 atom, could more that act had no eans of enforcing their right to denomnational schools, and, therefore, how ould such right or privilege be said to dist by law? A right without a remedy no right at all. The act seems to have been framed for the benefit of the whole people, giving to o class any privilege in any shool not nioyed by every other. The very section so much relied on in that act that catholic parents are entitled to have ead the Donay version of the Bible hewed by the addition of the words without note or commen" that the cegislature intended the schools should to be in any sense denominational. Except as regards direct taxation the Act of 1871 is very similar to that of 858. True it is provided that the schools chall be unsectarian, but this is no more than was intended by the Act of 1871; but then it is not excluded. Whether the Board of Education, by taking by regulation the privilege from parents of having the Bible, either common or Douay version, read in schools, and leaving it to the tacher to regulate, have done wrong, or whether by probibiting the use in the schools of religious symbols or emblems they have or not needlessly interfered with delicate rights is a question with which this Court cannot deal. A brutal murder was discovered in Brooklyn last evening, the perpetrator of the crime being no other than the father of the victim. The affair is yet involved in considerable mystery, but enough has been ascertained of the matter to render it clear as to who the guilty parties are. It appears that on Tuesday night a man named Fox, who occupies a tenement house in one of the back streets of the city, told his little boy to go out to a saloon and get him some beer. The boy told his father that he had no money with which to purchase it, but if he would give him some money he would go.
