INTRODUCTION

THURSDAY, December sixth, 1917, will be ever memorable as the date of the great disaster which, with catastrophic suddenness, burst upon the beautiful and old historic city of Halifax, causing widespread destruction, death and desolation, the magnitude of which finds no parallel in our history. The fateful morning dawned both fine and fair, and the normal activities of the busy city were set in motion for the day. No one dreamed that in the magnificent harbor of Halifax the opening scene in a terrible drama of tragedy was already staged.

PROCEEDING up the harbor, and making for Bedford Basin, was the French steamer "Mont Blanc," carrying a deck cargo of benzol and an under cargo of picric acid and about one thousand tons of the world's most powerful explosive, "T. N. T." Leaving the upper harbor and steaming at slow speed was the Norwegian steamer "Imo," on her way to New York for a cargo of relief for the war sufferers of Belgium. Slowly the two vessels approached each other; nearer and nearer they drew, reaching the Narrows between the harbor and Bedford Basin, at which point they should have passed. Then happened the inexplicable—save for the fatal phrase "Someone had blundered"! The Norwegian vessel collided with the "Mont Blanc," and almost immediately her deck cargo of benzol caught fire and a few minutes later, at five minutes past nine to be exact, the thousand tons of high explosive aboard exploded with a dull reverberating roar and a crash that defies description. In a second of time it was as though a fierce tornado had swept the City. The whole North End, practically two square miles of territory, became a burning ruin. A considerable section of the water front was completely shattered, and all over the city, public buildings and private dwellings were wrecked, and not a window remained anywhere intact.

THE preponderating magnitude of the calamity can be somewhat realized by the terrible toll of dead and wounded. The casualties were truly appalling—1,200 dead, 2,000 or more wounded, and 6,000 rendered homeless. Property damage was estimated to be between Forty and Fifty Million Dollars.

The scenes following the great convulsion are utterly beyond the power of language to describe. Chaos reigned supreme, and our vocabulary fails to depict the heart-rending scenes witnessed on the streets and in the hastily improvised hospitals and morgues. Gallant acts of amazing heroism are recorded, and Halifax will never fully know all she owes to the military and naval forces stationed in the city for their magnificent services, so promptly rendered in the hour of her dire disaster.

NO sooner had the appalling news flashed across the cables than messages of sympathy and offers of practical aid poured in from all parts of the Dominion and the U. S. A. The local Relief Committee was inspired and heartened by the prompt despatch from Boston of a special relief train, bringing a corps of doctors, surgeons, and Red Cross nurses with full equipment, under the direction of Hon. A. C. Ratchesky, the personal representative of Governor McCall of Massachusetts. Premier Borden arrived in Halifax on Friday morning, and issued the following statement expressive of the keen appreciation which all Canada felt at the magnanimous assistance of the American people:

"The people of Canada are profoundly grateful for the generous sympathy of the people of the United States in the terrible disaster which has overtaken the City of Halifax, and they most deeply appreciate the splendid aid which has been offered and sent from so many communities of our great kindred nation."

IN an incredibly short space of time, considering the tremendous nature of the calamity, confusion took on the semblance of order, and the eager hands of willing citizens were busily engaged under the direction of committees in ministering to the maimed and injured, reverent burial of the untimely dead, catering for the hungry and providing for the thousands rendered destitute and homeless through the sudden stroke of swift catastrophe which had laid the city low.

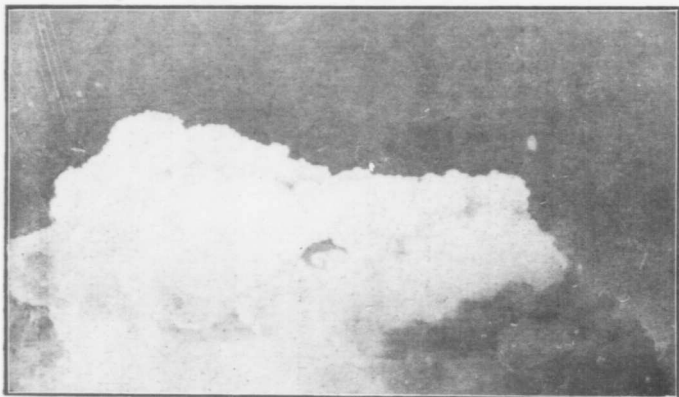

Not yet, at this hour of writing, has Halifax recovered fully from the shattering blow of that fateful Thursday, the sixth of December, but with optimistic fortitude, with courage and with ardor, is already grappling with the Herculean task of reconstruction; and thus it is that the gloom of the present is even now radiantly relieved with the gleam of a splendid vision—The Greater Halifax of Tomorrow. Surely here is ample evidence that there is something in man, frail and human as he is, which nevertheless defies and rises above catastrophe.

HAROLD T. ROE.

Halifax, December 14th, 1917.

This picture was taken at the corner of Queen and Green Streets, three miles from the scene of the disaster, a few minutes after the explosion, and shows the cloud of smoke from the explosion.

This picture shows another view of the cloud of smoke from the explosion. This smoke cloud swept over the north end of the city and was visible in all sections of Halifax for more than a quarter of an hour.

In one brief minute this home was smashed to atoms. Furniture and bathtub can be seen mixed up in the debris.

This view is looking down on the roof of North Street Station and shows how that building was battered up.

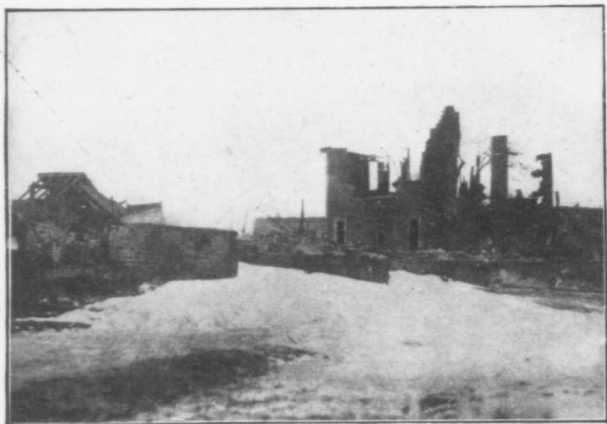

This is the interior view of North Street Station after the explosion, showing the roof smashed in and wreckage trains carrying debris away.

THE HOME OF THE ROYAL PRINT & LITHO LIMITED AFTER THE EXPLOSION. This building is situated more than two miles from the scene of the disaster, and so great was the explosion that every window was shattered. Temporary repairs were completed and business resumed with but little delay.

Ruins at Richmond. This picture was taken shortly after the explosion.

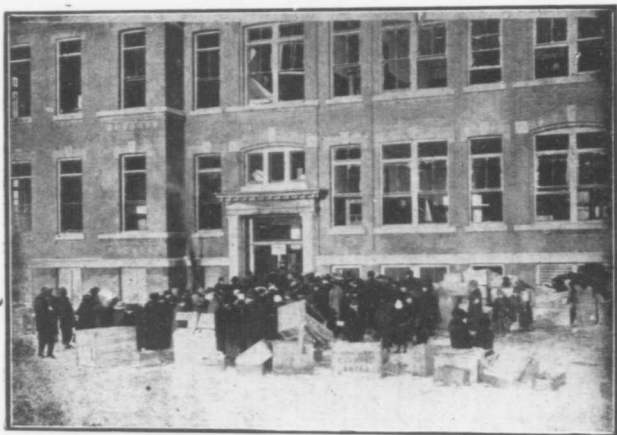

All that is left of a residential section in the North End.

The havoc wrought among stores and homes on Gottingen Street.

This is a view of Roome Street School in the heart of the devastated area. As can be seen this building was completely wrecked.

Crowds swarming into Clebucto Road School to identify the dead.

This is a view of the St. Joseph's Girls' School. It now resembles a shell-torn building in Flanders.

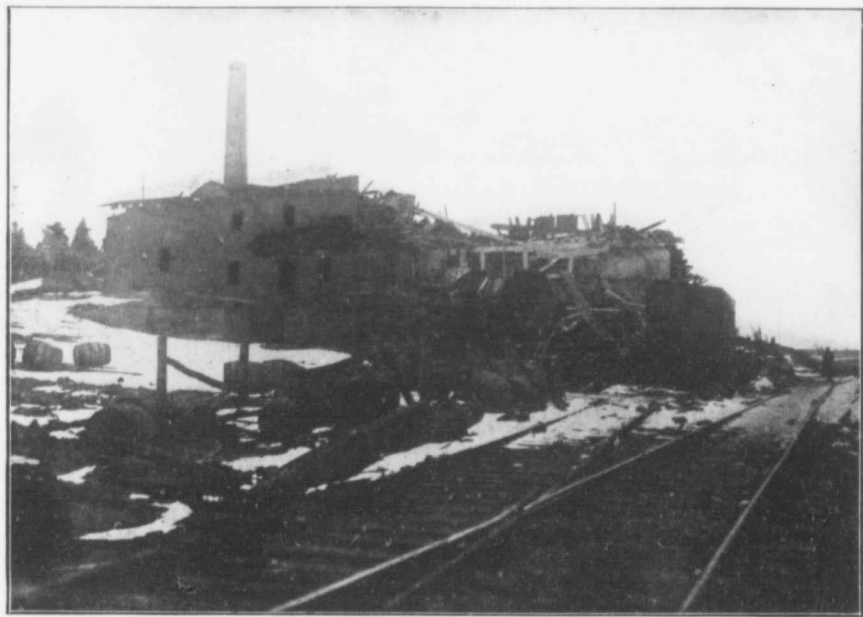

Crashing chimneys fell on the sick and dying and added to the awful horror of the explosion.

This picture shows the ruins of Emmett's Limited. Mr. Emmett is holding in his hand a tin containing one hundred and fifty shillings which he recovered from the ruins.

This picture shows wreckage of Fire Chief Condon's automobile after the explosion.

The wreck of the Halifax Breweries, located on the harbor front in the north end of Dartmouth.

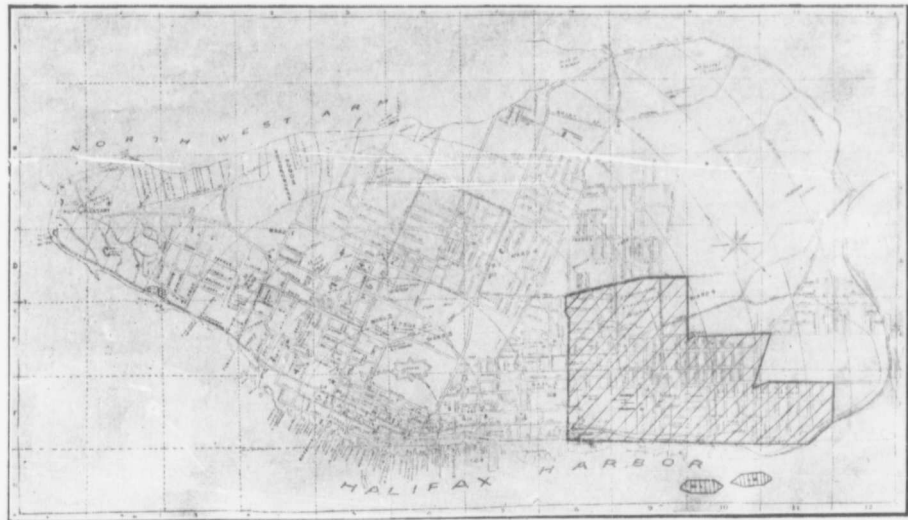

A view of the wrecked St. Joseph's School, with the ruins of St. Joseph's Church showing in the rear.

Searching for bodies in the basement of a school.

The effect of the explosion on rolling stock and track.

This is a map of Halifax, and the section outlined is the devastated area extending from the harbor front out North Street to Windsor Street and then north almost to the extreme right of the map. The collision took place in "Section 10" as indicated above.

The Names of 886 Identified Dead

Coffins piled up in front of Chebueto Road School at the funeral of nearly 100 unidentified dead.

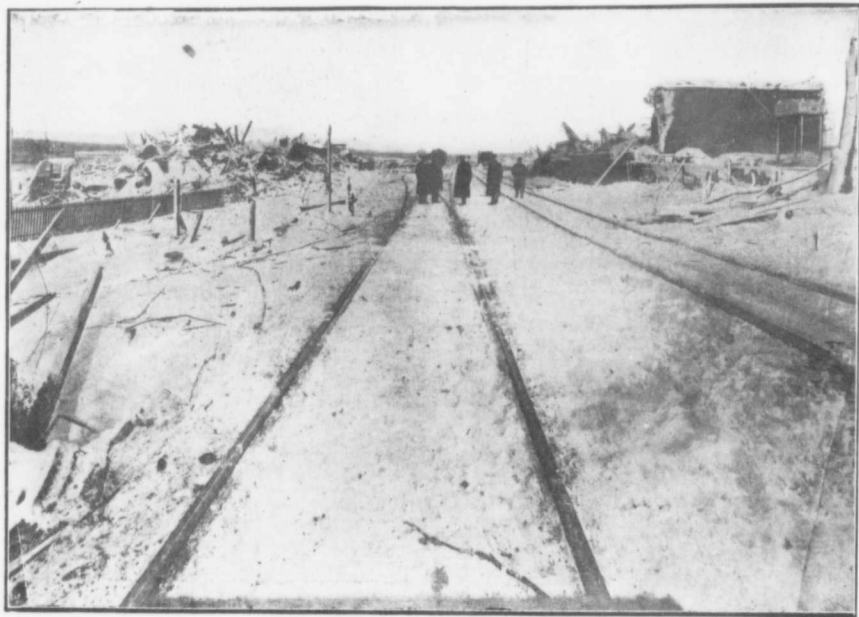

Homeless people of the North End were forced to spend the night in canvas tents.

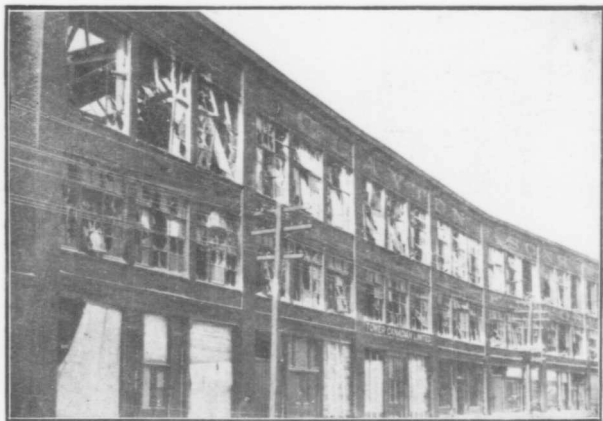

So terrific was the explosion that horses were torn from their waggons and instantly killed.

This is a scene at Richmond which shows how completely the buildings in that section were demolished.

All that remains of several large buildings in the devastated area, where the full force of the explosion was felt.

This is a picture of Clayton & Sons, Clothing Manufacturers' block on Barrington Street, one of the largest buildings in the city. Practically every pane of glass in this building was shattered.

This is an interior view of the tailoring department of Clayton and Sons. This picture was taken after the blizzard of Friday and shows the snow piled up on the tables and the damage to the stock by the storm.

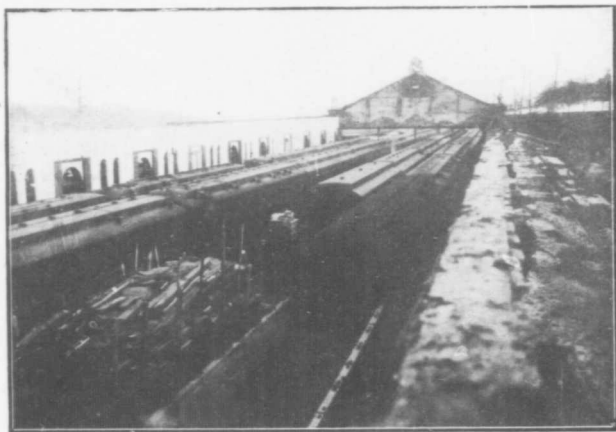

Rows of unidentified dead in the basement of Chebucto Road School.

Amid the Blinding Blizzard of Friday many found shelter in rows of canvas tents.

Wreckage of homes in the devastated area.

This shows how completely the train entrance to North Street Station was wrecked.
The whole roof was swept away.

All that is left of St. Joseph's Church.

All that remains of buildings in the north end of Dartmouth, where the full force of the explosion was felt.

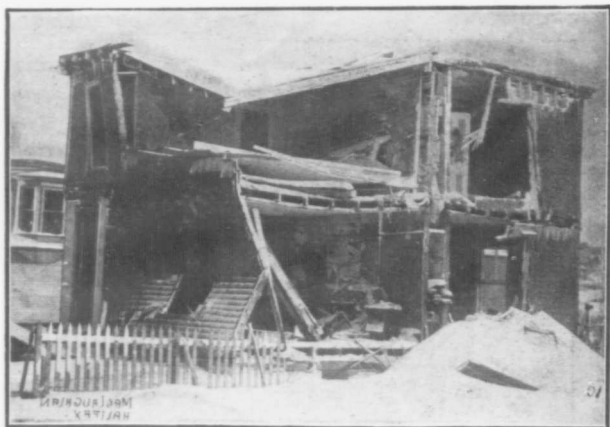

The motor fire engine "Patricia" as she appeared after the explosion.

The ruins of Emmanuel Episcopal Church, Dartmouth. As will be seen by the picture this building is a complete wreck.

Searching for human lives amid the debris in the devastated Richmond section.

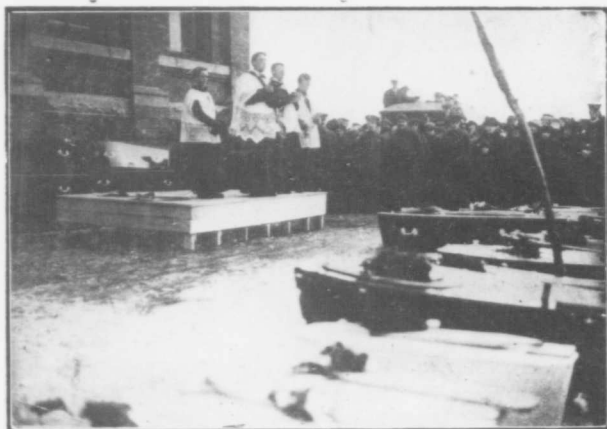

All that is left of two homes in the Richmond section.

Oland's Brewery. This building is a complete wreck and all that remains standing is the smoke stack.

The Protestant Service at Chebucto Mortuary, from which nearly 100 unidentified dead were buried.

The Roman Catholic Service at Chebucto Mortuary, from which nearly 100 unidentified dead were buried.

This picture was taken almost opposite the scene of the explosion and shows how completely industries and homes were leveled to the ground. Notice mattresses, bath tubs and other furniture mixed up in the debris. The building on the left is all that remains of Hillis & Sons' foundry.
