Cust, Robert Needham, brother of R. J. C. Cust, supra, b. 1821, at Cockayne Hatley, Bedfordshire, and educated at Eton; called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn 1857; entered the Indian civil service, and took honors in four Oriental languages at the College of Fort William, Calcutta; served many years with Lord Lawrence; was judicial commissioner of the Punjab, and a member of the legislative council of India. He is a member of various learned societies, British and Continental, as well as of the committees of the British and Foreign Bible Society and the Church Missionary Society, and is a frequent contributor to Oriental, literary, and religious publications. 1. A Sketch of the Modern Languages of the East Indies: accompanied by Two Language-Maps, Lon., 1878, p. 8vo.

"Within the last ten years the study of Indian ethnology and philology has made rapid strides, and the importance of the investigation of the dialectical varieties of speech has in India, as in Europe and elsewhere, been more and more recognized. A mass of materials for the prosecution of these researches—scattered in the Transactions of learned societies, in literary periodicals, and in the anonymous Government Reports and other publications—has thus accumulated, which required only the patient and painstaking linguist to arrange, digest, and form. This is what Mr. Robert Cust has attempted to accomplish, and has, upon the whole, successfully accomplished, in the book under notice."—Atk., No. 267.

"Mr. Cust has evidently seen much more of Hindustan, Upper India, and the Punjab than Burke could ever have imagined, and could have enlightened Macaulay on many other objects besides what that picturesque writer had taken in in his morning drive to Ballygunje and Garden Reach."—Sat. Rev., III. 21.

7. A Sketch of the Modern Languages of Africa: accompanied by a Language-Map, Lon., 1883, 2 vols., 8vo.

"He admits that in the long list of languages which he had collected he had not the slightest knowledge of any one except of Arabic. . . . A student of any one of the languages grouped as African will only have to turn to his will there of research in the work we are reviewing, and he will find not studiously catalogued under its heading every known source of information on the subject."—Sat. Rev., LVII. 783.

"Before the publication of this valuable work the student who desired to learn what had been discovered about any given language of Africa had to enter upon a severe course of research. . . . What Mr. Cust has done is to clear away this obstacle."—Atk., No. 269.

Daly, Augustin, b. 1838, at Plymouth, N. C.; was dramatic critic on several New York papers from 1859 till 1869, when he became a theatrical manager, and organized a company of comedians, which has its headquarters in New York, and has also performed in other cities of the United States, in England, France, and Germany. He has adapted many plays from the German and French. Peg Woffington: a Tribute to the Actress and the Woman. Illustrated by Sixteen Rare Portraits. N. York, 1888, 4to, 150 copies; also a few copies on large paper, fol.

"It is perhaps the most richly adorned volume ever devoted to the memory of a player... Mr. Daly's biography is admirably written, in a style which has a color and flavor of its own, and it is furnished on the most careful and loving research."—Nation, xli, 322.

"Mr. Daly's life of Woffington is a great improvement upon any previously-attempted memoir of the famous Irish actress... His fine reproductions of the portraits of Woffington by Hogarth and other painters give it real and as events will doubtless prove, permanent value... No equally valuable tribute to an English actress of past days has been furnished."—Ibid., No. 3173.

Darby, Rev. John Nelson, 1800-1882, b. in London; graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, in 1819; was admitted to the bar in 1823, and afterwards took orders and held a curacy in the Anglican Church, but resigned his charge in 1827 to join a new sect called the "Brethren," afterwards known as the "Plymouth Brethren," from the association of many of their number with Plymouth, where they had a meeting-house.

In 1838 he went to Switzerland, and established congregations in the cantons of Vaud, Geneva, and Berne, some of which suffered persecution in 1845 in a revolution aroused by Jesuit intrigues. Darby escaped and returned to Plymouth. He had already been accused of departing from the first principles of "the Brethren," and after his return a division took place, and he founded a new association, known as "the Darbyites." He paid several visits to Canada and to the United States, and also visited New Zealand and the West Indies. His writings were published partly under his own name, partly anonymously or under his initials. He made French and German translations of the New Testament, and wrote a number of hymns. The list of his publications includes the following: 1. Notes on the Gospel of John, from Notes of Lectures. 2. New Opinions of the Brethren examined by a Spectator, Lon., n. s., 13mo. 3. Darwin, Charles Robert, F.R.S., F.G.S. [ante, vol. i, add.,] 1809-1882, b. at "The Mount," Shrewsbury, Eng., son of Robert Waring Darwin, M.D., F.R.S., and of Susanna, daughter of Josiah Wedgwood, and grandson of Erasmus Darwin, (q. v., ante, vol. i.) After studying at Shrewsbury Grammar-School, he entered Edinburgh University in 1825, with a view to adopting his father's profession: but the study of medicine proving distasteful to him, he abandoned it after two years, and entered Christ's College, Cambridge, with the design of fitting himself for the church. The influence of Professor Henslow, whose lectures he attended, aroused an interest in science which soon became dominant, and shortly after taking his B.A. degree, in 1831, he was engaged as naturalist to the "Beagle," then starting under Captain—afterwards Admiral—Fitzroy to complete the survey of Patagonia begun by Captain King in 1826-30, and to make further surveys in South America and the Pacific. In 1836 he returned to England, and was occu-pled for some time in the preparation of works embodying some of the results of the expedition. In 1839 he married his cousin, Emma Wedgwood, and in 1842 settled at Down, Kent, where he spent the remainder of his life, engaged in researches and experiments designed to test and establish the theory of evolution which has become identified with his name. His study of the South American fossils had first led him to doubt the commonly-received view of the different species of animals and plants as distinct and immutable types, the product of direct and successive acts of creation. But before seeking to displace this doctrine by that of a slow and continuous development through regular and ordinary processes of nature, he desired to trace so far as possible the whole course of derivation, and to illustrate his argument by an abundance of minute details. He accordingly looked forward to the production of a single elaborate work, covering the whole field of his argument. But, finding that he was about to be anticipated by Mr. Alfred Wallace, who had arrived independently at the same general conclusions, he first drew up a paper, which was read, with that of Wallace, at a meeting of the Linnean Society, July 1, 1858, and then set to work to prepare an "abstract" of his theory, which grew into a volume, and was published in November, 1859. This was "The Origin of Species," which excited a discussion that partook of the character of a theological controversy. The adverse criticism was, however, much more sweeping and vehement than the defence. Men of science were not generally prepared to accept the new theory in its entirety, and those most favorably disposed to it either shrunk from the open expression of their approval or were content to claim for it a respectful hearing and to deprecate the notion of its destructive influence on religious belief. Yet there could be little doubt as to the general drift of scientific opinions. In March, 1860, Darwin drew up a classified list of his adherents, including among geologists Lyell and Ramsay, among zoologists Huxley and Lubbock, among botanists Hooker and Asa Gray, (to some extent,) among physiologists Dr. W. B. Carpenter, and (to a large extent) Sir Henry Holland. He added that should the book be forgotten "with such a list, I am convinced the subject will not." Darwin's subsequent works may be regarded as amplifications of different sections of "The Origin of Species." The Descent of Man presented the most unpalatable portions of the doctrine, but the shock was less than had been anticipated, the attitude of the public towards evolution having considerably changed in the years between 1859 and 1871. In the interval that has since elapsed the theory of evolution has been subjected to more careful criticism in regard to details, but in the main it has formed the basis of all recent scientific investigation. During his later years Darwin devoted himself chiefly to the study of plants and to works embodying the results of extensive experimental researches. He led a quiet, secluded life, partly on account of chronic ill health, and his absorption in his work was such that he appears to have sacrificed to it not only extraneous interests and occupations, but to some extent his natural tastes, his sense of religion, his love of literature and of art. He was distinguished by his modesty, his simplicity of mind, and his kindness and helpfulness to younger naturalists. He died at Down on April 19, 1882, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. For biog. see DARWIN, FRANCIS, infra; also, ALLEN, C. B. G., and BETTANY, G. T., supra, and a volume of Memorial Notices, by T. H. Huxley, J. G. Romanes, A. Gelikie, and W. T. Dyer, issued in 1882. The literature of "Darwinism" would form a library in itself, including works in many foreign languages, especially German, the influence of evolution on the general tone of philosophical thought and investigation seeming to have been greater in Germany than in any other country. The following list of Darwin's works, additional to the few mentioned ante, vol. i, does not include his contributions to scientific journals, unless reprinted, which are enumerated in the biography by his son. The critical extracts give, necessarily, only a meagre idea of the controversy that followed the publication of his principal works, the articles from which they are derived being mainly occupied with a discussion of details. 1. A Monograph of the Fossil Balaenia and Verrucae of Great Britain, (Palaontological Soc. "The essay is full of Mr. Darwin's characteristic excel-lences. It is a most readable book. Full of facts in natural history, old and new, of his collecting and observing; and all thrown into picturesque combinations, and all sparkle with the colours of fancy and the lights of imagination.

 It assumes, too, the grave proportions of a scientific argument upon a matter of the deepest interest, not to naturalists alone, or even to men of science exclusively, but to every one who is interested in the history of man and of the relations of nature around him to the history of his of creation. . . . On what, then, is the new theory based?
 We say it with unfeigned regret in dealing with such a man as Mr. Darwin, on the merest hypotheses, supported by 25 of seq. (This article was by Bishop Wilberforce, Darwin's theory is an ingenious and plausible speculation, to which future physiologists will look back with the kind of admiration we bestow on the Roms of Lucretius or the crystal spheres of Eudoxus, containing, like these, some faint half-truth, marking at once the ignorance of the age and the ability of the philosopher."—North British Review, xvi, 171.

"It is a book—we say it deliberately—that will not bear thought and labour directed by a man of remarkable ability and wide attainments, to construct and consolidate a theory which has for its basis some unobscured facts.
 There is scarcely an objection that can be urged that Mr.
 Darwin has not already anticipated, and to which he has not replied, so far as it admits of reply,—and that with a degree of moderation and candour that would be evident to the eye, entirely unimpaired. . . . So much we have may relieve the anxiety of some of our readers if we at once declare that, after the most deliberate consideration of his argument, we remain unconvinced."—Sat. Rev., xviii, 75.

"Mr Darwin abhors mere speculation as Nature abhors a vacuum. He is as greedy of case and precedents as any constitutional lawyer, and all the principles he lays down are capable of being brought to the test of observation and experiment. The path he himself follows professes to be not a mere airy track, fabricated of ideal conceptions, but a solid and broad bridge of facts. If it be so, it will carry us safely over many a chasm in our knowledge, and lead barren Virgins, the Final Causes, against which a high anth in the Times of December 26, 1859, quoted in the Life of Darwin, Amer. ed., II, 24.

"We are disposed to rank the derivative hypothesis in its fitness with the nebular hypothesis, and to regard both as allowable, as not unlikely to prove tenable in spite of some strong objections, but as not therefore demonstra-tively true. Those, if any there be, who regard the derivative hypothesis as satisfactorily proved, must have loose notions as to what proof is. Those who imagine it can be easily refuted and, just aside mist, we think, have very imperfect or very erroneous conceptions of the facts considered. 135. (The article from which the extract is taken is one of three originally published in the Atlantic Monthly was reprinted, in London, in 1861.)

3. On the Various Contrivances by which British and Foreign Orchids are fertilized by Insects, and on the Good Effects of Inter-crossing, Lon., 1862, 8vo, 2d ed., 1877.
 (In which the word "On" is omitted from the title.) 1877.
 "The mass of detail here accumulated round a single subject strikingly illustrates the luxuriant nature of Mr. Darwin's investigations, and the laborious patience with which some six thousand species of Orchids are absolutely dependent upon the agency of insects for their fertilization. It is to say, were these plants unvisited by insects, they would all rapidly disappear. . . . Mr. Darwin reads a valuable chapter on the Homologies of Orchids."—Sat. Rev., xiv, 186.

4. The Movements and Habits of Climbing Plants, (reprinted from the Journal of the Linnaean Society, vol. ix.) Lon., 1865, 8vo; 2d ed. rev., 1875.
 "Readers of this fascinating treatise will learn, first of all, that the sun has no influence over such movements directly, and that its indirect influence is commonly diverse or disturbing, except the heat, which quickens and stimulates it as does animal life. Also, that climbing is accomplished by powers and actions as unlike those generally professed to exist in the vegetable kingdom as any which we have been brought to view in the preceding volume." [Reprinted from the Nation, January 13, 1876.]

5. The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. Illust. Lon., 1868, 2 vols, 8vo; 2d ed., rev., 1875, 1 vol.

"Mr. Darwin's recent volumes are not of a nature to stirle either friends or foes of the peculiar philosphical theory which has of late years been associated with his name. . . . They are remarkable for the profusion and the skill with which he has brought them together, upon his fundamental hypothesis. . . . Those who shrink with the most suspicion or dread from the author's allured satisfaction and profit in the stores of information as they exist."—Sat. Rev., xxv, 358.

6. The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex. Illust. Lon., 1871, 2 vols, 8vo; 2d ed., 1874, 1 vol.; new ed., 17th thousand, 1883.
 "Never, perhaps, in the history of philosophy, have such wide generalizations been derived from such a small basis of fact. Mr. Darwin's theory of the growth of the opinion sense and of the intellectual faculty is unsupported by any proof; and, the very cornerstone of the hypothesis, that the human mind is identical in kind with that of the brutes, is a mere assumption, opposed alike to experience and philosophy."—Edin. Rev., cxxxiv, 32.

"The effect of Mr. Darwin's long-expected and lately-published volumes will not be so much to startle friend or date to fortify, and to push to a conclusion the scheme of ideas which the world has learned for years to associate with his name. . . . His conclusions now go the length of himself of the outset of his speculations. He claims to within that unity which he had previously sought to trace through all lower animal forms. . . . The growth of opinion in the human mind, due in chief measure to his own intervention, has placed the discussion of this problem
 . . . Mr. Darwin's object in the present work is to establish a general survey of his whole nature, the evidence of some pre-existing form; secondly, the manner of his development; and, thirdly, the value of the difference between the so-called races of man. . . . The intellectual deduction may almost compensate many minds for the shock which his ultimate conclusion will inflict on them."
 —Sat. Rev., xxxii, 276.

7. The Expression of the Emotions in Man and Animals; with Photographic and other Illustrations, Lon., 1872, p. 8vo. (More than 5000 copies were sold on the day of publication, but so large a reprint was issued that a revised edition, for which materials had been collected, was never called for.)

"His leading idea is that of tracing the law of Evolution as displayed in, or accounting for, the expression of the articulate language, as it has been called, of the emotions.
 . . . As a kind of supplement of parvorum to his more found or systematic studies, as well as containing inexplicable matter of novel suggestion and various thought, this little work will be found well worthy of the writer's name."—Sat. Rev., xxxiv, 633.

8. Insectivorous Plants, Lon., 1875, 8vo.
 "Before the experiments made by Mr. Darwin, no such power as that of true digestion was known to exist in the vegetable kingdom."—Sat. Rev., xl, 304.

"Mr. Darwin's book may be held upon as a model of what a treatise should be that is addressed to intelligent readers, acquaintance with the matter under consideration.
 Fact is added to fact, inference to inference, till at length the body of evidence, direct and indirect, becomes so ing Mr. Darwin's conclusions as there is for a by-escape sundew."—Ath. Soc., 240.

9. The Effects of Cross- and Self-Fertilization in the Vegetable Kingdom, Lon., 1876, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1878.
 10. The Different Forms of Flowers of Plants of the Same Species, Lon., 1877, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1880.
 "This book of Mr. Darwin's is a specimen of what, at first sight, may seem one of the most insignificant as well as the driest of scientific investigations; but it is another and experiment for which its author is so remarkable, which evolves from the most obscure corners of creation
 what may yet prove to be great results."—Spectator, II, 183.

"He has brought together, with his wonted industry and patience, an immense array of facts; . . . and he may be held to have satisfactorily established the preliminary truth that differently-formed flowers are actually produced upon plants of the same stock. But he has hardly shown his habitual grasp of the problem in which he has shown general law of evolution, or upon that specific law of beneficent arrangement which he has taught us to read in nature."—Sat. Rev., xlv, 21.

11. The Power of Movement in Plants. Illust. 1880,
 p. 8vo; new ed., 1881.
 "Mr. Darwin has in the quietude of his hot-house, and meditated upon the vital organism of plants, seconded by an infusing energy of his son. Night and day seem to have come alike to the aid of this enthusiastic pair of naturalists. The electric light has served them on the failure of the sun's beams, and has, in truth, opened up of itself a wholly new field for observation as regards the agency of light upon the phenomena of life."—Sat. Rev., li. 57.

12. The Formation of Vegetable Mould through the Action of Worms: with Observations on their Habits, Lon., 1881, p. 8vo; 6th thousand, corrected, 1882.

"With the absolute simplicity and frankness which constitute the chief literary merit of his books, he reconstrues the observations, scattered now over fifty years, which he has made upon the habits of earthworms, the amount of fine earth brought up by worms to the surface, the part which worms have played in the burial of ancient buildings, and the action of worms in the denudation of the land."—Ath., No. 2816.

GENERAL CRITICISMS:

"In respect of the great problems of Philosophy, the post-Darwinian generation is, in one sense, exactly where the pre-Darwinian generations were. They remain insoluble. But the present generation has the advantage of being better provided with the means of freeing itself from the tyranny of certain shams solutions. The known is finite, the unknown infinite; intellectually we stand on an islet in the midst of an illimitable ocean of inexplicability. Our business in every generation is to reclaim a little more land, to add something to the extent and solidity of our possessions. And even a cursory glance at the history of the biological sciences during the last quarter of a century is sufficient to justify the assertion that the most potent instrument for the extension of the realm of natural knowledge which has come into men's hands since the publication of Newton's 'Principia,' is Darwin's 'Origin of Species.'"—T. H. HUXLEY: On the Reception of the 'Origin of Species', forming chap. xiv. of the Life of Darwin.

"The few generations out of which the theory of evolution by natural selection is formed—viz., struggle for existence, survival of the fittest, and heredity—were all previously well-known facts; and we may not unreasonably feel astonished when the somewhat apparently obvious combination of them as that which occurred to Mr. Darwin should have occurred to no one else, with the single exception of Mr. Wallace. . . . But the greatness of Mr. Darwin as the reformer of biology is not to be estimated by the fact that he conceived the idea of natural selection; his claim to everlasting memory rests upon the many years of devoted labour whereby he tested this idea in all conceivable ways,—amassing facts from every department of science, balancing evidence with the soundest judgment, striking new difficulties, and at last astonishing the world as with a revelation by publishing the completed proof of evolution."—Nature, xxvi. 99.

"Those who have watched the progress of science within the last ten years will bear me out to the full when I assert that there is no field of biological inquiry in which the influence of the 'Origin of Species' is not traceable; the foremost men of science are either avowed champions of its leading doctrines, or at any rate abstain from opposing them; a host of young and ardent investigators seek for and find inspiration and guidance in Mr. Darwin's great work; and the general doctrine of Evolution, to one side of which it gives expression, finds in the phenomena of biology a firm base of operations whence it may conduct its conquest of the whole realm of nature. History warns us, however, that it is the customary fate of new truths to begin as heresies and to end as superstitions; and, as matters now stand, it is hardly rash to anticipate that in another twenty years the new generation, educated under the influences of the present day, will be in danger of accepting the main doctrines of the 'Origin of Species' with a little reflection, and, it may be, with as little justification, as so many of our contemporaries, twenty years ago, rejected them."—T. H. HUXLEY: Nature, xxii. 1.

"Darwinian teleology has the special advantage of accounting for the imperfections and failures as well as for successes. It not only accounts for them, but turns them to practical account. It explains the seeming waste as being part and parcel of a great economical process. Without the competing multitude, no struggle for life; and without this, no natural selection and survival of the fittest, no continuous adaptation to changing surroundings, no diversification and improvement, leading from lower up to higher and nobler forms. So the most puzzling things of all to the old-school teleologists are the principles of the Darwinian."—ASL GRAY: Burtonian, 378.

"Mr. Darwin's investigation presents us with a creative force, constantly, and apparently to human eyes instinctively, producing all possible variations in the specific living forms of every kind which it has brought into existence, with a view, as it were, to see whether any of them will have the advantage over others,—creating very high forms of intellectual instinct at the very threshold of the world of life,—gradually mingling the love of beauty with the instinct of self-preservation, and fashioning out of that love of beauty some of the most wonderful of the artistic instincts of the world,—rooting, however, all its greatest achievements, both intellectual and moral, in the sense of weakness, and overcoming this sense of weakness only by the most wonderful and noble of all the forms of the universe, disinterested affection,—finally, when this moral affection is once fairly generated, gradually depriving the higher beings of the instincts by which the lower had been preserved, and giving them in the place thereof the power to create and mould their own instincts, and even to spoil and grievously sin against such instincts as were left them, if they would,—in other words, giving them love, freedom, conscience, the power to sin. Is this in any sense whatever, even conceivably, an atheistic philosophy? . . . For our own part, we find Mr. Darwin's investigation of the origin of man a far more wonderful vindication of Theism than Paley's 'Natural Theology.'"—Spectator, xlv. 311.

"The book Mr. Davis has written is not the book which real students of history would have asked him to write. They would like to have him tell the things which he knows better than other men, and of which his personal reminiscences will be original and valuable evidence. . . . Mr. Davis in his two bulky volumes throws hardly a single ray of light upon the real secrets of the great conflict."
"The work of Mr. Jefferson Davis will disappoint some readers and weary others. Those who turn to it to write for revelations will find that he has little that is new to tell, while those who hope to get from him a concise and clear chief will be repelled by the vast amount of dissertation with which he cumberes his pages. . . . His work will not vindicate him from the charge of blundering or folly; it will not raise him in the opinion of his fellow-citizens in the North; but every impartial reader must recognize the ability with which it is composed, the sincerity with which his opinions are held and the good faith with which they are set forth, and the value which it possesses as the authentic commentary on the most momentous episode in the history of the United States."—Atk., No. 2769.

"Mrs. Davis's stories are habitually spoken of as 'earnest works.' . . . Their pretensions are something very different from those of the simple novel of entertainment, of character, and of incident. The writer takes life desperately hard, and looks upon the world with a sentimentality—we may even say, a tearful-eye. The other novel—the objective novel, as we may call it for convenience—appeals to the reader's sense of beauty, his idea of form and proportion, his humanity in the broadest sense. Mrs. Davis's tales and those of her school appeal, we may say, to the conscience, to the sense of right and wrong, to the instincts of charity and patronage. She aims at instructing us, purifying us, stirring up our pity. Writers of the other school content themselves with exciting our curiosity."—Nation, vii, 320.

He drew up the programme of the Irish Nationalist Land League, which was formed in 1879. Leaves from a Prison Diary; or, lectures to a "Solitary" Audience, Lon., 1884, 2 vols. p. 8vo; new ed., 1 vol., 1883.

"The work is divided into three parts. The first deals wholly with prison experiences. . . the second treats of the causes which produce a criminal class, and suggests remedies. . . and, lastly, there is a section occupied exclusively with Irish political matter.—How Ireland is ruled and ruled, and 'How the Anglo-Irish Problem might be solved.' . . In all three parts, however diverse the subject, the treatment of the matter in hand is thoughtful, temperate, and dignified."—ibid., No. 2385.

Dawkins, William Boyd, F.R.S., F.G.S., b. 1838, at Welshpool, Montgomeryshire, Wales; was educated at Jesus College, Oxford, where he was the first holder of a geological scholarship founded by the Baroness Hurdlet-Coutts, and graduated 1860. He was appointed geologist to the Geological Survey of Great Britain in 1867, and in 1874 became professor of geology in Owens College, Manchester. In 1882 he was one of the committee of scientific men appointed to inquire into the scheme of the Channel Tunnel, and was intrusted with the geological survey of the French and English coasts. He has contributed numerous papers to the Proceedings of the Geological, Anthropological, and Royal Societies, relating chiefly to fossil mammalia, and is best known by his researches on the remains discovered in caves in the south of France. He visited the United States in 1880, and lectured before the Lowell Institute in Boston. 1. Cave-Hunting: Researches on the Evidences of Caves respecting the Early Inhabitants of Europe. Illustrated by Coloured Plates and Wood-Cuts. Lon., 1874, 8vo.

"Mr. Dawkins divides his subject under two heads, Physical and Biological; the first treating of the relation of caves to general physical geography, especially to that of the calcareous strata; the second, of their animal contents."—Ath., No. 2158.

"No one has gone more thoroughly than Professor Dawkins into the details of the succession of animal life in England since the Miocene period, and the bearing of this evidence on the antiquity of man. . . . He is less disposed than most cave-hunters to worship their special idols of the cave. But when he comes out into the open, and takes to looking ethnologically at the people of the land, he is somewhat apt to set up 'Idols of the tribe' and pay them reverence."—Spectator, xlvii, 1568.

2. Early Man in Britain, and his Place in the Tertiary Period. Illust. Lon., 1880, 8vo.

"Professor Boyd Dawkins has sought to bring to a common focus the rays of light shed upon the primordial stage of human life by the sciences of geology, prehistoric archaeology, and history. . . . With the materials thus accumulated the archaeologist may claim to have established, as our author does in his preliminary remarks, a tolerably complete sequence of events from the remote past in which man stands in the geological foreground down to the borders of written history."—Sat. Rev., xlix, 827.

"The weight of learning in its pages is by no means oppressive, since it is relieved by a pleasant style of writing, not common, it is said to say, in works on solid science."—Ath., No. 2739.

"Mr. Dawson is careful to disclaim literary pretensions for his matter, which the reader will feel to be but a labour of real love. . . . Mr. Dawson states that he was moved to undertake his task by the conviction that only one who knew not merely the events of Hannington's career, but the man himself—who was familiar with the springs of his inner nature,—was qualified to tell the story of his life. . . . "He discourses of individualities as diverse as those of Queen Elizabeth and John Bunyan, Dean Swift and Thomas Hood, Cromwell and Cowper, and seems so much at home with all of them that we incline to think of each in turn as the friend he would single out from all the rest as the boon companion of his spirit. . . . The volume is full of capital examples of the art of putting things."—Acad., xxx, 365.

"What Sir Roderick Murchison's well-known labours did a generation back for the Maritima system of Western Britain the careful work of Dr. J. W. Dawson may be said to have done for the geological structure and remains of the maritime Provinces of British North America. . . . Bearing its bearing upon theoretical and general geology, the work has a high local and economical value inasmuch as the mineral and other sources of wealth with which the Acadian soil is essentially rich."—*Sat. De Forest, John William, (ante, vol. i., add.)
b. 1826, at Humphreysville, (now Seymour.) Conn.
Part of his early life was spent abroad, where he became a proficient in modern languages. He served throughout the civil war, commanding a company of Connecticut volunteers, and leaving the army with the brevet rank of major. After the war he remained for a time in the army as adjutant-general of the veteran reserve-corps, and afterwards as chief of a district under the Freed-man's Bureau. Since 1868 he has resided chiefly in New Haven. He has contributed a large number of short stories, military sketches, and reviews to the Atlantic Monthly and other periodicals. 1. Seacliff; or,

"It is a picture of the military service in the Department of the Gulf, a novel of the war, that we think best of the book. So considered, . . . it is a poor novel with a great deal of good in it."—Nation, iv, 491.

7. The Bloody Chasm: a Novel, N. York, 1881, 16mo; new ed., entitled "The Oldest of Courtships; or, The Bloody Chasm," 1882.

"Mr. De Forest has many of the necessary qualifications of a good novelist. His plots are always interesting, and uncertainty is carried out to the end of the book in a pleasing manner. There is a profound conviction of a happy issue and alarm at the dangers that encompass the tortured hero and heroine. His characters are sharply and humorously drawn, and, if they often lack those higher qualities that make people interesting in stories and in real life, they have certainly the merit of distinctness.
They make an impression as of people whom we have recently met, or persons at once so true, so good, that he repents as never dull, and the little side-remarks . . . are often quite amusing."—Nation, xiv, 189.

4. The Vision of Esther; a Sequel to "The Vision of Ninrod," N. York, 1882, 12mo. 5. The Love-Poems of Louis Barnaval, [pseud.]. Edited, with an Introduction, by Charles De Kay. N. York, 1883, cr. 8vo.

"This remarkable volume takes a stride so far in advance of anything yet done by Mr. De Kay that we can hardly wonder at the acceptance by the public of the 'Louis Barnaval' authorship."—Nation, xxxvii, 387.

"Charles De Kay is . . . conspicuous for height of aim, and certainly for most resolute purpose. . . . 'Hesperus' and the 'Poems of Barnaval' show his impassioned and more subjective moods, and his resources for a prodigious display of varied, uneven, but often strongly effective lyrical work."—STEDMAN: Poets of America, 442.

"The author was a native of Queen's County, connected with the aristocracy of the colony, and one of the judges of the supreme court of the province just before and during the war. . . . Coming as an heirloom into the possession of the late Bishop De Lancey, the manuscript was left by him to his son, under whose judicious care it is now edited. . . . Our author's simple rule discards language; his censure is all for liberals, his praise all for Tories; nor does station silence his reviling, nor sex check his insinuations. . . . The pains and research bestowed upon the notes, making them far the most interesting part of the publication, deserve hearty praise."—Astoria, xxviii, 420.

"sweet, calm, and unassertive."—Sat. Rev., lxxvi, 360.

"There is something more than promise in Mrs. Deland's work; her touch is already sure, her color-sense fine, and the quality of her verse indicates no inconsiderable amount of discipline in her art."—Critic, vii, 68.

2. John Ward, Preacher, Bost., 1888, 12mo.

"In 'John Ward, Preacher,' the author has given a picture of that ram avis, a logical Calvinist. . . . John Ward's concerns, however, are not the only, perhaps not the main, interest of the book. The village of Ashtut supplies some charming scenes of country life, drawn with tender grace and quaintness in which the poet of 'The Old Garden' dipped an earlier pen. . . . About the village spinsters and the elderly village teacher and the loves and rivalries and uncompleted lives of Ashtut, hangs an old-time fragrance, as of a grandmother's rose-jar, but only a modern novelist (or a Greek poet) could have stated and felt unsolved so many questions touching on tragedy."—Astoria, xli, 330.

"There is a wonderful harmony in the book. The tide of carnival flows ceaselessly through it, with the booming music, the swift, fantastic, whirling rush, of the opening char. Images press, associations swarm, sounds are multitudinous, there are dash and glitter everywhere, and one is fairly smothered in flowers and garlands, bewildered and deflated by the mixture of good and bad taste, and delicate definition of sentiment and vulgar darning, the piling-up of epithets, the attractiveness of some and the repulsiveness of other sentiments, the inventiveness of art which first describes a beautiful object beautifully and then spoils the effect by likening it to something else."—

"Not only does the interest of the tale never flag, but there is scarcely a page which does not contain either some fine bit of description of animate or inanimate nature, some clever touch which shows how thoroughly she understands Italian men and women of the class she has undertaken to portray, or some scrap of prose which is a reminiscence of times gone by, or a peep into the artworld of the present day."—Spectator, xviii, 1067.

12. In a Winter City; a Sketch, Lon., 1876, p. 8vo.;

"Ouida's new story is perhaps the best of her many and meritorious works. It is in one volume, which is much, and the style is comparatively subdued. . . . The virtue ground, her scenery is less lush, less overgrown with violets, maudlin, rhododendrons, and so on, than usual, instead, her style is decidedly chastened. Unfortunately, her theme is not so very chaste."—A. LANG; Aquat, mune*, Lon., 1881, 2 vols. 8vo. 18. In Maremma,

"The book now to be considered makes her genius apparent in the powerful and pathetic story which she tells of an Italian girl, possessed of great beauty and a strength of character, who takes up her abode alone in an almost entirely upon roots, berries, and bread which she crushe-herself out of wild oats, exists in a Robinson-like sort of fashion, and has strange adventures.
Her character, way of life, and hereinafter strength appear probably equally improbable; but the reader is too much interested to take exception to that, and no more interference of fables, gnomes, and elves spoils the pleasure of a child deep in some of Hans Andersen's creations."—

"This is one of the books which stir up the wrath of the historian. . . . A fragment of history, however short, with the evidence for it, is something. A genuine local tradition, true or false, is also something. An avowedly fictitious story, well told, is also something in a third way.

Denison, Ven. George Anthony, (ante, vol. i., n.d.), b. 1805, at Oseington, Nottinghamshire, Eng.; brother of the late J. Evelyn Denison, Viscount Oseington, and of the late Edward Denison, D.D., Bishop of Salisbury, (q. v., ante, vol. i.) He was educated at Eton, and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated with honors in classics in 1826; was elected Fellow of Oriel College in 1828; became curate of Cuddesdon, Oxfordshire, in 1832, vicar of Broadwinor, Dorset, in 1838, and vicar of East Brent, Somerset, in 1845. On his presentation to the latter vicarage he was made examining chaplain to the Bishop of Bath and Wells, who in 1851 advanced him to the archdeaconry of Taunton. He resigned his chaplaincy in 1853 on account of a charge of unsound doctrine which was made, and preached as his defence three sermons on "The Real Presence," which led to his being deprived for a time of his ecclesiastical preferments by judgment of a court presided over by the Archbishop of Canterbury. The judgment was set aside by the judicial committee of the Privy Council in 1858. The following is a selection from the list of his numerous publications, which are chiefly addresses, letters, single sermons, charges, &c. 1. "Nature's Secrets; or, Psychometric Researches; with an Introduction by a Clergyman of the Church of England.")

"Something new has turned up in the wonderful spiritualist world. It is called Psychometry, and means a serpentine power possessed by people who are termed psychom-eters, which enables them, when any piece of matter is placed in contact with them, to see all that has ever happened to that piece of matter. . . . So far as is yet known, almost all psychometers are American ladies. The greatest are Mrs. Denton, wife of Mr. Denton, a lecturer on geology, Mrs. Lucille De Viel, of Pultneyville, Wayne Co., N.Y., and only goes to the sensation of travelling while doing so, the kindness of nature as some compensation for her extraordinary name."—Nat. Rev., xvi. 584.

Deutsch, Emanuel Oscar Menahem, 1829-1873, best known as Silesia, Germany; was educated by his uncle, David Deutsch, a learned rabbi, who trained him in Talmudic lore, and at the University of Berlin, where he supported himself by writing Jewish poems and stories for periodicals. In 1855 he was appointed to a post at the British Museum, which he retained till his death, which took place at Alexandria, after a short tour up the Nile made in search of health. He had visited

1 Palestine in 1869. His article on the Talmud in the Quarterly Review for October, 1867, had established his reputation as the foremost Talmudic scholar of his day, and his deep research were added a reverence for the past given rise to the impression that he suggested to George Eliot the character of Mordecai in Daniel Deronda. Literary Remains, with a Brief Memoir, [by Lady Strangford,] Lon., 1871, 8vo.

"His true place in Hebrew scholarship was to have been decisively established by a great work, never completed, the treatise: on Pseudepigraphical Inscriptions, the Moulton Stone, &c., demonstrate an epigraphist of a high order, and his numerous articles on Semitic subjects in the "Saturday Review," "Athenaeum," and other journals, reveal extensive reading and wide grasp of Oriental history and philology. In whatever he wrote his vividly poetic nature asserted itself; his prose is the prose of a poet and musician."—STANLEY LANE-Poole: Out of the Past, xiv, 123.

"The thesis of his book, so far as there is one, is that the pre-Christian family exhibits a scene of progressive degeneration, which is repeated, with the prospect not yet deeper in blank, among the French and English peasantry, and in New England."—Ibid., xxx, 402.

Mr. Devas has gathered together a great deal of interesting information on the various constitutions of the human family at different times among the white and yellow races of mankind. While he undoubtedly possesses many qualifications for the historical investigation of this important subject, he has preferred to treat it in a dogmatic rather than a strictly scientific spirit; he uses history to illustrate and enforce the Christian doctrine of family relationship."—Historical Review, No. 6.

De Vere, Aubrey Thomas, [ante, vol. III, VENE, (ante, vol. I.) b. 1814, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin. He has written largely upon Irish themes. About 1851 he became a Roman Catholic. He was an intimate friend, as well as a connection by marriage, of Sir Henry Taylor. The following list of his works is believed to be complete. Some of those which are mentioned ante, vol. III, and under the name of his father, vol. I, are there erroneously ascribed to the latter. 1. PRACTICAL WORKS: 1. The Waldenses; or, The Fall of Rora; a Lyric Tale; with other Poems, Oxf., 1812, 1p. 8vo. 2. The Search after Proserpine, Recollections of Greece, and other Poems, Oxf., 1813, 1p. 4. May Carols, Lon., 1837; new ed., 1881, 5. (Ed.) Select Specimens of the English Poets; with Biographical Notices, Lon., 1858, 12mo; new ed., 1861, 6. The Infant Lullaby, and other Poems, [collected], Lon., 1864, 12mo. 8. Such Odes, and other Poems, Lon., 1869, or. 9. The Legends of St. Patrick, Lon., 1872, 12mo.

"I thank verse, in which his book is chiefly written, with its vast compass and infinite variety, too mighty an instrument for his hand. Yet true glimpses of nature, 481 picturesqueness, imagination, and even music, may be found in his principal poems.—Ath., No. 2332.

 "He has given us a series of paintings in which the great missionary is no isolated and supernatural figure, but most human."—Sat. Rev., xxxiv. 541.

10. Alexander the Great: a Dramatic Poem, Lon., 1874, 12mo.
 "It will compare with Sir Henry Taylor's fine drama of 'Phillip van Artevelde,' as well in general power as in the delicacy of the minutest elements of its workmanship."—Spectator, xlviii. 757.

11. St. Luoman of Canterbury: a Dramatic Poem, Lon., 1876, 12mo. 12. Antar and Zara, an Eastern Romance; Inisfall; and other Poems, Lon., 1877, 12mo. 13. Legends of the Saxon Saints, Lon., 1879, 12mo.

"The blank verse which rehearses these exploits is frequently vigorous, at times picturesque, some of the small dramatic touches being admirable; but when an occasion offers which demands fervour and brilliancy of imagination, Mr. De Vere too often loses its poetry and limits himself to little more than dry chronicle."—Ath., No. 2701.

"A book of much reflective beauty, in which we find, if not precisely a picture of the age to which it relates, at least a picture of the type of mind which diffused the finest spiritual leaven of that age."—Spectator, lii. 1103.

14. The Foray of Queen Meave, and other Legends of Ireland's Heroic Age, Lon., 1882, 12mo.

"In this volume Mr. De Vere attempts to do for the heroic lore of the Celt what Mr. William Morris has successfully accomplished for that of the Teuton."—Ath., No. 2869.

(Contains essays on Wordsworth, Landor, Shelley, Keats, Spenser, on "Subjective Difficulties in Religion," &c.)

"If his writing is not marked by that unity of purpose, by that desire of the critic to keep his eye always on the object, and to concentrate his analysis, which is to be found in the school of literary criticism which looks to France for its methods, but prefers to lead the reader by more labyrinthine paths to the full appreciation of some poet's beauties, it is none the less pleasant and delightful. . . . By far the most important of the literary studies are those that treat of Wordsworth and his poetry."—Spectator, lxi. 171.

"Though holding but a subordinate rank, . . . Mr. Devereux was as qualified as any official of higher authority could be to note and record the facts which meet the eye, and to afford us the means of forming at least an approximate judgment upon them. . . . Our author's trip in company with Dr. Livingston seems to have impressed him with the idea that the great traveller is one of the most changeable and easily led of mortals."—Sat. Rev., xxxiv. 296.

Devey, Louisa. Life of Rosina, Lady Lytton; with Numerous Extracts from the MS. Autobiography and other Original Documents; published in vindication of her Memory, Lon., 1887, 8vo.

"If one tithe of the statements contained in this volume are true, Lady Lytton was for years the victim of cruel and persistent persecution. Many of the details must be regarded as proved beyond dispute. As a wife she was deeply wronged; but even the bitterest provocation will not suffice to excuse the course of conduct which she pursued. . . . In her vindication of her heroine Miss Devey has overshoot the mark. She relies implicitly on Lady Lytton's own evidence, as given in her diaries, letters, or an autobiography and unpublished MS. called 'Genesis.' No impartial person can fail to see that much of this evidence is extremely high-coloured."—Ath., No. 3108.

"No work has issued from the American press for many years embodying the result of more diligent and intelligent research than this massive volume. . . . Dickens, Charles, [ante, vol. i., add.] 1812-1870, ("entered in the baptismal register of Portsea as Charles John Huffham, though on the very rare occasions when he subscribed that name he wrote Huffam.") In the year 1828, to which the latest entries in vol. i. belong, Dickens began the course of public readings from his works, which was continued at intervals, during the twelve remaining years of his life, in London and the provinces, and in 1867-68 in many of the principal towns of the United States. In the same year he separated from his wife, and took steps for severing his connection with Household Words, which in the following year was discontinued, and followed by the establishment of All the Year Round. In 1860 he sold his residence in London, "Tavistock House," and established his permanent residence at Gadshill. His incessant labors and multifarious activity are supposed to have hastened his death, which occurred very suddenly, though not without premonitory symptoms throughout all his late years. His popularity as a writer seems to have suffered no diminution, at least in the twelve years succeeding his death, during which period the sale of his works in England amounted to 4,279,000 volumes. The following list includes the books mentioned ante, vol. i., where very few dates are appended. "It would, of course, be against all experience to suppose that to future generations Dickens, as a writer, will be all that he was to his own. Much that constitutes the subject or at least furnishes the background, of his pictures of English life, . . . has vanished, or is being 'improved off' the face of the land. The form, again, of Dickens's principal works may become obsolete, as it was in a sense already. He was the most popular novelist of his day; but should prose fiction, or even the full and florid species of it which has enjoyed so long-lived a favour, ever be out of season, the popularity of Dickens's books must experience an inevitable diminution. . . . Nature, when she gifted Dickens with sensibility, observation, and imagination, had bestowed upon him yet another boon in the quality which seems more prominent than any other in his whole being. The vigour of Dickens—a mental and moral vigour supported by a splendid physical organism—was the parent of some of his fables; amongst the rest, of his tendency to exaggeration. . . . But without this vigour he could not have been creative as he was; and in him there were accordingly united with rare completeness a swift responsiveness to the impulses of humour and pathos, an inexhaustible fertility in discovering and inventing materials for their exercise, and the constant creative desire to give to these newly-created materials a vivid plastic form."—A. The papers with which he deals had been arranged by Mathews himself."—A. D., No. 307.

Dickinson, Miss Anna Elizabeth, b. 1812, near Philadelphia, Pa.; was educated at the schools of the Society of Friends, and began about 1857 to write for anti-slavery papers, and to speak before a society devoted to anti-slavery interests, known as the "Progressive Friends." During the civil war she lectured on war topics in different cities, and later on "Reconstruction," on "Women's Work," and other social subjects. She has written three plays,—"A Crown of Thorns" (1876), in which she acted herself, "Aurorian," from which she has given readings, and "An American Girl,"—and has contributed to periodicals. 1. Thoughts on Woman and her Education, Lon., 1861, 12mo. 2. What Answer? [a novel.] Bost., 1868, 16mo. 3. A Paying Investment, Bost., 1870. 4. A Rugged Register, of People, Places, and Opinions, N. York, 1873, sq. 16mo. "Miss Dickinson's title well enough describes her book. It is a record of her wanderings to and fro in the United States, well spiced with reflections, and it is ragged!"—Nation, xxix, 162.

Dilke, Charles Wentworth, [ante, vol. i, add.] 1789-1864. The Papers of a Critic: selected from the Writings of the late Charles Wentworth Dilke; with a Biographical Sketch by his Grandson, Sir Charles Wentworth Dilke, Bart., M.P., Lon., 1875, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The Papers of a Critic" are mainly occupied with an attempt to prove who was not Junius. This applies to the second volume only; the first is "occupied chiefly with Pope."—Sat. Rev., xi, 208.

(The memoir prefixed to the reprinted papers contains matter in reference to a great number of literary people, especially Kents, some of whose letters were first printed in this work. See Athenaeum, No. 2488.)

Dilke, Sir Charles Wentworth, Bart., LL.B., b. 1843, in London; son of the late Sir Charles Wentworth Dilke, and grandson of Charles Wentworth Dilke, supra. He graduated as head of the Law Tripos at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, in 1866; was called to the bar of the Middle Temple 1866; elected M.P. for the borough of Chelsea 1868, and re-elected 1874; was appointed under-secretary of state for foreign affairs in 1880; became president of the local government board, with a seat in the cabinet, 1882. In 1883-86 his name was before the public in connection with the divorce case of Crawford v. Crawford, and in 1886 he lost his seat in Parliament and retired from public life. 1. Greater Britain: a Record of Travel in English-Speaking Countries during 1866 and 1867. Maps and Illust. "The defects of Mr. Dilke's work are a certain excess of statement, a considerable crudity of opinion as to the principles which govern the formation of societies, some naivety to believe in the grandeur of England because you barbarians in Nevada or Colorado. Its merits are that it is written in a lively and agreeable style, that it implies a show an acute and highly intelligent observer, that it stimulates the imagination; as well as the judgment of the reader, and that it is, or perhaps the most interesting subject that can attract an Englishman who cares about his country."—*Sat. "Provided with a mass of information and professional opinion, he supports his statements of military weakness with facts the truth of which cannot be gainsaid. When, however, he comes to remedies, his lack of professional training leads him, in our opinion, occasionally into error. . . . Sir Charles Dilke would have two armies—a long-service one for India and the East, and a short-service one valuable, practical, and pregnant for . . . a most else, it will instruct the public and give the authorities cause for reflection."—Ath., No. 3122.

Disraeli, Benjamin, Earl of Beaconsfield, [ante, vol. i, add.] 1804-1881. In February, 1858, Mr. Disraeli became chancellor of the exchequer for the second time, resigning with the rest of the ministry in June, 1859, and remaining in opposition till July, 1860, when becoming chancellor of the exchequer, and in February, 1868, succeeded Lord Derby as premier. On the defeat of the government in the general election of that year he resigned office, in December, without waiting for Parliament to assemble. In February, 1874, his party returned to power with an immense Parliamentary majority, and its six years' tenure of office, with Disraeli at its head, was distinguished by a bolder and more active foreign policy than that of any former administration for a long period, leading to the treaty of Berlin, 1878, and a new invasion of Afghanistan, and exciting a strong agitation and conflict of opinion at home, the final result being the overthrow of the government in April, 1880, when the prime minister retired from office with the title of Earl of Beaconsfield, and his political career, one of the most extraordinary in English history, came to an end. 1. "The controversial part of the book is subordinate to the decorative effects in which Mr. Disraeli delights as heartily as when Lord Cochrane, five-and-twenty years ago, visited Rafael Mendosa at his sumptuous palace in Holywell Street. The true precursor of the author of 'Lothair' was the biographer of Aladdin. . . . There is always something attractive in the preservation through maturity of the innocent tastes of early life; and it is pleasant to find that Mr. Disraeli still cherishes the dazed illusions which fascinated his youth."—*Sat. "As a story the book will probably be found disappointing. . . . Vividly as the figures are for the moment brought before the reader, they come somewhat like shadows and so they depart. . . . It is excellently written, and the author has never so fully proved himself able to produce quiet, graceful English prose. It is full of epigrammatic turns of thought and speech, less ostentatiously sparkling than of old, perhaps, but still of the old stamp."—Ath., No. 2776.

"It enables the reader to form a just estimate of the most brilliant debater of his day, and to study the several phases of his development as an artist in speech. . . . The speeches contained in it have one and all the virtue—not common in displays of oratory—of being eminently readable."—Ath., No. 2834.

"That Mr. Dixon has admirers is plain. . . . What kind of people they can be who are not disgusted with his senseless false glare and glitter, with his constant sacrifice of truth and sense to mere sound, is beyond our power of guessing."—Sat. Rev., xxxvii, 532.

Dobson, Henry Austin, b. 1810, at Plymouth, Eng.; son of George Clarisse Dobson, a civil engineer; was intended for his father's profession, and was educated in Wales and at Strasburg, but on returning to England in 1836 he gave up that profession, and was appointed to a clerkship in the Board of Trade, which he has retained ever since. He began to write for St. Paul's Magazine in 1838, and under the editorship of Anthony Trollope in 1848, and has also contributed to the Cornhill and other English magazines and to the Century and Harper's Magazine. He was one of the first to introduce into English poetry the old French lyrical forms. 1. Vignettes in Rhyme and Vers de So- ciété, Lon., 1873; 2d ed., 1874, 12mo. 2. The Civil

2d ed., 1879, or 8vo. 3. Proverbs in Prose and in other Verses, Lon., 1877, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1878.

"It is too bad. Mr. Dobson can give us something better than this. . . . It is not of the poet's words that we have to complain, but of the present instance the rhymes are almost faultlessly, annoyingly finished,—but of the absence of thought to inhabit the words."—Spectator, 1879.

5. (Ed.) Eighteenth Century Essays: Selected and Annotated, ("Parliament" Lib.), Lon., 1882, p. 8vo.

"His text is an example of accuracy and neatness. His notes are apt and pertinent. His introductory essay is clearly and gracefully written. . . . Mr. Dobson has wisely sensibly confined to sketches of character and manners, and those chiefly of the humorous kind."—ibid., No. 2838.

previously published in America, chiefly from "Vignettes in Rhyme" and "Proverbs in Prose.") These volumes being out of print.) 8. Fielding, ("English Men of Letters,") Lon., 1883, p. 8vo.

"His design has been to exhibit Fielding, not himself;
to tell the story of Fielding's life, so far as the very scanty materials available for such a tale have allowed him; without putting at every possible or impossible opportunity his own views either as critic or moralist."—ibid., No. 2839.

"Mr. Dobson's volume is, we think, more painstaking than attractive."—Spectator, xl. 111.

9. Thomas Bewick and his Pupils. Illustr. Lon., 1884, sq. 16mo.

"Mr. Dobson's high appreciation of Bewick and his innate love of art, together with his literary power, combine to make his book an extremely pleasant one for the reader. . . . He has access to the best sources of information now available, and gives us many facts not previously known."—Sat. Rev., xviii, 411.

10. At the Sign of the Lyre, Lon., 1885, 18mo. (This volume contains poems reprinted from "Vignettes in Rhyme" and "Proverbs in Porcelain," with others republished from magazines.)

"On the whole, we prefer it even to the author's 'Old-World Idylls.' Mr. Dobson has a niche of his own in England's Poets' Corner, and is not, we venture to think, wholly mortal."—Sat. Rev., ix, 656.

11. Sir Richard Steele, ("English Worthies,") Lon., 1886, p. 8vo.

"No living writer is better qualified than Mr. Dobson, by his knowledge of the period and by the love of it, to write the life of Steele. . . . His monograph is full of matter, keen in criticism, brilliant in execution, and not likely to be superseded."—Spectator, lxx, 153.

12. Life of Oliver Goldsmith, ("Great Writers,") Lon., 1887, 12mo. He has also edited Selected Poems of Oliver Goldsmith: with an Introduction, Oxf., 1881, 12mo.

GENERAL CRITICISMS:

"He reigns where Prior and Præd have reigned before him, and this is no little thing to say of any man. . . . He is not merely a writer of vers de société; he is a fabulist, a dramatist in genre, a lyric pure and simple. The only occasion upon which he seems to me to fail are those in which he attempts the romantic and heroic styles. . . . But in his own way, how perfect an artist, how exquisite a seer; passing lightly over the surface of things. . . . and touching the harmonious frivolities of by-gone times as the flingers of some naestros might lightly run over the keys of an old-fashioned harpsichord."—E. Lon., 1863, p. 8vo; numerous later editions.

"So much clever and yet genuine fun in the letter-press, and so much grace and humour in the illustrations, have never before been found within the compass of the same volume. The sweet figure of little Alice contrasts delightfully all through the book with the funny creatures and people she encounters in her most exciting journey; and as she never makes a slip in her manners or loses her sense of propriety in the most trying situations, her story may be considered as strictly moral as it is exquisitely humorous."—Spectator, xxxix. 136.

Mohammed, Buddha, and Christ: Four Lectures on Natural and Revealed Religion, Lon., 1877, p. 8vo; new ed., 1887.

"The author seems to have selected Moslemism, Buddhism, and Christianity as typical or representative examples of three leading phases of religious growth and belief, rather on the principle of analyzing and discriminating between their essential differences, than upon that which forms the aim of most of the able investigators of comparative theology now so numerous.—the tracing of their mutual analogies and resemblances."—Spectator, li. 29.

Donnet, Alfred, C.M.G., 1811-1887, b. at Cranberwell Grove, Surrey, Eng.; studied at St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1829-33, but left without graduating; travelled in Europe and America, and contributed poems to Blackwood's Magazine, including A Christmas Hymn, which attracted much attention. He was called to the bar in 1841, and in 1842 emigrated to New Zealand, his departure from England being mourned by his intimate friend Robert Browning in the poem entitled Waring. He filled in succession nearly all the chief administrative offices in New Zealand, including that of secretary to the colony, (1851), and that of prime minister, (1862-63.) In 1871 he retired from public life and returned to England. 1. Venice, [a poem.] Lon., 1839, p. 8vo. 2. Banoff and Amohia; a South-Sea Day-Dream, Lon., 1872, cr. 8vo; new ed., rev., 1883, 2 vols.

"There is power, buoyancy, intellectual subtlety, and vivid pictures enough in this book to make out a great many poems which would strike the attention of every critic with the least critical insight; but whether the whole makes a poem we are by no means sure. . . . There can be no doubt that its author is a man of great originality and buoyant imaginative life."—Spectator, xlv, 1332.

3. Flotian and Jeteam: Rhymes Old and New, Lon., 1877, sq. 16mo.

"Mr. Donnett's shorter poems resemble his long and striking New Zealand poem in this, that they are always graphic, often brilliant, and generally full of force. What, with one or two exceptions, they want is the subduing lyrical feeling which warms and modulates and breathes through the whole. . . . The key-note is not given by feeling, but by thought."—Spectator, l, 510.

"Every fresh perusal of his work only serves to show beauties not previously observed; and one does not wonder that Mr. Browning thought his 'Banoff and Amohia' a great and astonishing performance, of very varied beauty and power, or that Lord Tennyson wrote of it as possessing 'intellectual subtlety, great power of delineating delicious scenery, and imaginative fire.' In truth, it is by far the finest long poem yet written in Australasia."—Aud., xxxiv, 382.

Donaldson, John William, D.D., [ante, vol. l., add.] 1811-1861, b. in London; gained the first prize in Greek at University College, London, 1830, and was afterwards scholar at Trinity College, Cambridge, and on graduating in 1834 was elected Fellow and tutor of Trinity. From 1841 to 1851 he was head-master of King Edward's School, Bury St. Edmunds. On resigning that position he settled in Cambridge, where he won a high reputation as a tutor and classical scholar. Besides many school-books, he published: 1. The Theatre of the Greeks: a Series of Papers relating to the History and Criticism of the Greek Drama. Fourth edition: with a New Introduction and other Alterations. Cambridge, 1836, 8vo. (The earlier editions appeared under the name of the original author, P. W. Heckham. "In this remarkable work he endeavored to show that fragments of a book of Jasher are to be found throughout the Old Testament Scriptures up to the time of Solomon, and that the book was compiled in the reign of that monarch, and that its remains constitute 'the religious marrow' of the Scriptures." Professor Adis Wright praised the genuineness of the theory; Thomas Love Peacock declared that it was of itself sufficient proof of Donaldson's genius; but it seems to have been generally felt that it rests far too absolutely on "hazardous speculation."—*Richard Garnett: Dict. of Nat. "An author who takes Arabia for his field challenges it by the highest tribute we can pay Mr. Doughty to own it, with the charm of Burchard and Burton, Palgrave and Palmer, undiminished record, we judge his book to be the most remarkable record of adventure and research opportunities that has been published to this generation. He enjoyed the experience of no one of his predecessors combined. He describes the life of the nomads with a minuteness and colour that will make his work stand for the Bedouin what Lane's famous description is for the modern Egyptians, while he succeeds in carrying out individual characters from groups and classes in a way that Lane never attempted."—Spectator, lxi, 480.

"The extraordinary merits of Mr. Doughty's travels . . . may possibly, we fear, be veiled at least to the general reader by some of the lessures of their presentation. The bibes; a busy critic, with not much knowledge and little patience, might say that it is something much more like mists and gravel for the eyes than the clear and little like it is written in a most marvellous style, suggesting a mixture of Mr. William Morris, Mr. George Meredith, the late Mr. Carlyle, and the living Sir Richard Burton. . . . As for the scientific results of his work, it is sufficient to say that the recovered inscriptions were printed by the Paris Institute, that authorities like M. Renan and the Marquis de Voghe have acknowledged the light they cast on the mysterious Nabatean monarch, and the relation of its civilization to Greece on the one hand and to Islam on the other. . . . As for the book itself, we wish that it could be as valuable as a storehouse of knowledge simply cannot be."—Sat. Rev., lxx, 391.

"My chief object has been to assist those who are engaged in the work of Christian missions; but for this purpose I have endeavoured to give a full view of the language so far as I have been able to learn it; and the book is fitted to be equally useful to merchants, travellers, marines, literateurs, and students."—Author's Preface.

"The Chinese words are expressed in the Roman character, and this will undoubtedly prove to be a great drawback to the usefulness of the Dictionary. . . . Mr. Douglas holds out the hope that he may publish in a few years a key to the present work, in which he promises to supply as many of the Chinese characters as it is possible to identify. When this is done, it will, for all ordinary purposes, be the best Dictionary in the language yet published."—Sat. Rev., xxvii, 283.

Easton, Md.; was a slave on the plantation of Col. Edward Lloyd, his mother being a negro slave and his father a white man. He escaped in 1838 and went to New Bedford, Mass., where he changed his name from Lloyd to Douglass. He became an agent of the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society, and in 1845 went to Europe and lectured on slavery in the principal towns of Great Britain. In 1846 he was manumitted according to law through money subscribed in England. He was U.S. marshal for the District of Columbia 1876-81, and afterwards recorder of deeds for the District, and in 1889 was appointed minister to Hayti. 1. 7. (Ed.) The Correspondence of Robert Southey and Caroline Bowles; to which are added Correspondence with Shelley, and Southey's Dream; with an Introduction. Dublin, 1881, 8vo.

"Professor Dowden, than whom no man living, except perhaps Sir Henry Taylor, could be more fitted to execute the delicate task, has done his work of editing with all the tact and taste which can be wished. . . . It does not, indeed, shed any new light upon the character or career of Southey,—no new light was needed there,—but it gives a charming miniature study of one of those rare instances of sympathetic nature who interest us so much as the satellites of genius. Caroline Bowles demands half our attention in this book, and the other half is claimed by the singular relations between Southey and Shelley which are now for the first time revealed."—Sat. Rev., lili, 2.

"The reason why Southey's correspondence with the lady who eventually became his second wife has waited so long for publication must be taken to be that which, as Professor Dowden tells us, has hindered on the present occasion the printing of a mere selection from it, namely, the voluminous correspondence of Southey which already exists in type. . . . Miss Howles got more familiar with her patron who dropped something of the coloring at the time, developed a pleasant wit, and frequently manifested decided opinions of her own; while Southey on his side fell into the delightful vein of gossiping letter-writing which he could work when he chose, and which shows not the Southey of the Quarterly Review, but the Southey of 'The Doctor.'"—Ath., No. 2, 26.

8. (Ed.) The Sonnets of William Shakspeare, Lon., 1881, sm. 8vo; new ed., 1882.

"Professor Dowden's is the only edition of Shakspeare's sonnets with so delicately full, yet not overdone, it is the best, as containing the sonnets in a clear and most efficiently explaining the relations of the sonnets to one another and to Shakspeare."—F. J. FURNIVALL, Dent, xx, 151.

9. The Life of Percy Bysshe Shelley, Lon., 1880, 2 vols., 8vo.

"At last the world is in possession of that complete life of Shelley, smothered by his family and embosomed by their hitherto carefully reserved materials, which has often been asked for, and sometimes demanded with a certain degree of impatience. . . . By the Shelley family, the Griddle family, (Shelley's grandchildren through his first daughter, Jane), Mr. Forman, Mr. Slack, (in respect of the curious and important Hothelmer Correspondence,) and others, Professor Dowden has been furnished with matter hitherto unknown or imperfectly known; and he has made good use of it. He writes in the spirit which befits a biographer of Shelley. He believes in Shelley's poetry and his genius; discerns that his character was in some respects singularly beautiful, and his opinions ardent and sincere. If extreme, is willing to believe in his general goodness; if he can find adequate grounds for doing so; and scrutinizes the evidence in the hope of finding such grounds, but with a reluctant willingness to give judgment against him on particular points if that proves to be the only course consistent with the evidence. He dwells on nothing invidiously, but adverts on various things. . . . His essential though sympathetic moderation of tone is matched by his equanimity of language; he avoids controversy as far as possible, and is never overheated. On occasion he exhibits an incident or describes a scene with effect; but he does not strive to be incisive, or to stimulate the reader to strong and one-sided conclusions. The book is readable rather than powerful or pictorial."—Ath., No. 3, 885.

"Mr. Dowden has given us such a picture of the man as for fidelity, literariness, and fulness of detail may never be equalled. He has done everything for Shelley that industry, insight, faithfulness, and loyalty could do. But the total effect produced is not invigorating to the better part of our sympathies. . . . Notwithstanding Shelley's earnestness, his sincerity, his unselfishness, his sympathy, his tenderness, and, above all, his unexpressed charm, the story of his life is a splendid performance that is not calculated to do the world much good."—T. HALL CAYNE, Lond., xxx, 373.

10. Transcripts and Studies, Lon., 1888, p. 8vo.

"Occasionally Mr. Dowden allows the wealth of decorative language of which he is a master to get the better of him and serve as a substitute for thought; but this is not often, and for the most part his criticism is as thoughtful as it is happily expressed."—Spectator, lxxli, 294.

A little more constructive skill would have saved the bulk of the work, and a dozen or a score of volumes would have doubled its value. . . . The earlier part, to which most students will look with special interest, is meagre in the extreme."—Sat. Rev., lix, 25.

Doyle, Sir Francis Hastings Charles, Bart., D.C.L. 1810-1888, b. at Nunappleton, near Tadcaster, Yorkshire; was educated at Eton, and at Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated, first class Lit. Hum., in 1832, and was afterwards elected Fellow of All Souls College. He was called to the bar at the Inner Temple in 1837; was appointed receiver-general of customs in 1846, and a commissioner of customs in 1860. In 1867 he was elected to the chair of poetry at Oxford, which he held for ten years, being re-elected in 1872. 1. Miscellaneous Verses, Lon., 1831, 8vo; new ed., 1840. 2. 6. Lectures on Poetry, delivered before the University of Oxford in 1868, Lon., 1869, p. 8vo.

"For the most part the lectures are rightly devoted to inquiry into some of the elements of poetry. . . . They are for the most part singularly graceful in style, displaying the command of language which is best attained in prose by the sedulous cultivation of verse."—Sat. Rev., xxvii, 318.

7. Lectures on Poetry, delivered at Oxford. Second Series. Lon., 1877, 8vo.

"The most thoughtful and instructive of the lectures are devoted to the inexhaustible subject of Shakespeare."—Sat. Rev., xliii, 420.

8. Reminiscences and Opinions, 1813-1885, Lon., 1886, 8vo; 3d ed., same year.

"The best of Sir Francis Doyle's reminiscences date from a period prior to 1840. . . . He is out of sympathy with the political life of the present day, and the tone of some of his later recollections and opinions is old-fashioned, if not discomfiting. But, taking the volume as a whole, the reminiscences are those of a genial man of wide culture and broad sympathies; and they form a collection of anecdotes which, as the production of a single man, is unrivalled in interest, in variety, and in novelty."—Ath., No. 3077.

Doyle, James E. 1. A Chronicle of England, B.C. 55-A.D. 1485. (Illustrated by the Author.) Lon., 1863, r. 8vo.

"It is a volume which, both in its text and in its illustrations, bears witness to real and conscientious work on the part of the author."—Sat. Rev., xvi, 704.

2. The Official Baronage of England: showing the Succession, Dignities, and Offices of Every Peer from 1066 to 1885; with 1600 Illustrations, Lon., 1886, 3 vols. 4to. Also, large-paper edition of 120 copies.

"Mr. Doyle has placed students under a great obligation by the monumental work on which he has been so long engaged. These three volumes, so far as they go, must supersede every previous publication of the kind."—Sat. Rev., lxi, 21.

"The author of these three handsome quarto volumes has employed half a lifetime in the production of a book which is absolutely unique both in its design and execution. . . . The few mistakes which disfigure this useful book are chiefly found in lives of peers of the Anglo-Norman period, where Mr. Doyle has been content to repeat the received story without critical examination."—*E. Doyle, John Andrew, b. 1844, in London, educated at Eton, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated, first class Lit. Hum., in 1867, and gained the Arnold prize in 1869; was elected Fellow of All Souls, and appointed Vinerian reader of civil and English law. 1. History of America, ("Historical Course for Schools,") Lon., 1875, 8mo. 3. The English in America: Virginia, Maryland, and the Carolinas, Lon., 1882, 8vo.

"The volume before us is—because of the author's knowledge of the subject, based upon study and thorough research—the best and most authentic history of these Southern American colonies that we have yet met with."—Acad., xxii, 356.

"The aim of this book," he says, "is to describe and explain the process by which a few scattered colonies along the Atlantic seaboard grew into that vast Confederate Republic, the United States of America." . . . It is a genuine pleasure, and rare as it is genuine, to read a work of a historical character which, like this, . . . is serious without being dull, and animated without showing partiality."—Spectator, lvi, 88.

"Mr. Doyle's standpoint is not that of a partisan, but of a student of institutional history. . . . He has enjoyed remarkable facilities for examining colonial documents preserved in the State Paper Office in London. . . . Mr. Doyle has viewed the English side of America, and he is consequently better able than most Americans to appreciate the principle of English continuity in our colonial constitution."—Nation, xxxvi, 307.

4. The English in America: the Puritan Colonies, Lon., 1886, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The thoroughness of Mr. Doyle's researches is conspicuous in every chapter of this history. Whenever and wherever contemporary MSS. materials exist, they have been carefully studied. In their absence the most reliable authorities have been consulted, and, when necessary, compared, so as to arrive at the nearest possible truth; and all this, we think, has been done with judgment and success."—*W. "He has gone over the field so often travelled in part by our specialists, and so thoroughly explored as a whole by Dr. Palfrey, and he gives us an admirable résumé of the facts and of the impressions made by them upon the mind of an educated Englishman. . . . These two volumes are attractive in style, full of careful research, impartial in judgment, and doubly valuable as giving the opinions of one not known to our readers by ties of birth or education."—Nation, xlv, 480.

"Dr. Draper takes one course, eluante, . . . and makes it account for nearly every social phenomenon with which he has to deal. . . . Of the narrative portion of Dr. Draper's work we cannot speak too highly. His sketch of the events which led to the war, and his summing of the Northern and Southern sides of the controversy, are models of calm, perspicuous and judicial statements. . . . His book, as a whole, will edify a large public indifferent to military criticism and accuracy of military detail."—Nation, v. 297, and xl. 91.

4. History of the Conflict between Religion and Science, ("International Scientific" Ser.) N. York, 1874, 12mo. "The most interesting chapters in the book are those on spectrum analysis, which show that the author is to be added to the list of those who preceded Kirchhoff in suggesting and applying this wonderful method: doing everything, in fact, but complete the invention and generalize the principles on which it rests."—Nation, xxviii. 55.

"In this country the name of Dr. Draper became famous in an hour. . . . The celebrated Belfast address of Professor Tyndall, and the thoroughness of his expressed trust in the accuracy and ability of Dr. Draper, sent many people who at a rush to the pursuit of his works. . . . Unfortunately, however, for the reputation of Dr. Draper that the great eulogium of Professor Tyndall was pronounced not on his scientific but on his literary works. For, as these 'Memoirs' show, Dr. Draper has been for many years a careful, diligent, and successful worker in the physical departments of science, and has, without question, extended the boundaries of our scientific knowledge. . . . His fame as a man of science is secure, but his place as a philosopher and as a historian rests on a very precarious foundation."—Spectator, lii. 536.

Draper, Lyman Copeland, LL.D., [ante, vol. i., add.] removed to Madison, Wis., in 1853, to become corresponding secretary of the State Historical Society, and retained this office till 1887, except during two years, 1858-1860, when he was State superintendent of instruction. 1. Drummond, Henry, B.Sc., F.G.S., F.R.S.E., h. 1822, at Stirling, Scotland; educated at Edinburgh and at Tübingen; was appointed professor of natural history and science in the Free Church College, Glasgow, in 1879. He has travelled extensively, with scientific objects, in Africa, &c. 1. Natural Law in the Spiritual World, Lon., 1883, p. 8vo; 2d ed., (824 thousand) 1888. "No one who reads the papers entitled 'Biogenesis,' 'Degeneration,' 'Kernal Life,' and 'Classification' to say the least, in this volume, will fail to recognize the view of law, and a powerful teacher, impression of law, and from the deep religious earnestness with which he traces the workings of law in the moral and natural worlds which science has discovered in the phenomena of the spiritual world, and can be traced, in the phenomena of the spiritual world; how such great principles as biogenesis, living—not only by analogy, but identically, govern the course of natural phenomena, as they have been proved to govern the chief laws of nature as they have been discovered and stated by evolutionists, and to reconstitute their identity with those principles of Christianity which have hitherto been accepted on authority, but have never been reduced to law or compared with the laws of nature. Biogenesis becomes in religion regeneration; spiritual death is want of correspondence; eternal life is perfect correspondence with the spiritual environment—God; conformity to type is conformity to the image of his son."—Spectator, lvi. 397, 2. Drummond, Hon. William Henry, 1845-1879, son of the ninth Viscount Strathallan; contributed articles on South African matters to English journals before and during the Zulu war, in which he served as a staff-officer in the British army. The Large Game and Natural History of South and Southeast Africa: from the Journals of Hon. W. H. Drummond, Edin., 1875, 8vo.

Mr. Drummond offers to the imagination of his reader numerous pictures of the African continent all but solitary in the same use of human occupation, with its brute denizens, some terrible and beautiful, others beautiful, graceful, and harmless as the fabled animals which dwell in the earthly paradise.—Spectator, xiv, 111, 1069.

Du Chailin, Paul Belloni, b. 1835, in Londons; spent his early life in a French settlement at the mouth of the Gaboon River on the west coast of Africa, where his father was engaged in trade; from 1852 to 1855 lived in the United States; spent greater part of the next four years in a journey of exploration in the Gaboon country, travelling on foot upwards of 8000 miles, and making a large collection of native arms and implements, as well as birds and quadrupeds which he had shot and stuffed, including gorillas and other species previously unknown or unclassified; returned to the United States in 1859, and subsequently went to England, where, in 1861, he published an account of his expedition, which became the subject of a vehement controversy at meetings of the Royal Geographical Society, and in the press; in 1864-65 he made another expedition through the same region, which, however, was cut short by the resistance of the natives; in 1872-73 he travelled extensively in Sweden and Norway, and he has recently visited those con-tries. 1. Explorations and Adventures in Equatorial Africa: with Accounts of the Manners and Customs of the People, and of the Chase of the Gnu, Crocodile, Leopard, Elephant, Hippopotamus, and other Animals,

Lon., 1861, 8vo.

“The harvest by which M. Du Chailin's labours were rewarded was beyond all comparison, more abundant than any of his recent fellow-labourers have reaped.
Neither Burton nor Livingstone, nor Magyar, have produced anything approaching in interest to the wonderful disclosures by which . . . The chief interest of the narratives have been repaid. . . . The chief interest of the narrative, of course, centres in the Gorilla.”—Sat. Rev., xi. 506.

2. A Journey to Ashango Land, and Further Pen- etration into Equatorial Africa, Lon., 1867, 8vo.

“M. Du Chailin's last journey was one series of misfortunes, succeeding each other with the most depressing monotony. . . . To take a sufficient quantity of bulky goods to buy one's way across the great jungle of Equatorial Africa seems to be an almost insoluble problem.
The chief interest of M. Du Chailin's book is therefore the light which it throws upon the condition of the negro.”

“His great merit lies in his fine descriptions of the scenery and physical characteristics of the country, and in his accurate and sympathetic account of the manners and customs of the peasantry. We think he is sometimes too lavish in his praise of these rude peoples; . . . but his pictures of their interiors, of their daily occupations, of their dances and weddings and other festive occasions, and of their religious worship, are so true and life-like that we can easily forgive him for not having the heart to find fault with a race to which he became so fondly attached.
. . . Literature, history, science, and art do not come within the scope of his work.”—Nation, xxxiii. 455.

“In spite of redundancy, repetition, and reiteration, these two volumes contain a great deal which disarms attack and merits consideration.”—Sat. Rev., lii. 769.

“From a literary point of view the book is not without its faults; the dramatic verses are sometimes made to speak and write in a stilted and sententious way, inconsistent with the character given of them. The author arrives in the country ignorant of the language, but very soon begins—in the book—to speak it. Probably the descriptions of places and events are not to be taken as strictly descriptive.”—Ath., No. 2817.

Duff, Andrew Halliday, 1830-1877, known as Andrew Halliday, was the son of the Rev. William Duff, of Grange, Banffshire, Scotland, and was educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen. He became a journalist in London; was a contributor to the Cornhill Review under Thackeray's editorship, and to Dickens's All the Year Round. He wrote many plays, farces, and burlesques, and dramatized David Copperfield and other novels. 1. The Adventures of Mr. Wilderspin on his Journey through Life, Illust. Lon., 1860, 4to. 2. Duff, Miss Henrietta A., d. 1879; contributed poems and stories signed with her initials to English periodicals. 1. Virginia: a Roman Sketch. By H. A. D. Lon., 1877, p. 8vo. 2. Fragments of Verse, Lon., 1880, p. 8vo. 3. Honor Carmichael: a Study, Lon., 1886, 2 vols. cr. 8vo. 4. My Imperialist Neighbour, and other Stories, Lon., 1880, p. 8vo; new ed., 1881.

Her stories and essays combined tenderness and quiet humour, a close attention to detail, and a faculty of suggesting rather than describing emotion which gave her high rank in the school where Miss Thackeray is chief; while her poems, though at times striking deeper chords, had generally a rare union of playfulness and pathos, making her the best, if not the only, female writer of vers de société.—TOWNSHEND MAYER: Acad., Nov. 22, 1879.

Duff, Sir Mountstuart Elphinstone Grant, G.C.S.I., C.I.E., F.R.S., b. 1829; son of the late James Cunningham Grant-Duff, (q. v., ante, vol. i.); educated at Edinburgh, and at Balliol College, Oxford; called to the bar at the Inner Temple 1854; M.P. for Elgin Burghs 1857-81. He was under-secretary of state for India 1868-74, and on the formation of Mr. Gladstone's second cabinet in 1880 he was appointed under-secretary of state for the colonies and sworn of the Privy Council. In 1881 he became governor of Madras, an office which he resigned in 1886. He was elected lord rector of Aberdeen University in 1867, and again in 1870. 1. "Mr. Dunphie is wholly genial in the range of his sympathies; he is delightfully unacademic; he is very observant; he is very reflective, and, like Charles Lamb, he can talk about himself in the quaintest of ways. His observation of nature is less elaborate than that of Jefferies or John Burroughs, but within its own limits and for its own sake quite different ends. It is as satisfactory. But, fond as Mr.
 Dunphie is of nature, he is much fonder of people. The ways of men and women are really the favorite subjects of his half-humorous, half-pathetic studies."—Acad.

deputy collector at Buakergunge, Bengal. The Peasantry of Bengal: being a View of their Condition under the Hindu, Mahomedan, and English Rule, Calcutta and Lon., 1874, 12mo.

"The book is an emphatic protest on behalf of the free the evils it has created, and to make a permanent settlement on behalf of the ryot with the zemindar, to rectify the former one made on behalf of the zemindar to the state."—Ramesh Chunder Dutt, writes vigorously English.—J. I. MIRCIS: Acad., viii, 306.

Dutt, Shoshee Chunder, Rai Bahádur, a native of Lower Bengal, and member of a family belonging to the Kayast, a well-known writer caste. He has three works in the following list (which is probably incomplete) were published under the pseudonym of "J. A. ti. Barton": 1. Bengal: an Account of the Country and the Effects of British Rule, Lon., 1874, 12mo. 2. The Ancient World, Lon., 1875, 12mo. 3. The Modern World, Lon., 1876, 12mo. 4. Historical studies and Recreations, Lon., 1879, 2 vols., 8vo. (Contains three works before mentioned, and two others of which parts only had appeared in two Indian magazines.)

"His own country he knows thoroughly well, and for what he says of it he may rightly lay claim to respectful attention."—Sat. Rev., xlvii, 781.

5. India, Past and Present: with Minor Essays on Cognate Subjects, Lon., 1880, 8vo.

"He writes sensibly and forcibly on matters with which his education and experience have made him competent to deal."—Sat. Rev., l, 428.

6. The Works of Shoshee Chunder Dutt, Lon., 1885, 6 vols.

Dutt, Torn, 1856-1877, youngest of the three daughters of Govin Chunder Dutt, a magistrate in his native province and a man of learning and cultivation. She survived them all. She made a very thorough study of the language and literature of France and of England, and in 1871 published a very full and learned essay on the writings of Leonora de Lisle, with translations into English verse. Having devoted herself to the study of Sanskrit, she translated the Vishvapurna into English blank verse. Meanwhile she was composing and translating poetry with extraordinary facility and apparently with equal ease in Hindustani, French, and English.

She wrote also a romance in French, Le Journal de Mlle. d'Arvers, which was published in Paris, with a critical study by Mlle. Clarisse Bader, in 1879. She left several original poems in English, and other productions.

1. A Sheaf gleaned in French Fields, Bhowanipore, 1876; 2d ed., with a Prefatory Memoir by her Father, Lon., 1881, 8vo. (Contains English translations of works of some of the least as well as the best known authors of the nineteenth century.)

"The 'Sheaf' gleaned in French Fields' would have been an extraordinary feat had it been performed by an English lady of high education; from a Hindu girl it was a little short of miraculous."—Sat. Rev., xlviii, 211.

"Books like this are sure to be cherished for the pathetic sweetness there is in them, to say nothing of latent intellectual stimulation."—Spectator, liv, 287.

2. Ancient Ballads and Legends of Hindustan: with an Introductory Memoir by Edmund W. Gosse, Lon., 1882, 12mo; new ed., 1885.

"Lovers of poetry will be grateful to Mr. Gosse for making them acquainted with her hitherto unpublished feats in English verse."—Sat. Rev., lxi, 441.

Dutt, Uday Chand, The Materia Medica of the Hindus: compiled from Sanscrit Medical Works: with a Glossary of Indian Plants by George King, M.B., F.L.S., Superintendent of the Royal Botanic Gardens, Calcutta, Calcutta, 1877, 8vo.

"This is the most interesting work on the Materia Medica of India which has yet been published, and will be welcomed by all students of the history of medicine."—Globe: Woodwork: Acad., xli, 116.

"Mr. Mark Twain has a great deal to answer for. Unlike Falstaff, though witty enough himself, (after the wit in others.) He has been the cause of very little wit in others. It is scarcely too much to say that had Mr. Du Val never read the 'New Pilgrim's Progress' he would have written a really interesting book of travels. . . . In the second part, in the author's personal reminiscences of there is a great deal that is interesting, and not a little that is instructive."—Sat. Rev., lv, 473.

"As the work before us was the latest, so it was the most considerable and enduring product of John Eadie's fruitful pen. It manifestly embodies the results of many years of quiet study, in the course of which he must have found not a few of his own researches anticipated with the public by more brilliant or less patient writers. Indeed, we may safely conjecture that our modest author would scarcely have taken up the subject at all had Canon Westcott's masterly sketch of the self-same history appeared a few years earlier. But what the Scottish divine lacks of his rivals' vigour and originality is amply compensated by minuteness of detail and rigid impartiality."—Sat. Rev., xliii, 70.

"His whole performance has more of an extensive than an analytical character, and comprises a great variety of interesting etymological topics which are in general lightly and agreeably handled."—Spectator, xiv. 351.

"The merits of the book, and they are great and many, lie in the details. . . . What Mr. Earle has to tell us about the history and usages of particular words and idioms is in almost every case happy. . . . He constantly shows the surest sign of a thinker who has gone to the bottom of his subject, that of saying things which, as soon as we hear them, make us wonder that we had never thought of them ourselves."—*Sat. "An introduction of one hundred and eleven pages treats first, of the forms of the charters, secondly, of social and land relations, and, thirdly, of the language of the documents. The second of these divisions possesses special interest for students of social history, and must be regarded as the most important contribution to this department of English history since the publication of Mr. Seebohm's treatise in 1885. Like Mr. Seebohm, Mr. Earle has advanced the discussion by a distinct step towards the solution of many some considerations which he does not appear to have taken fully into account."—Nation, xvii. 226.

Eastlake, Charles Lock, F.R.I.B.A., nephew of Sir C. L. Eastlake, supra, b. at Plymouth; educated at Westminster School, where he gained a scholarship in 1840; studied architecture in the schools of the Royal Academy and on the Continent, but has not devoted himself to the active practice of the profession. He was secretary of the Royal Institute of British Architects from 1866 to 1878, and since then has been keeper and secretary of the National Gallery. His name has become literally a household word in connection with the revival of artistic styles of domestic furniture and decoration, which he was the first to advocate and introduce. He has contributed to periodicals and lectured to art institutions. 1. Hints on Household Taste in Furniture, Upholstery, and other Details, Lon., 1868, 8vo; 3d ed., rev., Lon., 1872; 4th ed., 1877; 6th Amer. ed., with Notes by C. C. Perkins, N. York, 1881.

"Its great value seems to us to consist in its simplicity and perspicacity. Mr. Eastlake expresses what are the general, not to say universal, convictions among all who have paid much attention to practical art. There is no novelty in his remarks or criticisms. They are neither original nor very brilliant. But they are well timed, and very suggestive and instructive."—Sat. Rev., xxxv. 253.

Eastlake, Elizabeth, Lady, [ante, vol. II., Ricar, Miss, add.] b. about 1816; daughter of Edward Rigby, M.D., of Norwich, Eng.; married, 1849, to Mr. afterwards Sir—C. L. Eastlake, supra. Her early works were reminiscences of a long visit to a sister who had married an Estonian baron and settled on the shores of the Baltic. Lady Eastlake completed Mrs. Jameson's History of Our Lord i. Works of Art, (Lon., 1865, 8vo.) She was also the author of the translation "by a lady" of Kugler's Hand-Book of Painting, edited by Sir C. L. Eastlake, which is mentioned under the latter's name, ante, vol. i. 1. Music, and The Art of Dress: Two Essays reprinted from the "Quarterly Review," Lon., 1852, 8vo. Anon. 2. "This little biography is mainly due to two friends of the sculptor, Mrs. Henry Sandbach and Mr. Richard Hay, who at different times induced Gibson to narrate the simple facts of his life, and to give his opinions on matters connected with the art which he pursued with rare simplicity and devotion. . . . The fragments have been skilfully woven into a whole by Lady Eastlake."—Sat. Rev., xxxix. 123.

"This is one of those gorgeous issues which are not offered for the hands of democracy. The edition has, we believe, been limited to one hundred and twenty copies, of which twenty have been reserved for the supreme Government and Council of India, and of the remainder for the greater number have been subscribed for by Native Princes of India. . . . We do not propose to criticise either the poetry or the politics of Mr. Eastwick's Imperial 'Lay.' Few men are so well acquainted with the history of India; still fewer are those who have a knowledge comparable mine."—ARTHEUR ANDER: Acad., xv. 155.

"The greater part of the work is devoted . . . to showing how the spoils system in England grew out of the absolute ownership of offices by the crown, and was modified but not improved by the substitution of party government; and how, as its abuses became rank and intolerable, a rising spirit of public reprobation kept pace with them, empowered the selfishness of a class and triumphed by the destruction of the system. The author makes skillful use of the occasions such a review presents for enforcing the lesson among ourselves."—Nation, xxx. 16.

"Dr. Ederheim is a Hebrew Christian, who believes that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and all his Hebrew learning—which is great—is used strictly for the setting forth of this great theme. . . . He has thrown light on many obscure points in the gospel history, and he has written the history of the time between the closing of the Old Testament and the opening of the New as it was never written before. . . . His strength lies in his wide and deep and accurate Jewish learning. . . . The weakness of the articles there also. It is overlarded with references to all kinds of Jewish topics."—Spectator, lvii, 286.

"A Thousand Miles up the Nile" is far from being a mere book of travel, though it is enlivened with the incidental narratives and picturesque descriptions customary in such a volume. . . The style of the whole book is marked by precision and sustained vigour. . . All are placed by the author at the service of a strong and ardent passion for Egyptian archeology. . . It is this enthusiasm for old Egypt, running powerful and deep throughout the volume as an undercurrent to its many other interests, that gives its real charm to the work."—*J. A. S. "Mr. Eggleston's stories have held from the beginning a great popularity with a large circle of readers, and it has been in many ways well deserved. They are full of incidents; all of these rapid events occur amid scenes almost entirely new to the Eastern reader and the new generation of Westerners; and they have in a high degree the element of dialectic speech, which . . . confers upon the element of the story that appearance of reality and individuality for which the novel-writer has to watch so keenly and work so hard."—Nation, xix, 207.

Eggleston, George Cary, brother of Rev. Ed. Educated at Ashbury University, in that State, and at Richmond, but entered the Confederate army on the outbreak of the civil war, and at its close removed to the West, and some years later to New York, where he adopted the profession of journalism, and has held, among other posts, that of literary editor of the Evening Post, 1875-81, and since 1886 that of chief editor of the Commercial Advertiser. 1. "If we feel that we could sometimes have spared some of the copious learning which Mr. Ellis brings to bear on this subject, our general feeling is one of the most genuine admiration. Its variety and plenty is such as it is difficult to describe. One peculiarity of it is that it passes, for the most part, the more familiar authors, to deal with those who are strange even to the well-read scholars of the ordinary stamp. He has drawn, he says in his preface, his parallel citations and illustrations from the predecessors or contemporaries rather than from the followers of Catullus: from the less hackneyed writers, such as Plautus, Lucilius, Varro, rather than from such as have become insipid by familiarity; from Greek preferably to Latin. It is difficult to describe how consistently this has been done: it is not too much to say that the most scholars will often find themselves introduced to an almost unknown world of ancient literature by this 'Commentary.'"—Spectator, l. 568.

"He is not his best in the analysis of social phenomena. . . . When he essays the discussion of social movements as a whole, he shows a lack of logical acumen and a narrowness of view which, in a university teacher, are most remarkable. . . . The two uppermost ideas in the author's mind are that the treatment of the history of the higher classes is marked by indifference, contempt, or heartless cruelty; and that it is to labor organization that we are to look for all real social progress."—Nation, xliii. 293.

Emerson, Ralph Waldo, [ante, vol. I., add.] 1803-1882, b. in Boston, Mass.; was educated at the Boston Latin School, and at Harvard College. After graduating in 1821, he taught school for three years, attended lectures at the Cambridge Divinity School, entered the Unitarian ministry, and in 1829 became the colleague of Henry Ware at the Second Church in Boston. In 1832 he resigned his charge, announcing the sermons which led him to do so in a sermon on "The Lord's Supper," afterwards published among his works. He continued, however, to preach occasionally in Unitarian pulpits for several years. In 1833 he went to Europe, visited Italy, Sicily, and France, spent some time in England, and paid a visit to Carlyle at Craigenputtock. In 1835 he settled at Concord, Mass. He delivered courses of lectures in Boston during several successive winters; founded in 1836 the society which acquired the name of the Transcendental Club, and was a contributor to The Dial during its brief existence, 1840-44, and for two years its editor. In 1847 he revisited England, lecturing in Manchester, London, and other towns, and in 1848 he made an excursion to Paris. On the establishment of the Atlantic Monthly in 1857 he became a contributor, and many of his poems were published in its pages. In the years before and during the civil war he lectured on the questions involved in the conflict. In 1872 his house at Concord was partially destroyed by fire. It was rebuilt by his friends, and he paid a third visit to Europe, remaining abroad about a year. He lectured occasionally till 1876, but in the last years of his life his memory became much impaired. In 1881 he read a paper on Carlyle before the Massachusetts Historical Society. "A forest of letters, many of which are not in the least characteristic of the writer, while some of them are wearisome and even painful, because surcharged with egotistic phraseology and morbid self-introspection. . . . We have read, it is true, with pleasure many of the letters in this book. Erving has sketched so lovingly in the 'Present-Day Papers' is not here."—Spectator, l, 793; notice of vol. 1, and it is a source of great satisfaction that, though the hands of the editor have been tied, he has received and friends of Thomas Erskine, and these friends are well to learn what manner of man he was, both in society and in the retirement of Linlathen; and these friends are Miss Wedgwood, Principal Shairp, and the Dean of Westminster."—Spectator, l, 1661; notice of vol. 1.

"The author's main object is to give a complete list of the vocabulary of Welsh literature, and to fix the meaning of the words given by reference to the passages where they occur. The etymological remarks in it are reduced within narrow limits, which I think is, on the whole, wise and prudent, since it is early as yet to attempt to treat of the origin of . . . In the mean while, Mr. Silvan Evans pursues with vigour and precision a work to which his whole life has been devoted, and one for which he is the fittest man living."—*J. Eyton, Rev. Robert William, M.A., [ante, vol. i., add.] 1815-1881, son of Rev. John Eyton, (q. v., ante, vol. i.) b. at Wellington, Shropshire; graduated with honors at Christ Church, Oxford, 1839; was rector of Hyton from 1841 till 1863, when he resigned his living of England. He sold his library, intending to give up literary work, but afterwards continued his researches, and published, in addition to the work mentioned ante, vol. i. 1. A Key to Domesday: showing the Method and Extent of its more usual Forms: exemplified by an Analysis and Digest of the Dorset Survey, Lon., 1879, 4to. 2. The Court, Household, and Itinerary of King Henry II., &c., Lon., 1879, 4to.

"That consummate antiquary, Mr. R. W. Eyton, . . . has produced two quarto volumes of singular interest and importance to students of Domesday and the reign of Henry II. . . . It is to be feared, however, that the two volumes will command less attention than they deserve, from the unattractive form in which they are presented to the reader."—J. C. WATERS: Acad., xvi. 275.

Eyton, Thomas Campbell, F.L.S., F.Z.S., [ante, vol. i., EYTON, T. C., add.] 1800-1889, b. at Eyton, and built a museum at Eyton containing one of the finest collections of birds in Europe. He was a friend and correspondent of Darwin and other naturalists, and his observations on the habits of pigeons were used as materials by Darwin, much to his chagrin, as he was not a believer in the theory of natural selection. He edited the Herd-Book of Hereford Cattle, mentioned ante, vol. i., 1842-60, and published, in addition to works mentioned there: 1. A History of the Oyster and Oyster-Fisheries, Lon., 1861, 8vo. 2. Osteologia Avium; or, a Sketch of the Osteology of Birds: with Two Supplements, 1869-79, 3 vols. 4to.; the whole in 1 vol., 1881, p. 8vo. 3. Synopsis of the Anatidae, or Duck Tribe, Lon., 1872, p. 8vo.

view. 1. Studies in the Philosophy of Religion and History, Lon., 1876, p. 30.

"The main scheme of the book is to show by example that the German investigations into the earlier history of 'culture-folk' are a better foundation for an historical study of religion than the English investigations into the present condition of 'nature-folk.' If we are to choose between two exclusive methods, we should decidedly prefer Mr. Fairbairn's."—Acad., x. 76.

Fargus, Frederick John, ("Hugh Conway," pseud.) 1847-1885, b. at Bristol, Eng.; the son of an auctioneer; was educated partly on board the school-ship "Conway," with a view to the maritime profession, but gave it up and entered an accountant's office, and in 1868 succeeded to his father's business, which he conducted till 1883. He wrote songs, many of which were set to music by different composers, and contributed to Blackwood's Magazine. 1. A Life's Idylls, and other Poems, Lon., 1879, 12mo; new ed., 1887, p. 8vo.
 "Mr. Conway writes at times almost well enough to force himself above the level of cultivated versifiers, but his flight is not sustained, and his place is with them."—Ath., No. 2739.
 2. Called Back, Bristol, 1883, p. 8vo. (The sale of this book, which was rapid and steady from the first, had reached, in June, 1887, 352,600 copies. It was translated into all the chief European languages, and a dramatized version by the author and Mr. Conyns Carr was very successful on the stage.)
 "It is clear enough that Mr. Fargus has a very bright imagination for what may be called sensational incident, but that when he has got hold of a sensational incident he narrows it with much freshness and vigour. "Called Back" is a most improbable tale, but the truth is that all tales which depend for their interest on plot alone ought to be in some sense improbable."—Spectator, lvi. 822.

"Mr. Farrar's object is to enter briefly into the causes, moral and intellectual, of the present wide-spread defection from the faith which our fathers held; to show that neither Philosophy nor Criticism has shaken one truth of Christianity; to show the extent and glory of its individual, social, and political virtues; and thus to demonstrate its mighty Witness borne by History to the Faith of Christ. . . . These Lectures will be read with interest by many who are no controversialists, while the numerous notes will furnish students with valuable references, and convince them of the trustworthiness of the guide who is here pointing out a path for them."—Ath., No. 2289.

"Dr. Farrar is familiar with the scenes and the customs of Palestine and its inhabitants, from his personal observation as well as from the accounts of other travellers; he is acquainted—as his notes constantly show—with all the authorities, ancient and modern, orthodox and rationalist, whose names he drags in a long list; he is devoutly Christian in his faith; moderate and liberal after the manner of our English Church divines; desirous to aid the cause of truth and righteousness by what he writes; and with these qualifications, intellectual, moral, and religious, he pours forth the torrents of rhetoric which form these two volumes. . . . The words are too big for his thoughts, and the poverty of the fancies is not concealed by the thinsel epithets with which they are tricked out."—Spectator, xlvii. 886.

"They seem to us to exhibit all the faults of his earlier efforts in an exaggerated form, without possessing some of the qualities which helped to atone for them. The style, in particular,—never a strong point with our author,—is unlikely to satisfy even his ardent admirers, fluctuating as it does between turgid rhetoric and a tone of jaunty familiarity better suited to the columns of the American daily press. . . . There can be no question as to the value and importance of his labours, if only they approximate to his ideal standard; and it is because, in our judgment, they fail to do so that we can accept them with but qualified approval."—Sat. Rev., xlvii. 665.

"The success which his work has met with is easily understood. There is the charm of a refined rhetorical style, not too heavily freighted with thought. The reader floats easily and happily along, past all the whirlwinds of modern criticism, and without a jar arrives at the destined conclusion. The favour of learning of a vast and multitudinous kind is presented. There is everywhere a studied reverence and a careful setting forth of conclusions preclous to the hearts of thousands, and great care is taken to keep the dry details of history out of view. . . . We get little help from Canon Farrar to the solution of the many critical problems which have arisen in recent years in relation to the Epistles of Paul and to the Acts of the Apostles. . . . The reader of these volumes might read them through without becoming aware of the weighty controversies which are now agitating the Churches on these questions. . . . It is, however, true that readers of this book will gain a more vivid conception of the moral, social, and religious condition of the world when Christianity went forth for the regeneration of the nations. . . . Canon Farrar has largely succeeded in setting forth the outward circumstances, the social forces, the special training, which moulded the character of Paul. . . . His large acquaintance with the Jewish literature outside of and beyond the sacred books, and his profuse citation of relevant passages, often throw a flood of light on obscure passages in the life of Paul and on difficult passages in his writings, while the description he gives of the great controversy of the early Church, and of the intense bitterness which marked that contest, is characterized both by fairness of information and accuracy of statement."—Spectator, lii. 1349.

"There is enough of matter, some of it indeed very disputable matter, in Canon Farrar's new book, to engage the attention of readers who care more for the science than the outward form when the questions at issue are both interesting and important. . . . It is not a great work, but it is not a literary failure, as we hold that the 'Life of St. Paul' was."—Sat. Rev., lv. 628.

"Archdeacon Farrar has very definite theory to account for all the errors of interpreters, whether they trace their faith in verbal inspiration; but whether his theory is accepted or not, he has given his readers ample opportunities of judging for themselves. "Mr. Featherman has set himself a long and laborious task. To digest from the travellers' tales of the last two centuries, the reports of missionaries, and the more formal observations of recent explorers, all that can be ascertained of the social life of every tribe of the many races of mankind; to reconcile the contradictions of these various authorities; and to discriminate where prejudice or credulity may have led them wrong, are undertakings that demand a vast expenditure of time, a great accumulation of knowledge, and some critical acumen. Mr. Featherman is well equipped in these respects. He justly republishes the faint praise that would damn him as a mere collector of facts and give him credit for nothing but industry in collecting them. He claims that he is writing, on the basis of facts collected from original authorities, a history of the peoples in their social capacity, including their manners and customs, their government, their religion, their superstitions, and their literary, artistic, and scientific advancement. He is, at any rate, engaged on a work which is such a storehouse of facts as the student of the social history will not meet with elsewhere, arranged with simplicity and clearness."—Ath., No. 3125.

Ferguson, Sir Samuel, Q.C., LL.D., 1810-1886, b. in Belfast, Ireland; graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, 1828; was called to the Irish bar in 1838, and made Queen's counsel in 1850. In 1867 he was appointed the first deputy keeper of the public records in Ireland, in recognition of his eminent services to Irish antiquities, and showed great ability in organizing the records department, for which he was knighted in 1878. He was elected president of the Royal Irish Academy in 1882. One of his early poems, The Forging of the Anchor, was introduced to the readers of Blackwood's Magazine by Christopher North, who, in his Notices Ambrosianæ, gave it warm praise and predicted success for the writer. He contributed translations from the Irish, as well as poems and tales to the Dublin University Magazine and other periodicals, and many papers on Irish antiquities to the Transactions of the Royal Irish Academy. 1. Lays of the Western Gael, and other Poems, Lon., 1864, 12mo; new ed., 1888. 2. *The Cromlech on Ilhow: a Poem: with Illuminations from the Books of Kells and of Darrow, and Drawings from Nature by M. "As a poet he deserves recollection in Ireland, for he strove hard to create modern poetry from the old Irish tales of heroes and saints and histories of places. . . . While sometimes giving the stories more beauties than he takes away, he misses something of the reality of ancient life. . . . Several of the poems of his own experience are admirable."—Dict. of Nat. Biog., xviii, 396.

5. (Ed.) Major Fraser's Manuscript: his Adventures in Scotland and England; his Mission to and Travels in France; his Services in the Rebellion (and his Quarrels) with Simon Fraser, Lord Lovat, 1690-1737, Edin., 1888, 2 vols. 8v. 8vo.

"The many side-lights which the narrative throws upon the characters of noted people, the picture which it draws of the wild lawlessness reigning in the mountains of the highland before the '45, and its curious description of the relations existing between the chief of the Fraser clan and its immediate adherents, . . . render it a far more important work than a reader is at first tempted to imagine."—Ath., No. 3298.

Ferguson, James, [ante, vol. i, add.] 1808-1886, b. at Ayr, Scotland, son of William Ferguson, M.D. (q. v., ante, vol. i.) went to India at an early age and started an indigo-factory. Ten years later he retired from business, and, having settled in London, devoted himself to archeological research. He was a member of the Royal Asiatic Society and a frequent contributor to its Proceedings. His theories in regard to the site of the Holy Sepulchre and the Temple of Jerusalem, &c., led to the establishment of the Palestine Exploration Fund; but they have not found favour with later explorers. In 1871 he was awarded the gold medal of the Institute of British Architects.

—The book is written in the easy, natural style of an educated man who is fond of gossip, fond of politics, and fond of general ideas to take an interest in any details of personal history which relate to the career of those about whom the world is fond of gossiping.
"One of those rare volumes which, copious as is the promise that is made on the title-page, does much more to encounter, from eunuchs to artists, and from politicians to the one are as amusing as those of the other."

George Park, D.D., LL.D., b. 1827, at Wrentham, Mass.; studied theology at Yale College, at the Andover Seminary, and in Germany, and became a Congregational minister; was appointed professor of divinity at Yale and pastor of the college church in 1854, and professor of ecclesiastical history in the natural Origin of Christianity; with Special Reference to the Theories of Renan, Strauss, and the Tübingen School, N. York, 1865, 8vo; new ed., enl., 1870. 2. The Reformation, N. York, 1873, 8vo; new ed., enl., 1883.

Dr. Fisher's work is by no means a dry summary of facts and dates, with notes and tables of reference; it is philosophical, eminently clear and often eloquently written, upon the causes, the honest nature, and the permanent effects of that great revolution. —Nation, xvi. 419.

"The discussions cover a wide range, and the easy handling which marks them throughout shows that the writer is equally at home in the broad domain of general church history and in the narrower field of New England con- troversial divinity." —Nation, xxx. 376.

8. Outlines of Universal History: designed as a Text-Book and for Private Reading, N. York, 1886, 12mo.

"A book of very great merit, which will abundantly satisfy the wants of those who desire a complete and ac- curate compendium of the world's history." —Nation, xlii. 155. 9. The History of the Christian Church. Maps, N. York, 1887, 8vo.

"It was a bold undertaking to present so vast a subject in the compass of a single volume of moderate size. Professor Fisher's previous works have shown that he pos- sesses the wide acquirements requisite to the undertaking, and the clearness of exposition necessary to render his knowledge available. Yet we cannot but regret that he should not have allowed himself a broader canvas on which to depict the infinite details that crowd each other in the presentation. . . . The whole work is informed with a reverent and believing spirit." —Nation, xiv. 463.

"Although many of the subjects discussed by Mr. Fisher must remain open questions until we are fir better acquainted with the conditions of volcanic action, we think that he has cleverly argued his points, and, by the frequent applica- tion of a right mathematical, and, by the frequent proved his opinions from the domain of these pure specu- lations which are too often applied to the explanation of obscure phenomena connected with the physics of the earth." —*G. was admitted to the bar, but has never practised, devoting himself to the study of history and sociology, and becoming prominent among the American advocates of "Evolution" and the Spencerian philosophy. "In 1871 longed infancy of mankind, and the part played by it in determining human development; and the importance of this contribution to the Darwinian theory, now generally admitted, was immediately recognized by Darwin Biography, iii. 469.) He was for a time lecturer on philosophy, instructor in history, and assistant librarian at Harvard College, and has lectured on American history at University College, London, at the Royal Institution, and in many of the principal cities of the United States and in Great Britain. Most of his works were originally published in successive numbers of leading American and English periodicals. 1. Tobacco and Alcohol: 1. It does Pay to Smoke; 11. The Coming Man will drink Wine, N. York, 1868, 16mo.

"Mr. Fiske's sly little book is an amplified review of Mr. Barton's recent busy writings on these difficult subjects, (see PARSONS, JAMES, ante, vol. ii.) . . . Mr. Fiske it with moderation, clearness, and penetration. He defines clearly the fundamental principle that everything in diet and medication depends on the dose."—Nation, viii. 13.

2. Myths and Myth-Makers: Old Tales and Superstitions interpreted by Comparative Mythology, Bost., 1872, 12mo.

"These papers discuss one by one some of the leading classes of myths, grouped about the idea from which they have respectively to have been derived. . . . The work, by its calm and broad spirit, is well suited to those who find themselves unprepared to follow Professor Max Müller and Mr. Cox to the full length of their hypotheses."—Nation, xvi. 233.

Fitzgerald, Edward, 1809-1883, b. at Bredfield, Suffolk; was the son of John Purcell, of Kilkenny, Ireland, who took his wife's name of Fitzgerald. He was educated at Bury Grammar-School, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1830 and formed life-long friendships with Tennyson and Thackeray. He married Lucy, daughter of Bernard Barton, the Quaker poet, (q. v., vol. I.), but a separation by mutual agreement took place soon afterwards. Fitzgerald spent most of his life at his house near Woodes, Suffolk, devoting himself to his favorite studies and literary work. His books were issued anonymously; his translation of the Agamemnon was at first privately printed, and of a translation made by him of the Edipus Tyrannus and Colonus of Sophocles he allowed only one friend in England to have a copy. 1. F., 1853, 8vo. 5. Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám, the Astronomer-Poet of Persia: rendered into English Verse, Lon., 1859, 4to; 2d ed., 1868; 3d ed., 1872; 4th ed., containing also the Sálmán and Ábusál of Jámi, in English verse, 1878; 5th ed., 1879. (The first edition of the Rubáiyát fell absolutely dead from the press, and was soon consigned to the "fourpenny box" of second-hand dealers. D. G. Rossetti was one of its first admirers. Copies of it are now worth their weight in gold, owing partly to the belief that the poem, when again issued, was spoiled in revision. There is at least a great difference between the first edition and the later ones.)

"It is not as a translation that the English-speaking people have accepted the 'Rubáiyát' into their literature.—It is as an original poem."—Sat. Rev., lxi. 188.

"His fame will mainly rest on his marvellous rendering of the 'Quatrains' of Omar Khayyám . . . which he has made to live in a way that no translation ever lived before. In his hands the 'Quatrains' became a new poem."—W. Aldis Wright: Dict. of Nat. Biog., xix. 112.

American edition, entitled The Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám; with an Accompaniment of Drawings by Elfin Yelder, Boston, 1884, 4to.

"Had the Rubáiyát been translated into Latin or German four centuries ago, or into English within the memory of many still living, Albert Dürer and Blake would assuredly have been befriended with Elfin Yelder. But neither Albert Dürer nor Blake, nor any other master-dead and gone, could, I venture to think, have exceeded in sublimity and subtlety of conception at least a score of these extraordinary designs."—AMELIA B. EDWARDS: Acad., xxvi. 361.

6. Agamemnon: a Tragedy, taken from Æschylus, Lon., 1876, 4to.

"Convinced of the impossibility of presenting the Greek play in its integrity to English readers, and doubtful of his power to succeed where 'good versifiers and better scholars' had seemed to him to fail, he determined to recast the 'Agamemnon' of the Attic poet, adhering in parts to the original, and in parts diverging from it, according to his sense of fitness. The result is that, while the whole poem is profoundly penetrated with the Æschylean spirit, which it reproduces with wonderful vividness, and while certain portions are accurate transcripts from the original, the Greek student will find many of the most impressive passages suppressed, and some most carefully prepared effects omitted. . . . Mr. Fitzgerald's style in the finest passages of this great torso has a weight, a compactness, and a picturesqueness, to find the proper parallel for which we must look back to Shakespeare's age."—F. A. Symonds: Acad., xli. 4.

7. (Trans.) The Mighty Magician, by Calderon de la Barca, Lon., 1877, 8vo. 8. Works, N. York, 1887, 2 vols. 8vo. 9. Letters and Literary Remains. Edited by William Aldis Wright. Lon., 1889, 3 vols. p. 8vo.

"At length, six years after Fitzgerald's death, we have these three volumes, of which the last two contain nearly all that he ever printed, and the first some three hundred and fifty letters from his pen, written between 1822 and 1883, to Frederic Tennyson, Bernard Barton, Archdeacon Allen, Prof. Cowell and Prof. Norton, W. B. Donne, Samuel Lawrence, Mr. J. H. Lowell, and twenty others. . . . They are, in their general tone, just what charming shall who knew their writer looked for them to be. They present a fine, albeit an imperfect, portraiture of a singularly noble character."—ib., No. 3230.

"In compiling his present work, which is likely to rank as his highest achievement, Mr. Fitzgerald has tried conscientiously—that is, with as much conscientiousness as a writer on theatrical subjects often exhibits—to make it good. His materials have been diligently collected, quarters hitherto neglected have been explored, a mass of new information has been obtained. . . . In spite of all the efforts he has made, Mr. Fitzgerald's book, pleasant as it is to read, is marred by an all but continuous series of slips and mistakes. . . . Much of it is worthy of praise, and the whole has vivacity which will commend it to general perusal. No piece is equally animated of theatrical life is supplied in any other existing work."—Ath., No. 2841.

"Collect a sufficient quantity of matter to make two volumes, pitchfork it into them without arrangement, verification, or even decent revision of a text—but in his simple rule. It is fair (though perhaps not strictly necessary) to say that Mr. Fitzgerald's volumes are by no means unamusing. It would have been very odd if they had been, considering the materials of which, at least in great part, they are composed. Of those materials, moreover, the Harcourt Papers, at least, are sure to be new to nearly all readers."—Sat. Rev., iv. 796.

"Mainly devoted to the career of the famous Brinsley Sheridan. . . . A new biography of the famous dramatist, actor, and wit is justified, as Mr. Fitzgerald explains, by the materials which have accumulated since Moore's life was given to the world. . . . Mr. Fitzgerald writes throughout with his eye upon Moore's pages, and he is much concerned to destroy the character of which his first biographer had succeeded in investing Sheridan before the world. . . . In spite of Mr. Fitzgerald's obvious industry, his volumes are unmethodical and discursive. To any one who wishes to turn over the pages and pick out good anecdotes about Sheridan or his contemporaries, they are pleasant enough reading. But to the more serious student . . . they would only prove bewildering."—Acad., xxxi. 158.

the theatres which first accepted, and the theatrical groups who probably first performed, stinkspectacular and other like half done. But that before the book is half, or anything strong for him, and the good old Adam, the old Fleay-Adam, is too confident dogmatizing on points on which it is impossible to dogmatize.—*Sat. Compiled and arranged by the Survivor of her Family, [Lady Richardson, widow of Sir John Richardson, the Arctic explorer.] Carlisle, 1874, 8vo, (this was a small edition printed for private circulation.) Edin., 1875, 8vo.

"This interesting volume contains more than the title-page promises. There are not only the incidents of the Yorkshire and Scottish life of Mrs. Fletcher, told by herself, but a sympathetic memoir also by Mrs. Fletcher of her gentle daughter, Grace, and another of her son, Archibald, by his widow. The whole forms an attractive, and often amusing, picture of life in Great Britain in the last and present centuries. . . . It is emphatically a charming book."—Ath., No. 2179.

 "All direct would be part if it could," and most Amer-ican novels would be by Mr. Henry James if they had the situations, the "international" combinations of Eng-lish, American, and Italian, are constructed on the model of Mr. James's stories. . . . The pulling of which "The Head of Medusa" is all compact, is sentimental in the manner of Miss Thackeray. . . . The book is full of talent."—Sat. Rev., i. 550.

"All histories of abstract ideas are liable to the same defect—namely, that they tend to become mere abstracts of the books professionally published on the subject. Professor Flint is no exception. After an attempt, in an introduction of sixty pages, to pursue and disengage his idea through the early, classical, and medieval periods, he fairly tumbles into the usual system of analyzing books. . . . We are most thankful to Mr. Flint for the labour he has bestowed on giving in an intelligible form a summary of the speculations, or ideas, of Scholzer, von Müller, Kant, Schelling, Steffens, Görres, Krause, Lotze, many of whose books are either inaccessible, or are too laborious reading to repay the time it would cost to extract any valuable metal from the dross."—*Sat. "Mr. Foley has at last brought his gigantic labours to a close. . . . He has collected such a mass of curious and really valuable information as it is granted to very few students to gather by the researches of a lifetime. He has added materially to those recondite sources of authentic family history which are for the most part buried in private archives and guarded with superstitious exclusiveness from the vulgar gaze. He has drawn back the veil which for centuries has covered the working of the Jesuits in England, and which, while it was allowed to hide the doings of the fathers from the gaze of the profane, invested them with a glamour of awe and terror such as no secret society of past or present times has succeeded in throwing round its proceedings."—Ath., No. 2912

Scott from Severn's drawing of Keats on his death-bed, a silhouette of Miss Brawne, and a fac-simile of one of the letters printed on paper of the same kind as the original and manufactured in the same year.)

"Even the truest admirers of Keats will read these letters with a sense that they are prying into what he would have kept from them if he could. . . . We cannot say, then, that the reading of this little volume has given us anything like unmixed pleasure. We have felt all through it that we were guilty of an intrusion, which, like all intrusions into such a region, Keats would have warmly resented. And we have felt, too, something besides this. . . . Justified, and would have justified, if he had been writing to us for a play, by the very simple expedient of making us see the object of his passion, as well as the glow of the natural effect here, when we have only his own side of the relation, and hardly even a single glimpse of the other side of it. . . . But, though this little book is in both the ways we have mentioned un-desired to us, it would be false to say that it is without interest. It bears the marks of Keats's vital character in almost all. . . .—Spectator, li. 410.

"We do not think Mr. Buxton Forman's publication serves for Keats, or, if it does, the pleasure to any one who with pain that, to use the poet's own phrase, 'it tastes like brass on the palate.'"—Sat. Rev., xiv. 216.

"I think there is nothing dishonourable in the joy with which we welcome these clear relics of Keats. . . . They are any one, except Mr. Severn, and Mr. Wells, can remember whom these letters were addressed, and the lady herself, to whom they were addressed, expressed before she died, a belief that they would be eventually required for publication. There has, therefore, been no indecent hurry in the matter, and Mr. Forman has displayed in editing them a scrupulous care and a tasteful delicacy that will do him great credit. He is a bibliographically concentrated man, and on every obscure point he has W. Gosse: Acad., xlii. 111.

"Mr. Forster wrote his [Sir John Eliot's] first Life, and he has now in all probability written his last. As he in the ages yet to come will have to treat of Eliot, — the name of one of our immortals, — but no fair critic will be able to go through this period of our national history without feeling and acknowledging at every turn his obligations to Mr. Forster."—ibid., No. 1898.

"The book is an enormously big one, and very trying to a conscientious reviewer."—Sat. Rev., xviii, 92.

5. The Life of Charles Dickens, Lon., 1871-74, 3 vols. 8vo.

"A book which, in spite of the many traits of astonishing humanity, power, and prodigal generosity, and unbounded social fascination with it, will certainly be read to the permanent fascination with which Dickens is regarded by so many of his countrymen. . . . On the whole, we cannot deny that Mr. Forster's biography was a very difficult book indeed to write, or that it has been well done. It has pointed to us a picture morally much more dispiriting than we expected, and it has perhaps dwelt on length, and with a certain awkwardness, on the unexceptionable half-depression. There is far too much of half admiring individual works of Dickens, to some of which Mr. Forster recurs repeatedly, and it does not appear to us that the criticism is always sound. . . . But, with all these faults he eagerly read as long as Dickens himself is eagerly read, and that will be as long as Englishmen read their delight in English literature."—Spectator, xvii, 174.

"The portrait of Dickens is, indeed, very incomplete and unsatisfactory; but it would be unfair to deny that it puts us in possession of many facts which render both the merits and the defects of the novels more intelligible. That will be its principal merit; for its independent interest is certainly less than might have been expected from the subject."—Sat. Rev., xxvii, 182.

"On the whole, we have in Mr. Forster's biography a difficult work well done. We believe it gives with candid and firmness of feeling a sound judgment of the nature and character of its subject. That it gives the true estimate of various works we for one shall not say; but it would be strange indeed if the average reader and student of an author should think so highly of him and feel so warmly with all a biographer's and all a friend's duty and fondness. To the fulness of detail in the story of the non-deduction and appearance of his literary methods, and of the pro- duction in this field can much hope to add anything that which his copiousness has not found room."—Nation, xviii, 175.

6. Life of Jonathan Swift: vol. i., 1667-1711, Lon., 1875, 8vo.

"With the conscientiousness and thoroughness to which his previous works have accustomed us, Mr. Forster has gathered, sifted, and interpreted the materials within his reach; there is in his book much that is new by the side of what is old, but more that is true in the place of what is false. In the way of positive discoveries of fresh facts of importance there is, as yet at all events, little to announce."—Sat. Rev., xi, 74.

"To the student of the period, one of the most interesting in our annals, Mr. Forster's biography promises to be invaluable. . . . The writer seems to be overwhelmed by his materials, so that he has so much to say, so many errors to point out, so many objections to meet, so many admissions to make, so many facts to state, so many inferences to draw, so many causes, or without having some noteworthy fact to state, smoothly along the road, thus himself suddenly pulled up. The literary student will enjoy this heartily, for he is but the general reader, whose interest in Swift is comparatively slight, and whose knowledge of the age is superficial, will hardly appreciate the wealth of illustration Mr. Forster has at his command."—Spectator, xlix, 47.

"Stag-hunting on Exmoor is a curious survival of very ancient manners and customs that prevailed not only in England, but throughout Europe, or at least Northern Europe. . . . Mr. Fortescue is well qualified to write on a subject of such interest not only to the hunting-man, but also to the antiquary and the general reader. His ancestors have hunted the wild deer for many centuries. . . . The Illustrations are of a very high class, after beautiful drawings of the scenery, the deer, and the hounds."—*Sat. Foster, Joseph, b. 1844, at Sunderland, Eng., son of a woollen-draper of that town, "a cadet of a family belonging to the Quakerocracy of the north of England" and numbering among its members Birket Foster, the well-known water-color painter and illustrator. He was educated at private schools, and from an early age has devoted himself to genealogical researches, producing several elaborate works which are noted for their accuracy and completeness. 1. Some Account of the Pedigree of the Forsters of Cold Hestleden, in the County of Durham, Sunderland, 1862, 4to; 2d ed., entitled "A Pedigree of the Forsters and Fosters," 1871, 4to. 2. The Pedigree of Wilson of High Wray and Kendall, and the Families connected with them: compiled from Private Pedigrees and completed to the Present Time, Lon., 1871, fol. Privately printed. 3. A Revised Genealogical Account of the Various Families descended from Francis Fox, of St. Germans, Cornwall; to which is appended a Pedigree of the Crokers of Linchman, &c., Lon., 1872, 4to. Privately printed. 4. Pedigrees of the County Families of England. Compiled by Joseph Foster, and authenticated by the Members of Each Family. The Heraldic Illustrations by J. Forbes Nixon. 4 vols. Vol. 1, Lancashire; vols. II-IV, Yorkshire, Lon., 1873-74, 4to.

"They are not for the general reader, but for the earnest student, and, though the latter may not have the intense pleasure in going through them which Mr. Foster had in compiling them, the worth of the work is 5. (Ed. Somerset.)

"We are glad to be able to congratulate Mr. Foster on the result of this great undertaking. That a single individual should have the energy and the patience to carry through a book of so laborious a character is a striking testimony to his knowledge and his powers. Three thousand two hundred and sixty-four separate columns, each of them teeming with scores of facts, and positively bristling with dates, represent an achievement of which any man might be proud, and the more so when the general accuracy of this vast mass of information has been so authoritatively acknowledged."—ibid., No. 3225.

"His work is the outcome of a long and high tradition. He is one of those who look on morality as something not imposed on man from without, but the result, the realization, of his whole nature. . . . He has produced what is, perhaps, for students the best existing work on the subject. It will show them how the lessons of their old text books can without any strain be so extended as to cover the vast and complex interests of modern life."—ALFRED W. BENN: Acad., xxxiii. 47.

Frazer, James George, Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Totemism, Edin., 1887, p. 8vo.

"The book on 'Totemism' by Mr. Frazer is short and good. Originally begun as a contribution to the Encyclopaedia Britannica, it outgrew the limits of one article. . . . As to the origin of Totemism nothing at all is clear. . . . Mr. Frazer, in his admirably clear and succinct volume, merely displays the working of an ancient and mysterious creation."—*Sat. In 1884 he succeeded Dr. Stubbs, then recently appointed Bishop of Chester, in the Regius Professorship of modern history at Oxford, and was elected Fellow of Oriel College. He has resided for many years at Somerleaze, Somersetshire, and once unsuccessfully contested a division of Somerset in the Liberal interest. He contributed for a number of years to the Saturday Review, and has written extensively for the leading periodicals on political as well as historical and archaeological topics. He is a member of learned societies in different parts of the world, and has been decorated by the governments of Greece, Servia, and Montenegro in recognition of his sympathy with the cause of independent nationality in those provinces. In 1883 he visited the United States on a lecturing tour. He is joint editor with Rev. William Hunt of Historic Towns. 1. "Nothing in his first volume is more remarkable than the width of his historical knowledge. Combined with a happy sense of historical analogy, it enables him to give freshness and animation even to the history of a period which remains unattractive in spite of his enthusiasm."—Sat. Rev., xv, 313, 112.

3. The History of the Norman Conquest of England: its Causes and its Results, Oxf., 1867-79, 8 vols. 8vo; 1.-iii., 2d ed., rev., 1879-75; vols. i, ii., 3d ed., rev., 1877.

"The bold, clear, nervous English of the book is throughout in admirable harmony with the clear, definite treatment of its subject, the precision with which it expresses the principles on which its author works, and the vigour with which he works them out. Not less remarkable is Mr. Freeman's command over the enormous mass of facts feet mine of learning on which the book is a per se. There is evidently a powerful attraction for Mr. Freeman in the outer aspects of war and policy which throughout tends to lead him away from the examination of the deeper questions which he beneath them. . . . Throughout there is too much of wars and wittemgements, and too little of the life, the tendencies, the sentiments, of the people."—Sat. Rev., xxiii, 469, 532.

"Mr. Freeman passes silently by religion, intellect, society, but he never takes his income to the digress hall or the peasant's hut. Of the actual life, the manners, the tastes of our forefathers, this book tells us nothing."—Sat. Rev., xxvi, 220.

"Few figures . . . are more fitted to kindle the imagination of the historian (than that of William the Conqueror), and it is a little disappointing when we find that every page of his book is with a coldness which tells upon unjust to the Conqueror: it is that one he is ever purposely what distinctly moral effort it costs him to be just. More than just he is resolute not to be. There is not a trace of sympathy, of fervid admiration, of enthusiasm, in the picture. The historian has washed off the brilliant colours in which he painted Harold from his palette, and sketches his great rival as a cold and conscientious, but in grey. The result is inevitable. We bow with respect before the care and accuracy which are displayed, but we gain no lively impression of William."—Sat. Rev., xxxiii, 161, 186.

"It is not too much to say that the publication of this work has been an era in historical study among English-speaking peoples; his glowing pages are the medium through which the results of the profound scholarship of others as well as himself have become a common possession. If his patriotism at times almost verges on chauvinism, if his hero-worship often blinds him to the faults of his favorites, his tone is at any rate always healthy and elevated; he never turns a blind eye to vices, his enthusiasm is never lavished upon vulgar aristocratic excellences."—Nation, xxiii, 391.

"It is . . . the work of a real historian, not of a mere historical critic, one endowed with a sense of art and symmetry, and able to paint a battle or a man. Its defects are those incident to the author's position as a pioneer in the field of history. He is compelled to argue while he narrates, and half his book reads like a commentary on the other half."—T. HEMPHRY WARD: The Reign of Queen Victoria, ii, 475.

4. Old English History for Children, Lon., 1869, 12mo. "His book has the special charm of being in its origin a real children's book. It was begun a good many years ago, and was written bit by bit for the use of my own children, as they wanted it, or as I found time to write it. . . . In all the earlier and better portions of the book it is good clear children's talk."—Sat. Rev., xxxvii, 678.

"The results of the whole investigation can scarcely be called satisfactory. The number of institutions for which a common origin is claimed is small, and, what is worse, the proof on which it rests is very slender."—Acad., v, 277.

"Mr. Freeman has compared Greek, Italian, and Teutonic institutions in an excellent manner. But the object for which the comparison was instituted he has altogether failed, in our opinion, to attain. We cannot find that he has thrown any light upon the primitive Aryan constitution; or, rather, we think that the facts he has adduced tend to a conclusion quite different from that which he has drawn."—Ath., No. 2413.

"Mr. Freeman has done much more than compile a handbook of geographical names; he has made a substantial contribution to geographical history. He has not only given definitions of terms, but he has shown the causes of the geographical changes which have taken place. . . . He has introduced a new view of European history, and has initiated the process of differentiation by which the various states were formed. . . . Mr. Freeman's book will for the future place at every one's command accurate knowledge of the points involved in proposals of territorial changes. "From Mr. Freeman's point of view—or rather from one of his many points of view, for he looks at his subject in many aspects—the period from the accession of William Rufus down to the overthrow of Robert of Normandy by King Henry was the time in which was worked out the problem of reestablishing the English crown to the Norman Conquest, of unfeudalizing, as Mr. Freeman expresses it, the Conquest and the dynasty which the Conquest had brought in. . . . There are no signs of the weariness and exhaustion that sometimes mark a continuation. Mr. Freeman is as profoundly interested in his work, as decided in his views of right and wrong, as minute and careful in working out every detail, as ever."—Sat. Rev., lli, 596.

"The last thirteen years of the eleventh century are depicted with all the wealth of detail, all the vividness of narrative, all the fulness of local and personal knowledge, which distinguish Mr. Freeman's history of the Norman Conquest. But, it must be confessed, the latter part of the story falls in interest considerably behind the earlier."—Ath., No. 2861.

22. Lectures to American Audiences: I, The English People in its Three Homes: II, The Practical Bearings of General European History, Phila., 1882; Lon., 1883, p. 8vo.

"It must be confessed that Mr. Freeman approaches the American public somewhat in the spirit of a missionary, as if the American public had not been reading his books for twenty years. The first course is precisely adapted to an audience that had never heard of Mr. Freeman or of the English people in their three homes. The thought is excessively diluted, but it is agreeably stated, and will prepare the uninitiate very satisfactorily for the stronger course of the second course. . . . Mr. Freeman's comments are always sensible upon our political machinery and methods are always sensible and worthy of consideration."—Nation, xxxvi, 49.

23. English Towns and Districts: Addresses and Sketches, Illust. and Maps, Lon., 1883, 8vo.

"Wherever buildings and ruins are wanting Mr. Freeman's interest in a period so remote is full blown, and he offers stones to syllabics. . . . The obvious answer to this criticism, of course, is that the original scope of each paper was antiquarian rather than literary."—Acad., xxiv, 2.

24. Some Impressions of the United States, Lon., 1886, p. 8vo.

"His desire to be faithful led him to be so cautious that it is not often very difficult to get from his book a distinct idea of what his subject were. . . . His book is in part a labored attempt to show us we are more English than anything else. . . . It is only a misleading kind of criticism. . . . It is only in our life that we differ from English life that we get any clear idea about ourselves."—Nation, xxxvi, 494.

"It tells us that his book is the fruit of a six months' visit to the United States; and surely to have observed so carefully, to have accumulated so many facts in so short a time, must be looked upon as no ordinary performance. Nor is it his industry alone that deserves praise; Mr. Freeman desires to see the object fairly, and he reproduces the impression it makes upon him with much faithfulness; the result is that the likeness of Brother Jonathan which is accepted in England as exact is seen to be a mere caricature."—Spectator, lvi, 897. Friedmann, Paul. Anno Boelyn: a Chapter of English History, 1527-1536, Lon., 1884, 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1885. (The work is based chiefly on manuscripts in the Public Record Office, supplemented by researches in the Archives of Vienna and the Bibliothèque National at Paris.)

*No historian has studied this period with greater care than Mr. Friedmann. It is true that he relies mainly for his facts on the letters of foreign ambassadors who were hostile to Henry VIII, and were constantly engaged in opposing him, but their testimony is amply supported by other evidence. —Ibid., No. 296.

How closely connected the history of Anne Boelyn was with the continental politics of Europe has never been adequately shown by any writer till now. Mr. Friedmann, however, makes it abundantly clear; and this, we should say, is the most marked and valuable feature of his work. —JAMES GALDNER: Acad., xxvi, 282.

After a series of chapters that detail the circumstances of Channing's childhood, youth, and education, the vicissitudes of his maturity, his wanderings to and fro, he has four concluding chapters . . . which summarize and criticize in a comprehensive and effective manner the leading characteristics of the man."—Nation, xlv, 101.

Froude, James Anthony, LL.D., (ante, vol. i, p. 1811.) b. 1818, at Darlington, Devonshire; son of the late Ven. R. de Froude, Archbishop of Toronto; was educated at Westminster School, and at Oriel College, Oxford, where he became under the influence of the Tractarian movement, of which his brother, Richard Durrill Froude, (q. v., ante, vol. ii, p. 1811) was one of the leaders. In 1840 he took his degree with a second class in Classics, and in 1842 he gained the Chancellor's prize for an English essay, and was elected Fellow of Exeter College. In 1844 he took deacon's orders in the Church of England. A fundamental change of views led to his abandonment of his fellowship and of a clerical life, and, being debarred by his orders from a profession, he devoted himself entirely to letters, contributing largely to Fraser's Magazine and to the Westminster Review. Of the former periodical he was for some time editor at a later period, resigning that office in 1871. In 1867 he was elected rector of the University of St. Andrews. In 1872 he took advantage of the Clerical Disabilities Act to relinquish formally the office of deacon. In the autumn of the same year he visited the United States and delivered lectures on the relations between England and Ireland, which led him into an animated controversy with Father Thomas Burke, supra, the Dominican orator. In 1874 he was sent by the government of Lord Beaconsfield to the Cape of Good Hope on a mission connected with the scheme for the federation of the South African colonies. Later he made a voyage to Australia and another to the West Indies. He was one of the executors of Carlyle, and was intrusted with the task of editing his literary remains and writing his life. His editions of Carlyle's Reminiscences, &c., and of Mr. Carlyle's Letters are entered under the names of the writers, supra. 1. History of England from the Fall of Wolsey to the Defeat of the Spanish Armada, Lon., 1856-76, 12 vols., 8vo; new ed., 1881-82, 8vo. (The title was originally History of England from the Fall of Wolsey to the Death of Elizabeth, Vols. i-iv, are mentioned ante, vol. i, p. 1811.)

"He writes under the auspices of a new school of historical composition, which requires effect to be produced not by brilliant rhetoric and imposing generalization, but by minute accuracy of detail. . . . Mr. Froude has evidently a genuine love of historical research, which has led him to make the most of the increased copiousness of his materials; and the chapters of his book on the Protestants on Ireland, on Scotland, on the Pilgrimage of Grace, and on the French War, as well as many minor portions of the work, are so much fuller than the average of the same subjects given by his predecessors, that they may be said to be additions to the history of England. . . The details are selected with judgment and taste, and thrown into a vivid and striking form by the powers of a fine imagination. The narrative moves slow; nor has Mr. Froide the skill of preserving the perfect unity of a great historical drama amidst great complexity of events and frequent shifts of the scene. . . The book is greatly expounded from a fault of literary judgment than from an exaggerated estimate of the historical and moral value of everything that proceeded from the government of Henry VIII. . . Mr. Froide has a great command of English language, which no man is expected to rival; sometimes runs a little wild. The tone of his writing is sometimes rather monkish: we come to read history, not to sigh over it. But this again is the exaggeration of a genuine sensibility which lies at the root of a good deal of the excellency of his work. . . The extended religious and conscientious career which Mr. Froide has gone through in the course of his devious theological career has given him a great advantage in depicting the various shades of religious sentiment and the various phases of religious party. . . We doubt whether in this great question of religious sentiment and the various phases of religious party. . . We are obliged to a complicated, various, and wavering religious movement, but Mr. Froide does not possess the same advantage in dealing with questions of politics, jurisprudence, or political economy, as in dealing with religious questions. . . Mr. Froide seems to have thought that it would be an unsatisfactory result of all his laborious researches if he ended in furnishing his readers merely with a mass of new and interesting details illustrating the received view of the occurrences of the time, or even with some important modifications of that view in regard to questions of a secondary kind. Some great discovery must be made to reward adequately so much labor, and to satisfy the expectation raised by the opening of mines of documentary evidence hitherto unexplored. This discovery is, that the reign of Henry VIII. is unimpaired, the original writing of which being restored by Mr. Froide, who has detected beneath the legends written over it, an edifying and pure doctrine, Henry VIII. though his administration was beset with difficulties and clouded by domestic infelicities, is converted into a perfect king, while his supposed victims are converted into criminals, without the least change of circumstances, by their misdeeds, and by the urgent pressure of duty. — Edinburgh Review, edit. 206 et seq.: review of vols. i. & ii.

high qualities as a historian. Of all Mr. Froide's best first; his account of the Memoria, for instance, is even finer than Mr. Motley's, and the best of others on the rebellion of 1549. In Ireland are exceedingly graphic. Inferior to these is this inferior at all, is his power of grasping the essential ideas of the period of which he is treating, and placing them clearly and strongly before the reader. . . His powers of analysis, both of policy and of character, are good, although less marked than the qualities already mentioned. . . While we do not think that Mr. Froide's place will be in the first rank of historians, we do not hesitate to pronounce this work an adequate and worthy history of Popery to Protestantism, and at the same time the English-ure, of thought and action, which change was made from revolutions and the maritime ascendancy of the seventeenth century. — Nation, x. 323.

The writer possesses many of the qualifications necessary to an historian of the first rank. With ample materials gathered and deciphered at the expense of time and labor which none can properly estimate who has not himself tried the process; with a power of graphic delineation, and a skill in the selection of such incidents as give completeness and interest to the narrative; with an insight into the characters that pass before him in the panoramic picture which prepares for a fair estimate of their capacity; with the patriotic feelings of an Englishman, the love of freedom natural to a protestant, and sympathy with man's intellectual and moral progress, the history takes a high place among those whose reputation is destined to endure. Mr. Froide is never dull or wearisome, though his history abounds in details. . . Weaving his web with constructive art, it comes forth from his hands having mark and finish upon it. — Atk., No. 2198.

A book to which even those who will differ in principle from the writer will not refuse to attribute of praise is a work of great industry, power, and ingenuity. — W.

We rise from his personal and deeply impressed with the vividness of the pictures which have been so artistically displayed before us: and, whilst expressing our dissent from much that is accomplished author has written, we must, at the same time, record our high sense of the debt of gratitude that is due to him for the unflinching sincerity not less than the remarkable ability with which he has communicated his views. — Atk., No. 2126.

8. Cesar, a Sketch, Lon., 1870, 8vo.

There is much in Mr. Froide's estimates of men and measures from which we entirely dissent, and his judgments of some of the most prominent characters in the history of the Roman Republic seem to us neither sound nor subtle. But in such matters differences of opinion are inevitable, and, as a rule, the tone of his sketches seems to us to be temperate and its candour unimpaired. . . In either in its method of treating its subject or in the conclusions at which it arrives, so that we doubt whether it is likely to be singled out by the readers of a remainder future from among the many tributes to Cesar and Ciceron which our generation has produced. — *Sat. 9. Bunyan, ("English Men of Letters") Lon., 1880, p. 8vo.

He has given in this volume a real study of Bunyan's life and character, and at the same time a study of his books. . . We may sum up what has to be said of Mr. Froide's purely biographical remarks by saying that they are sensible and sufficient and very strongly marked with his own. — Atk., No. 2731.

As Hamlet's father was slain by his unnatural brother his grave with all his imperfections fill upon him, so Carlyle been recalled from his tomb by one who professes to have felt for him the love and veneration of a son, but who has performed by some marvellous perversion of judgment all that might have been looked for from an independent, honest character and of lofty thoughts, who would not for any worldly advantage abate one jot of his own standard of right and duty, essentially of a generous and kindly nature, a delightful companion, shining in his own husband and friend, a devoted brother, a really actionate tributions to English literature which have for so long placed him in the front rank of historians and essayists. This being so, why has every fault and weakness been traced with such loving insistence as to spare no ugly or repulsive detail? . . . Why need every spiteful and rusty letter or journal have been preserved and printed for the misquotation of posterity? . . . Why need the discomfited been a thoroughly useful and his wife by what should have dwelt upon at such length and with agreeable friendship be is of course, impossible to note all the matters of consequence and amusement in these pregnant volumes, which, seemed right to produce them, cannot be laid down without a deep feeling of their importance and surpassing interest. — Sat. Rev., lviii. 588.

Carlyle was a great moral teacher, or he was nothing. If he was such a teacher, then he must to use Mr. Arnold's description of Joubert have sincerely loved light, and not he came to prove to have little private darkness of his own. If selfish, then undoubtedly his practice did not square with his teaching. If biographers are to be studies in the moral lessons which his life has afforded, then the scrupulousness therefore, Mr. Froide's charge in fulfilling his task in his own way, unmoved by the constraints of the newspaper press, — that fine engine, according to the authors of "On Com- much to be admired as it is characteristic." — W. WALLACE, Acad., xxlii. 267.

It would to some readers be a relief if more plausible and more complicated paradoxes had not seemed to constitute a purpose of proselytism with one of the most interesting biographies in the English language; yet, when the book are disregarded and forgotten, in portions of the Carlyle, as well as in the heraldic personality "live." — *G. "It would be hard to exaggerate Mrs. Furness's industry and faithfulness; and if we were to make any complaint about the book, it would be that lavish care and industry had made it almost too good."—Nation, xvii, 412.

"This work supplies an undoubted want, and we are happy to add, it supplies it in an admirable manner. . . . It is credit to herself, to her sex, and to her nation. . . . Properly considered, it is a most valuable contribution to true Shakespearean study; by the side of which much of what passes for Shakespearean lore is shown in its full worthlessness."—Ath., No. 2446.

"We do not think we exaggerate when we say that no spurious criticism exist that the volumes for which we are deeply indebted to Mrs. Cowden Clarke and Mrs. Home are the utmost heartiness. It is like the coming of a fresh breeze which will never cease to blow, to blow away the frothy phantasies that are perpetually issuing from the brains of ill-informed guess-mongers, to blow strength and vigour into all criticism that are genuine births of knowledge and of sound and healthful judgment."—J. W. Hales: Acad., vi, 420.

Furness, Horace Howard, Ph.D., LL.D., son of Rev. W. H. Furness, infra; b. 1833, in Philadelphia; graduated at Harvard 1854; admitted to the bar 1859; studied; and has accumulated materials for the illustration of the poet's works unrivaled probably in value and extent by any similar collection in America. The honorary degree of Ph.D. has been conferred upon him by the University of Göttingen, in recognition of his eminent services to Shakespearean literature. He is an active member of the board of trustees of the University of Pennsylvania. 1. (Ed.) A New Variorum Edition of Shakespeare: vol. i, Romeo and Juliet, Phila., 1871, imp. 8vo.

"That a new Variorum Shakespeare is wanted no one will be inclined to dispute. The last work of the kind . . . appeared in 1821. In the half-century since then, Shakespearean studies have been carried on with constantly increasing activity. . . . We have thus a Shakespearean literature wonderful for extent and variety. It is sent its substance in a condensed and acceptable form. . . . This is the task—opus vere opusculum—which Mr. Furness has undertaken. . . . In deciding what to admit of the editor's reason, to err on the side of fullness rather than of defect. . . . One aim of his work was to present a history of Shakespearean interpretation; and for this it was necessary that the correct. . . . From a variety of indications we are satisfied that his self-imposed task has been executed with conscientious and unwearied fidelity."—Nation, xli, 397.

"Correction since the appearance of Malone's edition in 1821, that, if the American editor maintains throughout the work the spirit and industry which he has displayed in his first volume, he will furnish a new reference to Shakespeare that, in bookseller's phrase, no library should be without."—Spectator, xlv, vi.

2. Vol. ii, Macbeth, 1873.

"It is impossible to criticize, within any reasonable limits, a volume so full of valuable matter. We can but repeat our expressions of welcome to this excellent and keen contribution to the study of our greatest poet, and give it our cordial approval."—Ath., No. 2589.

3. Vols. iii, iv, Hamlet, 1877, 2 vols.

"Hamlet" is in bulk double either of these, "Romeo and Juliet" and "Macbeth," and is doubtless the outcome of tenfold the labor. A Variorum edition of it, harvesting of England, but of Germany and France, and storing all this in two volumes of this size, might be the work of a lifetime. . . . Mr. Furness has found it necessary to construct a text for himself by collation and comparison of the others. He has done it with infinite judgment and care, and given a good, conservative text in modern type and printing. . . . Then come notes grammatical and explanatory. These are presented with admirable brevity and clearness, and are occasionally enlivened and en- lightened by pithy remarks of the editor, all too rare. . . . The second volume, under the name of an appendix, presents the student with a collection of documents and critical discussions too extended to be placed in immediate connection with the text. . . . Most students would have been glad to see this volume larger, but all will recognize the excellent judgment with which the selections have been made and the fidelity and art of the translations. Beyond all question, the work furnishes important facilities for the study of this great poem."—F. A. Mace in: Nation, xxv, 272.

"The present volumes abound in special difficulties of their own, not the least of which spring from the extraordinary number and extent of the discussions upon so many points connected with the play. A glance at the bibliography of Hamlet in the first volume, and of the second volume, would strike the nervousness of despair into any editor not fortified by the intensest love of the author and of the work. . . . Mr. Furness is to be congratulated on the completion of the most difficult, the most important, and the most interesting of all the volumes of his series."—Spectator, II, 219.

4. Vol. v., King Lear, 1880.
"Mr. Furness gives us the substance of a hundred volumes in one. It contains a critical text, with all the various readings and interpretations and explanatory notes from the beginning to the present time, with the criticisms and comments of all kinds, lexical, grammatical, æsthetic, and the rest. Mr. Furness works with more ease and expresses his own opinions more freely than in his former volumes, and this is a gain. In an appendix there are discussions of the date of composition, the sources of the plot, the actors, the costume, extended passages of English, German, and French criticism, and a bibliography, and an index. . . . There is no book to be compared with it; it is indispensable to every student of 'shakspeare.'"—Nation, xxxi, 327.

"I slowly but surely the great task undertaken by America of providing an edition of shakspeare authoritative as regards text and exhaustive in respect of comment advances. . . . It is pleasant to have in one volume the utterances of many a scholar, the student, the critic, the erudite, and commentators upon Lear, together with a full record of the views that have been taken by actors like Kean or Devrient."—Ath., No. 274.

"This edition of 'King Lear' strikes us as, for all practical purposes, perfect. . . . The river of text flows between broad meadows and park-lands of annotation. A series of appendices swells out the volume to portly, though by no means unwieldy, dimensions. Yet we have hardly met with a superfluous or irrelevant sentence. . . . Not only is the text as printed the result of exhaustive critical research, not only is every plausible emendation, every pertinent comment, inserted in the foot-notes, but we have separate essays on the date of composition, the source of the plot, the duration of the action, the costumes of the characters, and so on. We are told what mad-doctors have thought of the insanity of Lear, and how celebrated actors have personated him on the stage; a section of interesting and useful selection is given of opinions by English, American, and German critics; a list of the editions collected, and another of the books that have been written on the play, present a bird's-eye view of the literature of the subject; and the whole is wound up with what no such volume should be without, an index. All this might have been done with a mere result of ponderousness—an imposing and appalling display of such reading as is never read. But Dr. Furness's hand is light, and strong common sense is his effectual safeguard from pedantry."—Spectator, III, 1069.

5. Vol. vi., Othello, 1886. (In this volume and the following the text is that of the first folio.)

"Mr. Furness's own opinions are always valuable. In the majority of cases he accepts the simplest reading. Now and then, dazzled as all appear to be who meet too earnestly and too long the rays of Shakspeare, he undergoes some apparent indication. As a rule, however, he is the surest as well as the most infatigable of commentators and editors. The position of his work is already monumental."—Ath., No. 3669.

6. Vol. vii., The Merchant of Venice, 1888.
"The text of the first folio, pure and simple, with all its errors and difficulties, is accepted, and the various readings of the four folios and the four quartos, with those of subsequent editions, are given at the foot. This course is the most sensible that can be adopted. . . . In the appendix, which occupies nearly half the volume, are given the materials bearing upon the date and origin of the plot, comments on the duration of the action, critical opinions, and much other matter of interest. . . . Like the previous volumes, this latest addition to the slowly-augmenting series is a model of scholarship and industry, the latter a rarer gift in the case of Shakspearian editors than the former."—Ath., No. 2183.

7. Vol. viii., As You Like It, 1890.
"In what is called 'The Variorum Edition of Shakspeare,' America has the honour of having produced the very best and most complete edition, so far as it has gone, of our great national poet. For text, illustration, bibliography (not pictorial), commentary, and criticism, it leaves nothing to be desired. The editor . . . combines with the patience and accuracy of the textual scholar an industry which has overlooked nothing of value that has been written about Shakspeare by the best German and French as well as English commentators and critics; and what is of no less moment, he possesses in himself a rare deficiency of literary approach and bias, which, if present, is dispelled by familiarity with all that is best in the literature of an-quity as well as of modern times, which he brings to bear on his notes with great effect. . . . It will say little for the intelligence of any one who chooses to profit by the labours of Mr. Furness over this play, if he does not rise from his book with a quickened appreciation of the dramatist's genius, and an intimate knowledge of the varied characters by which the action of the play is carried on."—Blackwood's Magazine, September, 1880.

Furness, Richard, 1791-1857, b. at Eyam, Derbyshire; was a Wesleyan local preacher, and successively a soldier, currier, school-master, &c. 1. T. Rag-Bag, [verse], 1832. 2. Medicus Magnus: a Poem, in Three Cantos, Sheffield, 1836, 12mo. 3. Poetical Works: with a Sketch of his Life by G. Calvert Holland, Sheffield, 1858, 12mo.

"His verse is antiquated but forcible."—Dict. of Nat. Biog., xx, 333.

Furness, Rev. William Henry, D.D., [ante, vol. i., add.], resigned his pastorate in Philadelphia in 1875; received the degree of Doctor of Letters from Columbia College in 1887. Besides the books mentioned ante, vol. i., he has published: 1. The Veil Partly Lifted and Jesus becoming Visible, Iost, 1861, 12mo. 2. (Trans.) Character of Jesus Portrayed; from the German of Daniel Schenkel, Bost., 1866, 2 vols., 12mo. 3. The Unconscious Truth of the Four Gospels, Phila., 1868, 12mo. 4. Jesus, (The Importance of ascertaining the Historical Truth concerning Jesus; The Historical Idea of Jesus, &c.) Phila., 1871, 12mo. 5. (Trans.) Schiller's Song of the Bell; with Photographs from Originals of C. Jaeger and A. Müller, N. York, 1874, r. 4to. 6. (Trans.) The Voice in Speaking, by Emma Schiller, Illust., Phila., 1875, 12mo. 7. The Power of the Spirit manifest in Jesus of Nazareth, Phila., 1877, 12mo. 8. The Story of the Resurrection of Jesus told once more: with Remarks upon the Character of Jesus and the Historical Claims of the Four Gospels, Phila., 1884, 12mo.

"In this little book there is much to recall the best features of Dr. Furness's early writings; and though, of course, we do not in the least concur in Dr. Furness's peculiar theology, or no-theology, (which is, perhaps, what he would prefer to have attributed to him), no one can read even this little volume without feeling that he gains a fresher insight into the scenes with which Dr. Furness is dealing."—Spectator, VIII, 183.

"Dr. Furness possesses that rare poetic insight so essential to the accurate transfer of a poet's thought into a foreign tongue."—Critic, v, 231.

Furnish, Frederick James, M.A., Ph.D., b. 1825, at Egham, Surrey; was educated at the College, London, and at Trinity Hall, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1846. He has since devoted himself closely to the study of early and middle English literature. He took a prominent part in establishing the Early English Text Society in 1864, the New Shakspeare Society in 1874, the Browning Society in 1881, and other associations for the special study of some one subject or author, and through these societies has raised and expended a large sum of money in printing early manuscripts and rare books. He was for many years editor of the Philological Society's new English dictionary. In 1885 he was awarded a civil-list pension for his philological labors. 1. Gaton, Francis, F.R.S., b. 1822; son of S. T. Gatton, of Duddleston, near Birmingham, Eng., grand-cousin of Charles Darwin, (q. v., ante, vol. i, p. 1.) and Birmingham Hospital, and at King's College, London, and graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1844. In 1846 he travelled in North Africa and on the White Nile, and in 1850, accompanied by C. J. Andersson, supra, he made an exploration of the then unknown Daumra and Ovampo Lands in South Africa. He at first attached himself to meteorology, and was appointed a member of a committee of the board of trade, which concerned itself with the administration of the Meteorological Office; but he is best known through his researches into the laws of heredity. He has contributed to periodicals, is an active member of the British Association and of other learned societies, and in 1855-56 was president of the Anthropological Society. 1. The Typelotype: a Printing Electric Telegraph, Lon., 1850, 8vo. 2. Narrative of an Explorer in Tropical South Africa, Lon., 1853, p. 8vo. 3. The Art of Travel; or, Shifts and Contrivances available in Wild Countries, Lon., 1855, 12mo; 4th ed., entirely reast and much enlarged, 1867; 5th ed., 1872.

"Mr. Francis Galton has bestowed immense pains upon the empirical proof of a thesis which from its intrinsic nature can never be proved empirically. . . . Until we can do infinitely more towards sorting the stores of man's mental growth and experience into what he brings into the world and what he draws from his subsequent surroundings in the world, our minds are in no condition for even the first shadowy conception of a 'law of heredity.'"—Sat. Rev., xxviii, 882.

8. English Men of Science: their Nature and Nurture, Lon., 1874, 8vo.

"His present aim has been, not so much to prove that scientific ability has a strong tendency to be hereditary, but to discover by an elaborate inductive process what are the leading conditions that go to the making of scientific men,—among which conditions innate disposition is shown to occupy a prominent place. . . . It is almost certain that no great results can be obtained from such a method as that which Mr. Galton has adopted."—J. S. COTTON: Acad., vii, 92.

"That which strikes us as most noteworthy in this important contribution to English history is the clearness with which the book, as a whole, brings to light, and habitually insisted upon, the constitutional significance of the Parliamentary struggles of those times. As the downfall of the personal authority of James I. had been due to the central and typical scheme of his foreign policy, so the failure of the foreign policy of Buckingham and Charles I. was an important element in the want of confidence which was the real cause of the overthrow of the Stuart monarchy."—*Sat. "What makes him pre-eminently trustworthy as an authority is that he abstains from treating events and the actors in them from any particular point of view; that, at the risk of giving his narrative an occasionally disjointed appearance, he enables the reader to see different courses of events (Scottish, for instance, and English) in progress side by side, now converging, and now intersecting; and that in the deed he never forgets the nature of the deed, be he King Charles or King 'I'm.'"—Sat. Rev., lii, 429.

"Mr. Gardiner's principal achievement, I take it, is the luminous explanation he has given of the rise of the Cavalier party and of that division which, growing up in the heart of Parliament during the autumn of 1641, led to the disastrous Civil War."—J. R. SEELEY, Acad., xli, 35.

Civil War itself is told minutely. It is made wonderfully clear."—Sat. Rev., lxii, 813.

"Mr. Gardner does not encourage the dream that haunted the English mind through the first half of this century—the dream of a grand, cyclic narrative, a sort of moral, of which Charles I., Strafford, Pym, Hampden, and Falkland, and Cromwell should be the heroes. It is evident, but also the poetical view, of that picture of Macaulay and the poetry of Carlyle. He rejects the poet's story which leaves its somewhat bewildered and serious."—J. K. SEELYE: Acad., xxxi, 33.

"If the art of historical narration consists in so handling one's materials that the reader shall see and how they came to happen, Mr. Gardner possesses the art in no common degree. Having a strong grasp of all the facts himself, he tells the complex story firmly, clearly, and coherently, always bringing it in again at the right moment. From first to last the reader finds himself really interested, and full-bodied kind which is produced by his brilliant devices of style or eccentric methods, but by genuine and orderly information as to men and events, communicated by his records. The style is deliberate, grave, and manly, with a passage of energy and heightened tone. . . . The only question is whether, in his impartiality, does not pass too far into the guise of unnecessary coolness. In the English past of two hundred and fifty years ago, if not at dates much further back, may not the strictest modern historian discern the traditions that had most of the right in them, and, while acknowledging anything of merit in other tendencies, may he not attach himself preferably to those?"—DAVID MASSON: Lond., vii, 236.

"For grasp of situation and desire to set everything in its proper light, for perception of motives and the wise use of Mr. Gardner stands alone."—Spectator, li, 699.

With MELLISSE, J. HASS, Introduction to the Study of English History, Lon., 1881, p. 8vo: 2d ed., 1882. "Made up of what are in fact two distinct works. . . . The second part of this book . . . contains a treatise on the authorities, contemporary and non-contemporary, of English history. This is the production of Mr. Mullinger. Mr. Mullinger's work. . . . Mr. Gardner supplies an admirable general idea of English history, and presents it to his mind. Mr. Mullinger puts the inquirer in the way of forming, if he so chooses, an opinion of his own."—*Sat. Although the treatise . . . is primarily a biography, and a very full and minute one, and although it is written with the reverential admiration of children rather than from the point of view of a biographer and critical historian, it is also virtually a story of the anti-slavery struggle. . . . It cannot be accurately dealt with till the later volumes are before us. . . . If that need now be done is to call attention to the mass of valuable materials which the biographers of Garrison have provided for historical inquirers. . . . None; all appear in print for the first time. Many relate to forgotten controversies, others serve chiefly to illustrate Garrison's character and that of his fellow-workers. But there are also many which throw a full and clear light on the condition of America, and especially of New England, five or six decades back.—JAMES HAYES, Historical Review, No. 1.

Gaskell, Mrs. Elizabeth Cleghorn, 1810-1865, [ante, vol. 1, add.], b. in Cheyne Walk, Chelsea, was not, as stated ante, vol. 1, Miss Stronkin, but was the daughter of William Stevenson, (q. v., ante, vol. 11.) who at the time of her birth was keeper of the records to the treasury. Her mother having died in giving her birth, she was brought up by her aunt, Mrs. Lamb, at the village of Knutsford, in Cheshire,—the "Cranford" of her popular story of that name. After spending two years at a school at Stratford-on-Avon, she lived with her father till his death in 1829, and afterwards at Knutsford, till her marriage in 1832 to Rev. William Gaskell, a Unitarian minister of Manchester. Some years later she turned her attention to writing, and contributed an account of Clopton Hall to William Howitt's Remarkable Pieces, and some short stories to the People's Journal. After the publication of Mary Barton she visited London and made the acquaintance of Dickens and other literary men, and became a contributor to Household Words. During the cotton famine in 1862 Mrs. Gaskell started sewing-schools for the female mill-hands, thus publicly adopted and proved of great benefit. Her death took place suddenly, of heart-disease, while staying at a house in Hampshire which she had recently bought as a present for her husband. Her novel Wives and Daughters, which was coming out at the time in serial form, was left unfinished. The following list of her works includes those mentioned ante, vol. 1, where dates, &c., are not given: 1. Mary Barton: a Tale of Manchester Life, Lon., 1848, 2 vols. p. Svo. Anon. (The 6th ed., 1854, contains Two Lectures on the Lamenches in Palestine, by Rev. William Gaskell.) 2. The Moorland Cottage. By the Author of Mary Barton. Lon., 1850, 4p. Svo. 3. Ruth: a Novel, 1853, 3 vols. p. Svo. 4. Cranford, Lon., 1853, p. Svo; new ed., illust., 1861. 5. Lizzie Leigh, and other Tales, Lon., 1854, 12mo; new ed., illust., 1863. 6. North and South, Lon., 1855, 2 vols. p. Svo. 7. The Life of Charlotte Brontë, Lon., 1857, 2 vols. p. Svo and 12mo; 3d ed., rev. and cor., 1858; new ed., illust., 1864. 8. My Lady Ludlow, and other Tales, Lon., 1859-61, 2 vols. p. Svo. 9. Round the Sofa, Lon., 1859, 2 vols. p. Svo. (This includes "My Lady Ludlow," &c.) 10. Right at Last, and other Tales, Lon., 1860, 12mo and p. Svo. 11. Lois the Witch, and other Tales, Lon., 1861, 16mo. 12. Sylvia's Lovers, Lon., 1863, 3 vols. p. Svo. 13. A Dark Night's Work, Lon., 1863, p. Svo. 14. The Gray Woman, and other Tales, Lon., 1865, p. Svo. 15. Cousin Phillis, and other Tales. Illust. Lon., 1865, p. Svo. 16. Wives and Daughters: an Every-Day Story. Illust. *No one would dream of ranking Mrs. Gaskell as a novelist beside Dickens or Thackeray, but she deserves a very high place among those who are comparatively unambitious in their efforts, and who, having a just measure of their own powers, succeed perfectly in what they undertake. She never attempted high flights, but pursued her way steadily and surely at a moderate elevation. Her style has not the magnificent reality of her friend Charlotte Brontë: it is homely, as suited her subjects. It was natural that art such as hers, working earnestly within a definite field, without straining to get beyond it, and never wasting its strength against the prejudices, should become more perfect as she went on. . . . To the last she was best known as the authoress of "Mary Barton" . . . But in her later novels, "Sybil's Lovers" and "Wives and Daughters," in which she left the manufacturing towns behind her and essayed to describe less oppressive and painful conditions of life, though she cannot be said to have improved upon the completeness and vividness of her separate portraits, she showed greater art in the management of her story. . . . Her last novel, "Wives and Daughters," though she did not live to write the concluding chapters, is in many respects the most mature, as it is, with the exception, perhaps, of Cranford, the most delightful, of her works."—W. "It is a new story, though it was impossible to tell even a few years ago with any thing like accuracy, simply because the original evidences had not been made sufficiently accessible, or comprehensively catalogued, in true chronological order. But, although the author is a monk, and dedicates his work to Pope Leo XIII., by whom, it appears, he was induced to undertake it, he need fear no contradiction hereafter on the main point here revealed. The old standards, universally discredited at the time, and believed in by a later generation only through prejudice and ignorance, are now dispelled forever, and no candid Prot-

Gatty, Mrs. Margaret Scott. ("Aunt Judy," pseud.) [ante, vol. I, GATTY, Mrs. ALFRED, add.] 1800-1874, was the youngest daughter of the Rev. Dr. Scott, Nelson's chaplain on board the "Victory" at Trafalgar, and was married in 1820 to Rev. Alfred Gatty, supra. In connection with her husband she wrote a life of her father, (noticed ante, vol. II, under SCOTT, A. J., II, 1.) She afterwards devoted herself entirely to juvenile writing, and in 1820 began the publication of a monthly journal for children, Aunt Judy's Magazine, which gained great popularity. 1. Geddes, James. The History of the Administration of John de Witt, Grand Pensionary of Holland: vol. I., 1622-1654, Lon., 1879, 8vo.

"If Mr. Geddes has been fired by the honourable ambition of worthily carrying on the thread of Mr. Motley's labours, the conception of the 'History' by the Administration of John de Witt is not the less his author's own, and his grasp of the general European history of the times with which he deals is, to say the least, as vigorous as that exhibited in the rather disappointing second volume of the 'Life and Death of John of Barneveldt.' We cannot, however, suppress a wish that Mr. Geddes had not thought it necessary to imitate Mr. Motley—or rather, perhaps, the admitted old master who is primarily responsible for the fashion to which we refer—in adopting the familiarly picturesque style of historical composition. . . . For English readers this volume is likely to possess a unique interest, centering in the narrative of what many assuredly will term the strangest diplomatic negotiation into which this country has ever entered with a foreign power. We do not know whether else to turn for so plain and succinct an account as that furnished in Mr. Geddes's pages of the great Protestant and Republican scheme of an Anglo-Dutch coalition."—Sat. Rev., xlii, 283.

"We feel, with Mr. Geddes, that 'if there had been a Boswell' by 'de Witt's' side, or a chatty French memoir-writer, we should have seen it all very differently.' As there was not, we think it pity that so good a writer should have wasted his time on such an unprofitable subject."—Spectator, III, 236.

George, Henry, b. 1839, in Philadelphia, Pa., California in 1858, and afterwards became a journalist. In 1880 he moved to New York. In 1881 he visited Ireland and England, and in 1883-84 again visited England and Scotland at the invitation of the English Land Reform Union, making speeches on the land question. At the invitation of the Scottish Land Restoration League he returned in the following year to Great Britain, and produced a strong effect by his speeches. In 1886 he was the candidate of the United Labor Party for mayor of New York, but was not elected. He is editor of the Standard, a weekly paper published in New York. 1. Fran., 1871, 8vo. 2. The Subsidy Question and the Our Land and Land Policy, National and State, San Democratic Party, San Fran., 1871, 8vo. 3. Progress and Poverty; an Inquiry into the Cause of Industrial Depressions and of Increase of Want with Increase of Wealth: the Remedy, N. York, 1880, 8vo; Lon., 1881; new ed., 1884.
"Mr. George endeavors to show that the cause, or principal cause, of poverty and wretchedness, in the midst of wealth and abundance in the world is the private ownership of land, whereby a few persons are enabled to monopolize from the many a rental for the use of something which is limited in quantity and indispensable to the human race. Essentially in sound, we find many admirable passages, and a notable spirit of candor pervading his work. The style is for the most part engaging, and often eloquent, and will find in it arguments to overthrow nearly all the communist theories of the present day."—Nation, xxxi, 68, 117.
(For replies to "Progress and Poverty," by the Duke of Argyll, Baron Bramwell, F. J. Bruce, I. B. Cooke, A. Crump, G. B. Dixwell, W. H. Mallock, J. Taylor, A. Toynbee, and F. Wrightson, see the respective names of these writers.) 4. The Irish Land Question: an Appeal to the Land Leagues, N. York, 1881, 12mo. 5. The Land Question: what it is, and how it may be settled, Lon., 1883, 12mo. 6. Social Problems, Chic., N. York, and Lon., 1884, p. 8vo.
"This is 'Progress and Poverty' over again, with less argument and more passion, less political economy and more trade and bombast. We do not understand the evils which Mr. George depicts, but his remedy for them is as worthless and futile as it would be atrocious if it had been carried into execution. . . . In his present work he advocates woman suffrage, and frankly avows his dislike of mixed dishes of sturdy good sense in all Mr. George's writings. . . . Mixed up with all his absurdities there are a few . . . Hurray for a few slight blemishes of diction, (will) for method of developing a subject greatly resembles that of Herbert Spencer: . . . but Mr. George's style is fresher and more brilliant."—Nation, xxxviii, 237, and xxxix, 294.
"Throughout his book there runs a vein of cheerful optimism; of the cynicism and scepticism which mark so many of the revolutionary class there is scarcely a trace. Nor can we agree with those who think that Mr. George's loud and here reappears, of the nationalization of land by the confederation of rent, is a dangerous one. It is a utopian idea that it may be dismissed as unpractical. Mr. George may hide from us the colossal blunder of gestions of truth that may undoubtedly be found in the book."—Lead., xxv, 87.
"Mr. George is the master of a clear and vigorous style, and although he looks almost exclusively at the darker side of things, although his denunciations of modern society are unduly severe, his facts are often unparily stated, and his not without warrant; and it is perhaps well that his observations are re-reminded, even in over-stimulated language, that our social system is not perfect, and that some momentous social problems are pressing for solution."—Spectator, lvii, 323.
7. Tariff Question; with Especial Regard to the Interests of Labour, N. York and Lon., 1886, 12mo.
"The most interesting parts of his book are the chapters in which he explains where the real strength of protection lies: it is in the assumption that 'the getting of work, not the getting of work, is the end to which we should have national policy should be directed. In following out this idea he discusses the matter in a way that is both fresh and suggestive.'"—Alb., No. 3065.

"A book which is to be commended for the labour bestowed upon it, but which can hardly find much favour outside the families of the descendants of the sergeant-at-arms to Guilelmus (conquisitor)."—Ath., No. 2121.

"It is, under the disguise of a family history, an attempt to construct a family, and establish a title to a baronetcy, which would be at once rejected if presented to any competent court. . . . There are a good many baronets, especially in Scotland, with dubious titles; but none of them, so far as we know, has fallen upon the device of supporting them by the publication of biographies of imaginary ancestors."—*J. 1. For Lack of Gold, Lon., 1871, 3 vols.; new ed., 1881.

"Mr. Gibbon has committed the same mistake in 'For Lack of Gold' which spoilt the thoroughness of 'Robin Gray'; that is, he has begun with a sweet and tender lullaby, and has suffered himself to wander off into unlikely and unreal sensationalisms. He evidently misapprehends both his own powers and the taste of the more cultivated class of readers, whom he could better interest than the coarser kind, and instead of striking out his vein of pure originality into the manufacture of a base and spurious metal, which is not refined enough for the best judges and not showy enough for the worst."—*Sat. "Mr. Gilbert seems to have spent some time in consulting the public records of Ferrara, and especially those which have reference to the life and times of Lucrezia Borgia; and his labour has resulted in a curious picture of the city as it was between three and four centuries ago, and a very interesting study of the character of a princess who has hitherto found but few champions. The idea originally thrown out by Mr. Rossetti, in his Dissertation on the Character of Lucrezia Borgia, has been fully worked out by Mr. Gilbert, who has at last succeeded in proving that the beautiful toxicologist of the stage has very little in common with the Lucrezia Borgia of history."—*Sat. "He is a story-teller à la generic, with a very peculiar tendency towards minute analysis of morbid and exceptional mental processes. Yet he never seems to analyze any mood or mental condition for its own sake simply; and we are therefore compelled to see in him the professed moralist with a leaning towards hard psychological phenomena, in which he finds a ready justification for his didactic purpose. . . . The fusing power is what Mr. Gilbert is most lacking in. He sees his whole subject clearly enough from the pseudo-scientific ground, but he does not so see it from the elevated table-land of the imagination. . . . All Mr. Gilbert's books are full of exquisite pictures and individual points, which are vastly unlike those found in the books of any one else."—Contemp. Rev., xii. 437-44.

Enlarged Edition, with Additional Letters and a Memoir of the Author, 1880.

"In the very interesting life before us tardy justice has at last been done to the memory of one whose natural gifts qualified him apparently to rank amongst the greatest of English artists. Mr. Gilchrist's book both tells the singular story of Blake's life, for the first time, with fullness and with a judgment which is rarely at fault, and by its numerous and faithful illustrations enables the reader more or less to make acquaintance with the artist. . . . The book is written in a clear, vigorous, unconventional style; it is as amusing as a romance, and we have few recent lives in which the facts have been more carefully collected, presented with less parade, or arranged in such neat order. The catalogue of drawings which has been added by Mr. William Rossetti is a model of what is an indispensable adjunct to an artist's life."—Sat. Rev., xvi. 650.

Sketches of Well-known American Writers, N. York, 1888, sm. 8vo. And see GIL, HELEN GRAY, supra.

Gilder, Richard Watson, LL.D., b. 1811, in Hordentown, N.J.; was educated mainly in a school kept by his father, Rev. W. H. Gilder. In 1865 he joined the staff of the Newark (N.J.) Advertiser, and in 1868 aided in establishing the Newark Morning Register. In 1869 he became editor of Hours at Honeson; afterwards merged in Scribner's Monthly, now the Century, of which he was made assistant editor. In 1881 he succeeded Dr. Holland as editor-in-chief. 1. The New Day; a Poem, in Songs and Sonnets, N. York, 1876, 16mo; new ed., 1880.

"There is sincerity of emotion, deficiency of expression, seriousness of intention, and artistic capacity enough in Mr. Gilder's verses to give ground for hope that, with large experience and faithful culture, he will write such poetry as will add pre-eminence to these first works of his muse."—Nation, xxii, 11.

"The New Day," a series of love-sonnets and short lyrics, deserves recognition for mastery of rhythm, for refinement of culture, and for a distinctness of expression which, if not to the imagination, has the subtle flavour of art."—Spectator, lix, 233.

2. The Poet and his Master, and other Poems, Illust. N. York, 1878, 12mo. 3. Lyrics, and other Poems, N. York, 1883, 16mo. 1. Poems, in Three Parts: 1. The New Day; 2. The Celestial Passion; 3. Lyrics, N. York, 1887. (Complete edition, including some poems not previously published.)

"He stands clearly the first in promise among the younger men to whom we must look to inherit the poetic laurels of Emerson and Longfellow."—Nation, xli, 549.

"Poet and his Master" each is a cluster of flawless poems, the earlier verse marked by the mystical beauty, intense emotion, and psychological distinctions of the select illustrative efforts. "An individual tone dominates his maturer lyrical efforts."—E. C. STEEDMAN: Poets of America, 42.

Gilder, William Henry, b. 1838, in Philadelphia, and was brevetted major at its close; accompanied Lieut. Schwatka on the expedition in search of Sir John Franklin in 1878, and in 1881, as correspondent of the New York Herald, accompanied the Rodgers expedition in search of the "Jeannette." He travelled across Siberia from Bering Strait in midwinter to telegraph news to Washington of the burning of the "Rodgers," and joined in the search on the Lena delta for survivors of the "Jeannette." 1. Schwatka's Search; Sledding in the Arctic in Quest of the Franklin Records. Illust. and Maps. N. York, 1881, 8vo.

"Colonel Gilder's book, giving as it does not merely interesting and minute details of the labours and sufferings of the heroic little band of explorers, but also much information about the manners and modes of life of various tribes of the limit people, is a valuable addition to what it seems, is now comprehensively designated as "Arctic."—Spectator, lv, 1291.

2. Ice-Pack and Tundra: an Account of the Search for the "Jeannette" and a Sledge Journey through Siberia. Maps and Illust. N. York, 1883, 8vo.

"It is strictly a personal narrative, except such portions as are devoted to be Long's journal, the heroic journey of Nindermann and Norov, and the later movements of Melville in the delta of the Lena. . . . Some characteristic sketches of dwellers in northeast Siberia will be welcome to ethnologists."—Nation, xxxvi, 240.

Gilderdule, Rev. John Smith, M.A., graduated at Oriol College, Oxford, 1851; ordained 1852; second minister of Forest School, Walthamstow, 1855-70, and since then epiphany at Dresden. 1. Gill, William John, 1843-1881, b. at Bangalore, India; educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich; became a captain in the Royal Engineers; Baker (q. v. supra) along the northern frontier of Persia, and the second, 1876-78, over previously untrav-elled ground in China and Tibet, and was awarded the medal of the Royal Geographical Society 1879, and that of the Paris Geographical Society 1880. He afterwards travelled in the East and in Africa, and in 1881 was sent on special service to Egypt, and went with Prof. E. H. Palmer, infra, and Lieut. Charrington to the Isthmus of Suez, where they were captured and murdered by Bedouins. The River of Golden Sand; the Narrative of a Journey through China and Eastern Tibet to Burmah: with an Introductory Essay by Colonel Henry d'Arny, C.B., R.E., Lon., 1881, 2 vols. Svo; new ed., cond. H. Kule, 1883, 1 vol.

"Capt. Gill is evidently an acute and accurate observer, with an artist's eye for effect, which, aided by a facility for clear description, enables him to enroll before his readers a lively and ever-changing panorama."—Atk., No. 2730.

Gill, Rev. William Wyatt, was for twenty-two years a missionary in the Hervey Islands, South Pacific.

1. Myths and Songs from the South Pacific: with a Preface by F. Max Müller, Lon., 1876, p. Svo.

"It contains much that in itself will deeply interest all those who have learned to sympathize with the childhood of the world, and have not forgotten that the child is the father of the man; much that will stirle those who think that metaphysical conceptions are incompatible with downright savagery; much, also, that will comfort those who hold that God has not left himself without a witness, even amongst the lower outcasts of the human race."—Proface.

Although it is not a chapter in Mr. Gill's book that is not rich in valuable and interesting material."—Acad., x, 52.

2. Life in the Southern Isles; or, Scenes and Incidents in the South Pacific and New Guinea. Illust. Lon., 1876, 16mo; new ed., 1888.

"He has now condensed into a single volume the scattered notes of more than twenty years' experience. . . . Although the author writes primarily . . . from a missionary point of view, he is by no means a man of one idea, and has evidently abundance of material at his command."—Acad., x, 453.

3. Historical Sketches of Savage Life in Polynesia: with Illustrative Chant Songs, Wellington, New Zealand, 1880, Svo.

"It is not, perhaps, so generally interesting as his previous work, the very remarkable 'Myths and Songs from the South Pacific'—a collection of antiquities, to use the words of Professor Max Müller, 'showing us, far better than any stone weapons or stone idols, the growth of the human mind during a period which as yet is full of the most perplexing problems to the psychologists, the historian, and the theologian.' The 'Historical Sketches' deal with the rough realities more than with the picturesque fictions of savage life, and the work is somewhat monotonous in its records of sacrifices to fierce gods, its legends of interesting feuds, and its chronicles of cannibalism. But the testimony it bears has the great merit of being quite trustworthy; and Mr. Gill has done very good service by placing on record the beautiful traditions which must before long fade from the memories of the Christian descendants of the fierce Islanders to whom they relate."—Sat., Rev. 1, 649.

"I hope the book will have as many readers as its predecessor. If that told us what the untrained human mind thinks about the universe and its government, that one man does that which is right in his own eyes."—A. II. Sayer, Acad., xix, 55.

Gilman, Nicholas Paine. Profit-Sharing between Employer and Employee, N. York and Lon., 1888, Svo.

"The book is well timed and well executed, and so far as we have been able to test it, is thoroughly trustworthy in its summary of facts, and the most complete compen- dium of them yet published. The writer, however, has not been content to give us a mere collection of facts, but has let us know very clearly the result of his studies on his own mind, and his reasons for arriving at that result,— which is, that profit-sharing is already proved to be, if not the very best, yet certainly one of the most promising methods of securing the peaceful and fruitful union of the productive forces of modern industry." . . . We believe he is right."—Spectator, ixli, 718.

At all events, he has favoured the world with a clear, spirited, and judicious life of one whose memory will ever be honoured by those who trace back to him and to men like-minded with him the first germs of that spiritual revival in England which, with all its drawbacks, has proved the source of happiness to thousands, and has powerfully affected for good our national life and character."—*Sat. Godkin, Edwin Lawrence, son of James Godkin, infra; b. 1831, at Moyne, County Wicklow, Ireland; graduated at Queen's College, Belfast, 1851; was a correspondent of the London News in Turkey and States 1853; was admitted to the bar 1859, and in 1865 established and became editor of the Nation, which since 1881 has been the weekly issue of the New York Evening Post. 1. The History of Hungary and the Magyar, Ilust. Lon., 1833, imp. 8vo. 2. Government, ("American Science" Ser.), N. York, 1871, 16mo.

Godkin, Georgina Sarah, daughter of James Godkin, infra. 1. Life of Victor Emmanuel II. First King of Italy, Lon. and N. York, 1879, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"The writer's admiration for the truly kingly qualities of Victor Emmanuel amounts almost to the loyalty of a viceroy, which an evidently long residence in Italy has fostered. . . . The permanent value of this biography lies in its extracts from the chief Italian memoirs on the period under survey: . . . while its interest is secured by a good assortment of anecdotes."—Nation, xxxi, 291.

"He has succeeded in compressing into the limits of two little of the late King of Italy. His work is very far above being dull."—Spectator, lli, 1233.

2. The Monastery of San Marco, Florence, 1885, 8vo.

Godkin, James, [ante, vol. i., nkl.] 1806-1879, of a dissenting congregation at Armagh 1824, and was vicar of several towns a missionary of the Irish Evangelical Society; became a journalist in 1817, edited several Irish papers, and was Dublin correspondent of the London Times. 1. Hand-Book of the Education Question, Ireland, Lon., 1867, 8vo. 2. Ireland and her Churches, for the Times, Lon., 1870, 8vo. 4. The Religious History of Ireland, Primitive, Papal, and Protestant; including the Evangelical Missions, Catholic Agitations, and Church Progress of the Last Half-Century, Lon., 1873, 8vo.

"The book is disfigured throughout by the practice of filling the pages with scraps from other writers. Mr. Godkin treats the three rival communions with praise-worthy impartiality, and is ready to do justice to good and worthy men in all three alike. . . . He is strong in behalf of the National system and the Queen's Colleges. . . . Mr. Godkin is much better employed in speaking of these later matters, which he has clearly looked at with much care, than in puzzling his brain about 'Cuthites and Fir-Bolgs.'"—Sat. Rev., xxvii, 411.

"Mr. Godkin's book is in no wise to be relied on. . . ."

The aim of the work is not historical at all, but political and partisan."—JAMES GARDNER: Acad., v, 30.

He contributed to the New York and Cuban press and to English periodicals. Since his return to England he has devoted himself to portrait-painting. The Pearl of the Antilles; or, An Artist in Cuba, Lon., 1873, p. 8vo.

"We recently reviewed a book by Mr. Gallenga called 'The Pearl of the Antilles'. . . . We are sorry to see . . . that some dispute exists between the publishers of the two volumes as to the right to the title. . . . As, however, the two authors had resolved upon the same name, it is almost a pity that they could not have gone further and agreed to combine their books. Mr. Gallenga visited Cuba as an intelligent observer of political phenomena. . . . Mr. Goodman, on the other hand, treats us to a purely picturesque account of Cuban life and manners. . . . We may admit that he presents us with a series of sufficiently lively pictures of life in the tropics."—Sat. Rev., xxxvi, 512.

Gordon, Maj.-Gen. Charles George, C.B., 1833-1885, b. at Woolwich, and educated at the Royal Military Academy; received his commission in the Royal Engineers in 1852; served in the Crimean war; joined the allied army in China in 1860, and in 1862-63, in command of a small force of natives, and recruits of all nations, known as the "Ever-Victorious Army," succeeded in suppressing the Taiping rebellion. Returning to England, he was appointed commanding royal engineer at Gravesend in 1865; in 1871-72 he acted as commissiener of the Danube at Galatz; in 1874 he was appointed by the Khedive governor of the Soudan tribe, a post which he resigned in 1876, but returned in 1877 as governor-general of the Soudan and the Equatorial Provinces. In 1880 he was appointed secretary to Lord Ripon in India, but resigned soon after reaching Bombay, and went to Hong-Kong on the invitation of the Chinese government to assist in bringing about an understanding between that country and Russia. He was appointed commanding royal engineer at Mauritius in 1881, major-general in the army and commander-in-chief of the Cape forces in 1882, visited Palestine in 1883, and in January, 1884, was sent as British envoy to Khartoum, and reappointed by the Khedive governor-general of the Soudan, with directions to bring away the garrisons hemmed in by the insurrectionists under the Mahdi. For three hundred and thirty-seven days he was shut up in Khartoum with scant provisions and a small and discontented garrison, and while the forces finally sent by the English government for his relief were on their way, Gordon was killed and the town surrendered. For biog., see GORDON, SIR H. W.; HAKE, A. EGDMONT; BUTLER, W. F.; FORBES, ARCHIBALD; BARNES, R. H.; KINGDON, ADAM; LEBLEY, W. E.; SWAINE, REV. S. A.; and MACAULAY, J. Gordon, C.B., at Kartoum: printed from the Original MSS. Introduction and Notes by A. Egmont Hake. Illust. Lon., 1885, 8vo.

"In these Journals, begun after Gordon was left absolutely alone, we have his communications with himself; his statement and re-statement of his own position, as he conceived it; of the action, or inaction, of Mr. Gladstone's government, as he understood it. . . . It is needless to remark that the Journals contain certain of his curious speculations as to the nature of man and the government of the world."—Sat. Rev., lx. 21.

Gosse, Edmund William, M.A., son of P. H. Gosse, infra; b. 1849, in London; educated in Devonshire; appointed assistant librarian at the British Museum in 1867; translator to the board of trade since 1873, and Clark lecturer in English literature at Trinity College, Cambridge, since 1884. He visited Norway, Denmark, and Sweden in 1872 and 1873, and Holland in 1877, while studying the literature of those countries, and in 1884-85 lectured at the Lowell Institute at Boston and at Harvard and Yale Colleges and Johns Hopkins University. 1. On Viol and Flute, Lon., 1873, 12mo; new ed., 1875.

"Mr. Gosse has been with the Lotus-eters, and his song has the grateful, murmuring sound which reminds one of the softness and deliciousness of summer-time. . . . In the love of which Mr. Gosse sings physical sensations hold too prominent a place; the body has often more to do with it than the soul. . . . When Mr. Gosse writes simply he writes well."—Spectator, xlvii, 18.

"The story of King Eiegod, King of Denmark, has long been dear to Northern minstrelsy, and now it has been told by Mr. Gosse with a pathetic grace which ought to endear it to English hearts as well."—Sat. Rev., xli, 396.

4. The Unknown Lover: a Drama, [in verse], for Private Acting; with an Essay on the Chamber-Drama in England, Lon., 1878, p. 8vo.

"A charming little piece of drama. It has play [plot?] and incident, while at the same time it has a poetical, a musical, quality. . . . The writer has observed carefully the limitations of prose, and his piece belongs."—Edward Dowden: Acad., xiii, 138.

5. Studies in the Literature of Northern Europe, Lon., 1879, p. 8vo; new ed., 1883.

"He has travelled through all the literature of the Teutonic North, and his ten essays are, as it were, Reise-bilder, vivid sketches of travel, full of learning, of humour, and of personal emotion."—Sat. Rev., xlvii, 49.

6. New Poems, Lon., 1879, p. 8vo.

"Technically speaking, Mr. Gosse's 'New Poems' might be classed as lyrics and lyrics; but the lyrical element predominates. His songs, as a rule, are the expression of emotion rather than of passion. . . . It is one great charm of these verses that they seem to come to the poet uncalled, to be the natural and necessary expression of his mood. Yet natural as they are—so natural that, granted the intensity of emotion, the musical utterance follows like a logical conclusion—the artistic expression is never neglected."—Sat. Rev., xlviii, 637.

"A work not only of taste and industry, but of research, unpretending in appearance, but to be neglected by no student of Gray, or indeed, we might almost say, of the English poetry of the eighteenth century."—Sat. Rev., liv, 232.

9. Memoir of Thomas Lodge, Glasgow, 1882, 4to. 10 copies, privately printed. 10. Seventeenth Century Studies: a Contribution to the History of English Poetry, Lon., 1883, 8vo.

"The reader who closes Mr. Gosse's book after reading it will do more than know more about the particular persons of whom he has been reading. He will understand (because he will have had a kind of bird's-eye view of them) the tendencies and strivings, the form and the pressure, of the whole transition time between the two Augustan ages, and he will understand also, as perhaps he has never understood before, how and why the one succeeded the other."—Sat. Rev., lvi, 693.

11. Cecil Lawson: a Memoir: with Illustrations by Hubert Herkomer, A. R. A.; J. A. M. N. Whistler, and Cecil Lawson. Lon., 1883, 4to.

"The Fine Art Society have published Mr. Gosse's pleasant Memoir of Mr. Cecil Lawson so as to make it obvious that they have thought of the plates first and the text afterwards. . . . His memoir gives the publication its only merit."—Sat. Rev., lv, 477.

12. A Critical Essay on the Life and Works of George Tinworth: with a Descriptive Catalogue. Illust. Lon., 1883, obl. 8vo. 13. An Epistle to Dr. O. W. Holmes on his Seventy-Fifth Birthday, Lon., 1881, fol. 40 copies printed. 14. (Ed.) The Works of Thomas Gray, in Prose and Verse, Lon., 1884, 4 vols. globe 8vo.

"Hitherto readers wishing to know all that Gray had written were forced to consult four distinct publications of various forms and sizes. Now all that it is possible to obtain of the poet's publications in prose and verse is inserted in these well-printed volumes. There are also some manuscript additions. . . . When an editor does his part as well as Mr. Gosse has done, the reviewer, having no errors to discover or omissions to point out, but thrusting him for a task which could never have been achieved so perfectly without the most exact and persistent labour."—Ath., No. 2985.

From Shakespeare to Pope: an Inquiry into the Causes and Phenomena of the Rise of Classical Poetry in England, Cambridge, 1885, p. 8vo.

"The lectures published in this volume were delivered by Mr. Gosse as Clark Lecturer of Trinity College, Cambridge, &c., and they also have been read before several learned audiences in America. . . . Mr. Gosse expresses the hope that he has been able to show that the classical movement was not a stupid decline into dullness, but that it was 'an absolute necessity, if English poetry were to exist, at that a period of executive severity and attention to form should succeed the hysterical riot of the Jacobines.' The process by which this conclusion is reached will interest every reader of poetry. . . . He has brought much to light that has been neglected hitherto, and done so with suggestions, and when for a moment he is allured from his main line of argument by some poetic memory or illustration his talk is delightful."—Ath., No. 3029.

"It contains much new and interesting information, and embodies the research and the judgment of a scholar who knows his subject intimately. . . . But for those who were expecting to hear some authoritative word upon the literary revolution which cast down Shakespeare and enthroned Pope, it is too much to expect Mr. Gosse come forward smiling with sheets of anecdotal biography."—Acad., xxviii, 330.

(The accuracy of this book on certain points, and Mr. Gosse's knowledge of the subject, were impugned in an article by J. Churton Jones in the Quarterly Review, which called forth letters and articles in regard to the reviewer, viz., 1452, the Athenæum, No. 2080, &c.) 19. Firdausi in Exile, and other Poems, Lon., 1885, 18mo.

"Mr. Gosse's verse is so smooth and fluent that the reader is apt to forget how difficult it is to tell a story like this ['Firdausi'] in fifty-four stanzas, — more difficult in rhyme arrangement than the ottava rima, inasmuch as one of the rhymes—sounds is repeated four times in the stanza. . . . Though the influence of Mr. Matthew Arnold is perhaps too apparent in the idyllic poems, such as 'A Ballad in the Upper Thames,' Mr. Gosse shows a true love of Nature and a true eye for her various moods."—Ath., No. 3029.

20. Raleigh, ("English Worthies,") Lon., 1886, 12mo. "It is written with much grace and energy, and is particularly remarkable for its working up of details into a whole."—Sat. Rev., lxii, 264.

21. Life of William Congreve, ("Great Writers,") Lon., 1888, 12mo.

"It does not tell us much about Congreve personally, because there is little to tell; but it corrects some misapprehensions, fills up some blanks, re-creates some dates to accuracy, and gives us a just general conception of what Congreve was as a contemporary; and, besides this, it sketches very completely the history of his age during the poet's connection with it."—Ath., xvii, 255.

Gosse, Philip Henry, F.R.S., [ante, vol. i., add.] d. 1888, at St. Mary Church, Torquay, Devonshire, where he had resided for many years. Most of his works were illustrated by his own hand, often with colored plates, and they retain a value in the market on account of their artistic excellence. Gould, John, F.R.S., [ante, vol. 1, add.], 1804-1881. The entomology of scientific papers compiled by the Royal Society shows that up to 1873 there had been two hundred and twenty-nine contributed by Gould, and this number was afterwards considerably increased. Of his vast collection of birds and mammals, the Australian birds are in the Academy of Natural Sciences, Philadelphia, and the humming-birds and Australian mammals in the South Kensington Museum. His books, which include more than forty folio volumes, now command enhanced prices for the beauty of their illustrations as well as for the value of the text. Most of them were originally published in parts. Add to the list given ante, vol. 1: 1. A Monograph of the Trochilidae, or Family of Humming-Birds, 1849-61, 5 vols. imp. fol. (25 parts) imp. fol. In the final volume the author writes in reference to the illustrations in his works,—

"Many of the public are quite unaware how the colouring of these large plates has been accomplished, and not a few believe that they are produced by some mechanical process, or by chromo-lithography. This, however, is not the case: every sky with its varied tints, and every feather of each bird, were coloured by hand; and when it is considered that nearly two hundred and eighty thousand illustrations in the present work have been so treated, it will excite some astonishment to those who give the subject a thought."

4. The Mammals of Australia, Lon., 1863, 3 vols. imp. fol. (The publication of this work in parts was begun in 1845, and parts i. and ii. are mentioned ante, vol. i.)

"Worthy to take its place as a companion to what we consider as the most complete of all Mr. Gould's undertakings, 'The Birds of Australia' and the mammals of that distant land are now better illustrated, and their strange outlines more nearly brought home to us, as we turn over his magnificent plates, than those even of Europe itself."—*Sat. "He has the gift of telling a tale, and in his perfection this is a very rare gift indeed. . . . But if he can write like a French vaudevillist, Mr. Baring-Gould can do a good bit of stiff scholarship when it comes in his way, as when he traces through all its developments the tale that has furnished Longfellow with the framework of his 'King Robert of Sicily.'"—*Sat. "If Mr. Baring-Gould's readers look for that critical or scientific treatment of legends which his previous works gave good promise they will, we fear, come to the conclusion that he has gone back rather than forward, and will experience the unpleasant feeling of being in the hands of a guide who shows himself uncertain as to the track which he ought to follow. . . . But while he [the reader] may regret that Mr. Baring-Gould has not done more with his materials, we will not deny their abundance, and it will be his own loss if he foregoes the pleasure and the profit of reading these entertaining volumes."—*Sat. "More than one of the chapters in these anything but dull volumes, which begin with the nobility, upper and lower, and end with a brief discourse on the stock and abundant evidence that the author might have written a valuable as well as entertaining book had he but carefully followed the method clearly indicated by himself. . . . Our charge against him is only that of over-haste."—Sat. Rev., xlviii, 664.

"This work consists of a great deal of padding and a little original matter. The padding is from well-known, and trustworthy German sources, and would be instructive and sufficient personal command of his subject to allow him to make an intelligent use of his materials. . . . With care and patience he might help to scatter the uth dark, ness prevalent among us with respect to Germany. His present work is not much more accurate, and it is less amusing, than the "Days of Millards" of M. Tissot, which at least has all the merits of a regular caricature."—Aust., xvi, 385.

"He is never dry; he is never tedious. He is seldom wrong in his facts, still seldom wrong in his inferences. If you let him take you by the hand, and follow his lead confidently, you will get a very good bird's-eye view of a vast subject. But it is, after all, only a bird's-eye view."—Spectator, lili, 625.

NOTICES OF MR. BARING-GOULD'S NOVELS:
 "Wild, singular, extraordinary, as the conceptions and combinations of the author of 'Mohalali' are, they are almost if not entirely removed from the realm of imagination. It is on this fact, as we believe, that their value and their chance of endurance as literature rest. The stories of English rural life which have followed 'Mohalali' form each in its way bits of human history; studies of eccentric development; scenes from the comedy of unsophisticated life, which have an interest different from what we accord to the flights of more exclusively imaginative writers."—Edin. Rev., xlv, 667.
 "Of our eight or ten living novelists of merit, few have greater ability than Mr. Baring-Gould. His characters are bold and forcible figures, his wit is as ready as his figures of speech are apt. He has a powerful imagination, and is quaintly fanciful. When he describes a storm one can see his trees breaking in the gale. So enormous and accurate is his general information that there is no trade or profession with which he does not seem to be familiar. So far as scientific knowledge is concerned, he is obviously better equipped than any contemporary writer of fiction. Yet one rises from his books with a feeling of repulsion, or at least with the glad conviction that his ignoble views of life are as intricate as the characters who illustrate them. Here is a melancholy case of a novelist, not only clever but sincere, undone by want of sympathy."—J. M. BARRIE: Contemporary Rev., February, 1890.

"He has vindicated the place and claims of philosophy with eloquence and power. He has made his own much-sided devotion to Hegel blinds him, we fancy, to the merits of some others."—Spectator, xlv., 42.

2. The Creed of Science, Religion, Moral, and Social, Lon., 1881, 8vo; 2d ed., rev., 1884.

"I propose in the following pages to give the chief conclusions reached by modern science in the central questions of religion, morals, and society,—to state, in a word, still be fallible, or of unequal degrees of credit, I propose, in the second place, to offer some comments and criticisms on some of its more doubtful articles, with a view to their reconsideration or revision."—Author's Preface.

"This volume shows in a very able as well as very interesting manner the poverty of the higher philosophy of men of physical science, and the absolute need for something better than they can give us as the supplement of their own science, which is so excellent in itself. But it is sympathy with the men of science, should have been so terribly afraid of being taken for a Christian."—Spectator, liv., 191.

3. The Social Problem in its Economical, Moral, and Political Aspects, Lon., 1880, 8vo.

"With terrible power he depicts the purgatorial pains of poverty. . . . What are his remedies? They are twofold,—one is to 'try and see what justice, the great and almost only social virtue, is, and where it lies.' . . . Unlike so many who have looked into the depths of the social abyss, he has the moral earnestness without the dogmatic value-theories of Henry George. . . . One feels that Prof. Graham may be the ablest living advocate of socialism; one wishes that he were less of an advocate and more of a judge."—F. Y. EUGENOWITZ: dead, xxx., 30.

1822-1885, b. at Point Pleasant, Clermont Co., O.; graduated at the U. S. Military Academy 1843; served as lieutenant in the Mexican war 1845-47; was promoted captain in 1853, but resigned his commission in 1854, and settled in Missouri; served in the civil war as colonel, brigadier-general, and major-general of volunteers 1861-63, and was then commissioned as major-general in the regular army; commissioned as lieutenant-general in 1864, with the command of all the armies, and as general 1866. He was President of the United States 1869-1877, and was restored to his rank as general and placed on the retired list shortly before his death. He died at Mount McGregor, near Saratoga, and was buried in: Riverside Park, N. Y., the funeral cortege being the most imposing ever witnessed in America. Among the numerous biographies of him which have been published it is sufficient to refer to his Personal Memoirs, mentioned below, and the Military Life by Adam Badeau, q. r. supra, 1. Report of the Armies of the United States, 1864-65, N. York, 1865, 8vo. 2. Personal Memoirs, N. York, 1885-86, 2 vols. 8vo. (The sale of this work has exceeded three hundred thousand copies.)

"Looked at simply as material for the American historical magnum opus of the future, probably nothing will be reckoned more important, certainly nothing can be more interesting on the military side, than this plain narrative, that man. . . General Grant writes a simple, American-Saxon style. . . It cannot be too carefully remembered . . . that the chief value of the book must be in the revelation of Grant's own character, feelings, judgments, and modes of thinking. It is both valuable and interesting as making us know him better than we knew him before; but, regarded as history, all the circumstances under which it was written precluded the possibility of that critical testing of memory and comparison of voluminous documents without which not even so prominent an actor on the world's stage can safely claim to write the history of his own time."—Nulton, xliii, 12.

Christian Peace; or, Christian Fruitfulness; Rush-Bearing; Heavenly Food; Four Sermons, Lon., 1863, 12mo. 2. Life of Sir William Rowan Hamilton, LL.D., Royal Astronomer of Ireland; including Selections from his Poems, Correspondence, and Miscellaneous Writings, Dublin, 1882-88, 2 vols. 8vo.

"His biography is one familiar with him from the early days of each, and was selected by him as his literary executor. He has written like a man full of his subject and forgetful of himself; and the result is a volume [vol. 1.] expressive, unadorned, and in entirely good taste. It is so faithful a delineation of a great intellect and a noble character that a thoughtful reader will seem to himself rather to recognize one whom he had known of old than to make acquaintance with him for the first time. . . . As one who was honoured by Hamilton's friendship, I may be permitted to bear witness that it is a faithful portrait of one who, of all the men whom I have met, appears to me to have most eminently combined depth and largeness of intellect with elevated aspirations and the simplicity of a child."—ABNEY DE VERE: Acad., xxiii, 179, 187.

"The hearty gratitude of all who can appreciate things lovely and of good report is due to Mr. Graves for this simple, discriminating, and sympathetic memoir of one who was in the best and noblest sense of the term a great man."—Spectator, lxii, 828.

Græley, Adolphus Washington, U.S.A., b. 1844, at Newburyport, Mass.: served through the civil war, and was brevetted major of volunteers in 1865. After the war he was connected with the signal service, and in 1881 was sent to the Arctic regions to establish one of a chain of thirteen circum-polar stations for scientific purposes, in accordance with a plan made by the Hamburg International Congress of 1879. On the return voyage in 1883 sixteen of the party perished of starvation, and the survivors were in an exhausted condition when rescued by a relief expedition. In 1887 he succeeded General Hazen as chief of the Signal Service Corps, with the rank of brigadier-general. 1. Three Years of Arctic Service: an Account of the Lady Franklin Bay Expedition of 1881-84 and the Attainment of the Farthest North. Illust. N. York, 1886, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The style of the narrative is excellent, easy, and unpretentious. The story of the 'Two Seasons at Fort Conger,' to the Explorer's admirable 'Voyage of the Tegethoff.'"—Nation, xiii, 198.

"These volumes are . . . so full of valuable matter that it is difficult to make a selection of points for notice. No account of travel produced this winter is comparable with them; not one is so beautifully illustrated or treats of matters so important, and, though some of the maps have already appeared in Capt. Schley's "Lessee," they are, one and all, of pre-eminent excellence."—ibid., No. 3045.

"Not since Mr. Green's death has any contribution to historical literature appeared in England which bears more unmistakably the stamp of genius than does this remarkable monograph. . . . The real value of this book is to be sought not in the charm of a brilliant style, or the surprising width of the knowledge it exhibits, or the vividness of the portraiture, or the subtlety with which some legal and constitutional questions are handled, but in the masterly manner in which the main object has been kept in view from first to last, and though nothing in the history of his reign has been shrined over, everything has been subordinated to the setting forth of the statesmanship of the king."—ibid., No. 3171.

Green, John Richard, M.A., LL.B. 1837-1883, b. at Oxford, Eng.; educated at Magdalen College School and at Jesus College, Oxford, and while an undergraduate published some papers in a local journal on Oxford in the eighteenth century. In 1860 he took his degree and was ordained. He became curate of St. Barnabas, King's Philip's, Stepney. His health, always delicate, was seriously impaired by the labors of an East London parish, particularly by his exertions during the cholera outbreak of 1847, and this fact, together with intellectual difficulties in regard to his position, led him to resign his parish for literary occupation. In 1868 he was made librarian to the Archbishop of Canterbury at Lambeth. For some years he wrote regularly for the Saturday Review, and contributed to other periodicals. His two latest works were written in the midst of a hopeless struggle with consumption. 1. A Short History of the English People: with Maps and Tables, Lon., 1874, p. 8vo. (Over thirty thousand copies were sold in the first year.)

A single volume of the modest dimensions and unpretending appearance of a school-book; but the wealth of material of learning, thought, and fancy which the author has lavished upon it might easily have supplied a more voluminous work of some eight or ten volumes. . . .

Some previous knowledge, some time and attention, may be required rightly to appreciate the extent of Mr. Green's historical scholarship, or the depth and thoughtfulness of his comments on historical events; but the most indolent reader can hardly take it up without finding that he has never dull. . . .

The value of Mr. Green's style has a fault, it is the one carried away with its passionate earnestness. At times we are invited by its poetry and tender feeling, but at other times we begin to weary of its repose, and that the author would all in the power it shows of conveying a period as a whole, tracing the causes and results of events, and of following the great currents of thought. . . .

What he seems to profess, and what we think he makes good, is to have acquired all the new knowledge upon a very large section of history, and to tell what he knows in such a style that every one may read it with little effort, and with such an arrangement, in many points new as well as ingenious, that it may be readily grasped and retained. . . . —Ath., No. 2471.

The secret of this extraordinary success it is not difficult to divine. Mr. Green's style is eminently readable and most right control, imparts its own colours, the dry details of history, where a more scrupulous or conscientious writer would have wearied himself, and fatigued his readers, unwilling to venture beyond the well-trodden paths. . . . If in some parts of his work we find the conscientious study and examination of original authorities, in attempting little more than a reproduction, after his own fashion, without exercising much independent judgment, and not always with rigid accuracy, of the opinions and conclusions of his predecessors. . . . —J. S. BREWER: Quarterly Review, cxlii, 285.

Now edition, 130th-135th thousand, thoroughly revised, (by the author's widow,) 1888, 8vo.

Many interpolations have been made in Mr. Green's work, many of his statements of fact, and even some of the opinions he expressed, have been modified or completely altered, and several additions have been made in important parts by this revision. . . . —Sat. Rev., lxx, 133.

2. (Ed.) Literature Primers, Lon., 1875-84, 6 vols. 16mo.

3. (Ed.) Stray Studies from England and Italy, Lon., 1876, p. 8vo. 5. History of the English People: with Maps, Lon., 1877-80, 4 vols. 8vo. Vol. i., Early England, 440-1071; England under Foreign Kings, 1071-1214; Vol. ii., The Monarchy, 1401-1570; The Reformation, 1510-1603. Vol. iii., Puritan England, 1603-1660; The Revolution, 1660-1688. Vol. iv., The Revolution, 1688-1700; Modern England, 1700-1815.

Although the materials of the earlier book [the "Short History of the English People"] have been woven into it, and though we recognize many of the most brilliant passages as old friends, still the arrangement is so altered, and the amount of fresh matter is so large, that it is substantially a new work. . . . Almost the whole of the constitutional part has been rewritten in accordance with the views of Professor Stubbs. . . . Moreover, he has to some extent clipped the wings of his imagination, which in the earlier work sometimes took rather lofty flights. In short, the professor, in better proportioned, calmer in tone, and with a more ripe and complete piece of work. . . .

Mr. Green's belief in the rights of conscientious and strong Protestant martyrs and confessors under Elizabeth; but it is at the same time neither with Protestant nor Romanist who may be looked upon as the spiritual ancestors of the "advanced thinkers" of our own day, — with the group of men, and more stand pre-eminently, among whom Colet, Erasmus, and More stand pre-eminently. . . .

Mr. Green has traced the various causes and pains of the Reformation, and has laid bare the various causes of it. Taking a general survey hardly be too highly praised. . . . We are inclined to say that of the four volumes, we should be inclined to say that Mr. Green is at his best as an historian in sympathy with all centuries, and, on the whole, that with which Mr. Green has least in common. . . . —Sat. Rev., xlii, 740, 813; xlv, 661; l, 244.

Mr. Green has recovered the lost art of historical narration. This is his peculiar gift, and it is one which no contemporary English or American writer shares with him. . . . Impartial critics must, in estimating the success of Mr. Green, admit that he excels in the matters which, if it were in the judgment of historical characters, he is not always calculated to gain the confidence of cautious readers. . . . —Nation, xxv, 227.

6. (Ed.) Readings from English History, Lon., 1879, 3 parts, 8vo. 7. (Ed.) Classical Writers, Lon., 1874-82, 7 vols. 8vo. (The separate volumes are entered under the names of their respective writers.) 8. (Ed.) Essays of Joseph Addison, ("Golden Treasury" Ser.) Lon., 1880, 18mo. 9. The Making of England, Maps, Lon., 1881, 8vo.

Though this book cannot be expected to be as popular as the "Short History," — for the average man is likely to shrink from a whole volume on what cannot be said to permit him to call the Hephæreus, — we believe that students will rate it as high as, if not indeed higher than, any of Mr. Green's former works. . . . —Sat. Rev., liii, 206.

We do not say that it probes very deep into the fundamental questions. As far as scholarship goes, it cannot compare with Mr. Elton's profoundly learned and broadly scientific work just published, which deals with much of the same period; but looking at it as an essay written wholly within the narrow bounds of Mr. Freeman's "History of the school," and based almost entirely upon the documentary evidence, it deserves high praise for its thoroughness and its general ability. . . . Indeed, two-thirds of the book may be accepted gratefully, without any reservation, by historians of every school, as a valuable contribution to the clearing up of perhaps the darkest period in our whole annals."—GRANT ALLEN: Acad., xxi, 14.

10. The Conquest of England: with Portrait and Maps, Lon., 1883, 8vo. (Left unfinished; edited by Mrs. Green.)

"It is difficult to criticise a book which we have no opportunity of judging as a whole. It follows as a matter of course that the volume cannot be placed upon the same level with 'The Making of England,' but we can see that there were materials here that might have made it as successful, and would probably have made it even more popular than the previous one. As it stands, it is necessarily open to criticism upon many points."—Sat. Rev., lvi, 381.

Green, Thomas Hill, M.A., 1836-1882, educated at Rugby, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he graduated first class Litt. Hum., 1859; Fellow 1860-82; elected lecturer and tutor in ethics 1867, and Whyte's professor of moral philosophy 1877. His influence as a teacher was very remarkable, owing both to the profundity of his speculations and the force and attractiveness of his character. He contributed philosophical articles to the North British Review and other periodicals, which are included in volumes published since his death. 1. Liberal Legislation and Freedom of Contract; a Lecture, Lon., 1881, 8vo. 2. The Witness of God and Faith: Two Lay Sermons; with an Introductory Notice by the late Arnold Toynbee, Lon., 1883, 13mo.

3. Prolegomena to Ethics. Edited by A. C. Bradley, M.A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford. Oxf., 1883, 8vo. "The most able and remarkable contribution to ethical science which has appeared in our century since the publication of Professor Sidgwick's 'Methods of Ethics' is to read in a measure far exceeding what is ordinarily necessary by the views of the writer and the subjects on which he treats."—Spectator, lvi, 1283, 1301.

"The simplicity and lucidity of its style are especially admirable when the complexity of many of the subjects-matter is considered; its argument is almost everywhere as clear as its is deep. Everywhere a most confident, the Germanized Jargon, the conventional paradox, which render some metaphysical and philosophical analysis of the capacities of the human mind is likely to find its way to the reader's mind."—Lect., xxiv, 265.

4. Works. Edited by R. L. Nettleship. Lon., 1880-83, 3 vols. 8vo. (Vols. I. and II., Philosophical Works; vol. III., Miscellaneous and Memoir.)

"The 'Introduction to Homer' (1874) was the first work summed up and expressed the results of his philosophical before us (the second) contains the results of his later reflections on many philosophical topics."—Spectator, lix.

"It is enough to say of the whole book [vol. III.] that it will be a treasure to those especially who knew him, because the Memoir fairly binds him out, and to those who have only heard of him from afar."—Sat. Rev., lxxv, 51. "To Professor Green philosophy was not a study of the words of men that are gone, but a life transmitted from authority which belongs to one who speaks from his own experience, and never to 'the scribbles' who speak from tradition."—Prof. Caird: Preface to 'Essays in Philosophical Criticism', edited by A. Seth and R. H. Hudson.

Illust. Lon., 1885, p. 8vo.

"As interesting as any record of difficulties overcome by courage and skill that Australian travel has yet produced. It tells how the writer, with two Swiss guides, made the ascent of Mount Cook . . . the book must necessarily be one of primary interest . . . the mountaineer. As a contribution to our knowledge of New Zealand as a home for the superlunary population of the old world, its value is necessarily slight."—Sat. Rev., lxxii, 457.

Greg, Percy, 1836-1889, son of W. R. Greg. infra: b. at Bury; became a journalist, and contributed largely to the Manchester Guardian, the Standard, and the Saturday Review. 1. Shadows of the Past, [verse.] By Lionel H. Holdroth, [seud., q. v., ante, vol. 1.] Lon., 1856, 8vo. 2. The Spirit of Inquiry, [verse.] By Lionel H. Holdroth. Lon., 1857, 12mo. 3. Interlaves in the Work-Day Prose of Twenty Years, [verse.] Lon., 1875, 12mo. 4. The Devil's Advocate. Lon., 1878, 2 vols. p. 8vo. (A satire against modern ideas and institutions, written in the form of dialogues.)

"The hero, if so we may call him, of these dialogues is a fastidious man of letters who, after writing as little as he could earn his bread by, has married a wife and retired on a competence. He thinks ill of the world, but appears to find much comfort in his own thoughts, which may seem an odd thing, but is quite true to nature, being the fundamental paradox of pessimism."—Sat. Rev., xlv. 725.

"It is full of thought, and of thought which goes to the very kernel of most of the questions discussed. With a little more of terseness and dramatic force in his dialogue, and a little more of net result, even though it were only the net result deduced by a powerfully prepossessed mind, from the discussions, the book might have been not only thoughtful, but exceedingly likely to contribute greatly to form the convictions of an age to which conviction is greatly wanting."—Spectator, lli. 50.

5. Errant a Life Story of Lutter-Day Chivalry. Lon., 1880, 3 vols. or 8vo. 6. Across the Zodiac: the Story of a Wrecked Record; Deschênered, Translated, and Edited, Lon., 1880, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"The state of Mars, as described in the record of Mr. Greg's imaginary adventurer, appears to show in a parable what mankind have to expect, or may plausibly be represented as having to expect, from the further progress of science."—Sat. Rev., xlix. 219.

"If we hesitate to pronounce the book a work of genius, it is because the subject-matter is so novel as to render difficult those comparisons on which literary judgments are usually founded."—Ibid., lli. 136.

7. Ivy: Cousin and Uncle. Lon., 1881, 3 vols. p. 8vo. 8. Sanguelac. Lon., 1883, 3 vols. p. 8vo. (A story of the American civil war, the scene being laid chiefly in South Carolina, and the author's sympathies entirely on the side of the South.)

"Looked at as a contribution to the history of the American Civil War, Sanguelac may be described as a challenge by Mr. Greg to himself. . . . Sanguelac proves only that he can write fiction which, from the literary and, above all, from the ethical point of view, is inferior to little and superior to most of the work of his contemporaries."—Spectator, lvi. 298.

9. Without God: Negative Science and Natural Ethics. Lon., 1883, 8vo.

"The range of 'Without God,' as its title indicates, is somewhat narrower than that of 'The Devil's Advocate.'

"The subject proper is the ethical and theological developments and capacities of what is popularly called Agnosticism. The characters are much the same as in the former book."—Sat. Rev., lvi. 508.

10. The Verge of Night: a Novel. Lon., 1885, 3 vols. 11. History of the United States from the Foundation of Virginia to the Reconstruction of the Union. Lon., 1887, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Mr. Greg's history falls into three main divisions, or at least there are three successive portions of his subject which stand out conspicuously: (1) The early history of the New England Puritans; (2) the War of Independence, and (3) the War of secession. On each of these matters he is an earnest partisan. Mr. Greg detests and condemns New England Puritans, American rebels, Northern abolitionists and their allies. . . . Every character, every incident, is so dealt with as to illustrate the righteousness of one cause, the unrighteousness of the other. . . . It is no more to be regretted that Mr. Greg should have chosen to write a partisan pamphlet instead of a history, because he has gifts which might have fitted him to play the better part. He sees his subject as a whole clearly and comprehensively; his style, though at times disguised by rather vague rhetoric, is for the most part lucid and effective; his arrangement and grouping of incidents methodical; his narrative concise."—J. A. FOYLE, Jour., xxxi. 367.

"After half a volume of it, the reader who does not begin as a blind partisan finds himself sympathizing with the victims of all this scolding, even though he is naturally inclined to lean to Mr. Greg's own side. The statesmanship, the wisdom, the culture, the valour, the chivalry, the lofty refined courtesy of the South are insisted on till one longs for the suppression of these immaculate creatures."—Sat. Rev., xlii. 43.

"It does not contain a particle of original research; it does not bring to light a single document, letter, note, or order. . . . Its animus is mischievous,—to arouse ill-feeling between America and England, and awaken resentments between the North and the South side. One would surmise that a novelist writing a history would at least make it entertaining; but there is not a picturesque description, a graphic narration, a fine personal characterization, in the two volumes."—Nation, xlv. 10.

Greg, William Rathbone, [ante, vol. 1, add.] 1809-1881, b. in Manchester, where his family was largely engaged with the cotton industry. He was educated under Dr. Lant Carpenter and at the University of Edinburgh; concurred in business, but was unsuccessful; was appointed a commissioner of customs in 1856, and controller of the Stationery Office in 1861. He gave much attention to political and economic questions, as well as to speculative and theological subjects, and contributed largely on these topics to the leading English reviews.

Lon., 1869, 12mo. 6. Why are Women Hebrutish? Lon., 1869, p. 8vo. 7. Political Problems for our Age and Country. Lon., 1870, 8vo.

"Trac'-'unions, Criminal Jurisprudence, Local Government, and Taxation are among the political problems of which Mr. Greg undertakes a partial or complete solution. Apparently cherishing no enthusiastic confidence in democratic principles, he endeavours to inquire how far it may be possible to make the best of an irrevocable change."—Sat. Rev., xxix. 318.

8. The Great Duel: its True Meaning and Uses. Lon., 1871, p. 8vo. 9. Enigmas of Life. Lon., 1872, 8vo; 8th ed., with a postscript, 1874; 15th ed., 1887.

"This collection of essays, as Mr. Greg informs us in his preface, contains 'rather suggested thoughts than any fruitfully in other minds than distinct propositions which it is sought argumentatively to prove.' . . . After accompanying him through his opening chapters, we shall probably feel that our mental horizon has been widened, and we shall certainly feel that Mr. Greg has added fresh interest to his subject."—Sat. Rev., xxxiv. 602.

"Mr. Greg has never written a more eloquent book than this, and never any so full of deep religious feeling, in spite of its deep underlying doubt; but a good many of his readers will perhaps agree with us that he has added one to the deeper 'Enigmas of Life' by his discourses on them, rather than taken any thing from their enigmatic character."—Spectator, xlv. 167.

"We cannot too highly commend the courage, earnestness, and skill with which Mr. Greg has maintained a position which will be attacked on the one side by the dogmatists who practically regard the virtues of faith and hope as superfluous, lacking a raison d'être, and on the other side, by those men of science who think charity, in the large sense of the word, a delusion."—Ibid., No. 2366.

10. Hoops Ahead; or, The Warnings of Cassandra. Lon., 1874, 8vo.

"The 'hoops ahead,' respecting which Mr. Greg desires to warn us, are three in number. The first is 'the political supremacy of the lower classes; the second, 'the approaching industrial decline of England; the third, 'the illvorce of the intelligence of the country from its religion.' . . . In his excited imagination, the dangers that he describes assume unreal proportions; but some, if not all, of them are real dangers, and it is well that they should be pointed out."—Ibid., No. 2448.

11. Mistaken Aims and Attainable Ideals of the Artisan Class. Lon., 1876, p. 8vo. 12. Miscellaneous Essays. Lon., 1881, p. 8vo. Posth.

"The five last essays in this volume are as striking in their kind as any which Mr. Greg ever wrote; and that on 'Harriet Martineau' is an exquisite bit of personal literary criticism."—Spectator, lv. 52.

13. Miscellaneous Essays. Second Series. Lon., 1881, 8vo.

"The last words of a man of independent and vigorous judgment, who formed his opinions for no other man's pleasure, and was wholly indifferent whether what he found favour with the great body of his hearers or with any party among them."—Sat. Rev., lli. 180.

"It was Greg's especial function to discourage unreasonable expectations from political or even social reform, to impress his readers with the infinite complexity of modern problems, and in general to caution democracy against the abuse of its power. His apprehensions may sometimes appear visionary, and sometimes exaggerated, but are in general the precursors of a far-seeing men acute in observing the tendencies of the age, though perhaps too ready to identify tendencies with accomplished facts."—Dict. of Nat. Biog., xxiii. 88.

Gregg, Joseph. 1. Rowlandson the Caricaturist: a Selection from his Works: with Anecdotal Descriptions of his Famous Caricatures, and a Sketch of his Life, Times, and Contemporaries. Illust. Lon., 1880, 2 vols., 4to.

"Those who study English satirical prints of the last century are indebted to Mr. Gregg for the share he took in the comprehensive monograph on James Gillray which appeared some years ago. Of this the two attractive volumes before us form the complement. . . . Of course a great deal of the letter-press is descriptive of, and stippled with, the excellent photographic fac-similes of Rowlandson's drawings. . . . Much historical matter remained to be expounded, and it is in dealing with it that our author's industry has been most profitably exercised. . . . He has gathered for the world plenty of amusing materials."—Atlas, No. 2752.

2. A History of Parliamentary Elections and Electioneering in the Old Days: showing the State of Political Parties and Party Warfare from the Hastings and in the House of Commons from the Stuarts to Queen Victoria: illustrated from the Original Political Squibs, Lampoons, Pictorial Satires, and Popular Caricatures of the Times, Lon., 1887, Svo.

"A history not of facts pure and simple, but of popular opinion on matters political, as it showed itself in contemporary English satirical prints. . . . Extraordinarily amusing as Mr. Gregg's book is, it is attractive and extremely instructive in its hundreds of illustrations, we must not but be true to them, or all the truth, and nothing but the truth."—Atlas, No. 3984.

"It is rather a collection of election caricatures, and anecdotes of striking incidents in some famous elections, and than a connected history. . . . In spite of its somewhat irritating faults, the work is interesting and amusing."—Spectator, ix, 234.

Throughout that period he was in intimate relations with the leaders of both political parties, and saw much of the interior of court life. 1. The Precedence Question, Lon., 1840, 8vo. Anon. 2. "No equally important contribution to the political history of the last generation has been made by any previous writer. Perhaps the only passage in the published portion of the Memoirs which could at present excite any offence is a probably unfounded charge against a lady who is still alive of having had thick ankles in her youth."—*Sat. 4. The Greville Memoirs: a Journal of the Reign of Queen Victoria, from 1837 to 1852, Lon., 1853, 3 vols. 8vo. "His sketches of character are sometimes almost worthy and they are the more valuable, though they may be less superficially consistent, because he often describes the same person more than once on varying occasions and in different moods of his own mind."—Sat. Rev., ix, 616.

"Readers who expect to find in the second instalment of 'The Greville Memoirs' . . . so many and such spicy bits of scandal as the previous three volumes contained will be disappointed. . . . It must be added that there is quite enough caustic chronicling and sharp criticism in these volumes to make them amusing even to those who do not read them especially for the solid information they contain and the valuable side-lights they throw on the personal and general history of the time."—Atch. St., 376.

5. The Greville Memoirs: a Journal of the Reign of Queen Victoria, 1852-60, 1887, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The completion of Mr. Greville's Journals is a considerable literary event. From first to last they cover a period of forty years; and few English memoirs have been so copious, so exact, so well informed, or so inclusive. In some respects this instalment lags behind the others. . . . There are but few stories. . . . There are fewer portraits. . . . There is little scandal, and the pages are almost exclusively occupied with political events. . . . On the other hand, these volumes bring us within reach of our own times, and what they lose in piquancy they gain in personal interest. . . . This record is one of the most valuable and interesting political books of the century."—Acad., xxxi, 62.

"He was peculiarly well informed on the most secret transactions of contemporary politics. He spared no pains in completing his information, resorted to with great freshness and perfect impartiality, and frequently revised his diaries. These characteristics, coupled with the brilliant portraits which he draws of his contemporaries, make his diaries the most important work of their kind of his generation."—*Dict. of Not. "It is many of the extracts here given . . . are too brief and superficial to throw much fresh light on the subjects they refer to, there is an abundance of easy and instructive matter, showing pleasantly how a shrewd and amiable man, who had exceptional opportunities for observing thirty or forty years ago, was impressed by what he saw."—Atch., No. 2906.

Grey, Gen. the Hon. Charles, 1804-1876. b. at Howick Hall, Northumberland; son of the second Earl Grey; entered the army in 1820, and became general in 1865; was M.P. 1831-37, private secretary to Prince Albert 1839-61, and afterwards to the queen, and joint keeper of the privy purse from 1861. 1. Some Account of the Life and Opinions of Charles, Second Earl Grey, Lon., 1861, 8vo.

"It is for the most interesting portion of the memoir is that which relates to Lord Grey's domestic life. . . . The account of his interior life satisfactorily repels the belief, which was once widely entertained, that he succeeded to power in his later years a soured and disappointed man."—Sat. Rev., xl, 501.

Ireland: the Causes of its Present Condition and the Measures proposed for its Improvement, Lon., 1888, p. 8vo.

"The value and interest of Lord Grey's political writing is to be found in the fact that he treats contemporary politics like a wise and clear-sighted historian, not like a statesman who is entangled with the actual and practical problems of the world. . . . Lord Grey's final suggestion for the improvement of Ireland is, however, by no means so transcendental. He proposes to govern Ireland for a term of years like a Crown Colony."—Speaker, lxi, 273.

"After Mr. Herbert Spencer's philosophical admiration, Lord Coleridge's polished though rather undiscriminating praise, and Mr. Arnold's cautious appreciation, and Mr. some student of the people and institutions of the United States should raise his voice in criticism and praise. . . . The voice of criticism, however, it is to be feared, of praise or warning, must proceed from accurate knowledge and impartial views. Of these two indispensable qualifications Sir Lepel Grieff possesses neither the one nor the other."—Spectator, lvii, 1640.

"Mr. Griffith has given us a panoramic view of Japanese history, bringing into prominence many of the most important periods. The accompanying this with a running commentary, which is enlivened by the fact that it is the language of one who, living among the people, has attempted to unravel the causes of recent events in the light of the past. . . . The whole book bears evidence of being the work of an intelligent and thoughtful observer, who was determined to be impartial; and it is undoubtedly the most important contribution that has appeared with regard to Japan."—Nation, xxiii, 316.

Griswold, G. The Fire Underwriters' Text-Book, N. York, 1872, 8vo.

Griswold, Mrs. Mattie, (Tung) b. 1842, in Boston, Mass.; was a teacher in the high school at Columbus, Wis.; married, 1863, to Eugene S. Griswold. 1. Apple Blossoms: Poems, Chic., 1877, 12mo. 2. Home Life of Great Authors, Chic., 1886, 12mo. (Relates to authors, chiefly English and American, of the present century.)

"The accounts are readable, and substantially accurate."—Natlon, xlv. 85.

Griswold, Lorenzo, b. 1847, at Mystic Bridge, Conn. Priest and author of a Story, N. York, 1889, 12mo.

Griswold, W. The Railroad Engineer's Pocket Companion for the Field, Auburn, N.Y., 1855, 15mo; new ed., Phila., 1866.

Griswold, Wayne. Kansas: her Resources and Developments; or, The Kansas Pilot. Illust. Cin., 1871, 8vo.

Griswold, William Macerillis, b. 1853, at Danzer, Me.; graduated at Harvard 1875. He has compiled several Indexes to American periodicals, A Manual of Misused Words, &c. A Directory of Writers for the Literary Press, Bangor, 1884; 2d ed., 1886.

Grives, Mrs. 1. Happy Sundays. Lon., 1853, 2 vols. 18mo; 5th ed., illust., 1873. 2. Half-Hours with the Bible. Lon., 1862, 16mo.

Grocott, John Cooper. An Index to Familiar Quotations: selected principally from British Authors, Liverpool, 1854, 12mo; 6th ed., 1881.

Grogan, Rev. George William, M.A., graduated at Trinity College, Dublin, 1841; ordained 1849; rector of Withington since 1872. Ancient Saints and Modern Commentators, Lon., 1875, 8vo.

Grogan, Mrs. Mercy. How Women may Earn a Living, Lon., 1880, 8vo; rev. ed., 1883, 12mo. (According to the British Museum Catalogue, this lady was the author of "The Roua Pass," published in 1857 under the pseudonym of "Erick Mackenzie," [q. v., ante, vol. ii.]; but Halkett and Laing ascribe the book to Millicent Grogan.)

Grobman, William A. Haillie. 1. Tyrol and the Tyrollese: the People and the Land in their Social, Sporting, and Mountaineering Aspects, Lon., 1876, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1877.

"Since Mr. Bonar wrote on chamois-hunting in the Bavarian Highlands, we have read nothing of the kind that has struck us so much as this book."—Sat. Rev., xli. 213.

2. Gadlings with a Primitive People: being a Series of Sketches of Alpine Life and Custom. Lon., 1878, 2 vols. p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1879, 1 vol.

"Mr. Grobman has done for the Tyrollese peasantry what Mr. Rose has done for the Spanish lower orders in his 'Entretolden Spain.'"—Sat. Rev., xli. 29.

3. Camps in the Rockies: being a Narrative of Life on the Frontier, and Sport in the Rocky Mountains. Illust. Lon. and N. York, 1882, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1883.

"Among the legion of books on the Far West in its various aspects which have appeared since King's 'Mountain Fresh, so full of the breath of its Alpine woods and peaks, and giving withal so fair and representative a view of frontier life.'"—Natlon, xxxv. 140.

Gronlund, Laurence. 1. The Cooperative Commonwealth in its Outlines: an Exposition of Modern Socialism. Boston, 1881, 16mo; authorized Eng. ed., Lon., 1886, p. 8vo.

"He is an advocate of Socialism of the extreme German type. His Socialism is quite distinct from Communism or Nihilism. He is constructivist as well as destructive. . . . Mr. Gronlund's style is vigorous, though not elegant."—Natlon, xxxix. 219.

"Mr. Gronlund raises questions far too grave to be discussed in a few lines. Let us simply commend his book to such as seek an exposition of socialism from a socialist who writes with unusual moderation and ability."—Acad., xxx. 163.

2. Ca Ira; or, Danton in the French Revolution: a Study. Boston, 1857, 12mo.

Gronow, H. M. The Angel with the Censer, and other Poems. Lon., 1883, p. 8vo.

Gronow, Capt. Rees Howell, 1791-1865, was educated at Eton, where he was intimate with Shelley; entered the army as ensign 1812; served in the Peninsular war 1813, and in the Waterloo campaign 1815, and retired 1821; lived for some years in London, and afterwards in Paris. 1. Reminiscences of Captain Gronow, formerly of the Grenadier Guards, and M.P. for Stafford: being Anecdotes of the Camp, the Court, and the Clubs at the Close of the Last War with France. Illust. Lon., 1862, p. 8vo.

"These Reminiscences, although the historical passages must be taken with many grains of salt, really bring back past times to us vividly and agreeably."—Sat. Rev., xlv. 80.

2. Recollections and Anecdotes: being a Second Series of Reminiscences of the Camp, the Court, and the Clubs, Lon., 1863, p. 8vo.

"As regards composition and arrangement, at all events, his second series of Reminiscences is decidedly an improvement on the first; and if his store of original anecdote be less abundant, his facts have been more carefully verified and compressed."—Sat. Rev., xvi. 59.

3. Celebrities of London and Paris: being a Third Series of Reminiscences of the Camp, the Court, and the Clubs: containing a Correct Account of the Camp d'Etat, Lon., 1861, p. 8vo. 4. Captain Gronow's Last Recollections: being the Fourth Series of his Reminiscences and Anecdotes, Lon., 1866, 8vo. Posth. 5. The Reminiscences and Recollections of Captain Gronow: being Anecdotes of the Camp, Court, Clubs, and Society, 1810-1860, with Portraits, Four Wood-Cuts, and Twenty Etched and Aquatint Illustrations from Contemporary Sources, by Joseph Grego; each in duplicate, one on plate paper, remarque proofs, the other on Whatman paper, coloured by hand: limited ed., Lon., 1888, 2 vols. r. 8vo.

"Gronow was not exactly a Tallemant des Reaux, but he had many of the qualities possessed by that prince of anecdote, and there is no more delightful reading than the pages in which he restores the society of seventy years ago, or those in which we can read of the glories of the Second Empire and its Court."—Sat. Rev., lxi. 622.

"When he relates his personal experiences, as in his account of the state of Paris in 1818, the condition of the court of Napoleon III., his testimony is to be relied on, but he did not know arcs of little value."—Diet. of Nat. Biog., xxiii. 270.

Groom, Edward. The Art of Transparent Painting upon Glass. Lon., 1855, 12mo.

Groom, James. The Apple in Orchard and Garden. Lon., 1883, fp. 8vo.

Groom-Napier. See NAPIER.

Groom, Francis Hinde. 1. In Gypsy Tents, Edin., 1880, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1881.

"Mr. Groom is exceptionally qualified to describe gypsies, having lived much among them and gained their confidence to a remarkable extent. His account of their manners and customs, therefore, is a valuable contribution to the materials on which the future historian must draw for a picture of their life and a summary of their opinions."—Ath., No. 2763.

2. (Ed.) Ordnance Gazetteer of Scotland: a Survey of Scottish Topography, Statistical, Biographical, and Historical. Maps and Illust. Edin., 1882-85, 6 vols. 8vo.

"A gazetteer of Scotland at once accurate and full ought to have been in existence years ago. Mr. Groom has here supplied this unquestionable want."—Ath., No. 2611.

"The number of places recorded is simply enormous, including hamlets, mansion-houses, and burns. . . . The information given is both most minute and most varied."—Acad., xxi. 239.

3. A Short Border History, Kello, 1887.

"An admirable little book. . . . It contains all that the stranger, or the tourist at all events, needs to know of the history, the social life, the geography, and the ethnology of the Border."—Acad., xxxii. 85.

Groom, W. Notes on Agricultural Chemistry, Birmingham, 1870, 8vo.

Grosart, Rev. Alexander Halloch, D.D., b. 1832, at Striding, Scotland; resident since 1864 at Liverpool and at Blackburn, Lancashire. He is the editor of The Fuller Worthies' Library, The Chertsey Worthies' Library, Early English Poets, The Ithub Library, &c. Of the numerous reprints, &c., of old English writers which he has edited, the more important are included in the following list of his publications. 1. Small Sins; 2d ed., Lon., 1863, 18mo. 2. "Mighty to Save;" or, Christ for All the World and All the World for Christ, Edin., 1863, 8vo. 3. The Lambs All Safe; or, The Salvation of Children, Lon., 1864, 32mo; 3d ed., 1865. 4. The Prince of Light and the Prince of Darkness in Conflict; or, The Temptation of Christ newly translated, explained, &c., Lon., 1864, p. 8vo. 5. Joining the Church, Lon., 1865, 32mo; new ed., 1879. 6. (Ed.) The Works of Michael Bruce; with Life, Edin., 1865, 4to. 7. Hymns, Liverpool, 1867, 32mo. For private circulation. 8. (Ed.) The Poems of Giles Fletcher, for the First Time collected; with Memorial-Introduction and Notes, (Fuller Worthies' Library,) 1868, 8vo; same, Manchester, 1876, 1to. 50 copies printed. 9. Who wrote "Britannia's Ida"? (mis-assigned to E. Spenser); answered in a Letter to Sir J. D. Coleridge, Lon., 1869, 8vo. 10. (Ed.) Poems of Sir John Davies; with Memorial, (Fuller Worthies' Library), Lon., 1869-76, 3 vols., p. 8vo. 11. (Ed.) The Dr. Farmer Chetham MS.; being a Commonplace-Book in the Chetham Library, Manchester, temp. Elizabeth, James I., and Charles I.; consisting of Verse and Prose, mostly hitherto unpublished, (Chetham Soc. Pub.), Manchester, 1873, 2 parts, 4to. 12. G. W. Childs: a Memorial-Sketch and an Example, Lon., 1874, 8vo. 13. Ihannai; or, Memoir of W. Smith, &c., Lon., 1874, 8vo. 11. (Ed.) The Complete Poems of Richard Barnfield, (Roxburgh Club Pub.), Lon., 1876, 1to. 15. (Ed.) The Poems of Bartholomew Griffin; with Memorial-Introduction and Notes, Manchester, 1876, 4to. 50 copies. 16. (Ed.) The Prose Works of William Wordsworth, for the First Time collected; with a Preface, &c., Lon., 1876, 3 vols. 8vo. 17. (Ed.) The Towneley Hall MSS.; English Jacobite Ballads, Songs, and Satires, &c.; with Introduction, Notes, and Illustrations. (Printed for Private Circulation.) Manchester, 1877-78, 4to.

"The contents can only give the reader a poignant sense of disappointment. . . . The genuine poems of the Jacobites are cold and lifeless productions. . . . As an aid to the study of literature, life, and history, the MS. is most instructive, its special interest being that it relates to the England of Shakespeare and Elizabeth."—Jedl., xli. 378, xlii. 372.

18. (Ed.) Sir Philip Sidney's Complete Poetical Works; including all those in "Arcadia;" with Portrait, Memorial-Introduction, Essay on the Poetry of Sidney, and Notes, Lon., 1877, 3 vols. 8vo. 19. - "He has not given us any systematic exposition of the Platonic philosophy; he has not even devoted even a single chapter to the general estimate of Plato's doctrines and a statement of their place in the history of thought. He has been content to follow the Protean philosopher through the mazes of each dialogic, sometimes translating long passages word for word, more often giving a sort of running analysis of the substance, and in both cases interspersing from time to time his own comments and criticisms. . . . Every one who opens his book can see that it is the work of a powerful mind which, having set before itself a high ideal of perfection, has thought no pains too great to be expended in carrying out his scheme."—*Sat. - "The contents are miscellaneous: French and English agriculture; art, ancient and modern; local history; the law of marriage, (in verse) Thomas Moore and Sydney Smith; and (what strikes us to be the gem of the collection) the 'Case of the Poor against the Rich, fairly stated.'"—Sat. Rev., xiv, 691.
4. The Personal Life of George Grote: compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends, Lon., 1873, 8vo; 2d ed. same year.
- "It is exceedingly readable,—more than readable, entertaining. . . . The contrast between Mr. Grote's quiet, simple, and scholarly letters, full of the work he was upon or the public events of the day, and Mrs. Grote's somewhat strong-minded personal sallies and baggage, has something of the effect of horseflesh sauce with roast beef. We should like the book better with much less fondness of tone; but perhaps we might not read it with so much curiosity and amusement."—Spectator, xlv, 638.
- "Mrs. Grote's work is almost an autobiography of her husband, and probably he could not himself have composed it with equal fidelity and force."—Sat. Rev., xxxv, 788.

"The country is comparatively new, the experiences of the travellers are peculiar, and the style fluent and animated."—Sat. Rev., xl. 81.

"The foot-journeys through the heart of the Caucasus here recorded was undertaken in the summer of 1874 by four Englishmen, a Swiss guide, and an interpreter. A few books of travel are thoroughly enjoyable except to those who have already some acquaintance with the regions described. Among these few 'The Frosty Caucasus' may, I think, be reckoned."—DOUGLAS W. FRESHFIELD: Acad., lx. 1.

John Hampden Gurney, (ante, b. near Walton-on-Thames; graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, 1871, and was elected a Fellow; studied successively music, medicine, and law; was one of the founders of the Society for Psychical Research, and its honorary secretary, and contributed numerous papers to its Proceedings. 1. The Power of Sound, Lon., 1880, r. 8vo.

"With all his depth of thought and keenness of observation, the author adds little or nothing to what every musician of ordinary attainments must know as the result of his own experience. The problem of the effect of musical phenomena on the mind is not made lighter by the manner in which it is here approached."—Ibid., No. 2813.

"The preface states that its chief object is 'to examine, in such a way as a person without special technical knowledge may follow, the general elements of musical structure and the nature, sources, and varieties of musical effect, and, by the light of that inquiry, to mark out clearly the position of music in relation to the faculties and feelings of the individual, to the other arts, and to society at large.' . . . It is a book which disparts on every side will need attentively to ponder. Psychologically and aesthetically—and, we would add, physiologically—also it is a book which makes a distinct forward step."—Spectator, 111, 1638.

"It stands in truth without a rival in its class, not only for varied interest and philosophic breadth of view, but also for positive scientific insight into some, at least, of the aspects of music."—Dict. of Nat. Biog., xxiii, 357.

2. Tertium Quid: Chapters on Various Disputed Questions, Lon., 1887, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"The essays collected in these volumes run over a considerable variety of topics—moral, metaphysical, and aesthetic; but the most cursory examination will show that they are marred throughout by the same predominantly critical and controversial character. Single-handed Mr. Edmund Gurney encounters one after another such champions as Mr. Frederic Harrison, the author of 'Natural Religion,' Mr. Mallock, Mr. Arthur Balfour, the late Prof. Clifford, Prof. Foltok, Mr. Swinburne, Mr. Alfred Austin, the opponents of 'psychical research,' both parties to the vivisection controversy, the devotees of Wagner, and finally, in defence of his own musical theory, Mr. James Sullivan and Prof. Stamp. In each instance he shows perfect knowledge of the subject under discussion, perfect mastery of dialectical fence, perfect good temper and good taste. . . . He has worked out certain views on questions of the day which bring him alternately into conflict with both parties to the dispute. It is this attitude that the title of his book is meant to indicate."—ALFRED W. BENS: Acad., xxxiii, 78.

"Not only have the gentlemen who have collected this great stock of valuable data gone through a great deal of labour, and gone through it with a most painstaking determination to expose all the weak points of the theory with which they were dealing, but we cannot too heartily praise the sobriety of judgment with which they have drawn their conclusions."—Spectator, ix, 146.
