GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EXCISE TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Thursday, October 24, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity this morning to speak on Bill C-80 which relates to the Budget delivered on May 23 of this year. That Budget has had very detrimental effects on low and middle-income people in this country. It has had a very retrogressive influence on the Canadian economy and on its prospects for the future.

This morning I would particularly like to discuss matters relating to the Budget as they in turn relate to energy. The Budget stipulated that the excise tax on gasoline be increased by two cents per litre on September 3 and another cent per litre on January 1 of 1987. There will be a further increase in taxes as a result of the Government backing away from the partial deindexation of old age pensions. Although we are very pleased that the Government backed away from that policy, we feel that it is very unfair to make up for it through the price of oil. It seems that the Government believes in give and take and this belief is costing consumers a bundle of money. The Government believes in giving lots of money to the major oil companies through such vehicles as the Western Accord and the Gulf tax deal. The Government can give millions of dollars to bail out banks which failed due to a multitude of bad loans and bad management. However, the Government can only take from consumers.

Since the new Government came into power the consumer has had to face more and more tax increases. The Government tried to take money away from senior citizens and when it backed away from that policy the consumer, rather than big business, ended up paying for it through an increase in the price of gasoline. The consumer ends up paying through the nose because it seems that the Government cannot see beyond the end of its nose. The Government promised that the consumer would benefit under deregulation. The consumer has not benefited one bit from deregulated prices. Oil prices are falling everywhere except in Canada. Thanks to the generosity of spirit which the Government is displaying the consumer in Canada is experiencing more and more tax increases.

I would like to point out the inconsistency, the ambivalence, and the complete disregard shown by the Government by referring to some of the things it said and some of the indications it has given to the people of Canada. After a meeting with Ministers of Energy in late January it was agreed that companies operating in Canada be allowed to negotiate their own deals with U.S. importers without having to wait for federal approval of export prices. At that time, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) said that this move by the federal Government in realizing export pricing controls is an important step toward ultimate deregulation of Canadian crude oil prices and marketing procedures. She went on to say that it was impossible to project what effect a new energy pricing policy would have on consumer prices. She was prepared to go ahead with this program of deregulation without any idea what effect it would have on energy prices in Canada. At no subsequent time did the Government give any indication of concern about what would happen to energy prices here. Why did the Minister agree to deregulation if she did not have any idea of what effect it would have? It does not make any sense that she would have agreed to that.

In April, an energy expert with the Consumer's Association of Canada said that consumers can expect very significant increases in gasoline prices after June 1, the time of deregulation. That expert was Bruce Wilson, the association's energy committee chairman. The Government and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources were told that oil company officials reluctantly admitted that tax cuts will not mean cheaper prices at the pumps.

Austin Torrell, of Gulf Canada Products said that gas prices are largely contingent on the price producers pay for their crude oil. He said: "As a refiner and marketer of petroleum products, we see no change in the price consumers will pay for gas as a result of these cuts unless there is a change in crude oil prices". There has been a change in crude oil prices internationally. There has been a reduction of oil prices to consumers everywhere but Canada.

Why has that happened? Why have oil companies not passed those reduced costs of oil to consumers in this country? It is obvious that the producers believe they have the support of the Tory Government in Ottawa and that there will not be any ripple effect if the people in this country are charged as much as the market can bear. This is an extremely callous, unfortunate and self-defeating action by the Government, as it is realizing today.

The Government has taken away consumer programs such as the Canadian Home Insulation Program and the Canadian Oil Substitution Program. Just in case consumers save money by insulating their own homes, the Government decided to tax insulation materials that consumers would have to buy as a result of the elimination of this program. Furthermore, if consumers try to save money on fuel tax by heating their homes with wood, the Government decided to tax wood stoves as well. Apparently the Government is attempting to tax consumers from every angle. First, it eliminated the program, then it taxed insulation products, and finally it taxed wood stoves when consumers tried to go off oil. The Government is making an incredibly lethal attack on consumers in this country.

It has told Petro-Canada to make profits, beginning by decreasing competition so that consumers will not benefit from any price war that may occur. Rather than worry about consumers in the future, the Government is encouraging us to become more dependent on foreign imported oil so that consumers will be left scrambling when the price sky-rockets. It will guarantee our reliance on foreign oil by cancelling the incentive program which provided incentive to find future oil and gas supplies. The Government has not given any thought to a replacement program for the Petroleum Incentive Program. This is devastating to frontier exploration, including offshore exploration in this country.

Let us see how these facts relate to the attitude of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Government. When the Minister was speaking at an energy conference on March 8 in Vancouver, she described deregulation as much better for Canadian consumers. This is especially true in today's world of falling international oil prices because we cannot expect and be complacent about the fact that lower prices will continue over a long term. Therefore, we have to do two things. The first is to build in-protection for consumers should international prices surge. The second, is to get on with the job of conservation. The Minister said on March 8 that we have to protect our security of supply and that we have to get on with the job of conservation.

Let us deal with the second point first, that of getting on the with job of conservation. The Minister said this on March 8 and on March 31 the Canadian Oil Substitution Program was terminated and she cut back on the Canadian Home Insulation Program. The final blow in the heart of the Canadian Home Insulation Program will be dealt with in March, 1986. She is talking about conservation and at the same time she is doing away with the conservation program. She is saying: "We do not need to give financial incentives. We do not need to have this sort of program. We are going to give people information so that the conservation program will continue". That conservation program will not continue to the same degree because the Government has stabbed the program in the back. Dollar for dollar the Government and the country got more benefit from energy spending on conservation than it did from any other energy expenditure which it instituted.

Let us look at number one. The Minister has said that first we must build in a protection for consumers should international prices surge. She is saying that we have to develop our energy sources. This is the same Minister who today is saying that we are working on a replacement for the Petroleum Incentive Program. On March 8 she said we must build a protection for consumers should international prices surge. Last November she said that her objective was to prevent a lull in offshore activity. How do you reconcile the statements of last November and the statement on March 8 with what this Minister is doing to the Petroleum Incentive Program, taking away the incentive for offshore, taking away the incentive to develop the energy sources off Nova Scotia and Newfoundland and in the Beaufort Sea, Mr. Speaker? Not only that, the Minister just recently postponed the bi-provincial Husky upgrader project. The former Liberal Government has promised a loan guarantee of $780 million plus a $50 million grant to cover construction costs. The Minister has completely gone against what she has been saying. It is incredible that she says one thing and does another.

The Government has no regard for what it is saying. It has no regard for matching what it says to what it does. It is insulting to people, not to mention its absolute devastation of our energy program. The whole this is ludicrous and it gets wilder and wilder.

The Government is now toying with natural gas pricing. It is bad enough that the Government did not come up with something in the Western Accord last spring. The Government said: "We are going to provide a natural gas pricing arrangement by November 1". To begin with, November 1 was not a good date. It should have been September 1 or even October 1. November 1 is the beginning of the contractual year for natural gas contracts. What she is saying is, "At best we are going to give you an arrangement on the very day you must enter into your contract for the next contractual energy year. It is ludicrous to wait that long, but anyway the Minister gave the date of November 1.

The Government has had plenty of time to reach an agreement but we still do not have an agreement on natural gas prices. The whole picture on natural gas pricing and exporting, the whole structure of natural gas commerce is in a state of limbo. November 1, is next Friday, which is four days away. Why has the Minister placed this very important aspect of our economy in a complete state of limbo and confusion? Natural gas exports mean $4 billion per year to Canada. She is taking a $4 billion benefit to the country and throwing it into a complete state of confusion.

I should like to talk for a moment about the offshore, the replacement of the petroleum incentive program and the amendments to the Canada-Nova Scotia agreement. After the signing of the Western Accord, the Minister of Energy was asked about a new agreement for Nova Scotia, and she said: "Give me a weekend to rest". Boy, was she tired? That was months and months ago, and still we do not have anything from the Minister or from the Government. It seems that Nova Scotia, and perhaps Newfoundland, if this complete inadvertence and disregard continue, will suffer tremendous problems as a result of the lack of a fiscal regime on the part of the Government. Once again the words of the Minister are not followed by action. Her words do not mean anything to her. I tell Hon. Members of the House that her words mean an awful lot to the people of Canada. They are not positive, but they are starting to realize that the Government just does not care about the country. It does not care what it says, and it does not care whether what it says is followed by action. It believes it need not do what it says it will do.

When the Western Accord was announced, the Minister said that offshore projects were protected; we all remember that. Also she said that she had received assurances of a reinvestment of $800 million per year from companies working in the Atlantic offshore and that removing five different taxes meant that they will invest more money in the East Coast. My, oh my, if they are investing more money in the East Coast, it has to be the best kept secret in the country. Last year, there were 10 rigs drilling off the shore of Nova Scotia. Now there are two. Companies are leaving Halifax and Dartmouth in droves. The whole offshore is crumbling because the Government has refused to put in place a fiscal regime which would indicate that it is giving any support at all to the Venture project in Nova Scotia.

On March 29, the Minister said: "The companies involved in the drilling ventures told me personally that the removal of the PGRT, which is a revenue tax, would be one of the greatest incentives to continue drilling in the Scotia Shelf". Imagine, imagine! Are those not just yummy words? Then, when referring to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), she said: "I can assure him that there is nothing in the Accord that does any damage at all to Newfoundland and Nova Scotia".

This Government, which was practically paranoid about the reduction of the deficit last spring and according to its own terms, supposedly reduced it by $2 billion, has completely done away with that reduction. In fact, the removal of the PGRT, which is a gift to multinational oil companies, and the bail-out of the banks, each meaning $1 billion to the taxpayers of the country, have completely wiped out any reduction which may have taken place in the deficit.

The Government made some decisions on energy which it felt it could make and from which it could gain some political points. If it was a easy decision, the Minister of Energy and the Government made it. They did not have any regard for consumers or for what increased prices would result. They felt that if they could get some political points from it, they would do it.

It seems that the energy decisions are a little more difficult now. Perhaps the pressure groups are not all on one side or the other. It is not clear-cut. There will be a down side and an up side. The Government is frozen at the switch, and Canadians are paying the price as consumers and they are paying the price by the reduction of impetus and confidence in our energy program.

• (1125)

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, there is no tax that is a good tax. All taxes are in some sense a drain on the productive end of the economy, to pay the expenses of Government. So it is easy to argue that tax increases, such as proposed in this Bill, to some extent can cut back on economic activity.

The problem of course is that bills have to be paid. The expenses of Government go on. The deficit of the Government is massive. It is to that issue that I intend to address the House this morning.

This Bill really is a three-part Bill. It increases the general sales tax from 10 per cent to 11 per cent and the tax on building materials and products of that nature from 6 per cent to 7 per cent, commencing at the beginning of the new year. It increases the tax on alcohol to 14 per cent. It imposes some new taxes and broadens the base of our tax system to include a number of products that were not heretofore taxed. To that extent the broadening of the tax base is to increase the revenue to the Government in the period commencing on January 1, 1986, for that year, by $510 million.

The tax also deals with the excise tax on motor fuels. You will recall that the effect of the Budget was to remove the Canadian ownership special charge. That was the tax that was designed and imposed on all consumers of all petroleum products in order to pay for Petro-Canada's purchase of Petrofina. That tax was 1.3 cents a litre and it covered home heating oil, natural gas and all forms of fuel, not just motor fuel. The effect of the change in the excise tax is really not to change the gross revenue of the Government at all because what the Budget has done is to remove the Canadian ownership special charge that applied right across the board and replace it with a tax deliberately and specifically focused on motor fuels. So while we removed a 1.3 cent a litre tax, which included home heating oil, we now have a tax of 2 cents a litre, but that is strictly on motor fuels.

It has been the view of the Government, indeed the view of this Party, that the cost of heat in a man's home should not be taxed. This is a pretty cold country and it is a pretty callous Government which would tax the cost of heat on homes. So we took the tax off that item, but we added tax to the cost of motor fuel because the Government needs the revenue. It would be a sensible Parliament that would applaud that effort.

The total effect of the taxes is to increase the burden on the economy by roughly $1.6 billion in the next fiscal year, and that revenue is absolutely essential if we are going to come to grips with the problem that this Parliament faces, indeed that the country faces, in returning our economy to a certain stability.

Recently the figures for the period ending on July 31, the first four months of this fiscal year, were released by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Those figures were disastrous. I remind you that the deficit at the end of July of last year was $11.3 billion. The deficit for the end of July of this year is $11.5 billion. In other words, despite what we have done, the deficit has crept up by $200 million.

Our expenditures are up. Our revenues are up. However, so is the deficit. For every $100 the Government spends, it is only able to collect in taxes $63. That means that it has to find $37 either by borrowing it or by taking it out of other funds such as pension accounts and the like. In other words, we have to beg, borrow or steal $37 for every $100 spent.

When Members of Parliament and Ministers ask for spending increases, for new programs and for better programs, they must remember that only 63 cents of every $1 comes from the taxpayer and that 37 per cent of that is a burden on our children and our children's children. It goes on and on sapping away at the life-blood of our economy and the future of our nation.

Dramatic efforts have been made by the Government this year to cut back on expenditures. In the figures ending in July, many Departments have shown that they are spending considerably less than they had spent in previous years. Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, for example, are down $8 million or $9 million despite the fact that there has been a drought, despite the fact that there have been problems in the agricultural community and despite the fact that we still have an inflation rate of 4 per cent. The same can be said of one Department after another. Indeed, the only Departments of Government that show any increase are those Departments which make specific transfers like transfers on pensions, transfers on EPF and transfers to the provinces. These are transfers that have to be made because they have defined programs of payments. Of course, the costs of two other items have risen. The cost of national defence has gone up as we try to do those things that were left undone through so many years of mismanagement. As well, the thing that has really risen is interest. The cost of carrying the national debt in this four-month period was $8,275,000,000. Last year we spent $6,954,000,000 in four months to carry the national debt. The cost of carrying the debt went up by $1.3 billion.

I have already mentioned that this Bill will raise $1.6 billion. However, the interest cost alone charged to the Government in a four-month period would take care of nearly all the revenue this Bill will raise. Opposition Members must tell us where we will get the money to pay the bills if we do not get it from the taxpayers.

Departmental Estimates have been cut way back. For example, the Estimates of the Department of Transport have been cut back by $250 million in this four-month period alone. Where do we get the money we need if we do not take it in taxes? How do we come to grips with an over-burdening debt if we do not raise taxes? It is totally unrealistic for opposition Members to oppose this Bill in any way because this Bill is an attempt to come to grips with the inherent problems with which the Government was left after so many years of profligate management.

As I said, the taxes we receive account for only 63 cents out of every $1 spent, and the other 37 cents have to be taken from the economy by borrowing. This borrowing burden presses up interest rates, cuts back on other expenditures that could be made and is the problem which seriously impairs our ability to come to grips with reducing the deficit and eventually getting the country on a sound footing.

It should be pointed out in this debate that the Government has been eminently successful over the past year in reducing interest rates. Interest rates are now lower than they have been for some seven and a half years. The interest factor is such that we were able on Thursday of last week to put 90-day T-bills at an interest rate of 8.51 per cent. We hope to be successful in borrowing on Canada Savings Bonds this year at 8.5 per cent. By the way, that is a pretty good rate of return for those who invest in Canada Savings Bonds because I do not know where else one would be able to get a bond or certificate cashable at any time that would yield 8.5 per cent.

Interest rates are being pressed down and they are being pressed down because we are coming to grips with the problems of the country and because we appear to the community to be responsible. Interest rates are being pressed down because the community realizes that we all have to face the music and pay the additional levy that we must impose upon ourselves in order to come to grips with our debt problems.

If we refuse to pass this Bill, if we refuse to pay attention to the cost of carryign the debt and if we refuse to pay some attention to the realities of our budgetary process, our interest rates will go up to the moon because no one will trust our currency any more than the currencies of Mexico, Argentina and Brazil are trusted. If we were to carry on the policies advocated by members of the Liberal and New Democratic Parties, that is exactly what would happen to our economy. We were in serious danger of having that happen to the economy throughout the years the former Government was in power. Interest rates have dropped at least 3 per cent since the previous Government was defeated.

Most importantly, Sir, I would like to speak today about how we may come to grips with these problems. Members of Parliament are elected to do things for their constituents who expect them to represent their interests in the House of Commons and before Ministers of the Crown. If there are programs that could be made available to assist Members' constituents, the Members want to make sure that those programs are put in place. However, Members of Parliament have an overriding responsibility and that is the responsibility of being legislators for the entire of Canada and of guiding the future of Canada not only for the short-term benefit of their constituents but for the long-term benefit of all of Canada.

I spoke of the need for some parliamentary review of the ways and means by which taxes are raised and expended. At the present time, the Government produces a "blue book" which contains a breakdown of the Government's estimate of spending for each Department. There is no parliamentary input on the Estimates before they are prepared. The only thing we can do is to object to an Estimate. Members will recall that on the last Supply day in the spring term there was a series of votes whereby a Member objected to an Estimate, put it before the House, and the Government moved to have the Estimate reinstated. I do not know of a method less effective than that by which Parliament is supposed to come to grips with government expenditures.

Under the present system the Government is totally responsible for the budgetary and tax measures. Until now it has refused to let Parliament really become involved in how taxes are raised and how expenditures are given priority. If you have so many dollars you can spend on the environment, where do you spent it? Do you spend it on a park, on protecting wildlife, or on cleaning up improper waste disposal? Where do those priorities fit in with pension, transportation or job training expenditures? It should be Parliament that decides on those priorities, but our present system does not permit Parliament to do so. Presumably the priorities are determined somewhere in the Treasury Board or Cabinet. Perhaps they are not determined at all. Perhaps Budgets are determined on the basis of what was spent the year before and you add 4 per cent.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, we must have a better system in order to come to grips with our expenditure program. Clearly we need a method whereby parliamentarians, in committee, can go over Government priorities and determine among themselves, from a zero base, how much ought to be awarded to one envelope or another. Until we are prepared to do that, the system will be without a budgetary control mechanism because at no time under our present system do Members of Parliament ever get together and go over the whole Budget and determine priorities on the basis of available funds.

Sir, I have made these suggestions before the committee which is studying new procedures for the House. I say to you that unless we are prepared to take this kind of action, we will be faced with one little Bill after another coming before us. This particular Bill taxes various economic activities at varying rates, 14 per cent, 7 per cent, 11 per cent. However, there is no relationship between how this Bill raises money and how the money is spent, whether it be on retraining programs or defence programs or anything else. It is a Bill to raise money, but there is no relationship between it and the needs and demands of our constituents and their children. Therefore, we need a committee of this House which will look at the total revenue raising potential in co-ordination with the necessary expenditures. Then we will have a handle on where we are going, because at present we have no such handle. Unless we as parliamentarians do this and do it fairly quickly, we are going to continue to receive great, big, thick blue books with all sorts of Estimate breakdowns which do not help us and do not give us any idea of expenditure priorities. They are all presented as equally important and therefore we will vote for them. The tax measures which come in will be equally important, as will the borrowing requirements, but there will be no co-ordination between tax and expenditure. That is why I say it is important that this Parliament comes to grips with our problem generally.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise and join in the debate on Bill C-80. Previous speakers have emphasized at considerable length that this Bill represents a large part of the income side of the Budget and that its primary purpose is without a doubt to raise money. At the outset I want to say everything good which can be said about this Bill, and I know Government Members will endorse that. I will then spend the other 19 and a half minutes pointing out what is wrong with Bill C-80.

It is my belief that the introduction of the search and seizure provisions, similar to those proposed for the Income Tax Act and which have been instituted in the system, is indeed a step long overdue. The idea that taxpayers may at least have some possibility of being considered innocent until found guilty is worthy of incorporation in the income tax system, and I am glad to see those principles extended to the Excise Tax Act through Bill C-80. It seems to me that the institution of provisions which will allow the taxpayer to exhaust his, her or their appeal remedies before the tax becomes due and payable is inherently fair and much more in accord with principles of natural justice than the previous regime of pay up now and we will settle whether you owe us anything later.

As has been said, the rate of the federal sales tax is increasing by 1 per cent. For the record, that will mean that from now on a 7 per cent tax will be payable on construction materials. I do not intend to enumerate all the items subject to increased taxes but I want to look at the larger items. One of the measures in this Bill which I see as most pernicious, the one most worthy of opposition from this side and, indeed, from that side of the House, if there are any Members who care to do so, is the introduction of the federal sales tax on a wide range of what we might call near-food items. Specifically, the sales tax exemption for candy and confectionery has been repealed, along with those for soft drinks, pet foods and certain health goods. I would like to concentrate on those two categories and see what sort of effect this has on Canadian consumption patterns and, by extension, on Canadian society.

● (1150)

It bothers me to see a measure coming in which taxes these near-food items, because there is only a very fine line remaining between those near-food items and items which are genuinely and legitimately part of people's every-day diets. In fact, I would go so far as to say that many items covered in the exemptions that are being repealed are legitimate parts of the every-day diets of Canadians today. We all know of people whose workstyles and lifestyles are run at such a pace and in such a manner that they do depend on snacking between meals to supplement their nutritional intake. I would say that in spite of the many legitimate things that have been said about the near-food items such as candy and confectionary, there are many such items which are legitimately nutritious, which have reasonable nutritional content for the price demanded, and which can legitimately be included in a proper nutritional diet.

I wonder if a spokesman for the Government would tell us at which point cereals become confectionary. Over the past few years we have seen the rising popularity of granola which has translated into products known as granola bars which are highly nutritious and of which I, in my travels, consume a fair number. One must wonder whether there is a line and whether the Government is planning to make a wider range of food products subject to the federal sales tax. I hear one of the Members opposite who represents a farming constituency making a comment. I would point out to him that when the consumption patterns of foods are changed, it is not necessarily Canadian farmers who benefit.

Similarly, with regard to what are to be classed as soft drinks, there is a very fine line to be drawn. There are products on the market today which are compounded of real juices, artificial flavourings and carbonated water. In passing a measure such as this, we have to ask whether this represents the thin edge of a wedge for the Government. Is it a measure which is being tried out to see what the public reaction will be? Is it some sort of kite flying to see whether a wider range of products could not be subjected to the federal sales tax in the future?

The subject of pet foods has not been adequately addressed in the debate to this point in time. It is unfortunate that there are some Canadians who consume pet food as part of their own diet. I do not point that out in an attempt to exploit it for its emotional value, but merely to state it as a fact. With regard to the question of health goods, let us look at the likely effect of the institution of the federal sales tax on medical substances and devices that were not previously subject to the federal sales tax. My impression, Mr. Speaker, is that in at least a marginal way, if not a wider way, it is going to impact on the operations of our health care system. Will it not lead to people paying more visits to the doctor, which visits are not entirely necessary, because the prices of the remedies which they have come to know, use, and trust in the past are now rising in price by 10, 15, or 20 per cent, depending on what happens between the manufacturer and the retailer? They may find, particularly with drug insurance that is available to many Canadians, although unfortunately not to all, that they can get these items virtually free by visiting the doctor rather than getting them on their own.

I would like to discuss the effect that the increase in taxes on fuels will have on the more remote northern parts of Canada which depend on transportation systems for all the major inputs of life. They depend on transportation systems for personal movement and for the transportation into the community of most of the goods consumed there. This situation can only be described as one of double taxation. For example, an airline operator in a community such as Big Trout Lake in my riding has to fly in large amounts of gasoline, preferably during the winter, in order to run his operation throughout the year. Therefore, the impact of the tax is in essence ratcheted. It is subject to a gearing factor, and the consumer is going to see far more than the pro-rated effect by the time it reaches the price of an airline ticket or the price of freight rate for bulk commodities. This is, of course, because tax is being paid on the gasoline used to transport the taxable gasoline for future use.

That is hitting at a community which is one of the lower consumers of the support services provided by the federal Department of Transport. I know that the Hon. Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) will be very pleased to confirm that for any Member of the House who may ask her. In fact, there are parts of this country where there are no federally maintained airports, runways, or control towers. While these areas can get weather forecasts, they are made for a larger area and cannot be relied upon too much for the smaller areas and shorter trips that these planes are making. There are planes, after all, Mr. Speaker, that serve their entire lives without ever touching a federally assisted runway because they are always operated on floats and skis. While it is not easy, obviously, to relate the actual cost of the services that those operations do consume, I think that the Government would be willing to acknowledge that, on a per airplane basis, the consumption of those services and, therefore, the impact on the budget of the federal Department of Transport is lower than that of those aircraft that are using airports and of those airlines that are using the wide range of services which provide such a safe and efficient transportation system throughout southern Canada.

The impact on prices in communities where all commodities must be brought in by air is not going to be of the same percentage order as the actual increase in taxation because it, too, will be ratcheted by the effect of using that tax paid fuel to get the product to the distribution centre, from the distribution centre to the jump-off airport where it will be flown north, to fly it north and finally to distribute it throughout smaller communities.

I would like to turn now to the so-called sin taxes, Mr. Speaker. I think that we should acknowledge that although we may not ourselves sin in all the ways that are taxed, there are very few of us who sin in none of the ways that are taxed. The Government, which in its Throne Speech offered something for everyone, is now getting something from everyone. I would like to look particularly at the effect of excise taxes on alcohol in Canada's tourist industry. It is my belief that many factors are being ignored in the imposition of that additional tax. It is not simply a question of what the final effect would be on the price of a drink in a given bar. Rather, it is a question of the way in which the market perceives it, the way in which people who are coming to Canada look at what is happening. There are, after all, price points in every form of service. Let us, for a moment, imagine the situation of someone saying to his neighbour in the United States that he went to Canada and it cost him $3.65 for a martini. Let us also remember that generally speaking, the effect of the very large exchange premium tends to go completely by the listener on first examination. They think of where they were when they last saw a martini advertised at that price. It is probably one of the most expensive places that they ever visited. They equate the range of prices for all of those other tourist products, including hospitality, meals, transportation and excursions by gearing them to the price of alcohol. There is a spill-over effect, if you like, and a negative perception permeates the way in which other tourism products are perceived. This is undoubtedly a contributory factor to the declining share that Canada commands in world tourism receipts.

I think the kindest and perhaps most sensible comment I could make on the increase of 25 cents for a package of 25 cigarettes is that it is an adequate increase. Of course, I was warned by my colleagues, as a known avid anti-smoker, that taxation is not necessarily the best way of stamping out that very expensive and dangerous habit. I will restrain myself by saying that I am glad to see that there was at least some raise imposed in that particular area.

Finally, let me set the excise tax increases within the context of Canada's over-all taxation system. It is in the over-all context that one should judge how Canadians would perceive these tax increases. The point has already been made many times but does not seem to have been fully absorbed by the Government that sales taxes are a regressive form of taxation. These taxes take a larger proportion of the income of low-income consumers. I am reminded of complaints against monopolies in Great Britain during the reign of King James I of England—the sixth of Scotland. It is somewhat similar about the complaint that was voiced about monopolies: "They sleep in our beds, they sup in our cups". Indeed, that is the effect of these sales taxes and it has a far greater relative impact on the poorer person than on those who are more comfortable or wealthy.

Let us look at the excise and sales tax increases within the framework of the rapidly declining contribution to Canada's tax revenues that is made by the corporate income tax. Let us look at the progress—I use that word with my tongue well in my cheek because it is indeed a regress—in the percentage of taxation collected from the corporate income tax over the last few years. In the 1950s, the corporations were paying approximately half of the income tax in Canada. In 1960, they brought it down to 42 per cent; down to 36 per cent in 1970 and by 1980, down to 30 per cent. Indications are that the corporate share of income tax in Canada will fall to the 20 per cent range, given the incentives, breaks, loopholes and boondoggles, frankly, that have become available to corporations in Canada.

The 1984 annual review of the Economic Council of Canada pointed out that the forgone tax revenue on corporate tax and expenditures was approximately $30 billion to $50 billion a year. This is at a time when taxes on individuals are predicted to go up by over a billion dollars in 1986, a year in which it is expected that the corporate tax share will drop by $500 million.

During this debate we have heard much from the Government side about the Government's record on interest rates and job creation. While I will not condemn the Government record outright, I merely want to suggest that the reason there are so many speeches being made in the House praising the Government on job creation and interest rates is that there are so very few economic journalists and economists in the country who really believe that the definite improvements that have taken place are a result of the Government's action in this field.

I want to commend the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). While I depart from him on most points of ideology, he is known and respected as one of the best technicians in terms of the budgetary process. Using the time he took to explain potential improvements was very worthwhile for the record in this debate. Over-all, however, C-80 is a game of winners and losers. We know who are the winners, and we know that the losers are the ordinary people of this country.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that the tax on alcohol spirits was to have risen by 4 per cent on September 1 in accordance with the cost-of-living arrangements and the current taxing system that is in effect. He will also know that this was abandoned and replaced by a 2 per cent increase.

I must agree with him that the price of alcoholic beverages in Canada is a serious detriment to our tourist industry but he should point out to the House that the Government recognized this to some extent and allowed that tax to rise only by half of what was proposed. I think it is important for people to understand that.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I certainly have no problem acknowledging that fact. I thank the Hon. Member for putting that on the record because I believe it is worth-while.

In the over-all context of taxation policy, it is a good principle to untie the major commodity taxes from a simple inflation adjustment because I believe that tax rates on such prime taxable items as alcohol, tobacco and gasoline should be reviewed every year as a matter of taxation policy and part of the budgeting process. I am sure that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South would endorse that point of view.

The Hon. Member is correct that the rate increase is half of what would otherwise have taken effect. I believe that the gasoline tax increases should have been handled as sensitively because that is also a substantial component in the mix of tourism expenditures in Canada. This is of particular concern to tourist operators in my riding because of the unusually long distances people must travel to get to their area. Since a large proportion of the route travelled to get to their area is in Canada, they have considerable concern about the impact of those gasoline tax increases on the tourism industry in Canada generally.

Mr. Blenkarn: I appreciate the Hon. Member's understanding of the Government's policy with respect to the liquor tax.

With respect to gasoline, the revenue between what would be received from the 1.3 per cent a litre Petrofina tax is approximately the same as the revenue from the 2 cent a litre tax on motor fuels.

While I am also very concerned that our gasoline prices are considerably higher than those in the United States as a result of this tax on motor fuels, I would rather have the tax on motor fuels than on home-heating oil. I am sure the Hon. Member will appreciate that, coming as he does from a constituency where many people are required to use home-heating oil to heat their homes. The amount of revenue collected from this tax is the same as what would have been collected with the Canadian ownership special charge. While it obviously increases the cost for those who drive vehicles, it reduces the cost for those who use home-heating oil. Perhaps he will agree that the effect is awash in the economy, even though the total burden of tax is regressive.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that comment. I think the elimination of the tax on home heating fuel is a sound measure. But it is worth saying that, by and large, the home heating oil tax has affected people at the lower end of the income scale even more than does taxation on gasoline.

I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his understanding of the way in which the tax on gasoline used for motor vehicles impacts on people who live in the more remote areas. Gasoline which they purchase has already been subjected to "up charges" because of the transportation distance for the refinery. The distances people must drive in remote areas tend to be greater than the distances people in major centres have to drive for whatever cause or reason. I see more higher mileage vehicles throughout my riding than I do around the City of Ottawa.

We ought to bear in mind, and it is worth having on the record, that that tax is one that tends to fall disproportionately on people who live in remote areas.

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista-Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support Bill C-80, not because I think it is a fantastic piece of legislation but because I think it is necessary and that it is a fair Bill which will help to bring our staggering deficit under control.

The Bill before us to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act will raise badly needed revenues from the commodity tax system, badly needed revenues which will assist the Government in achieving its goals of economic renewal and sustained economic growth.

While it would surely be easier, Mr. Speaker, for the Government to avoid such difficult measures as tax increases, uncontrolled increases in the deficit and debt would not only hamper economic growth but would jeopardize Government programs and services which people require.

Hon. Members from the opposition Parties who have spoken on Bill C-80 so far oppose the responsible action the Government is taking in this Bill, despite the fact that the interest on the deficit is fully one-third of total spending and that debt charges threaten social programs targeted at the needy.

Controlling the deficit is a condition of assisting the needy. This is a fact which should motivate all Hon. Members in this Chamber to give their full support to this Bill and to ensure its speedy passage through the House.

As the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and my other colleagues outlined in debate last week, Bill C-80 concentrates on controlling the national debt through a number of revenue raising measures. Substantial new revenues will be raised by broadening the base of federal taxes and increasing rates of tax.

None of us like tax increases, Mr. Speaker. However, putting people back to work is going to require sacrifices and hard work by all of us. I believe Canadians are willing to give a little to help those who are less fortunate. It is important to consider this Bill in a broader context in relation to other measures which the Government has also taken. The Government has balanced these increases in taxes with a reduction in its expenditures. Measures have been introduced to increase private initiative and investment in the country's economy. Civility has been restored to federal-provincial relations. The Western Accord is presently contributing to economic renewal in that part of the country after its economy had been devasted by the former Government's national energy policy.

In my own Province of Newfoundland, after a decade of long battle with the former Government over control of our province's offshore resources, the Government has fulfilled its election promise and brought an early agreement after just five months in office.

The Atlantic Accord is a shining example of what can be achieved when a spirit of co-operation and fairness exists between two Governments. Just as the Atlantic Accord will help to achieve economic prosperity for Newfoundlanders, the measures in Bill C-80 will assist in creating economic growth throughout the country.

Some Hon. Members have stated that this Bill will have a dampening effect on the economy. It is well known that since 1984, 305,000 new jobs have been created and that today's rate of unemployment is the lowest it has been in three years. It is not low enough by any means, but our Government will continue its successful efforts in order to keep this decline continuing in the jobless rate. As well, interests have fallen since the Government was elected a year ago and are at the lowest level in seven years.

A recent Statistics Canada survey found that business investment intentions for 1985 are up 12 per cent over last year's level. This increased capital spending will create jobs, of that there is no doubt. Inflation remains steady. At 4 per cent it is at its lowest rate since October 1971.

After only a little over a year in office, the policies of the Government have brought about these positive results. I am amazed that opposition Members, which saw the deficit go from $17 billion to $200 billion while the former Government was in office, can stand in this House and criticize the responsible actions of Bill C-80.

The economic indicators which I have cited show we are on the right course, Mr. Speaker. The difficult measures contained in Bill C-80 clearly reflect the Government's commitment to the people to achieve economic renewal and jobs.

• (1220)

I believe that the Government is on the right course. The difficult measures contained in Bill C-80 clearly reflect the Government's commitment to the people of the country, to achieve economic renewal and to create new jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception (Mr. Johnson). He has spoken favourably and said that it was good to contribute by this means, that his constituents should pay more for liquor, gasoline and all types of goods and services which in fact will suffer an increase in sales tax under Bill C-80. He is saying that that kind of sacrifice is something which is worth while. Of course, the question which comes to my mind is: To what extent will his constituents benefit, or for that matter the people of Newfoundland?

I suggest that the people of Newfoundland will not benefit, if benefits arise, in nearly the way the people in central Canada will benefit. Quite simply, the private sector in an area like Bonavista-Trinity-Conception is not particularly strong. There are very few high-rollers in that part of the country who stand to make $500,000 in capital gains which will be sheltered from tax, according to the measures put forward by the Government. At the same time, there are large numbers of unemployed workers or people in the fishing industry who are now being driven to the wall by the decision of the Conservative Government to allow the Department of National Revenue to go after fishermen for back taxes to the point where they will be driven out of business, if they are still in business at all. They are suffering from the worst catch in many years in that particular part of the country.

I ask myself the following question: If a Government wanted to make all people suffer to some extent by means of increases in regressive taxes in order to turn around and create jobs in disadvantaged parts of the country, that might be at least a defensible strategy. However, is it really defensible to take money from regions with high unemployment or little economic opportunity in order to put it into the pockets of people who benefit from capital gains on investments in apartments in Manhattan, in works of art, or in condominiums in Florida or Palm Springs, Arizona?

Perhaps the Hon. Member would be able to enlighten the House as to how many of his constituents will in fact be in positions to benefit from the capital gains exemption on such matters as foreign real estate investments, and what he thinks that will do in terms of job creation in his region about which I know he is terribly concerned. Perhaps he could enlighten us in terms of the provision of jobs for young people, married women and workers in general in Bonavista-Trinity-Conception.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his comments and for his question. I am sure he is well aware that I said at the outset of my remarks that it was not a Bill about which to be jubilant, but that I thought it was a necessary and fair act.

While the people in my riding may not benefit from all measures contained in the Bill, with the vastness of the country from Newfoundland to British Columbia, we would be sitting in the House year round, day after day, for many years to come, if we had wanted to introduce legislation which would perfectly meet the requirements and the needs of all people in the country. I am well aware of the hardships in Bonavista-Trinity-Conception. Some of the taxes collected from the more prosperous areas of Canada will help to pay the $9.5 million which the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) had announced today in Newfoundland to help fishermen and plant workers who were not fortunate enough this summer, through their endeavours in trying to earn a decent living, to have acquired enough fish or work to qualify for unemployment insurance. A lot of people look upon unemployment insurance as a supplement to their income in the part of the country from which I come. It is not because they are proud to tell people that they are receiving unemployment insurance benefits. It is because they do not live in a manufacturing area and they can only find seasonal work. They have to depend upon the prosperity of other parts of Canada. That is what Confederation is all about; it is the sharing of the wealth of one part of the country with the poor in other parts of the country.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, again I appreciate the Hon. Member's comments, but I should like to suggest to him that perhaps the long-established practice of the sharing of wealth among different regions of the country has been reversed, now that the new Government is in power. Traditionally, those areas which were the most prosperous, including southern Ontario and Alberta, for a time, in fact contributed to regions of Canada, including Newfoundland, which were less prosperous. Surely the Hon. Member must know that a sales tax increase is a regressive tax. It hits people in low-income brackets harder than it hits people in upper-income brackets.

The Hon. Member stated that the people in his riding may not all benefit from these particular measures. It seems to me that the redistribution of wealth which will take place with Bill C-80 is that money will be taken from the people of Bonavista-Trinity-Conception. They are the ones who are being hit in order to provide financing for the high-rollers in Toronto, Montreal, perhaps Ottawa and other parts of the country, who will benefit from the $500,000 exemption on capital gains tax. I am told those high-rollers all drive BMWs, but I have as yet to hear about a BMW being made in Canada by automobile workers even in southern Ontario. They are made in West Germany.

Does the Hon. Member really feel that he can go back to his constituents? The Government has announced a program to allow some completion of unemployment insurance entitlement for his constituents, and that is welcome, but it has yet to pull back on saying to the same fishermen, who could not even reach the point where they could receive unemployment insurance, that they will have to pay more than 25 per cent of their income this past year toward paying off tax liabilities from previous years with National Revenue. If the Government were really concerned, it would be doing something about that as well, but it is not taking place. What kind of Government does the Hon. Member find himself a part of which in fact robs the poor in order to benefit the rich? It is a kind of reverse Robin Hood tactic, and the Newfoundlanders whom I know do not stand for that kind of reverse tactic.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member decided to sit down and make a little time available to me in which to respond to him. The grass is always greener on the other side of the fence. I am sure his colleagues in Ontario thought that when they formed a coalition with the provincial Liberal Government. In order to provide the services which people want, they found it necessary to increase taxes. I am sure the Premier of Ontario was not happy to have his Finance Minister do that.

When I made reference to the Atlantic Accord, I did not say that the Government of Canada was putting in $225 million for the training of people to work on oil rigs and in the developmental stages of Hibernia. That is a substantial amount of money. People are grateful that a Government in which they believe could come to an agreement with a provincial Government in just five months in office. I am proud to be part of that Government, even though there will be times when I have to take part in decision-making that I do not fully agree with but, as I have already said, that will be necessary if we are to continue to govern and give the needy of the country the things they deserve and to which they are entitled.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the debate today takes place in rather unusual circumstances, provoked by the publication of public opinion polls this morning whereby it would appear that there has been a sudden drop in Progressive Conservative support across the country. It is a sudden drop that reflects the political reality where the federal Conservatives seem to be holding only a six point lead over the Liberals and trailing the Liberal Party in every region except in the West. According to this poll also, the Conservative losses have occurred in every region and demographic group and they are the greatest in Ontario, especially in Toronto.

[Translation]

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, on point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for LaSalle, on a point of order.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I was waiting to see whether I could find some relevance to the debate. You asked the House a while ago to resume debate on Bill C-80. I have the Bill here, and although I have looked everywhere, I fail to see any connection with the points the Hon. Member is trying to make.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has the floor and is an experienced parliamentarian, and of course he will speak to the Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) would give me a few minutes, I would be delighted to demonstrate the relevance of this poll to Bill C-80.

[English]

In continuing with this background to this debate it would appear that middle-aged Canadians, professionals, executives and union members have also deserted the Tory Party in large numbers. In Ontario the federal Liberals have moved ahead for the first time since June, 1984.

Mrs. Mailly: The Bill isn't passed yet. This is not relevant.

Mr. Caccia: Exactly. That is an interesting point. I will take it into account in a short moment. In Quebec the Conservatives are slightly—

Mr. Blenkarn: That is what happened to you. You believed the polls last June.

Mr. Caccia: —trailing the Liberals.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is no doubt interesting but could the Member please get to the Bill shortly. I understand that he wants to make a preamble, which is fine, but I would ask him to come to the Bill, please.

Mr. Caccia: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will certainly heed your advice. I was getting there by also reviewing Atlantic Canada, but your urging brings me to raise the question: is this because of these budget measures and the Ways and Means measures in Bill C-80? That question, of course, is being answered by those of us in the Official Opposition by opposing the measures contained in Bill C-80 and in having for months and months—

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau, on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker . . . Yes, well, the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) just left the House after addressing some comments to me. He remarked a while ago that I was always the first to complain about people asking questions while I was speaking. I want to point out to him that my complaint against him was not about a Member putting questions to another Member while he is speaking. Actually, what he does is make audible comments when he is not even in his seat, and then leave the House. Mr. Speaker, I wish you would remind him of the ruling you handed down several months ago, when he was acting in a way that was not acceptable in this House.

Mr. Rossi: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), on the same point of order.

Mr. Rossi: I would say that it is not up to the Hon. Member but up to the Chair to decide. She complains all the time . . . You see, what she is doing is just talk for the sake of talking, as usual. She does not want anyone to ask questions when she is speaking, and she goes and complains behind the curtains to the Speaker as soon as any one does, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to listen to what the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has to say.

[English]

Mr. Caccia: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope that this latest exchange and the time involved will not be counted against the time allocated to me. The points that I am trying to get across to this evidently nervous group of Tories across the aisle who are, as you can see by their faces, extremely unhappy about the result of the polls, is that if they had listened to our advice and comments since the Budget was announced when we told them that this Budget had a number of weak points and a number of wrong decisions in it, maybe the polls today would not have been so unfavourable as their present result.

There are a number of measures in this Budget that are going to come into effect once the Bill is approved, which we object to. There is, for instance, a 6 per cent tax that became effective on the day of the budget that affects insulation materials, heat pumps, solar heaters, panels and furnaces, wood-burning stoves, wind deflectors, wind generators and windmills and other such energy saving types of equipment and material.

In addition to that, we are debating a measure that involves tax increases on gas of 2 cents per litre as of September of this year, and that will impose 1 cent per litre in January of 1987; a tax that has already been imposed on many categories of construction materials; and a tax on equipment and construction materials using energy conservation; a tax on candy, soft drinks and pet foods; a tax on a wide range of health care products on which we on this side of the House have commented on a number of occasions before, and I would not be surprised if it is also one of the components that has led Canadians to lose their confidence in the Progressive Conservative Party to govern them, as shown in the poll published today. An increase in federal sales taxes across the board from 10 per cent to 11 per cent will become effective on January 1, 1986.

If we look at 1990-1991, what we see is a picture where consumers will pay some $2.6 billion more as a result of these tax changes while at the same time corporations will enjoy a $2.2 billion decrease in taxes. The capital gains tax break alone will reduce the taxes of wealthy Canadians by some $1.25 billion. I ask, where is the equity in the long term of this kind of taxation measures?

To increase sales taxes is damaging to the purchasing powers of consumers, as we know. The increase in higher fuel costs will affect also the cost of transportation and it will affect also the competitiveness of Canadian truckers vis-à-vis their U.S. competitors. Hundreds of small and medium-sized construction companies will see their profit margins cut to the bone as they are forced to absorb the new 6 per cent tax on construction materials because of the existence of many fixed-price contracts in this sector, which as you know characterize the construction industry, and which are of a nature that cannot be modified just overnight.

We made suggestions, and I thought they were practical, on our side of the House, that this tax on construction companies be phased in to take into consideration fixed-price contracts, but these suggestions have been ignored by the Government. The list goes on and on. What we object to are the details of the measures as well as the direction that is being taken on behalf of Canadians.

I would say in summary that the new taxes discourage energy conservation and they erode the progress made in permetting an increased capacity on the part of the Canadians to exert their purchasing power and, therefore, they erode the purchasing power and lower and middle-income Canadians. In the time available today I would like to speak about a specific measure whereby a specific tax rate will be imposed on unleaded gasoline, a .35 cents per litre tax as compare to .32 cents per litre on regular gasoline. In bringing this to the attention of Hon. Members and the Government, I regretfully conclude that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made a serious political mistake, particularly in environmental terms. I will explain this mistake as briefly as I can.

It is well recognized that leaded fuels contribute to environmental degradation, and this occurs in two ways. First, lead emissions pose serious environmental threats in and of themselves, particularly in large urban areas. This has led to legislative reductions in allowable gasoline lead content. The desire to control emissions of substances like CO, HC and NOx has led to tough emissions standards requiring the installation of expensive catalytic converters on new automobiles. These converters are very sensitive to lead in fuels and lead to relatively high rates of misfuelling, which render the converters impotent, thus sabotaging the cause of good, sound, tough environmental standards.

Approximately one-half of the misfuelling that takes place in our country today has been encouraged by the price advantage enjoyed by those who use leaded gasoline. From an environmental point of view, it is undesirable to sell leaded gasoline at prices lower than those charged for comparable unleaded gasoline. On the one hand, this increases the demand for automobiles running on leaded gasoline relative to the demand for automobiles running and unleaded gasoline. On the other hand, it provides an incentive for the misfuelling of automobiles designed to run on unleaded fuel. This price advantage, therefore, leads to increases in lead pollution and acid-rain-causing emissions. It is thus desirable, I submit, to use the federal commodity tax system to eliminate the price advantage.

I propose that the price differential be eliminated through changes to the structure of the federal sales tax on motor fuels. I will explain this briefly. I apologize in advance for the fact that this will mean putting on record some technical data and figures. Nevertheless, it is necessary.

Let me first explain that as of June 1 of this year, the sales tax on motor fuels has been charged at specific rates according to the following formula: (a) gasoline, regular leaded, a tax of .32 cents per litre; (b) gasoline, regular unleaded, a tax of .35 cents per litre; (c) gasoline, premium leaded or unleaded, a tax of .36 cents per litre; and (d) diesel fuel, a tax of .29 cents per litre. These tax rates will increase by 10 per cent on January 1 of next year. In addition, the excise tax on gasoline and diesel fuel increased by 2 cents per litre as of September, 1985, as we all know.

The sales tax on motor fuels was converted by the recent Budget to a specific tax from an ad valorem tax. The respective rates of taxation thus reflect relative gasoline prices and therefore the tax on regular leaded gasoline is lower than the tax on unleaded or premium gasolines.

On May 29, 1985, a small survey of retail gasoline prices was conducted. I am told that the price of regular unleaded gasoline was found to be consistently higher than the price of regular leaded gasoline by some 2.5 cents per litre. Only a small fraction of retailers sell premium leaded gasoline, and those who do said that they charged the same price as for premium unleaded gasoline.

I would propose that the formula used for setting the federal sales tax on motor fuels be altered and that two new categories, premium leaded gasoline and premium unleaded gasoline, replace the present category of premium leaded or unleaded gasoline. Following the terminology of the notice of Ways and Means motion to amend the Excise Tax Act, the formula for calculating the sales tax on motor fuels should be changed to read as follows:

That the specific rate of sales tax imposed on the following petroleum products be determined as:

(a) gasoline, regular leaded	.57 cents per litre;
(b) gasoline, regular unleaded	.35 cents per litre;
(c) gasoline, premium leaded	.36 cents per litre;
(d) gasoline, premium unleaded	.36 cents per litre;
(e) diesel fuel	.29 cents per litre;

multiplied by the ad valorem rate of consumption or sales tax expressed as a decimal number and multiplied by one hundred, which applies to goods other than wines and goods on which a duty of excise is imposed under the Excise Act and goods enumerated in Schedule V of the Act.

This is the technical text, as I understand it, that should be applied in order to achieve the desired goal of reducing the differential in price that exists and which is likely to increase in future between leaded and unleaded gasoline.

What this convoluted piece of language means—and I apologize for it but it is infernally complex—is that as of June 5, 1985, the sales tax on gasoline would be the same as indicated earlier except for regular leaded gasoline which would have a tax of .57 cents per litre; namely, an increase of .25 cents per litre from the .32 cents per litre which the tax is to be according to the formula to which I referred earlier.

As of January 1 of next year, if this proposed amendment to the Ways and Means were to be adopted, we would then have the following tax structure: (a) gasoline, regular leaded, a tax of .63 cents per litre; (b) gasoline, regular unleaded, and note the difference, a tax of .39 cents per litre; (c) gasoline, premium leaded, a tax of .40 cents per litre; (d) gasoline, premium unleaded, a tax of .40 cents per litre; and (e) diesel fuel, a tax of .32 cents per litre. These taxes would then be based upon the current differential between leaded and unleaded gasoline of 2.5 cents per litre. In the meantime, as I learned from The Globe and Mail of Thursday, October 17, in an article by Nicholas Hunter, this spread unfortunately has increased to 3 cents per litre and therefore these figures will have to be slightly adjusted in light of that development.

This very serious situation leads me to say that had the Government thought in environmental terms, it would not have proceeded by recommending a .35 cents per litre tax on unleaded fuels and a .32 cents per litre tax on regular fuels but would have adopted the kind of schedule I proposed a few moments ago.

This adjustment, Mr. Speaker, would of course require from time to time a survey of retail gasoline prices. However, this new formula will not completely eliminate the price differential between leaded and unleaded gasoline. This is for two reasons. In the first place, there is always a time lag in its imposition. Market conditions which generated some differential in one quarter may change so as to generate another differential in the next quarter. Second, the taxes are based on the average differential; regional variations, as we all know, may exist. Having said that, it is quite evident that the spread between the price of leaded and unleaded gasoline tends to be much more stable than the actual price of gasoline which can vary significantly over time and from place to place.

Therefore, even though the sales tax structure I propose will not completely eliminate this price spread, it would eliminate most of the price advantage currently enjoyed by leaded gasoline. I can imagine the thinking on the part of Members representing farmers and fishermen. They will be a bit edgy about this proposal as it affects both the farm and the fishery. To meet that understandable concern, I propose that those two groups be made eligible for a rebate equal to the difference between the sales tax on leaded gasoline and its unleaded counterpart, multiplied by the volume of leaded gasoline purchases. This rebate would be delivered to farmers and fishermen in the same manner as the current 1.5-cent a litre tax refund is delivered. The same eligibility rules would apply and therefore no restrictions would be made between on and off highway use.

It is important that when we approach the taxation of gasoline from now on that we have a political concern for the damage caused by acid rain and that we reflect that concern in our taxation structure. This is a departure from practice because what I have put on record today requires a calculation which so far has not emerged. My conclusion is that by proposing a tax rate for unleaded gasolien which is higher than for regular gasoline we are making a serious environmental mistake. If we want to redress that mistake we should therefore restructure the proposed tax rates. It would be to our long-term benefit if we can find ways through the price structure in the market-place to make unleaded gasoline available to the consumer at the same price as leaded gasoline. In doing so we will reduce lead emissions and the concomitant health dangers, particularly in the heavily built-up areas, as well as reducing the emissions of NOx which find their way into the atmosphere and come back to us in the form of acid rain. It is with this in mind that I would like to conclude and I thank you for your patience.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if I did not know the rules of this House I would be tempted to ask the Hon. Member what effect he thinks the massive sales tax increases brought in by the NDP-Liberal Government in Ontario will have on the polls. I would also be tempted to ask him what effect he thinks the vicious behind-the-scenes leadership campaign being waged by the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) will have on the Liberal Party. However, I will not do that. What I would like to ask him is this. In view of the fact that he was a Minister of the Environment in the former Liberal Government and has given us a very interesting discourse on what steps we should take with respect to taxing unleaded and leaded gasolien, what steps was he successful in having previous Liberal Cabinet Ministers take specifically on these proposed taxes when he was Minister of the Environment?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for asking two questions to which he does not want an answer and then focusing on the third one which is as interesting as the other two. This price spread and its widening is something which has emerged only very recently. It is on the path towards becoming wider as time goes by. As I mentioned earlier, it was 2.5-cents in the spring. It is now 3 cents. The application of this specific tax rate as recommended in Bill C-80 is likely to increase this spread in the future because it applies unevenly. On unleaded gasoline the tax will be .35-cents per litre but on regular it is .32-cents. This is, to the best of my knowledge, a new policy development in the taxation process adopted in this country. Therefore, it is obviously my duty to bring it to the attention of the Government and to underline the environmental consequences of this particular tax measure, small as it may appear to be in the immensity of the Ways and Means Bill in which it is buried. I am not saying it is buried deliberately, but it is a measure which may go by unnoticed by anyone who is not sensitized to the environmental impact caused by leaded versus unleaded gasoline.

I am sure the Hon. Member comes from an area where the question of acid rain is perceived by people in a particularly strong manner. I am sure he knows that in addition to acid rain the question of lead in gasoline has been one of concern to people who follow its effect on health and connect it with the content of lead in human blood. If that is the case, I imagine that I would have in the Hon. Member a very keen ally in making representations to the Minister of Finance on this issue because he would approach the matter in a way very similar to mine. He would want to ensure that leaded gasoline usage goes down and unleaded goes up.

Finally, in answer to the Hon. Member as to what I did in my term, I would bring to his attention—

Mr. Lewis: You have just about enough time to tell me, 30 seconds.

Mr. Caccia: —the fact that we did set in motion a reduction of lead in gasoline in Canada. The present standard of .77 milligrams per litre is gradually being reduced to .29 milligrams, bringing our standards in line, by 1988 I believe, with the standards in place and enforced in the United States.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

REPRESENTATION OF COCHRANE-SUPERIOR—STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MR. GERVAIS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House of my wish to dissolve a partnership, a partnership to which I never gave consent in the first place. The Progressive Conservative Member of Parliament for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Gervais), not having enough work to do in his own constituency, has announced to a handful of PCs in Kapuskasing that he is now in partnership with me to serve my riding. He told a small gathering of the Party faithful: "It is quicker to gain the ear of Cabinet through a Government Member rather than an opposition MP". The curious aspect of this claim, Mr. Speaker, is that there is hardly a Cabinet Minister who even knows who the Member for Timmins-Chapleau is.

Mr. Boudria: Who is he anyway?

Mr. Penner: As far as the House of Commons is concerned, he is somewhat akin to H. G. Wells' The Invisible Man. Where was the Hon. Member for Timmins-Chapleau when the opposition Parties were fighting back attempts to reduce senior citizens' pensions? Where was he when we protested the cuts to family allowances? What has he said here in the House or to his constituents about the billion dollar bank failure fiasco, or rotten tuna on supermarket shelves? He said nothing.

No, Mr. Speaker, such a partner as that I do not want under any circumstances. To the House, to the people of Cochrane-Superior and to the people of Timmins-Chapleau I want to say that this never was partnership will never, never be.

THE HUMANITIES AND SOCIAL SCIENCES

INCREASED FUNDING URGED FOR RESEARCH

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, Canadian social scientists and humanities scholars feel discriminated against by the federal Government. They have watched support for the Medical Research Council and the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council increase by over one-third in real dollars since 1978-79. The federal Government's support for the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, however, has kept pace only with inflation and has not increased at all in real value since 1978-79.

Medical, natural science, and engineering research is undoubtedly important to Canada. Pure research requires federal Government support even while corporations fund a great deal of applied scientific research. Scholars in the social sciences and humanities are primarily dependent on government support for research funding. The limited funding by the Government of such research could lead them to infer that this research is not important to our country, but that is surely not true. If the Government has become largely economic and requires the best possible understanding of how our economy functions, such areas of policy as multiculturalism also require a research basis for their development.

We should all be deeply grateful to the scholars who have clarified ethnic development over the years in our country. Their research points us toward a fuller appreciation of how ethnic interaction created the Canadian society of our day. National development, Mr. Speaker, requires a substantial increase in federal funding of the social sciences and humanities.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REINSTATEMENT OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, today I want to join all Canadians in deploring the murder of policewoman Jacinthe Fyfe, 25 years old, who had been with the Montreal Urban Community Police Force for nearly five years and, while she was making a routine call, was shot down by an unsavory character.

Mr. Speaker, this time it was a policewoman. Two weeks ago, it was Mr. Frank Shoofey, a well-known Montreal lawyer and one of my constituents, who was killed in cold blood at his office while he was at work. A few months ago, an elderly lady, the mother-in-law of Tex Lecor, a well-known Quebec performer, was strangled and hanged in her apartment, for the sake of a few articles worth $50. And there are many more cases I could name.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time our Government tabled in this House a Bill aimed at reinstating capital punishment in Canada, since 25 or 35 years in prison do not seem to be a sufficient deterrent.

Mr. Speaker, now that every week Canadians are constantly hearing about gratuitous killings and murders, it seems to me that Parliament can hardly remain unmoved.

I understand that Crime Prevention Week will be held from November 3 to 9, a very laudable decision on the part of our Government, but it is not enough. The time has come, and this is what most Canadians and most people in my constituency want, to allow this House to speak out and hold a free vote on the reinstatement of capital punishment.

APARTHEID

COMMONWEALTH ACCORD—PRIME MINISTER'S LEADERSHIP

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as someone who spent many years living and working in east and central Africa, and who has been to South Africa three times, I am proud to be finally a part of a Government that is showing strong Commonwealth leadership to dismantle apartheid in South Africa. The Commonwealth countries, with Canada leading the way, have opted to take a series of economic sanctions against South Africa that were announced in the recent Commonwealth Accord. No more Government loans will be extended to South Africa. Trade delegations will no longer be funded, organized, sanctioned or endorsed. There will be a ban on the importation of krugerrands. The freedom of Nelson Mandella is demanded, and more, Mr. Speaker.

In his address to the U.N. last week the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said: "My Government has said to Canadians that if there are not fundamental changes in South Africa, we are prepared to invoke total sanctions against that country and its repressive regime. If there is no progress in the dismantling of apartheid, our relations with South Africa may have to be servered absolutely". That's leadership, Mr. Speaker—great leadership.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

COMPUTATION OF SEVERANCE PAY IN DETERMINING ELIGIBILITY FOR BENEFITS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has been told once again that changes to rules concerning unemployment insurance eligibility are a step backward in coming to terms with the problems of unemployed workers in their forties and fifties. This time the warnings came not from the opposition benches as they have so often in the past, but from counsel she appointed to advise her. Yet it appears that even their thoughtful consideration of the issue failed to sway the Government from its plan to add to the enormous social and financial problems of older Canadians who find their jobs disappearing, most often because of the Conservatives' economic policy.

The Minister has been persistently warned that changing the rules for unemployment insurance eligibility for workers who received severance pay or company pension payments until their funds are exhausted could present serious problems. I would be remiss, however, if I failed to note that the Minister partially returned to her senses last year when, under heavy pressure from unions and the Members on this side of the House, she decided to delay the revisions. Although the show of compassion was short-lived, those changes affecting severance pay are now in place and The Globe and Mail quotes a ministerial spokesman as saying that there will be no delay to the senseless imposition of hardships on the unemployed who receive company pension payments. To quote the commission's report: "A large number of older workers are faced with economic and social problems which range from severe to desperate. They see their hopes for a safe and secure economic future for which they have worked many years disappearing. They feel that employers, the community, Government and society have abandoned them and they cannot understand why this is happening".

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

S.O. 22

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

EQUALITY FOR ALL REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, Canadians can be proud of the parliamentary committee on equality rights which held hearings across Canada and came to an all-Party consensus on progressive changes that are needed to remove discrimination from our laws and enforce our Charter of Rights. The Equality for All recommendations, which must be implemented, will affect parents, persons over 65 who wish to continue working, homosexuals, immigrants, religious minorities, native people, visible minorities, and the physically and mentally disabled.

Discriminatory practices against Canadian women have been given special consideration in recommendations that also respect the rights of men. The committee recommends shared parental leave, protection in common law relationships, equal treatment of women in the Armed Forces, prorated benefits for part-time workers, and much stronger enforcement of employment equity than is proposed in current Government legislation.

We call on the Government to prepare legislation immediately to implement these recommendations and remove discrimination. Bill C-62 should be redrafted as a first step. Action must replace words to achieve true equality.

THE COMMONWEALTH

SUCCESS IN REACHING ACCORD ON APARTHEID

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, upon the return to Canada of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) following the successful meeting of the Commonwealth leaders, we have heard nothing from the Opposition about the success of the Commonwealth Conference. Surely the Liberala and others in the House would have been able to set aside their jaundiced opposition mentality just this once to give credit where credit is due.

The Commonwealth Accord was signed in Nassau by all 49 Commonwealth representatives. This agreement, which calls on South Africa to dismantle apartheid, was largely due to the work of our nation's Prime Minister. The Prime Minister and Mr. Gandhi of India successfully convinced Commonwealth leaders to call on South Africa to end apartheid, end the state of emergency, and initiate real and meaningful dialogue. In addition to these terms, the Commonwealth Accord calls on South Africa to release Nelson Mandella and lift the ban on the African National Congress. Included in the Accord is a serious commitment of measures toward reform. These measures are sensible and compelling. This unanimous accord adds more credence to the Commonwealth and its leadership, among whom our Prime Minister ranks highly.

ROLE OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Commonwealth is a vital institution in Canada's external affairs program and the manner in which it interfaces in the solution of world problems. Each Commonwealth Conference has addressed significant world problems. The last Commonwealth Conference was no exception.

Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) used this forum to announce an immunization program for persons in Third World countries.

The Prime Minister was also instrumental in bringing the Commonwealth leaders to agreement, to finding a middle ground on anti-aparthied sanctions against South Africa. The Commonwealth Accord was signed at the conference in Nassau by all of the 49 Commonwealth countries. It allowed the Commonwealth to remain united, to remain intact and to find a solution to a problem of concern to all.

Prime Minister Diefenbaker returned to Canada triumphant from a Commonwealth Conference some years ago. The Prime Minister returned in a similar manner last Friday. All Canadians are proud of his leadership, his contributions, and his accomplishments.

THE ADMINISTRATION

PUBLIC OPINION POLL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the area near the West Door of the House of Commons looked like a used car lot again this morning, with Cabinet Ministers' limousines all over the place. Undoubtedly, the Cabinet was in session discussing the latest public opinion poll.

The poll that was released today shows that there is growing dissatisfaction with the Tory Government and a resurgence of Liberal fortunes. The people of Canada knew that they made a mistake when they elected the Government over a year ago. The jaw that walks like a man is making a mess of things. Even Charlie Star-Kist, the Tuna, will vouch for that.

What a glorious record the Government had in September. The tainted tuna scandal, the failing of two Canadians banks, the gifts to oil companies, the resignation of two Cabinet Ministers, and the awarding of lucrative contracts to Tory friends.

Ministers, Members, and staff from the Prime Minister's Office, and the Tory Party executive are retracting their statements because what the "great one" says is the truth, nothing but the truth, so help us God. Some even claim not to be astute. What does November have in store for us? More resignations, more scandals, more broken promises and more retractions? Who knows.

It is rumoured that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will end this Session and start afresh in the spring. I say to him: "Don't wait for spring, Brian. Do it now".

EXTERNAL AID

IMMUNIZATION PROGRAM FOR THIRD WORLD CHILDREN

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on the eve of the recent Commonwealth Conference the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced that Canada will give $25 million for immunization of Third World children during the next five years.

In 1984 CIDA provided assistance to 45 Commonwealth countries. Forty per cent of our bilateral official aid goes to develop Commonwealth countries. The immunization program of $5 million a year can save 700,000 children a year from certain death. Vaccines, equipment, and technical assistance will go to Commonwealth countries such as India and Nigeria, which have recently begun infant immunization programs.

Diseases claim about 2 million infants a year in Commonwealth countries alone.

October 16, 1985, marked the tenth anniversary of the elimination of smallpox. Other diseases will be eliminated through the generous funding of research by countries such as Canada. The $25 million immunization program is another major step by Canada, and all Canadians should be proud to be part of this generous preventive program.

CHILDREN

RESPONSIBILITY FOR PROTECTION AGAINST SEXUAL ABUSE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, sexual abuse of children is a concern of all Canadians and it must now become a concern of all Members of the House of Commons. I do not know whether there are more cases or whether incidents are more disgusting, more sickening, more reprehensible and, therefore, being reported more frequently, or both, but the protection of children is a responsibility of each and every citizen.

The funds must be found now to meet the challenges of this crime. It has been over a year since the Badgley Report was filed with the House of Commons and still there has been little, if any, action taken. The parents, friends, and others who inflict their perverted lust on children must be stopped. The House of Commons must make dealing with this matter an urgent priority.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—SIZE OF BAIL-OUT PACKAGE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. During his absence from the country we learned that last March 24, the day after the Prime Minister made his decision to rescue the Canadian Commercial Bank, the Government had information from its own officials that the bail-out package was at least $116 million short of what was required. In other words, the Government knew that that bail-out package was doomed to fail.

Why did the Prime Minister and his Ministers continue to assure the House, the banks, and the depositors that the bail-out would succeed? Why did the Government not take steps at once to amend the bail-out package to take into account this shortfall of at least $116 million?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this question has been discussed in the House on a number of occasions. I want to draw a distinction for the Hon. Member that there is a difference between the loan losses that the bank was suffering at the time and the need for a capital injection. Those can be two different amounts.

I believe the Hon. Member is totally wrong when he says that we believed that this support package was doomed to failure right from the start. That is not the case and that is not want I have said. That is not what the Minister of State has said. He knows that that is incorrect, yet he persists in using that misinformation.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The Minister of Finance is simply contradicting a senior official of his own Department, Mr. Grant, who identified the $116 million shortfall.

PRIME MINISTER'S INFORMATION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask another question of the Prime Minister. We learned from the Estey Commission hearings that on March 23 the Prime Minister ordered his Minister of State for Finance to proceed with a bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank despite her own opposition to this bail-out. She was the lead Minister whom the Prime Minister himself appointed to look into this matter and make recommendations. Will he tell the House what information he had to justify his overruling the Minister of State for Finance on this important matter?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the imagination of the Hon. Member is running wild again. We have said on a number of occasions that the Government looked at a number of options and considered all of the pros and cons of each of those options. It was on the basis of that range of information that a decision was made. That was a decision taken by the Government. It is a Government decision and all Ministers stand by that decision.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Obviously the Prime Minister did not have a good reason to overrule his Minister of State for Finance, unless, perhaps, he did not want to rain on his own Economic Summit.

ESTEY COMMISSION—REQUEST FOR APPEARANCE BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Prime Minister's totally unjustifiable lack of willingness to speak to the House of Commons and come clean with the House, will he at least agree to appear before the Estey Commission forthwith to explain and justify his personal role in this bank fiasco?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, contrary to our Liberal friends, when there was a legitimate controversy this Government did not try to cover anything up. We appointed the Estey Commission to investigate all of the circumstances of it.

I think Canadians expect us to put the full light on all of the circumstances surrounding this important matter and to allow someone of the integrity and ability of Mr. Justice Estey to make a value judgment in regard thereto, unfettered by other considerations. That is why he was appointed, and I assume that all Members of the House will want to allow him to continue to do his job.

BAIL-OUT ESTIMATE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It concerns his March 23 decision to rescue the Canadian Commercial Bank. The Government had information that the CCB's bail-out estimate was far short of what was actually required. Why was this information not shared with the Government's partners in the bail-out, the chartered banks, the Province of Alberta and the Province of British Columbia?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again this is a question that has been answered in the House on a number of occasions last week. The Hon. Member is drawing information based on statements that have been made by people before the Estey Commission. She forgets that the whole purpose of that Commission is to assess these different points of view, draw conclusions from them and present those conclusions in its final report. The Government will wait until that final report is available. At that time we will be able to address the various options open to us on how we deal with this problem.

● (1420)

REVIEW OF BANK'S ASSETS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, investigations on March 19, 20 and 24 showed that the CCB had seriously underestimated its loan losses. Why then did the Government wait until May, having formally guaranteed the bank's solvency in April and paid over the money, before starting a complete review of the bank's assets?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the office of the Inspector General of Banks had been in before the rescue package was put together, as well as after.

An Hon. Member: They told you before it was flawed.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There were a considerable number of discussions also during that period of time what steps should be taken in connection with the Canadian Commerical Bank. Unfortunately, the result was not something we were happy to see happen.

The bank did enter into a number of loans that, according to one of the witnesses at the Commission, were bad loans the minute they were written. Those were the things that contributed to the undoing of the bank, and were things beyond the control of the Government. We believe we took the appropriate steps both on the weekend of March 22-23 as well as later on when the bank was put into liquidation.

INFORMATION AVAILABLE TO INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which I hope he will answer. He has been away from the House on important business with which the whole country agrees.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: But he is now back after two weeks and I hope he will answer the questions.

We now know that the Inspector of Banks made available to Ottawa information on the Sunday, before the decision was announced to bail out the Bank, that the package was going to cost at least $100 million more than we were told in the House of Commons on the Monday.

Either the Government, when it took its decision on Saturday, did not have this information—in which case it was acting irresponsibly with the taxpayers' money before it looked at its own report—or the Government had the information and the House was misinformed on Monday about the extent of the cost. My question to the Prime Minister is: which is it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think I responded to this very question—

Mr. Broadbent: No.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —from the Hon. Member last week. Again, I repeat to him, he is drawing conclusions based on testimony that has been put before the Estey Commission. That is the responsibility of the Mr. Justice Estey.

At this point in time we are not going to comment on the range of views that will be put before the Commission—

Mr. Gauthier: Come on.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —but await the results of the report and comment at that time, if it is appropriate.

TIMING OF GOVERNMENT DECISION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, before this matter went to the Estey Commission, the Government made it clear it would be prepared to answer for ministerial responsibility in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That is what the Government should be doing today.

[Translation]

I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Government made the decision on the weekend, before a report by a very important public servant was presented Sunday evening.

My question to the Prime Minister is as follows: Was his decision made before the report, yes or no?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is confusing certain statements that were made with reports that appeared in the media.

The important matter of the bank situation was submitted to a commission of inquiry chaired by Mr. Justice Estey of the Supreme Court, so that he could judge all the facts objectively and clearly. And that is what we are doing. We set up this commission of inquiry so that it could find out all the facts and make conclusions on the basis of those facts. It would not be my place to comment on the speculative notions or reports of third parties.

PRIME MINISTER'S INFORMATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is not about speculations or opinions, it concerns the information the Government had or ought to have had before it made its decision on the weekend.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister, as the person who was chairing the important meeting attended by the Minister of Finance and by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, to tell the House when he met on that weekend, specifically on the Saturday, whether he had the information that the cost of the package was going to be $100 million greater than the Minister of State responsible for Finance told the House on the Monday morning. Surely the Prime Minister can answer that question now, and he ought to.

An Hon. Member: Yes or no.

An Hon. Member: The whole truth.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that it is not the practice of this Government, or any other Government, to say these are the various things that were discussed in a confidential meeting.

An Hon. Member: That is outrageous.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What is important is the decision that was taken by the Government—

Mr. Frith: You misled the House on Monday.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —is well known to the Hon. Member and to other Hon. Members. That decision was based on the range of information we had at the time. It was based on the results of discussions that we had had both with officials as well as the banking community. It was the best decision we could have taken based on the information that was available.

REQUEST THAT MINISTERS APPEAR BEFORE ESTEY COMMISSION

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this country deserves—

An Hon. Member: A question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: —a thorough explanation of the Government's decision to bail out a bank against the advice of the Minister responsible, the Minister of State for Finance, who says she will not answer any questions concerning the matter while the Commission is having its hearings.

My question, in her absence, is directed to the Minister of Finance. Will he and the Minister of State for Finance appear before the Commission and explain how they can defend, in Parliament, a decision of the Prime Minister with which the Minister of State for Finance did not agree?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the preamble, as well as the question itself, are totally false. When the Hon. Member has a question that is sound in substance, then we will answer the question.

An Hon. Member: What are you hiding, Mike?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

GOVERNMENT DECISION

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on September 17 in this Chamber the Prime Minister said:

The Leader of the Opposition makes statements like: "The Prime Minister didn't know the facts".

The Prime Minister knew all of the facts available at the time.

My supplementary question is for the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance. Is the Minister of Finance saying in the House today that the Prime Minister made a bad decision because he did not have the facts available at that time? Is that what he is saying?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me advise the Hon. Member that the information available to us was the information we needed to make the decision. That decision was made by the Government. That decision stands.

I do not quite understand what the Hon. Member is trying to get at with the misleading things he is putting into the preamble to his question.

SITUATION OF CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—INFORMATION GIVEN BY BANK INSPECTOR

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Everyone knows by now that bank auditors examined the Canadian Commercial Bank loan portfolio on Sunday March 24 and discovered that the amount outstanding was $100 million more than what the Government had thought.

My question is this, Mr. Speaker: Had the bank auditors conveyed that information to the Prime Minister and the Government when the Prime Minister made his decision on Monday, March 25?

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether there are any rules in the House, but that is exactly the question which was asked a little earlier in this Question Period and was asked on two or three occasions last week. I could give the Hon. Member the same answer, but I do not want to take up the time of the House. The answer which I gave last week and earlier today still stands.

ORIGIN OF INFORMATION RECEIVED BY MINISTER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

I asked a very direct question. Did the Government, did the Minister of Finance have that information from the Inspector General of Banks when it was decided to give $250 million to the Canadian Commercial Bank?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am going to answer this question one more time, and that's it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The answer to the question is—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): That is a contempt of Parliament.

Mr. Broadbent: Answer the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If Hon. Members wish to listen to the answer, the answer to the question is that the Hon. Member is drawing conclusions based upon things which were put before the Estey Commission last week. They are the conclusions which he is drawing from it. The whole purpose of the Estey Commission is for Mr. Justice Estey to draw these conclusions, so that he can present a report to the House and to the people of Canada which asserts his judgment of the various points of view that entered into the decisions which were taken surrounding the demise of those two banks.

Mr. Nystrom: What did you know?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Until Mr. Justice Estey brings forward his report, I am not going to make any furhter comments.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, it sounds like the Government is about to make its case for shutting down the House, because it does not intend to answer the most important questions before the nation.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Tobin: I welcome the Prime Minister back from the Commonwealth meeting. I hope he has learned a lesson from the British Prime Minister. I hope he is prepared to move a little out of his seat and answer some questions.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Tobin: I want to ask him the question which was asked by the Opposition House Leader that he deliberately chose not to answer. What information did the Prime Minister have which caused him to overrule the Minister he selected and appointed to oversee the entire matter, to overrule her decision and her judgment that this—

Mr. Speaker: I am in some difficulty. The House knows that our practices have been to allow Members to put the questions they wish to put. However, the House also knows that we have a tradition of not simply repeating, repeating, and repeating the same question. May I, therefore, ask the Hon. Member to come immediately to a question which perhaps has not been asked and already answered?

Mr. Tobin: Did the Prime Minister have access to any information which was not available to other Members of his Cabinet who were part of the decision to allow the bail-out package to go ahead? Did he have any information which was not available to other Ministers?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should realize that this is a government decision. It is a decision taken by the Government at that time. The basis for the decision is not subject to a wide-ranging debate in the House of Commons as to who knew what and who did what during that time.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Why not?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Because the—

Mr. Rossi: It looks fishy.

Mr. Andre: Have you heard of responsible Government and responsible Ministers?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): What are you afraid of?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If Hon. Members would let me complete my answer, I will give them an answer. This is a collective decision taken by the Government. What individual Ministers felt and what individual Ministers brought forward what information to the decision are subject to Cabinet confidences. The result is a collective decision; the result is a Government decision.

MINISTER'S MARCH STATEMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, that is an admission that there were differences among the Cabinet.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: I have a supplementary question. Can the Minister of Finance tell us why, on March 29, the Minister of State for Finance told the House that $255 million was sufficient, when we know that she knew on the twenty-fourth that the package was flawed by $116 million? How could she make that statement and mislead the House?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that what the Hon. Member has added to that question is totally wrong. The decision was taken by the Government based on the information which we had at that time. The information which we had was sufficient for us to make the judgment—

Mr. Tobin: What information did you have?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —that the rescue package would be successful.

NATIONAL REVENUE

GULF TAKEOVER—TAX RULING

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. During his absence the former Deputy Minister of Finance stated that in the Olympia & York-Gulf-PetroCan deal, which came before the P and P Committee of Cabinet on a number of occasions, the matter was discussed during the time the negotiations were progressing. Why did the Prime Minister not move during that period to close the tax loophole which will allow $500 million to $1 billion of taxpayers' money to be paid out? Why did he not close it when he knew it was going to happen?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with regard to this, the company, O&Y, exercised the right of all citizens, including corporate citizens, under the Act to seek a ruling. The ruling was made objectively by officers of the Crown in the Department of National Revenue, and presumably it became part of a package which allowed that company to make an offer. That transpired in the normal course of business, and it was not for Cabinet, retroactively or at any time in those circumstances, to place judgments upon legislation which had passed the House in, I believe, 1971.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, we all understand that it was Liberal legislation and that it had been used maybe five or six times. However, I am concerned about the following. Why did the Government, knowing that it would cost taxpayers between $500 million and $1 billion, not move during the time the negotiations were being proceeded with, in advance of the deal being consummated, to close that particular tax provision to ensure that Canadian taxpayers would not be ripped off further?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I responded fully in that regard. Canadian citizens or Canadian corporations, under the laws which govern our jurisdiction in tax matters, have the right to address themselves directly to the Department of National Revenue to seek a tax ruling. That is what transpired.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—ANSWERING OF QUESTIONS IN PARLIAMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I find it to be terribly offensive, and I ask the Minister of Finance to clarify for Members of Parliament whether it is a decision of his and the Prime Minister that they will not answer questions with regard to that subject matter until the Estey Commission reports? Is that what the Minister of Finance is telling the House, thereby in fact resigning from his responsibilities?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the specific question which has been posed, probably have a dozen times, and in many cases using exactly the same words. I do not think that it is an appropriate use of the time of the House.

Mr. Tobin: That is not for you to judge.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Nor, with respect, do I believe that it is in line with the rules of the House that I should have continually to answer the same question, time and time again, because Hon. Members cannot get it into their heads.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has not answered the question repeatedly. I charge that the Minister of Finance is involved in a cover-up, and he is refusing—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is there a question?

Mr. Dingwall: Will the Minister of Finance tell the House if he knew in detail about the $116 million difference? Will he tell the House whether he knew about that particular difference?

An Hon. Member: Yes or no.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Andre: Same question.

Mr. Rossi: Harvey, you are not the Speaker; go back to sleep.

An Hon. Member: We all heard that.

Mr. Speaker: I think it is clear, since we have been told, that the question being repeated will result in the answer being repeated. It does not seem to me to be in the interest of the House simply to keep repeating the same question and the same answer; it just does not seem to me to make much sense.

EMPLOYMENT

IMPACT ON QUEBEC OF FREE TRADE AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware of the fact that according to figures released by his Minister for External Trade, about 200,000 jobs in the manufacturing sector in Quebec will be threatened as a result of a free trade treaty with the United States? Since many of these jobs are in industries that are particularly vulnerable such as textiles, clothing and footwear, what assurance can he offer that a free trade agreement with the United States would not cost Quebec more than it would gain in terms of jobs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking a hypothetical question, but I can inform him that despite his preamble about the job priorities he mentioned, last week I spoke directly to President Reagan about these issues in connection with certain initiatives that may be taken by the U.S. Congress and which may have a disastrous effect on production in Quebec or elsewhere. I received the assurance that the President of the United States would intervene vigorously to support certain changes or free trade between our countries, to ensure that we would not lose jobs in Quebec or the rest of Canada, pending negotiations if any.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY

IMPACT OF IMPORTS ON QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister realize that the textile industry in Quebec is losing jobs at this very moment as a result of imports, and if the President is going to intervene in the United States, will the Prime Minister and his Government intervene here in Canada to guarantee that at least half of the Canadian textile market will be reserved for Canadians and Canadian manufacturers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member forgot to mention is that in our first year, 304,000 new jobs were created, because the Conservative Government came to power; that the unemployment rate is the lowest it has been since three years; that youth unemployment has dropped 2.2 per cent in twelve months; and that interest rates are at their lowest level in seven years here in Canada. That is an extraordinary record of economic expansion.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, we have a positive policy in that we do not blame our neighbours. We know that we Canadians are able to do a lot when we work together, and 300,000 new jobs are a dramatic indication of what we are capable of achieving in our economy.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PENSION INDEXATION—POSITION OF PENSIONERS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the President of the Treasury Board and, with your generosity, I will have a chance to ask both of them.

The first is to request, on behalf of the many thousands of superannuates in Canada, the status of negotiations concerning the indexation of the pensions that they paid for.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, further to my answer to the Hon. Member on September 26 last, I can inform him that we have received, on the management side and on the employee side, the reports of our actuarial consultants. Reports have been exchanged between the two groups, they are under study at the moment, and will lead to discussions within the next week to ten days to come to, as I mentioned at that time, a fair and equitable resolution to the issue, putting the pension fund of employees on a sound financial basis and in line with the commitments of this Party and the Government.

PUBLIC SERVANTS' PENSIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. I would like to know what you intend to do to restore the base of public service pensions which was eroded as a result of the unacceptable Bill C-133?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this question has been raised many times by associations of employees and pensioners. They want the Government to review closely the very negative impact which that unilateral decision of the previous administration may have had on public service employees and pensioners.

The matter is indeed the subject of discussions with the groups involved and a decision will be made which I hope will be acceptable to all parties concerned.

ENERGY

PRICE OF NATURAL GAS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who will remember speaking at Jasper last June when she said: "There are more than two million households out there on natural gas and they will be looking for a fair deal this November."

Can the Minister assure the consumers of Canada that they will be getting a fair deal, including a cut in natural gas prices, by November 1?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I have said before, this is a matter that is under negotiation. Our officials are meeting again today, as we have met constantly over the last two weeks. I am meeting again with the western Ministers tomorrow, and I do not discuss details of these negotiations until they are concluded.

PLEDGE ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources pledged, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians would never have to pay more for Canadian natural gas than Americans do. Is it the attention of the Minister to live up to this pledge?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated to the Hon. Member that I will not discuss details of these negotiations in public until they are concluded. I can assure him that all Parties are trying very hard to come up with a conclusion which is fair to both consumers and producers.

ESTEY COMMISSION—MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister knows well the meaning of ministerial responsibility. He also knows that the Estey Commission's terms of reference are such that it may not deal in the slightest way with ministerial responsibility.

Considering that the Minister of Finance just a few moments ago said that he refused to answer questions on the subject matter before the Estey Commission indefinitely into the future—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): On that particular issue.

Mr. Broadbent: —even if it is dealing with ministerial responsibility, my question to the Prime Minister is simply this. Does he agree with this complete abdication of responsibility by the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understood the Minister of Finance to say that he was disinclined to answer the same question repeated time and time again. He was quite open of course, as he is obliged to be, to respond to any other question at any time submitted by any Members of the House.

One of the Hon. Members referred to the Prime Minister of Great Britain. The Prime Minister of Great Britain would be very surprised to see the extent to which the Canadian Prime Minister and all Ministers are here. We try to be here every day to respond fully to the questions from Hon. Members.

BANK BAIL-OUT—INFORMATION AVAILABLE TO PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Considering that the Prime Minister, by his answer, has agreed that ministerial responsibility questions will be answered by the Government, I would like to ask him, considering that the Minister of State for Finance came into the House one Monday in March, gave an estimate of cost that was $100 million less than the Inspector of Banks conveyed to Ottawa on the Sunday night, will he as Prime Minister answer for his responsibility and tell the House did he or did he not have this information on the weekend. Please answer.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Hon. Member does well—he always does well until he adopts the Clarence Darrow pose. In point of fact the response of the Minister of State for Finance has been full and complete.

An Hon. Member: Yes or no?

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member yells yes or no. One of the reasons that we responded with a commission of inquiry was pursuant to strong suggestions made by the NDP who indicated in the House of Commons that the only manner in which this matter could properly be handled would be by a commission of inquiry. We sought out someone we thought was the most distinguished person in Canada in terms of independence to conduct this commission of inquiry, and we want to let him get on with the job, and do it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—EMIGRATION OF JEWS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State of External Affairs but in his absence I will direct it to the Parliamentary Secretary. There was encouraging news out of Israel last week that thousands of Soviet Jews may receive permission to emigrate to Israel. I know the Parliamentary Secretary was with the secretary of State in Moscow earlier this year when the plight of refusniks was forcefully discussed. Is this encouraging news valid? Will the Jews in Russia be given freedom to emigrate, and freedom from social and religious harassment and imprisonment?

● (1450)

Mr. Gerry Weiner (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member for Don Valley East has been very concerned about the plight of Soviet Jewry. The Government is closely monitoring the situation of Soviet Jews but regretfully sees no improvement in their predicament. Emigration remains statistically insignificant. There were only 268 exit visas authorized by the Soviet Union in the last three months, about the same as the low figures of last year.

The Government is also concerned about reports of continued cultural and religious difficulties experienced by the Jewish community. Canada is calling upon the Soviet Union to adhere to internationally recognized and fundamental human rights, which include the freedoms of religion, cultural expression, and emigration. We will continue to press Soviet authorities to permit increased Jewish emigration.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED ECONOMIC SUMMIT AND TRADE SHOW

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is the Minister able to confirm to the House that he plans to spend more than $1 million on a native economic summit and trade show in Toronto next June, and is it the case that Argyle Productions, a firm headed by the Minister's good friend and political organizer, Mr. Bill Marshall, will receive over half a million dollars to put on this show?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I think I can confirm the first part of the Hon. Member's question and certainly reject the second part of it.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, in confirming that expenditure, does the Minister really feel comfortable using such a large amount of money from the Indian Community Development Program, which is not very substantial to begin with, to finance a hyped-up media event, at the same time as the people of Lubicon Lake are looking to the Minister for help and have been looking to him for quite some time in their struggle for survival?

Hon. David Crombie (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am very disappointed that the Hon. Member would suggest that it is somehow a hyped-up media event, particularly when the event has not yet been described. Certainly he has no knowledge whatsoever about it.

Mr. Penner: What about the program?

Mr. Crombie: No, there is no program so there is no way the Hon. Member would have any understanding of it.

Am I comfortable with using funds to create jobs for Indian people? You bet. The only thing that has been done for 15 years is to give them the sickness of more welfare dollars and no money to get them into business so that they can create jobs for themselves. That is why I am comfortable with that.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

SUBCOMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On Friday the Subcommittee on Equality Rights tabled a unanimous report calling for sweeping changes in federal laws and policies affecting women, the disabled, gays and lesbians, visible minorities, and the elderly, amont others. In view of the many statements made in the past by the Prime Minister calling for tolerance and respect for an full protection of minority rights, will the Prime Minister assure the House that the Government will take early action to implement these unanimous recommendations for real equality for all Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in my absence I believe the Minister of Justice indicated that there would be a response from the Government at a reasonably early moment and I believe he indicated a time frame which would give us the time to analyse very carefully some of the very significant recommendations that have been made. That response will be provided as quickly as possible. My hon. friend can be assured that it is my hope that nothing in that response will be a variance with our belief that minority rights are indeed fundamental and very important in Canada.

SEXUAL DISCRIMINATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister agree with the recommendation of the Sub-committee on Equality Rights—echoed as well by the Canadian Human Rights Commission and endorsed by his colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—that discrimination based on sexual orientation must be barred by his Government, the federal Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that would be part of the comprehensive response the Government is expected to submit to the House. I suspect the Hon. Member will not be surprised to learn that I am against any kind of discrimination whatsoever. Our imperfections notwithstanding, we are trying to build a more tolerant and equitable society in Canada and, with great difficulty, we will succeed, I am sure.

PETROLEUM INDUSTRY

ACQUISITION OF GULF CANADA—TAX CONCESSIONS—CABINET'S ROLE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Considering the answer he gave earlier to the New Democratic Party House Leader, could he give the House the assurance that at no time was the administrative decision concerning Olympia and York and Gulf Canada discussed in Cabinet, neither before nor after it became effective?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member could explain what decisions he is talking about.

Mr. Chrétien: The decision he made to allow Olympia and York a tax exemption worth between $500 million and one billion dollars. Was the administrative decision made by departmental officials discussed in Cabinet, yes or no, before or after the officials made their decision?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, at the risk of being repetitive, I have to tell my hon. friend opposite, who knows these things very well, that this particular ruling was discussed in the proper way by the officials of National Revenue. The Hon. Member also knows, as I have mentioned to the House before, that, contrary to some opinions that have been expressed, the taxpayers in question could have gone ahead with this particular transaction without any ruling at all. The fact that they asked for comfort, for a ruling, does not necessarily mean that this transaction was solely dependent on such a ruling.

TIMING OF CABINET'S DICUSSION OF DECISION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I shall make my question even more specific, either for the Minister or the Prime Minister.

I would like to know whether the administrative decision by officials of the Department of National Revenue was discussed in Cabinet or in a Cabinet committee, before or after it was made by these officials. That is what we want to know, because if the decision made by these officials was discussed by Cabinet or a Cabinet committee, it is then no longer an administrative decision but a political decision.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that I cannot do that nor would he want me to break the confidentiality of what is discussed in Cabinet. However, I think I have already answered the main question, which is that the decision was made by National Revenue officials on the basis of objective criteria that apply to all taxpayers, corporate or otherwise.

RESIGNATION OF WOMAN MANAGER

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who will know that Isobel Goligher was the first woman to achieve a senior managerial position with the federal Government in the Department of Supply and Services in London, Ontario, and that within a year of her obtaining this promotion she resigned under duress. Would the Prime Minister establish an independent inquiry to look into the circumstances surrounding her resignation and to ensure that justice be done in the case of Isobel Goligher?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister responsible for the status of women, I will take that question as notice and see that it is brought to his attention.

REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I had a letter delivered to the Prime Minister today advising him of this matter. The request has been longstanding in his office. The only means of redress are those at his level.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is there a question?

Ms. McDonald: Will the Prime Minister agree to establish an independent inquiry since there are no further means of redress? Will he keep the word that he gave us when he agreed, as Leader of the Opposition, that an independent inquiry was the only means of redress for a person in this situation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take a look quickly at the suggestion raised by my hon. friend. One of the main objectives of the Government on which we have acted effectively—not perfectly but effectively and well—has been to increase the number of women in senior responsible positions in the Public Service of Canada. We have done so dramatically, and we want to ensure that that process continues at all times and is not inhibited by the kind of alleged injustice raised by the Hon. Member. If that is the case, I will get on to it right away, and I thank the Hon. Member for raising this matter.

UNLEADED GASOLINE TAX

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment who undoubtedly knows that his colleague, the Minister of Finance, is proposing a tax measure to impose a greater tax on unleaded gasoline than on leaded gasoline. Would the Minister tell the House what steps he intends to take to stop this anti-environmental measure which, in essence, rewards the polluter and runs counter to the acid rain policy which the Minister is applying at the present time?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member may know, tomorrow at three o'clock p.m. the Royal Society of Canada will be releasing a major report, undertaken for my Department, on a broad range of issues, relating to the item to which the Hon. Member refers. At that time I myself will make a public statement. I ask for the Hon. Member's indulgence and patience until I am prepared to make the statement.

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, October 25 of this year, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) pointed out a discrepancy between the English and French versions of the Government Response to the Second Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages Policy and Programs.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE AND UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY MEETING—STATEMENT OF PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to report to the House this afternoon on the events of the past two weeks. During that period I have had the opportunity of representing Canada at the Commonwealth heads of Government meeting at Nassau, making my first address to the General Assembly of the UN, meeting with leaders of the western industrialized nations in anticipation of the upcoming summit between President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev, and holding a number of bilateral meetings with leaders both in New York and in Nassau.

This morning I was able to provide Her Excellency, the Governor General, with a full briefing on these activities.

The Commonwealth heads of Government met in Nassau against a backdrop of continuing violence in South Africa and increasing international condemnation of that country's repressive policy of apartheid. Before the Nassau meeting convened, each Commonwealth country had, in its own way, taken action to express its repugnance for the intransigance of the regime in Pretoria towards the aspirations of the vast majority of South Africans—their simple desire to be free and to participate fully and responsibly in the national life of their country.

Each Government, however, was fully aware that at Nassau we would face the challenge of finding a consensus on the collective and unanimous message which needed to be sent to President Botha and the Government in South Africa.

While Commonwealth leaders began the meeting united in the belief that apartheid must end, we did not all arrive in the Bahamas agreed that economic measures were the best or even the appropriate way to signal our determination to see an end brought to systematic racial discrimination in South Africa.

In my opening statement at the conference, on behalf of all Canadians, I tried to stress the unanimity of resolve I felt existed amont Commonwealth leaders, each of whom had clearly expressed his or her abhorrence for apartheid. I also confirmed the view of Canadians that this resolve must find expression in a common program of action to enable Commonwealth countries to signal to Pretoria, clearly and without exception, that world-wide pressure against South Africa will be sustained, and must be sustained, until such time as apartheid comes to an end.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The discussions among leaders, which ultimately produced the Commonwealth Accord on South Africa, were long, arduous and not without some difficulties. At the same time, I thought they were characterized by a degree of good will and civility which I understand is typical of Commonwealth meetings and which contributes to what I found to be the very special nature of this forum. But no matter how challenging the negotiations, all participants readily agreed on the urgency of the situation in Souch Africa, the rightness of the struggle against apartheid and the need for a common and united front.

The Accord articulates a unanimous call for the authorities in Pretoria to declare that the system of apartheid will be dismantled and specific and meaningful action taken in fulfilment of that intent; to terminate the existing state of emergency; to release immediately and unconditionally Nelson Mandela and all others imprisoned and detained for their opposition to apartheid—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: —to establish political freedom and unconditionally lift the existing ban on the African National Congress and other political Parties; and initiate, in the context of a suspension of violence on all sides, a process of dialogue across the lines of colour, politics and religion, with a view, finally, to establishing a non-racial and representative Government in South Africa.

On the basis on these principles, Commonwealth heads of Government also agreed to joint measures aimed at making the Government of South Africa understand the urgency of dismantling apartheid and establishing the structures of a truly representative Government in that country.

In addition to reiterating Commonwealth support for rigorous implementation of the compulsory embargo on arms sales to South Africa and to reaffirming their approval of the Gleneagles Accord of 1977 to discourage sports encounters with that country, Commonwealth leaders have agreed to apply the following joint economic sanctions against South Africa:

—ban all new public loans to the Government of South Africa and its agencies;

—be prepared to act unilaterally to take any measures judged appropriate to ban the importation of krugerrands;

—cease all public financing for missions to South Africa as well as participation in exhibits and trade fairs in that country;

—ban the sales and exports of any computer equipment likely to be used by the South African military, police or security forces;

—ban new contracts for sales and exports of nuclear products, materials and technology to South Africa;

—ban the sales and exports of oil to South Africa;

—impose a strict and rigorously controlled embargo on imports of arms, munitions, military vehicles and paramilitary equipment from South Africa;

—impose an embargo on all military co-operation with South Africa;

—discourage all cultural and scientific events, with the exception of those contributing to the elimination of apartheid or not likely to promote it.

Mr. Speaker, all these measures have already been adopted, in some guise or other, by the Government of Canada. Some have been applied recently by the Reagan Administration and some of course had been previously approved by the British Government. Some of these measures, such as the ban on granting new loans, will have significant repercussions in South Africa.

In addition to these joint measures, heads of Government have agreed to give a restricted group of prominent Commonwealth figures a mandate to "encourage in every possible way the progress of the indispensable process of political dialogue to contribute to peaceful change and turn away the terrible threat of conflagration looming over this country".

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the House that I got in touch with the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau last Monday and asked him to consider the possibility of becoming a member of this important contact group. I had the pleasure of formally submitting Mr. Trudeau's name and the Secretary General of the Commonwealth will go over the matter in more detail with Mr. Trudeau within a few days.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, along with the President of Zambia and the Prime Ministers of Australia, the Bahamas, India, the United Kingdom and Zimbabwe, I was selected as member of a co-ordination group responsible for steering the activities of the group of leading personalities and monitoring progress in efforts made to cause the breakdown of apartheid.

We will be meeting within six months to review the situation in South Africa.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker, I think that Canada and all Canadians should feel some pride about the conclusion of the Commonwealth Accord.

During the many talks which finally led to the accord, I stressed, on behalf of Canadians, the importance of conveying clearly to the Government of Pretoria that the people and the States of the Commonwealth were determined to unite their efforts to breakdown apartheid.

We reached the objective, which was to organize common action. We are now waiting to know the reaction of South Africa.

Should the reaction be positive, we will monitor the situation very closely to assess the nature of the reform measures and the tempo of their implementation. Should it be negative, our only avenue will be to consider increasing sanctions against South Africa, either with other Commonwealth countries or alone.

[English]

The Commonwealth leaders' meeting in Nassau also addressed in some detail the current international economic situation and Canada was honoured to make the lead statement in this discussion. I was pleased to be able to report to Commonwealth leaders that at the recent World Bank-IMF meeting in Seoul, Canada was successful in maintaining preferential lending conditions under the International Development Association for smaller Commonwealth Caribbean countries. During the economic discussions in Nassau Canada ensured that increased Commonwealth resources will be applied to activities aimed at integrating women's concerns with all of the organization's activities. I also advised Commonwealth leaders that Canada will contribute $50 million over the next three years to the Commonwealth fund for technical co-operation.

Finally, the meeting in Nasseau provided a welcome opportunity for me to meet with a group of leaders of countries with which Canada has a special relationship, the Commonwealth Caribbean. When I last met with leaders of these countries in Jamaica in February they asked, as they had asked over a number of years, for Canada's co-operation and for a special degree of understanding and comprehension of their problems in this hemisphere, and we have discussed this in the House, in dealing with a wide variety of trade problems. In Nassau, at a special meeting with them, I was pleased to advise the Caribbean leaders that Canada is responding with a wide variety of practical and concrete measures. These include the establishment of a one-way duty-free trade arrangement, which will cover 99 per cent of Caribbean exports to Canada; an amendment to Canadian legislation, which will permit the bottling of unblended rum in Canada; the development of a sourcing directory of Commonwealth Caribbean manufacturing and export capacity to assist Caribbean exports to Canada; the establishment of a system to enable Caribbean trade commissioners access to DRIE offices; and 50 new scholarships in Canada for students from the Commonwealth Caribbean area. In addition, air agreements were signed between Canada and the Governments of Jamaica, Barbados, and St. Kitts-Nevis. This was an illustration of a special responsibility that Canada has and accepts with regard to special areas of focus in the Commonwealth. We accepted that responsibility on behalf of all Members of the House, and I am delighted to report to all Members the satisfaction with which Canadian intervention in these vital areas was received by fellow Commonwealth members in the Caribbean.

The success of the Commonwealth Conference in Nassau itself, Mr. Speaker, was for me a first experience and a moving reaffirmation of the value of this very unique and special international organization. At the close of the Conference I extended Canada's invitation for the Commonwealth heads of Government to hold their next meeting in Canada in 1987, and I am pleased to announce that we expect this important meeting will be held in Vancouver, British Columbia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: It was a choice between Vancouver and Manicouagan.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, in my speech to the United Nations' General Assembly last Wednesday I addressed briefly five key issues of great importance to Canadians. I reconfirmed on behalf of all Members of Parliament the central role of both multilateral diplomacy and the United Nations in Canadian foreign policy. On behalf of all Canadians I expressed the hope that the upcoming Geneva talks between President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev will indeed set the world on the road towards a significant reduction in the nuclear arsenals on both sides. I reported briefly to the General Assembly on the conclusions reached at Nassau amongst Commonwealth heads of Government on a program of common action aimed at putting an end to apartheid. In light of continuing incidents of international terrorism, which has again been discussed in this House, I called for strong and co-operative action among nations to deal with this bane to the existence of civilized societies.

Finally, both in my address to the UN and later, in a separate UNICEF ceremony, I confirmed that Canada has committed an additional $25 million as our contribution to the UN target of world-wide universal immunization by 1990. If that target is reached the lives of as many as five million infants and children will be saved every year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: This is another indication of the unglamourous work which UN agencies do and do not always get recognition for. It was an important oportunity to draw attention to that magnificent work performed by so many people on behalf of those who sometimes do not have Parliaments, Members of Parliament and Cabinet Ministers to speak for them.

In New York I had meetings as well with Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres and Prime Minister Nakasone of Japan. With Mr. Peres I discussed possible joint co-operation with Israel in civilian research and development projects. Mr. Peres outlined for me his current efforts to restore momentum to the Middle East peace process. Despite recent events in the region I am heartened by the sustained commitment of both Prime Minister Peres and King Hussein to the pursuit of a just and fair-minded negotiated peace settlement. I assured Mr. Peres that this process has Canada's strong and unwavering support.

The meeting with Mr. Nakasone, our third in eight months, enabled us to deepen our already excellent personal relationship to explore the particular perspective each of us brings to the principal economic and political issues of the moment. I outlined the Government's objectives in seeking a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States and I assured him that such an agreement, if indeed it comes to pass, would be fully consistent with our GATT obligations and would in no way diminish our excellent and growing relationships with Japan and Pacific Rim nations. At the conclusion of our discussion in New York, Mr. Nakasone invited me to make an official visit to Japan following the Economic Summit meeting in Tokyo next spring and I was pleased to accept.

Last Thursday I had a private conversation with President Reagan during which we discussed a few questions of common interest.

With respect to preliminary talks on the possibility of concluding an over-all trade agreement between Canada and the United States, I expressed the hope that, in these delicate times when we are getting ready for future negotiations, neither country will let isolated trade tension factors disrupt the climate required for achieving an agreement.

In that respect I pointed out to the President that we were experiencing difficulties in certain sectors such as resinous lumber, pork, potatoes, textiles and fish.

We agreed to do the utmost so as to prevent protectionist pressures in any such sector from jeopardizing negotiations on the kind of over-all agreement we both have in mind.

For his part, the President assured me that he strongly favours a climate of free and open discussions, and that he is adamantly opposed to the various protectionist propositions originating from the Congress.

More specifically, in response to a direct question put by me, Mr. Reagan suggested to me that legislative measures designed to stop the flow of Canadian goods into the U.S. would encounter his vigorous opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The President and I agreed that our next bilateral meeting involving questions essentially of simply Canadian-American interests, although not exclusively, should take place in Washington on March 18. At that meeting we both look forward to receiving the report being prepared by Bill Davis and Drew Lewis, our special envoys on acid rain. In this regard I stressed that the search for a solution to the problem of acid rain should remain at the very top of our agenda for that meeting next March.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, many heads of state and heads of Government had come to New York on the occasion of the 40th anniversary of the United Nations. President Reagan took advantage of that rather unique situation and gathering to initiate discussions with the leaders of five of the principal allies of the United States of America, including Canada. The purpose was to exchange views about the forthcoming meeting between the President and General Secretary Gorbachev in Geneva. I had already conveyed some of my views on this subject to President Reagan in private correspondence and telephone conservations.

The President was surely right to have taken this initiative. The first meeting between the Soviet and United States leaders at the summit in six years would be a crucial event, whatever the circumstances. But it is all the more so now—it is all the more important. The Soviet Union has an impressive new leader and the United States has an experienced President who enjoys massive public support in his own country. That is so important because of the requirement of an American President to submit whatever is agreed to the Senate for ratification. As we met in New York, the six western leaders recognized that these circumstances represented perhaps a historic opportunity to set relations between the United States and the Soviet Union on a new and constructive course.

Our talks I think, Mr. Speaker, fully justified the unprecedented time devoted to them. In two sessions lasting more than five hours the President was able to present his own ideas at length and to take the views of others. The degree of mutual understanding was impressive. The President knows that he carries with him to Geneva the hopes and expectations not only of his own people, but those of all the western countries. He knows he has their full support. He understands and agrees that progress in arms control and disarmament is central and vital. But equally, he shares the view that, if progress is to be made on the central issue, all other issues that bear upon it will have to be considered, among them human rights, trade and cultural relations and regional issues. The leaders agreed that it would be unreasonable to presume bad faith on the part of the new Soviet leadership. If an honourable agreement is possible at all, we shall seek to conclude one.

In New York we agreed that it would be extremely useful if the President could provide NATO members with a full debriefing immediately following the Geneva summit. As a result, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to tell the House today that NATO heads of Government will gather in Brussels on Thursday, November 21, to hear President Reagan's impressions of his meeting with Mr. Gorbachev.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Over the past two weeks, Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to reassert certain major principles of our international policy and, more specifically, to reiterate our strong commitment towards the Commonwealth, the United Nations and the Western Alliance.

I know that at the close of the Nassau meeting none of the other delegations entertained any doubt whatsoever about the seriousness of the measures this Government will take to put a quick end to systematic racial discrimination in South Africa and pave the way for a total ban on apartheid.

Of course, speaking for Canada, we alone cannot achieve that, but we are proud of the fact that the Commonwealth did rise to the momentous challenge confronting it.

We hope that the Nassau message has been received not only in Pretoria but also in the entire community of nations, for the world will not wait indefinitely for Pretoria authorities to come to their senses.

[English]

Canadians take special pride in the significant contributions that they have made over the years to the United Nations and its many associated bodies and agencies. Distinguished Canadians such as the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson are intimately associated in the public mind with important successes of the United Nations. It was a pleasure for me to reassert our commitment to the U.N. All Canadian Governments and all Canadian political Parties, irrespective of political allegiance, I think have held this view of the U.N. as a vital world body.

We are aware of the deficiencies and limitations of the U.N., but we continue to believe that what nations can accomplish by working together will always be greater than what any one nation can accomplish by going it alone. In this regard I take particular satisfaction from the strength, unity and vitality of the western alliance. When the leaders of the United Kingdom, Japan, Italy, West Germany and Canada met with President Reagan to discuss the forthcoming summit, the strength of cohesion of our common purpose was strongly evident. We are all deeply committed to the alliance and the principles it represents. We were also agreed that every reasonable avenue must be explored and every thoughtful attempt made to reduce tensions and promote co-operation between the two superpowers.

I encountered no disagreement, Mr. Speaker, when, on behalf of all Canadians, I urged President Reagan to go that extra mile to seek a just agreement, to presume that Mr. Gorbachev is no less interested in a secure peace. These are the ingredients that Canadians view as indispensable to the conclusion of a fair and verifiable accord. The quest for peace is everyone's business, Mr. Speaker. While Canada will not be present at the table in Geneva, our interests will. We shall remain vigilant to ensure that they continue to be defended effectively and well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all Members of Parliament, I would like to welcome the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) back to Canada. Especially those of us on the opposition benches are very happy to see him back. I am not sure that he is that happy to be with us, but he is smiling and I think it is all right. I would like to raise a question of procedure, Mr. Speaker. This statement was delivered to my office ten minutes before Question Period. There may have been an error somewhere, and I know that was not the desire of the Prime Minister, but I am just reporting that fact. If it is an accident, it is an accident.

We welcome the Prime Minister back and we realize that over the years the survival of the Commonwealth was always related to one or more crises. The apartheid crisis was a great danger for the Commonwealth due to the great division of views among the participants. I am glad that this problem has been somewhat resolved by the participants. Of course, we wish that Prime Minister Thatcher had moved more than a little bit, but under the circumstances I think it was better to take what was offered than to have this great association broken on this problem.

I am happy with the report that there is an agreement and there will be some sanctions put forward. I do think that the new ones are marginal. I think the most significant point is that there was an agreement, and the second most significant point is that there will be another meeting in six months. I hope that there will be progress made during that period of time. I hope that the group which has been selected to work on these problems because of their past experience in international affairs will be successful.

And I hope that under these circumstances, the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau, our former Prime Minister, will accept to play the part the Right Hon. Prime Minister has asked him to play, and I am sure that he could make himself useful in this process and that his experience in the area of international relations would be much appreciated by the other members of the committee, and we all wish for the committee the best possible success.

I have also noted, perhaps with even more pleasure, the speech which the Prime Minister has made before the United Nations, more specifically his reference to the situation in South Africa. I feel that if both statements could be combined, we could make considerable progress, for I think we should set a time limit for the South African Government to abolish apartheid which all Canadians find abominable. Such a time limit should be clear and final.

And when the Prime Minister stated in New York that Canada would go as far as breaking off relations with South Africa unless enough progress were made within a certain time, he would have been well advised to do as the House had suggested, that is, to set a time limit, clearly indicating to that Government that if not enough progress had been made by, say, July 1, 1986, Canada would not only impose global economic sanctions against that country, but demonstrate unequivocally our disagreement by severing our diplomatic ties with it. As a matter of fact, Canada is one of the last countries of the world still with diplomatic ties with that country.

I can understand the Prime Minister's willingness to allow President Botha a certain time to operate politically within his country, considering the difficult situation which now exists in South Africa, the election which is to be held there, and Parliament which is scheduled to reconvene in early 1986. However, if in the spring or early summer of 1986, no progress has been made, I think the Prime Minister should act within six months, during the meeting which is to take place as a follow up to the Bahamas meeting, and announce that Canada would severe its diplomatic ties with South Africa within a couple of months of that meeting.

As the Prime Minister said himself, the House unanimously condemns the apartheid system anyway. We are not very far apart as far as means are concerned, and I believe that the major and most important difference of opinion at this time is related to the fact that the Prime Minister has still not decided that he can set a target date after which our relations with South Africa must be severed. However, I know that he will consider the suggestion made by the Opposition and that we can continue to have a non-partisan policy in this regard.

I also want to refer to the Commonwealth Conference as the Prime Minister spoke about external aid. We are all very happy that a few minor changes have been made to create a relatively favourable impression, but it still remains, and other countries should clearly know this, that our policy has unfortunately been changed and that the objective of allocating 0.7 per cent of our gross national product to external aid has been set aside by this Government, that it has simply reduced the total amount which we had promised to provide to developing countries in external aid and that the commitment of Canada for external aid amounts to less than it did previously. However, the changes proposed here are obviously welcome even though, as a whole, they do not improve the image created by the Government when it imposed cutbacks in this regard last November.

[English]

Let me turn to the issue of world peace and nuclear disarmament which is a great preoccupation of all Canadians and the world. As the Right Hon. Prime Minister knows, the meeting between the leaders of the superpowers next month will be a great occasion. I believe we all want those two leaders to have the great wisdom to be able to find a common ground during this extremely important meeting.

I had the privilege in May and June to travel across Canada and witness the deep concern felt by Canadians about this problem. There has been great participation by Canadians on this issue, because since January the summit in Quebec left the impression that the Government would support the star wars program. After the storm that was created, and reflecting opinions throughout Canada, we are happy that the Prime Minister and the Government decided to accept the point of view of Canadians and of the two opposition Parties. We are grateful for that.

I am somewhat disappointed that the Prime Minister did not include in his statement an attempt to put pressure on the American Government to include the star wars program or the SDI Program on the agenda. The American administration, when dealing with Canadian problems, insists that everything be on the table when negotiating free trade. However, when negotiating peace in the world, nuclear disarmament and nuclear control, not all the issues are on the table. I believe that is very inconsistent. While there may be a secret which cannot be shared with the House of Commons, basically we must believe what we see. However, when it comes to world peace we should make it clear to the Americans that human survival should not be negotiated secretly but with our greatest skill and logic. When talking about a reduction of deadly nuclear weapons in the world, we must ensure that we do not move into a new area involving nuclear weapons in space. That is why it is so disappointing that this new escalation is left out of the equation completely. We must insist that there not be an escalation of confrontation in the universe but that there should be instead a concentration on the reduction of nuclear arms on the earth and in the sea in order to make progress toward global peace.

I hope that the meeting in Geneva in November will not be distracted as a result of too many people filling the agenda with too many other problems that will prevent the consideration of the fundamental problem of nuclear disarmament. The fudamental problem concerns nuclear disarmament and preventing the increase of stockpiling of nuclear arms to the detriment of world peace and resulting in the creation of more hunger in the world. All the money that is spent to build these deadly weapons and develop the star war concept could be better used to feed the poor and educate the weak of the world.

I believe that we all want to remain as non-partisan as possible about these problems. When the Prime Minister travels in the near future I hope he will convey these messages from the Canadian public.

The Prime Minister referred to free trade and other matters. I want to tell the Prime Minister and I repeat to Canadians that the problem is a very, very delicate one. When I see the Prime Minister of Japan preoccupied about the global negotiations with the Americans on trade, it means we have to be careful.

● (1540)

In January last year I travelled in Japan. Many people were afraid about the new trend, that of the Canadian administration moving closer to the American administration. The Japanese see Canada as an international partner that can make its own decisions. They hope that Canada will remain a partner that can be relied upon as a secure supplier.

On of the fundamental problems of the Japanese Government and the Japanese businessmen, because they do not have these resources inland, is that they have to go around the world to get what they require from different countries. Up to now the Japanese have always looked upon Canada as an independent country that makes its own decisions.

If ever there were a crisis between the United States and Japan, they want to be sure that they could still come to Canada as they go to Brazil, Australia, Malaysia and so on because Canada has always been a secure supplier of goods. I am not surprised that Prime Minister Nakasone was preoccupied about the global negotiations. He must wonder why a country like Canada, having a surplus of $21 billion, wants to get into global negotiations. Canada is not going to these negotiations in a strong position, but in a week position. We are the ones with the surplus. It is the other side wanting to reduce the surplus. I would rather see the Government going, perhaps less spectacularly, but much more efficiently, on a one to one, problem by problem basis into these negotiations. The method used over the last 20 years has resulted in a large surplus for Canada and unfortunately for America, a large deficit for that country.

I am happy to have this occasion to welcome back the Prime Minister. After the glory of world travelling, I think that he will now deal daily with the banks, the tunas and so on—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: —and we will make sure that the Prime Minister has as good a time in Canada as he had abroad.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I too join in welcoming back the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). At the outset, I want to commend him on behalf of members of my Party for the generally quite constructive approach he took at his meetings while outside of our country representing the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister dealt with many important subject matters in his statement to the House. He talked about the United Nations as an organization, the Commonwealth, the IMF meetings in Seoul, trade discussions with the United States, and the importance of dealing efficiently and promptly with the acid rain problem among other matters.

Like the Prime Minister I want to concentrate on, and indeed in my case restrict my comments to, two important matters that he dealt with at greater length than he allocated to other subject matters. Specifically I shall speak about the situation in South Africa, the Commonweath response to that, and the forthcoming meeting between President Reagan and and the Secretary General of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, Mr. Gorbachev.

First, I want to say something about the situation in South Africa. Without belabouring the points in terms of rhetoric, I do want to say that I share totally, as do the overwhelming majority of Canadians, the noble sentiments expressed by the Prime Minister in his address to the United Nations about the moral abomination of apartheid. Whatever one may say about other regimes in the world, and there are many for which Canadians have no high regard in terms of what they do to civil liberties in particular, there is no other regime in the globe of which I am aware that divides human beings in terms of their rights on the basis of race. Opposition to racism is something that ought to have, by this point in human history, united all men and women, however else they may differ in political and econonomic policy matters, in attempting to rid the world of it. I commend the approach which the Prime Minister took in his statement at the United Nations on this important question.

I understand the important situation of the Prime Minister as head of a key Government in the Commonwealth and the difficult situation with which he was confronted in trying to work toward building a consensus among Commonwealth nations on this important issue, and the fact that a consensus was achieved at all is a positive sign. Given the importance of the Commonwealth continuing in the future, it was an understandable top priority goal of the Prime Minister.

At the same time, any consensus that includes Margaret Thatcher on this important question has to be a consensus, in my judgment, that is not likely to be very effective. I say that frankly. I suspect perhaps that the Prime Minister, if he could say so publicly, might even agree with what I have just said. His task was to work for a consensus, which the Commonwealth obviously ended up producing. It would have been good to see Commonwealth leaders, perhaps in some kind of circumstance and in some kind of way, openly taking on Margaret Thatcher in this issue. I am not, of course, doubting Margaret Thatcher's opposition to racism. That is not the issue. I do not think her credentials in that regard are any worse or any better than those of anyone in this House or any worse than those of other members of the Commonwealth. I totally deplore her unwillingness in policy matters to take the kind of tough action that ought to have been taken. Had she moved, I am sure the rest of the Commonwealth nations would have been prepared to accept her move. I regret that. We now have the consensus that has been produced, and we will be looking to see what will happen with it.

The real test, as everyone in the House knows, as the people in South Africa know and particularly the black majority in South Africa knows, will come after watching the regime in South Africa over the next six months to see if there is a response that is constructive, positive and that moves in the direction of removing apartheid. The initial response by the Government of South Africa has not been encouraging. It has said, rather like the Soviet Union when such matters are being discussed, that discussion of fundamental rights and human liberties is an internal matter.

One of the great accomplishments that began somewhere in the seventeenth century and has gradually evolved in the thinking of most politicians and most people in most states is that fundamental rights are not matters to be restricted to particular nation-state Governments. Fundamental rights are human rights and they ought to concern us all. We have a moral right to be discussing them, not only as they affect our citizens, but as they affect human beings anywhere in the globe.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Prud'homme: And not to be selective.

Mr. Broadbent: Of course not to be selective. The Government of South Africa has already responded to the Commonwealth declaration by saying that, in effect, it was not going to take the declaration seriously because it was an infringement on the rights of the South African Government to deny fundamental rights to the majority of the people. Violence in South Africa has continued since the statement produced by the Commonwealth leaders.

We look, as I say, with interest and with—how can I put it—qualified optimism or qualified pessimism about the efficacy of the declaration in getting the Government of South Africa to change its policy in the next six months.

● (1550)

Unfortunately, party policies continue to be applied. Canadian men and women would like the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to answer the following questions: First, what specific criteria does our Government intend to use to monitor the situation in South Africa and determine whether changes are occuring?

Second, what kind of contingency plans have our Government and those of other Commonwealth countries prepared in case South Africa pursues its apartheid policy?

[English]

I would now like to move on to the other subject of great interest and concern to people throughout the world, that is, the general problem of disarmament, the particular problem of nuclear disarmament and, more particular still, the meeting which will take place next month between President Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev.

The meeting between President Reagan and Secretary General Gorbachev next month in Geneva could be a critical junction point in human history. The world is at a turning point in the fight to slow down the arms race, especially where nuclear weapons are concerned.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the nations of this globe spend as a whole $1 billion a year for armaments. That would be sufficient to cancel the debt of all Third World countries. It is time to change our priorities.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has stated that the Geneva Summit represents a unique opportunity which must not be ruined in the search for world peace. He is quite right. He also said that it is time for the United States and the Soviet Union to go a step further.

All Canadian men and women support this statement wholeheartedly. Mr. Speaker, Canada is well-known for its ability to have frank discussions with both superpowers. It is a tradition that we must continue to nourish and cherish. However, it is better cherished and nourished by practical and specific gestures.

I would like the Prime Minister himself to make this further step.

[English]

During the summer months I had occasion to visit both Moscow and Washington and to have discussions with the chief negotiator of the Soviet Union at the Geneva Talks which took place recently and, back to back with that meeting, to meet with his American equivalent in Washington. While the Prime Minister was meeting with the Commonwealth heads in the Caribbean, I had occasion to take part in an important disarmament meeting in Vienna, attended by a number of Prime Ministers, as well as Party leaders in the Social Democratic movement.

I say to the Prime Minister and to other people in the nation that it seems to me that a framework of agreement is possible. There is an extra concrete step which, I say to the Prime Minister, he could be and should be taking right now. If there is a conclusion which I have drawn from my own meetings in Washington and in Moscow, and from the meetings last week in Vienna, it is that the two superpowers are maintaining for themselves a certain rigidity in two key areas, one for each of them. If it were forcefully presented, with minimal rhetoric, by a number of nations, whether or not they are in the NATO Alliance, there is at least a greater chance an agreement could be reached.

The framework which seems very clear includes the following points. The first is one which the two superpowers ought to share in common, that is, to make an agreement that we now not only have a freeze on the development of more nuclear weapons but that each of them reduce some of their nuclear weaponry. The two superpowers know that the Soviet Union has an advantage in its strike force capacity into certain areas and that the United States has an advantage in certain other areas. They both know—and they have an expertise which we in this country lack—what needs to be done to have a balanced reduction on the part of the United States in certain areas, on the one hand, and on the part of the Soviet Union in other areas, on the other hand. That is to what they have to agree in common. It is not very much, I say, for people with common sense as well as expertise to say at this point in human history that they have to agree to that.

There were two other points repeated in private talks in Washington, Moscow and Vienna. First, the Soviet Union has an obligation, at long last in the history of the discussions of these matters, to say that it will accept on site verification for any announced changes leading to a de-escalation in existing levels of armaments and a commitment not to construct more. The Soviet Union must move from its historic position. Sometimes in the past it has talked about this, but it has been greatly reluctant, to understate it, to accept that kind of verification. Given its strong opposition to the great escalation in spending on star wars, the Soviet Union may well be prepared now to move on that. The Soviets have to be prepared to do that. Second, I say that the United States has to make a specific concession which the Reagan administration has been reluctant to do, that is, as has already been said in the House, to put star wars on the agenda for discussion. What kind of a discussion can there be when one of those coming to the bargaining table says: "We want you to discuss everything, but there is one thing we want left out"?

I ask the Prime Minister to take some action on this publicly and to continue with the Canadian tradition which has been a non-partisan one. Mr. Trudeau, whom he invited to play a role in the Commonwealth, has a distinguished reputation in this field which all Canadians recognize. All Canadians, of whatever Party, recognize that Canada has played a constructive role, not simply by going along in a pre-established consensus among western countries in these matter, but from time to time speaking out in fair and clear terms to both superpowers. If we want some movement to take place on the part of both of them at Geneva next month, I say simply to the Prime Minister that time is short. Just as he called for the superpowers themselves to take that extra setp, I ask him to take that extra step himself and put before the superpowers the necessity of moving within the framework of the framework about which I have just talked.

Time is short. If we do not move in this kind of direction soon, if nations around the world do not join in on putting pressure on both the superpowers, and if we do not move on this important matter now to take that extra step for once, it may be perfectly correct to say that tomorrow will be too late.

I conclude by welcoming the Prime Minister back and by welcoming his constructive efforts at the UN and in the Commonwealth. I hope that he, too, will take that extra step which he is calling upon Washington and Moscow to take.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of residents of my riding in Winnipeg. They call upon the Government to withdraw its plan to deindex family allowances in light of the fact that those changes in family benefits will hurt the poorest and middle-income families. They call upon the Government to take action quickly on this matter.

• (1600)

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of my constituents in Ottawa Centre and a number of residents of the Province of Quebec who object to the Government's plan to deindex family allowances, who point out that families who are poor will be worse off financially, that money is being diverted from children and families into the deficit and call upon this House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary. I want to ask him when the Government will answer Question No. 285 that I placed on the Order Paper on February 28 and Question No. 287 that I placed on the Order Paper on March 6. I also want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary when the Government intends to reply to Question No. 313 of March 28. These are all very simple, straightforward questions, for instance, the costs of renovating cabinet Ministers' offices. As well, Question No. 319 that I put on the Order Paper on April 1 involving the cost of the Quebec City conference.

Mr. Dick: I imagine, Mr. Speaker, that those questions will be answered soon.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question with regard to Question No. 386 which was asked on May 31, 1985. That question deals with a pertinent subject that was the object of a question by a member of his own Party to the Minister concerning pensions of superannuates in the Public Service of Canada.

I think it would be very useful to us on the Opposition side if the figures requested, which are not that difficult to answer, were given generously by the Parliamentary Secretary, in an answer soon to be forthcoming or in whatever term he wants to use, but for God's sake, let's get this thing out.

Mr. Dick: I shall pass on the Hon. Member's representations.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXCISE TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: May I inform the House that prior to the resumption of debate because of the ministerial statement consideration of Government Orders will be extended by 57 minutes this day. Therefore Private Members' Hour will begin at 5.57 o'clock.

An Hon. Member: On my duty day.

Mr. Speaker: On the duty day of the Hon. Member, yes, and he knows where to take his complaint.

Resuming debate, please.

Mr. Cassidy: Questions and comments.

An Hon. Member: There are two minutes left—

Mr. Speaker: This is a good time for me to make my point. The Hon. Member wishes to complete a period of time for questions and comments which would remain were the Hon. Member present who had spoken. The fact that he is not here, in my view, when the House resumes debate after a normal interruption like lunch or overnight or a week means that the time dies.

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: That is a ruling.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I make it a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Let me withdraw. I appreciate that hon. Members want to make some comments. What I will do for the moment is I will indicate to Members that that is certainly my intention and those who wish to communicate with me on this matter are free to do so. I think it more properly may be a matter for some conversation as opposed to a point of order structure here. Therefore, I invite the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) to come and see me on this question. Resuming debate.

Mr. Prud'homme: A question of privilege, if you would allow, not on your first point, but on your last point.

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Prud'homme: I would like to bring to the attention of Your Honour that I am getting a little bit, not annoyed, not suspicious, but concerned about these private discussions that could take place between Members and Your Honour outside of the framework of the House. It has happened a few times and we have a very good point—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is making his point but it is not a question of privilege. If the Hon. Member would like me to rule, I will rule.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I don't want you to rule, but—

Mr. Speaker: Exactly. I take it that the Hon. Member did not wish me to rule. I am therefore simply resuming debate.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, just on that same point because I think I misunderstood you. Did you say that you had rules on this question or that you were reserving your ruling?

Mr. Speaker: I thought I was very clear. Let me make it clear to Members now. The report that brought in the proposal for questions and comments is absolutely clear on this point that the purpose of the question and comment period is to question or to have back and forth comments—

Mr. Prud'homme: No.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, it is. The report is absolutely clear on this point.

Mr. Prud'homme: I don't agree.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, it is. Would someone please bring me the report. It is at the Table. I have had it waiting for this purpose. If Hon. Members wish to push me on this I am perfectly prepared to cope with it right now. I quote from the report:

> The ten minutes set aside following a member's speech should be used to question the Member or to comment briefly on the speech in a manner strictly relevant to the content of that speech.

I will find the next quote:

> "Your Committee envisages that the exchanges that would take place would be sharp and short.

The quote continues:

> Furthermore, the Chair should control the interventions to promote a series of exchanges to enliven the debate.

I took it on reading that that it was dead clear that the intention of the 10-minute period was to allow a back and forth relationship between a person who had made the speech and those who wished to question and comment thereafter.

An Hon. Member: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Therefore, it is to me not sensible when a debate has been adjourned for a normal period of time, overnight or a lunch period or a week or whatever, to allow the questions and the comments to continue in the unavoidable absence of the Member who made the speech.

Mr. Prud'homme: But any Member can leave the House and there can be no questions.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Therefore, I rule that questions—

Mr. Prud'homme: You may rule, that doesn't mean we agree.

Mr. Speaker: That is absolutely historically true for every Speaker. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Tupper).

On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Cassidy: Since I was the Member who wished to comment, I will indicate to you that according to your ruling refusing me the right to speak that I will not seek to intervene at this time on that particular question. I do appreciate that it will be—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member merely needs not to rise. To rise on a point of order to make the point is to make the point, with respect. Does the Hon. Member have a point of order?

Mr. Cassidy: There is a grave danger that you leave it open to an Hon. Member to withdraw after having made a speech and therefore to cut off the period of questions and comments.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member might read precisely what I said to the House a few minutes ago. I said quite precisely to the House that when a normal period of interruptions such as a lunch period, overnight period or adjournment of the debate has caused a problem then it seemed to me to be unreasonable or to be against the spirit of what was intended by the Report to allow the question and comment period to continue in the unavoidable absence of the Member.

If the Hon. Member is interpreting from that that he thinks that I believe that the question and comment period can be obviated by a Member making a speech and leaving the chamber then he has not interpreted me correctly.

Resumption of debate. The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Tupper).

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to rise this afternoon on behalf of my constituents of Nepean-Carleton to provide an analysis of Bill C-80 during debate on second reading. This Bill will implement the Budget proposal relating to federal sales and excise taxes and excise duties announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on May 23, 1985.

This Bill complements or forms part of the Budget which had a number of components. One of the major initiatives of the Budget was the aspect of economic renewal which included items to stimulate the economy and, perhaps most important to all Canadians, to create jobs. Another aspect of the Budget was fiscal responsibility or the reduction of the deficit. It provided that we reduce the deficit partly by cutting expenditures on the one hand and by increasing revenues on the other in an equitable way.

No member of a legislature is totally comfortable with initiating legislation that creates new taxes. However, all Governments must provide leadership and certainly all progressive Governments must create new initiatives and in doing so must be equitable in their endeavours.

The Budget to which I referred has been in place for a number of months. We have already begun to see its results. We recognize that some 300,000 new jobs have been created in the past year and that the prime interest rate is down by 2.75 per cent, the lowest it has been since September, 1978. The inflation rate is steady at 4 per cent, the lowest it has been since 1971. Business investment is up by about 12 per cent over last year and business confidence is at a very high level. Housing starts and automobile manufacturing are all increasing.

Statistics Canada and DRIE surveys indicate that investment growth will be considerably greater this year. Business fixed income in the second quarter and third quarter of the year is up substantially. In the past 10 days, we have seen the report of the Federation of Independent Businesses which indicates that that sector of the economy alone created something like 250,000 new jobs in the first half of the year. The delightful thing about the report was that it indicated that those trends would continue on into the last half of the year. Furthermore, four out of 10 small businessmen who replied to the Federation's questionnaire indicated that they were going to expand their businesses in the second half of the year, and five out of 10 of them indicated that they were going to incease investments in their businesses. All of the trends from the small business community indicate an atmosphere of confidence and growth. That was expanded upon in the past week by the Economic Council of Canada which indicated that Canada's Gross National Product and its employment rate were going to grow in the coming months.

It is against that background that this Bill has been introduced. The Bill contains four main thrusts. First, consistent with the recommendations of the Nielsen Task Force, the Bill proposes to broaden the sales tax base reversing the trend which has left only 30 per cent of potential commodities within the sales tax base. The federal sales tax is a general revenue which applies to most goods manufactured in Canada or imported for use in Canada. The tax is a major source of revenue generating some $8 billion in the 1984-85 fiscal year. However, over the years, the list of products which are exempt from this tax has grown significantly.

The Government and the Ministerial task force on program review have re-examined many of these exemptions and concluded that some of them should be repealed. In some cases, the original rationale on which the exemption was based is no longer valid. In others, serious administrative and compliance problems have developed. All of the exemptions contribute to the serious deficit problems now faced by the Government. Even where the exemptions provide a valid benefit to some groups, it is necessary to carefully examine whether or not this benefit is truly required, properly targeted and reasonable in relation to the cost to government revenues.

In response to these concerns and in an effort to spread the burden of reducing the deficit over a broad range of products and consumers, the Government proposed that a number of federal sales tax exemptions be repealed. Effective July 1, 1985, a 10 per cent rate of federal sales tax was imposed on candy and confectionery products, soft drinks, pet foods and certain health goods and surgical and dental instruments. In addition, the 6 per cent tax rate applying to construction materials has been extended to apply to insulation materials, heat pumps and solar furnaces.

The sales tax is normally levied on the manufacturer's sale price in the case of domestically produced goods and on the duty paid value of imported goods. However, in the case of certain domestically produced construction goods, special provisions allowed manufacturers to pay taxes on the costs of raw materials used in producing the goods rather than on the sale prices. These provisions were introduced in 1963, more than 20 years ago, following the imposition of sales tax on construction materials. The measure was initially intended to address a disparity affecting concrete basements but was later expanded to cover certain metal and wooden structural products and precast concrete shapes. It also applied to ready-mix concrete.

Recent reviews of the relative burdens upon concrete, steel and wooden prefabricated products indicate, however, that the provisions available for these classes of goods actually cause competing products to bear significantly different tax burdens. Furthermore, there were disparities between those goods and other manufactured building products such as windows, doors, shingles, et cetera.

Extensive research into the issue concluded that the only fair way to tax construction goods was to impose the tax on all building components calculated on their sale price at the time of shipment by the manufacturer to the job site. The federal sales tax does not apply to the sale price of erected buildings but rather applies only to the components which are delivered to the job site for erection or incorporation into the structure.

Second, the Bill implements an element of the Government's deficit reduction strategy by increasing the rate of federal sales tax. The rate of federal sales tax will be increased by 1 percentage point effective January 1, 1986. The new rates will be 7 per cent on construction materials and cable and pay-television services, 14 per cent on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products and 11 per cent on other taxable goods.

The excise tax on gasoline and aviation fuels will be increased by 2 cents per litre and a new excise tax of 2 cents per litre has been imposed on diesel fuel and aviation fuel effective Septembre 3, 1985. These excise taxes will be increased by an additional 1 per cent per litre effective January 1, 1987. It is important to note that the latter relates to the indexation of pensions for senior residents.

Offset against these increases are the tax cuts which flow from the elimination of the Canadian Ownership Special Charge and the Oil Import Charge. The first of these substantially offsets the fiscal impact of the motive funds taxe increase while the latter is a reflection of oil price de-control.

Third, the Bill implements the campaign promise to end the automatic indexation of alcohol and tobacco taxation. In past years, these levies have been increased automatically each year on September 1. Initially the rate changes were made according to changes in the alcoholic and tobacco products subcomponents of the Consumer Price Index but following complaints from the industry and following a joint government-industry study, the indexing system was adjusted to track the full Consumer Price Index. This Government believes that automatically increasing the levies on alcohol and tobacco products in accordance with a rigid formula is not appropriate. Rather, such changes in tax rates should be considered and approved by Parliament. Thus, this Bill will eliminate the provisions in the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act which automatically index these levies.

In place of the past system of automatic indexing, this Bill will implement modest increases in the excise levies on alcoholic beverages and a substantial increase in the levies on tobacco products. Effective May 24, the excise taxes on wines and the excise duties on beer and distilled spirits will be increased by 2 per cent. This is approximately half the size of the increase which would otherwise have occurred in the levies on these products under the automatic indexing system.

The taxes on cigarettes are being increased by 25 cents per package of 25 effective May 23, 1985. This is a substantial increase, but the serious health hazards associated with these products, the costs to society in general of smoking, and the need to raise significant amounts of new revenues, led to the conclusion that such an increase is approximate at this time.

The Bill also repeals—and I am delighted the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) is present—the constraints on persons who make home-brewed beer for non-commercial use for themselves and their friends. I believe the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre has raised this question in the House previously.

Mr. Cassidy: It's the one enlightening thing this Government has done.

Mr. Tupper: Home-brewers of beer will now be treated in a similar way to persons who produce wine for personal consumption.

Finally, the Bill introduces a comprehensive system of assessments, objections and appeals into the Excise Tax Act. This system is similar to the current system under the Income Tax Act and incorporates the recent improvements to that statute in the areas of search and seizure and the "presumption of innocence" which defers collection action until the taxpayer has had an opportunity to resolve any disputes arising with respect to his tax liability.

While addressing the inequities in the tax system is always an important objective, I want to emphasize the twin goals of the Budget again, namely to bring the deficit under control and to achieve economic renewal. With revenues covering less than two thirds of our outlays last year, with a national debt approaching $200 billion and growing rapidly, and with annual interest charges of $25.5 billion, it is essential to get our financial affairs in order.

This Bill contains, as the Minister noted last Thursday, many tough measures, including the repeal of certain sales tax exemptions and increases in the rates of tax, in addition to the modest changes in the taxation of construction materials. The size of the deficit is such that we must establish priorities and can no longer target the Government's limited resources to provide preferential treatment to certain products.

I urge the House to endorse this Bill at second reading and move it on to committee for detailed examination.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this debate on Bill C-80, although it is not a pleasure to have to consider it in view of the regressive nature of the taxation within it, and in view of the fact that many of the measures in Bill C-80 are precisely the kinds of measures to which the Progressive Conservatives were opposed when they were in opposition just over a year and a half ago. I can recall that before the 1984 election, the Progressive Conservative Party opposed a sales tax increase, but after it took power it implemented the same increase to which it was opposed. The Government has now compounded that turnaround by imposing a further increase in the sales tax, a 1 per cent increase, which will amount to a total cost to the Canadian consumer of just under $1 billion in 1986-87.

I believe everyone should know just who is getting hit in this particular regard and where the costs are particularly the greatest.

The costs of this sales tax increase are incurred mainly by small and moderate income people. The most affluent in our society are the least affected by the sales tax increase, and it can be said that this is typical in my view after one year in power of the Progressive Conservative Government, that the most affluent should profit from this Government, and small and middle-income people will have to pay.

Mr. Speaker, I will remind the taxpayers that the $1 billion to be paid by them following the 1 per cent sales tax increase effective January 1st, 1986, is almost equal to what will be paid by this Government to people who had deposits of over $60,000 with the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, the two Western banks that went belly-up recently.

Mr. Speaker, those large depositors were uninsured, they had made those deposits having in mind interest rates higher than those available at the larger, respectable chartered banks or trust companies in this country. Interest rates at those two banks were higher than those at chartered banks. Although the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank made high-risk loans, although those large depositors made deposits for business reasons, to earn slightly larger interests, although they had uninsured deposits, without the Canadian Government's guarantee, they will be getting in 1985-86 the exact amount of money that will be paid under the 1 per cent sales tax increase that is being put forth by this Government.

Now, in his May Budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said it was essential to increase the sales tax. Why? To help him cover the budget deficit. Now everyone is concerned about the budget deficit. But, in fact, instead of using the funds to cover the deficit, instead of using the funds collected by way of the sales tax to create jobs or to help people in need, the Government is extorting the money from the small taxpayers, who will be paying for the tax increase, and giving it to large corporations, large depositors. And, in addition, there are $200 million or so that will be paid to foreign banks. Mr. Speaker, this is something I cannot understand.

Also, in view of the fact that the sales tax is regressive, its burden falls on low-income people. If your income is $15,000 a year, the sales tax increase proposed in Bill C-80 will cost you $140 a year. If your income is $20,000 a year, the cost will be $282 per year. If your income is $40,000, your tax incease will be $361 a year. This means that, instead of a progressive tax that would get heavier the more your income increased, we have a situation where the tax burden becomes lighter the more your income increases.

Mr. Speaker, it must also be noted that throughout the budget, and not only under the provisions of Bill C-80, the same sort of equity pervades everything. Individuals will pay tax increases under the budget to the tune of about $1 billion.

Families earning less than $40,000 will pay $490 million in tax increase because of the repeal of the federal tax reduction.

People with cars will pay $930 million in extra fuel tax. Today, Mr. Speaker, I went to a service station and I paid $35 to fill up my tank. Being a Member of Parliament, I can afford it. But for many people their automobile is an essential means of transportation. They need it to earn their living, to commute, and now they will be paying more. Why? As I said, they will be paying more to allow the Government to give money to big corporations, to the most affluent in our society.

The Hon. Member for Bonavista-Trinity-Conception (Mr. Johnson), who just contributed to the debate, said that even though he did not agree with the provisions of Bill C-80, he accepted them because they were needed so that something could be done to find the required revenues. What he failed to see is the fact, for instance, that the benefits arising out of the budget will flow mainly to individuals and corporations that are the most well off, like big oil corporations which will be saving $900 million following the removal of the oil and natural gas revenue tax. A $900 million gift to big oil corporations.

Mr. Speaker, people with fair income and owning RRSP will be earning thousands of dollars by way of tax concessions for fiscal year 1986, while low income people will pay for a sales tax increase.

According to our assessment, corporate income tax will in effect be reduced by $500 million. And, Mr. Speaker, what is most unfair, people who speculate, people who invest in Florida condominiums, in jewels, in art that is bought and sold on the New York, London or Paris art markets, those people who make capital gains and often contribute nothing to our society, who make no contribution in terms of job creation, those people get the windfall, they pay no tax on their first $500,000 of capital gains.

Mr. Speaker, this means that those who have enough money to afford a summer cottage or a ski chalet in addition to their city home have to pay taxes on these cottages as they are considered a second residence and a luxury, because it is obviously not necessary or essential to have a cottage in the country. This is why it has been decided that the gains on these recreational second residences should be taxed as capital gains. However, in the future, Mr. Speaker, those who are wealthy enough to afford a cottage or to make profits from real estate speculation in Canada or elsewhere will no longer have to pay taxes on these profits.

[English]

As I have been saying in French, it seems extremely unjust that the series of very complex taxes presented in this Bill as a means of raising revenue to combat the deficit turn out to be a way of raising money to pay off the depositors in the CCB and Northland Banks as well as the cost of the tax gimmicks used by Olympia & York in the Gulf deal. They entered into a phoney partnership with Norcen Resources in order to make a tax saving of $500 million to $1 billion. As was evident today in Question Period, this move was not simply made without the Government of Canada being aware of what was going on. These people were not prepared to take the kind of risk the free enterprisers like to talk about. No, they went to the Government and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) and asked for a ruling. They wanted to know in advance that they could save the money. They were letting the Government know that this loophole, which it inherited from the Liberals, was there and they were going to use it. The people in the Department of National Revenue, quite properly, saw that this matter was too big for them to handle. It was not a small taxpayer looking for a modest and routine kind of ruling. Therefore, the matter eventually found its way into the Priorities and Planning Committee of Cabinet. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was told. If he was not told that $500 million was floating out the window because of these tax arrangements, he certainly should have been. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) knew about it. The Deputy Minister of Finance, in an action which I think was definitely improper, tried to pretend that he would have nothing to do with it because he knew all he needed to do was pick up a telephone and he would have a job at double his present salary working for Olympia & York. He has now taken that job. The kind of intimate relationships which were involved to the cost of the little taxpayer of this country is absolutely outrageous. Yet that is the situation in which this new Government, the tribunes of the people, those who promised change when Canadians were looking for change on September 4, 1984, have put Canadians.

I want to comment on a couple of specific issues. As my friend from Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Tupper) points out, not everything the new Government has done is to be criticized. I said on a number of occasions that I thought Canadians wanted and voted for change. Realistically, in the Province of Quebec, for example, where our Party is on the verge of winning seats, but is not yet there, the people of Quebec voted to throw the Liberals out by voting for Conservatives. But what they expected to have—

What we wanted in Quebec were real changes which would benefit ordinary people and not only the rich in our society and the big businesses which have traditionally been the friends of the Progessive Conservative Party.

We did not change the reds for the blues simply to have the same red policies, but with a blue tint. In fact, this is what we are getting. People wanted a real change, but they are not getting it.

[English]

One thing I would like to mention, and my friend from Nepean-Carleton already mentioned it, is that there is a group of people, of whom I am one, who are concerned about the quality of the beer we drink in this country. You will know that I had the temerity to break the laws of this country by offering to journalists and other interested parties some home-brewed beer in my office in the Wellington Building a few months ago. I did this in order to dramatize the fact that the present laws were unjust. They forced people who simply wanted to make some very pleasant brew in their cellar or in their recreation room or in their bathtub to break the laws of Canada. That has been changed or will be changed according to one of the provisions in this Bill. I note as well that this weekend the Ontario Government has decided to allow brew pubs in the Province of Ontario. That is something for which I worked when I was an MPP. My friend, Mr. Nick Wallen, who is a resident of my constituency, fought for both these measures and I remind him that it was the NDP, long before the Liberals tuned in, who fought for the rights of beer drinkers across the country. We are delighted to see this particular measure in the Budget.

It is not enough, however, to compensate for the other problems in the Budget. I would also like to bring to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary and his Minister that at the time of the Budget last year a specific concern was raised with the Government not only over the taxing of supplies for diabetics but also over the taxing of an essential product for blind people who have guide-dogs, and that is the food they have to feed to the dogs. I have a number of guide-dog users in my riding. They now have a Canadian Association of Guide-Dog Users. When they raised the issue of the tax on pet food applying to them they did not get a satisfactory answer from the Government. Guide-dogs allow blind people the chance to function independently. They can do certain jobs that people with sight presently do. However, to tax blind people further is to jeopardize the necessary service which guide-dogs provide and reduce their employment opportunities which are already extremely slim. It has been suggested by the Canadian Association of Guide-Dog Users that there be a tax rebate for blind people if they supply Revenue Canada with receipts for guide-dog expenses. This would be similar to a sales tax, rent, or property tax rebate given to people under Ontario tax law. The Minister of Finance responded by saying that he thought a tax reduction would be more appropriate. The problem is that 80 per cent of blind people cannot work or do not have jobs. If you do not have a job it is pretty tough to pay tax and therefore pretty tough to get a tax reduction. I suggest that although this is a small point with a limited number of people involved, it is symptomatic of a lack of regard by the Government for people who are poor.

I would like to say about the deficit generally that, last August, the Government prepared a study on the cost of tax concessions given to corporations and individual taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, the amount is about $30 billion to $50 billion, according to the report tabled by the Minister of Finance in the Clark Government, when the Conservatives were in office. Curiously and interestingly enough, the tax relief to taxpayers—mostly rich ones—is roughly equal to Canada's deficit. If our tax system were really fair, we would not grant the same tax relief to major companies, multinationals, wealthy people, and foreign controlled corporations. We would give such tax relief only to selected groups and, Mr. Speaker, that is how we would begin to build a truly fair tax system. As an example, Mr. Speaker, I would quote a statement from the Minister of Finance to the Canadian Textile Foundation: "The average corporate tax rate in Canada is about 15 per cent instead of 36 per cent." Those are tax incentives, tax relief, that is what they did.

Mr. Speaker, I note that young girls and women who work in our chartered banks pay an average tax rate which is higher than the tax rate paid by their employers despite the fact that Canada's chartered banks have assets ranging all the way up to $200 billion, $300 billion and $400 billion, that they are big corporations with a lot of financial clout. Yet ordinary people who work for the banks pay higher tax rates than their employers do. Mr. Speaker, there is something definitely unfair in that situation. Now, these small taxpayers with a yearly income of $15,000 will have to pay $140 more because of the increased sales tax which is provided for by this bill.

That is why, as members of the New Democratic Party, we are concerned about the Government's priorities. We question the priorities of any Government that believes it will create more jobs and improve the unemployment situation by giving corporations major tax breaks. That was the approach favoured for the past 15 years by the Liberals, the Conservatives, the Quebec Liberals and the Parti Québécois. Quebec has made the same experience and it is not working, as unemployment remains extremely high. Governments will not accept our ideas and our efforts to make sure that low income people are not penalized by our tax system but benefit from it, and to set up a tax system which is fair, and not outright unfair as this one is for low income people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier).

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I feel quite indignant. Normally, we would not bother responding to the mass of fallacious reasoning we were served up here today, but I believe I ought to raise a few points because this week, I realized that people were watching the proceedings on television. In fact, they are doing so in all ridings in Canada, and especially in wonderful LaSalle. The people of LaSalle and Ville Émard are watching the proceedings of the House.

So I would like to raise a few points and first of all, I would advise New Democratic Party Members to let Quebecers get on with their election. We can take care of ourselves, we don't need any outside help, and I would advise them to mind their own business. The references they made to the election in Quebec—this is a matter that concerns Quebecers and does not concern Ontarians or the rest of Canada. So I would advise these people to please mind their own affairs since it is none of their business.

Second, Mr. Speaker, in referring to the little guy, the New Democratic Party seems to forget the taxation restructuring that was done in the last Budget. In fact, there are two specific points I would like to mention. First of all, please notice that in the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Centre (Mr. Cassidy), there was no reference to the minimum tax levied on people with high incomes. It is rather unusual that this particular tax was not mentioned. Throughout these comments on the little guy, it does come as a surprise that this particular item was not referred to. An oversight, no doubt. After all, they can hardly be expected to enumerate or criticize every single item.

Second, earlier there was also a reference to a potential loss, because they were talking about a loss; mind you, potential loss and loss are not the same . . . and this was in connection with tax restructuring and the child tax credit. They also forgot that in the last Budget, there was an element of unfairness because there were people earning between $23,000 and $26,000 who were paying less taxes than people earning between $18,000 and $23,000. What we did was restructure the tax system to make taxes progressive instead of regressive. At the time, there were all kinds of bandaid solutions introduced by the party then in power, which took away an allowance here and added a tax rebate there, and when it was all added up, it made no sense at all. The Government has now straightened out the mess.

I would also advise people to be careful where the tax on alcoholic beverages is concerned. Mr. Speaker, as you know, I have some experience in this field. It would be very dangerous for the moral health of Canadians to decontrol completely the sale of alcoholic beverages. We got rid of that situation in 1900. We are not going to revert to a procedure or a system for the sale of alcoholic beverages that had proved to be disastrous when it was abolished in 1900. Please understand that a certain amount of regulation in the sale of alcoholic beverages is necessary, and when I hear people bragging about breaking the law to serve illicit alcohol, well, I get very angry, because it is very dangerous, and it is a dangerous precedent, whether we are talking about beer, wine or pure alcohol or spirits.

Mr. Speaker, these are the points I wanted to clear up somewhat since I felt they had been overlooked.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in reply to my friend the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier), whom I hold in high esteem, I suggest that his attitude toward the Government's action seems to me to be somewhat on the defensive, and understandably so. He clearly disregards the fact that in my remarks I criticized the policy of the Federal Government. The reason I spoke French is that I represent a bilingual riding and that I am an elected representative for the whole of Canada. He should not exclude Quebec from Canada, even though some of his supporters might work for the Parti Québécois during the forthcoming provincial election, I do not know. But what I deplore both at the federal and provincial levels, Mr. Speaker, is that there are two major parties in Alberta, British Columbia and in Canada, and even in Quebec there are two parties, the Liberals and the P.Q., which are leaning to the right and not paying attention to ordinary people. They disregard their problems, just as the Federal Government does. That is something the Minister chooses to ignore.

The Minister blamed me for forgetting the minimum tax. It is very difficult to forget something that does not exist. No specific step has been taken by the Government in this direction. One could read in last weekend's newpapers that the Government is considering ending this session in December and beginning a new one in February with a Speech from the Throne, instead of trying to solve the problems of unemployment, regional inequalities, as well as those concerning women and young people. We have a long list of problems to be solved, including the minimum tax, Mr. Speaker. But I should like to remind the Parliamentary Secretary that the Minister has failed so far to introduced a bill calling for a minimum tax, and it seems that this Conservative Government will do everything in its power not to levy such a minimum tax.

[English]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly glad that constituents in the riding of the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) had the opportunity to watch the proceedings of this Chamber. I wish that I could say that all of my constituents have the same opportunity. I say that because I want to refer to a comment made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) when referring to my remarks this morning. He said that he was glad to know that I said that I did not agree with all that was in Bill C-80. The people in my riding do not want to watch the proceedings of the House to make sure that I will always speak the truth when I rise. If there is something in a Government Bill with which I do not agree I will not be ashamed to say it. They expect no less of me than that.

However, I want to take some exception to the fact that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre can get up in this Chamber, where the laws of the land are made, and proudly boast about the fact that he broke the laws of this country. I resent that and I believe it would be remiss of me if I did not rise to make that point.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, with an unjust law, there are times when one is compelled to—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: I hope the Hon. Member will recognize that my violation of the law was perhaps a bit light-hearted but also designed in order to prove a point that there was an unjust law. While it was not as unjust as some laws that exist in this country and certainly many others, it should have been changed. In fact, it was the pressure which came from CAMRA, the Campaign for Real Ale in Canada, which I supported, that helped persuade the Government that it was time that that unjust law be changed.

I hope that some of the other unjust laws in our country which discriminate against women, young people and poor people will also be changed by the Government.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 46, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon.

Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Law Reform—Imposition of prison sentences; the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—Public Service (a) Request that documents signed with unions be tabled. (b) Pensions; the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) (a) Social Security Coalition of women for family allowances—Government position. (b) Election debate.

We will now proceed with the debate. The Hon. Member for Quebec East (Mr. Tremblay).

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Before beginning my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief comment. You know how fast the situation can change here in Ottawa, and we have to revise our priorities on a regular basis. I want to commend our staff for the oustanding work they do to enable us to deliver the goods when we need them. I express my sincere appreciation to our legislative and secretarial staff for their unrelenting support and assistance.

As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members were eager to comment on the Budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last May 23. I am just as pleased and honoured to take the floor today to speak to the Bill to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. If I remember correctly, the Bill was given first reading on October 18.

As I said in a speech I delivered in this House nearly five months ago this day, the Wilson Budget is fair and equitable, realistic and productive. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that you remember what I said five months ago.

While Members of the Opposition do their utmost to claim that the measures are too harsh, they pretend to be tax experts and economists to say how surprised they were that the Budget was not even more drastic. The Canadian people also support the steps taken by this Government to reduce the deficit. Last September 4, they told us loudly and unanimously: Get rid of those leaders who behave like all-powerful deities and take pleasure in spending as if there were no tomorrow. I would almost dare say they were showing their irresponsibility to the people who had put their faith in them for so long.

Last May 23, Mr. Speaker, all Canadians were expecting to hear at long last the voice of reason tell them to tighten their belts in a spirit of fairness and justice for all since no group would be favoured in relation to any other. The Government even backed down in full knowledge of the facts when senior citizens protested about the deindexing of old age security pensions.

We listen to the population when it calls for our help. We do not let the public agonize under a mountain of tax inequities.

The Budget of May 23 announced three major objectives which I will not comment today. I shall simply say that the first two already seem nearer as action has been taken to promote private enterprise and improve the management of public finances.

Mr. Speaker, how can we slow and eventually stop the increase of our national debt, which has now reached $200 billion? How can we correct a situation where, in the last three years, our national debt has increased by 75 per cent while our economic growth was only 25 per cent? As one of my colleagues just pointed out, the previous Government literally left us in the red, Mr. Speaker.

Massive borrowings were needed to make ends meet. The Canadian public is well aware that one third of each dollar goes to pay the interests incurred while, ten years ago, servicing the debt represented only one eighth of each dollar. Mr. Speaker, the situation faced by our Government was an aberration.

It had to try to find additional funds to prevent our country from sinking in a slump which was paralyzing all our population and even the Government itself.

Our Government got to work and decided, not to take very rigorous action to control our increasing yearly deficit, but rather to take a more cautious, a more conservative approach. We have chosen an approach which can solve, or at least reduce our debt problem given time. This is why public revenues and expenditures had to be rationalized.

Mr. Speaker, I shall now deal more directly with Bill C-80, which is especially concerned with the obtention of public revenues. I cannot overemphasize the fact that three quarters of the initiatives taken by our Government to this date to control the deficit aim at reducing expenditures rather than at increasing public revenues. This increase in the revenue produced by consumer taxes is only one more step which will guarantee to the Canadian people that our Government is keeping its promises and proving one more time that it is worthy of their confidence as concerns its management of the Canadian economy.

Our initiatives have already begun to show results. As my colleague for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Tupper) mentioned earlier, the creation of at least 300,000 jobs has considerably reduced the unemployment rate. Inflation is going down and these tendencies should continue for a while.

I have found out in my discussions with my Quebec East constituents that my fellow citizens understand the need for the Government to control its expenditures and reduce the national debt by increasing revenue first, so as to reduce the interests which much be paid daily on our debt.

The future economic growth of this country depends on our being able to take our financial situation in hand immediately. Our measures will ensure a progressive and considerable reduction of the deficit.

The Government announced an increase in the excise tax on tobacco in the Budget speech. This has now been done. The tax increase of 1 per cent per cigarette also reflects the concern of our Government about the dangers of tobacco for all Canadians, especially our youth. It is true that the tax increase is substantial, especially as concerns tobacco. The harmful effects of the use of tobacco cause incalculable Government expenditures. This provision compares to that aimed more specifically at alcohol, except that in this case we only have a moderate increase. There is a 2 per cent tax increase on alcoholic beverages, instead of a 4 per cent increase that would have resulted from an indexed increase. We all know the federal sales tax was due for a 1 per cent increase starting from January 1st, 1986.

When deciding to maintain the indexation of old age security pensions, this Government not only showed how attentive it was to Canadians, but also showed how the deficit problem may be resolved without any negative impact on any one particular group of Canadians. For this reason, and because of the understanding of the situation shared by all our citizens, people will be treated fairly and the burden—let us make no bones about it, this is a burden we have to face—will be shared fairly by all Canadians across the land.

In order to have its revenues increased, as I said, this Government aims at reducing the interests we have to pay on all our borrowing debts. There will be a one percent tax increase on fuel effective January 1st, 1987. This will affect us all, but we know it is a necessary thing. It is aimed at no region or no group of people in particular.

Without getting into details, Mr. Speaker, I must concede the repeal of sales tax exemptions on a large number of goods will reverse the current situation. Let me explain this. By maintaining the prices of those products at the current level, we would be maintaining artificial prices. The price differentials were distorting the interaction of supply and demand. Standardizing will let market forces play their role. These rates will also eliminate the administration problems that existed to determine which items were taxable and which were not. As you know, Mr. Speaker, some companies employed people whose only job was to go through the numerous pages of literation on various kinds of products to know whether they were taxable or not.

This Bill is fair and just, Mr. Speaker, despite what the Opposition may think or suggest.

Also, this Government is not in any way forgetting our concern for economic recovery in the process. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine), made a speech on October 24, 1985, on Bill C-80. He raised the increasing problem of inflation as it affects our exports, excluding our natural resources. The Government will deal with this by exempting exports from the excise tax. Also, all tourist literature published by any one of the three levels of Government will be exempted from the federal sales tax. Again, the Government will also foster foreign investment in Canada, while increasing its fiscal revenues.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but Bill C-80 introduces a comprehensive system of assessment and appeals similar to that provided under the income tax system, including the right not to pay amounts in dispute until the issue has been settled by the courts. Whatever the critics may say, Mr. Speaker, our legislation is consistently fair and equitable and organized in such a way that all Canadians are helped to bear a fiscal burden that in the long term, and for generations to come, will always be lighter than it was in the past.

I shall, if I may, reiterate the four broad principles of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, and I would say that the first one which is aimed at broadening the base of our federal sales tax will help increase Government revenues. It is a first step towards reducing the interest the Canadian Government has to pay on its loans.

The second principle embodies one of the elements of the Government's strategy to reduce the deficit by raising the federal sales tax. Increases in the excise tax on gas and fuel will compensate for the tax cuts that followed the repeal of the special "Canadianization" tax—quite a mouthful, even after one year, but Mr. Speaker, you may be assured that in time, people should be able to pronounce it without any trouble—and the tax on petroleum imports. Once again, these are measures that will affect all Canadians, and we will all have to tighten our belts together.

The third principle arises from an election promise to eliminate automatic indexation of excise taxes on alcohol and tobacco. Thus, the end of automatic indexation puts an end to future automatic revenue increases without parliamentary approval.

The fourth principle is aimed at producing a comprehensive system of assessments, objections and appeals in connection with the Excise Tax Act. The Government is not a monolith, Mr. Speaker, intent on crushing its subjects. These changes include the principle of "presumption of innocence", thus prohibiting seizure until the taxpayer has a chance to clear up any dispute regarding fiscal responsibility.

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-80 is one more in a series of spending restraint programs implemented by this Government.

This particular program faces up to the situation and takes the bull by the horns. Yes, we will have to increase certain taxes, but the increases are being imposed fairly. In this way, we will be able to control the Government's finances and remedy a situation that we and all other Canadians with us inherited.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has stated that the measures to reduce the tax rate which the Government has taken are fair. How can he justify a measure which will reduce the tax rate on capital gains while increasing the sales tax? How can he say that a measure which will make the rich richer and the poor poorer is fair?

Mr. Tremblay (Quebec East): When the House dealt with the Government's plan to deindex Old Age Security Pensions, Mr. Speaker, I asked, as an experiment, a number of senior citizens in my riding to write down $200 billion, a very large figure indeed with a great many zeros. Most of them left out three zeros, Mr. Speaker, and now that they realize what a large figure it, is, they are a little sorry the Government went along with their request and they are willing to pay their share of the debt, for it is necessary to write $200,000,000,000 to realize what a huge figure that is. To reply to my hon. colleague, may I say that it is by helping those who are willing to take calculated risks risk-takers are born, not made, Mr. Speaker and to reinvest the profits they make in forever larger investments that we will replenish the coffers of the State and increase the NGP.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, a supplementary question?

Mr. Keeper: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member has indicated that the measure to reduce the tax rate on capital gains would yield economic benefits. I wonder if the Hon. Member is aware that nearly all economists in this country agree that it will yield no economic benefits.

Mr. Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, because I meet regularly the businessmen in my riding, including people involved in real estate, lenders or stockbrokers, I can tell you there is in Canada renewed confidence, so that these fine people are looking forward to investing more, increasing their share of the market and, therefore, their purchasing power, with a great many spinoffs for each and every Canadian in their everyday lives.

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate today on Bill C-80. It has been said that happiness is never having to say that you are Tory. I can understand why people feel that way, especially after listening to those who are in favour of Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof. That is as it is known in parliamentary language. It would be far better and far easier for a majority of Canadians to understand if the Bill were entitled an Act to take from the poor and give to the rich. That would probably reflect much more of the reality of what the Bill does.

What does the Act to take away from the poor and give to rich do? It raises the tax on television programming from 6 per cent to 7 per cent. It increases excise tax on wine. It repeals a section of the Excise Tax, the effect of which is to impose sales tax on certain building components and materials. It increases the federal sales tax from 10 per cent to 11 per cent. It increases the gas tax by two cents per litre on September 3, 1985 and one cent per litre on January 1, 1987. It increases the excise tax on cigarettes, tobacco and cigars. It imposes sales tax on carbonated beverages, candy, confections and pet foods. It also puts sales tax on certain health foods. Of course there has been a back-pedalling by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on this particular measure, but it also imposes sales tax on energy conservation equipment, thereby indicating the bias of the Government against energy conservation. It imposes sales tax on previously exempted construction and building materials. That is what the Bill does.

I was interested in hearing the last Conservative Member who spoke on this matter. He said that he was in favour of all those hideous things. I want to record to show just what the previous speaking was in favour of. Now you can understand, Mr. Speaker, why the Bill should be named an Act to take from the poor and give to the rich, as I previously described.

Why do we need to have sales tax increases? How much money will be generated by them? I have a confidential table which was leaked from a cabinet document to which reference has been made before in the House of Commons. It talks about the fact that $174 million more will be generated this year as a result of the Bill, $1.2 billion next year, and $4.5 billion in 1990-91. I draw the attention of the House to the boondoggles or mistakes of the Conservative Government of the last few months, coupled with giveaways to its friends, which will cost a similar amount to the taxpayers of Canada.

As a specific example, Mr. Speaker, I should point out that Canadian taxpayers will have to pay over $1 billion to finance the Gulf deal. All this will be done with the good wishes and compliments of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) and the other members of Cabinet.

Then, Mr. Speaker, Canadian taxpayers will have to pay about $2 billion for the Northland Bank and Canadian Commercial Bank disasters. Once again, this will be done not to bail-out a financial institution, but to save the credibility of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) because he was attending a conference and did not want to be embarrassed by the failure of a bank.

Third, Mr. Speaker, there is another Government fiasco which will cost a number of jobs in Canada, even though its effects will not be felt for a while yet, and I am speaking of course about the Star-Kist tuna fiasco at the New Brunswick plant.

If we had all these major and even monumental mistakes of the Conservative Government, we can understand why the Conservatives need more money than they now have.

[English]

Also, the Conservatives made many promises to Canadians. As I have indicated previously on a couple of occasions, at least, they are all in the document entitled 338 Tory Promises. Since then most of them have been broken. All Canadians are welcome to have a copy of this document if they telephone my office. However, in it there are 113 promises to spend more money, 5 promises to spend less, 2 promises to increase revenues, and 26 promises to decrease revenues. Then we wonder why the Tories need more money! Had they not become involved in fiascos, they would still need more money in an attempt to live up to one or two of the promises in 338 Tory Promises. Beyond that, they have made a considerable mess of things and require further funds.

Let us look at the effect of some of the tax measures. I have received letters from constituents concerning some of the taxation measures in Bill C-80. One such letter is from the Cumberland Ready Mix company in my riding, a good employer who provides many jobs. The owner, Mr. J. B. Brazeau, wrote as follows:

> We wish to make known our strong objections to the 6 per cent federal tax proposed in the Budget of May 23, 1985, on Ready Mix Concrete.
> We feel the levying of this tax, at this time, is unfair. Prices have already been quoted, and contracts signed for the year.
> We hereby request that if this tax must be levied it should at least be postponed until January 1, 1986.
> Any assistance you may give us in obtaining at least a postponement would be greatly appreciated.

To most of us that would seem logical. One would think that if a contract was signed in April or May to provide concrete for the whole year and there was an increase in taxes, this small-businessman would have to absorb that tax.

An Hon. Member: That is all right.

Mr. Boudria: I hear a Conservative Member across the way saying that that is all right. Maybe Tories are of the view that eliminating small businesses from the map is all right, but we in the Liberal Party do not feel that way. I want the record to show that we will speak in favour of small businesses, even when the Conservatives are against them.

I have a similar letter from Denis Brisbois Contractor Ltd., a contractor involved in cement and in my constituency. That company provides many jobs for the people I represent in the House of Commons. He objects to the same things as Mr. Brazeau of Cumberland Ready Mix. There are other similar employers—Centennial Constructions, Vars Concrete and so forth. They have made similar objections. The result will be a loss of jobs in my constituency, notwithstanding the fact that an Hon. Member across the way said that that was all right.

● (1720)

Well, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you what the Minister of Finance replied when I wrote to him. Most of us would understand this logically; but then again most of us are not Tories. Most of us would understand this. I read in part of the letter from the Minister of Finance:

> As you know, the federal sales tax is a general tax which applies to many goods produced in or imported into Canada.

I will let you, Mr. Speaker, decide how relevant that particular sentence is to the whole discussion at hand. The letter continues:

> It is, in fact, the third largest source of federal revenue next only to personal and corporate income taxes.

I am sure that my constituents would be glad to hear this as well. The letter continues:

> The tax is normally levied on the manufacturer's sale price in the case of domestically produced goods and on the duty-paid value of imported goods.
> However, in the case of ready mix concrete and a number of other construction goods, special provisions existed which allowed the manufacturer to pay the tax on only the cost of the raw materials used in producing the goods.

That is what he had to answer to my constituent.

There are about two and a half pages of similar irrelevancies in the letter. The Minister of Finance finally concludes:

> Finally, may I point out the efforts made by this Government to keep interest rates down, which is ultimately the best help it can provide to the construction industry. Indeed, interest rates have fallen by almost 3 percentage points since September 1984 to their lowest level in seven years.

Then he goes on to describe the number of housing starts and says:

> I regret that my reply could not have been more favourable.

Mr. Speaker, if you were a small contractor in my riding who had been treated unfairly by this tax and will lose money everty time you sell another ready mix truckload of concrete, what difference would receiving this kind of irrelevant answer from an insensitive Minister of Finance make? I suggest absolutely none. This is a clear example of a mistake. None of us even asked that the tax be removed, only postponed so the current contracts could expire. It made sense to most of us, but not to the Tory Government.

Last August 29 and August 30 I had the honour and the privilege to chair the national Liberal forum on the Budget. I was asked to do so by my Leader and I gladly accepted. We heard two days of testimony from various groups, many of them national groups. Let me summarize what some of them had to say to us.

We heard from the Canadian Automobile Association, certainly a very non-partisan group representing a large number of people in this country. I understand that their membership is over two million people. Here is what they had to say, and I am summarizing from the report that I have in front of me. I quote from his submission:

> —the CAA believes that by addressing the deficit in the manner they have, the Government has treated the Canadian motorist unfairly and at the same time introduced measures which are counterproductive to both deficit reduction and employment growth.

That is an organization representing 2.2 million people. That is what they had to say about this Budget. They said also that they found it unusual that since this Government had been elected, and we all remember that date, as unfortunate as it was, up until May 23 gas prices increased in this country by 18 cents a gallon.

Remember what happened to the Tories the last time they tried to increase gas prices by 18 cents a gallon? Remember what Canadians did to them? That is what they would do to them now if there was any way that we could have an election, but unfortuantely we are stuck with them. When I say we I mean not only myself as an opposition Member but all Canadians are stuck with them for the next four years. Thank God time does go by fast, not fast enough, but we will be rid of them four years from now. That is what the Canadian Automobile Association had to say about the Tory Budget and specifically about the price increases we are talking about in Bill C-80.

The Canadian Federation of Municipalities also made representations to the national Liberal forum and here is what it had to say:

The largest part of increased municipal costs is due to the removal of the tax exempt status for asphalt and ready-mix concrete. Local Governments are the primary consumers of asphalt products in Canada.

Many Hon. Members on all sides of the House have had the opportunity to sit in municipal offices in the past. I have; I sat for three terms on Cumberland Township Councils. Once the mill rate is struck that is all the mony there is for the current year. One cannot change the rate of municipal taxes once it is levied and one cannot deficit in an election year. In Ontario, this is an election year so what do the municipalities have to do? On May 23 most of them have struck their budget and have sent out their notices for municipal taxes. The municipalities have to cut back on projects, cut back on many things they want to do because this Government imposed those taxes, not on January 1 of next year so that municipalities, the largest consumers of asphalt and concrete, could plan ahead, but they did it right away, again a very regressive and completely idiotic measure on the part of the Government, which should have thought of this and subsequently modified its plan.

We also received testimoney at the national Liberal forum on the Budget from the Retail Council of Canada, and again, the groups that I am enumerating here, are certainly not partisan groups.

An Hon. Member: Not much!

Mr. Boudria: They are non-partisan. I see the Hon. Member across seems to disagree. Let the record show that he does not think that the Canadian Automobile Association, the Federation of Municipalities and the Retail Council of Canada are non-partisan. Perhaps he thinks otherwise. I am sure that the membership of those organizations will be glad to hear his comments to that effect.

The Retail Council of Canada said:

The Council recognized that food and drugs could be exempted from increases and extension of the federal sales tax—

That is their view, Mr. Speaker. It said:

We regret the need to modify the personal income tax indexation provisions because we feel strongly that Government should not appear to benefit from inflation. We accept the need, at least on a temporary basis, until the deficit is under control.

They recognized that but at the same time they were saying that other things were unreasonable. They gave a balanced view but this group was quite adamant that some measures were wrong. Did the Government listen? No, Mr. Speaker.

Finally, I have two more issues I want to raise. The Association of Concerned Citizens for Preventive Medicine also addressed us, Mr. Speaker, and this group, a very worthwhile agency, a very good group, said to us that the actions of this Government in placing taxes on health care products was wrong-headed and it was to the detriment of good health care in this country. We saw the Government backtrack slightly on some of it but the issue was still strong.

Finally, I just want to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, recognizing the very limited time that I have, unfortunately, to the fact that a large number of my constituents are quite concerned by the fact that this Government decided in the Budget of May 23 that UIC benefits and other pension benefits cannot be used to buy spousal Registered Retirement Savings Plans. This measure goes against the women of Canada. There are many instances of people using funds from pensions and the like to buy spousal Registered Retirement Savings Plans. This has now been disallowed. In the case of an older and younger partner in a marriage, it is important to be able to transfer those funds in order to benefit the younger person, most often the woman, who will be staying alone for many years after her husband has passed on. This measure is unfair and it is one about which many people from my constituency have written to complain.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to reply to the questions Hon. Members may wish to ask about my speech this afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Hudon).

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, I did not really intend to ask questions or make comments, but when I heard the Hon. Member talk about the price of oil and gasoline and the proposed increase of 18 cents a gallon, I felt that I had to remind him about what happened eight months later when his party regained power and by how much they increased taxes on gasoline in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I can understand that the Hon. Member may have received letters from manufacturers or concrete processing firms, but generally, when a law or a regulation is changed, there can be some confusion during the transition period. However, I believe that people are satisfied and even quite happy, at least in my region, that interest rates are now lower than they have been for the past seven years and that this has an impact on mortgage rates. They are happy because this stimulates the building industry. For a young couple with a $50,000 mortgage, current lower interest rates represent $5,000 over five years. This is important and it will stimulate the building industry.

We have made an effort to improve the economy generally. There is now some confidence in our economy, as evidenced by the fact that the consumption of goods has increased by 10 per cent since last year. Car purchases have increased by 23 per cent. These are obvious signs that Canadians have stopped investing their money in mere savings to take part in the economic development of our country. This will have an impact on concrete manufacturers and people in the building industry as it will affect both interest rates and the sale of consumer goods. We must be able to see both sides of an issue. If we ask someone in the building industry or with some education whether he prefers present market conditions or those which existed three years ago when interest rates were around 20 and 21 per cent, I am sure that he would choose the situation today because it is more likely to provide a better future for Canadians than was the case three or four years ago.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it is worth the trouble answering, but let me try just the same to live up to the situation.

The Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) is referring to the interest rate as it was three years ago. I am pleased he did so, and I wonder if he is going in his next supplementary question to perhaps take credit for the sunrise or perhaps tonight's moonlight, or something else which his Government had absolutely nothing to do with. I also ask him whether he wants to take credit for the fact that interest rates also declined in the United States. It would make just as much sense, Mr. Speaker. The level of logic would be almost the same.

Second, concerning the construction rate, I would like to remind the Hon. Member opposite . . . He says that over the next five years, due to low interest rates—for which he is taking credit but for which I refuse to give him that credit—anyway he says that over the next five years, a person would save $5,000. I wonder whether he is aware that construction groups in Canada have expressed the view that because of the budget brought forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and also the statement of November 8, 1984, the cost of a home in Canada will increase by some $2,000, because of this Government's policies, and whether he is aware that by increasing the cost of approval, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation insurance premiums, the costs of building materials, concrete, they are jacking up the cost of building a house by $2,000 or so a year.

Does he think this is a fair provision, when we are in the process of promoting construction, when a city like Ottawa has a vacancy rate that is so low that people have nowhere to live, and this Conservative Government is striking at people who are trying to buy a home? Does he think that this is fair, Mr. Speaker? We, in the Liberal Party, do not share the view that this is fair and just.

[English]

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I listened to my colleague, a member of the Liberal Party, with interest and I listened to his comments about the contracts that were signed for a year in advance held by the various ready-mix concrete companies in his riding. I need only observe how very fortunate they are to have those contracts in their pockets.

There are parts of Canada including my constituency in which contracts for a year in advance are unheard of by virtue of the economy which has developed over the past four years and to which there has been a response which is slow in some areas and faster in others. One only need drive around Ottawa to see the nature of the construction industry here. I found it to be a most startling sight when I came to Ottawa in the aftermath of the last federal election. I compare my constituency as it is today to Ottawa as it is today. I can only say that the cement contractors in the Hon. Member's riding are fortunate indeed.

In fact, ready-mix cement contractors from Kootenay West have approached me as well. They see nothing wrong with the levying of this tax. The concern they do advance is about the manner in which it is being levied. They suggest, and I think perhaps rightly so, that that tax would be better levied at the manufacturers' level. They argue that because of winter conditions, there are certain additives that have to be put into the ready-mix to delay the action of the cement and there are certain concerns about distances that have to be driven when a ready-mix delivery may take place 60 or 80 miles away from the plant because of the nature of my constituency in which communities are spread many miles apart. It is the concern of the contractors that the driver of the delivery truck must then make the tax interpretation based on distance driven, the additives and the cost of the product when the driver may not have the education to make those kinds of calculations. Mistakes may be made either in favour of or against the consumer. Those kinds of things do present a problem.

In conclusion, I would only ask that before my colleague comments on all of these taxes, he consider that the Ontario Liberal Government has levied some $700 million in tax increases on the very items to which he has referred including gasoline, tobacco, beer and wine, alcoholic products and personal income tax. I think the Hon. Member must recognize that if the hat fits, and I realize he requires a large one, he should then wear it.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, regarding the size of the hat, I suppose the size of one's hat is the size that is required to hold what is inside.

Mr. Gormley: All kinds of air.

Mr. Boudria: I would like to respond to the more substantive comments made by the Hon. Member. First, he said that he had listened very closely to my remarks and he indicated that the contractors in my riding have contracts signed for a year in advance. Of course that is not what I said. I said that the contractors of my riding have contracts signed to the end of the season and, of course, the construction season will end a few weeks from now after which time one will not be able to pour large amounts of concrete. Some construction still goes on in the winter but not as much as in the summer months. The prices which were quoted were at the beginning of the season for the construction season. That does not mean they have contracts for a year in advance. That is not the case. Perhaps some of them do but it had nothing to do with what I talked about in this House today.

● (1740)

What I talked about is a policy which is unfair. If the Hon. Member opposite is saying that the whole issue of raising that tax is unfair, that is fine, I will agree. However, I did not even go that far in asking it to be removed. I only asked that it be delayed until January 1 of next year so as not to harm the small business people of my constituency. However, I will go along with the Hon. Member's version. Let us remove it completely.

Mr. Brisco: Read the "blues".

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member opposite tells me to read Hansard later. Perhaps he should do that also and he would get straight what I said.

The Hon. Member opposite talks about the fact that the Province of Ontario has been put into debt by the provincial Tories. It is not my fault that the Tory Government of Ontario spent some $650 million of money it did not have in order to buy 25 per cent of Suncor. The Liberals are now trying to fix up the mess which Frank Miller and his friends left behind, and they will succeed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, we have in front of us another piece of the Tory edifice being built, another brick in the wall of tax increases which we believe will lead to a severe blockage of the economic progress of this country. This particular Bill has in front of it the whole omnibus itself. We have the rates increased on federal sales taxes. We have a broadening of federal sales taxes to a whole new set of absolutely crucial items to our economy like candy, soft drinks and pet food. That shows the certain desperation of a Government when it decides that those targets somehow deserve to be taxed extra. We also have with this piece of legislation the increase in excise taxes on gasoline by two cents per litre. Farmers, incidentally, are also going to have to pay the extra two cents per litre tax, thereby contradicting one of the promises which this Government made before its election that it would take all fuel taxes off fuel for the farm.

Mr. Thacker: Not all.

Mr. Langdon: That is what was said and that is what this tax contradicts.

What this legislation also does is increase the per unit taxes on different categories of alcohol by 2 per cent and, of course, a package of cigarettes is increased by 25 cents for a package of 25. All of these increases, when one adds them together, represent a colossal drain on the economy of individuals. The federal sales tax increase takes $990 million out of the economy and away from people. The cost to Canadian consumers from broadening the federal sales tax is $785 million. The total cost of the excise tax increase for gasoline is $1.325 billion. We then add on the tax increases on alcohol and on cigarettes, which makes a total excise tax increase of $1.765 billion, and the total package, the total gap in consumer spending, which will result from just this part of the Budget, is $3.54 billion. I predicted, if you recall, Mr. Speaker, when the Budget debate took place in principle last May and June, that the consequence of this massive shift of money out of the pockets of people would be to slow down the economy as compared to what would take place, and to lead as a result not to a lower deficit as was predicted, but instead to a higher deficit. What is fascinating, Mr. Speaker, is that the evidence is now proving that to be the case. The deficit is increasing rather than decreasing because the growth rate is not moving ahead with the kind of buoyancy which is required.

Mrs. Mailly: It's better than the United States.

Mr. Langdon: It is better than the United States but let me tell the Hon. Member that that is not good enough. We have to accelerate growth in this country if we are going to bring down the deficit. By taking $3.54 billion out of the pockets of Canadian consumers, we are doing exactly the opposite. We are slowing down growth and cutting the capacity of the farmers, workers, small business people in my constituency, and in Conservative consituencies, to go out and buy the products which will get our people back to work and get our economy producing once more. This Bill, I believe, is particularly obnoxious in the mechanisms it uses because the tax burden from these kinds of increases falls upon people for what they purchase not for what they earn. The consequence is that the increased tax burden, as a percentage, can be greater on families making little money than on families making a great deal of money. For example, a family earning $20,000 is going to pay a 1.4 percentage point increase in tax burden as a result of these various measures. A family earning $40,000 will have to pay an increase of less than 1 per cent. Therefore, what this proposal does is take a higher proportion of money from the poorer people.

That is a particular contrast with the tax decreases in the Budget package. Those tax decreases, of course, are going to people who have large incomes. The $500,000 lifetime capital gains exemption is going to go preponderantly to those who are quite well off in our society. If we take the last available statistics, for instance, 1982, we find that in that year 63 per cent of the value of net taxable capital gains went to persons with incomes over $50,000 per year. Those are the people who are going to gain the greatest benefits from the capital gains tax exemption. At the same time, corporate taxes are falling dramtically. I would like to refer to the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to the Canadian Tax Foundation in November of 1984. He said recent figures indicate that the effect of tax incentives has been to reduce the average federal corporate income tax rate from 36 per cent cut to 15 per cent. That is a great deal more than a 50 per cent cut in the form of some exceedingly dubious corporate tax expenditures such as accelerated depreciation which costs us $2 billion to $3 billion a year, as well as write-offs for corporate takeovers which are anything but productive. Here we have dramatically demonstrated a Bill which will unfairly remove from the pockets of ordinary taxpayers a total of $3.5 billion. At the same time this country has, over the past 10 years, put an extra $21 billion into the pockets of corporations.

If it had worked, Mr. Speaker, if as a result of all these corporate tax breaks we had a massive upswing in our economic fortunes, then as a good pragmatist I might have to sit back and say that despite what I expected success has arrived. However, every study done of this crazy, skewed-up, mixed-up, messed-up approach to tax equity shows that we did not get the extra jobs promised. We did not even get the extra investment. Yet we persist in giving more benefits and more giveaways at the same time we hit the poor consumer over the head with a total of $3.5 billion in taxes in this Bill.

That is that macro-cost of this approach, but there is a micro-cost, too. For example, in my constituency, the liquor industry, companies such as Hiram Walker and Seagram, used to employ almost 2,000 people. The massive increase in excise taxes on liquor products has devastated that industry. At this stage those companies are down to a total employment of perhaps 600 people. Again and again and again they have made a serious economic case to Government that an unfair burden is being placed on them. The workers in that industry are being asked to carry an unfair share of the load. They have explained the direct impact on the tourist industry which arises out of these higher taxes but the only consequence is another $447 million loaded on their backs by this legislation. We do not have to talk only about large industrial companies like Hiram Walker, let us talk about the small construction companies, most of which are the backbone of the Conservative Party in my constituency, a backbone which is weakening. There are companies like Scofan, Bondy Trucking and McIntosh Paving. They came to me this summer and said: "Look, we don't object to the tax being put on us for the future. All we say is that it is crazy to put that tax into effect as of July 1 when we have contracts set up throughout the summer". Nine out of 10 of the contracts in Essex County had no escalation clause to take into account the possibility that the Government might suddenly and arbitrarily throw a new tax on asphalt and concrete paving. These people are reasonable. They went to their Government, they wrote letters. Their construction association approached the Minister of Finance. He wrote back and said that he chose to delay the imposition of the tax until July 1 in order to provide time for manufacturers to accommodate the levy. Of course, he provided much more flexibility for other manufacturers. Gasoline did not go up until September 11, 1985. However, he would not take into account the very specific way in which these people were going to be badly damaged, not because the tax was going into effect, but because of the arbitrary nature of its timing. This Government is not only making serious economic mistakes at the macro level by taking money out of the pockets of consumers, it is not only being unfair in the way it levies taxes, but it is shooting itself and its supporters in the foot by not permitting a little flexibility with respect to when these taxes are effective.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ABORTION PROVISIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved that Bill C-238, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (abortion), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to speak in support of Bill C-238, an Act to amend the Criminal Code to repeal those provisions dealing with abortion. I realize that this subject has given rise to a great deal of controversy and provoked strong feelings and emotions among Canadians. However, I believe it is most important that we as parliamentarians not shirk our responsibility to speak out on fundamental questions affecting the rights of all Canadians. As a member of the special parliamentary subcommittee on equality rights I had the honour to travel across this country and hear from Canadians from coast to coast representing literally millions as they outlined their concerns about issues of equality, whether they be representatives of women, the disabled, visible minorities or other minorities. One of the very serious illustrations of inequality in Canada today was brought to our attention as being the unequal provisions of the Criminal Code dealing with abortion. The effect of my Private Members' Bill would be to repeal the sections of the Criminal Code dealing with abortion and allow a women to make this very important decision herself in consultation with her doctor. This is the policy of the Canadian Medical Association. I want to read from a policy summary which was prepared by the Canadian Medical Association on the question of abortion. Their policy is as follows:

The Canadian Medical Association recognizes that there is justification for abortion on medical and non-medical socio-economic grounds and that such an elective surgical procedure should be decided upon by the patient and the physician(s) concerned. Ideally the service should be available to all women on an equitable basis across Canada. The Association has recommended the removal of all references to hospital therapeutic abortion committees as outlined in the Criminal Code of Canada. The Criminal Code would then apply only to the performance of abortion by persons other than qualified physicians or in facilities other than an approved or accredited hospital. The Canadian Medical Association is opposed to abortion on demand or the use of the procedure as a method of birth control emphasizing the importance of counselling services, family planning facilities and services, and access to contraceptive information.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the policy of the Canadian Medical Association which clearly calls for repeal of these provisions of the Criminal Code. Why do I advocate freedom of choice, and why is this not only my position but, as well, the official policy of the federal New Democratic Party? Before coming to the grounds for this, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read that policy as reaffirmed at the federal convention of the New Democratic Party in Regina in 1983. The policy reads as follows.

WHEREAS the NDP recognizes that it is a basic right for every woman to make her own decisions about maternity,

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the NDP reaffirm the existing Family Planning Resolution (1971) which asserts that an NDP government would:

(a) remove Sections 251 and 252 from the Criminal Code;

(b) pardon all qualified medical practitioners convicted under Sections 251 and 252 of the Criminal Code of Canada and drop prosecutions under these sections;

(c) provide adequate facilities in hospitals or special clinics for sterilization and abortion procedures; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the NDP act on this resolution by supporting campaigns launched by coalitions in Manitoba, Ontario and other provinces to establish free-standing medical clinics providing a wide range of gynaecological services including birth control counselling and abortions, fully covered by provincial health insurance plans.

What is the current law in this area, Mr. Speaker? As it stands now, the law provides that abortion is legal in Canada only when a hospital abortion committee certifies that a woman's life or health is likely to be endangered by continuation of the pregnancy. The Criminal Code provisions require that abortions be performed only in an approved or accredited hospital which has a therapeutic abortion committee of at least three doctors. The committee has to rule on these applications for abortions and none of the doctors on the committee are allowed to perform the operation. There are a number of very serious shortcomings in this law as it now stands, Mr. Speaker. First of all, no hospital, even though it may be publicly financed, is required to establish a therapeutic abortion committee. Thus, even though there are over 1,300 hospitals in Canada, only approximately 250 of those hospitals have indeed established therapeutic abortion committees.

Access to safe therapeutic abortion varies widely depending on where a woman lives in Canada. In the Province of Prince Edward Island, for example, there is no access whatsoever to safe therapeutic abortion and women in that province who are seeking abortions must travel to other parts of Canada or, indeed, to the United States. Over 70 per cent of abortions in Canada are in fact performed by a very small number of large urban teaching hospitals. This effectively denies access to abortions to women in many parts of Canada including rural communities and other communities in which there are not therapeutic abortion committees.

As well, Mr. Speaker, even though a hospital may have established a therapeutic abortion committee, that commitee is not in fact required to grant and perform any operations at all. Some 20 per cent of hospitals which have established therapeutic abortion committees in fact perform no abortions at all. No provision whatsoever is made for the many hospitals outside major cities which cannot find the means to staff such committees and perform abortions. A woman who is applying for an abortion is not allowed to appear before the therapeutic abortion committee and there is no right of appeal allowed whatsoever when a woman's application for an abortion is denied.

Back in the early 1970s a special committee chaired by Dr. Robin Badgley studied the existing provisions in the Criminal Code dealing with abortion. The Badgley Commission clearly documented what it described as sharp disparities in the distribution and accessibility of therapeutic abortion services, a continuous exodus of Canadian women to the United States to obtain this operation and delays in women obtaining induced abortion in Canada. There has been no effective action taken since the report of the Badgley Commission in 1977 to ensure that safe access is made available.

I would point out as well that the effect of the current provisions of the Criminal Code is to delay, in many cases, access to safe therapeutic abortions. It has been very clearly demonstrated that delays in this area can in fact result in the increased possibility of complications for the woman seeking an abortion. The bureaucratic hurdles which currently face a woman seeking a legal abortion result, on average, in a delay of some eight weeks from the time she first visits her doctor until the time the abortion is performed. As I said, the medical risks arising from these delays increase as the pregnancy advances. Thus, the current provisions of the Code do have an adverse impact on women.

Unfortunately, many of the women who seek abortions in Canada today are adolescents. In fact, one-third of those seeking legal abortions in 1976 were below the age of 20. I would strongly urge the Government to recognize that the most effective way of reducing the number of abortions in Canada is to promote access to safe contraceptives, to promote access to family planning counselling, to promote greater awareness of sex education in our schools, and to provide more money, not less, for research into effective forms of contraceptives, not just for women, but for men as well.

Those are the kinds of steps that can be taken to reduce the number of abortions in Canada, but instead of taking those steps the federal Government has cut back on funding to the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada. The theory in this cut-back of funding to the Planned Parenthood Federation was that the provinces would pick up the slack. Well, in fact, the provinces have not picked up the slack and we have seen a very serious erosion in the provision of information about family planning, contraception and, of course, in sex education as well. This erosion is in direct contradiction to the spirit of the 1969 amendments to the Criminal Code.

That is a particularly serious problem in certain jurisdictions such as the Province of Saskatchewan where the provincial Conservative Government is actively promoting the removal of birth control information from the shelves of health centres. In fact, one of the pamphlets that the Conservative Government of Saskatchewan has removed was produced by the federal Department of National Health and Welfare. While that Government purports to be trying to reduce the number of abortions, by reducing access to information about sex education and family planning it is increasing the likelihood that there will be more abortions, particularly among young girls.

I want to speak for a moment as well, Mr. Speaker, about an individual whom I consider to be one of the most courageous men in Canada in the struggle for full freedom of choice, that is, Dr. Henry Morgentaler. Dr. Henry Morgentaler has been acquitted now by four juries and yet the injustice goes on, the trials continue. I want to stand here in the House today and say that Dr. Henry Morgentaler has done a tremendous service for Canadian women by being prepared to offer safe therapeutic abortions, in many cases to women who would have no access were his service not available. I am proud of the fact that Canadian jurists have been prepared to recognize the contribution that he has made. Of course, the legal battle—the struggle which costs so much—continues. But Dr. Henry Morgentaler, in his fight for safe therapeutic abortions, I believe should be commended. His fight for the right of women to have the choice for safe medical abortions without committees, without judgments and without delays is an objective which I share. I believe Dr. Morgentaler should be commended for assisting Canadian women in trying to achieve that important objective.

I would note as well that the provisions of the Criminal Code which allow for an appeal from an acquittal by a jury should be overturned by the Government. Both in the United States and Britain, there is no possibility whatsoever of this kind of harrassment through the judicial system. In fact, if an individual is acquitted then that acquittal stands. They are not put through the difficulty and expense of another jury trial.

The position that I have taken in support of freedom of choice is one which is shared by many Canadians. I would hope that the Government would be prepared to recognize the fact that in the most recent Gallop poll in 1982, some 72 per cent of Canadians called upon the Government to ensure access to safe therapeutic abortions. While I do not believe that Governments should run by Gallop poll, in this particular case I think it would be of some assistance to the Government.

I would like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that even though in the Province of Quebec there are clinics set up by Dr. Morgentaler, Quebec women perhaps have better access to abortion services than their other Canadian sisters, but they still are far from enjoying the right to a free abortion. For instance, in many Quebec areas, services are not available, and the Quebec Federation of Family Planning has emphasized that the law should be changed so that women could have access to safe abortions. Also, some hospitals still refuse abortions to married women or women who are not on the pill or do not use the IUD.

I have to wonder, Mr. Speaker, what the impact will be if there is a change of Government in Quebec, if for instance the New Democratic Party does not win the elections or if by a stroke of luck the Quebec Liberal Party wins the elections. We must ask ourselves whether such a Government would respect the right of Quebec women to have access to safe abortions.

[English]

This is a difficult issue. It is an issue which has divided many communities and one on which Members of all Parties can express very strong convictions. However, let me close by quoting from a lecturer from the Toronto School of Theology, who speaks about the very difficult ethical questions in this area of abortion. He says:

> The overall ethical thrust of the Bible is on the side of personal responsibility and the freedom to shape one's life as an adult rather than as a child living in enforced dependency. It is opposed to any and all forms of coercion.
> Theologically speaking, God has given us the right and duty to follow our own conscience. This means, ultimately, having the right to be (what others may regard as) wrong.
> It is easy for commentators and preachers—most of whom are male and many of whom are celibate—to label women who seek an abortion as selfish, hedonistic, or lacking a certain "generosity of spirit." Some may well be. Most are not. They are painfully choosing the lesser of two evils and it is cruel, in pious phrases, to add guilt to their distress.
> This position is not "pro-abortion"—nobody in their right mind waves a banner urging anyone to promote this route and it only muddies the issue to cling to any of the cliched slogans of either side in this debate. It is, however, pro-compassion, pro-freedom, pro a fully moral, fully human life for the women of Canada and of the world.

That is from Tom Harpur who is a freelance writer and broadcaster who lectures at the Toronto School of Theology.

In closing, I want to briefly underline the reasons for my support of this Bill and support of freedom of choice. The present law is unworkable. It is unevenly and unfairly applied. Even if we were to adopt the suggestions of some and in fact return to the days when all abortions were illegal, this would simply ensure that abortions continued but would take place at the hands of the back-street butchers or at the hands of desperate women themselves. That certainly has been shown to be the case very clearly in jurisdictions such as Portugal where abortions are illegal today. Yet, they continue in conditions of very serious risk to the women involved.

I note as well that at present there is no contraceptive that is 100 per cent safe and 100 per cent effective. Human beings are not infallible and safe legal abortion is essential as a back up. I would note as well that in many cases those who would not allow abortion have also opposed the right of men and women to contraception. That is the case in too many areas. I suggest that the most effective way of reducing the number of abortions in Canada is by increasing the funding to the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada and similar provincial organizations, not cutting it as the Government is doing, and ensuring that there is access to contraception and sex education in our schools.

I hope that the Government would be prepared to adopt this measure and ensure freedom of choice for Canadian women.

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to speak to this Bill which concerns one of the most important issues facing our country. I am even more happy, however, to have the expectation that this Bill will not receive the approval of the House.

This Private Member's Bill, presented by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), is designed with the intention of fully legalizing abortion. It reflects the view that neither society nor the state has any business in interfering with a woman's right to make decisions fundamentally concerning herself, her body and the question of reproductive choice.

The position of the Member for Burnaby is that the option of abortion must always be open to Canadian women and that such a choice, made in consultation with a physician, must be reserved for the woman who is directly concerned. In a sense, I would like to thank the Member for bringing this motion before the House. I am very optimistic that if we co-operate we can settle this abortion debate once and for all tonight.

It seems that this is not the first time that the traditional terms of this issue have been set before the House for debate. I will be encouraging the Government, as some point, to bring forth amendments to the Criminal Code that will have the opposite effect to the Bill we see today. I believe that both public opinion and the general leanings of Parliament would support such an initiative. In any case, maybe Hon. Members present today can use the occasion of today's debate to demonstrate to the House and leaders of the Government that the great preponderance of support on this issue would encourage changes to decisively reduce the incidence of abortion.

The primary problem with abortion is simply that women have them performed. They are performed with disturbing and totally unacceptable frequency. The second problem relating to abortion is that people find themselves in a position where they are brought to see abortion as a legitimate alternative.

I believe this is more than just a statement of philosphy. It relates to the strength of a nation, the economic future of Canada and the position Canada holds for human rights around the world. It is because of a deep personal conviction that I have risen in the House today to condemn what I believe is totally irresponsible Bill. To accept this Bill today would be to abandon the moral mandate given our Government.

The sad thing with this Bill is that it will allow and even encourage women to have abortions. Moreover, it will encourage them to continue to get into positions where they will see abortion as an easy way out. It is my understanding that the pro-choice or pro-abortion faction is pressuring, more or less, for an amendment of this type. Since this Bill neither discourages abortion nor discourages women from getting into circumstances of an unintended or unexpected pregnancy, it seems that some people are content with a sky-rocketing abortion rate. I believe that will be precisely the effect of this Bill.

Can a responsible Government consider this as an alternative? It is obvious to me that, all moral convictions aside, this Bill is quite simply bad policy. An abortion is a traumatic and emotionally difficult event, regardless of the conviction of women who choose to undergo the ordeal. This Bill is badly designed policy. It increases the frequency of these events, regardless of what other goals are aimed at in the process.

The vocal minority calling for abortion on demand is infecting our society like a degenerative disease. When I say this, I do not apologize for using words that might be considered harsh or blunt. It is common for people in favour of abortion on demand to say that I am being insensitive to the needs of problems of people who find themselves facing difficult and complex moral decisions. Unfortunately, it has become popular to define sensitive as an inclination to pass over what people see as moral or even as in their best interest and to dwell on what people want. It is now considered insensitive to insist that people might just have to put up with certain difficulties.

The disease that is infecting our entire political system is most evident in the abortion debate. This hinges on the prevalent view that Canadians are neither required nor wish to be held accountable for their actions. People are insisting on rights without acknowledging responsibilities. The Hon. Member for Burnaby and his whole Party seemingly are not willing to tell Canadians that there is a bottom line of accountability. This set of attitudes, primarily characterized by the theme of no accountability and no responsibility, can explain equally well why we have both a burgeoning abortion rate and a spiralling federal deficit.

Tonight this House has an opportunity not only to repudiate abortion on demand, but at the same time to indicate that Canadians as a whole believe there are more constructive ways to deal with the pressures encountered through life than by giving in to them.

The laws of a society must reflect its highest moral aspirations. The Bill before the House involves a practical compromise with a growing tendency. When laws are changed to accommodate unacceptable practices, invariably those practices become acceptable conventions and create new norms. As legislators, Mr. Speaker, we must accept the challenge to make laws that will have the best possible effect on Canada and Canadians.

Dr. Harley Smyth is an eminent physician at the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto. He is well respected for his sensitivity, compassion and defence of medical ethics. I would like to support my remarks today with some of his which, I believe, communicate a basic principle that should underlie decisions, like this one that will, without a doubt, dramatically influence social attitudes and practices:

> This half of the twentieth century is witness, on a virtually global scale, to a new creed about man—that the life of man is a biological accident—that man was made not for justice, nor for eternity, but for nothing in particular. A creature whose very decisions are, by definition, meaningless. There is a relentless pressure on governments to govern, and physicians to practise on the principles of pure utility. In this view, what is good is not what is just or what is right, but what is useful. Who is strong will survive. Who is wanted will be welcome, but the only really welcome people might be those whose minds and whose bodies will ensure high rating on a computerized cost/efficiency ledger.

When the abortion issue becomes a question of respect for human life, and it always does, that not only refers to the lives of unborn children, it also refers to our own lives. When making our own decisions on this issue, it says something about our own lives, our human dignity and the purpose of our society. Laws that freely allow abortion repudiate any possibility of a higher human purpose.

Everyone will admit to having a basic sense of what is right and wrong, and it is this sense that, I believe, provides everyone with an intuitive bias against abortion. As a Government, we can sometimes be in danger of inadvertently extinguishing any feelings of personal obligation to oneself or to a moral standard. Abortion legislation is a clear example of this. I hope Members will join me in voting against this Bill.

So far I have dwelt mainly on the philosophical objections to abortion. I think they stand by themselves and prevail over the abortionist arguments favouring a woman's right to reproductive choice. It is obvious to me that by the time a woman is pregnant, she has already made her choice. I will stick to that view even though there are those who would prefer to see an unintended pregnancy as an inconvenience that is easily done away with. In any case, I would like to present to the House some figures that will help people to understand the scope of the problem with which we are trying to deal.

The most staggering figure I could cite is the number of abortions performed. In 1982, there were 66,000 therapeutic abortions performed for women resident in Canada. It is obvious that a pregnancy terminated by an abortion is not an exceptional case. It is not extraordinary. It is not unusual. The number of abortions performed has been constantly growing. In 1981, the City of Toronto released figures stating that 8,300 abortions were performed while there were only 7,600 live births. When abortions are more popular than live births, I think things are getting out of control. There are still some people who claim they are denied freedom of choice.

If their freedom of choice continues to lower the birth rate and raise the abortion rate, I think that reflects an abusive freedom, and a repudiation of responsibility. When the abortion rate is as high as it is now, you can be sure that the whole question has become a decision that is taken very lightly, Mr. Speaker. Through the negligence of Parliament, abortion has become acceptable in the sense that a great number of women are making casual decisions about reproductive choice and exploiting the latitude provided by the way current laws are enforced.

Why, in 1982, over 11,000 women had an abortion for the second time. Over 2,000 had one for the third or fourth time. When people try to defend the practice of abortion, they always create extreme circumstances surrounding the event. They might say the mother's life was threatened or that it was a pregnancy due to rape or that the person was particularly young and unequipped emotionally. This convinces some people that there might be justifications for abortion.

When over 11,000 women had their second abortion in one year there are going to be among that number a great many people who have been irresponsible and who have made the wrong choice. For this irresponsibility, 60,000 unborn children are killed each year. The tragic thing is that with permissive laws, and they are already too permissive, these decisions are taken out of the moral context. Pro-abortion groups say that if a woman chooses to have an abortion, she must be correct to exercise that right.

I have never heard a group in favour of choice ever say that, in some cases, it is better to go through with the pregnancy. This disturbs me because abortion is in the process of ceasing to be a difficult moral question for those who have had one. I am personally opposed to them on any grounds. Not everyone is, but I would hope that most people would still admit that there is no justification for the majority of abortions.

The private Members' Bill under consideration today makes no recognition of the fact that most Canadians see abortion as something that should be positively avoided, even if they might condone it in some circumstances. I hope that we will never pass a Bill like this that would make abortion a casual personal decision or just another form of birth control.

The issue of abortion has given the medical community a much more uncomfortable time than it has presented to the pro-choice movement, who do not see it as nearly so difficult. That is probably because it is the doctors themselves who are given the ultimate responsibility for performing abortions. Many doctors refuse to perform abortions, and I have a great deal of respect for them for upholding their professional standards. Doctors are dedicated to a code of medical ethics, the point of which is to guide human action so that they will be consistent with social values.

Canadians believe that life is worth protecting. In 1982, they spent $30 billion or 8.4 per cent of our Gross National Product because they believed that life is the greatest gift we can be given. It seems ironic to me that Canadians take life so seriously, while some people believe killing should be legalized, killing for no reason other than convenience most of the time.

Maybe the Hon. Member for Burnaby believes that you have to be able to fight for your share of that $30 billion pie. Maybe medical treatment and health protection is not a right at all, but rather something you earn yourself. In this case society might be justified in turning its back on unborn children. Since Canadians spend $1 out of every $10 protecting and saving lives, it tells me that they cherish their own lives, the lives of their families and of their friends.

It is precisely the function of an institution such as Parliament to correct failures in our country's equation of social and political justice. A key part of this is recognizing and promoting rights of underprivileged or deprived minorities. The Government has committed itself to championing the causes of women, ethnic minorities and the handicapped, three groups fitting this description. I hope we will take up the challenge with equal enthusiasm of defending the interests of the most defenceless group of all—the unborn children of Canada.

There is a final point which I should like to make that always emphasizes the senselessness and tragedy of the frequency of abortion in our country. The futility of the situation we have today is emphasized by the currency of the term "unwanted pregnancy". No greater insensitivity is shown than by people who persist in using this term.

There is an unlimited number of families in Ontario alone who would treasure an "unwanted pregnancy" and welcome an adopted child into their home. In Ontario, in 1969, official agencies processed the adoption of 5,400 children. In 1979, this figure had fallen to 1,248. By 1984, last year, 862 children were adopted through provincial agencies in Ontario. People have not lost interest in adoption. As much as ever, some couples are incapable of producing children. Maybe the fact that abortions have increased over 600 per cent in the same time span has something to do with it. The term "unwanted pregnancy" loses some of its meaning when one finds out that there is a five-year waiting period for adoptions in Ontario.

Passing this legislation would legitimize the "unwanted pregnancy" as one that can be properly aborted. When this is used as a justification for abortion, it is a selfish and thoughtless treatment of not only the unborn child but of the thousands of people who would do anything to give that baby a home.

Before closing, I think it is important for the people of Canada to be totally aware of how abortions are carried out, the procedures involved. There is the D & C or the dilatation and curettage abortion. This method is most often used in the first 13 weeks of pregnancy. A tiny hoe-like instrument, the curette, is inserted into the womb through the dilated cervix, its natural gateway. The abortionist then scrapes the wall of the uterus, cutting the baby's body to pieces. This is now used less frequently than suction.

The second procedure is suction abortion, the most commonly used method for early pregnancies. The principle is the same as in the D & C. In this technique, which was pioneered in Communist China, a powerful suction tube is inserted through the cervix into the womb. The body of the developing baby and placenta are torn to pieces and sucked into a jar.

The third is salt poisoning, or hyper-natremic abortion. This method is generally used after 13 weeks of pregnancy. A long needle is inserted through the mother's abdomen and a strong salt solution is injected directly into the amniotic fluid which surrounds the child. The salt is swallowed and "breathed" and slowly poisons the baby, burning his or her skin as well. The mother goes into labour about a day later and expels a dead, grotesque, shriveled baby. Some babies have survived the "salting out" and were born alive.

These are just some of the forms of abortion which are carried out today. However, I should like to conclude by simply requesting that all Hon. Members seriously consider the implications of the abortion question. The time has come that the majority of Canadians who clearly oppose the senseless killing of infants receive their rightful voice in this matter, and silence once and for all the voice of the vocal minority of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak to the Bill introduced by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). Abortion is an issue on which fundamentally differing and opposing views are strongly and genuinely held by many Canadians. I recognize the underlying reasons and feelings which have prompted my hon. colleague to introduce the proposed amendment to the Criminal Code. However, because there is a lack of consensus for major change in the abortion law, and because I believe that the existing law strikes a somewhat fair balance for Canadians who hold opposing views, it would be premature to bring forth such an amendment. In short, further study and consultation with church, medical and community groups are required. Nonetheless, I believe it would be useful to have a discussion on this very important issue, so that we can increase our knowledge of the many questions involved. In this regard, I propose to take the next few minutes of my time to place the Canadian situation in respect of abortion into an international context.

The debate over abortion rages in Canada as in many, if not most, countries of the world. Perhaps no other issue raises so many fundamental legal, medical, social, political, philosophical and religious questions as does the issue of who shall dictate the future of a human being about to be born—the state, the mother or the father. At one extreme, the state determines the status of a human being by criminalization of the abortion procedure and imposition of governmental sanctions, for example, imprisonment, fine or other penalty, upon those engaged either in performing the operation or having the operation performed upon them. At the other extreme, by permitting the potential mother or father to decide whether or not to have the child, the state removes itself completely from the decision-making process and places the choice entirely in the hands of future parents.

Most societies have opted for an intermediate position and allow abortions to be performed when certain legally formulated indications are present. As with other medical procedures, the state reserves the right to regulate the competence of those performing the operation. The intermediate position has been created by attenuating the criminal sanctions imposed upon violators of the penal code through legislative action, judicial interpretation, or simply by choosing not to prosecute blatant evasions of the law.

The harshest restrictions on abortion exist in such countries as Ireland, Portugal, the Philippines and Spain, where no exemption from the absolute prohibition against abortion is permitted, not even for the narrow purpose of saving the mother's life.

Less restrictive nations permit abortion for medical indications. For example, exemptions are allowed when abortion is necessary for health reasons. These are the most common abortion statutes. As exceptions to a penal code prohibiting abortion, these exemptions are widely favoured because they can be interpreted as narrowly or as liberally as the courts and legislatures of the various nations desire. Interpretations range from a literal definition of health, protecting the life of the mother, to an expansive view which includes preserving the physical or mental well-being of the pregnant woman. More liberal laws allow for the termination of pregnancy on evidence that the child will be mentally or physically deformed if the pregnancy goes to term, or that manifestation of an hereditary disease will be prevented by permitting a legal abortion. Ethical or legal indications laws permit abortions for most women whose pregnancies result from rape or incest. Laws setting forth medico-socio or social indications conclude the list of exemptions by permitting legal abortions to be performed for a wide variety of medical and non-medical reasons. Such minimally restrictive abortion laws are found in Japan, the United Kingdom, the Scandinavian nations and the countries of eastern Europe. There, abortions are legally performed for such reasons as difficult domestic situations such as too many other children, financial hardship, unmarried status or ill health of other family members. However, these social reasons are generally disallowed, as they should be, in most countries of western and southern Europe, Latin American, Asia Africa and here in North America. In short, most of the world has approved the rights of the unborn. If Bill C-238 is adopted in the House, the rights of the unborn would not be protected, as the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson) has so ably pointed out a few minutes ago.

The least restrictive type of abortion law permits abortions "upon demand", although usually within a limited period. These laws allow a woman, after consultation with her physician, to choose to terminate a pregnancy without the need to offer an officially sanctioned justification. The distinction between this type of liberal abortion policy and the medico-social indications policy is that with the latter the woman is still required to convince a doctor, a hospital, or a committee of medical or psychiatric personnel of the validity of the indication.

By January, 1974, only seven countries legally permitted abortion at the unconditional request of the woman: the People's Republic of China, Denmark, the German Democratic Republic, Tunisia, the Soviet Union, the Democratic Republic of Vietnam and the United States. By 1977, France, Austria and Sweden joined this group. Even such nations, however, maintained restrictions upon personnel or facilities used for the operation.

Most of the attempted changes in abortion policy have taken place in Western Europe. Italy's—one of the most recent—liberalization of abortion laws in May, 1978 allowed women over 18 years old to opt for termination of their pregnancy during the first three months for physical or mental health reasons, ethical considerations, or socio-medical indications such as economic deprivation or family pressures. France adopted a liberal abortion policy in 1975 by removing penal sanctions from abortions performed in the first ten weeks of pregnancy.

The UK Parliament enacted a liberal abortion statute in 1967, authorizing abortion upon certification by two physicians that the pregnancy would involve greater injury to the physical or mental health of the women or their existing children than if the pregnancy were terminated. Furthermore, a woman's "total environment" may be considered in this decision as well as eugenic and ethical considerations.

The 1967 statute restated the British position on abortion originally formulated in the Offences Against the Person Act 1861 which made an abortion a felony punishable by life imprisonment. The Infant Life (Preservation) Act 1929 had amended the 1861 Act to provide that the abortion would not be regarded as a felony if the Act were carried out in good faith for the sole purpose of saving the mother's life. This exception was expanded by common law interpretation in the 1938 case of R. V. Bourne in which a physician illegally performed an abortion upon a 14-year-old girl who became pregnant after being raped by two of the King's soldiers. The judge in that case, Mr. Justice MacNaghten, loosely interpreted the exception for the life-saving necessity to include preservation of physical and mental health and thus Dr. Bourne was acquitted.

Abortion reform was achieved in the United States through constitutional adjudication in 1973. In Roe v. Wade the U.S. Supreme Court struck down state legislation prohibiting abortion under most circumstances and allowing only limited exceptions to these prohibitions. The Supreme Court decided the issue on due process grounds and, in a far-reaching opinion, held that States could not prohibit abortions at all during the first trimester of a pregnancy, could only restrict it to save the life of the mother during the second trimester, and could proscribe it almost entirely during the last trimester.

Many nations of the world have thus created changes in abortion regulations within the last two decades; indeed most have done so within the last few years.

The Hon. Members may wish to compare these developments in other countries with the evolution of the abortion law in Canada. Until 1969 the law in Canada relating to abortion had changed little since 1892, and generally provided that it was an indictable offence, for which one could be sentenced to imprisonment for life, to procure the miscarriage of any woman. In 1969 the Criminal Code was amended to provide an exception to the offence of procuring an abortion. It was not an offence if the abortion had been approved by the therapeutic abortion committee of an approved or accredited hospital. The ground for approving an abortion was that the continuation of the pregnancy would likely endanger the life and health of the mother, which in most cases is a rarity.

With modern technology such as imaging, created by ultrasound vibrations, new medical evidence has emerged. The evidence indicates that life occurs at conception. If such is the case, then any abortion which is performed is an attack on a human entity. Our charter, Section 15, protects all life. Thus if this entity is life we are actually contravening our laws as well as our morality.

Thus if this Bill, Mr. Speaker, were allowed to pass we would be violating the rights of a defenceless human being being protected by a mother's womb, whereas that individual would receive total protection if mechanical means such as incubators were used to afford it real protection.

As I have stated earlier, Mr. Speaker, the debate in Private Members' hour may touch on some of the issues and give us a better idea of what is involved. It is not the place to solve one of the most complex social issues facing Canada today. We must be sure that when we do move to change our laws on abortion that the defenceless of our society must and will be fully protected.

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak against this Bill. The protection of the unborn is really of the utmost importance. As legislators we may deal with a number of financial Bills and other issues, but it is a Bill like this that really cause one to speak from conscience, speak from the heart on issues such as this.

I find in my own riding of Don Valley East, in talking to so many people, that they obviously are not of one mind on this issue. There are many pro choice people who have their own strong reasons for their view on this most important topic, and there are many pro life people. This topic arises at town hall meetings as well as at other meetings of all types, and I find that very few people are swayed by the logic and the reasons we have individually. They seem to have taken a point of view in most cases well thought our in terms of their own background and experience. But this is one of those issues that I do not believe can be answered by taking a poll. I think these issues are answered best by, as I said earlier, speaking from the heart, which requires a very personal decision.

In my own family we have four children ranging in ages from 18 to 26, two boys and two girls. We chose to adopt our fourth child when he was 11 months old. He is now over 18 years. My wife and I have often thought what might have happened to that life—he came from a disadvantaged family—if in 1967 abortion had been easily accessible. I do not think that young man would not be living today. I am simply sharing a personal experience. Mine is a moral and religious point of view from which I cannot be dissuaded. I have a strong conviction about how important life is.

On another personal note, if I may be permitted, just this last July my wife and I became grandparents for the first time. On July 18, a young boy, Kyle William Strolenberg, was brought into this world by our younger daughter. We saw the magic of life begin within hours. When we saw our grandchild, we were speechless and in wonderment over the creation of life that we witnessed. I know people do take a different point of view but I simply do not know how they can deny how early life starts and how that life can be snuffed out through the abortion process.

In all conscience, I do support abortion if a mother's life is in danger, but not otherwise. There are many Canadian families who would dearly love to adopt a child. This is a country rich in so many ways. In certain cases where, for financial or other reasons, children cannot be looked after by their natural families I am sure we can find homes for those children. We in Canada are a collective family that will look after such children.

Some of my colleagues have already mentioned the statistics. The statistics are of concern when one is reminded that in 1982 there were over 66,000 legal abortions. As my colleague said, statistics show that the number of women who are having second abortions and sometimes third abortions is increasing. Regarding second abortions, I am advised that the statistics have gone from 2,850 second abortions in 1974 to over 9,500 in the year 1982.

The abortion law as it appears in Section 251 of the Criminal Code does permit an abortion where a hospital abortion committee thinks the pregnancy threatens the mother's life or health. As I mentioned, I am very much in support of abortion in that one particular instance. However, I do think we need to study some problems that arise in that particular area. I am told that some places in Canada are not in a position to have a hospital review committee made reasonably accessible to the woman who may be seeking the committee's assistance. As the Hon. Member who introduced this Bill said, something like 75 per cent of abortions are performed by a relatively small number of hospitals. I cannot believe that we are making this service as fairly and justly as we should to all parts of the country. This is an area at which we should look.

An issue like abortion is not one at which we should look with reams and reams of statistical data or with intense medical advice. While we as legislators need to have all the facts available, the issue is one about which many people have a point of view that is well thought out and thought out with sensitivity. I have talked at length to men and women who represent both sides of this divisive issue, not only during the election campaign but since that time. I have not spoken to one person who has indicated that he or she held a particular point of view but, after intensive discussions, had been persuaded to change his or her mind. It seems that the die has already been cast regarding how people feel about this issue. It goes right back to family and church life and to how people's views, disciplines and beliefs in the freedom of life have been cast.

As I say, people are not about to be dissuaded from their points of view by various arguments. This makes the issue all the more difficult for us as legislators. It is not like when we are dealing with a money Bill and a person may not be well informed regarding its true impact and may change his or her mind after receiving information. The matter of abortion is a very personal decision for anyone who takes it seriously. It is a decision that is thought out from the heart. It very much reflects the way we ourselves have been reared. Therefore, we must take the matter very seriously.

I am not compelled to go along with the Hon. Member who has his own point of view on this matter, a point of view which is, I am sure, very close to his own principles. I must go on the record as stating that I cannot in any way, in all conscience, support this Bill.

I understand that my hon. colleague would like to say a few words on this matter. I will give him the opportunity to do so. I appreciate the chance I have had to say a few words.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Gormley): The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), very briefly.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, could you indicate how much time remains?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Gormley): One minute.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, in the next 60 seconds, I would like to go on record with pride as being opposed to this Bill. I know the Hon. Member who has proposed this Bill quite well and I respect his sincerity on this issue as on other issues. However, for reasons that were indicated by the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell), the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson) and the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom), I very much hope that the day does not come that a Bill of this nature is passed.

The purpose of the Bill, according to the explanatory note which I believe may have been drafted by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), is basically to abolish therapeutic abortion committees and to allow qualified medical practitioners to perform abortions without having to obtain prior authorization from such committees. Are you indicating that my time is up, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Gormley): Yes. Order. The time allotted for Private Members' Business has now expired.

LAW REFORM—IMPOSITION OF PRISON SENTENCES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who believe that for some time there has been a growing concern and a great dissatisfaction with the state of our criminal justice system. I suspect that in all likelihood, Mr. Speaker, you share that dissatisfaction and concern with me. It emanates from a fear on the part of many people about their own personal safety in their homes or on the streets. That fear is something which seems to have been with us for years and years, but something which I think is growing more and more prevalent these days. I find that this fear manifests itself in people asking what we are going to do about the Charter of Rights. They say that the Charter of Rights seems to be a greater protection for the criminals in society than it is for them. It also manifests itself in people saying that they want to see a return to capital punishment and to see it very quickly. Those are all quite legitimate comments because they stem from the concern that each of us shares about what is going on with the criminal justice system.

One of the things the House is going to be looking at again is the whole question of capital punishment. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that we were promised a review of that issue during the current Session of this Parliament. However, at the same time there are other things that can change and improve the criminal justice system besides a review of the question of capital punishment. Some of those things, I am pleased to say, the Government has already accomplished.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have had changes in the Criminal Code since September 4 last year, including changes with respect to drinking and driving. There are changes now being dealt with in committee with respect to street prostitution and soliciting, and the whole question of mandatory release of people who are confined to penal institutions.

All of these things are good and will improve the system, but there are other changes as well which we have to look at. Some of those changes were put forward just about two weeks ago by the president of the Law Reform Commission of Canada in his submissions to a criminal justice conference. He called for drastic changes in our sentencing laws. He suggested that what we should be doing is eliminating many of our sentencing procedures. He called for the elimination of both minimum sentences and the provision for time off for good behaviour. He has also called for the elimination of the whole parole system.

All of those things seem very revolutionary and very drastic on the surface. Suggestions of eliminating the parole system comes as a shock, because the parole system seems to us to be something engrained in the whole criminal justice system. It seems to be a good thing, so why would we ever want to do away with it? However, Mr. Justice Linden pointed out in his paper that we have had the parole system in Canada for a great many years and it has not seemed to have solved any of the problems. He also points out that the whole idea of time off for good behaviour came about as a result of insufficient room in the prisons to keep people, so we had to get them out somehow. What we did was implement the idea of releasing these people earlier even though a judge had sentenced them to a longer term in prison.

Mr. Justice Linden also points out that the minimum sentencing provisions in our Criminal Code have been there since the last century. All of these things he suggests should be reviewed. In fact, he suggests that we throw them all out and start over again with a new procedure of sentencing which he refers to as a "bench-mark" sentencing system. He suggests we set up a committee or commission to establish average sentences for different crimes. Instead of the system we have now, we should make sure that the penalty fits the kind of crime which has been committed and of which the person has been convicted. This does not sound revolutionary to me, Mr. Speaker, it sounds like good common sense, particularly when it comes from someone who is as learned as Mr. Justice Linden, the president of the Law Reform Commission of Canada. I believe it is high time the Government began to consider these suggestions. I feel that if it did, that would restore a good deal of the faith and confidence people have lost in the whole criminal justice system.

I am sure you know, Mr. Speaker, as we all do, that the former Government set up the Canadian Sentencing Commission to look into this whole question of criminal sentencing. It received, I understand from the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty), over a hundred different submissions, including those from Mr. Justice Linden, on how we should attack this whole area of sentencing. I understand that that commission is going to be making some recommendations, probably next year or the year after, and perhaps there will be some changes. However, it seems to me that this is an area in which the Government should be moving and moving quickly. It is only by tackling this problem and straightening it out that both the ordinary citizen and those who are convicted of crimes will know exactly where they stand and the people of this country will have their faith restored in the criminal justice system. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will assure the House that the Government is going to tackle this problem, and in a big hurry so that we can restore the faith and confidence of the Canadian people in the Criminal justice system.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his carefully considered and thoughtful remarks on a very important subject. As you know, Mr. Justice Linden made an important speech on sentencing in Toronto. The concept of bench-mark sentences, and I am speaking throughout on behalf of the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) who is unfortunately unable to be here tonight, should be of strong interest to the sentencing commission referred to by the Hon. Member. It might offer a viable solution to instances of sentencing disparity in Canada, of which there are many.

As well, Mr. Justice Linden's suggestion of creating a commission empowered to revise these bench-marks, according to factors such as prison populations, could have a great deal of merit, particularly for a Solicitor General who is so concerned with rising prison populations. However, the Minister is of the view that the philosophy of "just desserts" on which Mr. Justice Linden bases his new system may not offer all the guarantees of justice that its American proponents promised. There remains serious questions whether the models have achieved the objective of sentence equalization and standardization.

In the criminal justice system we always seem to come back to the age old dilemma of chosing between the classical approach and the neoclassical approach. In the classical approach all citizens are considered equally responsible and punishable for the crimes they commit. The neoclassical approach, as both you and the Hon. Member know, Sir, insists that individual circumstances must be assessed in every case because the physical and social environment influence the level of criminal responsibility. The Solicitor General believes that neither philosophy is fully satisfactory and we remain in constant search for a balance.

In that connection the Minister is not as certain as Mr. Justice Linden that "good time" and parole should be abolished on the grounds that they contribute to the arbitrariness of the system. Those programs, rooted in Canadian correctional tradition, represent in the Minister's view a recognition that human beings change for the better and, unfortunately, sometimes for the worse. To be placed in a completely static situation where it is not possible to affect one's destiny would destroy all motivation to change for the better.

How far can we go in a complete rationalization of the system from the court's viewpoint? For example, would the security level be determined by the court? What about the granting of temporary absences and access to education? You are indicating my time is up, Mr. Speaker? In that case, I simply thank the Hon. Member again for his thoughtful comments.

PUBLIC SERVICE (A) REQUEST THAT DOCUMENTS SIGNED WITH UNIONS BE TABLED. (B) PENSIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the matter I would like to debate this evening relates to a question I asked last May 2 concerning my interest and the interest of my constituents in current negotiations between the Treasury Board and the unions representing public service employees, particularly on pensions. I wanted to know whether the Government, as announced and promised, would soon make public an agreement with the unions concerning the issue of pensions paid to federal employees.

To refresh memories, I will quote the comments made by the President of the Treasury Board in the House last April 17. They can be found on page 3818 of Hansard, under Routine Proceedings:

I am delighted to be able to announce to Hon. Members that the Government has reached an understanding with the Public Service unions on a number of issues that are important both to our employees and to the Treasury Board as the employer.

Following that statement, Mr. Speaker, I asked a question in the House on May 2. I quote my own words on page 4343 of Hansard:

Ever since the Minister announced what he calls the new era in labour management relations in the Public Service, I have been asking him in the House to table the memoranda that he has signed or negotiated with the Public Service unions. The Minister has persistently said no to my request. In fact, the documents have been leaked to the press. Public servants are quite concerned. Superannuates are very disturbed. Will the Minister table those documents today so that people can rest at ease, read them, and understand them clearly?

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Minister did table the documents. These are draft documents which were made public and which feature what is called the four major issues—the general agreements, the pension question, the dental plan question and, finally, the question of amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

This evening, Mr. Speaker, I only want to consider the pensions issue. I will get back to the other items at some other time.

On April 17, the Minister said in the House, and I will quote him again, because it is important to understand what the Minister is saying in the House. He said on April 17: "The Government has reached an understanding with the Public Service unions on the subject of a Public Service dental plan". "I have signed an agreement". That is clear. A little further, and I quote: "Agreement has been reached on improvements to the work force adjustment policy" and finally "the understanding reached", again, the understanding reached, "goes a long way toward fulfilling the promises we made last summer during the election campaign."

Mr. Speaker, all these quotes and comments may be found in Hansard at page 3818, under Routine Proceedings, Minister's Statements on Management-Union Relations. And every paragraph reads, "I have concluded . . .", "I am delighted to announce . . .", "I have signed an agreement . . .", "An agreement has been reached . . .", "The understanding reached . . .", all of which leads one to believe that something has transpired and that some agreement has been reached.

However, today in the House, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) if he had anything new to announce about pensions, and especially about the pensions of those who are already retired. The Minister rose in the House and referred to an actuarial report, which had been received and considered, and said no more. He did add that he would like a few days to formulate his conclusions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we know that the agreement with the union specifically provided an actuarial review to be done by the employer, that is Treasury Board and an actuarial review to be done by the unions. Those reviews were supposed to provide information on the pension plan, its financing and its conditions.

To this day, Mr. Speaker, we have not obtained, and I repeat, we have not obtained from the Minister the assurance that we would see during this session an end to his shilly-shallying with the union.

As recently as two weeks ago, I had the honour to attend a public meeting of the Public Service Alliance with the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) and with the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Centre (Mr. Cassidy). At that meeting, the pension issue was discussed at length. It is a present-day problem for public servants as well as for those who are retired because every once in a while they have the feeling that the Governments are peering at them, wanting to alter the rules of the game.

I would like the Minister and perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary to reassure us, and those concerned with this issue who deal with public servants, and tell us that the actuarial review will soon be made public. In this connection, I would like to refer the Hon. Members to a debate held in this House on April 17 when I directed a question to the Minister who answered as follows: "There are still some details to be drawn up and actuarial reviews to be completed." Well, they are completed and he said today he had them. They should be made public to be sure that it was useful to stir up the matter in order that justice be done.

I remember, Mr. Speaker, quite clearly, the famous debate on public service pensions, a debate which was rather acrid. I was then considered as a renegade because I had upheld the rights of the civil servants. I still maintain today that when one pays or contributes to a pension fund, the employer must keep his word. I hope that this Government in its actuarial studies will keep its word and its commitment and provide an equitable pension to civil servants which will give them no more but no less than what they are entitled to in that respect.

• (1915)

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, my friend the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) having spoken in French, I would have liked to answer him in French, especially since both of us formerly were members of the Committee on Official Languages. Unfortunately my notes were prepared in the other official language, and I will answer in English.

[English]

My remarks on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) are not intended to provide additional detail on the public service pension reform issues because these are to be worked out by the Minister in consultation with the advisory committee on the PSSA. I would simply like to clarify the arrangements with respect to the composition of the Board of Management as announced by the Minister last April.

Let me begin by giving some background about why the Government has created the Board of Management and to outline some of the principles upon which it feels it should be founded. The Public Service Superannuation Act has, since its enactment in 1954, provided for an advisory committee to advise and assist the appropriate Minister on matters arising in connection with the administration of the Act. The Committee consists of six members appointed by the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the President of the Treasury Board and six members recommend after consultation with the National Joint Council of the Public Service of Canada. The committee has been consulted by successive Ministers on major policy issues over the years and has provided valuable advice, most of which has been accepted and implemented.

In recent years, this arrangement has become less than satisfactory from the plan members' point of view because the committee's role is restricted to the provision of advice and because the proceedings of the committee are confidential and cannot be debated publicly. In other words, the role of plan members in management of their pension plan has thus far been somewhat limited.

Our Government recognizes that public servants should be actively and directly involved in their pension arrangements. Therefore, we have agreed in principle with the representatives of public service unions that the pension plan will be placed under a system of joint management, which provides plan members with direct involvement in policy development and administration for the future.

The President of the Treasury Board has indicated in his statement to the House that a Board of Management will be established, consisting of an independent chairperson, with at least 12 representatives, representing in equal numbers the employer and plan members. There appears to have been some misunderstanding about the composition of the Board of Management and the role of pensioners in this proposal.

It is the Government's view that public service pensioners are certainly plan members and it was never intended that they be excluded from representation on the Board of Management. I believe that the employee associations share this view, as does the Advisory Committee on the Public Service Superannuation Act, which has suggested that the proposed board include a pensioner representative.

I understand that a representative of the Federal Superannuates National Association already attends meetings of the present Advisory Committee and, therefore, already has a say in the application of all the reform proposals, including the operation of the Board of Management.

In conclusion, retired public servants can be assured that they will indeed be represented on the proposed new management board with direct involvement in public service pension policy development and administration in the future.

SOCIAL SECURITY—COALITION OF WOMEN FOR FAMILY ALLOWANCES (A) GOVERNMENT POSITION. (B) ELECTION DEBATE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, tonight we are dealing mainly with the issue of family alllowances. On October 2, 1985, I directed a question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) concerning social programs. I quoted from the statement he had made during the women's debate in the 1984 election campaign.

At that time, the Prime Minister assured Canadian women of his support to the principle of social programs, and I quote:

> Yes, I can give the insurance that no social program at all affecting anyone in need shall be touched.

But that promise he did not keep. The de-indexing of family allowances is prejudicial to all Canadian families, including the most in need. The de-indexing of the tax child credit will reduce the income of less privileged families in Canada. Single parent families will lose Government help, contrary to what the Prime Minister has promised.

Canadian women are opposed to the Government's deindexing plan. Quebec women in particular are organizing against it. A coalition of Quebec women for family allowances has been recently established. That coalition brings together more than 50 organizations representing more than one million Quebec women.

When the Prime Minister attempts to gain women's support for his program, he is wrong because women are beginning to understand what the Government has in mind. They realize that it will indeed increase the child tax credit, temporarily . . . They know however that even the tax child credit will be reduced as of 1989. Deindexing results in a loss of purchasing power. That is what we must fight. Within 20 years, the baby bonus will be reduced, in real terms, to half its present value. It is almost the same for the child tax credit. Today, a poor family with two children gets $1,578 from the federal government under both the Family Allowance and the Child Tax Credit plans. That family does not get any exemption for child care like those who are better off. In 20 years, that poor family without any employment income will only get $973 a year in Government assistance. In addition, the taxes it has to pay will be substantially increased. As of 1990, the poor family will get less support from the federal Government than it does at present.

Women are appearing before the Legislative Committee on Family Allowances to make representations against this deindexing of family allowances. Those representatives have asked us among other things to increase family allowances. They have made it clear that the baby bonus is used for basic needs, to buy food and clothing for the children. The nurses' representatives have emphasized the hazard to the health of young children. One million children are living in poverty in Canada and this figure is a shame in a country endowed with so many resources; it is outrageous!

The Government's priorities are unacceptable. We must maintain and even increase our child support programs.

We must recognize the contribution made by mothers and that is the purpose of the family allowance program, which is the only one of its kind.

[English]

Women are coming to Parliament and they are saying firmly that they do not want this deindexing. They want the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to keep the promises he made in the election campaign and, indeed, to give more support to families, especially to poor families. It is our duty to respond to those needs and to respond decently and generously. I call on the Government to do that.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it should be emphasized that family allowances will continue to be paid in respect of all dependent children under 18 years of age. The universal nature of this program remains unchanged. However, the indexing formula for these benefits will be amended. Therefore, effective January 1, 1986, family allowances will be indexed only if the yearly cost of living increase exceeds 3 per cent. The portion of the increase over and above 3 per cent will be fully compensated.

[English]

It is also important to emphasize that assistance for low-income families will increase over the next three years. While it is true that their family allowances will be subject to the same indexing provisions as those of higher-income families, it is also true that low-income families will be more than compensated. Thus, the maximum child tax credit payable to low-income families will be increased by $140 per child over the next three years.

[Translation]

Moreover, in order to share more equitably our limited resources, the child tax exemption in respect of dependent children will be reduced until it equals the yearly family allowance payments. The House is aware that this exemption was blamed on many occasions for being regressive, because it benefited more high income families than low income families.

In short, Mr. Speaker, the Government is streamlining the child benefits system and making it more progressive.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Darling): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 7.27 p.m.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, October 28, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to offer a few remarks on Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof. In considering this Bill it is necessary to start from the basic and fundamental starting point of our national debt, that horrendous figure, that tragic legacy of the previous administration. It is almost impossible to overstate the magnitude and seriousness of that Liberal legacy. Not only did we inherit the debt, we also inherited a Government financial operation that is completely out of control. The problem has been created because successive Liberal administrations over the years believed in deficits of ever-growing proportions regardless of the state of the economy. Thirty to 40 per cent cost over-runs were a matter of course because of financial incompetence and indifference. Year after year this is what was served up to the Canadian people, a terrible legacy for this and future generations. We were elected to deal with this situation, Mr. Speaker, and deal with it we shall.

I will not bore you with statistics, Mr. Speaker. The House has heard often enough the price that current and future generations will have to pay for this lamentable legacy. We have heard of the amount owed by every man, woman, and child in this country for past spending excesses and how interest alone on the accumulated debt exceeds the total budget of a few short years ago.

I want to address solutions to this problem. We have to come to grips with our national debt in exactly the same way as one reduces a personal debt. We either achieve a higher income, reduce expenditures, or seek a combination of the two. This combination of the two mechanisms is what we proposed in the May Budget; increased federal income, partly through tax changes, on the one hand, and reduced federal expenditures on the other. It is important to recognize that action to increase revenue accounts for only 20 per cent of this year's attack on the deficit. Bill C-80 is but one part of a comprehensive approach the Government has initiated to break the financial hemorrhage we inherited in September, 1984.

Opposition spokesmen have sung a song about ordinary Canadians at every opportunity. They would have you and others, Mr. Speaker, believe that they and they alone speak for ordinary Canadians. Indeed, it was the ordinary Canadians, the many responsible and caring voters in this country, who cried "enough" just over a year ago. By the hundreds of thousands they threw out the tired and incompetent Liberal Government, rejected their fellows in arms, the NDP, and elected a Progressive Conservative Government which pledged to raise revenues, control spending, reduce the deficit and create jobs. This is exactly what we are doing, Mr. Speaker. We are keeping our campaign commitment on this issue as we have in the many other important policy areas.

Spending money is easy, Mr. Speaker. Our predecessors showed all of Canada just how good they were at spending money. Never mind any controls, think of a spending program and we will give you the money. Do not worry about accountability or prudence, there is more money where this came from. Their NDP colleagues chortled with joy. We have been witnessing a spending binge for over a decade, each encouraging the other with their spending zeal.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Terrible.

Mr. Crofton: For years the Auditor General has decried the lack of financial responsibility and accountability. The SRTC boondoggle was one of the last in a series of Liberal extravaganzas. Two billion? Three billion? Five billion? The financial bleeding still has not stopped from that great Grit scheme. The Canadian people said "enough".

Raising funds is not a popular or pleasant activity, but it is essential for the economic future of Canada. The majority of Canadians supported the initiatives in the May Budget. Public reaction was very plain on that score. Indeed, there was some strongly voiced criticism that the financial change of direction was not strong enough, that deficit reduction in our first Budget was too gentle. This time last year we were seeing the first faint signs that the recession was easing. The economy was still very fragile. Clearly, a responsible balance was required between necessary expenditures for essential social programs and job stimulation on the one hand, and economies in Government activity in other areas. The November economic statement and the May Budget struck that essential balance.

What has occurred in the 13 months since we came to office? The opposition Parties appear to be negative about everything that happens in this place. They certainly are negative about everything said by Members on this side of the House. Are they opposed to the fact that interest rates, bank rates, are down by over 3 per cent in the last 12 months? Are they opposed to the reduction in unemployment of 1.5 per cent over-all and over 2 per cent among young Canadians? Does the fact that bankruptucies are down 13 per cent find disfavour with them as well?

The inflation rate is steady at just under 4 per cent, business confidence is up in the past six months, the investment rate is up, housing starts have increased and consumer spending is up. Can the opposition Parties be opposed to all these important financial indicators? Canadians are not opposed to it.

In part, this improvement in the past 12 months, which is at least welcome on this side of the House, is the result of actions taken by the Government. Another important ingredient in this welcome change is the anticipation of stated government intentions, competent financial management and deficit control.

Earlier in this debate, Members opposite lamented the amount of money these tax measures in Bill C-80 would take from ordinary Canadians. As usual, they put forward very selective arguments and did not mention some of the offsetting benefits Canadians have received as part of the Government's actions. They include lower interest rates, over 300,000 new jobs, pensions for widows and widowers between the ages of 60 and 64, new increased pensions for the handicapped, increased pensions for veterans, substantial new funds for direct job creation and training, and funding for record-sized ERDA agreements with the provinces. There is a whole range of initiatives of direct benefit to Canadians in all walks of life. These are actions which have injected money and confidence into the economy.

Members on the other side have complained that Bill C-80 is a tax on the poor. However, they conveniently ignore the fact that the Government has invoked a surtax on the rich and will shortly introduce a Bill for a minimum tax, to commence in January, 1986, to ensure that all Canadians will pay a fair share of tax in the future. The Liberal Party, for all its years in office, did not have the wit or inclination to deal with this important matter. As well, we have introduced a surtax on corporations and a surtax on large banks and trust companies. All of these measures were contained in the May Budget. Since the Opposition is so negative, must one conclude that it is opposed to these measures as well?

Bill C-80 is an essential stage in restoring sensible fiscal management to our nation's affairs. The opposition Parties have shown considerable ingenuity in developing spending programs and indeed I will not deny that some of their ideas over the years have been good. We have endorsed some of them. Unfortunately, the Opposition does not seem to know how to raise funds adequately, sensibly and prudently and certainly how to account for these funds once they have been raised. Spending money is easy and oftentimes popular. Raising money tends to be unpopular and contentious. Nevertheless, it is an essential part of responsible Government, and responsible people must take responsible action to discharge this essential obligation.

Bill C-80 does that. It is a necessary response to the budgetary needs of this country. It is a proposal maligned by the unthinking and regretfully acknowledged as necessary by the rest. Bill C-80 is just one step in a long vital journey back to the economic safe ground where our massive debt can be brought under control, where competent and responsible fiscal management is restored to this country and where Canadians, after a number of years of uncertainty and doubt, can look forward to financial security for themselves and their families wherever they may live in Canada.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Crofton). The Bill before the House adds some $3.5 billion to the tax load of Canadians over the next couple of years. Many of those taxes, including the increased sales tax, an increase of some 2 cents a litre on gasoline and increased tobacco tax, will affect ordinary people.

In his opinion, is this the best way of reducing the deficit? Often if you reduce the spending power of consumers, you take money out of their pockets which goes into the federal Government's pocket. Doing that can slow down the economy at times. This does not necessarily increase the economy or make it more productive. To bring down the deficit, we have to become a nation of producers and we have to start doing things. Is not one way of doing that by increasing consumer spending? Rather than putting all this money into government coffers, are we not better off to leave that money in the pockets of ordinary Canadians who will spend the money for food, clothing and shelter, which will stimulate the economy and create more jobs?

Will the Hon. Member comment on the argument used by a lot of economists that the way to bring down the deficit is to leave more money in the hands of ordinary Canadians, who will spend it stimulating the economy from the grass roots up?

I know that one of the philosophies of the Conservative Party over the years was to stimulate the small business sector and consumer spending. When the Tories were on this side of the House they made speech after speech that that was the way to go. They did not argue before the election campaign that they should be raising taxes. Why is there this change in tune? I realize that the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich is a new Member, but does he agree with this approach or is he trying to defend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)?

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. There are several comments I would like to make in reply.

First, I again draw to the Hon. Member's attention the fact that Bill C-80 and the proposed tax measures are a part of the 20 per cent reduction in the deficit for this year. To suggest that Bill C-80 is the only measure that has been taken is, of course, quite wrong.

There is, indeed, a place in the scheme of things for deficit budgeting. Unhappily, the previous administration, over a great many years in good times and bad, indulged in that practice. If deficit budgeting had been properly co-ordinated and organized so that it was genuinely benefiting the Canadian economy, there might have been some purpose to it. But when you start getting 50 per cent cost overruns year after year to the point, as I emphasized earlier, that just interest payments on the debt are more than the whole budget of a few years ago, clearly corrective action has to be taken. If deficit spending was all that successful, why are we in the mess we are today? No control is the reason.

It is essential that revenues be raised to pay the debt and to pay for ongoing expenses. This Bill is an attempt to spread the load evenly. Action is being taken prudently, and in many instances phased in. It is irresponsible to do otherwise.

The Opposition has had a lot to say about proposed spending reductions, trimmings and cuts, and does not like any of them. That, however, is an essential part of the budgetary process. The additional revenues are only 20 per cent of the approach in this fiscal year to deal with the monumental problem that we have inherited.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member who comes from an area of the country where tourism plays a critical role. Perhaps if the Hon. Member is considering some areas where cuts would be appropriate, it might be in some of the tax expenditure areas which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has identified as being relatively non-productive. These are areas where there is little, if any, gain to the country as a result of some fairly large tax expenditures presented in his paper, which I appreciate.

Could the Hon. Member comment on the effect in his own area, particularly, where tourism plays such a critical role, of additional taxes on alcoholic beverages? Representations by the tourist community remind us time and time again that we cannot price ourselves totally out of the market. For American tourists coming to British Columbia for Expo '86, gas, accommodation, food and entertainment will be very expensive. Now we are to increase the cost of alcoholic beverages. Does the Hon. Member have some views to share with us on this point?

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that question as well. I remind the Hon. Member that in the rules which we inherited there was an automatic 4 per cent increase. This particular budgetary proposal reduces that increase to 2 per cent. Indeed it is a benefit to people in the entertainment industry.

An Hon. Member: It was a campaign promise.

Mr. Crofton: As my colleagues says, it was a campaign promise. It was but one on a long list of promises which we have kept.

I should like to refer to another matter at this time. The Opposition has criticized some of the tax proposals, such as the gasoline tax and the tax on alcohol and liquor. However, some of the Hon. Member's colleagues only a few short days ago were decrying the fact that the Government was proposing to talk with the Americans to try to deal with some serious trade matters. They were terribly afraid that somehow we would bargain away our social programs. They pointed with long fingers to the Americans who do not have a social security program like ours. Many of the social measures of our country are not enjoyed by the Americans. They cannot have it both ways. If we are to have these programs, the Government requires the revenue to pay for them. If they prefer cheaper gas, that is fine, they can live in the United States and do without medicare. That is the choice they have.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) for a supplementary question.

Mr. Nystrom: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You speak French very, very well now.

[English]

I wanted to ask the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich another question. When the Minister of Finance was talking about our finance system a few months ago, he said that Canada had an acute shortage of rich people. Does the Hon. Member agree with that?

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, if I had my druthers, all Canadians would be rich. The fact that there are not very many who are is no great source of pride—and it should not be—on the part of any Member of the House. I hope the standard of living and incomes of all Canadians will be improved. Unquestionably, over the years, there have been well-to-do Canadians who have managed to escape paying their proper share of taxes. The previous Liberal administration, for all its puffery, never got around to doing anything about it, as I said earlier. Indeed, we intend to. We have already introduced a surtax for this year. We also intend to introduce a minimum tax, which we hope we will be debating in the House very shortly, to take effect in January, 1986. It is long overdue. When we talk about rich Canadians, it is high time they paid their fair share. If that is the point the Hon. Member is trying to make, I share it.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, if that is the case, how can the Hon. Member support putting this extra $3 billion in taxes on ordinary Canadians? How can he support things such as partial deindexation of family allowances? Why did he support last spring, before the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) did a flip-flop, partial deindexation of old age pensions? If he is concerned that many people are not getting a fair deal in our taxation system, why does he support these kinds of measures? Obviously we have a very unfair taxation system.

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, maybe the hon. gentleman was not paying attention. I drew attention to the fact that indeed a number of initiatives were taken by the Government of benefit to ordinary Canadians, not the least of which was the reduction of 3 per cent in interest rates. That puts a great deal of money back into the pockets of Canadians, hundreds of thousands who were paying mortgages on which formerly there were usurious interest rates of over 20 per cent. For the first time in a long while, five-year mortgages are being offered. These are all beneficial things.

We have introduced a number of new pensions for people who were not getting them previously. Indeed, there is a fair bit of money being injected back into the economy. Job creation is a very important part of it. Whether the sales tax goes up 1 per cent or down 1 per cent is of cold comfort and not of a great deal of interest to someone who does not have a job and cannot even buy the essentials in the first place, whether or not their price has gone up by a few pennies. We are trying to take measures on a broad front.

• (1125)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now terminated. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I have just a few words to say concerning this Bill.

Mr. de Corneille: The House will never be ready for the question.

Mr. Baker: I think it should be kept in mind that Clause 9 of the Bill means that the telecommunications programming tax rises from 6 per cent to 7 per cent; Clause 13 of this Bill before the House increases the excise tax on wine; Clause 15(3) will repeal a Section of the Excise Tax Act, the effect of which imposes sales tax on certain building components and materials; Clause 16 increases the federal sales tax from 10 per cent to 11 per cent.

From listening to the Conservative Members, one would not know but that this was a good Bill for Canadians. Clause 49 increases the gas excise tax by two cents a litre as of September 3 and one cent a litre on January 1, 1987. Regarding that September 3 date, on which the two cents per litre increase in gas excise tax becomes applicable, I am sure Canadians will remember that marvellous statement in the Budget Speech that said that the increase in the tax on gasoline would be held off until just after the summer vacation, so it would not affect the tourist trade for 1985. What a ridiculous statement for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to make in the Budget! Obviously, it is going to affect the tourist trade every year after 1985.

Let us continue. Clause 15 increases the excise taxes on cigarettes, tobacco and cigars.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. We are in second reading and the Hon. Member knows, and surely I do not have to tell him, that we are speaking to the Bill in general terms and not clause by clause. That will come a little later. I hope that the Hon. Member, who has been here a few years, as long as I can remember, will comply with those rules.

Mr. Baker: Generally speaking, it is a terrible Bill. If I were to run through all of the tax increases that are included in this particular measure it would take me my entire 20 minutes in this Chamber. Canadians who pick up the daily newspaper know that these taxes should not be imposed, that this is not the right time to impose these taxes.

Today in The Globe and Mail there is a story which quotes the National Anti-Poverty Organization. It said the following:

> A study by the organization of the Budget's tax measures concludes that families with incomes of less than $10,000 will pay, on average, an extra $128 a year. For families with annual incomes of $25,000 to $30,000, the increase will be an average of $308. For those with annual incomes of more than $50,000, the extra cost will average $547.

Then the article goes on to say:

> The tax increase for families making more than $50,000 a year is 0.69 per cent of their income, compared with 1.39 per cent for families making less than $10,000 a year.

Those are facts that they have dug up, and here they are under the heading "Taxes Worst for Poor".

In the same newspaper and in every newspaper in Canada we read that today the first contract for the Prime Minister's Office to install new communications equipment is estimated to cost $7 million. We read about the UI premiums scheduled to rise on January 1. That is what employees and employers have to pay into the system. No problem. Hit the poor, and there is money for such things as a communications system for the Prime Minister's Office. We all know that a new communications system is what is probably needed in the Prime Minister's Office. It appears as though the communications system in the Prime Minister's Office is not all that great. Perhaps this might solve the problem. After all, it will only cost about $7 million, according to the media.

• (1130)

In the past few days, we have heard the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) say that she is renegotiating gasoline prices with the producing provinces. There will be all of these tax increases for Canadian consumers. The Government has increased the unemployment insurance premium while a study is in progress. The Government announced in the Budget that it would re-analyse the unemployment insurance scheme because it said that there is too much wastage in the system. After all that, we hear announcements like the one which emanated from the Prime Minister's Office. We see that there appears to be two rules for the Government: one for the rich and one for the poor, one for ordinary Canadians and one for the select few.

Perhaps the worst aspect of this Bill is that it will impact more on the poorer provinces than it will on the richer provinces. When analysing how these taxes are collected, one discovers that after the federal tax is put on, there is a provincial tax levied on the bottom line.

The Government announced in the Budget that it would increase gasoline prices by 2 cents per litre, but because it did not want to disturb the tourism industry in 1985, it waited until September 3, 1985, to do it. The Government did not take into consideration what would happen after September 3, 1985.

What is also not taken into account by the Government is that there are provinces in this nation that have provincial taxes that are as high as 22 per cent. As well, there is one province with no taxes. In effect, this particular Bill provides a windfall to provincial administrations with excessive taxation on the bottom line. Someone living in Newfoundland is hit worse by the Budget than someone living in another province of Canada. It is estimated that Newfoundlanders have to pay again 50 per cent of the taxes imposed under this Bill. Surely that is not fair. The Bill is not fair to all Canadians.

The same thing applies to the changes in income tax. When filling out one's income tax form, one first fills out federal tax payable and then provincial tax payable as a percentage of federal tax payable. When a change is made to the federal tax payable, it influences the provincial tax payable. In provinces like Newfoundland with high provincial income tax, one ends up paying even more provincial income tax. This is how the budgetary measures brought in by the Government provide a windfall for the provincial administrations as well as the federal administration.

Canadians in the poorer provinces who have to pay double what people in other provinces have to pay because of the provincial take on the bottom line, whether in income tax or sales tax, wonder what the Government is doing. Those people see the Government spending $1 billion here and $1 billion there with only a sweep of the pen. The spending of this money occurred because of an on-the-spot decision made by the Minister of Finance or the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) under the direction of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in a private meeting held on a Saturday afternoon while the economic conference was going on and the TV cameras were rolling. The Prime Minister had to make a decision on the spur of the moment and he made a decision that will cost Canadians $1 billion.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Stop! Stop!

Mr. Baker: Those are the decisions that make ordinary Canadians ask what the Government is doing. They ask why the Government is hitting them at the gas pumps and on their income tax and everything else.

An Hon. Member: To pay off our debts.

Mr. Baker: The hon. gentleman says that it is to pay off our debts. If there has to be a pay-off of our debts, then why are we giving away so much money? Why is the Government giving to the rich people and taking away from the poor people? Why is the Government so flippant about a measly $1 billion here and $1 billion there while it increases the unemployment insurance premiums? Why has the Government examined the unemployment insurance scheme and come to the conclusion that it is a giveaway? Why are there so many contradictions?

During the election campaign, every single Conservative Member complained about the giveaway make-work projects. I must admit that that hit home with a lot of people. A lot of people agreed that some of those projects were a waste of money. However, what has happened? Nothing has happened. Nothing has changed. Just yesterday, the Government of Canada with the Government of Newfoundland announced make-work projects for fishermen on the northeast coast of Newfoundland. That was a great announcement and I applud the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). However, why in goodness' name did she not do something about this problem when it was brought to her attention some three months ago? If she had done something then, we would not have to be in such a rush and we would not have to make up short-term make-work projects so that people can get their 10 stamps. It is little consolation to Canadians to realize that the Government of Canada is in the process of re-examining the entire unemployment insurance scheme but that a couple of years down the road, many Canadians will not qualify for it in any event.

I think I have said almost everything that needs to be said about this Bill. It is a terrible Bill. Mr. Speaker would not allow me to run through all of the tax increases. I accept his decision. He has been in the chair for some years and he knows the rules. I should know the rules as well. However, the point is that this particular Bill is a terrible Bill. It cannot be justified by the Minister of Finance or the Minister of State for Finance or the Prime Minister. It cannot be justified by any member of the Conservative Government. It is a Bill that goes against all campaign promises. I can assure Conservative Members that we will pull every stunt in the book to delay this Bill because it is a bad Bill. All Canadians agree with us that it should not be passed by this Chamber.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) has given a very fine speech on the unfairness of this Bill. I wonder if he would agree with me that the way this Government treats ordinary Canadians is almost as bad as the way the former Liberal Government treated Canadians.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, that is an interesting question. If the former Liberal Government behaved in the manner in which this Government is behaving, half of us would have resigned.

Mr. Murphy: Or gone to the Senate.

Mr. Baker: Half of us would have sat as independents if it had behaved in the manner in which this Government is behaving. It has reached the point now in Question Period when the Prime Minister will not answer, the Minister of Finance will not answer—nobody will answer the questions because, of course, they are embarrassing questions.

● (1140)

I do not recall, and I am sure Hon. Members will agree, when we have had a Government which has taken so many actions against ordinary Canadians in such a short period of time. I think the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party would agree that we have never seen such a mess in the past 12 to 15 years as we have seen with this Government over the past year.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that if a Liberal Government ever brought down a Budget such as this one half of its members would resign. Is it not true, Mr. Speaker, that in the last federal election about 70 per cent of them were forced to resign?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would the Hon. Member like to comment on that?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, my only response to that is that in the next election the Hon. Member will see an awful lot of people coming out of retirement.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I cannot resist saying a few words with respect to this Bill. I had no intention of speaking on it today, but as my hon. friend from Ottawa-Carleton interjected a few moments ago from his seat: "This is a very tough Bill." He said it is a very, very tough Bill. It is a tough Bill. Tory times are tough times, as we used to say on the Prairies. I am sure you as an Albertan, Mr. Speaker, remember those comments as a kid. Tory times are tough times. I am not old enough to remember, since I was born in 1946, but my father and grandfather used to talk about the great recession and the great depression when R. B. Bennett was in power in Ottawa and when we had a Conservative Government in power in the Province of Saskatchewan. Those were really tough times on the Prairies. They also had what was called the Bennett Buggies on the Prairies. These were old cars from which the engines were removed and horses were hitched up to them because Tory times were tough times. Once again, we are seeing that type of phenomenon.

My friend from Ottawa-Carleton says it is a tough budget measure—it is a tough budget measure. Tory times are terrible times. Tory times are tough times. We are seeing exactly that type of Bill before the House today.

Why do I say that? I say that because the ordinary Canadian family will be hit with an additional tax load of $500 per family as a result of the Bill which is before us today—$500 per family.

Another reason I am standing in my place speaking now is I concur with the comment made by the Hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) who says that this is a very tough Bill. He is a Tory whom I really admire. He is willing to stand up and tell the truth. I notice his analysis of this measure is confirmed in a report found in The Globe and Mail of this morning. If Hon. Members read the paper this morning they will have seen a story with the following headline: "Taxes worst for poor, poverty fighters say". The article quotes the National Anti-Poverty Organization which represents poor people from across the country who say that this particular Bill hits the poor Canadians, the ordinary Canadians, exactly twice as hard as it does rich Canadians. The article reads in part:

> Federal tax increases announced in the budget will take twice as much from the poorest Canadians as they do from the most affluent, and Ottawa must consider a new tax credit to mitigate the effects, the National Anti-Poverty Organization says.
> The sales- and excise-tax increases announced in the May budget "have a much greater impact on the bank teller than they do on the bank president,"—

The article goes on:

> The study says those estimates "make it clear that the poorest of Canadians will pay increases in federal sales and excise taxes at twice the rate paid by the most affluent families."

The organization goes on to state that, in fact, the increase for the poorest Canadians, those who earn under $10,000 a year as an average income, compared to those who earn over $50,000 a year as an average income, will be twice as great. Thus, my friend from Ottawa-Carleton says it is a tough Budget—of course it is a tough Budget. It is very tough on ordinary Canadians, the poor people of the country, the unemployed, those working at the minimum wage, people who do not have skills or the breaks that those of us in society have who are making over $50,000 a year.

So the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton is right when he says that it is a tough measure and that Tory times are indeed tough times. Tory times are bad times, and we see a good example of that in Bill C-80 which we are debating before the House today.

As I have said before, the Bill proposes to increase the tax load on the average Canadian family by $500 a year—$500 a year. This comes from a Party which a year and a half ago in the election campaign did not promise to raise taxes. This comes from a Party that did not say: "Elect me and we will increase your taxes." Members of that Party did not say that at all. In fact, when tax measures were before the House a year and a half ago when the governing Party sat in opposition they got up and said: "This is not the way to bring down the deficit. This is not the way to solve the problems of ordinary Canadians. The problems of the ordinary Canadian can be solved by making sure there are fair tax cuts given to ordinary Canadians". However, once in office, members of that Party are doing exactly the opposite of what they preached a year and a half ago. Thus, we now see an increase of $500 in taxes for the average Canadian family on the one hand, while on the other hand we find that there is a tax decrease for the corporations of the country of at least $500 million in the calendar year 1986.

This is only one Bill which is being dealt with by Parliament. There is another Bill before the House which proposes to bail out the banks by $1 billion. This is a Bill for big, wealthy depositors, many of them foreign banks which, if this Bill passes, will be subsidized—forgiven—because they had deposits at the Canadian Commercial Bank. At the same time I represent a riding of western Canadian farmers who are having difficulties making ends meet. In my province we have a tremendous drought in the southern part of the province. A study was conducted of that drought in southern Saskatchewan by the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson). It took him several weeks to carry out the study. Once it was done he presented his report to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). We had a commitment in the House from one of the Ministers that at a cabinet meeting of last week the Government would make a decision with respect to this matter. No decision has been made and I am told by reliable sources that one will come in about two weeks' time at the minimum.

Why are we so quick in the country to pass Bills to bail out bankers? Why are we in such haste to increase the tax load on ordinary Canadian families by $500 a year? Yet we cannot assist farmers who are suffering from a tremendous drought in southern Saskatchewan. All summer long we saw pictures on our television screens of the drought in the southern part of Saskatchewan. Yet there is still no help for those ordinary Canadian farmers.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, why should we support this tough budget measure? The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton is right. I hope he will get up and make another speech on this point. I hope that he will go before the committee to explain to us what he means when he says that we are dealing here with a very tough Government Bill. Indeed, it is a tough Bill because Tory times are tough times. Just as they were in the 1930s, they will be tough times again. The Bill bofore us should not pass. The National Anti-Poverty Organization of this country says that it should not pass. It will affect the poor people twice as much as it will the rich. We are supposed to be here to make sure things are more fair and equal for each and every Canadian.

Another matter which strikes me as unfair with respect to this particular Bill and with respect to our tax system in general, since we are having a general discussion on whether this Bill is fair in principle or not, is that we are collecting far too little from the corporations of the country. I make no apology for saying that I advocate some tax increases. However, I advocate them for the rich and for the corporations of the country. The Economic Council of Canada in its 1984 review said that corporate tax expenditures through forgone tax revenue represent a loss of around $30 billion to $50 billion a year to the Canadian population. To put that more clearly, what the council is saying is that we could be collecting between $30 billion and $50 billion more a year.

I find it almost impossible to believe that we could be collecting that much more in taxes from corporations in the country. According to the 1984 annual review by the Economic Council of Canada—by no means a radical body, a socialist body or a bunch of crazies—we can collect in addition between $30 billion and $50 billion a year from corporations. Even taking the lower sum of $30 billion a year, this increase of $500 a family would not be necessary. Instead of increasing taxes by $500 a year, we could decrease taxes by $500 a year. We could also have an extra several billion dollars a year to reduce our deficit. The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Crofton) argues that our debt is too high and that the Liberals, when they were in power, were irresponsible. Of course, we know that the Liberals spent irresponsibly and more importantly, they collected irresponsibly. They failed to plug the tax shelters and loopholes such as the deferred taxes of Canadian corporations. And if the Economic Council of Canada is right, they could have collected $30 billion plus per year from the corporations, which would have reduced our deficit and the tax load which ordinary Canadians have to pay. That money could have been used to stimulate agriculture, forestry, the fishery and small business, thereby creating more jobs, and we would have had a more affluent Canada, to boot. It is not only members of the opposition Parties who are saying this. The Economic Council of Canada, a cross section of experts, says the same thing.

I believe that is the way we should go. Let us collect taxes from those who are most able to pay. Let us have a tough economic measure with respect to the large corporations rather than being tough on ordinary Canadians and, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) says, Bill C-80 is tough on ordinary Canadians.

However, in that Bill, Mr. Speaker, we find tax increases for the ordinary Canadians. There will soon be a 7 per cent tax on building materials in this country at a time when we need more funds for housing. Yesterday, my eye caught a large headline in the Ottawa Citizen which said that Ontario needed increased housing.

Mr. Speaker, there will be a 7 per cent tax on pay television and on cablevision. There will be a 14 per cent tax on alcoholic beverages; I am not against that one, it is a sensible tax.

Mr. Speaker, I also approve of another provision in that Bill and it is the 14 per cent tax on cigarettes, cigars and other such products. However, there are too many taxes to be collected from ordinary Canadians and this is not fair. The sales tax will be increased as well as the tax on gasoline.

[English]

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the increase in the sales tax on gasoline will be two cents per litre, which is about 10 cents per gallon. That in itself will cost ordinary Canadians several hundreds of millions of dollars.

We had an election back in 1980. The main issue during the election campaign was the proposal of the then Minister of Finance, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) of an 18 cents per gallon excise tax on gasoline. The Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) was the Prime Minister at that time. After only nine months in office he was clobbered in the following election partly because of the 18 cents a gallon he wanted to impose as a sales tax on gasoline.

Mr. Crofton: The truth hurts.

Mr. Nystrom: I did not quite hear the interjection but I believe the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich said that the truth hurts. I suspect he was agreeing with me that the truth certainly hurt the former Prime Minister, because following the election he became the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. Canadians do not like that kind of increase. In my own province of Saskatchewan the CCF was defeated in 1964 by the Liberal Party partly because the Liberals came out with a policy of purple gas for the farmer. This was very popular with the farming community. They needed that kind of tax break. That was one reason why the old CCF Party lost the election.

In 1982, after the New Democratic Party was in power for 11 years, Grant Devine, as Leader of the Conservative Party, came out with the promise that if he was elected, there would not be any gas tax. That also was a very popular measure. The politics of gasoline taxation in this country are very powerful. Whether it was the Hon. Member for Yellowhead in 1979, Grant Devine in 1982 or Ross Thatcher in 1964, people are not going to favour those who want to impose steep taxes on gasoline.

In spite of all the evidence to the contrary, the Conservative Government is now increasing the tax on gasoline by two cents per litre. That is not just on gasoline for cars but on aviation and diesel fuel. That is a big tax increase to impose on ordinary Canadians.

The total of these increases comes to about $3.5 billion. As the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton said, it is a tough measure and it was a tough Budget. And as the National Anti-Poverty Organization states, it hits ordinary Canadians twice as hard as it hits the wealthy in this country. If Hon. Members of the Conservative Party can stand in the House and refute what was said by the National Anti-Poverty Organization, I would be pleased to see them do it. If they can refute the arguments of the Economic Council of Canada which said we should be collecting an extra $30 billion or $50 billion of taxes from corporations every year, then I would be pleased to hear those arguments. If not, let them pay heed to the Conservative Member of Parliament for Ottawa-Carleton and agree that it is a tough measure to impose on ordinary Canadians. It is reactionary and regressive and is reminiscent of the old Liberal days. Let us defeat this legislation or else radically amend it.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) and a comment I would like to make. The Hon. Member describes these present days as Tory tough times and tries to relate back to the depression days which I did not personally experience as he himself did not. I would like to ask the Hon. Member if 304,000 new jobs created in the first year of Government—if the rate continues for four years it will mean 1,250,000 new jobs—means tough times? Unemployment is down by over 1.5 per cent, I believe, and it is down 2 per cent with respect to young people. People are getting jobs now. Is it tough times when people can get jobs?

There were 177,000 new home starts in the first year. There were 177,000 new homes built with mortgages which now have an interest rate of 3 per cent to 3.5 per cent lower than previously. Is that tough times? There has been a 25 per cent increase in car sales. People are buying cars now. Is that tough times? The Hon. Member describes the Bennett buggy. I suggest that there are not very many Bennett buggies around in these Tory tough times, as he describes it.

Business investments are up. People are now investing in Canada. New factories are being built, which creates new jobs. Is that tough times? Consumer confidence is up. Purchases by consumers are up. Is that tough times?

My last point is that we have kept the inflation below the 4 per cent level. We know that increasing inflation creates recession and depression. That is why I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he is in favour of these Tory tough times I have just described or is he opposed to that type of growth?

Mr. Nystrom: If Tory tough times are so great, why do we have to impose this $500 tax per family through this budget measure? If things are so great and prosperous, why do we have to increase taxes on ordinary Canadians by $500 apiece? Why do we not listen to the National Anti-poverty Organization which says that we are hitting ordinary Canadians harder than we are hitting rich people? I ask the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Minaker) why we must take that kind of reactionary measure if we have all that money, if things are beautiful and if there is a golden tap out there?

To take this point by point, the unemployment rate has dropped by a little over 1 per cent in the last year. The unemployment rate is dropping around the world, Mr. Speaker. What is the Government doing that is different from what is being done in other parts of the world? Our unemployment rate is not dropping any faster than that of our major trading partners. A major report on poverty was released last Thursday. It says that about 4.5 million Canadians are living in poverty. Those are Canadians who will say that Tory times are tough times. They are not tough times for wealthy people who have a few bucks with which to build apartment buildings or take holidays in the Caribbean. I know that they are not tough times for the wealthy people of this country. This Budget is reducing taxes for corporations. It creates an exemption of $500,000 on capital gains.

I agree with my hon. friend that these are not tough times for wealthy people. However, come to my riding and talk to the ordinary farmer. There are more and more farm bankruptcies nowadays. The price of grain is down around the world. There is more and more difficulty for young farmers to stay on the farm. There is a drought in southern Saskatchewan. The Government has been sitting on a report now for several weeks refusing to assist farmers who are suffering because of the drought. Yet there is $1 billion for banks and all kinds of money for large corporations.

For the farmers in the drought area, Tory times are tough times. For the mothers who have kids and are living below the poverty line and have their family allowances cut back, Tory times are tough times. Mr. Speaker, for ordinary Canadians who are going to pay an extra $500 a year because of tax measures in this Budget, Tory times are tough times. The Member for Ottawa Carleton is absolutely right. This is a tough measure on ordinary Canadians and we should not be doing this in a country as affluent as Canada.

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). He wants to draw a comparison between the early 1930s and the present day. I would like him to reflect for a moment upon what was happening to the economy prior to this election and what was happening to the economy before the election of 1930. I would like him to reflect upon who was in office when these two great recessions afflicted the country and which Government was spending money in a profligate manner. Which Governments were in office on those occasions? What did the Canadian people do at their first opportunity? Which Party did they turn to to take the appropriate and necessary measures to put the country back on track? I ask the Member to reflect on that and I would be interested to hear his response. Which Governments were in office when the two bad recessions hit and to whom did the Canadian people turn for the stern and necessary measures to put us back on track?

Mr. Nystrom: The answer to that is very simple. The Liberal Party was in power prior to the 1930s when the Great Depression started and the Liberal Party was in power prior to September 4. We all know that. It is history. The Conservative Party was elected in both cases. However, it is interesting that the Member asks which Party came to power and took the "appropriate and necessary action" to put things in order. The Member says that the people turned to a certain Government to do the necessary thing. It was R. B. Bennett who did the appropriate thing in this country.

Is the Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Crofton) saying that R. B. Bennett is the model, that what R. B. Bennett did in the 1930s the man from Manicouagan is going to do in the 1980s? Is he telling the Canadian people that R. B. Bennett was right and that we are going to follow his model? The Member said that R. B. Bennett did the appropriate, right and necessary things. I do not think that people want to follow in the footsteps of R. B. Bennett.

I come from the Prairies and I know that those Tory times were tough times. I know that my grandfather sold a steer and shipped it by rail to Winnipeg. He received a freight bill for $1.87 because he got less for the steer than what the CPR charged him for the freight. Mr. Speaker, for my grandfather Tory times were tough times, but the Member for Esquimalt-Saanich is saying that R. B. Bennett did the appropriate, necessary and right thing. The Member is implying to the House that the man from Manicouagan is going to do exactly the same for the economy in the 1980s as R. B. Bennett did in the 1930s. If I am misinterpreting what the Member said, he can get up and make another comment or ask another question. He said that the Liberals were in power prior to the 1930s and prior to 1984, that the Tories took over and did the right, necessary and appropriate things. After about six years of the administration of R. B. Bennett the Tory Party was tossed out on its ear and stayed out of office for 30 or 40 years except for the five years of the Diefenbaker administration.

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment in response. The difficulties of the 1930s were inherited from the previous administration, as were the present difficulties. I suggest to the hon. gentleman that the circumstances of the 1930s were unique because it was a financial dilemma experienced in the western world far beyond anything that had been previously known, and it was magnified by a very serious drought on the Prairies. Many of the essential social programs which we enjoy in Canada were initiated during that period. We now have a number of new social initiatives to deal with the underprivileged and people in need in Canada today. There is a parallel, but I assure you that the initiatives which are being taken now are being enacted with sensitivity. They are essential and the entire country would be a lot further ahead if members of the New Democratic Party were a part of the reconstruction process rather than being an encumbrance.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to have been referred to so frequently by the Hon. Member. I did not realize that he had such an affection for the riding of Ottawa Carleton and I am very taken by this. However, it is tough to sit here and be told that I am being tough. It is tough to make tough decisions when you are bailing out a country from an unbelievable fiscal mess inherited from our predecessors.

The Member spoke about Tory times being tough times. He is from Saskatchewan. This August I took the trouble to go to Saskatchewan and look at the effects of the drought. I agree that it is terrible and the Government will respond accordingly. However, you cannot blame the drought on the Tories. Let us keep the drought problem in perspective.

However, what can be blamed on western Canada is the National Energy Program, that great socialist axis which destroyed the oil and gas industry of the western economy, which industry has now been rejuvenated by the Western Accord. Those are not tough times but good times for westerners, and the Member should remember that. I ask the Member to keep in proper perspective what we are doing with this Bill and other fiscal measures to restore the health of the Canadian economy. My colleague mentioned some of the very positive key economic indicators. He must not lose sight of the tremendous economic achievements which we have had in our first 13 months in power.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Member for Esquimalt-Saanich said that there is a parallel between the 1930s and 1980s in terms of what the Tories will do. He said that they inherited all kinds of serious problems, and I assume there is a parallel between the solutions as well. He seemed to be quite proud of some of the social and economic accomplishments of R. B. Bennett. Maybe this gives us some insight into the philosophy of some members of the Conservative Party.

My friend, the Member for Ottawa Carleton, was in Saskatchewan and saw the drought conditions. I am glad he was there. We need to have a lot of Members of Parliament become more aware of particular regions. I hope the Member will join us in putting pressure on the Prime Minister to come up with funds for the people in southwestern Saskatchewan.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I already have.

Mr. Nystrom: I am glad he has done that. The Member for Assiniboia has put a lot of time into working on a special report, but the Prime Minister has been sitting on it. There was a commitment in the House that it would be made public a long time ago. Perhaps even you, Mr. Speaker, can lend your considerable weight to putting pressure on the Prime Minister because we need that money and I am sure those people would appreciate it.

● (1210)

The Tories do not control the weather. I know that the Prime Minister believes he can control much, but he does not control the weather. However, the Tories control the purse-strings and if a billion dollars can be spent on the banks, we can spend a few million dollars for the farmers as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the House for this opportunity to speak to a Bill that will help to restore the economy of this country.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Plamondon: You will have your turn.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-80, which is aimed at amending the Excise Tax Act and other acts in consequence thereof, will increase the Government's revenues by $2.5 billion in 1986.

Mr. Speaker, our task today as Members of the Progressive Conservative Party is, of course, not a very cheerful one. Asking people to make sacrifices is never an easy thing to do. However, considering the financial situation we inherited from the previous Government, we had, need I say it again, no choice. What makes our task even more difficult is the realization, and I hope I can say this calmly, that the Members of the previous Government had created an untenable situation in this country, as a result of poor financial management, lack of interest in the economy, a complete absence of administrative skills and their chronic fear of taking action to contain inflation because they were afraid to arouse the displeasure of the people, and all this for the sole purpose of maintaining their little kingdom, and there was also their increasing tendency distributing favours, thus aiding and abetting the kind of bandaid policies they incorporated into the system for over fifteen years, with their legendary arrogance which deprived this country of the views of all its economic and social partners.

For more than fifteen years, as a result of their absurd phobia, their incredible excuse that all the ills of this country were to be blamed on nationalists, whether they were from Quebec or anywhere else in Canada, and by their legendary but ill-famed skill in focussing the attention of the media on artificial problems while the real ones were waiting desperately for solutions, yes, Mr. Speaker, those people, and I hope no one will ever forget it, plunged this country into the morass from which it is now emerging, thanks to the responsible attitude of this Government's Members.

Mr. Speaker, we are not talking through our hats. In less than one year and a half, we have done more for Canadians than the so-called New-Liberal-Democrats managed to do in fifteen years.

During the election campaign, Mr. Speaker, we had promised to shift into reverse and get rid of those famous hand-out programs which had made a good many Canadians rely exclusively on their good old paternalistic Members of Parliament. Those popular programs had undermined the creative vitality of our country's most innovative, most promising and most sacred resource, our youths, programs which practically eliminated all retraining opportunities for workers in their forties who had just lost their jobs because the Government, totally unimaginative as it was, simply could not bring itself to get off the beaten path.

Mr. Speaker, this Government is extremely proud to have completely destroyed all such remnants of the mental atrophy of pseudo-Jesuits.

Our Government strongly believed that Canadians were determined to build a new country, a country which is not afraid to take bold steps, a country which affords every citizen the opportunity to open up a new career, which gives its people the incentive to start up new businesses and provides them with the proper tools to shed fears created by ignorance and generated by paternalism.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) rose to the challenge and did get off the beaten path. She expressed full confidence in the private sector. She knew she could count on the intelligence of youths and Canadians generally, and she simply would not baby them as the previous Government had done. Well, Mr. Speaker, she did live up to the challenge, and how!

The programs we now have cannot in any way be considered as crutches one must carry throughout life, for they are indeed stepping stones towards the kind of training which is absolutely essential in our days.

Mr. Speaker, I have not lost sight of the issue as I speak these words because, sure enough, every good thing has its price, and Canadians were aware of this when they elected us. No Government, even if I am willing to render unto Caligula the things which are Caligula's, can deny its responsibility for a disaster simply by passing the buck. It should act and try, as a good Government, with all the resources at its disposal and the cooperation of the people in all walks of life, to find the best and cheapest solutions, especially if it assumed power at a time when the country was on the brink of bankruptcy.

Mr. Speaker, this Government having decided to act with, I repeat, the consent of the Canadian people, it has felt that a tax increase on various commodities was the price to pay to help our economy recover. I said the Government had the consent of the Canadian people, Mr. Speaker, because in the September 1984 election, the Canadian people clearly demonstrated to our hon. friends opposite that they had lost faith in their quack remedies, that they did not believe that they could reduce the deficit with quasi-usurious interest rates, with uncontrolled unemployment, with an elitist, arrogant and despising attitude, by encouraging a number of provinces at the expense of others, and with the narrow-mindedness of their elected representatives. No, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people clearly demonstrated that they had reached the age of political maturity, that they realized finally that those who borrow money must pay it back sooner or later, and that if we did not reimburse what we owe, we would jeopardize forever our future.

Because it wants very strongly to put Canada back on the right track again, the Government will not surrender its responsibilities simply to make political gains as the former Liberal administration tried to, because it was in utter disarray. The Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced in his Budget that Canada would no longer bury its head in the sand and that it would make a voluntary collective effort to get out of the hole.

It is the mark of a good leader and a good people when, together, they decide to apply difficult but effective constraints to put their country back on track. Such an attitude can only lead to success.

Mr. Speaker, it was said about the Budget on which Bill C-80 is based that it was regressive in that it hit poor people harder than the rich. Those who said so consciously omitted the fact that a taxpayer with an annual income of $100,00 will be hit by a $1,629 tax hike next year, while a taxpayer with an income of $30,000 will only have to face an increase of $133.

What this shows, Mr. Speaker, is the will to balance the Canadian taxation system. It is the wish of this Government to put more equity into a system which, until now, rewarded the rich too easily and taxed the poor too heavily.

• (1220)

Mr. Speaker, what Bill C-80 tells us, as it is an integral part of this Budget, is that, if the Government really tries to balance the tax burden and to make it more equitable, each citizen will also have to be willing to do his fair share of this national economic readjustment effort. Bill C-80 is not unfair. In view of the situation existing when we took over the reins of this country, it seems to be instead a logical solution which should have been applied long ago by this House, but which never was because of the lassez-faire attitude of the previous Government.

Mr. Speaker, with all these Budget measures aimed at reducing expenditures rather than at increasing taxes, the Progressive Conservative Government sets an example by saying that the effort must be collective and fair for everybody.

Our friends over there did not hesitate one moment to revile against the budget, calling us all possible names. Still, Mr. Speaker, have they not read as we all have, that this great budget directly resulted in increased investor confidence, a factor of economic renewal that is vital to economic liberalism? And I am referring here to the genuine thing, the liberalism of Rousseau, Montesquieu and the like, rather than to the gutter class of liberalism espoused by our friends over there, the kind that has taken on the electoral ambitions of those Sunday phoney Socialists.

As did the fathers of our capitalistic system, we are looking for stability and justice in our relations with our fellow men, which indeed have made a success of that system. Have not our friends over there, Mr. Speaker, seen as we all have that another direct consequence of that budget was the reduction in the unemployment rate? Have they gone blind? Were they so overwhelmed by the situation when they were in Government that they lost confidence completely in the ability of Canadians to correct any situation? The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker, they had lost faith. But nothing is lost thanks to us, the strayed sheep roaming in the limbo of disbelief will find their way again.

Have our friends over there not seen, as we all have, that interest rates are declining, another consequence of the Budget? No, Mr. Speaker, they saw nothing. Not only have they become blind, but they have forgotten their mathematics. They have forgotten that with low interest rates, there are increased consumer expenditures, increased housing starts and a decrease in the number of failures.

Maybe they have not forgotten anything, maybe they never could count? If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, with our new employment strategy—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) on a point of order.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we have been listening with interest to the Hon. Member's long dressing-down. As is his right he is throwing all kinds of insults at the Liberal Party of Canada. But it seems to me this bears little relevance to Bill C-80 now before us, and I would ask you to call the Hon. Member back into line and ask him to deal with the matter at hand.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sure the Hon. Member was getting to the principle of the Bill. I find that, generally speaking, the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon) was speaking to the whole principle of the Bill. Maybe I have missed something.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): You have, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sure the Hon. Member will come back to the relevancy of Bill C-80.

[Translation]

Mr. Plamondon: Mr. Speaker, I am very much surprised the Hon. Member does not see the connection between out-of-proportion expenditures and the deficit inherited by our Government, and the steps we are now taking to correct the situation.

I was indeed suggesting—no problem, Mr. Speaker—that considering our new employment strategy with the required training aspect, we will be in a position to send the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) and the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) on a re-training course, and thanks to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), perhaps they finally will see the light.

Seriously, Mr. Speaker, this Government wants more than that. It wants to restore Canada to its economic strength of the 60's. It wants Canada to recapture the leading role it once had, and to that end, clearly, the Government and the people must strive harder to regain lost ground.

Mr. Speaker, we are perfectly aware that speeches are not enough, as the previous Prime Minister once believed. Unfortunately, the cost of success is very high. Bill C-80 is an example. But everyone should know that it was not of its own free will that this Government decided to introduce it. But it is just and fair for everyone. Canadian citizens must contribute to this country's success. Some may believe that the Government alone must look after the needs of society. This is their right. But clearly, on the night of September 4, 1984, Canadians believed otherwise. They preferred to be on the spot, to roll up their sleeves and help their elected representatives rebuild a new country.

Mr. Speaker, I am honoured, and prouder than ever to be a Canadian and to contribute with this Government to putting our finances back in order with Bill C-80.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions, comments. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I listened closely to the Hon. Member's speech, and I would have a question to ask. We know that in Bill C-80, there is reference to the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Tax. This Bill amends existing statutes and is a bulky and intensive piece legislation. If you look at the Bill, you also find that the people, the consumers of Canada will pay $4.1 billion in additional income tax between now and 1990-1991. We also find that there will be increased sales tax and excise tax for a total amount of $2.6 billion between now and 1990-91. On the other hand, corporations will be getting a gift, they will be getting some $2.2 billion in tax reductions. And the rich—because we should remember than when Tories are in Government the rich get richer—I repeat, the rich will be entitled to a tax deduction, that is if they invest and earn half a million dollars in capital gains, they may reduce their income tax accordingly.

I am asking the Hon. Member a very simple question: Where is the fairness in all that? Where is the fairness, when we know that average consumers will be taxed, while big corporations, friends of the Conservative Party, will get tax benefits and tax concessions?

Mr. Plamondon: Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised at being asked such a question. We have always advocated that this country's economic renewal would be accomplished by the private sector with the help of tax measures that would contribute to create jobs. The previous Government tried its hand at it by constantly increasing the deficit and we saw the economic disaster which followed. We came and changed the course of things and already after one year, interest rates have gone down and Canadians are quite pleased with the recipe we proposed since it is the only solution to reduce the deficit and launch Canada on the way to prosperity. Therefore, this exercise is fair to all. It enables the poor to get jobs and the corporations, by way of tax rebates, to create those jobs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. A brief supplementary.

Mr. Gauthier: My question will be quite brief, Mr. Speaker, because I intend to stick to the 10-minute rule. We have just heard the Hon. Member restate the old theory of the horse and the sparrow. If we put enough oats before the horse . . . enough will come out to feed the sparrow.

Mr. Speaker, this is not good enough.

Mr. Plamondon: Mr. Speaker, should I reply to such nonsense? Should we have continued adding to the deficit? We know that 24 per cent of our revenues are used specifically to pay the deficit which has never created the promised jobs and has never had the expected economic consequences.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I do agree with the Hon. Member because we are now paying almost 25 per cent towards the Canadian deficit.

However, I should like to ask two questions because I know that the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon) is a very politically and socially progressive Member—

Mr. Malépart: That is not true!

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, he is; I know him well. I would like to ask him these questions: Does he agree with the provisions contained in this Bill to the effect that the sales tax will increase from 6 to 7 per cent after January 1, 1986, since an increase in the sales tax is a regressive measure which dicriminates against the disadvantaged and the poorest people in this country? Does he agree with this means of collecting money for the Government of Canada?

Second, the Economic Council of Canada said last year that we were losing from $30 billion to $50 billion in corporate taxes. Does the Hon. Member for Richelieu agree that we need such measures to increase corporate taxes in this country? Does he agree that we should collect more taxes from Canadian businesses?

Mr. Plamondon: Mr. Speaker, I think that the answer to that question has been given many times already, and that is that we are asking all Canadians to make a collective effort. Of course, I would like to be able to say that no one should pay for the deficit and that it will go away by itself. However, we have no choice. We have to ask everyone to make a minimum effort. Everyone in Canada must contribute and this is what Canadians asked when they elected this Government on September 4, 1984.

As concerns businesses, they must also do their share, and this is why I believe that Bill C-80 is fair and equitable, as I have already said. It is equitable because it asks for an effort by both the disadvantaged and corporations, and the latter must do a bit more since they have access to wealth. At the same time, the Bill promotes the use of tax initiatives aimed at creating jobs. This past year, they made the creation of 300,000 jobs possible and allowed corporations to lighten their tax burden if they do create jobs.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I first want to congratulate the Hon. Member because his secretary prepared a very good speech for him, even though it contains a few inaccuracies.

I would like to ask a question to the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon). He says that his Government consults the people and does what the people want, but what does he think about all the mothers who came to Parliament Hill and all the groups who expressed their disapproval of the plan to deindex family allowances? Has the Hon. Member told his constituents that he agreed to this proposal and that the Government was exploiting the illness of Canadian citizen by imposing a 10 per cent tax on medication and taking $56 million of the taxpayers' money to change the colour of the Armed Forces uniforms? Has the Hon. Member told his constituents that, to reduce the deficit, his Government is deindexing family allowances and taxing illness to give $1 billion to people who had deposits of over $60,000 in certain banks?

I shall close with this comment, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member says that his Government has confidence in the business sector, but has he told his constituents that businesses in Eastern Montreal will lay off 5,000 people?

Mr. Plamondon: The usual exagerations of my colleague are completely beside the point and have no bearing on Bill C-80 now under consideration.

Your colleague called me back to order earlier when I spoke about the matter under discussion, and he will probably want to do the same in your case since the purpose of Bill C-80 is to correct through the taxes we collect the inequities created by your Government.

As concerns the readjustment of family allowances, this reflects the will of the population to reduce the deficit which, as noted in the MacDonald report, is stifling all Canadians. This is a priority.

Second, we believe that what people want most of all is to be able to pay for the services they expect to receive by getting a permanent job instead of relying constantly on the Government since they will have to pay eventually in any case.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now over. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am convinced all Members of this House will agree that Bill C-80 is hardly a cheerful topic to discuss. The previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon), gave us ample proof that his speech was written by his secretary, because he did not even read Bill C-80. In fact, Bill C-80 provides that the Progressive Conservative Government, led by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), will levy a 10 per cent tax on drugs.

Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand how a human being, whatever his political stripe, could take pleasure in considering and adopting a Bill of this kind. However, I am beginning to understand why some Conservative Members agree with the Bill. It is because they have not read it. They do not know what they are talking about, and their speeches are prepared by Ministers' offices, Mr. Speaker.

If the Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon) would care to stay in the House, I will give him a list of products appearing in the papers of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Let him stay here in the House. I will give him a list of the products that his Government . . . And I can say to him, because most Progressive Conservative Members do not know who had the bright idea to use the illnesses of Canadian citizens to reduce the deficit . . . Never has any previous Government, whether Liberal or Conservative, been so hostile to the elderly, the ill and the children, with a Budget like this one and a Bill like the one before the House today.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, we know that the person who urged the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister to slap a 10 per cent tax on drugs and on everything that affect the health of our Canadian citizens, was our brilliant Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen), who is also Minister of National Defence. Today, I understand why he has no trouble getting funds to change the colour of our military uniforms, to spend $100 million more annually and send 1,000 soldiers over to Europe to spend their money, and recover $25 million from Canadians who are ill, in order to reduce the deficit.

Mr. Speaker, if Conservative Members want to know where I got the idea it was the Deputy Prime Minister and his task force that recommended this measure to levy a 10 per cent tax on drugs, all they have to do is read the Budget Papers tabled by the Minister of Finance, in English, on page 77, under item 6, "Removal of Federal Sales Tax Exemptions".

The Hon. Member for Richelieu had been trying to disprove what I had said. Mr. Speaker, to prove what I said was true, I intend to quote from the paper presented by the Minister of Finance: "The exemption from sales tax applying to a range of consumer goods is being ended, effective July 1, 1985."

That was a nice birthday present for Canadians, when the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance decided to levy a sales tax on drugs.

● (1240)

Prior to the mid-1960s, the federal sales tax applied to most consumer goods. Since then, exemptions have been granted to a number of products in response to the social and fiscal policy goals—

And I repeat, previous Governments, Liberal and Conservative alike.

—exemptions have been granted to a number of products in response to the social and fiscal policy goals of the Government of the day. This Government has re-examined a number of—

Referring to the Government now in office, the Government of the little guy from Baie-Comeau, Mr. Speaker—

—of these tax exemptions, as has the Ministerial Task Force on Program Review—

—headed by our brilliant Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker—

—which has recommended a repeal of several of them. These exemptions have resulted in a significant erosion of the federal sales tax base.

The rationale which originally prompted the exemptions is no longer valid in many cases.

As a result of all this, Mr. Speaker, anyone suffering from diabetes became less seriously ill as of September 4. That was the judgment which had prompted the Deputy Prime Minister to recommend something to the Prime Minister, who promptly fell for it. According to the recommendations of our Deputy Prime Minister, fully endorsed by the Prime Minister, all people with a heart condition did not suffer as much as of September 4, so it was quite all right to impose a 10 per cent tax. The same scenario applied in the case of others suffering from arthritis or respiratory aliments.

I would like to give you an idea of the number of people with such diseases whom the Conservative Government—led by the Prime Minister and supported by all his Conservative colleagues—was and, unfortunately, still is pleased to use to reduce its deficit, sick men and women all of them. In fact, that will not reduce the deficit. The Government chose to change the colour of uniforms and took $1 billion of the taxpayers' money—the sick, the elderly, mothers with children—to rescue some of its cronies who had more than $60,000 in bank accounts.

Mr. Speaker, 2,620,000 Canadians suffer from cardiovascular diseases and every day they have to take nonprescribed drugs. Perhaps our Conservative colleagues would like to know why these are nonprescribed drugs? The person suffering from a heart condition has no time to visit his or her doctor to get a prescription. All Governments before this one had hearts, even Progressive Conservative ones; a Government under Mr. Clark (Yellowhead) would never have agreed to that, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Diefenbaker must certainly roll over in his grave when he realizes that this Progressive Conservative Prime Minister is trying to reduce his deficit on the backs of sick people or squandering the taxpayers' money, Mr. Speaker.

There are in Quebec and Ontario respectively 730,000 and 950,000 persons suffering from cardio-vascular disorder. For the information of the House, may I add that there are in Canada 300,000 people suffering from diabetes, including 30,000 in the province of Quebec, who must give themselves a shot of insulin everyday. It is not for fun that they do so; for them, it is a matter of survival. This heartless Prime Minister and his whole Government behind him have decided that all Canadians suffering from diabetes should pay a 10 per cent tax on the syringes and the other paraphernalia they must use, in addition to all the other taxes they have to pay as ordinary Canadians.

How about the people who are suffering from arthritis? I am sure all Hon. Members have among their friends, relatives and acquaintances someone who is suffering from arthritis. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, there are in this country 3.2 million Canadians who are suffering from that condition, including 620,000 in the province of Quebec; there are in Canada 30,000 children under 15 years of age suffering from it, including 4,000 in the province of Quebec. There are in Canada 1.1 million senior citizens 64 years of age and over who are suffering from it, including 300,000 in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, can you imagine that nowadays, with all the know-how and resources at our disposal, there are human beings who are delighted they have found a way to levy a tax on sickness?

Mr. Speaker, this is a shame, this is a scandal. In August, after pressure had been brought to bear by the Canadian and Quebec Diabetes Associations, by the Canadian Cancer Societies, by the Canadian Consumers Association, I had the privilege to work with all those groups to see that the Government withdrew that shameful decision. For the second time the Government was forced to back down and to recognize it had blundered as it had with senior citizens. But this time, contrary to what he did with senior citizens, the Minister of Finance issued a short press release stating that those suffering from arthritis suffer less than those suffering from diabetes. And he started to make comparisons, always anxious to bring people down, to extort money from them, after implementing a 10 per cent tax on 5,000 important pharmaceutical products that are important for the people. He agreed to back down on drugs for diabetics, but this was not self-prompted. It is a shame that people with illnesses had to put pressure on to wake up the Prime Minister and the Tory Members. He backed down on certain drugs for people suffering from cardiovascular diseases.

And then again, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that someone with heart disease should avoid energy and stress. I would have thought that at least one Tory Member out of 211 would be humane enough to say: "Listen, Brian, wake up!" People are suffering, Mr. Speaker. Another group, persons with respiratory diseases among others, had to embark on a coalition.

The Government backtracked on a number of goods, but unfortunately, it only backtracked on 20 or so drugs, after deciding to levy a 10 per cent tax on 5,000 products. Who is being affected by Bill C-80? I am saying this, because in addition to the tax on drugs we also have the increase in the price of gas, consumer goods and also the price of cement and so forth in the construction industry. However, I intend to concentrate on the tax on illness, Mr. Speaker, and on that shameful 10 per cent tax on drugs.

What are these drugs and who uses them? Who is going to be penalized by this 10 per cent tax? First of all, the usual family remedies, familiar to everyone here, are being taxed. Everybody knows that people who suffer from arthritis have to take what is referred to as buffered aspirin to ease the pain. This isn't chewing gum! They aren't taking these for fun! They have to take buffered aspirin to keep from getting ulcers. The Prime Minister and the Government have decided to maintain the 10 per cent tax on these products.

Mr. Speaker, these products include everything that families with children need, including baby lotion, children's aspirin, bandages for sprains, and what are usually referred to as plasters. And the bigger the family, the more they need for their medicine cabinet, and the more drugs they have to buy and the more this Government is going to gain from their illnesses.

Soon we will be back in the flu and cold season. Because of our climate and the weather here in Canada, people are going to be ill. When I see Progressive Conservative Members rubbing their hands with a glee, I wonder whether they are not secretly hoping that more Canadians will get sick, so that the Government can draw more revenue from the 10 per cent tax on drugs. All drugs that ease suffering and pain when people have a cold or the flu, whether we are talking about drugs for sinusitis or decongestants to ease pain, the Prime Minister and the Conservative Government have made their decisions and this Bill is intended to levy a 10 per cent tax on these drugs.

Mr. Speaker, coughdrops, cold remedies and even ointments for burns and scrapes carry a 10 per cent tax. You people who suffer from athlete's foot will now be able to do your share when you pay the 10 per cent tax levied on your affliction by this Conservative Government.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned aspirin and medication for acne. Most of the people here have families with children, and pharmacists and doctors tell me that this kind of medication is sold especially to young girls at a certain age. Even those items, and in fact all medication and products used by young people, whether boys or girls, whether it is medication for acne or some other kind of medication, on all these goods, this Government—I see the Progressive Conservative Members rubbing their hands with glee—is levying a 10 per cent tax.

And there are also laxatives, eczema remedies, food substitutes, vitamins, medication for sinus trouble . . . Mr. Speaker, people have hemorrhoids, I know it is not a subject—

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Malépart: —no, Mr. Speaker, it is not a subject people like to talk about, but it is a serious matter, and many Canadian men and women suffer from this affliction and when a Government stoops to tax the ointment sufferers require to cure this affliction, I say that Government's logic has gone by the board. Laxatives, liniments, medicinal chewing gum, poison ivy medication—

Mr. Speaker, to hear the Progressive Conservative Members, I get the distinct impression they have not read the Bill. I am not making this up. This is a press release from Revenue Canada, Customs and Excise. Before adopting this Bill and making any more speeches, I would strongly urge Conservative Members to read what they are going to vote on. This is what is happening, Mr. Speaker. They are now taking advantage of the aches and pains of Canadians. As more people get sick, the Government gets richer and will be able to give more money to the rich! That is the Conservative policy. However, it was not what these people promised before September 4 last year. Is there a single Conservative Member in the House who can tell me that when he went on the hustings in his riding, he promised to put a 10 per cent tax on medical products, and said he would be proud to see the Government get richer as people got sicker? That is just not true. There is not a single Member who had the courage to say so, Mr. Speaker.

I see them laughing in the House today, Mr. Speaker, but this is a serious debate. This 10 per cent tax affects poor families, not only wealthy people. I can understand why the rich Conservative Members, the millionnaires, could not care less about this issue. They all have their own business through which it becomes a deductible expense, they can reduce their tax load and make other taxpayers pay for this.

Mr. Speaker, each one of us represents a certain number of poor or low and average income families. When we talk about the 10 per cent tax on family drugs, we must keep in mind that most of them are probably young couples just starting out in life. These are young couples without much experience, with low paying jobs. They are just starting out in life and such young couples will think twice before raising a family, what with all those taxes, the deindexation of family allowances and the lower level of the child tax credit through deindexation.

Such are the consequences of the irresponsible measures I mentioned earlier, all of them advocated by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen). The next recommendations of the task force will reflect the same kind of principles which brought us the tax on drugs.

Mr. Speaker, it is unthinkable that a human being, someone who has been elected to represent people, would have us believe—as he made all Conservative Members believe—that there is no longer such social justice as existed before last September 4, and that the 5,000 drugs which had been tax-exempt for social reasons should have become taxable as of July 1, the Prime Minister's gift to celebrate Canada Day. The social conditions which existed under the Liberal Government and the Conservative Governments of Mr. Clark (Yellowhead) and Mr. Diefenbaker—and I should call these two gentlemen "Honourable", Mr. Speaker—no longer exist today.

Mr. Speaker, we could go on at length about every aspect of the tax on medicine, I trust that some of the Conservative Members will make an effort, but I am not asking the majority of them to do so. I know that they have a mission. They have the right to have one. In fact, they have decided to come here to defend the rich. Everyone must make his own choice and it will be up to the population to judge. However, I sincerely believe that the majority of the Conservative Members do not share this philosophy. The Conservative Members should recall what they were saying before they lost face in the debate on old age security pensions after their Prime Minister retreated. Members of the Progressive Conservative Party, remember what you said about the fact that senior citizens in your constituencies accepted this measure. Remember how you looked when the Prime Minister had to retreat after Mrs. Denis had come to Ottawa to speak to Charlie Brown. You will remember the speeches that you are now making when the population discovers the hypocrisy behind this Bill, because the Government is exploiting the illness of the people in all our ridings, Mr. Speaker. When the public realizes what you have done, Mr. Speaker, you will lose points in the polls and you will not be here much longer because the public will know where each of you stood on this issue.

I shall close on this comment, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, I would have liked to talk about the tax on gasoline, which will be applied in spite of the promises made by the Progressive Conservative Party and the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce). This will also have an impact on poor families.

Mr. Speaker, I shall close by urging all the Hon. Members to forget about party politics, to reread this Bill, the Budget speech and the advice of the Department of National Revenue, and to amend this bill and leave sick people alone. They should not be exploited. We should be defending instead of trying to use them to increase revenues.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct the following question to the Hon. Member for Montréal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). He made a fine speech and mentioned many regressive provisions in this Bill. I agree with him. However, I should like to ask him the following question. Does the Hon. Member not agree that the Progressive Conservative Party is almost as reactionary and regressive as the former Liberal Governement?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, since I have been sitting in this House I have never had to give an answer to a phoney socialist, to an NDP Member.

I should like to remind my hon. friend that before being a Member in Ottawa I was a Member in Quebec and there were six PQ members who, like the New Democrats, were going to save the world. From the day they came to power, they became the nastiest Government against the poor. It was the first Government in Quebec, a PQ Government, which while in opposition was as dishonest as the New Democratic Party seemingly tends to be, deindexed as the Tory Government is doing, the welfare allowances to reduce them proportionally to increases in family allowances.

Mr. Speaker, it was the PQ Government which decided to give lesser welfare benefits to young people below 30 years of age than to those over 30. I still hope, Mr. Speaker, that the NDP Members will not act like the PQ members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie has still seven minutes for questions and comments.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to lay upon the Table the report of the Auditor General of Canada to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1985.

EMPLOYMENT

CLOSING OF SIX PLANTS IN MONTREAL EAST—RECOMMENDATIONS OF SURVIVAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform Hon. Members of the decisions that were reached yesterday by the Survival Committee to prevent the shutdown of six plants in Eastern Montreal and the loss of 5,000 jobs.

First, members of the Survival Committee of Eastern Montreal are asking to meet the Prime Minister in order to explain the situation and suggest steps he should take to prevent the shutting down of those plants.

Second, the Committee suggested a mass meeting of working men and women in Eastern Montreal to sensitize the population.

Third, the Committee accepted the appointment of a manpower retraining committee that could study the problems of plant shutdowns and bring about longer term solutions.

Fourth, that the federal Government declare Eastern Montreal a designated area with the best program, rather than mere crumbs as the Government seems intent on doing.

Fifth, that a regional employment schedule be drawn up to adjust the situation in Eastern Montreal with a view to preventing those plants shutdowns.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I call on the Prime Minister and I ask both Conservative and Liberal Members, my colleagues from Eastern Montreal, to urge the Prime Minister to meet those people within the shortest possible timeframe in order that those plant employees may enjoy a Merry Christmas like all other working men and women in Quebec.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IRAN—PLIGHT OF BAHA'I COMMUNITY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to recall to the attention of the House the plight of the adherents of the Baha'i faith living in Iran. The persecution of Baha'is in Iran died down in 1983, with world outrage being expressed over the hanging of 10 Baha'i women and girls simply for teaching their religion to the youth of their community.

We are now told that the imprisonment, torture, and executions of Baha'is have resumed once again on a large scale. Let us and our Government not be silent on this grave matter, for the Government of Iran may be looking to eradicate its Baha'i population.

The Baha'i religion, with its origins in Persia, is the largest religious minority in Iran with 300,000 members residing there. Their doctrine forbids involvement in politics. Canada was the first country in the world to speak out on this issue in the past, unanimously passing parliamentary resolutions through the House on July 16, 1980, and June 9, 1981, in support of the Baha'is in Iran. The Canadian delegation to the United Nations has also actively pursued the matter there, and Canada has been open to refugees from the area.

We in the New Democratic Party call upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to do what they can through their offices to impress upon Iran that Canada wants to see the repression of the Baha'is in Iran stopped. We ask the Government to pay close attention to the report of the special representative on human rights to the UN General Assembly pertaining to this matter, which is expected to be released in late November or early December.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

THE ECONOMY

PROGRESS ACHIEVED SINCE ELECTION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, because I am generally inclined to see things from a point of view which is more and more positive and optimistic, I realized a couple of months ago that PC could also stand for positive consistency.

Ever since our party came to power in September 1984, Mr. Speaker, Canadians have become more aware that the economic outlook in this country has markedly improved thanks mainly to this Government's initiatives. These initiatives are indeed responsible for the giant steps Canada has taken toward a full recovery. Our hon. friends opposite had brought this country to the brink of bankruptcy and they had swept under the rug all economic concerns.

Contrary to them, Mr. Speaker, we have taken up the challenge and created 304,000 new jobs, including more than 84,000 in the province of Quebec, and it is only the beginning. According to a recent survey by the Canadian Federation of Independent Businessmen, 26 per cent of small and medium-sized businesses, that is, more than a quarter of all such businesses in la belle province, are planning to create new jobs within the next six months. In other words, one such business in four is going to expand.

Moreover, 37.2 per cent of them intend to increase their investments in Quebec. That, Mr. Speaker, is the result of our efforts—

Mr. Speaker: I must regretfully advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

POLICIES FOLLOWED BY NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY GOVERNMENT IN MANITOBA

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak today on behalf of ordinary Canadians—more specifically, ordinary Manitobans. The NDP would have the public believe they are the Robin Hoods of Canadian politics. They would chastise the Government for the bail-out of depositors in two recent bank failures. Never before have the people of Canada been deceived by such unadultered, hypocritical hog-wash.

The NDP Government of Manitoba has behaved not like Robin Hood but like the robbing hoods of Canadian politics in giving out $3.2 million in venture capital interest-free loans. Did the NDP hold true to their policy of assisting the placing confidence in ordinary Manitobans? Did they hold true to their promise of making the rich pay their fair share into the public coffers to distribute the wealth better?

They shared the wealth all right—they shared it with a numbered corporation, lawyers, and multimillionaires. They gave it interest-free to the rich. Why? So the rich could invest and profit from the labours of ordinary Manitobans.

They are secretive about their venture capital lending and do not want to release details because their actions are in direct contradiction to their Party's policy and commitment to ordinary Manitobans.

SALES TAX ON READY-MIXED CONCRETE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 22 to seek the assistance of all Members of the House to change a very regressive measure which was imposed with the budget statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on May 23, 1985. It should be noted that this particular measure affects not only companies in my own province but, indeed, companies in other provinces. It also has devastating effects for the construction industry which, on a sector basis, could be indicated quite clearly, suffers from perhaps the highest unemployment in the country.

The Nova Scotia Roadbuilders Association representing the road-building and heavy construction industry in that province finds itself in a catch-22 situation because of the federal Government's May 23 Budget. The imposition of a 6 per cent sales tax applies to, among other things, ready-mixed concrete and asphalt. This has created havoc in that industry.

Companies employing 3,500 people find they are tied into contracts with no tax escalation clause, which means that they must absorb unforeseen costs which, for some, means that they are actually losing money on projects. These small-businessmen find the budget changes an affront to the very principles of free enterprise that the Government espouses. In fact there will be hundreds of construction workers who will either be laid off or be without permanent employment for numerous months ahead. On behalf of them, the workers of Nova Scotia and of other provinces, I ask that the Government and the Members of this House change this regressive tax measure.

HEALTH

BAN ON CIGARETTE ADVERTISING ADVOCATED

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is proceeding with timid measures indeed to counter a growing health problem in Canada. Recently he announced a $1 million program of counter-advertising to discourage young people from smoking, while the tobacco companies themselves spend more than $90 million to encourage young people to start.

He has now requested a tobacco company not to violate the terms of the industry's own so-called voluntary code of advertising which prohibits advertising to young people. As of next year the company will stop flogging its cigarettes at an amusement park catering largely to young people. But should we be grateful for mercies so small? Every year 35,000 Canadians die of tobacco-related diseases. That is three-quarters of the death toll of Canadians during the whole of World War II.

Since adults, especially men, are quitting in record numbers, the tobacco companies are increasingly going after children and are succeeding. The only responsible public policy in the face of this slaughter is to develop a comprehensive plan to reduce tobacco use, including a complete ban on advertising. Legislation to prohibit all advertising was introduced in 1971, but it was not passed.

I call upon the Government to get serious about Canada's number one preventable health problem and to begin by banning all cigarette advertising, and do it now.

THE LATE MAURICE CARDINAL ROY

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join all the people of the diocese of Quebec and all Canadians in paying tribute to Maurice Cardinal Roy, who died on October 24, 1985.

Head of the Church in Quebec for 34 years and Primate of Canada, Cardinal Roy served the Church and society with great intelligence, dedication and a mind open to the needs of modern society.

He was active internationally in the important roles with which he was entrusted by Pope Paul VI, as president of the Council for the Promotion of the Laity and the Commission on Justice and Peace.

After serving as a military chaplain from 1939 to 1945, Cardinal Roy was for a long time the bishop responsible for the Canadian Forces.

His modesty, discretion and hard work made him a figure who reflected the grandeur of this country.

All Canadian men and women are proud of him.

We pray God that he may rest in peace.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADA'S ROLE AT UNESCO

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): From October 8 to 23, Mr. Speaker, I had the honour to accompany the Canadian delegation to the opening of the UNESCO's 23rd General Conference which is being held in Sofia, Bulgaria, until November 12.

In view of the serious crisis which the organization is facing, Canada's speech was eagerly sought after by the member countries generally.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Vézina) made quite a remarkable speech on October 21. As a matter of fact, comments heard immediately following her speech confirmed that hers was undoubtedly one of the very best speeches because it outlined perfectly the ills that are undermining UNESCO's credibility and raised plainly the basic issues which the Conference should address.

Contrary to what was reported the next day by the France Presse news agency, whoever makes an honest effort and carefully reads the Minister's speech, just as Angèle Dagenais did in the October 26 issue of the news paper Le Devoir, realizes that although Canada is dissatisfied with the situation which exists today within UNESCO, it will continue to adhere to this organization.

In view of the fact that the United States has withdrawn from UNESCO, and because the United Kingdom has openly indicated its decision to do likewise immediately after the Conference, this organization really needs Canada which will be called upon to play an increasingly greater role.

EFFECT OF TAX ON UNLEADED GASOLINE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, since spring the price gap between unleaded and leaded gasoline has gone from 2.5 cents to three cents per litre. The taxation on gasoline which is recommended by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget will widen the gap between leaded and unleaded gasoline prices even further because a lower tax is imposed on leaded gasoline than on unleaded. In making unleaded gasoline more and more expensive relative to leaded gasoline, the Minister of Finance is in effect rewarding the polluters.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) seems silent, unaware, or indifferent. He should impress on the Minister of Finance the fact that leaded gasoline affects health and that it is the policy of the Government of Canada to reduce acid rain emissions by shifting consumption in favour of unleaded gasoline. Therefore, the thrust of the Budget measure affecting gasoline should be reversed so as to impose a smaller tax on unleaded gasoline and a greater tax on leaded gasoline, achieve parity in the price of both gasolines, and wipe out misfueling.

The Minister of Finance is wrong in imposing a tax on unleaded gasoline which is greater than that on leaded gasoline because it will encourage greater use of leaded gasoline, thus increasing air pollution and acid rain damage at a time when the Government proclaims its intent to reduce acid rain damage. The Government is not practicing what it preaches.

RECOMMENDED LISTING OF PHARMACISTS AS GUARANTORS FOR APPLICANTS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, over the years a number of pharmacists have been elected to this House. Many of them have quietly attempted to add pharmacists to the list of eligible guarantors for passport applications. Although there has been no change to date, pharmacists have continued to solicit the support of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark).

While no one disputes the qualifications of the existing list of eligible guarantors, many of them are not as accessible as a community pharmacist. How many people get to know personally their bank manager, lawyer, or veterinarian? Have you, Mr. Speaker, ever tried to get hold of your bank manager on a Friday night? How often do you see your veterinarian? Do you even know who is your local commissioner for oaths?

A recent United States survey indicated that pharmacists rank number two on a list of the most trusted community people. Pharmacists, by the nature of their profession, develop personal relationships with their customers. As professionals then, it would seem reasonable and logical for pharmacists to be added to the list of eligible guarantors for passport purposes.

I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to consider recognition of pharmacists as trusted community leaders who should be added to the list of guarantors.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—BAIL-OUT DECISION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would he be good enough to tell the House why it was he overruled the Minister of State for Finance and ordered a bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank in March? And will he tell us why he has stated consistently during the last seven months that he acted on the best advice available when it is clear he either did not have any advice at all or ignored the advice of the Director of Inspection of Banks, or he suppressed such advice? Why did he give this statement to the House of Commons?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I gave the statement to the House of Commons because it was accurate. As my right hon. friend knows, the Government acted upon advice which was received. The Government considered that advice, decided it was appropriate and in the national interest, governed itself accordingly, and will accept the consequences.

One of the reasons we appointed the Estey Commission, for example, was to provide an impartial review and permit fair-minded evaluations to be made.

INFORMATION AVAILABLE TO PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister admit that when he ordered the bail-out of the bank he did not have the facts because a proper audit of the books of the Canadian Commercial Bank had not been done, as it appears from evidence which was submitted before Mr. Justice Estey, or that the advice given to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance by the Inspector General's office was to the effect that, even on the basis of the information it had, the bail-out package was inadequate at that time? Would the Prime Minister say to the House that he was operating on the basis of insufficient information at that time?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that we are all much smarter with hindsight; in fact, we are just about infallible with the benefit of hindsight. All I can tell my right hon. friend is that the Government acted on the best advice available from its public servants and from the officers of the Crown, which was considered by the Government of Canada and acted upon in the manner I have described.

ROLE PLAYED BY PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I want to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Concerning the Canadian Commercial Bank, it was not only a matter of advice given by the Government of Canada, but it reflects the judgment of the Prime Minister himself.

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Here is my question: Does the Prime Minister claim that he had exercised judgment as Prime Minister of Canada without being fully informed or after suppressing information given by the Inspector General of banks?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, I did not suppress anything, Mr. Speaker. On the contrary, as I said we acted in the light of the best advice provided in an objective manner. The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien), referring to the Canadian bank in question, because but I am told the problem with this bank did not begin yesterday or the day before . . . On the contrary, when the Hon. Member was a Minister, it seems that this banking institution was reported to be in serious difficulties. So I would think that the Estey Commission will make a value judgment not only on the facts raised by my Right Hon. colleague, but also on earlier facts which gave rise to the problems we know.

MINISTERIAL ACCOUNTABILITY

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, we have heard conflicting accounts in this Chamber of who knew what and when with regard to this bank bail-out. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are refusing to answer pointed questions and are expressing no enthusiasm about appearing before the Estey Commission. What does the Prime Minister intend to do to account to the Canadian people for his actions in the bank bail-out, or is he going to save it for his memoirs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are back on the same track as we were on yesterday. The Hon. Member must realize that there is a purpose for the Estey Commission, and that is to consider the range of points of view that will be presented to the commission over the course of the inquiry. At that time, or possibly during the course of this inquiry, if members of the Government are called, we will have an opportunity to discuss some of the points of view. However, I caution the Hon. Member that it would be wrong, in relation to Mr. Justice Estey, for us to comment on individual pieces of information as they are presented to the commission.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary question.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the only supplementary question to ask in light of that non-answer is to ask the Minister of Finance to confirm a rumour that he overheard the Prime Minister rehearsing In the Sweet By and By.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

DOME PETROLEUM—TAX CONCESSION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance which arises from the Auditor General's report which came out today. It has informed Canadians that there has been another billion dollar tax bonanza. According to the report, the former Government, headed by the present Leader of the Opposition, made a decision the day after the election was called to enable Dome Petroleum to get a billion dollar tax gift or concession.

The Minister of Finance spent all last fall admonishing Canadians about the problems of the national debt and suggesting that we had to cut back on social programs. Therefore, why did his Government announce in February an agreement confirming this billion dollar gift to Dome Petroleum?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let us go back over the sequence of events. I believe it was in 1982 that the previous Government entered into extensive negotiations with Dome Petroleum and the chartered banks to provide support for Dome Petroleum, for a number of reasons about which I am sure the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice would enlighten the Hon. Member. It was pursuant to that, and pursuant to the announcement that Mr. Lalonde made in July, 1984, to the effect that a remission order would be granted on the basis of certain actions taken by the company. The company followed through on those actions and, because it did so, and in order to fulfil the commitment made by the previous Government, we acted on the basis that is set out in the Auditor General's report.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, to use an old phrase, the Minister of Finance had a choice.

REASON FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance was not legally locked in. He could have renegotiated and used a number of options rather than giving away $1 billion of the taxpayers' money at a time when he was increasing taxes for ordinary Canadians across the land. Therefore, why did he give this $1 billion to Dome Petroleum?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Hon. Member to think back to the circumstances. It was not a gift as the Hon. Member sets out, because if Dome Petroleum had been called upon to pay those taxes it would have gone bankrupt. If it had gone bankrupt it would have taken with it a number of the smaller oil services companies in the western economy that were suppliers of and had trade accounts with Dome Petroleum. That is a consideration that I ask the Hon. Member to take into account when he draws conclusions on this particular matter.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance knows that there are a lot of other options such as deferred taxes, special loans, and special financial agreements through which Dome Petroleum would be obligated to pay back to the people of Canada the $1 billion it got, instead of getting the gift which the Conservatives gave it.

PUBLICATION OF DECISION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Since the Government made this unnecessary and wasteful decision about the taxpayers' money, will the Minister of Finance confirm that the Government did not even publish the details of that in February, but simply made a brief reference to the deal in what it gazetted, without telling the people of Canada that it cost taxpayers $1 billion?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Hon. Member that we were honouring a deal that had been entered into—

Mr. Broadbent: You had an option.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member does not like the answer. He should listen to the answer and maybe he will learn something from it. We were honouring a deal entered into by the previous Government. We made the decision public at the time it was made. If the Hon. Member looks back he will see it in black and white.

NATIONAL REVENUE

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. During his absence the former Deputy Minister of Finance revealed that the Gulf deal had been discussed a couple of times by the Priorities and Planning Committee which the Prime Minister chairs. Would the Prime Minister confirm that the Gulf tax ruling was in fact discussed by the Priorities and Planning Committee, contrary to the impression which he left at his press conference on October 11?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have the transcript of the October 11 press conference. It is entirely in keeping with what transpired. O&Y exercised the rights of any citizen under the Act to seek a ruling. The ruling was made by departmental officers, public servants, pursuant to objective criteria that exist under a statute which I understand was passed by this House under the Liberal Government. That is what transpired. Any discussion of any proposal was appropriate.

AUTHORITY FOR ISSUING TAX RULING

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister asking us to believe that a thousand million dollars of taxpayers' money can be drained from the public treasury without any consideration being given by him, the Minister of Finance or any other Ministers? If that is the case, how on earth is any control exercised over the finances of the country by the Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Liberals introduced and passed this legislation in the House of Commons. A taxpayer of the country, corporate or otherwise, came before the Department of National Revenue in the ordinary course of business and availed himself of the rights of any Canadian taxpayer to seek a ruling. That ruling was granted objectively pursuant to those criteria which govern in such cases and are determined upon by public servants, and public servants alone, acting in the public interest. That they were able to make such a finding was because of a piece of legislation which existed empowering them to so do. That piece of legislation was enacted because of the desire of the Liberal Government.

AID TO DOME PETROLEUM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and has to do with the $1 billion gift his Government gave to Dome Petroleum on February 5, 1985. During the election campaign the Prime Minister, in no uncertain terms, told the former Prime Minister that he had a choice and that he should have disregarded the decisions made by his predecessor on patronage issues. Why then did the Government honour the commitment towards Dome Petroleum, which cost taxpayers $1 billion, instead of taking the option to renegotiate the deal?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question to the Hon. Member's Leader. We respected a deal that was made by the previous Government. The company had fulfilled its obligations under that deal. The Government of Canada was going to fulfil its obligations.

● (1430)

REASON FOR DECISION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance if the Prime Minister chooses not to answer. When it came to patronage, his Leader said to the Leader of the Government at the time that he had an option and that the former Prime Minister should have rejected the patronage option. Why did you not reject this option and save the taxpayers a billion dollars in this bonanza to Dome?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, because there was not going to be a savings of a billion dollars as the Hon. Member sets out. The fact is that if Dome Petroleum had not received the remission order, as had been promised by the previous Government, that company was not going to exist. It would not exist to pay the taxes that are foregone as a result of this remission order.

Mr. Broadbent: There are lots of other options.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As a result, the oil service industry in western Canada—

Mr. Cassidy: Lots of choices.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —which was under a great deal of pressure at the time—

Mr. Broadbent: Like the banks.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —would not have survived either, because there were a tremendous number of companies in that industry that had trade credits out to Dome Petroleum and they would have gone under as well.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—LETTER ISSUED BY INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): My question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Although the Prime Minister approved the bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank on March 23, no moneys were paid out until the end of April because the participating banks required written assurance that the support package would ensure the CCB's viability. Who instructed the Inspector General to issue such a letter on April 26, although it was known from April 4 that at least $100 million more would be needed?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Finance is not in the House today. That is her area of responsibility.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: You are the Minister of Finance. You made a decision.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I will raise the question with her when she returns.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rossi: She is your sidekick.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

IMPLEMENTATION OF GOVERNMENT DECISION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Will he tell the House why the Government pushed ahead with the March 23 decision when nothing had been signed and the initial information was so disquieting? Why not do a complete audit in the month of April and change the terms?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe that question has also been put in the House before. The Hon. Member knows that if there had not been a deal agreed upon by the Monday morning, that bank would not have opened on Monday morning. That is the reason why the deal had to be agreed upon—in order to allow the bank to proceed with its business. She should know that there are many, many examples of instances where a deal is agreed upon but the paper work may take up to three weeks, and sometimes longer, to be put together. That is what happened in this case.

DOME PETROLEUM—TAX REMISSION ORDER

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In his Budget speech in May he made specific reference to the elimination of the deficit and the soaring national debt. Therefore, when the Dome remission came forward, which was the expenditure of a billion dollars of taxpayers' money, why did he not bring that before Parliament? Was it not something that Parliament should have known about?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is no basis in past practice for remission orders to be brought before Parliament.

Mr. Broadbent: Maybe you should change some of the practices. Change the practices. That is what Dye says.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to answer the question, but if they are not going to listen to the answer they will not get one.

The point I was making is that there has not been a practice of bringing remission orders before Parliament. There are hundreds of remission orders granted each year, some of them big and some of them little. We discussed this one at some length in Government. Furthermore, there was also a public statement and announcement, not just by the Government but by the previous Government as a result of the announcement made by Mr. Lalonde, committing the previous Government to this remission order. Therefore there was a significant amount of public discussion that was available to Members.

PARLIAMENTARY APPROVAL INQUIRY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Under the circumstances, are you suggesting that a billion dollar expenditure by Parliament does not require parliamentary approval? That Auditor General, in his report, suggests that every expenditure of taxpayers' money requires the approval of Parliament.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, there are hundreds of remission orders that are granted each year for a variety of reasons.

Mr. Riis: Billion dollar ones?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): There has not been a practice of presenting these before Parliament and we follow the prevailing practice.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday the American Secretary of State, Mr. Shultz, announced that he, or the American administration, would propose to the U.S. Congress the specific package upon which they would base their negotiations with Canada on the trade issue.

When will the Government provide the Canadian people with the same courtesy and bring something forward in this Parliament that would detail the kind of proposals that we will be presenting, as recommended by an all-Party committee? It recommended that parliamentary discussion and debate be held before the formal negotiations begin. Will the Minister make a commitment that he will bring that kind of proposal to this Parliament before January?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, regrettably the Hon. Member is misinformed. Secretary Shultz did not say that.

UNITED STATES POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I presume that the Secretary of State was part of those discussions. He held a press conference in which they jointly announced that proposals would be going forward to the United States Congress. The American administration is required to do that under American trade law.

Is the American administration not going forward to its Congress to ask for authorization? Will he tell us what they intend to do?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it would take more time than the House has to try to inform the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry—

Mr. Axworthy: Not really.

MARINE TRANSPORT

CONSTRUCTION OF FERRIES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Consultations with management and workers at the Port Arthur shipyards have again underscored the seriousness of the situation in the Canadian shipbuilding industry. Almost a year ago the Minister of Transport promised that there would be additions to the CN Marine Gulf ferry service. Will the Minister tell us today what will be done about this in the context of what he promised, that such additions would have a tremendous impact upon the shipbuilding industry and, therefore, create jobs?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the launching of the Caribou took place in September, I believe. It will be in service by the beginning of the year.

The issue of further vessel replacement is currently under consideration by CN Marine and is being considered as part of its five-year plan.

PLACEMENT OF ORDERS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister guarantee that the addition of a second Caribou-sized vessel and others will be vessels built in Canadian yards by Canadian workers, using Canadian materials, so that there really will be jobs in the Canadian shipyards?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member is aware that my colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, is very actively involved, as am I, in promoting the shipbuilding industry and ensuring that not only vessels are acquired but vessels are acquired in Canada which will provide jobs and the efficient service that is necessary. As I indicated, these are things that are under consideration by CN Marine. I am sure the Hon. Member would not want me to dictate to the CN board of directors and/or management how to run their affairs.

Could the Minister please tell the House what the reaction is from his Ministry to this recommendation?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Science Council has proposed this very intriguing concept of a unified space agency for Canada. We, at the present time within the Ministry and the Government, are studying this proposal, with other similar proposals, in the context of developing a long-range strategic space plan for Canada. I expect to be able to report to this House within the next couple of months on our deliberations to that effect.

PLANT CLOSINGS IN MONTREAL EAST—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET SURVIVAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, if he wants to listen to it. He is certainly aware of the tragic situation in which the people of Montreal East now find themselves since they might lose 5,000 jobs because of plant closings by Versatile Vickers, Bombardier, the Gulf refinery, and so on. If the Prime Minister will listen to my question, I would like to ask him whether, following the meeting of the Montreal East Survival Committee, he would accept to meet the members of this committee next week to hear proposals to solve this problem.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are indeed not only aware of these problems, but very sensitive to the situation, especially in Montreal East. This is why we are all very encouraged to see that the unemployment rate has gone down from 11.6 per cent to 10.1 per cent in eleven months, that youth unemployment has fallen down from 18.3 to 16.1 per cent, that 304,000 new jobs have been created in one year, that our rate of growth has reached 4.1 per cent, and most important, that interest rates have gone down by 3 per cent to their lowest level in seven years. These are substantial indications of economic development because of which we are able to work with all the regions, including Montreal East, to stimulate an economy which had effectively been under attack for too long.

DEMAND THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET EMPLOYEES FROM MONTREAL EAST

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister has any courage, he will come with me next Tuesday to repeat this answer to the Vickers employees he met at the Journal de Montréal. If the Prime Minister has any courage, he will come with me to meet the Bombardier and Gulf workers—

An Hon. Member: Question!

Mr. Malépart: My question to the Prime Minister is this. Statistics cannot buy food for these people. Will the Prime Minister have the courage to meet the members of the East Montreal Survival Committee and will he grant designated zone status to Montreal East to save the 5,000 jobs which are now in jeopardy?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): To the contrary, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has created tens of thousands of new jobs in Quebec since the election. The people of Montreal are well aware of it. In certain regions—

An Hon. Member: Small jobs!

An Hon. Member: Insignificant jobs!

Mr. Mulroney: One says "small jobs" and the other says "insignificant jobs". However, the unemployed in Quebec will remember the Liberals who say such things because they know that we have created lasting jobs in Quebec. They know it!

We are going to work with all those involved, including of course the people of Montreal East, to promote a valid economic recovery.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—VIEWS OF PROVINCES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Such provinces as Manitoba and Ontario have stressed that cultural industries, agricultural support policies, and regional development aids should not be on the table in U.S. free trade talks. Did the Secretary of State for External Affairs convey these views to Foreign Secretary Shultz yesterday, and did our Minister indicate his support for these provincial views?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada very much welcomed the decision by the United States Government to send a signal yesterday of U.S. interest in responding positively to the invitation that was offered by the Prime Minister to enter into a discussion of possible trade arrangements.

The Hon. Member knows, because he and I have discussed it at length, that I am very sensitive to the interests of Canadian industries that might be affected in any negotiation that develops. I have given a commitment to maintain the active process of consultation that is involved.

The Hon. Member asks if I indicated to Secretary Shultz what I have indicated to him, in general, yes, I did.

JAPANESE CAR MANUFACTURERS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Did the Secretary of State for External Affairs sense that the decisions announced by the Japanese Ambassador yesterday, cutting back the commitment we had anticipated from companies like Toyota to produce here in Canada, reflected at all the concern of the Japanese that we were becoming part of a fortress North America through this trade pact, which would have fewer beneficial trade ties with Japan?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): On the contrary, Mr. Speaker. I think that the Government of Japan and, indeed, other Governments of the world with which we are involved in seeking new discussions under the MTN, know the strong commitment of this Government toward a freer trade arrangement in the world.

Naturally, we are interested and looking to the advantages that exist for Canada in that kind of an arrangement on this continent. But the record stands, and the record is strong, that this Government is pursuing that kind of freer regime around the world.

PROTECTIONIST MEASURES PROPOSED IN UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Some Canadians are concerned about the rising tide of protectionism in the United States, especially as we are just beginning our negotiations. Since the Secretary of State for External Affairs has just finished preliminary negotiations and discussions with Secretary Shultz, can we count on President Reagan's veto powers when any extreme protectionist measures arise in that country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that commitment was given by the President to the Prime Minister at Québec, and it was renewed in conversations between the Prime Minister and the President in New York last week. I believe if there is any threat of the kind described by the Hon. Member that that will be the response of the American President.

CANADIAN FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. As the Minister knows, agriculture is facing the worst economic crisis in history. This is being highlighted today by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in a massive visitation to Members of Parliament. Unfortunately this morning only one Member of the Alberta P.C. caucus showed up for a meeting. The Minister of Finance did not show up at all.

Is the Government ready to take the representations of the CFA seriously by agreeing to provide 10 per cent loans to farm families to save family farms, which is a recommendation of the CFA?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to respond to some of the many inaccurate statements with which the Hon. Member began his question. Perhaps, though, I will ignore them.

As the Hon. Member should know, this Party, whether it be in Opposition or in Government, has always regarded the CFA as one of the outstanding and credible farm organizations we have. We have always taken its representations to heart. I look forward to meeting with its representatives later today.

GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): My supplementary question is also for the Minister of Agriculture. Is the Government prepared to show its long-term commitment to agriculture by reinstating the $50 million which was taken out of the Department's budget this year, and is it prepared to commit more funds for agricultural research?

• (1450)

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that seems to be the Hon. Member's daily or weekly question. I can only again remind him to check the record. The record speaks for itself. The Government has passed more agricultural legislation in the last eight months than the previous Government did in the last eight years. The Government has taken over 90 initiatives providing support to the agricultural industry, to the extent of $2 billion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: And, Mr. Speaker, we have only just begun.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REDUCTION IN PERSONNEL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

It would seem that the Department of Veterans Affairs is one of the most recent victims of the May budget move to blindly and savagely cut jobs in the federal Civil Service. Recent reports show that 218 jobs will be abolished by next May. Could the Minister comment on the accuracy of such reports, and if such is the case could he tell the House how he will go about achieving the increases and improvements in services to veterans which he has so often been referring to this last year while slashing some 6 per cent off the overall staff? This is absolute inconsistency, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member's question I would advise him—and I think he knows this—that for the next six months there will be no lay-offs. Two hundred and nineteen positions have been declared surplus. Of that 219, 104 are either vacant or held by people who have already indicated their intention to retire, or are held by people who were hired on a term basis. We can see that only 114 positions are affected. I assure the Hon. Member that the Department will do everything possible in the next six months to find alternative employment for those people.

VICTIMS OF EMPLOYMENT CUTBACKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull-Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister has always been seen as a Conservative gentleman with very liberal behaviour and manners.

Could he tell us exactly what he intends to do, in order to specifically help the victims of those cuts by a Government that is in the process of committing hara-kiri? Is he bent on concluding his prestigious political career by making himself known as the hatchet Minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[English]

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member will take the trouble to talk to any members of the Veterans Affairs Department he will find two things: they are very satisfied with the work they are doing and with the treatment they are receiving. I can assure him, with regard to how we intend to improve services to veterans, that the trimming of these various positions will not affect our efforts in this regard in any way, and that we will continue in the next few months and years to give veterans a steadily improving service with courtesy, generosity, and speed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: George for Leader; Mulroney for Veterans Affairs.

Some Hon. Members: Leader, Leader!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

FLIGHT OVER POLAR SEA IN CANADIAN WATERS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who will remember how pleased Canadians were last summer when citizens themselves, through the Council of Canadians, proclaimed Canadian sovereignty in the North when his Government did not have the courage to act.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. McDonald: Will the Prime Minister assure the House—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Your tie is too tight.

Ms. McDonald: Will the Prime Minister assure the House that no sanctions will be taken against the pilot who dropped the flag on the Polar Sea, our Canadian flag, for all of us?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the allegations to which the Hon. Member referred are indeed being investigated by Transport Canada officials. There is evidence that there was an infraction. The investigation is going on internally, and I will be pleased to report back to the House on the outcome of that investigation.

DROPPING OF CANADIAN FLAG ON UNITED STATES VESSEL

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, again my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On the public policy aspect of the matter, does the Prime Minister consider it good public policy that, according to the Aeronautics Act, the Canadian flag might be deemed a dangerous object? Would it not be more dangerous for us not to have spoken up at that time? Should the pilot not be getting a medal rather than an investigation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the dangerous aspect of public policy was the policy of absolute neglect of the North and the Arctic by the Liberals for 16 years. That was the dangerous aspect of public policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The comprehensive statement in regard to the integrity and the sovereignty of the North set forth by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the House of Commons will rank as an outstanding contribution to the protection of the integrity of the nation.

NATIONAL REVENUE

GULF TAKEOVER—TAX RULING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I want to be assured of his answer in response to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri-Westmount. The Prime Minister insists upon continuing the statement that the Gulf tax ruling was a purely bureaucratic phenomenon created by officials of the Department of National Revenue in the ordinary course of events. On the other hand the former Deputy Minister of Finance, Mr. Cohen, said in an interview that the Gulf matter came before the Priorities and Planning Committee chaired by the Prime Minister on two occasions. The Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance was there—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Is the Prime Minister saying to the House that, despite those two meetings of Priorities and Planning, the tax aspects of the Gulf purchase were not discussed and made aware to members of Cabinet? Is that what he is saying to us, that they did not come before Cabinet or before himself?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are saying exactly what we have always said, which is the absolute clear statement of fact that the tax ruling was rendered objectively by officers of the Department of National Revenue pursuant to their procedures in a matter totally unrelated to anything which transpired subsequently, from the Government's point of view. Anything that was discussed by the Government in Cabinet would be under sceau de la confidence, on the one hand, but in complete conformity with the national interest, on the other hand.

CABINET COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister saying that the tax aspects of this purchase, which were such an integral part of the arrangement, were not before the Priorities and Planning Committee, which he chaired, and were not brought to his attention and the attention of the Minister of Finance? Is that what he is saying?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think—

Ms. Copps: Tell the truth.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Shhh!

Mr. Mulroney: I think I have responded fully to my right hon. friend who, previously as Minister of Finance, Minister of Justice and Prime Minister, knows full well the manner in which these tax rulings take place. The ruling was sought, and rendered by the Department of National Revenue on the one hand. A governmental decision, which involved in part a Canadian corporation and in a substantial part as well a Crown corporation, was rendered on the other hand. In both cases the Government conducted itself completely properly.

Mr. Foster: That is not what Mickey said.

PLIGHT OF SASKATCHEWAN FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He will know that farmers are in the gallery today looking for some action by the Government on the farm situation in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Althouse: A smaller part of that situation exists in Saskatchewan. According to recent reports, farmers are expected to have net incomes of less than $5,000 this year per farm in that province. That is only partly due to the drought.

What is the Minister proposing to do? When will we hear the report from his committee, for which we have been asking for three months? Is he serious about helping those farmers? Is he really serious about agriculture at all?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is rather interesting to note that the only time we get questions from the two opposition Parties is when they have an audience in the gallery.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Deans: The only time you are here is on Tuesday.

Mr. Wise: What would—

Mr. Broadbent: That is not fair, and you know it. Cheap shot, brother.

Mr. Mazankowski: Truth hurts.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Rideau Hall,
Ottawa,

29 October, 1985

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that The Right Honourable Brian Dickson, The Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day, the 29th day of October, 1985, at 4.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Esmond Butler,
Secretary to the Governor General

POINT OF ORDER

RESPONSE TO MR. WISE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I draw to your attention the response of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) which, I think, went beyond the rules of the House regarding the activities and presence of Members in the House of Commons. I think if the record were to be checked, you would know, Mr. Speaker, that we ask this particular question every Tuesday because Tuesday is Cabinet day. If the Government acted with the generosity, courtesy and speed with which the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) assured the House it always acts, we would have had an answer and would not have to keep asking this question.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member has made his point. He knows that this is not a point of order and he knows that any reference by any Member of the House to the presence of someone in the gallery is out of order.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED INAPPROPRIATENESS OF THE RESPONSE OF MR. WISE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege regarding the comments made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) today. It was very inappropriate for him to say that the only time questions are put in the House is when the CFA is meeting here in Ottawa. In fact, questions on agriculture have been put by me every week. The problem is that we never get any answers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Foster: I would ask the Minister to withdraw—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the same comments apply to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) as those that applied to the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: No, there is no point of order and there is no question of privilege here. Order, please.

PRESENTATION OF TENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the tenth report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND WITHDRAWAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to introduce a petition to the House signed by a number of residents of the east end of Toronto. Those petitioners state that the deindexation of the universal family allowance is an unfair attack on women and families and they further state that this attack will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that other tax increases in the May Budget will place an unfair burden on low and middle-income earners.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition on behalf of a large number of western Canadians who are concerned about the Government's plans to deindex family allowances and are concerned that the cut-backs in child benefits on top of the sales tax changes and increases, the excise tax increases and the stiff income tax increases are all unfair and place an extraordinary burden on middle and lower-income Canadians. They therefore ask that the Government reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind the unfair tax increases presently before the House.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of citizens from Halifax, Springhill, Dartmouth, Lawrencetown and East Preston in Nova Scotia as well as from New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island who are appealing to the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases which are having such a negative impact on families.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present to the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled a petition signed by a number of people from the constituency of Prince Albert who ask the House of commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions which have been signed by hundreds of Canadians who object to the horrendous decision of the Tory Government to deindex family allowances.

More specifically, I have petitions from constituents of Drummond, Manicouagan and Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke in Ontario.

I also have another petition signed by constituents of Hull-Aylmer in Quebec who are so well represented in this House; I also have some from the constituencies of Shefford and Trois-Rivières in Quebec.

I also have a petition signed by constituents of the federal constituency of Kent in Ontario, Victoria in British Columbia, and finally a petition signed by constituents of the federal constituency of Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador in Newfoundland.

Those people, Mr. Speaker, want to state their grievance. I am pleased to present those petitions.

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present some petitions to this House.

The first one comes from the constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot in Quebec where hundreds of people deeply regret the fact that family allowances are being reduced. Under the circumstances, they would like to enjoy full indexation. Also, several dozen constituents from Brome-Missisquoi, Beauce, Outremont, Rosemont, Saint-Henri-Westmount and Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic in Quebec deeply regret the reduction in family allowances which, in many cases, are part of the minimum resources for which those families have an urgent need.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, a petition from the federal constituencies of Saskatoon East and Saskatoon West in which once again the Government is asked to reconsider its position and grant full indexation.

• (1510)

[English]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a large number of petitions to present to the House on behalf of constituents in my home riding of Broadview-Greenwood. They point out that the accelerating cut-backs in child benefits as well as sales and excise tax increases place an extraordinary burden on middle-and low-income households. They therefore call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances.

Similarly, I have another number of petitions from citizens across Ontario, namely Toronto and Windsor, who point out that the cut-back in family allowances and the tax increases are inequitable and unbearable in the face of budget hand-outs such as half a million dollars of tax-free capital gains and the bail-outs to the banks. They therefore call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a duty for me to present petitions on behalf of more than 150 persons resident in my riding of Thunder Bay-Nipigon. More than one-third of the signatories are residents of classes of the Lakehead University, students joining in the protests that the decision of the Government to deindex the universal family allowance and to carry through other cut-backs in the public commitment to child benefits represents an unfair attack on women and families with children. These persons are well aware that even the poorest will be worse off by 1990, and they call on the House of Commons to re-establish full indexation for family allowances.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have here a number of petitions dealing with the Government's intention to deindex the family allowances. They are from the Quebec ridings of Saint-Léonard-Anjou, Langelier, Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, Shefford, Drummond, Lac-Saint-Jean, and from the British Columbia riding of Richmond-South Delta, the Ontario riding of Guelph, and the Nova Scotia riding of South Shore.

Mr. Speaker, all these petitions humbly pray the House that the Government re-establish full indexation of the family allowances and the Child Tax Credit.

CONCURRENCE IN TENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, if the House gives its consent, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) that the tenth report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs presented to the House earlier today be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: 398.

[Text]

COURT CHALLENGES PROGRAM

Question No. 398—Mr. Gauthier:

1. Since January 1985 to date, under the Department of the Secretary of State's Court Challenges Program, did the Government allocate funds for (a) assembling the elements of a case (b) defending a case in court (c) pursuing a case already under way and, if so, for each category, what organizations and individuals received support?

2. In each case, what was the subject matter of the challenge and in what court was it or will it be heard?

3. What funds have been committed or promised to the program?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): 1. From January, 1985 to June 18, 1985.

(a), (b) and (c) (i) The sum of $4,101.10 was awarded to the Comité des parents pour une classe française à Summerside to assemble the elements of the case and prepare the statement of claim at trial level.

(ii) Julius H. Grey was awarded $30,000 in the case of Helen Wong-Woo et al v. Attorney General of Quebec for all aspects of the work related to the Supreme Court level.

(iii) Alliance des Professeurs de Montréal received the sum of $1,029.62 to continue the proceedings at the Appeal Court level.

(iv) Duncan C. MacDonald was awarded $15,000 as a final grant at the Supreme Court level.

2. (i) Comité des parents pour une classe française à Summerside v. Regional Administrative Unit number 2. The parents claim that the number of eligible students in the community warrants a French language class of instruction as guaranteed by section 23 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The parents are developing an application to the Courts. Trial level.

(ii) Attorney General of Quebec v. Wong-Woo et al. Several individual petitioners commenced actions to contest the education provisions of Bill 101 to the extent that they conflict with section 23 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms (Canada clause). Their cases have been heard along with the case of the Attorney General of Quebec v. Quebec Association of Protestant School Boards et al. The individual petitioners and the Q.A.P.S.B. won their cases before the Quebec Superior Court and the Quebec Court of Appeal. Leave to appeal before the Supreme Court of Canada has been granted and the case was heard at the Supreme Court on February 21 and 22, 1984. On July 26, 1984 the Supreme Court of Canada found in favour of the plaintiffs and declared inoperative those parts of the French Language Charter which conflicted with section 23 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

(iii) Alliance des professeurs de Montréal v. Attorney General of Quebec. L'Alliance des professeurs de Montréal representing some 6,000 to 7,000 teachers from the City of Montreal holds that the "notwithstanding" clause in section 33 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms should be used in exceptional cases only. This case involves a challenge to Quebec's "Loi concernant la Loi constitutionnelle de 1982" (L.Q. 1982, c. 21) and other Quebec acts which provide for the exclusion of certain protections found in section 2 and sections 7 to 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This application was rejected by the Quebec Superior Court but, on appeal, the Court of Appeal overturned this decision and found in favour of the Alliance des professeurs. This is now on appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

(iv) MacDonald v. The City of Montreal. Mr MacDonald received a summons for a traffic offence in the French language only. The case questions whether Section 133 of the Constitution Act, 1867 which guarantees the right of use of either the English or French language in the Courts imposes a duty on the State to respect that choice of language in summonses. Rejected at the Superior Court and the Court of Appeal of Quebec. The case was heard by the Supreme Court of Canada and judgment is pending.

3. The Government recently announced a new expanded program which will be administered by the Canadian Council on Social Development.

[Translation]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a question I want to ask the Government House Leader or his Parliamentary Secretary. I wonder if they could indicate to the House when the Government will reply or when they intend to reply to Question No. 285 that I placed on the Order Paper on February 28; Question No. 287 that I placed on the Order Paper on March 6;

Question No. 313 that I placed on the Order Paper on March 28; and Question No. 319 that I placed on the Order Paper on April 4, which concerns the Quebec City extravaganza of last March 17.

Could the Government House Leader respond to these questions that I have been asking over and over in this House, about which apparently the Government must have something to hide?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Government House Leader does not, but the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader might have something to say, and the innuendoes cast by the Hon. Member are not worthy of him.

However, since he did bring this matter up just yesterday I can report that I had the matter looked into, and I can indicate to him that Question No. 285 is in the process of being prepared and has not yet been completed. Question No. 287 is assigned to seven different Departments; two of them are still outstanding and until those two Departments report we cannot return it because they all have to be completed together. Question No. 313 was a question which dealt with all Cabinet Ministers and was assigned therefore to all 40 Government Departments, of which 15 have not yet responded. When those 15 Departments respond we will be able to supply the answers. Question No. 319 was in 20 parts and it cannot be answered until all 20 parts are completed and they have not yet been completed.

As to Question No. 386, which was referred to yesterday as well by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), it is in 18 parts and all 18 parts are not yet completed. It will be answered as soon as we have them all completed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: Debate. Questions and comments. Question: the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: This morning, Mr. Speaker, I listened closely to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie, and the first thing I want to do is commend him for his well-structured speech and especially for his widely acknowledged concern over poor people in our society and low income individuals.

Bill C-80 makes provisions for higher taxes on gasoline and nonprescribed drugs. This morning the Hon. Member read a list of ailments which could be treated with such nonprescribed drugs as will now be subject to a 10 per cent tax, and I wonder if he might give us more details concerning this famous tax on nonprescribed drugs?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer my colleague. I see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is in the House, and we would normally expect him to defend the interests of people who are suffering, people who are sick.

Unfortunately the Minister of National Health and Welfare has not done his job, just as he did not either with respect to elderly Canadians and families with children.

My colleague is right to point out that the 10 per cent tax on sick people affects more than only those who are gravely ill. I must say that the Minister of National Health and Welfare did not make any effort to force his Government to reverse its decision concerning people who suffer from diabetes, heart conditions and respiratory ailments. The Government maintains its position and the Bill will indeed impose a tax on people who suffer from arthritis. The Minister of National Health and Welfare invests a lot of money in research to find cures for various illnesses, yet that same Minister will not do anything to convince the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance to repeal the 10 per cent tax on drugs which are necessary.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague quite properly stressed the odious nature of this measure and this policy. We know very well that people will pay $125 more for family drugs as a result of all the new taxes contained in the Bill, yet on the other hand the Government will deindex family allowances and change the child tax credit. My colleague is therefore quite justified to say that this odious and immoral tax is unacceptable to most Canadian men and women.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie referred this morning to our discussions in this House about the issues of the partial de-indexing of family allowances and the de-indexing of old age security pensions.

Did the Liberal Member agree with the decision made by the former Liberal Government at the time of the 6 and 5 program, when the Trudeau Government did exactly the same thing by partially de-indexing family allowances and old age security pensions for all Canadians? It was exactly the same. It was partial deindexing. It is exactly what the Conservative Government has done. Did the Hon. Member agree with this? If so, why does he not agree now?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I can understand that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Conservative Members would want to play politics on the backs of low-income people and poor Canadians. I did not expect this from a Member of the New Democratic Party, and this is the first time that I see such a thing, Mr. Speaker.

In reply to the Hon. Member, I must say that he should know the difference between the 6 and 5 restriction program and the initiatives of this Government. I would have thought that the Hon. Member would know all about it. First, the purpose of the 6 and 5 program was to reduce inflation and increase the purchasing power of consumers. Second, the Government had also increased the tax credit for low income families and this initiative was to apply for two years only.

Mr. Speaker, the difference between this initiative and the 6 and 5 program is that this Government is removing the first 3 per cent of increase from the very beginning. All the taxes imposed under various programs will increase inflation and therefore the costs for the public. What the Conservatives have said about the changes they have proposed to family allowances is that they will take money away from the taxpayers to reduce the deficit, but in fact, they are not even reducing the deficit. They are taking money from poor people and giving it to the wealthy. If you remember the 6 and 5 program, the tax credit was fully indexed while we now have a partial deindexing as the first 3 per cent of inflation will not be taken into account.

As for middle and low-income families, those with an income of $26,000 will no longer be eligible as the amount will be reduced to $23,000 because of the changes made by this Conservative Government. Middle-income families with three children will lose $400 in the first year because of these changes.

If the Members of the New Democratic Party want to play politics on the backs of the poor, it is their business, but I for one refuse to do it.

[English]

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question with respect to the subject of taxes. I am sure he is aware of the study conducted by the National Anti-Poverty Organization, which was released today, which shows that federal increases in sales tax will take twice as much from the poor families in Canada as from those who are more affluent. On top of that there are also cut-backs with respect to family allowance. What does the Hon. Member think of this matter? Also, what did the Liberal Government do in this respect when it was in power?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), but very quickly.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is a lot smarter than that of the Hon. Member who preceded her—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I am sorry, but the period provided for questions and comments has now expired.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I may refer to an opinion given by the Chair yesterday about this specific 10-minute period following speeches. I would like to ask the Chair whether in the particular case we have just seen, where the Hon. Member asked a question, in fact it was a very good question which required an answer . . . I dont't think the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) was given enough time to answer the question.

I would therefore ask the Chair if from now on, when there is a one-minute or perhaps two-minute limit, to perhaps let the House know that only two minutes of the 10-minute period are left, so that both question and answer are given equal time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Perhaps I may explain to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) that I was absent yesterday, so unfortunately, I was not aware of what may have transpired from yesterday's debate. In any case, as a courtesy to Members, the Chair often indicates, while they are making their speeches, when their time is nearly up. And I think most Members have made a habit of watching the Chair because of that. That is what I just did in the case of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-East (Ms. Mitchell). I indicated to her very quickly that she had very little time left.

It is all more or less left to the discretion of the person in the Chair. I think we should remember that the only hard and fast rule we have left, and one which treats all the Members of this House as fairly as possible, is the rule of 20 minutes plus 10. And this rule is applied as fairly as possible in each particular case.

Mr. Gauthier: I just want to explain to the Chair that I am not questioning the Chair's ruling on the 20 minutes or the time allowed Members to make their speeches. What I mean to say, and I would invite the Chair to read yesterday's Hansard to become familiar with the case, is that the 10 minutes allowed for comments and questions should be fairly distributed on both sides of the House. I have noticed on occasion that at the end of the 10 minutes allowed for questions and comments, some Members take advantage of this to put a question that requires a far more elaborate answer. So in that case, if the Chair could indicate to both parties that their time is limited, so that we could have a constructive dialogue on both sides... I would simply ask the Chair to check yesterday's Hansard to make sure I am not referring to the 20-minute period but to the 10-minute period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I shall consider the comment by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) as a constructive one. I intend to consult yesterday's Hansard, and I may remind the Members of this House that at least as far as I am concerned, if we consider the time allowed Hon. Members, and stick to that question in particular, it is first of all their responsibility to keep track of their allotted time and not the responsibility of the Chair. So perhaps we could start there.

Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner).

[English]

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to take part in the debate on Bill C-80. I did not think I would survive the onslaught from my hon. friend this morning, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I did and I am looking forward the debating Bill C-80. I regret the Hon. Member is not in the House at the moment. I hope he will return shortly.

This morning we spoke about the toughness of Bill C-80. I would now like to speak about its fairness.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-80 implements the budget proposal concerning the federal sales tax and excise tax and the excise duty as announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his May 23rd budget.

The Bill moves in four major directions.

First, pursuant to the recommendations made by the Nielsen Task Force, this Bill would enlarge the sales tax base, putting an end to a trend that leaves only 30 per cent of possible profit subject to federal taxation.

Second, this Bill would implement one component of the Government strategy to reduce the deficit by increasing the federal sales tax rate.

Third, this Bill would implement the election promise to eliminate automatic indexation of the taxes on alcohol and tobacco, an indexation which would have increased the taxes by 4 per cent in September and by an indexed amount over the coming years. In lieu of indexation, there will be a tax rate increase of 2 percent on alcoholic beverages and a 25-cent tax on the 25-cigarette package.

Finally, this Bill introduces an extensive system for assessing the objections and appeals under the Excise Tax Act. This new system is similar to the current one under the Income Tax Act, and includes recent improvements made to that Act with respect to search and seizure and the presumption of innocence that prevents seizure until the taxpayer has a chance to resolve any litigation as to his fiscal responsibility.

[English]

Before I continue with my remarks with respect to Bill C-80 I want to say that, in the true spirit of practical reform of some of our parliamentary procedures, the budgetary reform process is also of paramount importance. Some five months and six days after being introduced on May 23, 1985, we are still debating our first full federal Budget. I find this a bit strange since we are effectively running the largest business in the country without having all of our fiscal plans in legal place. Some of my constituents, in fact, are asking me why we have not voted on all of the Budget yet and I find that sometimes difficult to answer. What I feel we should be looking at—and I know the Government is and will be looking at it more closely—is limiting and perhaps regularizing the Budget debate in future.

I would like to continue on a bright note and to end on an even brighter one. The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) said in the House last Thursday, October 24, and I quote from page 7941 of Hansard:

> Early this week the Royal Bank of Canada confirmed that economic growth in this country is proceeding at a steady pace, that inflation and interest rates will continue to decline and unemployment will be at its lowest level in years. The Royal Bank says that the Canadian economy is looking better because Canadian businesses are spending more money producing more goods and employing more people.

The Minister went on to say, and I quote from page 7943 of Hansard:

> I said it was a tough Bill but I believe it is also fair. It asks all Canadians to share in the effort to restore the fiscal health of our country.

I could not agree more. The Economic Council of Canada said in one of its recent reports that the real growth is expected to continue for the next four to five years in a very positive way in Canada. The Conference Board of Canada recently revised its growth projections upward for 1985-86 by a full 2 per cent of GNP increase. This is bright news and it is getting brighter every week. The Throne Speech spoke of national reconciliation and economic renewal and we are on track with both of these two national themes. The economic statement of November 8 spoke of a course of action to create jobs, growth and opportunities. If we look at the recent record of this Government, we find it has been simply remarkable. The Budget of May 23, 1985, builds on our successes to date by creating more opportunities through encouraging private initiatives and incentives in a realistic, fair and effective way. The fiscal course we have set is obviously working so far and will continue to work well into the future. All Hon. Members of the House know deep down that all of the economic news is good news.

Bill C-80, which represents one slice of the over-all budgetary process, concentrates on revenue raising measures from federal tax changes on candy, confectioneries, soft drinks, pet food, beauty and health goods, gazoline, beer and wine, construction materials, tobacco and a few other products, but the over-all theme we must maintain is budgetary control of the deficit and its reduction through fiscal responsibility.

In the fall of 1984 I did a survey in my riding and I asked my constituents to tell me what they thought the top priority should be for the new Government. Three out of four of those who responded—75 per cent—indicated that deficit reduction was at the top of their list. I remind the House that we are exercising deficit control through and 80 per cent reduction of Government expenditures and only 20 per cent through tax increases. That is pretty responsible management, in my opinion.

Let me compare Bill C-80, in an over-all broad context, to an expandable swimming pool full of money—sometimes called "capital". Those who want to dive into this pool of money, the people who would use these funds, are you and I, Mr. Speaker, my constituents, businesses inside and outside of Canada—that is, the international community—and municipal, provincial and, obviously, federal levels of Government. We are the largest player in the pool and as our capital needs become greater, we squeeze out others from competition. That is bad because Governments do not create jobs, they create the environment for others to create jobs. Today's environment is now healthier than it has ever been. We compete for a part of that capital pool. The greater the competition to buy or borrow, the higher the price, and the price of money is interest. Therefore interest rates would probably rise unless we could lower our needs for our part of the pool. We cannot expand the size of the pool very quickly because it would mean printing more money or more capital. That could be inflationary. The over-all amount of money in the pool can only expand as the over-all wealth of our nation expands. With the elimination of the hideous National Energy Program, replaced by the very successful Western Accord, the very negative Foreign Investment Review Agency, replaced with a well received Investment Canada; and with capital gains incentives in the Budget, our over-all wealth is increasing and will continue to increase, thereby giving the Government more room to manoeuvre.

Since we cannot expand the size of the pool too quickly, we must lower our demands and swim in a smaller part of the pool so that others who are competing for those funds, such as businesses and other borrowers, will have a little more room.

Bill C-80 necessitates some of the changes we must make in order to allow the Government to have more financial flexibility. On the surface, the waters may look a little rough, a little tough, in fact, as it was said this morning, but fair. No one likes tax increases, myself included, but underneath the waters are much calmer. Our plan is obviously working. One can see the increased confidence levels in the private sector as it finds more areas to swim in and therefore the price of borrowing money is lowered.

I can see the western energy developments are increasing tremendously in western Canada. The automobile industry of Ontario is operating near capacity. The housing industry is undergoing a tremendous uplift in new housing starts. The manufacturing industry is showing tremendous growth as consumers buy more and more durable goods.

As the Miniser of State for Finance said with respect to Bill C-80, it is a tough Bill but it is fair in that all Canadians are asked to contribute. We must keep in mind the over-all budgetary themes such as economic growth. Recent economic indicators are all strong; deficit reduction, 80 per cent through expenditure reduction and 20 per cent through tax increases; and job creation, especially our great achievement in lowering the unemployment levels of the youth of our country in the last few weeks and months.

An area of real concern with which I have to deal in my riding concerning Bill C-80 is the increased taxation of construction goods manufactured other than at a construction site, such as steel, concrete, asphalt and even asphalt shingles for roofs, and others. A number of businesses in my riding reacted against the date of the proposed increase of July 1, 1985. They wanted to put it off until January 1, 1986. I met with a lot of these business representatives, with officials from the Department and discussed the issue with the two Ministers concerned who listened very attentively, but it was decided that the federal Treasury needed the revenue as soon as possible.

Normally these increases are effective immediately a Budget is brought down. As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, the measures in the Budget were put off for a period of about six weeks in order to allow for a reasonable adjustment by the affected businesses. I find that very fair. The affected businesses in the construction industry were not questioning the need for the Governemnt to raise more revenue. They were merely asking for the effective date to be put off to January 1. They understood that we had to start to live more within our means. I think everyone in the House understands, as do my constituents, that we have to do the same. Mr. Speaker, what happens to you when you live beyond your means and for how long can you do that? You get a phone call from the bank. You are told that your credit is up, that you must turn in the plastic and have no more credit cards. On September 4, 1984, the people of Canada called up the former Government and said its credit was up, it was time for a change. They wanted to give the Tories a chance to run the business. Our track record to date is simply outstanding, but the struggle continues. The passage of Bill C-80 will give us more financial freedom to do more for those in the greatest need in Canada.

Mr. Foster: How can he read that crap?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Recently the Business Council on National Issues was referred to in an article in The Toronto Star. Its President, Mr. Tom d'Aquino, who happens to be a constituent of mine, indicates that businesses are preparing for a powerful lobby to back deficit cutting. This article indicates that one of the purposes of this lobby is going to be to convince the public that it is better to make small sacrifices in government services now to get the deficit under control than to allow interest payments on the country's burgeoning debt to eat up an ever-greater portion of the country's resources. That is what we are trying to do. In an editorial in The Globe and Mail of October 25, Jeffrey Simpson says the same thing. I quote as follows:

> Only radical measures can turn the deficit problem around by the early 1990s.

These measures of tax increases in Bill C-80 are not only necessary but essential to the on-going process of fair tax reform and economic renewal in Canada.

I would like to refer to some even brighter aspects of what has been happening since the Government took power. We spoke of farmers today during Question Period. Interest rates paid by farmers have fallen significantly since the election last year. One year ago five-year mortgages given by the Farm Credit Corporation carried an interest rate of 14 per cent. Today the interest rate is eleven and seven-eighths. That is a drop of two and one-eighth percentage points and that is pretty significant. Some other good news deals with employment. Of course we hear this every day because it is such good news. Employment has risen by 2.7 per cent in Canada in the last year compared to 2 per cent in the United States of America. Our track record is much better and more positive than that of the United States. In September of this year 175,000 more women were working than in September 1984. That increases the confidence level in what the Government is doing.

In the energy and mining sector drilling activity is up significantly this year. Well completions in the first eight months of 1985 are up 19 per cent over last year's levels. I was in Saskatchewan in August. I went out to look at the effects of the drought. It is a tragic situation, but I also saw tremendous activity in drilling for new oil in the southern part of that province, particularly around the area of Macoun and Estevan.

In the 1980 election the Liberals promised cheap gas. Between 1980 and 1984 gas went up by $1.15 per gallon.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): And it will go up some more now.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the deficit today exceeds total spending a decade ago and is three times greater than total spending was in 1967. That is difficult to imagine, but those are real numbers. In fact, the entire length and width of the Trans-Canada Highway could be paved with dollar bills adding up to the amount of the deficit of today. That is a lot of miles and a lot of wasted money. The cost of servicing the debt this year is equal to $1,024 per capita, compared to $174 a decade ago, or $63 in our Centennial year. Debt service costs account for one revenue dollar in three today. That is a lousy way to run a business, Mr. Speaker, and we must do more to manage our national affairs more effectively.

The list goes on. The successes we have had are absolutely outstanding, as I said earlier. The non-residential portion of construction is up by 12 per cent over last year. With regard to small businesses, 173,000 of Canada's small businesses are retailers. The value of retail trade climbed 10 per cent in the first seven months of 1985 compared to the same period last year. Mr. Speaker, the good list goes on. Although Bill C-80 is a Bill to increase Government revenue, when taken in its global budgetary context it is actually contributing to increasing the level of confidence that Canadians have in their Government to live more within its means so that others can share in the capital pool that I spoke of earlier more equally and fairly.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer comments on several aspects of the speech of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner). I am sure some questions will emanate from that to which he will want to respond. He has made a good deal of the fairness which the provisions of Bill C-80 which grow out of the Budget of last May represent in his opinion. He cites the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) to that effect. I do not see how provisions which are applied at the same level to purchases of various products can represent fair taxation when persons of greatly differing income levels are purchasing these goods. The amount that each person spends on these products might conceivably be the same, but the proportion of income spent by the various persons on the purchase of gasoline, confectionery, tobacco or alcohol would be very different. To the person earning $10,000 a particular amount may represent a very large proportion of his income while a person earning $200,000 hardly notices the effect of these purchases. It escapes me, Mr. Speaker, how that kind of tax provision can be fair. I suggest that this is not simply a matter of rhetoric with members of the Government wanting to uphold the fairness of the tax system and members of the Opposition wanting to criticize it. It is in fact directly related to the matter of economic performance in the country.

The Member suggests that all the indicators are good. Surely the unemployment rate in the country is not a good economic indicator. The deficit to which the Member has pointed is not a good indicator either and he has recognized that. He can point to interest rates as being satisfactory although, again, I do not understand what action the Government has taken to produce lower interest rates. Surely good sense in the American Federal Reserve Bank system has primarily been responsible for lower interest rates and those have had happy results.

How can the Member believe that these tax provisions represent fairness? How can he also assert, aside from Government rhetoric, that the economic indicators are satisfactory? The capitalists are unhappy about the deficit his Government is running and the unemployed people of the country are unhappy about the lack of jobs.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the questions of my colleague. I want to answer with the following question: Was it fair that year after year since 1972 the federal Government lived beyond its means and accumulated an unbelievable national debt of $224 billion? Is it fair that one in three dollars in federal revenue goes to pay interest alone to service this accumulated national debt? Is that a good way to run a business or a fair way to have run a country since 1972 when we first went into a deficit situation?

The Member stated that the unemployment level was still unacceptable. I agree. However, let us give credit where it is due. In September, 1984, the unemployment rate was 11.6 per cent. In September, 1985, it was 10.1 per cent. That is a significant decrease in the over-all unemployment statistics.

The Hon. Member talked about people with low income who need a greater opportunity to increase their income. There are 300,000 more people working today. Does that not mean that they will be earning more income?

In the last 20 years we have lost 2 per cent of our world trade. Canada used to occupy 5.5 per cent of world trade but through bad economic policies of former successive Governments, our world trade is now approximately 3.5 per cent. If we are able to regain 1 per cent of world trade in the next three and a half years of this Government's mandate, we will create 400,000 new jobs in Canada. That is why we are looking to expanding our trade and regaining economic stability and growth. That is why we are looking at lower interest rates which will mean more investment in Canada by Canadians to develop their own businesses.

The list goes on. I do not understand how the Member can say that we are not headed in a positive economic direction.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could add a third area of comment and question, relating to the metaphor of a pool of capital to which the Hon. Member was alluding. He used that metaphor to make a point about the interest rates facing Canadians.

Metaphors can be very dangerous forms of expression. The Member raised a picture of a fixed amount of capital in the country. The Government takes a part of this capital but if it takes too much there will not be enough left for others. When he gives this metaphor he is creating quite the wrong impression. There is no such fixed amount of capital available to the bankers and financiers of this country. One need not believe in social credit to appreciate that the expansion of credit is carried out not just by the Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada, or to realize that when worthy projects can be carried out, whether public or private, the capital will be found and the credit will be extended so that the pool will grow, to use the Hon. Member's metaphor. It is not at all obvious that the Canadian Government's call on Canadians to buy savings bonds and other financial instruments has in any way driven up the interest rates in this country.

Therefore, I suggest that the Hon. Member's metaphor leads us astray. Moreover, I would suggest that if the Hon. Member wants to appreciate what constraints may exist in this area, he can look at the early 1940s when the Government of Canada was coming out of the Depression. It felt just the kind of constraints that he is talking about now. When the Government began meeting the challenges of the Second World War, it discovered that the constraints were not ones of finding money because Governments can easily find the necessary capital. The real constraints involved how rapidly one could invest that money and how rapidly one could expand productive facilities with the necessary equipment and so on.

When we have hundreds of thousands of people unemployed and ample productive facilities wanting work, it seems to me that the metaphor of the pool is totally wrong. I am sure the Hon. Member will have a comment about that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am convinced that the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) will have a comment.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that I have convinced somebody in the Chamber. Certainly the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest) is a man who is not easily convinced.

I believe the pool of capital is a good metaphor. I am not sure what the Hon. Member suggests we should do. Is he suggesting that we should print more money? We cannot simply start the press. One cannot simply run off paper money and distribute it to whoever wants it unless the country is wealthy enough to permit it.

Our approach is to change investment opportunities in this country for foreigners and Canadians. If Canadians invest in their country and keep that pool of capital here rather than investing in foreign countries, then the wealth of the nation will increase. The size of the pool to which I referred will increase. As the Government reduces its need to dip into that pool, more money will be available for businesses, individuals and domestic and foreign corporations. It will be easier and cheaper for them to compete for the same funds. That will keep the level of interest rates much lower in a domestic context.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments has now expired.

It has been brought to my attention that I referred to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) as being from Thunder Bay-Atikokan. I cannot understand how I could ever make that error, but it has been brought to my attention.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate have passed Bill C-73, an Act to validate certain ordinances of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories, without amendment.

Excise Tax Act

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Henceforth, there will be only ten-minute speeches, no questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I suppose if you placed the Members for Thunder Bay-Nipigon and Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus) side by side the mystification may come to an end.

May I confirm, on a point of order, that we are permitted 10 minutes at this point?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Yes.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): I can only say that I regret that, but I am grateful that I spent some time in comments with the Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) which allowed me to dispose of some items.

Even though the Government is a little over a year old and Parliament convened less than a year ago, one can already have moment of déja vu.

Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, imposes increases as a result of the Budget of last May 23. There is an increase of 1 per cent in the rate of federal sales tax on various products, effective January 1, 1986. There are other changes as well. For example, there is the extension of the federal sales tax on a variety of products enjoyed by men, women, boys and girls across the country. They will face increased charges for such things as candy, confectionery, soft drinks, pet foods and certain health goods.

There is tax on energy conservation equipment from a Government that claimed to be concerned about this matter. It is imposing sales tax on energy conservation equipment soon after it ended programs that supported energy conservation in this country. On that point alone, surely we have evidence of how reactionary this Bill is. There is also an increase of 2 cents per litre on gasoline and aviation gasoline, diesel fuel and aviation fuel which came into effect on September 3. There will be an additional increase of 1 cent per litre on January 1, 1987. These tax increases go well into the future.

As I contemplate these increases I am reminded of the debate we had in the first weeks of this Session of Parliament. The Government had to consider the question of whether to go through with an increase in the sales tax which the previous Liberal Government had planned for October 1. It was surely very significant of what the Government would continue to do, that instead of cancelling that particular increase as it had given every indication it would do before its success in the election—it was very critical of that Liberal sales tax increase—it decided to proceed with that 1 per cent increase. The following May, in the Budget measures we are debating here, the Government decided to add to those increases in sales tax. We have in the last minutes been considering the fairness of all this. It is not simply a question of fairness, but a question of the economic wisdom of following this course in the fiscal and financial policy of the Government.

There is a deficit, which is very significant. Why do we have a deficit? This Government will answer first by saying that too much is being spent. The Government does not very often say that there is a deficit because not enough taxes are being raised in certain areas, although in the practice of the Budget and in the Bill, C-80 that we are debating today, there is a suggestion that the people of Canada, as far as sales and excise taxes are concerned, should pay more. There is a deficit then, at least in part, because the ordinary people who already bear and excessive burden of taxation need more burden laid on their shoulders.

What has not been considered at all is the distinct possibility that there is such a large deficit in our federal fiscal operations because the Government of Canada has increasingly slipped into allowing various kinds of activity, particularly on the side of capital investment, to escape taxation. This has resulted in the rich getting richer, succeeding more and more in concentrating their economic power while the poor keep paying more and more taxes. That comes from a Conservative Government which likes to think it speaks for ordinary Canadians, that it is anxious about them and wants to ensure that prosperity genuinely comes to Canada.

It is not simply a question of fairness as I have said. It is also a question of economic sense. When you decide that the largest part of the burden of taxation is going to be borne by individuals who have to pay the sales and excise taxes willy-nilly, whatever they may want to do, they face these charges when necessities need to be purchased. They are sneaky taxes because they are hidden charges. As a rule they are simply in the price and there is no way of knowing what they were originally unless you check the charts.

There is little opportunity to appreciate exactly how serious these charges are as they get worked into the cost of things and percentages are added to them in additional charges. It is a matter of economic stupidity to make individual Canadians the basis for the fiscal system in this way. These are exactly the people on whom we depend to ensure business is being done in our communities, that people come into the shops with money to spend and buy things. That purchasing power gets translated into demand to wholesalers, factories and employment throughout our industries. If we insist on using these means to add inexorably year by year to the burden individuals have to bear, then we will find, as we have found in the past decade and a half, that all the inducements we may provide in the way of our tax expenditure system, accelerated capital cost allowances and so on, do not succeed in ensuring that there is enough investment taking place to give us anything like full employment. What it does, Mr. Speaker, is to make the rich far richer than they would be otherwise and to reduce more and more of the Canadian population to poverty. That was obvious by the beginning of this decade when the Department of Finance provided some evidence of the benefits that federal tax expenditures amount to for Canadians at various income levels. On the basis of the 1979 returns, Canadians who had incomes of $7,500 to $10,000, obviously very poor Canadians as far as the demands of life in our cities and towns are concerned, were receiving over $300. It was well under 5 per cent benefit as a percentage of income. But Canadians who had incomes of over $200,000 were receiving benefits that exceeded $50,000.

An individual Canadian in the existing system, which dates back to the early 1970s and which has been quite fundamental in creating the deficit situation we have, could receive in tax expenditure benefits more than the total income of five or six other Canadians. There is the rank unfairness of the system which the Liberals created through the 1970s and early 1980s and which to date the Conservatives have done absolutely nothing to change.

There is the ultimate foolishness, the economic stupidity, with what we are faced in Bill C-80. We want the Bill taken back. We want the Government to come to grips with the fact that tax expenditures may well be running at the $30 billion to $50 billion level, meaning that the deficit impact of these tax expenditures may be as much as $15 billion, almost 50 per cent more than the total deficit the Government is presently running. If that were the case, we would have the clearest of arguments for an actual reduction in taxation for invididuals. We would have an argument for reducing the sales tax, not increasing it. What would happen at the same time the Government came to grips with tax reform as it should and if the Government recognized as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated last November? Let me quote his statement:

> As we grapple with the technicalities, the subtleties and the complexities of our tax system, we must never lose sight of the citizens it is ultimately meant to serve. That is what our efforts are all about. The real bottom line is people.

I could not agree more with that Mr. Speaker, but where is the action that is required to operate on this statement?

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I am also proud and pleased to take part in this discussion.

In my view, Bill C-80 probably is since the Progressive Conservatives came to power the document that best depicts and defines the true faces of those men and women who are now at the helm.

This Bill enables us to understand how and where the Government team wants to lead this country over the coming years. Let me say first that we all admit and accept the fact that the national debt is tremendously large, that it requires and deserves particular intention, so that steps will be taken to eventually reduce that deficit.

On the other hand, we all admit that this country has had to go through an historically unprecedented period in every respect, and Canada did so in a way that is simply fantastic, and at the end of that crisis, steps had to be taken to restore and straighten out our public affairs. And today we are witnessing the impact, the spin-offs of measures that were put forward by the previous administration. We see the levels of job creation and inflation—

On the other hand, Hon. Members opposite suggest: "Listen, if interest rates went down, if inflation abated, if there is job creation, it is because of measures, of initiatives we have taken since we came to power on September 4." But this is my view is not the case, and it is certainly not where that improvement is concerned.

To me, the important thing today is to get into details, and see the true orientation which this Progressive Conservatives Government wants to impart to the country.

We now have before us Bill C-80, the basic aim of which is to collect taxes, to extort money from the smallest people possible, middle and small income earners, the have-nots, those who find it most hard to make ends meet under current condition.

In this context, they put forth Bill C-80 in order to pick money from small people's pockets, the purpose, of course, being to collect $15 billion or so.

In other words, middle and low-income taxpayers are being asked to bear the whole burden of our financial problems in Canada.

It would be both unacceptable and just as unbearable, but it would nevertheless keep up the pretence of some sort of justice if, at the same time and in the same breath, the Government told the wealthy, those with substantial means, that they must also make an effort and do their share to reduce the deficit.

However, that is not the point. The point is that, with Bill C-80, the Government is going to take millions of dollars away from the poor, from those with very low incomes, and give this money to multinationals, to individuals who can pay and who have made it through the recent crisis without any problem.

In this regard, I believe that it is important and relevant to list some of the initiatives which favour the wealthy in Canada. If I may, I would just like to mention the capital gains exemption with which the Government tells those who make profits in real estate or on the stock market: The next few years are going to be highly profitable years for all you Ladies and Gentlemen who are involved in big business. During the next few years, you will be allowed to claim as non-taxable income up to $500,000 in capital gains for Personal Income Tax purposes. It is assumed that you will re-invest that money in the system. But what guarantee do we have that you are indeed going to do so? All Hon. Members are aware of course that the taxpayers who are going to benefit most from these generous provisions are not those who are living in poverty and who can hardly make ends meet. The taxpayers who will benefit most are those who are well-off, if not outright rich, and who could, without depriving themselves of the necessities of life, make a special effort to reduce the national debt. I feel this measure is quite unfair for all middle-income Canadians.

There is another matter which I find especially odious. We are dealing today with Bill C-80. Well, the same Minister, namely, the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) introduced recently Bill C-79 to ask Canadians for $1 billion to compensate these honourable gentlemen and corporations who had invested in a bank at very favourable rates in excess of the $60,000 of normally fully insured deposits. The Government needed $1,000 million to reimburse these people all the money they had invested in these Western banks, capital and interests, and for that purpose the Government introduced Bill C-79, the legislation that was immediately followed by Bill C-80 we are now studying.

In the following Bill, Bill C-80, the Government is telling people who can hardly make ends meet: Ladies and gentlemen, you will have to play your part to help the Government meet its obligations. You will have to tighten your belt. You will have to do your share by paying a surtax or a higher tax so we can meet our obligations. This is happening right after another Bill to raise $1 billion to repay individuals and companies that, in many cases, will take the money and invest it outside Canada, in foreign countries where it will not do anything at all to spur the Canadian economy.

Well, Mr. Speaker, barely 14 months have elapsed and this Government is giving us today an opportunity to see how it is reacting to the vote of confidence and support it received from Canadian men and women last September 4. The Conservatives told the Canadian people that universality was a sacred trust, that it was here to stay, that ordinary Canadians would be protected and have the resources required to face the future with serenity. So here we are, hardly 14 months later, debating a Bill which to me is historically odious and altogether shameful, a measure through which the Government will take $15 billion from low and average income Canadians, $15 billion in taxes on products which in many cases are absolutely essential.

Of course we know that under Opposition pressure the Government caved in on the pension issue, as it did with respect to certain drugs for diabetics. But there is still a very large number of drugs which are taxed and which in many cases are essential medicine and this is the indisputable proof that the Government does not care a hoot about ordinary Canadians while it surely pampers our few thousand very rich Canadians.

At present, there is another very important political debate going on in Canada, the one dealing with the footwear industry and the Government will very soon have to reach a decision to protect 20,000 jobs, to protect the consumers, to create 6,000 new jobs but its decision is long overdue. We have every reason to believe that the decision which will soon be made public will be in favour of a few hundred importers who are already taking in prohibitive profits. Once again, a measure that will protect a few hundred rich individuals at the expense of thousands and millions of Canadians unable to cope with the real difficulties that they have to meet.

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak on Bill C-80. This piece of legislation implements some of the key elements in the May Budget, unfortunately some of the elements which the ordinary Canadian least likes to see implemented in that they mean an increase in the federal sales tax and the excise tax.

Although we have been talking about the Bill for several days, I remind the people of Canada and the House just exactly what we are talking about. The federal sales tax will be increased by 1 per cent as of January 1, 1986 if the Bill passes. Canadians would be interested in knowing what rate they will now be faced with as far as the new rates are concerned. For example, they will be paying 7 per cent on all construction materials, 7 per cent on cable and pay television services, 14 per cent on alcoholic beverages, 14 per cent on tobacco products, and 11 per cent on all other taxable items. It is very interesting to note that the whole process will cost Canadian consumers $990 million in 1986-87.

Today the Auditor General brought down his annual report. One item in it concerned something done by the Government on February 5, 1985 when it gave a remission to the Dome Petroleum company. This will cost Canadian taxpayers in the next 10 years something over $1 billion. Dome Petroleum will not have to pay taxes for the next 10 years which is going to cost us something over a billion dollars. That is considerably more than the total revenue from all these taxes. There was an alternative to this taxation. The Government had an option, to use the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). It did not have to pass that remission. It could have taken equity in Dome Petroleum so that at the end of 10 years we would have an equity of a billion dollars in that company, or it could have given it a loan. It had an option but it chose instead to give Dome Petroleum, the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company, a billion dollars. This money is derived from increases in excise and sales taxes on the ordinary Canadian.

The federal sales tax is being expanded as well. Sales tax exemptions on candy, confectionery, soft drinks, pet foods and certain health foods and energy conservation equipment are repealed. All of those items, which have been non-taxable up until now, are going to be taxed. These are areas where the ordinary Canadian spends a little bit of money for his comfort or his recreation.

The excise taxes, which are direct taxes added on to the prices and not a percentage tax, not an ad valorem tax as the sales tax is, are two cents per litre on gasoline and aviation fuel and two cents per litre on diesel fuel. That was applicable September 3 and effective January 1, 1987 we will have one cent per litre on gasoline and aviation fuel and one cent per litre on diesel fuel also added.

In their unsuccessful invasion of Prince Albert in the last federal election this Conservative Government, then in Opposition or then in an election process, promised the farmers of western Canada that it would reduce the price of fuel, give a rebate on the taxes being paid for the fuel that the farmers, as primary producers, used to produce much of the food of this country. With this one cent on January 1, the two cents on September 3 and the past increases in fuel over the last year, instead of a 20 cent reduction per gallon that the farmers were promised they have instead a 20 cent increase per gallon in the cost of fuel. That, Mr. Speaker, is having a real impact on the production of food in this country. There are many farmers that are close to the line as far as survival is concerned. They are not making very much profit and a couple of cents per gallon, when you use several thousands gallons of fuel, makes quite a bit of difference in the cost of their production.

It is very interesting to notice that compared to the increase in taxes for the ordinary Canadian and for the primary producer, we have in a publication by the Economic Council of Canada this kind of a statement and it is a very telling statement because it gives some kind of a comparison between the corporation tax and the tax on the individual. It reads:

If there were no inflation, Canadian industries would pay virtually no income tax.

The speaker here is Glenn P. Jenkins, a Harvard University Economist who has done some work for the Economic Council of Canada. He makes this statement, and I quote:

Mr. Crosbie: He worked for the Government—Assistant Deputy Minister of Taxation.

Mr. Hovdebo: He said:

The corporation income tax system has been made so generous that were it not for the spurious effects of inflation the effective corporate income tax rate would, on average, be close to zero.

We have the situation of a Government which has reduced by its very generous taxation process the taxes on corporations to zero and at the same time has added one cent on gasoline, two cents on gasoline, two cents on diesel fuel, 1 per cent on all the goods that we buy. When the Minister introduced this tax she was very careful to say that this is a fair tax. How fair is it? What is the definition of fair? In our tax system a definition of fair has always been taxes as a percentage of earnings. These taxes do everything but that. They are repressive taxes. The poorer the people, the larger proportion of their income they pay. If the tax on a bottle of pop is five cents or ten cents that is a much larger proportion of the income of one who earns $5,000 than of one who earns $45,000.

Mr. Speaker, what I wanted to do here was to present to this House and to the people of Canada the difference in the process of taxation that this Government is opposing. The poorer the people, the less income they have, the more they are going to feel the effects of this tax; and that is wrong. Therefore, it should not be a method of raising revenue for this Government at this time.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is not with any particular pleasure that I take part in this debate, because I believe that the Bill in question is a regressive measure that increases the tax burden of Canadians and does absolutely nothing to reduce the deficit. The Government's friends, the big corporations, are making a tremendous profit with the tax benefits they were given, while on the other hand, money is being taken out of the pockets of the average and low-income Canadian as a result of increasing taxes, including sales tax, the tax on fuel, and an increase in the tax on non-prescription drugs.

Bill C-80 before the House today is aimed specifically at taking money from Canadian consumers to try and balance the budget of a Government that has not hesitated, on occasion, to spend billions on banks or on administrative decisions in favour of large companies such as Olympia and York, which helped that company make a profit of $500 million.

[English]

The Bill before us, of course, adds immensely to the taxes of Canadian consumers who will have to pay these increases in excise taxes to the extent that the Bill, taken globally, will add some $2.4 billion over the years from now until 1990-91 to consumer taxes. At the same time corporations will enjoy a $2.2 billion decrease in taxes. Under the good Tory Government, the rich get richer. Those who have capital gains will be able to deduct $500,000 thus costing the federal Treasury $1.25 billion in lost revenue.

• (1630)

Mr. Crosbie: Are you a broken record?

Mr. Gauthier: I would ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) where the equity is in these arrangements. The Minister is part of the Government. Are his friends not receiving the benefit of the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption?

Mr. Foster: His friends are retractable.

Mr. Gauthier: The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) said that the Minister's friends are retractable. It could be that they are, but his comments are certainly retractable at times.

I would like to address this difficult and regressive legislation. The tax increase on motor fuels is something that will touch every consumer except those using diesel fuel in the generation of electricity. All others will have to pay, whether they be municipal Governments, commercial businessmen, fishermen, trappers, farmers, hunters or those involved in transportation services. The amazing thing about this is that the Government is now changing the rules. This tax will now be called an ad valorem tax. This ad valorem tax will encourage pollution because the tax itself is lower on leaded fuels than it is on unleaded fuels.

Yesterday when the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) put a question to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), he tried to bring it to the attention of the House that the Government is giving a subsidy, if I may use that word, to those who consume leaded gasoline while we are all trying to reduce acid rain and encourage the use of unleaded fuels. The ad valorem tax on fuels will be .32 cents per litre for regular leaded gasoline while it will be .35 cents per litre for unleaded gasoline. The tax is higher for unleaded gasoline. I wonder about the commitment of the Government to purifying the atmosphere, to creating a better environment and to reducing acid rain.

I would like to touch on a few other items of the Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we were surprised to find that regressive measures, which means a tax that applies to some and not to others, that is what the word regressive means, that these measures do not seem to stop our Tory friends from attacking the average consumer. They have increased the excise tax on gas, as I said earlier, but they have also increased the tax on alcoholic beverages, tobacco products, wine, and programming services provided by telecommunications. The sales tax has been raised, and that is a very big source of revenue for the Government, by levying taxes on a number of construction materials and certain prefabricated materials.

By levying taxes on equipment and building materials used for energy conservation, such as controlled combustion stoves, for instance, the Government is discouraging Canadian efforts at conserving energy, by taxing items that once could be bought without paying tax.

Taxes are being levied on candy, on soft drinks, on pet foods. People say: So what! It is only pets, after all. Well, some of those pets are dogs used by blind people, they can be very important for the every day life of those whose sight is impaired. And it is unfair in my view to impose an additional tax on those people. I find this absolutely unacceptable.

Taxes will be levied on non-patent drugs and the list is quite exhaustive as the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has shown. I do not find it here but it is an exhaustive list, it goes from acne to hemorrhoids, Mr. Speaker. All sorts of drugs that are used daily by Canadians will be subject to an extra 10 per cent tax, in order to do what, Mr. Speaker? To pay for this Government's errors.

How do they dare come in this House and suggest, as I heard the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) state earlier: "You know, we are giving $1 out of every $3 to pay debt interests." Mr. Speaker, if the Government's argument is to reduce the deficit, this should not be done on the backs of medium and lower class consumers. Other steps should be taken.

I read today in the report submitted by The Canadian Council on Social Development that they consider the sales tax as regressive. I quote:

[English]

The Canadian Council on Social Development has estimated that the combination of increased sales, gasoline, alcohol, and tobacco taxes will result in tax hikes of $140 for a $15,000 annual income couple in 1990, $282 for a comparable couple with $20,000 income, and $361 for a $40,000 income couple.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this therefore is a tax that applies regressively to middle-and low-income Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to go back to the question of people and the extra burden that this legislation appears to be imposing upon them.

[English]

Consumers will pay $2.6 billion more in sales tax by 1990-91 as a result of the changes contained in Bill C-80. At the same time, corporations will enjoy a decrease of $2.2 billion in tax and capital gains tax breaks alone. Where indeed is the equity in this Bill?

Because of higher fuel costs, hundreds of small and medium-sized construction companies will see costs rise. God knows that the increase in costs on inputs to construction companies will discourage the construction industry as it will find the costs harder to bear. When added to other budget measures such as the general tax increase, higher fuel costs, CMHC cuts and elimination of the Registered Home Ownership Plan, this becomes a heavy blow to the industry at a critical time when we need the construction of new homes.

I would like to go on to talk about the tourism industry and how the additional cost of motor fuels will have a negative impact on tourism. I see, however, that you are rising, Mr. Speaker, to cut me off because my 10 minutes are up. I regret that, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Gervais): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 46, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Pietz)—St. Lawrence Seaway—Welland Canal blockage. (b) Request for extension of shipping season; the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp)—Co-operatives—Government response to task force report. (b) Request that co-ordinating agency be established; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Social Affairs—Increased role of voluntary organizations. (b) Request for Federal-Provincial discussions.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXCISE TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to oppose this Bill for a number of reasons. First, when we are talking about sales taxes, we are talking about taxes that are regressive and place a more severe burden on lower-income earners than on people with higher incomes. People with lower incomes spend a greater proportion of their incomes on the basic necessities of life including food, clothing, shelter and other things needed to carry out a daily existence. Therefore, when it comes to sales taxes, people with lower incomes are hit more severely by increases. This was confirmed by a recent study carried out and released by the National Anti-Poverty Organization. Regarding this study, an article in The Globe and Mail reads as follows:

> The study says that those estimates "make it clear that the poorest of Canadians will pay increases in federal sales and excise taxes at twice the rate paid by the most affluent families."

The article is quoting a study done by the National Anti-Poverty Organization. It is not a political group. It is not a supporter of any political party. It speaks objectively about the plight of lower income Canadians, the poorest Canadians, all across the country. Yet, when the Government decided to obtain more tax revenue, not for expanding programs to help lower income Canadians but to reduce the deficit, it decided to place an undue and unfair share of the burden in reducing that deficit not on the backs of well-to-do Canadians but on the backs of the poorest of Canadians through measures such as Bill C-80. As we know, the Budget increased and expanded federal sales taxes, according to the press report with respect to the study of the National Anti-Poverty Organization, "by raising the rate on such items as construction materials, alcohol, tobacco and extending coverage to such other items as candy, pet food, many health and personal care products and insulation materials". Is that not the height of insensitivity and lack of concern for the needs of lower income Canadians? Even the candy bought by children on the way home from school is to be hit by this additional sales tax.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Even the food for the pets of our children, the pets which provide comfort and companionship for older Canadians, for senior citizens, will be hit by this unfair and regressive Tory sales tax. Even the food for the seeing eye dogs, the companions and helpers of sightless Canadians, will be hit by this unfair and regressive Tory sales tax.

In addition to that move, by extending the base of the federal sales tax to all sorts of non-prescription medication, the Tories are imposing an unfair, heartless and cruel tax on the sick and on sickness. They originally intended to impose this tax on hypodermic needles which are absolutely essential for people with diabetes to take insulin, a product required to keep them alive. After a determined outcry the Tories backed down on imposing this sales tax on hypodermic needles used by diabetics for ingesting insulin. However, they maintained the tax on a whole range of other products which are equally or almost as important to maintaining the health of Canadians, particularly older Canadians. For millions of older Canadians a product such as aspirin is absolutely essential to contain the pain and swelling of arthritis. There is no substitute for it—certainly no substitute within the easy reach of millions of older, lower income Canadians and millions of Canadians generally. However, even aspirin used to reduce the pain and swelling of arthritis is subject to this unfair and regressive Tory tax on illness.

This heartless Conservative Government is creating problems for Canadians generally. They are being given headaches by these problems. I refer not just to the effects of having rancid tuna in the market-place, or the effects of being asked to pay the bill for the incompetence, poor management and poor judgment of Government in the mishandling of the bank fiasco, but to the general burden of this unfair and unduly burdensome federal Budget of which Bill C-80 is one part. These measures must be giving millions of Canadians millions of very severe headaches. One would think that this cruel, heartless and incompetent Government might at the very least exempt aspirin from the imposition of sales tax because the Conservatives should certainly be willing to provide some relief to Canadians from the headaches they are giving them as a result of their incompetent and heartless management. Instead, these headaches have to continue until the next election when Canadians will finally receive relief by voting out this incompetent, heartless and cruel Government.

In the meantime, we have to speak out strongly in the House and across the country against measures such as Bill C-80.

An Hon. Member: To pay your bills.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Tories in the back row keep saying: "To pay your bills." I say let us have the well-to-do and the multinational corporations pay those bills. Do not put that burden on millions of lower income Canadians. If that burden were fairly distributed we would not have had a report such as the one received from the National Anti-Poverty Organization which states:

> The sales- and excise-tax increases announced in the May budget "have a much greater impact on the bank teller than they do on the bank president,"—

That is what was said in a brief prepared for submission to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). If the Minister of Finances has not been able to find time to meet with the farmers, then I hope that he can at least find time to read the brief prepared by this organization and react to it by withdrawing Bill C-80. If the Government is not willing to withdraw the Bill, then certainly we have to insist that there be a vote on it and that this Bill be defeated. If this Bill is not defeated then it will be another black mark added to the many already in the debit column when it comes to the very poor record of this Conservative Government. I say on behalf of middle and lower income Canadians: Let us vote to defeat this Bill. If it cannot be defeated, then let us remember that this heartless, cruel and incompetent Government has offered it and that it will pay the bill when we come to vote in the next election.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I anticipate that we will be having a vote on this Bill shortly. In fact, I thought all that had to be said with respect to it had already been said. Then it struck me, as my friend and colleague the Opposition House Leader rose, that there were two or three things that really ought to be tied together to clarify once and for all what is wrong with the way the Government approaches tax policy.

This is a Government which preaches fiscal restraint. This is a Government which told us it was going to manage the financial affairs of the country in a way previously unhead of. In fact, it may well have done that now that I think about it, but it was probably not exactly what it had in mind. This is a Government which told us that belt-tightening was the order of the day. This is the Government which said to the elderly that it would be desirable if they carried a share of the cost of tightening the nation's belt and subsequently withdrew what it was attempting to do, but only after great pressure. This is the Government which said to families: "You can no longer expect to have your family allowance indexed." This is the Government which told us that it was necessary for those in the upper income levels who previously had not paid any tax to pay their share and then it introduced a surtax on the tax payable. If anyone were to stop to look at it they would realize that a surtax on tax payable if one does not pay any tax means absolutely nothing. If one is in that upper income level which pays no taxes as a result of the loopholes left by the previous Liberal administration, and which have been left in place by this Government, then a surtax on the tax not paid will not result in any great hardship, certainly not to the person who does not pay the tax in the first place.

This is the same Government which said: "We could not find the money necessary to top up the unemployment insurance payments," of many who were finding their UI payments running out and who could not find employment and were therefore left in abeyance, left hung out to dry.

On the other side of the ledger, this is the Government which found something in the order of $3 billion to bail out certain banks in the country. It is the Government which found $1 billion to bail out Dome, which company should have been paying its share but was not required to pay it. Notwithstanding the financial problems facing the nation, this is the Government which was able to say to Olympia & York: "We do not need your nearly $1 billion in taxes, it is okay, you can keep it." This is the Government which speaks out of both sides of its mouth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I hear applause from the Government benches. This is the Government which, as a result of this piece of legislation, is inflicting upon those who can least afford it an even larger burden of taxation. On the one hand, the rich pay less and, on the other hand, the poor pay more. Those who can barely eke out a living are asked to contribute significantly more to the cost of running the Government and those who already have an adequate income are not asked to pay one penny more. Those who are not now paying will still not be paying. Those corporations which mismanaged their affairs over the course of the last 14 months are still benefiting from the largess of their Tory friends now in office. That is why this Bill is wrong. That is why these taxing provisions are wrong. This Government starts at the wrong end of the spectrum. Instead of beginning by creating some sense of fairness within the tax structure and making sure that those who have more than they need pay their fair share, the Government follows the lead of the previous Liberal administration and imposes on those who have the least an additional burden.

● (1650)

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that that is why we in the New Democratic Party refuse to support this kind of legislation. I am not surprised that the Liberal Party has decided to oppose this Bill. I suspected all along that those who managed to survive the 1984 election were in fact more intelligent than the others. They probably opposed these measures when the then Government of the day, of which they were Members, introduced them. Those Hon. Members probably felt at the time when these tax give-away schemes and inadequate taxing provisions were being put in place that the Government was wrong but they could hardly raise their voices, being a part of that Government. I am therefore pleased that now that they are on this side of the House their consciences allow them to speak out and they can stand up for what they really believe and are now able to say that those things they supported over the years were wrong, that when they stood in their place and nodded assent to those inappropriate measures, they were wrong. I am glad they are joining with us now in opposing this terrible tax measure which is brought in by this inadequate Conservative Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I know that like all of us in this House, you are waiting for the other Chamber to call us in for the Royal Assent. In fact, there are so few Bills passed that we will be very happy to hear the Senate's call. Meanwhile, I see it as my duty to join my colleagues at this late hour in condemning this practice which we find again in Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof. I always like to demonstrate, for the information of the people watching us, the scope of a Bill that affects Canadians in their daily lives.

As my colleague from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) said earlier in his own speech, we must oppose this Bill, because we all know that if there is one thing that is expensive in this country, it is gas, and it is getting more expensive every day. We all know that this Bill authorizes a two-scent per litre increase in the price of gas, effective last September. The most insidious aspect of this Bill is that like the former Quebec Minister of Finance, Mr. Parizeau, who introduced Bills that, once passed, dealt with both present and future situations. We are voting today in the knowledge that on January 1, 1987, another additional cent will be added, in addition to the provincial taxes that will be added as well.

Which means that a lot of taxes are being levied on one of Canada's natural resources, and this is not going to benefit the producing provinces—

An Hon. Member: Or the consumers.

Mr. Prud'homme: Governments are making money out of the abundant primary resources of our country which are not getting any benefit out of it, because these are all federal and provincial taxes, and in the case of my own province which will soon be judging a Government that introduced what is referred to as the "taxe ascenseur", the escalating tax, which means that as soon as we increase here . . . and I would ask my hon. colleague from Ottawa-Vanier to stop me if I am mistaken, but in any case, this new federal tax will help provincial taxes, because in Quebec with its so-called escalating tax, as soon as another level of Government introduces a tax in a way as—

Mr. Gauthier: —insidious—

Mr. Prud'homme: —insidious, as my colleague said, in such an undercover way, without any legislation, they are just adding to what another level of Government is already levying on the people . . . they are just adding another tax.

As for the increase in taxes on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products, as far as tobacco products are concerned, I can announce officially, and I want to do this, because I know that if I do, I won't have as much trouble sticking to it, but I was smoking three packages of cigarettes a day, until my Whip told me about a month ago this was ridiculous, and I must say, Mr. Speaker, that since that time I can safely state, and I hope this will be an example for our young people, that, across my heart, I have not touched a cigarette for a month, and that is why a debate like this one this afternoon gets on my nerve.

Mr. Gauthier: You feel better, any way.

Mr. Prud'homme: And I feel better for it. I owe it to my whip who watches me constantly. However, it still remains that those who want to smoke can do so, as Canada is not a dictatorship yet, but at what price? It will cost even more now. As for those who want to drink . . . I really like what the Minister of Justice said recently in his advertisements: If you want to drink, do not drive. In fact, I remember that the one who said this for the first time was the then Minister of Justice, who later became Prime Minister of Canada, and who is now our distinguished Leader of the Opposition, the Right Hon. John Turner. When he was Minister of Justice, he said: If you drink, don't drive, and if you drive, don't drink. He also said: I have made my own choice and I do not drive. I really liked his honesty, and no, I am not speaking about myself.

Mr. Speaker, the new taxes that we are going to vote are once more taxes which people will not even remember even though they will be hit hard by them and will be placed in serious difficulties because of the Budget and these economic initiatives.

The Government wants to promote economic recovery, and I am trying to defend the point of view of the party in power by saying that the Government had promised jobs, jobs, jobs, but the situation is really bad in Quebec and Montreal East.

I hope that my friend, the soon to be Right Hon. Minister of Public Works, will be able to find someone to defend the interests of Montreal because, while he himself is now doing an honest job and acting very responsibly, there is a serious lack of concern on Montreal Island, and I can tell him that the people of Montreal, especially in the east, are beginning to feel the effects of the indifference of some of his colleagues who do not seem to be concerned about the problem and who prefer to boast, like the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), who says each time that the problems in Montreal are mentioned: "Oh, but you do not know how many jobs have been created." This is not what the people of Montreal East want to know.

All these new provisions that the Government wants to have adopted in this very substantial bill can be considered indirect taxes because, in certain cases, people will even forget their very existence.

There are people who want economic recovery . . . I see that my allotted time is coming to a close and I thank you, Mr. Speaker for informing me that I only have thirty seconds left, but I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that our party will be voting against this bill, that we are not about to agree to it today, tomorrow or later this week and that we shall fight against it as long as there is one of us left to do so.

HOUSING

ADVISABILITY OF CREATING MINIMUM STANDARD FOR HOUSING

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the feasibility of creating, in consultation with the provinces, municipalities and Indian organizations, a five year plan which will ensure that every Canadian can have decent, affordable housing under a national minimum standard of social housing.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this time to tell my understanding and my hopes about the housing that the people of Canada need and to hear the comments of others on the same subject. The resolution as correctly transmitted on the Order Paper unfortunately contains three minor typographical errors for which I only am responsible. I wish I had said "native housing" rather than "Indian", "according to a national minimum standard" rather than "under", and that I had deleted as redundant, the last three words "of social housing". In other words, I wish, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask unanimous consent if this might be so varied by the House. I wish it read: "That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the feasibility of creating, in consultation with the provinces, municipalities and native organizations, a five-year plan which will ensure that every Canadian can have decent, affordable housing according to a national minimum standard".

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that the House is prepared to give unanimous consent to the Hon. Member for those changes. Is there consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: There is consent.

Mr. Heap: I thank Hon. Members of the House for their consideration. Mr. Speaker, Canada is a rich land and Canadians are productive people. Yet, one-sixth of the people of Canada, according to a recent report, are living in poverty as it is understood in our country. One of the chief causes of this poverty is the lack of decent, affordable housing. The Government of Canada can lead the way to remedying that lack and, therefore, I shall propose a plan to ensure that every Canadian can have decent, affordable housing. After I have outlined my plan I shall explain my reason for it which arises from the failure of the privately run real estate and housing industry to meet this goal. Finally, I shall show why I believe my plan is financially workable.

The first principle of the plan is that housing for Canadians shall be decent and affordable. By "decent" I mean in accordance with the standards of CMHC for health and safety standards. That means it would include weather-tight shelter, no crowding, proper bathroom and kitchen facilities and modern heating and lighting. By "affordable" I mean it would cost the residents no more than one-quarter of their income for rent and utilities.

The second principle is that both publicly owned and privately owned rental housing shall be subject to rent control. Since a growing number of Canadians live in cities—about three-quarters of Canadians in fact live in cities—and the majority of those in multiple dwellings owned by absentee landlords, mainly the large corporations, tenants need a statutory basis for organizing in order to bargain on more equal terms with their landlords to attain reasonable accommodation and service for reasonable rent. Therefore, the federal Government, in the course of negotiating cost-sharing programs with the provincial and other jurisdictions, must ensure that the best use of federal moneys is made by negotiating for rent control and rent registry. Rent levels must be registered with Governments and the information available to tenants and prospective tenants. There must be no exceptions, either because of public ownership or because of rent level.

The third principle is that Canada must create a national home-building program. The federal Government must negotiate with the other jurisdictions, according to needs in each, to devise a program aimed at creating, in five years, the half a million units needed by the families and singles presently without decent, affordable housing. In order to control costs and ensure responsible maintenance this housing should be either co-operatively produced and owned or public produced and owned with as much management responsibility as possible assumed by the tenant associations.

The fourth principle is that existing substandard housing should, where practical, be rehabilitated with Government assistance. Tens of thousands of rental apartments in Canada's major cities need rehabilitation because federal tax benefits have encouraged builders to throw buildings together fast but not to do maintenance. Roofs and garages are leaking and plumbing, heating and elevator systems are breaking down. To allow the absentee owners 20 per cent or 25 per cent permanent rent hikes, as is proposed, in order to increase the owner's equity by rehabilitation, would, therefore, be compelling the tenants to pay once through rents and once again through taxes which would be a massive injustice. It would also depress the tenants' buying power for food, clothing and other necessities that Canadians earn a living by producing. Therefore, Governments must devise ways to assist tenants to buy their buildings for co-operative or non-profit ownership and that way to ensure a motivation for responsible maintenance and taking the buildings out of the inflationary market, somewhat in the manner of utilities like schools, roads, and public hospitals.

The fifth principle is that private homeowners must also receive aid to remedy the damage done to them by the same land, interest and tax squeeze that has made tenants poorer. Public loan funds must be established, or private loan funds within Government legislation, that will provide mortgages to homeowners at no more than 2 per cent above the rate of inflation. These would be solely for a family or person buying, building or repairing a principal residence, not for use in revenue properties.

The sixth principle is that there should be annual targets and reports. The federal Government should, after negotiations, publish, jointly with the other jurisdictions, the outline of the five-year plan with annual targets. Parliament, other jurisdictions and the public—

HOUSING

ADVISABILITY OF CREATING MINIMUM STANDARD FOR HOUSING

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Heap:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the feasibility of creating, in consultation with the provinces, municipalities and Indian organizations, a five year plan which will ensure that every Canadian can have decent, affordable housing under a national minimum standard of social housing.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I believe I had been speaking for approximately eight minutes and I was saying that the sixth principle of the program I am proposing is that there should be annual targets and reports. The federal Government shall, after negotiations, publish jointly with the other jurisdictions the outline of the five year plan with annual targets. Parliament and other jurisdictions and the public will be encouraged to debate this plan for possible amendment and adoption. Thereafter they shall jointly publish an annual report showing progress toward the targets, the numbers of men and women employed in construction, maintenance and management, relations with labour unions, and the growth of co-operatives and non-profit corporations.

• (1720)

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, the substandard housing produced in such large numbers by the present housing and real estate industry is itself, of course, not the main cause of poverty. The main cause is low income. However, substandard housing also contributes heavily to poverty.

I would like to give some examples of how bad housing deepens poverty, increases poverty and makes poverty harder to overcome. In the Northwest Territories, for example, according to a survey made a year ago as many as 11 people in some settlements were living in two bedroom bungalows with leaking roofs and faulty wiring, often sleeping in shifts to compensate for the fact that there were too few beds. There is an increase in family violence, assaults between spouses, in breakdowns of families and in high school drop-outs. There is a zero vacancy rate for rental units in Yellowknife. Waiting lists there contain up to 100 names for a single apartment when there is a vacancy. In other words, life is being damaged by bad housing.

In Toronto, a recent Metro Social Planning Council report said that the high cost of rental housing is leading to hunger, sickness and emotional trauma for many of Metro's most vulnerable and disadvantaged households. This is in Toronto where the vacancy rate in the city is .03, or three apartments or houses out of 1,000 for rent. The result is malnourishment of the children and neglect in families. There are more than 20,000 men, women and children waiting for subsidized housing in Metro. There are more than 4,900 families and 441 seniors on the waiting list for the Metro Toronto housing authority units. Children have been placed, of necessity, into foster homes only because their parents' homes were too crowded to help them. Yet this year, City Non-profit Housing and Metro Toronto Housing Company Limited could only build 300 new units each. We are not nearly keeping up with the need.

In Halifax, it is stated that the vacancy rate for rental housing in the Metro area has consistently been below 1 per cent since 1981. The average cost of a three-bedroom apartment is between $550 and $750, yet the poverty line of $20,000 would mean such a family should probably have only about $410 to pay for rent. Four hundred and ten dollars could not possibly get a three-bedroom apartment, which a family of four very likely needs, depending on the age of the children. They have asked for assistance to build 1,000 social housing units this year because only 252 were constructed in the last five years. Again, the result has increased homelessness—families of four and five persons are living in one room—increased family breakdowns, and increased child abuse. Physical and mental health is being affected. There are unnecessary hospital admissions and food money is spent on shelter. There is frustration of human service workers, and this does not come only from the poverty itself and the lack of income of those people, it comes from the housing and the condition of that housing. The point is we have to arrive at the understanding that housing, like education and health service, is a necessity for Canadians to provide so that Canadian children can grow up as a healthy part of this country.

One more point in regard to the effect of housing itself on poverty, Mr. Speaker. Over one-sixth of Canadians were below the poverty line in 1984, that is, half of the single elderly and half of the singles under 25 years of age, but the gap between rich and poor also widened during the last four years. What this means is that every year there are more people who are in poverty, and those are nearly always the same people who are damaged by the substandard housing.

Let me now outline how the real estate and housing industry, helped by the federal Government, so misdirected and squandered the wealth and revenues of Canada over the last generation that many hundreds of thousands of house and apartments fall below the national standards of health and welfare.

First, the land. Land prices for housing have risen crazily since World War II in most cities, where three-quarters of Canada's people live. Prices often jump by 10 times over 10 years, five times faster than wages. The land sharks defend this price gouging as the natural, inexorable product of the impersonal market. But we know from experience that that argument is unparallelled, unmitigated, and self-serving balderdash. It is politicians in Government who help their friends in business by spending huge sums of taxpayers' money on roads, railroads, port and airport installations in a way so as to enable land owned by their friends to fetch a higher price. Tenants and homeowners must pay twice, once in their taxes and again in rent or mortgages because the Government will do nothing to set a ceiling on prices.

Look at Toronto's Dome Stadium, Mr. Speaker. The CNR, a Crown corporation, is giving $50 million worth of public land to private corporations so that they can skim a profit. They plan to build luxury office buildings around it, maybe luxury condominiums and a few luxury rental apartments, although the rental vacancies in Toronto are .03 per cent. Offices, which Toronto needs like the bubonic plague, are several hundred times higher in their vacancy rate. People are not renting offices but that is what the builders build. Many condominiums are going unsold. Why is the land not donated for low rental housing instead?

Second, interest rates. Since the federal Government 18 years ago lifted the ceiling off housing mortgages, the banks have increased the 2 per cent spread between what they pay for the money they invest and what they get for it. They have increased it to as much as 6 per cent, 8 per cent or 9 per cent, triple or more the take. No wonder no more than one Canadian in five can now really afford to start buying a house.

The federal Government, which enjoys restraining workers and small business, ought to begin by restraining the banks. Even if the Government cannot control inflation rates, it can and must stop the banks from pushing inflation higher through extortionist interest charges on mortgages.

For example, in August 1981, the Consumer Price Index was high enough—12.8 per cent—but the prime loan rate—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Member. I would just like to call his attention to the fact that he has approximately one minute left. Perhaps he would like to wind up.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had 12 minutes from the time we came back because I had eight minutes before.

The prime loan rate at chartered banks was 22.75 per cent, nearly 10 points higher than the inflation rate. The conduct of the banks helped bring down the last Government and is now helping to bring down this Government.

I am sorry on account of the interruption I will not be able to make all my points. I want to point out that the third reason for the unreasonably high cost of housing is that the taxes which the federal Government collected have been given disproportionately to developers over the last eight years, $1.5 billion on one program alone, namely, the Multiple Unit Residential Building programs. The money would have been better spent if it had been given to the co-operative and the non-profit corporations so that residents of those apartments, who have an interest in the maintenance and in creating a community, would be able to preserve the benefit of that investment. It has not happened in the way the fly-by-night developers have done it. I am asking that half a million houses be built by the Government over the next five years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry to call the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) to order, but the 20-minute period is now over.

Mr. Joe Price (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, by way of introduction, I should like to ask the Hon. Member where he stood when the "Clark" Government of 1979 introduced the mortgage interest deductibility feature and was partially defeated on it. I assure him that such a program was not designed for the rich. It was designed to make housing available to those people who were having difficulty finding suitable housing.

However, the Government welcomes the motion of the Hon. Member, for it raises some very important matters upon which we have acted during the past year. Of course I am referring to the housing review and consultation process. This process involved and continues to involve the active participation of the provinces, representatives of municipal interests, natives and many other important players in the housing sector. Moreover, one of the key purposes of the process is to develop better ways of ensuring that Canadian in need have access to affordable, adequate and suitable shelter. Today, and in recent weeks and months in the House, the Hon. Member has raised some important questions about the consultations and about the directions of federal housing policies. On behalf of the Government, and in particular the Minister responsible for CMHC, I will take this opportunity to address some of those questions and to speak generally about the housing consultations and policy directions which are emerging.

A good place to begin is with the question as to why the housing consultation process was undertaken. The answer in large part was indicated in the economic statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in November of last year. At that time the Government committed itself to renewing the strength of our economy. To do this, we pledged to put our own fiscal house in order and to get control of the deficit. We also set out to improve co-operation between the two main levels of Government and to get Canadians in general working again in pursuit of national goals. These objectives bear directly on housing.

When the new Government assumed office a year ago, federal housing expenditures were on the rise. There was a pressing need to get those expenditures under better control and to ensure that limited funds were expended efficiently and effectively. There was also a clear need to improve federal-provincial co-operation in housing. Housing is one of those areas in which both levels of Government have roles and some very important responsibilities. At times we had programs working at cross purposes, as well as duplication in programs and administrative overhead. This created confusion in the minds of the people the programs were supposed to help. It also increased the costs to both Governments and of course to Canadian taxpayers.

The housing actions of Governments also created problems for the housing industry. There was particular concern about the "on again-off again" programs initiated at both levels of Government. What the industry needed was reasonable stability and certainty in its operating environment. It wanted the federal and provincial Governments to commit themselves to a common approach, a common game plan. It wanted the federal and provincial Governments to consult, to co-operate and to co-ordinate their housing activities. All it was asking for was a stable housing environment within which to operate. It was certainly not an unreasonable request.

There is one further point about federal-provincial relations in housing which needs mentioning here. Over the last decade the federal Government has assumed on a national basis an increasingly larger share of social housing expenditures. In some provinces the federal Government has been bearing nearly all the costs of new activities.

Provinces must recognize their responsibility to act in partnership with the federal Government. This means that they must contribute their fair share to the costs of housing programs. The reasons I have just discussed for undertaking the housing review and consultations suggest the objectives toward which federal housing policies should strive.

In many speeches to housing groups in the last eight months to ten months, the Minister has outlined four objectives of the Government. One is to build a national consensus on appropriate objectives of federal housing policies and programs. Second is to design effective programs to meet those objectives. The third is to improve the relationship between the federal and provincial Governments in housing and remove needless duplication in the administration of programs. The fourth is to achieve a fairer balance on a national basis between federal and provincial housing expenditures. Considerable progress has been made toward achieving these objectives, thanks largely to the co-operative participation of the many housing interest groups as well as the provinces in the review and consultation process.

I will now outline some of the conclusions and directions which are emerging from this process. A consensus has been building around a number of objectives for federal housing policy. What Canadians have been telling us is that the paramount purpose of social housing programs should be to assist households that cannot afford decent shelter; that federal housing policy should aim to strengthen security for home owners and prospective home owners through steps to foster private market development of longer term, fixed interest rate mortgages; that the Government should ensure continued access to mortgage funds in all parts of the country; and that moderate-income households unable to afford home ownership should have opportunities for security of tenure.

The next question concerns programs to meet those objectives. In the case of social housing, it is generally accepted that there is a need for a mix of programs involving the construction or acquisition of housing, the provision of assistance to enable households to pay market rents, and the rehabilitation of substandard low-cost housing to bring it up to minimum standards. If the most cost effective solution is to be put in place, flexibility to apply these approaches in different proportions across the country is required.

In the consultations it was generally felt that the federal Government could take steps to help Canadians achieve the security they desire through home ownership. This assistance can be achieved by the federal Government working with the private sector to create an environment for the development of long-term, fixed rate mortgages. There is universal support among housing interest groups and the provinces for mortgage-backed securities, which will contribute to the develop of longer term, fixed rate mortgages. The Government has indicated that it intends to proceed with a mortgage-backed securities program.

There was also strong support for the need to ensure access to mortgage funds on an equal basis across the country. Not surprisingly, there was considerable suppot for the continuation of public mortgage insurance.

Another objective around which a consensus has been building is what the Minister has called opportunities for security of tenure for moderate-income households unable to afford home ownership. The Government recognizes that the co-operative housing movement has made a significant contribution to housing in Canada, and that many moderate-income households look to co-operative housing as a way of achieving their housing aspirations. The Co-operative Housing Foundation has put forward an innovative proposal for financing co-operative housing, and the Government is continuing to consult very closely with it on the proposal which involves the use of index-linked mortgages.

I have talked briefly on the merging consensus on appropriate objectives of federal housing policy and on programs to meet those objectives. I want to move on now and talk about the federal-provincial discussions in housing. Last December federal and provincial housing Ministers met in Ottawa and agreed to work together in a new spirit of co-operation and to examine housing programs to ensure that they are effectively targeted to those in greatest need, and efficiently delivered. I might note here that, under the previous Government, the last multilateral meeting of federal-provincial housing Ministers was held in June, 1981, some four years ago; whereas this Government has participated in two such multilaterals in the space of eight months.

The second meeting of federal-provincial housing Ministers was held in Calgary in early July of this year. The Ministers reached an agreement on a number of matters including acceptance of a report on market housing, a declaration of unanimous support for mortgage-backed securities and agreement to a set of principles to govern future federal-provincial territorial activity in social housing. These developments have led some to worry that the federal Government might be removing itself from social housing and simply turning it over to the provinces. I can assure those that might think that is happening that the federal Government has no intention of reducing its commitment to social housing.

The discussions that have been ongoing between federal-provincial housing Ministers and officials have focused on ways of co-ordinating federal and provincial initiatives, of overcoming duplication between Governments and rebalancing, on a national basis, the relative expenditures of both levels of Government.

The set of principles on social housing agreed to at the July conference did include the principle the provinces may deliver social housing under conditions acceptable to both levels of Government. From the federal point of view, those conditions include assurances that federal housing objectives are met and that mechanisms are in place to ensure federal accountability.

There should be no doubt about federal objectives nor about the Government's commitment to ensuring that its objectioves are met. Regardless of what happens in program delivery, there will remain the need for the federal and provincial Governments to continue to work together and plan social housing strategy.

In addition to concerns about future federal-provincial roles in social housing, there have been charges from some who should know better that the review and consulation process has not been open and fair, that groups interested in housing have been excluded from the process. There is absolutely no truth to this. From the start, the Government was committed to an open process and welcomed, indeed encouraged, the participation of all interested parties. I think a look at the process that has been followed clearly demonstrates this fact.

In late January the Minister released a consultation paper on housing. It was intended to stimulate and focus discussions during the consultations. About 8,000 copies of that paper have been distributed to date. The response to it has been substantial. In fact, it has been overwhelming. The Minister has received over 300 briefs and letters from a wide range of interested parties including social policy and service organizations, local tenant associations and co-operative housing groups, native associations, business groups, representatives of municipal interests and many individual interested Canadians. Also included among the respondents were all of the major housing interest groups.

Following receipt of the briefs the Minister and myself began a series of personal meetings, most of which took place in March and April of this year. The purpose of these meetings was to clarify issues in the briefs and to discuss housing generally with the groups. These meetings have involved the participation of some 21 different groups. The participants included industry association, social housing groups, financial organizations and groups representing women, the poor, the elderly, the disabled and natives.

In all cases, though, regardless of whether meetings with interested parties took place, responses to briefs and to the many letters were provided. Over the summer the responses were closely analysed and it was then that the Minister turned to intensive consideration of the housing direction that the Government might pursue.

Furthermore, subsequent follow-up meetings have been held by the Minister's staff and senior CMHC officials with major interest groups. The purpose of these meetings has been to inform the groups about federal-provincial discussions, to respond further to proposals contained in their briefs, and to outline and discuss possible directions that we might take.

I want to tell the Hon. Member, because I know he has a special interest in native housing, that native groups are among those with whom the Government is closely consulting. The Minister has received a number of briefs and letters from native organizations across the country. He has met twice now with the Native Council of Canada and has extended an open invitation to the Assembly of First Nations. In addition, members of the Minister's staff and senior CMHC officials have met with the Metis groups and the Inuit groups of Canada, as well as with the NCC and the AFN. The views and concerns of native groups are being taken into full account in the housing review.

The openness and co-operation that has been displayed in the consultations will not be lost. The Government intends to continue to rely on the co-operation of all those involved in the housing sector as we proceed to develop and put in place policies and programs that effectively and efficiently meet the housing needs of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, the housing policies and programs that this Government will develop and implement will be widely accepted because they will have evolved out of the input of all interested Canadians. Those policies and programs will be the products of consultations promoted by a Government that listens and then acts.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take the floor on such an important issue as housing, and I want to commend the New Democratic Party Member for introducing this motion.

Mr. Speaker, before dealing with the motion I would like to comment on the remarks of the Progressive Conservative Member who just spoke about consultation. Perhaps they are trying to make people believe that the Government is concerned about social housing and housing generally, but we have to remember that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) tabled a document last November, and that the first step taken by this Government was in the sector of social housing where they slashed $9.6 million off the envelope for social housing, cooperatives, low rental units and nonprofit organizations.

There is another sector where the Progressive Conservative Government did not hesitate to wield the axe—$29.4 million cutbacks in the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, RRAP for short.

Here is what the Progressive Conservative Government did with respect to two programs which had been very popular for a number of years because they were designed to improve housing in Canada: cutbacks of $29 million in RRAP, Mr. Speaker, and the people of Quebec had to bear the unfairness of those measures taken by the Government. Unfortunately all Quebec Conservative Members did not say a word about this.

Mr. Speaker, cutbacks amounted to $17 million in Quebec, as compared with only $2 million in Ontario.

• (1750)

As we recall, Mr. Speaker, this decision was made before the elections in Ontario and we know it was a political manoeuvre to try and save Mr. Miller's neck, but the people saw through this scheme and threw out Mr. Miller and the Ontario Conservative Party.

Mr. Speaker, in this field the previous Government always saw to it that funds were available to improve the quality of housing and create jobs. The funds available under RRAP were quite useful and even necessary in Quebec and the Maritimes, while Ontario and the western provinces were spending funds allocated under rental unit construction programs. That was the request. In view of the fact that Ontario and Western Provinces needed money for the construction of rental housing, while Quebec and the Maritimes needed less, the previous Government made sure that in terms of fairness and equity in the area of housing funds, Quebec and the Maritimes received extra money under the residential rehabilitation program.

Unfortunately, this Conservative Government last year, as I said, slashed $17 million from the residential rehabilitation programs and cuts were made in all the constituencies represented by Conservative Members. The only area where this could be saved is the City of Montreal, on Montreal Island, because there was quite a bunch of Liberal Members who knew about the issue and we had a Mayor who looked after it.

Mr. Speaker, in the area of rental housing construction, still before the election, the Province of Ontario received $22 million, the Province of Quebec, nothing; Manitoba, $4.9 million, the Province of Quebec, nothing. The Province of Saskatchewan, $1.9 million, the Province of Quebec, nothing for the construction of rental housing, in addition to having suffered a $17 million cut under the RRAP program.

I have clippings here, Mr. Speaker, which show that these are not just partisan comments from an Opposition Member trying to bicker at Government Members.

Mr. Speaker, the Mayors are opposing the decision, including the Mayor of East Angus. I have another here, the Saint-Colomban Home and other areas where the Mayors, the Regional Community of Bécancour oppose the decision made by the Conservative Government and the lack of action by the local MP to defend the interests of his constituency with regard to those cuts. The Regional Municipality of Arthabaska, Mr. Speaker, and this is in my press clipping, on the regional level. In the Bellechasse area, cuts in the RRAP program, Mr. Speaker; nearly 50 per cent of the former budget is slashed out.

Mr. Speaker, there are places, with the distribution that had been made for all municipalities, where there was a budget to restore one unit per municipality. That is stupid, but it is a fact.

Mr. Speaker, the Municipality of Rouyn-Noranda, and there are Conservative Members here, sitting before me. Mr. Speaker, I would be furious if my Party had done this to me. In Montreal, we looked after that, we provided protection. And there also, they allotted $81,000 instead of $140,000! The city of Sherbrooke, and I presume you know that area, and I have here a clipping from La Tribune of April 11, 1985: the City of Sherbrooke was frustrated at the cuts in the RRAP program, and, moreover, certainly the City of Sherbrooke was frustrated because it was run from Longueuil, Mr. Speaker.

As far as Windsor, Arthabasca and many other municipalities are concerned, I can tell you that all the cuts in the RRAP have affected ridings held by Conservative MPs from Quebec. I am aware that they were not very clever at the time and they could not even find the washrooms on their own, but I dare hope that they will wake up in the coming year and make sure Quebec gets its fair share, just as Liberal Members used to.

Mr. Speaker, these cuts have resulted in 4,600 fewer housing units, a loss of some $17 million which Quebec was supposed to get but did not, and a loss of 1,330 jobs in the construction industry. Now you know!

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Member who took part in the debate—the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister I think it was, but I am not sure—referred to the Government's famous consultations and Blue Paper. The Minister responsible for housing is a Minister in name only, for we know that it was the Deputy Prime Minister who was in charge of the study, and I demonstrated to you this afternoon that it was the Deputy Prime Minister who insisted that the social reasons behind the tax exemption on drugs no longer existed. What can you expect in the area of social housing from a Minister who is going to levy a 10 per cent tax?

After spending a great many years in the opposition claiming they knew all the answers. Conservative Members, many of them freshly baked greenhorns now sit on the Government side and do anything but ask questions. In Montreal, the Front d'action populaire en aménagement urbain has held a press conference. This organization includes technical resources and cooperative groups who are asking that the Government establish a Parliamentary committee to consider a reform or an improvement of our housing programs.

Mr. Speaker, the consultation now going on is only a sham. The people in Quebec have not even been able to meet the Minister. They had to be content with the fellow who carries his suitcase, the Parliamentary Secretary. In addition, this meeting could not even be held in French in Quebec. Yet, we all know that Quebec has always been to the forefront as far as housing, cooperative, rehabilitation and repair programs are concerned, that it has innovated in this field under governments of all parties, whether under the Liberals of Robert Bourassa, when I was Member of the National Assembly with my colleague, or under other administrations. Quebecers have always been innovators.

Yet, there is no Quebecer in the consultation group, no Quebecer to take part in the decision-making process. Quebec was ripped off by the Prime Minister when the RRAP and the social housing program were axed.

Mr. Speaker, if we really want to have an effective and healthy policy for housing, we have to stop using band-aid solutions. First, it is essential to hold a national conference and include all those involved in this field. For the moment, the Conservative Party is content to meet its friends who own multiple unit buildings. Of course, and I do not blame them, they want to make some money, but they forget that they have tenants. We should do what was done in the case of pension reform by Miss Bégin and Mr. Allen MacEachen, the former Minister of Finance, who organized a national conference to discuss the issue of pension reform with all the interested parties. As long as there are secret consultations, apparently by the Minister responsible for housing, but in fact by a task force led by the Deputy Prime Minister, the Government should say so and stop lying to people. The national conference on housing should include architects. They have a lot of impact on the cost of residential construction. The conference should also include young families who could suggest mechanisms to provide ownership opportunities to young couples who want to look forward to the future. Why is it that, as the Hon. Member seems to be trying to say, and I know what he means as I was Parliamentary Secretary for housing, and the Hon. Member has read the text prepared by the officials, will it be suggested that there be a 50 per cent cutback in social and cooperative housing and that this money be used instead for housing subsidies?

Mr. Speaker, if there is no rent control in a given province, a housing subsidy would simply mean that the landlord would increase the rent and the taxpayers' money would go directly into his own pockets. On the other hand, if the housing subsidy is given only to tenants, what will happen in all the rural areas where there are small homeowners who cannot make both ends meet?

Cooperatives therefore were essential and needed to house senior citizens who had low income, had worked all their lives and received small pensions, for they were not accepted in social housing units and did not have enough money to live in residences where rents are higher and geared to more affluent people. So they got together in housing cooperatives or nonprofit corporations which made it possible for all people with average income to find accommodation in homes for the elderly where they felt secure because these were new buildings offering protection and various facilities.

The federal-provincial link should also be discussed at those meetings, at this national conference. I happen to know that the Government of Quebec wants the Canadian Government to hand over all such funds so that the province might allocate them as it sees fit. I met with most Quebec groups responsible for cooperative housing and nonprofit organizations, and they all say no. I can tell you that some of them voted yes in the referendum, but in this case they say no, we need protection and the low rental housing sector in Quebec must be administered by the province.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say it is imperative to debate the housing issue, and I dare hope that the Government will put an end to its pseudo-inquiry and set up a true national housing conference.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am very sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr.

Malépart), but the hour allotted for Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—WELLAND CANAL BLOCKAGE—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SHIPPING SEASON

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, the question I wish to address this evening is one I raised with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) in Question Period on October 21 having to do with the upgrading of the Welland Canal section of the St. Lawrence Seaway. The blow-out of Lock 7 on October 14 has served to focus attention on the need to look again at upgrading the canal facilities. We now know that the canal will be open on November 6. The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority is to be commended for the fast action taken in repairing the damage. Notwithstanding this, the matter of upgrading the canal is one which must be addressed.

The recent accident has affected all of the communities along the canal. Sailors have been laid off and industries, both local and across the country, have been affected. Detractors would have us believe that the canal has outgrown its usefulness. That is not true. According to statistics gathered by the Canadian Trade Commission, 26 per cent of Canadian goods are transported by truck; 32 per cent by rail; but fully 40 per cent of Canadian commodities are shipped by water. There is no indication that this will change. Water transportation is cheap, fast and efficient and it will continue to be that way if we maintain our waterways to international standards.

I would like to take a few moments to outline briefly some of the history of the canal. I think it is important for Hon. Members to realize what this engineering marvel has done for the country's development. When the first Welland Canal was completed in 1829 it provided the means to bring grain cheaply and quickly from the interior of the country to the St. Lawrence River and on to Europe. One forgets what an incredible achievement it was and is to have conquered the obstacle presented by Niagara Falls, making it possible to link the Canadian West along 2,200 miles of continuous inland waterways to the Atlantic Ocean.

Since 1829 the canal has been rebuilt four times. The first canal included 40 locks. Later this was reduced to 27 locks and still later to 26 locks.

At the turn of the century, a report of a Government-appointed commission which said that wheat, lumber, copper and iron from the upper lakes would pass through the canal in increasing amounts were it not for the fact that larger boats of the period could not go through the then existing canal resulted in the 20-year construction of the present waterway which was opened in 1932 and which became generally known as the fourth Welland Canal.

For this fourth canal a new route was chosen which would take ships across the Niagara Peninsula in virtually a direct north-south line of only 26 miles. The difference of 326.5 feet between the levels of Lake Ontario and Lake Erie was overcome by seven lift locks and one control lock. Three of the seven lift locks are twinned, thus allowing ship traffic to move in both directions simultaneously.

Improvements have been ongoing over the years. In anticipation of the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway in 1959 the depth was increased to 27 feet. A sophisticated control centre was installed in 1966 and it is being updated this year. The most important improvement, however, was the $200 million Welland Canal bypass which was completed in 1973. The old nine-mile stretch of the Welland Canal which bisected the city of Welland and imposed a navigational problem for the new and larger ships was abandoned and replaced with a new bypass.

This project took seven years to complete, during which period I was mayor of the city of Welland. I am, therefore, very aware of the immense amount of work which went into this realignment project not only to the canal itself but to the railway and road systems which were taken under the new channel by means of tunnels.

The completion of the bypass channel allows lakers 730 feet long to travel through the Seaway locks. What a difference this is from the 100 by 20 foot vessels which used the first Welland Canal.

I hope through this brief historical outline I have illustrated how ongoing improvements to the Welland Canal have kept it up to world engineering standards. The Seaway's corporate plan, however, indicates that the Welland Canal will not be able to handle the increased demand which will be placed on it in the future in terms of both the number of ships using the canal and the larger size of ships which will be in use in the 21st century.

The corporate plan indicates that the capacity pressures will surface in about 15 years, around the year 2000. That is not a long time away, Mr. Speaker, for improvements to be planned. The recent accident at Lock 7 is currently holding up 107 ships in the Great Lakes system. The financial losses this is causing to the Seaway, shipping companies and suppliers are running at a very high level. I therefore suggest that the Seaway authority consider a program of upgrading the lock system at an early date.

A necessary part of this process would be a cost benefit analysis of proposals which have already been made. These proposals include three conceptual plans for lock improvements. One plan is a new system of superlocks in a new location which would lower the number of locks to three, as well as widening them for larger vessels. The necessary land was purchased in the three communities at that end of the Seaway in 1975 but the project has since been placed on hold.

The second plan is the conventional twinning plan which would twin locks numbered 7, 3, 2 and 1 in the same manner as the flight locks 4, 5 and 6. Here again, the necessary land is in place.

The third proposal is the hybrid twinning plan which also calls for the existing locks to be twinned but with longer and wider locks to accomodate the larger ships of the future.

As these plans are already drawn up, and considering the importance of the canal to Canada's future economy, I would like to ask my question again, this time to the Parliamentary Secretary. In light of the recent accident and in light of the future demands which will be placed on the current facilities, will these proposals be given serious consideration with a view to implementing one of them in the near future as the Government looks at improving the Welland Canal?

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, given the importance attached to this waterway system, of course the Minister will give very serious consideration to the proposals put forward by the Hon. Member this evening and which have been reiterated by him on a number of occasions.

I would like to take the opportunity to briefly indicate to the House, first, that because of the uniqueness of the accident of the blow-out—the fact there was no history to rely on—congratulations are probably in order to the officials of the Seaway, the contractors, subcontractors and the men who actually worked on the site for the splendid and I feel very responsible and professional way they effected the repairs. Concrete will be poured into the blow-out hole commencing later today, if it has not already been done. We are indeed optimistic that the reopening date of November 6 not only will be met but will be exceeded. Hopefully we might have ships moving prior to that date. There are 107 ships in the system. We can move these at the rate of about 24 or 25 a day so it will take about a week to clear up the backlog and return the activities of the Canal to normal.

To address very briefly the contingency plans that have been put in place, the House will be aware that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) have made the offer and, indeed, grain will move assisted by CN which will locate and operate grain hopper cars east of Thunder Bay. The Government, in its wisdom, and to facilitate the movement of this product, will assist in the payment of any additional costs that are incurred. We are very pleased with the progress of the repairs. Those involved with them are to be congratulated.

With respect to the cause of the blow-out, I do not think we will know that with any certainty for some time to come. The detailed analysis will take quite a while. I thank the Hon. Member for his suggestions and reassure him that the Minister and the Government will take them seriously.

CO-OPERATIVES—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO TASK FORCE REPORT. (B) REQUEST THAT CO-ORDINATING AGENCY BE ESTABLISHED

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity of saying something more this afternoon about the importance of co-operative development in Canada. Two weeks ago today I asked the Minister responsible for liaison with co-operatives (Mr. Mayer) about a Government response to the report of the National Task Force on Co-operative Development. I was not satisfied with his answer at the time, but I feel honoured today to have him in the House to respond further in the minutes that he has to this report. I really do look forward to him saying good things about what the Government plans to do.

In the minutes that lie before me, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say something about the importance of co-operatives and to underscore the importance of a substantial federal response. Mr. Ray Siemens, the President of the Co-operative Union of Canada, wrote to all Members of Parliament early this year sending along copies of A Co-operative Development Strategy for Canada which dates from May of 1984. He sent a memorandum with that, the second paragraph of which reads:

> The new government has indicated that its primary objective "is to put in to place a policy framework that will release the creative energies of Canadians to build a better future for themselves" and challenged Canadians to participate in wide-range consultations about this framework and the future direction of our country.

He goes on to indicate that people involved with co-operatives in Canada were very happy to have that invitation and joined in the consultation. I am aware that those discussions continue.

The report itself, A Co-operative Development Strategy for Canada, makes a number of points that I think help us to appreciate how very important co-operatives could be to achieving just what the Government set out in the fall of 1984 as its own objectives. On page 5 of the report it reads:

> Pairing the democratic responsiveness and economic efficiency that characterize co-operative business, we believe that co-ops can play a key role in Canada's national development. As serious as the new problems are that face Canada, they also open many opportunities for new development. We have identified four such areas where co-ops can make a difference. Worker-owned co-operative businesses offer a direct means of meeting the often desperate need of many Canadians for jobs and a sense of control in their lives. The rapidly increasing costs of health care systems are straining government finances; co-operative health care delivery systems provide an attractive and affordable solution. Fisheries co-ops are an overlooked, yet critical part of the solution to problems facing the fishing industry. And in meeting the demand for affordable housing in this country, the co-operative model has proven to be a successful alternative and could be expanded to the benefit of many Canadians.

The report focuses on these four areas. In scanning the 32 recommendations which this task force arrived at last year for developing co-operatives in Canada, I will note those that deal specifically with matters that the federal Government could support.

Therefore, in connection with worker co-operatives, I note that Recommendation No. 12 focuses the importance of a support system which could provide the encouragement that workers need to develop co-operative policies for control of their industry. In fact, I might point to Canadian Porcelain in Hamilton as an example of such a development being undertaken or approached last spring. I do not believe it would be unfair to the Government to express regret that the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion did not ensure that that project moved ahead.

A support system established under this recommendation and, as Recommendation No. 13 says explicitly, the endorsement of the federal Government having been given to such possibility, we would see worker co-operatives as one of the means by which individual Canadian workers in their communities and work-places could have a larger role in the direction of their work-place and could actually see a return in the gains in which they participate.

Recommendations Nos. 15 and 16 deal with the matter of health care, specifically the possibility of health co-operatives. In both cases, they call for federal Government participation. It is suggested that it would be very useful to have a substantial conference to explore this, since these possibilities have in fact been demonstrated by community clinics. It would be useful to have such a conference, with the Federal Government playing its part in funding it. It would also be useful, as Recommendation No. 16 suggests, to establish a development assistance group in this area. Again, the federal Government could play a very useful part.

There is the question of housing and the importance of co-operative housing in this country. Recommendation No. 23 suggests that that be continued. I understand that the federal Government appreciates the importance of this sector. I realize that another Minister is responsible for housing and I am very pleased to hear that progress is being made.

The fourth area that this task force singled out concerns the matter of fisheries co-operatives. There are a number of recommendations that help us to appreciate more of the challenge that faces the Minister, who is here this afternoon, and the federal Government. It is important that co-operatives receive similar financial treatment as the conventional capitalistic enterprises with which we are familiar. Surely worker co-operatives should not be discriminated against simply because they are co-operatives.

There is the matter of the establishment of a central division in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and the importance of technical resource groups.

Although I may have started a minute or two late, Mr. Speaker, may I conclude by suggesting that with respect to Government support generally, it is important that the federal Government take up the recommendations, specifically Recommendations Nos. 30, 31 and 32. I look forward to hearing the Minister talk about the progress he is making in finding personnel and establishing exactly how the federal Government plans to move ahead in providing a response to this matter. He has already indicated that he fully appreciates its importance.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank the Hon. Member for the way he co-operated with my office in arranging this time so I could be here to respond this evening. Second, I want to thank him for being the first person to ask me a question in the House of Commons about this very important sector. It is a sector that accounts for approximately $15 billion in sales and it employs 70,000 people. Approximately one out of every four Canadians belongs to a co-operative organization of some form.

In the time I have available, I want to cover two areas. The Hon. Member will know that we made some specific progress in the area of employment co-operatives. The Minister responsible for CMHC is also very aware of the potential and in fact has paid more attention to co-op housing, as far as allocations are concerned, than has previously been the case with other Governments.

We are very much aware of the specific concerns with regard to finance in the Minister of State's financial paper. We are also aware of the potential in co-op to co-op international trading for expanding our ability to export outside the country. The Department of Agriculture, which has most of the support staff with which the Government presently works with co-operatives, had a trade mission to Japan last fall for that same purpose.

We are also aware of the potential in health care and in fisheries. We could go on and on. There is potential in the co-op sector in this country to expand and deliver programs effectively and as efficiently as any other sector. We certainly do not want to do anything but encourage that sector to continue.

Those are the specifics, Mr. Speaker. Now to a larger more general question. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp) has the report and he is obviously very familiar with it. He will know that Recommendation 30 talks about a small secretariat within government that could be used to support the co-op sector. That is the one with which we want to take the most care and be the most diligent about because it is the one that will provide ongoing support for the co-op sector.

I think it is very important that we put something in place with which the co-op sector feels comfortable and with which it can work. It is something that is not going to take over and expand as a bureaucracy or attempt to direct the co-op sector in the direction it would see it go. That is the area in which we want to take the most care, and I have been in very close contact with the co-op sector on it, including all the people connected with the executive of the CUC. We are close to being able to announce two names. These people will be on a contract basis to help us draft a response to the specific recommendations. When co-op people come to Ottawa and to the federal Government we want them to find a co-ordinated approach, one that can carry their concerns after they leave town.

As a first example the first ever meeting of Ministers responsible for co-ops was held in Regina two weeks ago. I think it was a very successful meeting in that the people who were there were very pleased about having the opportunity to attend. For the Hon. Member's information, we announced then that we will be meeting again in February in Ottawa, specifically to come with recommendations and thoughts about how to use the employment co-op idea to expand the number of people who are working.

I thank the Hon. Member for his question and I thank him for giving me a chance to expand a little bit on the attitude and on some of the things we are doing as far as this important part of our society is concerned, both on the economic and the social side of it.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS—INCREASED ROLE OF VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS. (B) REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DISCUSSIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, last week I directed several questions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I pointed out that an increasing number of people were finding it necessary to depend on voluntary agencies for food baskets, for meals and for clothing. I asked the Minister whether it was not time to discuss with his counterparts in the provinces what was wrong with the social security system established over the years since the end of World War II; why so many people seem to be falling through the cracks in the system and why so many people are having to depend on charity. I urged the Minister to work with the provincial Ministers to improve and expand the Government programs so that people would not have to depend on charity.

In the last 40 years, since the end of World War II, we have developed a whole host of programs which we thought would meet the needs of Canadians; for example, the unemployment insurance program, the pension programs, the medical and hospital insurance plans and the provincial social welfare programs, funded in part by the federal Government. Most Canadians believed that we established a system which would meet the needs of Canadians.

As unemployment has grown in recent years, and we have seen the number of unemployed people increase to 1.5 million or over 10 per cent, we have witnessed a growth in the voluntary effort. Last week it was brought to the attention of the people of Canada and to Members of Parliament by the National Council of Welfare that over four million Canadians now live in poverty, or 17.8 per cent of the population, and that the number of low-income children under the age of 16 years has risen steadily each year from 1980 onward, so that we now have 1.2 million children living in poverty, or one child in five is poor. I could continue with those figures. The situation is unacceptable to me and should be to all Canadians.

We have seen in every city, town and village in every province from the Atlantic to the Pacific tremendous growth in the number of voluntary church, native and community groups which have established food banks so that people can obtain the food baskets, the meals or the second-hand clothing which they need. We know that in many cities some children get their first meal of the day at noon at the school they attend, and that some can only attend school after being given used clothing obtained at one of these voluntary centres. I believe Canadians in need should not have to depend upon charity. I give a great deal of credit to them and respect the efforts of voluntary organizations, but I believe the needs of Canadians should be met by government programs, provided as a right.

I call upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to work with provincial Ministers to upgrade and expand our existing assistance programs which are partially funded by the federal Government through the Canada Assistance Plan, so that those in want will again have their needs met by government programs, to which I believe they are entitled, and that the generous efforts of the voluntary groups can be cut back as they become less necessary.

I call the attention of the Government to the recent study conducted by the National Anti-Poverty Organization in which it was pointed out that the increase in the sales and excise taxes included in the May Budget had very adverse effects upon the poorest of Canadians. It pointed out that these taxes would cost each Canadian family several hundred dollars a year, and that the poor, or those with incomes of less than $10,000 per year, would pay twice as high a percentage of their income as wealthy Canadians with incomes of $50,00 or more. NAPO has proposed that the Minister of Finance establish a refundable federal sales and excise tax credit for those in low-income brackets. I urge the Minister of Finance to give careful and sympathetic consideration to that proposal of the National Anti-Poverty Organization.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to respond to the concerns of the Hon. Member—concerns which certainly are and ought to be those of all the Members of this House—regarding the number of Canadians living in poverty, and also to point out to the Hon. Member what is being done by this Government to combat poverty, without, of course, overlooking the increasingly important role played by charitable organizations.

We want to combat poverty in two ways. First of all, we want to take the direct approach by providing increased employment opportunities. Second, we are taking steps to improve financial support for those who are most in need.

We realize that Canadians want to work. During our first year in Government, 304,000 jobs were created. We have set up a number of projects aimed at improving opportunities for employment. For instance, the Canadian Jobs Strategy announced by Miss MacDonald was set up after consultations with Canadians. Certain elements of this strategy are specifically aimed at improving the employment potential of certain Canadians whose chances of entering the labour market would otherwise be very slim.

● (1830)

In addition, the federal Government has recently reached an agreement with the provinces and the Territories to increase labour market opportunities for social assistance recipients. This agreement will make support under the Canada Assistance Plan and the Canadian Jobs Strategy more flexible while helping welfare recipients to develop skills and experience to assist themselves.

During our first year in office we have also been combatting poverty through initiatives to provide more financial assistance to those who are most in need. For example, by extending the Spouse's Allowance Program the Government has increased the income security of an estimated 85,000 widows and widowers aged 60 to 64, the majority being widows.

As a more direct response to the concerns of poor families with children, the Government, Mr. Speaker, has consulted with Canadians and produced a series of changes in child benefits, in its May Budget. These changes will provide increased benefits for families who are least well-off, including low-income families, by raising the ceiling of the child tax credit to $524 per child over the next few years.

We are also taking other steps to upgrade income and job securities, and I am thinking of the employment equity legislation.

Mr. Speaker, generally speaking, the measures taken by the Government to provide for economic renewal and recovery, job creation and reform of social programs, clearly demonstrate our concern and our commitment to fighting poverty in Canada. By improving our economy and our general economic productivity, we will be able to provide all Canadians with a more secure future in which they will have a better chance of making a decent living.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.32 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 22

CANADIAN FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE'S REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, yesterday and today the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has been visiting Members of Parliament on Parliament Hill. It has presented a brief to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to Ministers and to MPs entitled "Call for Commitment" to Canadian agriculture by the Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada.

Canadian agriculture is facing the worst economic crisis since the 1930s. Farmers are tired of the soothing, empty words of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). They want action.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture is calling for farm credit with interest rates at 10 per cent to save the family farm, and for farmer-creditor arrangements legislation as promised by the Minister of Agriculture in July. They are calling for a commitment that our marketing systems will not be bargained away in the Canada-U.S. free trade negotiations. They want expanded research in agriculture, not a $50 million cut in the budget of the Department of Agriculture. They want an emergency relief program for farm disasters like the drought in western Canada this year.

The soothing, empty words of the Minister of Agriculture are not enough. There must be an enhanced commitment to agriculture from the Government. There must be action now if we are to save this industry which is so vital to Canada.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

RECRUITMENT ADVERTISEMENTS DEPICTING WOMEN IN TRAINING

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) for allowing women to take up combat roles in the Armed Forces.

Perhaps you missed the announcement, since it was hidden in a TV commercial, but there is no disputing that Armed Forces recruiting ads now show women tackling an obstacle course and deploying from helicopters in full gear.

I am proud that women are being given the opportunity to serve their country to the best of their ability. I am also proud of the Minister for stating that it is ability, not sex, that decides the role of a member of the Forces.

I was just as proud of the men portrayed in these commercials. They were obviously well disciplined and concerned with the task at hand. They were not leering at their colleagues, or wondering what colour underwear they had on, or worrying if they might be homosexual. The Minister knows that the Armed Forces are not so undisciplined that they have to be protected from what some think is the subversive influence of women in dark underwear.

The Minister is to be congratulated for defending the reputation and integrity of the Armed Forces. But not everyone seems to have gotten the message. Maybe it should be repeated. The Minister should state in his White Paper that the Armed Forces have enough discipline to be an equal opportunity employer. Otherwise Canadians might get the impression that there really is "no life like" the one portrayed in these ads.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

DEFINITION OF DISCRIMINATION—TRADITIONAL CANADIAN VALUES

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, the Government cannot respond to the recommendations tabled by the Parliamentary Committee on Equality Rights in its report Equality for All without first defining certain well worn but often misunderstood terms and concepts, one of which is the word "discriminate".

The word "discriminate" is inherently neutral; it is synonymous with words such as "distinguish", "differentiate", "discern", or "judge".

As such, it may be used in a positive sense to denote the practice of good judgment or, conversely, it may be used in a negative sense to denote the practice of bad judgment.

One's decision as to whether the act of discrimination is either a positive or a negative exercise is entirely contingent upon one's value system.

The value system from which I operate will not tolerate negative discrimination based upon race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age, mental or physical disability, or socio-economic status.

However, the same value system compels me to urge the Government to exercise good judgment and reject the Report's recommendations 10 to 14 inclusive, pertaining to sexual orientation.

It is imperative that the Government affirm its commitment to traditional Canadian values concerning the created uniqueness of male and female and their inter-relationship, particularly within the context of the family unit.

THE ECONOMY

PERSPECTIVES FOR THE FUTURE IN CANADA

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to address the subject of the Canadian economy. This Government has reason to be proud of the situation in Canada. In its 22nd annual review, the Economic Council of Canada says that Canadians may be optimistic about the economic outlook for this country.

According to David Slater, ECC chairman, projections for the next five years have not been as encouraging as this in a long time. Mr. Slater added that the new Conservative Government deserved the credit for increasing investor confidence. The favourable economic outlook should continue until the middle of the 90's. Here are some of the details contained in the review.

The gross national product is expected to increase by an average of 3.5 per cent over the next ten years. In the review, it is recommended that Canada engage in a process of trade liberalization by means of negotiations with the United States and multilateral negotiations within the framework of GATT. Unemployment is expected to drop from 10.1 to 8.1 per cent in 1990, and to 7.6 per cent between 1991 and 1995.

Inflation is now staying around 4 per cent per year, and should remain relatively stable until 1990. It might drop to less than 4 per cent between now and the year 2000. Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative Government has shown what it can do.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, research and development are absolutely essential to the future social and economic growth of our country. If Canada is to compete successfully with other advanced nations in the information age and retain anywhere near the present standard of living for its citizens, the federal Government must increase significantly its support to research and development.

[Translation]

The Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada has $2 million less in its budget this year than last year, and cannot even complete current projects. What we must have now is a major financial commitment on the part of the Government. We cannot accept that the Government should continue to break its election promise, a commitment to allocate 2.5 per cent of GNP to research and development.

● (1410)

[English]

The federal Government must, as a first step, approve the proposed five year plans of the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council and of the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. It is also incumbent on the federal Government to fund the three granting councils at the levels indicated in their plans, and to commit itself to fund the councils adequately in the medium and long term.

HEALTH

DIOXINS IN RAINY RIVER FISH

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, carcinogenic dioxins have been found in fish from the Rainy River system. As a result of this discovery by the Environmental Protection Agency of the United States, the Ontario Government has suggested that people refrain from eating excessive amounts of fish, while the Minnesota State Department has recommended that no fish be eaten from this international waterway until a larger sample of 175 fish have been given more intensive analysis.

It has not yet been determined what the exact source of this pollution is, but a number of facts remain clear, and a number of questions beg to be answered. If this chemical is, in fact, dispersed throughout a wide area in the river system, the public health and local economy of an entire region of northwestern Ontario will be jeopardized, including an active and progressive tourist industry and the Rainy River Indian Band commercial and subsistance fishery.

It is said that 1 kilogram of polychlorinated dibenzodioxins would render the water of Lake Ontario unfit for human consumption.

I wrote to the former Minister of the Environment on May 24 of this year expressing concern about industrial pollution in my riding. Her response two months later ignored my suggestion and my invitation to her to visit the area in question.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I must again call upon the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and the federal Government to act as a watchdog for environmental pollution. The stakes are a lot higher now for the people of the Rainy River district.

SMALL BUSINESS

AGREEMENT ON REDUCTION OF BUREAUCRATIC RED TAPE

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, profits based on a business's level of productivity should be the guiding rule of business activity in the market-place. Because of a discouraging taxation and regulatory environment, productivity has not been providing commensurate profits for entrepreneurs and risk takers. At the same time, too many businesses show profits that have nothing to do with productivity. Just to break even, today's entrepreneurs have to be more concerned with making the most of Government programs and subsidies, tax exemptions and credits, and legal and accounting contortions, than with giving a better deal than the competition.

In the future, things will be different. I would like to congratulate the Minister of State (Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette)) on a recent agreement he signed with provincial and territorial business Ministers. This agreement commits the signatories to efforts aimed at reducing regulation, paper burden, and red tape for small businesses. When specific measures resulting from these efforts are combined with the proposal of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), announced in the Budget, to lower corporate tax rates by eliminating certain tax expenditures, we will have a small business environment that can respond with versatility and speed to signals in the market-place. All I can say is that it is about time, Mr. Speaker.

ENERGY

INCREASED DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT DUE TO WESTERN AND ATLANTIC ACCORDS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the initiatives put forward by our Government with respect to the oil industry are continuing to pay dividends for the Canadian economy. Investments are up in the energy sector as a direct result of our determination to make the system work. We signed the Atlantic and Western Accords. We have replaced the Foreign Investment Review Agency with Investment Canada, and we have made investors aware of the new attitude in Ottawa.

Recently, Mr. Speaker, Mr. John Maher of Polaris Petroleum told a St. John's audience that the Western and Atlantic Accords were sound policy to which the industry was responding in an overwhelming way. He went on to state some statistics, which I would like to share with you. As of June, 1985, $3.6 billion had been committed and $11.8 billion was defined for new projects in Canada. Between $80 million and $120 million will be spent at Argentia and Adams Head, Newfoundland, to prepare construction sites for Hibernia Production.

Over the next nine years, the oil industry will create 300,000 new jobs. Over the same period, business investment will increase by $100 million and our gross national product should increase by 2.5 per cent.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a clear indication the Government was right in encouraging investors, entrepreneurs, and risk takers. Canadians are up to the challenge, and they will continue to meet the challenge head on with ingenuity and determination, as long as they are not stifled, hampered or discouraged—

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Member that his time has expired.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

EQUALITY RECOMMENDATIONS OF SUBCOMMITTEE—IMPACT

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the members of the Sub-committee on Equality Rights who tabled their report last Friday.

It is a document of liberal inspiration which reveals considerable open-mindedness towards women, disabled persons, native people and visible minorities.

I would lay special emphasis on recommendations concerning women in the armed forces. Mr. Speaker, I do not advocate sending women to the front lines—anymore than men, for that matter—but I believe that women should not be barred from any military operation because of their sex.

The Sub-committee on Equality Rights also recommends that the federal Government take measures to ensure that language training programs be open to all male and female immigrants regardless of their marital or family status and whatever their relationship.

That is something we have been asking for for a long time. Female immigrants are being discriminated against because language training programs for immigrants are geared to those who will eventually join the labour market. Female immigrants often have to look after their family and thus remain isolated.

We are looking forward to examining the other sub-committee recommendations in the coming months. I trust the Conservative Members will be as open-minded as their sub-committee colleagues.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF HIS EXCELLENCY AHMED BEN ARFA, SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE MINISTER OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS OF TUNISIA

Mr. Speaker: I would draw the attention of the House to the presence in our gallery of His Excellency Ahmed Ben Arfa, Secretary of State to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Tunisia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

EQUALITY FOR ALL COMMITTEE REPORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. We have studied the report of the parliamentary committee entitled Equality for All, affecting the rights of all Canadians. We on this side of the House, in the Liberal Party, believe that the rights of Canadians cannot be determined on the basis of public opinion polls or, frankly, even by the will of the majority; that the rights of Canadians must be determined as a moral issue, and that discrimination is wrong whether or not it is popular.

Does the Government intend to wait for the courts to enforce Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, or does it intend to act legislatively in the House of Commons to implement that report? In particular, would the Acting Prime Minister indicate to the House whether his Government intends to amend the Human Rights Act so as to forbid discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, a discrimination which is already implicitly barred by Section 15 of the Charter of Rights?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): My Speaker, we share not simply the commitment but the priority to the realization and respect for human rights expressed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. He will understand that this is a question of very real complexity for the country and for the Government. For that reason we are studying, on an urgent basis, the report which has been placed before the House. I can indicate to him now only that we will be able to respond to the questions which he has put to me today as early as is possible.

MANDATORY RETIREMENT AGE—REQUEST FOR LEGISLATIVE AMENDMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Section 15 of the Charter prohibits discrimination on a wide range of grounds, including discrimination on the basis of age. On the basis of that section, a mandatory retirement age is probably already unconstitutional. Will the federal Government agree to legislate toward a more flexible retirement age?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Government is required by the rules of Parliament to respond to recommendations of committees. We intend to respond as quickly as we can to that and other recommendations in that particular report.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY LEGISLATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Acting Prime Minister is referring to the 120 days. The 120 days are not an adequate period, particularly in view of the employment equity Bill under the pilotage of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, which is currently before the House. Sections of that Bill run counter to the all-Party report, particularly the aspects of the report reflecting financial support for the Canadian Human Rights Commission and for mandatory retirement. Would the Acting Prime Minister consult with the Prime Minister and his colleagues and advise the Minister of Employment and Immigration that she should delay the Bill until the amendments in that Bill can properly reflect some aspects of the report?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the view of this Government is that in so far as employment equity is concerned there has been too much delay. I will, however, bring the representations of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to the attention of the relevant Minister.

PROVISIONS IN PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. The Minister knows that the legislation is flawed in several ways. I am sure that he is aware of the fact that it has no mandatory enforcement mechanisms—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order. It is before the House.

Mrs. Finestone: It provides no additional funds for monitoring—

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mrs. Finestone: —and federal Departments and agencies are not covered under the legislation, if you read the fine print.

Does the Minister intend to address the serious omissions in the legislation so that the disabled, the visible minorities, the natives, and women will get their fair share?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, several of us on this side of the House have had occasion to demonstrate our commitment not only to the particular groups that were mentioned by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal, but we have also on other occasions had the opportunity to demonstrate our respect for the parliamentary process. The parliamentary process means that Question Period begins at 2.15; debate begins at 3.00 in the afternoon. She is trying to debate during Question Period a matter that will arise under Orders of the Day.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATIVE AMENDMENTS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): My question is again to the Acting Prime Minister. I find that that is quite a cop-out, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Look at Beauchesne's Section 359.

Mrs. Finestone: Support for principles reflected—you really have to reflect rights clearly in law.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! Does the Member have a question?

Mrs. Finestone: It is our right under the law. Do you intend to amend our laws to bring them into conformity with employment equality principles rights?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: That is the best answer this session.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is a better answer.

FINANCE

ASSISTANCE TO DOME PETROLEUM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Yesterday, the Minister said that where Dome Petroleum was concerned, the Government had no option. That is not true. He could have considered alternatives such as granting loans or buying shares in the company. It was not really necessary to give away one billion dollars to Dome Petroleum.

Could the Minister inform the House today whether the Government did consider other options and if so, what those options were?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered this question yesterday. What I said then, just to refresh the memory of the Hon. Member, is that this whole Dome Petroleum matter started back in 1982 and during that time the previous Government took a number of steps to ensure the continued existence of Dome because they were concerned about the impact of the failure of Dome, in particular on the oil service industry.

We have followed through with the remission order that was granted earlier this year because the previous Minister of Finance, Mr. Marc Lalonde, had committed to a remission order as part of a refinancing of the Dome Petroleum debt. It is because of that commitment and the conditions that were attached to it that we had to follow through on that commitment. That is why we made the remision order earlier this year.

PUBLICATION OF DECISION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, precisely around the time that the Liberal Government was making that commitment the present Minister of Industrial Expansion and Development and the present Minister of Transport, then in opposition, were categoric in their opposition to a bail-out of Dome. Second, they said that the matter should be brought before Parliament before any decision was reached. Why, now that the Conservative Party is in Government rather than Opposition, has it changed its position? Why was it all right for the people of Canada to know the details of important cases such as this one when Conservative members were in Opposition, but not all right to know when they are in Government?

• (1425)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we made no attempt to hide the fact that we were providing this remission order. This is all part of a continuing process that we have followed since we got into office of reviewing all matters of corporate and personal taxation. In fact we set out in August of this year an account of the cost of selective tax measures to help Members opposite, as well as Canadians generally, identify those areas of the tax system that should be changed. We are still waiting to hear one peep out of members of the New Democratic Party regarding what some of those changes should be.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF TAX REMISSION ORDERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to send the Minister a whole memo. If he paid attention to what was said during the election campaign rather than misleading the people of Canada through his own campaign promises, he would have heard some of those suggestions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Since the Minister has now given another general assurance about providing more information, will he make a specific commitment that information regarding all tax remissions in excess of $1 million, including specific dollar amounts, are tabled each week in the House of Commons?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will take that as a representation and give it consideration. As the Auditor General has indicated, he has some concerns, and we take the recommendations of the Auditor General quite seriously. Once we have made a decision on that, I will get back to the Hon. Member.

TREATMENT OF PERSONNEL'S SPOUSES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question deals with the issue of equality as well and I hope the Government will not hide behind the cover of study. My question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence. I am sure the Minister has had a chance to read the report of the equality committee which suggests, among other recommendations, the following:

> We believe that spouses on military bases should not be precluded from taking part in community activities and arguing for increased services.

Does the Minister agree with the committee when it states that spouses should be treated as independent individuals? Is he going to move immediately to bring in legislation that will permit spouses to be treated as independent individuals?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, not only are spouses independent individuals but indeed a great deal of resources and concern within the Department are directed toward ensuring that spouses' concerns are looked after. We well recognize that military life is difficult. There are lots of separations. It is very much in our interest to ensure that families of military personnel are looked after. We devote a lot of resources to that purpose.

RIGHTS OF SPOUSES ON MILITARY BASES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have had no answers at all from the Minister. Since I get many letters from women who do not agree with what the Minister just said, I would like to know from the Minister whether the Progressive Conservative Party is prepared to recognize the fact that spouses on military bases are independent persons who have their own rights, and whether he is going to take some kind of legislative action immediately to recognize this fact, or isn't this part of the Conservative philosophy?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has created a straw man which she is now pummelling.

Some Hon. Members: You're it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): A straw person.

Mr. Andre: A straw person, sorry. In fact many of the accusations that are implicit in her preamble and her question are entirely false. In terms of the question of what degree of political activity should be permitted on military bases directly associated with the military, as I indicated to the Hon. Member, I believe a couple of weeks ago, that question is under review.

FINANCE

DOME PETROLEUM—TAX REMISSION ORDER

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It pertains to the commitments a new Government has when it takes office with respect to engagements or promises made by its predecessor Government. In power, the Conservatives reversed many things which were done by the Liberals. They cancelled appointments, fired people, and changed policies. Can the Minister explain why it is that when it came to a $1 billion hand-out to Dome Petroleum, which the Conservatives opposed when they were in opposition, they respected that particular Liberal policy and gave $1 billion to a large corporation by means of this tax hand-out?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me again repeat some of the things I said yesterday because I think the Hon. Member has forgotten. This particular transaction, the remission order, was part of a series of transactions which related to the very existence of Dome Petroleum had it not received this remission order. It was not a question of whether or not it would have paid the taxes—it would have gone bankrupt.

Mr. Broadbent: That is just not true.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Had it gone bankrupt, it would have taken with it a number of small and medium-sized oil service industry companies, which would have wreaked havoc in the Alberta economy at a time when the economy was very fragile.

So there were commitments made, commitments which the private sector followed through on in good faith. It was based on those commitments and the response of the private sector in fulfilling its side of the commitment that we felt obliged to fulfil our side, which was to carry through with the remission order.

TAX TREATMENT OF CORPORATIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. While I question the Minister's history in that particular case, can he explain why it is that the Government is proposing to give to all corporations in the country the same privilege which has been given to Dome Petroleum with respect to the write-off of losses? Why is it that in the May Budget the Minister said that such a concession would only cost $300 million or $400 million, when the cost is already $1 billion to the taxpayers of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all let me draw attention to the $1 billion figure to which the Hon. Member refers. That is the absolute maximum—

Mr. Broadbent: We have heard that before.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —that could be gained by the company over a long period of time. The figure to which the Hon. Member refers in the discussion paper which was presented with the Budget was $300 million to $400 million a year. They are two different figures and he is mixing apples and oranges when he compares the two.

Mr. Cassidy: It all adds up to $1 billion.

NATIONAL REVENUE

GULF TAKEOVER—TAX RULING

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Prime Minister suggested that the Gulf ruling was as a consequence of the operation of the law. The Minister of Finance knows that the issuance of tax rulings is a matter of practice and that it is discretionary. In view of that, why did he not stop the issuance of this tax ruling which drained as much as $1 billion from the public treasury? I would like the Minister of Finance and not the Minister of National Revenue to answer my question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is his responsibility.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I respect the wish of my hon. friend not to have me answer the question. He knows very well that the matter of tax rulings is within the province of National Revenue and that the law precludes a discussion of the background of these types of considerations before the House. This ruling was done like all others, that is, with impartiality and with a perfect regard to the procedure which is set out in the legislation in these cases.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH TAX CREDITS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, that is not the issue here. The issue is whether or not a ruling must be given. On October 10 of last year the Minister of Finance suspended rulings on scientific research tax credits. In view of that, why did he not take the same action this year and stop that ruling from issuing in the case of the Gulf acquisition?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Hon. Member to cast his mind back. There were not such things as rulings on scientific research tax credits; we just stopped the quick flips totally.

TAX CONCESSIONS TO COMPANIES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. We now know that benefits, perhaps in the order of $1.5 billion, flowed to Petrofina and to Olympia & York as a result of their use of the Little Egypt Bump tax dodge. We also know that there are perhaps four other similar types of situations involving other companies. Is the Minister prepared to table in the House the names of the companies and the amounts of money that they received as a result of their use of this particular tax loophole?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the four companies or of the four transactions to which the Hon. Member refers.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DATA ON TAX CONCESSIONS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister whether or not he will undertake to review with the Minister of National Revenue the number of times that that particular tax loophole has been used. Will he table in the House the names of the companies and the amounts of money that those companies received as a result of the use of that tax loophole?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have heard the representation made by my hon. friend. I will take it as a representation and consult with my colleague, the Minister of Finance, to see whether that would be a proper thing to do.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DID NOT FOLLOW HITCHMAN REPORT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, and I must say I was somewhat surprised at the answer he just gave to my hon. colleague from Westmount-Saint-Henri (Mr. Johnston), since only a few weeks ago, a broker was offering me research funds with a ruling from the Federal department.

Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Hitchman report. We all know that Mr. Hitchman recommended against proceeding with liquidation and was in favour of assigning loans to major banks and asking these banks to take care of collection and administration of these loans.

I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, who may wish to explain his choice before the Estey Commission, but since we are talking about taxpayers' money, I would like to ask him why this Government, contrary to Mr. Hitchman's recommendation, proceeded to liquidate the Canadian Commercial Bank instead of heeding the recommendation of the Hitchman report?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have tried to indicate on this side of the House throughout this discussion that we regard the matter of the banks very seriously. That is why we have the Estey inquiry. We also are a little bit tired of having this issue turned into—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Real tough.

Mrs. McDougall: We are a little bit tired of having the Opposition turn this issue into a soap opera.

Mr. Waddell: It's all right, Barbara, you're a star.

Mr. Foster: You sound like you're at the edge of night, Barbara.

Mr. Angus: And you are making our stomachs turn.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mrs. McDougall: The Hon. Member knows full well that I am appearing in committee this afternoon and that I have agreed to appear before the Estey inquiry. All the answers on this issue will come out within their proper context.

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER CONTACTED MR. HITCHMAN

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, it is a billion-dollar soap opera, and if that amount is not important enough to merit the consideration of the House, I wonder what is.

The Minister did not want to follow the recommendation in the Hitchman report. I would like to ask the Minister why, after she selected this consultant herself and probably paid him a fee to do the job, why, when she received the report from Mr. Hitchman, she did not get in touch with him one single time to find out on what basis—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Immediately, please.

Mr. Garneau: So why didn't she at least have the courtesy to get in touch with Mr. Hitchman to find out why he recommended assigning the loans to the major banks instead of proceeding with liquidation? Why didn't she communicate with him at least once?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the Hon. Member attend the committee meeting this afternoon.

FINANCIAL ABUSES—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who is well aware of the long list of financial abuses presented by the Auditor General. He is aware of the $1 billion bail-out to Dome Petroleum. He is also aware of the $800,000 in fees and memberships, if you like, in a posh Hong Kong club. We recognize that these financial atrocities were introduced by the Liberal Government. What steps has the Minister taken to end these abuses?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first of all, we have welcomed many of the recommendations and observations in the report of the Auditor General. I can tell the House that in the last year we have taken a number of steps to address many of the concerns.

• (1440)

In terms of the abuses mentioned by the Hon. Member, I have asked my officials to look into the specific case of the Hong Kong situation and hope to have a report very shortly. In the case of information to Parliament, over the last year we have introduced a number of measures to improve information for all Hon. Members of this House.

Certainly we have addressed many of the issues, such as cash management, which were raised in the report as early as January of last year. So I feel we have certainly taken good note of the recommendations of the Auditor General and have acted upon them in due course.

REQUEST FOR REGULAR REPORTS THROUGHOUT FISCAL YEAR

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, one of the points made by the Auditor General year after year which has been ignored by the previous Government was the ability of the Auditor General to make regular reports to Parliament so that people would not have to wait for the year's end before they were made aware of these abuses.

Is the Government now prepared to move to permit the Auditor General to make regular reports to Parliament, and to the people of Canada, on these lists of abuses?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member has noted, that is a recommendation which has been made time and time again. It is certainly something I am looking at very seriously. I am consulting with the Auditor General, with the office of the Comptroller General, and we will be in a position to—

Mr. Riis: That's what the Liberals said.

Mr. de Cotret: Well, there are pros and cons. We are looking very seriously at the issue so as to ensure that parliamentarians are in full possession of all the facts they need to carry out their duties in this House.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

TREATMENT OF VISITORS AT EDMONTON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. As the Minister is aware, there have been a number of legitimate concerns expressed by numerous groups relating to the poor treatment which is extended to incoming visitors by his customs officials at the Edmonton International Airport. Will the Minister give us the assurance that he will look into this situation and correct it so that it will not adversely affect our tourism trade, or Canada's reputation abroad?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, for the most part, I think our customs officers are doing a fine job in walking the line between law enforcement and public relations, as the Auditor General noted in his recent report. I can assure the Hon. Member that, to the best of my knowledge, this is an isolated incident. Senior officials in my Department have met with provincial officials to study the matter and we will be reporting to the Hon. Member shortly.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—SIZE OF BAIL-OUT PACKAGE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. The Canadian Commercial Bank bail-out was finalized and the money paid out more than a month after the Minister's announcement on March 25. During this time it was known that the package was at least $100 million short. Will the Minister tell the House why she did not investigate this discrepancy and why, without any such investigation, she authorized the release of a letter to the bail-out group on April 26 assuring them that the support package would ensure the CCB's viability?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I believe my colleague, the Minister of Finance, did address this issue yesterday.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): No, no. We were waiting for the commission yesterday.

Mrs. McDougall: In answer to a supplementary question he said—without accepting the preamble or premise of the question—that it is quite common, even if one is buying a house, or in any other financial matter, to come to an agreement in principle and sign the final documents some time later.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the letter of comfort was a condition of the agreement. No money was paid until it was received. Will the Minister explain why the Government turned a blind eye to disturbing information and proceeded with the bail-out, although there was time to reconsider, reassess, and change the terms of the agreement?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, once again I hope the Hon. Member will bring all of her questions to committee and to the inquiry.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): No; right here.

TAX REFORM INQUIRY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. During the election campaign the Government promised change, Canadians voted for change, and all we have seen is a repeat of the performance of the former Government. Will the Minister tell the House when we are going to see some honesty in Government? When is the Government going to come clean with the Canadian people and bring in some real tax reform on behalf of Canadians so that it benefits Canadians rather oil companies and large corporations?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the Hon. Member has been. We cancelled the SRTC quick flips. We stopped rulings on limited partnership because of the abuses there. We stopped the carve-outs. We stopped income splitting. We cancelled totally the balance of the scientific research tax credits.

Some Hon. Members: More.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We released a booklet—

Mr. Deans: When are you going to bring in change?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —for all Hon. Members of Parliament, and the Canadian public, so that they could see set out, item by item, every tax measure which was available to Canadians with, in many cases, the cost, so that Hon. Members could evaluate the distinction between the benefit and the cost.

I have yet to hear one word from the Hon. Member as to what—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Take that, Scottie.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Young: I will give the Minister one word, "flimflam", and we aint buying it.

Mr. Crosbie: Nobody asked you to.

CORPORATE TAXES

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance is very simple. What is the difference between this Government and the former Government? What is the difference between the Tories and the Liberals when it comes to bailing out their friends in the corporate sector? That is the question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We don't have a marriage with the NDP; that's the difference.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, as I think may be the case with many members of his caucus, does not understand the distinction between—

Mr. Young: We understand ability.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member doesn't want to listen to the answer. A deal is a deal.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member should look at what was said—

Mr. Althouse: No option.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —in the press release which was issued by the previous Minister of Finance—

Mr. Broadbent: The devil made you do it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It said in part: "This remission order is given in support of the private sector refinancing efforts which the Government has supported since the September 1982 agreement in principle was signed". This deal has been in the works for about three years—

Mr. Broadbent: And you opposed it when you were in opposition.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): For the Government to—

Mr. Broadbent: And you took five months to make up your mind.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): You overturned the work that had been going on for nearly three years.

Mr. Speaker: Surely questions and answers continue to deserve more silence.

TEXTILES

INQUIRY ABOUT $30 MILLION GIVEN TO DOMINION TEXTILE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Small Businesses) and relates to the textile industry where the majority of workers are women.

After the shutdown of two modern plants in Saint-Jean and Valleyfield had been announced, members of a committee to maintain employment urged the Government to inquire into the use and management of public funds given to Dominion Textile by the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board. Was there an inquiry? If so, what has been learned about the $30 million given to Dominion Textile?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, I would say to the Hon. Member that we are working in close cooperation with the textile industry to find a practical solution in Quebec and in the rest of Canada. Last week I met with the President of Dominion Textile, the workers and the two "Sauvons le textile" groups from Valleyfield and Saint-Jean. The Minister responsible for DREE also met with those people and is committed to unveil a far-reaching textile policy in the near future.

INQUIRY RESPECTING USE OF FUNDS PAID TO DOMINION TEXTILE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, of course the Minister would say he is looking for solutions, but the workers want jobs, not solutions which never materialize.

What I would like to know, and this is the question the Minister has failed to answer: What happens to the $30 million—and these funds belong to Canadian taxpayers—which were paid to Dominion Textile which has now announced the shutdowns? What happens to that money?

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, a Member opposite may say that we are not concerned about unemployment or the workers, but we did create 60,000 jobs in Quebec over the past eight months and 304,000 throughout Canada. That is—

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

HIGH INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY CREDIT CARD COMPANIES

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Nystrom: Sock it to him.

Mr. Stackhouse: With one exception, credit card issuers have not reduced their interest charges on unpaid balances for two and even three years, and now charge ten percentage points above the bank rate. The chartered banks of Canada are the major owners of credit card issuers. In view of that, what moral suasion or other initiatives can the Minister take in the interest of consumer justice to induce the companies to bring their charges in line with current low interest rates?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, that question naturally concerns us because it involves consumer protection. My hon. colleague knows that credit card charges are made up not only of interest rates, but a charge for services as well. That is why it is such a complex issue. We had meetings with our provincial colleagues in September. There are ongoing talks.

Mr. Riis: You haven't done anything.

Mr. Côté (Langelier): I want to assure the Member that we have the protection of consumers in mind and we are going to ensure that the matter is taken care of very well.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

MAIL DELIVERY DELAYS—COST TO TAXPAYERS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. Ordinary Canadians have been complaining for some time about delays in the delivery of mail. Small businesses have told us that delays in the delivery of mail are costing them money. The Auditor General has documented that through only two companies some $190,000 has been lost to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans as a result of mail delivery delays. What is the Minister prepared to do to rectify this situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have said previously that my colleague and predecessor had set up an inquiry or a study, and I am referring to the Marchment Study which is considering the corporate mandate of Canada Post. A report is expected within the next few weeks, and on the basis of its recommendations, Cabinet will make the necessary decisions.

[English]

REQUEST FOR SPEEDIER MAIL SERVICE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, rather than simply waiting for a study and a report, what is the Minister prepared to do now in order to speed up the delivery of mail? Will he put in place a budget for the Post Office for this fiscal year which is yet to be approved?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, my answer to the Hon. Member is quite simply that we as a Government set up a system and a study based on consultations throughout this country's business sector, and that when we receive the recommendations, we will make the necessary arrangements for examining them.

AGRICULTURE

CREATION OF AGRI-BOND PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The farmers with whom Members met this morning want an answer to the following question. Considering the promises made by the Progressive Conservative Party in Sherbrooke on July 26, 1984, namely, that a Conservative Government would introduce an agri-bond program, when can farmers expect to see this program and similar measures to help farmers who are suffering under the worst recession in 50 years?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member checks the record he will find that it reveals that we made 16 campaign commitments to the agricultural community. At this time we have fulfilled 13 of those commitments. We had an excellent session with representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture yesterday. They were very complimentary in recognizing—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wise: —the record of the Government during the last 13 months. They were very fair and honest, and I can assure him that they certainly know a lot more about the agricultural industry in this country than the Hon. Member does.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Minister must have met with different people from those with whom we met, because that is not what they had to say.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We didn't meet many Taiwanese.

ONTARIO MUNICIPAL DRAINAGE PROJECTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also with regard to promises of the Minister of Agriculture. On July 17, 1984, in a letter addressed to the President of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the leader of the Conservative Party promised "to commit its share of necessary"—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is another preamble. Is there a question?

Mr. Boudria: Yes, "—in order to complete municipal drains". Can the Minister tell the House if and when the Government intends to fulfil the promise to complete municipal drains in Ontario?

Mr. Crosbie: How are things in Formosa?

Mr. Boudria: It hasn't done a thing about that yet.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to make a comment, but perhaps I will avoid doing so.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Say you're sorry.

Mr. Broadbent: Go ahead.

Mr. Wise: The Hon. Member will realize, particularly after spending some time in the provincial Legislature, that there are some problems with respect to the continuation of those drainage projects which are not within federal jurisdiction. He knows that environmental approvals must be sought and received by a jurisdiction other than the federal Government.

YOUTH

ONTARIO YOUTH FORUM DISCUSSIONS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Youth. Last weekend the City of Orillia hosted the Ontario International Youth Year Forum. Could the Minister tell the House what young people attending that Forum were saying about the important issues which were brought to the attention of the Minister by the youth of Canada?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Forum brought together one hundred young people from throughout the region to consider strategies for community-based activities. The final plenary reflected the spirit of the weekend which was one of co-operation, support, encouragement, and information sharing.

Ms. Copps: Next.

Mrs. Champagne: It focused on a commitment of Ontario youth to bilingualism—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Broadbent: What is this?

Mrs. Champagne: —to multiculturalism—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: Is this a paid political announcement?

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF FINANCE REVIEW BOARDS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Farm Credit Corporation reports that up to one-third of Canada's farmers face severe financial stress and could lose their farms. Since the Minister has placed a moratorium on foreclosures by the FCC, will he take the next step and establish finance review boards with powers to write down interest and debt and to impose settlements on the lenders?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, for me to have considered a recommendation of that kind two or three years ago might have been somewhat radical in nature—

Mr. Nystrom: You're a red Tory.

Mr. Wise: —but I can tell the Hon. Member that I am now giving serious consideration to some movement in that direction. I am not totally—

Mr. Foster: You sound like a radical, John.

Mr. Wise: —putting aside the recommendation of the Hon. Member.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since it was the policy of the Minister's Party to accept the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act as proposed by Mr. Ferguson in the last House, which set up that type of arrangement, what has changed in the intervening time? The situation has only gotten worse. Now that the Conservative Party is in power, why is it changing its point of view on this issue?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is very simple. We are much more inclined to follow the recommendation of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture rather than the sponsor of the Private Member's Motion to which he referred.

SOCIAL SECURITY

MAINTENANCE OF FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. This Government gave away $600 million to the people who bought Gulf Canada, and at the same time, in this very House, the Government introduced a Bill that will cut $55 million from the subsidy program for families with children. My question is as follows: Does the Minister realize that the interest alone on that $600 million present would have been enough for the Government to maintain full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit?

• (1500)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think all of us enjoy the Member's active participation in Question Period. However, I want to say to him seriously that issue is being dealt with in the committee. I understand that I will be appearing before the committee in the next few days and I am sure that we can continue the debate there.

I say to him that the Government has clearly projected its intentions on Bill C-70 and there is no change.

ASSISTANCE GIVEN TO RICH FAMILIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, now that everybody knows about this $600-million present, is the Minister of Finance prepared to admit that it is unfair, intolerable and immoral to sacrifice families with children in order to give presents to the families of the very rich?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should be addressing that question to the man who presided over the tax policy for four years, immediately after that provision was put in. He is that Hon. Member's Leader, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, who had every chance in the world to make the changes and did not do anything about it. That is to whom the question should be directed.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND WITHDRAWAL OF TAX INCREASES

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition signed by 13 people in British Columbia, 11 of whom appear to be from my constituency. They state in the petition: wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax inceases.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear! More, more!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Victoria.

Mr. McKinnon: As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition from the fine city of Victoria, British Columbia, containing a few hundred names of people who indicate their concern that the Government is planning to deindex family allowance. They call upon the Government to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance as well as rescind the unfair tax increases which have been presented before the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I have some petitions from residents of the following federal ridings, namely, Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic, Swift Current-Maple Creek, Trois-Rivières, in Quebec, Montreal-Sainte-Marie, Langelier, Louis-Hébert, in Quebec, Brome-Missisquoi, in Quebec, Shefford, Drummond, in Quebec, and Kingston and the Islands, in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, these residents are asking the Government of Canada to reinstate full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of citizens from my riding of Vancouver East who are concerned that the poorest families will be worse off by 1990 and, in addition, that there will be unfair tax increases affecting families. They call on the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by a number of residents in Scarborough. Those petitioners state that the deindexation of the universal family allowance is an unfair attack on women and families. They further state that this attack will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that other tax increases in the May Budget will place an unfair burden on low and middle income earners.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to present on behalf of residents in my riding of Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe who are concerned with changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act as of December 31, 1985 that will deduct pension benefits from unemployment insurance. They believe this is an unfair and arbitrary policy of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald).

I have a second petition from the riding of Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe from a group in the northern peninsula area who are also concerned about this change in the unemployment insurance program as of December 31, 1985, denying benefits that people were formerly entitled to and which they believe is necessary to continue a decent way of life.

LOW INCOME HOUSING

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a third petition to the House of Commons and Parliament assembled from several hundred residents of the city of Corner Brook who are concerned about the housing crisis in this country and the lack of support from the Minister in charge of Housing responsible for CMHC in providing low income housing to the unemployed and the poor in this country to enable them to put a decent roof over their heads and the heads of their children. We pray that the Government will act according to the wishes of these petitioners.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND WITHDRAWAL OF TAX INCREASES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from residents of the Don Mills area of my riding and others calling upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of family allowance.

[Translation]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition as well, but unlike the Conservative Members, I am also prepared to support it.

The petition reads as follows:

The undersigned residents of the federal riding of Drummond, who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance, in the certain assurance that Your Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy, considering that Government family allowance and tax credit programs constitute a form of indispensable assistance, are asking the Government to reinstate forthwith the right of families to benefit under these programs.

I have another petition from the riding of Portneuf in the beautiful province of Quebec, asking the Government and the Prime Minister to reconsider the decision to deindex family allowances, since families with children include a high percentage of single-parent families and for that reason, steps should be taken to provide financial assistance.

I have another petition from the federal riding of Verdun-Saint-Paul, asking the Government to promise to give back to Canadian families their right to full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit, especially since the Government made a commitment during the election campaign to take measures designed to strengthen the family unit.

Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from the riding of Louis-Hébert, in the beautiful province of Quebec, which is also asking the Government to reconsider its decision to deindex family allowances and the child tax credit, since this is a matter of real concern to single-parent families and families with many children, and I support them wholeheartedly.

REQUEST THAT RAOUL WALLENBERG BE MADE HONORARY CITIZEN OF CANADA

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition addressed to the House of Commons. One thousand one hundred and fifty-nine residents of Toronto plead and pray that the hero of humanity, Raoul Wallenberg, a Swedish diplomat who was instrumental in saving the lives of tens of thousands of Jews in Nazi Hungary; who defied the notorious Adolf Eichmann at great risk to his life and who was arrested by the Soviet Union in 1945, never to be heard of again and who is probably now languishing in a Soviet prison in the Gulag, be made an honorary citizen of Canada.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from the federal riding of Bellechasse in Quebec, asking the Government of Canada to reinstate full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

[English]

It also gives me pleasure to present to the House of Commons a petition from residents of the Louis-Hébert riding in Quebec maintaining that the Government is engaged at the present time in not fulfilling its promises in the election. They ask that the Government withdraw its call for the deindexation of family allowances.

Also I have a petition from the federal riding of Quebec East——of Quebec East in Quebec.

That the Government of Canada reinstate full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

[English]

Also in the same vein, a petition, Mr. Speaker, from the federal riding of Richelieu in Québec—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the Hon. Member knows that petitions are supposed to be presented very briefly. If the Member has a series of petitions on the same subject he should simply indicate that is what he has.

Mr. de Corneille: I have petitions signed by quite a number of citizens from the riding of St. Hyacinthe in Québec, Calgary East, Alberta, and a large number also along the same line and from the riding of Beauce in Quebec and from the riding of Frontenac in Quebec, all of them requesting this House of Commons that it withdraw the Bill which relates to deindexation of family allowances.

Petitions

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions calling for the Government to index fully the universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases. Since some Conservative Members have risen in this House and joined with us, I wonder whether the Government House Leader would like to present this petition from his riding.

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Murphy: I also have petitions from my own riding from the communities of Lynn Lake, Le Pas, Flin Flon, Thomson and others in which the people also ask the Government to withdraw the legislation and fully reinstate the protection from inflation for the family allowances.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents in the City of Toronto attacking the proposal to deindex in an accelerating way the child benefits that have been in force for some years, pointing out that it is unfair to do that in the face of the hand-outs, such as a half a million dollars in tax-free capital gains, greater RRSP deductions for high income recipients and billions of hand-outs to the oil companies and, of course, the banks. Therefore, the residents petition Parliament, the House of Commons, to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind the unfair tax increases, and in duty bound your petitioners undertake ever to pray.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents in my riding who indicate that the cut-backs in the family allowance will not be offset by the child tax credit and that even the poorest families will be hurt. They also indicate that combined with the tax increases, middle-income people will be bearing an unfair burden. They call upon the House of Commons to prevail upon the Government to withdraw this deindexation of family allowances.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of 100 more residents of Thunder Bay. These petitioners protest the decision of the Government to deindex the family allowance and point out the consequences for all families, even the poorest, becoming less well off by 1990. They call upon the Government and the House of Commons to cancel that decision and to maintain full indexation for the family allowance.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by a group of people from a small community in my own riding, more specifically the Cercle des fermières de Stratford, who object to the Government's decision to deindex family allowances. This group feels that family allowances are something families with dependent children simply could not do without.

On the same subject, I have a number of other petitions from various federal ridings in the province of Quebec, namely, Berthier-Maskinongé-Lanaudière, Trois-Rivières, Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, Saint-Jacques and Portneuf.

I have a number of other petitions from the Ontario ridings of Brampton-Georgetown and Durham-Northumberland, as well as from the Quebec ridings of Terrebonne, Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic, again Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic, and Chambly.

Here is one from the Quebec riding of Gatineau-Labelle. Here is one from the Ontario riding of Rosedale. Another one from the Quebec riding of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot. There is also one from the Quebec riding of Montréal-Saint-Marie, one from the Calgary East riding and, finally, one from the Montmorency-Orléans riding. The petitioners, several hundreds of them, strongly object to the Government's decision to deindex family allowances and ask the House of Commons to direct the Government to rescind this totally unfair decision.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions from La Belle province of Quebec, all about family allowances.

[English]

These petitions come from a number of ridings, namely, Frontenac, Rimouski, St. Henri-Westmount, Verdun-Saint-Paul, Portneuf and Montreal-Sainte-Marie. I have one also from the ridings of Saint-Hyacinthe, Louis-Hébert, Charlesbourg, and the last one, Mr. Speaker, is from the riding of LaSalle. All these petitions say the same thing. The petitioners are urging the Government to remove the deindexation program for family allowances, which is regressive and will take away some $55 million from families.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of 50 residents of Edmonton who believe that the deindexation of the universal family allowance and the massive cut-backs in the public commitment to child benefits are an unfair attack on women and families with children, especially single parent mothers. They pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION FOR HOUSE TO REVERT TO STATEMENTS BY MINISTERS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations between representatives of the Parties. I believe that you will find unanimous consent for the presentation and passage of the following motion without debate:

That at four o'clock p.m. this day, the House shall revert to "Statements by Ministers" for the purpose of the presentation of a statement, pursuant to Standing Order 19(4) by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources;

Provided that at the end of the aforementioned statement, the Minister shall lay upon the Table a document related thereto; and

Provided that at the conclusion of the statement and related comments pursuant to Standing Order 19(4), the House shall revert to Orders of the Day.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion needs unanimous consent for its introduction.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we have been consulted and we are willing to give consent.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the motion of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn)?

EXCISE TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

NOTICE OF ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-80

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that there have been consultations among the representatives of the Parties in this House and that it has not been possible to reach an agreement pursuant to Standing Order 82 or Standing Order 83 with regard to the allocation of time to the second reading stage of Bill C-80, and Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Therefore, at the next sitting of the House, it is my intention to propose the following motion pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 84:

That, in relation to Bill C-80, An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the said Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of Government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed, from Wednesday, October 23, consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Employment Equity

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate. What we have before us is a Bill which purports to deal with a problem that has been with us for a long time. Almost 40 years ago, indeed shortly after World War II, it became obvious to leaders in our ethnic communities, major churches and the labour movement that a great deal of prejudice against minority, ethnic, religious and non-white groups existed in Canada. They came to believe that steps had to be taken to deal with that prejudice and with the discrimination which flowed therefrom, and that legislation was required.

When representations were made to Governments at the federal and provincial levels in the late 1940s and early 1950s by representatives of those organizations, the Government's first responses were that there was very little prejudice. However, when it was proven and information was given concerning actual cases, the first response of the Governments was that legislation was not necessary, that legislation to prohibit discrimination in employment or accommodations would be counter-productive, and that prejudice and discrimination could best be dealt with through educational processes. It took a number of years, but finally the Governments responded by bringing legislation forward.

I give credit to the first Government which responded in a realistic way. It was the Conservative Government of the Province of Ontario which first passed a Fair Employment Practices Act that made it illegal for employers to discriminate against people applying for work on the basis of their race, colour or creed. Later, following the provision of evidence indicating that there was discrimination in accommodations against certain groups because of their religion or colour, whether it was in their desire to rent apartments or to stay at certain resorts from which they were prohibited by tacit agreement, the Government of Ontario passed the Fair Accommodations Practices Act. In the main those two Acts were copied by all other provinces, and have led to a very substantial improvement in the reduction of discrimination which formerly existed in employment and accommodations for people of various minority groups. While those laws have had some very effective results and have led to substantial improvements, they have not come anywhere near solving the problem of discrimination in employment which still exists to a very large extent. Federal and provincial Governments established agencies to help people who felt that they were being discriminated against or had not been given an opportunity to obtain employment with a particular company, and for people who felt they were unable to rent accommodations because of their race, colour or creed. They could complain to the agencies or commissions appointed by the provincial and federal Governments. The commissions would investigate and, if they found discrimination, they would order the employer, apartment owner or hotelier to end the discrimination.

Federal and provincial Governments have expressed their determination to eliminate discrimination. In the past Governments have expressed their support for the principle of affirmative action, promised to make efforts in their own employment practices to right the wrongs and reduce the discrimination in hiring practised against various minority groups and by encouraging the acceptance of those employment applications by government Departments from members of minority groups.

The former Liberal Government expressed its support for affirmative action and designated a number of Departments in which it expected to get action fairly quickly. However, not much happened as a result of those expressions of support for affirmative action. Governments or private employers can accept the principle of affirmative action in employment or, as we now call it, employment equity, but it is not the Government Ministers of Departments or presidents of private companies who do the actual hiring. It is the personnel departments of private employers, of the Public Service Commission and of the Civil Service Commissions in the provinces that examine the applications of people applying for positions and do the actual hiring. They choose from a large number of applicants those who will be given an opportunity to work for the Government or for the private company. Particularly at times such as this when there is so much unemployment they have a great deal of power.

The one area in which affirmative action was a success in the federal Government's operations was in large increases in the number of people working for the federal Government who come from the Francophone community.

The reason it was a success, Mr. Speaker, was that the former Government—and I give credit to the present Government because it is following the same approach—instructed the agencies which were doing the hiring that they wanted more Francophones at all levels of Government and that they expected to have reports at regular intervals, probably every year, as to what had been accomplished. In that way, in that area, we did get action and we did get the employment of a substantial number of Francophone Canadians.

Because the former Government realized that we were not proceeding as quickly as all people wanted to in dealing with the problem of discrimination, the Government appointed Judge Rosalie Abella as a one-person commissioner to look into the whole question of employment equity. Judge Abella brought down a report in October, 1984, the report of the Royal Commission on Equality in Employment. She dealt with the problem of discrimination and she gave illustrations of how much there was. She called for Governments to do a survey to see where there were less than should be employed from various groups such as women, natives, visible minorities and the handicapped. The findings which Judge Abella made and some of the illustrations she gave were endorsed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). In a speech which the Minister made on March 8 of this year she quoted with approval from a study called "Who Gets the Work", a test of racial discrimination in employment which was commissioned by the Urban Alliance on Race Relations and the Social Planning Council of Metroplolitan Toronto. Let me just quote a couple of sentences from the Minister's speech citing illustrations which she obtained from this report. She cited this quotation:

—"whites have three job prospects for every one for blacks". Fact: among employable disabled persons, 50 per cent are unemployed. Fact: in many native communities unemployment is higher than 70 per cent.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration, speaking for the Government, endorsed the views expressed by Judge Abella that there was discrimination in employment, and that we had to deal with it.

But one of the major recommendations, and I believe the most important recommendation made by Judge Abella was a recommendation that mandatory affirmative action programs were necessary in the federal sector to deal with the problems of discrimination in employment. She also recommended a strong enforcement mechanism for the program; the implementation of equal pay for work of equal value; the creation of accessible daycare; improved training programs and barrier free transportation.

It is a tragedy, I believe, that despite the belief of Judge Abella that in order to attain the goal which we all aim for, that is, that people who have not been able because they belong to a minority group to get employment with the Government or to get employment very frequently in the private sector, a mandatory affirmative action program was necessary, this Government has rejected that key proposal. Because there had been so much controversy about the phrase "affirmative action", Judge Abella used instead the term "employment equity".

Mr. Speaker, it has been the experience in many jurisdictions that without mandatory programs we will not achieve affirmative action and we will not achieve the goals of employment equity. So it is, I believe, a real tragedy that the Government has opted for a voluntary employment equity program with no enforcement mechanism, and that only the reporting of work force data will be mandatory.

When we talk about employment equity or mandatory affirmative action we are not saying that jobs should be given to people who are not qualified. We are not saying that native people, handicapped people, women or members of visible ethnic minorities must be hired just because they are from minority groups. What we are saying is that members from those minority groups who are qualified to do the work for which there are jobs available and who have in the past not been able to get em ployment due to a large extent because there is prejudice and to a large extent because there has been and is discrimination that they, through a policy of employment equity, shall be given the opportunity to get jobs.

This is the system which they have followed in the United States for many years and it has been successful. Recently the present administration in the United States headed by President Reagan has proposed moving away from mandatory affirmative action programs. It is interesting to read what representatives of business have said in an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail on September 28, written by Michele Landsberg. I want to put on the record a few of the opinions that she quoted which were expressed by leading American business people. She quotes William McEwen, Chairman of the Resources and Equal Opportunity Committee of the U.S. Association of Manufacturers. He said:

> There's no such thing as voluntary compliance with affirmative action laws. If voluntary compliance worked, Moses would have come down from the mountain with the Ten Guidelines.

Then she quotes Lawrence Branch, Corporate Director of Equal Employment Opportunities, Merck Co. Inc., the largest pharmaceutical company in the United States, as follows:

> Business is very upset with Washington's attack on affirmative action.
> These programs have given us a beautiful, tappable resource of women and minorities who have increased our work force diversity and brought us new skills.

Victoria Smith, Senior Consultant, Organizations Resources Counselors, Inc., New York, said:

> Business is comfortable with numerical goals and targets. That's how business works. We just did a survey of our clients—most of them are Fortune 500 big corporations—and, of 142 responses, 95 per cent said they would keep on using numerical goals to track the progress of women and minorities, regardless of government requirements.

So, Mr. Speaker, what we are saying is that we want action. We want action and that needs to be mandatory employment equity.

The response of most of the interested organizations to the decision of the Government not to make employment equity legislation mandatory is very clear. Representatives of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, the Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped, the National Ethnocultural Council, the Canadian Association for Community Living, the Canadian Labour Congress, the Urban Alliance on Race Relations, the Canadian Congress for Learning Opportunities for Women and the Coalition for Employment Equity joined in condemning the Government's responses as weak, ineffective and a betrayal of commitments and promises made to them.

According to a press release of October 9, 1985, these representatives said that we need one standard-setting and enforcement agency with powers to monitor programs and to impose penalties for non-compliance, goals and timetables for increasing the representation of target groups as a required element of programs, mandatory implementation of equal pay for work of equal value in the federal sector and labour and target group involvement in the design of programs. Chaviva Hosek, President of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, speaking for all those groups, said that this is what the Abella Commission recommended and what we need if equality is to be made a reality in the future.

I urge the Government to reconsider the position it is taking in connection with this Bill. I encourage the Government to follow the advice of the coalition of groups that are so vitally interested in this matter and to adopt the major provisions of the Abella Report.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? We will resume debate with the Hon. Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek). I would like to advise the Minister that the time limit for speeches is now 10 minutes.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to participate in this debate on Bill C-62, the employment equity legislation which is based on a belief in fairness. I do so with particular interest because, although the Bill comes to grips with many critical issues, it comes to grips with a particular issue on which I would like to dwell for the next eight or nine minutes and that is, the issue of fairness and equity for members of visible minorities.

As Hon. Members know, visible minorities play a large and important part in Canada's ethnocultural community. Members of visible minorities must receive equal opportunities. All opportunities provided to all Canadians must be provided on an equal basis to members of visible minorities as well. In fact, the policy and the new thrust of the Government in respect of multiculturalism is to provide an equal opportunity to all Canadians while encouraging the maintenance of the cultural heritages of all ethnocultural groups.

Equality and fairness are qualities that go to the very root of our country. I might say that it is a sense of Canada which I personally deeply share because of my own background. I am one who chose to be a Canadian. It is a sense of respect for the smallest and weakest of communities and one which gives urgency to the challenge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) put before us last year when he said that, "there is no obligation more compelling, no duty more irresistible than to ensure that our minorities live at all times in conditions of fairness and justice". Those are words to live by.

I am proud of the fact that the Government has led the way in giving substance to all discussions and proposals for employment equity for visible minorities which now join the target groups of women, natives and the disabled. The legislation has even greater significance when it is viewed together with the second major initiative of the Government, that of affirmative action within the federal Public Service. The Treasury Board commenced its initiative on behalf of visible minorities with a survey in March and a commitment to action announced in September of this year. In June, my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), brought forward Bill C-62, the Bill we are now debating, which will require Crown corporations and businesses which contract with the Government to submit annual reports on the status of the target groups they employ.

This Bill is an important step toward ensuring that all Canadians, regardless of racial origin, are treated fairly and that Canada benefits from a dynamic economy which draws on the best talents of all Canadians unimpeded by artificial barriers. I hope we can all support this legislation and I am flabbergasted to hear opposition to it from members of the Opposition and others. This is the first time a Government has taken positive steps by way of legislation to make it possible for Crown corporations, agencies and businesses to be encouraged to hire not only individuals of ethnocultural backgrounds but those who are members of visible minorities. It is particularly the Liberal Members who should be ashamed to be opposing a piece of legislation which is far reaching and goes in the direction of the goal we all hope to achieve by providing equality of opportunity to all Canadians.

Mr. Marchi: That's not what the press releases say.

Mr. Jelinek: I see my hon. friend, the Liberal critic on multiculturalism, who is afraid to rise in the House to ask me questions on multiculturalism—

Mr. Marchi: You've never answered one.

Mr. Jelinek: He hides behind press releases and statements so that people cannot answer him on this matter. He is a member of the Party that has not taken any positive steps in making it possible for visible minorities to be hired by Government agencies or businesses.

Mr. Marchi: You don't have to teach us anything.

Mr. Jelinek: The Hon. Member should listen. Perhaps he will be in a position to learn a little bit about what the proper direction is when he sees what the Government is doing, has done and will continue to do for the benefit of all Canadians.

Mr. Marchi: Sit down. You're a shame.

Mr. Jelinek: I know that I am running out of time. Ten minutes is a very short time. I would like to close by saying that this is only one step toward providing equal opportunity to all Canadians. The Equality Now Report, the report of the Special Parliamentary Committee on Visible Minorities in Canadian Society, was tabled some time ago and I am proud to report on behalf of the Government that out of the 80 recommendations in that report, the Government has already begun to implement 50 and the rest are being worked on right now. I look forward to working with the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism toward implementing with the help of that committee and others within the ethnocultural community the remaining 30 recommendations of Equality Now.

The positive steps taken by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) in announcing further opportunities for visible minorities on September 9 were yet another step in the right direction. Hon. Members will know that we have come a long way. This legislation is yet another step toward providing to all Canadians the equal opportunity in which we on this side of the House believe belongs to them. We still have a long way to go. I am not suggesting that this is the final means of reaching our goal.

Mr. Marchi: You're going backwards.

Mr. Jelinek: However, this is a major step in the right direction, a step that no previous federal Government has had the guts to take. This is only one of many that will finally provide to all Canadians that equality of opportunity which is so necessary in a free and great country like Canada.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are no questions or comments permitted.

Mr. Marchi: Is the Minister hiding behind that?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Minister who just spoke indicated that this legislation is just one step, but it is a major step. It is not that at all. It is no movement whatsoever when one comes to consider the needs of aboriginal peoples in the country. What bothers me most about the Bill which is before us is the unsubstantiated fanfare which has accompanied its introduction. If Hon. Members look at the press release from the Minister they will see that it states that Bill C-62 will remove employment barriers and provide equality for a number of target groups. Included among the target groups are the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

If we go back to June of 1985 and look at the working paper on the employment equity legislation we will see that it makes an even larger claim for the legislation which is now before the House. It says that this will be a major step—and the Minister who just spoke repeated that—for certain target groups, including aboriginal peoples. To do what? To ensure that they could participate fully in the economic life of this nation? To describe this rather thin and not very substantial Bill as being a bold, new move is really stretching the credulity of this House. It is far-fetched to think or believe that this Bill will provide anything approximating equality for native people and that it will provide them with the opportunity to participate fully in the economic life of the country.

This piece of legislation is so meek and mild that I think it reveals on the part of the Minister a failure to comprehend the grave and difficult problems which Canada's aboriginal peoples face. They are striving to achieve economic parity with other Canadians. How much more comprehensible are the conclusions of Judge Abella in her report. She demonstrated very well that she had grasped the magnitude of the problem, something which Bill C-62 fails to do entirely. The data which Judge Abella looked at indicated clearly that the native people of the country have very low participation rates in the labour force. They have high unemployment in many communities, in fact, in excess of 70 per cent and sometimes even as high as 90 per cent. She indicates that there are low levels of education and that they are further restricted by geographical concentration in rural and remote areas of the country. Therefore, their access to employment opportunities is limited and difficult.

In the Minister's introductory speech with respect to this Bill she argued that native people have been refused job interviews not because of their competence but because of the colour of their skin. That is a somewhat shallow and superficial analysis of a very serious and complex problem. I ask the House: Why does this Bill do nothing for native people? It does nothing because it presupposes that native people will get as far as an interview. This Bill begins to help when an interview is granted; but the vast majority of aboriginal people in the country never get inside the building, much less past the receptionist, in order to have that interview about which the Minister speaks. The Bill is not related to the situation in the country with respect to aboriginal peoples in any sense at all.

The lead as to what we have to do has been given to us by Judge Abella. In her report the talks about equality in employment for native people. She says it means effective and relevant education and training. It means having a primary voice in the design of education, training and funding programs which have been established for their benefit. It means meaningful support systems and the delivery of services through native-run institutions. Even if Bill C-62 had the ability to make every Canadian colour-blind it would not in any way help Indian, Inuit or Metis people in the country discover that they now have full equality in employment opportunities. They would not then have all of the barriers removed. They would not then be able to participate fully in the economic life of the nation. The emphasis, the need and the problem lies elsewhere.

In making the claim that this Bill will take these important and necessary social steps for aboriginal peoples the Minister is misleading us in the extreme. The emphasis must be on education and on training. The emphasis must be on programs which are designed and controlled by aboriginal peoples themselves with the necessary funding support in place to ensure that they can be successful.

I have to agree with my hon. friend from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East who spoke earlier in this debate when he said that Bill C-62 is a small step in the right direction. Perhaps for some of the other target groups it may be a very small step in the right direction. I tell this House that it is no step at all, it is no movement whatsoever for the aboriginal peoples of the country. It does not implement the Abella recommendations, nor does it satisfy the designated group which is referred to in the Bill—the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

In her report Judge Abella spoke about the poor economic conditions among native people. She spoke about an unemployment rate which is more than twice that of other Canadians. She spoke about a sense of anger among native people in their desire for self-determination. I quote just one sentence from her report which states:

> Native people do not have anything that begins to approximate equality in a country they inhabited long before any others.

If we want to include aboriginal people in a Bill with respect to employment equity what we really need is a Bill designed especially for them. We need an access to employment Bill for native people which would contain some entirely different provisions from what we have in Bill C-62. Such a Bill would have an improved strategy of offering and providing education to native people. Such a Bill would be tabled by the Government after consultation with native people. It would take them in the direction of reviewing strategies and programs for the training of native people. A Bill such as the one I am proposing would make sure that adequate financial resources are provided.

I cannot begin to tell the House the degree of apprehension which exists among aboriginal peoples as a result of the Buffalo Jump Report which proposed taking some $350 million out of the support system program upon which they depend for their well-being and their future.

The previous Government introduced a Native Economic Development Program. Since this Government assumed office there has hardly been a single application approved under that $345 million program. There is a fear and a concern that there will be an announcement in the near future when the task force of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) completes its work to the effect that this program will go by the boards and that something of lesser proportions, something much less in the way of accessibility, will take its place.

Thus I have to say that Bill C-62 is not a Bill which I can support in principle because it does not do what it claims to do. It claims to give employment equity to aboriginal peoples and allow them to participate fully in the economic life of the nation. I say nonsense; it will do nothing of the kind. Therefore, in principle, I am not able to support the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being four o'clock, pursuant to the order made earlier this day, the House will now revert to statements by Ministers. The Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney).

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT POLICY—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, five years ago this week, the previous Liberal Government introduced in this House the National Energy Program. It was a program which was presented in terms of opportunities, fairness and security. Instead, it was an unprecedented exercise in market intervention, Government waste, discrimination and confiscatory and retroactive measures. It robbed Canadians of opportunities and very seriously impaired the economic and energy potential of this country.

The Progressive Conservative Party has always supported the goals of the NEP, the goals of opportunity, fairness and energy security. But we had adamantly opposed the measures in the NEP by which these goals were sought and the manner in which it discriminated against regions of the country. Like many Canadians affected by the NEP, we deplored the way it was developed, in secrecy; we resented the way it was introduced, unilaterally, without any consultations, and we opposed the way it was implemented, overriding legitimate concerns and criticisms.

In a very constructive reaction to the NEP policies of the previous Government, the Progressive Conservative Party caucus released its energy policy principles in Prince Albert in July of 1984, and again in Halifax in August of that year. These were energy resource as an engine of economic growth; energy self-sufficiency; increased Canadian participation; fair treatment of energy consumers and producers, and co-operation between the federal and provincial Governments and the industry. Canadians were presented with a choice on energy policy in the last election campaign and they voted for a new approach—they voted for an end to the National Energy Program.

Therefore, it is a privilege and an honour for me to announce that on Monday, October 28, when we marked the fifth anniversary of the NEP, was the last anniversary of the NEP.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: During our first year in office, we have worked hard to implement our Prince Albert principles to change Canadian energy policies. The energy initiatives we have taken to date in the Atlantic and Western Accords, and the measures I will be announcing today, mark the end of the NEP and its replacement by a fair, non-discriminatory and constructive Conservative energy policy.

Our agenda for change was established by the Prime Minister's early emphasis on national reconciliation and economic renewal. We believe our energy resources should be used to unify Canadians not to divide them.

The first change, which was struck last February, was implemented in the Atlantic Accord with Newfoundland following an agreement in principle which we developed while still in opposition. For the first time, the historic Accord provides for revenue sharing on offshore oil and gas resources on the same basis as if they were on land. It is based on the equality of Governments in shared management, while providing for the national interest in oil self-sufficiency.

The Accord is creating new opportunities for the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador which were denied by the previous Liberal Government. It creates investment, employment and energy benefits for all Canadians.

Only a month and a half after the Atlantic Accord, the Government announced the Western Accord with the Provinces of British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan. The Western Accord marked a major break with the past. Oil prices were deregulated. Oil trade was freed up to provide strong encouragement for investment. A long list of federal taxes was eliminated, taxes which negatively affected Canadian energy producers and consumers. As well, the unfair PGRT tax and the discriminatory PIP program were phased out.

The Western Accord reflected our approach to relying less on Government hand-outs and intervention, and more on the opportunities provided in the market-place.

The reaction to these initiatives has been very encouraging. Oil exploration in western Canada is now higher than at any time in our history. Over-all oil and gas investment intentions are up by about $2 billion, more than a 25 per cent increase over last year. This investment is providing energy security and economic benefits—jobs—right across Canada. As well, deregulated oil markets are creating opportunities for both producers and consumers. I believe market-oriented natural gas pricing can also provide balanced producer-consumer benefits and we have worked hard in the last few weeks to strike that balance with both the producing and the consuming provinces.

I am proud to announce that earlier this afternoon we reached an agreement in principle with the western provinces.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: And I am honoured to recognize in the Gallery two of the western Energy Ministers who made it possible; John Zaozirny of Alberta and Stephen Rogers of British Columbia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: Building on the principles of the Atlantic and Western Accords, we can now announce another major energy policy initiative relating to Canada's energy frontiers. The frontiers, the offshore and northern regions beyond provincial boundaries, hold vast oil and gas resource potential and can contribute important energy and economic benefits to Canadians. However, oil and gas exploration in Canada's frontier regions is now guided by the NEPs Canada Oil and Gas Act, one of the most controversial pieces of legislation in Canadian history. It introduced the retroactive Crown share and an extremely interventionist management regime for the frontier.

Our Government has decided to replace this NEP legislation with an entirely new Act, the Canada Petroleum Resources Act. I am now tabling, Mr. Speaker, a public document entitled Canada's Energy Frontiers—a Framework for Investment and Jobs, which reviews the policy initiatives which will underly our new legislation.

I can review these briefly. First, the NEP legislation provided for a retroactive and confiscatory Crown share, the so-called "back-in", which did so much damage to Canada's investment climate and to our international reputation. There will be no Crown share in our legislation.

Second, the NEP established a management regime which was highly interventionist, placing greater reliance on bureaucratic processes than on market forces. Our legislation will reflect an entirely new management approach. It will reflect our emphasis on market solutions. For example, exploration rights will be issued on the basis of a clear, best bid system, which is free of bureaucratic interference while providing for specific regional adaptation.

Third, the NEP legislation provided special treatment for federal Crown corporations, including Petro-Canada. Under our regime, Petro-Canada's conduct will be governed by competition in the market-place, not by preferential legislative treatment.

Fourth, the NEP legislation also included a number of extraordinary ministerial powers to direct industry activity on the frontier, none of which was subject to appeal. Our legislation is based on fairness. It will permit the excise of ministerial authority where necessary to ensure that the national interest is met. However, the extent of this power will be reduced to be in line with international standards, and will in all cases provide for appeal.

Fifth, the NEP legislation required 50 per cent Canadian ownership of frontier production. If this was not met, the legislation allowed for expropriation without compensation even for discoveries which were made prior to the NEP. Our legislation will require 50 per cent Canadian ownership in frontier energy projects but will not be applied retroactively. Any sale will be at the market value of related assets. There will be no Government expropriation without compensation and no fire sale prices.

While fair to all investors, our approach will provide opportunities for increased Canadian ownership. This approach is working. Canadian ownership of the oil and gas industry rose to 47 per cent from 42 per cent within the last year. This represents more progress in one year than in the previous three years under the NEP.

As well, Mobil Canada has agreed to our request to offer for sale sufficient portions of Hibernia and Venture frontier projects to ensure that our 50 per cent ownership objective can be met, even for these 1979 discoveries.

Finally, my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and I want to complete the task of fundamentally changing the NEP fiscal regime as it applies to the frontier. The NEP provided for very rich Government grants on exploration while legislating a very high government tax take on eventual production, including a royalty regime which was not profit-sensitive; the 25 per cent Crown share of which I spoke earlier and, of course, the PGRT, which was a tax on revenue, not on profit. In effect, generous Government grants promoted the drilling for dollars while taxes discouraged commercial production.

The Government believes that investment in Canada can best be encouraged by rewarding success rather than by subsidizing effort through Government grants. That is why we announced the phase-out of the costly PIP grants and the PGRT tax in the Western Accord. Consistent with this approach the frontier royalty regime will be replaced with a profit-sensitive system that encourages investment. It will be modelled after the Alberta royalty regime that applies to oil sands projects and enhanced oil recovery. Royalty takes will be modest in early years, but will rise when projects become more profitable. As well, royalties will be subject to further consultation and negotiation on a project-by-project basis. As well, the Minister of Finance will establish a 25 per cent exploration tax credit for high cost exploration. The credit will be refundable and will apply across Canada to exploration expenses above $5 million a well.

We expect frontier oil and gas investment to amount to about $1 billion to $1.5 billion a year for the next several years. Of course, this could rise substantially with an early oil or gas discovery. It will certainly rise as the Hibernia oil and Venture gas projects near development. Together these two projects represent a $10 billion investment in Canada's energy future. The tax credit will be available to the end of 1990. It is intended to help bridge the gap between PIP availability and the timing of expected frontier development which will create new commercial incentives for frontier investment.

A royalty investment credit will also be applied to frontier exploration costs of up to $5 million per well. The credit will be applied against royalties otherwise payable within the region. Of course, under the terms of the Atlantic Accord, the responsibility royalties in the Newfoundland off-shore has been transferred to the provincial Government. Similar treatment may be provided in other jurisdictions, for example in Nova Scotia where discussions are taking place to improve Nova Scotia's off-shore regime. The new regime will be based upon equality in management and will meet the very special needs and opportunities of the Nova Scotia off-shore. The new legislation will enable regional priorities to be readily accommodated in coastal provinces and in the North. My colleague, the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie), will be discussing how these policy initiatives will be implemented in the North.

Over all, Mr. Speaker, the frontier energy initiatives I have outlined today will establish a sound, internationally competitive framework for exploration and development. Interventionist road blocks to investment have been replaced by a positive, market-oriented management regime. Elimination of the Crown Share will remove an unnecessary and unfair fiscal burden from the industry. The improved royalty regime and the refundable exploration tax credit will attract investment. As well, the elimination of the PGRT in the Western Accord has improved the commercial viability of off-shore energy developments and has left the industry well placed to pursue the frontier investments Canada needs.

I do not expect these changes to ensure the financial health of all companies in the frontier regions. However, our policies will reward enterprise and establish clear rules for an industry ready to invest in Canada. Companies that structured their activities primarily to take advantage of Government grants will have to adjust to our new approach. I expect they will show the same ingenuity in adjusting to our regime as they did in adjusting to the Liberal Government's grant scheme. The grandfathering of frontier PIP commitments until the end of 1987 will help in this transition. I expect the industry as a whole, and investors generally, to be very supportive of the changes I have announced today. We have established a solid framework for jobs and investment, a framework that will provide energy security and economic benefits for all Canadians.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 47(2) I would like to table in both official languages a copy of Canada's Energy Frontiers A Framework for Investment and Jobs.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has announced here today is going to prove to be a disaster for frontier exploration in the country. It is going to devastate what the Liberal Party, when it was in power, tried to do when it was in power to create a security of supply and to develop these rich resources in the frontier, particularly in the off-shore.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that the replacement for the Petroleum Incentive Program would be world-competitive. We have known for some time that the Minister of Finance is not in the real world, but regardless what world he is in, surely there is no way one could say that this replacement is world competitive. I think that the true sentiments of the Minister of Finance were best expressed in a speech in Calgary on June 1 to the Independent Petroleum Association of Canada and the Canadian Petroleum Association when he said: "I would caution you, we are interested in moving very much to a market oriented system with a minimum of tax incentives. When it comes to special measures to encourage northern and off-shore exploration we need to be pushed by you". That is an understatement. There is no incentive here that will have a meaningful bearing on the promotion of frontier exploration in Canada.

On November 22, 1984, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that her goal was to prevent any lull in exploration. Due to her hesitation to provide this replacement and do anything constructive, and now due to this minimal provision, there will not be any off-shore activity in the country, Mr. Speaker. It is going to be a disaster. The Government is making the energy sector an offer it cannot accept. There is no risk of the Government spending any money to encourage frontier exploration because there will be no one taking it up on this. There may be a few people participating in exploration, but it will be very, very few.

What the Minister has said about her expectations means as much as it meant when she announced the Western Accord and that the off-shore projects were protected. She said that she had received assurances of reinvestment of $800 million a year from those companies working in the Atlantic off-shore. The removal of five different taxes meant that those companies would invest more money on the east coast. Well, Mr. Speaker, we have seen what has been invested on the east coast. It is much less than was ever invested previously. In fact, participation in the off-shore has been reduced and the projections for 1986 are even worse. At best they expect three drill rig years of activity off Nova Scotia and, at best, four drill rig years of activity off Newfoundland.

What will this do for small Canadian companies, Mr. Speaker? From the jargon used by the press to describe what "tax credit" means, I can only hope that at the very least the Minister is telling companies participating in frontier exploration that if they cannot use the 25 per cent expended on frontier explorations and therefore do not have to pay taxes and cannot claim a tax deduction, they can receive a grant from the Government in the same amount as the reduction of taxes they would have received had they been in a position to pay taxes. If not, none of the small Canadian corporations will be able to take advantage of this offer.

Mr. Tobin: They may as well have given them a mobility grant, they're all leaving anyway.

Mr. MacLellan: There is going to be bidding for the rights to drill on these particular lands. This will be to the highest bidder. We will see who has the deepest pockets and it will be the multinational oil companies and perhaps Petro-Canada and one or two other Canadian companies. That is the activity we will see on frontier development.

• (1620)

There will not be the previous opportunities for small Canadian companies to be able to participate in this very valuable part of the country's future.

Mr. McDermid: That is nonsense and you know it.

Mr. MacLellan: I listened to the Government's drivel, at least Government Members can listen to my common sense. The Canadianization mentioned by the Minister will literally be ransacked. She stated that an increase in Canadianization from 42 per cent to 47 per cent was more than the Liberal Government had achieved in the past three years. From 1980 to 1984, the Liberal Government increased Canadianization from 28 per cent to 42 per cent, or a 14 per cent increase in that period. That is a very good record, not even considering the fact that the Liberal Government gave birth to this very important concept.

We will not talk about the cost to the federal Government in tax breaks to realize that increase from 42 per cent to 47 per cent.

The legislation will require 50 per cent Canadian ownership in frontier energy projects. Who will be able to afford becoming part of this 50 per cent Canadian ownership? While Petro-Canada and perhaps one or two other companies may take part, how will small Canadian companies be able to participate in this very important part of our future? In her statement the Minister said:

> Mobil Canada has agreed to our request to offer for sale sufficient portions of the Hibernia and Venture frontier projects to ensure that our 50 per cent ownership objective can be met, even for these 1979 discoveries.

It is no wonder that they are prepared to sell. Everyone will want to sell their frontier interest as a result of the Minister's announcement today. Who will the Minister entice into frontier exploration with that 25 per cent offer? It is an offer that cannot be accepted because it will not make any meaningful contribution. We will see a reduction and an eventual phasing out of future exploration on the frontier, including the offshore.

Not only will the Minister's provisions cause devastation, she has also announced a sunset clause, making these available only to 1990. Venture will not come into production by 1990.

Miss Carney: Why not?

Mr. MacLellan: Because of what the Minister is doing in these provisions. The Government is providing a puny fiscal regime. The partners in Hibernia have said that it will not come on stream until 1992, yet the Minister is removing what meager, paltry sum, fiscal regime and incentive that she is offering today. It is ludicrous.

How will she compensate Newfoundland and Nova Scotia for eliminating the back-in for the Canada Lands? How will she sooth those two Tory provincial Governments and soften their ruffled feathers, not to mention their apoplexy when they read this statement? They will go into actual convulsions when they read about the future of the projects upon which they have placed so much hope.

The Minister and the Government says that the frontier royalty regime will be replaced with a profit sensitive system that encourage investment. It is not the federal Government's royalty regime. The federal Government stipulated whose royalties they are in the Atlantic Accord. They are not the royalties of the federal Government.

What is the position of Newfoundland with respect to this profit sensitive arrangement? Newfoundland is told that they have royalties under the Atlantic Accord, but the Minister states: "Royalties will be subject to further consultation and negotiation on a project-by-project basis". What gives the Minister the right to do this?

I find it rather ironic that the Minister, at the end of her statement, has provided her own epitaph on this project. She said:

> I do not expect these changes to ensure the financial health of all companies in the frontier regions.

If there ever was an understatement, that is it.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to comment on this important matter on behalf of the New Democratic Party. First, I find the nature and the timing of this announcement very ironic. This is the day after the Auditor General has brought down a report that damns the hiding of the real cost of government largess to its corporate friends, via tax expenditures. The Auditor General exposed another billion dollar government tax boondoggle to a large oil corporation. The Minister stands in the House to try to sell what is, in effect, another tax boondoggle. We will have little control over that, particularly when one considers what the Auditor General said yesterday; which is as follows:

> The concealed nature of selective tax provisions means that too often they escape the scrutiny of MPs. It can be seen that I was not exaggerating when I said last year that tax expenditures represent a huge hidden budget in the financial affairs of Canada.

Although the PIP was a very rich program we knew that these grants were targeted and we knew how much they cost. For that reason, I find it ironic for the Government to turn to this other system.

The measures announced by the Minister today are basically flawed. We should consider the history of offshore oil exploration in Canada. There is a book entitled The Politics of Energy, written by Bruce Doern and Glen Toner. It disregards the myth which the Minister has been expressing about the National Energy Program and deals with the reality of energy politics and energy exploration and development in Canada.

The areas thought to contain the majority of Canada's undiscovered oil and gas reserves are in Canada Lands, meaning the offshore and in the North. In 1980, despite 20 years of exploration permits and generous tax allowances for exploration, relatively little activity occurred in Canada Lands. Only three fields were in production.

It was precisely because of the demonstrated failure of the old tax incentive system to foster development that the Canadian Government—a Liberal Government at that time—designed an up-front system of incentives, together with shared decision-making, to ensure that development occurred in Canada Lands.

History shows us that the old system of tax incentives did not work on Canada Lands. However, the Government is returning to the old system. Therefore, especially considering that the world oil price is going down, the program announced by the Minister today is simply flawed and will not work. No matter what myth she creates or rhetoric she uses, this program will mean that we will not have security of supply, especially from investment and development on the East Coast and in the Arctic. This is a short-sighted package. It will not be rich enough to keep frontier activity alive.

If we are going to ensure security of oil supply for Canada in the oil shortage which I anticipate will occur in the 1990s, we must encourage frontier exploration now, not when the crisis is upon us.

Third, the economies of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland are already in desperate straits. For all its faults, at least PIP represented a massive injection of cash into that area. As I said, there was a target, a particular area and a particular purpose with these grants. The Federal Government should use the money that it will save from eliminating the PIP grants at least to announce a further program or proposal that would provide more money to the Altantic Provinces.

Since the Minister did not do so in her speech, I will ask her to explain the effect of the elimination of the 25 per cent Crown share. Considering that Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, as part of their energy agreements with the federal Government, have an interest in that share, what do they say, Mr. Speaker? The Minister never said anything about that. What do they say about giving up the Crown share?

• (1630)

Where is the Canada share? What about the Conservative promises? The Minister made reference to the Prince Albert meeting of the Conservative caucus on July 5, 1984 from which we have this statement:

> We will set aside the retroactive "back-in", which is expropriation without compensation and has done so much to damage our relationship with international and Canadian investors. Instead, we will introduce a "Canadian share" which will encourage Canadian private and public ownership of oil and gas production on discoveries made after October 28, 1981.

I may have missed something, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the Minister will explain to me but I have not caught exactly where the Canadian share is in this announcement today. Is what the Minister is announcing the Canadian share or did the Minister have in mind transferring the moneys that were in the back-in provision, the 25 per cent Crown share and giving it to Canadian companies in a Canadian share?

I say to the Minister that what the Canadian Government did was to back off in this package. The Government retreated in the face of American pressure. The Minister knows that there was a letter from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to her saying: "Pat, don't put this thing through the Cabinet. Let's check with the Americans first. Let's see what George Shultz has to say." In fact, the Minister was terrified of the Americans who said that the previous program was discrimination because it favoured Canadian companies over American companies. The Government has backed off with respect to the Canada share which it originally had in mind as a private discriminatory break to Canadian companies.

What is perhaps a tragedy in the dismantling of the PIP system is that some Canadian private companies will suffer. To get into the offshore exploration is a very expensive business. It is tied up with some large American companies, such as Mobil. What the PIP grants did to Canadian companies was discriminate over American companies and that is why the Americans objected. These grants enabled the number two level Canadian companies to get into the frontiers. As a result of this system we will see that these Canadian companies will not be able to participate.

Will Canadian firms, so recently enticed into Canada Lands by the PIP grants—by the carrot and the stick part of that program—be financially able to stay the course that Ottawa planned for them? It is very important for the capacity of second line Canadian firms to be major players in the development stage of the Canada Lands. They got into the exploration stage. We want them to be part of the development stage. This is where the program is flawed.

There is nothing here about the North, Mr. Speaker. I would like to hear further details about that.

Miss Carney: Yes, there is.

Mr. Waddell: Regarding the repeal of the Crown share, the federal Government should retain a share of lands large enough, especially in the North, to provide for the negotiation of a fractional interest by the aboriginal peoples in the North. I know the Minister has promised an announcement by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) and we will look for that.

Let me sum up by saying a number of things about the program. First, the Crown share was a quid pro quo for the rich PIP grants that were given. It was a share to the people of Canada. That share has been taken away from Canadians. What is the matter with the people of Canada getting 25 per cent of the action? After all, they are our resources. They do not belong to Mobil in New York. They belong to us.

We allowed foreign and Canadian firms to develop these resources but they are basically our resources. We have a right to get a fair share. Look what Norway and what Britain did in the development of the North Sea Oil.

The Conservatives have got carried away withr hetoric here and missed the fact that the international oil industry was feeding them. It is a shameful retreat from a tentative step—I do not agree with all of the National Energy Program, indeed, I voted against most of it—for us to get control of energy in our own house.

Second, the exploration permits are to be opened up to the best bid system. That will clearly favour multi-national oil companies.

Third, a 35 per cent exploration PIP grant would be equal to a 50 per cent exploration tax credit, but this is a 25 per cent credit. That means the equivalent of an 18 per cent PIP grant. That gives you some idea of the diminution—

An Hon. Member: Down from 90 cents.

Mr. Waddell: —down from 90 cents, my colleague tells me.

Fourth, the Minister talks about following the free market. I have listened to the rhetoric. The world market in oil is not really a free market. It is controlled by some large companies.

Miss Carney: That is why it is declining.

Mr. Waddell: You are in there with big players, Mr. Speaker. To speak this nonsense that somehow little Canadian companies can play with Mobil and some countries is crazy. If we had followed the free market, we would have no Venture field.

Miss Carney: Venture was before PIP, Ian.

Mr. Waddell: The Government sent Petro-Canada to explore. PIP grants were given for companies to explore. It is ridiculous for the Minister to make these kinds of statements. If we had followed the free market, there would have been no real investment in Atlantic Canada. If we had followed the free market, we would not have any encouragement or incentives. By having incentives, you are not following the free market, Mr. Speaker.

Let us get rid of this rhetoric. Let us get rid of the rhetoric on the National Energy Program. We are seeing an orgy by rewriting Canadian history. The way Conservatives are trying to rewrite history it is worse than Stalin. I am not kidding. The Conservatives are trying to rewrite the history of the energy program, saying that it is responsible for home foreclosures, bank failures, vacant office buildings and so on.

The National Energy Program has had a mixed result. The National Energy Program got a better deal in terms of private and public investment. It was not a radical program. Its goal of fairness, security and Canadianization were accepted by everyone. That it has had mixed results is what you can say about the National Energy Program. Instead the Conservatives are returning to the bad old days to a system that does not work, and historically has not worked. We look at the Conservative energy program and the Minister says a long list of tax is being eliminated. However, I have seen gas prices going up.

[Translation]

I was in Quebec recently and noticed that gas prices are higher than they were under the previous administration. Is that the new energy program of the Government of Canada: more taxes, higher prices, closed refineries? As far as I am concerned it is not a good program, the energy program of the Progressive Conservative Party is a disaster.

[English]

Let me conclude by saying that the Government has taken a tremendous gamble with the short-term future of Atlantic Canada, and in the long term with the whole future of energy supply for the country. I cannot say that there will be no exploration. I do not want to say that. I would like to see exploration. When I see falling oil prices and a retreat from the grants and incentives of the Petroleum Incentives Program, I find it hard to believe that we will continue this pace of exploration in Altantic Canada. If that does not happen, the Government owes Atlantic Canada some additional help. As to the details of the program, we will discuss them in committee.

● (1640)

However, as I said and to sum up, I think we are retreating in the face of American pressure and the myths which the Conservative Party has bought from the big oil industry and returning to a program which essentially did not work before 1980, with the hope, prayer and gamble that suddenly it will work in 1985. I do not think that is a very smart energy program.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With Your Honour's indulgence, I just want to clarify what I understand, that the new rules now in effect in the House have set up a system where only one Member from each Party may comment on a statement of a Minister and where the Minister is not obligated to answer questions. Is that correct?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) is in fact correct. There was an amendment to the Standing Orders of the House which was adopted unanimously by the House in June and came into effect on September 9, 1985.

Mr. Waddell: Well, what about unanimous consent?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am referring to Standing Order 19(4) which provides:

A spokesman for each of the parties in opposition to the government may comment briefly thereon—

That eliminates the question period which existed prior.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. When we look at today's statement, as important as it is, and how it impacts upon the economies of many regions of the country, particularly the Atlantic region, we see that the new Standing Order was obviously not well thought out. Obviously it is counter-productive and counter-democratic and reduces accountability.

I want to voice my objection and say to the House that we ought to review a policy which allows the Minister to make a major policy statement which negatively impacts upon major regions and to walk away from the House with no requirement to answer questions and with no ability for Members to speak their minds. That is ridiculous.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but perhaps they may be representations which the Hon. Member would like to make before the Procedure Committee. Is the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) seeking the floor on the same point of order?

Mr. MacLellan: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The way it looks right now, no one will be asking the Minister questions, unless she comes back into the House. If she is running away to avoid these questions, that is certainly a travesty—

Mr. Tobin: We can seek unanimous consent.

Mr. MacLellan: —and certainly a slap in the face to the House of Commons.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well, we will return to Orders of the Day.

Mr. Tobin: The House can do anything it wants with unanimous consent.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very glad of a chance to speak on this Bill—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), but the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys is seeking the floor on a point of order.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We cannot allow this sort of behaviour to continue. If the Minister is in the lobby, would someone get her—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the rules indicate that no questions are allowed after the comments by the Members for each Party. There can be, if someone asks.

Mr. Tobin: Well, seek unanimous consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do I understand that the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys is seeking unanimous consent to ask questions of the Minister?

Mr. MacLellan: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister is not present, so the Chair cannot.

Mr. Keeper: She is hiding behind the curtain.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Spadina.

Mr. Heap: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. If Liberal Members have finished with their little game, I would like to get on and speak against this Bill, Bill C-62. It is a bad Bill because it pretends to do something very important, something that people have asked for, and it does not. The stated purpose of the Bill is in Clause 2:

> The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the workplace so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability—

That is good, that is a good statement of goal. The trouble is that the Bill does not do it; it does not come near to doing it. In Clause 4 we find this:

> An employer shall implement employment equity—

That sounds good.

> —by
> (a) identifying and eliminating each of the employer's employment practices, not otherwise authorized by a law, that results in employment barriers against persons in designated groups—

That sounds good, and it also says:

> —instituting such positive policies and practices and making such reasonable accommodation as will ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a degree of representation in the various positions of employment with the employer that is proportionate to their representation—

Unfortunately that is just hot air and nothing more, because there is absolutely nothing in the Bill to do more than ask what has already been asked for many years, namely, that employers should change their stripes, change their spots, and cease to discriminate for the sake of their own advantage.

It goes on to say that they will make reports. It offers a penalty if they do not make the reports, but it nowhere suggests any way of compelling them to do what Clause 4 says they shall do. In other words, if an employer goes on discriminating against women, against Canadian native people, against Canadian blacks or immigrants from the Caribbean, against handicapped people, against any group, so long as he makes reports—and there is no guideline for the reports; the reports do not have to be true; they do not have to make any sense—and sends in a piece of paper with his signature, he has complied with the law. That is a sick joke.

There is nothing in here about mandatory affirmative action which all the groups have asked for, all the reports have recommended, including the Abella report of which the Minister made so much last March. She led us to believe that her law was going to follow the Abella report. The Abella report said: "It is useless to ask for voluntary compliance", which is what this Bill asks for. There has to be mandatory compliance, which means targets and penalties for people who refuse to meet or try to meet those targets. There is no mandatory affirmative action in this Bill. It is an excuse for not doing mandatory affirmative action.

There is also, by the way, no place at all for the recognized labour movement of the country to participate with the workers and the management in any enterprise, in trying to make sure that these goals are achieved. The main force in Canada now for bringing this to public attention has been the labour movement, and this Bill just quietly excludes them from all the action.

There is not even contract compliance, the idea that if the Government is going to give a contract to a private employer, they tell the employer first, before he bids on it: "Look, we won't even consider your bid unless you undertake firmly as part of the contract to bring in employment equity". That is the easiest excuse or the easiest opportunity this Government has, and they are not using it.

The people in Spadina have a great deal of experience with the kind of discrimination and the kind of oppression that this Bill was supposed to address, the kind of oppression that the Abella report did address. We have Canadian-born black people, many of them whose ancestors came here long before most of the others in the country, long before most of the Members in this House, perhaps, and they are still being discriminated against because of their colour. We have immigrants from the Caribbean, from South America, from Africa and from Asia who are being discriminated against, who are being made to do the low-paid, rough jobs—labourers. Within the police force one can see it—very rarely a dark-skinned policeman. But, what about the green hornets, the parking officers? Those are mostly big, tall, healthy, dark-skinned people. In other words, there are two classes of people for the police in Toronto according to colour.

What about the Indians who are off the reserve in Toronto? We have them within a few blocks; we have an Indian centre within a few blocks of our office, but I see them all over on the streets of downtown Toronto, especially in the poorer districts because they are poor.

I want to refer to what has been mentioned before but needs to be repeated—information I have from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), regarding the situation of employment among the Indians, in which he says that job seeking is the single most important reason for leaving the reserve. On the reserves, employment rates vary but they tend to average 60 per cent to 75 per cent and often go over 90 per cent. Unemployment tends to be especially high among the youth of the Indians on the reserve, and that is expected to continue for another decade.

● (1650)

The 1981 census shows that the average Indian yearly income was only 69 per cent of the Canadian average. No wonder Indians are forced off the reserve into the cities, but in the cities they are amongst the poorest and most discriminated against of our people.

We have many immigrants, as I said. In the Spadina riding in particular we have many women immigrants who are doubly discriminated against such as the ones who clean the offices for the big, fancy oil companies and the banks in downtown Toronto. They do the lowest jobs in the hospitals. While the doctors can go on strike for higher pay, and do when it suits them, if the floor cleaner goes on strike she can be thrown in jail. She can be fired without recourse, and it has happened. At least it has happened to the leaders of the union. They work as clerks; they work as waitresses in the downtown restaurants serving the people who don't live downtown but find their wealthy employment downtown. They work as domestic servants not only for the people downtown but for the richer people uptown, and they are discriminated against.

I have a man, John, I will not mention his last name, who has come into my office many times in the last two years. He has several university degrees and he has been seeking professional work. He was written and applied to banks and other appropriate companies because of his education. He has aplied to the Human Rights Commission in Ontario for redress. He has applied to the federal Human Rights Commission, and he was given the run-around. By the time it has gone through the commission and they have written back to him it is out of date. Then they say, well, put in another application. The trouble is that he is black. Otherwise he is a very competent and acceptable employee.

These people are subsidizing the rich corporations through their low wages and through their taxes. They clean the oil companies' offices and the banks' offices; they do the menial work in the restaurants and hospitals; they manufacture clothing; they get the lowest wages but in proportion to their income they often pay higher taxes than the very companies that they work for.

The Bill has been condemned by a group that represents a majority of the people of Canada. On October 9 a group consisting of Chaviva Hosek of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women; Navin Parekh of the National Ethnocultural Council; Jim Derksen of the Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped; Carol Tator of the Urban Alliance on Race Relations; Linda Gallant of the Canadian Labour Congress; Joan Brown-Hicks of the Canadian Congress for Learning Opportunities for Women and Orville Endicott of the Canadian Association for Community Living which used to be the Association for the Handicapped gave a press conference.

These representative groups, the very people whom this Bill was intended to serve, these representative groups, have condemned this Bill for fundamentally failing to introduce anything in the way of mandatory affirmative action.

I urge the Minister to withdraw this Bill in the interests of not wasting the time of this House any further with her fraud—this fraudulent Bill—and bring in a Bill which seriously addresses the goal she undertook to address which is stated in the first two sections of the Bill, and denied in the rest of it.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this is on debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, in discussing with my colleagues the situation regarding this debate and the fact that I sat here a few moments with another Member from Newfoundland and Members from Atlantic Canada while the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) ruined our exploration on the east coast of Canada—ruined it—

An Hon. Member: How is that for equality?

Mr. Baker: —and would not remain in this chamber—no unanimous consent to ask her questions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could I ask the Member please to get back to the Bill at hand?

Mr. Baker: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will get back to the Bill at hand and back to equity. Because of that, I move:

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Rossi: I second it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion is the following one. Mr. Baker, seconded by Mr. Rossi, moves:

That this House do now adjourn.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

And the bells having rung:

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 19(4), it being 6.40 p.m., the motion before the House has lapsed and therefore, pursuant to Standing Order 9(1), this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11.00 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.40 p.m.

POINT OF ORDER

APOLOGY TO MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of State (Small Businesses) (Mr. Bissonnette), on a point of order.

Mr. Bissonnette: Mr. Speaker, it seems that the morning papers reported some reference I made to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), comments which are not on the record as such but which were heard via the sound system of the House of Commons. This morning, I immediately got in touch with the Hon. Member to express my sincere regrets and to apologize.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore wish to make a public apology to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East and formally withdraw the comments attributed to me, although they do not appear in the official record of the proceedings of the House of Commons.

The House resumed from Wednesday, October 30 consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am concerned that we have to join together in this debate on such an important Bill when only this week the all-Party committee, which involved members of the Conservative Party as well as the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party, issued what, in a sense, is a rather stunning indictment of the Government's so-called initiatives in the area of employment equity. I refer to suggestions within the report Equality for all—Égalité pour tous—which was received in this House and, I think, supported very strongly by Members on all sides. The Equality for All Report spoke not only to the need for fundamental legislative changes to incorporate the principles of the Charter of Rights and the Constitution into Canadian law, but also made some very specific recommendations directed at the current legislation before the House, the so-called Employment Equity Bill.

That all-Party committee, which I stress was attended by a majority of Members of the Conservative Party as well as representatives from the Liberal and the New Democratic Parties, pointed out some very serious flaws, flaws which are so serious that even the National Action Committee on the Status of Women—which represents more than three million Canadian women and notwithstanding its long-standing support for promotion of the Employment Equity Program both within the Government and in the private sector, federally and provincially—has been forced to repudiate Bill C-62 because it does not achieve in any small way what it claims to achieve.

Most specifically and ironically, and I think the public should be aware of this, Mr. Speaker, the legislation currently before the House which is being trumpeted by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) as a panacea for the women of Canada, will not apply to the federal Government as an employer. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, the federal Government and the Minister of Employment and Immigration introducing a Bill which will not apply to the federal Government as an employer? It will apply only to Crown corporations and to federally regulated corporations with 100 or more employees.

We know that if Bill C-62 is not amended in the way that has been suggested by members of the Liberal Party, the exclusion factor with respect to this Employment Equity Program will mean that 82 per cent of companies under federal regulation will not be touched by the Employment Equity Program. Quite specifically, because the Government and the Minister of Employment have refused to include any provision for businesses with fewer than 100 employees, 3,700 out of 4,500 companies will be excluded; 82 per cent of companies under federal law will not be covered by this legislation. At the same time, the federal Government has excluded itself from the very limpid provisions of Bill C-62.

I believe this Bill irks not only the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, but also a rather rare coalition in Canada which was formed only two weeks ago. We saw major organizations representing women, disabled persons, visible minorities, multicultural minorities and labour getting together to hold a joint press conference to express their dismay at the so-called Employment Equity Bill, which is alleged to be a response to the Abella Report.

In my time in Parliament and in the Legislature of Ontario, I have spent a great many hours working toward the notion of equal pay for work of equal value, affirmative action and the over-all employment equity provisions that have been suggested by Judge Abella. However, Judge Abella makes it quite clear that if there is no proper enforcement mechanism, if there are no proper teeth in the law which alleges to give the Canadian Human Rights Commission the right to include plans for employment equity of companies with more than 100 persons, then in fact the law is a fraud, the law is a sham and, in the words of George Bernard Shaw, "the law is an ass". In that particular case I think the Government made serious and believed promises when it entered the women's debate. We remember the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney); he was very strong and very forceful. He said to the Canadian people, in particular to the women of Can "As soon as this Government is elected, the very moment that we are elected, we are going to begin to force companies, which deal with the federal Government, to come into line when it comes to issues of employment equity and affirmative action". Yet, we see that the kind of watered-down version of contract compliance included in Bill C-62 does nothing to ensure the access to equal opportunity promised by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker, we have here a situation where groups such as women, visible and other minorities, the handicapped and labour are getting together and telling the Government: The legislation introduced in the House is a fraud, because the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), that red Tory, is claiming to Canadians that here is a Bill that will help women, minorities and the handicapped. And at the same time, even the largely Conservative Committee that produced the report Equality for All is extensively criticizing the provisions of Bill C-62 now before the House. It is being suggested that certain amendments are needed that will, for instance, give the Human Rights Commission a chance to go to the companies and really make sure that even minor rules that will affect only companies with more than 100 employees, will have enough teeth so something can be done about the situation. Because what is happening now, according to this group of Conservative Members, which includes one Liberal and one New Democrat, is that since the Bill does not apply to the Federal Government, it does not apply to Federal employees, and since it only applies to companies with more than 100 employees, it applies only to about 18 per cent of the companies that are federally regulated.

Mr. Speaker, when women, the handicapped, Conservative Members, the public, labour and people belonging to visible and multicultural minorities all get together to tell the Government: What you are proposing is a fraud, what you are proposing to do is not a genuine response to the promises made by the Prime Minister to women in August 1984: "As soon as I am elected, we are going to start programs that will provide employment equity for women" . . . Mr. Speaker, what we are seeking, is employment equity for everyone.

The Liberal document produced in the House this week . . . in any case, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-62 provides no answers whatsoever with respect to women's rights, minority rights or rights for the handicapped, and that is why all Canadian men and women are rejecting this legislation, because it is a fraud and an attempt by the Government to live up to promises it never intended to—

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to speak today on Bill C-62, the employment equity Bill. This is a really inadequate Bill, I am terribly sorry to say. The need for strong action to guarantee genuine equality in the workplace for women, the handicapped, visible minorities and native people has long been recognized. Of course, we have had some very strong recommendations before us, such as those in the Abella Report. We do not see these recommendations being acted on in this legislation.

The NDP caucus has had meetings with representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress, the National Action Committee and other groups that have told us that they are not even remotely satisfied with the action the Government has taken. The National Action Committee on the Status of Women, speaking for millions of Canadian women, has very clearly indicated that the Bill is not adequate and that in principle it is wrong if a Bill is directed toward such a weak array of voluntary measures.

What is wrong with this Bill, Mr. Speaker? The program is voluntary and that is not acceptable at this time. Voluntary programs have been tried before and have been found wanting. They were deemed failures in the United States even though tougher measures were attached. The great wage and salary gaps between women and men are not closing.

The Bill does not provide an enforcement mechanism. This is absolutely crucial and Judge Abella recognized that it was not enough to have a program for affirmative action or employment equity or whatever it is called put in place; there has to be an enforcement mechanism. There is no provision in the Bill for the input of a union where there is an affirmative action or employment equity plan to be developed. Obviously the workers in the workplace would have excellent ideas to contribute. Since they are the ones who are going to be most affected, clearly they ought to have a say in the evolution of these plans.

The Bill does not provide goals and guidelines for affirmative action. It is very vague. It is not directed to anything specific, and not being directed to any specific goals or timetables, we can be jolly sure that nothing will be achieved. A comprehensive affirmative action program would include contract compliance, equal pay for work of equal value, adequate child care measures and a comprehensive education and training plan. This Bill addresses none of these related issues.

The whole subject of affirmative action has had a very long history in the United States and that is probably the model to which we have looked. It is not a very positive model for Canadians. In the United States, there were some contract compliance measures and so there were some teeth in the legislation. Companies would actually lose money if they did not come up with affirmative action plans. Here in Canada we have the same model being adopted without the enforcement mechanism, without the teeth and without the threat of lost business. Of course, that threat would be an incentive for a company to introduce a plan.

I suggest that we need to have very careful reporting provisions. There must be concrete guidelines for concrete reports so that we will not have just window dressing types of plans reported. I suggest, for example, that the very simple statistic that ought to be reported by every company doing business with the Government is the proportion of women in the workforce compared with the proportion of the payroll the women receive in the case of comparisons between men and women. Of course, one could do the same for other groups being tested. This statistic would give us a very good indication year after year of whether or not the gap between the two is being reduced. It is only with very firm and objective measures like that that we can ensure there will be real action and not just more window dressing plans allowing the Government to pretend to be doing something about the issue.

I would like to refer to the matter of visible minorities. In my own riding of Broadview-Greenwood, there is a sizeable community of members of visible minorities and many of them tell me about the discrimination they encounter when looking for jobs. They tell me that they are not considered fairly and do not get the same chances. Unfortunately, this has been all too well documented by actual studies. The Urban Alliance on Race Relations has conducted extremely interesting and objective studies. It sent actors and actresses with identical work histories and identical qualifications to potential employers. It was found that those who were members of the white majority were very much better received than members of visible minorities. In one-third of the workplaces tested preference was given to white applicants over non-white applicants who were equally qualified. Will the proposed legislation do anything to remedy this situation? Unfortunately not. Over 50 per cent of employers in this investigation, unsolicited, expressed negative views of racial minorities. Is there any way this legislation will help change that situation? The answer is no.

Some 49 per cent of the complaints by racial minorities of discriminatory behaviour and of racial harassment were dealt with by disciplining the victims, the non-white complainants. Will the proposed legislation in Bill C-62 change that situation? No.

Some 82 per cent of employers have no policy to deal with discrimination in their workplaces and, perhaps, the most disturbing statistic to come out of this study was that 78 per cent of employers do not want policy changes which will compel them to eliminate discriminatory practices. Since they are not willing to make these changes voluntarily we must say, as a society, that they do not have that option any more. Equality of our citizens is now written in our law. It is in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It is not optional. It is not just a question of people following their own personal tastes in a matter as crucial as the right of other people to earn their livelihoods.

The measures which are before us today are just not remotely up to dealing with these issues. The same can be said for the question of disabled people looking for work. The report Obstacles, which is an excellent federal Government report, deals with the situation of the disabled. The recommendations in that report are much more specific as to what types of measures are needed. Recommendation No. 26 states that a policy should be established of contract compliance for Government contracts with firms employing 100 people or more and involving contracts of more than $20,000. The proposal in Bill C-62 is much less adequate than that. It deals with a much smaller number of firms with larger contracts. Thus the opportunity to bring a large number of businesses under contract compliance legislation has been lost as a result of the wording of the Bill before us.

Recommendation No. 27 of the report Obstacles is that the federal Government should establish an affirmative action compliance board or designate another existing board to develop guidelines and procedures for enforcement, to approve plans and monitor them. It is only with that type of concrete action, with specific plans, with a monitoring mechanism in place and some real penalties that we can ensure that the job will be done. Other countries have done a far better job than Canada has in providing job opportunities for the disabled. The United Kingdom has that type of legislation, as does West Germany and even the United States which is not a pillar in terms of social legislation.

It should be required that managers in the Public Service be accountable for their success in employing and promoting visible minorities, the disabled and women. That aspect should be built into the evaluation plans to ensure that there is action within the Public Service itself. Of course, that is not being done in terms of the Bill which is before us.

I might add that the Province of Saskatchewan, under an NDP Government, brought in such proposals and implemented them. There was beginning to be some movement toward seeing that visible minorities, women and native persons were being given job opportunities. Unfortunately, with the new Conservative Government, those provisions have been watered down. However, we can see that the example went on long enough to know that it was beginning to work, things were beginning to happen and justice was beginning to be done in the workplace.

[Translation]

We are asking for more concerted efforts and mandatory measures, not for the kind of propositions made by this Government in Bill C-62. The Government is advocating weak and non-compulsory measures, but women, visible minorities, native people and disabled persons want—and have earned—equality in the workplace. This Bill falls far short of the mark.

That is why the New Democratic Party will vote against the Bill.

[English]

What we want are strong, concrete measures with enforcement, monitoring and evaluation. We really want to encourage the Government to come up with something which will do justice for women who are discriminated against, the handicapped, the disabled and native people. I regret to say that we are voting against Bill C-62 in principle because it does not go far enough. It is not a realistic attack on this problem.

● (1125)

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, we would not want to vote on this issue without having the opportunity for a thorough debate on Bill C-62. I see the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) in the Chamber and I am sure he would not want that, either. He would want us to discuss this issue fully and throughly in the House of Commons before we vote on this very important measure. We are talking, of course, about employment equity. For many of our constituents this is a relatively new term and perhaps we should identify what employment equity is. Employment equity is the elimination of discrimination and the promotion of employment opportunities among four specific target groups, according to Judge Abella. We are talking about women, native people, disabled persons and the visible minorities. Judge Abella in her report preferred the expression "employment equity" to "affirmative action" or other phrases which have been used in the past. What we all want to do, of course, is to promote and assist those people who need to be equal in relation to all others. In other words, we must put them in a more equitable position with other Canadians because those four target groups have traditionally been greatly disadvantaged.

The purpose of employment equity is to eventually ensure, through this process that we have true equality for all Canadians. We know that we in this country are all equal, at least in theory, according to our Charter of Rights. However, looking at this issue in a more realistic way, we know there is not equity in employment or salaries. For instance, a women earns on average 60 per cent of the salary earned by a man. I hope the day will come very soon when there is real equality in this country but, unfortunately, notwithstanding all of the good intentions which collectively we all have, we are not approaching that stage nearly soon enough.

I would like to refer to some of the background of this issue of employment equity. I referred a few moments ago to the report of Judge Rosalie Abella which was commissioned in June of 1983 by the then Minister of Employment and Immigration. A report was tabled in this House in November of 1984. I am sure you recall that day very vividly, Mr. Speaker. Judge Abella's recommendations to this House were, in brief, that we should bring forward legislation enacting mandatory employment equity for employers under federal jurisdiction—all of them. She recommended that we should be persuading provincial Governments to adopt similar legislation in the areas of provincial jurisdiction, and the recommended contractual compliance for all federally-regulated employers. Finally, she recommended that we establish an agency to enforce mandatory employment equity, and four options were enumerated. But what have we done?

Let us review the Bill that we are talking about today. I want to remind Hon. Members across the way that the Bill has no mandatory enforcement of employment equity at all. There are no provisions for a separate monitoring agency. The responsibility has been conferred upon the Canadian Human Rights Commission. The Canadian Human Rights Commission will have no power to enforce employment equity. There have been no targets set by the Government or the Minister, no standardization in reporting procedures, and no penalties for companies that do not comply. The Minister said that that is all right because public opinion will ultimately be the judge of those who do wrong. I ask Members across the way, since when do we as Canadians offer justice to our minorities based on a popularity contest? That is what the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is asking us to do through this Bill.

[Translation]

In other words, the Minister seems to think that we will have to wait for the findings of a public opinion poll before the situation can be set straight—nothing will change unless the people voice their opposition, and then justice will flow from this measure. I have to ask the Hon. Member opposite whether he really believes a popularity constest is the best way to solve the problem.

Well, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding what he might say now, I think he is a fair man and I wonder whether he would agree that the Bill should provide mechanisms to ensure full compliance with the new legislation on the part of Government agencies and the various companies which are awarded Government contracts. Mr. Speaker, it is not good enough to say that Canadians need only be informed and that it will be up to them to judge whether an agency or company has failed to follow the ministerial directives.

[English]

During the last election campaign the Conservatives promised many things to many people.

Mr. Malone: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Someone says "hear, hear". I was not intending to go into great detail, but I will remind that Member that there is a little book containing 338 Tory promises which I have talked about in the House on one or two occasions. Anyone who wants a copy of the book need only contact my office and I will gladly send one. That offer includes Members across the way and Canadians across Canada as well.

I will outline some of the promises that the Tories made to Canadian women. The Conservatives said that they would institute major training and retaining programs to ensure that women are prepared for the new occupations of the technological era. What happened to that promise? They also said that they would make clear to companies doing business with the federal Government that their performance in hiring and promoting women will be a key factor in obtaining contracts for goods and services. What happened to that promise? Why is Bill C-62 based on public opinion, instead of making it clear as was promised in that commitment? Could it be that the Conservatives have broken a promise? Maybe it was a sacred trust, in which case we can be sure that it has been broken because all the sacred trusts were broken a long time ago.

Another sacred trust of the Tories was that they would make the federal public service a model to be followed with regard to the equality of women in the workplace. What happened to that promise? Why does this promise not coincide with what is included in Bill C-62? Mr. Speaker, as much as I have to say it, I think the Tories broke another promise. It does not surprise some of us that some promises have been broken. Why does the Minister not stand up in the House and tell us that she will improve this Bill and make it coincide with what the Conservative Party promised the women of Canada and others during the election campaign of last year? I urge her to do that now.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) said, Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, is a Bill about opportunity. It demands that employers take special measures to ensure that our aboriginal people, our disabled, our women and our visible minorities will not be denied work opportunities because of their sex, colour or handicap. This debate reminds me of the time when a six-year old black girl on a very dirty, dusty road in her village in Tanzania adopted me as her white man. She had no fear, prejudice or discrimination. The Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) spoke on this Bill with regard to some of the acts of discrimination which he has experienced. I, for one, do not doubt him for a moment since he is black. I can relate closely to what he said because of my own African experiences. The incident with that little black girl, whose name I do not even know, has impressed me to this day so much that I now feel totally colour blind. I am proud to say that as a member of this truly great national Government I am making history, along with my colleagues, in ensuring that all our people—and I emphasize the word "all" —will now be treated equally with retard to opportunities in the workplace.

Equality is of paramount importance and concern to Canadians, especially new Canadians. The provisions of Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which were entrenched in April of this year, state:

> Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age, or mental or physical disability.

The royal commission report on equality in employment, more often referred to in this House as the Abella Report, noted that the hope of the four designated groups was that "as quickly as possible, they would be transformed from being objects in the political laboratory to being subjects of political action". Mr. Speaker, Bill C-62 shows a willingness on the part of the Government to do just that, and it has been done in record time. The Abella Report continues, on page 23, to say the following:

> Yet for all their differences, the one issue about which there was general agreement among the groups was the need for strong government measures to ensure equality in employment.

This is exactly what we are doing with the targeted areas of federal responsibility. How many times have you heard an employer say that he would not hire a black, a Paki, a women or a disabled person? I think we have heard that all too often, Mr. Speaker. To me this attitude is mindless and it demonstates a degree of bigotry that is all too prevalent in Canada. Bill C-62 does not go all the way, but it is a pretty positive start to changing, not only the law, but the attitude of many Canadian employers.

There is a company in my riding called BDM Co Operative Warehouse Service of Canada Ltd. which does business with the Government and wants to do more. It is presently negotiating to buy or lease a vacant Government building in Ottawa-Carleton on Walkley Road. In so doing it will kill a number of birds with one stone. It intends to use the building to provide first class private sector services to the Government for storage facilities of files and documents. The beauty of the project, Mr. Speaker, is that the company intends to hire 40 or 50 disabled persons to do the work. That is very good news and that is why I am doing all I can to assist that company. That is an obvious immediate response to Bill C-62. That the arms and legs of handicapped persons do not function the same as those of more normal persons does not mean that their minds are poor. They cannot always work at the same speed as others, but they probably make fewer mistakes. There are many jobs that these people can do if given a fair chance. Some Members opposite have called for more affirmative action. There are Government programs in existence now that are tougher than Bill C-62 because departments must submit plans to Treasury Board for approval in advance with respect to hiring the four designated groups. Let me say, for the sake of the cynics, that we are not throwing the merit principle out of the window in the Public Service or federally regulated businesses. However, systemic discrimination and other forms of discrimination must be eradicated in all areas of federal jurisdiction as soon as possible.

I was proud to assist a young woman in her late twenties to find employment with Labour Canada recently. Her name is Janet. She suffers from cerebral palsy as a result of difficulties at birth. Today, she walks with the aid of two crutches.

Through the excellent co-operation of Diane Dufresne, who is a director in the National Capital Region's staffing office of the Public Service, and Suzanne Azzie, who is co-ordinator of employment services for disabled persons, Janet is now working very well and is very happy as a full time clerk in the Public Service. In fact, for the first time in her life, she is living in her own apartment in Ottawa.

I liken this to one small step for Janet which will be translated into miles for many other deserving capable Canadians.

There has been much talk by the Opposition about the lack of enforcement mechanisms and penalties for companies that do not abide by Bill C-62. Let me assure you that we will not set up another bureaucracy to monitor results. We know that we have enough of that at the municipal, provincial, national and international levels. We do not want, nor do we need more bureaucracy.

With respect to enforcement, the Government is modelling its enforcement plans after what is called Model Four in the Abella Report. Guidelines are now being prepared by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission, known as CEIC, and will be shared with employers along with free consultative assistants. Collection of data will be done by CEIC. Data will be made available to the Human Rights Commission as well as to individuals and groups.

Investigation and adjudication of disputes under Section 32.3 of the Canadian Human Rights Act empowers the commission to initiate complaints where reasonable grounds exist. The data will provide such grounds. The Human Rights Commission will be strengthened, if necessary, to enable it to carry out this role. Contract compliance is being introduced, along with enforcement mechanisms. CEIC will monitor contractors and advise the contracting Minister of companies who do not live up to their commitments. These companies may be barred from future contracts.

With respect to Labour Canada inspectors, the Government will ensure that the Canadian Human Rights Commission has the staff necessary to monitor their settlements. The Labour Canada inspectors now have the authority to refer complaints to the Canadian Human Rights Commission in the case of equal pay, and they have a specific mandate to do so under Section 38.1 of the Labour Code. It is thus clear that the Government's mechanisms for enforcement are consistent with those recommended by Judge Abella in Option Four. The specific organizations involved reflect the Government's desire to utilize existing mechanisms rather than create new ones.

Judge Abella has said that achievements will be measured by results, not quotas, as some have suggested. The affected companies will set their own goals to meet their particular situation, such as the case of BDM in my riding to which I referred.

The question of sanctions have been of some concern. I would like to address that question as well. Bill C-62, as recommended by Judge Abella, requires employers throughout the federal sector with 100 employees or more to implement employment equity programs. The Bill will also require them to demonstrate the results of their implementation by annually reporting their results.

The measures outlined in the Bill respond to Recommendation Nos. 3, 6 and 7 of the Abella Commission. Let me paraphrase those recommendations. They recommend that no quotas should be imposed, employers should be given flexibility in the redesign of their employment practices, and results, not systems, should be reviewed initially.

Employers now know that they need to identify and eliminate practices which discriminate against target group members. If one refers to Clause 5 and Clause 6 of the Bill, one can see quite clearly that clause 5 states that employers must file reports. In terms of sactions, Clause 6 reads:

> An employer who fails to comply with section 5 is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding fifty thousand dollars.

Let us not forget that lobby groups will keep the pressure on business and Government and that this is to be encouraged. The potential for lawsuits on the entrenched rights in the Constitution maintain the pressure.

More important, Bill C-62 concerns fairness. Employment equity is a concept based on the belief of fairness and opportunity. Those realizing the economic benefits of employment should comprise all aspects of the Canadian population. The Bill aims to achieve results with the co-operation of employers in the federally regulated business sector. My Government and I believe that that approach can and will be effective.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, you ask whether the House is ready for the question. I am certainly not ready for the question. A number of Members on this side of the House want to make a contribution to the debate on this legislation. I want to assure you that the House will not be ready for the question for some time.

The Bill before the House today concerns employment equity, or affirmative action. Let me commence by briefly explaining the importance of affirmative action and why we are urging the Government to implement a positive and effective affirmative action program. Affirmative action is fundamental to our values in a society which firmly believes in equality of opportunity and condition. Since we value the opportunity for people to participate in society as a whole, our citizens must have the fullest opportunity to develop as individuals and the community must have access to the full potential of its human resources. We do not want to see anyone in our society excluded from that participation. It is only on the basis of each person being given an opportunity to develop and become productive in society that we can have a community in which we can have pride and a sense of security.

Affirmative action is a means of confirming our value of equality in Canadian life. It has long been stated that Canadian society is far from equal and that a number of groups in Canadian society are far from reaching that goal of equality.

I want to refer to the status of women in our society. One glaring example of inequality is the fact that for each dollar earned by men, women earn only 60 cents. While women have made significant advances in employment in the last couple of decades, the remuneration they receive is inadequate and far less than what a man would receive in similar circumstances. We must address this problem through affirmative action. Furthermore, it follows that women's pensions will be 60 per cent of the pension of their male counterparts. The vast majority of Canadians are not willing to tolerate this kind of inequality.

● (1150)

We have in our society a number of visible minorities, including black and Asian people.

The inequality of visible minorities in Canada is a worry which I am sure many Canadians have when they look south across the border and see what has happened with the black people, particularly in the cities. Not only to see the potential of individuals fulfilled, but also to see that our communities are ones in which we can live in peace, comfort and enjoyment, it is important that visible minorities be given full opportunity, particularly in the area of employment.

The same inequality exists for the handicapped. The handicapped are in many ways excluded from our society by architecture because few buildings are accessible to the handicapped, a situation that needs to be changed. Buildings are only a symbol of the way we bar access to equal opportunity for handicapped individuals. Other changes are needed, changes in employment policies and in recruitment procedures. What about opportunities for training? The vast majority of Canadians would like the Government to take effective action to ensure that handicapped people have equal access to opportunity and employment and to see that society benefits from the rich resources of the handicapped.

Another group of people who stand out in terms of inequality and call upon us to establish effective affirmative action programs are the native people. If we look at native people in the poor areas of cities, such as Winnipeg and other western cities, we find that poverty is intolerable. It is visible. People live in inadequate housing and have a low level of education. Unemployment is in the area of 60 per cent. These are not official statistics but educated guesses. If we look at native people in rural areas on reserves, we find that unemployment is in the area of 80 per cent to 90 per cent. Greater equality is needed.

The need for affirmative action is based upon lack of equality. Most Canadians want a society in which people have equality of opportunity and human condition.

This Bill before the House falls far short of what could be called effective affirmative action. The Bill is a voluntary program rather than a mandatory one. We know from the United States experience and from our own experience here with regard to voluntary programs that we need a mandatory program with deadlines, goals and specific objectives.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

Employment Equity

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-62, an Act respecting Employment Equity be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

I move this motion, Mr. Speaker, because the Government needs more time to find out about why this Bill falls far short of an adequate affirmative action program. The Government needs to rethink its position. We need the six months for the Government to come up with an effective affirmative action program.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) must realize that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) cannot second this motion because he has spoken to the main motion. Therefore, we will substitute the Hon. Member for the Beaches (Mr. Young).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment introduced by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). I think the purpose of his amendment, which is to give some time for the Government to come to its senses, is a very important one. Not that I have much confidence that that will happen because we have seen over the past 18 months that you cannot come to your senses if you do not have much sense to begin with. At the same time, being a Liberal I am an eternal optimist and live in hope that at some point in time Members opposite will understand fully what a serious betrayal they are perpetrating on the Canadian people by this Bill.

In the spring of 1983, I was engaged in what I thought was one of the more important initiatives as a Minister of the Crown. I received from my Cabinet the approval to establish the Abella Commission. It was important because at that time I saw it as a major turning point in the evolution that had been under way for the past two decades, which was to bring about a higher and greater sense of understanding and consciousness about the need for equality rights.

The Abella Commission was established for an important reason. In a simple way, the voluntary system to achieve affirmative action that had been put in place up to that time had failed. Every single Conservative speaker who has risen to speak in this House has said, "Let us give the voluntary system a chance", which shows that Conservatives are incapable of understanding history or they are blind to what went on before. There was a voluntary system, Mr. Speaker.

The Department of Employment and Immigration had a special division to provide assistance to private employers and municipalities to engage in the development of voluntary affirmative action programs. Four years of effort to achieve that resulted in something like 100 companies of the 50,000 or 60,000 companies in Canada showing any interest in signing up or developing an affirmative action program. They all had the resources they needed and all the support. All the things that are supposedly going to happen as a result of this Bill have happened before. This Bill simply puts up a masquerade instead of a program that has already ostensibly failed. That is why it is such a betrayal.

● (1200)

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) knows full well that that method will not work. She was the critic from 1982 to 1983. She stood on her feet time and time again and said, with no sense of uncertainty, that we needed mandatory contract compliance to make it work. Now that she is the Minister, she totally denies a position which she held for many years. That is an act of betrayal by that Minister of a constituency which, as she said, she represented for many years. It is a betrayal of a clear understanding of the facts, and now it is a betrayal of what was to be an important achievement in terms of legislating the requirements at the federal level for private companies and Crown corporations to introduce a proper system of affirmative action.

I have gone over the Debates of the House carefully. It is an ironic tragedy that the Conservative Members of Parliament who have spoken on the Bill have been so blind and untrustworthy when it comes to the actual achievement of affirmative action. The Government is engaged in one of the most serious breaches of trust.

We can all remember the flourishing words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during debate in the summer of 1984 when he was asked about the Abella Commission and what he would do. He held his hand to his heart and with that incredible sense of insincerity, which we have now come to know, love and admire, said that he was fully committed to contract compliance. What a difference a year makes! What a difference an election makes! What has happened to those firm and unalterable words of the Prime Minister? I guess the same thing happened to them as has happened to almost every other commitment he has made.

The record and history of mandatory programs of affirmative action show that they work. Along with the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), I, as Minister responsible, introduced into the Public Service the requirement for affirmative action in Departments. It was begun on a trial basis in 1981 with three Departments. The system and methodology were tested. We introduced it in 1980-81 to the Treasury Board, the Secretary of State Department and the Department of Employment and Immigration. We put in place a method to demonstrate clearly how such a system could work and be effective. Then, in 1983, the program was introduced to cover all government Departments.

The next step in the blueprint was to extend it to Crown corporations and all industries which were then under federal jurisdiction. The Abella Commission was established to determine the most effective formula for that third step. It was not a commission of study. It was not established to ascertain the facts. We all knew that there was a continuing and unacceptable inequality when it came to the employment rights of women, the handicapped, native people and visible minorities. The Abella Commission did not have to ascertain those facts; they were known. The task of Judge Abella was to determine the most effective formula, based upon intensive consultation with private business, Crown corporation leaders and provincial Governments.

The report was tabled, and that formula was clearly accepted and applauded across the country. It was accepted because Judge Abella put her finger on one fundamental ingredient in any affirmative action program, that is, that we could not rely upon individual companies, corporations and organizations to introduce a program for their own organizations when they did not know whether their competitor across the street, or other organizations with which they did business, would do the same. Therefore they said: "Why would I accept an unfair advantage? Why would I go to the extra cost of introducing affirmative action when no one else is going to do it?" It does involve extra cost to introduce affirmative action. The basic, fundamental flaw in a voluntary program is that unless it is universal and unless the same rules apply to everyone, individual companies or organizations will not do it. Even those well-intentioned presidents of corporations who saw the necessity and the imperative need for affirmative action told me when I was Minister of Employment that they would like to do it, but that they would not do so because their competitors would not do it and therefore they would be unable to compete with them on an equal level. They said: "If we are going to do it, we all have to do it". That is also what Judge Abella said and, therefore, that it was essential to have a mandatory requirement. As well, she pointed out the importance of introducing the contract compliance ingredient.

It was clear that the provinces, particularly the Conservative Governments of those provinces, would not do it. A meeting of provincial Minister was convened in 1982 by the then Secretary of State to talk about the introduction of equality rights, and it was the provincial Governments which opposed it at that time. Judge Abella carefully said that if we were to provide for a further clear step forward, it must be done at the federal level.

The report was tabled. The recommendations were made. The Minister of Employment and Immigration rose in the House and declared with the greatest of flourish and fervor how wonderful the report was. What happened thereafter? Then the Government came out with Bill C-62, which is not even a pale imitation. It is a betrayal. It is a denial. It is a treasonous act against all those who have worked for years to try to bring about substantial improvement in the lives of many Canadian workers. There is nothing in Bill C-62 in which Parliament can take pride. Therefore, it makes eminent sense for us to support the amendment. Those Conservative Members who in their heart of hearts know that it is a Bill which is simply a paper masquerade, should try to put some pressure upon Cabinet, which has made the wrong choice, a serious mistake and has betrayed women, the handicapped, native people and visible minorities. That is what the Bill is all about. It will go down in the long history of trying to achieve equality rights as one of the blackest moments.

Mr. Malone: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: And the only response we get from the Tories is that they laugh about it.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on Bill C-62 and on the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

This employment equity Bill is really a missed opportunity. Because that is so, we in the New Democratic Party have great difficulty supporting it. There are several reasons for that difficulty. The Bill really calls for a voluntary program, which is clearly unacceptable to my Party.

Voluntary affirmative action programs have been tried in several jurisdictions other than in Canada—most notably, in the United States, Germany and other European countries—and it was found that they simply did not work. In the United States, in particular, it was decided in the 1960s to come forward with mandatory programs, which have proven to be quite effective.

I, along with other Members from all sides of the House, had the opportunity in 1980, after the election campaign, to form an all-Party committee of the House of Commons to look into problems affecting the disabled population. We came up with a number of recommendations which, if implemented, could have been of great assistance to disabled Canadians in their attempt to participate in the mainstream of Canadian society.

I would like to centre my remarks on the disabled community rather than on women, natives or other groups as other members of my caucus have already addressed themselves to those groups. The committee recognized that most of the problems affecting the disabled community centred on the key issue of employment opportunity. One can talk about the social needs of that particular group in any terms one wishes, whether it be in terms of access to housing, access to transportation, education, recreation, information or even technical aids. These things cannot be separated one from the other. Each one is connected to the other. One cannot talk about providing an individual with access to education on all levels including post-secondary education without also talking about how that individual can be productively employed following the receipt of his or her education, and this is assuming that the individual can get into the educational system to begin with.

As the committee went across the country speaking to Canadians, it heard numerous stories indicating that there are literally thousands of children who are denied access to education because of their disabilities. This Bill does not address that problem. It does not address training opportunities for people who happened to be disabled. Unless we talk about that in a very real and concrete way, we cannot talk about employment opportunities because one is synonymous with the other.

We cannot talk about employment opportunities without talking about how we allow the individual to be moved from the place of residence to the place of employment. It must be recognized that most modes of transportation are not designed to be used by physically disabled people. We have to talk about these things in a very real and basic way. This Bill does not do that. It does not even touch upon that.

I find it surprising that the Government would introduce a measure like this. I can only conclude that the reason it did so was that it recognized there is a public sentiment in favour of providing equity to the various diverse groups in our society, but the Government did not want to go too far because of the pressures from other areas of society, primarily employers. I have been told that that is indeed the case. The Government has caved in to the pressure from that elite group of society against the best interests of those who really need society's help in order to move within the mainstream of society. I think that that is rather shameful. If I view this Bill as being purely a public relations effort rather than a real effort to help people, I am going to have great difficulty in supporting it, even though it goes a bit further than anything introduced by the previous Government.

I listened with some interest to the Member who just spoke, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). In his previous capacity as a Minister, he appeared before the committee to give testimony. I must say that he was generally sympathetic toward affirmative action programs. However, he could afford to be generally sympathetic because the rest of his Cabinet opposed them.

Miss Nicholson: Come, come!

Mr. Young: The Hon. Member scoffs. It is on the record. It is contained in the transcripts of the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped. It is recorded there for posterity and it cannot be disputed.

I am glad to hear that there are other members of that previous Government who now support mandatory affirmative action programs. They certainly did not do so before. If they had done so before, perhaps that influence would have been felt by the present Gouvernment, which indeed needs some education in this field. That is why I am pleased that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, moved the amendment. If we give the Government another six months to give more thought to this Bill, I am sure it will do the right thing. The right thing is to bring in affirmative action programs that mean something.

There is a concern felt by the Government that if we were to bring in an affirmative action program, it would be disruptive to industry. That has not been the case where affirmative action programs exist. I will speak of those in the United States because it is of close relationship to our jurisdiction. When the special committee had the opportunity of speaking to public figures and indeed members of the corporate sector in the United States, it found that they did not have any problems with affirmative action programs in so far as they concerned the disabled community. In fact, they found that as those programs worked, they allowed members of the disabled community to support themselves within society and to be productive members of society. In fact, they boasted to us on several occasions that a disabled individual was equal to or even a better productive worker than an able-bodied individual. That has been the experience in the United States. The Government of Canada should not have any great concern that affirmative action would be disruptive in some way. In fact, it would have a very beneficial and positive result.

An initiative on which the previous Government refused to act because of pressure from industry, and not even Canadian industry which supported the initiative, was to make telephones fully compatible with hearing aids. It requires only a small coil to be placed in a telephone to make it totally compatible with hearing aids. Bell Canada and other Canadian telephone manufacturers support that initiative. The problem is with imported telephones that are not compatible with hearing aids. This threatens the job security of people who are hard of hearing. If the Government wanted to do something before six months was up, it could move in that direction and order that all telephones coming into the country be compatible with hearing aids.

I see that you are signalling that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. That is very unfortunate. There is a great deal more that I would like to say on this subject.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a contribution to this debate on employment equity. I am in a good position to do so because the riding I represent, Saint-Léonard-Anjou, is home to many community groups who live and work there. Practically every Saturday morning many people and members of those cultural communities drop in my riding office to express their deep concern about their chances of getting good jobs and the possibility of their children ever being able to work in the Public Service of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-62 does not give any assurance to those people, and that is why I rise in the House this morning to urge my colleagues on the Government benches to work with us so that we might indeed assure the various communities of a fair share in Canadian society, a fair share of Canadian jobs.

I was rather disappointed yesterday when I saw the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) (Mr. Jelinek) rise in the House and, instead of telling us more about those programs and what he is prepared to do for cultural communities in Canada, criticize my colleague from York West (Mr. Marchi) for allegedly wasting time to send out press releases instead of asking more questions in the House. It is ridiculous, Mr. Speaker! Instead of telling us how he will convince his Cabinet colleagues to restore the confidence of our cultural communities by assuring them that they are equal partners and full-fledged members of Canadian society, our Minister responsible for those cultural communities stands up in the House to criticize and make fun of Members who are doing their job.

I have something else to say about this, Mr. Speaker. One of the Progressive Conservative Party's election campaign was to look after cultural communities but, at the first opportunity, the multiculturalism portfolio was given to a Minister with joint responsibilities. We have a Minister responsible for amateur sport and multiculturalism. That is how much importance this Government attaches to Canada's cultural communities!

Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to another very important question which is not even mentioned in Bill C-62, yet it has been the subject of equality rights committee recommendations. I am talking about the question of the wife or spouse with respect to Revenue Canada. I am a strong supporter of institutional marriage, but still one must keep an open mind and face reality. A great many people live together in what is usually known as common law marriages. Mr. Speaker, those people cannot avail themselves of the various tax benefits which allow deductions, asset transfers and other arrangements. I should think that Canadian society is mature enough to take a close look at the situation and make it possible for those fellow citizens—regardless of their condition or marital status—to enjoy the same benefits as you and I and other Canadians take for granted.

Another point I want to make this morning relates to the case of disabled persons, for it is our responsibility to make sure they do have a place in our society. And this is why, Mr. Speaker, we must make sure that we have employment policies, that we help them get jobs and that we provide the means of transportation they need to go to work. Of course, our tax system fails to satisfy either the individual himself or the employer who is willing to hire the handicapped.

Mr. Speaker, as legislators, we must give a clear signal to all Canadians, to our employers, to our public servants and to our administrative officers that they must change their attitude in order to enable the handicapped, the people of various ethnic communities and the visible minorities to have access to all our programs and services as well as to our job opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure my constituents of Saint-Léonard-Anjou that as their representative in this House, I will do my utmost to defend their rights so that they may always feel that they are full-fledged citizens of this great country we call Canada.

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, we oppose Bill C-62 and we support the hoist motion for what I think are well documented and well established reasons. We do not feel that the Bill takes the right type of action toward ensuring that we will have affirmative action.

By putting the hoist motion before the House we are giving the Government an opportunity to reassess the contents of its Bill. If it does not do that, then Bill C-62 can be dubbed the Bill of lost opportunity What the Government has here is an opportunity to do something about job equity in the country. We know from experience, not only in Canada but from all over the world, that it is quite a simple matter to pay lip service to changes in the type of structures which our country has developed.

After the Civil War in the United States the slaves were emancipated. However, it took another 100 years before there was any effect on changing discrimination against blacks. That only took place when legislation was put in place and the courts made decisions forcing people to adhere to the legislation. That is what the Government has the opportunity to do with respect to this particular Bill.

All of the Parties in the House gave major support to the Abella Report. However, Bill C-62 backs off from that report. In fact, one would think that the people who drafted the Bill forgot entirely about the Abella Report. In fact, one can easily recognize that the attempts here are simply a matter of paying lip service, a cosmetic move, to have something appear to be done. They also forgot about all the other reports of commissions which have been laid before the House and other public statements which have been made by a variety of public-oriented groups and organizations.

We are opposing the Bill and supporting the hoist motion for what we consider to be good and acceptable reasons. The first reason is that it is a voluntary program and we know that voluntary programs have not worked in the past. The Bill does not provide any type of enforcement mechanism. Surprisingly, it has an enforcement mechanism with respect to the gathering of data to ensure that corporation report. However, it does not put into place any type of penalty or any enforcement mechanism with regard to the actual affirmative action which it pretends to be putting into the employment structure of the country. If affirmative action is going to be developed, or is developed in a particular corporation, there is no suggestion in this Bill that the employees, the workers or the union should have a part in putting in place the kind of affirmative action which would work better. We have learned over the years that if we really want something to work, it must have the support of the employees as well as of management.

This Bill does not even give specific goals or objectives for companies which do start in this direction. It does not establish a level which they should be expected to achieve at any particular time. What is necessary is a program which would require contract compliance, equal pay for work of equal value, adequate job care measures and a comprehensive education and training plan. This legislation has none of these provisions.

Many organizations have made this point to the Government. It is not as if the Government passed a Bill and then later found out that many organizations did not support it, all of the organizations which are involved have told the Government that the Bill is inadequate. It is not a matter of the Government not knowing. Since it has not taken action, the six-month hoist might possibly give it the opportunity to do so.

The United States, because it is close to us, is a good example of what does not happen if there is voluntary affirmative action. It was tried in the United States for years and it did not work. So why should we expect this Bill to work?

Women, the disabled and visible minorities have all indicated that they do not think this Bill will work. I suggest that this Bill flies in the face of the Abella Report which indicated that the voluntary element of this program with mandatory reporting requirements is nonetheless voluntary, therefore, it does not require a remedy to be put in place. It does not require a remedy to the discriminatory practice disclosed when the information comes in. When the reports come in from the corporations indicating that they have done something but have not done enough to satisfy the situation, there is no requirement that they produce a program which would have some impact on employment equity.

I have a number of letters, press releases and so on from a variety of groups. The National Action Committee on the Status of Women opposes the passage of Bill C-62 without previsions which guarantee mandatory affirmative action programs with targets. The Canadian Congress for Learning Opportunities for Women is concerned that Bill C-62 will not achieve its stated purpose to achieve equality in the workplace. The Coalition of Visible Minorities stated:

> Clearly, the proposed legislation is not an effective vehicle for dismantling structural inequities.
> Without an enforcement mechanism, without sanctions, there is simply no reason to expect that employment equity can be achieved.

I could refer to any one of those groups and spend 10 minutes in speaking about how they feel that Bill C-62 does not fulfil these requirements. Since I do not have the time to do so, I will conclude by saying that the Government has now before it a six-month hoist possibility. That could be a time in which the Government could make sure that the Bill does what it says it should do.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, Clause 2 of Bill C-62, which is before us today, has as its purpose, and I quote:

> —to achieve equality in the work place so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfillment of that goal, to ameliorate the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada by giving effect to the principle that employment equity means more than treating persons in the same way but also requires special measures and the accommodation of differences.

That is a very laudable purpose, but when one looks through the Bill for ways in which this purpose is to be achieved, one finds that the only requirement is for reporting. Certain employers are required to report on their staffing patterns.

They are required to report on the industrial sector in which the employees are employed, the location, and the number of persons and designated groups so employed. There is a fine for not filing the report annually. So there is a fine for failing to report but there is no sanction whatsoever for failing to do. Nor is there any assistance offered or any clear guidelines. We read that the Minister "may" make guidelines.

I would assume that the reason we only have a reporting provision is that the Government is relying on the reporting and on the publication to create, perhaps, a certain climate of public opinion and certain public pressure on employers to come into line.

Ten years ago, I would have supported this kind of notion of voluntary sanctions or, at least, voluntary encouragement. Most Canadians generally, I think, respond to encouragement and persuasion rather than to coercion. However, we tried for over 10 years. We have had various systems of voluntary compliance and there has been very little progress. I am sure that most employers do not set out to discriminate against women, the handicapped, Canadian Indians and visible minorities, but it is often just more comfortable and simpler to hire the kind of person you know. It is often thoughtlessness rather than deliberate discrimination.

Financial factors enter into the case of the handicapped. To accommodate wheelchairs one must have wider doors, ramps instead of stairs and wider elevators. What one hears from employers—indeed, as my colleague from Winnipeg said earlier—is: "Why should I add to my cost of doing business if my competitors are not required to do so?" That is also an argument for mandatory requirements which apply equally to everyone.

I was in the House, Mr. Speaker, as you were, when the human rights code was amended to include the concept of equal pay for work of equal value. I believe that may have been the case in 1975. At that time we hoped that the amendments would lead to a considerable improvement in the economic status of women in the public service and of other disadvantaged groups. At that time we thought that giving the right of complaint and setting up procedures within the Human Rights Commission was an adequate way of redressing those grievances. It has not proved to be so, Mr. Speaker. It is now time to recognize that the complaints method has not worked. That method puts the onus on the employee to make the employer observe the law. It is now time to recognize that that puts an unfair load on the employee. It has not worked because the system is cumbersome. Many employees find it difficult and it is now time to make employers obey the law.

The commission headed by Judge Rosalie Abella, which examined the problems of employment equity, came up with some far-reaching recommendations. The Government has chosen not to adopt them, but to bring in a Bill which relies only on reporting. In terms of contract compliance, we are told that the employment equity requirements will apply only to contracts over $200,000. This includes only about 100 of the 25,000 to 30,000 companies with which the Government deals and it effectively excludes small business, the largest creator of jobs in Canada. The thinking may have been that if the 100 largest companies were required to set an example, other companies would follow them. Since voluntary measures of one kind and another relying on public opinion have not been effective until now, surely it is time to move on to new methods.

The only redress for an employee under Bill C-62 continues to be the Human Rights Commission, which is expected to monitor these reports without any formal extension of its mandate and without any increase in funding. We know that the Human Rights Commission has an enormous backlog at the moment. The Auditor General's Report which was tabled yesterday referred to it. It is simply not feasible to think that the Human Rights Commission will be able to do this additional work under those circumstances.

Let us look at some of the groups representing people covered by this Bill which have criticized the Bill as not going far enough. The National Action Committee on the Status of Women, the Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped, the National Ethnocultural Council, the Canadian Association for Community Living, formerly the Canadian Association for the Mentally Retarded, the Urban Alliance for Race Relations, and the Canadian Congress for Learning Opportunities for Women are unanimous in saying that the Government's response to the Abella report, as represented in this Bill, is weak, ineffective, and a betrayal of the commitments and promises made to them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to speak on this Bill and specifically on the amendment just introduced by the New Democratic Party to delay the implementation of the Bill until it can be changed. I want to take this opportunity to read into the record some suggestions for change from a group called S.U.C.C.E.S.S.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Are they Tories?

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member asks whether they are Conservatives. I think this is a non-partisan group. It is the United Chinese Community Enrichment Services Society. It was formed in 1973 to help members of the Vancouver and Lower Mainland Chinese community overcome language and cultural barriers, to assume greater responsibility toward self-reliance, and to contribute fully to Canadian society. Last year the group served 42,250 people, which is quite a record. They are interested in the creation of employment equity for disadvantaged groups in our society.

I have a copy of a letter written to the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) by Sandra Wilking, who is the chairperson of the board of directors. She makes five suggestions which I would like to put on the record in order that they can be considered by the Government in changing the Bill. First, she says that the possibility of expanding the definition of "designated groups" should be looked at to include minorities, for example, people from Mediterranean and Latin American backgrounds. These peole are just as disadvantaged as visible minority groups because, like the visible minority groups, they have limited knowledge of the English language with which to function in the workplace.

Second, she says that the Government should look at the possibility of including in the employer group unions that fall under federal jurisdiction. This group is also a potential group of employers.

Third, she says that they are concerned that the current proposed legislation remains silent on the enforcement factor. Who will be responsible for ensuring that there are positive results toward employment equity in the employer groups? Who will police the Act? The fine of $5,000 is not as effective as specific performance and other remedies, according to S.U.C.C.E.S.S.

The fourth point they make is that the current Bill is not clear on what types of relevant data would be required in the employers' reports. There may be data, for example on the number of applications from the designated group for a particular job opening and a number of appointments made in ratio with the number of application, and that data should be forthcoming.

Fifth, if an employer is to recruit for the various target groups, as outlined in the Act, it would seem that the relevant questions should be asked on the application form. This would include the ethnicity question and the group suggests that Anglo Saxon should be included as an ethnic background.

These are a number of interesting suggestions and I offer them to the Government. I certainly agree with one point in particular, that is, that there is no enforcement mechanism in this Bill. It is not good enough, Mr. Speaker, just to rely on reporting. We need some teeth. The subject is too important to ignore.

I would like to say something generally about employment equity. I would like to express some of my own views in this particular area. Employment equity is a polite way of saying equal pay for work of equal value. I think it is a good concept. Some of the recent reports recognize the reality that women will continue mainly to do women's work, but that women's work has been historically grossly undervalued and, therefore, should be much better paid. While we must make every effort to help women break into the traditional male jobs, it will be very difficult because it seems that our society is not set up to handle two-career families who must raise children at the same time. A sacrifice must be made and as a result of role conditioning and biology, to some extent, it is usually the woman who must make the sacrifice. Indeed, househusbands are rare.

Child rearing must be recognized as valuable labour in order to give women economic strength. Surely, parenting is the most important job in the world. Imagine a society which paid mothers the same amount as corporation presidents. That is not likely to happen but the difference between what mothers are paid—usually nothing—and what we pay corporate presidents shows how undervalued parenting is in our society. Parenting is a low status job and society must change its values in this regard.

The job of a Member of Parliament can only be carried out if that Member has a support person to look after the children and other household responsibilities. It is a job that is more easily carried out by a single person. One can see that a disproportionate number of women in the House of Commons are single or have no children. Of 282 Members of Parliament, only 28 are women, or 9.6 per cent. Of 39 chiefs of staff, only 4, or 10.3 per cent, are women.

The reason for this is that men have wives to look after the children. The problem is that the reverse does not occur. The real solution is not to have more househusbands but to provide for more work-sharing and to place a high value on child care so that families who choose to have children are not discriminated against economically in the workplace. For example, women who work in a law firm should not be forced to fit into the male mould but should have an equal footing with men. In this way, men will be just as interested in looking after the children after work rather than staying late to work on a case.

Employment equity is beneficial because it promotes women in the workplace and promotes equal pay for work of equal value. Placing a higher value on women's work gives women more economic strength. It lowers the barriers in job ghettos so as to make traditional women's work more financially attractive to men, thereby equalizing sex roles in our society.

I repeat that this Bill is inadequate because there is no enforcement mechanism. It is not sufficient to rely on a reporting system. The Bill must have more strength in order for it to work. That is why I commend to the House some of the suggestions made by my Party as well as some of the suggestions made by the United Chinese Community Services Society in Vancouver. I look forward to seeing some of those suggestions implemented.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate. In fact, Bill C-62, which is aimed at legislating employment equity, arises from a private Member's Bill.

Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the House is considering a motion to suspend consideration of the Bill and resume debate in six months' time, in other to give the Government a chance to reconsider and make the necessary changes.

Mr. Speaker, on the face of it, as far as the principle of the Bill is concerned, I do not think anyone in the House is against employment equity. It is a principle we accept and which we want to support. It is a principle that commands respect, and in any case, it is high time it was put into practice.

However, Bill C-62 now before the House is a clumsy and extremely ill-planned piece of legislation, drafted with . . . It is almost amateurish, Mr. Speaker, and I am sorry to have to say this, but any Member of Parliament, upon reading the Bill over, will say it is not only ambiguous but is often so difficult to understand that it undermines the very objective and principle of the Bill itself.

Hon. Members will recall that Bill C-62 supports the hiring of women, native people, handicapped persons and persons whose race or colour make them members of what we refer to as Canada's visible minorities. To reach its objective, Bill C-62 is proposing to eliminate employment barriers. It also proposes to provide for fair proportional representation of members of these groups in various jobs, and I quote Clause 4 (b):

(i) in the work force, or

(ii) in those segments of the work force that are identifiable by qualification, eligibility or geography and from which the employer may reasonably be expected to draw or promote employees.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-62 proposes that every year, starting on or before June 1988, every employer shall file with the Minister of Employment and Immigration a report providing a profile of the employer's employees, an annual report that will be tabled in Parliament. That is in the Bill.

Upon summary conviction, if the employer concerned fails to comply with the legislation and does not file this report, he will be liable to a fine not exceeding $50,000. And speaking of employers, Mr. Speaker, these are federal enterprises with 100 employees or more, and any corporate entity employing 100 or more employees on, or in connection with, a federal work or undertaking or business.

The exception, Mr. Speaker—I realize I do not have much time left, but I do want to raise this particular point—departments are excluded under the provisions of Sections 2 of the Financial Administration Act. When we examine this Bill and read that Departments are excluded under the provisions of the Financial Administration Act, we say to ourselves: Well of course, because several years ago, Treasury Board introduced an affirmative action program which, I think, reflects the intentions of the previous Liberal Government to set an example, at least with its own employees. So, in Bill C-62, departments are excluded. If we try and find out what is a department—

[English]

When we try to find out how that is defined, we look at the Financial Administration Act and note that those subject to Schedule 1 and Schedule 2 are exempted because they are covered by Treasury Board, which is the employer.

However, if one looks at others which may be Crown corporations or companies which have a mandate from Parliament, one finds that those are not covered by Bill C-62, nor by the Financial Administration Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member will have four minutes left in his speech when he resumes after Orders of the Day. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 22

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—EFFECT OF CHANGE IN UNION REPRESENTATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to the attention of the House the Government's neglect in dealing with the concerns of those employees of Canadian National whose rights to union representation have been violated.

More than six months ago the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) became aware that 50 Ontario workers were in limbo because of a change in union membership from the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers to the Teamsters. These 50 workers were even denied the right to vote, and have been told that they have lost their right to seniority for modified jobs within the Canadian Brotherhood, and have further been denied representation by the Teamsters.

Workers like David Malcolmson and Henry Singleton of Hamilton have a combined service of 27 years with Canadian National, and have been told to quit their jobs and reapply in the normal fashion so they might be able to find modified work or to find the door.

When we inquired on their behalf, we were told to write a letter to the Minister. The Minister has had a letter on this subject for more than six months. David Malcolmson is about to lose his job because he remains in a state of limbo caused by the Government's inaction.

I call on the Minister of Transport to resolve this problem immediately and save the jobs of Canadian workers. These workers rightfully deserve better treatment. They deserve action on the part of the Minister of Transport, not letters and inaction.

EMPLOYMENT

SITUATION IN MANITOBA HOG PROCESSING PLANTS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, many people are wondering how, if the Conservatives have created so many jobs, the unemployment rate is still so outrageously high. I can give the House one example of Conservative job creation in Manitoba where they have robbed Peter to pay Paul.

This summer the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board announced a federal grant of $865,000 to a firm in his riding in order to build a new hog processing plant. It is supposed to create 70 jobs. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, there are already three hog processing plants in Winnipeg, all of which are operating at 50 per cent to 75 per cent of full capacity. They all employ unionized workers, but the new plant is not likely to do so. This will likely mean much lower wages and benefits for the 70 new workers.

The Conservatives should know that consumer demand for red meat is already on the decline, and farmers cannot produce enough hogs to keep existing hog processing plants going. But never did the Conservative Government consult with the workers. Never did the Conservative Government consult with the three meat packing plants in Winnipeg. Without listening to the local plants or the union, all of which are in opposition to the new plant, the Conservatives are prepared to throw 100 or more workers in Winnipeg out of a job to provide 70 new poorly paid jobs in the Minister's riding.

In other words, the Conservatives are not creating any new jobs, they are shuffling them around from non-Conservative ridings to Conservative ridings; from unionized shops to non-unionized shops. That is the Conservative idea of job creation. No consultation, no co-ordination—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF SAINTE-ANNE-DE-BELLEVUE ARCTIC BIOLOGICAL STATION

Mr. Pierre H. Cadieux (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, last weekend, the Arctic Biological Station at Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue, in the riding of Vaudreuil, celebrated its 20th anniversary. In fact, we could even say its 40th anniversary, since the origins of this institution go back to 1946, thanks to the efforts of Professor Max Dunbar of McGill University.

Mr. Speaker, the Arctic Biological Station is unique in this country. Over the years, the station has received international recognition for its work, and there is no other institution like it in Canada, especially if we consider the expertise of its staff, its specialized library and its location.

[English]

The Saint-Anne Arctic Biological Station, Mr. Speaker, has the mandate to study Arctic marine life. The importance of this mandate becomes abundantly clear when one realizes that 90 per cent of all Canadian waters are either Arctic or sub-Arctic.

In addition, current projections estimate that for the remainder of the 1980s and through the 1990s, 25 per cent of all major Canadian capital projects will be in our North.

[Translation]

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to add that the excellent work done by all those either directly or indirectly concerned with the activities of the Station over the years deserved to be mentioned here in the House, and that we shall watch with interest as they continue in their quest to increase our knowledge and understanding of Canada's North.

ABORTION

OBJECTION TO PLANNED PARENTHOOD ORGANIZATION'S POSITION

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, there has been concern recently about funding levels for Planned Parenthood, both nationally and at the provincial level in Saskatchewan.

As one who supports the principle of public education on family planning and birth control, I agree with the general objectives of an organization like Planned Parenthood. However, there is one very objectionable aspect of Planned Parenthood's philosophy that cannot be tolerated by people of conscience. It is Planned Parenthood's stand on abortion.

Regardless of one's view on the subject, abortion is prohibited in the Criminal Code, except under certain circumstances. Yet Planned Parenthood continues to counsel that abortion is an equal alternative to women facing the birth of a child.

Planned Parenthood counsellors are instructed to state that an expectant woman has three options: carry a child to term and retain custody, place the child for adoption, or have an abortion. By doing this, Planned Parenthood is openly promoting an act which is illegal. Further, this counselling relegates Planned Parenthood to the role of an abortion referral agency.

I join with millions of Canadian taxpayers who feel that their tax dollars might be used for birth control information, but must not be used for the promotion of abortion.

INDUSTRY

NATURE OF DEMANDS MADE BY CANADIAN SHOE RETAILERS' ASSOCIATION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I want to take advantage of this opportunity to condemn the short-sighted and demagogic attitude of the executive of the Canadian Shoe Retailers' Association.

S.O. 22

Despite huge profits as a result of the fact that more than 60 per cent of shoes sold to consumers are imported, the Association has the unmitigated gall to demand more imports.

These demands, made on the basis of a very poor interpretation by the Anti-dumping Tribunal, are just a way of seeking more and more profits, which are already exorbitant.

The demands being made by the Association are oblivious to the real interests of consumers, a large majority of whom are in favour of consolidating and expanding employment in the shoe manufacturing sector. The Association wants to wipe out 20,000 jobs in the shoe industry for the sole purpose of increasing the profits of a few big retail importers.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this shortsighted attitude is not being used by the Government to legitimize its next decision.

The situation is quite simple: Five-year quotas and 50 per cent of the market mean 20,000 jobs, the possibility of creating 6,000 more jobs and fully safeguarding the interests of the consumer. No quotas means these jobs will disappear and increased profits for a few big retail importers.

TRADE

FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS—CALL FOR FIVE-YEAR RENEWAL

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, across the country 14,000 footwear workers anxiously await the Government's decision on extending footwear quotas. Our caucus has considered this question carefully, and now calls on the Government to renew these quotas for five years.

The process of restructuring to modernize the Canadian industry is lengthy. Restructuring assistance given by the previous Government was late in coming. Only $2.2 million of the $14 million in earmarked funds from CIRB was actually handed out by December, 1984.

Clearly the restructuring effort has only just begun. It would be grossly irresponsible to end quota protection at this time. Thousands of jobs would be lost and the Government would have wasted its restructuring assistance.

Also, Mr. Speaker, we call for the tightening of the quotas and for their reallocation away from importers and retailers who now get most of the benefits. Most quotas should go instead to manufacturers and to retailers who are prepared to carry 50 per cent Canadian content in their stores. This strategy will revive—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CRITICISM OF OFFICIAL OPPOSITION

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, there are some things that take place in this House that drive one to distraction, even to the point of using unparliamentary language.

In over 20 years the most direct action the Liberal Government took in relation to the environment was a former Prime Minister writing a letter to a local Liberal candidate stating that he would urge the United States authorities to stop polluting the Niagara River. The present Liberal environment critic, who was once the Liberal Minister of the Environment, did not even do that much. If he had been serious about the concerns of those millions of people living within the Niagara River-Great Lakes basin, instead of writing about it now, he would have then improved the Canada-U.S. Water Quality Agreement; he would have then joined with the provincial Government in taking legal action against U.S. polluters; and he sould have then been working with the people in the municipalities of Niagara to fund the elimination of Canadian pollutants. However, he did none of those things. His response to questions at the time was: "The Government is monitoring the situation".

● (1410)

Now that the present Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) works to clean up the mess which was left by 20 years of Liberal inaction, the Liberal critic stands by and says: "Not enough, not enough". This simply shows his Liberal roots and why they will be sitting on the sidelines for many years to come.

PENSION PLAN REVISIONS—PLEA ON BEHALF OF PRESENT SUPERANNUATES

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, in April of this year the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) announced that an agreement had been reached with the unions representing Public Service employees on the principles to govern the introduction of pension plan revisions. Both the Government and the unions agreed that Public Service pension plans would be funded and administered in accordance with accepted practices of major private-sector employers.

This means that current indexing of pensions would be replaced by an inflation protection feature based upon the earnings of the fund. Placing Public Service pension arrangements on a sound financial basis is a proposal with much merit.

I hope that an agreement can be made which would allow the retention of current indexing for those federal employees who have retired from the Public Service. This latter statement is one which I made public to federal superannuates in my constituency on June 21 this year. I now state it again. My stand on this issue has not changed.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

CANCELLATION OF PENSIONERS' RAIL PASSES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all Members of the House will want to join with me in condemning the decision of CP Rail to cancel the rail passes of CP pensioners who retired prior to 1978. I remind the House that these pensioners are not represented at the table for purposes of collective bargaining. They are appealing to us to be their voice in reversing a decision which is both unjust and unfair.

Many of these CP pensioners have very meagre pensions. In many cases the widows of these men receive barely enough to make ends meet. I know this for a fact, as many of them reside in the constituency which I represent.

The CP rail pass was considered to be part of the retirement package prior to 1978. Now it is being unilaterally withdrawn by the company. This is shameful, and it means that in many cases retired CP workers and their spouses will be unable to visit family and friends. They will be prevented from taking some kind of modest vacation.

I ask all Hon. Members to protest and insist that CP Rail squelch this policy which punishes its pensioners.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

SWEARING IN OF NEW ALBERTA PREMIER, HON. DON GETTY

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow will be a special day for the people of Alberta: We will have a new Premier.

[English]

On the eve of Mr. Don Getty's swearing in as Alberta's eleventh Premier, I would like to welcome him back to the political arena. Of course Mr. Getty is no stranger to politics. He will bring to his office experience as Minister of Inter-Governmental Affairs and Energy during the Lougheed era.

Mr. Getty's first involvement was in 1967. He was one of the six Conservative candidates to win in the election of that year. History has proven that this victory was only the beginning. In 1971 he was part of the Lougheed team which broke the Social Credit dynasty after 36 years in office.

The Getty style is one of conciliation. He has always been in favour of federal-provincial negotiation and consultation. He is a man worthy not only of the office he has attained, but of our support as well. He has proven his commitment to the people of Alberta and of Canada in his capacity as Minister responsible for inter-governmental affairs. He is supportive of the initiative of the federal Government to seek a new trade agreement with the United States.

As an Albertan and as a Member of Parliament, I welcome the opportunity to work with the new Premier. He will bring to our Confederation a voice and spirit for Alberta of which we can all be proud.

PLANNED PARENTHOOD FEDERATION

INCREASED FUNDING ADVOCATED

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support strongly the call by literally millions of Canadians for increased funding to the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada. That Federation is in the forefront in Canada of the struggle for safe and effective birth control and sex education. I could think of no more positive and appropriate means of reducing the number of abortions in Canada than ensuring that our young people, particularly, have access to proper sex education and to safe and effective contraceptives.

Mr. Gormley: You are kidding.

Mr. Robinson: I suggest as well that the Planned Parenthood Federation has called for additional research into proper and effective forms of contraception.

Instead of accepting the counsel of the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley), which will result in an increase in the number of abortions in Canada, and instead of accepting his suggestion that we cut off the funds to the Planned Parenthood Federation, which is what he is saying, I suggest that we should increase the level of funding to that Federation and thank it for the outstanding service it is providing to Canadians in promoting safe, effective birth control, and preventing unwanted pregnancies.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

EAST COAST OFFSHORE DRILLING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In her announcement yesterday affecting the oil industry, she hurt that part of the country which is already the most economically depressed, namely, the Atlantic Provinces. Offshore drilling off the coasts of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia is already drastically down, yet her decision yesterday made the situation worse. Why did she decide to cut the Atlantic Provinces adrift?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: —the fact that drilling is down in the offshore under the present grant-rich PIP program is the reason we brought in our new frontier policy yesterday. It provides a very handsome package of incentives, better management, and new royalty regimes, which will assist in the maintenance and the development of the offshore in the Atlantic region, will create jobs, and will benefit the region as a whole.

[Translation]

INQUIRY WHY NEW OIL PLAN FAVOURS MULTINATIONALS RATHER THAN CANADIAN COMPANIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The new oil plan announced yesterday by the Minister will benefit the multinationals at the expense of Canadian companies. Here is my question to the Minister: Why did she introduce a plan which will favour foreign companies rather than Canadian companies?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, our program is aimed at both the multinationals and Canadian companies which are interested in exploring in the offshore. However, the Right Hon. Member should be aware that 65 per cent of the exploration being undertaken in the frontier regions is by Canadian companies which pay taxes.

Some Hon. Members: Was!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, of course the answer to that is that it was, but she killed it yesterday.

NATURAL GAS PRICING—EFFECT ON ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): On June 17, the Minister told the Canadian Gas Association that any gas pricing scheme, and I use her words deliberately, "that is not supported by the buyer and the seller will be unacceptable". Why, then, did the Minister exclude from her discussions on natural gas pricing the two largest consuming provinces, namely, the provinces of Ontario and Quebec?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will be announcing the new natural gas pricing agreement with the western provinces this afternoon, after Question Period, on Statements by Ministers.

I can assure the Right Hon. Member that consultations with the consuming provinces have taken place. I have personally spoken with or seen the Energy Ministers of the consuming provinces. We have had their principles and their concerns at the table with us, and they have both been briefed on the contents of the agreement which I will be tabling later this afternoon.

Mr. Gauthier: How about the consumers?

OFFSHORE DRILLING ACTIVITY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister has said that she has put the last nail in the coffin of the National Energy Program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Come on over.

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

• (1420)

Mr. MacLellan: She has put the last nail in the coffin of the offshore exploration program. Drilling rigs are going to other areas like the North Sea. People are losing their jobs. Why does the Minister think that with a reduced incentive she can maintain activity in the offshore?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, our new frontier program has been welcomed by the Energy Ministers of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland who have benefited more from our policies than from the policies of any Liberal Government. Nova Scotia, for instance, can look forward to between six and eight wells being drilled in the next year, a very healthy level of development.

I do not understand why an Hon. Member from Nova Scotia would criticize a policy which is aimed at creating jobs and maintaining an oil and gas industry in his home province.

CANCELLATION OF PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the wells to be drilled next year are because of the grandfathering of the PIP program and have nothing to do with this program that the Minister has introduced. The President of the Canadian Petroleum Association said that the cancellation of the Petroleum Incentives Program makes drilling in the offshore unprofitable. How can the Minister give billions of dollars to the multinational oil companies through the Western Accord without giving equal consideration to the East Coast and frontier areas?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member is, without intent but probably in ignorance, misleading the House when he suggests that the President of the Canadian Petroleum Association has attacked our program. The CPA was consulted throughout the development of the program and has endorsed the program as being a clear statement of policy and an incentive package which will benefit the offshore area.

OFFSHORE EXPLORATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the same Minister that follows up on that. If Nova Scotia is benefiting so much from the present policies, can she explain to the House why there are only three offshore drilling rigs currently operating off Nova Scotia while there were nine a year ago, why offshore employment has gone from 3,300 to half of that, and why Nova Scotia's unemployment rate has gone up from 11 per cent to 13 per cent? Why are those things happening if Nova Scotia is benefiting from the present policies? Can the Minister also tell the House how many jobs will be created through her new offshore policy?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has failed to point out that the decline in offshore drilling activities has taken place under the present PIP program under which taxpayers' money, sometimes as much as 90 cents on every dollar, is being given to oil and gas companies. All the Government grants in the world cannot guarantee geology. We want oil and gas companies to drill for oil and gas, not for Government grants. That is what our program is designed to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: I think the Minister is using my line about drilling in Ottawa.

EFFECT OF NEW POLICY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, how does the Minister think we can benefit from returning to a policy like the one we had before the 1970s when American companies were sitting on their butts not exploring, while benefiting from a tax based regime that they were ripping off through tax deductions? How does she think that we will help Atlantic Canada by going back to that regime? How is she going to encourage Canadian companies to get back into play? They will be completely lost under this new regime.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we are not returning to any past regime, and particularly not to one of a Liberal Government. We are putting in place a Conservative regime which is using energy as the engine of growth to create jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: May I point out, in regard to the Hon. Member's concern over the multinational oil companies, that the four biggest operators in the offshore are Shell, Mobil, Canterra, and Petro-Canada. Two of them are Canadian companies and two of them are multinational companies. The Government did more to create a Canadian oil industry owned by Canadians through the acquisition of Gulf Canada, and other measures that we have taken, than any other Government.

[Translation]

GAS AND PETROLEUM INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Would the Minister tell the House whether the Government has shelved its policy aimed at giving back to Canadians up to 50 per cent control over the gas and oil industry, as provided under the previous policy endorsed by the House of Commons?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the policy clearly states that we are maintaining and strengthening the provision for 50 per cent Canadian ownership in the oil and gas industry. Not only do we say it, but we have done more to Canadianize the oil and gas industry in the last year than was done in the previous three years.

[Translation]

SECURITY OF PETROLEUM SUPPLY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister bring the House up to date on the energy policy goal, namely that Canadians must have security of petroleum supply should another oil crisis break out in future?

Will that goal be achieved now that drilling operations will be reduced on the Atlantic coast and in the Northwest Territories?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker, our policy is aimed at enhancing energy security for all Canadians. That is why we brought in a clear and efficient frontier policy. That is why we are maintaining the 50 per cent Canadian content. That is why we have created the conditions for the development of Hibernia, our largest oil field. That is why we are working on the development of Venture.

FINANCE

OIL COMPANY TAX CREDITS—REQUEST FOR ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Minister indicated that the Government was in favour of moving toward a system in which the public would have the right to know if large sums of money would be going to corporations. Yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced a new tax regime for the oil industry which includes a system of tax credits which will ensure that many millions of dollars will be going to multinational oil companies as well as others, while remaining secret. Since the tax credit is calculated on an annual basis, will the Minister live up to what he has indicated in the past few days, by ensuring that we will have tabled in the House on an annual basis a list of the companies that receive tax credits and the precise amounts of the tax credits?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw a distinction for the Hon. Member. I was referring to remission orders yesterday when I said that I would consider whether or not it was appropriate to provide information on those orders to the House. Now the Hon. Member is asking for information on specific tax incentives. That is a very far-reaching question because he is saying that, in addition to the provision of broad information such as that which I provided during the summer, he wants individual taxpayer's personal tax information to be placed before the House. I think he should rethink his question. That is something that goes totally contrary to the intent of the Income Tax Act as it stands today.

REQUEST FOR ABOLITION OF TAX LOOPHOLE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the Conservatives were elected to effect some changes, not to maintain the status quo. That is what Conservative Members promised to do. We are not talking about individual taxpayers, we are talking about corporations. We on this side of the House happen to think that if Shell, Imperial Oil, or a Canadian company receives millions of dollars in taxpayers' money, the taxpayers of Canada have the right to know about it.

Since the Minister obviously does not want to do anything about that special tax provision, I would like to ask him about another one. This concerns the well known Little Egypt Bump that has been used at least six times—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Could the Hon. Member come to a question?

Mr. Broadbent: Considering that there is a specific loophole known as the Little Egypt Bump that has provided windfall profits without benefits in terms of jobs, particularly to oil firms, will the Minister abolish that particular loophole?

● (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated to the Hon. Member that we have abolished a number of tax incentives which were not performing the job that had previously been expected of them. I released a booklet this month—this past summer—

Mr. Broadbent: In August.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —in August, which indicated the cost of a wide range of tax incentives. I was calling on Hon. Members to give me some comment with respect to whether or not they should be maintained. I will continue to look at all of these in the context of a continuing reform of the corporate tax system and the personal tax system.

CALL FOR FREEZE ON LITTLE EGYPT BUMP

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, a month before his last Budget I provided the Minister with a list of such loopholes which we thought should be omitted, and I gave the reasons. Since the Minister says he is willing to look at this matter and its impacts, will he turn it around? Is he prepared to place a six-month freeze on this particular benefit, which we contend has no net gain for Canada but which simply provides a tax windfall to companies? Will he place a six-month freeze on it for the time being, look into it and then, if it turns out to have benefit in his judgment, he could restore it some time down the road? Will he save the taxpayers money now by doing that?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Very good thinking.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again I believe the Hon. Member should think carefully about the type of question he is asking.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: What condescending nonsense, Michael.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You speak of nonsense?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member suggests we should just stop the clock and have a total review of everything then, sure, we can do that. However, I think there are a great many people whose jobs could be destroyed if that clock is stopped. I have said on many occasions—

Mr. Broadbent: Name one!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —both to him and to other Members of the House, and many times publicly, that we have a continuing review of a broad range of corporate tax measures. I have indicated that I am very prepared to make those changes, have done so with the carve-outs, the scientific research tax credits, income splitting, limited partnerships—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a speech.

BANKS AND BANKING

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF NORTHLAND BANK INSTABILITY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Finance) or the Minister of Finance.

The Northland Bank has been under the control of a curator since September 1 and, in addition, 45 Royal Bank employees have analyzed the institution's loan portfolio. As a result of that analysis the Minister asked the court to initiate liquidation proceedings, a decision she announced last September 30.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister to what extent the Northland Bank was insolvent. To put it another way, the specific question I want to ask her is this: What was the amount of potential losses on loans outstanding? What was the figure given the Minister which prompted her to make the decision she announced on September 30?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I spent two and a half hours in committee yesterday and I have agreed to go back to committee. I have said in the House on many occasions that this is not the place or the forum to try to discuss numbers in 30-second clips. I will be very happy to discuss the bank at the next committee meeting. That is exactly why we have an inquiry where all these facts will come out.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE A DOCUMENT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I have no idea to what extent one can refer to the committee, but we cannot get answers there. I had to leave the committee room this morning to object and indicate my dissatisfaction about the fact that the witnesses do not want to answer.

I would ask the Minister whether she would be prepared to enlighten Hon. Members by tabling in the House the document on which she based her September 30 decision, for we would be better informed when she appears again before the committee.

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I do not regard walking out of committee as a very useful way to get information.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REPORTED ALLEGATIONS MADE BY SUPERINTENDENT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It concerns a very serious charge by RCMP Superintendent Al Nowlan that in 1977 Commissioner Simmonds deliberately lied to the then Solicitor General, Francis Fox, over the extent of RCMP illegality and wrongdoing by the security service. What action is the Solicitor General taking to investigate these very serious allegations that, in effect, the Commissioner lied to his political masters? Has the Minister asked the Commissioner on how many other occasions since 1977 he has deliberately covered up or lied to his political masters, either Ministers, or Members of Parliament?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I take very strong exception to the tone of the question which leaves the strong implication that the Hon. Member has come to the conclusion that Commissioner Simmonds has possibly lied on a number of occasions to members of Cabinet. I believe there is no basis for that, and the Hon. Member should retract it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Now answer the question.

Mr. Beatty: The Leader of the NDP says: "Now answer the question." The question being asked was premised on a statement in the newspaper today by a man who, according to the Leader of the NDP, as reported in Hansard on January 30, 1978:

> —conducted the internal inquiry established last June into wrongdoings of the RCMP, was personally and deeply implicated in the illegal break-in to obtain information about the Parti Québécois in January, 1973—

And who, he alleged, withheld information from the then Solicitor General and who, the Leader of the NDP said, should be fired by the Solicitor General.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Remember that, Ed?

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, that is the approach which the NDP took then. That is the sort of approach which they are taking toward the Commissioner of the RCM Police today.

Mr. Speaker, I want to respond to this question—

An Hon. Member: Well, do it!

Mr. Beatty: —because I think it is an important one to which Canadians are entitled to have an answer.

As the Hon. Member will know, this allegation dates back to 1977—eight years ago. The allegation deals with events which allegedly took place prior to the McDonald Commission which came down with a three-volume, two million-word report on the allegations into the RCM Police's activities. Mr. Nowlan was one of the witnesses before the McDonald Commission. If he had any evidence of any wrongdoing on the part of the RCMP it was his obligation to bring that forward before Mr. Justice McDonald.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, it may have been eight years ago, but he is still the Commissioner of the RCMP today and there should be an inquiry.

Mr. Andre: Slander somebody else now.

Ms. Copps: Don't talk to us about slander.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Supplementary question.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is this. In view of the fact that this unprecedented charge by Superintendent Nowlan of lies and deception by the current RCMP Commissioner raises a very fundamental question about his ability to continue in his capacity as Commissioner—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: —will the Minister immediately suspend the Commissioner from his duties pending a full inquiry into these very serious charges?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the tactics of the NDP are these. Just as the Leader of the NDP in 1978 attempted to attack the reputation of Superintendent Nowlan, now that it is convenient for the NDP they chose to use what Superintendent Nowlan says today to discredit the Commissioner of the RCMP.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Beatty: I had the opportunity this morning to speak with the Hon. Francis Fox who was Solicitor General of the day. He agrees with me that the appropriate forum to have considered any allegations of wrongdoing, the forum which had the ability to subpoena witnesses and to look at every single file and record within the Royal Canadian Mounted Policy, was the McDonald Inquiry. He has no evidence to indicate that he was misled by Commissioner Simmonds who then, at that point, was Deputy Commissioner for Administration and was not even the individual who answered for the RCM Police to the Solicitor General of the day.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MULTICULTURALISM

MINISTRY'S RACE RELATIONS UNIT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism I would like to direct my question to the Secretary of State. The Minister is aware that the equality of rights report endorsed all the recommendations of an earlier report on visible minorities entitled Equality Now. Yet in discussions with national organizations and his own officials it is very clear that the race relations unit within the Ministry has been allowed to wither away and has been rendered largely non-operational at the very time that its strength is urgently needed. Therefore, given the magnitude of the recommendations in the Equality Now report on the problems faced by visible minorities, is the Government prepared to endorse fully and restore the race relations unit to its former and proper functions so that the rights of visible minorities can be realized in fact, and indeed be protected?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the report has just been tabled. We will refer the matter to the Minister of State (Multiculturalism), hold discussions and take the appropriate steps in due time.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: A very short supplementary question.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY INQUIRY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the same Minister. Given that countless organizations, including the Canadian Ethnocultural Council and the Alliance on Race Relations, have rejected out of hand the spineless—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member had a long preamble to his first question. Does he have a question, please?

• (1440)

Mr. Marchi: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister prepared to support the organizations which are calling for a mandatory program in the employment equity legislation and a viable employment enforcement mechanism which will ensure that all Canadians, regardless of race and colour, will indeed have employment equity in the workplace? Or is the Minister prepared to buckle under to the whims of the Minister of Employment and Immigration?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat the answer, if the Hon. Member cares to listen. I would remind the Hon. Member that he directed his question to me, so I will answer if he wants to listen.

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. All the interjections do not help, wherever they come from.

[Translation]

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious, and I said so a moment ago, that along with the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) we will review or analyze the policies concerning . . . right now I simply do not feel any inclination to make a specific commitment with respect to the Hon. Member's request, we shall see. We will weigh the pros and cons of the various policies. One thing for sure is that we do not have to take any lesson from Members opposite concerning that question.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

NOTIFICATION OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND DEPARTMENTAL VACANCIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. It concerns a meeting which took place on September 10 here in the City of Ottawa between Edgar Gallant, the Deputy Minister of Veterans Affairs, the Associate Deputy Minister of Employment and Immigration, and Peter White, who is the "prince of patronage" in the Office of the Prime Minister, two Conservative Members of Parliament from Prince Edward Island, and the Chief of Staff to the Minister of the Environment. The result of the meeting was that the Prince Edward Island Conservative Members of Parliament were to be notified of DVA and Canada Employment job vacancies seven days in advance of those vacancies being posted, in other words, before they were posted through the Public Service. Would the Minister tell the House whether or not he was aware of that meeting? And did he approve of this procedure of undercutting the merit principle in favour of blatant political patronage by the Conservative Party?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, first, to answer very directly the question put by the Hon. Member, I was not aware of that meeting. Quite honestly, this is the first I have heard of this meeting.

Mr. Broadbent: Check with your staff.

Mr. de Cotret: I would also like to remind the Hon. Member that the Public Service Commission does not report to the President of the Treasury Board. The Public Service Commission reports to Parliament. It does not have to report to me and tell me what meetings it has, and with whom it has them.

I will be happy to look into the matter, but it is certainly not the responsibility of the Government to follow the Public Service Commission's activities in that way.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have minutes of a meeting in my hand which state that the open competitions to be held in DVA and CEIC will be sent to local Members of Parliament seven days in advance of being posted in the Canada Employment Centres. Will the Minister investigate this matter—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He just said he would.

Mr. Nystrom: —or is this the new policy of the Conservative Party in terms of patronage in the Public Service of Canada?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I indicated in my first answer that I would be happy to look into the allegations made by the Hon. Member. Once again, in terms of patronage, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the reason the Public Service Commission reports directly to Parliament as a whole rather than to the Government is to make sure that staffing decisions are outside the realm of direct political control.

I will be happy to look into the matter. I will talk to the chairman and try to get whatever information I can about that meeting, and report back to the House.

HUMAN RIGHTS

REDUCTIONS IN DEPARTMENT'S PERSONNEL AND BUDGET

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. The Minister will know that his Department's mandate gives it the central point of reference for domestic human rights issues. In that capacity, could the Minister explain why the Human Rights Program in his Department has suffered reductions in both personnel and budget at the very time when the Government should be implementing the recommendations of the Equality Rights Committee?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, actually, I have not yet had time to consider the matter of staff and resources assigned to deal with the Canadian Human Rights Commission, but I will take the Hon. Member's question as notice and report my findings at a later date.

[English]

DUTIES OF PROGRAM MANAGER

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, this is the Minister's portfolio. It is the Human Rights Section of his Department. In fact I must point out to the Minister that not only has the Human Rights Program been downgraded in his Department—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Mr. de Corneille: —but its manager—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. de Corneille: How does the Minister square his rhetoric of pious intentions when not only has the Human Rights Program been downgraded but its manager is now expected also to run the very important Secretariat for the Disabled, and this is happening at a time when it has not even finished the work it was assigned, never mind about the new work which will be assigned to it now by the Equality Rights report?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we can confirm there has been a certain amount of internal reorganization at the Department of the Secretary of State. This does not mean that work formerly done by a person who has now been displaced will not be done by someone else. Reorganization does not necessarily mean reducing the number of employees. I said that we were evaluating our resources. As soon as the process is finished, you may start criticizing.

TRANSPORT

PURCHASE OF SHIP BY CN MARINE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Yesterday's Le Soleil reported that Mr. Tingsley, President of CN Marine, is considering the purchase in Europe of a ship, the Viking Saga. Is the Minister of Transport disappointed, and is he going to do everything he can to prevent this, so that Canadian workers can have jobs before foreign workers are considered?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to acknowledge the very excellent report sent to me by the Hon. Member in connection with his support for Canadian-built vessels and, in particular, his keen interest on behalf of the shipyard workers in his constituency. This is a matter which is currently under consideration and I can assure the Hon. Member that his representation and, indeed, the thrust of his report, will be taken into consideration during the course of that evaluation.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STRATEGIC, TACTICAL OR OPERATIONAL REQUIREMENTS FOR QUEBEC CITY ARMORY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

The Quebec City Armory has been identified by the city's tourist industry, and by the Pluram group in its study, as having excellent potential as a tourism reception and interpretation centre.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Associate Minister what strategic, tactical or operational requirements are making his department retain use of the armory.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Department has been approached in terms of the Department of National Defence giving up this facility for some community use in Quebec City. While I appreciate and agree that it would be useful to Quebec City, it is also very useful to the military. It is military property which is used on an ongoing basis. For the Department to give it up for this purpose would require the taking on of additional costs and inconvenience, and at this point in time we really cannot reach that decision.

UTILIZATION OF QUEBEC CITY ARMORY—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of State (Tourism) and I want to ask him whether he is prepared to support this project and to pursue the matter with his colleague?

[English]

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to pursue discussions on this particular matter with anyone who is interested and willing to talk to us. The Hon. Member surely knows that all monies going into any province—Quebec not an exception—go through the joint federal—in this case—Quebec Tourism agreement.

We are certainly prepared to talk, but until the issue with the Department of National Defence is ironed out, we are not prepared to do anything unilaterally on our own.

INCOME TAX ACT

INTRODUCTION OF RHOSP AMENDMENTS

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. There is considerable interest on the part of Canadians in the Government's planned changes to RHOSP contributions and deductions announced in the May Budget. There exists at this time only a Ways and Means motion affecting this subject. Could the Minister indicate to the House and to Canadians when the legislation amending the Income Tax Act will be introducted? Could he be specific enough to predict if this will take place before the Christmas break?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not have a precise date, but I am hoping that the income tax legislation will be before the House toward the end of November.

EMPLOYMENT

DIFFICULTY OF SITUATION IN MONTREAL EAST

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. We are informed that Fonderie CSW in Montreal East will be laying off 125 people on November 8, which is one more example of how Montreal's industrial base is continuing to erode.

In view of the urgency of the situation, I would like to ask the Minister whether she is prepared to consult with other Cabinet Members, and especially the Minister of State (Transport), with a view to announcing some concrete measures, such as orders from CN or VIA Rail, that will provide job security for 125 workers who will soon be out on the street.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we announced the creation of an adjustment committee. The purpose of this committee is to examine existing problems and provide solutions. I think the Hon. Member should give the committee some time to do its work and submit recommendations.

● (1450)

POSSIBLE LOSS OF 125 JOBS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister probably already knows how the Montreal East Survival Committee reacted to this announcement. It's like prescribing aspirin for a cancer patient. I would like to ask the Minister what concrete measures she intends to take, and this is important, before November 8, to keep another 125 families from losing their breadwinners.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the Hon. Member's question, because the unions, the private sector and the municipal authorities have expressed an interest in the committee. I would also invite the Hon. Member to pass on suggestions to this committee, for consideration.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—INFORMATION SOUGHT ON FATE OF MISSING PERSONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, today 200 people are occupying the Metropolitan Cathedral in Guatemala City to demand that before the military leaves power it gives answers about the disappeared, and also to demand a commitment from the group that will assume power after the elections that they will get answers about the disappeared. Where are they? What happened?

Will the Minister ask the Hon. Gordon Fairweather, Canada's Human Rights Commissioner, who arrives today in Guatemala City for the elections, to visit this group in the Cathedral and to give them what aid he can to get the answers to their questions?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take it that question is directed to me. I will see if it is appropriate to do what the Member requested and, if it is, I will so request Mr. Fairweather.

Mr. Heap: I thank the Hon. Minister for noticing my little slip in not directing it to him.

HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSIONER'S REPORT ON ELECTIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): I would ask the Minister again, will he also direct the Hon. Gordon Fairweather, in his report on Guatemala's elections, to tell us which candidates or parties show the honest courage to challenge the decree of President Mejia Victores that, as he said: "To take steps toward the reappearance alive of the disappeared is a subversive act and will be treated as such"? Will the Hon. Gordon Fairweather pursue that question?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, whenever the Hon. Member rises in his place I get ready to answer questions because very often they are directed to me. I am not sure whether it would be appropriate and consistent with Mr. Fairweather's activities to act upon the second request. I will look into it. If it would be appropriate and consistent, I will ask him to do that, but if not, I won't.

DAYLIGHT SAVINGS TIME

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION IN 1986

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The Minister is aware that the United States House of Representatives has voted to extend Daylight Savings Time for four extra weeks starting next spring. Will the Minister and the Government urge the provinces to adopt a similar change, bearing in mind the fact that the National Research Council has indicated that it would result in a savings of some $24 million a year in energy costs for Canadians?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Move to Saskatchewan and save.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Saskatchewan is very progressive, Mr. Speaker.

The suggestion of my hon. friend indeed makes eminent good sense. I should point out that the proposal, which has passed the United States House of Representatives, has yet to pass the U.S. Senate, but indeed is widely supported in Canada and the United States for some of the reasons upon which he elaborated. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague, the Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine presented a motion to the House in May of 1984 a motion that this matter be addressed with our provincial colleagues because it is indeed a matter which, under convention, falls within provincial and municipal jurisdictions, but I will take it up with my counterparts at the earliest opportunity.

POSSIBLE CONSTRUCTION OF RESEARCH LABORATORY—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

In June 1984 the Minister in the previous Government was in Victoriaville, in Quebec, to announce the construction of a $13 million agricultural research laboratory which was to create a number of good job openings. In November 1984 the project was put on the back burner because you thought there had not been enough studies.

Does your Department now have sufficient information to make a decision and, if so, what is the decision and, if not, when will you be in a position to make a decision?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I do not have sufficient information to respond specifically about the project to which the Hon. Member refers. I am very happy to take notice of the question and will get back to the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

BRIEF PRESENTED BY CANADIAN FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, we had an opportunity to meet with spokesmen for the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and a major part of their brief stressed the need for massive research investments.

Can the Minister make the firm commitment that he will support this specific and well structured research project which is ready to proceed?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that dollars invested in research and development have always been a very high priority of the Government. I can assure the Hon. Member that as far as the budget of the Ministry of Agriculture, over which I have some control, is concerned, that will continue to be a number one priority.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

GRADES 2 AND 3 WHEAT QUOTAS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board. Many wheat producers in the northern Prairies are still in the process of harvesting and drying grain. The Canadian Wheat Board has had a five-bushel quota on dry grades 2 and 3 wheat. The quota expires tomorrow. Would the Minister prevail upon the Canadian Wheat Board to extend that quota for a week or so to give all farmers a fair opportunity to deliver their grain?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Member raises a very fair and serious question of concern to a lot of prairie producers. I am happy to tell him that as of Tuesday the Board decided to terminate the quota, but to reinstate it as quickly as possible after November 1 to allow producers who did not have a chance to deliver prior to the termination date an opportunity to deliver after that date. As far as the Board is concerned, that will assist all producers in being able to manage the stocks that come into the system. Those concerns will be looked after, Mr. Speaker.

PORTS

PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It relates to his meeting yesterday with the provincial Minister of Transportation on the Port of Churchill. In a press release issued by his Department earlier today the Minister said that the only thing the Government is guaranteeing is that it will meet with Manitoba Hydro and provincial officials by the end of November. When will we finally get action? Why are we only having a meeting? Why will the Government not live up to the agreement which was signed over a year ago?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Hon. Member cannot read, because the press release clearly says that the issue will be resolved by November 30. That means that we will not only have a meeting, we will have a resolution to the problem.

ENERGY

TAX TREATMENT OF OIL COMPANIES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday, when referring to the incentive grants for petroleum exploration, the Minister said: "There are other ways in Canada to spend money than giving it to oil and gas companies".

If the Minister really believes that, why did she reduce the taxes to oil companies last spring by $2.4 billion a year and increase the value of their reserves by $800 million? Could she explain why she made that statement?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member why we reduced taxes on the oil and gas industry and would now follow that up with reducing cash incentives. It is because we want an oil and gas industry that is economically viable and will create jobs for all Canadians.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Government House Leader for the customary statement on the business of the House for the coming week.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to report on the legislative platter, appealing as it is, for the next few days.

We are now dealing with Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity. The back-up Bill is Bill C-42, respecting the dissolution of Canagrex. We will continue with Bill C-62, notwithstanding the motions that have been put forward by the Opposition today, and I hope opposition Members will allow second reading to take place early. We have had a very substantial and long debate at second reading stage and it would be appropriate to move along.

I indicated earlier this week, certainly to House Leaders if not publicly, that it is my intention to initiate second reading debate on Bill C-45 tomorrow, which is the Bill relating to employer and employee relations in the Senate and House of Commons. I hope that we will have a good debate tomorrow and possibly see that Bill go to committee.

The House will know that I have given notice with respect to Bill C-80 and I hope to deal with the time allocatio motion on Monday. I also want to deal with Ways and Means motions on Monday. My colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), will be tabling certain motions which we will want to have brought forward so that the details will be made public. We will attempt to deal with that on Monday. Hon. Members will have an opportunity to see the contents of those Ways and Means motions over the weekend. Depending on our progress, it might be appropriate to deal with Bill C-45 if there is some time left on Monday.

On Tuesday we will probably deal with Bill C-80, if that is appropriate. I am not anticipating the vote of the House on the time allocation motion, but assuming that we win that vote, we might proceed with that final day of debate.

For the remainder of the week there is the report stage of Bill C-66, the reorganization of Canada Development Corporation; and Bill C-81, an Act to amend the Criminal Code with respect to lotteries. There are other items of legislation coming out of legislative committees. I want to consult with my colleagues and the opposition House Leaders to see if we can deal with these matters at report stage and third reading. As always, I will give as much notice as possible to Hon. Members if there is any change. I will monitor progress to make sure that the people of Canada are well served.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I notice that no mention was made of any allotted days for this coming week. Am I to assume from that that there will be no allotted days during the course of next week?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, there is the possibility of allotted days next week. As the Hon. Member knows, we have had some discussion about that. I am just looking ahead at the conventional week. As I have indicated, on the basis of what progress is made, there may indeed be an allotted day if not more, next week. I would certainly give adequate advance notice to the Hon. Members so that they can give some consideration to an appropriate form of motion, in the event there is an allotted day. However, that is a distinct possibility.

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT OF FUTURE LEVELS OF IMMIGRATION

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 47(2), I wish to table, in both official languages, the annual report on future levels of immigration.

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 47(4), this report is to be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

IMMIGRATION

FUTURE LEVELS OF IMMIGRATION—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF STATE (IMMIGRATION)

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I rise to indicate that the Government is today signalling that Canada is once again welcoming immigrants.

[Translation]

Today the Government reiterates its intention of welcoming immigrants.

[English]

I have tabled in the House the report on future immigration levels for the next two calendar years. Immigration levels are being increased to 105,000 to 115,000 in 1986 and 115,000 to 125,000 in 1987. This is up from the 85,000 to 90,000 announced for 1985. The Government believes that, contrary to myths, immigrants do not take jobs away from Canadians but instead contribute positively to our economic and social development. This view has been confirmed by comprehensive consultations undertaken this year, by reports of the parliamentary Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, and by the recent report of the Royal Commission on Canada's Economic Prospects.

The two-year plan announced today represents a new era for immigration policy and stresses the postive longer term impact of the program. During this period, the level will be rebuilt in a moderate, controlled manner which will, in a balanced way, support the reunion of families, the admission of humanitarian immigrants and the selection of economic immigrants. Taken as a whole, this plan will place the immigration program back on the path of the more traditional and widely accepted post-war levels.

• (1510)

[Translation]

Taken as a whole this plan will place the immigration program back on the path of the more traditional and widely accepted post-war levels.

[English]

Specifically, the Government will be implementing the policy through its major programs.

First, family class. The family class will remain the cornerstone of immigration policy, and we will continue to process applications on demand.

[Translation]

The family class will remain the cornerstone of immigration policy, and we will continue to process applications on demand.

[English]

Government projections suggest that 45,000 landings may occur next year. But I want to stress that this is not a quota or a ceiling, and this projection may be exceeded if demand rises.

Second, the humanitarian program. Canada will increase its growth of Government assisted refugees in 1986 by 1,000 from 11,000 to 12,000. This is at a time when many refugee receiving nations are becoming more restrictive.

[Translation]

Canada will increase its growth of Government assisted refugees in 1986 from 11,000 to 12,000. This at a time when many refugees receiving nations are becoming more restrictive.

[English]

These refugees will be aided by an additional provision of $3 million to the Adjustment Assistance Program. An additional $750,000 is being provided to agencies to provide direct aid to refugees and other needy immigrants. In total, the 1986 plan allows for some 20,000 to 23,000 humanitarian landings, the second largest plan in the world next to the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McLean: Third, Mr. Speaker, we have independent immigration. The Government is going to emphasize increasing the number of assisted relatives and other independent applicants who have, since May, 1982, been unable to immigrate without a validated job.

[Translation]

The Government is going to emphasize increasing the number of assisted relatives and other independent applicants who have, since May 1982, been unable to immigrate without a validated job.

[English]

These individuals will be admitted on the basis of a revised selection system. Qualifications and skills will be stressed. Preference will be given, however, to assisted relatives through the allocation of bonus points. Landings for this group are projected to double in 1986 to 12,000 to 15,000 applicants, and to increase somewhat more in 1987. This contrasts with the 1985 level of 5,500 to 6,500.

Fourth, business immigration. The business immigration program stands out in terms of its direct impact on job creation and investment in Canada.

[Translation]

The business immigration program is limited but stands out in terms of its direct impact on job creation and investment in Canada.

[English]

We are setting a goal of 4,000 landings in this program in 1986, an 83 per cent increase over the 1985 announced level of 2,200 landings. Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that this increase will not be at the expense of family or humanitarian immigrants.

The creation of a new investors program will encourage immigration of business people with proven track records, who have resources to invest in Canada. This new program will directly support the efforts of Investment Canada.

These changes represent an important first step in revitalizing the immigration program on a longer term basis. They recognize the important contribution that immigrants make to national economic development. This rationale was easily understood by our forebears but it has been all too quickly forgotten in an era when we have become overly preoccupied in solving our short-term problems. The Government is committed to a longer term role for immigration and, as the Minister responsible, I intend to engage Canadians in a dialogue to develop the next steps of this program.

[Translation]

The Government is committed to a longer term role for immigration and, as Minister responsible, I intend to engage Canadians in a dialogue to develop the next steps of this program.

[English]

We may need to consider in the next two years significantly higher levels of immigration if we are to sustain our population growth and economic development.

Today, the Government has presented a plan which will restore the balance among the major immigration themes in a moderate, controlled way. It will also be conducting a demographic review under the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). We will be closely monitoring these changes to ensure their effectiveness and, if needed, I will bring further revisions to the House next fall.

I trust all Members of the House will join with me in supporting these positive changes, which the Government is introducing today. Canada is sending a message world-wide that from now on this country will be welcoming more immigrants to support its longer term economic and social goals.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the Government's position on future immigration levels for the coming year. I am also happy to recognize, with the Minister, the contribution made by immigrants to the economic development of this country, and to hear that immigrants are not taking jobs away from Canadians.

However, I am also happy to see that the Conservative Government is going back to the immigration levels set by the Liberal Government a few years ago, because quite frankly, legislation passed by the Liberal Government made it possible for such large numbers of immigrants to settle in Canada.

I wholeheartedly agree with the Minister when he says that Canada intends to admit more immigrants to help support the longer term social and economic goals of this country.

I would also like to point out that recent improvements in our economy are also due to long-term policies established by the Liberal Government.

Actually I would like the Minister to give particular consideration to visa procedures. It is a fact that some immigrants, depending on the standards in their countries of origin, have trouble obtaining immigration visas for Canada. Further more, I would like to see the Minister make it easier for handicapped persons to immigrate to Canada and set standards based on ability, not on their handicaps.

In concluding, I want to wish the Minister the best of luck and say that we, as Opposition Members, intend to watch carefully and make sure that the new levels of immigration established by the Government are well received.

[English]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to welcome this report to the extent that it does increase our immigration levels in the areas that are needed, to a small extent. It is a very small extent. As the Minister knows, because of the studies done this year with the aid of his Department and through the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, the figure he quotes is nowhere near enough even to maintain the existing population level of Canada. We would need between 150,000 and 175,000 just to stay where we are, according to the information received by the parliamentary committee and tabled this spring. However, granted, it is a move in the right direction, and the Minister says that there will be further moves in other years, which is also encouraging, although it is unnecessarily slow for the reasons I will point out.

● (1520)

The category of families and the category of assisted relatives are being unnecessarily held back by the practices of the Employment and Immigration Commission. They are being held back in three ways. One is that excessively high incomes are demanded of Canadians who wish to bring over, to sponsor an assisted relative. During the past year when the cost of living went up 4 per cent, the amount of income required of a sponsoring relative here went up 9 per cent. This was similar to increases in previous years, but this is the one for which the Minister's Government is responsible, and I think it is very regrettable.

There is also the matter of the visa offices which are very poorly distributed in the countries from which many of our immigrants come, and it takes sometimes years to process an application because there is one office for India, two offices for all of Africa, two offices for all of Central America, and those have to go through Trinidad. The third way it is limited is that the health and welfare requirements are becoming more and more nit-picking. When a whole family is kept out because a 12-year old child has a speech impediment, then it is clear that it is something that happens to Third World immigrants and would not happen to somebody from my old country, that is to say, Great Britain.

The figures are royally confusing because the Minister's figures do not jibe with the figures in the report which was distributed about five minutes ago. Apparently he has only selected some of the items, but they are also confusing because of their comparison with the report of a year ago. He has implied that there might be an increase—he has not stated it—in the family class. In fact, there is no increase. He has given a figure for refugees and humanitarian immigration which is, at maximum, 23,000, the same as the maximum for last year. There is no increased for family immigration, no increase for refugees, members of designated classes and people who are landed under special humanitarian measures.

There is an increase for selected workers, principal applicants and their spouses and dependents. That is where the main increase comes. That is nearly doubled from about 13,000 last year to perhaps—it is more than doubled—13,000, depending on which figures one uses, to about twice that or a little more for this year. Then there is a doubling—more than a doubling, really—of the figures for business immigrants. No, perhaps it is not more than a doubling—I just had these figures a few minutes ago—but they are up from 7,000, including the families, to 12,000 now.

The Minister's figures given in his statement would total 97,000. The figures in his report total 105,000 to 115,000, so I do hope the Minister will disregard his statement and act according to his report, and I do hope he understands that there has been no increase in humanitarian immigration this year.

I have one further point, and that is, I welcome the statement by the Minister that there will be an increase of, I think it is, $3 million in the Adjustment Assistance Program. This is long overdue and very welcome. He also says there will be $750,000 to agencies providing direct aid to refugees. I hope that will cure some of the difficulties now provided by lack of counsel to immigrants arriving at Toronto and Montreal.

All in all, the improvements are very small, most of them are in the right direction, and we hope that they indicate that the administration of immigration will be much more humane in the coming year.

ENERGY

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NATURAL GAS AGREEMENT—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I announced in the House yesterday, the Government of Canada has reached agreement with British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan on a new domestic pricing and marketing formula for natural gas.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: This agreement, achieved after weeks of intensive negotiations, completes a task which we set for ourselves when we signed the Western Accord last March. It was concluded in the spirit of co-operation and national reconciliation our Progressive Conservative Government set out to achieve when it was elected to power nearly 14 months ago.

Mr. Gauthier: It seems like 14 years.

Miss Carney: Our Government promised to use Canada's vast energy resources as the engine of economic growth, to create new jobs and bring unity to a nation divided by past energy policies.

Mr. Gauthier: Nonsense.

Miss Carney: One of the opposition Members says that it seems like 14 years instead of 14 months since we assumed power. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we expect to be here for 14 years because of policies like this one.

Mr. Gauthier: Double nonsense.

Mr. Foster: Don't brag; you will be the next one to resign.

Miss Carney: We have now created the conditions to stimulate economic renewal throughout Canada.

Mr. Tobin: There will be only 14 of you left when it is all over.

Miss Carney: The Atlantic Accord, the Western Accord, the frontier energy policy which I announced yesterday, and this latest agreement on natural gas, represent the beginning of a new era for consumers and producers. We have moved Canada into an environment which is free of excessive regulation, unfair taxes and intervention in the market-place. It will be an era of economic promise.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: I would like to point out that it is a policy of the Government to make important ministerial statements in the House instead of in press conferences outside the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: If we are to continue that practice, which is in the interests of the House of Commons and of our parliamentary tradition, I would suggest that Opposition Members allow me to read the statement.

Mr. Gauthier: Where were you yesterday?

An Hon. Member: She was right in the House making a statement.

Mr. Tobin: She ran away yesterday.

Mr. Keeper: Let her speak.

Miss Carney: Our achievements have been of historic significance. Our first step toward market-sensitive pricing came last November when we lifted restrictions on the sale of Canadian natural gas in international markets. This step increased our volume of natural gas exports in the current gas year by 23 per cent and increased our share of the important U.S. market. That was our first step toward removing Government from the natural gas market-place.

Our next step was the deregulation of oil prices on June 1 under the terms of the Western Accord. We promised to let industry get on with the job of exploring, producing and selling its product.

The agreement which I am tabling today completes the task we imposed on ourselves. Canada and the producing provinces have reached an agreement which is fair to both consumers and producers. We expect the agreement to have favourable regional and national effects on investment, employment and trade.

For the first time in a decade, all Canadians should benefit from an industry which is free of unnecessary Government intervention and is responsive to market conditions. Consumers will have freer access to supplies, and producers will have freer access to both domestic and international markets.

Because of complexities such as existing contractual arrangements in moving to a market-oriented pricing system, the agreement provides for a one-year transition period between the old regime and the new. This agreement is an excellent example of balanced compromise in the national interest.

During a transition period between tomorrow, which is the start of the new gas year, and November 1, 1986, the cost of natural gas will be frozen at both the Alberta border price and the Toronto wholesale price. As markets adjust to our new regime, the Alberta border price will remain at $2.79 per gigajoule, and the Toronto wholesale price will be frozen at its current level of $3.79 per gigajoule, which includes the costs of transportation from Alberta.

The price freeze at the wholesale level will mean that price levels for eastern Canadian consumers should decline as distributors pass on benefits provided to them through provisions contained in the Western Accord. Residential consumers will pay lower gas costs this winter than last as they benefit from the removal of the Canadian ownership charge of 8 cents per gigajoule due to be applied on November 1.

• (1530)

Under our new gas agreement, further benefits should result to consumers as producers, absorb the November 1 rise in the TransCanada Pipelines' transportation toll for the transition period. This was an important contribution by the producers which will benefit consumers. In return, the producers will get increased access to export markets.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: In addition, the agreement calls for direct sales at prices and terms freely negotiated between producers and distributors or large industrial users provided transportation is made available by the consuming provinces' regulatory bodies. That will exert downward pressure on prices during the transition year.

Competitive marketing programs under which distributors will be permitted to offer discounts to meet competition will also be available. Export floor prices based on a regional price test rather than a single Toronto price will go into effect, and we have promised a National Energy Board review of TCPL's services in light of the new pricing system in order to ensure that there will be equitable access to this system.

We are also removing volume restrictions on short-term natural gas exports. That will lead to an immediate increase in spot sales. We are also proposing a comprehensive review of the role and operations of interprovincial and international pipelines.

In addition, arrangements have been made to provide equitable access for British Columbia gas through the Alberta pipeline system to new markets both in the U.S. and eastern Canada. As a Minister from British Columbia, I must say that that gives my province enormous opportunities. Similarly, the agreement leaves room for consuming provinces such as Quebec to deal with regulatory issues that are within provincial jurisdiction. Nothing in our agreement intrudes on provincial jurisdiction.

Effective tomorrow, the Government of Canada will amend its policy on conditions for natural gas exports to ensure that the price of exported natural gas recovers its appropriate share of production and transportation costs incurred, that the price of exported natural gas shall not be less than the price charged to Canadians for similar types of service in the area or zone adjacent to the export point. Canadians will never pay more for gas than their American neighbours.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: Export contracts will have to contain provisions which permit adjustments to reflect changing market conditions.

I believe that we have reached an agreement that will benefit all Canadians. The Government was guided in these negotiations by its non-interventionist philosophy, and I would like to take this opportunity to thank members of the summit group, which was a group representing all of the elements of the natural gas industry and which helped over the last few months—

Mr. Foster: Except the consumers.

Miss Carney: And the consumers were consulted as well. They helped me over the last few months to focus on the important elements. At the same time, we were compelled to honour contracts that were freely entered into by producers and distributors and also to recognize that the regulations controlling the industry are complex and that a transition period is required to change them.

We have also put an immediate stop to what would have been a guarantee of rising prices scheduled by our Liberal predecessor in its National Energy Program.

Mr. McDermid: Fifty-six cents a gigajoule by now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: This agreement hails the birth of a revitalized domestic natural gas industry. Above all, it is fair to both consumeres and producers. Again, this agreement is also a measure of our Government's commitment to restoring national unity through co-operation and harmony in this vital economic sector.

With the unanimous consent of the House, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table, under the provisions of Standing Order 47(2), in both official languages, a copy of the agreement between the Governments of Canada, Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan on natural gas markets and prices.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention the fact that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), and I did not receive a copy of this document until five minutes to three. I know the Minister is sorry about that.

Miss Carney: Neither did I.

Mr. MacLellan: I would like to apologize to me on her behalf. I can see from this document that the Minister has not lost her recipe for failure.

The natural gas supplies to this country are tremendously important. They provide 25 per cent of our energy needs. It is an important export as well for western Canada. Western Canadians and in fact the entire country depend on these natural gas exports. They have brought into the country approximately $4 billion worth of benefit each year. It is one of our greatest resources. As such, this statement is tremendously important for all Canadians.

Miss Carney: Particularly for Nova Scotia.

Mr. MacLellan: Obviously the Minister does not know the difference between exploration and prices to the consumer. I think this is the reason she has failed to come through with a program in either case that will be beneficial to the country. In fact, she has come up with programs that are detrimental to the country.

The Minister has gone back on her own promises to consumers. On June 17, she said that the Government's constituency includes producers, transporters, distributors and consumers of gas and that there are more than two million households out there using natural gas which will be looking for a fair price this November. They did not get a fair price this November. The Minister had the audacity to say that she was cancelling the price increase that was the responsibility of the former Liberal Government under the National Energy Program. The price that the consumers in Ontario paid was a good price at a time when there was a much higher world market price for natural gas than there is at the present time. The Minister did not lower this price. She backed out, she copped out and she froze this price.

Mr. Foster: Shame.

Mr. MacLellan: One June 17, the Minister said as well that she wanted to see the details on domestic gas pricing worked out before any more changes were made to export pricing. The details on domestic pricing were not worked out. The Government and the Minister are great at making easy decisions but when they get points of view from more than one source, they freeze at the switch. That is what the consumers who cannot afford these prices and who are depending on the Government for reduced natural gas prices will be doing this winter.

Mr. McDermid: Your Government was going to put them up by 56 cents.

Mr. MacLellan: This is not to say that a deadline of November I was heaped upon the Minister and that she was a victim of some unfriendly source or alien from another world who said she had to have this agreement in place by November 1. She imposed this deadline on herself. She said that she would be ready by this date. She said that she would have a consumer price by November 1.

Miss Carney: Wrong, wrong.

Mr. MacLellan: What happened? After seven months of waltzing around the negotiation table, she has come up with nothing for consumers. It is a disgrace.

Mr. Foster: Right. Deregulation frozen up.

Mr. MacLellan: The Minister says that the price of exported natural gas shall be less than the price charged to Canadians for similar types of service in the area or zone adjacent to the export point.

Mr. McDermid: It could never be less.

Mr. MacLellan: How is the Minister going to enforce this by freezing the price at the same time? The price in those areas by certain indexes in the United States is higher than it is for Canadian consumers. If the price is frozen for the year, we will have the same problem. The Minister will not be able to live up to the promise and she will break the promise she made to the consumers. Canadian consumers will be paying more for natural gas than their American neighbours, even with the formula that she has put into place today. The Minister says that export contracts will have to contain certain provisions which permit adjustments to reflect changing market conditions. It will be interesting to see how the Minister works that one out. What does she mean by that? They are nice words if one does not have to place any meaning on them. They are nice words if they do not have to be acted upon to the benefit of the consumer. The consumer is receiving nothing except a frozen price for one year. It is a disgrace.

• (1540)

Miss Carney: You don't understand it.

Mr. MacLellan: It is a disgrace to leave consumers in this country with nothing more than that.

On June 17 the Minister said that she wanted to see the details on a domestic—

Some Hon. Members: You don't understand.

Mr. MacLellan: Listen to the ducks quacking over there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would like to hear the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hope that it can be a little quieter. I cannot seem to hear the Hon. Member. I do not know what it is. Is it because it is Hollowe'en or something? I do not understand it.

Mr. MacLellan: The trouble is that this arrangement was prepared by the goblins on the other side.

On June 17 the Minister said she wanted to see the details where more charges are made on export prices. She then went on to say that what will be part of any new export price test is the fundamental principle that domestic consumers will not pay more for Canadian gas than their American neighbours. She admits that she has said that. It will be interesting to see, as the year goes along, how many times she will repeat that. There should be a lottery with respect to how many times that particular phrase will be thrown up by the Minister as her promise to Canadian consumers is broken.

She then goes to say that she must tell us frankly that she stops at proposing a partial solution which is not supported by both buyers and sellers. It certainly was not supported by the buyers because the consuming provinces of Ontario and Quebec were not represented at the bargaining table.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. MacLellan: She said it would be unacceptable to not have the support of both buyers and sellers. She has said that half measures will simply bring governments reluctantly back into the pricing game after a short recess.

The Government had better come in tomorrow with a better arrangement than it has given to the people of Canada here today. There was not a reduction for consumers in the country. Consumers know it. The Minister insults their intelligence on top of that by saying that the price levels for eastern Canadian consumers should decline as distributors pass on benefits provided to them through provisions contained in the Western Accord. Those benefits are the Canadian Ownership Special Charge, the credit for which was taken by the Government when the Western Accord was announced. The Government is now trying to take credit for the same thing again. What has happened is that this whole thing was negotiated in the Western Accord and the benefits have not been passed on. These charges are still being collected by Ontario utilities. This is a travesty to consumers and to the natural gas industry in the country.

What about the request to have something said about the 25-year reserve level? What has the Government said about that? Not one thing. It is just one other thing on which it has bailed out. The whole question is just left up in the air.

The Minister says that for the first time in a decade all Canadians should benefit from an industry which is free of unnecessary Government intervention and is responsive to market conditions. I tell Members of the House that this is not such an agreement. The conditions which have been imposed on the consumers of the country are to their detriment. This is a far worse scenario for consumers in Canada than was the case under the former Liberal Government. The people know that. The Minister will not be able to sell this program in her own constituency of Vancouver Centre.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the Minister's statement on behalf of the New Democratic Party. First, I would like to thank the Minister and her Parliamentary Secretary for making their best efforts to get me a copy of the statement before it was given. I understand the difficulty in doing that. However, I only received it somewhere between 2.30 and 3 p.m.

Mr. Dick: An hour ago.

Mr. Waddell: That is right, about an hour ago. I will do my best to respond to it in short detail.

First, I want to explain to Canadians generally how important natural gas is. I suppose it is only Canadians who could feel that this is a fundamental debate. However, it is in Canada because next to oil natural gas in Canada's most important fuel. There has been a growth in its use to 25 per cent in the three decades since the trans-Canada pipeline was built to bring gas from western Canada to the East. By the year 2005 gas will catch up with oil as Canada's top home heating, cooking, industrial and transportation fuel. We will even be fueling some of our cars with natural gas. The National Energy Board estimates that oil and gas will each fill 31 per cent of Canada's energy needs in the year 2005. That is quite incredible, which is why this measure is so important. What we are discussing today may be the policy for the next decade.

On top of that, we are seeing a tremendous growth, according to Oilweek magazine, of gas exports to the United States. Somewhere between 15 per cent and 22 per cent of our production is exported. I would ask Members of the House to keep that in mind as we discuss this document today.

I can sum it up this way, Mr. Speaker. The mountain has laboured and brought forward a mouse. After a year of different committees, meetings of different groups, a year of consideration, this is what has been brought forward. If one looks at this document one will see that it is all shoulds, all reviews—it is all fudge. In effect, there is no real deregulation at all if one really looks at it. Perhaps it is impossible to deregulate the gas market because it is such a complicated one. It is much more complicated than oil.

However, the fact is that there is not much deregulation here. As a matter of fact, there is a retention of monopolistic practices by gas distribution firms, the established intermediaries in the market which have exclusive rights of sales and services. They have long-standing regional franchises and contracts. There has been no effort to break up TransCanada Pipelines, the monopolistic carrier, which really could have brought lower prices for eastern consumers rather than fudging it with an announcement that the producers will absorb the recent increase in the transportation costs.

Miss Carney: A $100 billion gift.

Mr. Waddell: The Minister could have taken that out of the hide of some of those transportation companies which are big, fat-cat transportation companies which deserve to be broken up. I am not just saying that, the Economic Council of Canada has said that. The Minister could have taken that action.

If one looks at what the Minister said one will see that she said that this is a new era for consumers and producers. Even as a westerner I have to say: Who was making this deal? Who was sitting down at the table? It seems to me that it is a deal of four Tory Energy Ministers, three from the western provinces and one from the federal Cabinet. It seems to me that in the interests of fairness and equality there should have been some representation from the Governments of Quebec and Ontario which are the largest consumers, especially the Government of Ontario. I know Mr. Kerrio, the Energy Minister of Ontario, is sometimes given to making absurd pronouncements. Sometimes he flies off the handle. For example, he has said that Ontario should buy gas from the United States. That is not the way Canada should work. Ontario should buy gas from Alberta and there should be a fair deal. However, Ontario should be consulted.

Miss Carney: They were.

Mr. Waddell: I see the Conservatives applauding whenever there is any mention of putting the nails into the National Energy Program. I would like to warn them that the constituency they are looking to is a very narrow one. It is a couple of special interest groups in western Canada, the oil industry and some Tory Governments in western Canada. They are forgetting the consumers which are the majority, even in my constituency, and in the constituency of Vancouver Centre. I am concerned that the consumers and the consuming provinces were not sitting down at that table. I think that is wrong.

The Minister says there should be no intervention in the market-place. That is nonsense. Of course, there is intervention in the market-place. There are decisions with respect to exports. There are decisions with respect to prices. The Minister is interfering. She is freezing the prices for one year. Let us be realistic.

When the Minister says that the agreement she is detailing today completes the task which we imposed on ourselves, I do not think it does that at all. If one looks at the Western Accord one will see that it spoke about deregulation of natural gas on November 1. This is not complete deregulation. In fact, this is a holding action for about a year. That is what I see in this agreement. The Minister says on page 3 that the price levels for eastern consumers should decline as distributors pass on benefits. I have two comments to make on that. The Minister says: "should". I prefer "will". Let's have some guarantees that they will decline. After all, if we go by the market—as I am constantly told by the Conservative Members opposite and all around me—if we have a surplus then prices, it seems to me, should decline. They should and they would decline, but here we are dealing with simply a hope that they may decline. Prices would decline in a free market but we are just hoping they may decline.

There is something else which causes me problems. Were we not promised this with the Western Accord? Were we not going to have declining oil prices? Were not the consumers going to benefit? All we saw was more federal Government taxes and more money to the oil industry. The consumers did not benefit. I warn the Minister that consumers at the pump are starting to write. They are asking where are the reductions in prices.

The Minister says that the Canadian ownership charge of 8 cents per gigajoule due to be applied on November 1 will not be applied, it will be removed. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), dealt with that matter. The Government is really foregoing an old tax. I think that is again a fudging of the situation.

The Minister says further benefits should result to consumers as producers absorb the November 1 rise in the TransCanada Pipelines transportation toll. I hope that benefits will result to consumers because I believe there is room for that. If that is so, why does the Minister not say that?

The Minister says that export floor prices are based on regional price tests rather than a single Toronto price test. This is a complicated issue and I think the Minister has fudged her promise. She basically said that Canadians would not pay any more than Americans. Now it is that Canadians will not pay any more than their American "neighbours".

Miss Carney: I have always said that.

Mr. Waddell: Whether that is a good or bad policy remains to be seen. There are certain arguments for it as long as it is just the transportation charges. However, we will be in a situation where people in California will be paying less, perhaps, than people in Toronto. We have to look at those transportation charges very closely. The Minister says that the NEB will review TransCanada Pipelines services in light of the new pricing system to ensure equitable access to this system. The Government has had about a year to look at this. It should have deregulated the TransCanada Pipelines. It should have given a real commitment to consumers that prices would decline. It should have given a commitment to the industry that there would be freer access to the producers in western Canada if it broke up TransCanada Pipelines. It should have given a commitment to the Canadian people that for sure there would be a 25-year supply of gas before there are any exports because we are going to export all of our cheap gas and in the future consumers in Toronto, Vancouver or Montreal are going to have to take gas from the Arctic. This is what the largely American-dominated gas industry is trying to do to Canadians. The Minister is going blindly into a continental energy policy in which we are going to be exporting to beat hell our natural gas today and we are going to have a problem tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, may I say one last sentence?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Go ahead, quickly.

Mr. Waddell: I trust we will have further debate on this matter. I appreciate that all of us were under some sort of time handicap today. I think there is a lot of fudging in the Minister's statement which is going to come to light in the near future.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, question No. 411 will be answered today.

[Text]

TOURISM MARKETING PROGRAM

Question No. 411—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Does Tourism Canada have a marketing program and, if so, what amount was (a) spent in 1984 (b) allocated for 1985, and will additional amounts be allocated?

2. Will Tourism Canada allocate additional funds to compensate losses caused by the devaluation of the Canadian dollar and, if so, in what amount?

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Tourism)): 1. Yes. (a) $31,286,000 was spent in 1984/85. (b) $30,000,000 has been allocated in 1985/86. In addition, for the fiscal years 1984/85 to 1989/90, an amount of $28.71 million is available under the Economic and Regional Development Agreement (ERDA) tourism subsidiary agreements signed with all the provinces and territories.

2. No.

[Translation]

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, consideration of Government Orders will be extended by 46 minutes this day—you lucky people. Therefore, Private Members' hour will begin at 5.46 p.m.

Mr. Gauthier: I take it, Mr. Speaker, that you will be in the chair for the almost hour and that your enthusiasm will be forthcoming.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am quite willing to be subject to correction but I don't think I heard the Chair call Petitions.

PETITIONS

TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition today signed by residents of the communities of Winnipeg, Manitoba, and Fort Frances, Stratton, Devlin and Black Hawk, Ontario, who call upon the House of Commons and the Government of Canada to end the testing of Cruise missiles in Canada.

CPR TRAVEL PASSES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of retired Canadian Pacific Railway employees in Swift Current, Saskatchewan, who protest the loss of their travel passes and request the assistance of this honourable House in securing the reinstatement of those passes.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition in which the petitioners state that the deindexation of the universal family allowance is an unfair attack on women and families. They further state that this attack will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and other tax increases in the May Budget, and will place an unfair burden on low and middle-income earners.

[Translation]

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of people of the federal riding of Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle in the Province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition from a number of citizens of the federal riding of La Prairie, in the Province of Quebec.

I have the honour to present a petition from a number of people of the federal riding of Montmorency-Orléans in the Province of Quebec.

I also have the honour to present another petition from the federal riding of Regina East in the Province of Saskatchewan.

I have the honour to present a petition from a number of citizens of the federal ridings of Montréal-Sainte-Marie and Hochelaga-Maisonneuve.

I also have the Honour to present a petition from a number of citizens of the federal riding of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, in the Province of Quebec.

And, finally, Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of people of the federal riding of Louis-Hébert, in the Province of Quebec.

And those undersigned, Mr. Speaker, urge the Government of Canada to restore full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

• (1600)

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of people from British Columbia, particularly Vancouver, who say that the present Government is launching an unfair attack on women and families by deindexing the family allowance, that this will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that the sales tax changes and excise tax increases in the Budget will put another burden on middle and low income families. They call on the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a petition signed by a number of citizens concerned about two issues. The first is the deindexation of family allowances and the second is the unfair tax increases in the last Budget. They are telling the Government to reindex the family allowances for the kids of the country and also to rescind the unfair tax increases.

And I know, Mr. Speaker, that you approve of such a proposal.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in speaking once again to Bill C-62, I just want to say that although I agree with the principle of the Bill, I am against buying a "pig in a poke". The Bill's substance is weak, its presentation is clumsy, it is poorly drafted, and I think it should go back to the drawing board and be redone and re-thought and submitted again to the House, so that we can then adopt a Bill that is truly positive and constructive. Mr. Speaker, that is why I am glad of this chance to speak to the motion to postpone adoption of the Bill for six months, so as to give the Government a chance to reconsider, re-think and re-draft the Bill.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to discuss a few provisions of the Bill which are basically quite valid but which are poorly defined and as such unsatisfactory. In the Bill it says that the purpose is to give Canadians who suffer some form of discrimination, the right to be hired by Canadian employers, whether they are handicapped, aboriginal peoples, women or, as it says in the Bill, people who because of their race or colour, the so-called visible minorities, have until now been discriminated against.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill does not define these terms. It does not say what an aboriginal person is, but Hon. Members will recall that Section 35(2) of the Canadian Constitution gives a very clear definition of what "aboriginal person" means. So what definition are we to use when we read this Bill? I really do not know. And if we consider the handicapped, for instance, how should we define a handicapped person? Is it someone who wears glasses, like me, or someone who wears a hearing aid, like you, Mr. Speaker, or is it someone who by definition should be recognized as having a physical problem, some kind of difficulty, a handicap that prevents him from finding a job? I think the program we had under the previous Liberal Government, set up by Treasury Board for federal employees, is an excellent program, an affirmative action program for hiring handicapped persons. I think we could agree on something like that. The Government could call Mrs. Suzanne Azzie at the Public Service Commission, for instance, and she could explain, Mr. Speaker, what she is doing at the Commission to promote and support the hiring of handicapped persons. I think that we would get a far more appropriate and a fairer and more precise definition.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill also covers people suffering from congenital or acquired deficiencies and mental or physical disabilities which prevent them from working normally. Well, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Government to give us a clear and specific definition of a handicapped person.

I said so and again I repeat that the Bill is ill-defined and restrictive. For instance, why is there no reference to the various religious groups? Are they not entitled as well to employment equity? Clause 3 of the Bill excludes departments as defined in the Financial Administration Act, federal departments are excluded, the House of Commons is excluded, the Senate is excluded, separate employers are excluded. I appreciate that the Treasury Board has a good law, a good regulation concerning affirmative action, but I wonder how a Minister can be excluded under this Bill C-62 which does not come under the Treasury Board because it is not an employer, how anyone is justified to tell the House: Pass a piece of legislation, but as a Minister you will have to exclude me. Mr. Speaker, I find it totally unacceptable that a Minister would come to the House without being able to give us a more serious and more reasonable argument in favour of this Bill.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of Crown corporations and a good many important agencies which are excluded under Bill C-62, they are not covered under the affirmative action program proposed in Bill C-62.

Mr. Speaker, I see that you are getting impatient and prepared to cut me off, but I would simply like to say that some of the provisions of this Bill are unacceptable. We will vote against the Bill, not because the principle is bad, on the contrary, but the Bill is deficient. We simply cannot support this Bill, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order I just want to say to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) that I am not impatient. I do not have a hearing aid, but I appreciate his comments. I did cut him off because I gave him an extra minute.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 46, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)—Public Service (a) Resignation of woman manager. (b) Request for independent inquiry; the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Agriculture (a) Saskatchewan farmers' losses. (b) Request for assistance payments; the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart)—Shipbuilding (a) Construction of frigates in Montreal. (b) Situation in East Montreal—Prime Minister's position.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Keeper (p. 8197).

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I know you do not have a hearing aid and I am glad you gave the Liberal Member an extra minute. He needs an extra minute to explain his position. It is part of your western generosity, I am sure, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: It has nothing to do with that. He forgot.

Mr. Nystrom: I guess we should not reflect on a decision made by the Chair. I want to say a few words on the motion before the House, specifically, a motion for a six-month hoist. I want to direct my comments specifically to why I support the idea of delaying the Bill for an extra six months. Bill C-62 supposedly would provide for employment equity for four target groups in our society; namely, women, the native people of Canada, visible minorities and Canadians who are disabled. We have heard from organizations representing all these groups. They are all saying that even though they like the idea of Parliament talking about employment equity, the problem is that the Bill before the House is strictly a voluntary measure. A voluntary measure is not good enough to ensure employment equity, Mr. Speaker. We need mandatory action. I have copies of various statements made by organizations representing the four target groups. They are all telling us that we need mandatory affirmative action. They are telling us that good sentiments and voluntary measures are not enough, that we need targets, goals, specific action and timetabling by the Government of Canada.

For that reason the Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) this morning moved a motion for a six-month hoist. He said that Conservative Members of Parliament need an extra six months to think this over. I am pleased to see the Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) in the House. He chaired a subcommittee on equality in recent months and did a superb job, along with the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), a Member of the Liberal Party and other Members of his Party. After a great deal of work they issued a unanimous report along with recommendations to the House of Commons on equality.

One of their comments was that Bill C-62, introduced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), was not adequate. They said that rather than leaving this strive for equality to the goodwill of Government and big business, mandatory rules, laws and regulations were needed in this country. I commend the chairman of the subcommittee for that recommendation.

By moving this motion for a six-month hoist, we are helping the Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore to persuade his colleagues that the Bill must be changed. We are helping him persuade his colleagues that they must listen to native Canadians, to women, to the disabled and visible minorities in this country who need specific goals, targets and mandatory action to provide equality in the workplace. That is why we have moved this motion for a six-month hoist. I know that you and many Members of the Conservative Party are intelligent and can understand this quickly but there are many Members of that Party who need another six months to catch up to the Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore and the subcommittee in order to understand what these four target groups are saying about this Bill.

I appeal to Canadians to telephone their local Member of Parliament in the Conservative Party and ask them to support this motion to delay the Bill an extra six months so that the Minister of Employment and Immigration can introduce a new Bill that reflects the four groups in society whom this Bill is supposed to help. That is specifically what we are debating this afternoon and specifically the reason why we are attempting to delay this piece of legislation for an extra six months. I wish we were dealing now with a Bill that those people want and could pass it quickly so that we could make sure there is equity in this country. However, that is not the case with the Bill before us.

I will not go through the statistics again relating to discrimination against women in this country and the fact that their pensions and salaries are much lower than those of men. We know that their opportunity for advancement is much lower than that of men. In this very House of Commons, there are only 28 female Members of Parliament and well over 250 male Members of Parliament. There is great inequality even in this Chamber. There are very few female chiefs of staff of cabinet Ministers. There are very few women who have important functions in the Public Service.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Look at the proportions in my office.

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) may be different, I do not know. If it is different in his office I wish he would take some time to enlighten the House and perhaps some fellow Ministers about how he does it. Certainly people like the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight), need to be taken by the scruff of the neck and told to make sure they have more women with important positions in their office. Perhaps by delaying this Bill for six months that equality can take place in the offices of cabinet Ministers in Canada. If you were a cabinet Minister, Mr. Speaker, I know that you would have equity in your office and that you would employ women and people from different minority groups in this country. That is what Conservative members of the subcommittee are saying, what our Party is saying and what the four target groups are saying. On my left we have——another Conservative member who is sitting on a quality committee who supports the notion of equality within our society for all Canadian women, our native people, our visible minorities and our handicapped. I am in favour of that and so is he. Unfortunately, his Minister does not agree at all with the means to achieve equality in this country. The Hon. Member should read over and over again Judge Abella's report where it is stated that what is needed in this country is compulsory affirmative action.

[Translation]

[English]

We must go in that direction. I invite the Member to join us in trying to persuade the Minister of Employment and Immigration to make those changes in her Bill. There is no doubt in my mind that she is a woman of goodwill who would like to do more. I am sure that she has made these arguments in Cabinet, but has lost. She has lost because she is outnumbered in that Cabinet.

The back-benchers of the Conservative Party should rise up, like the Member of Etobicoke-Lakeshore and demand a tougher Bill that will implement employment equity in this country with no reservations. Let some Conservative back-benchers have the courage to say so because Conservatives are supposed to be rugged individuals.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): We are.

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister of National Health and Welfare says: "We are". I recall some courageous stands he has taken and that is a reason why he is a prominent cabinet Minister. I want to see other Conservative Members of Parliament have the courage of their convictions and take a stand to fight for real equality in this country. In that way they will back up the Minister of Health and Parliament will have the kind of Bill that is demanded by women, native people, visible minorities and disabled Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you agree with this position and I know that a lot of Progressive Conservative members do too. But, unfortunately, they are all scared of the Prime Minister, even those representing Quebec ridings . . . They are all scared.

[English]

However, they should not forget what happens to a back-bencher who is afraid to speak out. We saw what happened to Liberals when they lost in the 1984 election.

I invite my friends in the Conservative Party back-benches to make a name for themselves, fulfil their election commitments and speak up on behalf of their constituents. They should follow the example of the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore and some of his colleagues, along with the Member for Burnaby and the Member from the Liberal Party and take a stand on behalf of equality, fairness and justice in this country.

You are holding your hands like you are about to pray, Mr. Speaker. I agree with you. If we take a stand on behalf of fairness and justice in this country we will have a society that is better for everyone. That is why we were elected and I invite my friends in the Conservative Party to take that stand now. I know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is tough, sometimes vindictive, sometimes very unfair and he may by-pass some of those Members for a Cabinet position. However, that is not the most important thing in life. It is more important for those Members to say what they believe and represent their constituents. I ask them to take a position of conscience and not forget that the Prime Minister will not be around for very long, considering the tradition of getting rid—

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I heard the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) speak about fairness, equality and equity. I would suggest that he did not have that in mind in his reference to the Prime Minister. I am sure he understands that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) stood up to talk about equity and fairness. I am glad we are talking about a Bill dealing with employment equity because we want to remind the Minister of Labour that the federal minimum wage is $3.50 an hour. The minimum wage in all of the provinces is more than $3.50 an hour. In fact, the difference is some provinces is a dollar an hour.

When talking about employment equity and equal pay for work of equal value, the Minister should listen because someone can be working for a federal Government Department in Ottawa on one floor, making $3.50 an hour, and the next day go to the next floor to work for a private enterprise or the provincial Government and make $4 an hour. In another province, you could make $3.50 an hour on federal property under the Canada Labour Code, on any contract that is awarded. You could have minimum wage for doing the same work one week and about a dollar an hour less for doing exactly the same job the next week.

• (1620)

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): In your province does an MLA get the same salary as yours?

Mr. Baker: I just bring that to the attention of the House because the difference is getting greater.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): A provincial Member in Newfoundland is paid less than you are.

Mr. Baker: I did not hear the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Member, I presume, is in favour of a low minimum wage for the federal Government and a higher minimum wage for the provincial administration. When you talk about equal pay for work of equal value, Mr. Speaker, it is a very important point for the Minister of Labour to keep in mind.

Let me get back to the Bill, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: The Bill before the Chamber is flawed in certain areas. We have the Government of Canada saying it is bringing in a Bill to force employers to hire women and to hire people in the other designated groups. That is what the Governmenmt is saying. That is what the Minister said in her speech when she introduced the Bill. Then you have the Opposition saying that the Bill does not go far enough.

What is the truth in the Bill, Mr. Speaker? I had a look at the Bill a moment ago to see what was in it. I suppose the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is correct when he says that the Bill is perhaps poorly drafted. I would not say that exactly, Mr. Speaker, because drafting of a Bill is a very specialized field of work. People who draft legislation are specialized people. We in Canada have some of the best drafters of legislation. Years ago provincial administrations had to bring people from Britain or Scotland just to fulfil those functions. What you give the drafter to put in the legislation is the problem. How can you be specific and write a law that a judge is going to look at and give the proper interpretation to, saying that this was the intention of Parliament when it passed that law?

Some things are quite obvious in the Bill, as the Hon. Member pointed out. The Bill excludes "Department" as defined under the Financial Administration Act. You and I know, Mr. Speaker, that when you look at the Financial Administration Act and you look at "Department", it does not define Government "Department". That is a part of the definition, yes, in Schedule A, but you have Schedule B and Schedule C which are not Government Departments at all. The definition of Department comes under the Financial Administration Act. As the Member for Ottawa Vanier pointed out, it excludes the House of Commons, the Senate, commissions of inquiry and all kinds of agencies of the federal Government. That is not a flaw by the drafter. That is what was fed into the Bill by the Department, I believe, intentionally.

The important clause and the important words are "that the various positions of employment with the employer are proportionate to the representation in the workforce or in segments of the workforce. If you have a law, Mr. Speaker, which says that you must hire proportionate to, then the numbers never change, do they? In other words, if you have B.C. Tel hiring telephone operators and its percentage of women is 90 per cent hiring and B.C. Tel is going on an average of Bell Telephone which is 99 per cent average, then B.C. Tel would feel when it looked at this Bill that it would have to hire more women.

If Bell were hiring the women and the situation were reversed, that the average number of women was more than it had, the company would have to say: "To comply with this legislation, we have to hire less women as telephone operators". Do you get my point, Mr. Speaker? It is a very important point.

What should be inserted there to satisfy the Minister's demands is that: "it is at least proportionate to" a percentage of their representation. I do not think this is the fault of the drafter, but I think some of it is actual intent.

One section says that the Minister "may" issue guidelines. The Minister demands of an employer that you have to do this, that or something else, but you do not then turn around and say the Minister "may" issue some guidelines to the employer. What is the employer supposed to do? He has this Bill and he says "I have to comply with this Bill. I have a contract from Supply and Services." The Government better listen to this because it is important. What if you have a contract from Supply and Services and your first clause in the contract is that you must abide by all laws and regulations of the federal Government and the provincial Government where the work is being carried out? If this is the law, a person has to look at it and say: "What am I supposed to do? To whom am I supposed to go to get the information on the number of women to hire and the number of people in the other categories? The word should not be that the Minister may issue guidelines directed to employers. It should be that she must issue.

There are other mistakes in the Bill, such as the occupational groups of the employer and the degree of representation of persons in the designated groups in each occupational group—the occupational groups of the employees, not the employer. There are obvious small errors in the Bill, perhaps some of them typographical.

Let me get back to the Minister of Labour and the minimum wage when you list salary differences and so on. I believe the federal legislation on the minimum wage is in the regulation. It states that it should approximate the provincial minimum wage as an understanding, which it presently does not. I know what the Minister is talking about. I have been searching for something, and I think I have found it in the general guidelines. It says the federal Government should have increased the minimum wage. The Liberal Government always did prior to that, Mr. Speaker. It always did, but the Conservatives do not.

I have one minute left, so let me tell the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) that the most discriminatory rules and regulations as they relate to employment are in the Minister's own direct employment programs in the federal Government this year. For example, you have to be out of work 24 of the previous 30 weeks to get work in the biggest employment program of this Minister.

That excludes all students coming out of school, all new entrants and all re-entrants. If a woman is out of the workforce for a year trying to get back in, she has not been unemployed for 30 months because she has not been registered for employment. It excludes people who actually work seven weeks for the previous seven months.

When you talk about equity in employment, Mr. Speaker, equity means fairness. I suppose any dictionary would say that. The Minister should look right in her own back yard and see how unfair she is being to people who want jobs and want training programs in Canada.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I want to support the very wise motion to delay this Bill. It is very important that there be a redraft of the Bill so we can all support employment equity in the real sense and have it implemented and enforced in a way that will not only be possible within designated companies but within society as a whole.

The New Democratic Party cannot support the Bill as it is because we believe it will not achieve the goals we all desire. We all want women, minority groups, native people and disabled persons to have equal opportunities in the workplace to get a job in the first place, and equal opportunities to have decent rates of pay, equal pay for work of equal value, to training opportunities and promotions. We are concerned that there is not the enforcement mechanism in the Bill as it stands now to achieve this important goal.

• (1630)

Experience has shown that voluntary affirmative action, which is really what the Bill is advocating, will not achieve this goal. I refer particularly to a study of affirmative action in Canada called Ten Years After. It was a summary prepared by the Department of the Secretary of State. The consultant who prepared the report said that voluntary affirmative action had not worked and that the observable and measureable results after 10 years must be classed as disappointing. This was a study of voluntary affirmative action in the provinces of Canada and in the federal Government to date. Surely the Conservatives do not want to be the same as the Liberals, and just leave this to chance.

Mr. Malone: Hear, hear!

Ms. Mitchell: That is what you are really doing. The Conservatives are suggesting a voluntary kind of employment equity. Changing the name does not change the nature of it, and we are very concerned.

To those colleagues who are in support of business, I want to say that the heads of a number of notable corporations in the United States have supported mandatory affirmative action. They have not done it just because they feel it is better for their employees, but because they have found, through experience, that it is productive and gives economic results within their companies. Let us not have any more of this hog-wash about being afraid to make the business community conform.

Mr. Holtmann: That is my line.

Ms. Mitchell: We are not dealing with hogs; we are dealing with employment equity.

We are opposed to the Bill in principle because it is based upon voluntary employment equity rather than mandatory employment equity. As I said before, employers are not required to impose clear goals, targets and timetables for change. Only record keeping is required, not necessarily change. There is no independent enforcement agency named which can really do a job in establishing what changes are needed in given corporations and in enforcing them. There are no sanctions for compliance. Also there is no reference to equal pay for work of equal value. That is a very significant omission.

The Canadian Human Rights Commission has been named—and the Minister has referred to this several times—as the agency which would evaluate programs and take individual complaints from employees. I want to stress again that the problem with that is that it is individual complaints. It is up to a woman somehow to find the resources to document here case, endanger her job, obtain the necessary information and go to the Human Rights Commission if she has a complaint. That is not the way it should be. It should be systemic change. It should be built into the system what changes are necessary to make employment equal in a given field or place of employment.

Also I should like to point out that this will place an impossible load upon an already overloaded Human Rights Commission. I have referred to an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail on October 30 by Michael Harris indicating that there was a two-year backlog in the work-load of the Canadian Human Rights Commission. Also it indicated that the backlog was caused by heavy work-load and staff changes. Last spring the Minister said in the House that she would make extra resources available and that the commission would be able to deal with these matters. It is six months later, and it still has a two-year backlog. There is no way the commission can take on the extra load expected in the Bill. Even if it did, it does not have the power to enforce, as I have already said.

I should like to refer to the recently tabled report Equality for All of the Parliamentary Committee on Equality Rights. It contains a very detailed section on employment equity. The Bill was out when the committee looked at the matter. Unfortunately I do not have the time to refer to all its recommendations, but quite a number of improvements were recommended. It would only make sense to take the time to look at these, to have another look at the Bill and to try to redraft it so that it will get at these things. I should like to mention two or three points which I feel are particularly important. Recommendation No. 61 reads:

> We recommend that representatives of the appropriate designated groups (women, underrepresented visible minorities, native peoples and disabled people) be involved . . . with management and labour in developing employment equity programs.

There is nothing in the Bill about that or about collective bargaining. Recommendation No. 62 reads:

We recommend that legislation on employment equity contain enforcement mechanisms providing for the review of special programs by the Canadian Human Rights Commission, and that the Commission be given additional financial and human resources for this purpose.

I have just referred to how inadequate we are in that area. Recommendation No. 63 reads:

We recommend that, to assure employment equity, a contract compliance program be established by legislation and that it apply to all firms providing goods and services to the Government of Canada—

There is no contract compliance in the Bill. Recommendation No. 66 reads:

We recommend that federal training and education programs be made accessible to women, disabled people, native people and members of underrepresented visible minorities to assist in achieving employment equity.

There is no reference to that in the Bill. We know that the Abella Commission strongly recommended training opportunities so that people in disadvantaged groups could move into jobs and upward in an equal way.

I am rushing because I want to put several recommendations on the record. I should like to refer to a group in Vancouver East, the United Chinese Community Enrichment Services Society, an agency which is particularly concerned with services and advocacy for Chinese Canadian people in Vancouver, and indeed in the province. It has reviewed the Bill very carefully, as it always does, and the chairperson, Sandra Wilking, recommended the following:

We agree with the spirit of the legislation. However, we would like the Legislative Review Committee to reconsider the following areas... (1) The possibility of expanding the definition of "designated groups" to include "minorities—

These are not necessarily visible minorities. That is a very interesting point. I do not think many of us have considered it. She continued by indicating, for example, that people from Mediterranean and Latin American backgrounds who do not speak English face considerable discrimination in the workplace and that they should be included. I think it was particularly sensitive to suggest an expansion of the groups which should be included.

Her second point on behalf of the society referred to including unions in the employer group which falls under federal jurisdiction for example, that the Public Service Alliance, which is responsible for employing quite a number of staff, should be considered in this employment equity jurisdiction. That was another sensible point. Her third recommendation was:

We are concerned that the current proposed legislation remains silent on the enforcement factor. Who will be responsible for ensuring that there are positive results toward employment equity in the employer group? Who will police the Act?

That is a very good question. She continued:

The fine of $5,000 is not as efficient as specific performance and other remedies.

I see your signal, Mr. Speaker. Her fourth point was that the Bill was not clear on what types of relevant data would be required in employers' reports. Her fifth point was that if employers were to recruit for various target groups, they should look at the ethnicity question. It is very interesting that this visible minority group would suggest that Anglo-Saxons be included as an ethnic group to be considered. Perhaps we Anglo-Saxons are very patronizing in what we think of as the majority, which perhaps is the minority. We tend to think that we are not ethnic, that everyone else is ethnic.

I ask that these matters be referred to committee for consideration. I urge all Hon. Members of the House, particularly Conservative Members who have the power to make changes, if they would only use it, to consider seriously a delay in the Bill and trying to improve it so that there will be true equality for women and minority groups in employment.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion which would have the effect of sending this Bill back for further consideration. The motion is very important and worthy of support, because even a superficial reading of the Bill shows clearly that it is deeply flawed. Whatever the worthy intention or purpose of this Bill may be, the Bill is so flawed and is so far from meeting that worthy purpose that it does not deserve second reading in its present form.

• (1640)

On June 23, 1983, the Minister of Employment and Immigration under the previous Liberal Government appointed Judge Rosalie Abella to head a royal commission on equity in employment. Judge Abella tabled her report last November. The principal recommendations of the report were that legislation enacting mandatory employment equity for employers under federal jurisdiction be presented to the House and adopted by Parliament; second, that provincial Governments be persuaded to adopt similar legislation in the areas of provincial jurisdiction; third, that contractual compliance be established for all federally regulated employers; and finally that an agency be established to enforce mandatory employment equity.

What does the Abella Commission mean by employment equity? As defined by Judge Abella, employment equity is the elimination of discrimination and the promotion of employment opportunities among four target groups representing 60 per cent of the population: women, native people, disabled persons and visible minorities. By the way, Judge Abella preferred the expression "employment equity" to the one that had previously been in use. "affirmative action".

The Government, under the rules of the House, is required to respond to reports like the report of the Abella Commission that are tabled in the House. The response by the Government to the Abella Commission Report gave the impression that the Government was going to respond meaningfully and to some substantial degree to the recommendations of the Abella Commission. First, the Government said it would extend employment equity to federally regulated businesses with more than 100 employees, although it would not deal with the smaller firms, even though they are large in number and may well be the place where many women and visible minorities are employed. Second, the response spoke of extending employment equity to government purchasing. It indicated that the Government would be committing its contractors to employment equity and that those not meeting the commitment, provided the contracts were for over $200,000 for goods and services, would not be given future contracts. Furthermore, the response of the Government indicated that the Canadian Human Rights Commission would be responsible for seeing that the provisions the Government would put in place in response to the Abella Report were followed.

The Government finally presented a Bill to the House on June 27. That is the Bill we have been debating for some days now and the Bill to which this motion applies. As I suggested when I began my remarks, the Bill has a very worthy purpose. Clause 2 of the Bill reads:

> The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the work place so that no person will be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfilment of that goal, to ameliorate the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada by giving effect to the principle that employment equity means more than treating persons in the same way but also requires special measures and the accommodation of differences.

When I read that Clause at the beginning of the Bill, I said to myself that that sounded great. But then I asked myself what the Government was going to do as spelled out in the rest of the Bill to make this purpose come true in a meaningful and significant way. I read the Bill and I re-read the Bill and I read the Bill again. I found absolutely nothing in it to assure that the laudable purpose of the Bill as set out in Clause 2 could be put into effect.

The Bill says nothing whatsoever about contract compliance even though the Government promised in its response to the Abella Report that contract compliance would be part of its policy on employment equity. The Government, in its response, created the general impression that there would be something meaningful in its legislation to carry out what I think we all agree is a very worthy purpose. However, this measure contains nothing whatsoever regarding mandatory enforcement of employment equity. There is nothing about it that is compulsory. No matter how flagrantly an employer may ignore its provisions, there is no way that the Canadian Human Rights Commission or any other body can issue an order that the Bill's provisions be carried out and, that if they are not carried out pursuant to that order, that proper charges can be laid.

The Bill has no provision for a separate monitoring agency. I have already said that according to the initial response of the Government, the responsibility will be conferred on the Canadian Human Rights Commission. The Minister has said something about promising additional resources for the commission but there has been no indication of the additional amount of money and staff members to be provided.

The Auditor General's Report tabled just the other day made very clear that the Canadian Human Rights Commission is simply overloaded with work under its existing jurisdiction. There is no way, even with the best will in the world, that the Canadian Human Rights Commission, even with additional staff, resources and budgets, can monitor the provisions of this Bill. In any event, the monitoring would be without any meaning, purpose or effect because the Canadian Human Rights Commission wil not have any authority to enforce the provisions of this Bill over any employer who wants to ignore it even though the Bill nominally may apply to such an employer.

The Bill sets no targets or guidelines for employers to follow. The Bill contains some very vague wording. The Bill has a laudable purpose, but even for employers who have the best will in the world and want to live up to the purpose of this Bill, there is nothing for them to do by way of seeking advice or guidance on how to live up to the purpose of the Bill in a meaningful, binding and significant way. As I have already said, there will be no penalties whatsoever when, as is bound to occur, there is an unwillingness on the part of employers to conform to the Bill.

I think we have learned over the years that when it comes to setting standards of acceptable conduct on behalf of the community, these standards are not going to be followed and do not have any meaning unless there are sanctions applied to those who do not live up to them. That is a great flaw in this Bill among other flaws. In fact, the Bill does not provide for definitive standards of conduct. It simply sets out a purpose which we all consider laudable.

We in the Official Opposition have been urging the Government to implement fully and promptly the recommendations of the Abella Report concerning employment equity as they affect federal agencies and Crown corporations. We say that the Government must ensure that the legislation is mandatory, comprehensive and enforced. This is exactly what is not contained in this Bill. Therefore, no matter how laudable its purpose or intention, the Bill is fundamentally flawed and must be sent back to the drawing-board.

The motion before the House to give the Bill the six-month hoist should be adopted by the House in the interests of the important objective of employment equity. If we do not adopt this motion and the Bill goes forward, we will be perpetrating a cruel deception bound to lead to frustration and disappointment on the part of the target groups designed to be helped by the concept of employment equity. They deserve better. The country deserves better. As a result, this Bill should not be given second reading. It should be sent back to the drawing-board for a complete redrafting. Therefore, this motion should be adopted and we should get on to some other business rather than continue with this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, you will not be surprised to see me entering this debate. You and I, Mr. Speaker, belong to that very large number of Canadians who have been described, quite correctly, as ethnics. "Ethnics", in Canada has come to mean people who are neither of Anglo-Saxon nor Francophone origin.

Mr. Speaker, I know that over the years, you and I have seen in many places, until very recently, large employers who would not hire ethnics. I am speaking of some of the largest retail and sales organizations in Canada. I am speaking of the banks and the trust companies which were, until not so many years ago, forbidden territory for those who were not white, Anglo-Saxon and Protestant. It took a long time for us ethnics—and I am now speaking about the older ones whose parents came before or just after World War I—to be accepted for employment in some of the largest business organizations in Canada. Similarly, accommodations in terms of housing and apartments for rent were areas in which people from certain groups, from various ethnic origins, were not acceptable. There were summer resorts where people of certain religious or racial affiliations were not acceptable. To a large extent for the older ethnics that type of discrimination has disappeared. Unfortunately, however, that discrimination which we experienced years ago is now here, prevalent and active for newer ethnics, the non-white people who have come from Asia, Africa and the West Indies. Studies have been conducted which show that their chances of gaining a job are probably one-third of what the job opportunities are for people who are part of the majority. I spoke about this matter several days ago and other Members have put a great deal of the evidence on the record.

We now know that there are other groups which are discriminated against. For example, the handicapped. I have in my hand a telex from Mr. Jim Derksen, Chairperson of the Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped in Winnipeg, which states as follows:

The Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped, Canada's major coalition of disabled persons, feels betrayed by the employment equity legislation being proposed by the Progressive Conservative Government. The legislation, as presented, bears no resemblance to the election promise made by the Progressive Conservative Party during the 1984 election campaign. Canadians with disabilities were promised contract compliance affirmative action along the lines proposed in recommendation 26 and 27 of the Obstacles report. This commitment has not been kept in the proposed legislation which does not include any legally binding contract language.

We received the same response from women's organizations which have also reacted sharply. They know that despite the gains which have been made by some women others are still discriminated against. Women are still second class citizens. I would like to put just a few facts about the situation pertaining to women on the record. The average earnings of a woman in the paid workforce are only 60 per cent of the average earnings of a man. Women workers are still confined to job ghettos. Some three out of five work in clerical, sales or service occupations. Some 42 per cent of families headed by women have incomes below the poverty line, while 62 per cent of single elderly women live below it.

The best way to deal with this matter is to refer Hon. Members to the reply given to me by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who when I challenged him to do something about the increasing number of Canadians—more than four million who, in 1984, live in poverty—said that we are going to do that by finding jobs for them. Jobs will help but not jobs at the lowest end of the scale.

In recent years we have educated and trained more women in professions than ever before. There are now more women doctors, lawyers, architects and engineers than there ever were before. However, the number of them who are working for the Government has not increased by very much. The number has not increased because we do not have a mandatory equity program. The federal Government Departments, the people in charge of the employment offices of the Government, have not been instructed that it is a high priority for them to employ women who are qualified.

I would like to mention just one other group which is really at the bottom of the ladder in every situation, whether it be education, health, housing or employment. I speak of our native people. In cities in western Canada, in Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary and Vancouver, there is a rapidly increasing number of native people. They are moving into the cities because the economic base on most of their reserves does not permit them to earn a living which will keep them in comfort. We have schools in the core area of the city in which 95 per cent of the students are native. Their opportunities to gain employment, even if they are qualified, are very slight.

Some studies have been done with respect to this situation and we have some facts and figures with regard to it. They show very conclusively, as far as the federal Government is concerned, that the need for an affirmative action program for indigenous peoples which was first identified in 1973 has not worked. The program has not met the objectives. The problem is simple. The Departments did not follow the voluntary guidelines of 1978 because they were voluntary. They were not held accountable for the lack of progress. Since the Office of Native Employment was set up hirings have increased; but they still fall below the 4 per cent level identified by the program. Indeed, the current level of native people in the Civil Service is just over 1 per cent and hardly any have jobs which are of any importance.

This program will not work on a voluntary basis as is proposed in this Bill. This program will only work if we have mandatory programs and if those public servants, those who are involved in the hiring for the federal Government—and I say the same about the provincial Governemnts—are given targets. We are not saying to hire people just because they come from minorities. We are saying hire minority people who have the qualifications. It has not happened up to now and it will not unless we have mandatory programs.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, the decision of my Party to support the motion to hoist Bill C-62 was not done without considerable thought and deep and careful consideration. I might say that that attitude seems to be in contrast with the great regulatory with which closure is being imposed on the House these days, even on Bills which will be of enormous cost to the taxpayers. However, let us leave that for another day and another opportunity.

We have decided to support a motion to hoist this legislation because it is a small and very thin Bill, and I do not mean only in its pages, words and clauses, but a very thin Bill in substance. It is a vessel which contains next to nothing. It largely ignores the much-heralded Abella report. The Abella royal commission and the recommendations contained therein are not reflected in this legislation.

It has been said on more than one occasion that a Bill like this cannot rely upon voluntary compliance. There has to be some mandatory program for affirmative action or employment equity. There must be some compliance provision, some mechanism to enforce the provisions of this Bill. The only way one can get into trouble with Bill C-62 is if one fails to fill out a report. What if one reports no action at all? If it is a large company doing business with a Government, perhaps the Government may take some action but then again it may not.

The Obstacles report stated that the net should be much more extensive than simply the large companies which do business with the Government, that it should include even small companies, for instance, those doing about $20,000 worth of business a year with the Government. Without trying to sound unkind or unduly critical, I have to agree with a colleague who said that Bill C-62 represents a lip-service approach to employment equity. It wants to make use of the Human Rights Commission in order to carry out what is somewhere behind the Bill, a long way behind it, and that is good intentions. The Human Rights Commission of Canada, as we all know, is a very over-taxed institution. It needs more resources and needs them now. The Minister has promised these resources some day in the future but it needs them now in order to deal with the backlog of work it faces.

All that is really required in Bill C-62 is for a company to declare that it is an equal opportunity employer. Voluntary action in a field like this, as you and I both know, Mr. Speaker, is next to useless. We need something which has the possibility of giving effect to the ideals we love to espouse in this Chamber.

Kathleen Ruff, a spokesperson for the Canadian Association for the Mentally Retarded, stated on June 12, 1985, and I quote:

> This is not employment equity, this is misleading advertising, this is a dishonest statement on the part of the government. It is a broken promise.

Mr. Jim. Derksen, national chairman of the Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped, who has been quoted in this debate, said that this legislation is a betrayal of election promises.

It is interesting to contrast the Bill with the fanfare which accompanied the introduction of it. This Bill was supposed to do quite remarkable things in terms of rights for Canadians. It was to remove employment barriers, not shift them gently aside, and to promote equality, not take a small modest step in the direction of equality. The employment equity working paper went even further in telling us what this legislation was going to do, and I quote:

> Employment equity constitutes a major step in the efforts to ensure that women, aboriginal peoples, visible minorities and persons with disabilities participate fully in the economic life of this nation.

What an outrageous assertion of what this legislation was to accomplish. One would think from all of the promotion that what we had here was a bold new move. I do not believe it is even one small step. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that it bothers me in no small measure to see that one of the designated target groups within this legislation are the aboriginal peoples of Canada. It is very far-fetched indeed to believe that Bill C-62 is going to provide equality of opportunity for the aboriginal peoples of Canada and will allow them to participate fully in the economic life of this nation. Judge Abella knew that and told us that quite clearly. In her report, Judge Abella demonstrated that she had grasped very quickly and very well the magnitude of the problems facing Canada's aboriginal peoples. She looked at the date—and it has been quoted in this House and in many Government reports—which clearly indicated that native people have the lowest participation rates in the labour force of any group of people in the country. They have the highest unemployment. Did Judge Abella say to us that to help the aboriginal peoples we must bring in a modest, meek, mild, little piece of legislation which says to the companies which do business with a Government: "On a voluntary basis, give them the chance for an interview"? Can you imagine that, Mr. Speaker? Most aboriginal peoples do not even get inside the building much less past the receptionist and into the office where the interviews are given. They never get that far. How is Bill C-62 going to help them?

Judge Abella stated on page 4 of her report, and I quote:

> For native people, equality in employment means effective and relevant education and training, accommodation to cultural and geographic realities, a primary voice in the design of the education, training, and funding programs established for their benefit, meaningful support systems, and the delivery of services through native-run institutions.

That is where I would take my stand, Mr. Speaker. If this Government would bring in a separate Bill—let us call it "equity employment opportunity for aboriginal peoples in Canada" or "access to employment" based on that recommendation—there would be something to support. The Government knows this because the National Economic Conference, which was a very worth-while undertaking—I am sorry it turned out to be more fanfare than substance—and the papers which were submitted to that conference are valid. In one of the papers submitted regarding access to employment for native people, the first sentence reads: "Access to employment for native people is a complex and difficult issue to address". It goes on to say:

> Severe social and economic problems are compounded by the realization that the majority of Native people have lower education levels than most Canadians, are unskilled and generally have inadequate opportunities that would allow for positive changes.
> Our paper attempts to highlight these problems with a view to identifying some alternatives that, if undertaken, would increase the opportunities for more Native people to acquire higher education, adequate and relevant training, and ultimately, create the access to employment.

Although Bill C-62 claims that it will do something in this regard, it is because it does nothing that we have introduced this motion. We want the Government to take the solid and commendable motivations of the other side and put them to work in order to give us a Bill with some teeth. We want the Government to up-grade the quality of this Bill and give us a separate piece of legislation to meet the very complicated needs of the aboriginal people.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I am proud to support Bill C-62 as it shows the tremendous progress made by the Government to ensure equity in the Canadian labour force. I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that this Bill does not deal with all the problems related to employment equity, but it is still a good starting point. This initiative will have a substantial impact on the human resources and the economy of our country. It will also be a basis for the development of our human resources, which will have surprising results within a few years. In addition, this development will take place in a context of economic renewal.

I say this because, in my opinion, the principle of employment equity makes perfect sense economically. Indeed, by implementing effective mechanisms, we shall be able to a great extent to meet our economic objectives. The competitiveness of Canada will depend on its ability to adjust to any future change. Our productivity will depend not only on technology, but also on the extent to which the employers are able to manage their human resources. Productivity will increase if the members of the designated groups can be trained and integrated into the labour force. Nowadays, the Government must put its resources to the test if it wants to stimulate the economy while bearing the social costs resulting from the problems of disadvantaged workers. By continuing to underutilize our human resources, we are jeopardizing our own future. We can no longer afford to ignore the skills available to us, to import an unprofitable labour force and to tolerate the high rollover of manpower or an inadequate matching of required qualifications and available skills. Such an attitude hinders our productivity.

Our country is facing a dilemma: Either we continue not to develop our human resources and to bear the costs of the transfer payments and social upheavals caused by our failure to face international competition, or else we take a concerted approach to ensure employment equity and harmony between the labour force and the labour market. Ensuring employment equity will cost money, Mr. Speaker. We shall need resources to make an exhaustive analysis, to amend and adjust our present employment systems or to create more equitable ones. However, if we consider that employment equity is a valid effort to improve the productivity of our labour force and to appease the general controversy, the results achieved should be positive as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, we must take steps in order that women, native people, the handicapped, and visible minorities learn the skills needed to be competitive on the market-place, if we are to make major changes over the next decade.

This is why employment planning has such an important role in the overall plan to ensure employment equity. It provides us with a perfect opportunity to devote money, time and effort to human resources. It puts the accent on training and employment development which are closely related to the private sector.

Further, each of the six programs under it fulfills the needs of target groups.

Bill C-62, as I said, Mr. Speaker, is but a first step. This Government has not been in power for very long, but we have identified the problem and have acted accordingly.

Also time is ripe for requesting the co-operation of the industrial sector and special interest groups. We must choose between thinking that no major choice is required, and seriously considering the opportunities offered by human resource management and employment equity.

The opportunity to put our economy back on course is there. Let us make sure that the recovery benefits all Canadian men and women.

I also listened closely to the comments—if the word is right—made by the Opposition parties. What I find interesting is that they even slap themselves on the back about a report entitled Equality for All to try and put forward an interpretation that no one ever had in mind. Mr. Speaker, in case you were not aware of it, I personally was a member of that Committee. When, in her introductory paragraph to the chapter dealing with employment equity, Judge Rosalie Abella defined the phrase "employment equity", she had this to say:

> Employment equity is a means of eliminating discrimination faced by many Canadians in that area. According to Judge Rosalie Abella, it is a strategy designed to do away with the present and residual effects of discriminatory actions and to establish equity in competition for employment opportunities for those men and women who have been arbitrarily excluded. It requires—> —a special blend of various components, namely what is essential, what is fair and what is practical in the work place.

And this is very important—

Mr. Speaker, we have the first recommendation in that chapter, Recommendation No. 59, which states, and I quote:

> We recommend that legislative measures be implemented to establish equity employment programs at the federal level to require employers: (a) to set up and maintain employment practices aimed at abolishing discriminatory obstacles; and (b) to increase the proportion of women, natives, handicapped persons and members of visible minorities in the work place, without however imposing mandatory quotas.

This indeed is exactly what Bill C-62 is all about. We never said, when we referred to mandatory measures, how to go about making them mandatory.

Mr. Speaker, if that committee was established, the subcommittee on equality rights, it is because there was a problem. Yet, in private discussions with various people, everyone supports motherhood, everyone supports equity. But when at the collective level it comes to ensuring that such a concept will be implemented, then things are different. It is for that reason that a committee was set up, it is for that reason that the committee made its recommendations, although its membership was aware that the way to solve this long-standing problem was not to impose penalties for non-compliance, but rather to prompt people to change their views through incitations, and that if this does fail, we could then impose penalties.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I will say this, because enough is enough. I was listening to a comment from the Opposition—I do not remember exactly who was speaking—the reference being that this was a Liberal report. This is false, Mr. Speaker. It is not a Liberal report, but a forward looking report that was supported by a majority of Conservative Members.

Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that my time has expired, because I would have more to say.

• (1720)

[English]

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, today's debate goes to the heart of the kind of society in which we, as Canadians, want to live in the future. As I think about that society and consider the questions we are attempting to deal with in Bill C-62, there are four occasions that stand out in my mind that I would like to share with the House of Commons.

One occasion which strikes home in a particularly strong way occurred during the election campaign last year in the debate that was organized by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. I recall watching the debate and noting the interesting exchange which raised many important questions. There was one question in particular which I believe would strike all Members of the House of Commons very hard. This very tough question on behalf of women in Canada was: "Why should we trust any of you politicians to put into effect the measures that you have talked about to us here tonight? Why should we trust you?" While that is a tough question, it is one to which we must respond not through words but through action.

As I think about this piece of legislation before us today I cannot help but consider that this Bill represents a failure to respond through action. It is this failure that the women of Canada were making us face in their tough questions last year.

I also think of a visit to my office by the committee of the people representing handicapped Canadians across the country shortly after I was elected to the House of Commons. They put a strong case to me that the battle for equity in our society is not just a battle that affects women. I was told that it is a battle that is equally important to those who must live their lives in wheelchairs and must face major physical handicaps that constrain and diminish their lives. As legislators we obviously cannot entirely overcome these constraints but we can take serious steps to establish equity in the workplace for these people who are physically handicapped.

I think of the presentation made to our action group on jobs in Toronto this past March by Carol Tator of the Urban Alliance. That group, drawing together black Torontonians in particular, talked to us about the absolutely incredible results of a study they had conducted in Toronto to test the depth of discrimination within perhaps the most liberal of our cities. They found that 28 per cent of employers felt that non-whites simply could not meet job performance criteria compared to whites. Some 82 per cent of employers had no policy to deal with discrimination in the workplace, and, in one-third of the 438 work-places tested, preference was given to white applicants over non-white applicants who were equally qualified. This revealed a systematic discrimination against visible minorities that is simply not acceptable in Canada in 1985.

I think of another occasion during that action group trip when representatives of Indian groups, native groups in northern Ontario, spoke to us about their efforts to establish training systems which would provide for their special training needs. Each of these occasions brought home to me the sense of a Canada of inequity, unfairness and inequality, which is not a part of the Canada in which I want my children to grow. It is not part of the Canada in which I want to live.

I believe we all must have a commitment to equality, not only because it will give a chance for a fair life to those who presently experience inequality but because it will give all of us in this society the experience of living in a community in which equality does exist. It will give us a sense of human solidarity in a society in which there is fairness for all. That is what equity in a society is all about.

When the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), for whom I have special regard, brought forward this Bill and introduced it for first reading, I applauded vigorously. I hoped that it would be a Bill that would achieve this vision of an equal place for all of us as human beings. It was a great disappointment to read the details of the Bill and see its inability to implement this vision of equity. That disappointment has been shared by all of those groups which feel this inequality the greatest in our society.

The National Action Committee on the Status of Women has condemned the Bill as not meeting the promises that had to be met. The Canadian Congress for Learning Opportunities for Women says that an enforcement mechanism is crucial. The conclusion of the Urban Alliance on Race Relations about this Bill is that the reality of the Government's response simply does not take into account the complexity, the pervasiveness and the intractable nature of discriminatory barriers. I could quote from the Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped who say that this Bill leaves this group of perhaps the most disadvantaged of our countrymen feeling betrayed by this proposed employment equity legislation. That sense of betrayal is not what we should be supporting as a House.

• (1730)

I urge the Government to withdraw this Bill, to rethink it and to bring back a Bill that will put affirmative action into place with tough enforcement mechanisms to make it work.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate for what is the second time for me on Bill C-62. I am pleased about my second opportunity. Perhaps

I can use the seven or eight of my 10 minute allotment on a more specific focus than my first participation on this Bill.

I am pleased to support the amendment moved by my friend in the New Democratic Party that will have this Bill hoisted for six months so that the Government, and particularly the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), can have another go at the blackboard. It is important this Bill receive extra work and a finishing on two accounts. First, it is a poor Bill and a weak one. It lacks the courage I would have loved to have seen in it. Having said that, let me preface those remarks by saying I do not think there is a Member in this House, regardless of political stripe, who does not agree that the Bill is a timely one in the sense of trying to achieve equality for all and in trying to achieve for all Canadians equality in the workplace. That principle is shared by all Members. What we should be asking as parliamentarians is whether this piece of legislation will simply speak to equality or deliver equality to the Canadians mentioned in the four target groups.

It is my opinion, and one shared by a number of different organizations from the target groups right across the country that the Bill will not deliver the equality it was intended to deliver. The purpose is far nobler than the process or the mechanism incorporated within Bill C-62. The programs are not stringent. They are not mandatory. There is no specific mention of an enforcement mechanism in the Bill.

The Minister and the Government have said since its introduction that the Canadian Human Rights Commission will have the opportunity to be the watch-dog on a national basis for an employment equity program. We all know that the Canadian Human Rights Commission is very busy these days. It is a body that reacts on a one to one, case by case basis. It is also a commission, as highlighted by the Auditor General's report, that is backlogged with a huge number of complaints from Canadians whose rights have been abused.

I must ask you, Mr. Speaker, and this House whether it is fair and proper to put the watch-dog mechanism to the Canadian Human Rights Commission when it is already strapped for financial and human resources. There should have been an enforcement mechanism, provided independent of the Canadian Human Rights Commission and this Government, to ensure that the words in the Bill would be reality.

There is no mention in the Bill of contract compliance. There is no mention of the federal Department and bureaucracy where visible minorities are reflected in the bureaucracy only to the tune of 1.2 per cent. Yet we have what the Government says is a monumental Bill on employment equity and it lacks all the various sectors I have outlined.

There is no criteria for the programs to be carried out by the different entities announced in the Bill. There are no penalties going to the firms or Crown corporations that do not attain employment equity. However, there is a penalty that if you do not report, you can face a fine of up to $50,000. If we are to fine anybody, we should be fining on the basis of not achieving what this Bill wants to achieve rather than saying that if you do not submit a monthly or a yearly report, a letter or a document, you will be fined. That is a perverse sense of logic.

On the second aspect, Mr. Speaker, we should be holding off this Bill for another six months because introduced in this House the other day we had the Equality Rights Report which speaks boldly to the rights of Canadians in the four target groups. This report accepted the visible minorities report, Equality Now and it reflects the Abella Commission. It was the Abella Commission which triggered this piece of legislation. The Abella Report said two fundamental things. First, you need a mandatory program, one that will deliver equality rather than only speak to it. The second thing Judge Abella mentioned was an enforcement agency. Both these central elements in the Judge's report which triggered this legislation are missing.

Expectations were raised upon receipt of the Abella Report that the Government would move swiftly on its recommendations. The Government did not do that. We should be reviewing and rethinking what Judge Abella said, what Equality Now recommended and more recently, what the equality rights committee said, a committee made up of Members from all sides of the House who removed the partisan element that is always alive and well in every issue. We should be paying attention to those three landmark pieces of work, and we should reflect those recommendations in Bill C-62. As a Parliament, we should be united in trying to improve this Bill.

I rise not to see the defeat of this Bill from a partisan view—that is the furthest thing from the truth—but I rise on this occasion to urge my colleagues on all sides that the Bill merits a review and a strong number of amendments to ensure that employment equity will be delivered, will be a reality and that Canadians from the four target groups receive not a special privilege or a gift but receive what is yours, mine and dutifully theirs as Canadians, namely equality for one and all.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my friend, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) for the opportunity to say a few words on this Bill before time ends for tonight. He had an opportunity to speak much longer but he offered to step down allowing me to say a few words today. I appreciate that very much.

As the Hon. Member for York West has indicated, as have many other speakers before him, this Bill is basically about rights and fairness. It fails by and large to deal with the situation faced by women in society and in the workforce as a result of obvious discrimination which they face on a regular basis in a variety of ways.

The Bill recognizes that the disabled have a very difficult time, again in terms of playing their rightful role in society as a result of the discrimination they face in perhaps some subtle and perhaps not so subtle ways. In my own riding there are five large Indian reserves. We have an ongoing saga. Discrimination stories have been told in my office time and time again. Perhaps the discrimination is not intended overtly, but it certainly exists in subtle and not so subtle ways.

In referring to visible minorities, I should like to indicate that I have the good fortune of having a large Sikh community in my constituency. Not many weekends go past when I do not spend a few moments speaking with individuals and small groups that lay out in a very precise way the discrimination which they face on a regular basis in the workplace and, actually in some cases, before the courts of the land. It is a sad situation.

Many of us hoped that Bill C-62 would go a long way toward alleviating some of these problems and removing discriminatory practices by requiring firms, which do business with the federal Government, to enact affirmative action programs that provide equal opportunity for all workers doing business with the federal Government. It is a small step in that direction in that the Bill itself, by its presence, recognizes that discrimination exists. However, the disappointing aspect is that it will only relate to those companies with more than 100 employees, bidding on contracts of $200,000 or more. In other words, it is too restricted. It is restricted to a handful of firms doing business with the federal Government. What about those firms not doing business with the federal Government? It does not require firms to introduce affirmative action programs to assist the disabled, native people, visible minority groups or women. It simply requires them to keep statistics on the numbers of women, disabled, visible minorities and natives on staff and to keep lists of the positions they hold. This will be reviewed on an annual basis. It is a very watered-down version of any kind of action which the Government may be taking to eliminate discrimination in the workplace.

However, what I find amazing is that not many days ago an article appeared in The Globe and Mail headlined "United States big business bullish on affirmative action laws". Large corporations in the United States have found that if they introduce mandatory affirmative action programs, it is actually good for business, is good for the economy and is good for their corporations. They have done well and, in the end, it has been to their advantage in a variety of ways.

We have to ask our friends in the Government to take note of the fact that the corporate sector in the United States is bullish on affirmative action programs. Hopefully it will motivate Hon. Members opposite to go into committee with an open mind, if it ever gets to committee. We felt that it was so weak and inappropriate at second reading stage that it should be hoisted for six months and hopefully come back in a form which is affirmative action, which has some teeth and requires firms doing business with the federal Government, as a starting point, to provide equal opportunity for visible minorities, women, native people and the disabled. In other words, it would really do something, as opposed to this "limp wrist, Milquetoast, Casper the Ghost approach" to affirmative action programs.

I want to indicate for the record that there is no shortage of statistics which describe the situation faced by women in the workplace of a discriminatory nature. I should like to read a few statistics which are relevant to women. The average earnings of women in the paid workforce are only 60 per cent of the average earnings of men in the workforce. Therein lies, I suppose, one of the most obvious areas of discrimination. By and large, women workers are still confined to work ghettos. Three out of five work in clerical, sales or service occupations. The best example can be found by walking into one of the banks in Ottawa. As one walks through the door, one notices that all persons doing the public relations work for the bank are low-paid women or poorly paid, one might say. If we ask bank tellers what they are paid after five years or ten years of employment, I do not think we would feel proud of the salaries which they are receiving. However, if one looks through the doorways into the back rooms, one finds that the management positions are filled by men. It is probably the best example or model of the discriminatory workplace.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That is not necessarily true.

Mr. Riis: I hear the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). Perhaps 3 per cent of the people involved in bank management are women, but that certainly does not reflect what ought to be happening. Those major institutions ought to be providing some leadership as opposed to being perhaps one of the most outmoded, medieval types of work structures when it comes to equality.

The statistics indicate that 42 per cent of families headed by women have incomes below the poverty line and that 62 per cent of single, elderly women live below the poverty line. If we look down the list, we find that over the last 10 years the average unemployment rate for women was 9 per cent, whereas the average unemployment rate for men was just over 7 per cent.

I notice that you are signalling, Mr. Speaker. I hope to have an opportunity to continue when this matter comes before the House once again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5.46 o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

COPYRIGHT ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING AUDIO AND VIDEO RECORDINGS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved that Bill C-227, an Act to amend the Copyright Act (private recordings), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in moving second reading of Bill C-227, an Act to amend the Copyright Act in respect of private recordings. The purpose of the Bill is to allow the making of a recording through the use of home video recorders and tape recorders by individuals for their personal use, where such recording is made from a public broadcast, noting that any compensation under the Copyright Act has previously been made to the holder of the copyright by the public broadcasting system used for the original broadcast.

Subsection 17(2) of the present Copyright Act reads in part as follows:

The following acts do not constitute an infringement of copyright—

(c) the making or publishing of paintings, drawings, engravings—

(d) the publication in a collection, mainly composed of non-copyright matter, bona fide intended for the use of schools—

This Bill would add the following section:

àed10

—the making of an audio or video recording of a work, where such recording is made by an individual from a public broadcast for his or her private use, and the recording is not used in a commercial nature, nor sold, exchanged, bartered or given as a gift.

In other words, the Bill would add to the Copyright Act something which will please thousands of people throughout the country.

In March, 1984, Statistics Canada carried out a survey of home appliances, in which survey forms were sent to 8,857,000 residents in Canada. The results of this survey showed that 1,104,000 VCRs were already in use. I might add that if members of the general public in a country respect the law, they will obey it. If the law is not respected, more and more will disobey it. Bill C-227 will correct that error.

In The Globe and Mail of July 12, 1984, a story appeared under the headline: "Copyright Jungle: Which way out?". It was written by Paul McGrath, a Toronto freelance writer and broadcaster. In the story, the following appeared:

—out of this miasma has recently come the first clear suggestion of proposed government action: From Gutenberg to Telidon, a federal White Paper on copyright. The title suggests that the Government has looked closely at the entire range of intellectual property and the document is as thorough an outline of the proprietary rights as could be expected. Based on a five-year series of background papers, the White Paper deals, most importantly, with the urgent copyright issues that have been the topic of public debate.

● (1750)

I would draw your attention to this sentence in particular, Mr. Speaker:

—duplication of film and video material for private use will not be an offence under the new Act—

That was from the White Paper issued in 1984 by the previous Government. Surely this makes common sense when a tape is made for a family's own personal use. The actors, performers and producers of a television broadcast have been financially compensated by the broadcasting company and therefore should not be entitled to additional funds if their broadcast is viewed at 4 p.m. or 10 p.m. rather than at 3 a.m.

It must be kept in mind that this amendment will not allow recordings to be made for rebroadcast, sale, gift or trade but for personal viewing only. This Bill makes copying legal for personal use.

Why do people make copies? First, it may be that a particular program is being shown at a time that is inconvenient for the family to watch. Rather than racing away from work 30 minutes before quitting time in order to catch a continuing soap opera or rather than staying up until 3 a.m. to see a particular program, it is far easier to record the program and view it at a time suitable to their schedule. Second, with the rapid changes in today's technology, it may be that a copy of a program was legally purchased by an individual but machinery or equipment on which to play it has become defunct or non-existent. This happened with 8-track tape players. In this case, it is necessary to duplicate the program onto a new format in order to continue enjoying same. Many citizens would carry out such a duplication but would not repurchase the same old recordings in a new format, nor should they.

In today's society, we encourage science and technology to create new devices in order to speed up the processing of information. The present Government has even appointed a Minister of State for Science and Technology. This is good. Yet existing copyright laws penalize the public for using the very devices we are encouraging our scientists and technologists to create. Video recorders and tapes have become a multimillion dollar industry employing thousands of Canadians in what is, because of an antiquated law, an illegal and improper business under existing legislation. This Bill would change that.

For any Member of Parliament who may not think that this is a serious matter or feels that it may be dealt with at a later date, may I point out that this Bill also covers an illegal activity that Members of Parliament may well be performing in their own offices right here on Parliament Hill. If a Member of Parliament makes a recording at home or in his or her office of any proceedings of the House of Commons, he or she breaks the law even when recording his or her own speech and even when he or she did not know that the broadcast of the House of Commons is covered by copyright. Ignorance of the law, they say, is no defence.

Through some special arrangements which state that the House of Commons is not subject to the Copyright Act, the OASIS Network is able to record and show Video Quorum each day so that Members of Parliament can see how statements made by the leaders of all three political Parties are carried in the press. Do that at home and you break the law. It is time the law changed to keep pace with today's society.

Up until five years ago, 8-track tapes and players were very popular. Many people purchased pre-recorded 8-track tapes. Today it is almost impossible to find 8-track tapes or players on the market. Most recording studios and stereo systems have changed to the cassette format. As a result of this, thousands of members of the public are left with hundreds of 8-track tapes. I was once in a home where there must have been 300 of them on the shelves. The entertainer or composer was paid a fee by the individual consumer at the time the 8-track tape was purchased. Whether the song or recording is now played directly by means of an 8-track player or converted to a cassette and played by means of a cassette player will have no effect on the composer or producer provided that the converted tape is not publicly sold.

Many of today, modern hits are sold on long-play records. These are recordings on which there may be up to 12 songs or numbers on each. In most cases, the LP was purchased in order to listen to one or two songs only. For a member of the public to purchase the LP and then record one or two songs from each LP onto a cassette tape for his own personal listening should not be an offence as the performing artist was paid under the Copyright Act at the time the LP was purchased. Further, in most cases, the finished cassette tape would not be available through the market-place.

Since technology is constantly changing entertainment systems as it did when it changed from mono to stereo, 8-track to cassette and LP to the new laser discs, these changes are making existing systems for playing recordings obsolete. The composer has absolutely nothing to do with technological changeover from one type of stereo system to another. For members of the public to be able to continue to enjoy the works of art they have already purchased, they must be able to convert the recordings they own to a system that can be played on the machinery they own without fear of having broken the laws of Canada.

At the present time, there is on the market a device which allows a consumer to play cassette tapes in an 8-track player. There is not, however, any device which enables the consumer to play 8-track tapes in a cassette player. Surely no one is suggesting that a cheque should be sent to a composer when an individual consumer plays a cassette tape in an 8-track player. Why then should it be illegal to re-record an 8-track tape onto a cassette tape for playing in today's modern equipment?

In the field of video recordings, there are presently four formats on the market: VHS, Beta, disk and the new eight millimetre format. Already the disk format has lost popularity with the consumer and the Beta format may be following the same route. It is expected that within the next decade, at least two of the other formats will disappear from the market-place. There is also the possibility that all four formats will vanish from the market-place and be replaced by a new type of format not yet introduced as changes in this field are taking place almost daily.

Members of the public should not be condemned to breaking the law if they use copying devices to change movies they have legally purchased from one format to another. As I previously mentioned regarding cassette and 8-track tapes, there is presently a device on the market which allows the consumer to play a Beta tape in a VHS player. There is no logical reason why the producer of a movie should be paid an additional royalty simply because the film was viewed by playing it in a machine of a different format.

It may be argued that the Copyright Act is coming before the House of Commons at some time in the future and that all changes should be made at that time. We have been waiting for changes to the Copyright Act for many years. I suggest that even though the Act may come before us shortly, that is no reason for refusing to make the Act sensible and reasonable at the present time by passing this Bill. As a matter of fact, it could well be that the discussion in committee of this particular Bill would be assurance that when the total Copyright Act comes before the House, we would be better prepared to handle it in a sensible and logical way.

In closing, I again emphasize that the making of audio or visual recordings of broadcasts for the personal use of the individual family must not be used in any way in a commercial nature or sold, exchanged, bartered or given as a gift. I have never made any such recordings but some one million people in Canada have. I suggest that the House would be wise to give reason to their voices by sending this Bill to committee.

• (1800)

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the Bill which is before us this evening, Bill C-227, is effectively a Bill to make an exemption from the Copyright Act for home copying purposes. The fact of the matter is that there is a great deal of home copying in Canada. Canadians are pirates, outlaws and criminals in terms of stealing intellectual property from creators. Most Canadians are copyright pirates in some way or another, be it the Sunday school teacher who xeroxes her lessons for her Sunday school class or an ordinary Canadian who tapes programs from the CBC on a home video cassette recorder. Common as this is I suggest it does not make it a good enough reason to change the law in the direction proposed by the Hon. Member. Just because a great many Canadians are breaking the law does not mean that we do not need that law at all. That law is there for a purpose.

We know that artists receive a bad deal from our country. They serve the country well. They subsidize the creative lives of Canadians to an enormous extent, far more than they should. Burdens are being placed on them to give of their services voluntarily; and when they are not recompensed by royalties for their work it means they have to suffer unduly. It seems extremely unfair. They have to pay the same for their groceries, their rent and mortgages, and they have a tougher time doing it. In fact, a much higher proportion of our artists live in poverty than people in other occupations.

Copyright does entail intellectual property. This property is created by people using their minds or their hands. It can be stolen just as other types of property can be stolen. I suggest that the consequences of this type of theft are not altogether harmless, even though the crime may take place in the home and it may be something which has the most innocent of purposes. Indeed, the type of uses which the Hon. Member has pointed out are quite proper and reasonable forms of use for entertainment. There is no suggestion that there should be an exemption which would allow anyone to take commercial advantage of this form of copying. However, even this use in the home has consequences for the owners of copyright material.

I had the pleasure of sitting on the Copyright Committee for the better part of last year. In the committee artists told us that they did not want to see any exemptions in the Copyright Act which would impair their very precarious livelihoods. They did not want to see any further exemptions. Indeed, they asked us to close the loopholes where exemptions already exist.

The whole thrust of the Bill which is before us is to take us in the opposite direction from—

Mr. Taylor: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member should recognize that I was not saying that they should not have to pay. They have already paid for these cassettes—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is argument and not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, in fact, the extent of violation of copyright is enormous. This is a question in which technology has created problems which we never imagined it would. More than one million households in Canada now have copying equipment, VCRs, of some sort or another. It is expected that that number will increase greatly every year and that very soon half of the households of Canada will have some type of recording equipment. This means that there will be an enormous use of this type of equipment. We do not know to what extent it is being used to copy material for which other copyright royalties might have been paid. However, we do know that a great deal of it is. It is estimated that as high as 90 to 95 per cent of the machines are used to some extent for copying copyrighted materials. They are not just being used to delay, to take out commercials or to switch times in order for a family to watch a program later in the day than its airing time. A lot of this use is to replace what might otherwise have been purchased. People go out and buy a record, a video cassette, or whatever, and when that happens the artist concerned receives a royalty. However, if there is another recording made then the artist does not receive that royalty.

The effect of this new technology can be seen in a Quebec study which shows that revenues from video rentals are now greater than revenues from movie attendance. So people who are showing movies are getting away from paying royalties and, as a consequence, artists are suffering.

There is clearly no way to control home copying and there is no suggestion that we should try to think of any way to control it. I suggest that the right proposal is to not forget about the problem and say: "Go ahead and do it," but to institute a practice such as the one proposed in the copyright report. That is a matter I deal with in my own minority report because I think I have a slightly better way of dealing with it. In either case, the idea is to allow for a levy on the tapes, on the cassettes and the equipment itself. The moneys thus collected—and there is some dispute as to how it should be collected—would be in lieu of royalties. This would mean that artists would receive some compensation to make up for the loss of royalties they do not receive as a result of home copying. Perhaps this compensation would only be a small part of the royalties which artists might have received if they had sold their works directly and if there had not been any home copying. However, it is at least a recognition that they have a right to be paid for their work and that they need money to pay for their groceries the same as everyone else needs money. It is at least a partial recognition of this fact and it seems to me to be a reasonable one.

Artists have been asking for this type of provision and, indeed, it became clear in testimony to the subcommittee that a great many Canadians are concerned about the difficult lives artists lead and that they are ready to see that there is more compensation paid to them. Even though people recognize that they would have to pay more money there was a great deal of acceptance of this principle. It was felt that it is time we stopped making artists pay all the subsidies for our culture. It is time for the burden to be more equitably borne by Canadians in order to get artists out of poverty and in order to give them more recognition for the work which they do.

I think there is a great deal of public support for measures such as the ones proposed in the copyright report. That is to say, in lieu of royalties being paid for home copying there should be a levy on all of the equipment for making the recordings and all of the mechanisms needed for doing it, be they tapes, cassettes or whatever new technology brings us. It has been recognized that this money should somehow go to the artists.

The way I propose it be done is by way of a tax because that is money which can be directed. We received a recommendation from the National Film Board to the effect that the money should go into Telefilm Canada and be directed toward further production works. That is certainly a good recommendation. The majority report for the committee on copyright recommended a straight royalty. My concern in that respect is that there would be a large outflow of funds from Canada as a result because so much of the copying which is being done is copying of material of a foreign origin. That would mean another burden being placed on the arts community with respect to money leaving the country. In a period in which we have had substantial cut-backs, it did not seem to me to be the best procedure to follow. Nevertheless, it is a clear recognition that artists deserve to be paid for the work which they do. I support that move as such, although I would prefer to see a different method put in place.

The idea of providing compensation by way of levy has been accepted in a number of other countries. We are not the only country considering this move. Nor are we the only country where artists have been demanding that such a move be implemented. We are not the only country where the public has reached the state in which they consider it an acceptable and fair provision.

Legislation to compensate copyright owners for home copying has been enacted, or is in the process of being enacted, in Austria, West Germany, Hungary, Norway, Sweden, the Congo, Finland, Iceland, Turkey and France. That is a sizeable number of countries. Further, legislation is under consideration in Denmark, Italy, the Netherlands, Switzerland, the United States and the United Kingdom. In Canada itself we have the beginning of a recognition. It has not worked out well, I might add, but nevertheless, there is the beginning of a recognition in Quebec with a tax of $2 on blank tapes.

• (1810)

The delivery of this money into the arts community has been fouled up rather seriously and we very much regret that. Nevertheless, it is a recognition and the principle is the right one. Clearly, the mechanism to get the money delivered to the artists should be put in place immediately.

As to the amounts, there is debate as to what would be a reasonable compensation to the artists concerned. In the United Kingdom, the recommendation is up to 10 per cent for audio tapes; and 5 per cent for video tapes. In France it is 56 cents per playing hour. In Finland it is up to 60 cents. West Germany it is down to 7 cents. This is just to give an idea of the amount of money which consumers might expect to have to pay in addition in order to see that artists are compensated.

With respect to machinery, in the case of Iceland, it is 4 per cent. The United States is considering levies in the order of 10 per cent to 25 per cent. In Canada, the recommendation is that the tariffs would be established by the Copyright Board.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would simply point out that we do have other options. This ongoing problem of artists not being compensated—and with home copying going on in great numbers—can be dealt with in a reasonable way. We are Canadians. We are masters at practical compromise. We should not just ignore the problem and put in an exemption in the Copyright Act, but we should make the exemption contingent on there being another and fair method of compensation for our artists. They have been serving us very well and I ask that we in this House give them the support they deserve. They have been paying the way for Canadian culture all too long. Let us share the burden with them and see that their needs are really justly met.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The great Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards).

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I would have to ask that Hansard be amended to excise that word. I am not sure that it is parliamentary.

The distinguished Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has introduced a Bill in this House to amend the Copyright Act and it is a great privilege for me to speak to his Bill. I have followed the career of this distinguished parliamentarian for many of the 45 years he has served the public and I admire his initiatives and vigour very much.

[Translation]

Bill C-227 aims at allowing private recordings of a public broadcast for personal use.

I would like to thank the Hon. Member for having supported the motion. This issue is very important and complex.

[English]

At first, the provisions of this Bill appear straightforward. However, the Bill provides an excellent example of a problem of immense proportions which affects the life of every Canadian. The problem concerns the law of copyright. At the consumer level it is copyright law which sets the rules under which market forces determine what music is heard, what records are made, what film are seen, what books are published, and what programs are seen on television.

The problem can best be described in terms of two ends of a spectrum. At one end there is the creative talent of this country such as authors, poets, composers, film producers, script-writers and publishers. In order to earn a living, creative interests depend upon copyright royalties being paid for the use of their creations. At the other end of the spectrum there is the user of these creations, the general public, who pay royalties by buying books, sound recordings, and theatre tickets but who also want to be able to copy these works with a variety of recording devices.

There is a dual purpose in the copyright system. On one hand, copyright stimulates creativity by granting exclusive rights to creators. On the other hand copyright responds to the public interest in the widest possible availability and dissemination of the subject matter of copyright. New copyright legislation is required to restore the balance between the legitimate interests of creators to be paid for the use of their works and the needs of users to have access to those works.

Before individual recording devices were available, creators were able to control, and be paid, for the use of their creations. For example, a broadcasting station would pay for the right to broadcast a program and the owner of the program would license the broadcast. Modern reproduction technology, which is used in individual homes, cannot be licensed in the same way. Now creators do not have control over their works and, in the case of home taping, are not being paid for their use.

The solution proposed in Bill C-227, although direct and relatively simple, does not address the need of copyright owners to be compensated for the copying of their works. The owner of the copyright in a film or television program has the right to authorize the broadcast and the right to authorize the reproduction or copying of the film or program. When a broadcaster pays a royalty to broadcast, the payment is for broadcast only. The royalty does not cover what would be paid to copy the film or program. Copying is a separate use from broadcasting which requires a separate payment.

Bill C-227 proposes that no compensation should be made for copying at home. That is one solution. However, it is not the only one. Another solution would be to pay compensation to copyright owners on the basis of a levy or tax on blank tape or recording equipment. As my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) said, this solution to the home taping problem is used in a great number of countries and others are contemplating doing so. Right here in Canada, the Province of Quebec introduced, in 1983, a tax of $2 on each blank tape sold to compensate for royalties lost due to home copying. My information is that, unfortunately for creators in the Province of Quebec, that money finds its way into general revenue and not into the hands of the creators.

When the magnitude of the problem is assessed the solution proposed in Bill C-227 may not be the most appropriate. It is estimated that 1.8 million Canadian homes have a video cassette recorder. Home taping is no longer an isolated activity. As home taping grows in magnitude so too does the damage to creators. In a larger context home taping is just one particular example of revising the copyright law to balance the needs of creators and the public.

New reproduction technologies are one of the reasons why the Government is committed to a complete revision of the law. The law in question is the Copyright Act which was first enacted in 1924. This law is hopelessly inadequate to deal with new technologies such as home taping, computers, satellites and photocopying machines.

Because of the inadequacy the Government has already taken steps to completely revise the law to bring it up to needs of the present day. In January of this year the Minister of Communications referred all matters of copyright revision to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Communications and Culture for a complete and thorough review. Its subcommittee has considered over 300 briefs and submissions from interested parties and has heard 111 witnesses at public hearings. The subcommittee filed its report to this House on October 10. It contained recommendations for appropriate solutions to the problem addressed in Bill C-227 as well as to the many other problems involved in copyright revision. The report recommends that a compensation system be introduced together with an exception from copyright liability which would permit home copying. The system which has been proposed will be considered by the Government. When a copyright Bill is introduced in the House full debate on the most appropriate solution to home copying will take place in the context of the overall revision of the copyright law.

To prejudge this involved an complex work by proceeding to deal with one of many related problems in isolation would be ill-advised. First, it would be a duplication of effort to have two separate parliamentary debates to consider the same problem. Second, the complexity of revision of the copyright law requires a concentrated and intense intellectual effort. All of the many issues are interrelated. The selection of a particular solution to one problem will dictate the choice of similar solutions to other similar problems. Without a consistent approach the revision of the law will be a hodge-podge of unrelated solutions with no central policy to further the cultural goals of the Government, or the country.

The issue of home taping addressed in Bill C-227 illustrates the complexity of copyright revision and the consequential need for the already completed committee work on revision. The Bill proposes one particular solution to the home taping problem. The committee has proposed another. An examination of the issue reveals not only the complexity of the problem but also alternative solutions to it. I have already stated that modern technological development has called into question the ability of existing copyright legislation to adequately protect the interests of copyright owners. This had led to appeals for revision of the Copyright Act to incorporate the same form of compensation for copyright owners for use being made of their works. In contrast, Bill C-227 proposes that no compensation be paid.

The present copyright law provides copyright owners with the exclusive right to reproduce a work. There are some exceptions to this exclusive right, the purpose of which is to strike a balance between the needs of creators and the needs of users. There is no specific limitation in the existing copyright law relating to the copying of copyright works for personal use. It is not certain whether some limited personal use might be permitted as falling within the exemption for fair dealing set out in the Copyright Act. In any event, it has been generally concluded that the concept of fair dealing is no longer able to deal with the new reproduction technologies such as home video recorders and photocopying machines which involve, in the aggregate, multiple reproduction of entire works. Consequently, it is generally concluded that the issue of copying for personal use should be dealt with in its own right.

Two polarized solutions are possible. One is to exclude home taping from the category of infringing actions by means of a specific exemption. The other is to construct a system which would provide for reproduction with compensation paid to copyright owners by either the manufacturers of the reproduction equipment or those who purchase blank tape.

The amount of home taping is increasing. Statistics tell us that the number of people purchasing video recorders has increased enormously over the past few years. Opponents of a compensation scheme for home taping argue that the amount of home taping cannot be quantified. It is true that the extent to which copyright owners have been harmed by home taping is disputed. But, however large or small the harm, it is clear that home taping is a major use of copyright works for which creators receive no payment.

The inability of copyright owners to control or to receive fair compensation for copying may disrupt the economic foundation of the motion picture and television production industries. Copyright owners face an even greater risk of economic loss than they did before in a competitive market-place. Their works are subject to widespread, uncompensated copying. Many directors, writers, actors, cinematographers, craftsmen and others depend for their livelihood on revenues earned by copyright works. They are harmed, as are many others, as a result of home taping. The loss is also occurring in many segments of the market-place: displaced attendance at movie theatres, prerecorded cassette sales lost to home-made copies, displaced viewing of cable and television transmissions and reduced royalties from broadcasters due to the adverse effects of time shifting. This amounts to direct economic harm to Canadian creators and copyright owners.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-227 would deprive copyright owners of any compensation for home taping. From what I have just outlined, it is apparent that the enactment of legislation, which would deny copyright compensation for home taping, requires a thorough and careful examination. The issue is complex and its solution is far from clear. A parliamentary reference of this problem, as well as the whole matter of copyright revision, to the subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture has recommended that compensation should be paid. When the copyright revision Bill is tabled in the House a full debate on the very complex problem of home taping will take place. Mr. Speaker, any further debate should be postponed until the complete copyright revision Bill is introduced.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-227 proposed by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), I would like to bring to the attention of the House certain broad public policy considerations and some particular aspects of the Bill which must be taken into account. I would like to thank my distinguished colleague, the Member for Bow River, for flagging the attention of the Department of Communications and the House of Commons to his particular concerns which I know are shared by many Canadians. The Member for Bow River has done the House a considerable service in bringing to our attention an issue which is of significant interest to consumers, creators, the film and sound recording industries, and those charged with developing a national copyright policy and legislation.

The Hon. Member for Bow River will know that in Canada today national copyright legislation is ridiculously outdated and is unresponsive to the needs of creators, entrepreneurs and users of copyright material. While the Copyright Act of 1924 was perfectly suited to such mechanical devices as player piano rolls and wet photography, it is totally inadequate for today's electronic communications age. Technological developments and advances are not addressed in the present law, nor is any provision made to accommodate change. I refer to television, cable systems, photocopiers, computers, satellites and video machines by way of example.

When we speak of the need to revise the legislation dealing with copyright, and indeed the Government has announced its intention to do so at the earliest possible opportunity, we must not forget the principle upon which the present law is founded. The present Act grants to creators exclusive private property rights in their works. These rights provide the legal foundations for industries which rely on the property rights of creators. Copyright legislation enables creators to exploit their works through the publishing, film production, sound recording and broadcasting industries. In turn, it is copyright which provides the legal basis for the creation and operation of these industries.

By licensing their rights to these industries creators make it possible for consumers to read books, see films, listen to music and enjoy television. Consumers and users have a wide choice of cultural material available to them through the operations of the market-place. However, because of the technological change the present law has become more and more unsatisfactory to creators, the industries using copyright material and, indeed, to consumers. This is because the law is uncertain and those who wish to benefit from the law or to use copyright works are uncertain as to their rights and obligations, particularly in the context of using the new devices made possible by technical advances.

Since 1977 the Departments of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Communications have been engaged in studying and reporting on the necessity and urgency of revising copyright legislation. In May of 1984 the former Government tabled in the House of Commons a White Paper on copyright revision entitled From Gutenberg to Telidon. That paper discussed revisions and advanced certain proposals based on the considerations of protecting creativity and responding to technological change. A major shortcoming of the copyright White Paper, Mr. Speaker, was its failure to identify the significant relationship that copyright legislation has to economic growth.

That deficiency was rectified on November 8, 1984 when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in delivering his address on the economy in the House, tabled the document A New Direction for Canada—An Agenda for Economic Renewal. In that document the Minister of Finance identified and underscored the particular and strong importance that copyright legislation has for economic growth, particularly with respect to the creation, transmission and processing of information. The Minister said:

> Canada's Copyright Act, unchanged since 1921, has been overtaken by new technologies. This has created abiguities and uncertainties and has, in some cases, left Canadian copyright owners with less protection or compensation than would be available to them in other countries which have more modern copyright laws. Impacts are particularly significant for the vitality of our cultural and computer services industries. This is a real obstacle to economic growth, particularly in an economy which is increasingly service-oriented, with a growing role for the creation, transmission and processing of information, and in which automation may be a powerful source of productivity gains.
> A broad-based update of Canadian copyright legislaton is needed to create an appropriate and balanced copyright environment. Much preparatory work has already been done and extensive consultation will continue.

It is manifest that it is a central policy concern of the present Government to address and resolve the issues created by technological developments. These developments represent major challenges to the interest of creators and the industries based on copyright.

● (1830)

Technological advances have made it possible to use copyright materials in ways not envisaged in 1924. Copyright works which are broadcast can be picked up and delivered around the world by satellites, and photocopying machines can reproduce books at the touch of a button.

It is because of these changes and the legal uncertainty of the present law that revision of the legislation is urgent. I recall that the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) moved a motion in the House on January 24 that all matters of copyright revision, including the White Paper on Copyright be referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture for examination and report. The motion received unanimous consent, thus approving the urgent need to get on with the revision.

I lay stress on what I consider to be a key phrase contained in the November 8, 1984 statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) almost a year ago on the need for copyright revision. He said:

> Much preparatory work has already been done and extensive consultation will continue.

Given the necessity of taking into account a range of factors and considerations in revision of copyright legislation, I believe fully consultation is fundamental to arrive at a consensus which will permit an equitable revision of the law. The committee report represents another stage of consultation which will receive a full debate when a copyright Bill is tabled in the House as soon as possible.

In considering particular proposals to revise the law to permit certain things to be done, it is my view that the broadest possible approach should be adopted. That approach should include taking into account not only the views of those affected by any change in the law, but the results which would flow from adopting any change. Here, in dealing with the possibility of making recordings or of certain works, the interests involved appear to be those of the creators of the work being broadcast, the owners of the copyright in the work being broadcast, the broadcasters themselves, and the individuals who make the recordings.

This activity, popularly called "home-taping", is an issue of some importance as the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has pointed out. The omnipresent video-tape recorder has made possible the recording of broadcast material an everyday occurrence.

The issue has been litigated in other jurisdictions with varying results. Indeed, the Committee on Copyright Revision of which I had the honour to be a member, had representations made to it that the incidence of home taping is seriously affecting the interests of copyright owners. By attempting to make copying a non-infringing activity, are we saying, in effect, that technology which makes copying possible should prevail over the rights of those who create works of the mind? Is such an exception compatible with Canada's international responsibilities? Is it in the public interest to provide such an exception? If the exception is enacted, what principle can be derived in order that it may be applied in other instances where similar or even different exceptions are sought?

These are very important questions which are at the heart of the many issues that will be debated when the copyright Bill is introduced in the House. It is my view that this particular matter before us cannot be addressed and answered in the narrow confines of a Bill designed to address a particular issue. Rather, I think that the answer has to be sought in the broadest context of the committee's report and the soon to be introduced copyright Bill where the many and manifold aspects of this question can be fully addressed.

I sympathize with the Hon. Member for Bow River and the sentiments behind this particular Bill. As I said earlier, I know that he shares the concerns of many Canadians about what is to happen regarding this particularly important aspect of home taping, which is among the some 137 recommendations we made in the Subcommittee on the Revision of Copyright. We received more than 300 applications and heard from 111 different witnesses. Many of them were speaking on the same topic that the Hon. Member for Bow River has raised this afternoon. Hundreds of thousands, indeed millions of words were submitted to the five members of the subcommittee, three of whom have spoken in this debate this afternoon. It was an enormous job in the course of 10 months, even through the summer, to come up with recommendations which we believed would update the copyright legislation from the archaic law that has existed since 1924 up to the 1980s to the end of this century, until some other parliamentary subcommittee will have to meet in the year 2035 or 2050 A.D. to deal with the technological developments that will have taken place.

As the Minister of Finance and I have pointed out and as the Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) and the Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) have made clear, it is not possible to consider one aspect of copyright revision in isolation. It must be put into the context of those 137 recommendations made by our subcommittee. We must ensure that whatever is enacted in the form of legislation is consistent with the economic statements that have been made by the Government.

If the Hon. Member for Bow River and his friends have any concerns that the home-taping regulations are not fairly dealt with in those recommendations of the subcommittee he will know that once the legislation comes before the House of Commons it will go through the normal legislative process and back to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

I say for the benefit of any hon. Member who is concerned about any of the recommendations which are made by the Government of Canada in that legislation, it is in that legislation where amendments can be brought forward. That is when we can debate all of the matters we have been discussing in the last 10 months. That is how we can bring about true copyright revision for the people of Canada, legislation which we believe to be a charter of rights for creators.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the issue of legalization of home taping of audio and video material is one which certainly warrants discussion. However, with utmost respect for my hon. colleague, the Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), it would be premature to adopt the solutions proposed in Bill C-227.

In January of this year the issue of copyright reform was referred to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture which, in turn, formed the Subcommittee on the Revision of Copyright to examine all aspects of copyright revision, including the issue of home taping. In referring to that subcommittee, I cannot help but congratulate the participants who spent many long hours this past summer hearing many presentations. That subcommittee advertised for submissions and held public hearings in June. A number of submissions addressed the issue of home taping and the subcommittee issued its report on October 10. The report contained 137 recommendations dealing with virtually all aspects of copyright law reform. Recommendations 93 to 96, both inclusive, addressed the issue of home taping or home copying in particular. The report dealt with all forms of home copying, not just recording from public broadcast.

The subcommittee recommended that audio and video home taping be permitted, subject to a royalty on the blank tapes and the recording equipment. This royalty would be paid to domestic and foreign copyright owners on the basis of tariffs approved by the Copyright Appeal Board. It did not recommend compensation for broadcasters. The minority opinion, while it agreed that copyright owners should in some way be compensated for home taping, felt that the compensation should be on the basis of a tax on blank tapes and equipment as opposed to a royalty. It favoured the tax approach because it was concerned with the outflow of royalties, while a tax would allow revenues to be channelled to creators and copyright owners in Canada.

Under Item 70(16) of the Standing Orders, the subcommittee requested the Government to respond to its report. It would be premature to act on this very complex issue until we have had the benefit of the Government's response.

The following are some of the points which must be considered in developing a policy on home taping. I will expand on some of them in a few moments. Audio home taping from broadcasts is a fact of life, Mr. Speaker. Many Canadian households have an audio cassette recorder that can make reasonable, and even high fidelity recordings, from FM broadcasts which can be used in personal stereos, cars, boats and at home. Such devices have been available for many years.

Video home taping is also commonplace. Somewhere between 10 per cent and 30 per cent of Canadian households now have a VCR, depending on what figures you use. Many studies have confirmed that these machines are mostly used for time shifting or library purposes. In either case, copyright owners are not pleased with the result.

How does one balance the realities of newly available technology in private households and traditional compensation to copyright owners? This is a delicate balance and any discussion must take both factors into account.

Because of this balance, one must examine carefully changing the law in the way the Hon. Member for Bow River suggests. The problem is that copyright owners and broadcasters would demand some sort of compensation for any such change in the law. Many experts will support them. To accomplish this, as we will see, is extremely complex and may or may not even be desirable.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, and in view of the Government's commitment reiterated here this evening to an overall revision of the law, I recommend that we wait until the Government has responded to the report of the subcommittee before acting.

I would like to expand on a couple of these points. Home taping is a fact of life. It takes place in several ways; for example, video taping for time shifting purposes. A recent study in the United States showed that, as the largest single use of VCR was the recording of afternoon soap operas so that they could be viewed in the evening. Of course, many people time shift other types of programs as well. Perhaps someone somewhere might even time shift proceedings such as these.

Second, we have library or collection purposes. Many viewers tape TV broadcasts for repeated viewing or permanent storage. This type of taping typically involves movies or collectable dramas or comedies, such as Star Trek or M.A.S.H. Radio broadcasts are also taped, not so much for time shifting as for more or less permanent collection purposes. Many young people tape FM broadcasts of new hit records and thereby avoid, so the argument goes, having to buy the record. In fact, for less than $300 one can now buy a portable mini studio that will play and record FM and cassettes in stereo and even duplicate the cassettes for a friend, and I might add, with surprisingly good quality.

Some would say that this proliferation of emerging technology may actually be beneficial to copyright owners. This theory works in the following way. By creating new uses for recordings, technology has encouraged consumers to buy them. Indeed, this makes some sense. A consumer can purchase a record and make a copy of it to use in the car or personal stereo. If, on the other hand, a person makes copies directly from the radio, at some point the user has to hear the inevitable commercial message, which is how everyone in the system gets paid. Although there are studies that indicate that this is the case, most copyright owners, broadcasters and advertisers loudly disagree.

I wish now to summarize possible problems with Bill C-227 and then explain some of the points in greater detail.

The solution may be too simple. It fails to reflect that certain home taping off the air is seen by some as an illegal act, while on the other hand some types of home taping off the air may actually benefit copyright owners.

Second, the Bill is based upon the premise, as stated in the explanatory note that:

—compensation under the Copyright Act has previously been made to the holder of the Copyright by the Public Broadcasting System used for the original broadcast.

Most copyright owners, broadcasters and advertisers would strenuously disagree with that assumption.

Third, there is considerable evidence that most types of home taping material off the air are harmful to copyright owners.

Fourth, creator interests would argue that if any type of home taping of copyrighted material is to be legalized, it is only fair that there be some kind of tax or royalty on blank tape or recording equipment, or both. The implications of such a compensatory tax or royalty would have to be studied to determine whether it is feasible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—RESIGNATION OF WOMAN MANAGER. (B) REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INQUIRY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the case of Isobel Goligher is representative of those of a large number of Canadian women. When an injustice is done to any person it is wrong and it should be resisted. I would be speaking today as if Isobel Goligher were the only person to be affected by the kind of discrimination she has experienced. But, she stands for many women, which is one of the reasons she is continuing her fight.

Let me explain the facts. Ms. Goligher was made chief of the EDP Section of Supply and Services in the London district office on September 22, 1980. This was the first time a woman had achieved a post this high in that Department. Within a year, on August 25, 1981, she resigned from that position under duress. What happened in that time?

Ms. Goligher was very competent; she proved her competence. The information we have from her evaluation, for example, indicates that she was evaluated at her probation period, six months afterward, and that Ms. Goligher's progress to date in adapting to her computer operation had been excellent. "She exhibits sound administrative qualities and I consider her a pleasure to work with". She passed her probation exceeding the Department's expectations. Yet one would wonder how a person doing this good a job could, six months later, be out of that same job.

One of the reasons her reports were so good was that she had a non-adversarial management style. This is something which makes the case a woman's case. Isobel Goligher did not have the same kind of confrontational tactics which apparently had been rife in that Department. Productivity went up and complaints went down. Morale was much better and staff worked harder as a result and felt happy about their jobs.

We might think the Government would be pleased with these developments. These are the kinds of managerial skills we want to encourage. Indeed, it is one of the hopes of the women's movement that as women move into management positions the beneficial aspects of a different kind of socialization and a more co-operative spirit, could be achieved.

Let me note, and let me be very clear, that productivity did go up. It is curious that she should be told later that she was not managerial material, evidently because she was not adversarial enough. She was too chummy with members of the union, for example, a statement made about her. What a curious thing to say when the evidence is so strong that all the results of this chumminess were better morale and a better job done for the people of Canada.

Ms. Goligher was told when she was promoted that her case would be a test and that people would be looking at her. What the Department failed to do, I regret to say, is look at the managers around her to be sure that she got the back-up she needed.

We do not need to have women tested when they are promoted to managerial positions. It should not be surprising that a women can handle such a position. This is not the first time a woman has been in a managerial position. That should not have been a matter for the test. We do know that in some work environments they are not ready for women yet.

• (1850)

Perhaps there should have been more back-up to ensure that she was accepted and that she would be able to continue in the job. That is why this is an important case for us today. If we are to have employment equity, if women are indeed to be promoted, they must get that back-up. It is not good enough to have a program on paper which indicates that women will be promoted in the Public Service; it is extremely important that there be adequate back-up and that their competence and participation are treated on a reasonable basis. If there are problems, they should be looked into promptly and solved, so that ill will does not develop.

What can be done about it? The only remedy available at this point is to have an independent inquiry established by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Ms. Goligher has exhausted all means at her disposal. She has tried a grievance and the Public Service Commission. No other remedies are available to her. This is why she and the Public Service Alliance of Canada have asked for an independent inquiry.

There has been much correspondence, including correspondence with the present Prime Minister and when he was Leader of the Opposition. He took some interest in the case and hoped that it would be resolved. I would suggest that it is not good enough to take an interest or to say, as he said: "Over 30 months have passed since Mrs. Goligher's resignation and, as public interest in this case appears to be increasing over time, I hope that you"—and this was directed to the Minister in question—"will personally give this case the consideration it merits".

I will tell the House what consideration this case merits. It merits an independent inquiry and action accordingly. There should be a possibility of this inquiry establishing, as I expect it would, that Ms. Goligher is perfectly competent and should be in that position. The relevant authorities should be given the option of putting her back into that position, or another suitable position should be found for her.

It is important that justice be done. It is important for us in Canada, now that we are beginning to see women treated equally in the workplace and beginning to get promotions, that women be able to do their jobs. This is why I call upon the Government this evening to set up an independent inquiry to make employment equity a reality, not make it mere rhetoric.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member bringing this matter forward. I want her to know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) are concerned about it, and I want to put some facts on the record.

The Hon. Member made the point that the Prime Minister has taken an interest in the matter. I think it is important for that to be on the record. The Prime Minister and the Government are adamant about equality for women in the Public Service.

My information is that Mrs. Goligher joined the Public Service in July, 1976. In September, 1980, she was promoted to the position of Chief of Eletronic Processing Section in the London regional office of the Department of Supply and Services. Obviously that was a responsible supervisory position. My information is that she was a competent employee and that management, at no time, had any intention of dismissing her for any reason.

On August 10, 1981, she submitted her resignation without reasons, and this took effect on August 24, 1981. Since that time she has made considerable efforts to convince Members of Parliament, union officials, departmental management and independent tribunals that her resignation was submitted under duress, at a time of emotional stress, that it should be rescinded and that she should be reinstated to her position.

Ms. Goligher has made the following formal applications to independent bodies, in each case alleging that her resignation was submitted under duress and should be rescinded. The formal bodies are the following: the Public Service Commission Investigations Directorate, the Public Service Staff Relations Board, the Federal Court of Appeal, the Federal Court Trial Division and the Public Service Commission Anti-Discrimination Directorate. In every case the independent body dismissed her complaint, finding no evidence of duress or disciplinary motive on the part of management.

The Hon. Member, who in my experience does not bring forward these matters, lightly, has asked for an independent inquiry. I submit that these inquiries are about as independent as one can get. If there is some reason that they are not independent, I would like to know. In fact, I think every Member of the House would like to know. Mr. Speaker, do I have 10 minutes?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No.

Mr. Foster: You have three minutes.

Mr. Lewis: I am trying to do something here, and I do not need to be heckled. I would like to talk to the Hon. Member afterwards because if there is a case, I want to hear about it. If those five bodies are not independent, I want to hear about it, as do the Government and every Member of the House. I think that is the important thing which the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) should realize.

We have tried to find her alternate employment in the London area, and I think that is the productive solution in this case. However, if there is any question that those inquiries were not independent, I want to know, and I want to follow up on that particular aspect with the Hon. Member right now.

AGRICULTURE—SASKATCHEWAN FARMERS' LOSSES. (B) REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on October 16 I directed a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) inquiring as to when the Government would come forward with financial assistance for the people in Saskatchewan and Alberta who suffered as a result of the worst drought in the history of western Canada, certainly since 1937. I had an opportunity to visit Assiniboia this summer and to see some of the devastation which was clearly biblical in proportions.

On September 10, I put a question to the Minister. It was the first day Parliament came back after the summer recess. He said at that time that he was waiting for the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) to make a report and that he would have it in a couple of weeks. I put another question to him some two weeks ago, and he said that he would be taking it to Cabinet.

The real problem with the Minister is that he has no clout. I do not doubt for a moment that he wants to do something, but he has zero impact on his cabinet colleagues and on the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), because he never gets an answer to anything. I could run through a list of at least a half dozen items. Canadian farmers are waiting for stabilization payments and stabilization agreements. They are waiting for action on the part of the Government, whether it be on potatoes, sugar-beets or the farm debt crisis. The new Government of Ontario which was elected in July brought down its Budget this past week and announced a $50 million program to assist with the farm debt crisis.

It is not only that the Minister cannot get decisions; when he makes up his mind to do something he proceeds to change it. This summer he announced that he would bring in legislation fearlessly dealing with a pre-foreclosure arbitration procedure for farmers facing foreclosures or bankruptcies. He backed down on that this week right here on the floor of the House of Commons.

The disaster faced in western Canada and in terms of the agricultural portfolios of the Government are not only apparent to Hon. Members on this side of the House. I should like to refer to a Canadian Press report out of Saskatoon earlier this week which indicated:

A conference involving a who's who of Saskatchewan agriculture evolved into an Ottawa-bashing session Monday.

I point out that this conference was sponsored by Grant Devine, the Tory Premier of Saskatchewan. It continued:

About 450 producers, grain and chemical company officials, farm leaders and a smattering of provincial politicians attended the Toward a National Agriculture Policy Conference.

● (1900)

Just to show that the agricultural community is totally fed up with the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), I will read into the record what Lorne Hehn, President of the United Grain Growers, a farmer-owned grain company, had to say, according to a Canadian Press telex:

Federal Agriculture Minister John Wise and Charles Mayer, Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, are not the men who can make fundamental changes in Canadian agriculture policy, Hehn said:

"Our lobby should be with (Prime Minister) Mulroney and (Deputy Prime Minister) Nielsen, not with Mr. Mayer and Mr. Wise," Hehn said.

Hehn went on to say that that is why it is so fitting that we have this conference with Premier Devine. Obviously the problem is a massive one. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will deliver to the Minister that message from the farmers of western Canada who are totally fed up with the inaction and lack of decision by the Government.

Clearly there is a massive agricultural disaster in western Canada costing somewhere in the order of $2 billion. The Saskatchewan western wheat pools have called on the Government for an assistance program of $50 per seeded acre in order to help get the producers through this disastrous situation. It is time the Government stopped bobbling around on this matter and made it clear to the agricultural producers on the Prairies and in the drought regions that it will come forward and provide this assistance which is simply desperately needed in western Canada today.

There is no excuse for putting this matter off any longer. The report the Hon. Member for Assiniboia was working on last summer was brought before the Government a month and a half ago. It went to the Cabinet a couple of weeks ago. It is time the Government made a decision and announced the assistance it will make available to the literally thousands of farmers, many of whom are already in a difficult financial position. It is time the Government got those cheques in the mail.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to reply to my hon. colleague for Algoma (Mr. Foster) about the problem he has raised. It is not the first time that we deal with the issue in this House, and if we put both the question and the situation in their proper context, I think that the Hon. Member will have to admit that our Government has assumed its responsibilities and responded as diligently as possible to the requests of producers affected by the drought.

[English]

The Hon. Member asked if the Government can give any hope at all to the young farmers who are suffering severe financial difficulties as a result of the drought and in particular what the Government is doing about the request for an acreage payment. As the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) replied at the time, Cabinet is now considering the recommendations made by the task force headed by the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson). My hon. friend knows that.

In further response to the first question put by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) regarding the over-all problem of farm income on the Prairies, I would like to remind the Hon. Member and the House of the many concrete actions that have in fact been taken by the Government to assist western farmers in the past years.

● (1905)

One of our first actions on October 1, 1984, was to implement a $60 million Livestock Drought Assistance Program in co-operation with the prairie provinces. That is a great deal of money.

Mr. Foster: It was Liberal money.

Mr. Blais: You speak about Liberal money. Do you also speak about the Liberal deficit? Do you talk about the $200 billion deficit? We do not speak of that. It is your deficit and not ours.

A month later we announced a $123 million final payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Program. That is a great deal of money as well. I am sure the Hon. Member opposite will say that it too is Liberal money. It is always Liberal money. When we give something it is Liberal money and when we spend money it is Progressive Conservative money; is that what the Hon. Member would suggest? We cannot understand that.

Mr. Foster: Tell us what you are going to do this fall.

Mr. Blais: Also, in November we provided emergency cash advances under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act to help farmers in the Peace River district of British Columbia who could not harvest their grain because of snow cover. We could give a great many examples with respect to other years and the help we gave to farmers everywhere in Canada.

[Translation]

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) will recognize that our Government has taken a stand on this issue, which is more than his colleagues did for twenty years.

SHIPBUILDING (A) CONSTRUCTION OF FRIGATES IN MONTREAL. (B) THE SITUATION IN EAST MONTREAL—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who spoke before me took a stand, but it was down on his knees. That is normal for him.

I think that everyone is aware of the problem which now exists in Montreal East. Because of the inertia of this Conservative Government, Montreal East could lose 5,000 jobs. At this very moment, they are 5,000 workers who are unable to decide whether they can buy Christmas presents for their children.

I know that the Parliamentary Secretary will read me a text prepared by officials and tell me that so many thousands of jobs have been created.

Mr. Speaker, my question was addressed mainly to the Minister of Supply and Services and concerned the risk of a close-down by the Vickers plant in Montreal. The problem is that, in a spirit of equity and to distribute jobs equitably in Quebec and the rest of Canada, the previous Government has decided to grant contracts for the manufacture of three frigates to the Versatile Vickers shipyards in Montreal to ensure employment equity with the Lauzon shipyards in Lévis, and as they were not on the list of accepted bidders for the building of the frigates, the previous Government had decided to grant them a contract to repair five ships under the TRUMP Program. This was a political decision, a contract without a call for tenders, for the purpose of distributing jobs throughout Quebec and Canada and in the Maritime provinces.

Mr. Speaker, in the meantime, Versatile Vickers decided to purchase the Lauzon shipyards and to cancel the previous contract and have the frigates built in Lauzon rather than in Montreal.

The Parliamentary Secretary will say that there is nothing legally binding in the contract. This was a political decision to create jobs in the three Quebec shipyards.

Mr. Speaker, if the Government had wanted these frigates to be built in Quebec, it would not have asked Paramax to set up shop in Montreal, but in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, let us say that this Conservative Government is so very much afraid of employers, so very much dependent on their party contributions, that it will not have the guts to compel the Vickers management to live up to its previous commitments. Supposing that it cannot do that, it can say: OK. The Vickers firm has decided to build the frigates in Lauzon. The $650 million contract which the previous Government had adjudicated to the Lauzon shipbuilding yards to repair the five ships, together with the other $500 million, you are going to execute in Montreal, where it is not going to cost taxpayers a cent, the contract is not yet signed, and we are going to save directly 650 jobs at the Vickers shipbuilding plant.

Mr. Speaker, let us say that they lack the courage to talk to the company management—perhaps they are too deeply involved with the election funds—they can adjudicate the contract to Versatile Vickers in Montreal for the next ships which would require repair jobs, and the Minister had forbiden all shipbuilding firms to bid, supposedly because of the ice on the river . . . And we know there were underhand dealings for the benefit of . . . because the decision was made after the new Minister was appointed.

Mr. Speaker, it is a human problem and a human tragedy. It is not a matter of statistics or unemployment, not a matter of principle. It is a human problem.

My colleague from Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) was with me when we met the employees of Vickers. All those people are between 50 and 55 years of age, Mr. Speaker. They all learned their trades on the job and not at school. They worked strenuously to obtain what they have today, to raise their children and look after their family.

They are proud. And I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if this Government does not move in to save the jobs of those people, their life will be shattered. They want to work, they do not want to be on welfare or live on unemployment insurance benefits. They do not want, as was announced yesterday, to pay $500 per day to have an expert look into the problem. There is no need for research, for any scientist or economist. There is only one organization in Canada which can let contracts for boat repairs and it is the Government of Canada.

The Prime Minister of Canada during the election campaign in Montreal promised publicly before a large crowd that Montreal would become an international city. Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister actually closed down Schefferville, but I can tell him that the people in Eastern Montreal will not let him shut their place down.

• (1910)

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is doing this on purpose, but I think that under the circumstances . . . Even before answering his question I would like to congratulate him on his decision to stay with us. Apparently provincial powers had been arguing over him, they simply had to have him, but his ultimate reaction and soul-searching decision was to stay here in Ottawa with us and forego a provincial career. But considering this is October 31, Mr. Speaker, he seems to be changing and I almost see him as a witch with a pumpkin walking the streets of Montreal East. He talks about electoral slush funds and suggests that is exactly what is involved in this case, yet he knows full well his own Government got mixed up in this contract with the St. John's shipyards, that a subcontract was awarded, he knows that. He spoke about it. Never did his Government have anything to do with this. When it was time, his Government did not even bother to ask for a special provision as they could have done. No, Sir, it did not matter in those days!

Mr. Malépart: It was decided a month ago!

Mr. Blais: All you had to do was to provide for that in the contract. You did not, so now there is no provision for that in the contract. We cannot... I wish the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) would stop action up with his pumpkin! Let me speak. I listened to you, so hear me out. It is my turn. We each have our turn here!

What strikes me as being rather obvious in all this, Mr. Speaker, is that when we needed those people a few years ago they were not there, they were not there to create the 300,000-odd jobs that we have created in one year. That is what the Government has done, Mr. Speaker. In this case, he knows very well that there is nothing we can do from a legal standpoint. The Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) responded to the appeal of Members of our Party from the Montreal region who got together. The Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) held the first meeting with his colleagues and the Minister. On a few hours' notice, the Minister met with union and management representatives and did everything he could legally do in the circumstances.

However, since the previous Government had failed to take the most elementary precautions, the company has the right to do what it wants to do, to deal with whom it wishes, in a country where free enterprise reigns. Those are the facts, my hon. friend, and you ought to know, though you said nothing during all those years. You could have said so that your Minister at the time. You had the power, but you did nothing!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 7.16 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 22

EMPLOYMENT

MONTREAL EAST—DEMANDS OF SURVIVAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, this morning's headline in the Journal de Montréal reads "SOS from Montreal East concerning eight plant shutdowns and possible loss of 7,000 jobs". In addition, the same newspaper reports the shutdown of another plant which will lay off 47 employees before Christmas.

Mr. Speaker, the problem caused by lay-offs in Montreal East is growing much worse because the workers involved are middle age men and women of 45 to 55. If the Government does not do anything to remedy the situation those people will draw unemployment insurance benefits and eventually end up on social welfare.

I would remind the Government that the Montreal East survival committee has urged the Government, first, to give Montreal East a zone four designation so it can avail itself of benefits related to plant upgrading and installation of new facilities, as well as of the so-called early retirement program for employees.

Second, Montreal East residents are asking that the Canadian Government assume its responsibilities by giving contracts to the Vickers company, allocating funds to the prospective buyers of Montreal East's Gulf refinery, and awarding contracts to the Bombardier company.

Mr. Speaker, when he was on the hustings the Prime Minister said that Montreal would become an international city, and all I can hope for is that it does not become a ghost city.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his allotted time has expired. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

BANKS AND BANKING

CONFIDENCE IN SYSTEM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Continental Bank has recently been given a clean bill of health by the Inspector General of Banks. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) have all said repeatedly that the Canadian banking system is sound. However, recent events have demonstrated just how profoundly the Government's mishandling of the CCB and Northland affair has shaken the public's confidence. Now, the fact that sophisticated investors and money managers are reluctant to invest in one of Canada's largest and most established banks, provides a clear signal as to just how far confidence has eroded.

Ordinary Canadians and investors alike have lost confidence in the Government's ability to regulate and supervise our banks. Confidence must be restored to this pivotal sector immediately. What the Government has done up to this point has obviously been inadequate.

I suggest that the first step to restoring confidence in our banking system would be for the Prime Minister to provide some strong leadership and remove the Minister of Finance, who must accept ministerial responsibility for this colossal financial bungling, and for the Prime Minister also to ask the Minister of State for Finance to say absolutely nothing about the stability of the banking system, for her comments on stability in the past have always turned out to be the kiss of death for the institution involved.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S FUND RAISING MAIL CAMPAIGN

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to the attention of the House a matter which is most disturbing. Yesterday I received, as thousands of Canadians have been receiving through the regular mail, a business envelope with the words "Taxation Notice; avis d'impôts" in bold, red print in the upper left-hand corner. Through the cellophane window of the business envelope Canadians see their name and address, postal code, and a number preceded by the letters "TX".

Clearly anyone seeing such an envelope would be led to believe that some level of Government was writing to them with regard to taxes assessed or owing.

S.O. 22

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, does one get a tax assessment notice or a reminder when opening the envelope? Or does one get an official Government document? No, Mr. Speaker, one gets a picture of the Leader of the New Democratic Party and a letter asking for a financial contribution to the NDP.

[English]

This technique is one which is a misrepresentation, at best. It misleads Canadians into thinking their municipality or federal Government is corresponding with them when, really, it is only an NDP ploy for money.

Canadians will not appreciate this joke being played on them. They will find this brand of NDP humour to be in bad taste. All Canadians who are victimized by this NDP brainstorm should demonstrate their disgust by throwing this so-called "taxation notice" in the garbage.

The only good thing which can be said about this trick is that the NDP has finally admitted that it, its policies and its tactics, are taxing to all Canadians.

STATUS OF WOMEN

FUNDING OF FORT GARRY WOMEN'S RESOURCE CENTRE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, for some time women's centres across the country have been experiencing severe financial problems due to federal funding cut-backs.

The Fort Garry Women's Resource Centre in Winnipeg is but one example. This centre provides an invaluable service to many Manitoban women, offering information and referral services, crisis intervention, counselling and volunteer training, to name only a few of its services. Much is done at these centres, and it is done at a very low cost and in an efficient manner.

Ongoing funding must occur, and once again the Manitoba Government is stepping in to replace vanishing federal funds. The Manitoba Government is willing to offer $21,000 in core funding, which is in addition to the $24,000 offered by the province for programming moneys.

We are asking the federal Government to be prepared to match that amount, knowing full well that, without core funding, programs are difficult to deliver, with no place to deliver them from and no staff to provide the services.

Given the promises of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), not only during the election campaign but during the televised debates, to offer money for such centres, will the Government finally deliver on the many promises made to Canadian women, starting with the Fort Garry Women's Resource Centre?

AGRICULTURE

ELECTION CAMPAIGN LETTER TO ONTARIO FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, on July 17, 1984, the Leader of the Conservative Party wrote to Mr. Harry Pelissero, President of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. I should like to read what he said. The first promise made to the OFA was:

A Progressive Conservative Government will commit its share of the necessary funds in order to ensure completion of the municipal drains in eastern Ontario under the Eastern Ontario Subsidiary Agreement.

Thus far that is a broken promise. The second promise was:

A Progressive Conservative Government will establish an Agri-Bond Program to provide loans at reduced interest rates to agricultural producers. A tax exemption for earned income on these bonds would be provided to attract investment capital to this program.

That is a second broken promise. The next broken promise was:

We will reduce the price of farm fuels by 20 cents per gallon by removing the 9 per cent federal sales tax and by not collecting the current excise tax.

Strike three. The Government is out on that one as well. Another promise was:

A Progressive Conservative Government would look to expand the role of the Farm Credit Corporation to take into account . . . interest rates—

That is another broken promise. Finally:

A Progressive Conservative Government would be very aggressive in dealing with subsidized agricultural imports.

And the biggest lie of them all:

My colleagues and I look forward to working closely with you in the future.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

PRESENTATION OF PETITION BY MR. RIIS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday after I had presented a petition to the House, the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) stated:

I too have a petition from the fine city of Victoria, British Columbia, containing a few hundred names of people—

I was surprised to learn later that his petition did not live up to his boast. A petition it certainly was, sent in by concerned citizens of Canada, but not several hundred. Actually the number was only seven, of whom two actually live in Victoria. The only part of his presentation that was true was the part about Victoria being a fine city.

The Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, for whom up until now I have had a high regard, should realize that he discredits himself and the party of Woodsworth, Coldwell, and Stanley Knowles with such a gross exaggeration. It is probably the NDP staff who dole out these petitions to the NDP members to table, but the Member must accept responsibility for what he says in the House of Commons. No amount of tolerance in debate can excuse a Member from claiming that seven equals several hundred.

I am sure the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap will want to take the first opportunity to apologize to the petitioners for trivializing their serious concerns in this matter, and I expect he will also apologize to the House for his misleading remarks.

THE ECONOMY

IMPROVEMENT IN ALBERTA—OPENING OF CANADA PLACE IN EDMONTON

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, from time to time I have risen in this House to report on the economic progress in Alberta. Today there is more good news in Alberta, which means good news for all of Canada. In Alberta projected investment is up 12 per cent. Oil and gas drilling is also up with a 22 per cent increase in well completions in Alberta from last year. The unemployment rate in Alberta has declined from 11.8 per cent to 9.2 per cent. Twenty-five thousand jobs have been created in Alberta since the election. This is a record of which this Government can be proud.

Monday will mark the fifth anniversary of the National Energy Program, but it will be the last. It is finally dead and gone. Now Western Canada can regain the positive spirit in which new investment can create more new jobs for Albertans.

Next Wednesday the Prime Minister will be in Edmonton to participate in the official ground breaking ceremony for the new Canada Place building. This new federal complex will be a mark of progress in downtown Edmonton. It is an indication of economic development. Edmontonians are looking forward to this event and we are proud that the Prime Minister will be there to share our enthusiasm.

The Canada Place complex is a $200 million project for Edmonton. It will create hundreds of jobs for my constituents in Edmonton East. We are on the move in Edmonton and this Government can take credit for the progress.

EMPLOYMENT

MONTREAL EAST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, there is in today's issue of the La Presse newspaper an article indicating that Montreal East is crying out for help and damning the Conservative Government for the closing of a great many plants, insisting that the area has been in a slump ever since the new Government came to power, in spite of the fact that the Prime Minister had promised during the election campaign that Montreal would regain its status as Canadian metropolis.

There is a similarity... the closing of plants and the laying-off of employees is the result of the Government's failure to act and put pressure on the various companies to continue the work they had been doing for many years.

I am blaming especially the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), as well as the Minister of State (Transport) (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) who is from the Montreal area, for their failure to provide the Bombardier firm with the support it needed to continue building railway engines in Montreal East as it has been doing for decades, or to adjucate contracts to the Canadian Steel Wheel, a firm with much expertise and well-trained workers in the area of smelting works—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! I must regretfully advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

BANKS AND BANKING

CONTINENTAL BANK OF CANADA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Chairman of the Continental Bank of Canada announced that his bank had been forced in recent days to borrow up to $2.9 billion from the Bank of Canada and the chartered banks in order to prop itself up. Has the Minister anything to say to the House in respect to this particular matter?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the Right Hon. Member back to September. At that time, because of the uncertainty that was in the market-place, I met with the chairmen of the largest chartered banks and initiated a broad inspection process which was focused on the smaller Canadian-owned banks. As a result of that, the Continental Bank was subjected to a very extensive inspection involving representatives from those banks. The Continental Bank came up with a clean bill of health which was endorsed by the members of the inspection team.

Since that time there has been a reduction in the funding capability of the bank. It has been forced to seek liquidity financing from the Bank of Canada. This arrangement that was announced yesterday was designed to put that funding on a broader and more sound basis which involved the chartered banks which, by their actions, endorsed the results of the inspection process. In that way they are sending a signal to the rest of the market that the bank is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With respect, the question invited a long answer but there must be a limit, I am afraid.

[Translation]

MINISTER'S ROLE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we were informed that the Continental Bank of Canada, the seventh largest in the country, was obliged to borrow almost $3 billion to stay afloat.

Was the Minister of Finance consulted in this matter? Did the Minister take part in negotiations to stabilize the bank? And what position did the Minister take with respect to protecting the Canadian taxpayer?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I indicated in my first response that I initiated the inspection process to establish for the bankers and the general public the solvency of the Continental Bank. As a result of the participation of the Bank of Canada in this financing arrangement, we have obviously been very much involved in the discussions and the arrangements that the Continental Bank announced yesterday.

REQUEST FOR REPLACEMENT OF MINISTERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. At a press conference two or three weeks ago when reporters put questions to the Prime Minister about the situation of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, the Prime Minister stated to the country that it was merely a blip. It has now been recognized, because of what happened yesterday, that the crisis was not over then.

My question to the Prime Minister derives from the fact that this crisis really began in March when the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance botched up the initial bail-out and sapped the confidence of the country. In the circumstances in which we now find ourselves, does the Prime Minister not feel that the confidence of the country can best be restored by replacing the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance?

• (1120)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it must be Friday; that is a Friday question. In point of fact we would find many people who would suggest that the crisis or difficulties did not begin in March.

Mr. Foster: Four banks have gone bust now, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: They began some years ago with Government policies which had the effect of really debilitating the economy of Canada.

I would have thought that rather than asking questions of a crepe-hanger nature the Leader of the Opposition would have been referring us to the fact that new figures released yesterday by Statistics Canada indicate that the economy expanded at an annual rate of more than 6 per cent.

[Editor's Note: And the incandescence of the lighting in the Chamber increasing momentarily:]

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Even the lights agree. Let the Hansard reporters record that from on high there was agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: Mostly darkness.

Mr. Mulroney: And darkness was avoided by the Government once more.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, a serious question does not deserve such a frivolous answer.

STATUS OF CONTINENTAL BANK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, the President of the Continental Bank announced at a press conference that if the support package failed to restore depositor confidence in his bank, he would have to consider a merger with other institutions. My question is as follows:

Are the Minister of Finance and the Government concerned about the high degree of concentration that would result? If so, what does the Government intend to do to avoid this?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the House to the actions of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides as well as of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap in relation to the previous two questions. It is the politics that are being played by Members opposite—

Mr. Broadbent: He didn't ask a question yet.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —that are causing these problems, which was directly alluded to by the President of the Continental Bank.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: That is paranoia, I'll tell you.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is the evidence before the tribunal.

Mr. Deans: He has not even asked a question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In specific answer to the Hon. Member's question, he is posing a hypothetical question, a question with respect to events that we have no reason to believe at this point will happen. So let us follow things along and give the support which should be there for the Continental Bank.

[Translation]

INQUIRY CONCERNING GOVERNMENT'S INTENTION TO RESTORE CANADIAN AND FOREIGN CONFIDENCE IN BANKING SYSTEM

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I am absolutely flabbergasted at the comments made just now by the Minister of Finance, especially since it was at his request that we avoided asking questions about banks other than the Northland Bank and the CCB. Since the Minister of Finance is taking that attitude, I may add he even thanked us for doing so. Mr. Speaker, today we realize the harm that has been done to our banking system in Canada as a result of the incompetence and amateurish approach of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State (Finance). What does the Government intend to do to truly restore the confidence of the Canadian public and the public outside our country in our banking system?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated both privately and publicly to the Hon. Member the various things that we are doing to re-establish confidence in the Canadian banking system.

Mr. Riis: It's not working, Mike.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think we have gone a long way; but every time there is an irresponsible question put by either the Hon. Member who has just posed the question, his Leader, or the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, there is a direct impact on what goes on in the banking system.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I encourage Hon. Members to act responsibly, including the Leader of the Opposition who should know better as a former Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Resign.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ST. CLAIR RIVER—PRESENCE OF DIOXINS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a very serious question for the Minister of the Environment. Action is finally being taken on the Niagara River, but an even more dangerous situation is becoming apparent on the St. Clair River. Will the Minister confirm that diving has once more found the substance first discovered in 1984, with massive concentrations of cancer-causing dioxins? And will the Minister tell us whether lab tests have now shown heavy concentrations of dioxins in these new samples?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly confirm that a tar-like slick has been found in the St. Clair River as recently as this fall, in addition to the slicks which were found earlier, I believe in August of 1984. It is clear that the substances do contain chlorinated hydrocarbons, including the cancer-causing agent, dioxin.

As soon as I found out about the most recent discovery I mobilized the top experts in the country, including those within my Department, but not excluding outside experts, for the purpose of confirming the preliminary findings and advising on the potential source.

Briefly, there are two possibilities; first, a direct discharge into the river from industries along the river; second, the possibility of a seepage from underneath the river bed from dump sites which are 30 or 40 years old. I will advise the Hon. Member when the analysis has been completed.

COLLECTING OF SAMPLES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, we understand from ministry officials that a significantly larger number of samples are needed to show conclusively the sources, and to provide the methods of potential clean-up for these toxic matters. Will the Minister immediately launch full testing throughout the chemical valley section of the St. Clair River so that real action can be taken in the six weeks remaining before ice freezes the river over and makes it very difficult to proceed?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my first reply, experts from across the country within my Department, within the Department of the Environment of Ontario, and the universities, have been mobilized for the very purpose to which the Hon. Member has addressed his question.

We will accelerate things, but I can assure the Hon. Member that everything is being done that can be done. There is some real doubt as to where the gooey substance is coming from. If the substance is coming from underneath the river bed from dump sites which are 30 or 40 years old and leaking into the river, the problem becomes much more serious for us than if the discharge is coming directly from the chemical companies along the river. I will keep the Hon. Member, and through him, the House, apprised of our progress on those analyses, and he can be sure that those analyses will be accelerated—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly the point. We respect the Minister's sincerity, but I ask the Minister at once to authorize immediate, direct, and urgent action to do the testing which will answer these questions which the Minister himself recognizes are still very much up in the air. Will the Minister take the action required to get this substance dealt with before the river freezes?

• (1130)

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I am speaking the same language as the Hon. Member. I have told him twice that everything possible is being done.

The Minister of the Environment in Ontario, my own officials in the Department of the Environment at the federal level, and university experts have been mobilized into a team to produce the analysis that he is seeking. We cannot rush scientists, but to the extent that we can do so, we are riding herd on them as heavily as we can.

HEALTH

DISCOVERY OF DANGEROUS SUBSTANCE IN ITALIAN WINES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In this age of packaged and bottled products with additives, preservatives, colourants and sweeteners, the public must have complete confidence in the health inspection system of the Canadian Government. Otherwise credibility in these products in the market-place completely falls down. This was demonstrated during the recent tuna crisis.

When did his officials first find out that certain Italian wines contained diethylene glycol, a substance dangerous to health? Why would they not advise the Canadian public directly instead of simply advising the liquor boards of Ontario and Quebec? Will he tell the House if these wines are also found in other provinces?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct in terms of the premise that there can be absolutely no compromise on vigilence in terms of health and safety. With that as a general principle, let me answer his question.

The Department was advised when, as he will recall, there had been earlier similar incidents with wines from another European country. We advised the Quebec liquor authorities that they should look at these wines because of the information that we received that there should be testing done immediately. That information was conveyed to the Quebec liquor authorities in early October.

REQUEST THAT LIST OF AFFECTED WINES BE PUBLISHED

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to know when the Minister's officials first advised him of this, because during the tuna crisis it was brought to our attention by the Canadian public that these matters are considered so important that they should be dealt with the Minister.

When did he first know about this, and would he not now at least make a full list of these wines public, and also tell us what other provinces have these wines on their shelves so that all Canadians will know? Would he not accept the principle that the public should be informed directly about these products which endanger health, rather than simply leave it to the liquor boards of the provinces, since Ottawa has jurisdiction over products like these which enter our country?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I operate very much along the lines recommended by the Hon. Member. The first note that I received on the issue was October 17, 1985, I believe. I also learned that information had been given to Quebec earlier to check the wines that were in question. I believe some of the information also came from the United States.

I might say that there is very close co-operation and exchange of information between the various national Governments if, in fact, a problem might exist. I am willing to give him the list containing the names of the wines. I think that they have been made public. This was also done at Queen's Park yesterday by the Minister responsible for the LCBO. Obviously, we are checking which other provinces are involved.

I might also say to him that in terms of testing there might always be the argument of what is an acceptable limit. From our point of view and the Government's point of view, these chemicals which were used in wines for sweeteners and/or thickeners are simply not acceptable for Canadian standards.

THE MINISTRY

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER OF FISHERIES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Serious problems are facing the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada with respect to factory freezer trawlers and a poor catch of cod this year.

It has been over a month since the Fisheries Minister resigned. Will the Prime Minister tell the House when he intends to appoint a full-time Minister to such an extremely important and sensitive portfolio?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that my hon. friend will join me in expressing congratulations to the Acting Minister of Fisheries, the Deputy Prime Minister, who has done a tremendous job in fulfilling those responsibilities on an interim basis.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: However, at the earliest possible moment I shall be announcing a change. It is a very important and sensitive portfolio and I hope to be announcing some changes shortly.

Mr. Rodriguez: That answer is not good enough for the people working in the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada and on the West Coast.

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister give a more firm commitment to the House that by next week at the latest we will have an announcement of a new Fisheries Minister who will be able to conduct that portfolio on a full-time basis rather than the part-time operation we are getting at the present moment?

Some Hon. Members: Louder.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not want the gentleman to get exercised, but—

Mr. Broadbent: We want you to get exercised.

Mr. Mulroney: The last time we gave you some exercise was September 4, 1984, and we will give you some more the next time. Keep it up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Just keep it up, Ed.

I have had the honour of representing Central Nova and Manicouagan where the fishing industry is vital and the role of fishermen is indispensable. I am aware of the importance of this. We will be making some announcements at an early moment.

HEALTH

DIETHYLENE GLYCOL IN IMPORTED WINES

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare knew last spring that diethylene glycol was being used as an additive in certain wines imported to Canada. He also knew that it is illegal to use that substance as a food additive in Canada. Why did he allow the product into the country? Why did he not remove it from the shelves, especially in certain provinces, such as the Atlantic region, that do not have inspection?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the Member must be careful about what he says. I told his colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East that there had been another incident with wine from another European country concerning, as we all know, the Austrian wines. If he wants to go back to that incident, we can. However, I think he will know that that wine was pulled from the shelves and that not only did we work closely with provincial Governments, but they worked with their liquor boards.

I do not believe he should confuse that incident with this incident of Italian wines. We have said in the Department of National Health and Welfare that it is not acceptable to have any traces of diethylene glycol in wines, either for sweetener or thickener. I make that point, and it is on that basis that that information has been given to the provinces. Obviously we are pleased with the action taken by Ontario and Quebec. Obviously we are also looking at other provinces to see whether the problem exists there too.

Mr. Baker: The general public will then ask, if it is illegal to sell this for use in Canada, why was it in the liquor stores in the first place.

ACTION TAKEN IN BRITAIN

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Britain removed nine German wines from its shelves on August 2, and notified the federal Government. Is the Minister saying that what is a health hazard in Britain is not a health hazard to Canadians? What will he do about that?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I repeat to the Member exactly what I have said. If we have any notification, either internationally or from our own testing, that information is conveyed directly. However, I think he should be somewhat fair in his statement. If there has been a wine imported and we do not know about the contents, but find out through international or Canadian testing, immediately we want to take action, and that is obviously the approach we must take.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND ELECTION EXPENSES ACT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. It concerns an attempt by the Conservative Government of Prince Edward Island, aided and abetted by the Liberal opposition in that province, to thwart the dramatic and surging growth of the provincial New Democratic Party on the Island—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: —by passing amendments to the P.E.I. Election Expenses Act. Will the Minister, in his capacity as the Minister responsible for the federal Income Tax Act, meet immediately with his colleagues from Prince Edward Island and urge them to rescind these unfair and undemocratic provisions immediately?

• (1140)

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can well understand the concern of my hon. friend opposite for the precarious condition in which his Party finds itself in Prince Edward Island where it is so threatened that it is almost in the category of an endangered species. Under the circumstances, I will be very pleased to accede to his representation and ensure that fairness and equity are used in dealing with this situation.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS APPLICABILITY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's undertaking. I ask that in the course of that review he have his departmental officials review these provisions in light of the Charter of Rights to ensure that they do not breach the federal Charter of Rights in an attempt to try to keep politics on the Island as some sort of an old boys' club. I ask him to look into that on a priority basis in view of the by-elections which are currently under way.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that I will certainly do that. I am sure all Members will agree with me that there is no place in this great country where politics is practised in a more decent and traditional manner than in the Province of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Broadbent: Decent and traditional are frequently contradictory.

ENERGY

PRICE OF NATURAL GAS IN ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The natural gas pricing deal which she struck this week really does very litle or nothing for consumers. The Minister talks about lower prices for consumers, yet she knows that the vast majority of Ontario consumers are locked into long-term, fixed-price, taker-pay contracts until 1995. What is the Minister going to do to lower prices for consumers of natural gas in Ontario and Quebec?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Government has provided a break for consumers which was never offered by the previous Government. I point out that starting today contracts which come up this year can be negotiated freely between buyers and sellers without interference by the Government, provided the provinces of Ontario and Quebec and the consuming provinces put the necessary transportation system in place. Therefore, those benefits can occur immediately.

CANADIAN PRICE LEVELS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in view of these long-term contracts for consumers in Ontario and Quebec, can the Minister guarantee that consumers in these provinces will not pay more for western Canadian gas than will new customers in adjoining states of the United States?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): In our agreement with the western provinces we made it very clear that Canadians will never pay more for gasoline than will their American neighbours. At the present time in the States adjacent to Ontario natural gas prices are 25 per cent higher than they are in Ontario. Therefore, there is a lot of protection built in for Ontario consumers and industries.

CHALLENGE '85

JOBS FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration from whom I have requested, as have others, data which will provide specific information on the job producing effectiveness of Challenge '85. In order that I can join in providing the constructive suggestions for program improvements which she said she wishes to have from all Members, will the Minister indicate when precise information will be available on the number of student jobs produced, their average duration, the income earned, the distribution of jobs by region, whether they are career oriented, and whether they are business or private industry supported?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it just so happens that last night I signed a letter to the Hon. Member giving him exactly those statistics.

Mr. Broadbent: That should get there in two weeks.

Miss MacDonald: I hope he will read it with real interest. It shows that over 100,000 jobs were created during the summer through Challenge '85, the highest number ever.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Miss MacDonald: It shows that the jobs were for the longest duration of any period for young people during a summer program. It shows that on average they received the highest income during that period.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Broadbent: Did you plant that question?

SITUATION IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have gotten such a timely response upon my return. I wonder whether those figures will reveal why fewer jobs were in fact produced in some of the most economically depressed areas of the land, such as in Nova Scotia, where in Cape Breton 20 per cent fewer jobs were produced this year than last.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there are always regions of the country which need to have more attention and concern shown them than others which are more economically viable. Cape Breton is one such area and I can tell you, as a Cape Bretoner, that I will continue to ensure that that happens.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SENIOR CITIZENS

HOUSING NEEDS IN OWN NEIGHBOURHOODS

Mr. Terry Clifford (London-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Canada's seniors population will increase by 20 per cent in the next five years. At the same time many, many Canadians are seeking shelter. Will the Minister consider these factors and tell us whether there is a new policy directive forthcoming that will ensure that seniors can remain in their own residences in their familiar neighbourhoods in order not only to ease the problem of housing but to increase and improve the quality of the senior's lives?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Member, not only for the question, but, more important, for his continuing interest in the well-being of Canada's seniors. He has had a number of conversations with me on the personal initiatives which he has been taking. The premise from which he starts, namely, that we can support the greatest amount of independence for seniors of any age group or health condition is, of course, a principle which the Government wants to pursue. I want to indicate to the Member that this is an on-going consideration of myself and of the Minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. We are looking forward to further suggestions from the Member.

ENERGY

OFFSHORE EXPLORATION ACTIVITY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I hope the statement of the Minister of Employment and Immigration for special status for Cape Breton comes to more than the Prime Minister's promise did for that.

My question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister said that she does not expect a stampede of activity in the off-shore. The Minister can expect a stampede away from it. That activity which does take place will be by the multinationals. Will the Minister do something to help Canadian companies participate in the off-shore, or is Canada going to be the only country to give its complete off-shore future to the multinational oil companies?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have already told the House that 65 per cent of the exploration occurring in the frontiers is being carried out by tax-paying Canadian companies. I do not know why the Hon. Member keeps trying to portray the Canadian sector of the industry as a bunch of small "gyro" operators who cannot compete. The regime which we have put in place is internationally competitive. In his own area, where the geology has been disappointing to date, he can look forward to between six and eight new wells next year.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, the reason that 65 per cent of the participants are tax-paying Canadian companies is because of the Petroleum Incentive Program which exists now and is being taken away by the Government.

TAX CREDITS INQUIRY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister may or may not have heard that the Canadian oil companies will be coming to Ottawa looking for the ability to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Supplementary questions should not have long preambles at all.

Mr. MacLellan: Will the Minister allow Canadian oil companies to transfer their tax credits or to pass them on to consumers? Is he going to give them the benefit of that consideration?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Is that question addressed to me?

Mr. MacLellan: Yes.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said he was addressing his question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. That is why I was not sure to whom he was addressing it to. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has indicated quite clearly what the tax regime is. I think it is a generous regime and, as she has indicated, it is internationally competitive and it stands in the form that has been presented.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION CRITERIA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. Canadians who, for several years, have been frustrated in trying to bring their relatives to Canada under the Family Reunification Program were glad to hear the Minister of State say yesterday that he will now allow some independent immigrants to enter without a validated job offer in advance. Will the Minister assure us that all assisted relative applicants will be considered without the validated job offer? Will he lower the high level of income that is presently required of the sponsors of these relatives?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question and tell him that we are opening the doors and sending out a signal that immigration is welcome.

● (1150)

We are seeking Canadians with skills to come not only in the context of family but to establish a wider family contact. This provision for minimum wage is not something established by myself, but is from Statistics Canada. It is seen to be the minimum needed for a family base.

ADMISSION ON HUMANITARIAN GROUNDS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): I will ask the Minister further, Mr. Speaker, in the light of the response of the Canadian Labour Congress's warning about sudden increases of immigration but asking for humanitarian increases, how does the Minister justify that he is nearly doubling the intake of people who each own at least half a million dollars, while he gives no increase to family class, and he reduces by 1,000 the number of people being brought in under humanitarian programs and special measures?

Hon. Walter McLean (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, in response to my hon. colleague, he quite misses the point. In fact the family class is merely a level and is very responsive. If more come, it is a category to which we can be responsive.

As to the question of humanitarian level, the Hon. Member will notice that the Government has increased that by 1,000. It is subsidized by the Government. In the other areas, we cannot predict where there will be an earthquake or a tragedy. Canada has a tradition of responding. We want to have the mechanisms in place so that we can give leadership and invite the non-governmental sector and others to join with us.

That is the intention, and if the Hon. Member reads the documents he will see that we have balanced both the economic and the social in this announcement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

CLOTHING IMPORTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade. Last July in the clothing industry, over 28 million units of clothes were imported in Canada, which represents an increase of 4.4 million units or 19 per cent over the same month the previous year and means lost jobs for Canadian textile and clothing workers. Does the Minister intend to take action to correct this situation since the domestic market has only absorbed an increase of 1.5 per cent a year in the last five years?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the Hon. Member that we, too, are very concerned about the textile industry and wish it to remain a healthy and a viable one.

This summer we began negotiations, in full co-operation with the industry, for the multifibre agreement in Geneva. Just this past month we concluded agreements with Bangladesh, Malaysia, and Indonesia for the restraint of low cost imports into this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LOBBYING

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday Canadians were made aware that Canada's second most controversial lobbyist, right after Richard Hatfield—I am speaking of Frank Moores—was lobbying in favour of a foreign takeover of Prentice-Hall.

In view of the fact that it has been almost two months since the Prime Minister presented this House with his blue ribbon document concerning public sector ethics, can he now inform the House if and when there will be a Bill concerning lobbying activities?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): It will be brougt in, I expect, very shortly, Mr. Speaker.

The record will show, I believe, that about 98 per cent or 99 per cent of the lobbyists in this town are Liberals.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LOBBYISTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and I am happy to know that 98 per cent of the lobbyists in the National Capital still are Liberals. Can the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who will introduce the Bill in this House according to what the Prime Minister told us the other day, guarantee that this legislation will include not only the names of parliamentary lobbyists, but even more important, the name of their clients, the purpose of their lobby and the fees paid to those who do this type of work?

[English]

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Is that the Taiwan model?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to point out that we are now considering the recommendations which will be submitted to Cabinet about this Bill. Of course, we are examining all options to prepare a Bill which will meet the needs of the business sector.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

OCEAN RANGER COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. His colleague, the Minister, said in this House that the Government had set a target of 120 days in order to give a comprehensive response to the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Ocean Ranger, especially those dealing with search and rescue.

That time period has now passed, and I ask the Minister whether the Government is prepared to indicate to the House how it intends to respond to the recommendations of the Royal Commission, especially those dealing with search and rescue, as we approach winter drilling?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister made the mistake of assuming this report on the Ocean Ranger was in the same category as a parliamentary report required by the rules of the House to be responded to within 120 days. It was an honest error.

I can say to the Hon. Member that a submission to Cabinet is in its final stages. As soon as my colleague gets back from Brussels early next week, we will be discussing it and making a submission to Cabinet. I feel certain the recommendations will meet with the Hon. Member's approval.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, this Royal Commission has cost the people of Canada $14 million. It has been the subject of an inquiry of the U.S. Congress, but it has not come before this House as yet.

Will the Government refer the report, in view of the fact that it touches on a number of Departments, to a committee of this House?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): That, of course, is not my responsibility, Mr. Speaker. It is that of the Government House Leader. I will certainly take the Member's representation to the House Leader and discuss it with him.

AUDITOR GENERAL

PETRO-CANADA'S ACQUISITION OF PETROFINA—AUDITOR GENERAL'S ACCESS TO DOCUMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have just learned that the Federal Court has announced its decision in favour of the Auditor General. The Auditor General is now going to have access to certain cabinet documents that pertain to the Petro-Canada takeover of Petrofina—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: —which the Government of Canada was refusing to turn over. All Canadians who believe in freedom of information will truly welcome this decision.

Having that decision now before us, will the Prime Minister assure the House that all those documents will be made available on a priority basis to the Auditor General?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the decision, which I understand the Associate Chief Justice was to deliver at about eleven o'clock. I will take cognizance of it immediately after Question Period and respond to my hon. friend and to the House at the earliest possible moment.

We are very much in favour, as my hon. friend knows, of the fullest access to information on the Government side. We have complied in all circumstances with that. We will examine the decision carefully and respond as quickly as we can.

Mr. Broadbent: I am pleased to hear that from the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker.

GULF TAKEOVER DOCUMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Considering that a section of the Income Tax Act that was used in the Petro-Canada takeover of Petrofina is precisely the same that was used in the Olympia & York-Gulf takeover transaction, and considering I have discussed this with the Auditor General this morning, will the Government be in agreement to turn over to the Auditor General this morning, will the Government be in agreement to turn over to the Auditor General all the pertinent documents relevant to that takeover?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, I think prudence would require that we read carefully such an important decision and see exactly the wording and the thrust of the decision, which is what we will do immediately after Question Period. As I say, we will give a response not only to my hon. friend but to the House and the country just as quickly as we possibly can.

AIR TRANSPORT

ARCTIC SOVEREIGNTY—DROPPING OF FLAG FROM AIRCRAFT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Given the Prime Minister's professed personal interest in the question of Arctic sovereignty, and given the fine work that was done by the Council of Canadians last summer when it brought to the attention of the Canadian public the Polar Sea voyage, would the Prime Minister tell us whether he agrees with the position taken by the Minister of Transport, who is now choosing to charge the pilot involved in the action taken by the Council of Canadians? Or, does he agree with the position taken in a letter two weeks ago by the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he indicated that the Government had no such intention and stated: "I have been advised that there are no plans to take this matter before the courts"? Does he support the position of the Minister of Transport, or does he support the position of the Secretary of State for External Affairs on this matter?

● (1200)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the House the other day, the matter is being investigated. It would appear that there was a contravention of the air regulations, specifically air regulation No. 508. For the information of the Hon. Member, I might just quote it to her.

Ms. Copps: I have it here.

Mr. Mazankowski: It indicates: "No persons shall create a hazard to persons or property on land or water by dropping anything from an aircraft in flight". I think it is incumbent upon the Minister of Transport to ensure that the regulations are enforced and carried out, and that is what the Department is doing.

CONSEQUENCES FOR AIR PILOT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He will know that a violation of regulation No. 508 could mean, for the pilot, a loss of his job, or a possible fine of up to $5,000, or one year in prison. Does the Prime Minister believe that this should be the fate of the pilot who, with the Council of Canadians, brought this very serious issue to the attention of the Canadian public? And that is directed to the Prime Minister, please.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is simply drawing conclusions before the investigation is completed.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition today on behalf of five individuals from the City of Vancouver.

Mr. Dick: How many hundreds?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: How many thousands?

Mr. Riis: Just five, Mr. Speaker. They are concerned about the deindexation of the family allowance and ask the Government to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to present from the following ridings: Montreal-Sainte-Marie, Richmond, Lac-Saint-Jean, Rimouski and Rosemont. In these petitions the petitioners are asking the Government to turn back its regressive decision to deindex family allowances to the tune of some $55 million.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF PEACE INITIATIVES

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, this morning I wish to present to the House of Commons a petition which was given to me last week by grade school children between six and twelve years old who send us a message of peace. These children are worried and saddened by the present situation and ask the honourable House of Commons to continue to promote all efforts made in pursuit of this ideal. This petition has been put together to mark the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations and was presented in a very unusual form by young students—boys and girls alike—from the Trefflé-Gauthier Primary School in Jonquière.

[English]

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND WITHDRAWAL OF TAX INCREASES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a large number of petitions to present from my own riding of Broadview-Greenwood and from other Toronto ridings. The petitioners indicate that the family allowance deindexation will not be offset by the temporary increases to the child tax credit and that even the poorest families will be worse off as a result. Accordingly, they request Parliament to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance.

Similarly, I have another large number of petitions from various places in Canada. The petitioners indicate that the accelerating cut-backs in child benefits, on top of sales tax increases, excise tax increases and stiff income tax increases, are unfair and place an extraordinary burden upon middle and low-income households.

These petitioners call on the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of residents of Winnipeg. They indicate that the cut-backs in family allowances and the tax increases for ordinary Canadians are unbearable in face of budget hand-outs such as the tax-free capital gains provision, the billions of hand-outs to oil companies and the billion dollar bail-out of banks. They call upon the Government to withdraw its legislation to deindex family allowances.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present another petition from people in Toronto, Canadian residents in Toronto, who are protesting against the Government's Bill that would reduce the buying power of poor people by cutting into the family allowance, at the same time as it gives more money to those who have the most, such as the banks.

Therefore, the petitioners ask the House of Commons to make sure that we reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance, and that we block or rescind the unfair tax changes.

PARLIAMENTARY EMPLOYMENT AND STAFF RELATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-45, an Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate and House of Commons, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

• (1210)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise today to begin the second reading debate of Bill C-45. This Bill is a progressive step towards reforming the labour relations process on Parliament Hill. It is based on legislation which was first proposed by the Standing Committee on Management and Members Services and which was unanimously supported by all three political Parties. It is a major step along the road to parliamentary reform and creates for the first time a modern and responsible statutory framework within which a positive approach to labour management relations can be achieved.

Given the subject matter of the Bill, I think it only appropriate that I begin my remarks by acknowledging the tremendous contribution of all parliamentary employees. It is their professionalism and dedication that makes this institution function. Each employee, whether he or she is employed in the House of Commons, the Senate or the Library of Parliament plays a unique and vital role in the effective operation of our institution.

[Translation]

Too often, Mr. Speaker, we forget how lucky we are to be able to rely on such qualified and professional staff to help us in our work. On behalf of Hon. Members on both sides of the House I want to assure parliamentary employees that their efforts do not go unnoticed and are greatly appreciated by all Members of Parliament.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the House of Commons has grown rapidly in the past several years. It is now a large and complex organization which employs over 3,000 persons. Unfortunately the evolution and growth of this institution has not been paralleled by the creation of a modern system of labour relations. As a result parliamentary employees do not enjoy the benefits of a contemporary labour relations regime tailored to the special circumstances of Parliament. This Bill will resolve that problem in a progressive and comprehensive fashion.

Because there appears to be some genuine confusion and misunderstanding about the nature of rights presently enjoyed by parliamentary employees, it may be useful to review the history of the collective bargaining debate on the Hill. It is that history which provides the context for the action which we are embarking on today.

The subject of collective bargaining rights for the employees of Parliament has been under discussion for some considerable period of time. In the formal sense the subject was first considered in 1967 by the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Employer and Employee Relations in the Public Service during that committee's deliberations on Bill C-170, namely the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

In its report of February 3, 1967 the committee stated, and I quote:

Your Committee recommends that consideration be given to the introduction of legislation to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act and the Library of Parliament Act to extend to the employees thereunder advantages and rights similar to those provided public servants under Bill C-170.

Unfortunately, no further action was taken with respect to this recommendation.

On a number of occasions since 1967 private Members have tabled Bills which would have provided a legislative framework for collective bargaining by parliamentary employees and questions have also been raised on the floor of the House of Commons. One such question prompted the undertaking of a study on this matter in 1982. This report, known as the Weir Report, after its author Mr. Robert Weir, was tabled in the House in February of 1983. The report analysed the issue and outlined a number of options but made no recommendations. The Weir Report was referred to the Standing Committee on Management and Members Services for further study on February of the same year and, in late 1983, this committee, with the assistance of the Privy Council Office, developed draft legislation on this subject. Events leading up to the election in 1984, and the change of Government which resulted, precluded immediate action on this Bill.

I must indicate at this time that the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) who was my predecessor in this particular capacity, during the summer of 1984 issued a press release in which he indicated the intention of the Liberal Government of the day to proceed with legislation with respect to allowing parliamentary employees the right of collective bargaining, which was in a similar vein to the recommendations which were made to that committee.

The Bill before the House today closely reflects the all-Party consensus which was reflected in the draft legislation that I referred to in 1983. Beginning in the fall of 1983 unions seeking certification as bargaining agents for parliamentary employees filed a series of applications pursuant to the Canada Labour Code. The Canada Labour Code governs labour relations in those areas of the commercial and business world which are subject to the jurisdiction of Parliament, but it does not apply to the Public Service.

There are clearly differences of opinion as to the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour Relations Board in this dispute. The legality of the question has not yet been determined to the satisfaction of all concerned and, because of the way in which legal proceedings have a way of carrying on, it could take months indeed, if not many years, for the element of uncertainty which surrounds this question to be cleared up through the judicial process.

[Translation]

In the end, after lengthy and costly legal proceedings, it is conceivable that, owing to the particular situation of Parliament, parliamentary employes be considered as having no rights, that is without the right to join a union, establish a certified association, or bargain collectively.

In the Government's view, Mr. Speaker, such a situation would be unsatisfactory. Parliamentary employees ought to have the right to bargain collectively and be able to resort to a progressive labour relations system.

[English]

Bill C-45 clears away all the jurisdictional doubts which presently exist with respect to the matter by proceeding quickly with a reasoned and reasonable approach to labour relations. It states clearly and unequivocally that parliamentary employees do have the right to organize and bargain collectively. The Bill introduces a comprehensive modern structure for the resolution of labour-management relations on Parliament Hill.

Bill C-45 has three principal aspects. First, it provides a collective bargaining framework for parliamentary employees which is similar to that contained in the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Second, it makes Part III of the Canada Labour Code applicable to parliamentary employees whether or not they are organized. Part III regulates labour standards, including such items as vacations and hours of work. Finally, the Bill makes Part IV of the Canada Labour Code applicable to all employees. Part IV regulates such items as occupational and safety standards.

As indicated, the Bill itself is based very closely on the Public Service Staff Relations Act. The logic of this parallelism is readily apparent. Notwithstanding the special place that Parliament occupies in our governmental system, the role of parliamentary employees is very similar to that of public servants generally.

It is our view that the labour relations framework which governs the Public Service commends itself very strongly to the parliamentary scene because of this fact. The Bill provides that, with specific exceptions, parliamentary employees are entitled to organize and bargain collectively. Exceptions are provided with respect to persons in a managerial or confidential capacity. Persons employed in the offices of Members of Parliament and caucus research groups will not have access to the bargaining provisions provided for in Part I.

• (1220)

These exceptions are in line with the all-Party recommendations of the Standing Committee on Management and Members Services based on its assessment that such persons occupy positions of particular trust and sensitivity. However, I wish to emphasize that in an effort to protect employees excluded from the collective bargaining process, we have included additional provisions to those which were included in the original all-Party recommendations to which I have just referred. I reiterate the fact that this legislation is a matter of some substantial accomplishment in making progress from the original proposal. Parts III and IV of the Canada Labour Code will be made applicable to all parliamentary employees regardless of whether or not they are organized. In this way, minimum protection with respect to working conditions and labour standards will be available to all who work on our behalf in this place and on the precincts of Parliament Hill.

Part I of the Bill closely resembles the Public Service Staff Relations Act which at present governs labour relations in the Public Service. The Public Service Staff Relations Board is established as the advisory board to administer this legislation.

Parliamentary employees will now have the right to present a grievance concerning various matters relating to the terms and condition of their employment. Part I provides that certain of these grievances may be pursued through to adjudication.

The certification process under Bill C-45 which is also located in Part I will be very similar to that which exists under any modern labour relations statute. Certification applications will be made to the Public Service Staff Relations Board and the PSSRB will conduct hearings and have the power to determine the appropriateness of the bargaining units and the certification of bargaining agents.

[Translation]

In the interest of parliamentary employees, it is imperative that we adopt a legislative measure which will dispel this uncertainty once and for all. I hope and believe that, by eliminating disputes before the courts with respect to the jurisdiction of the CLRB, the ultimate effect of this measure will be to speed up the efforts of the employees concerned to form a union.

[English]

The last two Parts of this Bill are those which incorporate Parts III and IV of the Canada Labour Code. These provisions go beyond the proposed legislation, which was agreed to by the Management and Members' Services Committee. I think it reflects the Government's continued commitment to fairness and progressive reform. As a result, Hill employees will have such benefits and protections as minimum standards respecting hours of work, overtime, holidays and vacation, entitlements to maternity leave, family bereavement leave and sick leave and they will also have the right of access to adjudication for wrongful dismisssal and the right to a hazard-free workplace.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, should the employees fear that this is the end of it, I want to assure them that, in my judgment, these measures are in fact only the beginning. In introducing this Bill, the Government wants to bring the working conditions of parliamentary employees to the same level as those of their counterparts in the Public Service.

[English]

I am confident that this legislation does strike a careful balance between the legitimate expectations and aspirations of parliamentary employees and the public expectation that the central institution of Government be able to function without disruption. My colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), is at present involved in negotiations to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Without prejudging the outcome of these negotiations, it would be my hope that any amendments that would be brought forward to the Public Service Staff Relations Act would also be brought forward as amendments to the Parliamentary Employment and Staff Relations Act so that we and the employees on Parliament Hill will keep pace with the Public Service and never again allow a situation to arise in which employees on Parliament Hill are so far behind in terms of labour relations.

The Government considers the question of parliamentary labour relations to be a high priority. We believe that parliamentary employees deserve and have the right to a modern labour-management relationship and that the people of Canada have a right to a parliamentary institution which is responsive and humane in its dealings with its employees.

This legislation has been promised many times and parliamentary employees have been, in my humble estimation, more than patient. Now is the time to bring forward true reform with respect to labour relations on Parliament Hill. In this sense and spirit, I urge all Members to join with me in supporting this legislation to ensure that we can embark on a new era of labour-management relations on Parliament Hill, a place that we all love so deally and respect so highly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) said in his comments that this Bill has a very high priority. We hope he will keep his word and see to it that the Bill is expedited through this House, so as to correct a somewhat unusual situation that has existed here for many years.

Mr. Speaker, the issue of bargaining rights for parliamentary employees working for the House, the Senate and the Library of Parliament has been debated for quite some long time. In fact, the debate has been going on since 1967 at least, and I am happy to see the House of Commons considering Bill C-45 today.

Mr. Speaker, in 1967, the Parliament of Canada granted public servants collective bargaining rights. In 1967, the House adopted the Bill on Public Service Staff Relations.

This legislation was introduced to replace a unilateral consulting process for determining most of the working conditions of Public Service employees, by a bilateral process, under which employees were to play an active and important role in determining their working conditions.

At the time, Mr. Speaker, parliamentary employees were not considered to be employed by the Public Service, and were therefore excluded from the provisions of the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

The adoption of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in 1982 has had a considerable impact on this question. The House will recall that in the Charter of Rights we adopted, it says in Section 2,

Fundamental freedoms

Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

d) freedom of association.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that this right to freedom of association is often legislated in order to establish clearly the rights involved.

I heard the Minister saying earlier that he was happy to set a high priority on a Bill he considered to be complex, but also progressive and modern, and that it would have a major impact on labour management relations.

Mr. Speaker, although I do not begrudge the Minister the credit he is due, I may remind him that in 1983, the Public Service Alliance of Canada, with the consent of many groups of employees here on the Hill, started organizing and explaining the concept of collective bargaining, so that parliamentary employees working for the House of Commons, the Senate and the Library of Parliament could belong to a union.

The Canada Labour Relations Board examined the question and announced it was in a position to consider these applications, but up to now, the Board has not issued any orders for certification. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received a copy of a press release from the Public Service Alliance, dated October 28, which reads as follows:

The Canada Labour Relations Board is today reconsidering its deliberate inaction in deciding on an application by parliamentary employees for bargaining rights.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that confirms . . . in fact that the Canada Labour Relations Board "is reconsidering"—I have had no answer from the Board—but if that is the reason, I can understand why today, we should want to consider Bill C-45 in order to put on the table and put before the public and before this House a Bill whose time has come and which should be passed.

Mr. Speaker, why did we go the route of extraordinary legislation? Why could we not simply let our employees come under the Canada Labour Code? Why bother introducing extraordinary legislation that is largely inspired by the Public Service Staff Relations Act and which contains, as the Minister said, two parts, namely Parts III and IV of the Canada Labour Code? Mr. Speaker, all this is the reason why I am taking part in the debate today. I shall try and explain to the House, with the little expertise I have on the subject, how we on this side see this legislation and how we perceive the importance of Bill C-45.

● (1230)

[English]

Bill C-45 replaces a unilateral system for the termination of most terms and conditions of employment for employees in the Parliament of Canada. It replaces the unilateral approach with a bilateral system. It ensures that a certain measure of participation will be provided for employees in the determination of these terms and conditions.

To establish this bilateral relationship an appropriate bargaining until will be determined and a representative bargaining agent will have to be certified. The employer will be defined as coming from the House of Commons, the Senate or the Library of Parliament. We find that the definition is under interpretation. It will be determined at some time who the employer will be.

The Public Service Staff Relations Board is charged with a large part of the general administration of Bill C-45. I think that is good. My experience with that board over the 13 years that I have been here has been constructive. I can tell the House that I have a great deal of respect for the Public Service Staff Relations Board and the challenging and complex issues with which it deals.

One cannot help but notice the similarities which exist between the Public Service Staff Relations Act and Bill C-45. Some of the strong points of the PSSRA have been noted by the Minister. Equally, many of the traditional weaknesses and shortcomings of that Act, unfortunately, are incorporated in Bill C-45.

It is rather frustrating for me to note that in 1975-76 the House was asked to establish a joint committee with the Senate to look into possible amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act following a thorough and interesting study conducted by Mr. Jacob Finkelman, Q.C., who is a past Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board. Mr. Finkelman conducted a thorough study of the Act at the request of the Government a few years after it was enacted and he made some far-reaching recommendations. I still hide my copy of the report because some people always seem to want it. In fact, I have hidden it so well that I cannot find it now.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It's over here.

Mr. Gauthier: Anyway, it is a black-covered report which recommended a number of amendments.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): It's in the garbage.

Mr. Gauthier: On the contrary, it is a constructive document. I invite the Hon. Member who just said that it is in the garbage to read it because it was at the origin of that report that the D'Avignon Committee on the merit principle was established. We also proceeded with a thorough review of management practices in the Public Service and in Government. This report contained some 72 recommendations for amendments. Some of them were interesting to us because they represented about a year and a half of intensive work. Justifiably, I think, all members of the committee from all Parties voted unanimously for its adoption. As I have said, there are some unfortunate weaknesses and serious shortcomings in Bill C-45 which we addressed in 1975-76 and upon which we reported at the time.

I commend the Government's reading of this report. If possible, it may inspire members of the Government to come forth with the much needed amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act, which I am sure was the Government's intention when it made its promises in last year's election campaign. It said to us that it would come forth with amendments. I hope the Government will follow through with its promise and come forth soon with the required amendments.

We are told that Bill C-45 is a sincere effort, and I noted some of the other adjectives which the Minister used. I agree that there is a sincere effort here to bring forth a new era in employee-employer relations in Parliament to try to bring employees on the Hill up to par with the Public Service employees of Canada.

I noted a statement made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to this effect, and I quote: "The Government desires to create a modern and progressive system of labour relations for the employees of Parliament". We find nothing very modern in the Public Service Staff Relations Act which, as I have said previously, is 18 years old and badly in need of progressive changes. In my view the Government has missed a good occasion to bring forth leading, modern and progressive legislation which could lead the way in putting forward urgently needed amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act. What we have before us today in Bill C-45 is not a very inspiring document in terms of leadership for improved public employer-employee relations. With the information available to this Government—and I refer to the Finkelman Report, to the report of the joint committee and to several studies made over the years—I would have thought the Government could have brought forth a model document which would give us the benefit of the evidence which was given over the last seven or eight years.

• (1240)

Mr. Heap: Why didn't your Government do it?

Mr. Gauthier: The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) asks me why my Government did not do it. Well, we worked on this document for many years. I take it that Bill C-45 is an inspirational legislation, in that it was taken from the previous Government's draft of the Bill. So the Hon. Member should perhaps refer to the present Government. I was not as close to the order of business at that time, but I did take an interest in this matter, although I was not a member of the joint committee or the Committee on Management and Members' Services, which drafted the first Bill on this matter, as was, I understand, my friend.

Although I can see that Bill C-45 is a start, it surely requires, in my view, a step which we must take unanimously. This legislation will mean the end to an era of unilateral decisions in matters of employee-employer relations for most employees of Parliament. It establishes a system whereby Parliament and its employees will jointly determine the terms and conditions of employment in collective bargaining. We have in Canada a good log-book of experience in employee-employer relations. At the federal level we have, as I said, accumulated 20 years of experience with the Public Service Staff Relations Act. We should be able to build upon this strong background. Both parties, in my view, the employee and the employer, should adapt quickly to their new relationship. We should not have to go through the growing pains we did in 1967. I am sure that with good will and patience, numerous benefits will come to both sides.

One can justifiably ask why we do not make the Canada Labour Code applicable to employees of Parliament rather than an Act which draws inspiration itself from the Public Service Staff Relations Act and the Canada Labour Code. While substantial differences exist between the two labour relations statutes, it is believed by some—and I take it this is going to be debated in committee—that there is good and sufficient reason to adopt special legislation with particular characteristics to accommodate Parliament with its complexities and necessities such as the maintenance of essential services. Of course, some people would wonder how one could say that Parliament is an essential service. I would take it that some people at some time would rather not have us here debating and would say that we are not that essential. However, I still believe that Parliament is an essential service to Canadians and I believe we need to have special legislation which covers it.

I would like to address a few problems pertaining to this Bill which I feel needs discussion and change.

[Translation]

As you know, Mr. Speaker, it is the Public Service Employment Act which governs hiring practices and methods based on the merit system, that is, any nomination must be based on merit. More specifically, Section 10 of the Public Service Employment Act states:

> Appointments to or from within the Public Service shall be based on selection according to merit, as determined by the Commission—

Although I have read this Bill from cover to cover, Mr. Speaker, I have not seen anywhere that appointments would be made on the basis of the merit system. I think that when the time comes for us to deal with this Bill in committee, we would be well advised to consider devising a system with a view to eliminate all possibility of interference or patronage on the part of the Government and to provide a better exposure of our hiring practices. I think also that we would have to be very explicit and include in the Bill provisions for the hiring of Parliamentary employees of all categories.

Mr. Speaker, another weakness of this document is the issue of job classification and job classification standards.

In a report to Parliament by the Special Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations, we examined the entire subject of classification. I would ask Hon. Members to refer to the document on page 4720 for the explanatory text on classification, which reads, for instance, and I quote:

> Your Committee is of the opinion that the law should provide for some extension of the scope of bargaining so as to include classification standards, and recommends as follows:

There are seven or eight recommendations. The first one is interesting, because it says:

> That, having regard to the established jurisdiction of bargaining agents in the Public Service, bargaining classification standards be interpreted to mean the determination of the relative worth of jobs within an occupational group.

That is the definition of classification. It is the "relative value of jobs within an occupational group".

In Bill C-45, job classifications and classification standards are not negotiable. That is a function of the employer, and personally, I think it is high time we amended the legislation in order to include the possibility that either party be able to negotiate classification standards.

Mr. Speaker, I intend to raise this point in committee, and I may remind the Government that the Opposition Leader at the time, the Hon. Brian Mulroney, signed a letter dated August 14, 1984 to Mr. Jack Donegani, President of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, which reads as follows:

[English]

The PC Government will negotiate directly with Public Service unions and associations toward the establishment of an improved collective bargaining system based on the provisions of the Canada Labour Code.

[Translation]

And my quote goes on:

[English]

Staffing procedures, classification, technological change, designations and other issues will become negotiable.

[Translation]

Therefore I take it for granted that the Government will keep its word and that the committee will be able to amend the Bill so that classification standards will be included as negotiable items in collective bargaining agreements.

Mr. Speaker, I beg Hon. Members' indulgence if I should take a somewhat technical approach to this Bill, but I made a few notes on it as it is rather complicated and difficult to follow. I simply want to refer to two or three points raised by critics of the Bill.

One of the criticisms is that we will have to go back to square one concerning the question of certification of the group which until now, for instance, was dealing with the board. The Canada Labour Relations Board will have to start from scratch because a new board, the Public Service Staff Relations Board, will be empowered to hear and accept or, if you will, certify the bargaining agents.

Mr. Speaker, I would think that Clause 26 of the Bill can be interpreted in such a way as to answer that criticism in part, in the sense that Clause 26 might be deemed to be permissive and allow the Public Service Staff Relations Board not to insist on beginning anew the whole certification process and agree that the elements of proof submitted to the PSSRB will be sufficient to establish the bargaining unit.

Once in committee, Mr. Speaker, I will elaborate on this point of view and, if need be, introduce appropriate amendments to clear up this question.

There is also the question of classification to which I referred a moment ago. According to the Alliance, job security is another point. There is the matter of arbitration as well. We will certainly comment on all those points and we hope our contribution will bring the required clarifications to the Bill.

Mr. Speaker, the suggestion that special legislation be adopted to govern labour relations in Parliament is a compromise between two extreme positions, namely that it is a question of parliamentary privilege. It is the kind of argument which has often been used here. We used to be told: Of course, parliamentary privilege eliminates any possibility for Parliament Hill employees to become unionized. There has been a certain evolution over the past few years, so that thanks to the Constitution and the unions' persistence before the Staff Relations Board, Parliament is finally starting to move and doing something which I feel is both constructive and necessary.

Designated employees of Parliament will be divided into three categories: House of Commons, Senate, Library of Parliament.

The employees hired by Hon. Members and working for them in their offices will not be subject to collective bargaining, although they will be covered, as all parliamentary employees, by Parts III and IV of the Canada Lobour Code which govern their terms and conditions of employment. There are also provisions governing occupational safety and health which apply to all employees working on Parliament Hill.

Bill C-45 will determine every aspect of the staff relations system which will apply only to employees working on Parliament Hill for the Senate, the House of Commons, and the Library of Parliament. As stated in this legislation, some of these employees will be designated employees.

According to the General Provisions of the Canada Labour Code, the right to collective bargaining stems only from legislation. Until now, no collective bargaining legislation had applied to Parliament. Parliament employees could not benefit from the Public Service Staff Relations Act because they did not belong to the Public Service and were not subject to the Canada Labour Code because of the privilege of Parliament to which I referred earlier.

Part I of Bill C-45 indicates that certain categories of parliamentary employees could join a union to protect their rights and set up a legal structure for collective bargaining and grievance procedure.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-45 is to create a framework very similar to that applicable to all Public Service employees, with a number of restrictions in line with those currently in force in the private sector.

The Canada Labour Code generally recognizes the right of workers to organize for the purpose of bargaining collectively their working conditions. The law creates a structure within which this agreement is made and which is administered by a labour relations board. As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, the fact that you have a constitutional right does not necessarily make the issue any clearer. The constitutional right is there, but in most jurisdictions, there is a law to define it.

The law creates a structure within which this agreement takes place and which is administered by a board. Employees in the groups judged apt to collective bargaining, or bargaining units, then choose their union representatives.

● (1250)

Generally, the union must have the support of the majority of the group involved to be certified by the Commission as exclusive representative of the group. Once certification is granted, negotiations can begin. The union, on behalf of the employees of the bargaining unit, can require the employer to negotiate in good faith to conclude a collective agreement, which is a document stating the terms and conditions of work as well as the rights and duties of the employer. In the private sector, Mr. Speaker, if it is impossible to come to an agreement after following all these steps and after a certain period determined by law, the employees can exert pressure by initiating a strike and the employer can do the same with a lockout. As soon as the collective agreement is signed, it is binding on each party; there can no longer be a strike during the term of the agreement, and any dispute as to the interpretation and application of the agreement must be settled by submitting the matter to an independent third party, known, as we are all aware, as the arbitrator for grievances.

Bill C-45 follows the restrictive model of the public sector, Mr. Speaker. Strikes are forbidden, disputes in bargaining are settled by arbitration; negotiable issues are restricted; any partisan political activity is forbidden for employee organizations or unions; and in addition, of the great number of people working on Parliament Hill, many are excluded from the collective bargaining system by being designated.

The Bill as a whole applies to people employed by or engaged in work in or for the Senate, the House of Commons, the Library of Parliament, Members of Parliament, and members of the research staff of parliamentary groups, but a number of these people are excluded from the application of Part I whose purpose "is to provide to certain persons employed in parliamentary service, collective bargaining and other rights in respect of their employment". A number of additional restrictions are contained in the preliminary clauses, such as the provision that nothing in Part I shall be construed so as to affect the right or authority of an employer to determine the organization of the employer and to assign duties and classify positions of employment. All this is stated in Bill C-45, but as I said earlier, I shall try, and I hope that the Committee will do the same, to make classification standards negotiable. Persons excluded from Part I are those on the staff of Cabinet Ministers, Senators and Members (employees of the Whip, the Leader of the Opposition or any person in an official position and all those who work for a Member of Parliament). Researchers for parliamentary groups, and persons in temporary employment with a parliamentary committee are also excluded, because they do not come under the definition of "employee", as given in the Bill. Persons appointed by the Governor in Council, part-time, that is working one-third of the normal work period, and casual, working less than six months, and also people in a managerial or confidential position.

After having provided for exceptions, there remains a core of people employed by the House, the Senate and the Library who can enter into collective bargaining. Those persons may be members of an employee organization and participate in the latter's lawful activities. Those activities are protected against any intervention or discrimination by the employer, but they may not take place on the employer's premises during working hours.

Mr. Speaker, the administration of the labour relations system as provided for in Part I is the responsibility of the Public Service Labour Relations Board, the tribunal established to administer and adjudicate any matter subject to collective bargaining within the Federal Public Service—that is the body I mentioned earlier—which was established in 1967. The Board has the power to decide over the certification of labour groups, the extent of bargaining units, the hearing of complaints—it establishes rules of procedure both for the adjudication and the settlement of grievances. Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note—

You indicate there is one minute left, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Yes, one minute.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with another matter, but if you wish I can call it one o'clock. I can wait and resume after two, but I will not be very long.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Shall we call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I will point out to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) that he has approximately seven minutes remaining in his speech. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 12.59 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): When the House rose at one o'clock the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauth-ier) had the floor. At that time I believe I mentioned he had approximately seven minutes left.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I realize there are Hon. Members who want to speak on the Bill, I will not use all of my allotted time.

Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the legal process, saying that under this Bill the Public Service Staff Relations Board would be the authority for the settlement of disputes, and that the Courts would not be empowered to rule on disputes. It is interesting to note that the Public Service Staff Relations Board is empowered under this Bill to enforce all orders issued. In general, the decisions made by the Staff Board are enforced as we know by the courts, and this is not possible where Parliament is concerned.

In order to preserve, and I would like to return to this, the principle of the separation of judiciary and legislative powers, Bill C-45 sets up a mechanism for enforcing the Board's decisions, under which there will be tabled before each House of Parliament one copy of its order, a detailed report and all documents pertaining or relevant thereto.

Mr. Speaker, at this point, I think we will be discussing that in committee and we will know how to proceed to table those reports.

As we know, there usually is in the House of Commons a Minister responsible for liaison between the House and the agency or organization concerned. As a matter of course, when an organization such as the Public Service Commission, for instance, wants to table its annual report, it usually asks the Secretary of State to do it on its behalf.

In this case, the Bill does not state clearly who will be accountable for the employer in the House. I think that during its consideration in committee, we will have to deal with the matter to elucidate the following phrase: "The employer represented by a Minister responsible to the House." A nameless employer hard to get in touch with and not accountable to the House would seem inadequate to me.

The Bill should specify who will table the report, whether a Minister or the Speaker. Once again I would find it difficult because the Speaker is not accountable to the House for the activities of the commission. Perhaps the commission itself will be empowered to table it in the House as happens with the Commissioner of Official Languages and the Auditor General, and a committee of the House would look after the accountability and the administration of the law.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, the matter dealt with in Clause 84 of the Bill is not clear enough.

Mr. Speaker, in short, Bill C-45 creates a system of rights and duties which regulates staff relations. I have tried to examine during the few minutes allotted to me the more important aspects of the legal system proposed in Bill C-45. A mere reminder though: Any person working on Parliament Hill will be subjected to the provisions of Parts III and IV of the Labour Code with respect to the minimum standards of health, employment and security at work. Previously, as we know, none of those sections of the legislation applied to the House of Commons, to the Senate and still less to the Library.

Mr. Speaker, some people will be able to organize and form a union to negotiate working conditions through the collective bargaining process. I think it is a step in the right direction. For me, it is clearly something we have all been seeking and which, I hope, will be constructive.

There are problems, of course, that will have to be discussed. I know, for instance, that the New Democratic Party is going to support the right to strike. Mr. Speaker, my Party and I, have made it pretty clear that, as far as essential services are concerned, we do not favour amending the general legislation. There are designated jobs. Staff that is essential to the administration and proper functioning of Parliament should be excluded from the right to strike. I am open and my Party is open to negotiating or discussing the following: Whether drivers, messengers and general support staff may have the right to strike. I think it would be an interesting subject for debate in committee, and I will reserve my comments until then.

We must not forget the prerogatives of Parliament. We must remember our parliamentary privilege and preserve it.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I want to say that Bill C-45 means the end of a unilateral decision taken by the employer.

• (1410)

We are putting in place a bilateral system which I hope will work to the benefit of all Parties. I know it will be taken seriously by the employees. I understand that they are willing and quite anxious to get this legislation passed. I give the House the assurance that my Party will not prevent or unduly delay passage of this Bill.

In general, the principle is good. We approve it. As far as the details are concerned, I think discussions are required. Therefore, we hope that in committee we will be able to improve upon Bill C-45 and make it a better piece of legislation than it is now.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have looked forward to having some legislation before this House of Commons for many years to provide rights for workers on the Hill.

Members of Parliament have been embarrassed because of incidents that have occurred in these buildings over the years. I have only to refer to the unexpected announcements made by former Speaker Francis when he talked about incidents on the Hill as a result of not having labour protection for people here. This litany of horror stories no other institution would accept, and if they had there would have been prosecutions for unfair labour practices, sexual harassment and so on.

We have had a rotten borough as far as the rights of workers are concerned. We have one of the last bastions in Canada that has no worker protection.

This legislation moves us a bit along the road to what happens in most workplaces. What annoys me the most, Mr. Speaker, is that we are not setting forward model legislation for our own employees. We are not saying that this is what should be the case in Canada. Parliament Hill, of all places, should be looking after the interests of workers in a fair and equitable manner, but that is not the case in this legislation.

In introducing the legislation, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) admitted that he was taking some parts from the Public Staff Relations Act but not going quite as far as that present Act allows. He was not going to the Canada Labour Code except for Parts III and IV. He is taking a few pieces from each of those major pieces of legislation and putting them together so we can have something for the people on the Hill.

If you look at the abuses mentioned by former Speaker Francis and if you look at what has happened to people working on the Hill, working for us, for the people of Canada, I would say that there is a strong case to be made for a good piece of legislation instead of that which we have before us today. Even now, we are not moving forward on this legislation because of willingness of Members of the House and we are not doing it because we think it is the right thing to do.

Unfortunately, the Government is bringing forward this legislation only because there are cases in front of the Canada Labour Relations Board and our courts which are forcing us to move.

Without any legislative protection whatever, over 1,000 people working on the Hill have joined the Public Service Alliance of Canada. They have done so because of what has happened here. Appointments have been made on the basis of patronage. They have seen nepotism and people getting promoted for granting various favours to their employers. People have seen that happen and they know it is happening. They know also that transfers take place without consultation and reductions in the number of workers take place without any input employees. They know they can be fired or transferred without any grievance procedure. Because of that, they have gone to the Canadian Labour Relations Board and said: "We believe we are Canadian citizens and that we should come under the Canada Labour Code".

The Canada Labour Relations Board listened to the complaints and made a decision that because the House of Commons, the Parliament of Canada, was a federal institution, people on the Hill should have the protection of the Labour Code, and it was in the process of granting a number of groups on the Hill the right to join a union under the protection of the Canada Labour Code. Parliament sat—and may I say it sat on its ass—for years.

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Murphy: Sat on its seat, Mr. Speaker. We are known for sitting, and how we sit is also very well known. It is not something new, the Government House Leader in his introduction pointed out how long it has taken for Parliament to act. He did a very good job of explaining how little action has taken place. We are now forced to act because there is an application before the Canada Labour Relations Board and an indication from the Federal Court of Appeal that the matter is probably something which can be decided by the Canada Labour Relations Act.

We have people in the restaurants and cafeterias, people working as messengers and in the distribution service, people working in the broadcast service, committee reporting service, maintenance, the Library of Parliament, the Senate maintenance and messenger service, the French and English indexes, the staff of Members of Parliament, mainly the New Democratic Party staff, the printing staff, the nurses, the constables and security and the committee clerks all asking to be certified under the Canada Labour Relations Code.

The Government's reaction, and I admit it was supported by all three Parties a year and a half ago, was to bring forward a piece of legislation. We do not believe that the legislation is strong enough. We do not believe the legislation is providing the protection necessary for workers. This legislation is quite weak. This legislation has six major weaknesses.

First, the classification of position in the assignment of duties cannot be dealt with in negotiations. Second, staffing, job appointments, appraisals, promotions, demotions, transfers and lay-offs cannot be dealt with under this legislation. Third, grievance procedures are limited. Grievances cannot go to third party arbitration except in certain circumstances. Fourth, union grievances are not allowed in many areas. Fifth, Members of Parliament staff are excluded from the right of collective bargaining. Sixth, the right to strike is prohibited.

At the present time, certification procedures will require that the thousand or more people who have signed union cards will have to start again from scrath. The people who have had the nerve in this House over the last three years who are working for us with no protection and who have signed union cards in order to take cases forward to the courts about the House of Commons are now having to start all over again. That is plainly unjust. If the Canada Labour Relations Board is right, they have the right to go forward right now with the union cards they have presently. The Government by this piece of legislation will be taking away what they have fought to obtain over the last three years.

I have given notice to the Government House Leader that when we go forward in committee, I would like some indication from him as to whether or not he will act on this very unjust matter. Despite many things which I have said about him in the past, I believe he may act quite favourably in response to this reasonable recommendation. Certainly it would undo an injustice in the legislation.

There are many things I could say and will say about the legislation before my time is up. However, one of the most ironic things about it is that a worker in a support role for the Privy Council, in other words for the Prime Minister's Office, would have more rights under legislation than one working for the Parliament of Canada. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that legally people working in the Privy Council Office have the right to strike? Do you know that they are covered by all aspects of the Public Service Staff Relations Act? Do you recognize that in many parts of Canada we have given people who work for the Government of Canada, for the Supreme Court, for the Governor General and for various Crown corporations, rights which we are denying our own people under this legislation? That is a very serious problem.

Why are we doing it? Are we saying that the Privy Council Office is not an essential service? Some may say that after the last month or two, it might be a good idea if it closed down for a while. Certain Tory back-benchers would probably be quite grateful if it closed down for a while. We are saying that that is not an essential service, but people here are providing essential services. I am not sure whether the messenger service is essential in the way this legislation means it. Certainly it is an essential service to us. However, if they wanted to go out on strike to protect their rights, and if it were the only way in which they could solve a problem, I think we should allow that. If that is the only way in which they can resolve the difference with us, I believe they should have that right.

Before talking about the people covered by the legislation, I should like to spend a few minutes talking about those who will not be covered. Earlier I mentioned that among the groups which applied for certification under the Canada Labour Code were the people who worked for the NDP caucus, the members of our staff on the Hill. The working relationship which we have had with the New Democratic Party caucus staff over the years indicates how things could work for Members. This legislation runs the danger of even taking away the rights which our employees have, the employees of Members of Parliament, at the present time. Right now they have an application before the Canada Labour Relations Board to allow them to have full certification as opposed to the voluntary certification which they have with us. This will be taken away by this legislation.

We have had a collective agreement with our staff since 1977. This agreement has been renegotiated three times. It sets out working conditions for the employees hired by caucus and by individual caucus members. It provides for the resolution of staffing problems through a grievance procedure. It includes the appeal of difficult problems through third party arbitration. I have sat on those appeals, and I know they can work. Our collective agreement also provides for agreed procedures for staffing of vacant positions, for technological change, respect for overtime, standards for vacations, education and travel. Our employees understand that they can meet with our caucus and talk about their rights. We think that is something with which we have survived quite well, not without some difficulties, since 1977. There have been over eight years of success through negotiating.

Why is it being said that that cannot happen any more? Why is the Government saying that Liberal and Conservative staff members cannot join a union? The legislation says that they cannot. The Government is taking away an existing right, and I do not think that is fair. I am not sure how the staff of Members of Parliament of the Conservative and Liberal Parties feel about that. It is a problem for us because we have recognized the rights of our employees. We want to ensure that this legislation recognizes their rights as well.

Speaking about the rights of Members of Parliament and explaining why there needs to be some protection, I should like to take a look at what happens in Ministers' offices and in the Privy Council Office, compared with what happens to us as Members of Parliament. At this time we are being asked to do more as Members of Parliament. The Auditor General is saying that we have to do a much better job of keeping Ministers on track in terms of Government spending. Also, reform of Parliament is taking place, indicating that we should be doing more on committees and doing a much more careful job not only of amending legislation but perhaps of introducing our own legislation through the committee system. At the same time the budgets of Members of Parliament are not being increased. I see other members of the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services in the Chamber this afternoon. We have been fighting for over a year to obtain an increase in the budget for the staff of Members of Parliament. We have had no success. However, at the same time, the Prime Minister's Office has been increased by a third in terms of numbers of people and its budget has gone up by over 50 per cent. Members of Cabinet have increased their staff allocation tremendously, again by over 50 per cent, and have increased the number of people working for them, yet the same has not been done for Members of Parliament. One of the reasons for this happening is that our staff do not have any negotiating power with the administration of the House of Commons. They do not have the right to say: "Look at what is happening, look at the expectations you are putting on us, look at the expectations you are putting on Members of Parliament, look at the new role which is being set out for Members of Parliament. Yet you are not giving us any more money for it". I think that is also a problem.

We also suffer with regard to how Members' staff is treated in comparison with Ministers' staff in the long run. At the present time there is a system in place, whereby people working in Ministers' offices, after a number of years, are able to be integrated into the Public Service, that they will be given preferential hiring for various posistions within the Public Service of Canada.

That is a form of favouritism which can be justified. It is a recognition that someone who has worked in a Minister's office for a number of years has a certain skill, ability and knowledge, and obviously has spent a fair amount of time working for the people of Canada. However, we do not do the same thing when it comes to people who have worked for Members of Parliament. For example, someone who has worked in the office of the NDP immigration critic could have spent five years working on immigration problems, and I suspect that one could have spent five years in the last ten months working on those problems. However, if that person wanted to apply for a job in the Department of Employment and Immigration, he or she would not receive any recognition whatsoever. That is an injustice, and it is an injustice that our own employees do not have any particular rights under present legislation and that what they do have will be taken away by the Government.

I do not want to be the only Member who has a chance to speak on the legislation this afternoon, but I have a few other points to make. It is important to realize that we are not setting forth on a new path. What we are doing here is accepting that we are being forced to move along that path. I think that is regrettable. In his presentation the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) indicated that the Government might be willing to make some changes to this legislation, if some negotiations take place successfully between the Treasury Board and the Public Service of Canada.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: When, not if.

Mr. Murphy: However, what I would like to hear—and I am sure the Minister responsible will tell us about it in committee—is when that will happen. What will happen if there are successful negotiations between the Public Service Alliance of Canada and Treasury Board? If we move away from some of the restrictive provisions of the Public Service Staff Relations Act and guarantee the workers of the Government of Canada some of the protections that are there under the Canada Labour Code, if that happened—and it is certainly something that I fought for for many years—then I want to make sure that this House provides the same protection for the people who work here. I do not want that to happen 15 or 20 years down the road or when there is some other court action being contemplated. I would like to be guaranteed by the Minister responsible for this legislation that the Government will move at the same time for the people who work on the Hill as it moves for the other people who work for the Government of Canada right across this land. In other words, what I am saying is that if there is legislation moving people who are presently under the Public Service Staff Relations Act under the new provisions of the Canada Labour Code, or changing the Public Service Staff Relations Act to include some of the same guarantees as are in the Canada Labour Code, at the same time this Act should be amended so that our people on the Hill will receive those same types of guarantees. I think that is the crux of the matter.

● (1430)

One of the reasons that there has been a fight against this legislation, even before it came before us, is that there is a recognition that, for the people who work on the Hill especially, the Public Service Staff Relations Act is not adequate legislation that will really protect their rights. Under the Public Service Staff Relations Act there are many things that cannot be negotiated which are the very crux of the problems that people who work on the Hill face. They want to be able to discuss, at a negotiation table, classification of jobs and assignment of duties. They want to able to talk about staffing decisions. They want to be able to grieve staffing decisions to an outside body. That is not possible under this legislation. Some of that is possible under the Public Service Staff Relations Act and some of it is not, but what we are setting up here is that we are accepting the Public Service Staff Relations Act and then we are watering it down.

I want from the Minister, in committee—and I have explained it to him already so it is not a surprise—some guarantee that we are going to move away from this system. I think we have to expect that the Government has a good chance of passing this legislation sometime in the future. The last time I counted Government Members outnumbered us slightly in this House of Commons, 27 to one, so they have a chance—not a good chance but they have a chance—of passing this legislation. But I want guarantees from the Government that when improvements take place for the Public Service of Canada, they should also take place for the people on the Hill, and that it is not just another watered down version of improvements but a real improvement, so that we are protecting the people who work for us and work for the people of Canada. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the adoption of Bill C-45 will prove to be a significant milestone in Canadian parliamentary history.

For the first time ever, Mr. Speaker, the relations between Members, senators, senior parliamentary officials and their staff will be subject to a whole series of rights, obligations and restraints. In addition, a new element—the union movement—will play a leading and legitimate role in these relations.

Whatever the outcome may be, chances are indeed that parliamentary activities will never be the same, and we rejoice for Canadians because extending the rights of our own employees can only enhance this institution.

[English]

I would like to reassure the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) that in committee or perhaps even sooner, as the House Leader of the Government said in his speech, we will be considering matters which are concern to him, such as the efforts which have been made up to date by employees to get themselves organized and so on. We will do our utmost so that their good efforts are not wasted. At the same time, we want to protect the rights of all employees, those who up until now have not been interested in the word that was being done to organize them in the existing unions, as well as those who had already accepted that situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to make working conditions of parliamentary employees similar to those of their counterparts in the Public Service. It will also give collective bargaining rights to parliamentary employees. For the first time therefore they will enjoy certain rights and some protection.

The Bill is divided in three parts and goes a long way towards improving the labour relations climate on Parliament hill. Part I is similar to the Public Service Staff Relations Act. It designates the Public Service Staff Relations Board as administrator of the act and defines the collective bargaining process, whereas Part II applies Canada Labour Code Part III to parliamentary employees. That part therefore will determine terms and conditions of jobs, including annual leave and working hours. The last part stipulates that Part IV of the Canada Labour Code applies to Parliament employees and determines occupational safety and health standards.

The purpose of Bill C-45 is therefore to create a structure for collective bargaining between the House and its employees. If and when adopted, it will grant Parliament employees the collective bargaining rights normally prescribed in this kind of legislation, including the right to join a union without any fear of reprisals from their employer. Moreover, it will provide all employees with the wide range of rights and guarantees listed in Parts III and IV of the Canada Labour Code, including the right to refuse to do hazardous work, and minimal guarantees concerning vacation leave, maternity leave, working hours, etc. The legislation will provide workers on Parliament Hill with a wide range of rights and regulations, giving them a protection to which they had no access until now. Moreover, Bill C-45 will provide them with more rights than those contemplated in the draft bill which our Committee on Management and Members' Service had supported in 1984.

In two areas, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-45 incorporates through reference Parts III and IV of the Canada Labour Code, extending to Parliament employees the rights granted to all employees under Federal jurisdiction. If we consider, for instance, some of the rules which forbid discrimination for workers under federal jurisdiction, for instance in Crown Corporations, as well as the new Canadian Government contract compliance policy, we can see that making Parts III and IV of the Canadian Labour Code apply to Parliamentary Hill employees, we are certainly giving them more rights than they had before.

● (1440)

The other aspect of Bill C-45 which goes further than the recommendation of the Committee on Management and Members' Services concerns the fact that Parliamentary Hill employees will be covered by the provisions of Parts III and IV of the Code, even though the staff of Members of Parliament, Senators, research services and caucuses will not be covered by the other parts of this Bill. However, they will be subject to Parts III and IV, which means that they will have extended rights and a better protection than the Committee on Management and Members' Services had recommended in 1984. It is therefore better than what the Committee had recommended.

Naturally, Mr. Speaker, some might say, like the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) did earlier, that the Bill does not go far enough. But still upon looking at the history of the protection of the rights of Parliamentary employees, we must realize that indeed this legislation is bringing something very important into the life of those employees, and it will have a rather massive impact on working conditions and environment in Members' offices.

The impact on Members and Senators of the implementation of Parts III and IV of the Code to their staff will be extensive. For instance, if a Member wishes his or her employees to work after the so-called standard hours provided for in Part III of the Code, meaning an average eight hours a day or 48 hours in any week, he or she will need permission from the Minister of Labour. Further, a Member's employee with more than one year of service who is being fired may ask the Minister of Labour to have his dismissal reviewed by a third party. In my view, that is quite a protection. Many of my constituents are civil servants, in the neighbourhood of 17,000, and I must tell you, Mr. Speaker, that many representations have been made to me concerning employees that were fired somewhat high-handedly. So this is a protection employees were impatiently waiting for.

Besides, where a Member's employee . . . where the dispute cannot be settled through informal mediation, the Minister may submit the matter to a referee who has much more extensive powers, including that of ordering the reinstatement of the employee involved, and this order can even be supported by a Federal Court judgment.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, this is something very significant, and very deserving to be noted. It is true that job classification, staffing, and all that, are not covered by this legislation. But when you consider the somewhat unusual relationships that exist between MPs and their staffs and the emergency work that can come up, the very rapidly changing situations, and also sometimes the very special projects that must be dealt with, if Members of Parliament were to be deprived of their freedom to manage their own offices, to allocate tasks to persons who are capable and qualified to deal with them, or, in cases of absence, to be able to transfer people between jobs in order to fill any gap created by reason of illness or whatever, they would be unable to fulfill their duty and would not at that point provide their constituents with the quality of services they promised to deliver when elected, with the commitment to adequately represent their constituents.

Therefore, as Lloyd Francis aptly said, labour relations between Members of Parliament and parliamentary staff must retain some sort of specificity, a character that do not apply, for instance, to other occupations under Federal jurisdiction that are related to transportation, maintenance, or whatever.

There is something very special about parliamentary work and we must preserve that specific character.

We also recall that conditions altogether different existed between 1908, when the Public Service was established, and 1961, when the permanent staff of the House of Commons, the Senate and the Library of Parliament came under the Public Service Employment Act as far as appointments, classification, salaries and promotions were concerned. However, Parliament kept its control over the duration of employment, the provisions regulating annual leave, standards for work performed outside, etc.

Mr. Speaker, in other words, the employee in those days was not protected as he will be under Bill C-45. Now why should the employees of the Members of Parliament be excluded? In Part I, it is stated that they are excluded from collective bargaining; on the other hand, in Parts II and III of the Bill they are included as I said previously, as parliamentary employees to whom Parts III and IV of the Canadian Labour Code apply.

Therefore, the employees of Members of Parliament will be far better off because they will benefit from improved labour conditions as provided to all employees while enjoying that very special relationship with their bosses which is necessary in parliamentary work.

Mr. Speaker, in addition, the President of the Treasury Board is now undertaking negotiations with unions to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act. The Government hopes that the amendments to that legislation will also be included in Bill C-45.

The purpose of the Bill before the House today is to bring the working conditions of parliamentary employees up to a level comparable with that of their counterparts in the Public Service. This is another example of the Government's commitment to parliamentary reform, and the emphasis is on fairness in relations between the Government and its employees.

Unfortunately, Bill C-45 does not enshrine all the principles of personnel administration, such as merit, and does not deal with staffing, promotions, transfers, competition, and so forth. Many of my constituents come to my office to complain that they have been treated unfairly in a competition or did not get the promotion they deserved. Their files often contain numerous recommendations attesting that their work is superior and even excellent. However, when it is time for them to move on in their career, their advancement or promotion is stalled as a result of habits that have developed in the last twenty years. Mr. Speaker, if there is anything that demoralizes our public servants, it is that. Corrective action must be taken.

It is clear, therefore, that the principles governing these matters should be dealt with at another level, as recommended by the Auditor General in his 1983 report. We must give careful and speedy consideration, as was said several times in the House, on both sides of the House in fact, to the merit principle in the Public Service. It is to be hoped that negotiations between the President of Treasury Board and the unions will result in something positive that will truly improve the working conditions of our public servants. And it is also to be hoped that we will be able to reach an amical agreement with the unions so that parliamentary employees, as a result of Bill C-45, will get better working conditions, will feel that their work counts, and that as a result, productivity, which may be slack sometimes in certain areas, will improve. Because you know, Mr. Speaker, that the days when we had an inexhaustible pool of resources that could be used in emergencies when it was necessary to set up special teams to cope with a given situation, those days will soon be over if they are not already.

Mr. Speaker, cutbacks in the Public Service for budgetary reasons must not be made in a cavalier fashion and without consideration for the individual. We must ensure that the staff we have on Parliament Hill is working under conditions that will promote better productivity, high moral and quality service to the public, through its Members.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your attention and, in concluding my remarks, I want to reassure my Opposition colleagues by saying that this Bill is considered as a major piece of legislation by the Government and the Member for Gatineau, indeed by every Member whose riding is home to a great many public and Parliament Hill employees, not simply because those people are electors who will vote in the next elections, but because we know very well that our work as Members is not quite up to par if our employees are demoralized or lack the necessary facilities or assistance, or the favourable environment and surroundings to give the best of themselves.

I therefore hope the Bill will be quickly referred to the legislative committee for closer scrutiny and improvements, as the Government House Leader has already suggested, and that it will be adopted without delay so that our employees may benefit from it and that all of us may be better parliamentary representatives of our electors.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. Questions.

● (1450)

[English]

Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) has indicated a desire in committee, or a willingness in committee, to resolve some of the matters with which some of us may be dissatisfied or which, perhaps, some of our employees may be dissatisfied. I am wondering if she would care to indicate her view on Clause 4 of the Bill—perhaps I should not speak so specifically about a clause. But the Bill does exclude all Members' of Parliament staff. They exclude my staff, her staff, the staff of all of the Members of Parliament. I am wondering whether the Hon. Member is of the opinion that our staff should all be excluded from union rights.

I wish to specify the question a little more precisely as well. In many jurisdictions there is unionized staff and there are people specifically excluded by individual designation. You know, the manager of an office and that sort of thing. In this case it is a rather blanket exclusion. It is unlike the practice in the Ontario Legislature, the practice in many other legislatures in Canada and abroad in excluding all—everyone—who might be employed, even perhaps just a typist, by a Member of Parliament. I would ask the Hon. Member if she cares to indicate whether she thinks it is just to deprive, in the year 1985, in a country such as Canada, all our parliamentary assistants of the right to choose a union.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer my colleague. As I said in my remarks, the specific nature of the work done by parliamentary assistants prevents us from considering them as we do all other employees on Parliament Hill. As former House Speaker Francis said when he was faced with the same decision, he had considered, and I will say this in English—

[English]

However, Speaker Francis considered the application of the Code to House employees as inappropriate and potentially disastrous for several reasons. For example, the Canada Labour Code does not provide for the continuation of essential services in the event of a strike nor does it in other ways recognize the unique functions and responsibilities of parliamentary institutions. Accordingly, the Speaker responded by seeking from the Federal Court (Trial Division) an order prohibiting the Canada Labour Relations Board from continuing to take jurisdiction.

He said:

"It is evident that Parliament, as an employer, is not like any trucking, rail, shipping, bank, or radio and television company that comes under the Canada Labour Code. The uniqueness of Parliament suggests the need to define a suitable legal framework for granting its employees the right to bargain collectively."

[Translation]

Therefore, that is not quite the case put forward by my hon. friend, but it shows the sort of context in which Parliament employees' rights, privileges and protections were discussed. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if my hon. friend thought about it seriously, he would realize that there is a big difference between the job of a Paliamentary assistant who must deal sometimes with urgent situation and show initiative, and that of an employee who must perform day in day out the same routine tasks which are assigned to him or her. He is perfectly aware that our employees on Parliament Hill are faced with constantly changing situations. There are really no standard formulas or patterns to define the jobs of our Parliamentary assistants.

He has to reinvent his routine each day because new situations are always coming up. Some constituents might need a certain thing, and he has to reorganize his priorities as well as those of his boss. Because of this, if he were constrained in an administrative straightjacket which did not provide the flexibility he needs to do his job, he could not serve his Member of Parliament as well as he should, and I believe that this would make the employees themselves quite unhappy.

I discussed this with employees before speaking about this Bill in the House, and they told me that, as long as their working conditions are protected, as long as their work is safe, free of any danger for their health, and so on, as long as there are rules to determine their hours of work, the length of their working day, their holidays, and so on, they are very happy to have different labour relations and conditions than those applying to the maintenance, library or services employees, who wait for people to ask them questions or to request something from them, while our own employees must very often be creative in order to help us, and they would not have the freedom of action necessary if the framework of their job was too restrictive. This is why there are differences between our own employees and other workers on the Hill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) for a supplementary. There are only two minutes left.

• (1500)

[English]

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker I agree with the Hon. Member. She mostly avoided answering the question even though she talked for eight minutes. Since employees of the Supreme Court, the Privy Council, The Prime Minister's Office, the Governor General and the legislators of Ontario, Quebec, Australia and Westminster are covered by union agreements, those have not broken down and their obligations are as difficult as ours, how can she justify her ridiculous claim that it is impossible to do the work here with unionized employees?

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I shall let the offending comment made by the Hon. Member pass. I thought that we were having a serious debate, but he obviously wants to play politics.

To reply to his question, what is going on in Ontario, Quebec, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories concerns only those jurisdictions. We are in the Federal Parliament and the situation is different because we have to serve an entire country and we often have to set some priorities. It is essential to have an environment which fits our pourposes and we should not try to imitate what others have done just because they found it convenient themselves.

Beside, we saw it in one of the cases where collective bargaining rights were involved in the Yukon, I believe. It was said that there might be areas where it did not prevent a municipality from doing this or that but that in a provincial context, at that point where the comparison was made, it could prove to be prejudicial at the provincial level. It is therefore obvious that there must be a work environment compatible with the institution involved. The federal level is not the provincial level nor the municipal level. We need our own Bill, our own regulations to govern and protect our employees.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments is over. We will now resume debate. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), unless the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps)—

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, on October 25, 1966, I walked into this building for the first time in my life. On that day I walked up to the sixth floor of this building and asked the maître d' of the Parliamentary Restaurant for a job. He said: "Yes, we have openings. We have them frequently", and the next day, October 26, I started here as a busboy. That was the first job I had in my life.

I worked in this building from 1966 until I left to become a Member of the Ontario Legislature in 1981. Of course, for that period of time I had two jobs. I was an employee of this House as well as being in a municipal office in the Township of Cumberland prior to my election in 1981.

The job I did in the beginning as a busboy was not as glamorous or as highly paid as other jobs. The job of busboy at that time paid $2,368 per year. I still have the stub of my first pay cheque and last night when I was reviewing my notes to speak today I examined it very closely. Needless to say, with that kind of salary it was difficult to keep busboys and other employees here for any more than a few weeks. There was a very high rate of turnover among the employees of the restaurant and certain other departments.

When I came back here in the fall of 1984, I noticed that there had been considerable change in the three and a half years I had been absent from Parliament Hill. Notwithstanding the fact that the salaries were not all that great when I was an employee here, there was, nevertheless, a good feeling among staff members on the Hill, whether they were blue-collar or white-collar workers. The staff, regardless of where they worked, felt good about working here because this was and, of course, still is, a very special and unique place to work. It was a privilege to be able to work here, at least that was the feeling felt by the employees when they worked here. They felt they were working in a very special place although, yes, one had to work hard and, yes, the benefits were dispensed in unusual ways. One never knew when a benefit was a benefit and when it would be taken away. Employees worked here at the so-called pleasure of the Speaker. In other words, there really was not such a thing on Parliament Hill, and still is not, as security.

By and large, the staff of this palce accepted that because it was an interesting and challenging place to work. I would love to say to you today, Mr. Speaker, that this is still the case but for the people who work for us on Parliament Hill, this is no longer the situation.

[Translation]

Unfortunately now, the congenial spirit, the good relations that prevailed between parliamentary staff and managers are for the most part things of the past. What has happened, Mr. Speaker? We pointed out earlier today in this House that, formerly, there were often occasions where a certain amount of patronage was the rule. There have been cases of nepotism, of favouritism even on Parliament Hill, where people were promoted or tried to go up the ladder in order to earn salaries, a better standard of living. Often that was unfair. Still there was in that structure an informal grievance procedure because we knew that there were 265 members in the House and if an employee thought he was ill-treated, he could at least go and see his Member of Parliament and state his grievance and the Member could raise the matter with the Speaker. It was not a very good nor a very efficient procedure, but at least there was something. What do we have today?

An Hon. Member: The same thing!

Mr. Boudria: No, not the same thing. And if the Hon. Member opposite would listen, he would understand. Mr. Speaker, I do not suggest that I have great expertise on many issues but I have worked in this House for 14 years and perhaps if the Hon. Member would take a few minutes to talk to the employees on Parliament Hill, whose services are so useful to us, he would also understand a little better.

What is happening today is something different. On the one hand, the administrative structure now existing is supposed to be better than in the past. On the other hand, the necessary counterbalance to enable the employees to be heard is not there. The Hon. Member opposite knows as well as I do that if a Parliamentary employee has a grievance and goes to his office—and many of them come to mine every day—we cannot do a thing for him. We can write a letter to the Speaker or to someone else, such as a senior official of the House, but the result is always the same. Nothing happens because there is no official structure for employee grievances. That is the difference. I would invite the Hon. Member to look into the matter and consult other people if he wants to understand the difference.

I shall give you an example of what I mean, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

In 1982 there were 50 cleaning people cleaning the Centre Block on Parliament Hill. It is a very large structure and most Canadians listening to this broadcast will know that. There are three managers or persons in a supervisory capacity here in the Centre Block. Some people said this was too much. They said: "There is not enough for them to do, so we will restructure it". Now there are 20 people who clean this building. There are still three managers. If a manager, or supervisor, is off work for one day, they take one of the cleaning people and make him a manager for that day. While they replace the managers when one of them is away, on a day like today when there are three or four cleaners away, nobody replaces them. Why is that? Why do we replace the manager but do not replace the worker?

• (1510)

The room in this building for the messenger staff is about 15 feet by 23 feet. There are 25 people who work in that room. If this occurred anywhere else the health inspectors would be sent in to tell them that this is a ridiculous situation in which to make people work.

On the sixth floor of this building, the women's change room is behind the men's washroom. The women who work here cleaning our offices must walk through the men's washroom in front of the Parliamentary Restaurant, out the back door to go into their dressing room. That is the way we treat the women who are working here in 1985. Is that the way to treat our workers?

We should be an example for the rest of the country. We should be demonstrating how well people are treated. If we cannot care for 3,000 people who work for us, then why are we so qualified to take care of the 25 million whom we represent in the Parliament of our country? I invite you to think about that, Mr. Speaker, and I invite all Members of the House to think about what we do.

Not only are we here to represent the people in our constituencies, we are here to represent the country, which means every voter. Yes, it means the officials of the House but it also means the people cleaning the floors in this building, cleaning our offices and doing those other jobs in the building which too many of us forget about too often.

The Parliamentary Restaurant closed the pastry shop. Not long before, it had just hired a pastry chef from a restaurant in Ottawa. What happened to him? He was sent to drive the delivery truck. Where will that person find another job? He has no choice: he has to take the job.

As a result of new directives the staff of the Parliamentary Restaurant are on duty just about all the time. They can be called at home with little notice. The managers of the restaurant did not make the rules—they came from higher up—but they are doing their best to give as much notice as possible. The butcher shop in this building was moved to the basement of the Confederation Building for some time while the place was under construction. The butcher who was working there cut his hand on an electric saw which was not even equipped with a guard. Would we allow anyone else to do that in private business? Surely not. We would not put up with that and would not allow anyone else to permit it. We stand here, telling the country how things are supposed to be done but we do not do it ourselves.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I believe that our effectiveness as Members of this House can be measured at least partially by the way we treat our employees and the staff of the House of Commons and the Senate, as well as the other employees who are here to assist us in our work.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that when we watch the debates of the House on television, we do not see all the people who cleaned up the House before we got here, the people who work behind the cameras, the people who work for Hansard, the translators, and so on. These people are often forgotten. In my opinion, it is wrong for us as Members of Parliament collectively not to be more aware of those who work for us, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The staff here attempted to organize into a union. They have been given as much hindrance that could possibly be mustered against them from almost everyone. The people who attempt to organize unions here have told me that people were accidentally opening the door when they were trying to have a meeting about organizing into a union. They believe that there has been snooping at their meetings. They believe there has been intimidation because threats were made against a number of them who attempted to have leave in order to circulate throughout the buildings to obtain signatures on documents in preparation for organizing a union. Is that the way for us, as Members of Parliament, to treat our people in this building? Surely not.

When the issue of certification of the union was before the courts, boxes and boxes of documents were presented to the courts as evidence. I suggest that providing so many boxes of documents is not evidence but can be seen as a process of intimidation. It will take six months to a year to review all of that documentation. During that time, nothing is being done. Why do we do such things?

Not long ago, employees of the cleaning staff and the Parliamentary Restaurant and others were told that they had to give thousands of dollars back to the Government of Canada.

Mr. Thacker: That is what you Liberals did. The Conservatives—

Mr. Boudria: I invite the Member opposite to stop his partisan nonsense for a minute. We are talking about the employees of all of us, collectively and individually, in this House. Maybe he can learn something. If not, perhaps he can talk to the workers downstairs for a few minutes and they will tell him.

Mr. Thacker: Why don't you sit down, then, and let somebody who knows what he is talking about say something?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I will not pretend to know many things, but having worked here for fourteen and a half years with those people, as one of them, I think I know a lot more than he will ever know. I have probably forgotten more than he will ever know.

Let me talk about superannuation for our employees. Until approximately 1970 there were essentially two categories of employees of the House of Commons. They were sessional employees and permanent employees. The sessional employees of the House of Commons were those who worked here every year, but only for the duration of the session. The permanent employees worked here all of the time. The sessional employees could not contribute toward superannuation. Of course, this was unfair, particularly in view of the fact that starting in the late 1960s sessions became longer and sessional employees in fact became year-round sessional employees.

Around 1975 it was decided that these sessional employees, because they were in fact permanent, should be contributing to superannuation. However, it would be a matter of choice on the part of the employees about whether or not they wanted to contribute. While some of these employees began to contribute to the superannuation plan of the House, others could not because of their low salary. I can understand that somebody who worked for $13,000 or $14,000 a year could not afford to have some $50 deducted from their cheque, no matter how beneficial in the future. Therefore, some of them contributed and some did not. A few months ago they all received a notice which indicated that in 1975 the Government made a mistake, that they should have all contributed to superannuation and, therefore, the employee who works for $14,000 a year owes the Government $8,000 or a similar amount. We told people earning $14,000 and $15,000 that they had to pay back $8,000 to the Treasury of Canada because we forgot to tell them 10 years ago that they were supposed to pay.

• (1520)

Finally, I want to bring to your attention something which I raised with you in the past, Mr. Speaker. As you know, outside the door of this Chamber there is a plaque which says that a Member of Parliament died in the great fire in the Parliament Buildings in 1916. When I first came to this building after the election last year the security guard giving me a tour of the building showed me the plaque and told me that six employees also died in the fire. I asked him the names of the six employees and he told me he did not know them and that they were not recorded. That day I asked you, Mr. Speaker, and all our colleagues to join me in asking that a plaque be erected in the name of those workers who died in the fire. A year later that has not been done. That tells me that we do not care enough to have done the job. If it is otherwise, I would like to have that done as a small gesture to prove to the people who work for us that we do care.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) a question similar to the question I put previously, but I want to vary it. He explained to me privately that the staff of Liberal and Conservative Members of the Ontario Legislature are not members of a union, however, I think he knows that staff of NDP Members there are members of the OPSEU Local 593. Since he has had experience there, I would be interested to know whether he thinks it would be appropriate for some or all of the staff of Members of the Ontario Legislature to be given the right to form a union. Perhaps they have that right now and have not exercised it, which is their choice, but I am not sure whether they have the right. If they have the right, does he believe it is a good thing for them to have it? If they do not have the right, does he believe they should have it? Does he, as a Member of Parliament, think that his employees should have the right to form or join a union?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his question. As he correctly states, when I was a Member at Queen's Park the staff working for the caucus members of the Liberal and Conservative Parties did not have a union. He is also correct in saying that the staffs of NDP members were unionized. As far as I know, there were no problems associated with the fact that there was a union for the staff of the NDP caucus. I cannot think of one instance when that led to anything that others in other Parties would have become aware of. Whenever people group together it provides for some form of discussion, but that does not mean it is good or bad, it just means that it's there. With regard to whether the other two caucuses had the right to form a union, I believe that they did. However, to my knowledge, it was never exercised. At least the staffs of the Party that I belonged to were not unionized when I was there.

The Member is asking for my personal feelings with regard to unionizing the staffs of Members of Parliament. My answer to that is that I personally do not have much difficulty with that proposition. I can think of only one possible difficulty that could arise. The Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) explained to us that the staff of his office are in a union involving the NDP caucus.

Mr. Benjamin: All our staff.

Mr. Boudria: Another Member refers to the fact that it includes all their staffs. I take the view that the staff that work for me do not work for the Liberal caucus or the Liberal Party. They work, through me, for the voters of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell and nothing else. I suppose that this depends in part on the way in which the different caucuses are structured. The difficulty I see is that you would almost have to have a local in every office because of the way in which my Party works. If there are other alternatives, I have no personal objections to them.

I asked the staff of my office how they felt about that and the three of them did not view it as something they wanted. However, as I say, I have no personal difficulty with the proposition other than to wonder how it could possibly be structured given that other Party caucuses do not work in the same way as that of the NDP. That would be the only difficulty that I can see.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the response of the Hon. Member. We will be happy to send him a copy of the collective agreement.

Mr. Boudria: I have it.

Mr. Benjamin: He has it and he, therefore, knows that the members of our caucus signed a collective agreement along with the representatives of the members of all of our staffs, including research staff, individual Member's staff, and the Leader's staff. As the hon. Member said, we have no control over the amount of wages paid to our staff as that is under the jurisdiction of the Speaker of the House of Commons. However, we do have jurisdiction in terms of working conditions, hours of work, and how we run our own offices.

Through my readings of Hansard I have seen that since 1935 people in my Party have proposed that employees of the national Government and the House of Commons should have the right to bargain collectively. On every occasion for the past 50 years when that subject came up, whether through debate or questions in the House, it was refused or talked out by the Party of the Hon. Member. Can I take from his speech today that he and his Party have changed their minds—I will not ask him to admit that they were wrong—and are now prepared to give the employees of this Chamber the same rights as those enjoyed by other employees of the Government of Canada and Crown corporations under the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, to answer the last part of the Hon. Member's question first, he knows that all public servants do not enjoy the same rights now. Some are under the jurisdiction of the Canada Labour Code and some are under the jurisdiction of other pieces of legislation. They do not enjoy identical rights at the present time so one cannot ask whether they will be the same as everyone else since everyone else is not the same.

Mr. Benjamin: I have a point of order.

Mr. Boudria: Notwithstanding that—

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am referring to in-scope employees, not Order in Council employees.

• (1530)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): That is not a point of order, sorry.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I recognize that, but even they are not all the same as the Hon. Member will know.

To answer the Hon. Member's question why legislation was not introduced in the past, the Hon. Member will know that it was under the previous Government that the Finkelman Report and other reports were done. The legislation was largely prepared under the previous administration and has now been introduced by this Government. It is not to say that nothing has been done.

Has enough been done, Mr. Speaker? No, I just spent half an hour saying that not enough has been done. I agree with that proposition. It is inherent on us now to give our employees their rights.

The Member is asking me whether the employees of the House of Commons should have the right to strike. My view is that quite possibly a number of them could. However, should we give that right to everyone? With that I have some difficulty. The Parliament of Canada is in charge of this country and nobody else can be in charge of the Parliament of Canada. Providing that certain positions are exempt to ensure the full and proper functioning of Parliament is the important issue, that Parliament be sovereign. The supremacy of Parliament has to be guaranteed. Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, obviously we could give better rights to our public servants and to House of Commons employees. Much of what I am saying, I remind the Member, was promised during the 1984 election campaign in terms of employees of the Public Service by the Government, the then Opposition.

[Translation]

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to be able to say a few words about this Bill because I was a plant worker and a union member for eighteen years. In fact, I was secretary of my union for two years and this subject has a special interest for me.

[English]

The arguments we have heard against allowing full union rights to the majority of employees of Parliament are very old arguments that have been disproved time and time again. A hundred and fifty to 200 years ago we heard the same sort of argument essentially from the industrial employers of Great Britain.

The same people who argued that they would go broke if 10 year old children were not allowed to work in the mines also argued they would go broke if their employees were allowed to have unions. It is less than two centuries since membership in any union in any industry was a crime. There was the famous case of the Tolpuddle Martyrs, agricultural workers. People in every country have to eat. I guess the argument was that those six or seven agricultural workers who committed the crime according to the statutes of the day of paying a shilling or two apiece membership dues in a union were threatening to starve all the people of England. In fact, the people of England decided that that was not so. Eventually the Government had to allow them to come home again, except one of them decided he had had enough of England and he came and settled in London, Ontario. In fact, at every stage, workers have been told: "We can't let you form a union because it would be disastrous to our industry", or in this case, disastrous to the Government of the country.

The attitude, of course, is that workers are a foolish, wicked, irresponsible lot who cannot be trusted to do an honest job. If they got a little power through being able to join together, the same power that the owners of capital exercise all the time, to counterbalance that power, then it would bring the country to ruin.

By the end of the last century, most workers in Britain were organized into unions and Britain reached the peak of its well-being in many respects according to most historians at that time. The workers of most of the western countries who have organized unions, often at the cost of martyrdom, death, imprisonment, harassment, are in countries now considered to be leading in prosperity and leading in good order. It is not only a matter of whether union members are satisfied enough to work, it is also a matter of whether a person has the recognized dignity to speak in terms of moral equality with his or her employer.

In my 18 years as a factory labourer it was very important, not just to me, but to all others in the factory that a worker knew that his or her right to speak as an independent human being was protected by the union which was founded on law, the laws of Ontario. It did not mean that a worker did not have to work. The union could not protect a worker who was slacking. It did not mean that a union member could violate the ordinary relationship, insult the foreman or something like that. It did mean that the foreman could not insult the worker. It did mean that the foreman could not drive the worker mercilessly. It did mean that there were rules applicable to both sides, that both sides had to observe.

The rules were broken on both sides from time to time. From time to time management and supervisors did what was wrong. From time to time union members did what was wrong. There was a system for adjudicating those. There were disciplinary procedures jointly recognized. There were grievance procedures jointly recognized. We had recourse to arbitration. We did not do it very often but once in a year or two the union might take a case to arbitration. We might win it or we might lose it. It was healthy because it kept the company on its toes and it kept the union on its toes.

We had to be serious about our grievances to make sure that we had what we thought was a reasonable case. The company had to be serious about its answers because it knew if it simply ignored an honest case, the company could get smacked down in arbitration. There are millions of workers in Canada who enjoy that kind of protection today. It is one of the things that makes Canada a healthy, prosperous and peaceful country.

Forty years ago that was not the case. Forty years ago during the latter part of the Depression when the unions were organizing, there was the potential for utter chaos. We had the then Premier of Ontario bringing mounted troups in to smash up the union organizing in the City of Oshawa of General Motors and so on. He got tossed out in the next election of course. He was wrong, and the voters said he was wrong.

What was established then in North America generally as the pattern of labour law was the concept of the contract. It is not necessarily the same in Britain or in Europe but in the United States and Canada for forty years, on the pattern of the Wagner Act, we have had a deal. The deal is for the life of a contract, let us say for a year, the company agrees that it will pay certain wages, maintain certain conditions and will not change them except by mutual agreement with the union. In return, the union agrees that it will not strike. It will not indirectly strike through an organized slow-down or disruption. For one year, or it can be for longer, there is labour peace. That was the basic pattern worked out. It has worked very, very well. Far more than 90 per cent of union negotiations are carried on within that general concept to a conclusion without a strike, certainly without the bitterness of violence on the picket line—carried out to a conclusion that is never perfect but is normally found to be workable. I mean, at the end of contract negotiations between the executive of my local in which I sat and the management, the general feeling was: Well, it was not all we wanted, but we can live with it, and we did. It saved a great deal of heartache, and it meant that employees and managers or supervisors could talk to each other with mutual respect. I did not have to be afraid that the manager or the supervisor could trample on my rights. I did not have to be so defensive, and he knew that I could go so far within my rights as a human being but no farther, that we would not try to wreck the place economically. We recognized that we wanted jobs there next year too. There was an atmosphere of peace and stability created by the assistance of the union and the contract arrived at. That method of arriving at it included not only recourse to arbitration; it included even the right to strike. There were times when we took a strike vote. While I was there, we never in fact did go on strike, but we had that possibility and we could contemplate whether or not we thought it was in our interests to do it. In fact, when we took strike votes, and the strike vote gave the executive a mandate, we never chose to go out on strike and the company never chose to exercise its corresponding right of lock-out. The system works, not perfectly, but far better than anything that went before it.

The trouble with this Parliament is that it is living in the beginning of the 19th century in which it is afraid of its own employees. This Parliament, collectively speaking, fears truck drivers, bus drivers, waitresses, cleaners, security men, constables and clerks. It fears those people. It says that if they are allowed to have the same freedom as is enjoyed by law by all other workers in Canada or practically—let us say more than 90 per cent of other workers in Canada—if we allow our employees to have the human rights that the huge majority of Canadians enjoy, well, we could not do our job as a Parliament; we could not run the country, supposing that it is Parliament that runs this country. There is some ground for questioning that when we see how impossible t is for us to get information about how the country is being run. That is another problem. Supposing this Parliament does run this country, what we are being told on the opposite side is that that would be impossible, if we allowed truck drivers and bus drivers and people like that on the Hill the right to strike. It is a ridiculous proposition which goes against all the experience in Canada, the United States, Britain and most western countries.

Because public opinion and the courts and boards like labour relations boards are crowding us, the Government has decided it has to do something. It is doing it as slowly as possible. It has sabotaged the original organizing effort by our employees by introducing a Bill to block it and to give decidedly less rights than our employees were entitled to under the Canada Labour Code. It has sabotaged any possibility of the employees of this Parliament doing what the employees of the Ontario Legislature are able to do, and some of them are doing, namely, create a union as free people. It has ruled that that is impossible.

Considering the poor wages, the unjust working conditions, the patronage and so on, which has been much better explained by my colleague from Churchill and by the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), whom I respect highly for his authority in his knowledge as a worker on this subject, in spite of the known, rotten conditions and rotten relationships at work, we still refuse to allow—that is, this Government and, therefore, the Parliament it controls—our employees to have the rights that practically all other Canadians enjoy. I agree with the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell that we do not necessary have to say that it is all or nothing. Every management jurisdiction that uses the labour relations system established throughout North America has the right to claim certain exclusions. There are certain employees or certain positions within which the employees may not come within the jurisdiction of the union.

The president of a company has to have a secretary who can type a letter from him to the union if the union is on strike—that is the ultimate example—since the president of the company, of course, would not demean himself by typing his own letter, if he could. That is not a problem. If the issue here were which of the positions should be excluded, a minority of management-type positions being excluded, we could discuss that and, I believe, arrive at a reasonable agreement. There would be some borderline cases, and we might go this way this year and that way next year on some of them, according to experience. That principle is well established, and everybody here who has worked anywhere else knows that that principle is well established. The principle of job classification is well established. It is not a disruption of management's rights.

The company I worked for, Continental Can, which insisted on bringing in a much more sophisticated job classification system and job evaluation system. It wanted it. The union resisted it for a while, and then we finally accepted a system in a modified form. The company felt it was better off. Instead or arguing with each individual about whether he should get a nickel more or a dime more in his job, the company wanted it done by a recognized set of criteria.

I want to say a little bit now about our experience in the NDP caucus. As a trade unionist, I and some others have found it embarrassing to say that sometimes we have engaged in an activity, perhaps thoughtlessly, which we would not tolerate and did not tolerate when we were on the other side of the table in our bargaining as union members or representatives. We got brought up short by our union, the Parliamentary Association of Support Staff. It was embarrassing, but in fact the relationships have been improved since then and there was an equality established, a moral equality. I am still the employer in my office, but I am not an absolute monarch, and I do not want to be. I could not handle it. I believe the same would apply to all other Members of this Parliament. Having a union to represent the employees, even though each Member is the employer under the present rules, is not uncommon. That happens in the fur industry, in the boot and shoe industry, in many industries and small factories—one union and one employer's association, and that is the model we are using in our caucus. We might find better models, but it would in fact not only bring justice to a thousand employees on the Hill, but it would bring a much more stable working relationship to the employers on the Hill and Members of Parliament, and we would then be able to hold up our heads instead of being ashamed of being one of the worst employers in Canada.

• (1550)

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to speak on this Bill because I and many of my predecessors in my Party in this House of Commons have been proposing this matter for a lot of years. The rights of employees of legislatures, city councils or the Parliament of Canada to bargain collectively for their wages and their working conditions and whatnot has been established for a number of years in many places. I am very proud of the fact that in 1947, almost 40 years ago, the Government of that day in my province, under the respected and lauded person of one Tommy Douglas, granted collective bargaining rights to all the employees of Crown corporations, the Public Service and the legislature employees of the Province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Except Crown Corporations.

Mr. Benjamin: It does not matter whether it is cafeteria workers, security guards, messengers, cleaning staff or whatever, the people employed in the legislature of the Province of Saskatchewan have had those rights for almost 40 years.

Since 1935, this matter has been raised in Parliament, as I said earlier to my colleague from the Liberal caucus when I was asking a question. In fact there were even some members from the Progressive Party in the 1920s, whom I know my honourable friend from Bow River (Mr. Taylor) will recall, even though he is younger than I am, who raised the same matter back then, but especially since 1935, and the Government of the day gave the darndest variety of reasons and excuses and protests that you could imagine. There were probably only seven or eight years out of those 50 years when it was not a Liberal government. Quite often, and I have even had this experience in this House since 1968, when the matter was raised my colleagues from the Conservative Party agreed with us and supported us because of those darn, mean, miserable old Liberals sitting on the other side of the Chamber. There was more than one occasion when we had unanimity between the Conservatives, the NDP and the Social Credit Party in this House, in Private Members' Hour, in Question Period, in committees on this right of the employees of the Parliament of Canada to belong to a union and bargain collectively.

Now I ask the question rhetorically, where are all of those Conservatives now that they are the Government? I hope that they will show up to persuade the Minister in charge of this Bill of the inadequacies in it, which would certainly remarkably speed its passage. I accept the word of the Hon. Member from the Liberal Party who said that the members of his Party have had a change of heart; they have changed their minds; so that is one third of the battle won.

I say to any colleagues in the Conservative Party that I hope that they will leap to the occasion as they did in previous times when the Liberals formed the Government to fight on behalf of the rights of the employees of this place.

In the case of employees of Members of the Legislature in Saskatchewan, and I suspect this is similar in at lease some other provinces, the staff of the Leader of the Opposition, the research staff of the political parties, any individual staff member of individual MLAs in my province do not have a union. They are Order-in-Council appointments. Therefore they are sort of what is called out of scope.

However, in the Province of Saskatchewan those direct employees of the Speaker and of all Members of the House including the Leaders of the Parties and their research staffs never at any time receive anything less than, and at most times more than, other employees of the Legislature or the Public Service of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Parts III and IV of the Canada Labour Code.

Mr. Benjamin: I want to tell the Government House Leader there are members of MPs staff in this House who receive less money than people holding an equivalent position anywhere else in the Public Service.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This Bill will give minimum standards of employment and full rights.

Mr. Benjamin: All I am telling the honourable gentleman is that this has been the practice in Saskatchewan since 1947 and I am confident that there have been a few other provinces that have done the same thing. If there has not been, that is to their disgrace. People who work in this building, whether in the cafeteria, the Parliamentary Restaurant, as a messenger or a guard or whatever are subject to the whim, in terms of a layoff, a firing, a hiring on whether or not they happen to be a relative of somebody or other or whether or not they happen to have some pull or influence. They are subject to those kinds of vagaries. We are at least 50 years out of date around here. These people really do not have any rights when it comes to their income and their security of employment. I think this is a reprehensible situation, assuming that they do a conscientious reasonably competent job, and as far as I am concerned the employees of this place do exactly that. There will always be the odd exception but I think the same would apply to maybe a very small minority of honourable Members of this place. If you put 100 people together on a job there is bound to be one or two of them who do not do the job but you do not condemn all the rest because of the one or two who might be goof-offs. That applies to us as well as it does to our employees in this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, I know it is Friday and it is getting on to 4 o'clock and I presume I will still have the floor at 11 o'clock on Monday. We will adjourn the transport committee hearings on railway pensions so I can resume my speech at that time.

May I close, sir, by saying to the Government House Leader that if he does not see to it that his people organize the holding of committees and subcommittees and legislative committees around here better than they have been, he is going to have a lot of trouble over the coming weeks.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to resume my remarks on Monday at 11 o'clock.

• (1600)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member will resume on Monday at 11 o'clock if this matter is on the Order Paper again, of course, which is not necessarily the case.

[Translation]

Order, please. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

WAYS AND MEANS MOTIONS

LANGUAGE USED IN DRAFTING

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, Notices of Ways and Means Motions should be drafted in plain language and that the practice of incorporating complicated draft tax bills into the text of such notices be discontinued.

He said: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Benjamin: Explain!

Mr. Nickerson: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has just requested that I explain. That is precisely what I intend to do over the next 20 minutes.

Mr. Benjamin: In plain language.

M. Nickerson: In plain language. I know no other, Sir.

What brought about my putting of this motion on the Notice Paper was the receipt on my desk on September 9, not too long ago, of a Notice of Ways and Means Motion dealing with proposed changes to the Income Tax Act. This Notice of Ways and Means Motion reads as follows: "That it is expedient to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to make a related amendment to the Tax Court of Canada Act as follows," and what follows, Sir, is a draft Bill of some 240 pages in length consisting of complext gobbledegook, for want of a more parliamentary word.

The Income Tax Act is the most complex, complicated and technical statute we have on the books. If we wanted to find out what this Notice of Ways and Means Motion was about, we would have to put the draft Bill side by side with an existing compilation of the Income Tax Act and compare the two. It would probably take a week to find out what it was all about. This should not be necessary and I will try to show in my argument that it runs contrary to the spirit of the rules of the House and contrary to the procedure which is very often correctly adopted by the Government to bring down Ways and Means Motions in such a way that people can read them find out what changes are proposed to these very complicated tax statutes.

Although my motion is pretty specific and deals only with the drafting of Ways and Means Motions, it is part of a greater whole, the whole question of simplicity and comprehensibility in legislation. It should be that any person of reasonable intelligence and comprehension of either the English or French languages ought to be able to read a statute and know what the law is and what penalties are imposed for any infraction of that law. One should not have to have experts like accountants or lawyers to interpret a law. Any citizen should be able to read through a statute book and know what the law means.

Just this morning as an exercise I went through the Criminal Code. Statutes that were drafted many years ago were drafted in simple language and made sense. We can understand what they say. I looked at Section 72 of the Criminal Code dealing with duelling. Everything I could want to know about the legality or illegality of duelling and the penalties imposed for it takes eight lines—and some of those lines are only one word long—in my copy of Martin's Criminal Code.

The Section of the Criminal Code dealing with the unlawful movement of monuments and survey boundary lines takes 23 lines. In the Good Book, I think it takes one line and says something like: "Thou shalt not move the monuments of thy forefathers". The Criminal Code can say the same thing in 23 lines and that ain't bad. Turning to recent legislation, the statutes and commentaries that deal with operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol take something like 30 pages of Martin's. It ought not to be that way.

The people who are drafting statutes these days do so in the most esoteric manner possible. They aim for such a degree of precision that it does not make sense any more. They try to contemplate in the law every possible conceivable technical eventuality. This leads to all kinds of technical defences in courts of law that need further expounding by the courts themselves. We do not solve any problems by going into great detail in the statute itself. All we do is make it worse and create the need for yet more interpretations by the courts.

There are frequent complaints about the complexities of legal drafting. These complaints usually come from the Opposition. It does not matter which Party is Opposition, these complaints come from the Opposition. When members of the Opposition get to this side of the House, they tend to forget about these complaints, that being human nature, I suppose. However, in certain jurisdictions these complaints have become organized. There is a movement toward plain language legislation. I understand that this movement is quite active in the United States of America and Australia. I understand that in certain states of Australia, when a law is brought in there must also be a plain-language explanation of what that law is all about. Where the request for plain language legislation is becoming more organized, the chances of having plain-language legislation are much greater than they appear to be in Canada at this time.

I would hope that soon it will be taught by the law schools to those who would become drafters of laws that the best way of doing something is usually the simplest way of doing it. When people who are taught that way are hired by the Department of Justice, they will then have that in mind when drafting Bills. They will win points for shortening a proposed law rather than lengthening it.

I return to the issue at hand, the question of the drafting of Ways and Means Motions. The rules as they exist in the House of Commons about the Business of Supply and the Business of Ways and Means make very little sense. They would never have been put together the way they are if they were done as a result of rational thought on this subject. They are like Alice in Wonderland or Topsy, they just growed.

I suppose we would have to go back in history to find out what the Business of Supply and the Business of Ways and Means was all about in the past. We can do that by taking as an example a Parliament of some European country several hundred years ago. The monarch would approach Parliament and say: "I have a new venture in mind. It is an expensive venture. Perhaps we will invade the next country and it will require more money than that which normally accrues to the Crown by the existing taxes". The monarch would make his pitch to Parliament and say that he has had the matter looked at by the Lord Chief Justice and has been assured of its legality and that he has had the matter looked at by a Conference of Bishops and has been assured that it is a just and holy cause. Of course, there will be certain spoils of victory to be divided by those who support this venture. The legislature of the day would resolve itself into a committee of supply and debate the requested amount of money. They might increase it or decrease it a bit and perhaps even vote for it. The next stage would be to find out how the money would be forthcoming. They would again resolve themselves into a committee of Ways and Means and debate the best method of raising the money. It might be necessary to put an extra tax on the peasants or an extra tax on imports such as tobacco or ardent spirits. They would decide among themselves the best way of raising these revenues. Out of that committee of Ways and Means would come a resolution suggesting that taxes be increased on tobacco products, or whatever it might be. A Bill would be drafted after that dealing with the wishes of the resolution which would then go through the legislature in the same fashion as any other Bill.

This type of system was incorporated into early Canadian practice. It involved the principles of free debate upon matters relating to the collection of revenue from the citizens of the country. There is an interesting quotation from Bourinot which states:

> The cardinal principle, which underlies all parliamentary rules and constitutional provisions with respect to money grants and public taxes is this—when burthens are to be imposed on the people, every opportunity must be given for free and frequent discussion, so that parliament may not, by sudden and hasty votes, incur any expenses, or be induced to approve of measures, which may entail heavy and lasting burthens upon the country.

In these days of executive constraint we have changed over a period of time. The idea of a free and independent committee of Ways and Means no longer exists. Not long after the establishment of a Canadian Parliament it was held that only a Minister of Finance could, for example, bring in Ways and Means resolutions. Despite this type of encroachment, at least until 1968 when the great changes were made in parliamentary procedure, the concept was always that tax Bills should be based on Ways and Means resolutions. Again, I would like to quote from Bourinot, page 439 of the Fourth Edition:

> When the resolutions amending the tariff, or imposing any changes upon the people, have been agreed to, they are embodied in one or more bills which should pass through the same stages as other bills—

If we look to the Standing Orders of the House of Commons, in particular Standing Order 65(11), we will see that it reads:

> The adoption of any Ways and Means motion shall be an order to bring in a bill or bills based on the provisions of any such motion.

Thus, the concept is there. There is a resolution which came out of the Ways and Means Committee and the Bill was to be based on that resolution. However, matters have changed, perhaps for the worst in 1968, to which I have previously referred.

I would now like to quote from the recently published House of Commons Précis of Procedure which was put out by the Table Research Branch of the House of Commons. I think this publication will quoted many times in the House, just as we often refer to Bourinot, Erskine May, or any of the established reference works. It is a very useful document which the Table Research Branch has put forward. With respect to the 1968 changes the document reads as follows:

> With the changes to the Standing Orders in 1968, Ways and Means motions replaced the traditional resolutions of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Further down on the page, page 95, we will see another change which was snuck in which reads as follows:

> Notices of Ways and Means motions are sometimes tabled in the form of draft bills.

That is what I am trying to get at today. I do not think this practice should take place except perhaps when the Bill is extremely simple. We can see the way the executive part of Government has encroached upon the previous powers which were held by Parliament and that there has been a change in concept. Today we wonder what the point is of the Ways and Means motions which are now put before the House. There does not seem to be any real reason for them. In fact, certain jurisdictions do not use that system at all. The tax Bill just comes in straight to the first reading stage and is not dealt with any differently from any other type of legislation. The Northwest Territories from whence I hail uses that system. There is no such thing as a Ways and Means motion in the legislature of the Northwest Territories.

If we are to have it, then we must ask ourselves what useful function a Ways and Means motion serves. The answer has to be that it puts down in an understandable form, at least to tax practitioners if not the public or Members of Parliament in general, what it is that the Government wishes to accomplish by the Bill which will be brought in later. We can see that when the Government uses that type of procedure things work out pretty well. When the Budget of last May 23 was brought down, regardless of whether or not one agrees with the specific contents of it, the notice of Ways and Means that was tabled on that day was an excellent piece of work. One can read through the document, which is just a few pages, and find out precisely and exactly what it was the Government wished to accomplish with the legislation it would bring in later. Obviously, there was a good deal of thought which went into the drafting of this notice of Ways and Means. In fact, I would like to compliment the people who put it together.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was in the House not too long ago and I would have liked to have been able to bring that matter to his attention. That is the way we ought to go. That is the way which is the historically right way. It is in keeping with the traditions of the House. It is in keeping with the concepts which have developed over the years. It makes sense. It is a useful procedure for Members of Parliament and for those in the tax community, which includes just about everyone in the country. One can tell from the notice of Ways and Means motion of May 23 exactly what will happen whether one likes it or not. However, that is not the case all the time. The Government sometimes tends to be somewhat lazy. I am sure that is the real reason for it. Perhaps those drafting the legislation feel rushed. One can see that when they come in with a notice of Ways and Means such as they did on September 9, to which I referred in the initial part of my presentation, it is absolute gobbledegook. It is impossible to understand what they are up to and what they are trying to hide. It makes no sense whatsoever.

The purpose of my motion which is before the House today is to encourage the Government to do it the way it did on May 23 when it brought down the Budget. Some attention should be given to these matters, the intent of what must necessarily be very complex tax legislation should be written down in a way which all of us can understand with just a little bit of effort. Were the Government to do that the House of Commons and the country at large would be well served. We would at least know what the intent of the Government is with respect to tax Bills brought before the House.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest for the past 20 minutes to my hon. friend from Western Arctic. I have been listening to my hon. friend for many years and I think, honestly, that this is the first time I have agreed with his position. Perhaps this is the beginning of a breakthrough in the House of Commons. I must say I have listened to his comments and found myself in agreement with almost everything he said. I compliment the Hon. Member for bringing forward Motion No. 234. This is a step toward clarification and a step towards democracy. It will institute real democracy in this House of Commons.

● (1620)

I would like to begin by reading from a recent notice of Ways and Means. I would like to read it for those Hon. Members, because of their special interests in various aspects of work being done by Members of the House of Commons. Perhaps Hon. Members do not have the opportunity to read carefully through the notices of Ways and Means motions but just as a sample, Mr. Speaker, and I know how interested you are in this topic, I will share with you how we spend our evenings. I will quote a short paragraph of explanation as to what the Government plans to do with taxation:

That the rate per litre specified in any enactment founded on paragraph 11 of this motion for the goods listed in subparagraph (d) of that paragraph be adjusted quarterly on the first day of January, April, July and October of each year, commencing on October 1, 1985, so that the rate applicable during the quarter commencing on any such adjustment day is equal to the rounded product of the rate that would have been applicable if no adjustment had been made pursuant to any enactment founded on this paragraph and the ratio, adjusted or altered in such manner as may be prescribed by regulation of the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Finance and rounded, that the Industry Selling Price Index for Diesel Fuel for the twelve month period ending on the last day prior to the immediately preceding quarter bears to the Industry Selling Price Index for Diesel Fuel for the twelve month period ending on March 31, 1985.

I know it is perfectly clear to you, Mr. Speaker, and to Hon. Membres of the House of Commons, but for a lot of folks it would be difficult to understand just exactly what the Government was planning to do.

Mr. Orlikow: Would you explain it?

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) asks me to explain it. I must admit, Mr. Speaker, I would have a great deal of difficulty doing so. I believe it simply emphasizes the point made by the Hon. Member that if this is a notice of what the Government intends to do, what on earth is the Government intending to do? I must admit that I, and my staff who are extremely knowledgeable in tax matters, have sat down and poured over this paragraph trying to determine what it means, with no success. I know there must be someone in the rabbit-warrens of the tax Department who understands this, but I have yet to find out who that person is.

In a democracy, the assumption is that the electorate will be well informed, and, therefore, make a wise and intelligent decision. That same attitude is transferred to the House of Commons after elections take place so that those people who represent the people of Canada, the duly-elected individuals, can make decisions in the House of Commons based on a thorough understanding of all of the facts and information available. When a Government introduces the Ways and Means motions, it is to alert Members of Parliament and the people of Canada to legislation which will flow out of the Ways and Means motion—it sort of serves notice that this is what it plans to do—and it is not very helpful at all. In fact, what it does is leave the impression that there is almost a cover-up being attempted here on the theory that if one uses enough bafflegab and mumbo-jumbo—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Riis: I am not suggesting that there is some evil intent. But you have to admit, Mr. Speaker, that if the citizenry is to be alerted to tax changes using this kind of language, no one is going to be alerted. If the intentions is honourable and the intent is to inform people of the intentions of the Government, surely, there are not two people in the world who would suggest that this is the way to do it, with the exception of a couple of folks ferreted away down in the catacombs of the Finance Department or the Department of Revenue.

Mr. Orlikow: It's great for the tax lawyers and accountants.

Mr. Riis: It is a good make-work initiative for tax accountants.

Basically, we have seen some breakthroughs. I want to give credit where credit is due. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) did introduce a tax expenditure plan which was an effort, and I believe an honest effort, to identify the major tax expenditures, particularly in the corporate sector, so that Members of Parliament could evaluate each and every one in order to determine if there was any benefit at all accruing to the people of Canada as a result of this tax expenditure. It becomes woefully obvious when we look at many of these phrases that we really have to struggle to make a case that this is actually benefiting Canada as opposed to benefiting a few corporate planners in terms of financial planning. Nevertheless, it is a step in the right direction and I applaud the Minister for that step. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) indicated that there has been on the odd occasion an explanation of the Ways and Means motions which have been proposed so that rather then having to try to get through this gobbledegook, there was some effort to explain what a particular section was trying to say. The explanation used a similar language, unfortunately, but there was still a recognition that there was a problem. I think what the motion before us indicates clearly is that we are trying to say to the Government, and to those people who provide us with these motions, that they can be and ought to be written differently and in a fashion so that ordinary Canadians and Members of Parliament who are examining these Ways and Means motions can understand precisely what they are all about.

I would like to conclude my comments today by saying that I believe the intent of this motion is extremely critical. It comes at a very important time. It is both appropriate and timely. It is timely in that we are being asked to debate and to examine so many tax proposals. I suspect that in the weeks and months ahead we will be seeing notice of Ways and Means motions coming before the House on a regular basis as the Government attempts to shift and change the tax system, in a sense making it more complex at a time when we all would like to see a movement toward a more simplistic tax system.

It is also very appropriate in that there is a sense in the country now that the tax system is unfair, that people do not understand the tax system. I suppose one could say that there is probably not a single Canadian who could honestly say that he or she understand the Tax Act in totality. It is an impossibility. All one could hope for is that the entire Tax Act could be programmed so the computer could access the portions of the Tax Act which would be applicable to an individual or a corporate circumstances. However, at the moment it is so complex there is a feeling it is very biased. Consequently, much of our economy is moving underground because people are avoiding tax. Ordinary Canadians, recognizing that it is an unfair system, and that they are being asked to pay an unfair burden of the tax payments, indulge in many more transactions on an ongoing basis which are unreported. They are almost operating on a barter system or the transaction is completed with cash so there are no records of it. I suspect that most Members of Parliament have encountered people who are in fact continuing this practice as almost a way of life.

What that tells us, Mr. Speaker, is that there is a limit when the system breaks down, that as more and more people take steps, in a sense, to avoid paying tax, those few people who cannot take those steps have to pay more and more and assume an unfair burden in taxes and eventually the system breaks down. I believe we are seeing the beginning of that process now in the country of Italy where so much of the economy is underground and every single citizen is involved in tax finagling, and that is something to behold.

At the time when this mood, this mind-set, is developing in the country, which is extremely destructive in terms of the long-term effective functioning of Parliament, this motion is indeed timely. It is an attempt to make public the Government's intentions so that we can determine in a serious way whether it is appropriate, for example, to increase taxes on, for instance, alcohol. Or is it appropriate to increase the taxes on gasoline? Is it appropriate to lift the sales tax another percentage point? We should explain it in such a way that you can have a sense of national discussion over coffee in the kitchens of Canada so that the word can get back to Members of Parliament for intelligent and informed discussions in the appropriate committees and in the House of Commons. If no one knows what the Government is going to do until the actual Bill arrives in the House, and we are restricted to a half a dozen witnesses before a legislative committee, the purpose then becomes a mockery. It becomes a farcical, nonsensical exercise and it builds on the attitude of the people of Canada that there is something going on here that is not quite right, that there is something inappropriate going on in terms of how the tax system is being developed. I applaud the Hon. Member who introduced Motion 234. As one of the spokespersons on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I say that we will certainly endorse this motion and would like to see an early change in Government policy as a result of it.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak in this debate.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson)—I have been told there is no French translation—deals in his motion with matters that are of considerable importance, both to the House of Commons and to the Canadian public in general.

I believe it is a generally accepted fact that our tax laws are not necessarily clearly understood by all Members of this House, and that it would not be an exaggeration to say that the general public in Canada does not directly grasp all the implications of the complex provisions of the Income Tax Act.

Not long ago, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said quite seriously, when he brought down the last Budget, that one of his most, I would almost say human objectives in the Budget was to make his Budget understandable, and to make all previous Budgets or previous legislation, especially that concerned with income tax, understandable for the general public.

I remember when I was teaching at the University of Montreal, we had an old professor who was giving us a course in didactics before we were to go off and teach our various disciplines. For instance, I was teaching engineering to architects, and it was pretty difficult, and he had explained the difference between complicated and complex.

We were told that something was complex when it was complicated but understandable, while complicated meant something complex that we failed to understand. And I think that reflects the essence of this debate.

[English]

I should state right now, of course, that I do not support the direct proposal of this resolution. Although I respect the motives of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), my conclusion after studying this resolution is that his proposal would not have positive results. It would run counter to some of the advances that have been achieved recently in terms of dealing with tax legislation. I am afraid that it would hinder rather than help the goal of legislating better tax laws and it would make things more difficult for taxpayers.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, when our Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs met recently, I had the opportunity for the first time in my life to study thoroughly a proposal to amend a number of regulations, even legislation dealing with extremely complex matters such as financial institutions. Because several of us were new members, expert witnesses and former members in the area had to explain to us the gist of the legislation and procedure.

It is clear that it would be impossible to define all the reasons behind a difficult legislation such as the Income Tax Act in one single statement. it is necessary to define them further by associating them with considerations about the lives of the Canadian people which are becoming increasingly more complex in the various regions.

[English]

The resolution advocates that plain language should be used in drafting the Ways and Means motions that are introduced and on which the Bill incorporating the precise Income Tax Act amendments is based.

I am sure that no Member of the House would argue against the use of plain language, so long as this language gets the message across clearly and completely. As Members know, when a Budget is presented, the notices of Ways and Means motions that are tabled at the time outlining tax changes in the Budget are in the so-called short form. These notices of motions must include all the essential elements of tax proposals that will be later included in a more detailed Bill, but they are generally in ordinary language rather than the more complex legal language that is used in writing the precise amendments to the Income Tax Act.

[Translation]

I would like to recall what happened in the House this week. It was alleged that some people had taken advantage of every kind of so-called legislative loopholes or dodging mechanisms, and that certain corporations employing crafty lawyers—experts as well, we have to admit—had been able to milk the legislation dry, so to speak, for everything it was worth in their particular sphere of activities.

You can imagine how the legislation could be interpreted if we had to stick to questions of principle only! Everything would then become a contentious issue and the courts would have to rule on every single piece of legislation, never mind the fact that they are overburdened as it is and the source of two- or three-year delays, sometimes even four, five or six years.

I think we would be ill advised to use the kind of language commonly heard on the street—rather vague and replete with generalities—to draft Bills related to highly specialized subjects.

[English]

I am not sure whether the language of these notices of motions is plain enough to suit all Members. It could be said that the notice of motion must serve two goals. It has to be clearly understood and it must be adequate in legal terms to serve as the basis for a subsequent Bill. It is not always easy to meet the latter goal while still using simple and clear language. However, that is what the legal drafting people strive for.

I should add, as is generally known, that the supplementary information which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) normally tables with his Budget provides further explanations, in clear language, of the tax changes proposed in the Budget.

Obviously, it is of great importance that tax changes proposed in a Budget be understood clearly, quickly, completely and fully. Individuals and businesses need to know where they stand in relation to the new proposals. Often, business decisions, investments and other expenditures hinge on them. The language in both the Ways and Means motions and in the supplementary information must be as clear as possible. Of course, some tax measures are inevitably complex and do not lend themselves easily to simple explanations.

Up to this point in the process, however, there is no disagreement with the principle of the resolution we are debating now. The language must be as clear and plain as possible. What the resolution appears to object to is the further step in the process, which has developed in recent years, of replacing the short form of a Ways and Means motion with a detailed Ways and Means motion. This so-called detailed Ways and Means motion in fact is written in the precise legal terminology that is later used for the Bill itself. Quite obviously, it is not the plain and simple language, as shown in the example given to us by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), which is advocated in the resolution we are debating now. It is written in a manner which attempts to define, very precisely, what is the taxpayer's liability.

Let me remind Hon. Members that the Minister of Finance has said on many occasions that he strongly advocates the simplification of the tax laws as an important goal. That, of course includes simpler language whenever possible, but we should not delude ourselves that achieving this is an easy matter. In our legal tradition an individual's tax liability is determined by the strict letter of the law rather than by the general spirit and broad purpose of the legislation.

● (1640)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I wish to explain to you, and it must be explained to everyone, I think, that the House of Commons here, as I found out, must state basic principles, and we must fight for basic principles, but we must also rely on people from all professions to explain the major purposes of a legislation. Sometimes they are doctors, sometimes they are engineers, but most of the time they are lawyers. But we must not rely on the advice of lawyers only, we also have tax experts who may have an accounting, a business and indeed a legal background. We have engineers involved in some public work Bills that I had an opportunity to examine. In some Bills dealing with health and welfare, we have had descriptions that would look horrible to us, certain medical descriptions written in terms which the average person and even some medical doctors in this House do not understand.

All this is to suggest that our tax system must be comprehensive, it must be specialized in order that it may be used as an unequivocal basis by those who have to enforce it.

[English]

The alternative leads to uncertainty and the possibility of arbitrary rulings by tax assessors, so I think we have to accept a certain degree of complexity and rather difficult language in our tax statutes.

The resolution before us apparently complains of the introduction of this precise legal language in the detailed Ways and Means motions which are sometimes placed before the House. There are some very valid and important reasons for doing it in that way. One important factor, which I alluded to earlier, is the importance of enabling taxpayers to know, as early as possible, in a very precise way, what their tax liability would be as the result of a proposed budgetary tax change. Often the taxpayer or his technical adviser can only calculate the tax liability once he has seen the exact language of the proposed amendment to the Income Tax Act. The general language of the short form Ways and Means motion is not always adequate for this purpose. If the taxpayer is not given this certainty, this precision of language, the result can be uncertainty about whether to take certain investment or other economic decisions. When this uncertainty affects many taxpayers, the result can be seen in terms of a slowdown in business, a fall off in investment spending, and other negative effects in the economy. Therefore, it can be important for economic reasons to place detailed Ways and Means motions before Parliament as quickly as possible.

Another reason can be found in the approach that the Government is following of basing policies and actions on the broadest possible consultation with Canadians. This consultation process has been developed in relation with the development of major economic strategies and programs. The National Economic Conference of last spring is an obvious example as is the round of pre-Budget consultations which the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) have again launched. Members will be aware of the two consultation documents presented early yesterday by the Minister which provide a progress report on the Government's strategy for securing economic renewal and a new study of the factors underlying the approach to deficit reduction and control of the national debt. That process of consultation is important, too, in the process of taxing draft legislation. The Minister of Finance has made it clear that he welcomes the advice and counsel of tax experts in the private sector so that our tax amendments are well and soundly written.

A year ago in a speech to the Canadian Tax Foundation the Minister of Finance encouraged tax specialists and practioners to help the Government in simplifying and improving our tax legislation. When it comes to legislating budgetary tax changes, that process of consultation is made much easier by the practice of placing detailed Ways and Means motions before Parliament. This allows private sector tax experts to see the exact language which the Government is contemplating for the subsequent Bill to amend the Income Tax Act. This private sector assistance can be most valuable in achieving sound, practical, well-drafted tax legislation. The tax consultation process would be much more difficult if we did not put the draft legislation forward in this way.

Before concluding this speech, I would like to remind the House of a number of other measures which the Government and the Minister of Finance in particular have taken to improve our tax legislation and the legislative process. I have referred to the importance placed on the consultation process and also on the goal of tax simplification, one of our ongoing objectives. For example, in his Budget speech last May the Minister of Finance put forward important proposals to restructure the corporate tax system. He invited comments and suggestions from the private sector as part of the ongoing process of public consultation. It is also important to note that the proposals to change the corporate tax system were motivated in part by the desire to simplify the tax system which we admitted was complicated.

The way to tax simplification is not just a matter of simpler language. The way in which our tax is structured inevitably has a bearing on how complex or simple the tax law must be. At the same time we must recognize that, if we want to achieve certain policy goals in taxation, sometimes the inevitable result is some increased complexity in the tax law. For example, the Minister has announced his intention to introduce a minimum tax effective next year. The goal of this initiative has received widespread support. One result would be to make the tax system somewhat more involved. It will mean an addition to individual tax returns. That will be one cost of achieving an important step toward greater equity in our tax system. I think the extra effort will be worth it.

[Translation]

However, Mr. Speaker, this principle being put forward, this idea of a minimum tax, requires a package of very specific measures which would change the existing Income Tax Act which, God knows, already is complex enough. Before introducing this new measure haphazardly, it is very important that we give a general idea of what it is, based on the principles, to the entire community by way of a proposal tabled in Parliament, in order that we may benefit from all Canadian expertise, all the expertise in those special areas.

[English]

There have been two other recent developments that have improved our process of legislating tax changes. One is the practice begun by the Department of Finance of issuing technical notes to help explain how individual clauses in tax Bills before the House will work and how they fit into the Income Tax Act. Those notes are of great value, both to Members of this House and to taxpayers and their technical advisers who must work with the new laws which are constantly in evolution.

The other innovation begun this year involves income tax amendments that are of a technical nature not involving any new policy. By putting these together in a separate Bill, apart from the Budget measures, they can be brought forward for consideration quite apart from the Budget measures. This process helps to liberate the Budget from a welter of technical matters and improves the over-all Budget process.

[Translation]

It is true that formerly, having tried to read through the previous budget, it was quite a nuisance to have a collection of technical notes obscure our view of the basic principles that were dictated in the previous budgets. In the last budget we wanted to set out principles first while encouraging people to be careful in their interpretation and to consult what was to follow—

[English]

In conclusion, I submit that the Government has taken a number of important steps toward improving our tax laws and the manner in which tax changes are legislated by this House. Further reforms are proposed in the Budget discussion paper of last May dealing with the budgetary process.

Further, I can assure the Hon. Member for Western Arctic that the Government is prepared to consider any more suggestions for improving that process.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, of course the House of Commons and the Canadian people should not be asked to trust their Government without question and to depend solely on the administration and interpretation of complex legislation by experts.

However, I think that we should all understand that the law is a complex thing which requires specialized interpretations that cannot be made only through policy statements.

[English]

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Government Members are not supporting this motion by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). I have just listened to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier). I felt like saying after he concluded his speech that he could make it again, but in plain language as the motion says.

I notice you, Mr. Speaker, even had difficulty at times understanding the technical remarks. I noticed that you were very deep in thought trying to understand completely what was being said.

Mr. Prud'homme: And he is a good lawyer.

Mr. Baker: Yes, he is a very good lawyer. The Speaker had extreme difficulty at times following the hon. gentleman's remarks.

The motion presented by the Member for Western Arctic is very well taken. If at all possible, the Government should aim at simplifying its laws and the way it carries out its regulations.

Because the statutes at times are rather complicated and complex in their wording, you have the communications that arise from that law to the people of Canada also complex and complicated in the written word. In other words, in most instances where a person has been found to be included or excluded from a particular program of the Government you see a constituent, a person, receiving a letter saying something like: "You are not eligible for this program because you contravened section such and such of such and such an Act". That is all the explanation given. I am thinking particularly about the Unemployment Insurance Act and certain other matters that arise out of taxation legislation.

The point is well taken by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic. One need only look at the legislation presented in this Chamber recently by the Government to see exactly why the point being made by the gentleman from Western Arctic is well taken. A lot of definitions especially in recent legislation, especially since the Tory Government took over, are somewhat hazy, general and certainly not specific and certainly not in plain language as they should be.

We have been debating for the last few days in this House terms like workforce, designated groups and aboriginal peoples that are contained in legislation but certainly not described to people. We have listened to the Government of Canada announce programs that say: "We are going to try to assist those who are unemployed". We know that the definition of unemployed by the Government of Canada these days is quite different from the definition the ordinary person would assume would be attached to that word, that is, the dictionary explanation. We look back to what is "unemployed" under such and such an Act or the definition of a fisherman or a farmer under such and such an Act or statute. As the Hon. Member for Western Arctic has put it, it makes much more sense to introduce legislation to have statutes on the books that are in plain English so people can understand.

We all recognize that we would perhaps be putting some lawyers out of business and perhaps even some juges. Unfortunately a lot of the cases before the appeal courts today having to do with the Tax Court of Canada and about which we are talking indirectly here today are there because it is unclear to the Canadian involved just what the law is.

I support the hon. gentleman's resolution before the Chamber and I hope that the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott) will also be very brief so we can get on with this resolution.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think it goes without saying that I will have to be brief since we have about four and one-half minutes left.

As my brief form of introduction, it is all very well to suggest that we should draft our income tax Bills and propose changes in plain simple unpretentious English and French in contrast to the unintelligible gobbledegook that has been devised under many years of Liberal rule, but the problem is that simple language or lack of precision means tax lawyers and other experts could drive trucks through the income tax system. While I know it is raw heresy to suggest that many wealthy tax lawyers probably earn their hefty remuneration by finding loopholes in the existing tax system by performing the most ingenious end runs around the laws as they stand now, surely the Government's task is to make the language in the tax system more easily understood to the average taxpayer. The hilarious example referred to by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) indicates the urgent need for that.

With all due respect to my colleague from Western Arctic, we cannot and we must not hinder rather than help the goal of legislating better tax laws. Talking the language of Sesame Street might make the tax system a little more entertaining, if anything about taxes can be called entertaining, but Big Bird would only make things more confusing for Canadian taxpayers. I happen to prefer the language of "Big Mike", the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). In the Canadian Budgetary Process Proposals for Improvement, on page 13, there is a whole list of technical matters and proposals for improvement. That document was released May, 1985. It clearly indicates that the Government is moving toward the initiative, the very worth-while and laudable suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), to simplify the language to make it plain. As I said, plain language while a laudable objective, is not the only answer to simplifying our tax system. Millions of Canadians and thousands of Canadian businesses depend on the precision of proposed tax laws in order to assess changes to their tax liability. A lack of precision, Mr. Speaker, creates greater uncertainty and that is not in my view in the interests of Canadian taxpayers. The inclusion of detailed Ways and Means motions promotes the consultation process between private Canadians and the Canadian Government. Detailed motions will allow specialists outside the Government to comment on the specific language that the Government intends to use.

Should the language prove not to accomplish the policy objectives of the Government, the language can now be changed. I certainly hope that one paragraph quoted by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap is put up as a prime example of some language that needs to be changed.

I suggest that it is the Hon. Member's intention to promote the importance of tax simplification, and for that reason it is a worth-while proposition, but his ways and means of doing it are not quite acceptable to the Government.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

EXCISE TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-80

Hon. Michel Côté (for the President of the Privy Council) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-80, An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the said Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act is a very important part of the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that that Budget addresses two major problems facing Canada today, high unemployment and our spiralling national debt. We must bring the deficit under control if we are to secure a prosperous economic future and promote growth and the job creation that we know is a priority with the Canadian people. This Bill is a major element in our efforts to achieve those objectives.

The main thrust of the Bill is to increase revenues through changes in both the scope and the rates of federal sales tax and the Bill also seeks to ensure that the burden of these increased revenues is spread broadly and fairly.

[Translation]

First of all, Mr. Speaker, federal sales tax has been increased by one percentage point. This slight increase will result in considerable additional revenue without, however, adding significantly to the tax burden of producers and consumers of taxable commodities.

Second, the excise tax on gas and fuel will be increased by 2 cents per litre as of January 1, 1987. These increases will provide additional revenue that will help reduce the deficit and partially finance the program for full indexation of old age security pensions.

Third, the sales tax exemption for candy and confectionery, soft drinks, pet food, certain health care products and goods related to energy efficiency, has been abolished.

Finally, this Bill provides for a slight increase in levies on alcoholic beverages and a more significant increase in the excise tax on tobacco.

[English]

All of these are very important measures in the Government's efforts to address the deficit and to achieve economic renewal and sustained economic growth.

Some Hon. Members have stated that this Bill will raise over $2.5 billion in new revenues in the next fiscal year. They are absolutely right. None of us want to raise taxes, but these are exactly the tough kinds of measures that are required to take control of the deficit and to look to the future with renewed vigour and renewed anticipation of jobs for all of us.

I recall the active and thoughtful discussion which was part of the budget debate in the weeks after my colleague, the Minister of Finance, introduced the Budget on May 23. I certainly recall how well aired and discussed in this Chamber these issues were. This is an appropriate forum for such debate and I look forward to discussing with Members opposite their views on our Budgets for many years to come. The Bill before us is an integral part of our first Budget and as such has already received an open and ongoing discussion as part of the budget debate.

I wish to remind all Hon. Members that as part of the Government's May Budget, the Minister of Finance tabled a discussion paper entitled The Canadian Budgetary Process—Proposals for Improvement. That is of great interest to us and one of the key elements addressed in that document is the parliamentary process of consideration and implementation of budget proposals. This process has been the subject of criticism in recent years, partly at least because of the lengthy delays experienced in passing tax legislation such as the legislation we are considering today. It has become common for proposals from one Budget to be under consideration at the time of the tabling of subsequent Budgets. These delays in enacting legislation cause confusion to taxpayers and make the administration of the tax system considerably more difficult and less efficient. In some cases these delays deprive taxpayers of early payment of tax refunds to which they will become entitled under budget proposals. The paper on the Canadian budgetary process is a proposal for future improvements so that we can get around some of these difficulties for the Canadian people.

The Government is committed to early implementation of improvements in the process. In this regard the Government has moved quickly to bring budget legislation before Parliament in this session and, after second reading, the Bill before us will be referred to a legislative committee. This will expedite consideration of such budget proposals, facilitate a more detailed and thorough review of all aspects of new tax measures and still be more efficient with regard to how taxpayers can deal with their affairs.

We have taken important steps in our Government toward improving the budget process; but the measure will only work if Hon. Members are prepared to allow Bills such as Bill C-80 to progress to subsequent stages of consideration after reasonable debate on the principles. We believe this has now occurred and that we should move quickly to complete second reading consideration of the Bill and refer it to committee for detailed consideration.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Government is again introducing time allocation with respect to a Bill on which there has been a limited amount of discussion in the House, although it is a Bill which fundamentally affects the lives of many individual Canadians and the whole thrust of Canada's economic planning. Since the House resumed its sittings under the present Government we have seen time allocation, or closure, introduced with respect to a number of Bills. This is a Government which promised a more open Government and reform of the rules of the House of Commons.

The Government moved time allocation on the Bill with respect to the reduction of family allowances. It moved closure on the Bill with respect to compensating uninsured depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank to the tune of $875 million. Notice of an intention to introduce a closure motion has been given with respect to the employment equity Bill. Today we are seeing the disgraceful introduction of time allocation on a Bill which will take $2 billion out of the pockets of low and middle income Canadian earners.

The Government wishes to rush this Bill through the House without full discussion. This is clearly a Government which is in trouble with its image. It intends to move to prorogue the House and, thus, Bills are being rammed through regardless of quality and regardless of the views of the public.

Let us look at the measures contained in the Bill on which the Minister has moved time allocation. I am sure she must be embarrassed by this move since I do not really believe she herself is in favour of this type of measure.

The Bill upon which the Minister has moved time allocation introduces a flood of taxes, taxes on non-prescription drugs, pet foods, an energy excise tax and a tax on building materials, all designed to take some $2 billion out of the pockets of consumers.

In its Budget the Government gave us no agenda for economic growth. Even worse, it is now taking money out of consumers' hands which might have encouraged a consumer-led recovery.

• (1115)

The sales tax which the Minister has told us is fair is not fair. A sales tax is a regressive method of taxation. It bears equally on those people able to pay and those not able to pay.

The construction industry has made many recommendations on the sales tax on building materials. It has pointed out that many companies are locked into fixed rate contracts on which they are going to lose money—and this applies particularly to smaller construction companies—as a result of the increase in sales tax on building materials. Their representations are not being listened to.

The tourism industry claims that the 4 per cent increase in the price of gasoline will cause a reduction of 900,000 in the number of American tourists visiting Canada for a year and could cost our economy $135 million and over 5,000 jobs. Their representations have not been heard either.

The Canadian trucking industry is complaining that the higher gasoline costs are going to impair its competitive position. The municipalities are complaining that the increased costs of construction materials may result over-all in a loss of $1 billion to municipalities across this country and these costs are again likely to be passed on to the taxpayer in terms of municipal taxes. It is estimated that the cost of a new house may go up $600 or $700 as a result of these measures.

When you add the general sales tax increase and higher fuel costs to the other budget measures, the cuts in the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation budget and the elimination of the RHOSPs, we can see that this is a heavy blow to the construction industry at a time when it is just beginning to recover from the recession.

The total bill which individual Canadians will have to pay in 1990 and 1991 as a result of the sales tax measures before us today, and the changes to the income tax which will be forthcoming in other legislation, will amount to $6.7 billion. The Government's justification for this is that it is important to reduce the deficit. No one questions that it is important to reduce the deficit. However, this Government is spending very lavishly and freely in other directions at the same time as it is imposing and loading up taxes on low and middle income Canadians.

The forecast documents of the Department of Finance, which were leaked to the press and became public knowledge at the time of the last Budget, show the Government's plans to reduce federal-provincial transfers by $2 billion in the year 1990. This is a cut which will have long-term influences on post-secondary education, health and many other services which are provided by the provinces. How can this Government claim that it believes in equality of opportunity for Canadians when it is cutting post-secondary education, the means by which bright young people, whose families are not well off, can still benefit from all the opportunities available in our society?

The same Government that is loading taxes on low and middle income Canadians, cutting transfers to provinces, and cutting back on regional economic expansion, post-secondary education and health is proposing a billion-dollar tax giveaway to a large energy business. It is proposing a capital gains holiday for very wealthy Canadians without any concomitant requirement that those who benefit from a capital gains holiday invest the money in Canada or create a single job in Canada.

The practice of limiting debate in the House is a serious one. This practice was used very sparingly by the last Government, but whenever it was used it drew howls of outrage from Members opposite who are now introducing a motion to limit debate practically every week on serious matters. The Government has no agenda for economic growth and no vision of progress for Canada, but it is not willing to allow the voices of the Opposition to be heard, just as it is not willing to respond to pressure from public groups.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, this is indeed a dark, dark day for democracy in Canada. It is a dark day for the House of Commons. I know many of my friends opposite have gloomy clouds hanging over their heads as they have to sit and listen to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) once again do the dirty work of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

She said that she has been instructed by the Government to introduce time allocation. That sounds like a nice term, Mr. Speaker. What it actually means is that the Government is going to gag the Members of the House of Commons and cut off democracy. No longer will the duly elected representatives of the people of Canada have an opportunity to comment on a Bill that, according to the words of the Minister of State herself, will cost the taxpayers of Canada $2.5 billion next year. The Government needs money to give to Dome, the Reichmanns and the bankers. After all, the Government must dig the money up somewhere, and once again the poor Minister of State for Finance has to do the dirty work of the Minister of Finance who does not have the courage to do what is rightfully his job.

This is a dark day, Mr. Speaker. The term "time allocation" sounds as if the Government were going to allocate time for discussion. It means that it is going to allocate 120 minutes and then say that that is enough. We have spoken for 11 hours, Mr. Speaker. It must be difficult for you to sit there as a strong proponent of democracy and freedom of speech in the House of Commons. We have only about 100 minutes left now to discuss a Bill that will cost taxpayers $2.5 billion.

This Bill will do much more than simply take $2.5 billion from the pockets of taxpayers. It is going to slap an extra tax on the construction industry upon which we depend for a great deal of job creation and the provision of much needed housing. Not many months ago the people who now sit across the way were sitting on this side of the House saying that we must take the sales tax totally off construction materials. Now that they are in power they say, "Hold it, we have had second thoughts. Not only are we not going to take it off, we are going to add to it". Oh, Mr. Speaker!

However, that is not the worst of it. "We have another good idea," they say. "We are going to tax everyone in the whole country, rich and poor alike. Whether you are from the poorest or the richest family, you are going to pay another 1 per cent sales tax on everything you buy". On top of that, if you have a canary and have to buy bird seed, or if you have dogs and cats, or children who want a bag of candy, they are going to tax that as well. How is this going to help Canada? I know Members Opposite, as responsible individuals, want to get the economy going. However, how will taking $990 million out of every single community do that? That will be the result of this 1 per cent sales tax increase in the next fiscal year. How is that going to help the communities of Clearwater and Barrière in British Columbia?

This legislation discriminates against western Canada most of all. The Government has decided it will tax especially those people who live in a region of Canada where goods are transported over long distances. This legislation will mean an extra tax on them because of an extra tax on fuel costs. That is simply a tax on distance, whether it be to a grain elevator or a mill pond in the forest industry. The people who make their livelihood by fishing on the West Coast or East Coast will be paying extra. Not only that, the tax will be passed right on down to the consumer so that everyone who buys a refrigerator, television set or shirt in western Canada will be paying more because transportation costs are being increased to the tune of over $1.3 billion over the next two fiscal years. The trucking industry must be leaping with glee over the fact that this new Government was elected in September of 1984. The farmers must be delighted, the fishermen must be excited, but the average consumer is absolutely dismayed along with all the other groups.

Then, of course, we have a safe tax, the one slapped on tobacco and alcohol. It is of course difficult to speak against those particular items, but one can make a case against increasing taxes on alcohol at the same time as we are taking out full-page ads in American newspapers asking them to come to Canada where their hospitality expenses will be much greater, and accommodation will be much more expensive because of the tax on rooms. Food is more expensive. When you buy gas to travel across the second largest country in the world, you will be paying much more than you do in the U.S. because of the increases in gasoline taxes.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We have a Tory Government here, though; that is the appeal.

Mr. Riis: I will leave that unsaid, Mr. Speaker.

This legislation is regressive because it means everyone pays, no matter what. Consequently the taxes take up a larger portion of the income of low-income earners. The Canadian Council on Social Development has estimated that for a family of four the sales and excise tax increases will result in the following. If your family income is in the $15,000 range, the tax increase will be $140 next year. If you are in the $20,000 range, the increase will be $282. If your total family income next year is $40,000, you will be paying an extra $361. As the Minister of State for Finance said, and I appreciate her honesty, the Government needs the money. The Government will need the money in order to make up for the $500 million in free capital gains tax. It will have to find the thousands of millions of dollars if it is going to bail out banks, especially foreign bankers. It will have to find the money somewhere in order to give Dome Petroleum a billion dollar tax dodge or to pay for an extra billion dollars in tax loophole dodges for the Reichmann brothers in the Gulf deal.

• (1130)

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) stood in her place to announce the Western Accord. That will cost taxpayers of Canada $9 billion over the next five years. That money must be found and the Minister of State for Finance has decided to dig into the pockets, wallets and purses of ordinary Canadian taxpayers. The Government will not look to upper income-earners or impose additional taxes on large corporations. It will look to the ordinary Canadian citizens, the individuals who are struggling to get their lives back in order and put their sector of the economy back on track.

Yet, the sinister Government will be reaching again to rip hundreds of tax dollars from their pockets in the next fiscal year in order to pay for the large corporate giveaways, the large corporate bail-outs and foreign banker bail-outs.

I think that today is very instructive. We have seen the Government go to ordinary Canadians to pay off its friends in the upper income, wealthy corporate brackets. It will not allow Parliament to discuss this because it is bloody well embarrassing. Therefore, it introduces closure and time allocation. The Government is muzzling Parliament and gagging parliamentarians. What we are seeing today is very instructive and it is a model of what the new Government of Canada stands for. As I said at the outset, it is a very dark day for democracy and the Parliament of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I had prepared a marvelous speech, but I think I must first correct the two previous speakers and what they said about the time allocation measure the Government is about to impose on debate. I am thinking more particularly of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), who used the same argument the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) used last week, when he spoke of a black day for the parliamentary system, not because we were choking off debate but just because we were limiting the time available to the House for delaying tactics so we could proceed with concrete measures.

Mr. Speaker, we must remind the new Members, and I am one of them, of the basic principles according to which this Government intends to operate: the three stages, namely, consultation, Parliament and action. I have been through those three stages, and I found them very instructive. Regarding consultation, we are no longer talking about consultations held in the past.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has just tabled two excellent documents and is already talking about the next Budget. He also mentioned his disappointment about the fact that the opposition has failed to produce any constructive work on the technical documents he tabled when he brought down the last Budget. Since the opposition is so reluctant to work constructively, he has no alternative but to rely on the people.

The arguments we heard this morning have added nothing new to the debate. In fact, they merely confirm what Canadians are saying when they ask us to stop our endless arguing in Parliament and do something. Actually, we have opportunities for some very effective work sessions when we go to committee.

Mr. Speaker, it was a revelation for me to see that at the committee stage, we can examine Bills with the help of Government and outside experts, while continuing direct consultations with witnesses that have been invited to appear before the committee. Personally, I can hardly wait to see the real world in committee, not people who have only negative criticism to offer. As soon as the legislative committee meets, it will invite as many witnesses as we want, and that is when we will have an opportunity to consider Bill C-80 in detail.

The motion for time allocation is entirely in order because it is part of a new approach taken by this Government since last September, a Government that wants to take action, and deal with the real world, either through consultation or by consulting with experts at the committee stage.

Mr. Speaker, I want to go back to the last election campaign, when the public was upset because it did not understand the televised debates. They heard people talking, and talking, and talking, and unfortunately, quantity outstripped quality by far. I remember the owner of a garage in the wonderful riding of LaSalle, who told me: Why don't you go to Parliament and show them how to run Parliament like a business, and tell them to stop trying to show us how to run a business like a Government? I think they were right. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that time has come for Hon. Members to act responsibly, to stop making meaningless and repetitive remarks and speeches, and then to take concrete action in committees where Government and private sector witnesses can provide relevant evidence.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-80 is a concrete extension of the last Budget which flowed from last November's economic statements. On September 4, 1984 the Canadian public gave Parliament a new steering course and elected a team of men with an unequivocal mandate. Canadians sent a team of new Members to Ottawa to tell Parliament they wanted action—no more of those redundant parliamentary debates which do nothing to check our ever soaring deficits.

In the month of November the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall)—worthy Ministers who do not shirk their responsibilities—came up with economic renewal propositions which were heartily welcomed by business circles. From that day on, we consulted the Canadian people to find out their reaction to our forthcoming Budget. We talked to Canadians, Mr. Speaker—businessmen, the unemployed whose ranks were shrinking, people who were paying interests which have since decreased, and others who were no longer stymied by spiralling inflation—and all of them were enthusiastic. I think that for the first time in the life of a Government our May Budget received a lot more praise than criticism. In fact, we were criticized for not going far enough. A good many people told us the Budget should have been much more drastic to cope with the pitiful conditions left behind by the previous Government.

All we need do now, Mr. Speaker, is put an end to procrastination and act decisively. When I say that I am not referring only to Bill C-80, but also to the recent invitation made by the Minister of Finance to urge all Canadians to respond to the principles advocated in the two consultation papers made public last week.

Mr. Speaker, I think that all Members have had plenty of time to have their say on Bill C-80, and they will be given further opportunities to voice their opinion on other constructive measures—and hopefully they will stop making meaningless speeches.

The Budget has already been debated at length and, in recent days, Bill C-80 has been the subject of more debates on specific issues. This morning Hon. Members opposite made 10-minute speeches and I would have thought they had something important to say, frustrated as they claimed to be. No, Sir, they kept repeating the same irrelevant inanities about the banks and arguing endlessly that our Ministers of Finance have failed to live up to their responsibilities.

Well, enough is enough, we are through talking, time has come to do something.

Mr. Speaker, I made a few calculations and the House might be interested to know that our time here is worth $80,000 an hour, which works out to $1,300 a minute or $13,000 for a 13-minute intervention. Do you not think that this money could be better spent in committee or anywhere outside this House, just so we might tackle other Bills which are not necessarily more important but which would be dealt with more expeditiously than this measure which has been debated ad nauseam? I would therefore urge all responsible Members of the House to give us their support, end this debate and refer the Bill to a legislative committee.

• (1140)

[English]

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I never thought that we would hear such a pathetic intervention as the one we just heard in the House of Commons. The Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) failed to find any good arguments to put forward on Bill C-80. He had to resort to the cost per minute to taxpayers of debating matters in the House. He was unable in his 10-minute intervention to say one thing, which his constituents could support, in positive terms about the Bill. The Hon. Member has lost touch. That is the only and most charitable thing I could say about his intervention this morning. Evidently he has not explained the impact of the Bill to his constituents. He would like to see the debate finished because he is embarrassed by the Bill. That applies to the totality of the Government. There is no other explanation which one can find as to why the debate on Bill C-80 should be choked.

The debate is being choked for the reasons the Hon. Member for LaSalle did not dare to mention, for example, that the Government is worried about its credibility. The sooner the debate is over, the better for the so-called Progressive Conservatives who, as time goes by, demonstrate that they are really regressive and conservative. When their credibility is in danger, they choke the debate; that is what they do. It hurts to hear what the Opposition has to say about the facts contained in Bill C-80.

The Government is beginning to become afraid. Its backbenchers, like the Hon. Member for LaSalle who is leaving his seat in fear, are afraid of the consequences of the Bill on their electors.

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is it not out of order to mention whether someone is or is not in his place?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. It is argumentative. I hope the Hon. Member will not raise such points of order, and I hope the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) will not mention whether or not a person is inside or outside the House.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, that is a pretty silly question by someone who has been in the House for over a year. The fact is that those back-benchers are afraid of Bill C-80. They failed in caucus to convince the Government to change it. The only avenue open to them is to see it moved ahead, out of the House and into committee, in order to avoid the embarrassing elements which can be raised. There are measures in the Bill which will hurt Canadians across the board.

By choking debate on Bill C-80, in essence the Government is saying that it wants to choke the debate on gasoline tax increases. Also it is saying that it does not want to debate the tax imposed on many categories of construction materials. It is really saying that it does not want to hear the facts about the taxes imposed upon equipment and construction materials used, for instance, in energy conservation. It does not want to hear any more about the taxes to be imposed on candy, soft drinks and pet foods. By choking the debate, this regressive Conservative Government does not want to hear anything more about the taxes on a wide range of health care products, which have been imposed in a mean and cowardly manner upon Canadian consumers, particularly upon elderly people. That is what is behind the intent of choking the debate.

The Government does not want to prolong the debate and hear the facts about how increased federal sales tax across the board will affect Canadians. On January 1, 1986, it will change from 10 per cent to 11 per cent. The Government does not want to hear the music any more. Its constituents probably have not been made aware about what is expected of them. The Government is choking the debate because it is politically unpleasant to have these things put forth in the House of Commons and through the media.

The regressive Conservative Government, as the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) pointed out, is imposing a number of regressive taxes which will hurt more those who have less. Consumers will have to pay something like $2.6 billion more in sales taxes by 1990 after this measure has been forced through as a result of the decision announced this morning. At the same time, corporations will enjoy a $2.2 billion decrease in their taxes, and the capital gains tax break alone will reduce the taxes of those who "have" by some one and a quarter billion dollars. That hurts, does it not? It hurts in terms of political popularity. That is why they want to choke off the debate in the House today. That is the reason. It is not for the reason given by the Hon. Member for LaSalle, who raised the red herring about the cost per minute of debate in the House of Commons. That was outrageous. There is a cost attached to democracy and, therefore, there is a cost attached to debate. The Hon. Member would have been better off giving us the reasons for the Bill having to go through.

The Government does not want to hear any further debate on the damage to consumers caused by their purchasing power being eroded when the higher taxes come into effect. It does not want to hear debate about the costs imposed upon many sectors of the economy as a result of increased taxes. For instance, because of the proposed increases in fuel costs as a result of the taxes proposed in Bill C-80, Canadian truckers will have more difficult times competing with their United States counterparts. This is why they want to choke the debate, is it not? It is not pleasant to hear the music.

They are changing the direction of the economy and imposing on consumers, the industrial sector and free enterprise a number to taxes which will make it more difficult for them to purchase and to compete. Hundreds of small and medium-sized construction companies will see their profit margins cut to the bone as they are forced to absorb a new 6 per cent tax on construction materials because of a regressive Conservative government measures in Bill C-80. Those involved in construction have to observe and respect fixed price contracts. They cannot change them when Ottawa changes the rules of the game.

The Hon. Member for Trinity already made reference to how the tourism industry will be severely affected in many ridings from Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland to British Columbia by the imposition of the sales tax on gasoline. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is preaching against the misfuelling of automobiles, while his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), is proposing through bill C-80 a tax on leaded gasoline that is lower than the tax on unleaded gasoline. Thus he is actually denying the thrust of the policy of the Minister of the Environment. It is a sham that two Ministers of the Crown are going in opposite directions regarding the same issue. This is why we feel a bit hot under the collar about this debate being brought to a halt by the regressive Conservative Government.

Canadians are beginning to realize that they were deceived on September 4. They are going to catch up with the Conservative Government step by step because of one measure after another. This particular measure is one that we will make sure Canadians will remember for a long time.

The list goes on. There is the imposition of a 6 per cent tax through this Bill on insulation materials, materials Canadians buy in order to reduce heating costs. There is the imposition of a 6 per cent tax on heat pumps, solar heaters and panels and wood-burning stoves. These are supplies that permit Canadians to insulate and maintain sources of energy other than costly ones and these supplies are being taxed.

What this morning's imposition of closure does to the credibility of the Government is that it reveals to the public that Government Members are uncomfortable with this measure and would rather sweep it under the carpet. Government Members do not want Canadians to know about the details of this measure and about how it particularly hurts the people on the street who have to purchase goods and whose capacity to buy will be affected by the imposition of such large-scale sales taxes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say that it is a particular pleasure to speak on this closure motion. To begin with, I want to quote from a speech the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made to the Canadian Tax Foundation on November 28, 1984. At that time, he said:

> As we grapple with the technicalities, the subtleties and the complexities of our tax system, we must never lose sight of the citizens it is ultimately meant to serve. That is what our efforts are all about. The real bottom line is people.

Today we are hearing his response to those particular remarks. Perhaps when he spoke of people, he meant only the people to whom he was speaking, the members of the Canadian Tax Foundation.

There was a time when closure was the ultimate step in the operation of Parliament. The Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) is probably the only person in this House who was a Member at the time C. D. Howe brought forth a closure motion on the pipeline debate. That motion of closure eventually caused the defeat of the Government. The Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, who was Leader of the Opposition at that time, made claims which these Progressive Conservative Members have forgotten. He said that under no circumstances did a Government have the right to gag Parliament. At that time, in 1956, as the Minister of Veterans Affairs will recall, the Conservatives were elected to government because the Liberals brought closure on the pipeline debate.

I had hoped that this Government would remember the days when closure meant the gagging of Parliament. Now it does it on a daily basis and acts as if it had the right to decide when Parliament is through debating a Bill. The Government does not have that right. Parliament has the right to make its own decision on that matter. Government Members form only one group in this House of Commons.

Government Members are now doing something which they claimed for years while in opposition and in government they should not do. Decisions are being made on the basis of how they affect the attempt to get rid of the deficit. I will use the issue of transportation as just one example of this.

My particular interest lies to a great extent in the transportation of grain. A decision has been made that the user will pay for the cost of transportation of grain, something that never happened in the past. The Government decided to charge for the movement of grain and to increase that charge until it will eventually be a major cost to the producers who are shipping and exporting grain and providing the Government with a large portion of its foreign exchange.

There is now a user-pay policy regarding transportation, but this country was built on the philosophy that transportation should be a service paid for by all of the people of Canada, thus allowing all parts of Canada to have the same access to central Canada and the ports. We are moving further and further away from that philosophy. As it stands now, the producers who live a long way away from the ports of export have to pay more to get their products to port.

I repeat that I am using the area of transportation as just one example of the Government's attempt to reduce the deficit. I am sure each Member of the House can give another example of this. In the area of transportation, the Government is moving toward cost recovery for services it provides, including ice-breaker and navigational services and communications services which are required for safe and effective transportation. The Government has decided that the people who use those services will pay for them. This will again increase the cost of transportation to those who are further away from the port. The further away a producer lives, the more it will cost him to be a part of the country.

Third, through the Bill we are discussing today, the Government has increased taxes on fuels that are used for transportation. In one single year, the Government has increased the cost of transportation to the extent that many farming areas are becoming less and less viable as time goes on. Effective transportation is the basis of a viable farming industry. If the farmers and producers cannot get their products to market at a reasonable cost then there is no point in producing them. Consequently, the remote areas of our farming communities are becoming less and less viable. So not only will the Government not allow us to put these arguments forward, but it is closing off any attempt to put them before the country.

The Government is increasing the cost of living for middle class Canadians all across the country. In particular, it is affecting the cost of production of the primary producers, the fishermen and farmers who provide the major portion of funds which go into the economy. If we did not have those primary producers then we would not have any of the rest of our economy. The base of our country is still made up of primary producers, fishermen, miners, foresters and farmers. Everyone else uses their products and moves them around, which is the basis of survival.

How long would the financial structure of our country last if we did not have a basic economy which depends upon primary producers? The Government has established a broadened base with respect to sales tax and excise tax in order to obtain a few billion dollars which it has already spent in providing tax relief for companies such as Dome Petroleum and for the takeover of Gulf by Olympia & York. This is the basis of its tax measures. The money has already been spent. It is taking away from middle class Canadians.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I too rise in opposition to the closure motion which has been put before the House of Commons with respect to Bill C-80. I find it particularly frustrating that the Government has chosen this particular route to chokeoff debate with respect to some important economic measures which will affect Canadians right across the country. On numerous occasions in this Chamber and, indeed, in other areas of the country, I have voiced my concern with respect to the less fortunate regions and individuals in society who are having an extremely difficult time living in a difficult economic world. However, when I see Government measures such as Bill C-80 and this closure motion I find it even more perplexing and frustrating.

The Government has attempted to increase taxes in a number of areas which will affect Canadians in a negative way. I make mention of the imposition of the sales tax on carbonated beverages, candy and confectionery and pet foods. This particular proposal will have a devastating effect on small companies in my constituency.

When one looks at the history of this particular measure one notes that there has been no consultation—none whatsoever. In September and shortly thereafter the Government of Canada claimed in this Chamber and throughout the country that as a national Government in a period it deemed one of national reconciliation it would travel across the country and consult with Canadians. It said that it would not just listen but it would talk to Canadians and interested groups and it would share information on a variety of subjects. Unfortunately, and

I say this with great sincerity, the Government did not do that in this particular instance. It went ahead in May of this year and implemented a Budget which affects small bottlers and small companies across the country in a negative way to the extent that we will find that these small companies will either go out of business entirely or they will have to implement massive lay-offs across the board.

Perhaps we on this side of the House have been wrong. We thought that the Government was concerned about small businessmen and small companies across the country. I think the facts are in place to show that it is not concerned about small businessmen and small corporations. It has designed its policies to assist and improve the economic viability not of small businessmen but of larger corporations which can afford to change, which have individuals on staff who are prepared to conduct the research and planning. That is what the Government has done in this particular instance. It is acting against the best wishes of small Canadian buusinesmen with respect to the imposition of this particular tax on carbonated beverages. It has never been done before. It will add substantial costs that will not only affect the labour component but that will add dramatically to the cash-flow problems of small Canadian entrepreneurs.

Why is the Government doing this? I suggest it is because the Government is concerned with promoting a select few, who are, however, friends of the Government, who contributed handsomely during the election campaign. The measure which is before us to chokeoff debate denies Parliament and the representatives of the Canadian people the right to debate that very issue here on the floor of the House of Commons.

Members of the Government can say: "Oh well, you will have a day or two to discuss these particular measures". I suggest that these measures are fundamental to the economic viability of the small business sector of the country. We ought to debate them and debate them for an even longer time and in more detail so that Canadians will know, and rightly so, just where the Government stands on the issues which affect them. Last week was Small Business Week. We now see the Government, which was elected with an overwhelming majority, betraying the wishes of the small business sector.

There are other measures which I find to be distasteful with regard to Bill C-80 and with regard to the motion to choke-off debate. What about the sales tax on health goods? Granted, there have been some exemptions since the tabling of the Budget. However, there needs to be more exemptions. The Government went from coast to coast advocating a consultative policy and it has not implemented one. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier) will avail himself of the opportunity to stand up in the Chamber and denounce this particular imposition and use his clout within his own caucus to have this particular measure changed. I happen to believe that the Parliamentary Secretary does not agree with these devastating measures. He does not agree with the imposition of the tax on health goods.

I hope that Government Members will not be pussy-cats or sheep when it comes to this motion. We saw a good example of Government Members being sheep with respect to other Bills which have come before the House. I hope that Government Members, whether former athletes or would-be athletes, will have the intestinal fortitude and the conviction of their constituents to put partisan politics aside and stand up to be counted. I hope they will do that. I hope that the former journalists who now sit in the House on the Government side will avail themselves of this opportunity to stand up in the Chamber and echo that sentiment with respect to choking-off debate on an important piece of legislation which will affect Canadians from coast to coast. And it will affect them in a negative way.

Surely, as parliamentarians, hearing reports of what has happened over the last number of weeks with regard to poverty, the Government would not want to exacerbate that situation. The very taxes it intends to impose upon the Canadian people will affect the poorest in our society. I hope that all Members of Parliament on all sides of the House not want to exacerbate a situation which is already difficult. I hope that the Government will see the wisdom of withdrawing this particular motion so that all Members of Parliament, including those in the Government, could participate in a full and open debate on the subject matter of Bill C-80 which affects all Canadians from coast to coast.

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, this Government is committed to cutting the deficit and to renewing the economy. These are two objectives which one would hope any reasonable Opposition would welcome and to which it would give its co-operation. However, day after day the Opposition erects one parliamentary road block after another so that there is no reasonable alternative left but for us to move time allocation and to transfer this debate into committee.

I listened to a number of opposition speakers this morning call this measure a choking off of debate. It is just the opposite. Debate is not going to be choked off. There will be an adequate opportunity to examine the legislation in detail through committee study. There will be further debate in this Chamber and there will certainly be lengthy debate in the other place because the Opposition has its own means of communicating with it. There will be considerable oppportunity to study this Bill in length and in particular.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo)—so far the only opposition speaker to remain in the Chamber despite their concern for democracy—with great interest as he recalled events which took place in 1956 because of my own recollection of the great pipeline debate. The fact is that in those days this House had a constructive, co-operative and rational Opposition, something it certainly lacks today. There is no practical alternative left to the Government but to introduce the measure which is before us, because what the people of Canada want is not simpy unlimited discussion of this legislation, but action—

Mr. Riis: Raise their taxes.

Mr. Stackhouse: —which will carry this country forward, and they are going to get action which will lead to the reduction of the deficit and which will continue the renewal of the economy.

Mr. Hovdebo: And higher taxes.

Mr. Stackhouse: We have heard one opposition speaker after another indicate that if Bill C-80 becomes law, it will have a negative effect upon the economy. The facts are just the opposite. Most of these measures were announced in the Budget last spring and are now in place. What has been the result of the Budget of last spring on the economy? There has been the beginning of the renewal of the Canadian economy which this Party promised. It is a promise which this Party is fulfilling.

Mr. Riis: There's more to Canada than Toronto.

Mr. Stackhouse: We will get to that. Perhaps the opposition speaker would take his seat rather than stand half in and half out of the Chamber. I wish there could be a recognition from the Opposition of the kind of economic renewal which is being enjoyed now, particularly by small business. We were told by one of the previous speakers that this measure would have a negative effect on small business, and I would like to quote the following excerpt from a report of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business:

> The combined employment and investment plans of small business are the most optimistic we have seen since the current format of Hard Facts was introduced in October 1983.

We have seen further evidence of economic renewal throughout this country. A negative reference was just now made to Toronto. I would like to quote from the Toronto Economic Trends. The geographical area referred to in the bulletin is the Toronto census metropolitan area which stretches from Pickering right through to Oakville and towards the north. It states that in the first quarter of 1985, there has been an improvement in construction of 31 per cent over 1984 in North York, Scarborough, Markham, Vaughan and Pickering.

Mr. Riis: What about Vancouver?

Mr. Stackhouse: We will get to Vancouver. What we want to recognize here is that the impact of the Budget, of which this legislation is an expression, has been economic renewal. The people of Canada have renewed confidence in the Government, in themselves and in their country and are willing to make investments and expenditures which are improving business and increasing employment. All the leading economic indicators support that claim. One of the reasons for this recovery is the way in which the Government has undertaken to address itself to the massive federal deficit which we have inherited from our predecessors.

Mr. Riis: Bank bail-outs. Dome bail-outs.

Mr. Stackhouse: This Government has shown its willingness to make the hard decision not only to restrain expenditures but to increase taxes, which is the other side of Keynesian economics. It has done this in a balanced way with a balanced taxation program which already involves increases to personal and corporate income taxes through the surtax of 1985. There has been the announcement that there will be a minimum tax imposed in 1986, and there will be increased sales and excise tax on some commodities. There has been as well a balanced approach in avoiding extreme cuts in spending. There has been no significant effect on our social insurance program and no extreme increases in taxation. So we are approaching the problem of reducing the deficit and at the same time renewing the economy with the kind of well balanced and rational method which is characteristic of this Government's economic policies.

Our constituents raised the question with respect to one of the recent statements of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson): "Why not stronger action?". That is a question we hear more often than the question put by Hon. Members on the other side of the House, "Why any action at all?" The answer by the Minister of Finance was, "Stronger measures in the shortrun could have jeopardized the economic recovery. Nonetheless, the impact of the action on the deficit builds up over time and such has already begun to be the result of the economic policies of the Government."

Mr. Cassidy: That's no defence of closure.

Mr. Stackhouse: So it is right that we should have this legislation before us.

Mr. Cassidy: That's no defence of closure. You don't trample on democracy and that's what you're doing.

Mr. Riis: Jack-boot tactics.

Mr. Stackhouse: It is right that we examine this legislation and debate its principles in this House as we have done over several days.

Mr. Cassidy: It's a crying shame that a man of your calibre is defending this motion of the Government.

Mr. Stackhouse: We should now transfer it into committee so that we can study it rationally, not with the irrational noise of which Hon. Members opposite seem only capable. We will then be able to go over it item by item, clause by clause. Therefore, I believe this measure is a reasonable one, and I therefore move:

> That, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(a), the House continue to sit through the lunch hour this day for the purpose of continuing consideration, together with any division if required, of the motion of the President of the Privy Council.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Could I have a seconder to that motion? The Hon. Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers).

● (1220)

According to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(a), if 25 Members rise in their places to object, the motion is defeated. Shall the motion carry?

And fewer than 25 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There not being 25 Members rising in objection, the motion, according to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(a) is deemed to be carried.

Motion (Mr. Stackhouse) agreed to.

Mr. Riis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I seek some guidance. My recollection is that it is inappropriate to refer to a division, as is the case in the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse). Is that not correct?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The purpose of the motion was to continue debate. It had nothing to do with the amendment.

Mr. Riis: Sorry.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We do not have a copy of the motion but from what we heard of it it may not be in order. Before continuing debate I wonder if we can have a copy of the motion so we may make appropriate argument? If the Government does not have a copy of the motion to give to the Opposition I think that in itself raises a question of order. One might ask what the Government wants to hide, why is it afraid to give us a copy of the motion?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The purpose of the motion was to continue sitting. It does not change the motion at all, so I see no reason for not continuing debate.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, as a Member who is still somewhat of a neophyte, I must say that—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I apologize to my colleague. As I understand the rule with respect to a motion of the nature which the Hon. Member intended to present, it refers only to continuing the debate and not to divisions. If the Hon. Member presented a motion dealing not only with continuing debate but with the taking of a division, I respectfully submit the motion is out of order and cannot be received and adopted at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Again, I say to the Hon. Member, who has been here a long time and is now operating under the new rules, this motion is just to continue debate. It has nothing to do with the division. It is to continue debate for the two hours and after the debate is completed we will then have the division. I see nothing wrong with that. The Hon. Member put the motion and I can read it again. He says, under Standing Order 9(4)(a), that the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of a motion relating to Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. I see no problem. I believe the former occupant of the chair had the same problem with the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) when this Standing Order was cited not too long ago. I believe it was well read and put into the Standing Orders. I see no problem with it. If there is, would the Hon. Member please advise me what he sees wrong with what has just been done?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have some difficulty in dealing with the matter since I do not have a copy of the motion. I appreciate your kindness in reading the motion, but the rule in question says that the motion must relate to the business then being considered. I respectfully submit that the motion in question does not relate to the strict terms of the rule because Standing Order 9(4)(a) says:

> When the Speaker is in the Chair, a Member may propose a motion, without notice, to continue a sitting through a lunch or dinner hour or beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of considering a specified item of business or a stage or stages thereof subject to the following conditions:

I have already read the relevant extract from the subclause which says:

> The motion must relate to the business then being considered—

I think there are extraneous matters raised in the motion which make it out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have to disagree with the Hon. Member, and I do not like to do that because he is a long-time Member of this Chamber. However, this is a continuation of the business at hand, the debate. Therefore, I see nothing wrong with this motion. I am not going to start reading the Standing Order because the Hon. Member is well aware of it, having just read it. It says as well that the Speaker shall ask those Members who object to rise in their places. If 25 or more Members then rise, the motion shall be deemed to have been withdrawn, otherwise, the motion shall have been adopted. What we are talking about here is a continuation of the debate in the House.

The Hon. Member might like to bring this matter forward to the Speaker at a later date in chambers and discuss this particular rule with him, or perhaps with the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). However, I feel that the rules are there and I hope the Hon. Member will allow the debate to continue.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise another point of order. It is customary, when motions are presented, to provide copies ot the opposition Parties. It makes it difficult to assess whether the motion—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Not every motion. If the Hon. Member would like a copy when a motion is presented, I will make sure that this is done. However, I do not believe that every time a motion is presented in the House, the House Leaders should receive a copy. Only copies of motions requiring notice should be provided, I am told by the Table Officers. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) rises on a point of order?

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe that my colleagues opposite mentioned the fact that we did not have that much time to debate such an important measure. It seems to me that we should now resume debate. We are trying to add one hour to this very important debate—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry—

[English]

That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) has the floor in debate.

Mr. McCurdy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I am glad to have it.

As I was saying, I am a neophyte in this House and I understand the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) is an extremely erudite man and regarded as a very able Member of this House. That is a reputation I dare not challenge. However, one does wonder how one so able can have such a faulty memory. He claims that the Government finds itself in office by virtue of its promise that it would cut the deficit and by so doing stimulate economic growth. It strikes me that the people most affected by the tax measures contained in this Bill heard a very loud refrain, which I really hesitate to repeat because the Government has been reminded of it so frequently, and that is the promise to produce jobs, jobs, jobs. Given the conditions which brought the deficit about, I would think the Government would say that cutting it would be best approached by creating the jobs which were promised rather than by taxing the poor. The Government could be increasing the graduated income tax, restoring it to the level of a few years ago. It could have hit with a litle more severity the $30 billion to $50 billion in tax expenditures which in the main benefit large corporations. It is those corporations which are not producing the jobs that the Government promised to deliver.

● (1230)

Having made those comments, which have been reiterated time and again in this Chamber, we are told that previously we had a rational Opposition. One would expect that those who were members of a rational Opposition would speak rationally when speaking in this Chamber as part of the Government. It seems to me that it is just a little irrational to suggest that by limiting debate through time allocation the Government is not, after all, limiting debate. It seems to me to be just a little bit irrational, on the part of one who claims to be a part of a rational Government, to suggest that increasing the sales tax for those who have litle disposable income will not affect the economy. I do not know how one can argue that taking between $2.5 billion and $3.5 billion out of the pockets of those who are most likely to spend their money as a necessity will not hurt the economy. He says, further, that the irrational Opposition has been putting procedural roadblocks in the path of the Government as it lurches toward its goal of ensuring that its friends benefit the most from the taxation system and that ordinary people suffer the most.

The fact is that no amendments have been moved by the Opposition. There have been no procedural roadblocks of which I am aware or of which he is aware. There are still a great many Members who wish to speak on the legislation before us.

Mr. Gurbin: Where are they?

Mr. McCurdy: They are here and available. Mr. Speaker, the Government has committed itself totally to consultation. Surely it is inconsistent with consultation, with whomever, to limit the debate as this motion does.

We have heard from the Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) about the failure to consult with the constituency of the Party that holds the reins of power. I personally have had conversations with representatives of the heavy construction industry who, as I am sure you are aware, Mr. Speaker, include many, if not a majority, who were somewhat pleased and encouraged by promises made to them by the Tory Party. They are now extremely angry, having had conversations with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and members of his staff and having returned to their offices, to receive an answer from the Government on the pleas they made. They are convinced that the Government is either perverse or completely committed to ignorance rather than to consultation in pursuing the measures that it has determined to pursue with respect to the sales tax on construction material. This will have a significant effect on many small businessmen involved in the heavy construction industry who will, due to the timing of the tax measures, lose a considerable amount of money due to contract commitments which cannot be corrected to reflect increased costs that they will face. This is from a constituency which I am sure the Tory Party would have considered to be its own and which is now extremely angry due to the actions undertaken by the Government.

Cutting off debate is a pretty sorry way of demonstrating commitment to the democratic process and a pretty sorry way of reflecting a commitment to consultation. We are now told that not only will we have limitation of debate with respect to Bill C-80, but the equity Bill is going to be subject to the same kind of motion. That is the Bill, Mr. Speaker, that says that the Government is going to be counting minorities and counting them twice to see which corporations are naughty and which are nice. The debate on that Bill will be limited as well, in spite of the fact that it is a matter of extreme concern and has been the subject of numerous reports. Consultation has taken place on that subject but has resulted in a Bill which does not at all reflect the consultation that took place.

To return to the subject matter of the Bill before us today, it is a tax measure which has previously been described as regressive. We need not engage in fine arguments about that obvious fact, but I will simply point out that as a result of this legislation an invidual earning $20,000 per annum will pay an additional 1.4 per cent in sales and excise taxes while an individual earning $40,000 a year will only pay an additional nine-tenths of one per cent.

There is another aspect of this tax that is extremely significant and should be emphasized more than it has been in the House, and that is the effect of actions of the federal Government upon municipalities. Municipalities throughout the nation are limited in the funding of their activities due to another regressive tax, the property tax. Recently the Federation of Canadian Municipalities pointed out that there is in the neighbourhood of $10 billion to $12 billion of infrastructure needs that must be pursued and paid for but cannot be with the limited resources available to municipalities. In the particular case of Windsor the increased taxes imposed by the federal Government will lead to an additional $1 million in budget requirements for 1986. Therefore, an increasing burden is being placed upon an already burdened sector of Government, the closest to ordinary people, which will now have to increase another regressive tax, the property tax—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret, but the Hon. Member's time has expired. I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker).

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I will continue with the remarks of the hon. gentleman pertaining to municipalities. It is a funny thing to see Bills presented in the House which adversely affect municipalities, and at the same time to see Government action to try to collect moneys due the Crown from small and large municipalities as the hon. gentleman just pointed out. I believe that the Department of Finance has a lot of explaining to do in this area, especially when it reviews its books and discovers that in the early 1970s certain municipalities in the country owed it money. In effect, in 1985 it is saying that the municipalities must pay what it is believed they owe dating back to 1972 and 1973, and they must also pay interest on that money.

In Newfoundland alone there are 80 municipalities which are judged to owe the Department of Finance funds due to a misunderstanding in an agreement between the federal and provincial Governments. The Department of Finance says that this is the time to collect. This is the time that the Government of Canada wishes to collect as much money as it can. It is telling these 80 municipalities that they owe money plus interest dating back to the early 1970s. As the hon. gentleman pointed out a moment ago, on the one hand the Government hits them with a tax increase on items which will adversely affect development in those municipalities and thereby cripple their ability to collect extra revenues while, on the other hand, they are told that they owe money, dating back to the 1970s, and must verify that they owe these amounts of money and confirm that these debentures are correct. While it is likely that this problem is confined to certain municipalities, there is certainly an imbalance when the Government turns around to say it will cut back on various services.

The Bill we are concerned with today provides for the imposition of sales taxes on energy conservation equipment. There is also the imposition of sales tax on previously exempt construction and building materials. At the same time, the Government of Canada will discontinue programs that assisted the construction industry, the lumber industry and the carpenters and plumbers who are out of work. We know what has happened to the RRAP program, the COSP program, the CHIP program and other programs. As a result of discontinuing these programs, the federal Government will adversely affect the number of jobs and the amount of money that flows to the very small communities in this nation, including communities in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and rural Quebec. Not only is the federal Government discontinuing these programs which were absolutely necessary in these rural areas, it is imposing taxes on previously exempt materials that involved the construction industry in those small communities.

The Government, through this Bill, proposes to increase the excise tax on wines. We should consider the control mechanisms that are in place in the various Government departments. Will those sections of the department be subject to the same policy of control and no expansion of person years that we are seeing throughout the federal bureaucracy? At a time of controversy concerning the contents of certain imported wines in this country, Canadians also see a Minister who is abrogating his responsibility under the Food and Drug Act in this area, passing the matter on to the liquor control boards, while at the same time increasing the excise tax on those particular products.

We on this side of the House are most amazed by the Government's policy concerning closure. There is a small Opposition in today's Parliament, yet the federal Government decides to use closure practically every day. It has been used by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall). Other Ministers have introduced closure on other Bills. We have never seen a Government introduce closure on so many Bills.

I am sure that Canadians have not forgotten that prior to the election campaign Conservatives complained that the Liberal Government rammed Bills through Parliament by the use of closure. If one were to read the speeches made by Conservatives prior to the election, one could see how they condemned the Government for the use of closure in order to ram measures through Parliament. However, what do we see? Today we see a tax Bill being rammed through Parliament with the use of closure. It might be understandable if there was a large Opposition which filled all of the benches on the left side of the Speaker, but the fact is that there is only a small Opposition. This oppressive Conservative Government has decided to impose closure to shut people up and ram an unprecedented number of Bills through Parliament in a short period of time.

The fact is that I am sure most Canadians know why the Government is doing this. We believe it is attempting to shut down Parliamant for an extended period of time, perhaps to give time off to its MPs. However, why do MPs want time off? Their duty is to be in the House of Commons. Certainly they do not need two or three months off at Christmas-time. Does that mean that the employees of the House of Commons will have a vacation? No, the employees of the House of Commons—

Mr. Boudria: They cannot even get one day off.

Mr. Baker: No, they cannot even get time off now when they want it, under this administration.

However, the Government would give MPs a vacation so that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and cabinet Ministers would not be under fire in the House of Commons and would not have to face the press. That is why closure is being used on so many Bills before the House. What is most outrageous about this closure motion is that the Bill we are dealing with proposes tax increases that will affect poor people more than rich people. As various organizations have indicated recently in the national media, this Bill affects poor people like poor fishermen and poor farmers of whom there are many in this country because of adverse weather conditions and so on. It affects poor people in general more so than it affects Members of Parliament, lawyers, doctors and those who own a lot of property.

The Government will impose a sales tax on items that were previously exempted and on which poorer Canadians spent a proportionately larger amount of their income. For that reason, this is a bad measure which should not be passed through this Parliament. The time allowed to debate this measure should not be limited simply because the Government wants to get off the hook. It should not be rammed through Parliament by closure because MPs want an extended Christmas vacation. Those reasons do not wash with the poor people of this country.

It is unfortunate that it is the poor people who sometimes do not have the opportunity to make us aware of how certain measures will affect them. We must remember that poor people use gasoline, pet food, carbonated beverages and they eat candy and confectionery.

You are rising to cut me off, Mr. Speaker. I have been speaking for only five minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): You have been speaking for 10 minutes. I regret, but that the Hon. Member's time has expired. I always enjoy listening to him.

[Translation]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate you on your French. I would like to take part in this debate on closure. It is now the fourth time since the session was resumed last September that the Government has imposed closure on our debates. The Government imposed closure to put an end to the debate on a Bill which involved an expenditure of some $875 million to assist the depositors of two Western Canadian banks. Then, closure was imposed on the deindexing of family allowances. The Government has also announced its intention to impose closure on the employment equity legislation. This Bill is very weak, Mr. Speaker, and it will finally cost about $2 billion annually to the taxpayers, but the Government is still imposing closure after only 11 hours of debate.

[English]

I want to participate in the debate on this Bill because I am very upset not only about the Bill—I have had an opportunity to speak on it—but with the process being used by the Government in this particular case. The Government has imposed closure on four occasions this fall. It is becoming clear that after six or seven hours of debate on any major measure, the Government becomes nervous and its finger begins to quiver at the trigger to terminate debate. The disturbing thing is that this was the case, as it was with Bill C-80, when the opposition Parties, certainly the NDP, were prepared to agree with the Government to bring the debate to a close, to have the vote, to indicate our opposition and to let the matter go to a legislative committee.

• (1250)

I was particularly disturbed by the intervention of the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse). He, above all, as a theologian and a man concerned about civil liberties, should be concerned about what is happening to this Parliament as a consequence of the frequent use of closure by the new Government. Prior to September 4, last year, I recall how many times the Conservatives objected to the Liberal Government because, they said, that the Government of the day was ramming through legislation. Yet closure is now being used as frequently by the Conservatives, the new Government, or more so than it was by the Liberals before them. In their view it is becoming an accepted parliamentary practice. As far as my Party and I are concerned, it is not an acceptable parliamentary practice.

The Government is undermining the spirit of the reforms of Parliament on which a special committee of the House of Commons submitted three report and which all Parties have been trying unanimously to reinforce. We are trying to reinforce Parliament, on the one hand, and the Government, on the other hand, is doing its best to undermine Parliament by terminating debate.

Was the termination justified in this case? No, it was not. We had debated a multi-billion dollar tax measure for a matter of 10 hours or 11 hours. Frankly, that is not very much time. We had reached the point where, according to the House rules, the contributions of Hon. Members limited to 10 minutes apiece. That means that if every member of the Opposition had a chance to speak on second reading debate, we would perhaps have had another eight hours or ten hours of debate, or maybe two days or three days of debate; no more than that.

In my view it is unreasonable for the Government to jump to the closure remedy when in fact there is not a problem which justifies the use of it. By using closure and by abusing it in this way, for whatever reasons it may be doing so, the Government runs the grave risk that the co-operation which this place needs in order for the House of Commons to work will be permanently lost.

The new rules provide for the creation of legislative committees. Those committees were intended to free up the standing committees of the House so that those standing committees could look into matters of special importance. At the same time, they were intended to expedite the Government's handling of House business. A legislative committee would be established as soon as a Bill passed second reading and would begin meetings, as has been the practice now for several weeks, within three days or four days of second reading being given to a Bill by the House of Commons. Therefore, the Bill had the possibility of coming back for report stage and third reading in a very short period of time. There have been some problems in the early days of the legislative committees with Government Members, in my view, being too insistent that the legislative committee terminate its work very quickly. Nonetheless, the idea in part is that there would be trade-offs between what happened in the House of Commons and what happened in the legislative committees. If, however, the Government is not prepared to talk through the usual channels about how that will be done, if it intends to use closure to terminate debate and then use its majority in the steering committee of legislative committees to limit the consideration of Bills when it gets down to the details, the frustration of opposition Members will have to find an outlet. The concerns which we express on behalf of Canadians from coast to coast will have to find an outlet. In my opinion, that will inevitably lead to a situation where report stage or third reading stage of Bills will be prolonged, perhaps unnecessarily as far as the Government is concerned, or to a situation where the Government, having fallen into the trap of using closure on second reading, will wind up using closure on every stage of Bills before the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members have said that they think the Government has a hidden agenda. They want us out of this place at Christmas. They want to have a rest for a couple of months so that they can regroup. I see the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) smiling in assent to my particular statement. Obviously she is agreeing. Maybe she disagrees; maybe she does not think that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should be going in this particular direction. Maybe she feels that this is an unworkable strategy being imposed upon Cabinet by the éminence grise in the Prime Minister's Office who thinks that this is the way to get the Government back on the right rails. Let me tell her that the Government would do a much better service to the people of Canada, if it intends to change direction, by keeping Parliament in operation and by bringing us back on January 15, rather than running away from us. It could come back with a new agenda on January 15, and we would be prepared to consider it. It should not hide and abuse Parliament by using closure. It should not use these procedural tricks. It should not undermine democracy, which is exactly what is happening by the use of closure.

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that we are not objecting simply to the Bill. The problem now concerns the responsibilities and rights of Parliament itself. If the Government imposes closure on all its legislation at the second reading stage in the House of Commons' the Opposition parties will inevitably have to find other means to express the views of Canadians on legislation which our Party finds unacceptable for the great majority of Canadians.

Of course, in the parliamentary system, the Government has the right, and we accept this, to hold votes, and to have the assurance that its measures will be considered, and with a majority, probably adopted. However, if the Government tries to put an end too abruptly to the debate by imposing closure, we shall find ourselves in a similar situation to that existing under the former Liberal Government.

As for us, Mr. Speaker, we have often said that the two parties are like Visa and Mastercard, or as my friend Jean-Paul Harney in Quebec says, they are like Ding and Dong. It is very difficult to differentiate between the former Liberal Government and this Conservative Government.

Last year, on September 4, Canadians voted for a real change. They wanted a Parliament that they could see working. They believed the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he promised an era of civility in this Parliament. However, we will have no civility, Mr. Speaker, with measures like the motion of closure now being imposed by the new Government and it is not just one instance but four in the course of this session, and apparently, the Government intends to continue its abuse of Parliament. I deplore this behaviour, and I ask the Government to abandon a measure that undermines the rights of Parliament.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the House is meeting this morning to consider once again a motion of closure presented by the Conservative Government, a Government that was elected little more than a year ago with a huge majority, a Government whose majority in the House is sufficient for the Government to operate and make the parliamentary system work.

That being said, why is a Government with such a large majority abusing the powers it has in this House? Mr. Speaker, last year, when the Conservatives made their promises to Canadian voters, did they promise that if they were elected, they would abuse their democratic powers in the House? I don't think so, Mr. Speaker.

Last year, during the election campaign, the Conservatives promised Canadian voters many things, but they did not promise to abuse their power.

[English]

This is probably the most controversial Budget ever introduced in the history of the country. The Budget introduced by the Conservative Government is an awful one. The Budget is so bad that the Government has decided to try to salvage whatever credibility, as small as it may be, it may have left. It has decided to rid itself of what may be left on the political agenda.

How has it done this? First, the Government has a grand scheme whereby it will move closure wherever it can, get everything off the legislative agenda, adjourn the session, and return in February or something like that. I should like to indicate how that strategy works on paper.

Mr. Ravis: Where did you get your information from?

Mr. Boudria: I hear the Conservative Member. I must say that if he is a Conservative and has not figured it out yet, surely the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Cabinet are keeping him in the dark a lot more than they are keeping the rest of us in the dark. He must feel like a mushroom.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): In more ways than one.

• (1300)

Mr. Boudria: My colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), says, "In more ways than one".

Returning to the Conservative strategy, the Government has decided to remove everything from the Order Paper of the House. It will withdraw Bills, let some die on the Order Paper and pass other Bills quickly because its credibility has been so badly affected by the Budget, the issue of the banks and everything else. The grand scheme, as I have just described it, will work on paper. However, in reality, it will not work that way at all. By attempting to stifle Parliament, Conservative Members will not gain any more respect from the voters.

Conservative Members have the theory that if Parliament does not sit, the Opposition cannot ask embarrassing questions and if the Opposition cannot ask embarrassing questions, the Ministers will not be embarrassed and will presumably rise in public opinion even if they keep on making the mistakes that they have made in the past. That is what Conservative Members think.

[Translation]

However, Canadians are smarter than that, Mr. Speaker. Canadians have already realized this Government made far too many promises, and that in many cases, it is not in a position to keep the promises it made to Canadian voters, and furthermore, has no intention of doing so.

[English]

Perhaps you are asking yourself, Mr. Speaker, why I am saying this. Let me give you some tangible proof. I have raised in the past the fact that Conservative Members made many promises to the Canadian people. I have here my little booklet of 338 Tory promises, a booklet which, incidentally, I will gladly send to any voter who makes a written request to my office. May I just add that several Canadians have already written to me asking for copies of this booklet. I am always glad to oblige.

My booklet indicates that 113 Tory promises involved spending more money and five promises involved spending less money. There were two promises to increase revenues and 26 promises to decrease revenues. Earlier on this morning, a Conservative Member, and I think it was an Hon. Member from Scarborough, had the unmitigated gall to say that the Government was elected to decrease the deficit. If the Government was elected to decrease the deficit, why did the Tories make so many promises to spend more money? Perhaps the Conservative Member across the way can tell us how he can save money by promising to spend more. Perhaps he can explain all this to us.

What has the Government done? It has cut back all over the place. It has cut back on very important social programs. It has cut back in the public sector. It has cut back almost everywhere. Has it done this to decrease the deficit? No, Mr. Speaker, it has done this to give the money to its rich friends. That is what the Government has done. They are using the money to make political appointments and bank bail-outs.

I understand that another Hon. Member wishes to speak briefly. I will give him the opportunity to do so because this is a very important debate and unfortunately Hon. Members have been stifled.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in the one minute left to me I would like to say that if I had known that the Government intended to use time allocation in the way it is now using it, I would never have supported the changes to the Standing Orders. I would never have supported moving to 10-minute speeches on second reading debate. That move was intended to allow the Government to plan its agenda and to foresee how long debate on certain Bills might take given that some Bills would take longer than others to debate.

When we studied the changes to the Standing Orders, it was never thought that the Government would find it necessary, or desirable if not necessary, to use time allocation as it is now using it on almost every single debate. I find it offensive that the Government has chosen to do so.

When we sat together as a committee some two years ago or more, we agreed that there was a need to change the Standing Orders in order to allow for a speedier passage of Bills at the second reading stage and to allow the Government to see how long debates might take given that until fairly recently, speeches went on for half an hour each for an indeterminate period of time. I am disappointed that the Government is now, in my opinion, breaching what I understood to be the agreement that we would not see the unfettered use of time allocation in the way we are now seeing it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being 1.05 p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 84 have expired. Accordingly, under the terms of the Standing Order, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

Mr. Hnatyshyn, seconded by Mrs. McDougall, moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-80, an act to amend the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the said Bill; and that fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hnatyshyn), which was agreed to on the following division:

Mrs. Mailly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, an Opposition Member entered the House after the vote was called, and I would like to say that the Member in question was the Hon. Member for the riding of Cape Breton-Richmond East (Mr. Dingwall).

[English]

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct. I was not in my place when the vote was called but I was here while the vote was being taken.

Mr. Speaker: In which case, the Hon. Member's vote may not be counted.

I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Speaker: It being after one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1.30 p.m. the House took recess.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BROCHURE SHOWING EMPTY CHAMBER

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I recently had occasion to glance through a colourful brochure entitled The House of Commons/la Chambre des Communes. Inside the pamphlet it states: "The House of Commons is the focal point of parliamentary democracy". I agree that it certainly is that.

My interest having been aroused, I looked further into this brochure only to be confronted by an empty Speaker's chair. Curious. It is not the chair itself which is vital to this focal point of democracy, but rather its occupant. Fearing the worst,

Mr. Speaker, I turned to the end of the brochure and, yes, there it was—an empty Chamber!

Whoever prepared this otherwise attractive pamphlet failed to realize that this lovely, old, noe-Gothic hall is irrelevant without its Members. Without the people's representatives, Sir, it ceases to be the focal point of democracy. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope that this publication will be withdrawn very soon and, when it is reissued, let it depict Your Honour presiding over a full and active House. Democracy is not an empty Chamber, it is a rigorous reality.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—NON OBSERVANCE OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, regardless of who finally wins in Guatemala's presidential election, the fundamental problems of human rights abuses must be faced before Guatemala can have any international respect. Showcase elections cannot lead to an open, democratic society so long as 900,000 Guatemalans are forced into civilian patrols, a conscripted army of occupation over their own brothers and sisters.

There cannot be any open society so long as people are herded into so-called model villages where they are under constant military surveillance. There can be no open society so long as trade unionists, church leaders, and university students and professors are made to disappear whenever they speak out for change. There can be no open society so long as the undeclared war continues against Guatemala's Indian people.

The present, Government of General Mejia Victores has refused even to meet with high level mediators for the families of the disappeared who continue to occupy the cathedral in Guatemala City. The Canadian Government must speak out on these fundamental abuses of human rights, and I urge individual Canadians to join me in sending telegrams to the Guatemalan Government demanding a full accounting for the families of the disappeared.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

REVOCATION OF TRAVEL PASSES—PLIGHT OF PENSIONERS

Mr. Moe Mantha (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, recently the Canadian Pacific Railway, a private sector company controlled by shareholders, negotiated with three of its major bargaining groups representing about one-half of Canadian Pacific Railway's unionized employees. In their settlements it was agreed to eliminate free passenger passes for current employees. In its new pension plan the company will introduce an early retirement provision at age 55 and replace the pass privileges with a new extended health care plan. While the new health care plan could be commended, it does not necessarily enhance health benefits for current CP pensioners residing in Ontario or Saskatchewan who already enjoy extensive health coverage.

Since the unions do not represent current CP Rail pensioners, nor are they legally allowed to negotiate on their behalf, the company unilaterally revoked pass privileges from its pensioners without sufficient consultation. Mr. Speaker, I urge Members on all sides of the House to offer their support to the pensioners in their efforts to have the option of retaining their pass privileges. The reason for my statement is to help the elderly who need help.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT'S PERFORMANCE

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Today, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay particular homage to the best Government this country has had for a very long time. It has been years and years since the Canadian economy has felt so buoyant. Day after day it is becoming ever more obvious that this Government is rebuilding our economy.

In the first nine months of 1985, Mr. Speaker, the value of building permits has gone up 20 per cent over the same period last year. The inflation rate has been hovering at about 4 per cent for more than a year and the climate is more stable than it has ever been since 1971. In the first nine months of 1985 bankruptcies have decreased by 12 per cent as compared with the same period last year.

That is why I would like to congratulate this outstanding Conservative Party team and the greatest Prime Minister of all times.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

CANADIAN-JAPANESE INTERNED DURING WORLD WAR II—REDRESS ISSUE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government's silence on the Japanese Canadian redress issue gets more depressing. Over the weekend in Calgary the President of the National Association of Japanese Canadians stated: "Mr. Mulroney indicated prior to the election that if he were Prime Minister he would surely compensate Japanese Canadians, but now he says they really aren't going to compensate us. I guess power does that".

The Government's attitude is distasteful. Despite his campaign pledges for a fair and speedy resolution, the Prime Minister shamefully and arrogantly continues to refuse even to meet the Association.

Also, the new Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek) has failed to make any public announcements on this to date. Instead of resuming official talks between his Government and the National Association, he prefers to conduct ad hoc, informal chats. The issue demands and deserves much more than that.

There is well-founded fear within the community that the redress issue is not a priority of the Prime Minister. Moreover, they believe that the "reinvention of the wheel" process conducted by the new Minister of State for Multiculturalism is ineffectual and time-delaying. I, therefore, call upon the Prime Minister and his Government to maintain their electoral promises and to reconvene immediately official negotiations with the National Association so that the redress issue can be dealt with in an expeditious, fair, and honourable manner.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROPOSED PERSONNEL CUT-BACKS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is growing concern among employees of the federal Government about the Conservatives' budget decision to fire large numbers of federal public employees. Last May the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced that the Government would eliminate some 15,000 public service jobs within five years. However, the reports that have leaked out give a rough count from just a few Departments of more than 10,000 cuts, many of which are scheduled to take place in the coming fiscal year. If this trend continues, we may see the 60,000 cuts that the Clark Government attempted to make in the Public Service. This will result in a significant loss of service to Canadians, and represent hardship for many employees who have honourably served Canada for many years.

Clear information is lacking, and the Government's system of redeployment of surplus employees simply will not be able to cope with the large number of lay-offs now being announced or threatened. As the Auditor General pointed out last week, the Public Service Commission is not effectively monitoring the situation.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to note that the Government's decision to use the reverse order of merit in determining staff cuts is inviting abuse on the part of departmental managers who are free to operate with a policy of vengeance and vindictiveness as they target for cuts employees they have never liked. I call on the Government to take private sector examples which show that, if lay-offs cannot be avoided, the seniority principle is the best way to determine who is to lose their jobs. I call on the Government to use the seniority principle, starting now, and to reinforce job security for public employees rather than undermining it.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

FIVE-YEAR AGREEMENT TO ASSIST BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, since coming to office one year ago the Progressive Conservative Government has initiated new programs and improved existing ones that directly benefit British Columbia. These include the over-all umbrella ERDA, a $525 million funding agreement for economic development, between the federal Government and the Province of British Columbia.

The five-year agreement will provide joint funding for initiatives in forestry, industrial development, tourism, agriculture, and mineral exploration. Over the term of the agreement it is expected that 15,000 person years of employment will be generated in forest management. A full-time federal forestry Minister was appointed in response to concerns expressed by British Columbia, which is by far the largest producer of forestry products in Canada.

The Government is actively involved in negotiations with the United States to head off U.S. tariffs on Canadian products.

The latest figures from Statistics Canada prove that the Government is doing a good job for B.C. The Retail sales in B.C. this August were up 11 per cent compared to August of last year. The unemployment rate in B.C. has fallen from 15 per cent to 13 per cent. There are 23,000 more jobs in B.C. since September of 1984. Business bankruptcies in B.C. in the first nine months of this year were down 16 per cent relative to the same time last year. British Columbia exports in the first half of 1985 are up by 8.3 per cent. Mr. Speaker, these are positive steps, but there is still more to be done.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ST. CLAIR RIVER POLLUTION—RESIDENTS' FEARS

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat surprised by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) raising a matter in the House last Friday concerning an environment problem in the St. Clair River and my riding of Kent.

I must emphasize that we can and indeed should trust the ability and expertise of the Ontario Ministry of Health and the Environment Ministry, as well as Environment Canada. Having said that, I want to encourage continuation of the extensive efforts to determine the source of toxic material found in the sludge at the bottom of the river, and to ensure on-site monitoring equipment at water intake points.

Quoting unidentified sources which indicate that the St. Clair River is more polluted than the Love Canal has succeeded in putting communities like the town of Wallaceburg in a panic position. The Town Council must and should rely on reports it is receiving from the Ministry. Politicians who attempt to gain visibility and recognition by spreading fear, should be ashamed. Smearing the ability of a team of Canada's best scientists, who were already on the scene before the Member for Essex-Windsor made his pitch to panic residents, is appalling.

Wallaceburg Town Council should be congratulated for being aware of the seriousness of the situation, and also for the professional way in which they have co-operated with the health officials. It is safety first, along with common sense, in Wallaceburg. I would urge my hon. colleague from Essex-Windsor to confine fear tactics to his own riding.

AIR TRANSPORT

TRANSPORTATION TAX IN THE NORTH

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, you would think that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) would have some say in Cabinet when it comes to issues like transportation in the North. However, much to my chagrin, Cabinet has not chosen to listen to the strong supportive letter which was directed to Ann Marie Dawe, President of the Consumers' Association of Canada, Yellowknife local, which states:

Dear Ms. Dawe:

I share your concerns regarding the removal of the $30 ceiling on the air transportation tax as expressed in your letter of July 24, 1985. I will be raising this issue with my Cabinet colleagues with a view to obtaining an exemption from the tax increase for northern and remote areas.

Such an exemption was also supported in a letter from another Minister, the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. Murta). Such an exemption was also supported by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) and by the Hon. Member from Yellowknife. Four eminent Members of the Conservative Party believe that it is wrong to impose further air taxes on travel in northern Canada.

Why have the Cabinet and the Government ignored the representations of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the representations of the Deputy Prime Minister, the representations of the local Member, and the representations of the Minister of State for Tourism on an issue which quite clearly penalizes the people of northern Canada?

I would ask that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance review this—

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF SILICON CHIP FACILITY IN OTTAWA

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the recent recommendation by the Canadian Microelectronics Corporation, a non-profit organization funded by the Presence in Gallery

Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, that the Government fund the establishment of two silicon chip facilities.

Having worked over the past year with members of the Ottawa-Carleton high technology community in encouraging the Government in this initiative, I am particularly pleased that CMC has recommended Ottawa as one of the sites for the proposed centres. The corporation has suggested that the Ottawa centre would co-exist with the Ontario centre for microelectronics, presently located in my riding of Ottawa West.

This is an important announcement, not just for "Silicon Valley North" in that it recognizes this region's unparallelled high technology infrastructure, but for the development of science and technology in Canada that is so essential for the continued economic growth of Canada.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

EFFECT OF DOUBLE TRACKING ON KAMLOOPS BUILDINGS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, Canadian National Railways have been double tracking throughout western Canada. In the Kamloops area, the construction of a second track has caused serious ground vibrations throughout a major part of the city. Co-operation between city council, CN and concerned citizens resulted in a study which indeed revealed that it was serious ground tremors, as a result of a second track, that have caused structural damage to the homes of a number of residents.

The matter has been brought to the attention of the Chairman and members of the Standing Committee on Transport as well as of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski). Both have indicated that they would look into this situation.

I urge the Minister of Transport in particular to contact Canadian National and encourage them to slow down the trains as they go through this critical area in order to minimize the vibration and structural damage, and to compensate those home owners who can justify clearly that they have in fact experienced structural damage to their homes as a result of CN's double-tracking program.

[English]

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CANADIAN BOOK PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Acting Minister of Communications, apparently following a policy enunciated by the former Minister of Communications, had advocated a strong Canadian cultural policy with respect to our book publishing industry. This has particular relevance in view of the potential takeover of Prentice-Hall.

My question arises out of a reported letter from our Ambassador to the United States to the effect that this posture on behalf of the Canadian Government is jeopardizing our negotiations in the matter of trade with the United States.

What is the policy of the Government of Canada, reflecting upon the potential takeover of Prentice-Hall? Who is speaking for the Government; the Acting Minister of Communications or the advocacy of our Ambassador to the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the House and the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would know, the Prentice-Hall question is before Investment Canada for decision and that decision will be taken there.

I should reiterate to him, as he well knows, the determination of this Government to maintain and strengthen the cultural industries and cultural expression of Canada, whether that is in any negotiations that might occur with the United States, or elsewhere.

My collegue, the Acting Minister of Communications, and I, have made it quite clear that we intend to meet personally with representatives of the cultural industries in Canada, including the publishing industry, to make sure that their interests are well reflected and well protected in any negotiation that might occur.

[Translation]

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES—CANADIAN POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if that is to be taken as a statement by our Secretary of State for External Affairs, it means his ambassador in the United States is in for a letdown.

In any case, could the Minister clarify the position of the Government of Canada? Is our publishing industry on the table as a subject for negotiations with the United States, yes or no?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is not new to Government. He knows perfectly well it is an ambassador's responsibility to reflect the situations he encounters. That is one of the duties of our ambassadors. I am proud to say that Canadian ambassadors are performing their duties very effectively.

As far as the Hon. Member's question is concerned, it is clear that the Canadian Government, through the statement made by my hon. colleague, the former Minister of Communications as well as by other means, has given a clear signal of our determination, not only to protect but to promote the development of our cultural industries, and that includes our publishing industry.

[English]

AGENDA FOR NEGOTIATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think our Ambassador to the United States, within the terms of his letter, was not only reflecting the reactions that he met in the United States but was also advocating a diluting of our cultural nationalism. I think it was clear from his letter.

My question for the Minister is made necessary because the Government has adopted a strategy of keeping Canadians in the dark as to what is on the table and what is not on the table; what is a subject for negotiation and what is not a subject for negotiation. Is our publishing industry part of a negotiating item on the agenda with the United States, or is it a matter that will be left apart and intact?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was a member of Governments which concluded international trading negotiations in the GATT and elsewhere, from which the people of Canada were excluded utterly. That approach has been changed by this Government.

• (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There has already been a process of consultation more complete than any which has been known in this country, in preparation for any negotiations that may occur with the United States.

Mr. Broadbent: Now answer the question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That consultation will continue. There have been meetings with provincial Ministers of Trade. There will be, as I have indicated, meetings directly between myself and the Acting Minister of Communications with representatives of the cultural industries.

Obviously some of our cultural industries are interested in achieving access to the larger markets which are available in the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Some of them are; obviously some of them are not.

Mr. Ouellet: The answer is yes.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is the purpose of the consultation in which the Government is involved.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

STATUS OF BOOK PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Presently we do not have tariffs on books coming across our borders. Right now, $600 million worth of American books come across our borders duty free.

From what the Acting Prime Minister just said, are you caving in to the kind of pressures which will open up our borders—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mrs. Finestone: If the book publishing industry is central to Canadian nationhood, is it or is it not on that hit list to be considered under free trade negotiations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no hit list. The Hon. Member has indicated that there is a situation in which United States books come tariff free into the country. The Hon. Member will also know that there are a number of Canadian operations publishing books and other periodicals which are interested in access to a larger market. We think, if there is to be a negotiation with the United States, it would be the height of folly for us to say, before those negotiations began, that we are going to cut off the opportunity for Canadian publishers to have access to larger markets. We are interested in strengthening the situation of the Canadian publishing industry, and we are determined to do that.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, that is not what I asked the Minister, and I shall therefore repeat my question.

This Government reestablished the rules of the game for the Canadian publishing industry. It published them in the Canada Gazette in July. Am I to understand today that the Government is going to change and modify the rules of the game for these sensitive cultural sectors?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for a long time, Government policy in Canada, as embodied in the Liberal Government, failed to defend Canada's cultural interests, and it was because of this that the former Minister of Communications made a policy statement on the publishing industry in July. Of course, a policy formulated by a Minister of our Government is a policy of this Government, that is clear.

[English]

AMBASSADOR'S ALLEGED LETTER—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In July, the former Minister, the Hon. Member for Frontenac, announced a tougher Canadianization policy in the publishing industry. In August, we now know, our Ambassador in the United States sent a letter advocating the abolition of this policy, warning of a scorched earth attack emanating from the U.S. unless it was abandoned. On September 26, the very day the Prime Minister announced trade talks with the U.S., the Government also announced the abandonment of the policy in the takeover of Classic Books, no doubt hoping that it would be buried in the news. My question to the Minister is a simple one. Why did you abandon Canadian interest in the face of this U.S. pressure?

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I suppose, with a Member less experienced with the House of Commons, two errors in parliamentary procedure would be excusable. They are not, with the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party. First, he knows that he is talking about a leak, a rumoured leak.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Rumoured leak!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He is talking about the leak of a document which may or may not have been written by the Canadian Ambassador to the United States, with regard to the policy of the Government of Canada indicated by the Minister of Communications. That policy, initiated or stated by a Minister of the Government, is obviously the policy of the Government.

UNITED STATES PRESSURE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, that is precisely our concern, and we want a change in that policy. That is what we are talking about.

On the weekend following the resignation of the Minister of Communications, we also had the U.S. Ambassador to Canada appealing to put our cultural industry on the negotiating block. Last Monday, Secretary of State Shultz, in a meeting with the Minister, specifically called for the publishing industry to be put on the block.

Once again I ask the Minister why he is yielding to U.S. pressure. Why does he not stand up for Canadian cultural integrity and say that our publishing industry is not up for negotiation?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the point is clear to the people acquainted with the interests of the publishing industry in Canada, that there are some aspects of that industry which are concerned about the possibility of negotiations with the United States. There are some aspects of that industry which are looking forward to the opportunity for substantial, new markets being available to them, available to Canadian publications. The Government of Canada is committed, without any question, to expanding and strengthening the Canadian publishing industry. That is why we are going to be involving representatives of that publishing industry directly in our preparations for any negotiations that might ensue. We want to protect those who require protection. We want to achieve larger access for those who are looking forward to larger access. That strenghtens Canadian cultural industries. That is what we are seeking to do.

PRENTICE-HALL TAKEOVER BID

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I wish, for once, the Minister would answer a direct question. Since the alleged letter from our alleged Ambassador in the U.S. said that there would be a scorched earth policy emanating from the U.S. if the Prentice-Hall takeover bid in Canada was not approved, will the Government announce now that it will not approve this takeover bid, and give us a clear answer? Will the Minister say that our publishing industry will not be negotiated, will not be part of the trade talks, and that the Government of Canada will stand up and protect our cultural sovereignty, at least in this area?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Government has already acted to protect Canada's sovereignty in so far as the Arctic and the North are concerned, after two decades in which that was ignored and abandoned by the Liberal Government, supported by the NDP. That was one action to establish the sovereignty of Canada.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): A $1 billion flag-pole.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): With regard to the Prentice-Hall decision, that is before the Investment Canada Board now. There will be a decision by the end of December, and the Hon. Member knows it. He should not tie his interest so absolutely to newspaper reports. If he is interested in those questions, his credibility would climb if he pursues those questions on their merits, not because they simply become a subject of publicity.

With regard to the cultural integrity of our country, the Government is determined to maintain and strengthen our cultural integrity. To repeat myself, we know that there are aspects of the cultural industry which are concerned about potential negotiations. We are taking account of that. We know there are sections of the Canadian cultural industry which look forward to larger markets—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

LICENCE GRANTED TO ALLEGED MERCENARY TRAINING SCHOOL IN NEW WESTMINSTER, B.C.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Is the Minister aware of the Eagle Combat and Bodyguard School near Vancouver, run by a veteran of guerilla wars in Africa and allegedly providing training for guerilla and mercenary activities? Could the Minister tell us whether the RCMP has investigated this operation? Considering Canada's position on international terrorism, will the Government take steps to close it down?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Commissioner of the RCMP that there is a training school providing self-defence and related training to the public, licensed and operating in New Westminster, British Columbia. It is operating under a municipal licence in British Columbia. Any questions which the hon. gentleman might have in that regard could be directed to the Attorney General of British Columbia.

There is no indication of any criminal offences being committed in connection with that school which teaches self-defence and related training.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What related training?

Mr. Crosbie: Surely we are entitled to learn the art of self-defence. That is something the Hon. Opposition might learn.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I ask if there is any place in Canada for a school like this, run by an ex-guerilla fighter in Africa, and for people, it seems, involved in militant international activities.

An Hon. Member: Is there any proof of that?

• (1430)

Mr. Allmand: I am asking that this be investigated—

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Is this an allegation?

Mr. Allmand: It seems that the Government approves of this type of school. I am asking the Minister if the Government has or is developing a policy to deal with schools like this which are proliferating in the United States and are of no good to a country like this.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this is a school that apparently provides general self-defence and bodyguard training, which training is offered to the general public.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You sound like a broken record.

Mr. Crosbie: If you do not mind, I will answer the question. It is licensed and operates under a licence issued by the Municipality of New Westminster, British Columbia, and is doing nothing which we know is in violation of the law. What kind of procedure is the hon. gentleman suggesting should be taken in connection with such an institution that is not operating illegally and is licensed?

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CANADIAN BOOK PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. With regard to Ambassador Gotlieb's communication of August 6 in which he advised the Government to reconsider its policy of increasing Canadian ownership in domestic book publishing, has the Minister instructed Ambassador Gotlieb that, in line with the cultural sovereignty arguments the Minister has been making, Canada will not be reconsidering its policy of increasing Canadian ownership of the Canadian book industry?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Government of Canada is clear, as stated by the former Minister of Communications in July. I was surprised to hear the Leader of the New Democratic Party suggest a few moments ago that he wanted that policy to be reconsidered. That is his position, but the position of the Government of Canada is clear.

In so far as the Ambassador to the United States and anything he may or may not have said in private communication is concerned, the Ambassador knows, and the Hon. Member should know, that ambassadors give advice. It is Ministers who decide policy. The policy of the Government has been decided by a Minister of the Government as expressed by the former Minister of Communications.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the problem for the Ambassador is undoubtedly that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has said something contradicting the former Minister of Communications, as indeed did the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given these conflicting signals, will the Minister now communicate clearly to the Ambassador in Washington that it is not the Canadian Government's policy to renege on its policy of increasing Canadian ownership in Canadian book publishing?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one thing that is abundantly clear is that this Government, unlike the Government that preceded it, has been acting vigorously to promote, assert, and strengthen the sovereignty of Canada. We did that in the North, we have done it on other fronts, and we are doing that in publishing.

With regard to the publishing industry, we are aware that it is a complex industry with different interests. That is why we are consulting directly with cultural industries. We will provide support where it is needed. We will help to seek new markets where those are needed.

HEALTH

CONTAMINATED ITALIAN WINE

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. For the second time in as many months the Government has failed to protect the health interests of the nation. First the Government failed to remove the contaminated tuna until forced to do so by the Opposition. Now we have learned of the problem of contaminated Italian wine. Upon learning of the contamination of the wine, why did the Minister not issue an immediate health warning and follow it up with the complete removal of the contaminated wine from consumers' shelves?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the House on Friday last, the information regarding contamination in certain Italian wines was received by the Department through various international sources at the end of August. The information was conveyed to the various provinces, and particularly to the Province of Quebec in late August. The provinces immediately undertook to start the testing for diethylene glycol. If the Hon. Member wants further information, I can give it to him as well. The provinces removed the wine from shelves pending further testing and further results.

The question that has to be addressed now is not that the federal Government become a quality control and inspection operation, as that is the responsibility of the provinces, but I have undertaken today to have officials of mine meet with the provinces to determine further what kind of testing should be put in place. That meeting will take place on November 21.

FEDERAL TEST FACILITIES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister going to order his Health Protection Branch officials to step up checking at border points? The Minister knows full well that there are several provinces in the country that do not have the facilities to test wines and therefore the consumers in those provinces will not have their health interests protected.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that allegation is not correct. For up to 20 years some of these chemicals have been present in wine without our knowledge. Since the incident with the Austrian wine, the Government has taken action. We have an agreement with the Austrian Embassy that it will inform us. We are now going to make the same agreement with the Italian Embassy. We have also put a test in place which the various provinces can use and are using. We are going to have the meeting on November 21 to take further action. We are taking action, and I wish the previous Government had looked after the matter as well.

AUDITOR GENERAL

PETRO-CANADA'S ACQUISITION OF PETROFINA—ACCESS TO CABINET DOCUMENTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. On Friday I had the honour to be in the Federal Court when Justice Jerome, in strong and clear language, said that the public's right to know how its tax dollars are spent far outweighs the tradition of secrecy that surrounds cabinet deliberations. There is now no excuse. The Government has had the weekend to look at this matter. Will the Government now release documents regarding the Petrofina takeover to Mr. Dye, the Auditor General?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am still reviewing that decision. I did not have the weekend to look it over since I was in Newfoundland over the weekend on other important matters. I am sure the hon. gentleman will agree that this is a very important matter and the principles involved are too important for any hasty decision to be made. However, I can assure the hon. gentleman that a decision will be made this week.

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF CABINET DOCUMENTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand why the hon. gentleman is stonewalling and being such a pussycat to the federal mandarins and the senior bureaucracy. He and his Party promised this in the election campaign. There is no excuse now. The decision was clear. Quit pussyfooting around, quit stonewalling, and release these documents to the Auditor General.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if we want to be factually correct, there was no promise made during the election campaign that the Auditor General or any other person would be given access to cabinet minutes, cabinet documents, correspondence of Ministers and the like. That was never promised, but that is the effect of this judgment which is not being reviewed. The hon. gentleman can be assured that the decision made will be in the best interests of the House, the country, and the Members of this House.

HEALTH

RESPONSIBILITY OF WINE IMPORTERS

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has said that the importer is responsible for the quality of wine and its testing. Will the Minister also, through his responsibility under the law, make sure beyond any doubt that the importer does that?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, under the authority of the Food and Drug Act, the federal Government, and specifically the Department through the Health Protection Branch, has that authority. Diethylene glycol is an additive which is illegal in any food, and wine is classified as food for these purposes. We will withdraw any of the wines that come into question. Happily, so far the provinces, through their commissions, wherever these questions have come up, have removed those wines voluntarily. There is absolutely no doubt from this Minister's point of view that that wine will be removed if any traces of the substance are found.

PRESENCE OF MONOBROMACETIC ACID

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister spoke of diethylene glycol. Is the Minister aware that another dangerous substance called monobromacetic acid has been found in some wines entering North America? Is he aware of that? Can he tell the House what it is normally used for, apart from giving one a good kick?

● (1440)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it has been discovered in Austrian wines. To date, that is as of this morning, none of those wines have been imported into Canada, at least not to our knowledge as of noon today.

Sodium azide has been found in some Austrian wines. That is used as an additive for detonators.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, monobromacetic acid has also been discovered. None of it has been imported into Canada. I want to add that I always feel that my late mother was correct in regard to these questions.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ACCESS TO DOCUMENTS CONCERNING PURCHASE OF PETROFINA BY PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. During the election campaign the Prime Minister stated it was totally unacceptable that the Liberal Government should refuse access to Cabinet documents concerning Petro-Canada's purchase of Petrofina. Can the Minister of Justice now explain why this Government continues to deny access to those documents, after last week's ruling by Mr. Justice Jerome?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman may have had trouble understanding what I said in my previous answer. This is a very important decision with respect to constitutional questions of great importance to the country. That decision is now being reviewed. It is not just a question of having the Auditor General look at papers in connection with Petro-Canada's purchase of Petrofina. Why would we have any objection to that? The whole principle is whether or not the Auditor General can have access to every cabinet confidence and make it public if he wishes.

Mr. Broadbent: It is not every cabinet confidence.

Mr. Crosbie: It is not just a question of cabinet papers regarding Petro-Canada and Petrofina, which brings up the question: can Cabinet Governments survive if all deliberations of Cabinet are to become subject to public disclosure? That is the question I am considering. When the matter has been properly considered I will advise the House with respect to the decision.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT AUDITOR GENERAL HAVE ACCESS TO DOCUMENTS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is as though the Liberal Government were still in office, for nothing has changed since September 4 last year. Given the crystal clear ruling of Federal Court of Canada Justice Jerome, could the Minister of Justice assure the House that the Government will not thwart the ruling by launching an appeal? Are you stating unequivocally that no appeal will be made in this case and that the Auditor General will indeed have access to the documents?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that there are a million reasons why this Government is in no way similar to the Liberal administration: the decline in interest rates, the increase in the GNP, and all other reforms which have been instituted since—

Some Hon. Members: Enough, enough.

Mr. Crosbie: There are many reasons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, there are two other problems. Both the Turner administration and the Trudeau administration had the right to request that their papers be undisturbed by their successor administrations. That is also an issue involved in this matter. If Mr. Turner and Mr. Trudeau want to give consent to have their papers given to the Auditor General, then I would like to hear from them. I have not yet heard from them to that effect.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ST. CLAIR RIVER POLLUTION

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I have noted with grave concern the statements made by the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor with respect to the presence of toxic substances in a dark material found at the bottom of the St. Clair River. The fact of the matter is that the Ministries of the Environment have known about this substance for a good number of years. Can the Minister of the Environment dispel the concerns generated by confirming that the dioxin found was contained only in the analyzed sediment samples and not in the water samples?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I share the concern of the Hon. Member about some of the exaggerated rhetoric being resorted to in connection with the question he has raised. I can confirm that while there was a tar-like substance found in the St. Clair River which was found to contain hazardous chemicals, those chemicals were not found in the river at large, let alone in the drinking water. We are concerned and we are exercising proper vigilance—but we are not panicking. We are most certainly not encouraging others to panic.

Let me simply say to the Hon. Member, and through him to his constituents, that analyses of the water in the river at large indicate that the amount of chemicals is well within the World Health Organization guidelines for drinking water.

HEALTH

IMPORTATION OF ADULTERATED WINES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and it relates to tainted wines.

Despite the assurances the Minister is giving us today, one fact stands out—for more than a month new Quebec consumers have been exposed to wines which may contain diethylene glycol, something the Minister has known all along.

What I want to ask the Minister is simply this: How could he have been so indifferent to the health of Quebecers by failing to publish forthwith a list of tainted and sweetened wines and, instead of waiting for a whole month as he has done, to bring pressure to bear on the liquor board so that such products would have been immediately taken off the market?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, no, the Hon. Member is not correct in saying that I knew. As I said, the information which we receive internationally was passed on. Again, it needs testing. I guess one could make the argument that we should have pre-market testing of all wines before they enter Canada.

I specifically go back to the test for diethylene glycol which was a test performed after the first so-called Austrian incident. Quebec began testing. Quebec and Ontario are the only two provinces which have independent laboratories. All other provinces use either the Quebec or Ontario labs, or they use our labs or private ones. Even as late as October 16 those tests were very inconclusive. It was at that point in time that the Province of Quebec through the Société des Alcools du Québec, came to us and Ontario asking for further testing to see if we could corroborate what at that time were very inconclusive results.

I should also remind the Hon. Member that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a speech.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT PRODUCTS BE TESTED ON ENTRY TO CANADA

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, if it is now imperative to take a wine off the market, it was just as imperative to do so a month ago when it was thought to be dangerous to consumers' health.

Here is my question to the Minister: Can he assure us that henceforth products will be tested at the time of entry just so we know for a fact that wines unfit for consumption are not displayed in our liquor outlets and readily available to Canadian consumers?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am concerned, as I am sure the Hon. Member is concerned, that those wines which are imported are not adulterated. I have to say to the Hon. Member that it is for that very reason the meeting has been called for November 21. It is to see what other system should be put in place to ensure that if any gaps exist they are closed, and to see who should handle the responsibility. That is why we have taken a co-operative effort with the commissions. They are co-operating with us. I think that after November 21, even as this matter evolves further, we will have made sure that every co-operation and effort have been made, as far as our knowledge base goes in these areas and that, in fact, everything is done that can be done.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXPORT OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The External Affairs publication Canadian Export Control Law and Policy was in effect until March 1 of this year when it was amended. Will the Minister confirm that in the amended version of the policy handbook he has deleted the restrictions prohibiting the export of military equipment to regimes considered to be wholly repugnant to Canadian values, especially where such equipment could be used against civilians? Did the Minister delete this category and, if so, why?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have to read the version of the document from which the Hon. Member quotes.

Le me take this opportunity to repeat a request I made to the Hon. Member some six months ago when he raised questions concerning export controls. I told him that I thought the questions he raised were important. I was reviewing them, and I still am. I asked him for his suggestions. I have heard nothing but silence from the Hon. Member since that time.

Mr. Riis: I will certainly have my list to the Secretary of State for External Affairs later today just to be specific about it.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. On June 18, the day to which the Minister has just referred, he stated that he and the Government had expressed their revulsion to Chilean authorities with respect to the practices of that regime. Prior to March 1 of that year the Minister authorized over $6 million in military exports. Did the Minister violate the export policy then as outlined up to that point? Did he amend this policy to legitimize selling military equipment to countries such as Chile?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no, I did not do that. However, I think what has been violated is an elemental sense of responsibility in the House. Day after day the members of the New Democratic Party, including the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, raised questions seeking action by the Government. In a range of fields, including export controls, we have invited Hon. Members in the Opposition, if they are sincerely interested in the issue and not simply in headlines, to help us to come to judgments on questions which are difficult and important. I repeat, I have made that offer to the New Democratic Party and we have heard nothing but silence and we have seen nothing but irresponsibility.

COMBINES

FIXING OF INSURANCE PREMIUMS—SMALL BUSINESSES AND MUNICIPALITIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Small Businesses) and concerns the Combines Investigation Act, which indicates very clearly that any combination that occurs in setting the prices of insurance premiums is illegal in Canada.

It is obvious that insurance companies have acted as a group to set the price of insurance premiums.

What is the Minister prepared to do for small businesses and municipalities which can expect a dramatic increase in the cost of their insurance premiums, indeed as much as 1,000 per cent?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to answer this question by pointing out to the Hon. Member that we are currently reviewing the Combines Investigation Act. We will be recommending various measures to Cabinet which will be adopted very shortly, and we will announce what these changes contain.

[English]

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, the Minister should stop the blarney and start acting.

INCREASE IN INSURANCE PREMIUM

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Would the Minister tell the House what he is going to do about the case of the Hilan Corporation in Almonte whose insurance was increased from $6,000 a year to $47,000 per year? What is the Minister going to do about that?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, this will be part of the recommendations we will be suggesting to Cabinet and which will be adopted. My hon. colleague will be advised of what they contain at that time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DESTROYER REFIT PROGRAM

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Would the Minister tell the House how the Navy justifies a multimillion dollar refit for each of four destroyers when, as a Canadian Press report indicates, they will be destined for the scrap heap one year later?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, because of many, many years of neglect, we have a destroyer fleet which is in sad need of repair in order to make it safe for sailors to go to sea. There is a program to replace these destroyers with new frigates actively under way. In that meantime there is a need to refit the existing destroyers for the reason I have just given. We are doing that in a way to minimize the cost involved, yet make it possible for our ships to satisfy our NATO requirements.

The press reports are inaccurate. The first destroyer will be tied up in 1988 when the first of the new frigates is commissioned. As other frigates are added, the ships will be mothballed. But it will all be done in an orderly fashion so that we can maintain our commitments to NATO and at the same time do it as economically as possible.

LOBBYING

INTRODUCTION OF REGULATORY LEGISLATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Friday, in answer to a question about a future Bill for registering lobbyists, the Minister is quoted in Hansard as saying: "Of course, we are examining all options to prepare a Bill which will meet the needs of the business sector". Will the Minister now rise in this House and explain what he meant by that statement? Would he also explain whether or not in the legislation he will guarantee that the names of the clients will be listed, as well as the amount of the fees and, more important, the amount expended by lobbyists for their clients will be made public?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I mentioned Friday in my answer that we were looking at recommendations and various alternatives, since we want to be in a position to give this Government the assurance that our recommendations will be in the best interests of the business world, and that is indeed our intention.

PARLIAMENTARY LOBBYISTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Last September the Prime Minister promised that the Government would request lobbyists not only to register but also to make public the names of their clients, as is the case now—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is a long preamble. Is there a question?

Mr. Robinson: Why is the Minister failing to honour such an important promise to the Canadian public?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Through the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, we have assured the House on a number of occasions that we would eventually recommend guidelines to guarantee the integrity and openness of this Government, and that is what we intend to do when we will make recommendations on the lobbying Bill.

VIA RAIL

TREATMENT OF WHEELCHAIR PASSENGER

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Transport. Last Friday one of my constituents, Viola Powell, travelled by train from Toronto to Ottawa to attend a conference for the disabled. Although she booked her ticket more than a month in advance, the train services advertised by VIA Rail for wheelchair users were not available. As a result, she had to travel in the vestibule of a coach, with the baggage, and without access to a washroom for over five hours.

Will the Minister indicate if she is aware of any particular problems at Toronto Union Station which result in disabled Canadians being unable to travel in the dignity they deserve?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, this situation is evidently unacceptable. I am meeting with the authorities of VIA Rail tonight and I intend to raise that question with them.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED GUELPH TOXICOLOGY CENTRE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Given the visit of the Minister last week to the toxic chemical dumpsites along the Niagara River, would he say whether he is prepared to reverse the ill-advised decision of his Government last November to cancel the Guelph Toxicology Centre, and proceed with the construction of these much needed facilities?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am not even sure it is true that the Government has cancelled the plan for the Toxicology Centre. I know a very worth-while proposal was put to the Government which was being considered by my predecessor at the time I was appointed Minister of the Environment. That proposal still stands. However, the decision is not mine, nor the Government's, to make alone. All I can tell the Hon. Member is that we are considering the proposal. We recognize the need for toxicology and Guelph would be a very worthy applicant.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, are we on this side of the House to interpret the Minister's answer that he is putting the health of Canadians ahead of cutting the deficit, as the Minister of Finance did not a year ago when he announced the cancellation of the Centre?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, that question does not do the Hon. Member, or his Party, a service. I am quite convinced that if I were St. Francis of Assisi the Hon. Member would attack me for spilling bird seed on the ground.

MINES AND MINING

REOPENING OF CYPRUS ANVIL MINE AT FARO, YUKON

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. I wonder if the Minister would tell the House how he responds to charges which have been made by certain leading Canadian mining companies that the reopening of the Cyprus Anvil Mine at Faro will, first, disturb the international market for zinc and, second, is going to postpone other zinc operations which would otherwise possibly go into production? What is his response to those very serious charges by these companies?

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, the original report which was presented on this subject contained many inaccuracies. In the meantime there have been several stories and reports which say that this was a private sector initiative and it was the Legislature or Government of the Yukon which approached the federal Government for its assistance in the reopening of this mine, and that it can, according to as many as four reports, both engineering and feasibility studies, be a viable mining operation in the Yukon.

• (1500)

COMPANY PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister then concur with the view expressed by Mr. Clifford Frame that his company, Curragh Resources, is not receiving any special deal at all from the federal Government but is simply taking advantage of existing programs available to any mining company which wanted to use them?

Hon. Bob Layton (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, it is fair to say that this Government recognizes the very basic importance of the mining industry, and that all proposals for the development of this natural resource will be given the same kind of fair treatment.

PERMANENT AND PROVISIONAL STANDING ORDERS

NOTICE OF MOTIONS RESPECTING REGISTER OF FOREIGN TRAVEL BY MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it was Edmund Burke, in a speech to the electors of Bristol in 1774, who said:

> It ought to be the happiness and glory of a representative to live in the strictest union, the closest correspondence, and the most unreserved communication with his constituents... It is his duty to sacrifice his repose, his pleasures, his satisfaction to theirs; and above all, and in all cases, to prefer their interests to his own.

That principle has not changed since 1774. It remains as true today as the day Burke gave voice to this belief. We who serve in this place were not elected to serve our own interests, nor indeed any interests which run contrary to, or causes us to lose sight of, the interests, both individual and collective, of our constituents. That is not to say that in the interest of ensuring greater representation we must sacrifice the value of leadership and independent judgment. It is to say that when Members rise to speak or vote in this Chamber, the people of Canada must be confident that Members are acting in good conscience and in the larger interests of our land.

It is for that reason that I have today given notice of two motions which are directed at ensuring that Members' interests are declared. In these motions the Government proposes that the Standing orders be amended immediately to provde for a public Register of Foreign Travel by Members of Parliament, and that the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services be instructed to consider and report on the feasibility of extending the register to include, in the public disclosure of Members' other interests, the categories of interest that might be included in such a register.

[Translation]

For some time, the public, the media and Members of this House have been concerned about the fact that accepting trips abroad gives at least the impression of a potential conflict of interest. Mr. Speaker, no one would claim that all these trips are taken with no useful purpose. In an international community that is becoming increasingly complex, it is important that legislators have a thorough knowledge of the way of life and aspirations of people in other countries.

[English]

Recognizing this need for the exchange of information and views, the Government is calling not for an end to foreign travel but for the public disclosure of travel when the cost is not borne by the Member personally, the House of Commons, recognized parliamentary associations, the Members' Party or the Government of Canada. We believe that the people of Canada have a right to know if a Member of Parliament has accepted travel at the expense of foreign Governments or interests. Furthermore, we are convinced that the principle of declaring interests is of merit. To that end, we believe that an honest attempt should be made to establish a registry of Members' interests in order to permit the interests of the public to be served. At the same time we must attempt to ensure that the right of Members to retain a private life beyond the walls of this House is not violated. As Thomas Jefferson said:

> When a man assumes a public trust, he should consider himself as public property.

Ms. Copps: A man?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Thomas Jefferson said that, and that was before the Progressive Conservative Government of 1984 and its outstanding record on women's rights.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that with the responsibilities of public office comes the burden of public scrutiny. A Member's personal interest must be subsumed to those of the public good. To date, the responsibility has largely rested with individual Members to ensure that their actions as Members are above suspicion and beyond reproach. The Government believes it is important that there be no shadow of doubt cast on the ability of a Member of Parliament to represent adequately the views and interests of his or her constituents and the better interests of the nation as a whole.

[Translation]

The step we are taking today, and which we hope will receive the support of the opposition parties, is a logical extension of reforms we have already initiated.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that on September 9, the Prime Minister rose in the House to announce a series of measures dealing with a code of ethics for the public sector.

[English]

That package included a new conflict of interest post-employment code for public office holders, instructions to Ministers imposing specific and strict limitations on the hiring of family members, an experimental program of parliamentary scrutiny of Governor-in-Council appointments, the registration of lobbying activities, advice to Crown corporations respecting appropriate conduct in their dealings with the Government of Canada, and a review of the judicial appointments' process. This process of administrative reform directed at providing more open and responsible Government parallels the process of reform in the rules and practices of the House now under way. The objective of the House reforms is to ensure that the House of Commons and its Members have the necessary tools to play a greater role in the development of policy and in holding the Government to account for its actions.

If it is time, as we are convinced it is, for Ministers and other individuals holding government offices to be made subject to a comprehensive code of ethics, and if it is appropriate for the Government to restore authority to the House, it is also appropriate that Members of Parliament meet the high standards which will now apply to other public office holders.

[Translation]

It was for this reason, when tabling the other measures dealing with ethics in the public sector, that the Prime Minister wrote to the leaders of the Opposition parties, asking their help in establishing a code of ethics for Members of Parliament and suggesting that the three House leaders meet to discuss recommendations that would make it possible for the House to take action.

[English]

We have begun that process and I am hopeful that our discussions will result in concrete proposals for further reform. In the meantime I believe the motions, of which I have given notice today, will go a long way toward establishing a solid foundation for reform as well as reaffirming the trust relationship which exists between the people of Canada and their representatives in Parliament.

● (1510)

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be worth-while to simply read into the record the motions which I am putting forward today for the consideration of the House. The first is the proposed draft Standing Order which would cover the element of foreign travel by Members of Parliament. The motion reads simply:

That the Standing Orders be amended by inserting the following new Chapter after Standing Order 84:

"Chapter XVI
Declaration of Interest by Members

85. The Clerk shall maintain a public Registry of Foreign Travel by Members of Parliament in which members shall register all visits they make outside Canada, arising from or relating to their membership in the House of Commons where the cost of any such travel is not wholly borne by:

(a) the Consolidated Revenue Fund;

(b) the member personally;

(c) any interparliamentary association or friendship group recognized by the House of Commons;

(d) any recognized party;

together with the name of the sponsoring person or organization which paid for travel to and/or from Canada."

With respect to the proposed order of reference to the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services which I referred to in my remarks, that motion is as follows:

That the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services consider matters related to the establishment of a Register of Members' Interests, and report on these and any other matters relating to registration of Members' interests, including the form and content of such a Register, considering among other matters relating to the registration of Members' interest, the following:

(a) remunerated directorships of companies, public or private;

(b) other remunerated positions or offices;

(c) remunerated trades, professions or vocations;

(d) the names of clients when the interests referred to above include personal services by the Member which arise out of or are related in any manner to his or her membership in the House;

(e) any payments or any material benefits or advantages received from or on behalf of foreign Governments, organizations or persons;

(f) land and property of substantial value or from which a substantial income is derived; and

(g) the names of companies or other bodies in which the Member has, to his knowledge, either himself or with or on behalf of his spouse or dependents, any beneficial interest including—among others, shareholdings—of a nominal value greater than one-hundredth of the total capital assets of the company or other body.

and that it report on the form and content of such a Register not later than December 31, 1985.

Provided, Mr. Speaker, that notwithstanding the usual practices of the House, if the House is not sitting when the final report of the committee is completed, the committee shall report its findings by depositing the said report with the Clerk of the House and it shall thereupon be deemed to have been laid upon the Table.

Mr. Prud'homme: I am sure your caucus is very happy.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Not only is my caucus very happy about this initiative, Mr. Speaker, it is one which I think will meet with some approbation from the people of Canada. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in terms of these disclosures these are reasonable proposals which we are putting forward. They are for the consideration of the committee which is chaired by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). I think the committee will be able to consider these recommendations and receive representations from interested parties and Members of the House.

This particular initiative was one which was indicated in the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on September 9. We hope to have the unanimous support of all Parties with respect to the proposals, the motion and the thrust. I appreciate very much the serious attention which Hon. Members have given to this important matter.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, some days prior to the Minister's statement, which we have just heard, I said publicly outside this Chamber that I looked positively on the idea of a registry of Members' travel. Certainly, we of the Official Opposition look positively on the concept as set out in the draft motion read to us today by the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn). I had pointed out earlier, Mr. Speaker, that they have had a registry of both Members' travel and interests in the United Kingdom Parliament for some time.

There is much to be said, Mr. Speaker, for the view that Members of Parliament should have the opportunity to learn, first-hand, about conditions in other countries and that this opportunity should not be available only to those who have been selected by the federal Government of the day, or only to those who have been selected to represent parliamentary associations, or who have ample personal private means. However, Mr. Speaker, if Members accept payment for foreign travel from other than the Government or parliamentary groups, they certainly do so as a matter of their own judgment and responsibility. They should be willing to account publicly for the exercice of that judgment and responsibility and the implications of this for the appearance it may create for the carrying out of their duties. They should be willing to account publicly, as I have said, if called on to do so, and a registry of Members' travel is important in this regard.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, we generally support the concept of the proposed motion that the House maintain a publicly registry of such travel by Members. With regard to this notice of motion, which the Minister was kind enough to give me at around one o'clock this afternoon, I certainly want to discuss the matter of its contents with my colleagues before making any definitive comments about them.

With respect to the proposed reference to the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services, which the Government House Leader has also read into the record of the House, this proposed reference is quite sweeping in its scope. I think all Members will want to examine this reference and consider its implications. We agree that the committee ought to receive such a reference and that it ought to have the time required to come to its conclusions. I would hope, however, that Members will give serious consideration to the implications of these proposals for themselves and their successors. Members on all sides of the House are affected by proposals in this area and I believe that the committee in its efforts to resolve it will find this matter to be quite complex.

The Government House Leader spent a good portion of his statement talking about the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in this House on September 9 when he outlined a package of initiatives relating to public sector ethics. I do want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that none or almost none of the measures announced by the Prime Minister some two months ago with great fanfare are yet in force, except perhaps for the conflict of interest guidelines which are to take effect only this coming January 1. Where is the program of parliamentary scrutiny of Governor in Council appointments? Where is the register of lobbying activities? Where is the review of judicial appointments?

The public will wonder, Mr. Speaker, why the Government has begun with the measures outlined in the Minister's statement. I hope the Government does not think that by putting forward what is in the Minister's statement the public will forget that there is an equal and, in fact, a greater priority to move quickly on the other measures set forth in the Prime Minister's statement, about which we have, so far, heard next to nothing.

I would like to say that the measures set out in the proposed notices of motions as read out by the Government House Leader a few moments ago are subjects in which we take a great deal of interest. We will co-operate in having them given the fullest and most expeditious study because we believe that it is necessary for Members of Parliament to conduct themselves, and to be seen to conduct themselves, with a very high degree of probity.

● (1520)

I conclude by saying that this applies in equal and perhaps greater measure to the Government and its officials who have in our parliamentary system a great measure of decision-making authority that we should recognize. We should not let the statement, useful as it is, hide the fact that we and the Canadian people expect more action in the other aspects of the Government's package with respect to ethics than we have seen so far.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I suppose that it is almost safe in the House of Commons to quote Edmund Burke and Thomas Jefferson. It seems to add a certain amount of validity to anything that one might want to say.

However, I want to express some personal concern because at this point I do not pretend to speak on behalf of all my colleagues. I have not had an opportunity to consult with them on this matter and, therefore, do not know what their views might be with regard to the measures proposed by the Government House Leader.

It is good that we will have a chance to review the proposals and deliberate on their effect before they become law, as far as we are concerned, within the Standing Orders of the House of Commons. It is interesting to note that no recommendation is made with regard to enforcement. To a large extent, the reporting process is one which is voluntarily undertaken by Members of the House within the proposals put forward by the Government House Leader.

It is difficult to express the real concerns I have because, rather than being specific, it is an uneasy feeling and goes to the trust and obligations that Members of Parliament must assume when they are elected.

How much is a citizen entitled to know about the day-to-day lives of Members of Parliament? For example, is it necessary that all the interests of every Member be made a matter of public record, given that the overwhelming majority of Members play little part in the actual management of the affairs of the country but, rather, simply pass judgment on the recommendations of the Cabinet?

Let me draw a comparison between the two bodies. The Cabinet has direct responsibility for the making of policy and the expenditure of funds. Clearly, the cabinet members have the opportunity to make use of that information, gathered as a result of the cabinet process, to improve their own personal lot in life. Of course, one hopes that this opportunity is never used. Members of Parliament only become knowledgeable of cabinet decisions when they are made public and, therefore, have no greater opportunity than any other citizen of this country to achieve any personal gain from a decision made by Cabinet. Therefore, I think those two bodies must be viewed separately.

I say quite bluntly that I support the Government's move to strengthen a code of ethics for cabinet Ministers and require higher standards than heretofore might have been in place. It does not necessarily flow from that, however, that changes are absolutely necessary for the ordinary Members who serve on the back-benches in Parliament. I repeat that I feel a sense of concern rather than concrete knowledge that the measures being proposed are wrong.

The questions that come to mind about this proposal are not specific. However, one of the proposed draft orders states that the Clerk shall maintain a public registry of foreign travel by Members of Parliament in which Members shall register all trips that they make outside of Canada arising from or relating to their membership in the House of Commons where the cost of any such travel is not wholly borne by certain groups.

If a Member were to be invited to address a university in Detroit, for example, and the passage was to be provided by that university for the purpose of making a representation at a seminar, is that to be listed? If so, why? What would be the reason for doing that? If a Member were provided with return tickets from Ottawa to Washington, Baltimore or New York to speak to a board of trade about matters relating to the policy of that Member's political Party with regard to public policy, is such a trip to be reported and, if so, why? What purpose would it serve to list those visits?

I believe we are trying to address an issue that is quite different. I think it is time we recognized that we are talking about Members who take trips at the expense of groups, individuals and Governments to exotic places in the world for well-paid holidays.

Mr. Prud'homme: What is exotic?

Mr. Deans: Exotic is any place where one has not been. That seems to be the definition for exotic.

I do not doubt that there may be some reason to consider seriously listing visits like that because the public may have the right to know who is paying for it and, therefore, why certain representations are being made in the House of Commons on a particular subject which bears a direct relationship between the Member making the representation and the group being represented. Perhaps there should be a way to check up on trips like that.

However, with respect to other trips, such as the examples I have given, I wonder if it makes much sense for the Clerk, busy as he is at all times, to be required to be in the office each day while Members troop in and fill out the registry and then to have it verified as being correct. Furthermore, what will we do if a Member did not indicate where he or she went? Do we issue a statement to the effect that the Member is in breach of the guidelines? But being in breach of the guidelines does not matter very much since there are no penalties.

Therefore, I say to the Government House Leader that these are matters that came to my attention when I heard what he said and read what was contained in the proposed orders. I am curious to know what useful purpose can be served.

Incidentally, I have no objection to listing everything I do, but what purpose does it serve to list the various remunerated trades, professions or vocations or Members? The people who will make the judgment about whether the Member is doing his or her job properly will be the electors. They will judge whether the Member was present frequently enough to perform his or her duties. Therefore, is it necessary for an ordinary Member, who has very little influence within the House of Commons, as it now stands, to list the remunerated trades, professions or vocations which he or she may have or to name the clients when the interest in those areas includes personal services by the Members?

I think it would be better to suggest that a Member cannot act on behalf of anyone for remuneration when the matter that is to be acted upon is one that falls within the ambit of the responsibility of a Member of Parliament. Frankly, I believe a rule arleady exists that no Member should be able to do for money that which he or she is being paid to do for the House of Commons, for their constituents and for the public of Canada. I would say that the law now covers that and that it does not have to be contained within these guidelines. Nevertheless, let us look at it anyway.

• (1530)

I do not propose to go on any longer. I think you understand, Mr. Speaker, that I am in a general way supportive of having some way to deal with what we have identified as a problem. I am concerned, though not yet focused on my concerns, about this kind of approach. I would certainly welcome hearing the views of other Hon. Members; not only those of my own colleagues, but the views of other Hon. Members in the House of Commons. I invite—although I do not often do this and it may be a little unusual—other Members who have views to express on this to do so, if they would not mind, since it is a totally non-partisan matter. In order to help me in my deliberations, I invite them to feel comfortable in letting me know how they feel about it and how they see it affecting their lives or the way they are able to do their work. In the final analysis, the argument which will take place on whether this will become law or otherwise, within the context of the House of Commons, will be determined behind closed doors. In the final analysis, the decision on whether or not to proceed with it will be made rather quietly, and then will or will not be proceeded with in accordance with what appears to be the over-all wishes of the majority of Members.

Therefore, I urge Hon. Members to pay particular attention to this matter because it could detrimentally or beneficially affect every one of them for as long as they are in the House of Commons and even beyond.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-62

On the Order: Government Notices of Motions:

November 1, 1985—the Minister of Employment and Immigration:

That, in relation to Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the said Bill;

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for the consideration of government business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings then before the House shall be interrupted, if necessary, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the said Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Section (2) of Standing Order 26, this Government Notice of Motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under Government Orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

WAYS AND MEANS

PETROLEUM AND GAS REVENUE TAX ACT

Hon. Barbara McDougall (for the Minister of Finance) moved that a Ways and Means motion to amend the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax Act, laid upon the table on Friday, November 1, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved that a Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act, laid upon the table on Friday, November 1, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It would be our intention to vote against this motion. However, we would be prepared to have the same vote as was taken on the previous Ways and Means motion recorded as applying to this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Rather than calling the yeas and nays, it is understood that the same vote will apply to this motion.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) will be included in the vote, and I assume he will vote with the Government.

PARLIAMENTARY EMPLOYMENT AND STAFF RELATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, November 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-45, and Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate and House of Commons, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, before my time starts, could the Chair or the Clerk tell me how much time I have remaining? I did not get a reading on Friday.

Mr. Speaker: I am informed that the Hon. Member has 10 minutes left in his speech under daylight or eastern standard time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Now, what is the good news?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to continue my remarks on what I was talking about last Friday, the general principle of the rights of employees on Parliament Hill in terms of collective bargaining, negotiations, right to strike and all those things entrenched in the laws of Canada and the provinces, even in the by-laws of municipalities, which are sort of taken for granted. There are large numbers, including those employed on Parliament Hill and its environs, who do not have those rights, and the Government is seeking ways to grant at least part of those rights.

The right to bargain not only concerns hours of work, rates of pay, holidays and so on. It also concerns the conditions of employment in the workplace. There have been far too many examples around here, since I came here, beginning in October, 1968, where, at the whim of a supervisor or someone at the lower or middle management level, people who had been working here for some period of time were left out when it came to assignments, job classifications, transfers or applications for promotion. They seem to have been left in limbo or left to the whims of those who were their immediate or top managers.

I should like to refer to an example of this. A senior technical position becomes vacant around here, several employees inquire about a competition being held, and none is held. However, the husband of a manager in another department of the same service is brought in to fill the position on a temporary basis. Several months later, a competition is held. Then, the now-experienced husband in that position enters the competition and is hired permanently, and the appeals of the other employees are denied. No self-respecting employer anywhere else would ever countenance that sort of accidental or "left to the whim of" procedure, which you, Mr. Speaker, or I or the Minister in charge would never even hear about, let alone know about. None of us, as Members, would countenance that treatment of staff in our own offices, let alone employees of the House of Commons.

Another example would be that of several employees in a support service who hold supervisory positions on an acting basis. Some could have held these positions from two years to seven years respectively, and they are informed that they have been downgraded four levels and that their salaries will be reduced from $21,000 to $17,000. However, during the same period, other working supervisors are hired for the same service without any competition process. Again internal appeals are denied.

I have only referred to two examples of some 14 which I have in my possession. I have no doubt that my colleagues on all sides of the House have other examples. It is one of the rights which is presently being denied employees of the Parliament of Canada, a right which the House has to instate for them. The matters of who gets what jobs, who gets transferred and how the process is carried out must be given to the employees to have in a collective agreement so that they may bargain about them in an orderly manner. This must be done so that someone does not hire someone else's brother-in-law simply because it is easy to lay off some people and not call back others when they have no recourse. That is a denial of fundamental justice let alone the laws that apply to others regarding collective bargaining and conditions of employment.

• (1650)

Again I must cite the experience of my own province as an example. In the Province of Saskatchewan, all three political Parties have been in power and employees have had the right of collective agreement since 1947. While there have been disputes, strikes and disagreements, those would not represent more than 2 per cent or 3 per cent of the difficulties encountered. In the overwhelming majority of instances, agreement has been reached through bargaining. Agreements were negotiated for employees of every Department and for every employee, whether it be a technical, professional or service employee, year after year for almost 40 years. There were some occasions on which Crown corporation employees went out on strike. There were some occasions on which members of the Public Service worked to rule. By the way, I always figure that working to rule is a darn good tactic when there is a disagreement with an employer. When employees work to the rules the employer has laid down, they can grind the place to a halt. That that can occur in both the private and public sector and has to tell us about some of the rules that are put down by some employers.

I think the Government is only dipping its feet into this matter. It wants Hill employees to appear to be equal to the workers in the other sectors of the Public Service and the private sector. However, these employees will not be quite as equal as others. Others will be more equal, but the Government wants to have at least the appearance of equality.

I admit that this Bill makes some positive moves toward making these long withheld rights available to Hill employees. Frankly, though, I think this Government and previous administrations worried too much about the effects this would have. The experiences in municipalities and some of the provinces have not been nearly as bad as those which were expected. I can recall that in the 1940s, officials of the Province of Saskatchewan thought that it would be a horrible idea to give public servants and employees of the Legislature collective bargaining rights. They thought that anarchy would follow and Government would not be able to function.

I have often wondered what it would be like if we did not have any messengers, pages, security guards or waiters and waitresses around here for a couple of weeks. Perhaps it would be a good lesson for all of us in this Chamber and the other place as well as for the top administrators. Perhaps then we would find out in a difficult way what all of these things that we take for granted mean to us on a day-to-day basis. I am including in this the interpreters, the Hansard employees and others as well. Some of these employees are well paid but they are certainly not, by any stretch of the imagination, overpaid. They darn well earn their keep. There are some employees of the Parliament of Canada who, if they wished, could make more money somewhere else but they are dedicated, loyal and they like it here. That is no reason to take advantage of them.

I hope that the Government will be amenable to improvements in the legislation and that the legislation itself will be amendable. I hope that proves to be the case because there are some shortfalls in this legislation about which none of us should be proud or brag and which all of us should be anxious to correct.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I too am happy to join in this debate. When looking back at the promises that were made by members of the Conservative Party when they were in opposition, I find that they made a fairly thorough representation of their perspective in response to some specific questions directed at them about their position on collective bargaining rights, staffing procedures and classification possibilities for the Public Service and in particular for employees on the Hill. I would like to refer specifically to some promises that were made and that were in fact tabled as a result of the commitments made by the Conservative Government. The Government stated for the record the following:

> A PC government will negotiate directly with public service unions and associations toward the establishment of an improved collective bargaining system based on the provisions of the Canada Labour Code. Staffing procedures, classification, technological change, designations, and other issues will become negotiable. We will pursue joint bargaining as a means of achieving greater fairness and efficiency in the collective bargaining process. Our Party will seek advice from PIPS and other public service organizations as to how we can improve the many regulations governing the use of arbitration and conciliation so that disputes can be resolved quickly without disrupting government service to the public.

An element of today's debate which we have not had a chance to address in the House is the Canada Labour Relations Board decision which reversed its previous position by announcing today that it was going to issue certification orders for certain bargaining units on the Hill. I have just received a copy of the judgment in my office. I understand that certification will be accorded to certain employees in the Library of Parliament, drivers, messengers and security services employees with others expected to follow.

It seems to me that what the Canada Labour Relations Board has done in announcing the reversal of its original position of June 28, 1985, in which it suspended proceedings for certification, is that it has in fact accorded to those hundreds and indeed over 1,000 employees of the Hill who have sought the right to certification the right to pursue that particular certification under the provisions of the Canada Labour Code. In that regard, this particular decision, a decision which in fact had been stalled for a number of months, sheds new light on the debate and on the Bill that is before us today. Quite clearly, in according the right to certification under the Canada Labour Code to a number of employees on the Hill, the Canada Labour Relations Board is saying that mechanisms that are currently in place can be utilized effectively for employees on the Hill. In that regard, it seems to me that it would further muddy the waters to follow up with Bill C-45 at a time when we know the Government has 20 days in which to respond to the decision of the Canada Labour Relations Board. You can believe me about this, Mr. Speaker, in light of the promises that were made by the Conservative Party and the promises that were issued to Public Service unions across the country. The Government said that staffing procedures, classification, technological change, designation and other issues will be negotiable. It is quite clear that the Government will have a chance to respond to the veracity of those statements within the 20-day period which has been allotted as a result of the Canada Labour Relations Board decision today.

• (1700)

I have had a chance to consult with a number of my colleagues on this issue, including representatives on the Hill who have worked hard to sign up members. At this point they have signed up more than 1,000 members, some of whom have been required to sign again and again and again indicating their interest in becoming part of a certified bargaining unit on Parliament Hill. It seems to me that while the Canada Labour Relations Board is awaiting summary action from the Government as to its good faith in adopting its recommendations it is futile for us to continue the debate at this time. I would argue, as have my colleagues, the Hon. Members for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle), that there are a number of amendments to the legislation which is currently before the House which this Party would like to see. However, it seems to me that with the decision which has been announced today that at this point in time it is futile for us to continue discussion of the Bill when we are still awaiting the response of the Government to a potential certification under the Canada Labour Code. From the perspective of the organizers on the Hill who have been trying to get the Canada Labour Relations Board to come to grips with this issue for two years it was a surprise decision. I have had discussions today with representatives of employees on the Hill and, therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer:

That Bill C-45, an Act respecting employment and employer and employees relations in the Senate and the House of Commons, be not now read a second time but one month hence.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it clear that this amendment will give the Government a chance to respond within 20 days to the rulings that have just been issued by the CLRB.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it quite clear that if the Government insists on continuing consideration of this Bill, we, our party, intend to demand a number of amendments to ensure at least that the promises made by the Progressive Conservative Party during the election campaign will be properly discussed and considered, including classification questions, and many other items not covered by the Bill at this time. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, the Bill in its present form, does not meet the requirements of the Canada Labour Code. Obviously, we would rather have something than nothing at all, but I think that all Hon. Members who are concerned and involved, whether we are talking about the rights of union members or aspirant union members, or whether we are talking about employers—

Since the CLRB has just ruled on a subject of such significance today, I personally, with the support of my caucus and that of the Hon. Member for Hull-Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle), want to give the Government a chance to have time to reflect. It would give them 30 days' time. During those 30 days, it will be up to the Government either to accept or reject the recommendations made by the CLRB.

Mr. Speaker, we want to wait for the Government to respond to the news announced today, before proceeding with a Bill that may undergo fundamental changes as a result of the decision that has just been announced.

I know Hon. Members in the corner find it difficult to talk about union matters because that is not where their interests lie. That is obvious. However, as a Member representing the most industrialized riding in Canada, I have a right to speak, and I will continue to do so until my time has expired. That is why . . . Mr. Speaker, it is not our intention to reject the Bill out of hand but to give the Government a chance to reflect, during the period of 20 days they are being offered, on the ruling announced today by the CLRB, and that is my purpose in moving this amendment.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I have been thinking about the Hon. Member's amendment. It is our custom not to interrupt debate. However, since the Hon. Member has moved a motion, which I take as a hoist motion in general terms, it is therefore in order.

Ms. Copps, seconded by Mr. Isabelle, moves:

That Bill C-45, an Act respecting employment and employer and employee relations in the Senate and the House of Commons, be not now read a second time but one month hence.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Resuming debate, on the amendment. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to know whether I have the right to speak now.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would like to consult for just one moment. The Hon. Member may know that our practice is, in fact, that speeches are normally made with amendments of this type moved at the conclusion of the speech. I appreciate that the Hon. Member may not have realized that and she may think that she has the right to rise again. Technically, she does not, unless the House were to give its consent.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We would be prepared to allow her to continue for her full 20 minutes and then move the motion at the conclusion of her speech.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member for Hamilton East is signalling to me that she feels, in fact, that she has put on the record what she wanted to put on the record.

Ms. Copps: With the consent of the House, I would like to proceed.

Mr. Speaker: Is there consent to follow the Hon. Member the normal time to finish the speech which she began and assume that the amendment was moved at the end of her speech?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I wish to demonstrate that even on a Monday I am prepared to show the usual generosity of spirit of the Government and have the Hon. Member finish her speech with the understanding that she moved the amendment at the end of her speech.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to enlighten those Members who perhaps have not been following the sequence of events which, in fact, have led to a decision of the Government to move ahead with Bill C-45 which, in fact, led us to move this hoist motion. In fact, a number of groups of employees on the Hill have been seeking the right to certify for some time. That right was originally upheld by the Canada Labour Relations Board and subsequently suspended. During the course of the suspension we find that over 1,000 employees have signed cards on at least three occasions indicating their interest in aligning themselves with a certification process on the Hill. In the meantime, the Government has come in with a Bill which would, in a very limited way, begin to recognize the rights of organizations on the Hill. Unfortunately, contrary to the promises made by the Conservative Party at the time it was in opposition, the Bill before the House does not address a number of issues. It does not address those issues which have been highlighted by a number of representatives from PSAC, as well as NABET, as being very crucial to the discussion.

• (1710)

For example, indications that this particular Bill will do nothing to allow an employee voice in certification and classification are obviously of great concern to us. Meanwhile, as the Government introduces this Bill and discussion and debate goes on—indeed, we have been waiting for some kind of Bill for several months—coincidentally, and totally by chance, the Canada Labour Relations Board today announced that it had reversed an earlier decision and would now issue certification orders to certain bargaining units on the Hill. The effect of that particular announcement is that the process of certification has effectively been approved by the Canada Labour Relations Board and certifications on the Hill can begin.

In deciding, together with my colleagues, to move a motion which would cause the delay of the Bill for 30 days, it is not our intention to stop the process, as was suggested by the Government House Leader. On the contrary, it is our intention to allow the employees an opportunity to receive the fullest representation possible within the bargaining process. It seems to me that the particular decision today by the Canada Labour Relations Board is going to impinge very directly on this piece of legislation. In fact it has granted to employees on the Hill the same rights which are currently available to employees in a number of other areas. We know, of course, there are questions of the implications of the freedom of association clause in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. There were a number of rights which were fought for and won through the Charter which have in fact been reinforced by an application which has been accepted under the Canada Labour Code.

There is a very valid question raised today as to whether we should proceed with this Bill or whether we should allow the course of events which could lead to a faster and fuller exploration of rights for employees on the Hill. It would be a misrepresentation of our intentions for Members of the Government to suggest that we are attempting in any way to somehow impugn or prevent the valid and due process of certification. That is simply not true. In fact, it is with the support of, and in discussion with the representatives of the movement to organize on the Hill, that we have suggested a 30-day delay in further discussion on this Bill pending the reaction of the Government with respect to the very current and pressing announcement that finally the employees will be allowed to organize under the Canada Labour Code.

Quite clearly, it was an unexpected decision in the light of the discussions which are taking place at this moment in the House of Commons. It is the feeling of the Liberal Party that while the Government has 20 days to respond, it would not want to allow anything to infringe upon the possibility of the Canada Labour Code decision going forward when the federal Government has the legal right and responsibility to respond. We do not know what the response is going to be. We know what the Conservative Party said during the election campaign. We know that promises which were made during the election campaign, specifically with respect to certification, classification and to other rights of employees, have not been respected. In fact, the Conservative Party has flaunted the very promises it made in the past by refusing to accord even those minimal rights. We will be suggesting amendments to address that basic injustice.

At the same time, it would be the position of this Party that a 30-day delay of further discussion on this Bill would permit the Government to move ahead in good faith in light of the current and crucial decision of the Canada Labour Relations Board. It would be my suggestion that all Hon. Members on all sides of the House who would like to have a full discussion of an issue which could affect them very directly, even their own employee relations, would find it in their best interests to take a look at what the Canada Labour Relations Board had to say. I only just received a copy of the decision in my office this afternoon and I have not had a chance to review the particulars. I would like to do so and see whether in fact the suggestion of the Canada Labour Relations Board, in its decision to allow certification, should supersede the Bill which we have before us. Is this Bill redundant? That question has not been properly explored. It is a question which remains in the mind of the union, for one.

The amendment is one way of addressing all the issues surrounding the certification process, and in particular the relationship of the employees on the Hill to the Canada Labour Code, and it would delay further discussion of this Bill for 30 days while we anticipate the Government's reaction to the most recent announcement by the Canada Labour Relations Board.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to participate in this debate since many of the people who are affected actually live, and certainly all of them work, in my riding of Ottawa Centre. On the other hand, I participate in this debate somewhat in sorrow rather than anger because Bill C-45 falls so far short of what should have been provided and what my caucus, the New Democratic caucus, has been advocating for a long time.

In April of this year, our caucus passed a unanimous motion endorsing the efforts of the House of Commons employees to gain recognition of their union under the Canada Labour Code. Our motion urged the House of Commons administration and the Government to cease the use of procedural and legal techniques which were delaying union recognition for Commons employees. We welcomed your commitment, Mr. Speaker, to the principle of union recognition for Commons employees and we urge that the Commons administration give informal recognition of union representatives for those employee groups where a majority of the employees had signed union cards.

That was the position we took at that time. But what really angers and upsets me is the fact that the legal and procedural road-blocks which have been put in the way of unionization of the House of Commons employees have come from the Government. I would say before my friend, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), leaves, that it has come as much from the Liberals prior to last September as from the Progressive Conservatives. However, the delays have also come from the House of Commons. You, Mr. Speaker, stated publicly that you supported unionization, and the chief administrator of the House stated, at least to me, that he would like to see a union here so that there would be a better way to deal with House of Commons staff. Nonetheless, the House of Commons continued to either go along with the Government or the administration itself put up legal road-blocks to the route of certification which is the only route those employees had to follow. It is noteworthy that today the Canada Labour Relations Board has reviewed and reconsidered the position it took in June when its panel decided that, pending legislation, it was not appropriate to proceed. The panel decided on Friday that it had made a technical mistake, that it was wrong and it should not take cognizance of legislation which to this point was just a proposal and had no guarantee of being passed. Today, as you know, Mr. Speaker, the Board has decided to grant recognition to some 960 House of Commons employees in the bargaining units.

I regret the decision of the CLRB to reject the certification of the staff of Hon. Members, just as I regret the proposal of the Government to reject that certification. However, it is noteworthy that the CLRB has now certified something like half of the staff in the House of Commons, including those who work for Hon. Members. That is quite a lot of people. That certification has taken place because of the determination of those employees to try and get union recognition against some pretty overwhelming odds.

What will happen now? The workers are caught in their reaction to Bill C-45. Although they won certification, the comments of the Government House Leader in opening this debate on Friday were really quite unequivocal. He said it is conceivable "after lengthy and costly legal proceedings that owing to the particular situation of Parliament, parliamentary employees might have no right to join a union". He said that by "eliminating disputes before the courts with respect to the jurisdiction of the CLRB, the ultimate effect of this measure will be to speed up the efforts of the employees concerned to form a union". The Government House Leader was talking as though there was some alien force out there who keeps on taking these employees before the courts, but that is not the case at all. It is the Government which has been taking these employees to the courts. The Liberal Government and now the Progressive Conservative Government have systematically put legal road-blocks in the way of these employees to form a union. The new Government is no better than the old Government. At this time there are no legal cases pending. There is a certificate which would allow the bulk of the employees who filed to have a union to have bargaining units which could now sit down, effective within a couple of weeks, and start bargaining for a first contract, a deal with question like the terms and conditions of work, pay, holidays and the other things which form the subject of collective agreements. However, the Government is not prepared to play by those rules and is going to change them. If this measure is too long delayed in the House of Commons and the Government has to proceed on the basis of the CLRB decision having effect, then it is threatening to appeal. The appeal will be costly, could take another year or two, and those employees are damn tired of having to wait while the Government delays and obfuscates. The Government, on the other hand, is saying we should trust it and it will give us legislation which I am sure the Government itself must recognize is inadequate and falls far short of what the employees have been seeking. In particular, it fails to address the grievances of greatest concern to these employees.

I have no doubt that some House of Commons employees are underpaid. However, the concerns they have raised in particular concern arbitrary actions by the employer, the failure to have a fair system of classification, and actions which appear to them to smack of nepotism, patronage and favouritism, as well as being arbitrary. I will just cite one with which I was very closely connected, the treatment handed out to Prudence Dallaire. She was the employee assistance counsellor in the House of Commons and had been for a very long time. A few months ago she was fired, her position abolished and her responsibilities turned over to the nursing staff. As recently as one week ago some of those nurses went to a conference on that particular subject. They were told that they needed training which they have not had, and independence to carry out the job. Employee assistance requires sufficient independence that the person responsible can act as an advocate for employees who have personal problems such as alcoholism, family problems or perhaps mental problems, things which lead to their having difficulty at work. The employee assistance counsellor has to be able to intervene with management. You cannot do that if you are reporting to management day by day, as do the nursing staff here in Parliament Hill. An appeal was made to the Speaker asking that Madam Dallaire be reappointed. The appeal was denied. Two petitions signed by 1,500 Hill employees were ignored.

That is but one of many examples of how the present administration of the House of Commons has ignored the needs of employees working here. Yet they are now told they have no choice, you have to take what is here. It is not appropriate that the CLRB should govern employees of the House of Commons. I ask: Why not? After all, Privy Council Office employees are unionized, as are those of the Governor General. Therefore, what is wrong with House employees having full union rights? I do not see what the fuss is all about. It has been pointed out in other jurisdictions that legislative employees are unionized. In the NDP caucus here on Parliament Hill we have had a collective agreement since 1977. At times it has been a bit difficult to administer because we are not a formally recognized employer and the staff association is not a formally recognized union. Nonetheless, we have been able to function and we have made that agreement work in good faith. The employees here in the House want to make such an agreement work. We should recognize that these people serve our meals, deliver our messages and provide an enormous range of services. They do our research, get our books and magazines, provide clippings. They handle parliamentary relations, and represent us in our dealings with Parliaments and parliamentarians around the world. They help staff our committees and make this Parliament look good and work effectively. There is no reason, given the importance of those functions, that we should give them the second class status and second rate form of unionization proposed in Bill C-45.

My caucus has decided that, although we recognize the need for unionization, we do not believe this Bill is anywhere near good enough. That is why we have decided, while we are not going to speak on the Bill forever, if this is all that is available we are going to have to live with it but we are going to oppose it because it simply does not live up to what we should be providing. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) worked in labour relations as a negotiator, mediator and conciliator for many years. He first came to public prominence as counsel to the Cliche inquiry into labour relations in Quebec in the 1960s. He knows intimately the stuff of labour relations. He, of all the Government and cabinet Members, should realize that the House of Commons should be looked to by employers and employees across our country as a model of what labour relations should be, a model for co-operation, employee involvement, and labour-management harmony which can exist where there is a real commitment on both sides. There are Members on the Government side who were terrified about the fact that people working in the cafeterias might actually go on strike if they were governed by the Canada Labour Relations Act.

Mr. Lewis: That is nonsense.

Mr. Cassidy: Then why is the Government seeking to override the CLRB, first by court challenges and now by proceeding with Bill C-45? The employees here have certification according to the decision handed down by the CLRB today.

Why on earth can we not demonstrate that other areas currently being discussed between Public Service unions and Treasury Board for inclusion in joint determination should be the same as far as the House of Commons is concerned? There is a very serious problem in the classification and staffing of House of Commons employees. There is no outside body monitoring those decisions. If you are a member of the Public Service of Canada the Public Service Commission does that job. they do not do it perfectly well all the time, as the Auditor General's report pointed out last week, but there is an outside and supposedly impartial authority which looks at those decisions. That will not be the case with the people working here, according to this Bill. Yet it was precisely that which drove many of those employees to sign cards and form a union.

I would point out as well that there are real problems in a very practical sense in the harassment these employees have gone through having to sign, re-sign and sign again their union cards. The CLRB has indicated what it believes the bargaining unit should be. If the Government is determined to move forward on this Bill, it should at least indicate that it accepts those classification decisions. One thousand employees have signed union cards. The Government should amend this Bill in order to ensure that those cards signed under the CLRB will be acceptable for the Public Service Staff Relations Board rather than forcing the employees to sign again, in some cases for the fifth time, in order to form a union. We, as parliamentarians, have to accept the fact that we have been bad managers. We have been bad employers. We have not done the job we should. The Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is here and I am directing these comments to him because he has a chance to exercise some leadership here.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Which I am doing.

Mr. Cassidy: He can act in a very positive way. I suggest that he accept the CLRB jurisdiction and certification. If not, at the very least accept the decisions made—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order!

Some Hon. Members: Order!

• (1730)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order! If the Hon. Member wishes to carry on with his debate, he may do so tomorrow if Bill C-45 is before the House. He will have six minutes remaining plus a 10 minute question and comment period.

It being 5.29 o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING GUN CONTROL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East) moved that Bill C-205, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (gun control) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise once again in the House to plead with Hon. Members to implement stronger measures for gun control in Canada. When I speak of gun control I am talking about a measure to restrict the too easy availability of guns and bullets which lead to violent crime, especially armed robbery and murder. We know that Canadians are concerned about the level of violent crime in the country. If we in the House are genuine in taking that concern seriously, we will want to do something to prevent murders and armed robberies from taking place rather than relying on measures to be applied after the fact. If we are genuinely concerned about this serious problem we should concentrate on preventive measures and effective gun control is one of the most effective measures we could take. While there has been a decline in recent years in Canada of the total number of murders and the percentage of murders committed with guns, the rate is still too high. There are still too many crimes committed with guns.

If we look at the statistics, Mr. Speaker, we can see that an overwhelming percentage of murders are committed with guns. Guns are used far more often for homicide than any other instrument. I will refer to the most recent statistics available. In 1983 there were a total of 682 homicides in Canada and of those 224, that is 32.8 per cent, were committed with guns. The other means of committing murder fall way behind. Each constitutes less than 10 per cent. In 1982 the percentage was even higher, 37 per cent. Two-hundred and forty-eight of 670 homicides were committed with guns. Therefore, we can see that if we want to reduce the rate of murder we should concentrate on a preventive measure which is geared to the source of the problem, that is, guns.

When we look around the world the evidence shows beyond a reasonable doubt that where guns are less readily available the number of crimes committed with guns is lower. In Holland, Belgium, Britain, Scandinavia, France and Italy there are tough gun laws and low rates of crimes with guns. In Japan there is a very low rate of crimes with guns due to their strict gun laws. In the jurisdictions of the world where there is loose control of guns there is a high rate of murder and armed robbery with guns. Unfortunately, our neighbour to the south is the worst violator in the so-called modern developed countries. They have very loose gun laws and very high rates of murder with guns.

There was a report prepared for the Solicitor General in 1983 which followed a five-year study of the new gun laws introduced in 1978. The intention was to examine those new gun laws over a period of five years and evaluate their effectiveness. In 1983 they published this report intitled Evaluation of the Canadian Gun Control Legislation: Final Report 1983. It comes to the conclusion that stricter gun laws have led to a lower rate of crimes with guns. I have a clipping from the Montreal Gazette dated August 20, 1983 in which it is pointed out that gun control legislation has restrained the use of firearms in robberies and homicides. I could refer to a lot of other examples.

I can remember when I first came to Parliament. A particular occurrence in Ottawa led me to introduce one Bill after another to bring about stricter control of guns. A young, mentally upset high school student went to a sporting goods store on Sparks Street and bought a shotgun. In those days a firearms acquisition certificate was not required. There were no controls. One could go to any department store or sporting goods store and buy a rifle or shotgun. That is what this youth did and then he went back to his high school, began shooting at random, and killed several students in the school.

Guns are too readily available in homes where there is a history of alcoholism, drug addiction and family disputes. I have a report from Montreal of a case where a son killed his father with the father's gun after the father had threatened the mother and a younger brother. In examining this case the coroner said that if guns were not so readily available they may have ended up hitting each other, but it would not have ended with people being killed.

Also, the way in which guns are stored without great care has very often led to the theft of guns and the use of them by others in crime. I have a story from the Montreal Gazette of October 24, 1984 telling of an incident in which the gun of a security guard, a powerful .357 magnum revolver, was taken from him. Many security guards are elderly and not well trained. His gun was taken from him by a group of young people and used in an armed robbery in which they killed a police officer. In the United States there are very loose gun control laws and some states have hardly any gun control laws whatsoever. In that country, guns have killed 440,000 people since the assassination of President Kennedy in 1963. In addition to that, over 1.7 million people were wounded by gunfire in crimes involving guns. Approximately 2.7 million people were robbed at gunpoint.

Many of us heard about the incident at the McDonald's restaurant in San Diego in July of 1984 where a mentally imbalanced young man—not a career gangster or criminal—who had never committed a crime with a gun before, took the readily available gun in his home, announced to his wife that he was going downtown to hunt human beings, went into a McDonald's restaurant and, by firing at random, killed 21 individuals. That was because the gun and the bullets were readily available.

As I said, the evidence shows that in those jurisdictions of the world where there are strict gun laws there are lower rates of murder and other crimes committed with guns. The polls in Canada show that a very high percentage of Canadians favour stricter gun laws. Every time a poll is taken once every two years we see that 80 per cent to 85 per cent of the people favour stricter gun laws. That includes every region of the country, including the prairies, British Columbia and the Maritimes. Despite the fact that over 80 per cent of the people in the country favour that, a very well organized and well financed gun lobby in this country, which represents a minority of Canadians is able to prevail upon Members of Parliament not to enact the stricter gun laws we need.

• (1740)

I must admit that we have made advances and I have been instrumental in helping us to move forward somewhat. However, every time we attempt to do something there is a minority of Canadians who organize themselves into the gun groups who are anti-gun legislation and they are able to hoodwink Canadians with phoney arguments. They hoodwink Members of Parliament with phoney arguments.

Those phoney arguments include the slogan: "Guns do not kill, people do". Of course, people do the killing but they require a means by which to do it. Guns are the most effective, in my view. A person who has the intention to kill and is emotionally upset in one way or another, but only has his hands, a stick or a stone, obviously cannot do the damage that is possible if a gun is readily available. A gun is an instrument that is designed and manufactured to kill, whether it is an animal or someone in war. We are not talking about pellet shooters, but guns. Their intent is to kill. In my view, that requires some control.

It is true that people can be killed with other instruments whose design and manufacture is not meant to kill. You can kill someone with a baseball bat if you can catch the victim. However, a baseball bat is meant for a game. It is possible to kill someone with scissors, a razor blade or chemicals, but those things are designed for other purposes. Even some chemicals are subject to restrictions and control. Of course, people do the killing but the gun is an essential instrument in killing.

Studies in the United States have shown that the capacity to kill with a gun is five times greater than any other weapon. That is obvious to any of us who know anything about guns. I do not think anyone would deny that a gun has that killing capacity.

Another argument we hear from the gun lobby is that if we ban guns, only criminals will have them. That dictum forgets that two-thirds of the murders in this country are committed in emotional circumstances between people who are usually members of a family, friends or acquaintances. A very small number of crimes are committed by the so-called professional gangster. Of course, gangsters will always know where to find guns.

We should concentrate on those people who would commit one crime in their life, to kill someone in an emotional argument, like the young person I referred to in Ottawa. I can give many cases of people who have never committed another crime until the day they have killed someone in an emotional disturbance or other dispute. Therefore, the argument that if guns are banned only criminals will have them is nonsense. Two-thirds of our murders are not committed by professional gangsters and criminals, but by those who do not usually have a history of crime.

Of course, we also hear that it is our constitutional right to bear arms. That particular argument is made because so many Canadians read American magazines and watch American television and movies. There is even doubt that it is a constitutional right in the United States, but it certainly is not a constitutional right in Canada.

We also hear that we must have guns in order to defend ourselves. I will talk later about the legitimate rights of hunters and sportsmen with whom I have no objection. However, with respect to people who say that they must have guns in order to defend themselves in their homes in their cities, studies show that those who have acquired guns to defend themselves usually end up having those guns used against them. In Chicago, elderly women and young people were trained to use hand guns in order to defend themselves. Those people were being killed with the very guns they were given to protect themselves. Criminals would shoot them with their own guns.

In order to defend ourselves we should have an effective national, regional and city police force, rather than relying on defending ourselves as they did in the days of the American frontier when people carried guns and shot it out to defend themselves and their rights. That is not the Canadian way and never has been.

Some will say that the way to deal with the problem is by imposing stricter penalties for the misuse of guns. I am in favour of tougher penalties but that will not solve the problem. When we deal with other matters such as traffic offences, we do not allow people to drive without passing a test or having preventive measures, only to fine them when they break the laws. We use both precautions. Most provinces have strict licensing provisions for driving an automobile. We test the vehicles from time to time to make sure they are safe. There are standards for brakes, tires and other components in order to prevent accidents. We do not simply rely on tough penalties which will be applied against those who might kill, injure or maim if they drive negligently. They are all phoney arguments.

What is the present law? Presently, the gun control law is in the Criminal Code. There are three categories for guns: prohibited weapons, restricted weapons and non-restricted weapons. The prohibited weapons are machine guns, rapid-fire guns and sawed-off shotguns and rifles which can be easily hidden. They are prohibited to all individuals in Canada, without exception. They are allowed to the Armed Forces and the police.

Restricted weapons are hand guns which are allowed to certain people in certain circumstances with a registration certificate and a carrying permit. They are allowed to olympic or competitive shooters and private detectives and others.

With respect to the long guns, the rifles and shot guns, we now have a firearms acquisition certificate. In order to buy a long gun, unlike the young man to whom I referred earlier in my remarks, it is necessary to have a firearms acquisition certificate. However, that is not enough because it leaves out a whole gamut of people in this country who have obtained guns either as a hand down, through a will or by trade. They are not covered by the legislation. Nor does it cover the purchasing of ammunition.

My Bill does nothing more than simply change the firearms acquisition certificate to a firearms possession certificate so that it would apply to the possession of all firearms. Anyone who wanted to use and possess firearms must have one of these certificates, just like a driver's licence. That person must be tested for criminality, background, mental balance and history with alcohol and drug abuse. Those criteria exist right now for the firearms acquisition certificate. It would also provide for a cooling off period. For instance, if someone buys a gun today I believe it should take two or three weeks before that person receives a firearms acquisition certificate. During that period, very often the emotional circumstances will change. I am reminded of the famous case in Montreal last year. A woman by the name of Tadio killed her boyfriend whom she found fooling around. She went to buy a gun and was told at the gun store that she needed a firearms acquisition certificate. She received that certificate and the gun registration form within three hours. Obviously, the police did not do their job according to the legislation. She went to her boyfriend's place of work and shot him dead on the spot. That was the only crime she had ever committed. She obtained that gun because it was easy to get and she committed that crime because it was easy to carry out.

I want to make guns and ammunition less readily available. I know this Bill is not a panacea. It will not solve all of the problems but if we are able to reduce armed robberies by 100 or 200 a year out of the 800, we will accomplish something. I do not want in any way to prevent the legitimate hunter and sportsman from continuing their sport. We had oustanding success in olympic shooting. These people would easily pass the tests because they are balanced people with a good record in their communities. They would receive their certificate just as they would receive a driver's licence; just like pharmacists would receive licences to sell prescription drugs. We do not let anyone sell prescription drugs which are harmful. That is done by specialists who must have a licence. We should do at the least the same for the most dangerous consumer good on the market, that is the gun; that is the very least we can do.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate and have this opportunity to give my views on Bill C-205.

In the spring and summer of 1976 and again at about the same time in 1977 the House of Commons experienced emotional moments which gave rise to controversy, particularly after the introduction of Criminal Code amendments concerning gun control. Finally, in July 1977, the House passed Bill C-51, the legislative measure I want to talk about this afternoon.

The legislation features several noteworthy provisions, including one on the issuance of firearms acquisition certificates for which the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) is now attempting to substitute firearms possession certificates. The legislation also marked the beginning of the firearms selling permit issuance system which makes it possible to ensure that retailers display, sell and store firearms in a cautious and responsible manner, and it also provides for stiffer penalties for those who use firearms for illegal purposes. Mr. Speaker, I should point out that the courts are making even greater use of their powers with respect to penalties and interdictions, and that is as it should be if we want to prevent people from using firearms for criminal intents.

I would suggest that, as a result, the existing legislative measures related to gun control are adequate, and that their implementation does not create major problems nor lead to controversy. I am in favour of judicious gun control in Canada but, in my estimation, the Bill under consideration this afternoon is unreasonable and would prove to be an administrative nightmare for ordinary and responsible Canadians who own guns and, for instance, enjoy hunting. Not only does the Bill deal with firearms, but it provides as well that any person having ammunition without being the holder of a firearms possession certificate will be guilty of lawbreaking. Even the Liberal Government which shepherded the legislative measures we are expected to amend today did not see any point in controlling ammunition. Indeed, under one of the amendments proposed in Bill C-19 introduced during the previous session, ammunition dealers were to be exempt from the obligation to secure a firearms selling permit because, according to the Bill sponsor, such a measure would not serve any real purpose. Now, then, if Bill C-205 were adopted, some people could be hauled before the courts simply for having forgotten, for example, that they happen to have a box of cartridges at home. That is going a little too far.

Through his Bill, the Hon. Member wants to impose even stricter gun control in Canada. We did consider a similar measure during the previous session and, as I recall, the Hon. Member failed to rally the support of his own Party. Our Party then opposed this kind of legislation and nothing has changed since. My constituents are fully aware of gun controls and, in that field, most people do not want overly strict and perhaps overly cumbersome legislative measures.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Government has created a ministerial task force responsible for looking into each and every departmental program. This exercise will enable us to set up a program chart which at the same time will be simpler, better, clearer and more readily accessible to users. The Bill now before the House does not improve anything, nor does it meet the needs of the millions of firearms owners in Canada. Should this Bill ever become the law of the land, every single one of them would be directly involved in the administrative rigmarole advocated by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East. Our Government has launched a genuine and practical reform of all its programs, but that does not mean the adoption of peacemeal measures.

The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) believes that there are problems related to some of the provisions on gun control. He has therefore introduced a small Bill to deal with what seems most urgent. If another problem comes up, he will propose other band-aid solutions until the legislation is impossible to enforce. However, I am not saying that no improvement is necessary. Legislation can always be improved, but this requires a comprehensive examination of the legislation itself or the related program and consultations with the provinces and those most directly affected.

Before closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the existing legislation, and particularly about the firearms acquisition certificate. This system was established in 1975 and requires that all those who want to purchase a firearm first be issued a firearms acquisition certificate. As of the end of last September, one million certificates had been issued.

When these provisions were adopted, the Government had promised that an independent agency would be asked to evaluate the firearms control program for three years. Two preliminary reports were submitted and the final report was tabled in August 1983. Afterwards, the public was invited to comment on both the evaluation and the program itself.

The Canadian public unanimously objected to additional gun control measures. Canadians believe that the existing measures are adequate and that nothing would justify stricter controls. Many have however requested that the provisions on the use of firearms for illegal purposes be much more rigourously enforced.

Those who commented on the firearms acquisition certificates believed that these certificates represent no infringement on individual freedoms and seem to meet their purpose, namely to reduce armed violence and prevent dangerous individuals from obtaining firearms.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Canadians have accepted the principle of firearms acquisition certificates. I do not believe that they would agree with the proposal made today. As legislators, we have to guarantee that Canada has adequate, and most important, reasonable legislation to control firearms in general. In my opinion, the proposals made by the Hon. Member are unreasonable in addition to being rather controversial, and I believe that it would be a mistake to support them.

[English]

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today in support of Bill C-205, which has been tabled by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). In fact, I seconded the particular Bill. However, in doing so, I want to emphasize that this hour is Private Members' Hour. In supporting this Private Member's Bill today, I am speaking in my capacity as a private Member of the House. I am not speaking on behalf of my caucus or on behalf of my Party. I am speaking as one Member of the House.

In doing so, and in speaking in support of the legislation, I know that a number of my caucus colleagues take the opposite point of view, particularly some of them from rural communities, such as the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), who take a position in opposition to the legislation. Indeed, the Hon. Member for Skeena has himself tabled a Private Member's Bill which would eliminate the search and seizure provisions of existing gun control legislation and would eliminate the firearms acquisition certificate in rural areas of Canada. It is obvious, even within caucuses, that there are differences of opinion on this very important question.

However, I am pleased to rise today in support of the principles of the Bill tabled by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East. As well, I want to take this opportunity to commend the Hon. Member for having in fact pioneered the original gun control legislation in the country. In 1976, the Hon. Member, who was then the Solicitor General of Canada, introduced Bill C-83. That Bill in fact contained principles in respect of firearms acquistion certificates which would have applied to all those who possess long guns, not just those who purchase new guns. That Bill died on the Order Paper when the session ended. The Bill which followed, also introduced by the then Solicitor General, the Hon. Member for Notre-de-Grâce-Lachine East, had in fact been watered down, to the extent that the firearms acquisition certificate licensing proposal only applied to the acquisition of new guns.

The purpose of this Private Member's Bill which I support is to restore the original provisions of the gun control legislation as tabled in 1976. That means that it would not just be those who have purchased guns since January 1, 1978, who would be required to have firearms acquisition certificates but it would provide that all those who wish to possess long guns, namely rifles and shotguns, must possess a firearms possession certificate.

The other change that this Private Member's Bill would implement is to ensure that, although one has to produce a firearms possession certificate when one buys a gun, one would also have to produce it whenever one buys ammunition for that gun. I think that that is a reasonable proposition and one which I support as well.

The fundamental purpose of this Bill is quite straightforward. It is to ensure that all of those who possess these lethal weapons which are manufactured, after all, to kill either animals or human beings, should possess a firearms acquisition certificate and a firearms possession certificate under the terms of this Bill.

The Bill does not in any way affect those who are responsible, law-abiding hunters, sportsmen and sportswomen and those who use guns in competition. Certaintly Canada has had some outstanding competitors at the olympic level in the area of competitive shooting. This Bill does not affect them nor does it affect hunters who would, I am sure, readily qualify for these certificates and who, I would think, would be supportive of this principle.

As well, the Bill would respond to some of the concerns which have been raised by those who argue that the present provisions of the gun control legislation are too weak. There are still too many crimes committed in Canada involving guns. The evidence is clear that in those jurisdictions and countries in which there are tough gun-control provisions, there is less crime involving guns.

Let us look at the provisions in place in the United Kingdom. British law provides that one may not possess or acquire rifles, pistols, revolvers or shotguns unless one has already obtained a certificate from the local police and the local police will not issue such a certificate unless they are satisfied one has good reason for having the gun, public safety is not endangered and one is fit to be entrusted with a firearm. That applies to everyone who wants to have a firearm, not just to those who have purchased one since January 1, 1978, as is the case with the Canadian legislation. The effect of the law in the United Kingdom is that there are only 8,000 to 9,000 hand gun and about 30,000 shotguns in the British Isles among a population of some 55 million. In the United States, there is a population of some 220 million to 230 million and it has been estimated that there are more than 55 million hand gun alone plus 150 million to 200 million rifles and shotguns.

In addition to the requirement to obtain a certificate, certificates have to be renewed every three years in the British Isles. In general terms, these licences are issued only to members of registered target-shooting clubs and shotgun and rifle licences are issued only to citizens who can show acceptable reasons for shooting and hunting.

What are the implications of these laws for crimes involving guns in the United Kingdom? In fact, while hand gun were involved in over 10,000 deaths in the United States in 1979, in England there were only eight deaths involving hand gun in the same year. I suggest that tough and effective gun control does reduce the number of crimes that are committed and the number of deaths that result from guns. In fact, an average of less than one policeman per year has been killed by hand gun while on duty in the British Isles. Contrast that with the situation in Canada. Here hand gun were used more than any other weapon in the murder of Canadian policemen in the 1970s. This is according to a report from the Canadian Centre for Justice Statistics, a branch of Statistics Canada. In fact, of the 73 policemen who were murdered between 1961 and 1981, 71 were slain by firearms. That can be contrasted with the situation in the United Kingdom where there is tough gun-control legislation. There are far too many crimes involving guns committeed in Canada.

The final report of an evaluation of Canadian gun-control legislation done by Decision Dynamics Corporation clearly showed that the purpose of that legislation which came into effect in 1978 has been achieved to a significant extent although the report points out a number of problems with the administration of that legislation. I will deal with those problems in a moment. I would emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that this study was looking only at the watered-down gun-control provisions which were implemented as a result of Bill C-51.

The study found that the proportion of violent crimes committed with firearms declined in the post-legislation period. Where firearms were used in a violent crime, there was an increasing trend for the firearm to be a hand gun. There has been a moderate displacement of firearms by other weapons in robberies. There was a strong relationship between alcohol and drug use and firearms misuse in the true rural jurisdictions that were examined. Accidents with firearms were declining prior to 1978 but the legislation contributed to further downward trends. Finally, and I think very importantly, suicides with firearms declined moderately in the post-legislation period.

In terms of process, the study found that following 1979, courts imposed more severe sentences for firearms offences and that robberies with firearms resulted in longer jail sentences after the implementation of Bill C-51. Following 1979, sentences for repeat firearms offenders were more severe.

The study did go on to find that the application of the return procedure which is set out in Section 101 of the Criminal Code, the search and seizure provision, needs to be more clearly delineated. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena has been very critical of this provision in the past. Unquestionably there have been abuses of this provision. The legislation now in force provides that following all Section 101 searches with or without a warrant, the Attorney General immediately shall make a return or report to a magistrate showing the grounds upon which the search was conducted. However, the study found that that requirement has not been met and that the use of these returns appears to be limited. They are only made if a seizure has occurred and a request for forfeiture was intended. Clearly that is flouting Parliament's intention when it adopted these provisions of the gun-control legislation.

Another point that the study made was that the mandatory nature of the Section 98(1) prohibition order must be emphasized to Crown Attorneys and judges. The study notes that the enforcement of the mandatory prohibition upon a Section 83 conviction is very poor and that it may be that many Crown Attorneys and judges are simply unaware of the mandatory provisions of Section 98(1).

We do need tougher and more effective gun-control legislation in Canada. I would like to give an example of one of the problems which has arisen from the current inadequate gun control legislation. Two 18-year old Woodbridge High School students in Toronto were gunned down with a 12-guage shotgun as they stood outside their school. An 18-year old man was arrested in connection with the incident. The day after he was charged with two counts of attempted murder and his mother asked the question, which I think all of us must ask: "Why does the law allow my son to have this gun?" In fact, a York Regional Police constable said that, quite clearly, the gun laws are not strict enough. He also said that if something is not done we will see a lot more shootings and maybe even police officers killed.

All the young man had to do was go into the regional police station, apply for his certificate and pay the $10 which the law requires. Originally, his mother said that she did not want him to have the gun. The station phoned her for permission since her son was 16 years old when he bought this gun. His mother said: "No. Do not give it to him. He should not have a gun." However, he returned home and his mother said that he did not speak to her for four days or a week and she finally said: "What am I supposed to do? The law says it is okay, how can I say it is not?" Today, the law allows kids who are 16 years old to have guns. I think that is wrong. I think we need tougher and more effective gun control legislation. Many police across the country agree with that conclusion.

Finally, I wish to note that in previous Parliaments the provisions of this Bill have been distorted out of all recognition by those who really oppose any form of gun control legislation. The purpose of the Bill is two-fold. First, it is to ensure that anyone who possesses these lethal weapons meets the standard criteria which have been set out in the Bill, that is, that they do not have a criminal record for an offence in which violence was involved and that they have not been treated or hospitalized for a mental disorder. Is it really unreasonable to suggest that those criteria should be applied to all in Canada who would possess these dangerous weapons? Second, the Bill applies to ammunition and to the possession of ammunition as well.

Of all the consumer goods which are sold in Canada guns are by far the most dangerous and most destructive. It is the only consumer good in Canada the purpose of which is to kill—to kill animals or people. It is the one consumer good in Canada which has the greatest potential to criminal violence. We licence those who use cars. We license those who must sell prescription drugs. I suggest it is not at all unreasonable to suggest that those who want to use guns should have to meet the very basic standards which are set out in the existing provisions of the Criminal Code. For that reason, I am pleased to have been able to second this Bill and to rise to speak in support of it.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased as a private Member to be able to participate in this debate. It is my understanding that the essence of the Bill is to impose stronger measures for gun control which, in the opinion of the mover and the seconder, will right all wrongs which have occurred or may occur in the future.

I would like to speak on this issue from the point of view of those people who obey the law. The vast majority of Canadian citizens who own firearms use them for sport. I say this based on my discussions with many, many sportsmen, people who fire guns, both men and women, from the riding of Simcoe North who obey the law, not only every day but every time they use a firearm. I resent the suggestion that there will be a further persecution of these people who, by and large, respect the weapons which they use for sport. I think Hon. Members would find that these people have a high regard for law and order at all times. I come from the vantage point not as one who owns a gun but as one who represents people who own firearms.

I can remember attending a meeting where the consensus of a group of about 100 sports people was that there should be a stronger penalty in the Criminal Code for any crime in which a firearm is used. Carte blanche, they were ready to tack three years on to any penalty under the Criminal Code if a firearm were used in the commission of an offence. In other words, the people I represent want to get at the people who abuse firearms. They do not want to have a horde of bureaucrats testing people for mental stability and forcing needless examinations on the people of Canada.

I have had submissions continuously from my riding and I would like to review some of those with Hon. Members if I may. I remember on August 2, 1982, I presented a petition to the House on behalf of 728 residents of my riding, many of them members of The Orillia Fish and Game Conservation Club, to which I will refer in a moment. These people said that Canada needs tougher laws to control the criminal use of firearms. They said that we need tougher courts and tougher punishments, not further controls on those who use firearms for sport purposes. For that reason they stood in complete opposition to a previous Bill brought before the House by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). I supported that petition with the conviction that I was representing these people and that they were right. I have had correspondence from The Orillia Fish and Game Conservation Club, a group of men supported by their wives and girlfriends who are very strong on conservation and who support the measures for gun control so long as they make good common sense. For example, The Orillia Fish and Game Conservation Club is in favour of deleting the present $10 firearm acquisition certificate providing that all first-time firearm purchasers are required to take a firearms education course. Instead of some psychiatrist trying to decide whether someone at the time he or she saw them is mentally stable or not my people want gun control legislation which speaks to the safety of people who use firearms. They say that when one looks at the current legislation the onus of proof is put on to the private citizens as opposed to the state. For example, if a firearm is sold or transferred to a person who has a firearms acquisition certificate and a question develops later as to whether or not the person really had a certificate, the onus is on the vendor to prove that he or she did have it. We believe that the onus should be on the authorities and not on the innocent sportsperson who, as I say, wants to comply with the law and is very aware of the dangers of the improper use of firearms.

The Orillia Fish and Game Conservation Club with regard to the question of penalties and regulations which relate to storage and safe keeping of firearms have an unusual suggestion for the bureaucrats. They want the people who use and handle firearms all the time to have some say in these myriad regulations. I can tell Hon. Members that if they go up Highway 11 to Elwood Epp's store the most vivid part of the safe keeping of weapons in Elwood Epp's store is this. It is a sign on the door which reads: "Beware of dog." There is no bureaucrat in the world who thinks that is protection; but I can tell Hon. Members that Elwood Epp does not get robbed all that much because some people have seen those dogs behind the store and know just what sort of chance they would have. The fish and game club and others speak to a common sense approach by the authorities and to the involvement of those in the club with regard to the determination of regulations.

I have further correspondence from the Orillia Gun Club, a group established in 1929 by a group of people from my area, some 180 family members, who point out that they have a proud record of purpose, safety, accomplishment and dedication to providing recreational shooting for the people of Simcoe County. When they looked at the previous legislation put forward by my colleague, they said, and I quote:

—we feel it should be scrapped in its entirety and replaced by legislation which will seek to reduce the "criminal use" of firearms through a legal process of laws that deter those that act in a criminal manner while using a firearm in that act, and will cause the "irresponsible use" of firearms to be approached through FAC screening and as importantly through the continuance of safety training programs which we wholly endorse.

I feel I must say once again to the House, Mr. Speaker, that this is where the sports people are coming from when we talk about gun control. They want safe, responsible use of firearms. That is where their emphasis is. They go on to point out that they will accept any constructive changes brought about in a democratic manner. They speak to the question of input from law enforcement agencies, sportsmen's groups, collectors and conservation authorities. Their goal, as stated in this correspondence, would be to see that the criminal and careless use of firearms is reduced, while protecting the interests of the firearms enthusiasts.

As their Member of Parliament, I support the submissions made to me by the Orillia Fish and Game Conservation Club and the Orillia Gun Club Inc. I am pleased to be able to put their position on the record of the House of Commons in speaking to the legislation put forward by my colleague.

I believe what the Hon. Member is trying to do is to make every individual who has owned a firearm prior to 1979, and who has not found it necessary to acquire a firearms acquisition certificate, to submit themselves to a screening by the police. These are people who have never had to submit to this type of screening before. They are innocent. They have never run into any problems with the law through their conduct with firearms in terms of sport hunting. Suddenly they have to trot down to the police station to be screened by the police, so that my colleague can determine whether or not their possession of the firearm for the previous five years constituted a hazard to their safety or to the safety of others. There is no mention made of what sort of examination will be conducted. There is no mention of what sort of protection the ordinary citizens are going to have from harrassment on other issues. I believe the Bill is sadly lacking in that kind of common sense.

Second, anyone who possesses ammunition—presumably they must have a gun as well—would also have to pass this screening by a hoard of bureaucrats who are going to determine whether or not these people who have always obeyed the law are capable of not obeying the law in the future. Finally, anyone who has a firearm or ammunition in a motor vehicle would require a firearms possession certificate.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the present legislation is drafted to deny individuals who wish to acquire a firearm the right to do so if there is reasonable cause to believe that for the safety of the public they should not have one. The legislation is intended to prevent convicted criminals who have used violence against another person, or who have used firearms in the commission of their crimes, and individuals who have been treated for mental disorders associated with violent behaviour or who have attempted or threatened violence against others—all within a previous five-year period—from legally acquiring firearms. I see a great deal of sense in that but I do not see any sense in individuals who have obeyed the law during their ownership of firearms, and who have acted in a safe manner whenever they used firearms, to be brought down to a police station and made to submit to this kind of inquisition.

I could continue, Mr. Speaker, but I see that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nipissing (Mr. Mantha) would like to make a few comments. I know that his constituents, like mine, are all law-abiding people and they want their Member of Parliament to have an opportunity to address this important matter.

Mr. Moe Mantha (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for relinquishing his time to allow me to speak for a few moments.

I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on Bill C-205 on gun control. This legislation raises issues of concern not only to my constituency but to millions of Canadians throughout the country because the issue of gun control touches on the very nature of our individual liberties in a free and democratic society. It is also a matter which touches on the issue of public safety and, therefore, is of interest to all Canadians. These are the realities which help to explain why the very subject of gun control is controversial and continues to inspire sharply divided opinion.

The use of firearms in sports, recreation and as a means of livelihood has been a part of our Canadian heritage for well over four centuries and that tradition continues today. Gun control also has a long history in Canada since its inception in the earliest days of Confederation. It has been an important aspect of Canadian and social policy. It is not the concept of gun control, however, which is at issue here. Measures which deal with the criminal and irresponsible use of firearms deserve our support. I do believe, however, that Government policy must strive for a reasonable balance between the need for public safety and the legitimate interests of firearms users and owners.

To achieve that balance it is important that we consider all of those affected before this House brings about any change in gun control legislation. It is in the consideration of millions of Canadians who would be directly and adversely affected by Bill C-205 that I must speak out against its main thrust.

When I said millions of Canadians would be affected, I was not exaggerating. Back in 1976, it was estimated that there were at least 2.5 million Canadians who owned firearms. Today that number would be at least three million. Over one million Canadians have had to get firearms acquisition certificates since 1979 in order to acquire firearms. That means that over two million Canadians—and it could be many more—would have to obtain a firearms possession certificate if Bill C-205 were to be enacted. I am concerned about the possible cost and major inconvenience that this measure would cause.

There are serious implications for all of those affected by Bill C-205 and I will address them now in the House. But first I would like to refer to a first-hand expression of the concerns of many affected citizens. It is a letter which was written to the previous Government protesting a previous Private Members' Bill, Bill C-451, which was put forward by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand). It was identical in content to this present Bill C-205. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we have run out of time. I would like to thank you for the privilege of speaking for a few moments.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION—AMERICAN CHEMICAL WASTE DUMPS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, back on October 17, the Minister of Environment (Mr. McMillan) met with Mr. Lee Thomas, the Administrator of the United States Environmental Protection Agency, in connection with the cleaning up of the chemical dumps on the American side of the Niagara River. As you are aware, there are four chemical dumps of great concern in that area: the Love Canal, Hyde Park, the S Dump, and 102nd Street in Niagara Falls, New York. All of those chemical waste dumps are owned or controlled by the Hooker Chemical Company or the Occidental Petroleum Company in the U.S. They were created over a period of years with the accumulation of waste and toxic material originally in great pools or surface dumps which have now seeped into the ground and are causing potential danger to the water of the Niagara River and Lake Ontario.

• (1830)

It has been evident over the last few years, when we see the glistening of the moisture on the rocks on the banks of the Niagara River, that seepage is taking place. Traces of toxic materials, including dioxin, have been found in the waters of the Niagara River and Lake Ontario.

Because of the complaints about the Love Canal and these other chemical dumps the American have been making some efforts to investigate the possible cleanup of these sites. However, all their efforts so far have been aimed at the containment of the dumps, leaving them where they are and containing the materials in a better way. This has caused a great deal of concern on the part of Canadians generally, and environmentalists in particular, because there is the real possibility that the toxic material will move towards the banks and then burst those banks on the Niagara River. This would make completely unusable the drinking water of over six million people. About four million of those people are in the Province of Ontario, two million in the City of Montreal, and about 200,000 in the U.S. Therein lies the problem.

The fact is that these dumps are on the American side of the Niagara River, but the problems caused if the toxic materials burst the banks of the river, will really be felt in large part by Canadians. Somehow or other we have to come to grips with this problem. The Americans have not just been sitting idly by. They have looked at this problem and have done something. Five years ago they created what they called the "Super Fund" to try and deal with hazardous industrial dumps and solve these problems. They put a great deal of money into this "Super Fund". However, they have an awfully large number of waste dumps all over the U.S. In fact, most of them are concentrated in the States of California and New Jersey. That is where large numbers of people are located, as opposed to the Niagara frontier and Lake Ontario. Therefore, it is those areas which have been getting most of the attention. As I understand it, the legislation creating this "Super Fund" has expired and has not yet been replaced. There is no funding at all at the moment.

If we are going to deal with this problem the only effective way is not just to contain it but dig it up and destroy it, which is a very expensive process and there has been a lot of discussion as to whether it can be done in fact. However, it is being done in Europe, in the Netherlands and West Germany. They have plants in which they destroy this toxic material. That is what we should be doing in North America.

It has not only been these dumps along the American side of the Niagara River which caused this problem. There are other sources. Other industries, other hazardous dump sites, as well as municipalities, are causing pollution of the Niagara River and the Great Lakes generally. We have to do something about that.

• (1835)

It seems to me there are three things we can do. First, we can press the United States to get on with cleaning up their act. Second, we should be funding our own environmental groups to take court proceedings in the United States to encourage them to get on with cleaning up their own act. Third, we should be funding the sewage improvements of our own municipalities so that we can look after the pollution and waste material we are producing and dumping in the Great Lakes and Niagara River.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that tonight the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will tell us that we are doing these three things and, in particular, tell us that we are going to clean up our own act, by funding the sewer improvements of some of our municipalities to ensure that we are not polluting our own Great Lakes.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as usual, I want to thank the Member for York East (Mr. Redway) for his excellent and ongoing representations relating to the serious environmental problems which exist, particularly in the Niagara area. In fact, we can find such conditions in many parts of the Great Lakes. One part which is currently in the news is in the Sarnia area. There have been questions asked about that area which are not dissimilar to those asked regarding the Niagara region.

The meeting of October 17 was in consequence of a main meeting that Mr. Lee Thomas had with the previous Minister of the Environment, at which time the United States made an undertaking to come forward with an action plan, a proposal to in fact deal with the ongoing and serious problem in many of the waste dump sites and point sources that exist on the American side of the border which contribute greatly to the problem we have in the waters of the Niagara region. In fact, the United States accounts for about 90 per cent of the pollution, while Canada accounts for about 10 per cent, so we both make some contribution to the ongoing problem.

The administrator of the EPA came to Canada and brought with him a proposal. This proposal is being examined by our technical and scientific staff. At the time he was here, with his agreement and support, we arranged for the next stage, which is a meeting in four days from now between New York State, the Province of Ontario, the EPA and Canadian Government officials. At this meeting we will try to bring into focus some of the things that are important from the Canadian perspective and to help define those parts of the proposal that we feel need definition.

The Hon. Member has asked many questions. I do not expect to be able to answer all of them in the short time I have available, but I will try to deal with a couple of the specific issues he raised.

I think he would be interested to know some of the specific parts of that proposal. The thing that we are very interested in regarding the proposal, and this is not meant to be exclusive, is the destruction of the chemicals. Dioxin is the most lethal, and dioxin 2378TCDD is second only to plutonium as a lethal substance known to man. That is, indeed, the point. The EPA understands that those things must be destroyed. The question is how to most effectively do that. We are dealing with massive amounts of land, some of which include the leachate that is coming out on the face of the Niagara surface and into the waters. This is a technological problem. It does, in fact, demand destruction, and that is something which is understood by both the American representatives and the Canadian Government. We know that it must be destroyed. The question is how we go about doing it. The second question is how we come to grips with these technologies. We intend to work together to ensure that we accomplish that destruction. Third, we know that we need specific timetables and budgets. The cost is in the hundreds of millions of dollars. All of the ingredients are there so that the Canadian Government, in conjunction with other parties, can come to grips with this problem which has existed for many years.

• (1840)

SHIPBUILDING—IMPLEMENTATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, prior to the election on September 4, 1984, the Party which now forms the Government took a position on the matter of shipbuilding and developed a Government policy area. We recognized at that time that Canada has established itself as a leader in the cold-water shipbuilding technology industry and that indeed we should be addressing ourselves to the concerns of the shipbuilding industry. We further stated that when elected we would work to make Atlantic towns and cities the leading maritime and marine service areas in the north Atlantic. We developed a number of proposals which we would bring to the attention of management, labour and the industry as a whole when we were elected.

It has been over a year since the election. On September 23 I asked the Minister responsible for shipbuilding policy when he anticipated action on implementing the shipbuilding policies which we talked about and promised to shipyard workers during the previous year. The Minister responded that the shipbuilding policies were under review and discussions were taking place with representatives of the shipbuilding industry both in labour and management.

During the period in 1983 when we were talking about the shipbuilding industry there were only 7,800 jobs. That was down by some 34 per cent over the previous year. We agreed that there was a need to address this deplorable situation. Therefore, we developed the policies to which I have alluded. The sad fact of the matter is that according to the statistics, today we are experiencing: "The slimmest order book since before the Second World War", as described by the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association. That is a sad situation indeed.

What has taken place with reference to the policies we talked about? We have phased out the performance improvement grants as well as the shipbuilding industry assistance program, which now means that for new orders there is nothing left in the shipbuilding policy to provide an incentive to Canadian or foreign builders to have ships built in this country.

Having said that, we recognize that there is approximately $100 million worth of credits remaining to be disbursed. Indeed, that will be done over a period of time and we will probably see the effects of that for some seven years. However, that will not bring into the yards the new work that is so badly required.

We also know that the federal Government is the mainstay of the industry. That is simply not acceptable. We know that nearly all the work that is now under way, or work that is planned is being financed and undertaken on behalf of and for the federal Government. In a nation with a coastline the size of ours, we cannot accept that the federal Government, it would appear, as the sole supporter of our shipyards and the sole provider of work for those few Canadians today who are able to find work in our shipyards.

• (1845)

I suggest that we now get on with the commitments we undertook during the pre-election period. I understand the serious restraints under which the Government finds itself at the present time. However, now that we have had a full year to assess the situation, I believe it is time—and those who represent shipyards in the Atlantic area and beyond agree—to get on with implementing policies which encourage, not discourage, Canadian and foreign businesses to build and repair ships in our yards. Time is of the essence for these workers. It is time for the Government to undertake the initiative and to implement the policies we said we would implement.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague and confrère from Fundy-Royal has raised an important issue, one to which the Government of Canada is devoting close attention. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) is acutely aware of the difficulties suffered by the shipbuilding industry in Canada, and has discussed the situation on several occasions either with representatives of the shipbuilding industry or with union leaders.

There is no easy or magic solution. Our Government has already made an enormous contribution to the survival of this industry by providing, through its own orders, the great bulk of the business now on the order books. It has also shown flexibility in its contractual dealings with the shipyards. For example, it agreed to renegotiate its contracts with Halifax Industries Limited, so that the company could complete work on Coast Guard vessels despite evident financial difficulties.

Our Government will continue to support Canadian shipyards through public procurements. The Polar VIII ice-breaker program is under study, and the patrol frigate program is well under way. These two programs together represent 10,000 person-years of work.

However, to assure the future of shipyards for the long-term, they must also obtain commercial work from private industry. In the face of a collapse of world demand, coupled with the addition of new capacity in countries such as Korea, competition is fierce in all ship markets of the world. Therefore, we must ensure that Canadian shipyards work at very high levels of efficiency and without imposing an economic burden upon the users of Canadian-built ships.

The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion will be most pleased to advise his colleagues in the House as soon as a practical solution can be found.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—ECONOMIC CONDITIONS IN ATLANTIC CANADA. (B) MUNICIPAL INFRASTRUCTURES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise concerning a question I directed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on October 23, 1985. In my question I indicated some relatively staggering figures regarding unemployment in different regions of the country. Specifically, I talked about Newfoundland and other provinces in Atlantic Canada where unemployment in some communities exceeds 40 per cent to 50 per cent.

Unfortunately the Minister of Finance was not very forthcoming regarding proposals or remedial actions he and his Government were anticipating putting into place over the next number of months. However, he availed himself of the opportunity and talked about the Atlantic Accord, assistance to the Fishery Products International Company and the Cape Breton Island tax credit. These measures to which the Minister referred are certainly far from sufficient. He may allude to the fact that it costs a number of millions of dollars for these particular proposals to be implemented, but the fact of the matter is that those proposals do not reach the magnitude of the bail-out of two western banks in excess of $875 million. They are in no way equivalent to the billions of dollars provided to multinational oil companies or to the capital gains tax exemptions, which will cost Canadian taxpayers from coast to coast billions upon billions of dollars, providing a benefit to the wealthy.

• (1850)

However, the Government has implemented a Canadian Jobs Strategy Program, a program which I suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary is not working and will not work in the regions.

The Government has refused to carry through with a decentralization of Government offices in the outlying regions. In fact, the Auditor General, astute man that he is, indicated quite clearly that the Government had wasted approximately $1.5 million by cancelling the decentralization of an office from Halifax to Sydney, Nova Scotia.

The Government has refused to take an active role in the substantive issue of regional development. It has given the sole prerogative in regional development to the provincial Governments. The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) has refused to stand up for the poorer regions of the country, whether it be the Provinces of Newfoundland or Nova Scotia or any other community in the country. He has refused to assist them. We have heard his answers regarding the Toyota, Hyundai and Honda plants. The Minister and the Government do nothing.

Some $2 billion in transfer payments will be cut. This means that those in the less fortunate regions will have to pay more for medicare and post-secondary education. If the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance disputes my figures, let me tell him what the Department of Finance indicates will be cut from the Established Programs Financing: $115 million will be cut in 1986-87; $240 million will be cut in 1987-88; $385 million will be cut in 1988-89; $545 million will be cut in 1989-90 and $720 million will be cut in 1990-91. All of this will be lopped off, thus causing further unemployment in the regions.

The answers provided by the Minister of Finance to my question of October 23, 1985 are totally insufficient, and the inadequate actions taken are to meet the needs of Canadians in the less fortunate regions. I would ask him, out of concern for the economic benefit of those Canadians, that he alter the economic course which is causing thousands upon thousands of Canadians in the regions to go onto the unemployment rolls. Would he change or alter that course of action?

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member must be feeling generous, since he left me a lot of time for my answer. In any case, I am happy to be able to give you an exhaustive list of projects that constitute a direct answer to the comments of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-Richmond East (Mr. Dingwall). Mr. Speaker, the following are measures specifically directed to the Atlantic region:

—Subsidiary regional economic development agreements have been signed with the Atlantic provinces, involving federal commitments for funding totalling approximately $270 million.

—We have concluded an energy agreement with Newfoundland, thereby removing a major obstacle to the development of the Hibernia field which is rich in natural resources.

—In order to maximize the impact of this projet on the regional economy, we have contributed $225 million to the Newfoundland Offshore Resources Development Fund.

—Last May's Budget provided for a new investment tax credit for Cape Breton, which was subsequently raised from 50 to 60 per cent, in order to create new jobs in the private sector on Cape Breton island and in the Mulgrave area. Furthermore, a private sector consultative committee was set up which has just submitted its report. The Government is now examining the committee's recommendations and will act on them as soon as possible.

—A grant of $16 million was approved to enable Devco to build a second gallery in the Morien coal mine in Cape Breton.

—Furthermore, we recently paid a contribution of $77 million to Fisheries Products International; in addition, Canada and Newfoundland have agreed on a five-year plan aimed at ensuring the long term viability of this company.

• (1855)

We also added $60 million to the equalization payments paid to the Atlantic provinces earlier this year, and we did so without prior contracts or commitments.

I would like to remind the House that these steps were taken despite the strict budgetary constraints necessary as a result of the extent of federal expenditures. The impact of these expenditures is very significant and will be felt throughout the Atlantic region and in all its communities.

However, even more important than these various financial commitments is the new climate of constructive co-operation between the federal Government and the provinces which has been established in the Atlantic region and in other regions in this country since we came to power on September 4, 1984.

If the Hon. Member wishes to obtain further information on the subject, I suggest that he get in touch with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) who will be able to give him more detailed information.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, October 29, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be allowed to join in the debate on Bill C-80 this morning. There are several points that I would like to make over the next 10 minutes. I would like to refresh the memory of the House regarding some of the campaign promises made one year ago and relate them to Bill C-80.

It was only 14 months ago, in the midst of a national election campaign, that a promise was made by Conservative Members that if they were to take office, any budgetary measures they would introduce would ensure that more resources would be placed in the hands of those who need them the most. That was going to be the guiding principle of the Government. Since that time, all Canadians have had time to digest the over-all direction of the Government. Upon reflection, I think most of us would have to agree that if anything, once again the Conservative Government has broken its promise to put more into the hands of those who need it the most. Bill C-80 is a good example of that.

As was pointed out at a press conference held some 10 or 12 days ago by the National Anti-Poverty Organization, Bill C-80, an Act to increase excise and federal sales taxes, will impact twice as hard on the poor as it will on upper-income earners. In an analysis of the impact of this budgetary measure, the organization points out that excise taxes and sales taxes are regressive because of that. As a result, the organization would like the Government to withdraw the Bill and bring in one that is progressive to some degree.

It comes as no surprise to the Opposition that the Government has again introduced a Bill that is regressive in nature. One need look no further back than to the impact of the deindexation of personal exemptions in the May 23 Budget. I have pointed out time and again that that measure alone will do more to widen the gap between the poor and the rich than any other budgetary measure that the Government could possibly bring in. Yet my complaints seem to have fallen upon deaf ears. All Conservative back-benchers represent constituents but they have been amazingly silent on this issue. It comes as no surprise to the Opposition that they would be silent on the matter. However, it is incumbent upon the Opposition to point out the folly of the Government's direction.

I said earlier that Bill C-80, the Bill to increase the excise and federal sales taxes, is regressive in nature. I would indicate as well that the deindexation of personal exemptions will be even more so. What is the full import of that kind of change in policy direction by the Government? It is astounding.

The various social council agencies that give advice to the Government including the Canadian Council on Social Development and the National Council on Welfare have had things to say about this impact. In a study released just two months ago, they indicated that from 1980 to 1984, before the Conservative Government came to power, there had been a widening in the gap between the poor and the rich. Despite all of the Guaranteed Income Supplement measures that the previous Government introduced between 1980 and 1984, the gap was still widening largely as a result of the recession. Clearly the point I am making is that there was a widening in the gap between the poor and the rich in those four years. Now, on top of all the other problems that are besetting the lower-income groups in our society, deliberate Government policy is going to widen that gap further.

The councils to which I refer have made some calculations and these numbers are not disputed by the Government, by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) or by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). They indicate that because of the deindexation of personal exemptions, a family that earns $15,000 per year is going to pay an additional $1,879 in taxes over the next five years. A family that earns $35,000 per year, a middle-income family, is going to pay an additional $3,450 in income tax over the next five years. However, what happens to the family that earns $80,000 per year? Amazingly, it will only have to pay an additional $1,612 in taxes over the next five years. In other words, the councils that represent middle and lower-income earners question the political and social policy direction of the Government, a direction that will widen that gap despite the fact that they have clearly shown that as a result of the recession, lower-income Canadians are the ones who have suffered the most in the last four years. They are now expected to suffer doubly over the next four to five years as a result of the Government's proposals.

I indicated to the House that the report of the National Anti-Poverty Organization indicated that the impact of the federal excise tax will be twice as hard on the poor in our society. More important, the organization indicated something which I think should clearly be at the heart of the debate, not only with respect to the excise and federal sales tax measures but with respect to the direction of the May 23 Budget. The organization shows that the most important source of revenue for the federal Government comes from taxes, which comes as no surprise. Everyone knows that if we have expenditures and Government programs someone has to pay for them. Amazingly, of the $63.8 billion derived from tax revenue in 1984-85, fully 90 per cent of that came from personal income tax and from commodity taxes and the rest was derived from miscellaneous and corporate income tax.

Corporate income tax in the country in the last two and a half decades accounts for a decreasing share of tax revenue for Governments. Here we have a situation in which, once again, we will have to pay increased taxes under the May 23 Budget. If anything, these corporations have been given more tax breaks. Members who have spoken on these measures, and other Bills, have indicated our displeasure with respect to them. Corporations are not being asked to pay increased taxes. Rather, middle income and low income Canadians are being asked to pay more, which is why we are so disturbed that, seemingly, the Government does not understand why the social policy direction inherent in not only this Bill but in others is being opposed by the majority of Canadians. Yet, every time we raise the issue during Question Period the answer comes back to us in terms of: "What are you complaining about? The Government has certain measures which will, in fact, put more into the hands of the poor". Nothing could be further from the actual case.

I ask Hon. Members to consider Bill C-70, a Bill which proposes deindexation of family allowances. We have had the opportunity to review this Bill clause by clause with expert witnesses who have appeared before the committee. Every one of the social policy agencies in the country and every one of the groups which represent women and the poor in our society have indicated the falling off of the Government's social policy direction as a result of the May 23 Budget. I include in this category specific groups which do not represent national interests but pockets of poverty-stricken individuals in communities in Calgary, Saskatoon and so on.

This is why members of the Opposition are so adamant about ensuring that the Government bears in mind that the interests of our constituents, middle income and low income Canadians, are well served by our opposition to these types of Bills. I understand, of course, that with 211 Members, the Government can do exactly as it pleases. However, we want to ensure that the Government bears in mind the interests of our constituents when it introduces Bills such as C-70 and C-80 and, of course, other Bills which will be introduced with respect to changes in the Income Tax Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the House for this opportunity to speak to Bill C-80. Quite frankly, the responsible but painful decision we are about to make is merely the result of the policy the previous Government maintained for fifteen years without any regard for sound financial administration.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-80, the legislation before the House today that concerns federal sales and excise taxes, is aimed at reversing the considerable erosion of the federal tax base caused by a lack of leadership on the part of the previous Government, which spent money without worrying about where it would come from. Red stands for Liberals, and they were indeed in the red.

The question we must ask ourselves today is, again quite frankly: Why are we obliged to impose these tax increases?

• (1115)

Mr. Speaker, this Bill should be seen within the context of the changes and proposals announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) last May. This Bill is a financial measure, and its purpose is mainly to keep our national debt within bounds through a number of measures that either produce revenue or reduce tax expenditures.

Unfortunately, I will now have to remind my hon. friends opposite of some of the consequences of their actions, actions that caused them to lose power, and subsequently, Canadians inherited a cumulative debt unprecedented in our history.

In 1968, only seventeen years ago, Mr. Speaker, our country had a budgetary surplus of $750,000, and now, seventeen years later, the country's national debt has risen to $200 billion, while interest rates have reached unprecedented levels, and I am thinking here of people who have payments to make on their homes, and I remember two years ago when we had interest rates of up to 18 per cent and even more, bringing Canadian industry to the very brink of bankruptcy, and causing the country's gross national product to drop so dramatically that around 1982, people were wondering whether Canada, as a result of the policies of the Liberal Government at the time, had become a country where the slogan was no longer "back to the land" but "into the ground".

Mr. Speaker, whatever my friends opposite may think, I take no pleasure at all in reminding Canadians of a time we would all like to forget. Mr. Speaker, forget is the word, because that time is certainly not representative of the imagination, know-how and courage of the Canadian people. During that time we were misled and deceived by the outward appearance of a serious Government, by a marvelous exercise in camouflage, by a flood of promises. On September 4, 1984, people across Canada finally realized it was time to hand the reins of power to a more responsible party that would not be afraid to bring this country's economy back to economic liberalism, and to focus on private enterprise and job creation.

The people were undeniably right, and in less than one year, our Government was able to restore the confidence of the people in their Government. However, Mr. Speaker, our Government did not mislead the people by telling them it would be easy. It did not claim, as some politicians do, often with a lot of political rhetoric, that all we need would be some legislation that would pay off in the next election. No, Mr. Speaker. By electing this Government, Canadians were putting common sense back into Government, and in doing so, they fully realized that they would have to do their share to help industry get back on its feet, a sector the previous Government preferred to ignore.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, Hon. Members opposite see confidence as an indispensable stimulus for democratic and capitalist societies, for societies that are creative and innovative. A man who is afraid of tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, is only happy in the security of the status quo, and he does not evolve. For fifteen years, Canadians have been kept in a state of non-confidence in the future, and they could no longer create or take risks or invent as they had before.

My colleagues in the Progressive Conservative Party and I are no longer interested in blaming the current situation on the previous Government, but in showing that one can achieve anything when one has both knowledge and confidence. We can go from a situation which is far from enviable to an environment which could be promising indeed.

Mr. Speaker, that is what we are doing now. Canadians have renewed confidence, as demontrated by various indicators. People are investing again, thereby creating hundreds of thousands of new jobs. Our trade unions, provincial Governments, and all economic agents generally are working together again, dialoguing and looking forward to rebuilding our country. Such are the indicators of the Canadian economy. It has been showing increasingly more evident signs of vigor ever since our coming to power. The number of jobs has increased, interest rates have come down, investors are showing signs of renewed confidence, consumer spending is rising, prices are stable and there are fewer and fewer bankruptcies. Moreover, the performance of our economy is superior to that of the United States.

Employmentwise, Mr. Speaker, we have created 304,000 new jobs over the past year. The unemployment figure, which was 11.6 per cent, is now down to 10.1 per cent. This is not yet excellent, but I suggest this shows a definite improvement and a very positive trend which should be emphasized.

Mr. Speaker, the era of arrogance and darkness has finally ended. We all know now that by working together, we will rebuild what others have demolished. We all know also that this will require the joint effort of all Canadians, but we are ready to pay the price for our own good and that of future generations of Canadians.

In fact, when I adhered to this party and this Government, I was fully aware that I was getting involved with all other Canadians in a national effort to reestablish a climate of confidence.

Knowing full well that Canada absolutely needs to replenish its coffers, that it is back on the right track, and that we are about to shelve 15 years of poor performance, we must continue without sparing our efforts. Because of his trust in the support and good sense of the Canadian people, the Minister of Finance moved ahead in May and introduced a new budget. Three of every four measures in this budget were aimed at reducing expenditures. Bill C-80, which has now reached 2nd reading, will increase our revenues by $2.5 billion.

The purpose of this legislation, which should have been adopted a long time ago but which was not for some dark election-oriented reason, is to increase the sales tax base, leaving about 30 per cent of commodities which could be taxed on the federal level. This sales tax, as we all know, is one of the Government's main source of income. However, throughout the years a very long list of tax-free products has kept getting longer and longer, thus depriving the Government of Canada of massive revenues which would have allowed us to reduce the deficit and promote confidence. We are now proposing that those products be no longer tax-free.

Mr. Speaker, once again this Government having succeeded, thanks to its sincere and honest attitude, in dispelling strains and easing the situation in economic, social and political sectors; having succeeded in restoring confidence and thus lowering the unemployment rate; having succeeded in replacing workers' assistance and meaningless programs with programs stimulating effort and the will to learn; having succeeded in reducing interest rates which are a burden for millions of heads of families, because the previous Government had not found anything better to control inflation than raising interest rates, we are asking Canadians to let us carry on with what we have so well started and to give us the means to do it.

Before concluding my comments, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the 2nd Annual Report of the Economic Council of Canada on economic forecasts and this is what its chairman, Mr. David Slater stated: "Economic forecasts for Canada are gradually improving and indicate a stable growth in the medium term. The Gross National Product could increase by an average of 3.5 per cent during the next decade and the inflation rate would be around 4 per cent per year as of 1990 and would fall to a lower level during the following five years."

The Economic Council of Canada expects that unemployment will decrease gradually to an average of 9 per cent between 1985 and 1990 and to 7.6 per cent during the following five years. Our federal deficit will continue to decrease in proportion to our Gross National Product. I think that it is quite an encouraging indication provided by the Economic Council of Canada.

We are now asking the Canadian people to support Bill C-80 now before this House in order to proceed with our economic revival and to reduce the deficit. It is not easy, Mr. Speaker, but we must do so if we want our economy to become healthier.

[English]

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather strange and somewhat disquieting to be debating Bill C-80, which introduces some very unfair tax measures which make no economic sense, and to be doing so under the guillotine. Closure has a purpose and validity in our Standing Orders, Mr. Speaker, as all Members of Parliament know, but I doubt very much whether it has validity when the Party in power has such a massive majority. I doubt whether the Canadian people would agree that a closure motion is justified when there is a huge majority on the government side and a small Opposition. Mind you, this small Opposition has proven to be very vigorous and very effective. If any Members have failed to comprehend that, they need only ask the senior citizens of the country how, when we combined forces with them, we were able to cause the Government to retreat from a mean and vindictive reduction of senior citizens' pensions.

• (1125)

However, I doubt whether closure has any validity on a tax grab Bill such as C-80. We all know that the sales tax is regressive. It hurts most those who can least afford to lose those extra precious dollars. It increases the Consumer Price Index. I suppose we have become lethargic about inflation, but it is still with us and it concerns most those who have the fewest dollars to spend. It is into the pockets of those people that we are reaching with these petty tax grabs which make no economic sense at all.

For example, we are going to add another tax on gasoline. In the region of the country from which I come, Mr. Speaker, gasoline is already too expensive. In fact, we pay the highest price for gasoline in the country apart from that paid in the far north. We pay much more than motorists pay elsewhere and it is hurting our tourist industry. I really wonder how the Members from northern Ontario who sit on the Government side could allow this additional tax on gasoline to be introduced through a Bill such as C-80. How do the Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) and the Member for Timmins-Chapleau (Mr. Gervais) justify to their constituents a higher tax on gasoline?

I see that the Hon. Member for Timmins-Chapleau is present in the House today. He indicated recently that he wants to be my partner. He wants to work with me for a better deal for northern Ontario. He indicated that he has much greater access to Cabinet Ministers. I rejected his offer of a partnership, Mr. Speaker. I said: "Thanks, but no thanks". I want to confess that perhaps I was just a bit hasty. I would like to reconsider that offer. I would like the Member for Timmins-Chapleau to prove to me, to his constituents and to my constituents that he can do something about this tax on gasoline. Can he get the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to roll back this increased tax on gasoline? If he can, perhaps I will reconsider his offer of a partnership. After all, I recognize that we are not here to serve our political Parties, but to serve our constituents. If we can get this tax rolled back, perhaps the Member for Timmins-Chapleau and myself can join forces and get a better deal for northern Ontario from the Government which has already done so much to downgrade this region with regard to job creation programs and regional development programs. So much has been done in such a short time to undo the good work of the previous Liberal administration in northern Ontario.

Let us talk for a moment about the increase in the price of gasoline. If one includes the increase in the general excise tax plus the higher gasoline price, it means that the price of gasoline will rise by approximately 4 per cent. According to the figures from the Tourism Industry Association, a 4 per cent fuel price increase translates into 900,000 fewer American visitors coming to Canada. The Member for Timmins-Chapleau knows that many of those visitors come to northern Ontario and that we want more of them.

On a typical day a visitor may spend about $82. The multiplier effect for every dollar is approximately $1.79. Therefore we can come to the conclusion that this increase in the price of gasoline will cost our economy, in tourism dollars, approximately $135 million. That is why I say it is an unfair tax that makes no economic sense. Furthermore, about 5,325 tourism jobs will be lost.

I do not know what happened in Cabinet when this issue came up but I must believe that the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. Murta) must have fought like a mad dog against that increase. He must have dug in his heels to say to his colleagues in Cabinet: "No way will I allow that kind of an increase. It hurts my national constituency. I am fighting for the tourist industry in this country and will not let that happen". The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) from Sault Ste. Marie must have been right there to give his support to the Minister of State for Tourism. When this issue came up in caucus I imagine the Member for Timiskaming and the Member for Timmins-Chapleau must have joined forces with those two Ministers to stop this tax increase, but to no avail.

We will feel the effects of this on the economy of northern Ontario because Members from northern Ontario will know that the forest industry has stabilized and is not creating any new jobs. Pulp prices are depressed. There is no expanding market so that we cannot look to forestry for new jobs. We are holding our own, but not growing.

Mining is in a depressed state, except for gold, so that we cannot look for any hope there unless international metal prices suddenly show a significant increase. We know that the market for metals is saturated so that we cannot look to that industry to produce jobs.

Tourism is the sector which can provide jobs and encourage the economy of a region like northern Ontario. However, the Government has slapped on an additional tax that will affect our tourist industry which is already having difficulty matching costs in the United States for such things as fuel, accommodation and liquor. This increase in tax will add to an already intolerable situation.

Bill C-80 is a series of unfair taxes that make no economic sense at all. Let me give another illustration. Canadians should be aware that, incredibly, Bill C-80 will tax alternative energy and energy conservation equipment. Let me cite some of those items which will be taxed at the 11 per cent level, beginning January 1 next year: heat recovery units and devices for extracting heat from exhaust air or waste water for recovery of energy; solar panels and tubes for collecting and converting solar energy; wood-burning stoves and space heaters. The following items will be taxed at 7 per cent construction rate: heat pumps in permanent heating systems; wrapping material and thermal insulation designed for pipes and ducts in buildings and mechanical systems; loading dock seals and shelters.

The measures being imposed in Bill C-80 will not result in any great tax revenue to the Government but will discourage Canadians from improving the efficiency with which they use energy.

Because Bill C-80 imposes unfair taxes and makes no economic sense, the Government, being very embarrassed about it, imposes time allocation. I have said that there is a proper moment, with certain Bills, to use time allocation. However, this is not one of those Bills.

Let us see how Bill C-80 will affect the construction industry. There are hundreds of small and medium sized construction companies which will see their profit margins cut to the bone. They will be forced to absorb a new 6 per cent tax on construction materials which will place them in difficulty because many of these contractors are on a fixed contract and cannot adjust their contracts to meet this new tax. Therefore, the profit margin is lost.

One modest and very practical suggestion was that the tax be phased in to take account of the fixed price contracts. However, the Government ignored that suggestion.

When this Budget measure is added to other Government measures such as higher fuel costs, CMHC cut-backs and the elimination of the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, it will add up to a very heavy blow to the industry at a critical time when it was beginning to recover. That industry will be cut back as a result of these unfair taxes that make no economic sense at all.

Even the children will not be spared. There will be an unfair tax increase on chewing gum, candy and pet food. It makes no economic sense at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allocated to him has now expired.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak on this matter but having heard the presentation by the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner), I cannot restrain myself from saying just a few words.

The Hon. Member is one who presents himself as a very reasonable person. In fact, he has a reputation for that and, in the past, it has been a well deserved reputation for reasonableness. However, he has thrown it all away today. I never heard such a blatant partisan argument as that presented by him today. There was not one iota of reason contained therein.

He argued that during the time of the Liberal Government it was acceptable to impose closure time and time again as a regular means of operation because there were more Members in the opposition. He went on to state that today that process, which is permitted in the Standing Orders of the House, should not be used because there are slightly fewer Members in the Opposition. That makes no sense because it is a well known fact that a small number of Members in the Opposition, by introducing amendment after amendment and recycling speakers, can tie up House business on a filibuster just as well as if there were another 30 or 40 Members. There is no difference when there is an opportunity to recycle speakers.

Unfortunately, the tactics that have been used by the present Opposition are precisely that. Their sole strategy appears to be to tie up the work of Parliament because they have no alternative policies to put forward. They have no real logical arguments to make that would propose better legislation. They are simply tying up Parliament and doing the Canadian people no benefit whatsoever by that type of tactic. They are forcing the Government to use these provisions in the Standing Orders.

I would agree to a certain extent with the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior that this is not the right way of proceeding. I understand that other Parliaments throughout the Commonwealth have developed a better system. Why is it not possible for us to use existing Standing Orders to allow the various Parties to decide how to deal with a measure such as Bill C-80? Everyone knows that it will be passed into law at some point because it is necessary legislation. This Bill is worth four or five days of debate and the Parties could sit down to organize such a debate and come to an agreement so that we do not have to use the time allocation system constantly. We certainly need a better system than that.

The Bill before us provides a means of raising the revenue for expenses that the Government will incur. These expenses include the old age pension. This again was referred to in the speech of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior. He was condemning this legislation and at the same time praising his own Party's position concerning the old age pension.

• (1140)

If we are to have indexed old age pensions, it will cost hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars. The Government cannot give something it does not first take away from somebody else. You cannot argue, on the one hand, for higher old age pensions, Mr. Speaker, and then, when the tax bill comes in to pay for it, say: "No, no, we should not raise that additional revenue". Anybody of a sound mind has to realize that if you want something, you have to pay for it. You cannot be like a child and say: "We want this and this". One cannot say, "We want more and more," as the Opposition says, and then when the time comes to pay say, "No, we are not prepared to pay for it."

If the public is to have any confidence in Parliament and any confidence in the Opposition—and what little bit the Opposition has in gradually slipping away—one has to take that sensible, reasonable and logical position and know one has to pay for anything given away by Government.

Regarding the sales tax, it is very easy to score political points by saying that any particular item should be exempt from sales tax, such as children's candy, for example. Who wants to put a tax on children's candy? Let us select another item, medical supplies, for instance. One hears: "We don't want to put a tax on that". You can come up with an argument on just about any single item as to why should not be taxed. It does not matter whether it is a cup of coffee, a cubic yard of cement, or whatever. You can always think of good arguments to exclude a specific item. If we allow ourselves to be persuaded by those who would argue that there should not be a tax levied on a particular item, one would find that the sales tax base would decrease, and on those items still taxed, the taxes would be horrendous in order to raise necessary moneys for other things.

What this Government has been trying to do is to be fair and say that everything, as much as possible, should be included in the tax base, so as to have as low an over-all rate as possible. Not only that, you have much less administration if you do not have special rates for special items or exclusions. Sometimes you exclude one thing that is substituted by something else, which creates a terrible administrative problem as the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) can well describe.

As a final point, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a good thing about the Bill in that it extends the right of appeal and the right not to pay taxes until—if you want to dispute the tax levied—the matter has been decided by a court of law. Another good thing is to extend the provisions which were recently incorporated with respect to income taxes—those provisions which were included in the Progressive Conservative taxpayers' bill of rights—to excise and sales tax matters. That is certainly a step in the right direction.

Thank you for the opportunity, Sir, to refute some of the remarks made by my good friend and colleague from Cochrane-Superior.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, when speaking on this legislation with the threat of time allocation hanging over our heads, it is important to remember that time allocation is getting to be a consistent policy of the Government. The Conservative Party, now in Government, used to oppose time allocation when it was in opposition. Yet we are in the ironical situation that on almost every piece of legislation coming to the House at present the Government is preventing full debate.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Shameful.

Mr. Murphy: One of my colleagues calls it shameful. I am not allowed to say that it is hypocritical because that is not allowed by the rules of the House, but it is something close to hypocritical when you do one thing in opposition and the exact opposite when in government.

Tax policy is one of the very areas on which the House of Commons should be spending a fair amount of time. It is evident from the Auditor General's Report that we, as the watchdogs of the Government purse and as the people who are passing legislation resulting in tax increases, are not doing a very effective job. Much of that is because we are not getting the information we need from the Government, whether the present Conservative Government or the previous Liberal Government. In addition, the whole structure in a lot of these debates does not allow for the real investigation necessary, something we will have to look at in terms of Parliament itself.

By bringing in time allocation on this Bill and forcing it through the House later today, the Government is preventing us from moving in the direction which the Auditor General called for in his report last week.

We are also rushing this piece of legislation through which will increase taxes, hidden taxes for the most part, on Canadians without any real study of alternatives and without any real attempt by the Government to look at tax reform.

There is no introduction of a minimum tax for the rich. There is no change in the corporation tax. There is no concept of fairer taxation. What we have is a minor series of amendments which will add to the tax bill of ordinary Canadians. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) pointed out, in some cases that will especially hurt people from northern regions because higher gas, oil and aviation taxes increase the cost of living in those regions. Yet here we are rushing a Bill through the House with no consideration as to how it will affect people in northern Ontario, the Northwest Territories or northern Manitoba.

In September, 1984, Canadians did vote for a change. They wanted to see their Government open things up. Canadians wanted to see some type of fair taxation system introduced. Yet much of this legislation before us today has been introduced by previous Liberal Governments. It is the same system. All we see is percentages increased by 1 per cent here or 2 per cent there to increase the revenue to the federal Government.

I object to the quick passage of this Bill without any chance for public input, without any chance for a study as to how taxes should be raised and where the money should come from. At the same time, the Government is constantly spending. We have seen a billion dollars go in tax write-offs for the Gulf deal, another billion dollars went into the tax write-off in the Dome deal, and we have seen another piece of legislation rushed through the House for a billion dollar bank bail-out. The Government is spending billions upon billions on tax write-offs and in bank bail-out money, yet it says it needs to increase the money collected from ordinary Canadians.

If you have these bail-outs and give money away or refuse to take money owing to the Government of Canada on various oil company deals, and if you are to give something like $9 billion to the oil industry as a result of the May 23 Budget, you will have to increase taxes and take away money from the taxpayers, people who will not benefit from the billion dollar bail-outs.

Worse than that, Mr. Speaker, some of the other things the Government is doing indicate there is no sense of fair taxation. The Conservative Government is to continue along the same trail which Liberal Governments followed in the past.

Let met quote from a speech made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to the Canadian Tax Foundation in November, 1984 when he said:

● (1150)

Our recent figures indicate that the effect of tax incentives has been to reduce the average federal corporate income tax rate from 36 per cent to 15 per cent . . . Particular activities qualify for very high rates of incentives, especially under certain grant programs. When the benefits from special tax incentives are added we are looking, in some cases, at an extraordinary generous level of assistance.

Those were the words of the Minister of Finance when he spoke in November, 1984. However, what did he do in May, 1985? He added on a capital gains tax-free amount of $500,000 per individual. We know that that will not benefit someone earning $10,000 or $15,000 per year. It will not help most farmers in western Canada. It will not help people working in the mines or in the forest industry. It will not help people living on a minimum wage or the people who are seeing their family allowances cut back by the Government. What the Minister is saying is that we have a very generous system at the present time and that the corporate income tax rate went from 36 per cent to 15 per cent prior to the introduction of his Budget. The situation is becoming worse in that corporate taxes will produce less money for Canadians. Those people at the top level of income will be paying less for the services which all Canadians require. At the same time, those people who are working on farms, earning a wage or earning a salary will be paying more and more of their take-home pay to the coffers of the federal Government. It is not fair. It goes in the opposite direction to fairness.

While I have the floor, and because we are talking about the raising of tax money, I should like to talk about how money will not go to the provinces in the future. In the Budget we were told that by 1990 the federal Government hoped to reduce the amount of transfer payments to the provinces by $2 billion per year. That is a lot of money. That money is used for medicare, post-secondary education and to help provide the services of the provinces to ordinary citizens. By increasing taxes at the federal level, and by decreasing the amount of money going to the provinces from the amount required under the present legislation, it will be more and more difficult for the provinces to be able to provide their services. Money is being taken away from the provinces. The taxes paid by ordinary citizens are being increased. The federal Government is saying that it is broke, that it cannot afford to provide those services, and that it is up to the provinces to do it. Again I say that that is unfair. It indicates that the Government does not have a tax fairness policy and that it does not really consult with the provinces before it takes action.

In speaking about the cut-back in transfer payments, it is interesting to note that last month, in Halifax, the Minister of Finance indicated that he was planning to keep the threat in the May 23 Budget of reducing transfer payments by $2 billion per year by 1990. He also indicated that he would change the present legislation and bring in those cut-backs one year earlier, so that by April 1, 1986, the provinces will be getting approximately $400 million less next year than they would under the present legislation. The Minister of Finance made that threat in a meeting with provincial Finance Ministers in Halifax. He finally admitted it in the House of Commons, but he will not come clean on the actual figures involved. He will not tell the people of Nova Scotia or the people of New Brunswick how much less they will be receiving in transfer payments next year. He will not tell the people of Quebec, Manitoba and Saskatchewan how much less they will be receiving. In fact, he will not tell the people of Canada what the Government is doing.

At the present time, the Conservative Government is increasing the taxes which people will have to pay, as well as the costs of various goods and services, but it will not tell them its plans for next year. Their taxes will be increased, but there is no indication of what the Government will do to ordinary Canadians.

I think that is what upsets so many of us in the House and people right across the country. The new Conservative Government is acting much like the Government which the people of Canada voted out in September, 1984.

I suspect that my time is almost up, but in closing I should like to indicate that the people of Canada wanted a change. They wanted Government to become more open with its population. I see a Conservative Member sitting silently across the way. When he was in opposition to Government, he used to be active in opposing time allocation. He used to be very upset about the closed nature of past Liberal Governments and about tax increases. Now he sits there, allowing time allocation to take place day after day, allowing tax increases which affect ordinary Canadians and allowing the Government to cut back on transfer payments. Similarly, when the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) were in opposition, they used to oppose cut-backs in services to the provinces. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) typifies what is wrong with the Conservative Government.

Mr. Aurèle Gervais (Timmins-Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill C-80 and to answer the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner). During the last week, I was singled out twice by that Hon. Member when I really do not believe he knew what he was talking about. He talked about a partnership into which he presumed I wanted to enter with him.

However, before speaking about the partnership, I should like to make a couple of comments about the Hon. Member himself. In my days in the municipal field, I had the opportunity to work with the Hon. Member for a number of years. He has done good work for northern Ontario. He must have lost his cool now that he is in opposition, because he is saying things and doing things which are not very characteristic of him. Certainly he was not trying to be complimentary to me when he spoke on both those occasions. However, I say again that I got along well with the Hon. Member in days gone by.

The partnership proposition was proposed, not with the Hon. Member, but with an association in Cochrane-Superior. With all due respect to him, I do not think I would like to enter into a partnership with an Hon. Member who represents a Government which brought in the National Energy Program, FIRA, and the MacEachen Budget. I think the feeling is mutual. I do not think I would want to be in partnership with a Member representing such a Government. However, I want to enter into an agreement with an association in Cochrane-Superior because we can do a number of things.

I live in northern Ontario. I return to my riding once per week. I spend a lot of time there. That is more than I can say for the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior. He lives in Ottawa.

Mr. Nystrom: Are you a nice guy?

Mr. Gervais: He might say that he has a residence there, but he is normally in Ottawa.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not sure if the Hon. Member is delivering his maiden speech, in which case he should be given the widest possible latitude and be allowed to express whatever views may be burdening his soul and his mind. However, if this is not his maiden speech and the general courtesies of the House are not extended to the Hon. Member, then I suggest that you, Mr. Speaker, direct the Hon. Member for Timmins-Chapleau to confine his remarks to Bill C-80. The House and his constituents are anxiously awaiting his views on Bill C-80.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) has well argued his case. I may point out to all Hon. Members that we are addressing Bill C-80 at this point in time. This would apply to all Members of the House, including the Hon. Member who rose to speak. We may bear that in mind while debating this Bill.

Mr. Gervais: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The reason I was making these comments is that I was singled out by the Hon. Member twice.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Gervais: I just wanted to explain the facts to the Hon. Member.

Let us talk about Bill C-80. Let us talk about increases in gasoline prices. Back in 1980, the Conservative Government was brought down by the Liberals and the NDP because at that time we had proposed to increase the price of a gallon of gasoline by 18 cents. The record of the next three or four years when the Liberals were back in power shows that the price of gasoline did not increase by 18 cents per gallon but it increased by $1.28 per gallon. I would ask the Hon. Member who singled me out twice where he was when the price of gasoline went up by $1.28 per gallon. He just finished asking me where I was when Bill C-80 was proposed. Where was my hon. friend during the three years the price of gasoline rose by $1.28 per gallon?

I can tell the Hon. Member where I was and what I was doing in the federal caucus and the northern Ontario caucus at the time. I was helping my colleagues formulate a policy that has increased employment in Canada by 304,000 jobs in the last year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gervais: I was working with my colleagues creating a policy that brought down interest rates to 8.85 per cent, the lowest they have been in seven years. What were interest rates when my colleague was supposed to be fighting for things of that nature?

I was working with my colleagues setting a policy that created an increase of 13 per cent in the manufacturing sector since September 1984. I was working with my colleagues introducing policy which became part of the Western Accord, an Accord which, in its first eight months, increased drilling activities in Canada by 19 per cent. That is where I was.

I was also working with my colleagues introducing policy that reduced bankruptcies in Canada by 13 per cent.

Mr. Gauthier: What about the three banks?

Mr. Gervais: Yes, we were also working on the bank failures that were brought about by the policies of the previous Government. For the benefit of my hon. friend, that is what I was doing. I have been working on these matters of policy of which I am very proud.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Unlike the Hon. Member who just resumed his seat, Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavour to relate my remarks to the thrust of Bill C-80. The Government was practically forced to invoke closure—time allocation—because the Opposition has not softened its unrelenting attack against the Bill, and it is imperative that we explain our approach.

Among the major arguments in favour of this measure, one in particular was raised earlier when the Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn) took the floor of the House. Referring to the kind of taxes and levies proposed in Bill C-80, he said they are intended to offset the erosion of the sales tax base. In other words, according to the Hon. Member for Jonquière and some of his Progressive Conservative colleagues, the purpose of this measure is to properly restore the sales tax within the Canadian tax structure.

That is where the Progressive Conservative Party and we in the Opposition have diverging views, Mr. Speaker. In our judgment, increasing the sales tax is a regressive step and we believe that the Government is not proceeding correctly to collect taxes. That is why we are against the Bill.

We agree that the Government should try to collect more money to provide better services to the people or perhaps to control the deficit, for those are commendable goals. What we are telling the Government is that it is trying to get the money from the wrong people. Its attack is directed against those who can least afford to pay. It is acting at the expense of low wage earners while continuing to protect its high income friends. For example, we figured out that, according to the forecasts, revenues generated by these new taxes in fiscal year 1985-86 will bring an additional $1.205 billion in Government coffers. However, 88 per cent of those revenues are regressive taxes. Among others, the gasoline tax will hit rich and poor people alike; the tax on alcohol—incidentally, there is nothing wrong with taxing bad habits—will produce only $15 million, but here again everybody will pay the shot; the tax on tobacco may prove to be a blessing in disguise if people end up smoking less, but again the Government will take $220 million out of our pockets regardless of incomes. The higher sales tax will account for $80 million more and, by widening the tax base, the Government will siphon off another $275 million.

That will do for examples, but what I am proving is that most of the new funds collected through this tax—88 per cent—will come from all taxpayers regardless of their income. As a result, a poor family will have to shell out $128 more this fiscal year, or 1.39 per cent of its total income. The $50,000-income family, much better off, will pay more in absolute figures, $547, but it will still amount to only 0.69 per cent of its higher income. To put it another way, poorer people will be expected to pay proportionally twice as much as wealthy Canadians, and that is where we draw the line.

I am not the only one who went through these tables and discovered that inequity. I can quote for instance the National Organization against Property, which had this to say according to the headline in the newspaper Le Droit of October 30, 1985: "Poor families will be twice as much affected as rich families by the increase in sales and excise tax proposed by the Tory Government". There is the problem. The Government is trying to get additional tax money, and this we do not oppose in principle, but it is plucking that money from the pockets of those who are the least in a position to defend themselves. Besides, this sales tax is a concealed, a hidden tax that nobody sees. If the Government on the other hand had chosen to increase taxes in a progressive way, it would have amended the income tax tables so that an extra effort would be made by high income groups to help increase Government revenues. But no, this is not what they are doing. They are asking everybody to pay, and the poor are asked proportionately twice as much as the rich! This is what we feel is unacceptable! This is why we are holding up the debate in the House of Commons. This is why we will fight this measure to the end, because it is fundamentally unfair.

As I said, this is a hidden tax. The federal sales tax is not like a provincial retail tax that is added on the invoice when consumers buy goods in the store. It is a tax that will be already included in the price tag. This is why people do not see it. It is a hypocritical way of collecting revenue especially as I said from the pockets of those who can the least afford to pay.

Meanwhile, the Government is proposing on the one hand to deliver a $500,000 handout, by increasing capital gains exemptions. It is interesting to note that with Bill C-80, the Government will tax the small people while with another legislation soon to be introduced, it will help those who make capital gains, those who are relatively well off in our society.

Let us also consider the Government's tax expenditures over the coming years in the sole area of existing capital gains exemptions, quite apart from the $500,000 handout the Government is getting ready to extend to people with higher income. I am referring to forecasts made by officials, for instance, on capital gains exemptions. These officials say that because of the increased use of such tax loopholes the Government would lose during the 1985-86 fiscal year something like $300 million more in tax revenues than it is already losing. And over the following fiscal year 1986-87, that amount would be $600 million. Finally, during fiscal year 1990-91, the forecasts indicate $1.25 billion. This means that the system set up by our friends opposite is aimed at helping, assisting high income groups, by switching the burden to those who already find it difficult to make ends meet.

The gas tax, for instance, is affecting everybody, even the taxpayer working at the minimum rate who has to use his car to commute. Even if he takes the bus, public transportation, he will suffer because the gas tax increase sooner or later will be passed on to him via his bus fares. This means it hits everyone, and the hardest hit are those who have the lowest income, because high-income groups could not care less if the costs of gas increases slightly. And speaking of the increased gas cost, let us look at the blind of judgment and meanness with which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) went about that: on the one hand, and this has been raised in this House by my colleague for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) who sits to my left, and thank God he pointed this out to the Minister of Environment (Mr. McMillan)—the tax increase on regular gas will be less than the increase on lead-free gas. So this measure, is regressive not only in respect of low income taxpayers, but also in respect of environment protection. In fact, the tax on leaded gas will increase by .32 cents a litre, while the tax on lead-free gas will be higher, at .35 cents a litre.

So what we have in Bill C-80 is a tax package that is ill conceived, that plucks the money the wrong people. And this is why the Opposition is fighting it so vigorously for the reason again, not that we feel the Government has no need for extra revenues to manage public business, because clearly it does—but good Lord, when will this Government try and understand it has not been elected to help the affluent and penalize the poor, but to try and maintain the kind of social justice that existed in this land before September 4, 1984! This is the reason why we are opposing Bill C-80, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak against Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. What we are dealing with in this Bill is $3.5 billion of extra tax money which the Government proposes to collect from taxpayers to the end of the next fiscal year 1986-87. As is typical with most Government legislation, and it was typical of the Liberal legislation, there is a bit of good news contained in the Bill. There is a minor clause which states that the treatment of the people who are collecting these excise taxes will be more in line with the recent changes to the Income Tax Act. This means that the power of search and seizure will be lessened. The Department of National Revenue will grant the person who is suspected of withholding taxes improperly the right to make a case for himself or herself and present that case before funds are actually seized from the person's bank account. This is a positive step. It gives taxpayers and the person collecting taxes on behalf of the Government for Revenue Canada some rights which were not in place before. I mention this clause because it contains good news. The rest of the few minutes which I have to speak today on this subject will be with respect to the bad news.

The bad news is that the tax rates which people in Canada have to pay will be going up. Because these are excise taxes and are geared to people who are spending money for consumer goods the load will tend to fall more heavily on lower income people than it will on higher income people. For that reason they should be designated as regressive taxes because they hurt people with average and low incomes far more than they hurt people with higher incomes. The reason for this is quite obvious when one starts going through the list of taxes.

We can see that one of the first tax measures mentioned in the Bill is an increase of 1 per cent effective January 1, 1986, which will be levied on construction materials. There will be additional taxes on cable and pay television services of 7 per cent. There will be a 14 per cent increase on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products and an 11 per cent increase on all other taxable goods. The other taxable goods category includes some items which were not included before. These are items which were exempt from sales taxes previously, such as candy which children buy, soft drinks, pet foods and certain health goods. An 11 per cent tax will be imposed on these items bringing the total cost to consumers up to $990 million—almost $1 billion. That is almost enough to pay for the recent bank bail-out.

Energy conservation equipment did not previously attract any excise tax at all. Taxes will now be imposed on this equipment on the same basis as other consumer items, which raises the question of just how serious the Government is about conservation. The total cost to Canadian consumers in the next fiscal year from these changes, including getting pet owners and children involved in the tax system, will be $785 million. As well, there is a tax increase which farmers have already noticed to their chagrin, that is the excise taxes on fuels. The excise tax went up 2 cents a litre on gasoline, diesel and aviation fuel on September 3. That works out to 9 cents a gallon for those using the other system of measurement. Effective January 1, those taxes will increase another cent per litre. This will collect one and a third billion dollars more taxes in the next fiscal year and will go some way toward paying off the taxes which Dome Petroleum did not pay last year because of its ability to avoid paying taxes. Ordinary farmers and consumers who use gasoline and diesel fuel will make up that loss by paying more at the pump. Smokers and users of alcohol will be paying their 14 per cent as well. Taxes on cigarettes, for instance, will go up by about 1 cent per cigarette.

• (1220)

The proposals in the Budget and in some of the speeches leading up to the Budget, did not make Canadians generally aware that this was going to happen. In a speech made to the Canadian Tax Foundation on November 28 of last year, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated that the real bottom line of any tax system is people, how it will affect people. We found out after the first Budget how this tax system will affect ordinary people. They will be paying about $3.5 billion more in taxes this year than they did last year. In the same speech, the Minister of Finance left the impression that there was going to be some levelling out of the tax system. During the election campaign there was concern expressed by all Parties, including the Conservative Party, that the tax system was inequitable, that the very rich were not paying their share and that people with lower incomes were paying a far higher burden of taxation than were the corporate citizens and those with high incomes. The Minister of Finance pointed out in that speech to the Canadian Tax Foundation, and I quote:

> Our recent figures indicate that the effect of tax incentives has been to reduce the average federal corporate income tax rate from 36 per cent to 15 per cent—

He was speaking about some of the fast tax write-offs which are permitted under the tax law, which are not being changed, and he alluded to the R and D rip-off which did finally get stopped. He referred to such things as what is known in tax circles as the "little Egypt bump" which is still going on and which allowed Olympia & York in its acquisition of Gulf, and Dome Petroleum, to avoid between the two of them $1.5 billion worth of taxes. When we put that together with some of the recent reports of what the bank bail-outs will cost the Government of Canada, we arrive at a total of approximately $3.5 billion in taxes which the Government is proposing to collect in the form of excise taxes from ordinary Canadians. One can see very quickly why those of us in medium and low income brackets will have to carry the tax bill for these decisions made by the Government.

In conclusion, I will reiterate that we will be opposing this Bill. We believe it continues an unfair tax system and has not addressed any of the real problems which exist in the collection of tax in this country.

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to address a few thoughts and comments on Bill C-80, particularly at this stage of debate, on what this Bill proposes and, interestingly, how the Opposition Parties have been dealing with it.

Speaking in support of taxation is a little like speaking in support of borrowing Bills. It is a necessary evil and certainly gives the Opposition Members plenty of things to place in their canons. However, as we approach this particular Bill and what the Budget calls for and envisions, I believe we should perhaps ask the Opposition, and those who have spoken so strongly and vociferously against the measure, what they would do. In the spirit of partisanship—and it is as partisan as I will ever get—I would ask the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), or his colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), that question. I would particularly like to ask that question of the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville, who is aspiring to be the Leader of the New Democratic Party in Saskatchewan, although why anyone would want that job I will never know. However, the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville is attempting very vigorously to get that job. So I will ask the supporters of the New Democratic Party what they would do, and I believe the answer would be quite clear. They would have us live in a system which requires no fiscal responsibility or accountability. It is a system of having an economy which is completely skewered.

Mr. Althouse: If you owe them, pay them. It doesn't matter if you are a corporation.

Mr. Gormley: Perhaps the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre would let me finish without interrupting.

Mr. Althouse: Had you listened, you would have heard $2.5 billion worth.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Gormley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In dealing with the depressing matter of deficit reduction, may I say that we asked Canadians what they wanted. Canadians wanted jobs and a growing economy. Mindful of this, however, they said we had to get those jobs and a growing economy at the same time that we cranked down the deficit. It is a fact of life—and I would have thought that these well worn parliamentarians would have known the figures by now—that when a country is running an annual deficit in excess of $34 billion to $35 billion, with a cumulative net debt approaching $200 billion, it is evident that the deficit is a pressing problem.

How do we address that problem? Our Government is proposing to address the deficit in a very responsible fashion. Eighty per cent of deficit reduction will be done by expenditure reduction, taking what exists presently and winding it down. Only 20 per cent of deficit reduction will be done by increasing taxes. I believe if we took the approach advocated by the New Democratic Party, we would have a system where there would be overwhelming tax increases just to pay for the financial recklessness these Hon. Members propose.

Let us examine the premise that the tax increases are a necessary fact of life, however unfortunate and difficult it may be to defend a tax increase. Bill C-80 proposes, in the spirit of the Budget which contains, as my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has said, "tough but fair measures". I believe if members of the Opposition would look responsibly at this Bill, as the people of Canada have, I think they would agree that Bill C-80 is indeed an equitable and fair measure of taxation. Yes, it is tough. It broadens the tax base and increases the number of sales tax items. Hon. Members of this House will know that the previous federal sales tax exemptions on candy, confections, soft drinks, pet food, certain health goods and energy conservation equipment have now been lifted so that those items are included in a broadened tax base. Yes, this is also tough in that it increases the actual rate of federal taxation. Hon. Members will know that the federal rate of taxation is increased by 1 per cent in this measure. But these are necessary tough measures in order to try to increase the level of Government revenue in an attempt to offset the great rate of expenditure with which our Government presently has to cope because of the large deficit we have inherited.

Let us look at the fairness. Bill C-80 includes some very fair measures, one of which is a comprehensive system of assessments, objections and appeals under the Excise Tax Act, much like the present reforms our Government brought into the Income Tax Act. This new comprehensive system will incorporate improvements in the areas of search and seizure, and in the presumption of innocence, which defers collection action until the taxpayer has had an opportunity to resolve any disputes arising with respect to his or her tax liability. So there is a spirit of fairness being brought into the collection of excise tax. This is indeed a moderate and fair approach to taxation.

• (1230)

Being a Member from Saskatchewan, I greatly deplore the criticisms of the NDP Members from Saskatchewan of the present state of the economy and their inclusion of the capital gains exemption in that criticism. This is indeed puzzling for those of us who come from a province with 70,000 farmers whose livelihood is interwoven into what we call the family farm. As a Progressive Conservative Member of Parliament from Saskatchewan, I worked very hard to see this exemption become a reality for my constituents. Numerous small retail service businesses serve these agricultural communities and industries and, like the family farm, the business and family life are interwoven. This is a way of life. These are the people who benefit most directly and immediately from this capital gains exemption. That money can be reinvested in a way that makes the economy grow. Therefore, when the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville is making his very active attempt to become the Leader of the NDP in Saskatchewan—and I do not know why anyone would want that job—the farmers of Saskatchewan should know that this is what the NDP has been criticizing our Government for.

Look at the positive effects this Government has had on the economy. Confidence and investment in the economy are growing and the figures are there for everyone to see. I would be remiss if I did not touch briefly on those figures. Inflation is now steady at its lowest level in years. Interest rates have tumbled a full three percentage points in the months that this Party has been in Government. Investor confidence and business spending intentions are rising. Housing starts have increased an incredible 44 per cent in the past year. Some 180,000 new living units have been built. That is indeed incredible. Over 300,000 new jobs have been created. These figures show that Canada is in an economic cycle or stage which we have not seen in at least the recent memory of most young Canadians, the past seven to 10 years. These are the sort of economic indicators we have seen since this Government came into power.

This Bill arises from the Budget of May 23, and I urge Members of the Opposition to ask the question I asked at the outset of my remarks. Let us leave aside the political rhetoric and partisanship, which is all too rife in this place at times, and ask ourselves how we should deal with the question of our need to bring in more revenue as against the large expenditure commitments already made. How do we come to a balance in dealing with the deficit by winding down present expenditures, and deciding how much revenue to take in?

Based on the formula we have dealt with, and based on the need for this increased taxation, I believe this Bill is fair. It is sensible and will add to the economic growth of Canada. Therefore, I call on all Members of the Opposition to see that the Bill is passed and, as a measure from a sensible Budget, enacted quickly into law so that we can see Canada continue to grow and develop and this Government continue to lead Canada on the proper path of economic recovery on which we have now started.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-80 will create a new class of poor, the middle-income poor. I was not the first one to say so; the Consumers Association of Canada said this on May 23, when the Progressive Conservative Budget was brought down.

First, Mr. Speaker, I would like my Government colleagues to understand that the federal sales tax is a hidden tax in the sense that the consumer will not see it on his bill because it will be included in the price. The consumer will therefore always believe that the prices have increased and that it is the fault of the small businessman or big business, even though the Government will have been responsible by increasing the sales tax.

Mr. Speaker, as for the deficit issue to which my hon. colleague has referred, I agree with him that, to reduce the deficit, we have to increase certain taxes. However, this measure is not reducing the deficit, Mr. Speaker. Just look at what we are taking from the poor, from the most disadvantaged, from the middle classes, to give to those with deposits over $60,000 in the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, and to the Reichmann brothers. Do these people need money? The poor, our senior citizens and the handicapped will be taxed to give something to these people.

Mr. Speaker, that is the whole difference between the Progressive Conservative Party and the Liberal Party. The Liberal Party has always believed in a just society, in raising money so that everyone benefits, but the Progressive Conservative Party is taking money from the poorest, from middle-income citizens to give to the rich who do not need it. A striking example is the construction industry. Today, even labour is being taxed. For instance, there are now two categories in the industry: If the concrete is poured on the spot, labour will not be taxed—

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn) on a point of order.

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) and the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) have both said that our Government is taking more taxes from the poor to redistribute this money to the rich, which is not true since our 1985 Budget provides that the rich will be taxed more and that someone with an income of $100,000 will contribute $1,686—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I think that the Hon. Member for Jonquière (Mr. Blackburn) is well aware that that is not a point of order, but a question of debate.

Mr. Gagliano: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, there is a new taxation field in the construction industry. Pre-mixed concrete is now being taxed, and we are faced with two situations. If the concrete is poured on the construction site, labour will not be taxed, but if you decide to build with pre-mixed concrete, a federal tax of 6 per cent will be charged. In announcing this measure, Mr. Speaker, there is something that the Government did not consider, which shows its incompetence and its lack of knowledge about the building industry, since we all know quite well that, in this industry, long-term contracts are signed two or three years beforehand. Last May, it was announced that a 6 per cent tax on pre-mixed concrete would apply from July 1. What happens to the contracts which had already been signed? The Government does not even respect its own commitments regarding this tax.

I have here a letter from the Canada Museums Construction Corporation which concerns a contract signed before the Budget, when there was no 6 per cent federal sales tax. After the Budget, the general contractor wrote to the Corporation asking them to increase his contract, and the answer he got was quite clear: There is no clause in the contract so we cannot act on your request. And now the company has to pay 6 per cent tax on a contract. Well, we all know that the profit margin on these contracts is not that high. The contracts may be big, but the profit margin is very slight. So if the contractor has to pay 6 per cent, Mr. Speaker, we are going to see a number of bankruptcies in the construction industry, a sector that needs stimulating instead of being beaten down by this kind of tax.

Mr. Speaker, I could mention the notorious $500,000 capital gains tax exemption. If we look at the statistics for 1982, we see that only 4 per cent of the people who declared capital gains were declaring the kind of gains from industry and businesses that really create jobs. Mr. Speaker, 96 per cent declared capital gains as a result of property transactions and sales of homes and office buildings. They know perfectly well . . . We all know that changing the ownership of a building does not create that many jobs.

Mr. Speaker, instead of saying: We want to stimulate economic recovery, we want to help small businesses invest and create jobs, the Government is giving $500,000 to everyone. With a little bit of accounting imagination, one realizes that these $500,000 could become one million or two million dollars' worth of tax exemptions. So when we say that the Government takes from the poor and people on average incomes and gives to the rich, I know it hurts my hon. colleague, but it is the truth. Obviously, people earning $20,000 per year are not going to have a capital gain of half a million. That is the whole point of this debate, and that is the difference between previous Liberal Budgets and this Progressive Conservative Budget.

I would like to quote some of the organizations which, on the night the Budget was presented, were worried about the Conservative Budget. For example, the Retail Council of Canada was disappointed that a federal sales tax of 1 per cent along with an extension of federal tax on food products was imposed as it will have the greatest impact on lower income Canadians and they will be worse off as they make up the bulk of the consumers. The Consumers Association of Canada said that the average consumer is hard hit with higher expenses, whether through expenditure cuts or increased taxes. The association said that it is hard to imagine how consumers will be encouraged to spend when the money value is reduced.

With regard to the increased consumption taxes, the British Columbia Federation of Labour said that the two-cent increase in gasoline tax to pay for the western energy agreement is a gift to the industry at the expense of the consumer. It said that a consumption tax is regressive by any standard and is a distortion of the tax system.

The Canadian Association of Social Workers said that the Budget was bad news for the lower income population, that it hurts the poor the most and that the child benefit package is another kind of horror. With regard to the reduced child tax exemption it said that there is no indication of where the savings are going. We know that they are going to Canadians who had more than $60,000 on deposit with the Canadian Commercial Bank and to the Reichmann brothers. The Government is giving a $1 billion tax credit to the Reichmann brothers at the same time as it is closing a refinery in the east end of Montreal. The Canadian Association of Social Workers also said that it seems as if we did not care for the low income sector and that we will probably see increases in line-ups at the food banks. We have been seeing that for the past few months, Mr. Speaker.

The National Anti-Poverty Organization said that the Budget is a bad one as far as support to families, the aged and women are concerned. It said that on top of that, all the increased consumption taxes target families directly and will be hardest on those with low incomes who have topay the same for basic products as do the rest. Increased taxes on upper income earners are off-set by giveaways such as the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption. The organization said that this Budget is bizarre as it increases public assistance to those who need it least.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, you are signalling that my time has expired. Well, we could go on for quite a while about the Budget and Bill C-80. Unfortunately, our time is limited, and I hope that Canadians will understand what the debate is about today.

[English]

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I too feel it necessary to participate this morning in the debate on Bill C-80. I feel it necessary because Bill C-80 is, on the whole, a regressive Bill. In simple, layman's terms, effective January 1, 1986 it will increase the sales tax on a wide range of products by 1 per cent. That list of products gives an indication of the regressive element of this Bill and of the mind-set of the Tory Government. It is going to increase the telecommunications programming tax by 6 to 7 per cent. It will increase excise taxes on wines. Federal sales taxes will go up from 10 per cent to 11 per cent. There will be an increase in the gas excise tax of 2 per cent per litre on September 3 and another cent per litre on January 1, 1987. There will be an imposition of sales taxes on carbonated beverages, candy, confectionery and, yes, even pet foods. There will also be a sales tax on health goods and an imposition of sales tax on energy conservation equipment as well as on previously exempt construction and building materials.

We must look at Bill C-80 not only from an economic point of view, but from a social viewpoint as well because it has a dual effect on Canadians, economic and social. On the economic front the Government promised a renewal of the economic spirit in the country. Yet, when you look at this Bill, Mr. Speaker, you have to ask where that spirit is. What kind of economic spirit will impose upon Canadians an increase of $2.6 billion in sales tax alone by 1991? When one couples that with the $4.1 billion increase in income tax imposed by the Budget of last year Canadians begin to ask where the spirit of economic renewal has gone. Where is the spirit of economic fairness in Bill C-80, Mr. Speaker?

It does not take an economic genius to understand that the purchasing power of average Canadians is going to be reduced. It does not take an economist to realize that companies are going to be hard pressed to sell their services and goods at a competitive price. How will this help firms in our country to be more competitive and to sell more products when they have to pass on increased taxes to the consumer?

How will construction companies be assisted by increased taxes on construction commodities and equipment? How will Canadian truckers, who compete with truckers from the United States, feel about this Bill which imposes higher taxes on fuel? How will the tourism industry, which has been lobbying the Government for the last year and a half not to impose higher taxes on gas, react to Bill C-80? How will companies in the energy conservation business react to this Bill which increases the taxes on their equipment? We are saying, on the one hand, that it is important for Canadians to conserve energy, and, on the other hand, we are increasing the taxes on the products that Canadians must purchase and have installed in their homes in order to conserve energy. You simply cannot do both, Mr. Speaker.

This legislation not only squeezes Canadian consumers by decreasing their purchasing power and increasing their taxes, but also squeezes Canadian companies. They are having a tough time as it is making ends meet without having more added to their problems. Clearly, on the economic front, this is a Bill that hits both consumers and companies at the same time.

But there is another element to this Bill that cannot be overlooked. It is its social impact and the social fairness of this particular piece of legislation.

As I mentioned at the start of my speech, I said that it was a regressive Bill. That sentiment is certainly echoed by the Canada Council on Social Development. It estimates that the combination of increased sales, gasoline, alcohol and tobacco taxes will result in tax hikes of $140 for a couple with an annual income of $15,000 in 1990; $282 for a comparable couple with an income of $20,000; and $361 for a couple with an income of $40,000.

We must begin looking at the social equity in this legislation as well. While Canadians will be paying more than $2.6 billion in sales tax alone, the reality is that corporations in this country will enjoy a $2.2 billion tax break. Canadians are asking themselves, and urging the Government to look in the mirror as well, to ask if this is fair economics. Of course, the resounding answer is no. Is it fair to pass increased taxes to the consumer when a very elite community in our country will enjoy capital gains tax breaks that were introduced by the Minister of Finance last May? Is it fair to pass on to consumers the goal of deficit reduction while the Government is bailing out banks in this country? Is it fair to ask consumers to pay more in the face of the Olympia & Gulf deal of over $1 billion?

Is it fair when tax increases in the Budget introduced by the Minister last May will mean that families in this country which earn $15,000 will pay 35 per cent more tax by 1990 while those earning $200,000 will only pay 4 per cent more and those in the fortunate income bracket of $400,000 will only see an increase of 2 per cent?

What sense of fairness is there in a measure which will mean that a family earning $15,000 will pay 35 per cent more while those earning close to $500,000 will face a 2 per cent increase?

When Government attempted to deindex the pensions of senior citizens, it told pensioners to forget about the social contract they had with the Government because it wanted to reduce the deficit. Is that fair? Of course not, and the senior citizens of the country taught Parliament and the Government in particular a big lesson about fairness. It seems that the Government has not learned its lesson very well because it went on to deindex family allowances. It is essentially telling mothers and children in this country that they also have to bear the brunt of deficit reduction. Yet there are companies and individuals in this country who earn millions of dollars but pay very little or no tax at all.

Canadians realize we must get our financial house in order and they are saying they will do it as long as it is fair for everyone. The $15,000 wage earner is prepared to pitch in with his family to put our financial house in order but he is not prepared to make that sacrifice when other families, individuals and companies in this country are not shouldering a fair burden of deficit reduction for economic renewal.

That is why this Bill is unfair and should not be supported by the House. It does not ask all Canadians to shoulder deficit reduction or the economic renewal equitably. This Bill, like most of the Budget measures, hits those families the hardest who can least afford to pay. That is why a host of organizations have come before Parliament to indicate their disapproval with this Bill. These organizations include the Metro Social Planning Council, COSTI and the Toronto Association of Neighbourhood Services. They have pointed out that this is a regressive and unfair Bill which attempts to place the burden for deficit reduction on the poor.

It is for that reason that the Government should withdraw Bill C-80 and redraft it. It is a regressive Bill which is unacceptable to Canadians.

Therefore, it gives me great pleasure to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

It is a fair motion that speaks to the equity that all Canadians want in this legislation.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will not take up too much time of the House since we will break for lunch shortly. However, I want to make it clear on the record what the opposition Parties are attempting to do in this debate. They have no more speakers who have anything to say and the fact is that the point of the amendment is to refresh the list of speakers. They are recycling the Members who have already spoken.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Shall we resume debate?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on the one hand, the Opposition complains that we are cutting off debate. On the other, it cannot even raise enough interest in this debate among its own members to bring in any more than four Members in the House.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: The Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I ask the Hon. Member to take his seat.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I knew that the Member was going to state the number of Members in the House, although it is against the rules. We noticed from this side that there were only three of them until the motion was put. Then they all flocked into the House, the book-ends and everyone over there came in like a bunch of servants.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is lucky for everyone in the House that there is only one of me. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m., the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

SOCIAL SECURITY

DEINDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, like the Confédération des organismes familiaux du Québec, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and more than 90 groups throughout the country, I want to voice my opposition to Bill C-70.

On October 23 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) admitted that the deindexation of family allowances would be used to reduce the deficit, but until then the Conservatives had always maintained that those savings would be set aside for other social programs.

The Government could not care less about its election promises with respect to the social sector, but it does live up to its commitments respecting the energy field, as evidenced by the Western Accord and the dismantling of the National Energy Program.

Bill C-70 has to be one of the measures which has drawn the strongest opposition from family organizations, women's groups and native people associations, among many others. The Conservative Government should be ashamed to bring down upon itself the wrath of poorer Canadians.

When the establishment of a country is in favour of something and the poor try to defend themselves, it is because the Government is not exactly upholding the right cause.

I hope that opposition against the deindexation of family allowances on the part of so many social groups will prompt Members on both sides of the House to have second thoughts.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STANGECOMING BAND SITUATION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the process of land claims for Indian bands in Ontario is in much need of repair. The Office of Native Claims is supposed to work in the best interests of Indian people, as is the Department of Indian Affairs whose Minister has a fiduciary responsibility in these matters.

One case in point, where this trust has been abrogated, Mr. Speaker, involves the Stangecoming Band near Fort Frances, Ontario. This Band is situated on an isolated island with no sewer and water, no electricity, no community buildings and, of course, is only accessible by water or air. With only one radio telephone on the island and no schools or medical facilities, it is easy to see why these people want a real place to live. But in order to do so, they need action from the Department of Indian Affairs.

The Minister has been made aware of the situation many months ago by the Stangecoming Band, the Assembly of First Nations, and myself. The Minister is also aware that if this situation is not resolved in a satisfactory manner, the Band will seek redress at a higher level, namely, the Federal Court.

Such action should not be necessary, Mr. Speaker, if the Office of Native Claims and the Minister would adhere to the Indian Act, act in the interest of the Stangecoming Band, and fulfil the commitments undertaken to the Band.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

UNLEADED GASOLINE—WRONGFUL USE BY MOTORISTS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, through you, I wish to appeal to the 24 per cent of Canadians who drive automobiles. It is estimated that this many motorists misfuel their cars to save money at the gas pump. Misfuelling occurs when cheaper leaded gas is used in automobiles designed to burn non-leaded fuel exclusively. This practice destroys anti-pollution devices in the engine and causes harmful leaded emissions to be introduced into the air.

I need not remind any Canadian of the evil effects acid rain is having on the environment, our health, and our forests. The short-term gain of a few pennies at the pump is not worth the long-term pain we shall endure if misfuelling continues.

To his credit the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has advocated wiping out the price differential between leaded and unleaded gasolines. Better yet, he wants to eliminate lead from gasoline entirely by the early 1990s.

Lest we introduce an Orwellian police state to regulate misfuelling, the onus is on each motorist to control this practice. From this point forward, Mr. Speaker, let each Canadian driver know he or she is part of a nation-wide honor system. Misfuelling must be regarded as a perversion upsetting our fragile environment.

THE ECONOMY

REVIVAL CAUSED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the latest survey made by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business shows that the rising trend in employment and capital investments in the small business sector is firm and that the capital gains tax exemption announced in the May Budget will indeed spur economic growth.

Those measures have restored a climate of confidence and signalled the beginning of a new approach in business planning on the part of many company owners.

The survey reveals that projected increases in capital investments and operating funds are more encouraging than they have been for quite some time.

Mr. Speaker, 42 per cent of those small businesses intend to boost their investment projects in the near future and to hire more people.

Quite clearly, small businessmen have welcomed the measures implemented by our Government to improve the small business investment climate, make funds more readily available, lower interest rates and do away with some of the more redundant regulations governing small businesses.

The survey definitely attests to this Government's intention of leading Canadians on the road to prosperity.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PENSIONS—PROPOSED END OF FULL INDEXATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of the House the plight of retired public servants whose careful planning for their days of much deserved rest has been torn as under by the Government's plan to end full indexing of their pensions.

On April 17 of this year the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) told this House of planned changes to public service pensions. Included in the package of amendments were provisions to replace the present practice of guaranteeing benefits fully indexed against inflation with protection based solely on the earnings of pension funds.

Present superannuates have paid for their pensions and their indexing, and they have every right to expect that protection to continue.

To quote the Progressive Conservative Party's own literature from the last election campaign:

> Our position is that current pensioners signed a contract with the Crown in years past and that contract should not be altered unilaterally by government. While our Party recognizes the need to negotiate changes to arrangements with current employees, we are determined that these must not affect the benefits for current superannuates.

If the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act or the Public Service Superannuation Act is changed, a grandfather clause must be introduced to protect former public servants who are now retired. Anything less, Mr. Speaker, would be a betrayal of trust with Canadians who serve our country with diligence and dedication.

INCOME TAX

NON PAYMENT BY INDIVIDUALS EARNING ABOVE $50,000 ANNUALLY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, last night millions of Canadians from coast to coast tuned in to watch the annual Juno Awards which celebrate excellence in the Canadian music industry.

Today I would like to present the "Golden Loophole Award" for excellence in the field of tax avoidance. Today we learned from Revenue Canada officials that the latest statistics available show that in 1983, 7,782 individual Canadians with incomes above $50,000 per year paid not one red cent in income tax.

When you consider these figures alongside the recent announcements of billion dollar tax breaks for corporations like Olympia & York and Dome Petroleum, it is surprising that taxpayers are not storming the Parliament Buildings.

What is important to remember in all of this, Mr. Speaker, is that this is perfectly legal. If you are wealthy enough to make use of the investment tax credit, the half a million dollar capital gains exemption, the indexed security investment plan or the flow-through share purchase tax credit, to name but a few of these loopholes, it is not surprising that you can end up without having to pay a cent in income tax.

If you are a corporation, Mr. Speaker, it also helps to have a Government formed by either the Liberals or the Conservatives, who have always shown themselves willing to use the taxpayers' chequebook to help out those large corporations that donate so generously to their party coffers.

All in all, I would say that ordinary wage-earning taxpayers are getting tired of having to pay for these tax boondoggles. It is time that the income tax system was changed to require everyone, including the wealthy, to pay their fair share.

AGRICULTURE

CANADIAN FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE—APPRECIATION OF GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, last week representatives of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture met with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), with members of the Cabinet, and with provincial caucuses.

Their president, Mr. Don Knoerr, stated on Canada AM on Wednesday:

> It would be unfair of me to even suggest that this Government is not addressing agriculture issues.

They appreciate the fact that on Tuesday afternoon the Prime Minister adjourned a cabinet committee meeting to permit the Economic and Regional Development Ministers to attend their presentation. They appreciate the fact that over $2 billion has been spent since the election for such things as special disaster assistance, farm finance initiatives, and research and development.

They appreciate legislation such as that providing for increased railroad accountability, freight rate stability, earlier payments under the Western Grain Transportation Act, and a doubling of advance payment levels for storable crops. They appreciate the $500,000 capital gains exemption.

• (1410)

Canadian agriculture has built itself around the family farm. Farmers have doubled their efficiency in the past 12 years and have provided Canadians with low-priced food of the highest quality. The Federation urged the Government to establish farm credit at rates to preserve the family farm, to expand, to expand research, to support supply management, and for emergency relief for farm disasters. The Federation recognized that the Government is acting to preserve agriculture and the family farm.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED OVERSPENDING BY CANDIDATES

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, the election expense provisions in the Canada Elections Act have proven, over the past decade, to be an important reform, ensuring that politics in Canada is not a preserve of the wealthy, and providing balance between contending Parties and candidates.

Over the past year, however, those very provisions have themselves proven to stand in need of reform in one important respect. I refer to the investigation of allegations of campaign overspending by candidates.

The Chief Electoral Officer lacks power to investigate complaints, to determine their validity swiftly, fairly, and in an even-handed manner. If he had this power, an investigation could determine whether evidence exists for charges to be laid, and then the matter turned over to the RCMP and made public. Members of all three Parties in the House, and the independent Member, have learned first-hand of the need for a reform of investigative and enforcement powers for election spending, to ensure that equal benefit and equal protection of the law apply to MPs as well as to all other Canadians. We do not need, in the first instance, the heavy hand of an RCMP investigation to determine what is essentially a matter of administrative compliance.

The Mulroney Government has already demonstrated a reform instinct as far as electoral matters are concerned, and I am confident that amendments to the Canada Elections Act could be made here as well.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ABSENCE OF CANADIAN DIMENSION FROM QUEBEC TRADE OFFICE IN NEW YORK

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, last week I had the honour of being part of the Canadian delegation which visited New York to observe and be briefed on the workings of the United Nations.

Might I say how impressed I was with the Canadian involvement and contribution to the UN. I was expecially proud and impressed with our Ambassador, Stephen Lewis, who has breathed new life and enthusiasm into the UN.

As part of our tour we also visited the Canadian Consulate and the Quebec, Ontario and Alberta Trade Offices. Upon entering the Quebec Trade Office I noticed, much to my chagrin, the absence of a Canadian flag. There was not one anywhere to be seen. I thought at first that it was an oversight. When I asked why there was not a Canadian flag displayed, I was told bluntly that the office was not there to promote Canada.

On touring the offices, I noticed a separatist poster in the office of the administrator. In another office there was an American flag beside a Quebec flag, but no Canadian flag. On reviewing the promotional literature, there was no mention of Canada or the fact that Quebec is a province of Canada.

As a proud Canadian, I felt let down by the Government of Quebec. As a proud Canadian, I felt betrayed. While it may not be the job of the Quebec Trade Office to promote Canada, surely it should recognize Canada as the great united nation we are.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CHANGES IN GOVERNMENT'S ATTITUDE TO VETERANS

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, Canada's more than 700,000 veterans of three foreign wars report that they are at last being treated with courtesy and respect by the Government, after many years when their problems and concerns were largely ignored, making them feel like second-class citizens. The change in Government attitude is a direct result of the dedication of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees).

The slowness of the pension process has been eliminated, with more than 50 per cent of pension decisions now going in favour of the veterans. A year ago that figure was only 28 per cent.

Other changes include an increase in the basic rate of pensions to parity with Public Service categories. Disability pensions at married rate now continue a full year after the death of a pensioner. There are increases in the casual earnings and interest earnings exemptions, as well as many other improvements. The program will again be expanded in 1986.

This record has brought new hope to veterans and their dependants, and it is something, in my opinion, of which we can be tremendously proud. These veterans made sure the terror of war never reached our shores. With these expanded veterans' programs, they can maintain their pride as well.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CULTURE INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Government's secret, manipulative style of negotiations in respect of free trade with the United States is doing a disservice to the country. Yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs admitted that culture would be part of the negotiating items. That is just great; now Canadian culture is on the block. Last night, when the Prime Minister attended the Juno Awards, did he tell that to Bryan Adams and Corey Hart?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): He didn't even sing.

Mr. Mulroney: I didn't sing. I couldn't; I am bound by union rules. The NDP knows that.

What I did tell them was that—I repeated my statement of September 26—our political sovereignty, our system of social programs, our commitment to fight regional disparities, our unique cultural identity and our special linguistic character are the essence of Canada. They are not at issue in these negotiations.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Having heard those words from the Prime Minister, I wish he would communicate that directly to the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —because he gave the distinct impression to the House of Commons yesterday that our cultural industries were to be part of the negotiations with the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

CULTURAL INDUSTRIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at a time when the Canadian record industry is in a slump as a result of an influx of U.S.-produced records, how can the Prime Minister claim to want to negotiate with the United States on the subject of our cultural industries?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, today, the Prime Minister has again pointed out that our Canadian cultural identity is not at stake and is not on the table in any negotiations we may engage in with the United States. What we want to do is to provide new strength for our cultural industries. We know we can do this, first of all, by implementing domestic policies in this country that will strengthen our cultural industries and second, by finding ways to expand the markets available to Canadian performers.

[English]

PRICE AND VALUE OF CANADIANISM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, he is swallowing himself today, after what he said in the House yesterday.

I ask the Prime Minister, who gave me a vague statement as to his intentions affecting the country: is the cultural industry—broadcasting, book publishing and periodicals—part of the items to be negotiated with the United States? Before he answers that, I want to remind him that while it may cost us a little more to live in this country and to be Canadian, the price of being Canadian is a price worth paying.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the price of being Canadian is a price worth paying. There is no doubt that the value of being Canadian has been enhanced in this country and in the eyes of the world by, for example, the action taken by this Government to establish our sovereignty over our North, after years when that Government and that Party did nothing about Canadian sovereign interests.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BOOK PUBLISHING—PRENTICE-HALL TAKEOVER

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is on record as saying that he is opposed to foreign takeovers of Canadian book publishers. Yesterday, in the House, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said just the opposite in respect of the industry, not necessarily the identity. My question to the Prime Minister is this: what is your policy?

● (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mrs. Finestone: You can't have it both ways. Are you now leaning toward the lobby of Gulf & Western that is headed by your friend, Frank Moores?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure there was a question there, but I think there was a question implied if not asked. I give the Hon. Member, as always, the benefit of the doubt. The answer is that the question with respect to one particular transaction relating to a Canadian publishing company is now before Investment Canada. I should make the point that, given the likely timetable of any negotiations that might occur with the United States, that question will be resolved before any negotiations might begin, because the resolution of that question has a deadline of December 31 and that deadline will be respected.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary question, through the Chair.

FILM INDUSTRY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had addressed the Prime Minister. However, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister this time. Will the Prime Minister specifically guarantee that policy regarding films, magazines, books and broadcasting is not negotiable? Can we have the Prime Minister's word on that?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me deal with the question of the film industry. The Hon. Member and other Members of the House will know that excellent Canadian films are produced in this country but cannot find an audience in the United States. Why is that? That is because of the old boys' network that exists in the United States. That is not a tariff barrier but it is a very real barrier that limits Canadian expression. Why do members of the Liberal Party not want us to have the opportunity, through any negotiations, to discuss the removal of that barrier to Canadian creativity?

[Translation]

INQUIRY IF CULTURAL INDUSTRIES ARE NEGOTIABLE WITH UNITED STATES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Government's policy with respect to our cultural industries is not clear. The Secretary of State for External Affairs was not clear about this yesterday, and the Prime Minister is not clear about the subject today. My question to the Prime Minister is quite simple: Are our cultural industries on the table in our negotiations with the United States, yes or no?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on September 26 of this year, when I was making a statement on behalf of the Government, I mentioned that, among other things, Canada's cultural dimension was not at stake in the negotiations, and that any Government initiative would be aimed at further strengthening our cultural position. That was the position of my party and the Government I have the privilege of leading.

[English]

CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge this is the first time the Prime Minister has used the phrase "cultural industry" as opposed to "cultural sovereignty" or "cultural heritage". I would like to be very clear because not only the fate of one publishing firm is at stake right now but the fate of the whole cultural industry, and what that means for a sense of nationhood for Canadians is at stake. Is the Prime Minister saying that Canada's cultural industries, including film, radio and television, are not on the negotiating block and will not be a part of the negotiations that are now taking place with the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Mulroney: I am sorry.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Go ahead.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, we are so well prepared on this issue, as on every other issue—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: —not only do we sing, but we sing in perfect harmony.

I made a statement on behalf of all members of the Government on the 26th. My hon. friend indicates some surprise and says that he had not heard it before. I think I indicated at that time that our commitment to fight and to defend our unique cultural identity, something which is done through a series of measures with which we are all familiar, is not at issue in these negotiations. That has always been the position of the Government.

CULTURAL INDUSTRIES INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, once again the Prime Minister has not dealt with the question. I am not saying that he has not dealt with the question deliberately; far be it from me to suggest that. I simply say that he has not dealt with the question. The question does not concern the broad notion of cultural sovereignty or identity. It is very specific and is about our cultural industries. Will the Prime Minister just for once reply to that question clearly? Are our cultural industries going to be negotiated or not? It is a simple question. Please answer it.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Will the real Prime Minister please stand up.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You're five years late, Joe.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Frankly, I—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That's one thing about the Junos, you can really rehearse.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I frankly do not know where the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party has been. I have indicated to him before that my colleague, the Acting Minister of Communications, and I will be meeting with representatives of the cultural industries, and we are looking to have that meeting on November 26, so that we can be sure that the interests of each cultural industry are well protected in the negotiations that might proceed with the United States.

Mr. Broadbent: So they are on the table.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): If he would stop shouting from his seat, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition—excuse me, John—the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party would know that there are some cultural industries that are concerned about the threat of negotiations and we intend to protect and preserve those industries. As well, there are others, such as the film industry and aspects of the publishing industry, that look forward to the opportunity of using these negotiations as a means of at least discussing the possibility of bringing down non-tariff barriers which limit the expansion of Canadian culture to larger markets. We are interested in strengthening Canadian culture, and that is what we are going to do.

CONTENT OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As the Prime Minister knows, culture is something about which people care and it is also at the very heart of sovereignty. Yesterday, and again today, the Secretary of State for External Affairs alluded to the fact that the book publishing industry is about to be sacrificed in the Government's attempt to snuggle up to the United States. Would the Prime Minister indicate to the House exactly what is on the table? Is the National Ballet on the table? Is the CBC on the table? Is the Neptune Theatre on the table for negotiations with the United States?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, none of those cultural industries is on the table. The Neptune Theatre is not on the table and the CBC is not on the table. We are interested in looking to see if there is some way in which we can deal with the old boys' network that limits the distribution of Canadian films. We are interested in seeing if there is some way that we can resist the pressures that are now growing in the United States Congress against a provision in American practice that allows Canadian authors access to U.S. markets because, under practice, but not law or treaty, they are treated as American authors. We are looking for ways to strengthen Canadian culture. For the life of me I cannot understand why members of the Liberal Party are so afraid of Canada that they do not want us to look for ways through these negotiations to strengthen our cultural industries.

NEGOTIATION ISSUES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, recently we have learned of a secret External Affairs document which emphasizes symbols as opposed to substance with regard to free trade with the United States. I suggest that the Government cannot continue to insult the Governor General by ignoring her role as head of state when the President of the United States comes to town, and then demand that she allow herself to be used for partisan purposes—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Dingwall: The Secretary of State for External Affairs has given us three examples of issues that will not be on the table. Will he now tell us what will be on the table?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one thing for which the people of Canada can be grateful is that Canada will not be represented at any negotiating table by that insecurity about Canada that is rife and rampant in the Liberal Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Some Parties in this House were afraid to assert northern sovereignty for 16 years. This Party and this Government asserted northern sovereignty.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We have made it clear on numerous occasions that the cultural institutions of Canada are not at issue and are not negotiable. What is at issue is that we have an opportunity to strengthen Canadian cultural expressions. We will not be so timid—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —that we will not respond to that opportunity.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL

ALLEGED DEPARTMENTAL DOCUMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister who will recall that at the Shamrock Summit the intent to use the office of the Governor General on the part of the Government became apparent. Given the report with respect to a memo provided for Cabinet by External Affairs which indicates a recommendation to the Government that the Governor General could and should be used to promote nationalism within the country while at the same the trade negotiations could go on with the U.S., which may well undermine that very nationalism, will the Prime Minister tell us now that under no circumstances will the Governor General of Canada be used by the Government for partisan reasons, as is suggested in the memo?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, naturally I have read with some interest Maclean's magazine. I read it with some interest every week, as do all Members of the House. There was reference in it to a document which was described as not only a cabinet document but one that had caused discussions in Cabinet. I have to say that from time to time Maclean's magazine is discussed in Cabinet; that alleged document has never been.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN NATIONALISM

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, now that we know that, I would like to ask my question again. In the memo prepared for Cabinet by External Affairs—whether Cabinet considered it or not—the use of the Governor General was recommended in appeasing nationalism in Canada at the same time as the negotiation process is going on. Is it the Prime Minister's intention to use the office of the Governor General in this partisan way?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this Party and this Government do not consider nationalism something to be appeased. This Party and this Government believe Canadian nationalism is something to be encouraged. That is what we did with Arctic sovereignty. That is what we did in the North—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —and that is what we will do throughout the life and mandate of this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SOCIAL SECURITY

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT WANTS TO CUT FAMILY ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Yesterday, Quebec's Confédération des organismes familiaux reminded us in its brief that in addition to the commitments to Canadian families which the Government had made in the Speech from the Throne, the Prime Minister has stated in front of the cameras when his fourth child was born that a family is the finest thing which exists in this world, an opinion which I share, Mr. Speaker.

My question is this: Could the Prime Minister explain to the representatives of millions of Canadian mothers who are here why he intends to make cuts in the programs designed to strengthen the finest thing in the world, when he had promised never to make cuts in this area?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the Hon. Member earlier, and as the Minister of Finance has stated in the House, if he were to take a look at year-over-year spending on social policy he will see that there is an increase of $2 billion. In addition, if he will take a look at the specifics of Bill C-70, which I would be happy to discuss with him later today when we meet in committee, and if he looks at the family tax credits, he will see that there is an increase for those in greatest need.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET MOTHERS' REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister who would not answer my original question. Is that a family policy?

In a gentleman-like fashion, would the Prime Minister kindly accept to meet with the representatives of Canadian mothers who are here today in order to hear what they have to say? Also, could the Prime Minister confirm whether he will take into account the views which the Committee has received concerning Bill C-70? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker—

Ms. Copps: Get up and answer.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member has requested, I am willing to meet with groups which have specific issues which they want to address that are directly the responsibility of this Department and this Minister. As well, I say to him that I look forward to meeting with him and other members of the committee to discuss this matter further this afternoon.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

MINISTER'S VISIT TO PARIS—COST OF HIRING LIMOUSINE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Transport. It is a $64,000 question concerning the Minister's travels earlier this year in April, June, and July. Can the Minister explain to the House why it was that on a four-day trip to Paris, when she had one meeting lasting approximately two hours, she felt it necessary to hire a limousine with a chauffeur at a cost of $1,700 to Canadian taxpayers? Does she not believe in taking a taxi? Why does she—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it the Hon. Member is asking a question about the travels of the then Minister of the Environment. Therefore, I think he knows that his question must be directed to the current Minister.

Mr. Benjamin: You are trying to get her off the hook.

Mr. Speaker: I am not trying to get anybody off anything. The Hon. Member knows that if he has a question of a Minister it has to be within that Minister's current responsibilities or it has to be directed to the Ministry, in which case the Ministry may decide whom they wish to answer.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I will then address my question to the Prime Minister, whose Government is cutting back family allowances at the same time as his Ministers are flying—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am trying to be helpful to the Hon. Member. He might just put his question, please.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, my question for the Prime Minister is this. Does the Prime Minister believe it to be acceptable for one of his Ministers to use a limousine with a chauffeur at a cost of $1,700, in Paris, in April of this year, when she had to attend one meeting lasting approximately two hours? Is that really an acceptable use of taxpayers' money?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: What is the matter, Brian, are you afraid of the heat?

An Hon. Member: Brian's a chicken.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker, I know that the now Minister of State for Transport is quite capable of defending herself. She respects the rules, as I do, and for that reason, and because the question relates to my Department, I am pleased to give the explanation. The explanation is quite simply this. I have read the news accounts in this morning's papers and other media accounts of the Minister's travels in Paris, Stockholm and elsewhere, and it seems—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: Then you agree she should resign.

Mr. McMillan: —that into a relatively short time she packed a lot of official business on behalf of her Department and the Government of Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McMillan: The problem seems to be that the newspaper reports are based on an official agenda and not on the Minister's itinerary. The two are different.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: There is the answer!

Mr. McMillan: Many of the activities in which she was engaged were not reflected on the official agenda. Indeed, some of the itinerary was fleshed out only upon her arrival, for example, in Paris. In the case of Paris—

An Hon. Member: Table it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: Let him go.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If Hon. Members want to hear the answer then there is only one way to achieve that.

Supplementary question.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Minister completed his answer before my supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it the Hon. Member did not have a supplementary question.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF AUTHORIZATION GIVEN FORMER MINISTER OF ENVIRONMENT TO MAKE TRIP TO EUROPE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the Prime Minister's attention—

[English]

Mr. Robinson: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fulton: He has a supplementary question. You phoney.

Mr. Robinson: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fulton: Supplementary question!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques.

Mr. Cassidy: Stop covering up!

Mr. Robinson: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I have a supplementary question. I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please resume his seat?

Mr. Robinson: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I invite the Hon. Member to resume his seat.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Every Member in the place has a supplementary question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques.

Mr. Robinson: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fulton: You wait until we get to vote.

Mr. Robinson: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Talk about a Tory hack.

Mr. Cassidy: You are covering up for the Tories.

Mr. Robinson: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cassidy: You tricked him out of a supplementary question.

● (1440)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If an Hon. Member believes that an unfairness has been done, or a breach of the Orders, his route is to raise a question of order after Question Period. I, therefore, invite the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques to pose a question.

An Hon. Member: We know what side you're on now.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and has to do as well with the unnecessary journeys of his Minister of Environment who squandered something like $64,000 of taxpayers' money last summer. I would like to ask the Prime Minister how he could possibly have authorized—I have here the Minister's written authorization request—such a trip when in fact the purpose of the trip, which was the signature of an automotive vehicle pollution agreement in Stockholm, had been cancelled ten days before her departure? How could he authorize such useless travel?

[English]

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

An Hon. Member: Be accountable, Brian.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, again the discrepancy between the media accounts and the true facts relates to the fact that the media accounts are based on an official agenda, not on the actual itinerary which the Minister followed. For example, in Stockholm—since the question was based on that particular leg of the trip—there were three days in Stockholm, from April 9 to April 13. The agenda shows that there was only a half day's business in an official capacity when in fact, between April 9 and April 13, the Minister was occupied with government business for two and a half days.

Mr. Gauthier: Wow! Do tell.

Mr. McMillan: This involved meetings with representatives of the Department of the Environment in Stockholm—

Mr. Ouellet: At what level?

Mr. McMillan: —and official functions hosted by the Ambassador in Stockholm, bringing together high level officials in that country with the Minister, including the Minister of Health—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McMillan: —the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of Energy for that country—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

ISSUANCE OF AUTHORITY FOR MINISTER'S TRAVEL

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary, and again I shall direct it to the Prime Minister, leaving the junior Minister lost in his flurry of details. What I want to know is who gave the authorization. I have here a letter signed by the Minister, addressed to the Prime Minister's Office, which begins like this:

> The purpose of this letter is to seek authorization to travel to Paris and Stockholm between April 3 and April 14.

I want to know why the Prime Minister or someone in his office gave authorization to make such an unnecessary trip whose very purpose had been cancelled even before the Minister got under way. How could such an authorization have been given? What I want to know, not from a junior Minister, but from the head of the Government—

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the meeting to which the Hon. Member has addressed himself—he said the meeting was of no import—the present Minister of State for Transport, the then Minister of the Environment, was vice-president of the ministerial meeting of the Environmental Committee of the OECD, during which time she met with high level representatives of some 24 countries over three and a half days. She addressed herself, with those officials, to the important questions of toxic chemicals, hazardous waste, air pollution, and acid rain, on which subjects I am wondering if the Hon. Member's Party is suggesting that Canada should abdicate responsibility in international relations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CULTURAL POLICY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for External Affairs. Over 20 arts groups met with us in Toronto this morning and made it quite clear that they don't want to be pawns in this free trade game. Will the Minister now be precise and make it quite clear that key parts of cultural policy, like our CRTC regulations, our cross-border advertising regulations, and our ownership rules on broadcasting, are not going to be part of free trade negotiations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the institutions of cultural expression in Canada, the regulations which guide and often inspire those institutions, are part of the exercise of Canadian cultural sovereignty. We intend to maintain absolutely unhampered the exercise of Canadian cultural sovereignty.

The Hon. Member knows that this Government, after 16 years of inaction in another field, in the Arctic, acted to assert Canada's sovereignty.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We intend to be as diligent about Canada's cultural sovereignty as—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, that is the most classic example of baffle-gab that I have ever heard.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Would the Minister please, for the sake of all of those arts groups right across the country, give a straight answer to the question I asked?

With respect to those specific cultural policies which these arts groups identified this morning as absolutely crucial, will the Minister say that we are not prepared to sacrifice them, or to negotiate about them, in free trade talks? Make it clear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that we are not going to sacrifice Canadian sovereignty; we are going to strengthen Canadian cultural sovereignty.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I have great respect for the Hon. Member. He and I have discussed this matter at committee and elsewhere. He knows that, respect him as I do, I believe it is my duty, and that of the Acting Minister of Communications, to meet directly with representatives of the arts community and of cultural industries which might be affected by any negotiations we enter into.

The Hon. Member knows well that entering into negotiations, discussing something, does not mean that we necessarily conclude on something. If Canada's interests are not well served, then there will be no arrangement. That commitment is clear and has been clear from the beginning, and from the Prime Minister's words. We will be meeting with Canada's cultural industries and we will be protecting Canada's cultural sovereignty and integrity. I look forward to some positive co-operation from my hon. friend and from others in this House.

SMALL BUSINESS

COMPATIBILITY OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL FISCAL INVESTMENT ADVANTAGES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns the compatibility of federal and provincial tax incentives. In his May Budget, the Minister of Finance provided opportunities for those who want to invest their money in small businesses, for instance, the Small Business Investment Corporations. Could the Minister inform the House whether there is any degree of certainty that investors in SPECs, Société de placements dans l'entreprise québécoise and SBICs, Small Business Investment Corporations, will be able to benefit from both federal and provincial tax incentives?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his very good question and his interest in this area. As I understand his question, he is asking whether the small business investment corporations are eligible investments for pension funds and RRSPs, and the answer to that question is yes.

THE CABINET

GUIDELINES CONCERNING TRIPS ABROAD

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He will probably recall that when his Ministers were sworn in, he promised that they would exhibit frugality and moderation in their public spending. Has the Prime Minister issued guidelines in this respect, especially on the subject of their trips abroad? And if so, is the Prime Minister satisfied that his Minister of State (Transports) abided by the guidelines on her travels in Europe last summer?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one of the figures I have seen since the end of our first year, from September to September, where results were compared with the previous year, was the very high operating costs for the Government's fleet of aircraft, which, if I am not mistaken, have dropped by about 32 per cent under this Government, compared with the previous year. Those savings are quite impressive.

My hon. friend, I think I can check with each Minister individually, but I think my hon. friend . . . I will check this out in order to give him that assurance, and we hope that in every case, the same downward trend in spending, compared with the situation under the Liberal Government, will be maintained. It is one of this Government's objectives to be careful how we spend the taxpayer's money, and that is what we are doing.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF GUIDELINES

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary for the Prime Minister is as follows. Did the Prime Minister issue guidelines, yes or no? If he did issue guidelines to his Ministers, and since he promised Canadians open Government, is he prepared to publish those guidelines?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one of the guidelines was that a Minister shall never spend as much as one tenth of the expenses of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) when he was a Minister! That is one of the guidelines, and there are others.

I assume—

[English]

Mr. Axworthy: What about your office, Brian? Why don't you measure your own office?

Mr. Mulroney: Oh, there he is, back from Florida.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Beaches.

Oral Questions

HOSPITALS

SAFETY OF OPERATING ROOM EQUIPMENT

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Health. As he knows, there have been numerous deaths and injuries on operating tables as a result of faulty equipment, yet he does not seem to be prepared to do anything about it. What steps is the Minister taking to restore the confidence of Canadians in hospital room equipment and devices? Up until now, as his own Department head said, if anyone believes those devices and equipment are safe, then they believe in the tooth fairy.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a very valid issue, one with which I have been concerned as well. Regarding the Health Protection Branch, specifically the Medical Devices Bureau, he appreciates that there is first of all the need for absolute safety, as well as the need to develop in Canada standards acceptable to both importers and Canadian manufacturers. I have looked at this matter and asked for a further update. As well, a 1-800 hotline has been established in which doctors and other health care professionals can phone directly to report incidents such as these. This is apart from any other action we have to take in tightening up the inspection system.

LAUNCHING OF PROSECUTIONS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister then advise the House why, even when cases are reported, his Department refuses to prosecute the manufacturers of these faulty products, as even their association has requested the Minister's Department to do?

Mr. Benjamin: That is not free enterprise.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it has nothing to do with free enterprise or anything else, but it has everything to do with the safety of Canadians. The Hon. Member is going back to some historical data. The point I want to make is that approximately 300,000 devices are in use across our hospital and health care system. Most of those are imported. Where prosecutions should be initiated, this Minister has no hesitation in doing so. In fact, quite the opposite. The Minister is instructing his Department that, where this can be founded, to do so.

MULTICULTURALISM

PRESERVATION OF IMMIGRANTS' HERITAGE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Multiculturalism. Most Canadians who choose to come to this country from another land see no conflict in being a Canadian first while preserving their cultural heritage and roots. Does the Minister agree that no conflict exists in these priorities, and will the Government continue to give strong encouragement to the preservation of cultural heritage?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to see an interest in this very important matter coming from this side of the House as opposed to the opposition Parties. I would like to tell the Hon. Member and the House that I am in the process of reviewing the funding criteria which will encourage the retention of ethnic culture, which of course is good for Canada's cultural community, while at the same time providing equal opportunity for all Canadians which will benefit all of Canada.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

LICENSING OF COMBAT SCHOOLS—REQUEST FOR SUPERVISION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General, but in their absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister.

When I asked the Minister of Justice yesterday about the Eagle Combat School in British Columbia he replied that its activities were within the law and there was nothing he could do about it. Is it not time that these schools were subject to laws and regulations in view of the fact that they very often spawn vigilante muscle groups and even terrorist activities? Is it not time that these schools were subjected to standards and supervision in the best interest of society?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice I might respond that it is one thing to make rather sweeping allegations with respect to any particular business. I think the Minister responded with the information he had at his disposal. If the Hon. Member has some specific allegations to make with respect to matters which are offensive under our Criminal Code, or which he feels should be dealt with in that context, I wish he would bring them forward. I am sure the Minister will give them the proper attention.

Mr. Speaker: A very short supplementary.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DISCUSSION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, at one time our private security agencies and detective forces were not subject to law and supervision. I know these schools are not now subject to law. However, I am asking the Minister if his Government will make a commitment to raise the matter at the federal-provincial conference of Attorneys-General to make sure that these schools are subject to standards and supervision and that they do not do the sort of things they are suspected of doing in the U.S. where there have been a lot of problems?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the basic premise of the Hon. Member's question, I will take it as a representation in a general sense. I will make sure the Minister receives the representation, and he will get back to the Hon. Member in due course.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CALL FOR SUSPENSION OF TESTING

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He will know that at the very time he was speaking to the consultative group on arms control and disarmament last week, six of the world's most distinguished statesmen were issuing a call to the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. to suspend all nuclear testing for at least 12 months. Will the Prime Minister consider Canada joining this great five-continent initiative and, indeed, possibly offering Canada's verification mechanisms to help provide third-party monitoring?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, this matter has been raised and considered before. It is Canada's view that, particularly at this time as the Soviet Union and the United States prepare for a Summit which could well hold the world's security in its hands, it is important for Canada to continue to play actively those roles we have traditionally played. That means, of course, that we want to pursue, very vigorously, initiatives and opportunities open for us at Stockholm, at Geneva, at the MBFR talks and in other fora.

● (1500)

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary question.

CANADIAN POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister willing, however, to join the leaders of Greece, Sweden, Argentina, India, Mexico and Tanzania in calling for an immediate ban by both sides on nuclear testing? That would be the action we could take now, and we could help in the verification of that action.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, asking others to act is not always action. The Hon. Member has asked the Prime Minister of Canada to join the leaders of India and some other countries. Very recently at Nassau the Prime Minister of Canada not only joined those leaders but led those leaders—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —in coming to a conclusion on an important international question on which Canada has direct influence. It is the policy of the Government to direct its attention toward those areas in which we can offer leadership and influence, not simply advice.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Wilson) on Monday, November 4, 1985, by filing with the Clerk of the House, meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. SPEAKER'S RULING ON QUESTIONS CONCERNING MINISTER'S FORMER PORTFOLIO

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order flowing from my question to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) in the House today. On October 3, 1985, I asked a question of the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) as follows:

> Is the Minister prepared to account to the taxpayers of Canada by tabling in this House all receipts for her personal expenditures on these junkets around Europe?

That was the question, Mr. Speaker, which I put to the Minister of State for Transport and on October 3 the Speaker allowed the Minister of State for Transport to answer precisely that question. I, of course, assumed that the Speaker's ruling today would be the same as his ruling on October 3. Therefore, following the precedent established by the Speaker, I put my question once again to the Minister of State for Transport. Well, Mr. Speaker, the rules apparently changed and the Speaker indicated that I should put my question to someone else, either the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) or the Minister of the Environment. I then, Mr. Speaker, got up and put the question to the Minister of the Environment, and the Speaker will recall that the answer of the Minister of the Environment was interrupted by noise and then the Speaker stood up.

My recollection, Mr. Speaker, is that at that point the Speaker said that Members of the House should allow the Minister to complete his reply. My recollection of what the Speaker indicated is that Members should allow the Minister to complete his reply and that he was not being permitted to do so. I then stood up and indicated, because the Minister of the Environment was rising at the same time, that before putting a supplementary question I would allow the Minister to complete his answer. He was on his feet, Mr. Speaker. The Speaker then knew very clearly that I had a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, I am prepared to let the Member finish his point of order, but I would appreciate if he would come to a point of order.

Point of Order—Mr. Robinson

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I clearly indicated that I had a supplementary question for the Minister of the Environment. The Speaker, however, said: "Obviously the Member does not have a supplementary question".

There is an appearance of, if not favouritism, certainly, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order, please. If the Member has an allegation to make, he may make it, but not in this way. Does the Member have a point of order to make? The Hon. Member knows full well, I take it, that the question of who may ask a question or whether, in fact, any supplementary questions may be granted, is entirely at the discretion of the Chair. Is the Hon. Member, therefore, saying that a point of disorder occurred during Question Period under our rules?

Mr. Robinson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, in two respects, the first with respect to the precedent that the Speaker himself established. On October 3 of this year the Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. Could the Hon. Member give me a point of order? The Hon. Member is saying that something happened once. Is he then arguing, therefore—I am sorry. It is improper for me to debate this question with him, as I think he well knows. If he has a point of order to make, I would be glad to hear it. If his point is that a previous question was allowed that was improperly allowed, then I am prepared to look at that and determine whether in fact a previous question was improperly allowed by myself or anyone else. However, the Hon. Member knows full well, as he is an experienced Member of the House, that questions may not be put to Ministers with regard to their previous portfolios or a portfolio which that Minister no longer holds. I think that the Hon. Member is an experienced enough Member to know that.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I also have Beauchesne's and I believe it indicates that this House is governed by precedent.

However, my second point of order, Mr. Speaker, is with respect to the question of order that arises from a situation in which the Speaker indicates, despite the clear record, that a Member did not ask for a supplementary when the Member clearly did ask for a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Robinson: That is a question of order.

Mr. Speaker: It is not a question of order. I recognized the Hon. Member for Burnaby clearly by saying: "Supplementary question". The Hon. Member for Burnaby rose to say that the Minister had not finished his answer. I, therefore—

Mr. Robinson: And I said I had a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: I, therefore, went to the next questioner. I am more than happy to check the "blues" and if I have caused an offence to the Hon. Member, I will be more than happy to do the appropriate thing but, clearly, there is no question of order. I think that the Hon. Member is an experienced Member and knows that.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member rising on a separate point of order?

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, if I may conclude on this point of order, I would ask the Speaker to check—

Mr. Speaker: Please! Is the Hon. Member rising on a separate point of order? The Hon. Member, I think, knows full well that the question of who puts questions and whether supplementary questions may be put is entirely discretionary. If the Hon. Member wishes to pursue the matter he may want to come to see me, but I will be glad, as I indicated, to check the "blues".

TABLING OF DOCUMENTS CITED BY MR. McMILLAN

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have a somewhat different point of order. During the course of his reply to questions asked here today, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) appeared to be reading some documents that had been provided to him that dealt specifically with the agenda of the former Minister of the Environment. He appeared, in fact, to be quoting from those documents in making his argument that the agenda was different in some way from the actual events that occurred—from the "itinerary" as he put it. I would like to ask you, if you would, Mr. Speaker, to review what was said during Question Period to determine whether in fact the Minister was citing those documents for the purpose of strengthening his reply. If that be the case, I would like to ask, respectfully, that he be requested to table the documents.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could resolve this matter by assuring the Hon. Member that I was not referring to any official agenda or official itinerary. To the extent that I was referring to anything, I was referring only to handwritten notes to myself based on conversations I have had with the present Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) with my own officials, her former officials, and with former and current members of her staff. I do not think, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that they fall into the category of that which would be appropriately tabled today.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to accept the Minister's assurances that he was not citing from official documents. I would request that, at some point, he and the former Minister get together to consider whether tabling the documents that relate to that particular trip might be advisable in the public interest.

HOUSE PRACTICE RESPECTING QUESTIONS CONCERNING MINISTER'S FORMER PORTFOLIO

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. As one sitting on the back-benches and listening to the procedure whereby one Minister has to answer for another Minister who no longer has that portfolio, I wonder if it would not be proper to have either Minister, perhaps the first Minister, make a statement under Motions in response to the whole matter.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member intends that that be taken as a representation to the Government. That may be his view, but I have to say to him that it is not a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: It is still a good point.

Mr. Speaker: It may well be.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table today in the House a petition from a large number of British Columbians who are concerned about the cut-back in family allowances while at the same time the Mulroney administration is bringing forth billions of dollars in hand-outs to the oil companies and a billion dollars for bail-outs of the banks.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasant duty to table in the House of Commons today a number of petitions from metropolitan Toronto citizens who pray and call upon the Conservative Government to restore full indexation of the family allowance and child tax credit.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition from residents of Saskatoon who point out that the family allowance deindexation will not be offset by changes to the tax credit for children and that even the poorest families will be worse off by 1990. Therefore they call on the House to reverse the Government's policy on deindexation of family allowances.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present five petitions from Regina, Saskatoon, Yorkton, Nipawin, Unity, Coronach and Carduff. The undersigned, your petitioners, call upon the House to make sure that full indexation of the universal family allowance is retained. They are in duty bound to pray forever and so am I.

CONTROL OF PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions to the House containing several hundred names from St. Mary's Church, Faith Christian Fellowship, Glad Tidings Fellowship on the Netherlands Reform Congregation and the Eden Mennonite Church. All of these congregations which are located in Chilliwack, British Columbia, in the beautiful Fraser Valley East, urge the federal Government to strive to establish clear obscenity legislation and to enforce stricter control of pornography.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a number of petitions to the House asking the Government of Canada to restore full indexation of the family allowance and child tax credit. My first petition comes from Vancouver Quadra.

I also have a petition which comes from Cape Breton-East Richmond, signed by dozens of petitioners who ask the Government to reconsider its position on family allowance.

I have another petition from Parkdale-High Park, Spadina, Broadview-Greenwood, North York and Etobicoke which is signed by several dozen petitioners asking the Government to reconsider its position on family allowance, to restore full indexation, and also to restore the child tax credit.

I have a petition signed by people from Ottawa West asking the Government to reconsider its position on family allowance.

I have another petition from New Westminster and Surrey, British Columbia, signed by petitioners who are asking the Government to reconsider its position on family allowance.

I am also in possession of a petition, which I have been asked to table in the name of people from Westmorland-Kent and Fundy-Royal, which asks the Government to reconsider its position and to restore full indexation of family allowances.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by the constituents of the riding of Ottawa-Vanier, asking this Government to reconsider its position and to reinstate full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

[English]

I have another petition signed by several dozen—

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but it seems to me that he is presenting petitions on the same subject. The Member is an experienced Member who knows that the practice is to be as brief as possible. Perhaps he might just give us a list of where the petitions are from.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that. I have so many petitions that I was not sure that they all claim to speak to the same subject. I was making sure by looking at them.

Following your direction, Mr. Speaker, I will table the petition from Spadina, Beaches and Davenport dealing with the full indexation of family allowances.

I have a petition from Mississauga North and Brampton asking the Government to reconsider.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It would appear that all of the petitions that have been presented by the Hon. Member are petitions addressed to the Government. He has said that in his own words. Surely the only petitions that might be presented here are petitions to Parliament. That does not appear to be the case. Therefore, the Hon. Member ought not to be presenting these petitions.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I appreciate the intervention by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). He will know that petitions are often presented that are not entirely appropriate as to form and the Speaker has something to say about that question on the next day. Petitions are normally checked after they are presented.

Mr. Gauthier: I will satisfy my colleague, Mr. Speaker. These petitions are addressed to the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled. If he wants me to read the petitions, I will gladly do so. However, I was asked by the Speaker just to table the names of the ridings. Evidently we are talking about the Government, talking about a Government that is insensitive to family allowances—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Gauthier: He is the one who started it.

Mr. Speaker: No. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier is an experienced Member. Let me repeat once more that he knows that petitions should be presented in the briefest possible period of time. I invite him to conclude very briefly.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to the House of Commons from the Capreol area in Ontario.

I have another petition submitted to the House of Commons from Sudbury, signed by several constituents in that riding.

I have petitions signed by people from Montreal-Sainte-Marie, Windsor-Walkerville, Belle River, Essex North and Windsor-Walkerville again.

I have another petition concerning family allowance signed by people from Brampton-Georgetown.

I have another petition tabled—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows the practice. He knows that if I allow this to go on for much longer it will be creating the appearance of a filibuster. He knows I cannot do that.

I am perfectly certain that the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier will be here tomorrow with the rest of his petitions.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, if you wish, I can finish the petitions for him. I have one petition, which was collected by Mr. and Mrs. Dorino Gobbo from my riding of York West. This petition also requests that the Government remove the deindexation of family allowances and restore full indexation, as part of the social contract that these families have had under the previous Liberal Government.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition from residents of Saturna Island in the riding of Cowichan-Malhahat-The Islands. These residents are very concerned about the deindexing provisions of the family allowance Bill and its unfairness in comparison to the giveaways to the oil companies and the banks. They call upon the Government and the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): I have a petition signed by residents of Canada, in this case particularly from Flin Flon, Manitoba in the riding of Churchill. It is their opinion that the deindexation of universal family allowance and the massive cut-backs in the public commitment to child benefits are an unfair attack against women and their families, especially single-parent mothers. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate the full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

• (1520)

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty, on behalf of a number of residents of the City of Prince Albert, to present three petitions which call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and honour to present a petition signed by a number of residents of Toronto from Spadina, Beaches, Scarborough West and other such ridings addressed to this House pointing out that the cut-backs in child benefits, on top of the sales tax increases, excise tax increases and other increases in income tax, are unfair and place an extraordinary burden on middle and lower income households. Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table two petitions on behalf of my constituents from the riding of Ottawa Centre and other parts of Ottawa. These people object to the indexing of family allowances and, in particular, to the amount of $600 million that will be taken out of payments to families. They call upon this House to restore the indexing of family allowances, the removal of which is proposed.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING FARMERS AND FISHERMEN

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma) moved for leave to introduce a Bill C-253, entitled an Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act (farmers and fishermen).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, these amendments to the Bankruptcy Act would provide a legal mechanism for farmers and fishermen to apply to a court for an arrangement to settle debts.

It would provide a pre-foreclosure arbitration procedure by the court. Farmer-creditor arrangement legislation has been called for by groups, such as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the National Farmers Union, and others. Therefore, I introduce this Bill.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions on the Order Paper be allowed to stand.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was served with a notice a little while ago in this House stating that questions Nos. 450, 451 and 452 were to be replied to this afternoon. That notice was given to me approximately half an hour ago. I believe some explanation is warranted as to why replies are not to be provided when I was told previously that today they would be. Specifically, why is the Government stalling and delaying its answers to questions concerning trips of the former Minister of the Enrivonment?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, as always we are ready, willing and able to assist the Hon. Member by presenting answers to questions on the Order Paper.

As it happens, in defence of my colleague who is not here today, let me say that when I had to stand up for a second day in a row to request that all questions be allowed to stand, I asked why. I am told that the question of the acceptability of questions, whether or not these questions are in order, is presently under consideration. That is the information I have been given. I am sure that in due course we will have a satisfactory answer.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

EXCISE TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Marchi (p. 8360).

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, immediately prior to the recess I was explaining for the record the reason that the Hon. Member put a motion on the floor to hoist the Bill for six months. After a full debate, during which many Members of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party have had an opportunity to contribute, the Government decided to allocate one further day for finalization of the debate.

At this point earlier today the unholy Liberal and NDP alliance ran out of steam, speeches and rhetoric. The House will know that we are in a period of 10 minute speeches and that members of the Opposition who have spoken will not be able to speak again unless the device used by the Hon. Member is used to freshen the list.

This comes at a time of severe embarrassment to the Liberal Party. The Liberal Party is decimated by the fact that nobody from the Quebec Liberal Party wants to go to the convention in Halifax this weekend and the leadership contest between the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) and the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) is heating up—

Mr. Gauthier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Rather than deal with it as a point of order, I might just remind the experienced Member of Parliament and Parliamentary Secretary of the rule of relevance.

Mr. Gauthier: We do not mind the publicity.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I was just relating the relevancy of the amendment to hoist the Bill to the difficulties of the Liberal Party in finding speakers to speak on the Bill. That is the binding relevance.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have a bona fide point of order.

Mr. Speaker: On a real point of order, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, there is a rule in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition that says that first, one has to be relevant to the Bill. Second, it says that you are not to impute motives. All I have heard for the last 35 to 40 seconds is the Member imputing motives, about which he knows nothing. In fact, my list is so long today that I could have Members speaking until twelve o'clock tonight, if the Member wishes to prolong the Members' right to speak. I have on my list Members who want to speak. If the Hon. Member has nothing else to say but that nonsense, he might as well sit down.

Mr. Lewis: I have something else to say, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. For the record I should rule that that is not a point of order, but I think the point is made.

Mr. Lewis: I am sure that the entire House knew that, Sir, but I am pleased you put it on the record officially.

We will now see in the rest of this debate Members who have spoken before and who have made a contribution to Bill C-80. I am not sure I see anyone in the House who has not spoken before. Now that we have the device of the six months hoist, I invite Members who are about to retread their previous speeches to commence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Mr. Gauthier: She has not spoken yet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Well, she will now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, may I point out, following on the remarks of my friend, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, that I am one of those now speaking on the motion who have not spoken yet on Bill C-80. His thesis does not have much to do with the facts.

Mr. Gauthier: It never does.

Miss Nicholson: When I spoke yesterday, Mr. Speaker, it was on the closure motion. I indicated that this Party has opposed Bill C-80 because we consider it unfair to low and middle-income earners and also because we think it does not make any economic sense.

It is interesting to find this morning that we got confirmation for this view from the prestigious Conference Board of Canada, which has generally been considered to take a rather conservative viewpoint of economic matters. The Conference Board of Canada points out that the tax increases in the last federal Budget will slow economic growth for the next few years.

• (1530)

In fact, it warns that economic growth will drop to a meagre 1.5 per cent per year, beginning in 1988, as the results of the cumulative measures introduced by the Government takes effect. The Conference Board blames the economic decline which it anticipates on tax increases in the Progressive Conservative Budget of May, which will take away spending money from most Canadians. It indicated that in 1986, the implementation of the more restrictive elements of last May's federal Budget would inhibit the expansion of consumer spending.

When the Government took power, Canada was at a point where it was recovering from a very serious world-wide recession, from which Canadians had been sheltered to some extent by the prudent policies of the previous Liberal Government. Canadians had not suffered as harshly as had people in other countries. Also, the Government inherited some building blocks for recovery and some elements of a good Budget. It has thrown away these advantages. In fact, in Bill C-80 before us we see an attempt, we are told, to grapple with the deficit. However, the attempt takes the form of piling on taxes like Pelion on Ossa on to low and middle income-earners, with the result, as we have heard from the Conference Board of Canada, that the money needed for a consumer-led recovery is disappearing. We will have a dampening of the economy and a dampening of economic growth. In fact, the deficit is more likely to increase.

Among the measures which we see before us in Bill C-80, there are tax increases on gas—two cents per litre in September, 1985, and one cent per litre in January. This will affect farmers. It is certainly already affecting food costs—and we have seen that food costs are up in the last month—because there is an energy cost in every food article. Farmers use energy. It is used for transportation, packaging, storage and retailing. Consumers will have to pay higher food costs as a result of this change.

Many of us have received mail from Canadian trucking companies indicating that the increase will make it more difficult for them to compete with their American competitors. So we see the risk of a loss of Canadian jobs.

A tax is imposed upon many categories of construction material including modular homes, concrete and asphalt. We have all received mail from people in the construction industry who are often locked into fixed cost contracts. For some small and medium-sized construction companies in particular, the fact that they now have to absorb this 6 per cent increase, because they are locked into fixed cost contracts, may mean going out of business. Yet this Government which claims to consult and to be responsive is not even willing to accept what has been proposed by some construction companies, that is, a method of phasing in the sales tax increase so as to allow them to deal with their fixed cost contracts.

Also we see taxes being imposed upon equipment and construction material used in energy conservation. The items which will be taxed at the 11 per cent level as of January 1 include heat recovery units, devices for extracting heat from exhaust air or waste water for the recovery of energy, solar panels and tubes for collecting and converting solar energy, wood burning stoves and space heaters. The items to be taxed at 7 per cent will include thermal insulation.

The Government has clearly made a policy decision to put all its eggs in the oil and gas basket and to discourage Canadians from using alternative forms of energy. Not only that, it is discouraging homeowners who want to save a little money on energy costs by insulating. A price has to be paid for that.

I should like to turn to the sales tax on candy, soft drinks and pet food. Candy manufacturers also asked for time. They were willing to accept the sales tax, but they asked for a little time because many of them had prepackaged and priced their merchandise for their peak sales periods of Hallowe'en and Christmas. They were left with Hobson's choice—either redo the packaging with new prices or absorb the extra cost of the sales tax. The Government has been deaf to their request for a six-month delay.

Turning to the tourism industry, it has very serious concerns about the increase in gasoline tax which it sees as discouraging American visitors who form a large bulk of our tourist trade. That industry foresees a very substantial reduction in the number of American tourists visiting Canada each year, accompanied by a net loss of $135 million to the economy and perhaps over 5,000 jobs, when one takes into account the multiplier factor.

The list goes on and on. The direction is wrong for Canada. The new taxes discourage energy conservation. They impose a very severe hardship upon the construction sector of the economy. When we add the sales tax, higher fuel costs, CMHC cuts and the elimination of the Registered Home Ownership Savings Program to what the construction industry is facing, it is a heavy blow to an industry which was beginning to make a rather nice recovery from the recession.

The total amount to be taken out of the pockets of Canadian consumers in 1990 and 1991 as a result of these sales tax measures and the income tax changes may amount to $6.7 billion. Even this year the amount will be about $2 billion. This can only exert a damaging and dampening effect upon the purchasing power of lower and middle-income Canadians and, therefore, the economy in general.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, most of the people I know would rather leave a burning building than rush into it. Most of the people I know would rather say hello to a friend than farewell. Most of the people I know would rather stand in Parliament and speak in favour of a tax reduction rather than tax increases. However, here I am rushing into the burning building to speak in favour of tax increases. I do so because in Bill C-80, the one under debate at this time, there are measures of great importance. I would like in the coming moments to look at three of them.

The first relates to the tax on cigarettes and what it raises in terms of general Government policy for the tobacco culture in our country and our economy. Second is the question of the tax exemption on certain health goods and what it means for many Canadians, particularly those who are disabled. Third, I should like to touch upon the measures included in Bill C-80 which represent an important step forward in terms of Government financial planning and accountability. I was also encouraged to rise to speak on this Bill because last night I heard from the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) who had just returned to Canada from one of the eastern European communist countries. He said that no matter how bad things seemed in Canada, he was awfully glad to get back because in comparison with other countries, things are extraordinarily good here. It would be helpful for Hon. Members to place the relative amount of tax increases contained in Bill C-80 in that broader context. Members should look at them against the backdrop of the sincere effort of the Government to come to grips with the deficit that burdens the country and the future of the country.

Indeed, regarding the deficit, I would like to make another preliminary comment. At different times I was thinking about running for Parliament. I looked at the House in the 1960s, that great period of time when Government consisted largely of Ministers rising to announce new spending programs. It was a great expansionist era and politics was relatively easy then because politicians only had to decide what problem faced the country on which they could spend money. That was not hard politics, that was simply a matter of goodwill and the ability to spend money. It is the legacy of that approach which has now returned to haunt us in the eighties, a time when politics has become much harder and involves restraint in an effort to reduce the staggering deficit.

I have listened to the speeches made by Members opposite. As the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) said this morning, any measure like Bill C-80 is bound to be fodder for the cannons of the Opposition. It is easy to shoot at the Government when tax increases are part of the legislation before us. However, the speeches that have been made in criticism of Bill C-80 have been very big on rhetoric and some of it easy rhetoric, but have not squarely addressed the reality faced by Government in the 1980s.

I now turn to the three measures I wish to mention briefly. One measure designed to increase Government revenue is the tax on cigarettes. This is the second time in the Thirty-third Parliament that a measure has been brought forward to increase tobacco taxes and it is the second time I have risen to speak in support of that increase for the same reason. I believe that the place of tobacco in our culture is something on which it is very difficult to formulate government policy. There are countries like China in which smoking is an indulgence followed by virtually the entire population. This kind of debate would never occur in China. However, in Canada we have now come to a point at which we are recognizing the extraordinary health hazards involved in the use of tobacco as well as the many related costs including the agricultural cost involved in having prime land dedicated to tobacco. A debate is now occurring in Canadian society which goes to the root of what we think of ourselves and how we wish to use certain products.

Hon. Members have recently raised the question of a contradiction in Government policy. Here we are raising tobacco taxes and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has recently announced a spending program that will encourage Canadians and particularly younger Canadians to break the habit of smoking. Contemporaneous to that, there has been a measure of support for tobacco farmers. One could detect here certain inconsistencies.

I believe Government policy is reflecting the state of the debate and the shift in the thinking of Canadian society as a whole. I would hope that in the medium-term, we can move toward a policy that would see agricultural lands now given over to tobacco crops being given over instead to soybean or other crops that are certainly desperately needed in a world in which many people are starving and many more are going to bed hungry every night. I believe we have a broad social responsibility in that area.

Government policy regarding tobacco is clearly now in a state of transition. I hope it can continue along the same line so that within the next five to 10 years, we can see a true transition in the policy toward tobacco and no inconsistency on the part of a Government which is trying to get people to stop using a product that is so destructive to health. If this were to happen, the Government would no longer have the marvellous source of revenue it has from taxing tobacco. There is not a Government in the world that has not turned to levying hefty tobacco taxes in order to raise revenues. However, by the same token, in a society in which the use of tobacco products is alien, many Government expenditures for which those very funds are required including health care costs no longer need to come from the public purse.

The second point I would like to make concerns the tax exemption on certain health goods. I would like to applaud the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for blending an approach of fiscal responsibility with a compassionate understanding of the needs of Canadians. It did not fall on unhearing ears or to a hardened heart that Canadians, upon hearing plans for removing exemptions from certain products such as those used by diabetics, those who suffer from cardio-vascular diseases and those who suffer from respiratory diseases, requested that the Minister make a change. The Minister announced some weeks ago that the Government is prepared to listen and to modify its policy. As the Chairman of the Committee on Equality Rights, I would hope that the same view will prevail as we look more closely at a number of the tax exemptions available to the handicapped and disabled Canadians.

My final point concerns the effort to bring order and predictability to tax planning in Canada. I support this Bill because it introduces a comprehensive system of assessments, objections and appeals into the Excise Tax Act. This system is similar to the current system under the Income Tax Act and incorporates the recent improvements initiated by the Government in the areas of search and seizure and the presumption of innocence which defer collection and action on taxation until a taxpayer has had an opportunity to resolve any disputes arising out of his or her tax liability. It is for the same reason that the Government has ended a provision inaugurated by the previous Government regarding the automatic indexation of tobacco taxes. We feel very strongly that it is Parliament that should have the opportunity to debate tax legislation. This point was made this morning by an Hon. Member from Manitoba. Again, I support this legislation because the removal of the automatic indexing of the tobacco tax is a step in the right direction. Whenever it has to be increased it is we here in Parliament, the elected representatives of the people, who will have a chance to speak to it.

• (1550)

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to speak on Bill C-80 which, as all Members of the House know, is nothing more than another regressive tax Bill being dragged forward by the Government because it either does not have the guts or the will to go out and obtain the money where it should. In fact, somewhere between $30 billion and $50 billion could be collected from the corporations of the country. These are taxes which they are legally obliged and required to pay but because of the insufficient will of those who sit on the Government benches those taxes are simply not being collected.

It was interesting to listen to the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer). He did not bother speaking about the Little Egypt Bump—the $500 million to $1 billion going to Reichmann's. Instead, he talks about getting tobacco farmers in Canada to grow soybeans, as if those people who are listening to the debate today might think that somehow there is some sort of a comprehensive Government policy with respect to either the question of taxation or the question of tobacco. None of the additional taxes in Bill C-80 will go to help Canadians who are suffering health problems in relation to the fact that they have been either moderate or heavy smokers. In fact, these taxes will go into general revenues to help bail out the corporate friends of the new Government. It is quite clear that those friends are either the banks, the oil companies or certain individuals in Toronto who seem to be receiving the hundreds of millions of dollars which this Government likes to shovel off the backs of the trucks every day.

I would like to deal with how regressive these taxes are because they hit low and middle income earners the hardest. It then goes after the farmers, the fishermen and the forest industry workers in my constituency with a rather vehement beat. It blatantly attacks the tourist industry, as I will demonstrate in a few moments.

Let us consider the key elements coming forward from the May Budget which are contained in Bill C-80. The increases in the federal sales taxes and excise taxes have to be looked at very carefully because, of course, there is an essential difference between the two forms of tax. The sales tax is an ad valorem tax in that it is assessed as a percentage of the price of a good, for example, at 7 per cent, which is simply tacked on. Excise taxes are assessed at a fixed rate, as we recently saw in the first week of September with respect to the 2 cent per litre increase on gasoline. The main thrust of Bill C-80, of course, is to increase revenue though changes in both the scope and rate of the federal sales and excise taxes. There is no question about that. It is somewhere in excess of $3 billion, which point I will come to in a few moments.

There is one interesting point in the Bill for which I think the Government should be supported. I am speaking of the implementation of the presumption of innoncence concept. Although this does not help the overwhelming majority of taxpayers in the country who have their taxes lobbed off every two weeks, and who never really get an opportunity to use the clause, for some small business people and for fishermen, farmers and truck loggers in my constituency, it will be a rather useful change to the tax legislation.

The major increases in the Bill are as follows. The federal sales tax will be increased by 1 per cent effective January 1, 1986. Therefore, the new rate will be 7 per cent on construction materials. I know that will not help speed up the number of housing starts in the country. There will be a 7 per cent tax levied on cable and pay television services, which will certainly not help those people who are either in long-term care facilities or who are shut in at home for long periods of time for whatever reason. It will certainly hit low and middle income people much harder than anyone else. There will be a 14 per cent tax increase on alcoholic beverages and on tobacco products and an 11 per cent increase on other taxable goods. The total with respect to these increases in relation to Bill C-80 will be $990 million in fiscal year 1986-87 which will be borne directly by the taxpayers.

One initiative which has been fought consistently across the country and which has received a few rather narrow changes to it is the concept of broadening the sales tax base. The historic exemptions for candy, confectionary goods, soft drinks, pet foods and certain health goods are still basically in place. There have been some minor changes by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in this respect. However, one which I find particularly irritating and one which is an example of colossal government stupidity is the broadening of the sales taxes to include energy conservation equipment. Studies which have been done by the National Research Council, by many provincial Governments and by many independent environmental organizations in the country demonstrate that that stands to be one of the stupidest things which has been done by the Government and one which will be hard felt in years to come as we see energy costs rising. This will be compounded by the fact that we will have used up so much more of our non-renewable energy base. To cut off funding to the scientific study of alternate energy, as we have seen at the NRC, and to cut back funds to universities and independent organizations across the country, whether it be with respect to wind, solar, biomass or any other alternate energies, is an example of a Government which his clearly in the pockets of the oil patch. Unfortunately for Canadians the Government is closing off one of the most promising small business enterprises which we have seen in this decade. Anyone who takes the time to study the figures would be quite astonished at the number of jobs which have been created and the long-term energy and cost savings both to the environment and to the economy. Those people could not find this concept of the Minister of Finance to be anyhting but stupid. The cost of this broadening will be some $785 million directly to the end of fiscal year 1986-87. It is interesting to note that not one single Member on the Government side has touched on the changes to the energy conservation area and what the impact will be in terms of job losses. We know that there will be almost $1 billion more in taxes on that sector; but no one from the government side has pointed out the large number of jobs which will be lost by so blatantly attacking a young and innovative new enterprise in Canada.

The excise tax will be increased on the following goods. Effective September 3, as we have already seen, an additional two cents a litre on gas and aviation gas had a hard felt impact on a constituency such as mine, which is about one-third of British Columbia, where many truck loggers are already hauling 200 miles each way in some cases. It does not take too many of these two cent a litre bumps to put many of these people practically out of business. We have seen the same thing occur with respect to many of the smaller airlines because there was already an increase of two cents a litre on diesel and aviation fuel. The Government sort of buries away and hides some of these increases, which is one reason I suppose we went metric with respect to gasoline. It is easier to hide from Canadian consumers just how great a lot of these jumps are in terms of taxation because of the change from gallons to litres. I see a resident expert on metric nodding knowingly from the government benches. I hope he will stand up and fight against this Bill. There is another one cent per litre on gas and aviation fuel effective January 1, and another cent per litre on diesel fuel and aviation fuel. The cost of these fuel tax increases to the end of 1986-87 will be $1.325 billion.

It is interesting that the Minister of Finance has not tabled in the House what the effect of this type of increase in taxation will be on farmers, fishermen, truck loggers, trucking companies and all those small airlines which fly not only in northern British Columbia but throughout Canada. I really object to this type of across-the-board taxation being brought in without knowing what the impacts will be.

When it comes to tourism I think the figures which I can put before the House will make it clear that these types of taxation increases are damaging some of the key industries in the country. The various per unit taxes on alcohol, with an increase of 2 per cent, and on cigarettes, with an increase of one cent per cigarette, are quite different. None of that money will go directly to deal with one of the most serious health problems not only in Canada but in the western world which is related to the consumption of cigarettes. There has been no serious attempt by the Government to deal in a comprehensive way with the issue of tobacco. The cost in this respect to the end of fiscal year 1986-87 is $440 million. Just on alcohol and tobacco alone we can see the Government stretching its long fingers into everyone's pockets on a fairly regular basis. The cost to the Canadian consumer with respect to these excise tax increases comes to $1.765 billion. When combined with the other hidden costs which the Minister of Finance has brought in to the end of next year it will amount to another $3.54 billion. I am sorry I do not have time to speak about tourism. However, let me conclude by quoting briefly from a speech of the Minister of Finance which demonstrates quite clearly how taxes in the last 10 years have gone from the individual taxpayer paying 50 per cent and corporations paying 50 per cent to corporations now paying 25 per cent and individuals paying 75 per cent. If we follow that through to the year 2000, individual taxpayers will pay it all. The Minister of Finance said on November 28, 1984, and I quote:

● (1600)

Our recent figures indicate that the effect of tax incentives has been to reduce the average federal corporate income tax rate from 36 per cent to 15 per cent . . . Particular activities qualify for very high rates of incentives, especially under certain grant programs. When the benefits from special tax incentives are added we are looking, in some cases, at an extraordinary generous level of assistance.

It is clear that the Minister of Finance, and the new Government, are giving all the give-aways to the rich and to the corporations and are loading all the taxes, particularly these kinds of taxes, on to low and middle income earners and are bankrupting many small businesses across the country.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 46, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell)—Trade—Protectionist measures proposed in United States Congress; the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Agriculture (a) Sugar-beet industry—Plight of farmers. (b) Request for stabilization payment; the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp)—Marine transport (a) Construction of ferries. (b) Placement of orders.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and on the amendment of Mr. Marchi (p. 8360).

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): I am just delighted to have a chance to speak on Bill C-80 because it is a Bill which clarifies the fact that the Government is out to deceive the people and will certainly not keep its election campaign promises. I simply point to the two cents excise tax which was imposed on farmers, fishermen, forestry workers and on the mining industry on September 3 of this year.

During the election campaign last year the Government made a very strong promise that it was going to reduce taxes for farmers, fishermen, forestry workers and for the mining industry. On November 8 of last year it did reduce the excise tax by some three cents. It also gave an exemption to the petroleum compensation charge of 1.8 cents. On June 1, that exemption from the petroleum compensation charge of 1.8 cents a litre was eliminated but the price of gasoline did not go down. On September 1, the two cents excise tax was implemented so we see a new expensive tax loaded onto Canadian farmers. In fact, it is estimated that that tax will cost farmers something like $130 million. On top of that, there will be an additional tax of one cent on fuel starting January 1, 1987. At the end of December of next year the three cents excise reduction which has been in effect will be wiped out. Therefore, we will see farmers, fishermen, forestry workers and mining companies paying the full shot, plus a couple of extra cents per litre. This shows the kind of double dealing activity for which the Government is becoming famous.

The Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) spoke this afternoon about the tobacco tax and tobacco farmers. If he is really interested in defending the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), he should visit St. Thomas this weekend. It is expected that 1,000 farmers will rally in St. Thomas to call the Government to account for its lack of action in agriculture. No industry has suffered more than the farmers from the farm debt crisis this past year, especially the young farmers. Yet the Government has failed to act. In fact, by this nine cents a gallon excise on gasoline, it is imposing even greater hardship on the agricultural community.

The Ontario Government changed from a Conservative Government to a Liberal Government last July and within a matter of two or three weeks, in the Budget brought down the provincial Government provided $50 million in relief for the farmers of Ontario. That is the kind of action which this Minister of Agriculture should be taking. Last year he put a moratorium on farm foreclosures. The situation has worsened.

We now have 23 per cent of our farmers, instead of 19 per cent, in serious financial difficulty and we see no action.

The Farm Credit Corporation was reduced from some $494 million of farm assistance, long-term loan funding, to only $90 million this year. On July 10 of this year, the Minister promised to bring in legislation on an urgent basis this fall with amendments to the Bankruptcy Act to provide a pre-foreclosure, pre-bankruptcy arbitration procedure for young farmers facing foreclosure. He started to walk away from this promise in September. Last week he was at the point where he was saying he would seriously consider it. This kind of lack of action is the reason the Minister of Agriculture is going to have to face many hundreds of young farmers in serious financial difficulty this Saturday when he goes home to his riding.

This Government has billions and billions of dollars. It has a $1 billion for a write-off for the Reichmann brothers in Toronto. It has $1 billion for Petro-Canada to buy 1,800 gasoline stations and refineries. But the Government has no money for farmers. This Bill exacerbates their situation because it imposes an additional two cents a litre, or nine cents a gallon, on farm fuel costs. It is a deliberate back-tracking and contravention of the very promises which the Government made. The Government imposes this tax at a time when the harvest is getting into full swing in western Canada. It is a travesty. It is unfair and unjust. On top of that the Government is going to impose an additional one cent sales tax on all farm supplies, including gasoline, which will probably cost a little over one cent a gallon. It will be imposing it on all farm supplies and goods.

The Government promised agri-bonds, long-term low-interest rate funding for farmers. It reneged on its promise. The Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs made a strong recommendation that we have an agri-bond program to help young farmers who are facing serious financial difficulty, but there was no action about that whatsoever in the Budget. The Government promised to revise Section 31. There was no action there. It promised to expand agricultural research and development. Yet the Government is cutting back $50 million on the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. That is reputed to be coming out of the research budget. The Government is reneging on its promise of an agricultural research institution in Quebec. The Toxicology Centre at the University of Guelph, which would have been very valuable to agriculture, was cut by the former Minister of the Environment. She did not have a clue about anything in the environment but you would think she would have at least learned something about that institution before cancelling it. This is just a totally disastrous history of lack of action or wrong action taken by this Government.

If we look at the rest of the Tory campaign manifesto we see that they promised to allocate the necessary funding to assist producers in refinancing their loans at current prevailing rates. We saw no action, but the Ontario Liberal Government, within a matter of a month, was able to announce a $50 million program of assistance. The Tories promised in the election campaign to impose an effective fast-track policy so that responsive action could be taken to protect producers by imposing import restrictions where necessary. What do we have? The Government imposed a 5.9 million pound limit on EEC beef imports to Canada but when the pressure was on, it was increased to 23.5 million pounds. The Tories said they would work to increase exports and stimulate production to meet export demand. Yet here we have a 5.3-cents a pound countervailing duty on all our hogs going into the U.S.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a pity that both the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) and the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) wasted their 10 minutes in exaggeration and puffery rather than addressing the problems of the day. I would particularly like to take up the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior that the Government of Canada should imitate the Liberal Government of Ontario. I would like to remind him that that Government brought in tax increases in its Budget. I would also like to ask him if he is suggesting that we should be getting the extra revenue we need to carry on with established programs and reduction of our debt, as well as trying to build up a cushion—

Mr. Foster: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I know the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) does not know what she is talking about, but I do not see the Hon. Member for Cochrane-Superior (Mr. Penner) in the House. If she is addressing her comments to me, I wish she would call me the Hon. Member for Algoma.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, the same thing applies. The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) is just as confused as his colleague from Cochrane-Superior; it was his performance in Question Period which left his name in my mind. As for the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), she had an interesting and creative approach to blotting out a terrible record which had the Hon. Member's Party thrown out of office in September, 1984. She spoke of prudent policies which brought us the economic renewal we are now just beginning to enjoy. that sent me to some of the background documents provided by the Department of Finance on the results of these prudent policies. For example, over the past three years our national debt grew at a rate of 25 per cent a year. That is almost three times the rate of growth of the GNP. Under the current fiscal plan debt growth has slowed to 17.7 per cent this year and will slow down further to 14.6 per cent in 1986-87. I fail to see where the prudent policies of the previous Government have brought us the economic renewal we are now beginning to see. Moreover, Statistics Canada, and DRIE surveys, indicate strong growth in investment for 1985, considerably larger than first forecast. Business fixed investment was up 17 per cent on an annual basis in the second quarter. I fail to see what that has to do with any policies of the previous Liberal Government. Had we followed those same policies the effect would have been exactly the opposite. For example, when I look at another indicator, the value of the Canadian dollar, I can see that when the Liberal Party came back into power in 1980 it inherited a dollar at .837. By December, 1984, it had gone down to .756. It is now slowly climbing back because of the policies of this Government.

Another matter concerns the Hon. Member for Algoma; he mentioned the metric situation. He seems to have forgotten that it was the Progressive Conservative Party which put forward a motion in this House to allow the use of Imperial measurement in the sale of gasoline. Not only that, the Budget of the then Minister of Finance, now the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), presented to the House in 1979 was in Imperial measure. It was the Government of the Hon. Member for Algoma, when it came back to power in 1980, which instituted the metric system for the taxation of gas. Therefore, I think he should remember some facts even while he allows himself these very poetic and theatrical stories in this debate.

It is a fact as well that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has helped farmers more than all previous Liberal Governments. An example of that is that in our first Budget we introduced the abolition of the capital gains tax on the sale of farms. This will go a long way toward helping the passing on of family farms from parents to children. I have seen Liberal Member after Liberal Member as well as NDP Member after NDP Member get up in this House and condemn the abolition of this tax. They talk about a gift of $500,000 to supposedly rich people. What they are talking about is the average value of a farm in my riding. One can hardly say that riding is populated by very rich people. As well, the abolition of the capital gains tax, which is a gradual measure as Members are well aware, will help small business. Very often, when small business could have had access to capital, they were stopped from doing that because of this tax on capital gains. A business could not liquidate some shares it might have, for example, in some larger company or some guaranteed investment because of the fact it would face a very high tax on capital gains. This is not a measure for rich people, it is for small and medium businesses. Moreover, when we look at the statistics for the current economic situation, we see that housing starts averaged 185,000 in the third quarter. That gives us an annualized rate of 197,000 units in September. This is an increase of 19 per cent over the level of the second quarter, on top of a 24 per cent increase in the second quarter.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, we do not enjoy increasing sales taxes. It is true that a sales tax affects everyone across the board and that it does not differentiate between people who are in a better position to make some sacrifices in things which are not essential to their lives. However, the fact remains that the choice was between increasing income tax for everyone and not being able to increase the child tax credit and not being able to continue with some of the programs which we have maintained. Our unemployment insurance fund, for instance, was exhausted by the middle of spring to the point where programs such as the Article 38 program, which was of very useful to small businesses, no longer had any funds to extend in order to create jobs.

Something had to be done and the Budget which was presented was an attempt to try, in an over-all rather than an ad hoc way, to increase revenues to allow us to maintain and improve programs for people who need them most, and also to put us in a better position to take advantage of renewed confidence.

That is the key, Mr. Speaker. When the Member for Trinity was talking about the report of the Conference Board of Canada she omitted to say that you cannot measure confidence and, therefore, when a report such as the one of the Conference Board is issued, it only measures those indicators which are very visible and tangible. It does not measure intangibles such as investor confidence or consumer confidence which is much more important. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think that this debate has not really been to the credit of Members opposite. They have wasted time with exaggerations. It would be unparliamentary for me to say what they were doing in this House, but let us say that it was as far from the truth as we are from St. John's, Newfoundland.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, when joining in this debate involves listening to some of the charges we have just heard, it requires a certain measure of self-control. It is obvious that the disagreement about what the effect of this set of tax measures may be can very easily lead to personal charges. That seems regrettable. I suppose that is one of the things that Members fall back upon as a response to the kinds of attacks that they would themselves probably have made if they were in the Opposition. In this case, of course, I am talking about Conservative Members. I expect that if they were in the Opposition and it were a Liberal Government proposing these things, they would be involved in saying the very same sort of things that we are saying now. Given that sort of reality, it is probably inevitable that in the process of defending the Government they will, in fact, stop the observations that are quite unworthy of Hon. Members. I shall endeavour, in my own comments this afternoon, not to do that sort of thing.

In taking part in this debate on Bill C-80, a proposal to increase federal sales and excise taxes, I want to provide a response to some of the observations we have heard, particularly from the Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), who suggested that we were merely producing noise over here which had no substance, that we had, in fact, no alternative, and that we were merely filibustering and killing time. That is one package of charges, Mr. Speaker, which is also, it seems to me, quite unworthy of Members on either side of the House.

To be faced with a closure motion so early in the debate on an important tax measure is, in itself, an action which all members of the governing Party should regret together with those of us in the Opposition. Surely, Mr. Speaker, to introduce time limitation on only the fourth day of debate, forcing us to a vote this afternoon resolving the matter, suggests a kind of arrogance that one would have thought the Government would have taken longer in coming to. I know that coming to the House of Commons with 211 Members was a very, very heady sensation. The actions of the Government over the past year and other errors of omission, shall we say, which were committed, surely reflect the fact that the Government was so very sure in its numbers that it felt it could do anything. With much less than 211 Members it can, under the present rules, restrict debate and force us to express ourselves by voting against a matter, but in fact allow the measure to be carried through.

The traditions of Parliament are very, very strong. There are any number of Members of past Conservative caucuses who are spinning in their graves these days as they contemplate a Government bringing in time limitation motions and forcing matters to a vote, taking them out of the hands of Members of the House of Commons. It is not any kind of illegitimate use of the position of an Opposition member to oppose an action of the Government if one thinks it is unwise. There is abundant reason for saying that the tax measures with which we are faced in this particular Bill are unwise. Given that, we have a positive duty to the people of Canada to object to this measure with all the energy we have, knowing always that the rules of the House of Commons now impose very severe constraints on us. Particularly when we are few in number in the House, the possibility of our debating measures indefinitely is obviously very, very limited.

I suppose members of the Government might say that we are few in number because that is what the Canadian people thought of us on September 4 and therefore we should be quiet and let them govern the country as they see fit. Of course, the Canadian people do not see things quite that way any longer. Many, many Canadians know that on September 4, 1984 they made a very serious mistake. I think they are quite supportive of us in criticizing the Government's actions, as is, in fact, our constitutional responsibility, and in pointing out the weaknesses of the programs which the Government has put forward.

I have suggested, Mr. Speaker, that what the Government has put before us in Bill C-80 is a mistake. Members in the Government caucus argue that the deficit had to be dealt with. I will not deny the truth of that proposition. It is a question of how to do it. What members of the Government, private Members included, do not talk about is one of the brute realities which the Auditor General of Canada has pointed out, that is, that the federal Government neglects to collect large amounts of taxes due to provisions such as those of the accelerated capital cost allowances which allow companies to avoid taxes. In just the past weeks we have seen some examples of that sort in the provisions which the Olympia & York interests were able to exploit to acquire Gulf Oil. More recent revelations of the Auditor General indicated provisions which Dome Petroleum was allowed to use earlier this year which will allow it to escape paying hundreds of millions of dollars of taxes.

If in fact the Auditor General is correct in saying that the total of the taxes which are not paid year after year is $35 billion to $50 billion, then I do not understand how any Conservative who can think straight and add and subtract does not realize that the deficit is in fact a result of the tax laws of the country. There are people who are bearing the burden of taxation because the Conservative Government, which felt the same way as the Liberal Government did in the past, has refused to take large and effective action and has left the burden of taxation on individuals and small businesses while large business gets away with all kinds of tax breaks. Some solemn shaking of the head will not change the reality that if the total tax revenue that is not received exceeds $35 billion it will be more than equivalent than the entire deficit in the current Budget. Those Members who do not see the country from the Bay Street perspective will appreciate that if the Government does not close that collection of loopholes it will have no choice but to do exactly what is provided for in Bill C-80 and other measures. The Government will decide to tax the little people in Canada, the individuals, families and small businesses, while the wealthy and large businesses in this country will escape the burden of taxation.

Many Conservative Members will not be back to the next Parliament of Canada. Those Members will want to think about that because in their communities across the country, from Erie to Fraser Valley West and all the way to the East Coast, there are people who will realize that they will have less money to spend next year. They realize that the small businesses in their communities which depend totally on the people in those communities with whom they do business will suffer because of a decline in business.

There are those Members who believe that the way to create a prosperous Canada is to lower the deficit by cutting the expenditures on the one hand while increasing taxes on the little people, including small business and low and middle income Canadians. Those Canadians will say that they did not get the change for which they voted on September 4. Rather, they will see that they got another dose of Liberal Government as far as taxes are concerned and, therefore, ought to look elsewhere. It will be obvious to those Canadians that the old line Parties are exactly as described by predecessors in my Party and caucus over the years. They are Tweedledum and Tweedledee. As David Lewis would say occasionally, I believe, they are Tweedledum and Tweedledumber.

Surely the Conservatives should know better as a Government. The tax measures contained in Bill C-80 have the potential of ultimately reducing the revenues of Government so that the deficit is even worse afterward than it was before. Those Conservative Members should begin pushing the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and their causus into action. We want substantial tax reform. The people of Canada expect a reduction in the tax burden.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to comment on Bill C-80. I say "comment", because I think at this point there can be no more debate. The Government intends to have all the measures proposed in this Bill approved, without considering the demands made by Members of this House. I may add that the demands of the tourist industry will also be ignored.

Mr. Speaker, I would therefore like to share with you a number of comments on this Bill and the tourist industry. I also would like to quote general statements made in this House by Conservative Members when they were in the Opposition. One Member said on March 14, 1984, and I quote:

In 1983, Canada had a record travel deficit, and an important cause of this deficit is the much higher price of gasoline in Canada compared to the United States.

Another Member said on January 30, 1984 and I quote:

The Canadian Automobile Association states that the high cost of gasoline has been a major culprit in deterring foreign travellers from auto touring in Canada. About 85 per cent of all tourism in Canada is by automobile.

Another Member said, and I quote:

The tourist industry is definitely pessimistic. We could take steps to reverse the trend in this crucial sector, and we would be well advised to start by reducing the federal tax on gasoline.

Those statements were made by Conservative Members when they were in the Opposition. I have yet to hear those Members raise the same points in the debate on Bill C-80.

Mr. Speaker, I also would like to share with you some data published by the National Conference on Tourism for Tomorrow. The paper is about the consultation process leading up the National Conference on Tourism for Tomorrow, and it says that more than 1,000 private citizens, businesses, professional associations and specialized groups in Canada gave their views on the problems being experienced by the Canadian tourist industry and the industry's potential. The 1,000 respondents said time and time again that current prices in Canada were too high, especially compared with the United States, and that this was very bad for tourism. Most comments were about the price of gas and alcoholic beverages.

Mr. Speaker, that is what our respondents had to say about the prices and more specifically about the price of spirits and gasoline. And here is what Bill C-80 brings us when we look at the price of spirits and gasoline, which are two major factors for the tourist industry.

Mr. Speaker, I may say, first of all, that the tourist industry is a very important one for Canadians. Tourism generates thousands of jobs. There are 600,000 persons working in this sector, which means that one out of ten Canadians work in the tourist industry. The industry represents 5 per cent of our gross national product and generates revenues of approximately $20 billion, which means it is well ahead of many other industries.

Mr. Speaker, nevertheless, despite the importance of this sector, the Government is doing everything it can to harm an industry that could create the jobs we need today.

To get back to the Bill before the House today, the proposed legislation provides for a 2 per cent increase in the tax on spirits. It also provides for an increase of 2 cents per litre in the tax on gasoline, diesel fuel and airplane fuel, as of September 3. We also find an increase of 1 cent per litre, effective January 1, 1987. The House will recall that the purpose of this increase is to pay for the full indexation of pensions for the elderly. The legislation also provides for extending sales tax to candy and soft drinks, pet food and certain health care products, which of course goes beyond the concerns of the tourist industry. We also find in this Bill the 1 per cent increase in sales tax, effective January 1, 1986.

So, to get back to the tourist industry: If we consider the price of spirits, we find that the Canadian Government is levying three times as much tax on a bottle of spirits as the U.S. Government.

Mr. Speaker, when Americans think about spending a few days in Canada, they certainly look at the price of spirits as a major factor, but it is only one factor among many others.

Mr. Speaker, I shall if I may get back to the price of gasoline, which is the most important consideration for people who come to visit this country by car. In fact, 85 per cent of the tourists who visit Canada, of Americans who travel across Canada, prefer the automobile over any other means of transportation. So if we look at the tax on gas which we were already exposed to in October 1984 . . . Does this mean I have one minute left, Mr. Speaker? Very well. Time flies.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may make a few more comments on the increase in the price of gas. If we consider the increase in the price of gas since the new Government came to power, we realize that the price has increased by 8 per cent. That increase is reflected in loss of visitors and especially loss of jobs, which works out to 18,500 jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I think we need these jobs back home, and I think people across Canada need these jobs.

• (1640)

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I am willing to take a minute or two to register the very deep concern that members of my own constituency would want to express about the cavalier way in which this Government is dealing with an essential tax matter. We have watched Tory MPs bob and weave trying to explain the inherent contradiction in a tax Bill that is a repressive measure. It dampens growth, slows down the important initiative and dynamics of many vital sectors of our economy all for the sake of so-called deficit reduction, a deficit that is not reducing at all but is increasing.

It is with great sadness we see that once again the Government is unwilling to hear proper debate and that it has brought in closure so Canadians will not have an opportunity to hear full expression and point of view on a matter that affects them vitally in their own industries and in their daily consumption. It is a Government that we see time and time again has a strategy of keeping Canadians in the dark. Do not tell them what is going on is the new slogan of this Government; make sure we can do what we want. It has covert hidden agendas rather than trying to be prepared to defend our interests.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: The only time we find them coming awake is when they face the truth. The truth is not a pleasant thing to face.

An Hon. Member: Look who is calling the kettle black?

Mr. Axworthy: The truth will be faced very clearly.

Once again we find a Government whose only capacity is to yell, bray and get excited when the truth is front and centre. This tax measure hits low income Canadians—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

[Translation]

Order, please. It being 5:45 p.m., and pursuant to order made Monday, November 4, 1985, in accordance with Standing Order 84, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the Bill now before the House.

[English]

The question is the following one: Mrs. McDougall, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn moves that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and on the amendment of Mr. Marchi, seconded by Miss Nicholson that the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Call in the Members.

Before the taking of the vote:

Some Hon. Members: Order. Out, out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I remind all Hon. Members that our practices have been that Hon. Members should be present in their seats at the beginning of the call of the question if they wish to vote.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Marchi) which was negatived on the following division:

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE SEPARATE REPRESENTATION FOR LABRADOR

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill) moved that Bill C-228, an Act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present this Bill on behalf of many people from the area known as Labrador. In their presentation to Hon. Members of all three Parties, the residents of Labrador explained that they feel they need a separate seat to represent their interests in the House of Commons. They point to the special dispensation we have at the present time for Prince Edward Island, the two seats we have at the present time for the Northwest Territories and the seat we have for Labrador. In talking with Hon. Members of all three political Parties, they have made a point that Labrador is a distinct geographical entity with clearly defined borders. It stands historically, culturally, socially, logistically and politically apart from the rest of the province.

Labrador has the special geographical consideration and special community considerations which have allowed similar dispensations for Prince Edward Island, the Yukon and the Territories.

Precedent already exists under the Constitutional Acts of 1867, 1982 and special Clauses 51(a) Subsection 1 and Rule 6, Subsection 2. Labrador, already difficult to serve because of its geography, must share representation with mainland Newfoundland. The purpose of this Bill is to provide full and exclusive representation for that part of the province. In making my presentation, Mr. Speaker, I do so with the realization that it has little chance of being passed within the next 35 minutes. However, I do believe the people of that region of Canada deserve to have their concerns studied by the Committee on Privileges and Elections of this House of Commons. As you know, Mr. Speaker, at the present time the Committee on Privileges and Elections is looking into a redistribution Bill which was presented to this House by the Government House Leader. It is my intention, in making this speech in the House of Commons today—and hopefully other Hon. Members will indicate their support for this particular motion—that we ask the Committee on Privileges and Elections, on which I serve, to look into the special problems which are faced by the people of that section of the province.

As someone who comes from a large northern riding—and I am sure the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) feels the same way—we understand the difficulties which a Member of Parliament has in getting around in a large geographical riding where there are no roads between communities and communities quite often have a small population and are spread out. What we are asking is not a blank cheque for the creation of a new seat for the House of Commons, but that the peculiar situation in which the people of Labrador find themselves be investigated by a Committee of the House of Commons and that we do all we can to try to meet the needs and concerns of the people from that region.

I am not going to take the full 20 minutes which would be allotted to me to speak on this Bill because there have been two votes and we only have 40 minutes left for the entire debate. What I will do in the next few minutes is to point out some of the things which have happened in the past. The idea of a separate seat for Labrador is not something which came from one political Party. It is not something which came from the New Democratic Party, the Conservative Party or the Liberal Party. What this is is a response to the efforts of the people of that region. They have founded a committee and that committee has written to people of all political Parties in the last few years. It is a committee which is asking for a seat encompassing the actual area of Labrador. They have written to the Premier of that province and he has indicated support for the concept. They have written to the representatives of the Liberal Party who have supported that concept. They have written to the New Democratic Party and our representative in the House of Assembly there has indicated his support for this proposal. Therefore this is something which has the support, if not officially of all three parties, nevertheless, the support of representatives of all three Parties. I believe it is certainly worthy of study and I would encourage Hon. Members of the House of Commons to indicate their support for this piece of legislation or at least indicate that they are willing to have the committee study particular problems of the people of that region.

[Translation]

Mr. Édouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga-Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has described a situation which seems quite normal to me, and I think the Government should consider this request and examine the possibility of having a representative for Labrador. I think it is entirely fair and reasonable. As far as I am concerned, the Hon. Member has my support.

[English]

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have a chance to make some comments on Bill C-228 brought before the House by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). It was interesting to hear some Churchillian statements about the need to have adjustments for the electorate in Labrador.

To place this very important recommendation contained in Bill C-228 in a certain context, I would like to turn to several very relevant and timely documents. The first of those is the report of the study group which met at Halifax on September 25 to 27. This is the study group of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. It was my honour to be the chairman of that study group. Subsequent to the Halifax meeting the report was represented in Saskatoon before the full CPA Meeting. There appears at page 27 the observation that those Government officials charged with the limitation of electoral boundaries are at times accused of being concerned only with the numbers and of ignoring other factors such as community of interest, community of identity or historical patterns. Since a realistic tolerance level may be difficult to establish, these other factors may have to be given more emphasis. On page 28 of that same report, the conclusion of the delegates was expressed as the view that in redistributing electoral boundaries, equality of representation should be one of the main guiding principles. The principle of one vote, one value, should be uppermost while not precluding consideration of the political, legal and institutional factors. Those are the considered opinions of Parliamentarians from many Commonwealth countries who looked at the same subject which has been raised in Bill C-228, a Bill which would reflect and, indeed, recognize that Labrador has a distinct geographical entity with clearly defined borders and that it stands historically, culturally, socially, logistically and politically apart from the rest of the province, Newfoundland.

That brings us to the fact that, as the Hon. Member for Churchill has noted, the Government, acting through the Government House Leader, has brought forward legislation which will deal with redistribution of the constituencies in this Parliament. Bill C-74, to which I am referring, is at this stage before committee and will be reported back to this House by November 26. This is an important Bill because it not only amends the formula for deciding the number of seats in this House found in Section 51 of the Constitution Act, it would amend the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, which is more relevant to the point raised in the Hon. Member's Bill. It would do so by providing to those commissioners who have the task of dividing up the boundaries in each province the power to depart in extraordinary cases from the 25 per cent rule. As Hon. Members know, the wording of the Act is that the population of each electoral district shall correspond as nearly as may be to the electoral quota for the province. That is to say, the quotient obtained by dividing the population of the province as ascertained by the number of Members of the House of Commons to be assigned to the province. We are suggesting two things in Bill C-74. First, that we change the wording "as nearly as may be" to "as close as reasonably possible". So we are, as the first step, introducing a doctrine of reasonableness. Second, we are amending the section to provide the possibility of going above or below the 25 per cent tolerance in extraordinary cases.

I think, Mr. Speaker, there can be no better example of an extraordinary case than that of Labrador. I am advised by one of my colleagues from Newfoundland that Labrador contains four, perhaps four and a half, electoral districts. Certainly it has a number of representatives in the provincial House, but at the federal level it is of course linked with one of the Newfoundland proper constituencies. The new provision being brought before Parliament in Bill C-74 will allow for the kind of suggestion that the Hon. Member for Churchill has made. That is why when he says here, as he did a few moments ago, that perhaps the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections should look into the possibility of doing something like this, I would like to reassure him that we have done more than look into the possibility; the Government has brought in legislation which will permit the very kind of thing he advocates. Therefore, I draw from those comments the inevitable inference that the Hon. Member for Churchill will be fully supportive of Bill C-74, not only as it goes through committee but when it comes back to the House for a vote.

If I may be permitted a further point, I was reviewing the book I wrote four years ago entitled Political Rights, in which I talk about the quality of representation. I would make a final observation concerning the long-heard expression of one man, one vote, or one vote, one value. There is no question that in a parliamentary democracy such as ours that is a fundamental concept. However, as important as that doctrine may be, it is not the only doctrine relevant here. It is one of two, the second being the doctrine concerning the quality of representation. The concept of one vote, one value, means each of us must represent as closely as possible the same number of electors. At the same time an equally important reality is the quality of that representation. At that Commonwealth Parliamentary Conference in Saskatoon which I referred to a few moments ago, and the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) was there, we heard the very powerful speech by an Australian parliamentarian who said that democracy does not belong to Parliament or the Members of Parliament or the Government or any of the institutions, it belongs to the people. It is not a democracy if the people who live in concentrated urban areas can have ready access to their Member of Parliament any day of the week, any time they want to raise their questions and concerns, whereas in other parts of the country men and women have to wait weeks and perhaps months before the MP comes around to their community and talks to them personally to receive their representations, concerns, and proposals. We do have a geographically scattered population and, as the Hon. Member for Churchill indicates in the Bill before us now, that reality must be recognized in the way we distribute the constituencies.

If this exercise was nothing more than a mathematical computation, we could simply add up the Canadian population and have a computer tell us where the electoral boundaries should be. However, that is not the exercise which is involved when electoral boundaries are delineated. It is, rather, a delicate balancing act which seeks to take into account a number of important factors, not the least of which is the accessibility of MPs to their electors, as well as having constituencies of a manageable size so that MPs can readily get around them to see those people they represent.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the idea contained in this Private Members' Bill is a very important one. It is one which has already occurred to the Government and is fully reflected in the new provisions which will be part of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act once Bill C-74 becomes law. For that reason I am sure the Hon. Member for Churchill will be exceedingly supportive of these initiatives by the Conservative Government to deal with a fundamentally difficult issue courageously so that long overdue reform of our electoral system is actually addressed, and so that the quality of representation comes closer to reality.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, let me say that I think the present quality of our representation is excellent, it could not be any better, covering the Labrador district. Let me also say that people in areas like Labrador sometimes wonder how it is that they, with a population of 30,000, cannot have a seat unto themselves where they are geographically removed from Newfoundland. They look at another area of Canada which has less population in a federal seat and ask why they cannot have a separate seat. It makes much more sense for an area such as Labrador with a population of 31,000 to be designated as a separate seat than it does for some other areas of the country with less population to be designated as separate seats. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it goes back to the Constitution which states that you must have an amount of seats at least equal to the number of Senators that represent a particular province.

It was good news to hear the Government Member say a few moments ago that with the passage of Bill C-74 this very issue will be addressed by the Government of Canada. I do not know whether we can conclude from that that Labrador will get an extra seat through action of the Government, but it is certainly good news to hear the Hon. Members say, on behalf of the Government, that that problem will be addressed.

I think there is perhaps value in pointing out to the Chamber the reason an area such as Labrador deserves, in a way, to be treated differently than other areas of Canada. There is nothing strange about Labrador. Labrador is the same as Gander-Twillingate is in Newfoundland. Parts of Labrador have the finest facilities to be found anywhere. Labrador City is a modern community. However, due to the geographic location of Labrador, it has certain problems not experienced in any other part of Canada.

With regard to one of the problems, I could never figure out why, in our so-called social security safety net, we have rules based on times of year. There are fishermen all along the coastline of Labrador. The law states that the fishing season will run from May 15 to November 1. That is a strange rule to have in northern Canada because the ice is on shore after May 15. Consequently, the Canadian fishery can be operating all along the coastline of Quebec, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, but it cannot operate on May 15 of the Labrador Coast. That has a very important effect, Mr. Speaker. By law unemployment insurance for fishermen is cut off on May 15. What do you do if the ice is on the coastline and you cannot get out to fish on May 15 or June 15?

People who live in areas like Labrador have problems distinct from those in any other northern part of the country. Fishermen ask why they are treated the same as people in the so-called southern areas which you, Mr. Speaker, may call northern areas. Their question should be addressed by the Minister in charge of unemployment insurance who has commissions on-going in an attempt to find out what to do with unemployment insurance. Well, Mr. Speaker, those fishermen could tell her what to do with unemployment insurance. The answer is quite simple. You must treat fishermen like everyone else and then solve the problem on the Labrador coast. If a fisherman could draw unemployment insurance as a normal labourer does, that is, after a 10 or 20-week qualifying period, the problem would be solved. Perhaps that is too simple for the Government of Canada to see. Perhaps it is a little bit too straightforward and sensible for the commissions that are set up to re-examine the present unemployment insurance system. This is a case of outright discrimination against these people.

There is the other problem, Mr. Speaker, of weather. Federal-provincial relations are sometimes very important with regard to areas like Labrador. The Member of Parliament for Grand-Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) was recently working on the problem of the installation of water and sewer facilities in Labrador. As often happens, about four or five months ago the federal and provincial Governments did not agree and the construction season has passed in certain areas on the Labrador coastline.

I suppose that these are some of the factors that went into the decision of the Hon. Member to introduce this Bill, if we interpret some of his explanatory notes correctly. He does say in the Bill that he would make Grand Falls-White Bay a separate riding with a population of 47,559. I do not agree with that. He would make Labrador a separate riding with a population of 31,318. I agree with that. I think we should allow the Bill to pass and then let the boundaries commission decide what the remaining districts in the Province of Newfoundland should be. Certainly the Hon. Member would not suggest that we should have a separate riding with a population of 47,559 when my riding is next door with almost double that population.

However, to facilitate matters, I suggest that we should pass the Bill through the Chamber this afternoon, as I am sure the Government is going to agree with it. We can then ask the boundaries commission to divvy up the remaining ridings in the Province of Newfoundland. Let us not forget, Mr. Speaker, that if the Government had allowed the redistribution to take place, there would have been an extra seat in Newfoundland and Labrador. However, the Government insists that we continue to have seven ridings in Newfoundland and Labrador and merely redefine the boundaries. I just wanted to make that one point. I hope all Members will agree with this legislation. I take my hat off to the Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador who has done such a magnificent job on behalf of Labrador over the years.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I agree with my hon. friend, the Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) who said that we ought to move quickly to pass this Bill and send it to a committee for further study. I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) for bringing to the attention of the House an anomaly which ought to be corrected. Since redistribution is now under active consideration, this is an ideal time to do it.

I would like to say, by way of preface, that it was my privilege a number of years ago to travel with the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) in the part of his constituency that is designated as Labrador. It was a never to be forgotten experience for me. The difficult aspects of moving from place to place along that coast are deeply imprinted in my mind. For example, I recall being weathered in for four days at a place called Marys Harbour. Being weathered in there was different from what I or the Hon. Member for Churchill are accustomed to. Being weathered in usually means that there is a low ceiling or fog which makes it difficult for aircraft to come in and pick up passengers. In the case of Labrador, we were weathered in because of the extraordinarily high winds. On a number of occasions the aircraft we were using took to the air but made no progress at all because of the strong head winds. We had to come back for another day of waiting. That illustrates the difficulty a Member of Parliament has in representing a constituency with those conditions which face him or her regularly.

I listened with great care to the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) in this debate because he is certainly the resident expert on matters related to redistribution and matters related to all electoral laws. I want to commend him very highly for the work he performed on behalf of all of us at a meeting of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association earlier this year in Halifax to do a special study on problems related to electoral law. According to all reports that I have received, his contribution was outstanding.

The Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore was absolutely correct when he said that the way in which the House of Commons represents a country cannot simply be a numbers fame that is arrived at by the use of a computer. The House of Commons must reflect, as accurately as possible, the nature and reality of our nation. This cannot be done by simply allowing representation by population to be the one and only guiding principle. We know this because we have already taken a number of steps with legislation in the past in order that more accurate or fairer representation could be given. For example, I draw to the attention of the House the fact that a few years ago we decided to introduce legislation allowing the Northwest Territories to have a second seat. It simply was not realistic to have one constituency that included the western Arctic and all of the eastern Arctic. It made no sense at all. Therefore, the Northwest Territories is represented by two Members of Parliament. It would be unthinkable not to have the Yukon Territory represented. How would the House or Parliament ever be what it is if we did not have representation from the Yukon Territory? The Hon. Member for Churchill tells us that there is an anomaly in Labrador. I agree and I think we should move to correct it by the adoption of Bill C-228.

In concluding, I want to remind the House that my hon. friend, the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has been giving serious consideration to a Bill that would allow the aboriginal people in northern Quebec, those people who come under the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement, to have representation in the House. They are the Cree of northern Quebec, the Naskapis people of northern Quebec and the Inuit. There should be a seat in the House of Commons in order to represent those people who in fact live under a treaty which we ratified in the House and which puts them into regular contact with the Government of Canada. They have no spokesperson of their own and I would support that Bill from the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East in the same way that I can support this Bill by the Hon. Member for Churchill. In the same vein, there is a situation in northern Ontario which I believe would justify a seat under exactly the same principle. The Nishnawbe-Aski nation, which lives north of 50 degrees and occupies a territory which stretches from the Quebec border almost to the Manitoba border, do not have their own spokesperson in the House of Commons. It would make eminently good sense if that were a designated constituency for the purpose of representation in the House of Commons.

The Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore was quite correct in drawing our attention to the Bill introduced by the Government, Bill C-74, which says that the Commission may, in extraordinary circumstances, depart from the 25 per cent more or 25 per cent less of the electoral quota for the province. Indeed, that does give the Boundary Commission powers an opportunity to respond to legitimate briefs and representations that they did not have before. Nevertheless, I still believe that we should follow the practice that we followed in the past in the case of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, to provide legislation to give the Commission more direction and greater certainty. They could be told that although they have these powers under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, we believe that Labrador ought not be ignored, that the aboriginal people of northern Quebec ought not to be ignored and that the Indian people who are part of the Nishnawbe-Aski nation, the treaty nine configuration in northern Ontario, ought not to be ignored either.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the debate on the Hon. Member's private Bill. Its essential purpose is to create a separate riding out of Labrador. I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern for the people of that area and his proposal that that area of Canada should be made a separate riding on a geographical basis.

I listened with interest to other Members of the House who contributed to this debate. I want to make some specific and general comments. First, I believe that all of us could probably fight for different riding boundaries in different areas of the country, including those areas we now represent. However, the predicament in which we may find ourselves at the end of such a battle would be that we may have a House consisting of some 800 Members. While that may provide an opportunity for more one-on-one representation, the parliamentary process itself would be bogged down in terms of the number of people in the House. Where would we put these Members physically, and how would we support the cost of running the House of Commons financially? I suggest that we would soon find such an approach unworkable.

That does not mean for a moment that I do not understand the Hon. Member's argument that geographically, these people want a separate constituency. I also want to say that in my experience with the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), he has proven to be a Member who pays attention to the House and does a good job for the people whom he represents. I do not believe that the Hon. Member who presented the Bill or any Hon. Member who spoke on this subject are, by any means, demeaning the contribution of the Hon. Member in trying to represent people from Labrador and Newfoundland. I do not want this debate to leave that impression.

The Hon. Member's suggestion raises some problems. If we were to adopt the principle of the Bill we would have to consider its effect on other ridings in the province.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. I am always very sad to interrupt the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary but the time allocated for the consideration of Private Members' business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

TRADE—PROTECTIONIST MEASURES PROPOSED IN UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to follow up on my question of October 29 concerning the proposed trade negotiations with the United States. My question on that day was to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) concerning the potential problem of trade protectionism in the United States.

We have been assured through the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that President Reagan would exercise his veto should extreme steps of protectionism arise in that country. The Secretary of State assured me of that.

Just going back a little, Mr. Speaker, on September 26, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) recommended to the Government that Canada begin trade negotiations with the United States at the earliest possible moment. Subsequent to that, the Prime Minister announced in this House that we would be sitting down with our ally, the United States of America, to begin the process of trade negotiations.

I would like to highlight the four steps involved in the process with the U.S. The first one we have already covered, that it is really the Minister for International Trade and the U.S. trade representative who submit their reports in accordance with the Quebec trade declaration.

Second, Congress has authority over tariffs. The administration cannot seek negotiating authority from Congress until it receives a proposal for trade negotiations from another country. That is the step we have taken.

Third, a formal proposal is required by letter from either the Prime Minister or the Minister for International Trade expressing our willingness to enter into negotiations of a trade agreement which would include tariff reductions.

Fourth, the administration sends the request for negotiations to Congress, which has 60 calendar days to consider the request. If Congress does not disapprove within this period, the administration may proceed to negotiations. There is no time limit in which the negotiations must be completed. That process has now begun.

I had the privilege to serve as an alternate on the special joint committee of the House of Commons and Senate on the subject of trade enhancement with the U.S. this past summer. We heard witnesses in Halifax, Montreal and in Toronto. Clearly, there are a number of concerns about this important topic. It may well be one of the most important decisions this Government makes. I suggest we should approach it with vigour and optimism but also knowing that we are up against a major ally which has some serious trade problems. That is not to say we should take anything away from what we are trying to do.

May I highlight the four objectives the Government has in mind. They include: security of access, expanded access in the U.S., a stable North American trading system and an ordered and predictable system.

If the decision is made at a later date to enter into very specific negotiations, I am confident that would be done over a protracted period of time. The recent free trade agreement signed with Israel, for instance, is to be achieved over a 10 year period.

Let me highlight how important our trading relationship is with the United States.

• (1805)

From 1960, our exports to the United States accounted for 56 per cent of our total exports. In 1984 that figure had climbed to over 75 per cent. On the import side, 71 per cent of our total imports are from the United States. Exports, as a percentage of our GNP, have grown in a very favourable way from 12 per cent in 1960 to 25.8 per cent now. A full third of what we produce is exported. The export market accounts for two million jobs in the country. Over a 24-year period, some 474,000 manufacturing jobs have been created in Canada. All but a handful of those jobs can be attributed to export trade.

It is a very important topic, one which we need to approach carefully with our counterparts in the United States. Other trade regimes have been organized in the world. It is a different world out there. We must remain competitive. We cannot put our head in the sand and think that things are not happening. For example, the Japanese and the Koreans are very competitive. If we are to get to the Government's main thrust, which is economic renewal in the country, I submit that we need confidence and good judgment to approach the whole subject, in order to get the country moving on a long-term basis and to create much needed jobs.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) has raised a very important question for the future of Canada.

As indicated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to the House on October 29, President Reagan initially provided the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) with a strong political commitment to halt protectionism in cross-border trade in goods and services during the Quebec Summit last March. This commitment, which was highlighted by both Leaders as a key element in a declaration on trade, reflects their intention to create a more secure, predictable environment for trade between the United States and Canada. That is very important.

As Hon. Members may recall, the declaration on trade made at Quebec also included commitments to adopt measures to enhance access to each other's market, as well as a reaffirmation by both countries of their commitment to a strong, multilateral trading system. In addition, I would note, as did the Secretary of State for External Affairs last week, that the commitment to oppose protectionist legislation was renewed two weeks ago when the two Leaders met in New York.

AGRICULTURE—SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY—PLIGHT OF FARMERS. (B) REQUEST FOR STABILIZATION PAYMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) on October 21 concerning the Government's intention regarding the sugar-beet industry in western Canada, especially in southern Alberta, where some 580 sugar-beet producers planted some 12,900 hectares in crop last year. It is a very important industry to southern Alberta. Some 550 jobs have been created in the plant operation at Taber. It is about a $170 million business. This is the first year in 60 years that a sugar-beet crop was not actually planted in southern Alberta. As I said, it is a very important industry to that part of the country.

The industry creates about $500 million worth of business across the country. Four times since 1976, the Government has made stabilization payments. In 1976, it was $1.3 million; in 1977 it was $1.1 million; in the crop year 1981 it was $5.9 million; and in the crop year 1982, it was $10.2 million.

In a letter written to me several months ago the Minister indicated that he did not think he would be able to provide any stabilization payments. However, he indicated in a later exchange in the House that he did not remember actually sending that letter to me, although I do have a copy of it.

What is important tonight is that the Government commit itself to two things in order to help the sugar beet producers. First, the Government should commit itself to a stabilization payment for the 1983 crop year, a payment which has been estimated to be somewhere between $15 million and $18 million. I undestand that the Minister has stood up the producers five times. There were meetings which he had agreed to attend at which he did not show up and there were meetings that were cancelled at the last minute. The Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) indicated in a meeting that he had with the sugar producers in late July that he would have a long-term sugar policy made available by October. October has come and gone and still no commitment has been made.

If there is going to be a sugar-beet industry not only in southern Alberta but in Manitoba and Quebec, a commitment by the Government to a stabilization payment for the 1983 crop year must be made and the payment should be due and payable now. There is no problem with the retroactivity of the payment. It used to be a legal problem but that was resolved with the passage of the stabilization Bill earlier this year.

It is essential that this payment be made now. As well, it is essential that there be a long-term commitment to a sugar policy. That commitment was promised by the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board who has been dealing with this problem. It is essential that the Government commit itself to this important industry.

The sugar-beet industry produces some $500 million worth of products used by Canadian consumers. It involves almost 1,000 jobs across the country. it is a vital industry. This is the first year that there has not been a sugar-beet crop planted in some 60 years. I hope that the Government will be able to make a commitment tonight to make the stabilization payment for the 1983 crop year of $15 million to $18 million, depending upon the calculations, as well as making a commitment to a long-term policy that will ensure that the industry continues.

Surely those figures to which I referred earlier regarding stabilization payments from 1976 are relatively small amounts in the scheme of things. That kind of payment is well worth making to save an industry that is important to foreign exchange and to the livelihood of at least 580 sugar-beet producers in southern Alberta. As well, there are sugar-beet producers in Quebec and Manitoba who will likewise be jeopardized if this stabilization payment is not made and a long-term commitment to a sugar policy is not announced immediately.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity to answer the Hon. Member's question. First of all, I can say that I know quite a bit about the situation. At the end of last week, I personally met with sugar beet producers from Southern Alberta here on the Hill, outside the House. I have met with them several times in the course of the year, and I even met them in Alberta. The Government has, in fact, already taken a number of steps to help sugar beet producers.

● (1815)

[English]

I would like to take this opportunity to clarify the situation raised by the Hon. Member. He felt there were anomalies between the federal Government's treatment of the sugar-beet industry and Ontario tobacco growers. Several points must be taken into consideration in this regard.

In the first place, the Hon. Member is in error when he says that the Minister of Agriculture authorized a $90 million payment to the tobacco industry. No money changed hands. Through the Ontario Flue-cured Tobacco Growers' Marketing Board, the Department provided a loan guarantee so that individual growers could receive cash advances to cover their needs while they store and market their crops the winter months.

The guarantee is handled under the Advance Payments for Crops Act. This Act has been used by a wide range of producer groups since it was passed in 1977. Under this Act there is a $400 million contingency liability which guarantees advances made to producers through their marketing organizations. The marketing organization obtains a loan from a bank or another financial institution and then makes advance payments to its members. The federal Government guarantees the loan and pays the interest charges until the advances are repaid. I should mention that there are seldom defaults under this program. Some 99.9 per cent of advances are repaid.

The Tobacco Growers' Marketing Board has applied for this guarantee every year for the past five years. To date, there have been no defaults on advances made to tobacco growers. The sugar growers have never applied for assistance under this program. The sugar growers have requested a stabilization payment, that is, a support payment to compensate for the fact that the bottom has fallen out of the world sugar market and farmers are not receiving adequate returns on their sugar-beet crops.

Mr. Speaker, last April, the Government, announced an $8 million aid program—

Mr. Prud'homme: You are always reading from English texts prepared by the Department—

Mr. Blais: —If the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) had been present at the beginning of my speech, he would know that I mentioned I met them personally, and that I am acquainted with the entire process that concerns Canadian sugar beet producers—

Mr. Prud'homme: I was in the lobby— I was listening to you on television—

Mr. Blais: —We met them, as I said, we set up a program and we discussed with them—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am sorry to have to interrupt your comments. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp).

MARINE TRANSPORT—CONSTRUCTION OF FERRIES. (B) PLACEMENT OF ORDERS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity this evening to say something more about the situation in the shipbuilding industry which is of concern to many Canadians. I appreciate this opportunity particularly because I am the only opposition Member with a shipbuilding or ship repair facility in his riding. In my case it is the Port Arthur Shipbuilding Company.

I am concerned about the state of the industry nationally and I am concerned about the industry in my own riding. In my riding there is a great deal of anxiety among the workers of the Port Arthur Shipbuilding Company with respect to the lack of orders the company has received. The management of the company has pointed out to me the difficulties which they face when competition for repair work is so severe because of the relatively few orders coming to the shipbuilding yards across the country, specifically on the Great Lakes.

There is much reason for concern about the shipbuilding policy of the Government. I have had the opportunity to articulate some of those concerns. I must say that as days pass and the Government says nothing, makes no announcements, I become more and more concerned. After all, more than four months ago, on June 27, I asked the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) whether or not he would wait months and months more to provide some answers to the needs of the shipbuilding industry. And he said in one word, "no". But four months have in fact passed and everyone in the industry, and we in the House of Commons, await a statement of policies to follow which would make a real difference.

I am, however, not addressing those general considerations so much as the particular question of the addition of vessels to the fleet of CN Marine in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. I address that particular matter for a couple of reasons; first, because of the fact that Government Orders are of enormous importance to the industry, given a lack of appropriate policy and, second, because as La Presse has pointed out just in the last day or two, there are in fact fewer vessels under construction in the shipyards these days than there are shipyards in existence. That underscores the fact that when Government does nothing in the way of commercial orders, it becomes imperative that the possibility of public orders, Government contracts of various sorts which now provide some business, remains a possibility.

What we quite specifically have for our focus is a statement by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) which was made almost a year ago. I am going to read that statement because it is quite central to our concern, and I quote from Hansard, page 217:

> Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member's question, it really is a twofold proposition. There will be a rationalization of the Gulf ferry services and the coastal ferry services. As a matter of fact, there will be an additional three new vessels on the Gulf service and one new vessel on the Newfoundland-Labrador coastal service. These vessels will be of the latest state of the art; they will be faster, they will be larger, and they will provide more flexibility and more reliable service. Not only that, this will have a tremendous impact upon the shipbuilding industry and, therefore, will create jobs.

That statement on November 14, 1984, is of enormous importance to people in the industry. When reports surfaced last week that CN Marine might in fact be allowed to import a vessel rather than ordering and having built in Canada a state of the art vessel, I had real reason to raise questions in the House. The Minister's answers were not satisfactory. They were in fact cause for the gravest concern.

In 1979, may I remind you, Mr. Speaker, and Hon. Members of the House, the Conservatives had achieved power and came to office on the basis of many promises, including the promise to build up the shipping industry, to encourage it. It allowed CN Marine very soon thereafter to obtain from Scandinavia two vessels on long-term lease, and by that action prevented the opportunity for construction of these vessels in Canada. At the moment the shipbuilding firm of Versatile Davie in Lauzon, Quebec is near completion of the Caribou. That is one addition to the CN Marine fleet.

The question is will the promise of the Minister of Transport on November 14, 1984, that another such vessel would be built in Canada, be kept? The Minister's statements a week ago today were anything but reassuring. In fact, there was enough cause for concern that one of his colleagues, the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine), presented a report to him on the following day, Wednesday, which pointed out that the cost advantages which CN Marine was putting forward with respect to a vessel from Scandinavia were largely elusory. If one takes a purchase price, of, let us say, $40 million and converts it into U.S. dollars, then puts a duty of 25 per cent on that, then applies the refitting effort which would be required to bring the vessel to scratch, whether it was done outside or within Canada, one would in fact end up with a vessel cost of perhaps $110 million in Canadian dollars. Versatile Davie is completing construction of the Caribou, I am told, at the price of about $117 million. So the difference is very small.

You can appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that the construction of the vessel at Versatile Davie would create 2,000 person years of work so that 50 per cent of that cost is likely to go for wages and an additional very large amount of money to Canadian suppliers of materials and so on. We can see that the impact on the economy of the Quebec City area, and of suppliers beyond that, and the return to Government in the way of income tax and corporation taxes, would be quite sufficient. On the other hand, if the work is not there, we are going to see people on unemployment insurance and the Government will be forced to incur other costs while CN Marine tries to get away with saving a little.

• (1825)

The question is then: Is the Government going to keep its promise? Is the Minister of Transport going to stand by his words of November, 1984? I look forward to a response from the Parliamentary Secretary who I know has the interests of shipbuilding very deep at heart. What will the Government do?

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's comments are appropriate and reflect a genuine concern. I assure him that those concerns are shares by this Government.

The Government is aware of its responsibility to provide good and efficient ferry services at a reasonable, efficient and effective cost. To this end the motor vessel Caribou, constructed at Davie shipbuilding, Lauzon, Quebec, will operate on the North Sydney to Port-aux-Basques ferry service. This vessel, built at a cost of $121 million, has a capacity of 350 automobiles and 1,200 passengers, and is expected to commence service in early 1986. As well, a new passenger-freight vessel is under construction at the Port Weller dry docks in St. Catherines for the Newfoundland and Labrador coastal service. The vessel, built at a cost of $20 million, will have a capacity of 130 passengers and will replace the aging motor vessel Bonavista which has served now for some 28 years.

Both these projects give work to Canadian workers, using Canadian materials in Canadian shipyards. The motor vessel Caribou was the first phase of the rationalization of the Gulf ferry services undertaken by CN Marine. The new service will consist of the motor vessel Caribou, a roll-on-roll-off vessel which will be assigned to carry containers, and a new passenger vessel for the North Sydney-Argentia service. The latter ship will replace the motor vessel Ambrose Shea and be similar to the Caribou but with additional passenger cabins.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) informed the Hon. Member, in response to his question of October 29, that methods of acquisition of the roll-on-roll-off vessel and the second passenger vessel are under consideration by CN Marine at this time.

In reply to the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine), on a similar question on October 31, the Minister gave his assurance that the report sent to him by this new yet very knowledgeable Member would be taken into very serious consideration during the course of these evaluations.

We remain vitally concerned about our Canadian shipyards. If it were not for Government orders, our shipyards, already in serious difficulties, would be in dire difficulties.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 22

[English]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, one year ago almost to the day the Government decided to cut useful and important services. In the case of the environment the Government slashed, without consideration of long-term consequences, $3.8 million from the Canadian Wildlife Service, a 27 per cent reduction in the strength of the service which has a national and international reputation for outstanding research and activities. Some 72 highly qualified scientists, technicians and the like have been lost. A unique federal role has disappeared including, despite denials, the research into herring gull eggs and toxicity in the Great Lakes.

Some $18.7 million has been cut from the Parks Canada budget. Planned developments have been postponed, delayed, or made conditional upon funding by way of public drives; marine park announcements have been postponed; future planning has been curtailed; user fees have been increased; amendments approved by the Liberal Government have been delayed; and northern parks and wilderness area announcements have been postponed.

Some $6 million for a toxicology centre at Guelph has been cut. Forgone is the opportunity to establish a centre of excellence for North America which would attract top quality scientists, including Canadians presently working abroad. A brain drain of emerging Canadian scientists is therefore at stake.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—GOVERNMENT BAN ON NEWS PHOTOGRAPHY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Botha Government has decided that if television and photo reporting of demonstrations, funerals, and brutal police behaviour is banned in South Africa, we in the West will believe that they no longer exist. Mr. Botha's desire to do his killing behind closed doors is a clear indication that the Government of South Africa does not intend to introduce significant reform to end apartheid and bring about democratic rule in that country.

Yesterday the Pretoria Government seized clergyman Allan Boesak's passport just hours after a court ruled it should be returned to him. This demonstration of contempt for the courts and the rule of law is one more indication that that anti-democratic Government has no intention of working toward reform in that country.

Surely a Government which denies its citizens fundamental human rights and hides its terrorist tactics from the world should be shut off from the world through the termination of all diplomatic relations.

CRIME PREVENTION WEEK

CITIZENS' CONTRIBUTIONS TO LAW ENFORCEMENT

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, during Crime Prevention Week people across the country take time to highlight special measures which can be used in each community, by the citizens themselves, to assist professional law enforcement officers in crime prevention.

In the last five years we have seen the aggregate crime rate gradually start to subside. This is due, in large part, to increased public consciousness with regard to a community's intolerance of criminal activity. Programs such as Block Parents, Neighbourhood Watch, Crime Stoppers, and Crime Prevention Week are excellent examples of how citizens can take part in creating safer neighbourhoods.

Preventive measures are only one part of our criminal justice system and must be complemented by effective enforcement, prosecution, and rehabilitation facilities. Canadians are taking preventive steps to help themselves from becoming victims of crime. It is our responsibility, as legislators, to see that the other parts of the system function effectively.

We must ensure that our courts can use effectively designed legislation to defend community safety and private property. In recent times our system has elevated the protection of individual rights, particularly of the accused, far above the emphasis on responsible behaviour. This trend will have to be reversed through tough but just enforcement and a penal system which places equal emphasis on justice, the rights of victims, and positive rehabilitation based on responsibility and self-reliance. If these goals are pursued, then the efforts of our citizens in Crime Prevention Week will be all the more worth while.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

INUIT POLITICAL AND CULTURAL SURVIVAL

Mr. Thomas Suluk (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, this fall the Canadian Government in its strong show of Arctic sovereignty indicated to northern residents that the true North will once again be made strong and free. I would like to take this opportunity to assure the Members of the House and all Canadians that the Inuit have always had a strong history of political and cultural survival.

On the political front we are on the verge of taking over the terrified territorial Government through division of the Northwest Territories. Aboriginal rights and land claims are also close to being completed.

Current Inuit cultural endeavours include over eight hours of daily radio broadcasting in Inuktitut across eastern and central Arctic regions. These programs cover everything from current issues to stories featuring past traditions. In fact the national news is read in Inuktitut daily. Television broadcasts produced by the Inuit Broadcasting Corporation offer similar programs of interest which link Inuit with their historical roots as well as the current affairs of the day.

On behalf of all Inuit I would like to make it known that we are not an endangered species. Because of our presence the true North is strong and free, and will remain so for the next several hundred years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLIC SERVICE

GOVERNMENT'S ATTITUDE TOWARD ITS EMPLOYEES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Government's attitude towards Public Service employees is altogether unacceptable. Ever since it came into office the Government has been responsible for the lay-offs of thousands of public servants, and it intends to proceed with the elimination of many other jobs over the next few years without any due consideration for the services rendered to the Canadian public by these loyal and devoted employees.

The Conservatives are trying to reduce the deficit at the expense of public servants, yet they squander taxpayers' money as a result of their ill-advised decisions respecting the banks—this will cost over $1 billion—not to mention certain Ministers' abuses to refurbish their offices, grossly inflated salaries paid to their executive assistants, limousines and other such excessive expenditures by the Conservative Party.

Public servants have never been so demoralized, Mr. Speaker, almost as much as House employees are right now. The Prime Minister had promised to provide public servants with the tools required to boost productivity. By letting the sword of Damocles hang over their heads, does he really expect to maintain good relations between his Government and Public Service employees? It is unfair, Mr. Speaker, and the Prime Minister should make amends to Canadians and public servants for having deluded them in the past.

THE SENATE

HOURLY WAGE RATE ADVOCATED

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Government claims it is always looking for ways of cutting Government costs and has asked opposition Members to give their suggestions. I have an idea which I am sure all Members, especially the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), will find very hard to resist implementing.

Research I have done into the length of time the Senate sits to debate legislation which has already been passed by the House of Commons clearly casts serious doubts on the Senate's role of sober second thought.

• (1410)

This October presents a particularly good example of how cost effective my idea is, as well as how inefficient the present Senate is, given the cost associated with its operation. During the whole month of October the Senate sat for only 10 hours and 10 minutes. Taking into account the total Senate budget, this works out to approximately $22,277 per Senator for a 10-hour work month.

Given the Government's preference for contracting out work, I would suggest that it makes sense to go one step further and contract out the Senate. It makes even greater sense to pay those people at an hourly wage rate.

PEACE

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF UNITED NATIONS ORGANIZATION

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, I had the pleasure of tabling a petition in the House on behalf of a group of children, and I am referring to the pupils of the Treffle-Gauthier primary school in Jonquière.

Mr. Speaker, on the 40th anniversary of the UN, these children gave me a message of peace which they asked me to transmit to this House.

All these children, who are between 6 and 12 years old, heard from their teachers about the importance of the United Nations Organization and its difficult mission in the world today.

Mr. Speaker, the message, which was handed to me by Magalie Brière on behalf and in the presence of all the pupils of her school, is as follows:

We address this letter to you, the leaders of our country, to express our sadness and our concern about peace in this world. We may be very young, but we believe that everyone has the right to live, and to live an increasingly better life. We want peace and brotherhood to be present everywhere in this world. We are sincere in making this gesture and we believe it is an important one. We firmly believe in your desire and commitment to take concrete action so that our desire for peace will become a reality throughout the world. We ask you to continue to encourage every effort being made in the pursuit of this ideal.

MINES AND MINING

CYPRUS ANVIL MINE—IMPACT OF REOPENING ON NORTHERN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak today about the decision to reopen the Cyprus Anvil Mine. We in northern New Brunswick are asking the Government to reconsider that decision. There are presently 200,000 metric tones of over-produced zinc in the world, and this is after a 10 per cent cut by Inco and Noranda, plus the closure of several Canadian mines.

The most recent annual Mines Department market forecast predicted that this over-capacity in zinc production would continue at least until the end of the decade and prices will stay depressed. It said the industry would have to keep supply and demand in tight balance in order to be competitive. The estimated 300,000 metric tonnes which will be produced by the Cyprus Anvil Mine will create havoc in an already saturated market.

There are 2,300 people employed in the zinc-lead industry in northern New Brunswick. The reopening of the Cyprus Anvil Mine will only cause job losses in an area which is already recognized as a very economically depressed area of Canada. The economic impact of any loss of jobs would be devastating to a region which already has a 30 per cent unemployment rate.

I realize that the Yukon has a very high unemployment rate as well, but I think it would be a more well received decision to delay the reopening of the Cyprus Anvil Mine until the zinc market improves.

THE FAMILY

SOCIAL MEASURES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Members of this House, and especially the Conservative Members, of commitments made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Government to our Canadian families.

First of all, on November 5, and I quote: "My Government has as a high priority measures to support and strengthen the Canadian family, which is the conerstone of our society."

On November 15, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) said: "It is my role as Minister of National Health and Welfare to put forward signals and initiatives which will strengthen the role of the family and give it more prominence in society than I feel it has been given before."

In his Christmas message on December 22, 1984, the Prime Minister said: "The family unit must remain the cornerstone of our society."

And when his fourth child was born, the Prime Minister declared that the family was the most beautiful thing in the world.

Mr. Speaker, I would invite all the Conservative Members of this House to remind the Prime Minister of these words, since he has cut $55 million, over two years, from support programs of low-income families. The only family that has been able to benefit from the largesse of this Government is the Reichmann family, which received a present of $600 million from the Conservative Government.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I may point out to the House that my former colleague from Verdun is with us today.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CULTURAL INDUSTRIES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, both no doubt now visiting Florida, I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Once again we have another example of confusion and contradiction in the Government in its handling of a very vital trade issue. In particular, the Secretary of State for External Affairs yesterday displayed a deplorable lack of understanding of the situation when he claimed the reason we were going to bargain with our cultural industries was to gain greater access to the U.S. market when, indeed, we already have full and open access to that market. The Canadian Publishing Association said that statement was full of nonsense.

What I want to know from the Deputy Prime Minister is the real purpose behind putting our cultural industries on the bargaining table. Is this the pre-condition that Mr. Shultz told the Secretary of State that the Americans will demand in order to go ahead with the talks? Is that the real reason we are sacrificing our cultural industries at the negotiating table?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I totally reject the twisted and distorted interpretation which the Hon. Member, not just on this occasion but on past occasions, has attempted to put on the words of the Prime Minister and other Ministers in addressing issues. The Prime Minister very clearly said yesterday, and I quote from page 8364 of Hansard:

> What I did tell them was that—I repeated my statement of September 26—our political sovereignty, our system of social programs, our commitment to fight regional disparities, our unique cultural identity and our special linguistic character are the essence of Canada. They are not at issue in these negotiations.

Surely nothing could be clearer to any simple-minded person in this House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I can think of no Minister who better exemplifies what it is to be simple-midned. What he simply demonstrates by that response is that there is a complete repudiation, in the statement of the Prime Minister, of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. That is what we want to know. Who is speaking for the Government? Is the Government prepared to have our cultural industries placed on the negotiating table with the Americans, or are we to listen to the general polemics of the Prime Minister? What is the Government intending to do in this vital area?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, what is so difficult to understand? What is so polemic about a statement which stipulates that our political sovereignty, our system of social programs, our commitment to fight regional disparities, our unique cultural identity and our special linguistic character are the essence of Canada? Is that too complicated for the Hon. Member to understand?

Some Hon. Members: Yes!

Mr. Nielsen: They are not at issue in these negotiations. Is that so difficult for the Hon. Member to understand?

FILM AND BOOK PUBLISHING INDUSTRIES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would simply turn the question back to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is it so difficult for him to understand that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has clearly indicated that he intends to have as part of the negotiations our film and book publishing industries? Are they not part of our cultural integrity and sovereignty? Who is speaking for the Government? Obviously the Secretary of State is being repudiated by the Deputy Prime Minister. The Canadian people have a right to know, and it is up to the Government to stop keeping us in the dark.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that is an utter crock of rhubarb, and the Hon. Member knows it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The Secretary of State said no such thing and the Hon. Member should not try to distort to the extent that he does.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY—TERRITORIAL WATERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Yesterday, during oral question period, the Secretary of State for External Affairs referred several times to what happened in the North this summer. The Americans violated our territorial waters, and now the Government has decided to act.

Is this the Government's policy today? Can the Minister of National Defence give the House the assurance that next summer, if the Americans again sail into our territorial waters, the Government will act before our territory is violated instead of after the fact?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The hon. gentleman and the Government of which he was a part had something in the order of 16 years to ponder that question, and did nothing. We have acted.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I will tell the Deputy Prime Minister that we passed the Act in 1970. We were never insulted by the American Government when we were in government as the present Government has been with regard to the Canadian north.

EFFECT OF NEGOTIATIONS ON ARTISTS AND AUTHORS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Is the Government going to follow the same policy in the cultural field? Will the Government act after our publishing and film industries have disappeared and Canadian artists and authors have to beg for work in the United States, as it did in the case of the North last summer?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Sir, I recognize that we have a newcomer into the field of the arts.

Mr. Chrétien: A very successful one.

Mr. Nielsen: I say that "from the heart" to the hon. gentleman. I can assure him that the answer to his question is plain. I have read it and re-read it for the benefit of his more simple-minded colleague. I am sure that he will better understand it given his artistic and discerning talents.

FINANCE

REPORTED SYNCRUDE TAX REMISSIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last week we learned from the Auditor General that Dome Petroleum gained about $1 billion at the expense of other taxpayers in the form of a tax remission. While the Minister has been trying to make up his mind on whether Canadians should be informed about such tax remissions on a regular basis, I have learned that Syncrude has also benefited from tax remissions to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars. Will the Minister confirm that so far Syncrude has in fact gained upwards of about $200 million in tax remissions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will correct what the Hon. Member said in his preamble because, although I am sure not purposely, he has misled the House. He said that Dome Petroleum has gained. If I may remind him, Dome Petroleum would have gone bankrupt had this remission order not been given. Therefore, it is not that Dome Petroleum has gained, it is that the Government has gained by allowing Dome some relief in order that it can stay in business, keep people employed, keep the energy service industry alive and active in western Canada and continue to provide tax dollars to the Government. Therefore, the Government has gained from that remission order.

In relation to the Syncrude order that he spoke about, I will have to clarify the details before responding to that question.

REQUEST FOR REGULAR PUBLICATION OF TAX REMISSION ORDERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister will look into it. It is our caculation that Syncrude has gained up to $200 million so far. This particular remission goes on until the year 2003 and the net cost to other Canadian taxpayers will be in the neighbourhood of $1 billion. Therefore, does the Minister not think it entirely appropriate to decide now that information on such costs to taxpayers who foot the bill ought to be made available on a regular basis to those taxpayers?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I said, I do want to clarify my understanding and recollection of what the Hon. Member has raised before I comment on it. My immediate response would be that he is excessive in the numbers he has used but I will not comment further without clarifying them myself.

• (1425)

I have said in response to his question last week that I would consider that, and I am carefully considering it now. There are certain aspects of confidentiality as it relates to individuals who receive the benefit of tax remission orders. As I indicated yesterday, there are hundreds of these during the course of the year. I want to clarify that before I make a decision.

TAXPAYERS' RIGHT TO KNOW

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Government in its wisdom has now increased taxes for ordinary taxpayers across the country to the extent of hundreds of dollars and up to a thousand dollars per average family. When taxpayers are paying the bill, as they would in tax allocations and tax benefits to Dome and Syncrude, will the Minister tell us why he must consider this any longer? Why can he not make a commitment to taxpayers of Canada now that when they are paying the bill they have a right to know who is getting that money?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is about the fourth or fifth time that I have responded to this question. I think the people of Canada would not want me to make a snap judgment on the floor of the House of Commons but to consider the implications of this, which is something that is quite far-reaching in relation to past practice. I want to consider it carefully before making a judgment.

Let me remind the Hon. Member that we are in no way hesitant to take action where action is needed. We cut out the SRTCs. We cut out limited partnerships where it was inappropriate. We cut out carve-outs, and we cut out income splitting. We put on a surtax for upper-income Canadians and we will establish a minimum tax effective January 1. That is action for which I think the Hon. Member should be applauding us.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Communications. Yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated that his Government plans to protect our cultural institutions, if not our cultural industries. Last night we heard a cry from the heart from Mr. Juneau, the man after whom we named our Canadian music awards. He says that our Canadian culture, through our national instrument of the CBC, will be destroyed if the Government proceeds with its savaging cuts to its budget. How can Canadians be expected to believe that the Government is serious about protecting our Canadian identity?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have seen the same reports and I fail to see how expenditures of $846.8 million in taxpayers' money in this fiscal year, and, I believe, $825.8 million last year, can be in any way described as destructive of the CBC.

Mrs. Finestone: I don't know whether we will have any Canadian industries left as a result of the way you are speaking and whether we will have any cultural identity left.

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister take Mr. Juneau seriously, go back to the drawing board and reconsider his program so that our cultural identity can be reflected through a proper communicating mechanism?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the hon. lady comes from, but—

Mrs. Finestone: Mount Royal.

Mr. Nielsen: I know the riding of the Hon. Member. But where I come from, $850 million does mean something.

FINANCE

REPORTED SYNCRUDE TAX REMISSION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On February 13, 1981, I asked the Minister of Finance of that day, Mr. MacEachen, how the Government would pay for the take-over of Petrofina by Petro-Canada. The present Minister of Finance is aware of this because he was the Conservative energy critic when I asked that question. I am still waiting for the answer, as is the Auditor General.

Given the facts raised by my Leader today about Syncrude and its getting tax remissions from 1978 to the year 2002, would the Minister of Finance undertake to come back to the House after the break with the particular figures of how much Syncrude will benefit from those tax remissions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I said, I do not give snap answers on the floor of the House of Commons on matters about which I must make a careful study before giving an answer. I have indicated to his Leader that I would look into the problem. Surely that is good enough for now. If he wants to pose the question on November 18, maybe I will have a different answer.

• (1430)

AUDITOR GENERAL

ACCESS TO PETROFINA ACQUISITION DOCUMENTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, given that both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Justice, the Attorney General of Canada, used to be in opposition and appreciate the difficulty of Opposition Members getting answers to these questions, will the Minister of Justice now tell the House that he is prepared to go along with the views of the Auditor General, the servant of Parliament, who says he will not abuse his authority if the Government does not appeal the decision of Mr. Justice Jerome, and give some access to those Government documents in the Petrofina case?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation repeating that if there is no appeal of that judgment, we will certainly co-operate with the effect of the judgment—

Mr. Broadbent: I guess you have to.

Mr. Crosbie: —and with the Auditor General, whether we have to or not. The Hon. Leader of the NDP would not know whether we have to or not—

Mr. Broadbent: Brr, brr!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: There is living proof of the imbecility of the Leader of the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CABINET

GUIDELINES FOR MINISTERIAL TRIPS OUTSIDE CANADA

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, we now know what the Prime Minister forgot yesterday, namely that there are guidelines for authorizations for travel abroad by Ministers. I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, and to refresh his memory, I would like to quote from a letter sent by the Minister of State (Transport) to her colleague at External Affairs:

"In accordance with the guidelines contained in the Prime Minister's letter of January 14 concerning authorizations for travel abroad by Ministers, please find enclosed a copy of the letter I sent to Mr. MacAdam".

Are these guidelines and in this letter dated January 14, 1985, going to be published, and is the Government going to explain what role, mandate and authority Mr. Pat MacAdam was given with respect to the approval of these trips?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, I am sure knows that the prerogative for setting the guidelines for the use of aircraft by Members of Parliament, DND aircraft that is, is a prerogative of the Minister of National Defence. Those guidelines are completed and hopefully will be tabled before we break.

With respect to the guidelines concerning the use of administrative aircraft by Ministers and others entitled, such as the Governor General and senior officials and so on, they are almost complete. The Hon. Member knows that that is a Prime Ministerial prerogative. They should be ready for tabling, if not before the break, shortly thereafter.

[Translation]

MINISTER'S TRAVEL EXPENSES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Every time we put an embarrassing question to the Government, the Minister or Prime Minister fails to answer the question. The Prime Minister did this yesterday, and the Deputy Prime Minister, unless he misunderstood my question, certainly did not answer the question I put to him.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to admit that a number of his colleagues have a tendency towards undue expenditure of public funds, especially the former Minister of Communications, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and now the Minister of State (Immigration), whose behaviour in this respect is well known? Is the Deputy Prime Minister going to ask these Ministers who mix personal travel and pleasure trips with their official business, to restore the funds in question to the public purse?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I do not at all accept that rather enlarged preamble of the Member, Mr. Speaker. He should certainly be the last one to be speaking as a member of a former Government that had three Cabinet Ministers arrive on three separate Government aircraft in the town of his seatmate in one day.

An Hon. Member: Within an hour.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I think that is right, I think within an hour of each other. I can assure the Hon. Member though, that travel, in terms of the number of trips by members of this Government as compared with the last, of which he was a member, is down 34 per cent. The number of hours flown on aircraft used by members of this Government as compared with the last Government over the past year is down 27 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL PARKS

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF SOUTH MORESBY NATIONAL PARK

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Minister of the Environment. He will know that all three Parties in this House support national park status for South Moresby, that the B.C. Government supports it, and there is a national consensus that that area become a national park. Has the Minister any plans to take any action or make any proposals that might head off what is a totally unnecessary confrontation, given the fact that everyone agrees some day that area should be a national park, and soon?

An Hon. Member: Does Jim Fulton agree?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is right in saying that there is a broadly based consensus in favour of the establishment of a national park in South Moresby. The question, however, is what part of South Moresby should be so designated, whether it should be the entire island or something less. I will say this though. The federal Government is totally committed to the principle of the establishment of a national park covering whatever territory in South Moresby. The prior decision has to be made by the Government of British Columbia and the poeple in that province because it is B.C. Crown land.

Having said that, I can tell the Hon. Member that the federal Government is prepared to do everything possible, including the creative use of public funds to bring about a national park, and I seek the co-operation of the Hon. Member and his Party in that regard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Good.

CREATIVE USE OF PUBLIC FUNDS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister elaborate for us what he means by the creative use of public funds, and give us an idea of what he has in mind to avoid confrontation so that we could have the opportunity of supporting a more concrete proposal?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, there are various legitimate interests to be accommodated in this case, certainly those of the Haida Indians, the logging company, Western Forest Products Limited, and its employees.

I am led to believe that there is some openness, if not a commitment, on the part of the company in question at least to consider the possibility of the federal Government and the Government of British Columbia linking arms to buy out some of the timber rights, the legitimate three licences. I would think that the employees themselves, in other words, those who actually do the logging, should be accommodated in some fashion.

If that is agreeable to the company and to the Government of British Columbia, it is certainly agreeable to me.

Mr. Broadbent: Good answer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

FORMER ENVIRONMENT MINISTER'S LIMOUSINE EXPENSES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. It continues to pursue the habits of his well travelled colleague, the Minister of State for Transport.

After Easter in Paris, the former Minister flew to Stockholm, Sweden, where she spent a half day at meetings, attended a cocktail party, a lunch, and a ballet.

Does the Minister agree, according to documents obtained through the Access to Information Act, that the limousine expense of $1,412.35 for a half a day's work, the ballet, and three days vacation, should be paid by the taxpayers?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has based her question on information obtained yesterday or the day before through the Freedom of Information route.

Since that time I have made available to the media, to her Leader and to other Leaders in the House, a reconstructed schedule of the activities—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Reconstructed? How about invented?

Mr. Riis: You were doing so well, Tom.

Mr. McMillan: —the now Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

• (1440)

Mr. McMillan: Much of the controversy is based on the very skeletal schedule, which was—

An Hon. Member: It was skeletal, all right.

Mr. McMillan: —the official agenda of the then Minister of the Environment. I had put together, based on what information has been made available to me by my Department and by the Minister herself, all information surrounding the many activities in which she was engaged during the trip in question—

Mr. Axworthy: Shopping, movies, and so on.

Mr. McMillan: —that were not reflected in the original agenda. I suggest that the Hon. Member go back to the drawing-board and rephrase her question on the basis of more up to date information.

HEALTH MINISTER'S LIMOUSINE BILL

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I certainly will rephrase my question. How can the Minister justify a four-day Swedish junket at taxpayers' expense by the Minister of State for Transport at the same time as the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who was in Sweden to sign the Canadian-Swedish agreement on social security, incurred a total limousine bill of $113, in contrast to the $1,412 limousine bill of the Minister of State for Transport? Can he justify that?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Broadbent: Jake is in trouble now.

An Hon. Member: Cheap Jake!

Mr. McMillan: —the Hon. Member has referred to a very busy schedule of official Government business—

Mr. Ouellet: Where?

Mr. McMillan: —of the Hon. Minister of State for Transport, the former Minister of the Environment, as a junket, when in fact her trip included bilateral meetings, multilateral meetings, international signings—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McMillan: —informal discussions, environmental briefings and—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McMillan: —tours of environment-related plants in Sweden, in Paris, and elsewhere. I suggest to her—

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Fulton: Well done, Tom.

An Hon. Member: Give him a chance.

Mr. Deans: Why is she doing this to you?

Mr. Speaker: I have the feeling that no one is listening to the answer, in terms of the noise.

Some Hon. Members: We are.

Mr. Speaker: Then perhaps Hon. Members would allow the answer to be heard in silence.

Some Hon. Members: Shhh!

Mr. McMillan: May I conclude my answer by saying this. In the relatively short time that I have been Minister of the Environment—

Mr. Rossi: It has been too long.

Mr. McMillan: —I have received one question from her, and that is the one she asked me today, on environmental matters, at a time—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: Answer the question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: That is not an answer to the question; that is irrelevant.

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An Hon. Member: He is bluffing.

Mr. Speaker: I think we will leave it there. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NOTIFICATION OF JOB VACANCIES IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for—

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Nystrom: My question—

An Hon. Member: Table the Minister.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, if we can calm down the Liberals, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Last Friday I asked the Minister why, for several weeks this fall, Prince Edward Island Members of Parliament received seven-day advance notice of job vacancies in both DVA and Employment Canada in that province. Since a senior official has said that this was a very serious mistake in terms of violating the merit principle, can the Minister tell us why Prince Edward Island Members of Parliament received a seven-day advance notice of job vacancies in that province? Can he confirm that Peter White, who is the Prime Minister's patronage man, was at the meeting on September 10 in an attempt to steer patronage jobs in that province to the Conservative Party?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the Hon. Member last Friday, I inquired of the Public Service Commission, which is a body that reports to the House or to Parliament through the Secretary of State, not to Government, and I was informed that that meeting had in fact taken place, and that the decision taken or reached at that meeting, which was an informal meeting which the PSC apparently conducts—

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Cotret: —The decision taken then was that MPs would receive, at the same time as they are posted, notices of vacancies. It was further misunderstood, unfortunately, by some officials who construed that Members should receive prior of seven days notice. I can assure the Hon. Member that, upon learning of this, the Public Service Commission immediately put a halt to it.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION'S ROLE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for that answer. However, in light of the statement made last night by the Minister of the Environment on television that he would do it again, and the fact that I found out today that similar meetings have also taken place with MPs from both New Brunswick and Quebec, what assurance can the Minister give the House that this practice indeed will not happen again, when a Minister who sits right behind him says that he would do it again if he had the chance?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the comments of my hon. colleague. I would doubt very much that he is being quoted correctly. I can assure the Hon. Member that from conversations with the Public Service Commission, they were quite disturbed that this unfortunate error at the level of officials had taken place. They have assured me and my office that they will have corrective measures in place to ensure that it no longer continues.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

MARCHMENT COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation, I will direct my question to his Parliamentary Secretary. The special committee, known as the Marchment Committee, named by the Minister's predecessor to study the problems and future of the Post Office in Canada, will soon be reporting. Will the members of that committee be able to hold a press conference so that they can elaborate on their findings and on their recommendations, and respond to questions?

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr.

Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member for Oxford, I am pleased to report to him, to his constituents and to Members of the House, that when the report is delivered to the Minister it is the intention of the Minister to make such report public. As to his concern about whether the members of the committee can hold a press conference to discuss their findings during the hearings, I will being it to the attention of the Minister, and he will respond to the Hon. Member directly.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

HOMEMAKER'S PENSION PROPOSAL

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the Government's consensus package on reforms to the Canada Pension Plan. Specifically, for the first time it excludes inclusion of a homemaker's pension plan in the common package which will be presented to Finance Ministers tonight at their meeting in Toronto. Will he explain to the women of Canada why his Government is backing off its election campaign promise to include retroactively a homemaker's plan in our public pension plan system?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the appropriate Minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I am afraid that I will have to take that question as notice. I will make sure that a response to the question is given to the Hon. Member as soon as possible.

INTRODUCTION OF BENEFIT IMPROVEMENTS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question, and I think the Deputy Prime Minister should answer it. In terms of the consensus package, why in heaven's name would the Government, knowing that a large percentage of Canada Pension Plan disability recipients live below the poverty line, adopt the position of phasing in the improvements to the benefits package over five years, rather than introducing a comprehensive plan in 1986, as recommended by our own parliamentary task force on pension reform?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the more the Hon. Member speaks, the more I am sure he is absolutely wrong in his premise. Nonetheless, I will take notice of the question. I know that the Government has given leadership in terms of pension reform unequalled in the history of the country. I will make sure that the Minister gets back to him and gives him more detail about that progress than he cares he hear.

PLIGHT OF FARMERS IN DROUGHT ZONE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He will know that we have been waiting 12 weeks for the report from the Hon. Member for Assiniboia on what action will be taken by the Government in the drought zone. Part of that zone is now under snow in the Peace River block. Farmers have waited long enough. Will there or will there not be special assistance for those farmers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know, and the record will show, that the Government always responds effectively to the problems facing the agricultural industry. I know that he asks this question from time to time. Again I am sure that we will not disappoint Canadian farmers this time. The only thing I can say to him is that, if it was four days ago that he asked that question, we are four days closer to an announcement.

FARM FORECLOSURES—REQUEST THAT MORATORIUM BE EXTENDED

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, if there is not to be financial assistance to farm incomes, will the Government be extending its moratorium on farm foreclosures, which now only covers FCC foreclosures, to other lending institutions? Will there be a judicial procedure offered similar to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act in the very near future so that farmers will not be faced with the unfairness of foreclosure as it exists now?

• (1450)

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member asked two questions. I would like to remind him that I did not say that there would not be financial assistance forthcoming. With respect to his second suggestion, it is one of the recommendations that we are currently studying, and indeed I take notice of the fact that it was one of the recommendations that was put forward to us by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. We regard that organization as a very credible organization representing the agricultural industry.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

GENERAL MOTORS OF CANADA—PROPOSED TRANSFER OF PRODUCTION TO UNITED STATES AND MEXICO

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and, in the absence of that Minister, to the Acting Prime Minister. Yesterday it was reported that a General Motors of Canada spokesman confirmed that that company intends to transfer production from its plants is Oshawa, St. Catharines, and Windsor to the United States and Mexico by September, 1987, at what UAW people say will be a cost of 5,000 Canadian jobs. What immediate steps is the Government taking to prevent that transfer of production and jobs, something which has nothing to do with Canadian quality, productivity, or efficiency?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as has been pointed out by the hon. gentleman, the responsible Ministers are absent. I will take the question—

Mr. Foster: They are always absent.

Mr. Nielsen: The Hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is unavoidably absent. I am sure the Hon. Member for Algoma realizes that.

Mr. Foster: What about the rest of them?

Mr. Nielsen: The Acting Minister is away on Government business. I will take the question as notice and see to it that an answer is supplied to the Hon. Member at the earliest possible moment.

AUTO PACT PROVISIONS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, will the Government immediately tell General Motors that any such transfer of production and jobs is unacceptable to Canadians and contrary to the Canadian-content provisions of the Auto Pact and that, if GM persists with these plans, it will apply the Canadian-content provisions of the Auto Pact to the fullest extent? Will the Government make that undertaking today?

[Translation]

Hon. André Bissonnette (Minister of State (Small Businesses)): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House that General Motors announced a few months ago it intended to reinvest one billion dollars in Canadian plants or in Canada. So we are already on the right track... we are negotiating with General Motors and we believe that the jobs will be saved and in fact, that more jobs will be created.

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, with the planned opening this evening of the Welland Canal after having been shut down—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pietz: —for three and a half weeks because of the failure of Lock 7 in Thorold, I would like to ask the Minister of State for Transport if she is in a position to give an estimate both of the cost of repairing the lock and the costs to its users, so that we may correlate this to the plan for the super locks that was placed—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order.

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, the Canal will reopen sometime tonight. It is likely that the first ship in will be the Furia. We do not have all the figures for the cost of the unfortunate event that occured but as soon as the bills come in we will be able to make those figures public. I must say that there have been no lawsuits in this situation but there have been some Notices of Intent filed.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ST. CLAIR RIVER—PRESENCE OF DIOXIN

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. A Conservative MP and local officials have now suggested that the tarry blob near Sarnia with what the Minister has called horrible levels of cancer-causing dioxin has been known about for 10 years. Will the Minister tell the House when the Ministry first learned of the frightening levels of dioxin in the St. Clair River, and if it has known about it for years, why the first public confirmation came just in the last month?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly put the Hon. Member's mind at ease on that question. The first tarry patch containing hazardous chemicals was found in August, 1984, through a routine check of the water in question as part of an over-all analysis of the water in the Great Lakes. It was not determined that dioxin, for example, was in the tarry patch until a year later in August, 1985. A second patch was found in September, 1985. I learned about it as a result of its final analysis on October 26, and on October 26, the very same day, I set up a team of high-powered experts from the United States and Canada to deal with the question.

ORIGIN OF DIOXIN—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, given the uncertainty over where the dioxin originates as it does not seem that products that produce dioxin are made in the area, will the Minister order an investigation into possible transport from the United States to Canada by American companies of dioxin-carrying wastes for disposal in the deep-well systems of sister companies in Canada? This could very well be one of the possible sources.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a worth-while suggestion and I will give it the careful consideration it richly deserves.

TRANSPORTATION

FUTURE OF CANADIAN NATIONAL'S TRUCKING BUSINESS

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, CN Chairman Maurice Le Clair's recent statement that CN may be out of the trucking business by the end of the year has caused understandable concern among CN Route employees in Scarborough and other centres. What assurance can the Minister give us that if there is to be a disposition of CN Route, job protection for its employees will have due priority?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, if a situation like that were to occur, I assure the Hon. Member that we would ask CN to give all due consideration and to do everything possible to minimize the impact on employees.

INDUSTRY

MODERNIZATION OF SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—POLLUTION ISSUE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Sydney Steel workers must keep the coke ovens open because they need those 50 jobs to feed their families, even though a recent Health and Welfare study indicated that those living downwind of the coke ovens die more frequently from cancer, heart problems and lung problems than others. Will the Deputy Prime Minister move now toward making funds available for the second phase of the modernization of Sydney Steel Corporation in order to correct some of these pollution problems? To do otherwise would be to ask people to choose between jobs and their health.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, because there is a distinct environmental dimension to the question the Hon. Member posed, if I may I will reply to that question. We are very well aware of the environmental hazards to the people of Cape Breton, and even beyond, as a result of the facility in question. I have been in touch with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion about the plans for the further modernization of the plant. We are taking fully into account the environmental dimension of the issue.

EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the matter is more serious than that. The people are afraid that the Government will use this health study to make a case for closing down the iron-making facilities in Sydney. When is the Government going to follow the words of the Prime Minister by doing everything humanly possible to bring durable jobs to Cape Breton?
