Mr. DAVIN. That makes it worse.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The sneers of the hon. gentleman do not amount to anything. He has simply insinuated that the officers were dishonest. I have confidence in Mr. Coste; I have full confidence in Mr. St. Laurent, and the insinuations thrown out is that they simply played into my hands, and that I asked from them false reports and false dates. I have said on my word that I have nothing to do with those reports. Mr. Coste had charge of this matter. If any man was guilty, he was the man, for he advised that there was a quarry there. He thought there was no doubt in regard to the quarry, but he should have taken better notice regarding it. I do not charge him with anything improper, but if tenders are based on a certain quantity of stone to be taken out of a certain quarry, the engineer should be perfectly certain that the stone is available. Mr. Coste has explained that he received a report from Mr. Duggan and another engineer on the subject. Mr. Coste undoubtedly acted to the best of his ability. An accident has occurred. My hon. friend said what he should not have said, that the contractor had the ear of the Minister, and, therefore, a change could be made from cement to stone or from stone to concrete, and he was therefore in a better position to tender than his competitors. This is a very plain insinuation, and I do not think an hon. member occupying the position of the hon. member for York should resort to such insinuation. He has no evidence to adduce; he cannot bring a particle of evidence in this case. Why should we in this Parliament resort to such actions—there is no reason, there is no ground for the position taken by the hon. gentleman in this case. We are called here to discuss together political questions and in fact all sorts of subjects, and I do not see why we should not discuss the cases as they come before us without these insinuations. Has the hon. gentleman any evidence to adduce that there was dishonesty practiced in this case? If so, let him rise and produce it. He has applied to me, and asked me to rise in my place. If he has any ground to attack let him show it; if not, let him not make any insinuations. I have always met hon. gentlemen opposite on that ground. They have tried to put a great many little jobs on me, but they have not succeeded yet. The hon. gentleman takes great interest in my future.

Mr. FOSTER. And your past, too.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My past career was spent in the same boat with the hon. gentleman. If there was any mistake made, I was of course responsible and he was also responsible. I supported him for many years. The day came, however, when we parted. He did not ask me to leave the boat, I was not asked to do so by hon. gentlemen opposite. They were very glad to have me in the boat then—there is no possible doubt about it. Of course the boat has been a great deal more successfully managed since I left. The boat may have been sailed with better chances of success; but I know the boat has been wrecked. I did not wreck it, but hon. gentlemen opposite have not shown enough ability to sail it in a successful manner. If there are any other points which I have not touched I shall be glad to answer any question regarding them. There is a point to which I wish to call the attention of the hon. gentleman, and on which I challenge him once more. He has no right to make insinuations; his right is to make assertions. He has insisted that this contractor got my ear, and that because he got my ear the change was made. If that accusation were true, it would prove that Mr. Coste has been bribed or has been compelled by me to make this report; in either case he would be unworthy of the position he now occupies. It would also prove that Mr. St. Laurent, who made the report, was a dishonest man. That is not the case. This is a straight contract, one above board; and I am surprised that the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Foster), who is an able man and a man of long experience in public affairs, has fallen into the manner of the hon. gentleman when he makes windy speeches. A man who is responsible to the House and to his party should not do that kind of business. He referred to the comparison the member for West Assiniboia made as to the tenders asked by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Those comparisons are ridiculous and unworthy of attention. In those contracts, what were the facts? A large quantity of masonry was tendered for and a small quantity of concrete. They were mixed contracts. We all know that contractors tender low on some items and high on other items.

In this case we have to deal with particular circumstances. Edmonton is far away from here and it costs $4.50 to carry a barrel of cement there. Mr. Coste's calculations were based on the bills of lading that Mr. Lemoine had to show, and on the actual price of the cement and the freight rates, and the cement actually costs $2 a barrel here. There is no use saying that cement sold in Montreal for $1.50. That is not the case, but even if it were, this particular brand of cement cost $2 a barrel. That cannot be disputed. I think, Sir, I have given all the information that can fairly be asked from me, but if my hon. friends opposite think they can make a big case out of this contract, they are very welcome to it.

Mr. McLENNAN. (Glengarry). The Minister of Public Works appears to become a little excited, and probably he has reason to be. Perhaps he would rather not hear the exposures that have taken place this afternoon. The hon. gentleman spoke of the cost of concrete compared with bridge masonry. I have here forty-eight tenders for contracts on the Canadian Pacific Railway for bridge masonry and concrete. Some gentlemen opposite said it was cheaper to put in foundations, but I say from experience it is more expensive. We find here the best contractors in the Dominion tendering for work in Manitoba and Ontario, between Lake Superior and Winnipeg, and find that their prices for bridge masonry are nearly double what they are for concrete. Neither the Minister nor any hon. gentleman in this House will undertake to say that contractors who tendered for this work do not understand their business and the value of work when they tendered, and what is more, they got the contracts and carried them out successfully. The bridge masonry on the Canadian Pacific Railway cost on an average $14 a yard, and the concrete from $5 to $6 a yard, so that bridge masonry costs double what the concrete did.

Mr. FLINT. I would like the privilege of asking a question bearing on this point.

Mr. McLENNAN. (Glengarry). When I get through you can ask questions. I was in Montreal the other day, and I inquired as to what price they would deliver cement at certain points in British Columbia and the North-west, among other places, Edmonton. I think Mr. Gibson, a member of this House, is using the White Star brand Belgium cement on the Victoria Bridge in Montreal, and it must be a good quality of cement. The price delivered at Edmonton is $5.41 per barrel. A yard of concrete does not take one and one-third barrels of cement. A barrel of cement is sufficient to make a yard of concrete.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is concrete and concrete.

Mr. McLENNAN. (Glengarry). Yes, there is concrete and concrete, and this is first-class concrete and first-class cement. I say a barrel of cement is quite sufficient for a yard of concrete.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not as good though.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Yes, a barrel of good cement will make a yard of first-class concrete. I am told that the concrete used all through the Welland Canal did not cost quite $4 a yard. I am told by practical men who would like to get the contract for the work at Edmonton that a good average paying price for concrete in Ontario is $4 a yard, and I am told also by as practical a man as is in Canada to-day that he would be glad to get the Edmonton contract at $10 a yard, and he would furnish ample security to this Government. There is $3.50 allowed for broken stone, and how they could put that value of broken stone into a yard of concrete I cannot see. The engineer reports that there is good gravel on the spot suitable for the work, and if that gravel, as he says, can be found on the banks of the Saskatchewan, they would certainly take it out for 50 cents a yard. Even if they had to go fifty miles up the Saskatchewan for broken stone and bring it down on flat bottom boats and tugs, they could do it for $1 per yard, which would be a liberal estimate. All the sand that goes into the concrete would not amount to more than 10 or 15 cents a yard. They have $2.50 for laying and scaffolding; I think $2 would be sufficient, but take $2.50 and $5.50 for cement and $1 a yard for mixing, which is a good average price, and put them all together and it would amount to only about $10 a yard; even allowing this high price for taking the cement up to that country. Some gentlemen opposite said that the freight rates were higher a year ago than they are now, but I do not think they can substantiate that statement. As a matter of fact, a year ago cement was about 30 cents a barrel cheaper than it is at the present time.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was $2 a barrel for that brand.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). It was 30 cents cheaper a year ago than it is now. There is no question about it, but that the Minister is paying $7 a yard too much for that concrete at Edmonton. I am sorry to see that the Minister of Public Works on every occasion when he is questioned on matters affecting his department attempts to place the responsibility on his officers.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). If the Minister of Public Works is really a Minister of the Crown the most honourable way for him to do is to take the responsibility, and he should not drag his employees before this Parliament by insinuating that it is possible they should do wrong and give him wrong statements.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not I who did it.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). The Minister's officials are not responsible for the fact that there were only 19 clear days allowed for tendering. Any man who knows anything about tendering knows that it is impossible to send in an intelligent tender for a work at that distance in so short a time. If a tender is sent in, it must be sent in at random, and any man who sends in a tender in that way takes good care to put in a price large enough to cover any contingencies that may arise. In this case the contract was let at an average of $17 a yard. Sometimes men who tender find out all about the work sooner than others. It struck me as very peculiar that this contractor had only twelve clear days from the time the contract was signed to go to Edmonton, the North-west and come back again; and from the report of the engineer we find that after the contractor came back the engineer went to the North-west and examined all the quarries in the country and made a most elaborate report upon them. That report was sent in on the 30th of August. The contract was signed on the 17th of August. The contractor went to the North-west and examined the quarries, came back here, then the engineer was sent up, and he examined the quarries and reported upon them—all within twelve days. How will the Minister explain that? Now, as I explained, the price of the concrete is at least $7 per cubic yard more than it should be. The men in the hon. gentleman's department are perhaps not to blame in this matter, because they perhaps found that they could not get proper stone in the locality, and reported in favour of doing the work with concrete, which would be cheaper than using stone. That may be all right enough, but the Minister should never have given this man a new contract without having called for tenders. That is where he is to blame, and the men under him are not to be blamed for that at all. He has no right to make a contract without giving the public an opportunity to tender. I am positive it does not take a barrel and a third of cement to make a yard of concrete.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have a despatch of my own engineer in my hands in which he says there is a barrel and a half in every yard of concrete.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). They do not use so much on the Cornwall Canal or the Welland Canal.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not speaking of the canals, but of the work as it is, and the more cement that is used the better is the concrete. If you make concrete with stone alone, it will not cost much.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Granting that it will take a barrel and a half of cement, cement can be got at $5.40 a barrel, which is something like $8 a yard. How can you justify paying $17 a yard for this concrete? Practical men who are known to nearly every public man in the Dominion and who give their whole life to this kind of work, say that they have to pay nearly double for bridge masonry to what they have to pay for concrete.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That depends on the work and on the place, as the hon. gentleman knows.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Taking the hon. gentleman's own figures for cement, the concrete could not possibly have cost more than $10 a yard. No wonder the hon. Minister got angry, because he was cornered. I think the country will understand this matter. This method of letting contracts without proper notice and changing a contract after it has been let, ought to be exposed, and there should be an end to it.

Mr. FLINT. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat posed before the committee, and no doubt addressed the committee as a practical man, who is better qualified than the large majority of the members of the committee to speak on a matter of this kind. It was calculated, and properly calculated, that his position and presumed knowledge would lend weight to anything he said on a practical matter of this character. He declined to allow me to call his attention to the figures which had been laid before the Minister of Public Works by Mr. Coste, the chief engineer of his department, another practical man of great experience, on whose opinion the Minister is bound to rely. The point I wished to call the attention of my hon. friend to was that another practical man, whose ability, knowledge and good faith are unquestioned, at any rate on this side of the House, had laid a series of figures on this very subject before the Minister; and acting on the figures placed in detail before him by his chief engineer, the Minister, who does not pretend to be an expert, and who is like the majority of us, a layman in matters of this kind, accepted those figures as correct. Then my hon. friend while pretending to attack the Minister for accepting a calculation, which he thought was extravagant, joined in the insinuations against the Minister's integrity, and impliedly threw out insinuations against the integrity of the engineer, and then added to these faults the additional one of denouncing the Minister for placing the calculation of his own chief engineer between himself and these criticisms. When a layman who is called upon to assume the responsibility of a Minister accepts a contract which we will assume for the sake of argument might be criticised as unduly high, it is perfectly legitimate and fair for him to say: My excuse for accepting that was that it was recommended by one in whom I had every reason to have confidence, and in whom I still have confidence as an expert. That being the case I think that the hon. gentleman should have addressed himself to the calculations of Mr. Coste, the chief engineer, and shown from his own experience, that those were absurd. I do not see how the hon. Minister can be charged with any impropriety for basing his defence of certain changes in the contract upon the report and estimates of so highly esteemed a professional authority as his chief engineer. If there is any impropriety in the matter, it must revert to the persons who recommended the scale of prices which my hon. friend, as a practical man, says are perfectly ridiculous.

There are other points brought up with regard to these changes of contract, which no doubt every lay member of the committee has listened to with a great deal of interest. One is the short interval allowed for sending in tenders, and the other is the change from stone to concrete and the failure to call for second tenders when that change was made. These are legitimate subjects for discussion, but I think the presumption must be that the hon. Minister was actuated by proper motives, in view of the fact that he was pressed by the municipality of Edmonton to expedite the work and that the season was a very short one in which it could be done. It seems to me that the explanation which the Minister has given ought to satisfy any reasonable man that he could have been guided by no improper motive in making the change and hastening the completion of the contract.

The point I rose to make against my hon. friend who spoke last (Mr. McLennan) is this, that, as a practical man and a man of considerable authority on these matters in the House, he should have directly challenged the figures of the chief engineer, and not given the committee a comparison between the figures of this contract and tenders made for other work, under other circumstances, concerning the particulars of which, such as the quantity and the kind of cement and so on, we know nothing. No doubt I am disposed to be partial to the hon. Minister, being one of his supporters, but it does appear to me that the explanation he has made of all the circumstances ought to be considered most satisfactory; and I for one strongly deprecate the style of insinuation indulged in by the hon. member for West Assinibolia (Mr. Davin) throughout the whole course of his remarks. It seems to me that if the hon. gentleman has any serious charge to make against the Minister, if he believes the Minister acted corruptly or was in collusion with the contractor, and consequently consented to more favourable terms than were comprised in the original contract, aided and abetted by his chief engineer and the other engineers who have been spoken of, the hon. gentleman ought to have brought the matter before a special committee and have all the parties concerned examined by a committee which would have been better adapted to investigate this matter than can the Committee of the Whole House. If, however, he has no charge of corrupt practices to bring, but simply makes a charge of carelessness and neglect, I think he ought to have assumed a different tone and line of argument, and I consider that the hon. Minister was justified in his indignant repudiation of any improper motives.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I have here a report of contracts let and a list of men who tendered for contracts on the Canadian Pacific Railway, no doubt, the last speaker knows very well. Here are such men as Marks & Conmee, Charlebois & Shanly, Denis O'Brien, Wardrop & Ross, J. R. McDonald, James Goodwin & Co., R. McGreevy and others, all prominent contractors, men who understand all about this business, men whose knowledge of this kind of work nobody can dispute—we have these men submitting prices nearly double for bridge masonry as compared with concrete. How then can you justify the course followed in this case? You speak of the engineer being a practical man, and no doubt he is, but these men who have been doing this work their whole life, we must admit are more practical as to the value of that kind of work than any engineer in Canada. They are putting their money into it, and it is their business, and engineering is a separate business altogether from contracting. Why do they ask twice the figures for bridge masonry than they do for concrete? How are you going to justify paying the same price for concrete, without calling for tenders and making the change in the short time you did? And your engineer reported, as far back as 1894, that he had examined the quarries out there, and was always under the impression that they were first-class. There was some stone taken out and sent down here to be examined, and was accepted as good stone, and that stone was shown to the men who were tendering and who did not get the contract. But this gentleman got the contract, and he went up to Edmonton and inquired all about this stone and came back and said it would not do, and then there was an engineer asked to go up and report, and that engineer went out to Edmonton and examined several quarries and reported, and the whole thing was done by both these men inside of twelve days. I have here the engineer's report. He speaks about the different quarries, tells us what stone can stand the weather, and the thickness and the quality of the stone. He evidently must have travelled a great deal. I say that no man could have gone over the country and made the report he did in the time he did it. All this, according to the report we have from the department, was done by the contractor and him in twelve days. The contractor went up and came back and reported, and then the engineer went up and came back and reported, and then the whole thing was changed from masonry to concrete, and the same price paid. Yet I have read you the names of some of the prominent contractors, and there must be in this list 150 of the most prominent contractors in Canada, whose ability no one can doubt, and who, according to the tenders which are here, say that bridge masonry in western Ontario and Manitoba is worth double as much as concrete.

Mr. FLINT. The observations which the hon. gentleman has made, as a practical man, tell, not against the Minister, but against his advisers. With regard to the speed with which the engineer who reported upon the quarry made his journey and examination, and on which a great deal of stress had been laid, I do not think the majority of the committee are prepared to enter into a discussion of that question without a careful examination of all the dates alluded to. But, assuming that the examination, from a superficial examination of these papers, was a farce or that it was not made in the time referred to in this report, every practical man knows that that proves nothing whatever, because it might very often occur that an examination may have actually been made at another time than it appears by the document itself to have been made. I do not know that that is the case in this instance, but I recollect a case in my own experience in which, if the matter had been of importance, a tremendous outcry might have been made against the report, as is made in this case, based on the date of that report.

The examination was made by a professional man in his private and individual capacity. Subsequently, he was asked for a report upon the matter, and he said he did not care about reporting unless he was asked officially to do so. He was then, probably a year after the examination, asked officially to make an examination and report, and he did so, making his report within a day or two. That report was simply to comply with official form and appearances. The examination had actually been made a year before, it was not until then that the official report was called for and made. This transaction was perfectly open and above board, and open to no objections. But I can fancy that a gentleman who had before him some collateral evidence and having a case on which suspicion might be thrown, could make an enormous amount of insinuation on the basis of a matter which was thoroughly square and honourable. So, there might be a dozen explanations of this matter which would be thoroughly consonant with the highest honour and integrity and efficiency on the part of the gentleman who has just been so eulogistically referred to. I simply take the ground that the insinuations are not against the Minister but against professional men of high honour and standing—not against their integrity necessarily, but against their professional standing. For, certainly, if Mr. Coste made a report which is utterly ridiculous and absurd as is alleged by my hon. friend (Mr. McLennan, Glengarry), a practical man of eminence, certainly, his professional standing as one upon whom the Minister can rely in deciding matters of this kind must suffer. I think that, on that account, the matter should have had a more careful investigation elsewhere before being brought to this committee, because we are not in a position to investigate the subject fully and fairly as we could with these gentlemen and other experts to give their evidence.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I am not charging anything against the officials, and I took great care to make myself clear on that point. I said that if the officials found that there was no stone suitable for the bridge they were justified in reporting that it would be better to build with concrete. The proper course for the Minister then was to ask for tenders and give those who had tendered before as well as others an opportunity to tender. Not only should this have been done as a matter of justice to would-be contractors, but in the interest of the country, so that no more money should be spent upon the work than was actually necessary. Now, as the question of time has been mentioned, there is a paragraph here that I do not understand, but perhaps the hon. gentleman can explain it:

As soon as the contract had been awarded----

Mr. FOSTER. Namely, on the 17th August.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). The extract I am about to read is taken from the report prepared in the Public Works Department and placed upon the Table of this House.

Mr. Lemoine proceeded to Edmonton but came back at once and reported that he could not find stone of the dimension or of the quality required by the specifications, and he was told to procure it elsewhere, but replied that he had also examined the stone found at Calgary and was of the opinion that it would not be accepted. Then Mr. Arthur St. Laurent, engineer, of this department, was sent to examine the quarries and he reported as follows under date of August 30th, 1897.

In twelve clear days, the contractor went up, after signing the contract on the 17th August examined the quarries in that country and came back and this is the report copied from the report which has been laid on the Table. If he got back before the 30th he made a very quick trip. This goes to show that he got back and that the engineer started up there and was able to make a report dated 30th August.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to answer the remark of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan), who has just sat down, when he questions the possibility of Mr. Lemoine having visited the quarries in the time shown in the report. I can only assure the hon. gentleman—and he will have to take my word for it—that Mr. Lemoine did visit the quarry between the time he signed the contract and the time he returned to Ottawa. He came in from Ottawa on the train on a certain night. Before daylight next morning he started for the quarry, and came back to Edmonton during the following night and went out on the next train. Mr. St. Laurent came on the same train as Mr. Lemoine, but did not go to the quarry at the same time as Mr. Lemoine. But he did visit it and made a report that he could not find suitable stone. I understand that Mr. St. Laurent, on the way to Ottawa visited the quarry at Calgary, which, as every one knows who has visited that locality, is within a few hundreds yards of the railway station. So, there was no great loss of time in any of these transactions. Allow me to assure the hon. gentleman that Mr. Lemoine did, at the time referred to, examine the quarry above Edmonton, and that Mr. St. Laurent did at the time referred to examine that quarry and did also, I understand, examine the quarry at Calgary. There was nothing impossible about it. In regard to another point raised by hon. members that there was no plant on the ground at the time when the contract was changed, I beg to assure them that a heavy piece of machinery necessary for some part of the construction of the bridge did arrive in the train either with Mr. Lemoine or within a train or two afterwards; and operations went on from that time until the present time, as a matter of fact. Of course, until a re-arrangement was made, matters went much more slowly than they did afterwards, but still the work went on, and money was expended.

Now, if hon. gentlemen are satisfied on these points, I will just say a word on the general question. I think it is hardly fair to the private members of this House at this late day of the session, that a whole day should be taken up on this question. I am the last member of this House to deprecate criticism, fair or unfair, against the Government or any member of the Government; but I say that criticism which takes up so much time of the House, should have some point in it, should have some likely consequence. Hon. members have attacked the Minister of Public Works. Have they attacked him for the purpose of showing that this bridge contract was a corrupt transaction? If they have, they have not brought one tittle of evidence in support of their contention. If they have brought on this discussion for the purpose of proving that the Minister of Public Works had a corrupt interest in connection with this contract, they have utterly failed to show anything looking towards that end. If they desired to prove that the contract was improvident, or was mismanaged, all the evidence with regard to that point was placed before them by the Minister in the very beginning of his explanations, and they have brought forward nothing additional since. The facts will go before the country, and the people will be able to judge for themselves whether the contract was provident or improvident, whether it was well or ill managed. The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan) has brought forward certain figures which, coming from him as a practical man, must be accepted with a certain amount of credence, and they go to show that the contract might possibly have been let for less money. That is the only point that has been indicated, and it seems to me a waste of time to have taken up so much time to elaborate that point, something which might occur in the case of any possible contract that was ever let in any part of the world, by any person or by any Government. I will go so far as to say that the whole attack is very peculiar coming from the hon. gentleman that it does come from, and from a party having the associations that attach to that party. However, let that go for what it is worth. I would be sorry to have the measurement of this Government taken by that of the late one. Let every contract stand on its own merits. Now, the hon. gentleman must have had some purpose in view in bringing on this discussion and prolonging it to such an extent. If their purpose was to condemn the Minister as a corrupt politician, they have failed; if their purpose was to show mismanagement, I do not think that they have succeeded. If I understand them aright, their purpose must have been to cover up the discredit which attached to the late Government for their conduct in connection with this bridge, by attempting to fasten discredit upon the present Government, so that the credit which was due to this Government for having prosecuted a necessary public work which had been neglected and mismanaged by the late Government, might thereby be diminished as much as possible by the simple process of throwing mud at the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have gathered together the facts connected with this contract, and having listened to the discussion on both sides, it appears to me that, in the first place, the people of Edmonton were very anxious to get this bridge built at once. The evidence of the necessity of the structure being proceeded with as speedily as possible, is shown by the fact that the people of Edmonton have granted the sum of $25,000 for that purpose. The Minister of Public Works was urged to secure the erection of that bridge at the earliest possible moment, he asked for tenders, and received four. He accepted the lowest tender. So far, I think, hon. gentlemen will admit that everything was all right. Now, the only question that has arisen is the wisdom of accepting concrete in place of stone, when the engineer reported that they could not get stone of proper quality to put into that bridge. Hon. gentlemen opposite maintain that he should have asked for new tenders. The Minister takes the recommendation of his engineer. This is what his engineer reports: "I have the honour to strongly recommend that the substitution of concrete for masonry be permitted." I think it will be generally admitted by engineers and by practical men, that concrete is as good as masonry. We find that concrete is being used in many costly and valuable structures, which proves that it is considered to be as good as masonry. Now, did he pay an extra price for concrete? No, the contractor agreed to put in concrete at the same price for which he had contracted to put in masonry. The contractor agreed that he would carry out the contract for the same tender, and that he would substitute concrete for masonry, and the chief engineer of the department urges that concrete should be accepted in place of masonry, on the ground that the work would be worth more. And that is what all this fuss is made about, there is nothing in it whatever. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) tried to make a point that there was not time for the engineer to have gone up there and examined this stone to be able to pronounce upon it. He has got his answer from the member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), who lives at Edmonton, and who declares that the engineer did make an inspection, and reported that the stone was not of proper quality. Why did the Minister act so hastily? Because the people of Edmonton were anxious that the construction of this bridge should be rapidly carried on. The work is now going on, and it will be finished this year. Now, where is the injustice, where is the boodle, where is the steal? The hon. member for Assiniboia thought he had found a mare's nest, but after all his labour, the mountain has not even brought forth a mouse, it has brought forth nothing at all. The ex-Minister of Finance grew quite eloquent when he reproved the Minister of Public Works for not asking for new tenders. What was there to be asked for? The only change made was the substitution of concrete for masonry, and the Minister has the certificate of his own engineer that concrete was as good as masonry, and even better, and concrete was to be put in at the same price. They talk about $17 being an excessive price. Do they remember what the estimated cost of the masonry was in the case of the Wellington bridge at Montreal? I have the evidence under my hand. The estimated cost on the Wellington bridge is $18 per cubic yard, and on the Grand Trunk Railway bridge the same. The hon. gentlemen opposite went on and built those bridges, and a pretty mess they made of it; it cost the country three times $18. Now, if the Minister of Public Works had taken this work off the hands of the contractor, had sent his own men up there and had built this bridge at a cost three times the amount of the original estimate, there would have been some grounds of complaint. Hon. gentlemen opposite would have then no doubt a basis on which to found a very serious charge. But nothing of the kind has been shown, and the indisputable evidence is that the Minister proceeded properly, as is shown by the fact that the Edmonton Board of Trade has endorsed the course he adopted and have complimented him on the energy displayed in connection with letting and carrying out the construction of this bridge. I consider all the statements made by the hon. member with respect to any recklessness or any impropriety on the part of the Minister as entirely unfounded. I do not believe there is a tittle of truth in the statement put forward by hon. gentlemen opposite, that charges of wrong doing can be sustained against the Minister in relation to this work. The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan) sought to make the point that cement had been laid down at Edmonton at $5.41. That is taking the rates for this year, and we know that the rates on the Canadian Pacific Railway have been less this year than previously.

Mr. FOSTER. How much on this particular item?

Mr. McMULLEN. We do not know. With respect to the use of gravel or broken stone. I am not prepared to say that gravel will make as good concrete as broken stone, though perhaps the engineer may hold a different opinion.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We used broken stone.

Mr. McMULLEN. I dare say it would be better. The engineer of course knew the gravel was there, but he decided on broken stone, and the Minister accepted that recommendation and acted on it. There is not a single charge that hon. gentlemen opposite have attempted to substantiate out of which the bottom has not completely fallen, and they should confess honestly that their efforts to fish out wrong doing has explicitly failed.

Mr. FOSTER. The committee will see that at least something has been done. Whereas a little while ago the hon. Minister thought everything necessary had been said, and his friends behind him agreed in that opinion, and they evidently entered into a compact that nothing more was to be said, things have changed. The hon. Minister has come out with an impassioned speech.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not impassioned.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, impassioned in the true sense of the term; the hon. gentleman's whole object being to endeavour to turn the discussion into a different channel. And more than that, the sturdiest of the supporters of the Minister back of the Treasury benches have been spurred forward to make elaborate defences, and one supporter made a most elaborate apology for the action of the Minister. The hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) cannot be said to have made any defence, but he made a most abject apology for the Minister's action. The hon. gentleman who last spoke I expected to defend the Minister. But all the time he was defending his action and whittling the case down till at last he came to the conclusion that there was not the slightest ground for criticism, I could not help looking back two or three years ago and considering what a strong and virile attack the hon. gentleman would have made, and how he would have denounced the then Government if such a case as this had been brought forward.

Mr. McMULLEN. No,

Mr. FOSTER. There is an importance to be attached to this case from two points. I deprecate one especially. We had a sample of it last night. When an hon. gentleman made an appeal for those dismissed from the post office in Belleville, and brought what he considered a proper statement before the House, how was he met? In the end he was met in this way by the Postmaster General, referring to the man acting as postmaster as a Conservative: I tried to be fair; the member who represents Belleville does not give me any credit. That opens up the question anew. What does it mean, translated into the English language? Simply this, that the Postmaster General used the poorest kind of threat, that if the hon. gentleman attempted to criticise the action of an administrator he did it at the peril of any friend he had left in office. Now, I ask hon. gentlemen, who when they are not heated by partisan bitterness are fair and who generally are fair when they are talking among themselves, is this a proper position for a Minister to take? Must the life of every employee of Conservative tendencies be imperilled because an hon. member on this side of the House ventilates a grievance against the Government in regard to a Government employee in his county? Is it a manly way of meeting it? There was a business answer to make to the hon. member for Belleville, and it should have been given and remained at such; but the Minister was not content with that, and there was this threat thrown out, that if a member on this side of the House ventured to ventilate a grievance he does it at the peril of any friend remaining in office. Is there any doubt that this was intended as a threat against that member, and an attempt to influence that member by saying: we are keeping some few of your friends in office, and if you say a word about any of these cases, you will only make those officers suffer. I say that is not manly. I say the very same thing has been repeated to-night by the Minister of Public Works. The Minister cannot shift his responsibility as a Minister on to his officers. Neither is it fair, and he knows it, when a gentleman on this side of the House criticises, as he has a right to do, the action, and the report to Council on which the action is based, for the Minister to fly into a passion and to say: Mr. Coste is a man who was one of your appointees; I have trusted him, and if he has deceived me all the worse for him; thus making the open threat that it would go hard with the official friends of the Opposition if they ventured to make such criticism.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that.

Mr. FOSTER. I will take my hon. friend's language when "Hansard" is printed and we will go over it if he pleases, and I venture to say that any honest man will give that meaning to it, and cannot give any other. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) was a little bit heated at the time and he may have gone further than in calmer moments he would, but he did go that far. Now, Sir, for any friends of the Liberal-Conservatives that remain in office I have the greatest solicitude. I would not wish to injure their prospects in the least, but if it comes for me as a member of this House to choose between being silent on points where I think I ought to criticise; and even injuring—if the Minister wishes to take that ground—those Conservatives that still remain in office, I will have to perform my public duty and let the Minister take the responsibility of performing that other duty if he wishes to do it. It will not abate one bit of the criticism that I as a public man think proper to make here. There is this other point. This action is one of many on the part of the Minister of Public Works. Already I can tell him there is an uneasy feeling in the country because of remarks which he has made which tend to the breaking down of the system of giving out public works by contract based upon tender. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) has taken the ground here that it will be at his own will and his own judgment as to whether he will carry on large public works by tender or by day's labour. He is doing dredging in Toronto harbour which will amount to $20,000, and he made the statement here that he was actually doing that work, not by contract on tender, but doing it simply by agreement with a friend of his own, and he justified it on the ground that his friends must be looked after. Look after your friends if they choose to put themselves in a position where you can look after them consistent with the public interest, but call for tenders and let your contracts to the lowest tenderer. If two persons have the same tender which is the lowest, one a Conservative and the other a Liberal, give it if you wish to the Liberal as a choice between the two. That is your right, but it is not the right of the Minister to use the public works of this country and to farm them out for the sake of looking after friends of his own.

Mr. McMULLEN. Speak about the bridge, please.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I will leave it in the judgment of the House if my criticism is not fair, and it is not on the lowest ground of criticism I am proceeding. The stone fence around the park was to cost $14,000, we were told by the Minister. He said afterwards that was a mistake, but at all events it cost over $5,000, and although that was one of the easiest pieces of work to give by contract based upon tender, he claimed he was right in doing that by day's work: doing it by his own friends and looking after his friends. It cannot be denied that in the case of the Edmonton bridge contract, after the Minister came to the conclusion to take away penalties and to take away fines, and to extend the time for the completion of the work from three months to an indefinite period, and to change it from concrete to masonry; it cannot be denied that under such circumstances the Minister would have consulted the best interests of the country if he then put up this $36,000 contract to public contract on tender.

Mr. McMULLEN. He was getting the same price and one was as good as the other.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And better work.

Mr. FOSTER. I will come to that in a minute. Will any one deny that there was a total change in the conditions of the contract?

Mr. McMULLEN. In what?

Mr. FOSTER. I will tell you.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will answer him.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister feels that he is not altogether done with it yet, and he still has another answer to make. I am glad of that because we will get the subject elucidated. Here are the changes made in the contract for the information of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). Nineteen days was given to tenderers to make their examination of work 2,000 miles distant; they had three months in which to build a $36,000 job; they were to be fined $50 a day for every day over that, and $2,000 penalty if the work was not done under certain conditions. All these conditions were changed in the second contract. There was no time limit to complete the work, no fine, no penalty and the material was to be concrete instead of stone. Are not these absolute changes? I say that after these changes were made the Minister would have consulted his own best interests and the best interests of the country if he had taken even only nineteen days more to get new tenders, and he could easily have done that. On the 17th of August the contract was signed ; on the 30th of August the reports were in, and the Minister had come to the conclusion to substitute concrete for rock. I find that although urgency was claimed to be in the case, the Minister's report to Council was not sent on the 30th August but only on the 22nd September, and the authority to go on with the work by Order in Council was not passed until the 20th October. That is a month and a half after these reports were before the Minister. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) contend that the Minister had the right to make this substitution without the authority of an Order in Council ? Not one stroke of work had he a right to do under these changed conditions until he had the authority of an Order in Council to do it, and he did not have that authority on the 20th October. Was the urgency so great that it exonerated the Minister from taking nineteen days after the 30th August to ask for tenders under the changed conditions. As to that my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) will have his opinion and I will have mine and the people of the country will have their opinion, and the opinion of the public will be that the Minister under the changed conditions should have called for new tenders. Two or three members have taken me and my hon. friends here to task for consuming some time. Here is a statement made, and it is backed up by good evidence. If practical builders of large public works put in tenders on the basis of rock or concrete, and if the unvarying difference is between 40 and 60 per cent, in favour of concrete for cheapness, I say that is a tremendously strong argument on which to rest an allegation that concrete is cheaper than rock. We cannot gainsay the statement made by a practical man who is not an extreme man, who has never shown himself to be so in this House.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. An offensive partisan.

Mr. FOSTER. He is not an offensive criticiser of hon. gentlemen opposite. A party man he is, but he is a practical builder and contractor ; and he takes the actual quantities that the Minister himself declares as necessary to make a cubic yard, and his statement is that concrete can be laid there for $10 per yard. Add that to the evidence of these other contractors, and you have cumulated evidence. What is more, my hon. friend has stated as a member of this Parliament, that contractors have told him that they would be glad to get the laying down of that concrete in Edmonton for $10 a yard.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When the girl is married, there are plenty of men who want her.

Mr. FOSTER. I will leave the Minister of Agriculture to express his opinion on that point. There is the evidence ; what is to rebut it ? I have heard nothing except that the hon. member for North Wellington and one or two other members have said that there might be a great difference between the railway charges of last year and those of this year. Have they adduced a fact to prove that ? Not one. It is simply a supposition ; and a supposition not supported by a single word of proof. Suppose that evidence is true. There were 1,450 cubic yards of concrete. On the basis of $10, which the evidence gives as sufficient to lay the concrete there, the $17 that is paid means a loss of $10,000 to the people of this country. That is a pretty respectable sum of money. I have heard my hon. friend criticise by the hour over a difference of a cent a yard for carpet ; or over items the whole value of which would not be $50 ; and here is an amount of $10,000, if the evidence is to be trusted, which has been lost to the country simply because the Minister of Public Works hastened to change a contract without tender for a friend who had got the contract first.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. How do you get over the deputy's valuation ?

Mr. FOSTER. I am coming to that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You ought to go over that first.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend the Postmaster General is of a very dictatorial caste of mind. I am trying to make my case in my own way, but the hon. gentleman sprawls out before me in approved ministerial style, and says I ought to do so-and-so first. I must take leave to conduct my case in my own way, and leave other men to conduct their cases in their own way. That item of $10,000 is worth something to this country, although my hon. friend laughs over the matter.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, I laugh at it ; it is a ridiculous calculation.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend, then, was not laughing at the loss of $10,000 to the country through a mistake of his own ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not make any mistake.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend rise in the House and declare that as a principle in letting public works he is going to go on the plan of changing the conditions of a contract without again calling for tenders ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will not say anything of the kind.

Mr. FOSTER. He said it practically in this case, and as a result we are face to face with a possible loss of $10,000 to this country. Now, I am coming to the point of the hon. gentleman's statement with reference to his engineers. The hon. gentleman says, I am not an expert, and I must take my engineers' report; if that is wrong, I am exonerated from wrong and the guilt is on their heads. That is not true, as a matter of ministerial responsibility or executive administration in this country. Will my hon. friend say that that is the doctrine of the present Government?—no ministerial responsibility, but shift the responsibility on your officers? Will the hon. member for North Wellington, no matter how enormous or how frequent these losses are, do in each case as he has done to-night—get up and say, "I cannot see that the Minister is to blame, because he simply went on the calculations of his engineer." Where does ministerial responsibility come in? Now, my hon. friend might as well face it; he is responsible. If he is not a technical man, and is entirely at the mercy of his officers, the question is whether he ought to occupy the position of the head of a department which is spending millions a year, having no better qualifications than that. My hon. friend would have saved himself if he had simply asked for tenders and given the work out by contract. Then the figures of his engineer would have been tested by practical business men contracting for the work. They would have been his vindication if he had got it done at no less than the estimate of himself and his officers: if he had got it for less, then so much gain for the country.

So my hon. friend must be responsible. How easy would it not have been for the hon. gentleman to have made the simple mathematical calculation. His engineer could have told him how much of this cement it would have taken to make a cubic yard of concrete, he himself could have inquired as to the prices of cement and the railway rates there, and a very little investigation would have informed him what would be a fair rate for the laying of it.

But this is the point that I make, that the hon. gentleman, without appealing to the contracting public, changed all the provisions of the contract and made what was really a private contract for a work which cost $36,000. He tries to vary the subject by saying that the people of Edmonton approved of his course. Well, the people of Edmonton did not care particularly how much the bridge cost. That was a matter for the Minister to consider. What they wanted was to have the work done and done quickly, and what they commended the Minister for was not his manner of letting the contract, but simply the fact that the work was going on and there was every prospect of its being soon completed. An hon. gentleman said that he knew my motives and those of my hon. friend, and that the only thing we had in view was to cover up the dilatory action of the previous Government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
I did not say that.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. No, I acquit the hon. gentleman of saying it. I do not admit that we were more dilatory than we should have been. There were certain preliminaries which had to be arranged; and if my recollection serves me right, it was some time before we got the people of Edmonton to the point of agreeing to raise one-third of the cost, $25,000, if we would pay the balance, and no doubt they would rather have had the whole structure built by the Government and not have been called upon to contribute anything. But that has nothing to do with the present case. You may chide us if you like, but that does not condone the course of the present Government. My hon. friend is more prescient than I gave him credit for being when he attempts to read the motives of hon. gentlemen on this side. I am sorry he has so slight an idea of the ability and standing of his colleagues in this House who happen to sit on this side. Hereafter I shall bow with very great humility before his opinion, and shall think less of myself than I ever did before after this crushing estimate which the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) has made of the mental and moral stature of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. I have not an unkind word to say of my hon. friend. His motives are good. He is an excellent member in his way. He does the best he can, and I am bound to say that he does it very well; but if I were to venture on a criticism of a brother member, I would say that he lays himself open to a slight suspicion of a little inconsistency now and then between his professions and his support of the Administration.

It was said that I made insinuations. The hon. Minister of Public Works charged me with having insinuated corrupt dealing on his part and that of his officers. I did not mean to, and I do not charge or insinuate corruption either against himself or his officers. What I said was this, and it is generally true. A contractor who is of the same political persuasion as the Government from which he hopes to get a contract, always has more or less the opinion—and he may by virtue of that opinion and the remarks made by friends of his, not in the Government or in the departments, very well get the idea: Oh, well they will not be hard on one of their friends; these penalties and the like of that, I think I can manage all right. That was the distance I went, and the only distance I intend to go. But what becomes of the miserable argument that because we attempted to criticise the course of the Government in this matter, we are hunting for actual corruption on the part of the Minister or his officers? Surely we can criticise an administrative act, surely we can say it is improvident and wrong in principle, without being bound to this, that unless we show actual corruption we have not proved our case. I did not start in to charge actual corruption and never insinuated it, but I did start in, after listening to the discussion, and my hon. friend (Mr. McLennan) had the same idea, to show that the Government was improvident and that a different course would have been far better in the interests of the country. I have said my say, and hope I have not lectured anybody, and that I have not offended the sensibilities of my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), because I have taken a little more time after he has said that I had already taken too much. And I hope that the criticism I have made will be taken in the spirit in which I have made it, as a fair and reasonable criticism of the administration of the Minister of Public Works, whose conduct I condemn in this matter on the grounds I have stated.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot complain of the tone adopted by my hon. friend in criticising the item before us. But my hon. friend has lost sight of one important fact in this case. The Department of Public Works, under the advice of the engineer, called for tenders. In the notice, we specified that the work was to be built of masonry, and we stated that there was a quarry available. A sample of the stone was deposited.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to interrupt him. I wish to mention a point that I had forgotten. I do not hold Mr. Coste as culpable or the department as culpable for the mistake made about the quarry. The quarry had never been opened, nobody had seen it, and the department here had sufficient prima facie evidence to believe that the stone was very good.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We called for tenders and said that a stone quarry was available for the work. The lowest tenderer believed that there was a quarry available, but when it was proved that there was not, what was our position. Would not my hon. friend admit that when Mr. Coste stated to the contractor and to myself that concrete work was just as good as masonry work, the contractor would have an action for damages against us if we had not let him the contract at the same price? He had tendered on the condition and understanding that there was a quarry available. He had made expenses. He had gone up there.

Mr. DAVIN. Was there any mention of that stone in the specification?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIN. There was not.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman has only to look at the specifications.

Mr. DAVIN. I have them here.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Have you the stone there, too?

Mr. DAVIN. No.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no use of splitting hairs and playing upon words.

Mr. DAVIN. Will you show it in the specifications?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I am to be interrupted at every step, I shall simply have to take my seat. I was saying that the tenderers were led to believe that there was a quarry of stone available. Mr. Lemoine tendered on that basis. The fault was ours, if fault there was. We were justified in the belief, as my hon. friend says, that there was a stone quarry there, but we had made a mistake. The contractor then would have a claim for damages against us. There can be no doubt about that. All that is taken into consideration. Further, the country is having at least as good work in concrete as it would have had in masonry. And so, it seems to me, there is no ground for all this fuss.

I wish to assure my hon. friend that he is altogether mistaken if he thinks that it has come to my mind to threaten any employee because that employee belongs to the same political persuasion as hon. gentlemen opposite. I may have all sorts of failings, but it is not in my character, I think, to act in an unmanly way. I know that the chief officers of my department do not belong to the same political persuasion as the party now in power. When I took office I called the chief officers of the department together and told them: Gentlemen, I know that you have served my predecessors to the best of your ability, and I will give you my full and entire confidence; and I have done so. I have resented, perhaps with some heat, the insinuations that were thrown at me, and I have said that the insinuations placed me in a very difficult position. That is perfectly true. I have been reproached over and over again with retaining Conservative employees. And, when it is insinuated that—not by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) but by some of his friends—I have acted in a dishonourable and dishonest way in a matter in which I was led by the advice of those employees, I say again I am placed in a very difficult position. My hon. friend will understand that I do not feel that it is necessary to say more, except this: The calculation made in this Chamber to-night as to the cost of the work are—I say it with all deference—ridiculous. The cement which goes into a yard of concrete in the bridge costs $8.75. We put in a barrel and a half of cement. It is said that we could build with less than that. No doubt we could. We could use a good deal more stone than we are using. But this is a pretty difficult work in a somewhat inclement climate, and we are obliged to do first-class work.

For that reason we are using a little more cement than is used in works of less importance.

It is no argument to say that in this work or that on the Canadian Pacific Railway contractors have tendered for cement work at certain figures. We know how contractors tender—low on one item and high on another. We have to deal with a special kind of work, concrete work for building piers. I will only say that the country is undoubtedly getting better work than if it had masonry built with local stone, and is getting it for the same price, and that price was the price of the lowest tender.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the item is adopted, I have a word or two to say. I have here the specification and there is not one word about the Edmonton quarry. The fact that the contractor examined the quarry at Calgary, nearly 200 miles away, shows that he was not confined to the Edmonton quarry, and shows that the statement made by my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte), that the Government would be liable to an action for damages, is simply the act of a drowning man catching at a straw, so anxious is he to excuse the position he finds himself in. What the specifications call for is simply stone, without saying that it was to be had. How, then could the failure of the Edmonton quarry to yield the stone required make the department liable for an action for damages?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The specifications called for stone and we could not find any stone.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, how would the action for damages arise?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Because we had a sample of the stone in our office and the contractor was led to believe that he could get stone of that quality.

Mr. DAVIN. Is that in the specifications or contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say it was. But stone was the article to be used, and there was a sample of stone in Mr. Coste's office, and Mr. Coste in his report says that Mr. Lemoine was shown that stone.

Mr. DAVIN. The position taken by the Minister is a very peculiar one. He makes a contract based upon certain specifications, providing that the piers and abutments are to be of ashlar masonry. And, because it is said that the contractor—without even the least evidence as to that—could not find stone at or near Edmonton, the Minister tells us that, if he did not accept the alternative of concrete, he would be open to an action. That could not be, unless, in some way, the Government was responsible for providing the stone. There is not a section of the contract or the specifications to bear out the position taken by the Minister. In order that we may understand what cement is being used, I would ask the hon. Minister what firm in Montreal is supplying the cement?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know.

Mr. DAVIN. Now, this debate has pained the soul of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), by reason of its length. I was sorry when I heard the hon. member for Alberta speak. He was suffering deeply; his soul was wrung with anguish at the thought of the time that had been taken up. And, with great zeal, he came to the defence of the Minister of Public Works. I could not help thinking that my hon. friend from Alberta was taking this opportunity to bring himself shoulder to shoulder with the Liberal party, if he possibly could, after his brief and solitary step towards independence that characterized his action on Yukon matters. The hon. gentleman is a professed economist, and he cannot quarrel with hon. gentlemen in this House, who, while not at all condemning the building of a bridge in the North-west and the building of it as quickly as possible, but approving of this, yet, whether a bridge is in the North-west or in any other part of Canada, assert their right to insist that economical methods shall be used and their right to this—that documents placed before this House to account for any course taken by the Government shall be documents that shall be consistent, and shall not make demands upon the credulity of gentlemen on this side of the House that would simply stultify us if for one moment we accepted the propositions thereby implied.

It was a curious spectacle to see the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) steal like a spectre into the chair of the plenipotentiary at Washington (Sir Louis Davies). Surely the hon. member stood like the sheeted ghost of the member for Wellington that used to rise up on this side and declaim in favour of economy and against extravagance. There he stood, and in a mincing way, in a voice that was ashamed of itself, asked: What have you to complain of? Have you not got concrete, and is not concrete, according to some engineers, as good as masonry? Was that the question? Was not this rather the question: Does concrete cost as much? Although I do not think the hon. gentleman either a Gladstone or an Aristotle or a Grotius—

Mr. McMULLEN. I thank God, he is not a Davin.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, Sir, I suppose that is the only doxology the hon. gentleman can put up to which I can heartily say, Amen. Not only do I say amen to his thankfulness that he is not a Davin, but I will say here, from what I know of the respective races, that to any remote posterity the hon. member for Wellington will never have any representative that will have the least in common with myself or with any past or future kindred of mine. But there was another question besides the question of substituting concrete for masonry. One of the contractors had tendered at 30 cents a foot for the piles, and this contractor, Lemoine, was charging $1 a foot. Here was a price that made a difference in the contract, according to whether the poles were fifteen or twenty feet long, of a sum varying from $1,200 to $1,400. That sum may seem small to men who have got into positions of apparent wealth, but if $1,400 has, by the misconduct of any department, been thrown wrongfully into the pockets of a contractor, I think the people who pay the piper will consider that something very wrong has been done. If the hon. gentleman had said: I find I will have to change this from masonry to concrete, I will see if I cannot get a lump sum lower than $36,500—as a fact, he could have got it done for $14,000, and he could have saved $21,000 to the people of Canada. The hon. gentleman laughs.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I must laugh; it is so ridiculous.

Mr. DAVIN. That laugh is more like a grin than a laugh. I will say this, that if every ministerial magnate in this Government were to laugh or grin like a Cheshire cat, it will not divert the attention of the people of Canada for such transactions as we have sought to drag into light. Mr. Burns, one of the contractors, proposed to drive those ninety-two piles at 30 cents a foot, and you are paying $1. When the hon. gentleman had the option of changing the tender and getting this done for 30 cents a foot, why was there no attempt to change the price for piling? The hon. gentleman replied to me, and he replied to the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), and he replied to the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan), and what is the character of his reply? The character of his reply invariably is to avoid the issue that has been raised, although he said in his somewhat theatrical manner, and I rather fear inspired by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that he would not speak any more. But it became so warm that he could not sit silent, he had to speak, because the point of the case had gone so completely beneath his fifth rib that he found it was necessary to do something, and so he squealed. He got galvanized, he gesticulated. Now, he says that the difference between ashler masonry and concrete is shown in the Canadian Pacific Railway contracts. I have here the official volume published by the Minister of Public Works. He says it is well known that contractors sometimes tender low for some things of which there is a very small quantity, and tender very high for others. But in the case of forty-eight tenders, it is not possible that they should all bear a certain proportion as between masonry and concrete unless that proportion was founded on the nature of things and on value. Let me point out to the hon. gentleman what we have in these contracts. Marks & Connolly, tendering for the piling on contract 41, the quantity being 18,500 lineal feet, gave a rate in the first column of 24 cents and in the second 25 cents. In the present case under consideration the prices are 30 cents and one dollar.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And the contractor was the lowest tenderer for both contracts.

Mr. DAVIN. The lowest as regards the lump sum. When the hon. gentleman had an opportunity of reconsidering this work he should have been influenced by the fact that one tender was for 30 cents per foot while another tender was for $1. In the Canadian Pacific Railway contracts Charlebois & Shanly offered piling at 30 cents per foot, Andrew Jones & Co., 30 cents, Denis O'Brien 40 cents, J. R. Macdonell, 30 cents, J. Goodwin & Co., 30 cents. These prices were for this large quantity I have mentioned, and so the parties had not the temptation to tender at a low rate. Under these circumstances it is palpable that 30 cents is a very fair amount to pay for piling. Probably owing to the magnitude of the other portions of the case, the Minister has not explained anything about the piling. In regard to that report made by Mr. Coste, I sympathize entirely with the remarks made by the hon. member for York as to the extraordinary manner in which the Minister refers to his officers. He said he questioned Mr. Coste when he made this report. This report indicates that the Minister had already consented to have the work done. "In the present instance the contractors have furnished good cement." This had been furnished before the report of the 22nd September was made; yet the Minister said he questioned him about his report. The fact that the report is made on the 22nd and that the language referred to is used is evidence that the change of contract had taken place before then, although the Order in Council permitting the change to be made is dated 20th October.

Mr. DOBELL. That cement was for the foundation and had nothing to do with the other part of the work.

Mr. DAVIN. I have great faith in the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Dobell), and I love to see him when laughter ripples in his countenance so fair.

Mr. DOBELL. Allow me to say a word.

Mr. DAVIN. After I have concluded. I cannot do so now as I cannot persuade myself at the moment that the hon. gentleman would shed any light on the subject. If I could do so I would willingly give way to him. Here are a set of documents that raise questions on their face, and they have never been explained. I want to say a word with respect to the statement made by my hon. friend, who I know would not make a statement without good ground for making it, the hon. member for Alberta, to the effect that he knew that within the time the feat extraordinary as described in this report was accomplished. It may be quite true that he saw Mr. Lemoine in Edmonton. It may be true that he saw Mr. St. Laurent there—I do not doubt it for a moment—but the feat described could not be accomplished, because there are only two trains a week going and coming between Calgary and Edmonton, and when Mr. Lemoine arrived in Edmonton, he could not have left it—because the first time he could have left Montreal was when this contract was signed on 17th August—before the morning of 26th August. He goes to Calgary and he inspects the stone there, because when he arrived at the department here and when told to go and get stone elsewhere (which is by the way a complete answer to what was said by the Minister of Public Works as to liability to an action, he replied that he examined the stone at Calgary and was of opinion that it should not be accepted. I grant that by lightning speed, but certainly not making any profound examination of either the quarry at Calgary or Edmonton, he might have gone up and reached the Department of Public Works breathless on 30th. But where then was the time for Mr. St. Laurent to go and examine the quarry at Edmonton and make a report to the Department of Public Works, dated Ottawa, 30th August, twelve clear days, as was emphasized by the hon. member for Glengarry? It is a most remarkable fact that this feature of these documents has been carefully avoided by the Minister, and one of the reasons is that it is impossible to explain it. These documents will not fit in with the theory that the Department of Public Works, when Mr. Lemoine secured the contract, was anxious that stone should be secured. If you formulate the theory that there was a desire to facilitate it being built of concrete and to give Lemoine the building of it in concrete at the same rate as he was to build it of masonry, these documents will fit in with a theory like that. The Minister throws out the suggestion in a very defiant manner, and says: Do you dare to suggest that I directed my officers to do certain things. Well, Sir, I am not going to suggest that, but I say that we are in the face of the inexplicable, and I will remind the Minister of this, that the God of worship of so many hon. gentlemen, Napoleon, when he used to have a court martial to try some person obnoxious to him would give directions to the court martial what its finding should be. And the darkest blot upon his great career, was the murder of the Duke D'Anguien. When the court martial sat upon that unfortunate man it heard no evidence, but it brought in a verdict that he was to be shot, and shot he was. And when one of the colonels of the court martial was remonstrated with, he replied: What could we do? If we had not shot the Duke D'Anghein we would have been shot ourselves. I tell the story and any application of it that has to be made can be made. But, Sir, I repeat that when we have documents that are inexplicable it need not be wondered at if our criticism of these documents sounds in what the Minister calls the language of insinuation.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Telegraph Lines—North-west Territories. $8,000

Mr. DAVIN. Is the Minister of Public Works responsible for the dismissal of Mr. Gisborne from the inspectorship of telegraphs in the North-west Territories?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is in my department.

Mr. DAVIN. Why was Mr. Gisborne dismissed?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I considered that it was in the public interest to have a competent telegraph operator as superintendent of the telegraphs, and as Mr. Gisborne was not a competent operator, I thought it was better to change him.

Mr. DAVIN. There could be no idea of partisanship touching Mr. Gisborne. I never heard of him taking the least interest in politics. Was the Minister influenced at all by politics?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Who was appointed in his place?

Mr. DAVIN. A man named Macdonald. It is the first time I heard that Mr. Gisborne was not a capable man. I have always understood he was a thoroughly scientific man, and I know that long before he was dismissed, the gentleman who was appointed in his place and who distinguished himself as a very hard worker against me in my election, said he would get the position.

Mr. HUGHES. Did he get it?

Mr. DAVIN. He did.

Mr. HUGHES. Is he a practical man?

Mr. DAVIN. He can send a message. I must say that I think the Minister got rid of a very good man in Mr. Gisborne.

Resolutions to be reported.

PRINTING COMMITTEE REPORT.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask permission of the House to move that the report of the Committee on Printing which sends down the testimony taken in the case of the examination before the Public Accounts Committee, with a recommendation that it be printed, shall be adopted and that the document be printed.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I wish my hon. friend would allow that to stand till Monday.

Mr. FOSTER. It is usual to print it, and it was recommended by the Printing Committee.

Motion agreed to.

QUEEN VS. SKELTON.

Mr. DAVIN. I am going to make a very humble appeal to the Prime Minister. I was promised by the Minister of Justice this day fortnight that he would give me the affidavits in the case of the Queen against Skelton. The Solicitor General always talks as if I would get them, but I think I am treated rather badly. I know my right hon. friend, and I do not think he would like to have a member of this House treated in this way, and I hope he will give me some help.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is difficult to resist such a personal appeal as the hon. gentleman has made to me. The hon. gentleman knows that this is a matter between him and the Minister of Justice. The only thing I can do is to speak to the Minister of Justice about it.

DISMISSALS IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. DAVIN. I would again ask my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior if he will bring down the return in regard to the dismissals in the North-west?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). That return is one which has to be prepared by all the departments. The necessary information from the Indian Department and the Department of the Interior has been sent to the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State informs me that there are one or two departments yet to be heard from to complete the return, but that he will call their attention to the matter and endeavour to have it completed at once.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.20 a.m., (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 30th May, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SITTINGS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SUTHERLAND moved :

That leave be granted to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines to sit during the time the House is in session.

Mr. FOSTER. With the consent of my hon. friend, I will move to amend that by adding "and the Public Accounts Committee."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no objection. There is considerable business before the Railway Committee which will be disposed of to-morrow. As to the business of the other committee, I do not know anything about it; but there is no reason, I suppose, why it should not be included in the motion.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have a resolution in my hand, in the same sense, which I intended to move with regard to the Public Accounts Committee.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. McMULLEN moved :

That the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts have leave to sit during the time the House is in session.

Motion agreed to.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 152) further to amend the Customs Act.

Mr. FOSTER. Explain.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This is a Bill to amend the Customs Act in some particulars. First, a slight change is made with reference to ship's stores. Provision is made for an allowance for the leakage of liquors while in bond. It is also provided that standards for tea may be adopted, and that the system of testing tea may be changed. Another clause has reference to the removal of doubts from or making more clear the law with regard to the transport of goods in bond. These are the four points touched in the Bill.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs whether he has had time to consider the subject of the Bill I introduced touching the coasting trade. It was discussed at some length by myself and the Minister of Customs, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) promised to look into the subject. I introduced it for the purpose of having it considered at a date when it was impossible for it to be dealt with in the hands of a private member.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries promised the hon. gentleman that he would look into that Bill, and it was a subject of some conversation between himself and myself; but he is not here at present, though he will be back, I think, before long. That subject is not dealt with, however, in this Bill.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I quite understand that, but I thought this was a favourable opportunity to ask whether the Government had reached any conclusion with regard to introducing legislation of that character—that is, to meet the United States laws to the same extent that we have hitherto done. Their laws have gone somewhat further than ours.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot say that the Government have as yet reached a conclusion with reference to the subject of the hon. gentleman's Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PROTECTION OF CUSTOMS AND FISHERIES.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 153) further to protect the customs and fisheries. He said: The object of this Bill is to make somewhat clearer the law with reference to the examination of a vessel that may be suspected of being engaged in the contraband trade, by providing that upon proper steps being taken, she may be brought to, and that the officers in charge may be indemnified for any damage that may be claimed while acting legally under the authority proposed to be conferred.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

L. P. O. NOEL.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) a question. Why is it that he dismissed Mr. L. P. O. Noel from his place as telegraph and signal service operator in the Saskatchewan? I want to call his attention to an article in the paper. I do not think it will be necessary for me to move the adjournment of the House, but, if necessary, I will move the adjournment in order to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to this matter. Here is an article in the Saskatchewan "Herald" of May 13th:—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

For more than a year the Liberal Central Committee, to whom Mr. Laurier and Mr. Davis assigned control of the political patronage of this portion of Saskatchewan, have been labouring to secure the dismissal of Mr. L. P. O. Noel,—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Davin), of course, is not at liberty, in asking a question, to introduce any controversial matter.

Mr. FOSTER. He is reading a paragraph to explain.

Mr. DAVIN. I will conclude by moving the adjournment.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I, perhaps, may satisfy my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) by saying that Mr. Noel has not been dismissed.

Mr. DAVIN. I am very glad to learn it.

THE MAJOR GENERAL COMMANDING.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would claim the privilege of reading a letter I received a few days ago from Major General Gascoigne:—

Ottawa, May 24th, 1898.

Dear Sir Wilfrid Laurier,—On May 5th, Sir Charles Tupper made some very severe reflections on myself in Parliament. These were reported in the press on the following day, but the reports which I saw appeared to me to be only the expressions of Sir Charles's own opinion, and though these were terribly severe, yet undoubtedly he was perfectly within his right to make them, if he saw fit, in the House. I was very grateful to see that neither you nor my own immediate Minister endorsed these opinions, but, on the contrary, protested against them, and, therefore, I saw no reason to complain, as I recognize that a public official is open to any criticism.

But a copy of "Hansard" has now reached me, and in it I see certain statements of facts reported, which, if not contradicted, will stand against me for all time, and which are not only untrue, but are exceedingly damaging to my personal character.

The statements I refer to are on page 5064. Sir Charles is reported to have said that he had it "on the authority of the most eminent counsel in Canada that if the civil action threatened against me had been brought, an adverse verdict would have been obtained, with the result that I would have been driven out of the Imperial service altogether." How far any counsel, however eminent, is justified in deciding an untried action is open to question, but what I altogether emphatically deny is that any verdict, even an adverse one, would have caused my expulsion from the Imperial service.

Sir Charles is reported further to have said that "I was able to avoid this disgrace by getting my resignation accepted."

This is altogether untrue, as you yourself are aware. My resignation was sent in after the threatened civil action was unconditionally and unreservedly withdrawn; it had no bearing or reference to that action whatever; indeed, I had spoken to the Horse Guards, in England, fully twelve months ago as to the possibility of my applying to resign, and I emphatically repeat that my resignation had no bearing or reference whatever to that civil action. I sent in that resignation on purely personal grounds; I am on the best of terms with my Minister; and both he and you, sir, yourself, were kind enough to express regret at my resigning. If uncontradicted, and viewed in the light of the exceedingly severe criticisms which precede and follow these misstatements, it would appear on the official records of the House that to escape the consequences of a civil action, which would have expelled me from the Imperial service, I was allowed to resign my appointment in this country. The very vagueness of the (unmentioned) charge to be brought against me by this civil process, would only, in after years, intensify the unknown nature of the crime which it would appear I had committed, and to escape the consequences of which I had been mercifully allowed to resign.

I am ignorant as to the procedure of Parliament, but I feel confident that when you read this letter and compare my statements with those recorded in "Hansard," and see for yourself the conclusion which, in after years, could be arrived at, if these misstatements are uncontradicted, that you yourself, sir, and the whole House, including, I believe, Sir Charles Tupper himself, would desire to remove the damaging and erroneous impression. At any rate, I leave the matter with the utmost confidence, in your hands.

Believe me,
Yours faithfully,
W. J. GASCOIGNE,
Major General,
Commanding Canadian Militia.

This letter, which is dated the 24th instant, I received on the 25th. Being engaged otherwise, I did not answer it on that day, but I told Major General Gascoigne that I would bring it to the attention of the House on Friday last. On Friday last Sir Charles Tupper was not in his place, and I refrained for that reason from calling attention to the matter. It did not occur to me, though I should have known, it having been mentioned in the public prints, that Sir Charles Tupper intended to sail on Saturday last. I have to express my regret that this matter was not brought to the attention of the House while Sir Charles Tupper, the leader of the Opposition, was in the House, but I deem it my duty to lay this letter of explanation from the General before the House and the public. I move that this letter be laid on the Table of the House.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. McDUGALL. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) if he has the statement I have asked for several times during the session showing the names of parties dismissed from the service of Customs in my constituency?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I asked the officers in my department to prepare that statement for the hon. gentleman. I have no doubt they are doing it. However, I will take a note of the matter and call their attention to it again.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to tell the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that I have not yet received a copy of the affidavit or affidavits of the Queen vs. Skelton that I was promised.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I can only say that I shall again call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that the promise made to my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) was not carried out.

Mr. FOSTER. I add my complaint to the others. I have not yet received the instructions the Postmaster General sent to his postmasters, nor a copy of the Berne Convention, anent the proposed reduction of postage between this country and Great Britain. I begin to find myself under quite a grievance on account of this not being brought down.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). On Friday night, at a late hour, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) reminded me of his desire to see these instructions, and at the earliest hour on Saturday morning I gave written instructions to have them prepared. I also made inquiries as to the Berne Convention, as I stated to the hon. gentleman before, and I directed the department to present to the library, for the hon. gentleman's special use and for the use of the public in general, a copy of the volume up to the latest moment. I have no doubt he will find it in the library at this moment, or at all events during the day.

Mr. FOSTER. I am so sorry the hon. gentleman would not give me one for myself.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If it will at all improve the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) I shall have much pleasure in doing so.

THE RIFLE RANGES AT COTE DE LEISSE.

Mr. MONK. I would like again to call the attention of the Minister of Militia to the firing at Cote de Leisse, which is continuous and causes considerable inconvenience to the farmers, because they are absolutely unable to work a considerable portion of their land near the road from Ste. Laurent to Dorval. I had a report yesterday from the Mayor of St. Laurent, who informed me that the firing continued on Saturday and that a number of farmers had been obliged to leave their work. To be thus prevented from working their land at this time of the year is a serious injury to them. I venture to suggest to the Minister of Militia the desirability of having this firing stopped and the practice discontinued and having this complaint investigated by some disinterested person. I am perfectly convinced that if the matter is fully investigated, the Minister will find that this grievance is well founded.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I may say to the hon. gentleman that on Saturday last Lieut.-Col. Cotton and another officer at headquarters visited the range with a view to ascertaining the facts with regard to the complaint contained in the letter which the hon. gentleman read a few days ago in the House. I have not received their official report, but I am told that there is not a word of truth in the statement contained in that letter, that any instructions were issued to the farmers in that locality that they were not to work on their farms on certain days of the week. I am further informed that these officials consider that under the careful instructions that have now been given with reference to firing and the careful supervision, there is no danger. However, I will have their official report, and will lay it before the House to-morrow, perhaps.

MAIL COMMUNICATION BETWEEN PORT MULGRAVE AND ST.
PETER'S.

Mr. GILLIES. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to inquire of the Postmaster General if he has issued the necessary instructions to have the mails carried by water from Port Mulgrave to St. Peter's instead of having them carried by the overland route. It has been the custom for years past, on the opening of navigation, to send the mails by the steamer plying upon that route, and in this way the mails are delivered the same evening they leave Halifax, instead of on the following morning.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I will make inquiries, and if the mails are not being so carried, will give the necessary instructions. I would remind the hon. gentleman that last year was the first time they ever went by water.

Mr. GILLIES. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. The hon. gentleman should not make those statements in the House, because they are not correct. The fact is that they have been going by the steamer, when navigation is open, for years past.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I may be wrong.

Mr. GILLIES. The hon. gentleman will find my statement corroborated by the records in his department.

Mr. FRASER. Last year was the first year they ever went on the boat between Canso and Mulgrave.

Mr. McDOUGALL. That is an entirely different route.

Mr. MONK.

CLAIM OF E. J. WALSH.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This may be a convenient opportunity to call the attention of the Government to some papers that were brought down in answer to an Address of this House during the present session, relating to the claim of Mr. E. J. Walsh against the Government of the Leeward Islands. Considerable correspondence has taken place on the subject, it seems, in connection with this claim of Mr. Walsh, who was engaged on the request of the British Government, or the Colonial Office, made to this Government some years ago, for a competent engineer to do service in that colony. A dispute arose in terminating his service there, and this correspondence covers the claim which he presented through the Secretary of State of this Government, to the notice of the Government of the Leeward Islands, and to the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain. So far as this correspondence goes, it shows that the claim was recognized, and the amount of the salary was recognized, up to the date when his services terminated. The claim was paid and the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain gives it as his opinion that the further claim of Mr. Walsh cannot very well be pressed. On an examination of these papers, however, it will be seen that there is ample material on which the Colonial Secretary might again be urged to press this claim upon the attention of the Government of the Leeward Islands.

Mr. SPEAKER. I suppose—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Only a moment. I think it is more convenient to mention this matter now than to go into all the papers on going into Supply, in which case I do not think I would serve the purpose of Mr. Walsh or satisfy the House. I only wish to call the attention of the Government to the fact that having admitted part of the claim to be due, that is, the amount of the salary, there is the very best ground for the rest of this claim, which is for the expenses that he was put to for about two months in waiting for the Government of the Leeward Islands to deal with his claim, in view of the position in which he was placed. I think also that the Colonial Office is under some obligation to press this claim, or at any rate to recognize it, because it was really through the Colonial Office that Mr. Walsh's services were obtained, and that being a Crown colony, the responsibility, perhaps, attaches in a measure to the Colonial Office itself, independently of the manner in which this engagement took place. I did intend to go fully into this matter, but I think the present reference will suffice to direct attention to it of the Secretary of State, who has been looking after the matter. He will see, at least, from the correspondence, that there is material on which to press a further claim on the Right Hon. Mr. Chamberlain for the expenses that were incurred by Mr. Walsh in remaining in the colony to obtain what is admitted to be due for meritorious services.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I can only say to my hon. friend that personally I know nothing of the matter to which he has referred, and I suppose my colleagues about me are in the same ignorance. However, I will have much pleasure in drawing the attention of the Secretary of State to the remarks of my hon. friend.

Mr. WALLACE. I think that the Prime Minister might do more than that, because I may say to him that the matter has engaged the attention, to some extent, of the Government through the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Hon. Mr. Chamberlain, declined to interfere very much, not because he had not the power—because the Leeward Islands being a Crown colony, he has a large amount of jurisdiction over the affairs of that colony—but the claim is founded upon the fact—

The PRIME MINISTER. Will my hon. friend pardon me? I see that my hon. friend has information which may be of value upon this subject. If he will allow me, I would ask him to defer his remarks, out of regard for the rules of the House, until we go into Committee of Supply. The House will be moved into Committee of Supply to-day, and that will be the proper time. This discussion is irregular.

CASE OF W. J. SPENCER, NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to mention—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIN. I was going to mention the case merely to the Prime Minister, but I shall now move the adjournment of the House. I was going to mention to the Prime Minister the case of a man named Spencer—

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I would suggest to my hon. friend as an old parliamentarian, that it is better to follow as closely as he can the rules of the House. There is no objection to moving the adjournment of the House for the purpose of calling attention to an urgent matter. But I see this question is of such a nature that it can be properly dealt with when the House is moved into Committee of Supply, and I would suggest to my hon. friend that he wait until that is done. As he knows, that is the proper time to ventilate any grievance that a man may have. But I think both sides of the House will agree with me that the adjournment should not be moved except when there is no other possible method of bringing a subject before the House.

Mr. FOSTER. That seems to be the case just now. What my hon. friend rose for was simply to bring a matter to the attention of the Government in very few words, but lately I have noticed, as no doubt my hon. friend has, that when he rises to speak he is met with a chorus of "boo hoos" on the other side, and I do not think the hon. gentleman would be otherwise than within his right if he entered into the subject most fully.

Mr. DAVIN. I should be very glad to accept the suggestion of the right hon. First Minister, but he, as an old parliamentarian, knows very well that every member of this House has certain rights, and he knows well that the freedom of debate and the freedom of question in this House is its most sacred, its most vital right and function. If you have a majority of the House so disciplined and at the same time so apparently ashamed of the gagged condition—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will understand that if he moves the adjournment of the House on the question of parliamentary gagging, or whatever it may be, he will have to confine himself to that subject.

Mr. DAVIN. I had to deal with the point that was raised by the right hon. First Minister. It seems that there is a determination to gag us, but I do not think that would facilitate business, and certainly I do not think that the Opposition are in any mood to be brought into that condition. I intend to move the adjournment, and I wish to bring before the House the case of one Spencer, who served his country gallantly in 1885. He was wounded, and a board of police officers sat upon his case and made a finding. The board of medical officers, assembled by order of Commissioner Herchmer, inquired into the nature of the disability of Regimental No. 983, ex-Constable W. J. Spencer, of the North-west Mounted Police, on the 21st day of November, 1887, at Regina, N.W.T., and they found as follows:—

We declare upon our honour that we have duly and impartially inquired into the case of Reg. No. 983, Constable W. J. Spencer, of the North-west Mounted Police, who appeared before this board this day, and we find that the above-named W. J. Spencer is suffering from the effects of a gunshot wound in the right lumbar region, the ball entering just above the crest of the right ilium posteriorly, and passing out $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches anterior to its point of entry, having apparently traversed the cellular tissue between the abdominal muscles and the skin.

We do further declare upon our honour that we consider the above mentioned wound was received in action, and that it was simply a flesh wound, and that the injury is not one which will disable him permanently, and that he will probably be fit for service or his usual occupation in six months, being now at "light duty," and we recommend that he receive pension under the 4th degree until fit for full service.

A lot of correspondence took place, and the upshot was that an Order in Council was passed, giving this man 23 cents a day for only a year, under the belief—and to this I call the attention of the right hon. gentleman who is at the head of the Mounted Police service—that he then would be as well as ever. The Government evidently believed that at the end of twelve months he would be as well as ever, but as a matter of fact he is still suffering to-day in consequence of that wound received in action, and the very least that should be done for our police, when wounded in action, is to place them in the same position as soldiers in the British service, and give them a pension, however small, for life. Now, this is the last letter of Mr. Fred. White, the comptroller :

Ottawa, 20th May, 1889.

Sir,—Referring to your letter No. 319 of the 17th ult., transmitting proceedings of a board of inquiry upon ex-Reg. No. 983, Constable W. J. Spencer, I have now the honour to inform you that an Order in Council has been passed granting a pension to Spencer at the rate of 23 cents per day for one year from the 21st December, 1888.

Will you be good enough to notify Spencer, and forward to him the inclosed cheque for $30.13, which represents the amount due to him under the Order in Council above quoted, to the 30th ultimo.

The report of the board of inquiry in Spencer's case recommended that in the event of his residing in the vicinity of a police post during the period for which he was recommended for a pension, he might receive medical treatment and medicine free of charge in connection with the injury received by him during the rebellion of 1885.

There is no objection to this recommendation being carried into effect.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) FRED. WHITE,
Comptroller.

The Commissioner,
N. W. M. Police,
Regina, N.W.T.

MEMO.

Cheques for the balance of the pension granted to ex-Constable Spencer were forwarded as follows :—

On the 29th October, 1889, from 1st May to 30th September, 1889, $35.19.

On 11th June, 1890, from 1st October to 20th December, 1889, $18.63

The papers are on the Table, and if the right hon. gentleman will look into them and have an inquiry made into the condition of Mr. Spencer, he will find that he is lame and no longer the same man ; and I say it was discreditable to the past Government that this man should have been so treated, and will be equally discreditable to this Government if they follow the same course. What I intended was only to refer the papers to the right hon. gentleman, but as I have made some comments, I move the adjournment of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am really sorry that my hon. friend did not adhere to the intention he had in his mind when he first rose. His intention was merely to call my attention to the case of this man Spencer, but he has chosen instead to move the adjournment of the House and to bring the question more fully before us. He must understand that it is impossible for me at this moment to give him any answer at all. My hon. friend is not only an old parliamentarian but he was an old soldier.

Mr. DAVIN. I fought in the rebellion.

The PRIME MINISTER. And I would suppose that the roar of battle on the floor of this House or anywhere else would not make him withdraw from any intention he had in his mind, and that no matter what obstacles were in his way, whether in the shape of bullets or otherwise, he would adhere to his intention. I am sorry to say that I cannot any longer hold that good opinion of him, because he changed his mind simply on account of some gentle criticism from this side. I will look into the matter and reply when we come to discuss the Estimates.

Motion to adjourn negatived.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 122) to incorporate the Supreme Grand Lodge of the Sons of England Benefit Society.—(Mr. Bertram.)

LAKE CHAMPLAIN AND RIVER ST. LAWRENCE SHIP CANAL COMPANY.

House resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 99) to incorporate the Lake Champlain and River St. Lawrence Ship Canal Company.—(Mr. Préfontaine.)

On section 19,

Mr. FOSTER. This Bill appears to have been all cut up since it was originally printed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Clause 19 has been materially changed.

Mr. FOSTER. It is one of the strangest Bills ever brought down and passed by a committee of the House. I have been trying to ascertain whether the Government were running it or a private corporation, as it asks for all the powers and procedure belonging to a Government. I have been trying to follow it, but I find it has been excised and added to. It is very objectionable that Bills should be changed so much from the form in which they came before the House and be passed through it when they re-appear before the House in committee. The Government have a printing office, and it would not take long to reprint the Bill, and it would only be fair to members of the House who are not on the committee, that this should be done. If the hon. First Minister has read the Bill, he will have found it is a most extraordinary one.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The rule I have invariably followed in matters of private legislation is to accept the report of the committee to which the Bill has been referred. If the attention of the House is subsequently called to the fact that it contains provisions which are objectionable, we are then only too glad to consider the matter; but up to the present time the practice of the present Government has been to follow the practice of the late Government, to accept the reports of the committees to which private Bills were referred, unless the attention of the Government was specially called to a particular case. If the hon. gentleman has an objection to offer, the only course to pursue is to discharge the order or to take time to consider the point.

Mr. FOSTER. The interest of the promoters would not be prejudiced if the Bill were reprinted, and I urge that that course be adopted. It is true the Bill has been considered by a large and important committee, but at the same time this House is the body that passes the Bill, and it is simply making a machine of the House to pass it through in this way when the original Bill has been so seriously amended. The Minister of Railways is not present.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Perhaps I was wrong in stating that there have been some material changes. No doubt the wording of the clauses has been changed to a considerable extent. The powers asked by the promoters have been considerably restricted by the committee. I may add that the consideration of the Bill occupied two whole sittings of the Railway Committee.

Mr. FOSTER. There must have been some disputed points to consider.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Some members took objection altogether to the granting of legislation of this kind. The point now is whether the Bill should be reprinted. As regards the charter being one to build a canal from Lake Champlain to the St. Lawrence River, there is no material change; the changes made by the committee have been confined to the wording of the clauses in order to further protect the public interest.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland) will see if he looks at that Bill that fully one-half of it has been changed or excised.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The main purpose of the Bill was to grant a charter to build a canal from the Lake Champlain to the River St. Lawrence and that still remains the chief object of the Bill, and so far as that is concerned there has been no material change. As I have already explained, the only changes made were changes in the wording of the clauses and restricting the powers of the company asked for.

Mr. HAGGART. I draw the attention of the Government to what is the principal objection of this Bill, and that is, that if ever it is built it will be on the proposed line of the International Canal. The commission appointed to inquire into the waterways of Canada, recommended the adoption of the St. Lawrence route or an alternate route from Oswego or Buffalo to New York, for transport from the upper lakes to the seaboard. The principal link that remains un-built is that from Lake St. Francis to Lake Champlain. It is true that this does not cover the particular link intended to connect from the St. Lawrence or Lake St. Francis, but the proposal in the Bill is just as important as if it were from Lake St. Francis to Lake Champlain, because if ever the Georgian Bay route be followed, then the American connection would be in line with this proposal. My attention has been drawn to this by one of the Deep Waterway Commissioners. He said to me: We expended a large sum of money for building the St. Lawrence canals; the connecting link is through our own territory, and if ever we went to make arrangements with the American Government for the purpose of obtaining a connection to New York or to the Hudson River, we can say to them: We have already contributed the money for the purpose of building these canals and the greater part of the expenditure required for building this link should come out of your pockets because it concerns you more than anybody else. Then, Sir, why should we part with that power which is at present in our hands and which we now control and give it to any private individuals. That argument I adduced before the Railway Committee and I am glad to say that the Minister of Railways took the same view of the case. I thought that the hon. Minister had brought the matter before the Government and got their policy in reference to this matter. It is a most important thing that the control of that link between the St. Lawrence River and Lake Champlain, whether it starts opposite Montreal or whether it starts from Lake St. Francis, should never be parted with by the Government and given to private individuals. If private individuals have control of this, the Government may contribute a sum of money towards it and these individuals may part with it to a foreign Government. Foreigners may get control of the stock just the same as the English Government got control of the Suez Canal, or the French Government may get control of the Panama Canal by granting certain rights to private individuals. I believe it was afterwards provided in the Bill as amended that the incorporators should be British subjects, but there is even still great danger that a portion of the stock, or the majority of it may be possessed in a foreign country. This is a Bill which the Government should inquire into carefully to see whether it is in the interests of the country or not that the right to that particular link should be parted with to a private corporation. I submit that the Government should have a policy with regard to this Bill.

Mr. CHARLTON. The question as to the policy of granting the power asked for in this Bill is one that should carefully be considered by this House. I was intending to wait until the question reached the stage when a motion would be made that the committee should rise, but as the discussion seems to be open now perhaps time will be saved by my marking what remarks I desire to make with regard to this Bill. I agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) that the franchises and powers sought under this Bill are of a very important character, and before Parliament proceeds to act definitely, it should be fully aware of all the consequences that may attend its action. The control of the waterways of this Dominion of the great line of communication which does now exist, and which it is proposed to perfect between the great west and the seaboard, is a matter of the utmost importance. When the Brown draft Reciprocity Treaty was negotiated in 1874, one of the features of that treaty was an agreement between the two Governments, that a canal should be constructed from the St. Lawrence River to Lake Champlain, and an extension of that canal from Whitehall at the southern end of Lake Champlain to tide water on the Hudson River. That action taken in 1874 illustrates very clearly the importance that was attached to this matter by both Governments at that time. Since then we have had various proposals with regard to the deep waterway communication from the great lakes to the ocean. We have had commissions appointed and reports made, and the commercial bodies of both the United States and of Canada have taken a deep interest in this matter. This, Sir, is a question of national consequence. It is a question the control of which should remain in the hands of the federal legislature and the Parliament of Canada should not abdicate its powers in this matter and pass them over to a private company. We should consider very carefully what we are doing in regard to this question to-day. We have before us various propositions in this connection. We have already decided to deepen the St. Lawrence Canals to 14 feet, and we have under consideration or will have under consideration, a project for a canal or waterway from Montreal to Lake Huron by the Ottawa Valley; a project which probably in the end will become a matter of necessity. That great work must have its connection with Lake Champlain. Circumstances will arise that will render this course necessary. Now we are proposing under this Bill to pass this matter of national importance, over to a private company, and that private company will be placed in a position in which they can extort from this Government in the future very large sums of money for this franchise that to-day we are giving away. This Bill is brought in at a very late date in the session, and it cannot receive that mature consideration which its importance demands. I do not believe that under the circumstances this House is warranted in proceeding with the consideration of this measure. I feel very strongly that the Government should retain this franchise in its own hands, I feel that this matter of a canal from Lake Champlain to the River St. Lawrence is one of national consequence, and whatever may be done with regard to it should be done by the Canadian Government in connection with negotiations with the United States. The time will come when the United States will be called upon, in connection with Canada to pay whatever it may be decided shall be their proportion of the expenses of improving the deep waterway communication between tide water and the great lakes, and we are simply complicating the question, we are making its satisfactory solution more difficult, by the course we are proposing to take under this Bill. I am decidedly opposed to the granting of this charter—opposed to it on grounds of general policy, opposed to it because it has been brought in at a stage of this session when we cannot be placed in possession of the information that it is necessary to have in our hands, to arrive at a just and proper decision as to the course that we, the custodians of the people's interests, should pursue in this matter; and I wish to record here my protest against this Bill, and to move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MONK. I am sorry the promoter of this Bill is not here. The Bill was very carefully examined in the Committee on Railways and Canals, and I think it would be a great pity if it did not pass. The main objection to the measure, according to the ex-Minister of Railways and the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, is that it keeps out of the hands of the Government a work of national importance. That was considered by the Committee on Railways and Canals. That objection, it seems to me, loses a great deal of force when we consider that there is a clause in the Bill which permits the Government at any time to take possession of this work.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Government may just as well retain possession now.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to call attention to the last clause which was passed by the committee, providing that this Act should only come into effect on the proclamation of the Governor in Council.

Mr. MONK. I thank my hon. friend for reminding me of that provision; but there is also a provision in the Bill which makes the measure entirely different, I presume, from the legislation under which the Suez Canal was constructed. There was no provision in that legislation for any such exercise of power as is granted to the Government in this case. The Government are not ready at the present moment, I assume, to undertake this work, nor will they be ready for some time to come. This Bill is one of great importance to us in the province of Quebec, especially to the city of Montreal, where there is a very large commercial interest involved. To give an instance, there is no doubt that if this canal were constructed we should get our coal from the United States at a much cheaper rate than we are now doing. It seems to me that the objection that the confiding of the building of this canal to private enterprise is depriving the Government of its power to take possession of this work whenever it may seem fit to do so, is a futile objection, in presence of this clause of the Bill, which allows the Government to take possession of the work at any time on paying to the constructors of the canal what they have expended upon its construction.

The PRIME MINISTER. The points which have been raised in this discussion are certainly of very great importance. The Committee on Railways and Canals have dealt with the question; therefore, the question is not new; and they have come to certain conclusions. Recognizing the danger which lies in this Bill, they have inserted certain clauses with the view of protecting the public interests. The Government will have to consider whether or not the safeguards provided by these clauses are sufficient to protect the public interests; and with this view, I will ask, in amendment to the amendment of my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. FOSTER. With the understanding that the Bill be reprinted.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a great deal of force in the objection urged by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) that it is utterly impossible to understand this Bill without its being reprinted. It was considered at two sessions of the committee, and there was a great deal of argument over it. I supported the Bill on the distinct understanding that a clause should be inserted providing that it should not go into force except by proclamation of the Governor in Council. While that was done, the many amendments which were made in the Bill make it utterly impossible for any one going through the Bill to understand its nature without its being reprinted.

Committee rose and reported progress.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 151) to incorporate the Pacific and Yukon Railway, Navigation, Trading and Mining Company.—(Mr. Rosamond.)

BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson) moved that the House, at its next sitting, resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Act to provide for bounties on iron and steel made in Canada, and to provide as follows:—"The provisions of chapter six of the Statutes of 1897, intituled 'An Act to provide for Bounties on Iron and Steel made in Canada,' shall be held to have come into force on the twenty-third day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven."

· Motion agreed to.

ABOLITION OF CIVIL SERVICE SUPER-ANNUATION.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock) moved second reading of Bill (No. 76) to provide for the abolition of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, and for the retirement of members of the civil service.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General to give us an idea of the scope of the Bill, as briefly as possible, of course. I have noticed reports in the papers of certain interviews had with members of the civil service with reference to this measure, and I think I saw an intimation in one of the papers, as a result of those interviews, that changes were expected to be made in an important particular. As far as I am concerned, I think the Bill itself is essentially bad, but even a bad Bill may be made a little better by taking the most objectionable features from it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is a reprint of the Bill that was submitted last session, but the Government propose to suggest some amendment. Even if the Bill be regarded by some as essentially bad, it is one the country has called for, and the Government, therefore, is simply in this, as in other respects, living up to its engagements by presenting this Bill to the consideration of Parliament. It provides for two things. It provides, in the first place, for the cessation of the Superannuation Act as regards certain classes and the adoption in lieu thereof of another measure for the retirement of civil servants. Some members may think that no retiring fund is necessary, or no provision whatever for the relief of civil servants who have ceased to be able to discharge their duties efficiently, but our experience has shown that it is necessary for Governments to have some fund whereby, either by way of gratuity or pension or otherwise, the service may be relieved of persons who have survived their usefulness, without being compelled to throw them adrift upon an unkind world with no means of support. Experience shows that men of fixed salaries, with rare exceptions, live up to their salaries. A special sort of improvidence seems to attend them through life, and if the Government does not in some way provide for them, they will have nothing, as they will not provide for themselves. Therefore, in order that the public service may not be hampered by useless employees, and that the embarrassment of discharging such persons may not be postponed by unnecessary though natural regard for the circumstances of worn-out officers, it is necessary that some provision of this kind be made. The old Act made no provision whatever for those who died in harness, and in their case their whole contributions were lost to them or their families. The present Bill introduces an entirely different principle, and it will be a mistake to suppose that the change is suggested by any feeling of hostility to the civil service. On the contrary, it is offered to the service as a just measure, removing the element of chance from their accumulations, and providing that the amounts deducted from their salaries shall be available on their retirement or, in case of death, to their families, without any contingency of loss by reason of their death in harness. This measure is introduced in no other spirit than that of regard for the interests of the staff. It is customary, on many occasions, when appeals are made to the electorate, for persons to speak in other than complimentary terms of the civil service of Canada, but so far as my experience goes, in my department at least, I can say without qualification, or with a very slight qualification, that a more efficient and worthy staff no member of a Government could desire. I believe that the same may be said, to a very large extent, of the whole staff of Canada, and it will be, therefore, most unfair if a measure such as this were to be introduced with any desire of injuring or causing detriment to the service. It may be that its provisions may not commend themselves to everybody. There may be a few hardships encountered; but still, I venture the opinion that when the measure has been worked for a reasonable term of years, it will be found satisfactory, not only to the staff and their families, but to the taxpayers as a whole, who certainly have to be considered in a measure of this kind. The time has passed for discussing the merits or demerits of the present Superannuation Act. The present Government is committed to the abolition of that Act. True, we did not undertake to abolish it as regards every one in the service, but to abolish it, at all events, as regards new appointees, and leave the question of the treatment of those already in office for future decision. The Bill, in the first place, proposes to transfer certain classes now in office from the operation of the present Superannuation Act to the operation of the Bill now before the House, and it proposes that new appointees or men who have not yet contributed anything to the service shall come in under the entirely new scheme of contributing to the fund out of their own salaries and having their contributions funded and capitalized at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, which fund will be available for the civil servant whenever he retires, or be payable to his family or representatives in case of death. My hon. friend asks me in what respect I now propose to amend the Bill. Representations were made from time to time that it might work harshly. For that reason, when it was brought up last session the Government consented to postpone the second reading, so that every possible case of hardship might be brought to its notice before the following session, feeling confident that all possible cases of hardship would be brought to their attention within that time. I may say, as regards such cases, that they are limited to those of the staff who have been contributing to the civil service superannuation fund for a shorter period than ten years. Various arguments have been advanced and carefully considered. The Bill, as it now stands in the hands of hon. members, provides that all those now in the service, but who have been contributing for less than ten years to the superannuation fund, shall come under the provisions of this Bill, and cease to fall under the provisions of the present Act. It was pointed out that such a provision would work hardship in various ways, and I am going to illustrate one case, which will explain the amendment I now propose. It happened that one officer in particular has been appointed to an office in the Militia Department under the Government of the old province of Canada. He was transferred to the civil service of Canada under the British North America Act, acquiring the same status as he held under the former Government; but by some series of accidents, legislation after legislation has affected him, so that although over thirty years have elapsed since he was appointed, he does not happen yet to have contributed to ten annual instalments required under the present Act in order to entitle him to an annuity. Other instances might perhaps be cited, and therefore, in order to prevent any hardship. I propose to submit an amendment to subsection "b" of section 2, in the following words:—

To strike out the words "who has been subject to such deductions for a period of less than ten years" and substitute therefor words which will make the clause read as follows:—"Every person now in the civil service, but who has not been in the civil service for ten years."

Mr. FOSTER. What is the meaning of that?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It means that this Bill shall not apply to any person who has been in the service for more than ten years. If he has been making less than ten years' deductions, but has been in the service for a longer period than ten years, this Bill will not apply, but he will continue under the provisions of the Superannuation Act. We need not discuss the phraseology at this moment—that is the object to be attained.

Mr. McNEILL. Suppose a man has been contributing for nine years, would this not apply to him?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If he has been in the service only nine years this Bill will apply to him; but if he has been in the service for a longer period, it is not proposed that this Bill shall affect him. Another amendment it is proposed to offer is this: It is claimed that under the present Superannuation Act, officers who have served less than ten years and contributed less than ten years, if they have not acquired vested rights at least, they have formed very great expectations that their positions would mature into vested rights at the expiration of the ten years of the service; and that, in the meantime, they have certain rights in the event of the Government choosing to retire them. Under the present Act, if the Government retires a civil servant who has served less than ten years, by reason of the abolition of his office or of infirmity of body or mind, the Government is permitted to pay to him, on retirement, a gratuity not exceeding one month's pay for each year of his service. But hon. gentlemen will see that this is a condition entirely dependent upon the will of the Government, there being no option in a civil servant to acquire and demand the gratuity under the clause referred to. It is proposed not to make it compulsory upon any officer who shall have served less than ten years and contributed less than ten years to come in under this Act. But in order to give him the benefit of what that class conceive to be the spirit of the Act, the option will be given to any in the service who have not paid ten years but have paid something, to withdraw from the service if they desire and be entitled, as a matter of right, to what is at present a gratuity, viz.: a month's pay for each year of service. These are the only changes in the Bill that are to be offered, except, perhaps, some of a formal character.

Now, I would submit to the House for a moment the working of the new method. My hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) says the Bill is essentially bad, but that a bad Bill may be improved. I am glad to get that much encouragement. This scheme, now being inaugurated, providing for a savings account out of the salary of the officer, is, in the first place, I think, eminently just to the people themselves who contribute the money. After this becomes law, no person hereafter appointed will become a charge upon the country, but will simply earn and be paid his earnings, with the exception of a certain amount reserved and funded for his own benefit. The public, therefore, will not be liable, as they have been in the past, to be burdened by the abuse of the system that has been so long in force. Under his proposed measure, the amount funded and carried to the credit of the officer is his from the moment it is withdrawn from his salary and put to his credit with the Government. It carries good interest. Some complain that we give too high a rate of interest.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The reservation is compulsory?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. That five per cent of his salary will be carried to the officer's credit and will bear five per cent per annum, compounded half-yearly. This money is his or his family's or his representatives and cannot be lost to him by those accidents that forfeit the benefits of the present Act to so many of the service. The working out of that scheme, will illustrate to some extent what I say, and will, perhaps, to some extent, commend it to the favour of my hon. friend from York. I have here a list showing the number of civil servants who have left the Post Office Department, inside and outside, in the 20 years preceding the 30th June, 1896. These figures cover the period when no such legislation as this was in contemplation and might be said to represent the workings of the present system. I have not the returns for other departments, but the Post Office Department, I think, represents about one-third of the service, and, if so, these figures will probably be accepted as fairly representing the working of the Act throughout the whole service. Well, Mr. Speaker, during the whole 20 years mentioned there have left the Post Office Department 842 officers. I mean that they have left the service from all possible causes, resignation, death, dismissal or any other possible cause.

Mr. FOSTER. Transfers?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, this does not include transfers. There are 842 who left the service of Canada in the 20 years I have mentioned, speaking of the inside and outside service of the Post Office Department. These 842 were entitled in greater or less degree to benefits under the Superannuation Act whilst they were alive or in office. Some of them being under the ten years provision, only took gratuities; those who had been in the service longer than ten years, were entitled to pensions.

Mr. FOSTER. Not those who died?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Of course not, a pension for the life of a dead man would not be a very valuable asset. Now I propose to point out wherein this present Act must have disappointed a large number of officers, or families of officers, who had contributed towards this fund. No matter whether the provision was adequate or inadequate, they contributed, and that contribution awakened expectations that they might be fortunate in sharing the benefits of the Act. Of the whole number of 842 that in one way or another severed their connection with the service, only 197 derived any benefits whatever under the Act. Of those 197, 162 were superannuated, and 35 retired. The rest, 481, retired, having served less than ten years. When I use the word "retired," I mean severed their connection from any possible cause. Of those who had served longer than ten years, and who, if they had survived, would have been entitled to the pension under ordinary circumstances, 164 failed to have any superannuation allowance. So that means, so far as these 842 civil servants are concerned, that 23 per cent alone got any benefit under the Act, and 77 per cent lost all benefit, either to themselves or to their families.

Mr. CLARKE. How much did those 77 per cent contribute?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot give the figures of their contributions. I suppose some of those 164 had contributed for more than ten years, so the hon. gentleman will see they had contributed substantially, and had passed the line which entitled them to superannuation under certain conditions, and yet they lost all benefits under the Act. Now it is believed that such a statute, that disappoints the fair expectations of three-fourths of the contributors, is not fair to them, and ought not to be allowed to continue. The Bill which it is proposed to substitute for that, provides for the establishment of a fund, and the working of this fund I now ask leave to illustrate. It will work in various ways. You can take an officer who has entered the service at $400 a year, and whose salary has gone up by annual increments of $50, until we will say, the 30th June, 1896, when the statutory increases ceased. I am taking now the worst case of hardship which can arise under the Act, men who, should this Act become law in a few days, have been in the service nine and a half years. We will say they entered at $400 a year, and have contributed under the provisions of the Act, first of all, one and a quarter per cent, and subsequently, two per cent, until their nine and a half years are completed, until their salary had become $800. Then we will suppose they pass out from that class and come in under the provisions of this Bill, and from this time forward they will be contributing their five per cent, and the Government will be contributing five per cent interest half-yearly. I give this illustration, which will perhaps cover a good many cases, and enable the House to decide, with the facts before them, how far this fairly takes the place of a pension. This schedule which I have in my hand, hon. gentlemen will observe, deals now with those actually in the service, the cases that may be prejudicially affected by the legislation, cases of officers who entered at $400. Suppose that they remain in the service 35 years, suppose we select as an age limit for men leaving the service, 65 years; how long, on the average, will those officers have served the public? That will depend, of course, upon when they entered. I am told, though this is not based upon actual examination, that clerks are now entering the service at a somewhat earlier age, as a rule, than formerly. Suppose they enter at an average of 30 years, then they will have served 35 years when they attain their 65th year. If, therefore, there are those in our service at the present time who are aged 30 when they entered the service—

Mr. FOSTER. I presume my hon. friend knows that it is now a provision of the Act that civil servants are not appointed if they are above 40.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Forty-five.

Mr. FOSTER. Forty-five—then I think that would make 30 an altogether too high an average.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It may. If so that will help my argument, but I shall give the House the benefit of both figures. My remarks have to do with those who are now in the service, who have spent from one to nine and a half years in the service. We will say that they all entered the service at an average of 30 years; the working of this Bill will put to their credit, when they attain their 65th year, $2,507.92; that is, beginning at $400 and going up by annual increments to $800. An officer of that class will have to his credit, should he be alive then, or to the credit of his family should he be dead, the sum of $2,507.92. Now if, in lieu of drawing that money in cash, which he or his representatives may draw, suppose that in lieu of taking a bulk sum, it suited his convenience better to purchase an annuity with it, the question is: What investment could he make in the way of an annuity? On data furnished to me, the last rates issued by the New York Life up to the 1st of January, 1897, and according to those rates calculated at a four per cent basis, the sum of $2,507.92 would purchase for a life at the age of 65 years—the expectation of life then is about 11 years—would purchase for that life an annuity of $291.06, and every officer that retires would get the $291.06 annuity, or have a fund wherewith to buy that annuity, based on the present rates of annuities, or he could have the money itself. If, instead of that, the present law were to continue in force, on a salary of $800 a year, the law would give him 35-50ths of his then salary, $800; while the present Act would give him $560 of a pension, or the fund he will draw would buy him a pension of only $291.06. In this case every person receives his money, there is no lottery about it. The Government offers that alternative as a better system than the one of chance, which is the fundamental principle of the present one. Not only so, but the present scheme provides for a man's family as well as provides for himself, should he survive.

Mr. DAVIN. How much, under the system the hon. gentleman wants to introduce, would a public servant receive at 65, who commenced at $400 and went up to $800?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Suppose he served twenty-five years, he would have to his credit $2,570.92.

Mr. DAVIN. What I ask is, what income would he have when he left the service, or would he only have a lump sum?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He can draw the principal. If he buys an income at 4 per cent, the rate at which annuities were sold, according to the scale adopted by the New York Life Company in January last, it would amount to $291.06. Thirty years is a rather high average as the time when men enter the service, and I propose to give the results on entering at 25 years. In that case the officer would serve forty years before he attained 65 years of age. On reaching 65 years of age he would have to his credit $3,439.99, which would buy him an annuity of $387.80, or $172.72 less than $560.52, which would be his allowance under the present Act. But under the present scheme an officer would get $387.87 per annum, whereas under the present Act only about one-fourth of them or less get any benefit.

Mr. CLARKE. What percentage of, say, one thousand men who enter the service would be in the service at the end of thirty-five years?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Under the proposed measure it is not necessary to remain thirty-five years to get any benefit. Suppose a man remained in the service only six months, there would be so much standing to his credit. Every year there would be his savings and 5 per cent added, and at any time he could, as a matter of right, demand the principal with the accretions. The deduction from salary is 5 per cent per annum. On each $100 the amount would be $2.50 at the end of each half year, and there would be added interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum.

Mr. FOSTER. Five per cent interest is the Government contribution, not, however, 5 per cent of the salary added.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend asked me sometime ago why I selected an officer receiving $800 yearly. I did so because I was endeavouring to take a class now in the service which would be most affected by the proposed scheme. Most of the officers entered at $400, until the law was changed. The cases of the greatest hardship would occur to men who are just attaining their tenth year. If a man entered the service on the 30th June, 1896, at a salary of $400, he would in ten years almost have reached $800.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose a man goes in at 25 years and dies at 50, or is superannuated, what would stand to his credit?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At the end of his twenty-fifth year there would be $1,210.96 standing to his credit.

Mr. FOSTER. What amount of annuity could he obtain?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not got the annuity table applicable.

Mr. FOSTER. It would be small enough.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Of course it would be small.

Mr. FOSTER. About $120. What would he obtain now as a superannuation allowance?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $400.

Mr. FOSTER. So the disparity is very marked.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes; but we cannot defend the scheme of the Superannuation Act.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has spoken of commencing at $400 and increasing to $800 by annual increments. I was not aware that annual increments were admitted.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not dealing with future appointees at present.

Mr. FOSTER. The Postmaster General is not giving the House the working out of his system. Suppose a man enters at a salary of $400 and remains twenty years and has still $400 a year?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will give my hon. friend a table that will deal with that. I was first dealing with those in the service, because the Government has felt it their duty to consider that question.

Mr. McNEILL. Are there any who enter the service at a higher salary than $400 ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The same rate will apply to them.

Mr. McNEILL. I am speaking of those who are deprived of it because they have not been ten years in the service. The hon. gentleman is referring to the fact that they entered at $400 and rose by annual increment up to a certain sum at the end of ten years. But they may enter at a very much larger sum than $400 and the hon. gentleman would see that that rule would be much more oppressive on those.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If a man entered at $800 the same table would apply.

Mr. McNEILL. The difficulty to my mind was that there are members of the service who have entered at a higher rate than $400, and if they have been in the service for nine years and are made subject to this provision it will affect them much more injuriously than it would those who entered at a lower rate.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That, of course, is a matter of argument, but the table I have given will apply to any salary.

Mr. McNEILL. Would the Postmaster General be willing to allow to those who have not been in the service the full ten years, to take the option either of remaining under the old system or coming under the new system ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am afraid I could hardly go that far. The Bill does give an option of the kind mentioned.

Mr. McNEILL. Not to those who have been less than ten years in the service.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It gives them the opportunity of the benefit of the gratuity if they desire to sever their connection with the service.

Mr. McNEILL. If the hon. Postmaster General would go as far as I have mentioned, I think it would remove difficulties from the minds of a great many.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is a question which may fairly be argued, and I have no doubt these arguments will be presented, and will receive, I am sure, every consideration, but I am not able to say anything further on that subject. I will now proceed to deal with the case of the new appointees, and I shall give a table of accumulations on a salary, say of $100. The table that I shall now quote from shows the state of a fund derived from a salary of $100, this fund being made up of half-yearly contributions, by deductions from the salary at the rate of 5 per cent per annum with interest of 5 per cent per annum compounded half-yearly. Now, $5 a year deducted from a salary of $100 and treated in the way I have mentioned, will at the expiry of 35 years amount to $474.52. Suppose the officer has $1,000 a year instead of $100. there will be to his credit when he is 65 years of age $4,745.20, and if instead of accepting that bulk sum he prefers to invest it in an annuity on the terms I have mentioned, he will be able to purchase an annuity for himself of $534.32. The officer drawing $1,000 a year under the present law would be entitled to retirement after 35 years on a pension of $700 a year, so that the difference between the working of this Bill if it becomes law, and the present Act, is, that under the present Act he would get $700 a year if he lives and his family nothing if he dies; under this Act he would get a bulk sum of $4,745.20, which would buy him an annuity of $534.32.

Mr. FOSTER. That is coming in at the age of thirty years ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. That is about $163 less than the pension under the present Act. Supposing the officer comes in at the age of 25 and serves forty years, when he attains the age of 65 there will be to this credit $6,361. and if he chooses to buy an annuity that amount will purchase him an annuity of $716.32 which is a shade over what the law gives him to-day. Every officer in that class will under that scheme get a capital sum which will be his own or that of his family, or an annuity if he chooses to buy one on these terms which will be greater than the pension under the present Act. I mention these features of the working of the Bill so that hon. members will see that the provision, taking the average of life, is a fairly good one for the benefit of the members of the service. There is little more for me to add except to say that the Bill contains a clause making it optional for those who have served more than ten years to come under the new Bill, provided they signify that choice within three months. The amendment which it is proposed to offer to subsection "b" is as follows :—

Every person now in the civil service who has been subject to such deductions for a lesser period than ten years may, at his option (to be declared in writing, signed by him or his duly authorized agent, and deposited in the office of the Secretary of State within three months from the passage of this Act) retire from said service, and thereupon shall be entitled to be paid a gratuity amounting to one month's pay for each year of his service.

Mr. CLARKE. What advantage would it be to those who have been over them years in the service to take advantage of this option ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That will be for them to determine. I know of one gentleman who asked me if he could come in under it. He is a relative of a former colleague of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. May be, he is a little afraid of his position.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not that.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish my hon. friend would anticipate an objection, and give us his justification; that is, why those who have been so unfortunate as to have been less than ten years in the service should be discriminated against—why, for instance, the arbitrary limit of ten years' service should be taken as the division between the old and the new.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think my hon. friend has scarcely used an apt expression when he asks why those who have served less than ten years should be discriminated against. We are not discriminating. We are leaving each class in the enjoyment of their rights. Those who have served over ten years have certain rights, and those who have served and contributed for less than ten years have different rights. Those who have contributed for less than ten years have not derived a vested interest, they have not a legal right to a pension. The only thing that can be argued is that if the Government desire to retire them from the service within the ten years for certain named reasons, they may be so retired, and in that event, they shall receive a gratuity.

Mr. FOSTER. There is more than that, is there not?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not according to the opinion of the late Minister of Justice.

Mr. FOSTER. Because they are travelling continually to the time when the right arises.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are travelling towards it, but they have not crossed the line. Until they cross the line, they have acquired no legal right, and therefore I think we can hardly use the term discriminate. We are leaving each class in the full enjoyment of their rights; and more than that, as regards the class to whom my hon. friend refers, we are giving them benefits and options which they at present do not enjoy. Further, we are making the Bill retroactive, so far as they are concerned, and giving them the benefit of this 5 per cent, ante-dating it, and going back to the nine years and a half or less that they have been in the service. So that the Bill gives them benefits in that respect, instead of discriminating against them.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose a clerk, after having been ten or fifteen or twenty years in the service, is guilty of gross misconduct, and is dismissed, he has the absolute right to all the benefit of his fund and the Government's accretion to it of 5 per cent interest.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not proposed to deprive him of his legal rights, whatever his misconduct may be.

It must be dealt with in some other way, if there is another way of dealing with it.

Mr. FOSTER. There would not be, unless it were a criminal proceeding.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that this Bill will have two results. The Postmaster General is dealing more generously with those civil servants from whose salaries a certain amount is deducted every year and invested for them, than he is with the poor labouring man who puts his money in the post office savings bank, for he is allowing 5 per cent in the one case and only 2½ per cent in the other case.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Which way does the hon. gentleman wish us to move?

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. gentleman ought at least to give the labouring man as much consideration as the man in the civil service who receives a larger salary and has much shorter hours to work. The other feature of this Bill that attracts my attention is that it destroys the stability of the service. There will be no stimulus to the ambition of men who come into the service who may be superannuated at any time at the whim of a Minister.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is nothing in the Bill changing the status.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a good deal in the Bill that changes. The Government can say to a man, "At any time you leave the service we will give you what money has been retained out of your salary, with 5 per cent interest upon it, and when we have given you that, no more and no less, we have done you no injustice."

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think that is not the correct view to take of the matter. Whatever the position is to-day between the Government and the civil service continues just the same—I mean as respects the tenure of office.

Mr. SPROULE. Will it not be possible at any time, without any such cause as would be considered a justifiable cause to-day, to drop a man from the service without it being regarded as an injustice to him, so long as the Government paid him back the money he has contributed to the fund, with interest at 5 per cent?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are perhaps a few members of the civil service to-day whom it would be both to their own interest and to the public interest to retire; yet it may not be fair to the public to retire them, because it would mean paying them a large annuity; and if this measure does enable the Government to weed out men who have survived their usefulness, then it is in the public interest that it should be passed.

Mr. SPROULE. I admit that ; but the fraction of such men that would be weeded out would be comparatively small if it were done in the interest of the country and not at the whim of the Government for the time being. But the same thing applies equally to a large number of men who have not survived their usefulness, and whose stability in the service and ambition to do their best in it are destroyed. There is one feature of the Bill that I do not quite understand. Do I understand that the Government keep back 5 per cent of the salary from year to year, and allow 5 per cent interest on that, or do they add 5 per cent of the amount of the salary in addition ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, it is interest only.

Mr. SPROULE. A man only gets interest on the amount retained out of his salary ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, and on the interest already to his credit.

Mr. SPROULE. That is, compound interest ? That is as I understood it.

Mr. McNEILL. I would urge the Postmaster General to regard this measure from the point of view from which it must be regarded by those who have been in the service less than ten years. It seems to me that we are introducing a very bad and a very dangerous precedent when we make an Act of this kind retroactive. I do not think we have any right to alter the status of those who entered the service under a different condition of things and a perfectly different understanding. I have already expressed the view more than once in this House, but I cannot help repeating that it does seem to me that if there be one thing more than another which the Government of Canada, whatever Government it may be, ought to determine, it is this, that they will maintain good faith with those who entered their service, trusting to their good faith ; and I do not think we have any right to deal as we are dealing with these men who have been less than ten years in the service. If my hon. friend would give such persons the option of coming in under this new Act or remaining in the position in which they are, it seems to me he would be doing what is just and right. Anything less than that seems to me unjust and unworthy of this country. I do not suppose that after all it would make a very great difference in the cost, but the question of cost ought not to have weight in a matter of his kind. If it be true that we induced these people to come into our service on a certain understanding, we have no right whatever to violate that understanding, no matter what the cost may be of adhering to it. That is my view, and I think it would be very desirable that my hon. friend should allow these civil servants the same option that he allows those who have been in the service ten years.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am very glad indeed that the Government have undertaken to abolish the superannuation system which has existed in this country for some 26 or 27 years. I was rather surprised at some questions that were put from the other side of the House, particularly one by the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster), and also by my hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. McNeill). They appear to think that those who have not served a period of ten years are discriminated against by this Bill in a manner in which they are not discriminated against by the present law. The present law does not provide at all for the superannuation of any man until he has been more than ten years in the service. If he is retired before he has served ten years, he is only entitled to a gratuity. The law was grossly abused in past years, because there are on the list no less than 53 who were superannuated in violation of the law. In some cases where they had only served three to four years, hon. gentlemen opposite added years to their time so as to bring them under the application of the Act.

Mr. FOSTER. Were hon. gentlemen on this side the only sinners in that respect ?

Mr. McMULLEN. If the hon. gentleman will cite a case in which the Mackenzie Government violated the law, I shall be very willing to admit it. I have here a list of forty names of persons who were superannuated in violation of the Act by hon. gentlemen opposite—men who had not served ten years, but to whose time of service years were added in order to bring them under the application of the Act. There are men on the superannuation list to-day who did not serve over three years and are still drawing pensions. The fact is that from the very inception of the Act down to the time hon. gentlemen opposite left office, it was grossly abused for party ends. It drew upon the resources of this country to an enormous extent. Had it been continued in force as at first outlined, when introduced in 1871 by Sir Francis Hincks, the deduction from the salaries of civil servants would have been four per cent, when the salaries were $600 and over, and 2½ per cent when less than that figure. During the first three years there was a very considerable sum to the credit of the fund ; but just previous to the election of 1874, the then Finance Minister, Sir Leonard Tilley, brought in an amendment. I presume that the service had complained of the heavy deductions of four and two and a half per cent, and no doubt he and his colleagues thought it would be very popular in the service to lower the deductions. I believe there were representations made that the deductions were excessive, and Sir Leonard Tilley introduced a Bill cutting them down one-half. The result was that so many were added to the list that the very first year after the passing of this Bill, it showed a considerable loss. The amount paid in the first year after these deductions took place was $34,620.18, and the amount paid out $64,642.94. In this way, the Act at once became a drain upon the country's resources. Then every year parties were removed from the civil service in order to make room for others, to such an extent, that that practice became one of the greatest abuses to which the Act was subjected. Year after year very large additions were made to the list of superannuated officers, so that many of these men are on the list to-day and drawing pensions who never should have been put on there at all. If the Government had, in the inception of the scheme, adopted the practice followed by England of having the superannuation system managed by a committee of the civil service, the country would never have been called on to suffer the enormous loss it has had to pay. The then Government, however, thought it better to keep the application of the Act under their own control, with the result that large additions were made to the superannuation list, and we have had to face an enormous loss. The entire sum contributed by all the civil servants—whether those that participated in the advantages of the fund or those who were dismissed from the service, or those who died in the service—up to the present, including this year, amounts to $1,422,977.95, and the gross sum paid out altogether amounts to $4,655,133.39, showing a net loss in twenty-six years of $3,232,055. It is time that an Act which has drawn to such an extent upon the resources of the people should be repealed. It is not necessary that I should detain the House at a great length in exposing the abuses of the Act. Hon. gentlemen opposite would hardly like to listen to such a statement. But unquestionably the Act was very badly abused. Years were added to men's time as hush money to cause them to be satisfied to accept superannuation. Take for instance, the case of the postmaster of Montreal. He had served sixteen and a half years and had drawn a salary of $4,000 a year during that time. Another man was very anxious to get the office, and, in order to induce Mr. Lamothe to retire, the Government added eight and one-half years to his time of service. This they did under a clause providing that if, when a man entered the civil service he was possessed of technical knowledge, the Government might add years not exceeding ten to the term of service on his retirement. What technical information had Mr. Lamothe as to the duties of postmaster before he entered upon that office? None at all. But they made his term of service for superannuation twenty-five years instead of sixteen and a half years, thus entitling him to draw twenty-five-fiftieths of his salary of $4,000, or $2,000; and Mr. Dansereau was appointed, and he now draws $4,000 a year. I could give many other cases of men who have been thus retired with years added to their term of service, the result being an enormous amount of public money squandered. The average amount contributed annually by the civil servants to the superannuation fund was $14.10, not sufficient to buy a life policy for more than $500. As I have often said before, the civil service are a well paid class and they should be an intelligent class, and I believe they are. I am ready to accept the statement of the Postmaster General—but I must say that it is not at all complimentary to them—that it is absolutely necessary on the part of this Dominion that we should in this way provide a retiring fund by taking 5 per cent from the salaries of civil servants and allowing it to accumulate until the beneficiaries are sixty or sixty-five years of age. One would suppose that the civil servants were called upon to live almost up to their salaries. I do not think that is the case. They have no right to put on style in excess of other people throughout the country. Take, for instance, the bankers, take the commercial men, in all lines, take the teachers—these men do not get as high salaries as do the civil servants; and yet many of them manage to have a comfortable sum to their credit before it is necessary for them to retire. I contend that the civil servants, who are so well paid, should be required to take care of their funds in their own interest.

The one redeeming feature of this Bill is that it completely cuts off a drain upon the resources of the Dominion. After the passing of this Act, the country will not be asked to contribute a dollar, except in the way of a high rate of interest. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) objects to this rate of 5 per cent in view of the fact that depositors in the post office savings bank are paid only two and one-half per cent. I believe there is some force in that observation. I would like to see the rate of interest under this Bill cut down, as I do not see why we should give so high a rate. When we get into committee, we can discuss that point. I would like to see a provision in the Bill that the money is to be held by the Government as a guarantee of good faith and efficient service on the part of these officers. Unless they faithfully and honestly discharge the duties devolving upon them, they should not have the right to demand this money. In many cases security is taken for good conduct; but in the majority of cases security is not taken. If a civil servant acts dishonestly, we should have the right to say that he shall not be entitled to draw this money that is deducted from his salary.

Now, there is another provision to which I wish to draw the attention of the House, and that is the amount of money we have lost by this system of adding years to the time of service. There are only twenty names upon the present retired list of men who were retired by the Governments previous to the time that hon. gentlemen opposite last came into power. It is true that the present Government have superannuated some since they obtained office. I do not find fault with that, for they found the Superannuation Act upon the Statute-book, and they must administer it as long as it is the law of the country. But I would ask my hon. friend the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster) to point out, if he can, a single case in which a man has been retired and another appointed in his place, the retired man having years added to his term of service. There is, I believe, one such case, the Chairman of the Land Board at Winnipeg. I understand that there was some condition made by hon. gentlemen opposite when this gentleman's salary was reduced from $5,000 to $4,000 that, in the case of his retirement, some years would be added to his term of service. Under the Superannuation Act, a civil servant had a right, on being retired, to receive a certain amount. He could claim that, and the Exchequer Court would give it to him. The country did not wish to violate the terms of a contract upon which it had entered. A civil servant, after serving ten years, was entitled to an allowance. But, though the country was obliged to give them a retiring allowance, it was not obliged to add years to their term of service in order to increase the allowance. By this system of adding years to their terms of service, hon. gentlemen opposite actually lost to the country $97,428.

Within a few dollars of $100,000 has been paid out virtually as hush money in order to induce men quietly to accept their retiring allowance, and to allow others to take their places. Now in the face of all these abuses, in face of the manner in which this Act has been administered, I am rejoiced to know that the Government have brought in the Bill that is now before the House, and that it will put an end to a system that has so far drawn from the resources of the people of this country about $3,250,000, for which they have had no return. This is one of the promises the Government made to the people of this country, and I am glad to find they are implementing that promise. The hon. the Postmaster General says that a retiring fund is necessary. As I said before, I believe if we had an intelligent class of civil servants, and I hope we have, it would be better if those servants were to realize that when approaching the evening of their days, they should make provision themselves for it. When superannuations were introduced in England years ago, there was no such cheap system of life insurance as we have to-day, there was nothing of that kind in force when superannuations were inaugurated in Canada in 1871, and the advantages of life insurance at low rates were not then obtainable. I think that civil servants should take advantage of these insurance companies, and contribute annual sums the same as others do, and they ought to have intelligence enough to keep up their payments, and thus provide for their old age, and if they had done that, they would not have to come here and ask the country to provide for them. I quite agree with the Postmaster General that a great many men in the service who have served faithfully for many years, were in a certain sense deprived of the moneys that justly belonged to them. Of course every servant in the civil service was entitled to his salary, but though there were many thoroughly efficient servants that died in the service and got nothing at all, I believe that in a great many cases, in the majority of cases, it was those who were inefficient, the drones I may say, that were superannuated. There were other cases where good and efficient servants were superannuated in order to make room for others. That abuse of the Act, I earnestly hope, will cease; at least I am glad to know that from the moment this Act becomes law, the country will not be called upon to pay one cent for the superannuation of civil servants, but will only have to pay back to them the money they have contributed with five per cent interest. Now, Sir, I think if there is any member in this House that deserves credit for the abolition of this Act, I claim to be that man. I assailed the superannuation system from the time I came into this House, I never allowed a single session to pass without exposing the manner in which it was abused, and by which the people's money was drained away, year after year. I spent more time in exposing the abuses of that Act than any other person in this House, and I feel proud of what I have done. If I never accomplished anything else in my parliamentary life than to contribute to the abolition of that system, I should feel satisfied in the knowledge that I had done something to free this country from the burden to which it has been subjected by the unjust operation of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. DAVIN. Could the Postmaster General tell me how many officers have entered the civil service between the years 1888 and 1896?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Act will date from the 1st of July, 1898.

Mr. DAVIN. I want to know how many entered during the last ten years up to 1896?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I could not say exactly. When a calculation was made some months ago, it was about 1,000. But every day there are some passing over into the other class.

Mr. DAVIN. Whether the policy that will be inaugurated by this Act is a good one or not, time will show. As for those who entered the service subsequent to the passing of this Act, they can have nothing whatever to complain of, they enter the service with their eyes open. But it may turn out to be the case that in order to get men to come into the service under the conditions of this Bill, you will have to pay larger salaries than are paid at the present time. There is a fallacy running through a good deal of argumentation against the old Civil Service Act, although some of that argumentation is sound. I was opposed myself to the old Civil Service Act, and to its administration. I am opposed to the facile superannuation of men who are in the prime of life, and able to serve the country. But I am sorry to say that neither party can throw a stone at the other in regard to offences on that score. But let nobody suppose that all the argumentation, such for instance, as we have heard lately from the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), is sound. He talks as if this superannuation was not part of the inducement held out to men to enter the service and, when in the service, to serve the country well. The remuneration he receives is not altogether the nominal sum he is paid as a salary; an important part of his remuneration is that which he receives under the Superannuation Act. But as I say, I am not going to antagonize the principle of this Bill.

As regards officers who entered the service with their eyes open, they have nothing to complain of. But take the persons affected by subsection "b" of section 2, I hold that in their case the Government are clearly breaking faith with a certain number of members of the civil service, apparently a small number, as the Postmaster General said they would not exceed 1,000. In order to save the amount of money that would be saved in regard to those thousand officers, is it desirable that there should be an Act placed on the Statute-book which a considerable number of persons outside or inside the service will feel was a formal breach of faith with certain persons on the part of the Government of Canada. The reason I asked the Postmaster General how many civil servants have come in during the eight years from 1888 to 1896 was that from the moment hon. gentlemen opposite came into power it was known they intended to bring in such a Bill, and therefore I would not feel that any such breach of faith had taken place between parties entering the service after June, 1896. When we go into committee I intend to make a suggestion to the Postmaster General in regard to that subsection, because I hold that in a young country like this we cannot be too chary about the honour of Government and Parliament. In Canada the only road to distinction is the political road, and it is most important that that road should be paved with honour and that we should feel jealous of our honour. With regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for North Wellington, I desire to show him that all the faults in regard to superannuation do not lie at the door of the Conservative party. I give him the following data:—

Mr. McMULLEN. If the hon. gentleman will take those officers he has pointed out as having been retired and to whose terms ten years were added as hush money, and will then give the list of those put in their places, I shall be satisfied.

Mr. DAVIN. I thought the hon. gentleman was going to ask a question.

Mr. McMULLEN. My complaint was that the Superannuation Act was used for the purpose of securing the retirement of men from the service, and years were added to their terms of service in order to secure their consent. The Act provides that this may be done, but it does not say that they shall be entitled to additional years. The point I made was that men without possessing technical knowledge had years added to their term of service which had the effect of hush money. The hon. gentleman should give a list of those put in their places and were possessed of technical knowledge.

Mr. DAVIN. It is quite clear these few facts I submitted have gone home. The hon. member for North Wellington is quite excited. He assumes that every time years were added by the Conservatives there were some sinister motives actuating them, but when the godly Grits added ten years it was a just and righteous act to do so. In committee I shall appeal to the Postmaster General to amend the second clause. As regards the general principle of the Act, what it amounted to was this, that for men of the same talent a less remuneration practically will be given under this Bill. Whether the Government will always be able, in the case of skilled men, to get their services for the same nominal salary, is exceedingly doubtful, and it may be found, under this system, that we will pay as much as under the old Superannuation Act.

Mr. FOSTER. I have a few remarks to offer on this Bill, and I find it really impossible to close before six o'clock.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the Postmaster General has explained the modifications which he proposes to make in his Bill as introduced and I must confess to some disappointment at the small measure of betterment which he has announced by way of amendment. The interview in the newspaper may have been somewhat aside from the actualities of the case, but certainly the tenor of the report of the interview between the leader of the Government and the members of the civil service who waited upon him, was to the effect that the distinction between under ten-year men, and those who had been in the service and paid the abatement for more than ten years was to be done away with. It seems, however, that that was an untrue representation of the results of the interview, or else that the Postmaster General has not acceded to the suggestions made and which I understood had been accepted by the right hon. the Prime Minister. The report of the interview probably was wrong. Now, in the first place, I want to say that if the Postmaster General takes this measure as a reform measure, and if his fidus achates takes it also as a measure of great reform and distributes the merits impartially, though largely to himself and in a lesser degree to the Postmaster General; I think it just as well that they should inform the House as to the whole extent of the reform. Now, they are not reforming the old Superannuation Act by any means, they are not reforming the Act as it was passed in 1870. They are reforming an altogether different Act, they are reforming an Act which has been already reformed and reformed in most essential particulars. This Bill introduced by the Postmaster General does not repeal the Civil Service Insurance Act, nor does it repeal the betterments that were made in the Civil Service Act in 1893, when the Acts were passed amending the Superannuation Acts and providing for a system of civil service insurance. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) seems to think that he has proved his case against the Superannuation Act when he has pointed out what he calls the abuses of that Act. I do not think that logically or practically he will get very far on that ground. He will have to prove something else than that abuses exist in a measure in order to justify the entire abolition of the measure, because abuses may be reformed whilst the principle of the measure may be sound. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), too, has confined his efforts in past years not so much to an attack upon the Superannuation Act, as to attack upon his opponents because of alleged abuses in the administration of that Act. Now, Sir, I take it that if you go back before 1879, you will find signal instances of what my friend (Mr. McMullen) is pleased to call gross abuses. My hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) read a number of them, and I might also quote numerous instances of very gross abuses of the Superannuation Act from 1873 to 1878, both years inclusive. Abuses have also taken place from 1878 up to the present time. I suppose there is scarcely any administration of an Act upon the Statute-book in which you cannot point out abuses, but I beg leave to say that for the last ten years the Superannuation Act has been, so far as the late Government and present Opposition is concerned, very carefully and very conservatively administered, and I am quite willing that these ten years' history of the administration of that Act should be thoroughly gone into, and if you like that it may be compared with the administration of the same Act during the two years just passed. But, that is aside from the question. Now, Sir, what was the great burden of the civil service and the great burden of the superannuation system? It was due to two things. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has pointed out one. When the Superannuation Act first became law a certain percentage of abatement was fixed as what was necessary in order to make the Act, under fair administration, self-sustaining or nearly so. Who was it changed that? After a few years a sentiment arose in some way or other; Parliament was responsible for the change and Parliament authorized the change. The Superannuation abatement was reduced below the self-sustaining basis, and I do not care how conservatively you had administered the Superannuation Act from that time, on that basis of abatement it could not be self-sustaining. Parliament reduced the percentage of abatement below what was actually necessary for the cost. The great reason for the cost of the civil service was not in what you may call its higher grades. I do not think any sensible man in this House, looking over the history of executive administrations, will come to the conclusion that the higher officials in the civil service have been paid too high salaries. Take our Deputy Ministers, our controllers, those men who have had to work up to their high positions, and who hold responsible and important positions; no man on either side of this House will contend that, either comparatively or absolutely, these men are paid too highly for the work they do. The burden of the civil service was due to the fact that for that class of work, which was simply writers' or clerks' work, which could have been done, just as effectively, for from $300 to $600 per year, has been paid for at the rate of from $400 to $1,000 per year. When a man entered the service as a third-class clerk at $400 a year, he did not rest, if he remained in the service, until he reached the maximum, which was $1,000, while doing the very same work. The result was that this country was paying men $1,000 each for doing simply writers' or clerks' work, which could have been just as well or better done by young men and young women for from $300 to $600 a year. During the time of the last Government, while I was in the Government, though I take no extra credit for it, these two burdens were entirely removed from the service, as far as legislation could remove them. In what way? In the first place, the Superannuation Act was amended by placing the future service on a strictly self-sustaining basis. The percentage of abatement was raised from 1½ to 3 per cent on salaries below $600, and from 2 per cent to 3½ per cent on $600 or over; and the limit of age beyond which no person could be admitted to the civil service and the superannuation list as well, was fixed at forty-five years. This system, calculated on an actuarial basis by Mr. Fitzgerald, the superintendent of insurance, was brought down to this Parliament with the assertion, which has been proved and which will remain proved so long as that system is carried out, that under these conditions the civil service would be self-supporting, and not in any way a burden upon the people of this country. So that, after that amendment was passed, the civil service that came into operation from that time, and so long as no change was made, would not have cost the country one cent. You would have had all the advantages derivable from a superannuation system, and the country would not have paid anything for its maintenance. Can we not on either side of the House fairly agree to that? When hon. gentlemen talk about reforming a tremendous abuse, it is just as well to let the House know what they are reforming. They are not reforming that part of the service, because that is no longer an abuse. To-day half the civil service on the hill, if I mistake not—I mean all under ten years of service—have come under that system; and in the course of a very few years the civil service would have been almost entirely renovated, and would have ceased to be a burden on the country. What else was done? Recognizing the fact that this system of third-class clerkships, with salaries going up to $1,000 a year, constituted the real burden of the civil service, I introduced an amendment doing away with third-class clerks; and this class was not to be admitted to the present, no third-class clerk has been appointed. An arrangement was made for a class of writers, to take the place of third-class clerks, and to be paid from $300 to $600, with increases of from $30 per year; and this class were not to be admitted to superannuation at all, and were consequently no burden upon the superannuation fund of this country. I thought it necessary that we should see exactly what the civil service system and the superannuation system are to-day, when you come to consider this new legislation. With regard to the superannuation scheme, it was felt that there was a lardship in respect to the official dying in harness and leaving nothing for his family. How was that met? It was met in this way. We introduced an insurance system, which was to be carried out by the Insurance and Finance Department at Ottawa without any cost to the country at all. We simply said that the Government would invest the money on the basis of 6 per cent interest, and would allow the civil service to insure themselves for not less than $1,000 and not more than $2,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What do you mean by a 6 per cent basis?

Mr. FOSTER. The tables were calculated on a basis of 6 per cent investment for the insurance funds. So that under the new plan the civil servant, if he lived, would have superannuation, and he would also have the cheapest form of insurance; and to both of these the whole contribution of the country was simply the payment of 6 per cent on the moneys paid in under the insurance part of the system.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Compounded?

Mr. FOSTER. No, it is not a compounding. Take an insurance society, it fixes its rates on the basis of a certain amount of interest which its investments will carry. In this case the interest was put upon a 6 per cent basis, the Government being responsible for that rate on whatever was in hand.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). It would be compounded practically.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, it would. The Government added the interest at the end of each half-year. Now, Sir, let time do its work, and in the course of a very few years the civil service would have been on an entirely self-supporting basis, so far as superannuation was concerned, because the abatement was founded actually on what was necessary to carry the system. To this superannuation system would have been added a cheap insurance system, to which the Government gave that small contribution of the difference between 6 per cent on the money invested and whatever rate the Government considered the current rate for its loans. With that we got the advantages of a superannuation system and a stable civil service system. Now, what are hon. gentlemen opposite doing?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) say what the deductions amounted to?

Mr. FOSTER. Under the terms of my Bill, which became law, instead of being 1½ on $600 and under, as under the previous law, they were 3; and instead of 2 on all over $600, they were 3½.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Would that have bought an annuity equal to the former provision under the Act?

Mr. FOSTER. It was not intended to buy an annuity. It was a superannuation system pure and simple. The only difference between it and the one that preceded it was that under the old superannuation, the Government had to carry it largely, while, under this, it was self-sustaining.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It took 6 per cent to do it.

Mr. FOSTER. I am afraid I cannot get my hon. friend (Mr. Mulock) to separate the two—the superannuation system and the insurance system. The hon. gentleman has dilated on the fact that under the superannuation system many got nothing, while under his annuity system, every man gets his own money at 5 per cent compounded half-yearly instead of an annuity. There was a certain force in that. But the superannuation system was not meant for an insurance system—it was meant for just what it said, and just the same as the English system upon which it was based. To meet the difficulty that has been pointed out, the Government added to the superannuation system an insurance system, and this insurance system was available to those who entered under increased rates. The investment was made at 6 per cent, and that carried the insurance at very low rates. The civil servant got his insurance at the cheapest possible rate, because all costs of management were eliminated, and the investment received a clean, straight and steady 6 per cent interest.

Now, there are some things I do not like in the hon. gentleman's Bill, some things which strike at what I consider the root of the whole matter. What I have said has simply been to clear away from the minds of hon. members and of the people generally misunderstandings as to what it is that hon. gentlemen are reforming and what it is that was not left for them to reform but had already been treated, as I have explained. The hon. gentleman proposes to sweep away the superannuation system entirely. No—not at once, for even he acknowledges vested rights. He says, with reference to civil servants who have paid the superannuation fees for more than ten years, they cannot be interfered with. Except with their own volition, this Act has nothing to do with. So that, for that part of the civil service, no change is brought about by this Bill. Where does the hon. gentleman commence his change? He commences it at the magic number of 10 years. The man who has paid his superannuation fees for 10 years and has been in the service that long keeps his privileges; but the man who happens to have paid his superannuation fee for nine and a half years loses the privilege which he was supposed to have under the Act. The Postmaster General says: No, we do not take from him anything that he had before; we are quite willing to give him his gratuity if he wants it. But, in order to get his gratuity, he must leave the service, he must leave the place he has fitted himself for and where he has passed 7, 8 or 9 years, and where he has become almost unfit for anything else. He could retire and take his gratuity of one month's pay for each year's service, and find out how to make a living for himself, if he pleases. But when a young man entered the civil service of Canada under this law and under the practice of 25 years, what did he have? He had not only before him the fact that if, at any time during the ten years of service, he retired, he would get a gratuity, but, if he remained for more than 10 years, he became eligible for superannuation. That the Postmaster General does away with entirely. Now, what reason or justice is there in making this dividing line at 10 years, so that if a man has been in the service for only a month more than 10 years, his privileges will be maintained, but if he has been there for only half a year less than 10 years, he is to be deprived of his vested interests in this respect. I do not think there is any ground of reason or justice which can be given for making that arbitrary distinction, and I think it is an arbitrary distinction.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was there not the same arbitrary distinction in the old Act? You could not superannuate a man unless he had served 10 years?

Mr. FOSTER. Quite true. But a man who was working up to his 10 years had this within his power of achievement, simply by doing his duty honourably and remaining in the service for 10 years. That was something to be worked for. A man has what he eats every day, but he is also laying by something which he may eat when he cannot earn; and it would be arbitrary to step in and by merely making a division line at the magic number of 10 years, take away his right to provision for old age. That is the difference between the two, and it was not a difference that was made in the old Act. There was not a dividing line which prevented a man getting that for which he was working if he stayed 10 years in the service and pleased his employers.

I think that one mistake made by the hon. gentleman and also by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is in assuming that the Superannuation Act is meant simply for the benefit of the civil service employee. That was not the reason for which the Superannuation Act was passed, but it was in the interest of the country. This is well shown in the report of the Civil Service Commission of 1892, under section 6, which says :

At the time the Act was placed on the Statute-book, in 1870, it was evidently the idea of Parliament that superannuation was entirely in the interest of the state, as will be witnessed from the preamble :

"Whereas, for better ensuring the efficiency and economy of the civil service of Canada, it is expedient to provide for the retirement therefrom on equitable terms of persons who from age or infirmity cannot properly perform the duties assigned to them."

I make bold to say that in Great Britain, in the United States and in this country the Civil Service Acts are based upon that primary idea that it is done for the benefit of the state, and not solely or primarily for the benefit of the individual—though I believe it is for the benefit of both. I am not going to prolong the discussion upon that. The law being accepted, and being the practice for 25 or 26 years, the young man who looked to the civil service of Canada looked to it in the light of the legal enactment and practice; and, having chosen that for his career, went into it with the idea that Parliament would not break faith with him. And I think that Parliament should not break faith with any, as my hon. friend is preserving the vested interests of those who paid for 10 years. I have here a statement of the clerks under 10 years' service now paying into the superannuation fund. I find that the total number is 1,173, and that about 540 of these are in fund No. 2 and self-supporting. That is, of all the clerks under ten years of superannuation payment in the civil service, one-half at present are self-supporting, as being under No. 2 Superannuation Act, and consequently the discrimination has to be made only against about 630. Now, when you save the vested interest of all these who have paid more than ten years, when you do not interfere with any of the 540 that are on plan No. 2 and self-supporting, because they are not a detriment to the public funds, it is but a small thing in comparison with the breaking faith by this Government with the people of this country, that you should make an exception of the other 600 or so who have not paid up to ten years' superannuation and yet who are upon the old or No. 1 system. So that when you come to get down to the facts of the case, the number that are the exception is small indeed, and that makes the injustice all the greater. What you ought to do is simply, if you are going to make this rule, make it for the whole service more than ten years as well as less; or if you are going to keep vested rights in one instance, keep them in the other and the cost will be very small to this country and be amply repaid by the very fact of keeping faith and acting according to the legal and certainly the moral spirit of the past legislation of twenty-five or thirty years.

I have made notes of several points which I am not going to amplify, but there are one or two which I wish to speak about in particular. What is this going to do? In the first place, you take a civil servant and you look only to his own welfare, because you are not looking for any benefit to the state at all, but are making legislation which compels that civil servant to invest his surplus as you say and not as he thinks best. I do not believe that that is right unless we are doing it in some form of a civil service superannuation, which bears its attendant great benefit. You are giving no great benefit to this young man. You simply pay him 5 per cent on the money you order him to invest in a certain way. That is, he has $40 or $50 more than he requires to live upon, and which he might want to invest in insurance or in some other way, which appears to him to be the better way, but he is estopped from doing so because the Government steps in and says: You must put this in our hands, and we will pay you 5 per cent on it. Unless there is some collateral benefit for the country, it does seem to me that you have no right to interfere with the manner in which a young man in the service shall invest the little surplus he has.

More than that, what are you doing? To-day the Minister, beset as he is and as he will be in every Government—and especially in this, on account of the party having been out of power for eighteen years, and consequently having a great many followers hungry for what they call the rights which belong to the victorious party—the Minister surely has all he can do to withstand the pressure at present, but what a tower of defence he has now. An insistent supporter comes to him and says: Mr. Postmaster General, I want to get a man into the post office here. The Postmaster General says, the office is full and I have no place for him. The insistent supporter replies: Dismiss that rampant Tory and put in my man, who is a good supporter of the party.

Mr. McMILLAN. That was your past experience.

Mr. FOSTER. I may frankly say that I have had just that experience, not often, but I have had it, and I do not think I am a rara avis in that respect. The insistent supporter says: Dismiss this man and put mine in his place; the one you dismiss will be a Tory and the one you will put in will be a good Liberal, who will do the work just as well as the other. What reply has the Minister? I cannot do that without facing, first, the Council, and then Parliament and putting a burden on the finances of the country, and having to make good my action before Parliament. That is a strong tower of defence, and the insistent supporter backs down and out, and says: Very well, give me a lien on the first vacancy, and the first poor fellow who dies or gets so sick that he cannot do the work and has to go, let me put my man in—and he is satisfied with that. But look at it now. The moment this Bill is passed, for every civil servant who comes under it there is no longer any safety or feeling of security, and for every insistent supporter there is this royal road to preferment of his friends. He will simply go to the Minister and say: Put this man out and mine in, and that will be no charge on the country at all, because you will be simply giving the man you dismissed his own money, with the interest, and you take the new man under the percentage of abatement on which you will pay interest, a little less than before, because there will be a little less money in the fund. You do not need to face Parliament, because Parliament has practically nothing to say in the matter. The road is clear, and the Minister will be put into all sorts of difficulties, and the insistent supporter into a heaven of supreme contentment until he has more to get in than can be placed in the department. But how is it to-day? To-day the civil servants feel—at least, they did before this Government came in, and before this measure was foreshadowed—that if they do their duty well, they have security and stability in office, and that is the very essence of good service, I do not care where you find it. This Bill, then, is doing what? It is taking away the essence of stability from the civil service, and that once taken away you have an insecure service, a partisan service, one which shifts with every caprice of a Minister and every change of Government. That is a thing I am very sorry to see brought into the civil service of this country, and that is the chief difficulty I find with the hon. gentleman's Bill.

Now, my hon. friend has made one amendment. He says that if there is a civil servant who has not paid the abatement for quite the ten years, but who has been in the service in some other capacity for one or two years so as to make up the ten years, he shall be exempted and kept upon the old superannuation list. That removes an injustice in that respect, but what greater injustice is there in that case than in the case of a man who came in, supposing he was dealing with a Government which would stand by its legislation and the practice of thirty years, and has loyally done his work and paid his superannuation abatement for eight or ten years.

I cannot see the distinction. You try to remedy an injustice in the one case, and you fail to remedy it in the other. What is the reason why it should not be remedied in both cases? I am not going to go over the calculations that the Postmaster General made, those calculations are plain and clear as far as they go, and every member sees just how far they go. When you take a civil servant and suppose he is going to live up to 65 years, and make your calculations upon it, you get a very good showing for the new system. But what is the percentage of those who will stay in the service up to 65 years of age? The percentage is very small indeed, when you take the average. The stay in the civil service will be somewhere, probably, more like twenty years than thirty-five, may be less than twenty—I have not made any calculations. You will find that on the average, and in the individual instance, the second system, as an annuity builder compared with superannuation after he has been retired from the service, does not give the recipient at all what he would get under the old system. We had an able civil service commission appointed in 1892. The members of that commission were Mr. Hague, a bank manager in Montreal, well known as a most practical and business-like man; you had Judge Burbidge, who is an old and skilled business man and financier; and you had Mr. Courtney, the able Deputy Minister of Finance. These gentlemen applied themselves thoroughly to this work of a commission, they made their investigation into the actual facts and conditions of things as they were here, and as they were in other countries; and what were their recommendations? Their recommendations were straight in favour of a civil service system pure and simple. They might have had some modifications of it, and they did recommend some, but they did hold to the keeping of the superannuation system, and it is well to have their opinion, in conclusion, put on record:

In conclusion, your commissioners are of opinion that the Superannuation Act now on the Statute-book for over twenty-two years, and under which moneys have been retained from the salaries of public servants, constitutes an agreement that the Government and the country are in all equity bound to execute, and whatever action be taken towards amending the Act, they would recommend that the vested right of every public servant now contributing from his salary superannuation abatement, should be respected to the highest degree.

That, I think, is a weighty deliverance from men of that class and character, and in the direct line of the civil service systems the best and most advanced in the world. To make a long story short: In the first place, I am sorry that the Postmaster General proposes by this Bill to emasculate and destroy the civil service system of Canada. Hereafter, and in proportion as this system works, the service is no longer permanent, the service is temporary and changing, temporary and changing at the will of the Minister while he is in office, belonging to his party, and changing as every party changes. It is going back to the old spoils and changing system of the United States out of which they are coming by leaps and bounds. It is a mistake to say that the spoils system is now the system of the United States of America. It was the system, but within the last six years that system has been almost remodelled, and to-day a very large proportion of the civil service of the United States are permanent and not temporary, and the spoils system does not apply. This will simply be going back to the spoils system, it will take away and destroy the amour proper of the service, the ambition of the service, the spirit of the service. Every man in the service will be looking to political friends outside, to the favour of this one and that one who is strong with the Minister inside. I think the hon. gentleman will find that it will be realized, if this unfortunately goes upon the Statute-book, that the deterioration will be marked and certain, and that the result of experience will be that this country sooner or later will go back to a wise, well devised and sensible civil service system. That there are evils in the present one, any one can well admit, but that the system is a sound one, I think most of us know and feel, and I believe that the country is of that way of thinking also. Why not cut off the excrescences? Why not take away abuses if they exist? But keep the system, instead of making this bold, bad plunge into what will inevitably end in an insecure and unsatisfactory service, and open the way to the spoils system in its most unadulterated form.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I presume the hon. gentleman refers to the statute of 1893, the Civil Service Insurance Act. If that is the only Act, will the hon. gentleman say wherein the legislation that he refers to affects or modifies the Superannuation Act?

Mr. FOSTER. As I said before, my hon. friend found fault with the superannuation system because, as he said, nine-tenths, or three-fourths, or seven-eighths, whatever the proportion is, never got any good from it. For instance, a man would pay in his abatement year after year in the service, and he would get no good from it, and there was that feeling that some provision ought to be made for the family. The Insurance Act of 1893 was based upon that sentiment, and met that sentiment. It was to be applied to the civil servants who paid the abatements under the superannuation system, and who consequently got the cheapest form of insurance that could be got, without any cost of administration, and with a steady investment of the funds that came in at 6 per cent, the Government interest. A civil servant then could do two things: Paying his abatement, he felt that if any disability came and he had to retire from the service after a certain length of service, and lived on for years after that, he had his superannuation to rest upon. He felt also that by this cheap system of insurance under Government control, it did not take a large amount of his salary each year to pay the rate upon that insurance, and that consequently he provided a cheap insurance for his family in case anything should happen while he was yet a public servant, and before he had been retired, and consequently got the benefit of the superannuation system. That is what I maintain, and I think that is borne out by the facts.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The only provision I find in the Act varying the conditions so far as the superannuation side of the question is concerned, is changing the old rate to 3 per cent, and on top of that, a life insurance system, which, of course, is only applicable by payment of the entire premium. So that all the Insurance Act does as regards the Superannuation Act, is to change the former contribution to the contribution mentioned in this Act.

Mr. FOSTER. No, it does not even do that. The abatements were changed in the amendment to the Superannuation Act itself, and then the Insurance Act was made applicable to those who paid the heightened abatement.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Reading the amended Act of 1893, the Insurance Act, and this Insurance Act, the only change in the Superannuation Act, to make it self-sustaining, is to change the old rate from 3 per cent to 3½ per cent. That is all the change. Whether it is self-sustaining or not, depends upon whether those rates make it self-sustaining.

Mr. FOSTER. They were calculated by an actuary, and based on that system.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. An arbitrary sum applicable to all classes and irrespective of each, would scarcely be regarded as an actuarial calculation.

Mr. FOSTER. You may call it actuarial, or modify it as you will, it was an actuarial calculation. The whole matter was submitted to Mr. Fitzgerald, with instructions that he should go very carefully into the history of the civil service, the ages civil servants were taken in and the maximum age—that he should take all these elements into consideration; he did so and prepared a statement in very elaborate form.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The insurance benefits were dependent upon further contributions. I asked the hon. gentleman whether the Government contribution of interest, perhaps more than the current rate, was based on a calculation in which the interest had been compounded. He seemed to imply that it was not. If not, how were those contracts made good? The only fund which the Government could have would be the principal money contributed year by year, like premiums in ordinary insurance. Was it simple interest for the lifetime of the officer, or what was the arrangement?

Mr. FOSTER. I explained that when the Minister of Trade and Commerce interrupted me. I said that instead of looking for interest upon investments in real estate or otherwise, these funds were invested with the Government, and the Government paid 6 per cent. So that it was really compounded interest.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is what I wanted to know.

Motion agreed to. Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

On section 1,

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest the changing of the title of the Bill. Instead of "retirement" of members of the civil service, we should insert the word "abolishment." The hon. gentleman might take this as a suggestion without a formal motion.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Give notice of it—put the question on the paper.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to draw the attention of the ex-Finance Minister to this point. He has drawn attention to the report of the commission, which was appointed and reported in 1892, and he made some remarks to the effect that it was composed of experienced officers. The hon. gentleman was then in power. I remind him that the commission reported by Bill. No Bill prepared by the commission was ever introduced by the Government. The commission also made recommendations with respect to the Superannuation Act. Those recommendations the commission recommended should not be applied to the second division of the inside service. The Government never carried out that recommendation. They did not carry out what the commission recommended, but they did many other things. It was no doubt a very intelligent commission and reported an extended Bill. They recommended alterations in the Act, but they were not carried out by the Government. What has the hon. gentleman to say in regard to these matters?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman thinks he has accomplished some mighty feat.

Mr. McMULLEN. No, I draw the hon. gentleman's attention to these matters.

Mr. FOSTER. It is sometimes a greater exercise of power not to do something than to do something, and hon. gentlemen opposite would show greater power and better sense if they did nothing in this matter than to do what they are going to do. We did not propose to abolish the civil service system, and we were at one with the commission in that respect. We believed the civil service system as it has remained on the Statute-book and been in practice for thirty years gave certain rights to employees and we did not propose to violate them. The hon. gentleman is in favour of action, and he is going to act against the representations of the members of the commission in that respect. But the hon. gentleman must not suppose that the whole case is gained when he says that the late Government did not do anything that the commission recommended. As the result of the commission's work the Government made changes in the Act, and those changes I have detailed to-night, and the most important change they made was in the direction of taking away burdens from the civil service, especially the third-class clerks.

Mr. McMULLEN. When that commission sat, the individuals who appeared and gave evidence were the Deputy Ministers and whatever clerks they named. Most of those witnesses therefore were the accountants of the departments and clerks who drew large salaries, men of extended service. No doubt they may have been honest men, but they thought superannuation should be continued, which it was natural for them to do, for they were looking forward to the time when they might reach some advantage from the system.

Mr. FOSTER. As the hon. gentleman has appealed to Cæsar, I will put on record what Cæsar said in some important respects. The commission reported, among other things:

Your commissioners, on due inquiry into the whole subject, are of opinion that it is eminently desirable and in the interest of the public that a superannuation system should form part of the scheme of carrying on the public service, and that such a system, if properly administered, directly leads to both efficiency and economy in administration.

The Postmaster General thinks differently.

That it is a growing practice with railway companies, banks and other large corporations to undertake the establishment of superannuation schemes.

The Postmaster General is against it on the ground of growing expense.

That the British Parliament decided forty years ago that superannuation was in the interest of the state, and that abatements should not any further be deducted from the salaries of public servants.

This proposed legislation proceeds on the ground that all civil service legislation has been necessarily in the interest of the employee and against the interest of the state. The report goes on to give the preamble of the Act of 1870, which places that matter without doubt so far as Canadian legislation is concerned. Then it goes on to say:

Much misapprehension exists in regard to the Superannuation Act, as no account is taken of the saving to the public expenditure of the salaries of those superannuated

That is a wise remark. The present Finance Minister makes use of that wise remark when it suits him, but he goes against it in the legislation which the Postmaster General proposes, for when the Finance

Mr. FOSTER.

Minister brought down a list of those superannuated and to whom gratuities were granted by this model anti-superannuation Government which the hon. member for North Wellington had been drilling in the ranks of the Opposition for seven, eight or nine years—an immense list, he said at the end :

The superannuation of those officers makes their allowances a charge on the Superannuation Fund, but there is a large saving to the treasury.

In some cases the officials had to be superannuated on account of age or infirmity, and their places have been filled, but in the majority of cases the office has been abolished.

Without doubt any person who will make a fair estimate of the civil service superannuation system must take into account the savings as well as the burden of superannuation upon the fund.

6. That the present rates, according to the evidence of Mr. Fitzgerald, are sufficient, if the Act were properly administered, to pay in round numbers one-half the charge for the service.

Now, these rates were just about double, and under the new superannuation system No. 2 they are self-supporting.

The last recommendation I have already quoted with reference to the conclusion of the commissioners that the statute and the practice of the country for so long had made a vested right for every public servant that had been contributing of his salary to the superannuation fund.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) knows that at the time of the introduction of the superannuation system in England there was no such system of general life insurance as at the present time ; in fact, life insurance was hardly known at all, and besides the civil servant in England years ago was given a mere pittance, and the state felt that some provision should be made. That condition never existed in Canada. In England the civil servant did not get a salary equal to what was paid in other lines of life, and they looked to a retiring allowance, but the Canadian civil servant is getting a salary equal and more than any other class, and why should we continue superannuating. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has drawn attention to the superannuations the present Government have made since they came into power. I have carefully gone over the list, and I find that about 154 have been superannuated in all the departments, and out of that number there are 110 or 111 whose places have not been filled, or have been filled by promoting the next official in rank, so that consequently there was no extra cost to the country.

Mr. FOSTER. That is generally the way.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is a proper application of the Superannuation Act, and besides no years have been added to their time of service. You cannot possibly refuse to pay, under the present Act, a superannuation allowance to men who have been retired, and who have been over ten years in the service. When the present Government found there were unnecessary men in the service they could not dismiss them, but were compelled under the law to superannuate them. No man will dare to challenge the honesty of doing that.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) missed one point in his argument. He said that in England they established a superannuation system fifty years ago because there was no such life insurance system as now.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Civil Service Act was introduced over a hundred years ago in England.

Mr. FOSTER. I will not cavil about the time ; but at all events, now they have a cheap insurance system in England, and yet, strange to say, England still keeps that superannuation system in existence.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall this clause be adopted ?

Mr. FOSTER. The Postmaster General will not accept my amendment ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We will consider.

Mr. FOSTER. You might as well accept it and be honest.

Mr. ELLIS. Whatever may be the difference as between parties on either side of the House with regard to this matter, it appears to me that there is a contract, or at any rate an implied contract, between the country and the civil servants, and I would rather that the Postmaster General would provide that all those persons in the service for under ten years should have the right to select for themselves what class they would go into. It seems to me that while there may be very grave public reasons why the superannuation question should be dealt with as provided in this Bill, yet the rights of the individuals in the public service exist, and they are rights that should be regarded by the Parliament of Canada. I listened attentively to the speech of the Postmaster General, but he did not appear to me to state a reason why the limit should be drawn at ten years. If I were the Postmaster General—he will excuse me for making the suggestion—I would at least allow it to be elective with these men under ten years in the service to accept these new proposals, or to continue on as they have been from the beginning under the Superannuation Act.

Section agreed to.

On section 2, subsection "b,"

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As there appears to be a difference of opinion with regard to this subsection, I will ask that it be allowed to stand.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I desire to know whether there is any, and what, amendment to section 7 of the Civil Service Superannuation Act? It would be very convenient if the Postmaster General would give the reference to any amendment to that Act so that we might know the changes made in the present law. That was found very convenient in the case of the Franchise Act, and it would be a good practice in the case of all important Bills introduced. I may tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) that what I desire to know is this: Whether or not a person who has been in the service ten years, but has not paid into the superannuation fund for ten years, is at present entitled to be superannuated upon a deduction being made, as provided by section 7 of the Superannuation Act?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The late Minister of Justice (Sir Oliver Mowat), I think, gave it as his opinion that those who have not paid for ten years were not entitled to the superannuation allowance.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock), when he brings this subsection up again would be good enough to give us information as to the view of the Government with regard to the law on that point.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The view of the Government is as I have stated.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We may accept that as the view of the Government.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think so.

On subsection "c,"

Mr. DAVIN. If the hon. gentleman is going to postpone subsection "b," would it not be well also to postpone subsection "c," because if the hon. gentleman amends subsection "b," he will have to amend subsection "c." Suppose the hon. gentleman had moved his amendment to subsection "b," and some hon. gentleman near him were to move that instead of "less than ten years," there be substituted "less than two years." I apprehend that the word "ten" in subsection "c" presupposes that subsection "b" has been carried?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Oh, no, it is quite independent of subsection "b." Subsection "b" applies to those who have been less than ten years in the service, or who shall have contributed for less than ten years. Subsection "c" deals with an entirely different class.

Mr. CLARKE. It seems to me that the time given in subsection to those who have been more than ten years in the service, to elect whether they will come under this Act or not, is altogether too short. I suppose that many men who have been in the service for over ten years will know very little about this Act during the next three months. I notice also that they can only come under this Act with the consent of the Governor in Council. On what principle are men to be allowed to come under the operation of this Act?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As to the first objection, that three months is too limited a period, I would be glad to have a suggestion from my hon. friend.

Mr. CLARKE. I think twelve months should be allowed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With regard to the inquiry as to the consent of the Governor in Council being required, the matter is in the nature of an insurance company changing a contract. Suppose that the state of a man's health is such that a pension would be of no value to him, he has taken his chances on that point. If we were to allow the contract to be altered without the consent of the Governor in Council, every one of the 5,000 in the civil service might elect to change their contract and come under this arrangement. One reason why the consent of the Governor in Council is required, in my opinion, is that the Governor in Council may cause inquiry such as an insurance company would make in the case of any one applying for an insurance benefit. If a man is about to die, he would naturally elect to come under this Act, whereas if his probabilities of life were great, he would perhaps remain as he is. We want a fair medium.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it intended to require a medical examination or evidence of health before transferring a man from one branch to another?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As the consent of the Governor in Council is required, before they give that consent, they will no doubt consider what precautions should be taken.

Mr. DAVIN. Suppose subsection "b" were made to apply to persons who have been in the service for less than two years, would not subsection "c" be required to apply to persons who have been in the service for more than two years?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps it would meet the hon. gentleman's objection to give the option to all.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, that would do. If the hon. gentleman intends to amend subsection "b," I apprehend that the question would come up whether he would not amend subsection "c."

Mr. McMULLEN. I think we should adhere to the principle of the old law, which provided that no man became entitled to superannuation unless he had served ten years. The ex-Finance Minister said that a man, all the time he was serving, was growing in the direction of becoming entitled to superannuation; but after all he did not become entitled until after he had passed the mark.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend misunderstood the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). He and the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) stood on the same basis, and I stand with them in that respect. They do not ask that a man who has been less than ten years in the service and has been paying the abatement should have the right to superannuation, but they ask that he should have the option to say whether he will come under the new system or remain under the old.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will meet the views of the hon. member for Western Assiniboia by striking out subsection "c" and making the clause read, "to every person now in the civil service who has been subject to any such deductions, and who, within six months," elects to come under this Act.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to urge upon the Postmaster General the reasonableness of giving these officials at least twelve months to exercise the option.

Mr. FOSTER. Make it twelve months.

Mr. MONK. I wish to call attention to a numerous class of employees in Montreal, particularly in the Customs Department, who have served considerable time, without receiving permanent appointment. As the hon. Postmaster General is aware, a great number of these were employed a number of years as temporary clerks before being put on the permanent list. From 1870 to 1884, these employees, when placed upon the permanent list, were allowed, when being superannuated, to add the period of their temporary employment to their years of service for superannuation. In 1884, the Government considered that unjust, and an Order in Council was passed making it incumbent on those employees, if they wished to claim the benefit of their temporary employment, to pay the abatements during that period. In 1893, an Order in Council was passed revoking the Order in Council of 1884, so that since 1893 it has been found impossible for civil servants to claim the benefit of their years of temporary employment, even by paying the abatements as they used to do. The radical change we are making now in the conditions of superannuation or retirement has caused many of these employees to make inquiries, and I would submit to the hon. Postmaster General the propriety of providing some safeguard of their rights such as they existed from 1870 to 1893. From 1870 to 1884, according to custom, and from 1884 to 1893 under the Order in Council, they had the same privileges as employees who had been made permanent civil servants from the first, simply on paying the abatements during the period of their temporary employment, and I have drafted an amendment to this subsection "c," as follows:—

To add to paragraph "c" of section 2 the following words:—"Provided, however, that all civil servants who desire to remain subject to the Civil Service Superannuation Act, may, for the purpose of such superannuation, add or cause to be added their time of service as temporary officers by paying all the abatements due on their past temporary salaries from the commencement of such temporary service, within such time as may be fixed by the Governor General in Council.

In other words, the object of this amendment is to restore to civil servants who have had a period of temporary employment, the plenitude of their rights such as they existed from 1870 to 1893, and I think that this moment, when we are making such a change, is the proper time to provide for their rights in a clear and unmistakable way, and it seems to me that those rights should in justice commend themselves to the attention of the committee.

Mr. McMULLEN. If you are to include all the temporary clerks in this Dominion—and they all would have just as good a right to be included as those in the city of Montreal—you would have to include over 2,000, which would add enormously to the list. Why should my hon. friend ask that the temporary clerks in the city of Montreal should be included?

Mr. MONK. I am not asking for any special favour for the city of Montreal, but simply that the provisions of this Bill should apply to all civil servants without any distinction, and that will be simply a recognition of their rights, as they existed from 1870 to 1893. These temporary clerks have not the same tenure of office, but did the same duties as the regular employees.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Does the hon. gentleman contend that temporary clerks had the right to superannuation?

Mr. MONK. They had from 1870 to 1893.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I speak from recollection, and I do not think that any temporary clerk was ever on the superannuation list at any time.

Mr. MONK. I am speaking of the permanent employee, who was once a temporary clerk.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Does the hon. gentleman mean that the men who had been temporary clerks, were allowed to count the period of their temporary service?

Mr. MONK. I think there is no doubt about it.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think not. I think it is only from the date they paid superannuation allowance.

Mr. MONK. I speak subject to correction, but my information is that according to custom, from 1870 to 1884, permanent employees were allowed, for the purposes of superannuation, to add to their years of service the time they were employed as temporary clerks. In 1884, on the 7th January, an Order in Council was passed providing that on and after the 1st January, 1884, it should be optional with temporary officers, on receiving permanent appointment, to place themselves, as far as regards their temporary service, under the Superannuation Act.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Does the hon. gentleman say that that came in force on and after January, 1884?

Mr. MONK. Yes.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I was referring to the practice which prevailed from 1870 to 1874, and at which time permanent employees were not allowed to count their temporary service.

Mr. MONK. As to the period previous to 1884, I am informed that permanent officers were brought under the operation of the Superannuation Act and their temporary services counted, when retired or superannuated, provided they paid the necessary abatements.

Mr. McMULLEN. In connection with that matter, in my opinion the Order in Council was unquestionably wrong. A temporary clerk, as a rule, gets a larger salary than a permanent one. A person entering the civil service as permanent clerk gets the lowest rate and works up, but a temporary clerk may get, on entering, a salary considerably in excess of a permanent one. I know of men who have been in temporary employment, who have got more salary than they would have received if on the permanent staff. If you allow them to serve a certain number of years receiving a larger salary than they would on the permanent staff, and then come under the benefit of the superannuation and have that date back to the time of their temporary employment, you are placing a premium upon men remaining in temporary service.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think cases may be found where permanent officers, on being retired, have had counted for them years of service passed in some other permanent capacity not carrying superannuation; but I do not recall any practice of a permanent officer being retired and having added to his time of service the time in temporary employment.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My recollection is, having seen the Order in Council, that it did not apply to men being retired but to those who had been in the temporary service and it went back, I think, six years, and I think provided that each person who desired to avail himself of the option might add years of his temporary service on paying the equivalent of a month's pay for each year of temporary service. I would ask the member for York (Mr. Foster) the reason why the Government rescinded the Order in Council of 1884 by the Order in Council of 1893?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not recollect that they were allowed to go back to temporary appointment. I cannot recollect the Order in Council referred to.

Mr. MONK. It is the order of the 9th February, 1893, respecting the Order in Council of the 4th January, 1884.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Whatever may have been the reason for the Orders in Council of 1894 and 1893, it is not necessary to have this legislation in order to deal with the matter proposed. If the Superannuation Act made it lawful for the Government to pass such an Order in Council or revoke such an Order in Council, that power is still left with the Governor in Council, and legislation is not necessary, and the amendment, therefore, is not necessary.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the hon. Postmaster General that the time in which these officers may exercise this option, instead of being merely extended from three to six months, should be fixed at the 1st of January.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Can the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) suggest a reason for that?

Mr. CLARKE. It will be a definite date, whereas under the amendment proposed many of them will not be able to know exactly when this Act comes into force and, therefore, when their option expires.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Make it the 1st December. That will be six months from the 1st June.

Mr. FOSTER. That will make your calculations wrong.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. All right, make it the 1st January.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 3,

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Instead of enumerating the officers, as here proposed, I propose to strike out section 3 and substitute the following:—

The Civil Service, for the purposes of this Act, shall include all officers, clerks and employees mentioned or referred to in section 2 of the Civil Service Superannuation Act.

Amendment agreed to.

On sections 5 and 6.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would ask that sections 5 and 6 be allowed to stand.

On subsection 8.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think there should be some provision that the person who retires or who is dismissed should receive this money upon condition that his conduct has been satisfactory. Supposing he violates some of the rules, supposing that he steals. I do not think that he should have a right to claim this money in that case.

Mr. FOSTER. If he steals, there is a penalty for it.

Mr. McMULLEN. He might be guilty of some grave offence, he might leave the service and run away. So I think that payment should depend upon good faith and efficient service. I do not think we should allow such men the privilege of drawing money if they have done anything for which the department felt it necessary to dismiss them. The money should then be kept as a security for faithful and efficient service. If they do their duty faithfully, then let them have the money, but not otherwise. I think that where the civil servant gives no security at all, it is right that this money lying to his credit, should be a guarantee to the Government, and that he should feel that if he violated his duty, he ran the risk of losing that money.

Mr. FOSTER. The loss of office is quite penalty enough for any offence other than that against the criminal or civil law, and the penalties, in the law itself are sufficient for that. We must not be too draconian.

On section 9.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, if the Postmaster General will only be good natured for a moment, and take out that clause in section "c," which lets the Governor in Council meddle with the business, I think he would do what is right. The contract, as my hon. friend is pleased to call it now, is a contract for service. This man's money is his own money, and the Government pays interest upon it. Now if he has the choice at all, let him have a free choice. It is not a matter as to whether you lose his service or not. It is a matter of choice, and is simply as to whether he shall elect to remain under one system or go into another. If it was on account of illness or something like that, the Government is strong enough to let the family have the benefit.

Mr. CLARKE. It seems to me that the defects in the old law mentioned by the Postmaster General this afternoon will not be remedied or improved if he persists in keeping these words in this subsection "c." I understood the Postmaster General to say this afternoon that under the law which he is amending by this Act, a person might be in the service ten, or fifteen or twenty years, and if he became ill and died, his representatives practically got nothing out of his contributions to the fund. Now I understand from his explanations made to-night, that though an officer may have been more than ten years in the service and desires to take advantage of this new Act, if it is found that such an officer is in poor health, he is not to be transferred, and cannot get the benefits of this new Act. If that is the case, the Government are perpetuating what the Postmaster General felt to be an injustice that obtained under the old Act.

Mr. DAVIN. I would appeal to the Postmaster General on the grounds of justice as well as on the grounds of humanity, to accede to the suggestion made by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) and supported by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke).

Mr. ROGERS. Of all the Acts which this Government has dealt with, I think this and the Franchise Act are the most important. The superannuation system played a considerable part in the last election contest. The people have felt its burdens very keenly, and they hoped the Government would take some vigorous action in this matter. It is one of the most indefensible Acts. I think, that the late Government supporters had to defend before the rural constituencies. We never could see any reason why the Government should take such paternal care over the civil servants of this country. We feel that these men are exceptionally well paid, much better paid than any other class in the community, regularly paid, and their pay is sure, something which cannot be said of the salaries of men in some other callings in life. I have spoken to many civil servants this year, and I understood that they would much rather the Government did not take such paternal care of them, but would allow them to look out for themselves in their old age. This they can do, especially in recent years, when there are so many mutual benefit associations and straight life insurance companies giving such good terms. These men have told me that they could do better with their money than they are doing now by paying it into an endowment fund. I do not think it would be any hardship to these men if the Government would abolish the system entirely and pay the civil servants a certain amount of interest on their contributions. I do hope the Postmaster General will not cut and destroy this Bill in such a manner that we cannot defend it before the electorate of this country. They are looking for some radical change in the direction of doing away with the superannuation of civil servants. Speaking about civil servants not accepting this, that or the other thing, you might leave the ten year limit to their choice. They have been in for a certain length of time, they are not obliged to stay there, they can leave any time they like. We all know that there will be hundreds of applications to take their places; every member of Parliament knows what a worry it is to receive applications for appointments in the civil service. Therefore I do not think there can be any hardship if this ten year limit is left in, and I hope it will not be removed. Then with regard to this 5 per cent interest clause. The great mass of the people throughout this country feel that 5 per cent is too much to pay on the money retained from the civil servants. It is more than they can get in any other investment, it is more than the people can get for any money they may have invested. I speak particularly of the rural classes, because they are the great majority of the taxpayers, and they have to be considered and counted with on election day. There is nothing you can put before an agricultural audience that will prove such a bug-bear as the superannuation of civil servants at enormous rates. They are indignant when you tell them of men in the service drawing $2,000 or $3,000 salary while they remain in, and afterwards drawing as high as $37,000 superannuation money after they have left the service. Some of these men go into foreign countries to spend their money. The people feel this is a great hardship, and they decline to submit to it. You cannot argue it away with them. The small arguments put forth in this House, will not take with the agricultural classes. The Liberal party made strong promises along that line of what they would do, and the people are looking to the Government now to fulfil their promises. I say again, I hope the Postmaster General will not cut and carve this Bill in such a way as to make it indefensible before the people. All the arguments I have heard put forward to-night are from the city standpoint and does not count with the agricultural classes. They get no direct benefit from the money spent by the civil servants. They justly say: Who will superannuate me, who will look after my family when I die? These men toil day after day for years, and when they finally drop in their steps from over labour and exertion, and die prematurely, who will pay their families any superannuation allowance? They feel it as an injustice for they never had half the luxuries and comforts of life possessed by civil servants. These people have to live very closely, and you need not discuss at public meetings this question of superannuation for you cannot get them to accept it. I hope the Postmaster General will exercise a firm hand and do justice to all classes, those who receive these allowances and those who pay the taxes.

Mr. CLANCY. I think the Postmaster General should be disposed to carry out this proposition, that those who have been in the service for a lesser period than ten years may have a choice. I hope there will be no limit, as has been suggested.

Mr. McMULLEN. It would be unfair to the Government if they were not allowed the right to judge as to whether a man should be permitted to take advantage of the Act or not. Supposing a man was dissipated, and it was inadvisable to retain him in the service, and he was about to be dismissed as unsuitable. We know cases of that kind are likely sometimes to occur. Unless this power were given to the Government, these civil servants might take every dollar and leave the service. I should object to the Government parting with their right of deciding whether the civil servants, as regards the manner in which they have discharged their duty and as regards their character, should be allowed to take advantage of the Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I cannot quite understand the object of retaining this provision. There are many reasons why it should not be retained. One is that so long as it is there, it creates uncertainty for the civil servants, and it is not desirable there should be uncertainty on one side or the other. The objection raised by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) does not seem to have any weight. He suggests that the Government might desire that a particular person should not come within the provisions of the Act. If any person is fit to remain in the civil service, he is fit to come within the provisions of the Act. The Act amounts to this: the Government take from each man every year 5 per cent of his salary, and give him interest thereon at a rate somewhat higher than the Government usually pay, but probably somewhat lower than he could get elsewhere. That is not very much encouragement to the civil servants. Perhaps the Postmaster General will explain why he desires to retain this power.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When the clause was framed it had to do with civil servants who had contributed more than ten years, and are not within the provisions of this Act, and it was simply an option given to them by the Government. It is impossible to anticipate whether it would or would not be proper on all occasions to consent to the request of the civil servants. They have their rights under the Civil Service Act, and those rights are not being curtailed. If they desire to alter their rights and the Government as a party to the contract chooses to allow them, well and good; but as it is a contract and they have their rights, and the Government has its rights, the matter must be considered from the standpoint of the public interest. The hon. member for North Wellington takes an imaginary case, that of an officer who might properly be dismissed. Very few such cases occur, but we can suppose such a case. Such officer, knowing that he was about to lose his position, might elect to take the money and interest, and thus get what he would not otherwise obtain. The consent of the Governor in Council is necessary in order that a man shall obtain a pension.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. member for North Wellington suggested that an officer fearing dismissal might desire to come into the arrangement. But the hon. Minister will remember that the period is limited as between now and the 1st January, and therefore that reason will not have effect beyond 1st January next, and the hon. gentleman is dealing with a very small number of cases of officers who may be dismissed between now and that date for misconduct.

Section agreed to.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I mentioned, on moving the second reading, that it was proposed to add a clause allowing officers who have served less than ten years to retire, and upon retiring to exercise the option of retiring with their gratuity. But inasmuch as subsection "b" which deals with that class of officers, has been reserved, I shall also reserve the amendment under consideration.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will read the amendment that he will submit.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The amendment will be as follows:

Every person now in the Civil Service who has been subject to such deductions for a lesser period than ten years may, at his option (to be declared in writing, signed by him or his duly authorized agent, and deposited in the office of the Secretary of State) within three months from the passage of this Act, retire from said service, and thereupon shall be entitled to be paid a gratuity amounting to one month's pay for each year of his service.

Committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Canadian Pacific Railway—To pay balance for work under award..... $2,600

Mr. FOSTER. Is this pretty nearly finished up?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The balance remaining to be paid is between $8,000 and $9,000 altogether.

Mr. FOSTER. So that this nearly finishes the work.

Canadian Pacific Railway—To pay for land damages, &c..... $2,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. Where were these land damages?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Nearly all in British Columbia, at Port Moody.

Mr. MONTAGUE. How were the damages assessed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have been settled by understanding between the parties where it was possible to reach an understanding. There have been valuations made, but the parties have not been willing down to the present moment to accept the valuation.

Intercolonial Railway—Increased accommodation at Halifax..... $135,000

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) in what position the proposed increased accommodation at Halifax now is; whether anything has been done with respect to that accommodation; if nothing has been done for what reason the delay has taken place, and if the work is not already commenced at what probable date will it be commenced. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) knows, the matter has been brought to the attention of the Government in various ways during the present session, and in the recess since last session. I am not aware that up to the present time any considerable progress has been made. It is a work of great urgency; it is a matter in which the entire city of Halifax and a very considerable portion of the province of Nova Scotia is very deeply interested. I would like as full an explanation from the hon. gentleman as possible with regard to the intention of the Government respecting this.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The intention is to push the balance of the work which remains uncompleted as vigorously as possible. There has been quite a little work done during the past year, and there has been an expenditure from the 30th June, 1897, to the 1st of March, 1898, of between $14,000 and $15,000. I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) that it is not at all our purpose to delay. The department is contemplating arrangements which will during the ensuing year practically complete the terminal facilities at Halifax.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman will, of course, recognize that the expenditure of $14,000 or $15,000, out of a vote of $135,000, does not indicate a very vigorous rate of progress; and if he does not proceed any faster in the future than he has done in the past, it will take something like ten years to complete the expenditure. I trust that the hon. gentleman will be able to complete it in something less than that time, and I venture to hope that the terminal facilities, according to the views pressed upon the Government by delegations during the past year, may be constructed at Halifax before the close of the present summer. I should think that would not be an impossible feat. As I said before, not only the city, but the business of the Intercolonial Railway, is suffering for the want of these terminal facilities.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend must remember that there are other people in this Dominion who have a little interest in the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway besides the people of Halifax. I do not want to say anything against providing necessary accommodation; but I would like to know from the Minister, before this item passes, how much money has been spent on terminal accommodation up to the present time, and whether this amount is considered sufficient to provide ample accommodation without any further money being required in the future. Year after year very large amounts of money have been expended for increased accommodation at different stations along that line of railway, and I would like to know whether the sum now proposed will complete the necessary accommodation at Halifax?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as I am concerned, I shall have to refer the hon. gentleman to the Minister, and I would also refer him to his own vote of last year, when this item of $135,000 passed. I would also like to remind him that the fact that there are other places in Canada besides Halifax does not seem to be any particular reason why the Government should occupy ten years in carrying out a measure which they themselves considered worthy the expenditure of $135,000. This expenditure is proposed, not in the interest of the city of Halifax alone, but in the interest of the whole country, which owns the Intercolonial Railway. As much if not more detriment is being done to the business of the Intercolonial Railway than to the city of Halifax by the failure to provide these terminal facilities. It also affects the trade of Ontario so far as that trade is carried through the port of Halifax; and I, for one, hope that some considerable portion of the trade of Ontario to the old country will be carried through the port of Halifax. The constituents of my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) as citizens of this Dominion, are interested in this work to some degree, if not to as great a degree as my constituents. I am simply pointing out that if this vote is a proper vote, and we must assume that it is, it ought to be dealt with vigorously and in a business-like manner, and that these terminal facilities, the necessity of which is recognized by this vote, should be proceeded with at once, as they would be by any railway or business corporation, and not be allowed to stand from year to year, or played with at the rate of $14,000 or $15,000 a year, to the detriment of the business of the country.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend must not attempt to construe anything I have said into opposition to improvements at Halifax. What I said was that I wanted to know the entire sum that had been expended at Halifax, and whether this vote would complete the expenditure at that point. That does not indicate any antagonism on my part to votes for Halifax. I remember when my hon. friend opposite was Minister of Railways we had votes of this kind. We want to know, when the money is spent, if it is going to accomplish what is intended?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was quite sure that my hon. friend had that broad spirit which would enable him to appreciate a vote of this kind, and would do the simple justice of admitting that it should be expended promptly and in a business-like manner. So far as further improvements are concerned, I am not proposing to give my hon. friend any assurance. If I were the person to give any assurance, I think I would content myself with saying that as soon as this amount is expended, we will take into consideration whether or not there will be necessity for any further improvements. I do not know at present of anything beyond this; but I imagine my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals would not undertake to pledge himself that he would not at any time in the future find it necessary to expend some further money for terminal facilities at Halifax.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend is evidently labouring under a mistake. The question I put was put to the Minister of Railways, not to my hon. friend from Halifax.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am quite sure the hon. member from North Wellington does not take any narrow view of this subject, but that the question of the expenditure of a sum of money towards completing the necessary terminal facilities at Halifax will be regarded by him as a measure, not for Halifax, not for Nova Scotia, not for the maritime provinces, but for Canada. My hon. friend will, I am sure, see that it is the duty of the Government to ask Parliament to make all necessary and proper provision for the purpose of putting the Intercolonial Railway upon such a footing that it will be able to do the business for which it is designed, and which we hope will offer to it. As to the amount in the gross which has been expended in connection with the Intercolonial Railway at and in the neighbourhood of Halifax, it has unquestionably been large, amounting in the neighbourhood of between $1,700,000 and $1,800,000 in the whole. A good deal of the property which we had constructed there, including the most important and valuable of our wharfs, with the sheds and elevators, was unhappily destroyed by fire, and as the Government had not, according to its wont, insured that property, it was necessary that it should be restored.

What we are asking for now is to restore in part the property that was destroyed, and I think we can make a very strong case in favour of that request because there are very strong indications that business which has not hitherto come to the Intercolonial—particularly ocean business, outgoing as well as ingoing—is likely to come at an early day, and we must necessarily, if the Intercolonial is to realize our reasonable expectation, be ready to do that business when it does offer. The Government will see that the money is expended carefully and prudently, we will go no further than we find the needs of the situation appear to require, according to our very best judgment. My hon. friend seems to think that we have been very dilatory in laying out this money. I can assure him that though there appears to have been some delay, it has not been intentional. I have been most anxious to inform myself fully as to what form this expenditure should take before making it, and I have pretty well settled that. We shall construct suitable and sufficient pier accommodation to replace that which was destroyed, and I am in hopes that it will be done during the incoming year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. May I ask what was spent out of the vote of last year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Between $14,000 and $15,000. A portion was spent in dredging, a portion in timber; we have built a shed and retaining walls, and laid down sub-tracks and grading, which constitute the greater part of the expenditure, and between $8,000 and $9,000 has been spent in putting down new tracks and preparing the ground for the laying of the tracks.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the estimated cost of the whole work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If my hon. friend would defer putting that question until a little later, I shall better satisfy him, because it is not improbable that there may be some item in the later Estimates which will have to be included in the statement I shall make.

Land Damages—Oxford and New Glasgow and Cape Breton divisions..... $2,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is the usual sum which we take every year to meet claims made upon us.

Original construction $2,900

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are still some claims coming in, from year to year, for damages in connection with the original construction of the Intercolonial.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not time these were superannuated?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was expended out of the current year not a very large sum, but this is a thing which we necessarily have to make provision for.

Mr. FOSTER. You only spent $724 last year.

Mr. McMULLEN. How are these things adjusted—by commission?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They have been adjusted lately by suit more than any other way.

Mr. FOSTER. To whom was the $724 paid?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot give the name. It included the legal expenses, and was the result of a judgment.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the original claimant on account of the original construction still living?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He bobs up serenely every year.

Extension to deep water, North Sydney.. $20,100

Mr. HAGGART. How much did the hon. gentleman expend last year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I expect to spend by the 1st of July $20,000.

Mr. HAGGART. You spent $30,000 last year in the town of Sydney carrying out its arrangement with the Government. Have you the right of way in the wharf as promised?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The town has arranged to furnish the right of way.

Mr. HAGGART. Are all the conditions that they promised when we agreed to take this new road to the water's edge being carried out by the town of Sydney?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am so advised. The only obstacle for building the pier was that the town did not furnish the right of way as agreed on, but they have now done that. We have nothing to pay for the right of way, but the actual cost of the construction of the pier and shed and the laying of the track will amount to some $50,000.

Mr. GILLIES. Do I understand that the town of Sydney has furnished the right of way from the present station down to the water.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. An arrangement has been concluded with the town, and they have obtained the title. I have no doubt that our agents have already had it properly seen to. We have let the contract for the work upon the basis that the title will be placed in our hands before the work will be commenced. The contract has been let for the work.

Mr. GILLIES. I am personally aware that the contract has been let by the department, and that the construction of terminal facilities for North Sydney are now in progress. But I was given to understand, whether it is the fact or not I do not know, that none of the land titles from the present terminus to the water's edge have yet been furnished to the department. If that is the case the department is running a great risk.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman suggest that the right of way from the present station to the water has not been conveyed to the Crown ?

Mr. GILLIES. I do not say all the way, but that the title to a large portion of the land. I have been informd, has not been furnished to the department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillies) is misinformed.

Mr. GILLIES. Do I understand the hon. Minister to say that titles has been furnished, and that the right of way has been paid for by the town of North Sydney ?

Mr. HAGGART. Does not the Minister exercise the power of expropriation with the understanding that the town shall afterwards recoup the department for the expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the understanding.

Mr. HAGGART. This seems an enormous amount of money for the work that is to be done there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. According to the estimate of the engineer it will cost $31,000 for wharf and freight sheds. It is quite an extensive wharf and shed, and we deem it advisable that they should be sufficient, inasmuch as this is to be used by the Newfoundland line, which is becoming an important line and doing a large business. In addition to this sum there will be for grading, $6,000 ; track laying and ballasting, $1,500 ; rails and fastenings, $1,900 ; dredging, $5,280 ; making, with other small sums, $50,000.

Mr. FOSTER. How much for the land ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not included. It is to be paid for by the town.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. HUGHES. Were tenders advertised for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, and the lowest tender was accepted. It was something less than our estimate. It was, according to my recollection, between $22,000 and $23,000, our estimate being $31,000. So we hope that the total will be something less than the sum here asked for. These estimates were prepared before we received the tender and they were made out on the basis of the estimate of the officers of the department.

Increased accommodation at Moncton... $20,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the whole cost of this work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The total cost of the new station, yard, shed, &c., I think, will not fall short of $140,000.

To increase the strength of iron bridges. $50,000

Mr. HAGGART. Will the Minister please give details of that item, and also give the reason for charging it to capital account ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We included this amount in capital account because we are making the bridges very much stronger than they have been hitherto, so they may be safe and secure for the very much heavier trains that we shall now run. We are charging against capital the amount which the increased strengthening would cost. The intention of the department is to increase the strength of nearly all the bridges along the line. That portion which is fairly represented by renewal on the same basis as these structures will be paid out of revenue ; but, of course, we consider it fair to charge to capital the amount required to increase the strength of these works.

Mr. POWELL. Where are these bridges ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We propose to take off two spans from the bridge over the North River near Truro, two spans over the De Bert River, eight miles from Truro, and two from the Ishgonish. These are to be removed and are to be doubled up to six spans for the new bridge and the one on Folley River. Then we take off one span of 60 feet, and this is to be replaced by a stronger and heavier span. The difference of putting in new bridges of additional weight and repairing them up to their present standard will be charged to capital.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand the hon. gentleman says that his explanation for charging this to capital is that these bridges are to be strengthened. If I remember right when the wooden bridges were replaced by iron, that distinction was not made, and that argument did not apply. For instance, the iron bridge that the hon. gentleman proposes to replace by a stronger one, was itself substituted for a wooden bridge, or at any rate that system was adopted. Those iron bridges were not charged to capital account, but I think they were charged to income.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can give the hon. gentleman a case. I know that when the wooden snow sheds were burned down and iron snow sheds replaced them, these latter were charged to capital account. Sir Charles Tupper was then Minister of Railways and Canals, and we had a long discussion as to whether iron snow sheds should be charged to capital account. We challenged the propriety of making such a charge, and the then Minister of Railways and Canals claimed that as they were permanent structures and not temporary, they should be charged to capital account.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has explained the difference between the two cases. But in this case there is no question of permanent structures as distinguished from temporary structures. Certainly the Opposition of a former time strenuously insisted upon that style of book-keeping, and I would like to know how the hon. gentleman now justifies this change.

Mr. McMULLEN. They merely permitted it in the matter of the snow sheds on the ground that they were iron structures.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As I did not make that argument, I cannot be called upon to justify it. I have nothing to explain so far as my own past actions on the question are concerned, and the hon. gentleman will not expect me to answer for anybody else. I may say, however, that these bridges are not to replace wooden structures, they are to replace iron structures which are absolutely good in every particular, but they are not heavy enough for the present needs of the road. No doubt they would be perfectly safe for a long time if we continued to run light engines over them; but we have to make provision for the altered conditions, we are going to run very much heavier engines.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No one disputes the necessity for strengthening the bridges for heavy rolling stock. Does the hon. gentleman know what is the system adopted by the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway in keeping their accounts for strengthening bridges?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The officers belonging to both those roads inform me that the invariable rule is to charge all betterments to capital, in every department of the service.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister has started a new line here. I remember that again and again when I was bringing down estimates, not for betterments upon the road but for increased accommodation at Halifax or St. John, the Minister of Trade and Commerce said it was time that all expenditure on capital account on the Intercolonial Railway should cease. There is no justification at all in this particular. Suppose you do want heavier bridges for heavier engines, it is not proper to charge the expense to capital account at all, it should be charged to income. There is the next item: To provide a passenger and freight shed at Richmond, $1,500, to be charged to capital account. To build snow fences on the Oxford, New Glasgow and Cape Breton division, $6,000. I have not the slightest doubt that they are required, and that the bridges need to be strengthened for the heavier engines; but what I object to is that these items and similar ones should be charged to income and not to capital account.

Mr. POWELL. What the Minister of Railways and Canals says is absolutely correct, in fact, on any fair principle of book-keeping, I do not see why betterments should not be charged to capital account. I may say that the Minister of Railways and Canals must feel very proud that he has behind him a luminosity that sheds so much light on every possible question that comes up in this House, and where the Minister's information fails him, the omniscience of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) can come to his rescue. Now, in the past a great deal of complaint has been made with the management of the Intercolonial Railway on the ground that improper charges were made to capital account. Of late years, at any rate, a great change has been made in this respect, or I should speak more correctly if I said that the custom for a long time past has been to charge these betterments to revenue account instead of to capital account. I can give a number of instances where this was done. When very heavy bridges across the north-west branch of the Miramichi River and across the south-west branch of the Miramichi River, were strengthened a number of years ago, the expenditure was charged, not to capital account, but to revenue account. If I am not misinformed at the time the road was taken over from the Grand Trunk Railway from Lévis to Rivière du Loup, all the improvements on its bridges were not charged to capital account but were charged to revenue account. In addition to that I am informed that every new rail that was placed upon the Intercolonial Railway had the charges incidental to it entirely placed to the revenue account, and not one dollar in connection with the vast expenditure of changing rails on the Intercolonial Railway from 56 to 67-pound rails was charged to capital account. In addition to that, the supply of the immense number of engines on the whole Intercolonial Railway system was charged under the administration of the late Government, not to capital account, but to revenue account.

Mr. McMULLEN. Oh, you are wrong.

Mr. POWELL. The hon. member for North Wellington, with his assumption of intelligence, says I am wrong. The hon. member may be an authority to himself, but I can assure him that he is not much authority to gentlemen on this side of the House. The hon. gentleman, no doubt, knows more about jack knives and lead pencils than I do. I will concede that. But there are some people who, if they do not know the facts of their own knowledge or from their own investigations, have been sufficiently fortunate to be informed by persons who do know, and, who if they do not possess the originality of the hon. gentlemen opposite, succeed in obtaining stores of information. The very large expenditures for iron bridges on the whole system of the Intercolonial, the raising of the overhead beams, thereby affording ample protection and doing away with what has been a nuisance and a great danger to trainmen, were charged, not to capital account, but to revenue account. The general policy of late years has been to endeavour to charge everything to revenue account which formerly was charged to capital.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken, and if he had been in the House a few more years he would not have made the statement he has made and would not have been quite so "fresh." When Sir Charles Tupper was Minister of Railways he made a clear statement as to what rules were to guide in making charges against working expenses and those against capital. In the case of an engine getting worn out, and it became necessary to get a new engine, that was charged to working expenses. Where a car got worn out and it was necessary to get a new one it was charged to working expenses. But where additional cars or engines were put on the road they were charged against capital account. If five new and additional engines were put on they were charged to capital account and the same with respect to one hundred new cars. The hon. member for Westmoreland has evidently been in the dark.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the item is a more important one than the Minister or the Government seem to think. In fact it implies a complete change in the manner of keeping the Intercolonial Railway accounts, and it is an attempt at cooking the accounts with respect of the Intercolonial. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the latter of whom understands the value which must be attached to uniformity in keeping the accounts of the Dominion as capital and income, should give a little attention to this matter. Two years ago the Minister of Public Works commenced by charging to capital what had hitherto been charged to income, and we had an afternoon's discussion with respect to the principle involved, and the Minister had the good sense to see that uniformity must be carried out in order to have a fair basis for comparison. With respect to the Intercolonial, every one is aware that considerable discussion has occurred as to the deficits in operating the road. Charges and counter charges have been made with respect to the use of the capital account. If the Minister of Railways is to come down here with the doctrine that everything which strengthens and improves the road is to be charged to capital and not to revenue, then there is no chance for comparison between the old and the new accounts with respect to the working expenses of the road. Will the Minister of Railways give an answer to this question: When the wooden bridges were changed to iron bridges, was the cost charged to capital or to income?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not familiar with the past history of the methods and manner of operating the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman ought to be familiar; that is what a Minister is for.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has stated that this method is evidently a new departure and a cooking of the accounts. I assure him it is nothing of the kind. It would be utterly unreasonable and absurd to say that when by reason of the development of business there was necessarily an entire and total departure from the old plan of running light engines and light bridges over the road, when the necessity arose for doubling the engines and strengthening the capacity of the bridges, the cost should be paid out of income and the Parliament should not be asked for this sum on capital account, although it was expended to bring up the road to the general condition which the altered needs require. You might just as well say that the original cost of construction should be taken out of income. The bridges require to be doubled in strength. I propose in effect to take two bridges and make one out of them. I am not charging that bridge to capital, but I am charging to capital the bridge to replace the one taken away. A century would be occupied in bringing the Intercolonial Railway up to the necessary standard and enable it to compete for and carry the business offered, if the necessary outlay were to be taken from revenue. Parliament would be tying the hands of the Minister and making the Intercolonial Railway useless until, after a long lapse of years, there had been accumulated sufficient income to pay for these necessary betterments in the direction I have mentioned.

The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) seems to be of the opinion that it was the rule in some years past that those betterments should be paid out of income. Hon. gentlemen need only turn up the Estimates submitted by the ex-Minister of Finance during the last Parliament to see item after item of the very kind and description I submit here. It is true we do not happen to find any item for the building of heavier bridges.

Mr. HAGGART. To what Estimates is the hon. gentleman referring?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am referring to the Estimates for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1897. I find the following headings: "Coal trestle and shed at Mulgrave," "Increased accommodation at Pictou," "Extend freight at Truro," "Increased accommodation at St. Flavien," "To provide a water supply at Grand Narrows," "To provide station sidings at No Man's Brook," "To do cribwork protection at Cape Breton," "To make improvements at Little Metis," "Improvements at Sussex," "Improvements at Trenton," "Improvements at Orangedale." I could go through previous years and show that it is by no means the rule which the hon. gentleman has stated in recent years, and I think I am entitled to follow the example which has been set me, and particularly am I entitled to claim that the construction of what are practically new bridges of a heavier character would be a proper charge to make upon the capital of the country, and especially so when I repeat that that is the invariable rule, as I am informed, on the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Might I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) whether the rule is to charge the entire cost of the new bridge in such a case, or the cost a new bridge less the value of the bridge which is replaced? I do not know about the usage on the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway, but I do know that in a great many companies the cost of a new work of that kind is charged to capital, less the value of the work which it replaced at the time it was replaced.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is correct, and that is what we are doing here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not quite understand that before.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the case.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to know from the Minister what is the total cost of this work and how much of it he thinks is betterment? He states that the amount charged to capital account is only the cost of the betterment or improvement required for the increased strength of the bridge.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said that there were three points, from two of which the spans were removed. There are two spans taken from one place and two spans taken from another, and the two are brought to a common centre and added to two spans which are already located, making six spans, and these six give the necessary weight for the bridge, and we have therefore two bridges to build in place of the two spans in each case which have been removed.

Mr. HAGGART. I understand you are taking some of the old bridges and utilizing them as part of the new ones, and I want to know what the total cost of that is, and whether the Minister includes the price of putting them up and what the amount of the betterment is? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) instanced a lot of works which he said were of a similar character to this, but not one of which was of a similar character. The expenditure at Mulgrave and these other places was entirely for new work. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) might as well charge to capital account if he changed the 56-pound rail to a 75-pound rail, which would be required for the purpose of improved traffic on the road and accommodating these heavier engines.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And I think that would be an entirely defensible position.

Mr. HAGGART. We do not. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) says that in order to make a comparison of the cost of the Intercolonial Railway we should continue on a similarity of accounts, but I state that in no estimate I ever brought down was anything such as the improvement of a bridge or snow sheds charged to capital. Even in the case of large expenditures such as for terminal facilities at Halifax and St. John, which is entirely new work, I had a great deal of doubt about asking Parliament to make that expenditure on capital account. I was of opinion, and I enforced it as much as possible on my department, that it was time the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway was closed altogether, and that unless there was new mileage added or an addition of that kind made, it was not justifiable to ask this House to vote the expenditure on capital account. What is the cost of the betterments on this particular bridge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The betterments are estimated not to exceed $50,000, and the principle upon which the calculation has been made is that no portion of the amount of the original value of the bridge and cost of the bridge is to be charged against capital. The only cost to be charged against capital is the sum which it will take to bring the bridges up to the necessary standard. The hon. gentleman has had no cases of this kind to deal with in the past, because the necessity did not arise.

Mr. HAGGART. What is the total cost of the improvements ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We intend this year to expend to the amount of $50,000 and next year probably we will ask a further sum. The estimate of the engineer's department is that in order to go over the whole road it would take something like $200,000, and our expectation was that we might be able to spread that expenditure over a period of four years.

Mr. HAGGART. With reference to this particular bridge which the Minister is asking $50,000 for, what amount does he intend to charge to capital and what amount to income ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can only give the hon. gentleman the amount we are actually going to expend for the new spans we will put in. There are six new spans altogether, every two of which we estimate will cost $14,000, and that will amount to $42,000. We have calculated up to that and these are the only direct figures that have been furnished to me. The $50,000 will be expressly applied to the new and not to any repair of the old.

Mr. HAGGART. All I can learn from the Minister is that the total expenditure is to be in the neighbourhood of $42,000 on income and capital, and he is asking $50,000 which he states is only to be employed in betterment, or $8,000 in excess of what ought to be the cost on income and capital combined.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not yet had any answer to my question as to whether when the wooden bridges were replaced by iron bridges, the cost was charged to capital or to income, and when the heavy rail was substituted for the light rail, whether the cost was charged to capital or to income.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am aware of the fact that when the rail was increased from 56 pounds to 67 pounds, the difference in cost was not charged to capital, but was paid out of income. As to the bridges, the Deputy Minister tells me that when any of the old bridges were replaced with new ones, the cost was charged to income.

Mr. FOSTER. These are cases exactly in point. I venture to state, so far as my knowledge is concerned, that that has been invariably the rule with the past Government. If when you replace an old wooden bridge with a new iron bridge, I would like to know if the argument, from the Minister's present position, is not strong, that that should be charged to capital ? And when you take a light rail, and replace it with a rail nearly twice as heavy, you thereby improve the working capacity of the road.

Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is a 67-pound rail nearly twice as heavy as a 56-pound rail ?

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend wishes to take a small point, he is welcome to do it. There is certainly a great difference between the two. When you substitute the heavy rail for the light rail, you make the carrying capacity and the endurance and permanence of the road very much greater ; you can put on heavier locomotives and heavier cars. Every argument which the hon. gentleman has used for charging the cost of these bridges to capital account can be used in these two instances, and used with greater effect than the hon. gentleman is trying to use it here. My hon. friend says that unless he is allowed to do this, it is impossible to get the betterments. He is taking this year $50,000. Can he not take that out of income ? He can, but if he does, his deficit will be more by $50,000 than if he takes it out of capital. There have been deficits on the Intercolonial Railway for years. These deficits have been created largely by charging these betterments to income and not to capital ; and so my hon. friend this year proposes to abstract $50,000 from capital account, and save the income by that much, and by that much lessen the deficit of the railways ; and then he will go through the length and breadth of the country saying how much better his administration has been than that of the late Minister of Railways. I say that is simply cooking the accounts ; there is no other word for it. When the public compare the expenditures on the Intercolonial Railway against its receipts from year to year, they suppose that the accounts are kept from year to year in about the same way. I grant you, there will be little shades of difference where it will be difficult to make the distinction between capital and income. That will occur under all governments and all ministers ; but the main distinctions can be kept. The Minister knows what these are. The cases which he has given to-night, when the facts have been got from his deputy, are cases stronger than those he has cited of expenditures charged against income account. In previous years these have been charged to income, but when the Minister proposes to charge them to capital, I want to know how anybody can make a fair comparison as to how the Intercolonial has been managed from year to year. What the hon. gentleman should do is to follow the precedents of previous years as far as possible, if he wants to show a fair comparison and to give us in Parliament and the public a chance to know whether the railway is being run as economically as before. I put that in a fair spirit of criticism as to account keeping. I put it to the Minister of Public Works, when we were discussing the question before, and in the end he acceded to that view—not because he thought the expenditure should not go to capital, but in order to carry out the custom of previous years, for the sake of comparison of the accounts. Therefore I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Railways that he had better charge this to income rather than to capital. The money has to be expended and the country has to foot the Bill; but by all means, whatever Government is in power, let us keep about the same uniform method of accounts. In that way we will not be doing any harm to each other as parties; but the greater end will be gained of letting the public know exactly how matters are going as regards these great works of ours.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Minister of Railways will surely yield to the appeal which has been made to him to keep the continuity of the comparison, which he knows is a most important thing. I am sure that he does not wish to gain any advantage from a comparison before the public of facts which cannot fairly be compared. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that if he compares the expenditure on the Intercolonial under his system of charging to capital account that which was charged to income by the late Government, the comparison cannot possibly be fair; and I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want an unfair comparison before the public. The hon. gentleman will perhaps tell me whether he would to-day regard the construction of entirely new cars as being properly charged to capital account or to revenue account?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would depend altogether upon the circumstances.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Would the hon. gentleman tell me under what circumstances he would charge them to capital account?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should think we ought to charge them to capital account if we were furnishing additional cars beyond the number that have been maintained from time to time. Suppose the business demands are such that we require a thousand additional cars, I should feel that we would be entitled to ask Parliament to put us in possession of funds from capital account to supply those additional cars. We are adding to our equipment, not simply replacing the former equipment. Therefore, they must properly be charged to capital account, and that has always been the practice.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am afraid that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways will have difficulty with that proposition before Council. That is, providing his colleagues have not absolutely abandoned every vestige of the policy they advocated in Opposition. The very proposition the hon. gentleman put was discussed before this House by his colleague, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the hon. gentleman will find in the "Hansard" of 1891, page 3,802, what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said. Discussing the question of new freight cars, he went on to condemn the Government for doing just what the hon. gentleman is now doing. He said:

An enormous amount of money was expended some years ago in the building of freight cars for the carriage of coal, and I think I am within bounds when I say $2,000,000. I may be wrong, for I speak without reference to the book, but every dollar of that should have been carried to revenue instead of capital account.

The hon. gentleman now contends that that should all go to capital account; but if I remember correctly, the Minister of Trade and Commerce stormed, time and time again, against the late Government, and demanded that the capital account of the Intercolonial should be closed for ever.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You would need to close the road.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That he must argue with his colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and not with me; but I tell the truth when I say that not only the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as well as the Hon. Edward Blake, all contended that even the small amounts which were being charged to capital by the late Minister of Railways and Canals for absolutely new constructions, such as the extension of the line and the erection of new accommodation in various points should have gone against revenue account. I appeal to the Minister of Public Works to say now whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not persistently demand that the capital account of the Intercolonial should be closed and that these things should be applied to revenue account entirely. I am sure that the Minister of Railways and Canals wishes us to go before the country with an argument and a comparison upon a fair basis, and now I ask him whether he will contend for a moment that we can go before the country and have a fair comparison, if he persists in charging to capital account large sums for constructions which, under the old Administration, were charged to revenue account entirely?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that the hon. gentleman can be serious in putting the proposition in the form in which he has put it. It is not a business suggestion, because he takes no note whatever of the altered conditions which undeniably exist, and which all those operating railways in the country recognize as existing. I cannot see why the hon. gentleman should think it is fair argument to say that the reason of this vote is that a comparison may be more favourably made between the late and the present Government. We do not need to ask the vote I am now proposing for the purpose of renewing or repairing the bridges here mentioned. Those bridges, with such ordinary repairs as would be made from time to time, would probably last half a century, but we cannot do the business with them, and we must have our bridges increased in strength. My hon. friend is not willing that a comparison should be made fairly as between myself and the previous Minister of Railways and Canals. The facts show that the bridges are not in need of repair and that we need not spend a dollar on them for ordinary purposes, but we have to double them up and make them into a totally different bridge to do the business. Why should I be asked to pay the large sum that will necessarily be imposed upon me out of income or revenue, if I am to do the business at all as it now requires to be done. I have always found my hon. friend reasonable and fair, and do not know why he should insist that a course should be taken which would, beyond doubt, and necessarily make the comparison unfavourable to my administration? But I do not think it is a question of comparison between my hon. friend's administration and myself at all. It is always open to my hon. friend to make the argument he has made.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman is quite aware that it is the custom in this House and before the electors to make comparisons between the two administrations, and it is a matter of great importance that the electors should receive proper information when instituting comparisons. I want to ask my hon. friend has he not admitted that he has charged to capital what under the previous administration was charged to revenue.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has he not admitted that he has charged to capital account the same class of work that, under a former administration, was charged to revenue account?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think I heard it stated by the hon. Minister that under the previous administration, this strengthening and renewal of bridges was charged to revenue account.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was asked, when the wooden bridges decayed and they were replaced by iron bridges, whether the iron bridges were charged to capital or revenue account, and my deputy informs me that they were charged to revenue account. The new bridges were built to replace the old ones, and are no doubt more durable.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. Minister states that under the old administration, when a wooden bridge was done away with and an iron one was constructed in its place that was charged to revenue account, and now he says that if you remove one iron bridge and put in another somewhat stronger in its place, you should charge that to capital account and not to revenue account?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say that if you take the spans upon the bridge and make them part of another bridge you are practically putting in a new bridge in the place of the one that, though it is taken away is still in use. You are not losing the old bridge, for the old bridge still exists, not in the same place but as part of another bridge.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then you are not buying a single span—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, you are buying what is, in fact, a new bridge.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. Minister says that if you take down a wooden bridge, which, if I am correctly informed costs two or three times as much—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not necessarily.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Usually so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, not usually so.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Well, sometimes so, and in this case so—I want to be fair with the hon. gentleman as he has said I am; but for the life of me, I cannot understand on what principle he will charge the change from a cheap wooden bridge to an expensive iron or steel bridge to revenue account, in the next moment ask us to charge the expense of improving an iron bridge which already exists to capital account—for that is the proposition he makes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) thinks that is the proposition I make, I can only say he is mistaken.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the proposition?

Mr. CAMPBELL. He has stated it two or three times already.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Well, will the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) explain it. I challenge any hon. gentleman to explain it otherwise than as I have done.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not said that when these wooden structures are replaced with steel which, the hon. gentleman says, costs two or three times as much, the additional cost should not be charged to capital.

Mr. MONTAGUE. But it was charged to revenue under the other Government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But I do not say that it is a sound principle.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Oh, now we are getting at it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member (Mr. Montague) must not assume that I am responsible for everything done by my predecessors.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. Minister state what are the extraordinary conditions that call for heavier bridges?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have now engines that are many tons heavier than those that have been in use—

Mr. MONTAGUE. How many are there?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not as many as we hope to have. We are going to ask Parliament, I apprehend, to give us the means to get some of those heavy engines; and we wish to have our bridges in shape so that we can carry these heavy engines. Unless we can carry out this policy we can not do the business.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) and I understand each other. He says he charged the change from wooden to steel or iron bridges to revenue account, but he does not advocate that system.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that it is necessarily sound.

Mr. BERGERON. It may be unfortunate for the House, but it is certainly very fortunate for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) that he was not here under the old administration to hear the criticisms of his friends. Since we are to have these big engines to carry the great traffic on the Intercolonial Railway, brought down, I suppose, by the Drummond County Road, perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us what is the deficit in the earnings of the road this year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am very desirous of giving the hon. gentleman all the information he seeks, because he asks his questions in a very friendly spirit. But he will see that I can not give him the returns for the present year, because those returns will not be made out until after the close of the year, and the year ends on the 30th June. When the general item of the Intercolonial Railway is up, I intend to give to the House some idea of the expectations I have on the subject, and, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) will pardon me, I will not give that statement just now.

Mr. POWELL. The Miramichi bridges, which were strengthened for the same reason which the hon. gentleman gives for strengthening these—the heavy rolling stock on the Intercolonial Railway. I would ask whether the betterments in these cases were charged to capital or to income. I would ask also the same question with regard to the bridge across the Tantramar, a very long bridge, which was strengthened two years ago. The contract in that case was awarded, I believe, to Mr. Forbes, of Halifax, and some thousands of dollars expended.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will be glad to procure the information desired by the hon. gentleman, but I cannot give it offhand, and I apprehend that my deputy will hardly be able to do so either. The hon. gentleman wants the amount expended on the Miramichi bridges—

Mr. POWELL. No, not the amount expended, but whether the expenditure was charged to capital or to income?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have already answered that question. I said that I was informed with respect to the bridges that were changed from wood to iron, all were charged to income.

Mr. POWELL. But the Miramichi bridges never were wooden.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am told that the amount was charged to income.

Mr. POWELL. And what about the Tantramar?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was charged in the same way.

Mr. POWELL. I would ask the Minister if the reason for the strengthening of these three bridges, at a very large cost, was not the heavier rolling stock being put on the Intercolonial Railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Deputy Minister says it is due to that cause.

Mr. MONTAGUE. So the cases are on all fours.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I do not think so. With respect to the expenditure on the line from Rivière du Loup to Lévis, I do not know with regard to the expenditure upon bridges, but I do know that the work that was done upon that road in reforming the embankment, in laying sleepers, in putting down rails, and in ballasting, amounting altogether to something over one million dollars, every dollar of it was charged to capital account. After the roadbed had been bought, which cost about $12,000 a mile, over one million dollars was spent on this 125 miles, and all was charged to capital account.

Mr. HAGGART. That was taken over from the Grand Trunk Railway. It had fallen into a bad state of repair, and they had to put it up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway, and there had to be a large expenditure.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman admits that under the old administration wooden bridges replaced by iron bridges and the construction of new ones, were charged to revenue.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And that of weaker iron bridges strengthened or replaced by stronger ones, the cost was also charged to revenue.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In so far as an outlay was made.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Now, I want the hon. gentleman to admit that for purposes of comparison between periods, since he is charging the strengthening of iron bridges to capital, he cannot compare the periods in future at all, the comparison is destroyed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think you can make a fair comparison in that way between these cases. No doubt, many bridges required from time to time to be strengthened and repaired; no doubt these Miramichi bridges required to be strengthened from time to time. But this present proposal is something totally different from any thing that has been done heretofore, in that we are requiring practically to double up, over the whole extent of this line, the carrying capacity of many of our bridges. The Deputy Minister tells me that there were no new additional spans, some few additional cords were put in, but they were trifling. The amount is inconsiderable compared with the additional cost which these structures require.

Mr. COCHRANE. Would not the principle be the same?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it would make all the difference in the world. The business of the road now requires engines weighing twenty, twenty-five or thirty tons heavier than those heretofore used. The cases are not parallel. You have to go over these roads and double the weight of the iron, and double the carrying capacity of many of these bridges. There has been, I think, in times past on that road no similar experience to this. If we had to pay this out of income, the effect would probably be that we would have to postpone to an indefinite period the putting of our bridges in a safe condition, because we could not undertake it. It would be unreasonable in addition to put upon income the cost of repairing and strengthening the bridges from point to point, if we had to spend $50,000 and upwards a year in order to get those bridges in shape for business. We would probably have to defer the strengthening of these bridges, and consequently we would have to defer the work of getting our line into shape.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Here is what a very solemn authority in this House said upon this very point:

An attempt to eke out a deficiency at the expense of capital account would be a very dishonest procedure.

That is the opinion of the Hon. Edward Blake, who is now a member of the Imperial Parliament, who was leader of the Opposition at that time, and who was criticising this very practice.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How did he impress you at the time?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I must say that he was a little vague later on. But I have no doubt if the hon. gentleman had been here, he would have impressed him wonderfully, as he did the hon. gentlemen on that side of the House who are now silent, but who at that time cheered most lustily the sentiments he expressed.

Mr. HUGHES. It appears to me that members on this side of the House are a little persistent with the Minister of Railways and Canals. I cannot see what more they want. He has repudiated his colleagues, he has said that he does not hold himself bound by any arguments they have placed on the "Hansard" in past years. It is a little peculiar that as soon as this discussion came up, the hon. member for North Wellington got up and sloped out of the House; we see the Minister of Trade and Commerce get up and quietly meander out; we see the Postmaster General get up and slip out another door; and the only one of the old guards that is left is the Minister of Commerce.

Mr. COCHRANE. The Minister of Railways and Canals says that the old Administration made a mistake in charging the renewal of the bridges to revenue when it should be charged to capital account. Now, he says, if I understand him aright, that because he is compelled to pay larger sums than they did, therefore they ought to be charged to capital account. If I understand him, if a bridge requires $10,000 to strengthen it, that should be charged to revenue, but if it requires $20,000, it should be charged to capital account. Is that the doctrine? Under the old Administration they renewed wooden bridges by replacing them by iron bridges.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, because the old ones decayed.

Mr. COCHRANE. Hon. gentlemen opposite wish to avoid a deficit, and are therefore charging this work to capital instead of revenue. I want to be fair with the country in discussing the matter, and hon. gentlemen opposite should be fair with the country and not withdraw from all their pledges and statements made when in Opposition. Hon. gentlemen opposite now admit that the Liberal party made a mistake when they declared that the changing of wooden bridges to iron bridges should be charged to revenue and not capital account. The trouble is that the present Administration does not want to be responsible for anything. No doubt the hon. member for North Wellington will back up the Government again and will come to the rescue of the Minister, and give reasons why the Government should go back on all the principles they advocated when in Opposition. I cannot understand why if the late administration replaced wooden bridges with iron bridges and charged the cost to revenue, the expense of strengthening these iron bridges should not be charged to revenue.

Mr. INGRAM. When were the iron bridges, which now require strengthening, constructed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In 1872 or thereabouts. This expenditure, however, is not so much to strengthen the existing bridges, as to utilise the iron in them, closing them together, putting them into one or two, and practically providing new bridges for the balance. That is the effect of the proposition.

Mr. INGRAM. What was the weight of the engines used on the Intercolonial when these bridges were built?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My deputy says he cannot state what the weight was, but the cylinders were 16 x 22, and the new engines will be 19 x 28.

Mr. McDUGALL. Is it the intention of the Government to spend any of this money on the Georges River bridge on the Cape Breton division?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had not such an expenditure in contemplation, for we are not likely to run any of our heavy engines over that part of the road.

Mr. McDUGALL. Is it the intention to improve the condition of the bridge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is under consideration.

Mr. McDUGALL. I understand that the condition is unsatisfactory, that it is not safe.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is safe.

Mr. McDUGALL. It may be safe, but there is some question about it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no question about it.

Mr. McDUGALL. It would not be wise to delay a proper examination of that bridge, because it is built on a very sharp curve, and is a dangerous place if any accident should happen.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have had an examination made and report on it.

Mr. McDUGALL. Latterly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Within the last six months.

Mr. McDUGALL. I have heard nothing about it within that time.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman intend to have all the bridges finished and strengthened before any of the new engines are allowed to pass over the road?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I hope so.

Mr. INGRAM. I cannot believe that the hon. gentleman cannot tell us the weight of the engines.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman suggest that I stated what was not correct?

Mr. INGRAM. I cannot believe the Deputy Minister is not in a position to tell the hon. gentleman the weight of the engines on the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a very common form of indicating the capacity of an engine to mention the size of the cylinder and the length of the stroke. An officer may not be able to tell the weight, but the size of the cylinder indicates it to an intelligent man.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not convey anything to me. I too cannot believe that the Deputy Minister or the railway engineer who has been in charge of the Intercolonial for fourteen or fifteen years is not able to give approximately the weight of the engines now in use. I think we should have that information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The deputy will be glad to procure the information, which he has not at hand at the moment. The question, however, was as to the weight of the engines in 1872, when the bridges were built. That is the question I asked of the deputy, and he stated that he did not like to commit himself definitely about it, but he would obtain the information.

Mr. INGRAM. There is not a manager of a railway who cannot tell the weight or tonnage of the engines on his road. Some years ago 30-ton engines were used, with light rails and light bridges, but increased competition led to increased weight of rails and iron bridges owing to the fact that 90-ton engines were used. We know that the cylinders vary in size, but every railway manager knows also the weight of the engines.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is what the Minister told you an hour ago.

Mr. INGRAM. The Minister did not tell me anything about the tonnage of these engines.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He told the reason for strengthening the bridges.

Mr. INGRAM. I know the reason for strengthening the bridges as well as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell), and as well as the Minister for that matter. I do not understand how it is that they do not know the tonnage of the engines. Every railway company in this country knows that.

Mr. POWELL. What is the weight of the large engine.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Seventy-two tons.

Mr. POWELL. What was the weight of the Moguls ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Deputy Minister says about 50 tons. The nearest he can come to the weight of the old engines in use in 1872 is 40 tons.

Mr. FOSTER. From whom does the Minister of Railways propose to buy the new spans he is putting in the bridge ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I really have not given any consideration to that yet. We propose to ask for tenders.

Mr. FOSTER. I want now to make a final appeal, not to the Minister of Railways, but to the Minister of Finance. This matter is now about as plain as it can be made if we discussed it for two hours more. The Minister of Railways proposes a new plan with reference to the apportionment of the expenditure. He has himself admitted and been informed by his deputy that in the past, when the wooden bridges, as traffic became heavier, were replaced by the stronger and more costly iron bridges, it was charged to the revenue account; that when iron bridges of great strength were made still stronger, owing to the increased traffic and weight of rolling stock, that was charged against revenue; that when the 56-pound rail was replaced by the 67-pound rail for the same reason, that was also charged to revenue. The present Minister (Mr. Blair) says he does not agree with that system at all that he did not originate it, did not practice it, and is not responsible for it. To-day he has iron bridges which are to be strengthened; and he says that this strengthening must be placed to capital account and not to revenue account; and his chief reason is that if it were not that way he could not strengthen them at all. Evidently he can get the $50,000 required for this just as easily out of revenue as out of capital. But there is a deficit at the end of the year and the consolidated fund has to make up that deficit. In plain English, the meaning of the Minister is that there is to be a change in the method of book-keeping which will result in this way: that whereas formerly an item like this would cause $50,000 more of a deficit on the Intercolonial Railway, now there will be $50,000 less of a deficit, but the $50,000 will be expended all the same and charged to capital. If the Minister of Railways does not see any obligation on his part to maintain a continuity and uniformity of accounts—not for party purposes, because the Minister of Railways is above that we will say—I appeal to the Minister of Finance, whose duty it is to guard the accounts of the country and place them properly before the people; I appeal to him as a man of responsibility in that respect, whether he proposes to give his weight and the weight of the Government towards that change. If he does, what we must do is to examine these matters before a committee and take care every year that the country knows just exactly the sum total of these differences. The country pays the bill in the end, and what matter should it make to the Minister of Railways. There is no man so warped as to ask that just for a matter of this kind, the whole face of these accounts shall be changed, and that hereafter the country will always be at the mercy of the man who speaks last, one saying that there was such a deficit and the other saying that the real deficit is more, because what was formerly paid out of revenue is now paid out of capital. In the interest of straight book-keeping and of presenting the public accounts in the uniform manner to the people, I make an appeal to the Minister of Finance. That responsibility is on the Minister of Finance, and I do hope that in this case he will take exactly the same position he took with reference to the items in public works, and that he will counsel that this work be charged to income.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I had not the good fortune to be present during the entire discussion, as I was obliged to leave the House on a pressing engagement, so perhaps I speak at a disadvantage. I think it is even better to be right than consistent, and without entering into the question of what has been the practise I must say that from the discussion I did hear the Minister of Railways created the impression in my mind that in charging these sums to capital account he was doing that which was done by all the leading railways of Canada to-day. If that is the fact it is a fair argument for charging it to capital. Whether we have been right in the past in our dealings with these matters is also a fair subject for consideration. If my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is right, that precisely similar works have been charged to revenue account, undoubtedly that would need to be taken into consideration in any comparison which might be made with reference to the Intercolonial Railway. From that part of the discussion which I heard, I was impressed with the fact that the item now proposed to be charged to capital is precisely the same as is charged to capital on the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway. If that be the fact, it would be difficult to prove that the course pursued is a wrong one, yet if it is inconsistent with the practice it is a fair question for discussion. I admit that if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is correct in his statement that similar charges have been in the past placed against revenue, that fact would have to be taken into consideration in any comparison of the workings of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose there is no moral principle of right or wrong in mere technical book-keeping. The only question that men have to look at when charged with the responsibility of exposing these accounts to the country is to keep a uniform method, and I do hope that this item will be allowed to stand so that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) may have a chance to talk it over with his colleagues. I do not overrate the importance of it. If it is done in this case it may be done in other cases, and it is quite certain, such are partisan methods in this country, that if it is done once it may be carried on. It is a bad principle to import into our finances. Wherever else we may carry politics, do not let us carry politics into the finances of the country. Now, I am quite willing to take the history of the Railway Department and bring it to the test, and say whether or not the course of that history has not been to charge these things in the main to revenue rather than to capital. If so, we are on no fair ground of comparison hereafter. Anyway, the hon. gentleman should allow this to stand for the time being. It makes no difference to him or to the vote. We want to have these bridges strengthened, and if he gets the bridge from income it will be just as strong a bridge as it would be if he got it from capital.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Speaking from a manufacturing point of view, the distinction would be between replacing an old piece of machinery that is worn out and utterly useless, and putting in new machinery. In this case, you will continue to have the asset which you have now, with all its value; it is not to be destroyed. It is not like the renewal of a wooden bridge that has become absolutely useless, and has to be replaced by a new wooden bridge or any other structure. You will have all the asset you have now, and in addition to that you have a new asset.

Mr. FOSTER. I will take my hon. friend on his own ground as a business man. Suppose he runs a business as manager for a company; for ten years he runs it in a certain way, and is accustomed to charge such and such things to current expenses, and such and such things to capital account. After he has run the business in that way and made yearly reports to his stockholders, another man comes in to manage the business, and he has a different idea. He says: "I think I can make the yearly accounts show a little better to the stockholders if I charge certain things to capital account which hitherto have been charged to income." He charges say, $10,000 in this way to capital, and his report to the stockholders at the end of the year appears $10,000 better than his predecessor's. Would my hon. friend, as a business man, think the stockholders were being properly used in such a case?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Is that a parallel case?

Mr. FOSTER. I think so.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, because the Minister is putting in $10,000 of new machinery. That is just the distinction. He keeps the present asset; he keeps the three spans, and he puts in three entirely new spans. The country has only got a bridge, it is true, but it is a bridge worth double the money.

Mr. COCHRANE. The Minister of Customs will see the absurdity of his argument when it is put in the proper light. He takes the ground that the Minister of Railways and Canals, in taking some spans and putting them with other spans to strengthen the bridge is giving the country an asset. The old administration took out a wooden bridge that was useless, and put in a new iron bridge, and it was charged to revenue; and yet, according to the hon. gentleman, the country did not get an asset. I think the absurdity of the argument will be apparent to the Minister of Customs himself.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman ought to see the absurdity of it, because he says that the wooden bridge which was replaced by the iron bridge was useless, was of no value, was not an asset, whereas in this case, we still have a valuable asset of the same value that it was before, and we add to it another asset—and the asset which we propose to charge to capital account is an entirely new structure.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The Minister of Customs has demonstrated that he slept a good while, because he says the old wooden bridge was absolutely useless. The reason given by the Minister of Railways why the old wooden bridge was changed to iron was that the weight of the rolling stock was increased, and the reason given for strengthening the iron bridge is that the weight of the rolling stock has been increased. I appeal to the hon. gentleman to say whether these cases are not entirely parallel. The Minister of Finance has hardly grasped the whole question properly in view of its past history in this House. The position of the two Governments, if I may believe "Hansard," has always been that the renewal of works which have once been constructed should be charged to revenue, and that only absolutely new works should be charged to capital.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that general statement can be accurate, because in the case of the wharfs and sheds which were destroyed by fire at Halifax, the proposal was, when they were burned down, that they should be rebuilt out of capital.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I can understand that every rule has its exception, and that is an exceptional case, where a work is destroyed by fire and has not been worn out by use.

Mr. HAGGART. Is the Minister correct when he says I proposed to rebuild out of capital the buildings which had been burned?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Let me go on and state my position. At any rate, as a general rule the contention of the late Government was that in the case of works which had been built in the early history of the Intercolonial and had to be renewed for ordinary causes, the renewals should be charged to revenue. But that when an absolutely new work had to be constructed, it should be constructed out of capital. The Opposition of those days contended that the Government did not go far enough and that not only should the renewals for strengthening of old work be charged to revenue but the construction of new works also. I have here the statement of Mr. Ross, the present Minister of Education for Ontario, who was discussing this very subject in 1883, and who declared what the principle of his own leader, Mr. McKenzie, was.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Probably if the hon. gentleman is in Opposition some little time, he will be making some contentions too.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not making any contention that we did not carry out when in power. The Hon. Mr. Ross said:

I remember the discussion that arose between the hon. gentleman and the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) as to the propriety of charging new works to capital account, and the hon. member for East York maintained that after the road was completed all additional works should be charged to revenue.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Railways has intimated that he has no special desire to press this item unduly, but will let it stand for to-night. I think we may possibly err in attempting to follow precedent too closely in this matter. We have had some very strange ideas in our estimates as to what should be charged to capital and what to revenue. We charged to capital a large sum of money which was applied to the excellent purpose of buying cartridges which go up in smoke. Then we spent a lot of money in buying a piece of land and putting up a $200,000 building on it and charged that to revenue.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is that in Liverpool?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, that will be exceedingly modest, and the kindly interest which the hon. gentleman took in it will be remembered in due course. The hundreds of thousands of dollars which are spent in acquiring land and putting up expensive buildings, such as the new drill hall at Halifax, which will cost upwards of $200,000, are charged to income, while the money that is spent on ammunition is charged to capital. That is one of the anomalies, in which we may not be right in adhering too closely to the past. I do not think the Hon. Mr. Ross, who is now Minister of Education in Ontario, would claim that he had attained perfection when a member of this House. He doubtless improved in his views after he became a Minister in Ontario. The Minister of Railways has agreed to let this item stand for further consideration and perhaps we will make progress with some of the other items.

Mr. FOSTER. The very fact which the hon. gentleman has adduced is a very good reason for the argument I have been trying to make. We commenced these public works out of income and have kept that up, and I think that so long as we have a Parliament we will keep it up, if for no other reason than that of keeping a parity of accounts.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That means that in order to prevent possible advantages for one party or the other, we are not to make changes.

Mr. FOSTER. I threw that out of consideration owing to the fact that I thought the Minister of Railways would hardly like to come down to so low a ground, and therefore I took the other ground, which is still higher, and that is the information to the public.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If we agree as to what is right, I would say we should do that, irrespective of what was done in by-gone years, and not follow a bad precedent. I quite agree that we should not make a change from one practice to another, in such a manner as to create erroneous impressions in the comparison between the two political parties.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman was wrong in saying that the Dominion Cartridge Factory was charged to revenue.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have the ammunition charged to capital.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is not quite fair. Two years ago we were face to face with this fact. We decided on a large appropriation of $1,500,000 for the militia, and that included our schools and the Cartridge Factory as well. We came to the conclusion that the time had arrived when we should expend an extraordinary amount in order to get a stronger and fuller equipment, and we spent nearly $2,000,000. That vote was agreed to as a special case, but it is not right to say that the cartridges we have for our common use are charged to capital account. We purchased batteries and ammunition, it was for an extraordinary purpose, and it was absolutely necessary to charge it to capital account because we had not the income for it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is one of the arguments my hon. friend condemned a moment ago.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I would like to ask the Minister of Railways whether the railway to water terminus at North Sydney is under construction?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have just entered into a contract with Ross & McManus.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What are the terms of the contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Between $22,000 and $23,000, if my memory serves me right.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There was some discussion with regard to the route over which the road was to be extended to the water from the present railway station.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We run down the valley of Oxford Creek or Belly Creek to the water-down to the Emory wharf.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What depth of water is there at the end of the pier?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am advised there will be 18 feet at the end of the pier at low water.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What is to be the length of the dock?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A steamer will lie in front, alongside, and the wharf will be a narrow one.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Then it is not the intention to build the breastwork to the old works, except to build a pier into the harbour?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What is the length of the pier?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can give the hon. gentleman details to-morrow. The chief engineer says the wharf will be about 600 feet long. That is a sufficient pier, I think.

Mr. McDOUGALL. If it is 600 feet, I think it will do for present purposes. I would like if the hon. Minister would be kind enough to give some information I asked for in the early part of the session in regard to dismissals on the Cape Breton division of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This item will stand.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I want to know whether I am to get the information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Did the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) ask for some information, and has it not been brought down?

Mr. McDOUGALL. No. I asked my question on the 17th February in the following words:—

What changes have been made in the employees in the Cape Breton division of the Intercolonial Railway since June, 1896?

That information was refused. I put it in the form of a notice of motion for papers, and that was called on two occasions, and on each occasion the request came from the Government side of the House to have it stand. Finding I could not bring my motion on and discuss it, I asked to have it dropped in order to have the opportunity of getting the information by other means. I am still without the information I desire, and I ask the Minister what time he will be prepared, if not now, to give it to me. I am prepared now to go into the facts of these dismissals; but if it will be more convenient for the hon. Minister, let him name any other time that will be convenient, and I am willing to agree to a postponement of the matter until that time, unless it is too late in the session.

An hon. MEMBER. Next winter.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It will not do next winter. I want to see that these items do not pass before I get some satisfaction with regard to these dismissals. I would not have taken that stand if I had been fairly treated when I asked for the information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I scarcely imagine for a moment that the hon. gentleman would say that I had not treated him fairly. I do not recollect that he asked me for any information which I declined to give. If he withdrew any notice of motion designed to bring out information, it was not at my instance or suggestion. If he had intimated to me the information he desired, I would have done what I could to secure it for him. The information that he asks for is not the kind that he can get at a moment's notice. I shall have to send to Moncton for it, and it cannot be here in a day or a week, as it will take some little time to prepare it and send it forward. The hon. gentleman will surely not say that I treated him with want of courtesy or declined to give him the information asked for.

Mr. McDOUGALL. That seems to me a most extraordinary way to meet a matter that was put on the public records early in the session. I have here a clipping from the official record of the 17th of February last. I read—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The discussion that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) proposes to bring on will come up more properly under item No. 252.

Mr. McDOUGALL. If you are going to take that plan of shutting me out from getting information, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If I may be permitted—

Mr. McDOUGALL. I shall see to it that the Minister shall not gain anything by attempting to shut me out that way.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I only called the hon. gentleman's attention to an item under which this discussion could more properly take place.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not want the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) to imagine that there is any information that I can give him that he is not going to get. But he cannot expect me to carry all these details in my head. I do not recollect that he ever asked me for information that I declined to give. He must have misunderstood the circumstances or have forgotten what actually happened. There is a general item for the Intercolonial Railway which I do not expect to reach to-night. If the hon. gentleman will give me a memo. in a friendly way across the floor, showing the information he wants, I will try to have it for him when the Intercolonial Railway item comes up.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I wish to give an illustration of how I have been treated in this matter, and how I expect to be treated hereafter if this matter is left to a day when it will be impossible to get the information. The notice was put on the official record, and the question was put by me.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What was it?

Mr. McDOUGALL. It was a question as to what dismissals of employees had taken place on the Cape Breton division of the

Mr. BLAIR.

Intercolonial Railway. I was refused that information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What was the answer?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I could not get any answer.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why not?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I was refused, but why I have some difficulty in understanding. I was refused in general terms by several members of the Government of that day. They protested against answering my question as to the changes that have taken place in the Department of Railways and Public Works. The question came up chiefly when asking for information with regard to dismissals under the Fisheries Department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Was the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) asked to move for a return?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I was, and I put a notice of motion on the paper. But when it came up and I was about to move it, a request came from the Government side that the motion should stand, in order to shut me out from going into the question and getting the information, I asked with regard to the dismissals in the fisheries service, the customs service, railway service and public works. This question I put on the Notice Paper on the 17th of February. I followed that up by putting a notice on the paper, and when my notice of motion came on, I was met with a request from the Government to let it stand, and I dropped it. Three or four weeks ago I saw there was a plan of the Government side to prevent me getting information. I put the following questions, and received the following answers:—

Mr. McDOUGALL asked,

1. Why was Mr. Rory McNeil, section foreman at West Bay Road, dismissed from the service of the Cape Breton division of the Intercolonial Railway?
2. Was his dismissal asked for by anybody; if so, by whom?
3. Was there any charge against him; if so, by whom, and was there any investigation?
4. Who was put in his place, and was he in the railway service before?
5. By whom was he recommended?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. Mr. Rory McNeil, section foreman, West Bay Road, was dismissed from the service of the railway on the ground of offensive partisanship. 2. His dismissal was asked for by Dr. McLennan, M.P. 3. A charge of offensive political partisanship was made against McNeil by Dr. A. McLennan, M.P. No investigation was made. 4. D. C. McDonald, trackman at McIntyre's Lake, who has been in the service of the railway since 1891, was put in McNeil's place. 5. D. C. McDonald was recommended for employment by Dr. Cameron in 1891.

That question was asked on the 16th of February, the general question was asked on the next day.

Mr. McDUGALL asked,

What changes have been made in the officials and employees of the Department of Marine, in the county of Cape Breton, since June, 1896?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). In this and succeeding questions the hon. gentleman asks for long lists of names in all the different departments of the Government in the county or in the district of Cape Breton. Another gentleman will probably ask similar questions with regard to the province of Ontario, another with regard to Nova Scotia, and so on. It is practically impossible that this information can be given in the form of answers to questions. But, if the hon. gentleman will put it in the form of a motion, I promise him that the information shall be brought down promptly.

That is the answer I received, and I then put all the questions in the form of a notice for papers. Now in reference to the answers which I received from the Minister of Railways and Canals with regard to the dismissal of Rory McNeil, I wish to show that the information which I received from the Minister is not in accordance with the facts, and that is the reason why I want to get information in regard to others in time to enable me fully to investigate them, and to give to this House what I know is different from the information that the Minister has to give, but yet is correct.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). If the hon. gentleman says that the charge against McNeil is unfounded, I beg to tell him that he is stating what is really not consistent with the facts. Of course I take full responsibility for having made the recommendation for the dismissal of McNeil, who was a most offensive partisan. It is quite true that he was from the hon. gentleman's county, but that does not signify when his conduct is called in question. He has been at the head of a gang employed on the railway who made it their business to insult and attack everybody that was in opposition to them in politics.

Mr. McDUGALL. The hon. gentleman having volunteered to give information on behalf of the Minister, I would like to ask him whether he made a request for the dismissal of Rory McNeil on that ground?

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I certainly made a recommendation to have McNeil dismissed on the ground that he was a most offensive political partisan, and I take full responsibility for having done so.

Mr. McDUGALL. I have some documents here which throw a little more light on the subject. I have here a letter dated 25th August, 1897, written from Point Tupper to Rory McNeil, section foreman on the Intercolonial Railway, West Bay Road:

Dear Sir,—I am instructed by the department to say that after 14 days from date your services will no longer be required.

Yours truly,

C. W. ARCHIBALD,
Track Master.

Here is a letter written by Rory McNeil in reply to C. W. Archibald, dated at West Bay Road, August 26, 1897:

C. W. Archibald, Track Master, I.C.R., Sydney, Cape Breton.

Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, inclosing notice of my dismissal. In reply I would like to be permitted to ask on what grounds my services are to be dispensed with on the Intercolonial Railway. Will you please inquire, and furnish me with this, in order that I may be able to ask for an investigation and defend my position.

I am, yours truly,

RORY McNEIL,
Section Foreman.

The letter is returned to Mr. McNeil, and the following notice on it:—

R. McNeil.

Dear Sir,—No grounds are mentioned.

C. W. A.

I have here a letter which was written in reply to a letter of McNeil, addressed to the hon. member for Inverness. The letter is dated Margaree, 6th October, 1897:

Dear Sir,—By the inclosed you will observe that I have made application for you in Cape Breton County. So great is the local jealousy against my permitting people from other counties to be employed here, in this county, I am going to press for your employment, and will communicate with Dr. Kendall and others with that end in view.

Yours truly,

A. McLENNAN.

But he was born in another county, eighteen miles distant from where he worked. Here is the inclosure:

New Glasgow, Sept. 30, 1897.

Dear Sir,—I am pleased to inform you that I have succeeded in getting John Morrison, of West Bay Road, reinstated as per your request. I had a letter from Mr. W. B. McKenzie yesterday, stating that John Morrison has been reinstated, and in regard to Mr. McNeil, the man you wished to get employment for in Cape Breton County, he regretted to say there was no vacancy in that county at present.

Yours truly,

T. C. CAMPBELL.

This is the McNeil who was dismissed for offensive partisanship, and the hon. member for Inverness wanted to appoint him to Cape Breton County.

He regretted to say there was no vacancy in that county at present.

Yours truly,

T. C. CAMPBELL.

Such is the condition of matters on that division of the Intercolonial Railway, where the hon. member for Inverness wrote to an official of the hon. Minister asking for the employment of a man whom he dismissed, not for offensive partisanship, but for the reason he was not born in the county where he was working. That goes to show to the House the importance which the country should attach to a statement coming from the Government, and to which we are accustomed to listen from day to day, that certain parties were dismissed on information received and that new appointments were given on the recommendations made by people in whom the Government had confidence. That answer of the Government is by this time about patented; we have had it so often with respect to dismissals that I believe we can obtain no other answer except this, that the Government dismissed a man on the recommendation of a gentleman or party in whom they had confidence. Will the Minister tell me now if he has confidence in the hon. member for Inverness, who has misled him, and who, after securing the dismissal of the man for offensive partisanship, forsooth, wrote to the railway officials, behind the Minister's back, recommending the man for a position occupied on some other division of the Intercolonial Railway. That is the position occupied to-day by the Minister and the hon. member in whom he has confidence, and the same position is occupied by them in regard to a great many other dismissals from the service. In order to prepare the Minister for giving the information which I ask in respect to others, I want to call his attention to the dismissal of the blacksmith of the forge at Grand Narrows, Rory B. McNeil. He was dismissed—I do not know for what reason. I am aware of many reports that have been in the air about the dismissal of this man, and of every other employee on that section of the railway. I asked the question of the Minister of Railways some months ago with respect to that man—it was on the 18th April, and was as follows:

1. What was the reason for dismissing the blacksmith employed in the Government forge and railway bridge at Grand Narrows, Cape Breton?
2. Who asked the dismissal?
3. Was there an investigation; if so, before whom?
4. Who gave evidence against the dismissed man?
5. Who was appointed in place of the dismissed man?
6. By whom recommended?
7. Is he doing the same work as the man who was dismissed was, and is he capable of so doing?

I added: I find that one of my questions is omitted: Is he a blacksmith? The Minister of Railways and Canals replied as follows:—

I may say that I have not information on that point; but I presume he is. My answer to the other parts of the question is: R. McNeil, bridge-tender and blacksmith at Grand Narrows, C.B., was dismissed for political interference. There was an investigation held by Mr. John T. Ross. J. J. McKinnon was appointed in his place. He was recommended by persons in whom the department has entire confidence. He is doing satisfactorily the same work as McNeil was doing.

Will the Minister be surprised to find that he did not give correct information with respect to that dismissal, and that the man appointed is not a blacksmith, but he is so strong a Grit that he has his newspapers addressed to him, "J. J. McKinnon, Grit." No one can say that this man has any other recommendation of any kind. He is utterly unfit for the work, as he is not a blacksmith. I ought to know for he lives in my neighbourhood. There is something further connected with this man to be stated. He was employed by the Government to go around with blank subpoenas for collecting evidence against officials of the Government in the various departments. He was searching for information against employees of the Government, and after he succeeded in getting some kind of evidence against this man and against others, he was given the place of a man employed on the forge built by the Government for the purpose of doing blacksmithing work for that division of the road. The work consisted of all kinds of work required for repairs to cars, snowplows and so on. The Minister told me in answer to my question, that this man was satisfactorily doing his work. He might as well have said that I could competently do the work of a blacksmith. This man who was appointed is no blacksmith. He might be able to sharpen a piece of iron and heat and bend it, and yet not a blacksmith but he is appointed to do the work of a first-class blacksmith, who had served for five or six years in learning his trade doing carriage mountings and similar work. The class of work that was done by the man who was dismissed is now sent to Moncton or elsewhere. I was informed on what I considered to be good authority, that such work as the making of frogs had to be sent a distance of over 250 miles from Grand Narrows to Moncton, because the blacksmith who was put in the place of the man who was dismissed was not fit to do the work. The country is under the expense of paying him and his helper to do the work in the forge and to open and close the draw, and the time they are required on the draw is only a few hours at most out of the whole day. The rest of the time they are supposed to be at work in the forge during the ordinary repairs to iron work that are required on the line between Sydney and Point Tupper. The man was put there in charge over the man who had been helper with the man who had been dismissed since the road was open in 1890. If any man at all was fit to do blacksmith work it was the man who was assistant to the blacksmith, but let me tell the Minister in advance that that man does not pretend to be able to do blacksmith work, because he was only helper to the man who was dismissed, and besides he is getting to be an old man and would not likely take the trouble to learn a trade. It was on my recommendation that both these men were appointed. I had the old man appointed because he was one of the best boatmen known about the shores and the work at the opening and closing of the draw required such a man. He had an exceptional knowledge of handling boats and with the strong current there during a heavy storm, it is very difficult to manage to get on and off the draw with safety. I have known that old man to remain on the draw all night during a storm because he could not with safety land. The blacksmith was a fair boatman, but I knew he had not the experience that would make him as safe a man in a boat as the old man. If the Minister (Mr. Blair) can give me any information with regard to these dismissals, which is not in keeping with my statements, and that he can prove is correct, I am willing to hear it.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). With regard to Rory McNeil in reference to whom the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) has so much to say, I might explain why I wrote him such a letter as has been read. My reason was this. McNeil belonged to the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall's) county. He is one of the chickens whom he sent abroad to forage on other constituents when his Government was in power. McNeil began to feel his way around in Inverness and thought that the same regime that held sway in Cape Breton would do in Inverness, and he took considerable delight in organizing political warfare around the Intercolonial stations in the county of Inverness. When the Minister of Railways very justly answered my demand by dismissing McNeil, I felt no objection whatsoever to have him employed in Cape Breton County to carry out his Toryism at his own sweet will. Hence it is that I wrote a letter to my friend, Dr. Kendall, in Cape Breton County, saying that if he had any use for Mr. McNeil and his political proclivities, he might avail himself of them both. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) objects to that kindly letter I wrote to McNeil, I promise him never to write such a letter again.

Mr. BERGERON. Politics is getting down pretty low.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). In the meantime I say that it is not coming down low, to shake excrescences like McNeil who comes into another person's constituency to foment trouble in the county where he is earning his bread. The least he should have done was to have kept his politics to himself. He did not do so, and as proof of the fact that it is to his politics and character I objected in the answer of the Minister will be found a reply to any charge of that description, because the nominee of my predecessor, Dr. Cameron, took McNeil's place. He was another Tory, but he kept quiet and minded his business.

Mr. McDOUGALL. And why is it that the nominee of Dr. Cameron got the place? It was because the hon. member (Mr. McLennan) could not get his nominees to take the place of Rory McNeil for the taskmaster, in obedience to his duty, had to select a man who had some knowledge of the business and had to pick out the best man he could get on the track as had been the custom. He put on Mr. McDonald and that is where the ingenuity of the Minister (Mr. Blair), assisted by the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. McLennan) came in, when he said that the man put in the place of McNeil was a man recommended by Dr. Cameron, as if that was going to knock me down. I would like to know who took the place of the man who was put in the place of McNeil? Did not the hon. member secure the place for one of his own nominees?

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Well, now.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Well, now. Why did not the member for Inverness when he was writing to Rory McNeil have the manliness to tell him he was dismissed for offensive partisanship. It is surprising that a man of his (Mr. McLennan's) height should not have the manliness to tell the truth about that. Why, Sir, his manliness went down to his boots, and nowhere else.

Mr. BERGERON. He might meet that man again, if he goes down there.

Mr. McDOUGALL. And if he does that man will behave well, as he always has done. I never knew of Mr. McNeil being anything else but a sober, civil, industrious servant of the public or of anybody else whom he had undertaken to serve. I never yet heard he was an offensive partisan.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). Why did you not employ him in your own county?

Mr. McDOUGALL. Because I had more applications for employment in my own county than I had places for, and because I secured positions for men from the county of Inverness in my county and the Government whom the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan) is supporting dismissed them. I might as well here remind the Minister of Railways that he dismissed the station master in the town of Sydney, who formerly came from the county of Inverness, and that man's place is not yet filled. It is likely the hon. Minister has not got the right explanation in regard to that, and I will give it to him. The Minister's friends in Sydney recommended a man who was unfit to discharge the duties of the position, and who therefore could not take it; and the leading supporters of the Minister to-day in and around that station are urging him, perhaps not directly, but through those who have his ear, to reinstate the man who was dismissed, because he was as fit a man as could be got to fill the position. Besides that, he was not deserving of being dismissed. He was not an offensive partisan. He gave no offence; but a job was put up, by which evidence was got against him, and this resulted in his dismissal. The man I refer to is D. R. McLellan. I make the statement here in the presence of the Minister and of the House, and in the hearing of the Minister's deputy, who knows this man, who has had reports from him from time to time. I challenge the Minister to get a statement from his deputy, who sits near him now, that he was not one of the best station masters he had on the Intercolonial. To-day the business of that station is demoralized, and it has been so since the beginning of last winter or last fall, because no man was put in the place of the man who was dismissed. Before leaving this subject, I would like to ask the hon. member for Inverness if he has written any other letters in regard to this man Rory McNeil to give the impression that he was dismissed for political partisanship.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness.) I think it is scarcely the hon. gentleman's business how many letters I write or to whom I write them.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It is my business to show the hon. member for Inverness in the right light. He is one of the gentlemen on that side of the House who asked to have my notices of motion stand when I asked for this information. I know the reason, and I knew it then. The hon. member has written several letters, but I will give an extract from one, with regard to Rory McNeil, who has been dismissed. A clergyman wrote to the hon. member, pointing out the mistake he had made in recommending the dismissal of this man, and in answer he wrote a letter dated Margaree, September 18, in which he says:

* * * Re McNeil's case, I will fix that all right. I had to make a move of this kind in the meantime.

Yours very truly,
A. McLENNAN.

Perhaps with a little more search we will find more letters of the hon. member. In order to settle this question, will the hon. member tell me why it was he lost his pluck and did not tell this man McNeil why he dismissed him?

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). When I got him sent to his political father, I thought he was safe.

Mr. McDOUGALL. If the hon. member means to refer to me as his political father, he did not go to his political father; but he is employed on a railway, well employed, I am glad to say, and I have no doubt the young man would get employment wherever he went, because he would be perfectly fit to fill any position he would apply for; and I think, from the evidence I have given to the House, that is more than I can say of the hon. member for Inverness.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I desire to say that I am not ashamed of anything I have written in this connection.

Mr. McDOUGALL.

I would not wish to be understood as having written anything that would follow McNeil into his native county. I did not care how soon McNeil was employed anywhere else; but I repeat that I did not want his politics to be exercised around the station at West Bay Road in the county of Inverness. Once he was out of that, I did not wish him to be prevented from earning his living anyway he might see fit. With regard to McLellan, I can only say this, that I am acquainted with him and his conduct, and if political partisanship should prevent an official of this Government from receiving employment under it, I say McLellan richly deserved dismissal. He is originally from the county of Inverness, which I have the honour to represent in this House, and there is scarcely a friend of his in that county to whom he did not write, earnestly pressing him to vote against myself. Therefore, although I did not move a finger to bring about his dismissal, for the simple reason that he was not in my county, I did not at the moment regret that he was dismissed, because I felt, as I feel now, that he richly deserved it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I attach the same importance to the statement of the hon. member for Inverness that I did to the one the hon. Minister of Railways made on his authority with reference to the dismissal of Rory McNeil. The one is on a par with the other. I feel perfectly confident that the station agent at Sydney did not write to a soul in Inverness any more than he did in the county where he was residing. He may have done so before he was appointed to the position. I can well understand that he would, because he was a strong supporter of the Conservative party. Of course, his appointment on my recommendation was largely due to the fact that he had rendered service to the party. I am not ashamed to say that, and I am not ashamed to say that he more than filled the position admirably and to the satisfaction of the leading Liberals of the county, as well as Conservatives. Not a Liberal worthy of the name who had dealings with him would recommend his dismissal. Scallawags would recommend his dismissal, but not the respectable business men of Sydney.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think that is not a proper expression to use in this House.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Do you forbid me calling people in my constituency scallawags?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand that the hon. member for Inverness has recommended the dismissal of this man McLennan, and I do not think that is a proper expression to apply in this House to a member who recommends a dismissal.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I did not apply it to any member of this House, but I apply it to men in my constituency who make those recommendations for dismissals.

Mr. INGRAM. I think this country would save money if a different method were adopted for managing our Government railways. What I have to say on that subject is not intended to reflect in any way on the Minister. Of all the discussions that have taken place in this House with reference to the dismissal of employees on the Intercolonial Railway, what we have heard in this House to-night is one of the most disgraceful. I would like to know, in the first place, what knowledge the hon. member for Inverness has with respect to the ability of any employee on the Intercolonial Railway to perform his duty to the general satisfaction of the manager, the superintendent or the master mechanic of that railway. He has not apparently the slightest knowledge of the qualifications of a man to fill the position on the railway. That being the case, surely so long as the manager and superintendents certify that an employee performs his duty faithfully and well, he should hold his position until his services are no longer required. If he does his services to the satisfaction of the general manager and superintendents, and there should be a chance for promotion, he ought to be promoted. If such instructions were given to the general manager and superintendents and track masters, the road would be conducted in a better way than it is, and be put in a position to earn and save more money than at present. I would suggest, as a practical railway man, that if the Railway Department were to place in the hands of their general manager and superintendents the entire control of those employed on the railway, they would be acting in the best interests of the country. They would place the officers of the road in an independent position and relieve the members of Parliament, representing constituencies through which the road passes, from the position in which they are now. Year after year members supporting the Government are pestered to death by applications for employment on the Intercolonial. These members have written recommendations to the department to employ their friends, and the department has been forced to refuse the applications. How much better would it not be for the representatives to be able to say: We have no control, because the department has issued orders that representations coming from members of Parliament will not be paid any attention to, and the only way you can get employment is to apply to the superintendent or general manager. That is the system on which other railways are conducted. The officers decide who shall be employed and dismissed, and until that system is adopted by this country, you will never have a surplus. We have had deficits from year to year on the Intercolonial, which, I think, are wholly due to the over-employment of men not required by the road. A few years ago the member for Kent and others found fault with the Government for employing more men than were necessary, and the Government found it very difficult to get rid of those superfluous men without creating dissatisfaction and prejudice on the part of their own political supporters. To avoid that annoyance, let the department issue instructions taking the so-called patronage out of the hands of hon. gentlemen supporting the Government and representing constituencies through which this road passes.

There is another point I wish to make. Surely in the employment of men on the road, they should be given some grounds for the belief that if they perform their duties faithfully and well they will be retained, and that if dismissed the reasons for their dismissal will be given them. Here is a man who is shown to have been a first-class trackman, and who was dismissed without cause, so far as the officials are concerned. The road master himself states "No grounds mentioned for his dismissal." On any other railway in this country, if an employee asks why he was dismissed, the company will give him the reasons unless he has been dismissed for cause. If he is dismissed because not required on account of the company having too many hands or some other reason of that kind, the reason is given to him, but if dismissed for cause it is not, because practical railway men know what cause means, and therefore do not investigate that at all. I trust the hon. Minister will promise us that he will adopt a new principle of conduct in the future.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I wish to add another word to what I have said in reference to the dismissal of the blacksmith, so that the hon. gentleman may understand the injury he has done this man by dismissing him. Only a few months before dismissal this man finished a House which cost him $1,000. He had bought a piece of land and built a house on it, but now, on account of his having been dismissed from the position he expected to occupy during good behaviour, he is deprived of his home and has to seek employment somewhere else. He is forced to abandon that property, on which he expended his savings, and which is situated in a place where it is not likely to get any rent or consideration for it whatever. That is what the hon. gentleman has done to that man in order to give the position to one who, neither by his character or reputation or other qualification, is fitted for it in any respect. His only qualification is that he is a Grit.

Mr. INGRAM. That is not the only way in which the Government have injured this man. According to the present system of conducting railways in this country, he will not be able to get employment on any railway in Canada or the United States without presenting a letter of recommendation or a letter to the effect that he has been employed on such a railway. Unless he has such a letter he cannot get employment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The item stands.

To provide a passenger and freight shed at Richmond.....	$1,500
To build snow fences on Oxford and New Glasgow and Cape Breton divisions..	$6,000
To dredge at Pictou Landing wharf....	$1,500
To dredge at Pictou wharf.....	$1,000

Mr. HAGGART. I must object to nearly all these items being charged to capital account. I suppose this building at Richmond is to replace one already there. And these snow fences on the Oxford and New Glasgow and Cape Breton division—that is a work that should not be charged to capital account.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must say that I am surprised that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) should have selected from among these votes as objectionable, one that is practically only a revote of his own item.

Mr. HAGGART. I will not allow the Minister to make a statement of that kind, because it is not correct. When the Oxford and New Glasgow road was built we had to have it furnished with snow fences. But it has been built for six or seven years. I never put in any of my estimates an amount for doing anything of that kind on such a road to be charged to capital.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) that he did.

Mr. HAGGART. It may have been immediately after the road was built. But here is a road that has been running for four or five years. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) show me the item?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman asked an appropriation for the year ending 30th June, 1897, for $12,000, for these snow fences. I only spent $6,000, and am only asking for a revote of the balance.

Mr. HAGGART. New Glasgow branch was built only two or three years, and the snow fences had to be constructed. Here is a road that has been running six or seven years. I do not recollect any such item as the hon. gentleman speaks of. If he will show me the item, thus making it clear that I am in error, I will readily acknowledge it. The hon. gentleman says he got a vote of $12,000 and spent only $6,000, but, according to these estimates, there was no vote last year, and no part of this is marked as a revote. There is no such information before the House as the hon. gentleman states.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am giving the information now.

Mr. INGRAM.

Mr. HAGGART. It should appear in the Estimates, and there is nothing to show that there was anything voted for it in 1897-98.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I spoke of the year ending 30th June, 1897.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) stated that he got a vote last year of $12,000 and only expended $6,000, and he wanted to complete the work.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). He was referring to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Haggart) own estimates, and that could not have been last year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What I said was that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) declared an item to be unwarranted which he introduced in his own estimates ending 30th June, 1897, the amount being $12,000. Only $6,000 was spent, and I want to expend the balance.

Mr. HAGGART. Then I misunderstood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair). I understood him to say that I had a vote in my estimates of $12,000 for this purpose, and he last year had $12,000 in the Estimates and only expended $6,000.

To improve accommodation at Mulgrave.. $1,000

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is the hon. Minister doing any more for accommodation on the Cape Breton division east of Point Tupper?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I think we shall have quite a little. I cannot furnish details at present.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Can the hon. Minister tell me what building is being put up at Grand Narrows?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have many requests for sidings and additional buildings.

Mr. McDOUGALL. This is not a siding; it is a building that is being erected.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are going to have a restaurant there.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is the Government building it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, we gave the lease of a small portion of land there, and we allow the parties to whom we leased it to put up a building with the right to remove it at any time. We are not building or bearing the cost.

Mr. McDOUGALL. How much land does the hon. gentleman give for this purpose?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot say just now. We insisted upon it being 15 or 20 feet from our station house.

Mr. McDOUGALL. What are the terms of the lease, except with regard to removal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One of the terms is that the restaurant must be conducted in a manner satisfactory to the department.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is there any money consideration?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think there is some merely nominal sum—a dollar a year or something like that.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is there any agreement?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, in writing.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Does the agreement give the privilege to the lessees to do anything else than conduct the business of a restaurant?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman mean to conduct a hotel. If the lessee pleases to put up a building to accommodate a few guests, I do not know that there is anything in the lease to preclude him from doing so.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is not this departing from the usual practices of the Intercolonial Railway—giving people the privilege of building hotels beside the railway track?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know that it is contrary to the usual practice.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it ever done?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should be very sorry to say that it has ever been done, because I have no evidence to bear out such an assertion.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am not aware that it has been done on the Intercolonial Railway or that there is anything like it on any railway. I must make known to the House the object the hon. Minister has in departing from the usual practice, or, at least, the object his advisers had. I myself am interested in a hotel near that place.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am quite willing the hon. gentlemen should cheer that statement. But there was no public place there where a man could go and get his dinner at the time that hotel was built, and I did what I think was quite proper and legitimate, built a hotel. I have an interest with others in that hotel, and I challenge the Minister of Railways and Canals to deny this statement, that there was no other undertaking east of Halifax, of that kind, that did as much for the Intercolonial Railway as that investment of my friends and myself. He goes to work to-day, because I did not wheel round and support himself and his Government, and tries to shut down that house if he can; he gets a party of outsiders that undertake to put a hotel adjoining the Government track, and as close to that track as the railway station is. If the Minister will give this House any reason for putting up that hotel, I will submit without complaint. But I think the Minister should give a reason for giving the privilege to private parties to go and put up a hotel on Government property to compete with another hotel.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know something of the locality myself, I have been there, and I have heard a great many complaints, and I have received many complaints with regard to the inconvenient location of the only place where people can go and get a meal in that locality.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Will the Minister give me one name?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall not give the hon. gentleman half a name.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Because you cannot do it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He can draw any inferences he pleases, but the fact remains all the same. The hon. gentleman's hotel is quite a distance away from the station, and there are times of the year when it would be exceedingly inconvenient for people to find their way to his hotel to get a meal. The complaints which were made to me, and which my examination of the locality justified, led me to agree to the arrangements which have been concluded under which a restaurant is being built on Government grounds, and will be very conveniently located for public use.

Mr. McDOUGALL. So far as I am personally concerned, I have not a word to say against building a restaurant; but I challenge the Minister to give me the name of a single man who made a complaint that that house did not afford proper facilities for the accommodation of people who wanted to get their meals during the time the train stops. The train stops there 20 minutes. There was always a large bus in waiting on the passengers that took them free to the hotel, and brought them back free. If a traveller prefers a restaurant to a hotel, I have no objection to that. But I do object to the hon. Minister interfering with the business of a private individual by building hotels on the railway track in competition with capital that was invested in a hotel within a reasonable distance of that station. That is my complaint.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I think a restaurant would not come into competition with the hotel the hon. gentleman has built there. I think the restaurant would fill a public want. The hon. gentleman has put up a first-class hotel suited to meet the wants of summer tourists, of whom a great many frequent that house in the summer season. But poor people travelling by the Intercolonial Railway cannot all afford to go and buy a 50 cent meal. Therefore do I consider that the Minister of Railways and Canals is perfectly justified in meeting a public need of this character. According to the hon. gentleman, because there is a hotel in Truro, the restaurant in Truro should be swept away.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The hon. gentleman is making a wrong statement; I never said so.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I feel that I am stating the facts as they appear to stand at this moment. I submit whether the Minister is not perfectly justified in the course he has pursued. I cited the case of Truro as a case parallel with that of the gentleman. I know further that if the records be correct, I do not see what interest the hon. member for Cape Breton has in that hotel now, because he made an assignment of it if I mistake not. I cannot see what interest he can have in this matter, and in raking the Minister of Railways and Canals for alleged interference with a hotel that he has no connection with.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let me say to the hon. gentleman that in arranging for the building of this restaurant and in giving accommodation there, no person, so far as I know, was influenced by any prejudice, feeling or desire to injure the hon. gentleman. It was felt that owing to the location of his house it was unreasonable to insist upon every person who wanted a meal being compelled to go there or else go without a meal. I do not apprehend that this party is going to interfere with him seriously, as he will only furnish meals for persons who might prefer to take a meal in a restaurant instead of a hotel. The hon. gentleman is attaching a great deal more importance to the matter than is quite fair, and I think he will probably find when the result comes to be fully known that he was in error in his impression as regards the restaurant being injurious to his particular business.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should attach so much importance to the remarks of the hon. member for Inverness after the disclosures tonight. He has gathered from that hon. gentleman information that only a restaurant is being put up, and he accepts the information. It is more than a restaurant. I want the Minister, if he has any better evidence than that of the hon. member for Inverness, to produce it. I am informed that the building has the dimensions of an hotel. The hon. member for Inverness made only one true statement. He tried to impress the committee with the idea that I was objecting to this item because it was to build a restaurant. I repeated several times that such was not the case; but it was a building for an hotel and it would enter into competition with another hotel. The hon. member for Inverness was not satisfied, and he repeated the statement in order to be able to tell the House that I had made an assignment. That is the character of the hon. gentleman. I did make an assignment, and I am not ashamed of it, and it is in order to do my duty that I take some interest in the hotel. It is my duty to pay my debts and obligations. If I gave up my interest in the hotel, I would be doing my creditors injury. I do not want any such statements made by hon. members, and it is below the dignity of an hon. member to refer to a matter of that kind.

Mr. McLELLAN. Do you deny it?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I say I made an assignment. But in what spirit did the hon. member throw it against me in this House? Every one can take his measure on the basis of that line of argument. If the hon. gentleman has anything worse than that to communicate to the House and the country, let him trot it out. I am willing to listen to him.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Railways stated that I had placed an item in the Estimates for $12,000 for fencing on the Intercolonial, and charged it to capital account. Is that so?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. On the Oxford and New Glasgow road. In the Estimates ending 30th June, 1897.

Mr. HAGGART. Such an item does not appear in the Estimates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is for the year 1897. I find it stated in a memorandum handed to me by my deputy: charged to capital account, new fencing, Oxford and New Glasgow Railway. In 1897 there was voted $12,000. Only half was done at a cost of $6,000, leaving a balance of $5,994. During the year ending 30th June, 1897, this amount was expended; no expenditure was made in 1898, and application is made for a revote of $6,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Then the hon. gentleman is misinformed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My deputy says it is absolutely correct. I shall, however, be very glad to correct the statement if it appears there was an error.

Mr. HAGGART. It must have been an error.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Might it not have been brought down in the Supplementary Estimates?

Mr. HAGGART. The charge made against me was that I found fault with an item when I had myself introduced a similar one in the Estimates.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Such an amount could not have appeared in the Supplementary Estimates. The Supplementary Estimates for 1896-97 were not the Estimates of the late Government but of the present Government. The main Estimates of the previous Government were adopted in their entirety, but the Supplementary Estimates were the creation of the present Government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will ascertain the facts.

To provide increased station and other accommodation at various points $6,000

Mr. HAGGART. This item should be changed, as at present it might include even painting.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not proposed to do any painting. The item was intended to furnish additional accommodation such as stations and buildings wherever required. That it would not cover painting is self-evident.

Mr. HAGGART. It is not self-evident at all. The vote is to improve station accommodation at various points, and if that does not cover almost everything I do not know what the meaning of the English language is.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Can the Minister name any of these points where the buildings are to be improved or added to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are quite a few points at which I think I could with advantage, and no doubt very much to the interest of the railway service, lay out the sum, but I have not yet selected which of them are the most urgent and in respect to which I would direct the expenditure to be made. I could not give the hon. gentleman a definite statement on the subject to-night.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is not this amount based on any estimate for the particular work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am reading now from page 7 of the Statutes of Canada for the year 1896-97, under the heading of Intercolonial Railway, chargeable to capital "To provide for snow fences at Oxford, New Glasgow, Cape Breton, St. Charles Branch Railway, $12,000."

Mr. MONTAGUE. Quite so, that is in your own Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the Minister tell me whether that is in the Supplementary Estimates or not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. "Sums granted to Her Majesty by this Act for the financial year ending 30th June, 1897, and the purposes for which they are granted."

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not in the main Estimates, that is very clear.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They are in the Supplementary Estimates prepared by the Minister himself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Supplementary Estimates which are introduced by us are to be found in the same volume later.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes, in the Supplementary Estimates for 1896.

Mr. HAGGART. And the Supplementary Estimates read by the Minister is an estimate with which I had nothing whatever to do.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is another case of the Minister comparing himself with himself, and making us bad fellows.

Mr. McDOUGALL. To whom was that lease of the hotel property made?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not remember the man's name just now.

Prince Edward Island Railway—

To shorten the main line by the removal of certain curves therein.... $15,000

To provide additional rolling stock.. 3,500

Mr. HAGGART. You do not require heavier engines and the traffic of the road is not increasing, and why charge this $3,500 to capital account?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is where the hon. gentleman is in error. The traffic of the road is increasing, and it is for the purpose of furnishing cars in addition to equipment which is now on the road that this vote is taken. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) may not be aware that there has been a very considerable development of business in the island recently, and I fancy the hon. member (Mr. Martin) will verify my statement that the business demands are calling for additional railway appliances. This vote is for additional live stock cars which are needed to carry hogs to the pork-packing establishment at Charlottetown, which promises to do a very considerable business.

Mr. MARTIN. With reference to the removal of these curves, what has been done and what is proposed to be done?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The intention is to shorten the line. We are taking the curve out of the line between Charlottetown and Summerside. It will make the line about three-quarters of a mile straighter.

Mr. MARTIN. What is the total cost to be ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My officers estimate that the whole cost will not exceed $25,000.

Mr. MARTIN. Is that all that is proposed to be done ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is all I am asking money to do just now. I should be sorry that that is all that should be done in the future. There are other curves which are perhaps not so bad as this one ; I think perhaps this is the worst curve on any railway that is being operated.

Mr. MARTIN. Is that the worst curve on the road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am told it is nearly as bad as can be.

Mr. MARTIN. I know, as a fact, that it is not the worst curve. How is it that this particular curve was straightened when worse curves were not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not aware there are any worse curves, but I know that this is a pretty bad one. This curve is between two important towns, and it is desirable that the straightening should be done first where the heaviest traffic occurs.

Mr. MARTIN. I know, as a matter of fact, that is not the worst curve.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is not that the place where the passengers on the end car can shake hands with the engineer ?

Mr. MARTIN. I do not know about that. I do not think there has been any desire expressed or any petition from the people of the province for the straightening of these curves ; but I am sure that the hon. Minister's department received many petitions for the expenditure of money in other directions. I do not know what reason he had for expending money on this part of the railway. I do not know that the line has been shortened very much, although there has been an expenditure of money on a part of the line which is in the constituency of one of the members of the Government ; and that may be a reason why the expenditure was made. The work was made by day's labour, and I understand that the heelers of the party came in for the greatest part of the spoil ; and that may be one of the chief reasons for straightening the curve. I do not think the main line is shortened to an appreciable extent ; but if the intention is to straighten the curve, I hope the Minister will go a little further. There are parts of that road where there have been accidents, but at those parts no attempt has been made to do anything. Where the sharpest curve is nothing has been done. So we have reason to suspect that this work is being carried on, not so much to straighten the curves as to provide work for the heelers and workers in the constituency of one of the Ministers.

Mr. YEO. I may say that in my opinion this is one of the sharpest curves on the road ; but there are several other bad curves, and I hope that after this one is straightened the Minister will give his attention to the others. With respect to the work being done by day's labour, I consider the Railway department is showing good judgment in having it done in that way. I have consulted many who are competent to judge, and their opinion is that it is being done in the best way. With respect to its being undertaken to supply work for the heelers of the party, that is a mistake. I have recommended men for employment on the work without any reference to their politics. I have never inquired as to their politics, and I think the hon. gentleman from East Queen's has been misinformed on that point.

Mr. HAGGART. As this vote is for $15,000, is it not intended to let the work by contract ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. From the best information I could gather, from the opinions and reports of the superintendent on the island, the general manager at Moncton, the chief engineer and other officers of the road, I concluded it would scarcely be in the public interest to have this work done by contract. It is not a very large work, and I am advised that so far as it has gone, it is being done in a very economical way, and as little expense as we could reasonably hope for if it were done by contract. You can easily see how, in carrying on a work of this kind, which crosses the line of railway, there would be difficulties between the contractor and the Government, which would not arise when the work was being done by day's work. I think there are no contractors on the island to take up work of this description ; and seeing that the people who are employed on the work are employed at a time of the year when they are not engaged on their farms, and for the other reasons I have stated, I was led to conclude that it would be in the public interest to have it done by day's work.

Mr. HAGGART. The statute is directory, where there is an expenditure of over $5,000, that it shall be done by contract. In certain cases that is modified by Order in Council. Where the Minister wishes to do a work like this, he must report to Council, and get an Order in Council giving him power to do it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think that is necessary, unless it is proposed to give a contract without tender. Then the Minister must necessarily submit to Council the reasons why he thinks the department should be permitted to make such a contract. But that does not apply to a case like this at all.

Mr. HAGGART. But the statute makes it compulsory to obtain a special order where there is an expenditure involving upwards of $5,000. I cannot understand how the hon. gentleman can get the account paid by the Auditor General without it.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the Minister to say that when this work was completed, it would cost $25,000. Does that apply to only one curve, or will it extend over several curves?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The road is very crooked at this point unquestionably. The hon. member who has spoken has stated that he thinks it is about as crooked a part of the road as there is, and those who have been over the island know that it is a pretty crooked road.

Mr. SPROULE. Surely the hon. gentleman has an estimate of his engineer to do work in certain places and for certain sums, and must know to what part of the road it applies.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The work is being done at one place and along one continuous stretch. What we are doing is to avoid as far as we can, what is called the North Wiltshire grade. We are reducing the distance and taking the kinks out. It is not work done partly at one part of the line and partly at another.

Mr. McLELLAN. The part of the road proposed to be straightened by the Minister of Railways is the most crooked between Charlottetown and Summerside, and the statement of the hon. member for East Queen's (Mr. Martin) is altogether made on his own responsibility. I know that road better than he because I have travelled over it a good deal oftener, and I believe that the curve being taken out by the department is the worst curve of the whole line. It is what the Minister calls the shaking hands curve. Few men in this House probably know the crookedness of the road between Charlottetown and Summerside. It was built by contractors who were allowed to make their own survey, and it was run around, I might say, every pine stump between Charlottetown and Summerside, and I am glad to see the present Government undertaking the work of straightening out the road and putting it in some sort of decent shape. I know it will take some years before this can be accomplished, for it will have to be done piecemeal. The way the work has to be done renders it almost impracticable to let it by contract, and I am sorry that the hon. member for East Queen's

(Mr. Martin) is throwing cold water on the undertaking and taking away from the Government the credit justly due them for straightening it out.

Mr. MARTIN. With regard to the statement of the hon. gentleman that this is the sharpest curve of the whole line—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Between Charlottetown and Summerside.

Mr. MARTIN. The whole line is not between Charlottetown and Summerside.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not say it was.

Mr. MARTIN. I say it now. The road extends east from Mount Stewart, what is known as the Souris branch, and every person who knows anything about Prince Edward Island knows that on the Souris branch is the sharpest curve of the road. The hon. gentleman will not dispute that, and if we are to avoid danger, the people of that section are entitled to safety just as well as the people between Charlottetown and Summerside. When I made the statement that there was a sharper curve—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is there any between these two points?

Mr. MARTIN. I am not talking about two points on the line, but the whole line and one part of the line is as important as the other.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Most of the business done is between Charlottetown and Summerside.

Mr. MARTIN. There is quite a business between the Souris branch and Charlottetown. Instead of throwing cold water on the undertaking, I told the Minister of Railways that he should not stop and leave one of the sharpest curves on the road without spending a dollar to straighten it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not say we were going to stop at this.

Mr. MARTIN. The objection I have is to the work being done by day labour. I do not want to throw cold water on it, but I do not believe there was any general cry in the province for straightening that particular curve, and I think the Minister of Railways will find his department loaded down with petitions for expenditures in other directions. I say that it looks a little suspicious that this money should be spent on that part of the road which is represented by one of the members of the Government, and the sharpest curve on the road is left untouched and that this money is spent without tenders being called for.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Will the hon. Minister give me the information with regard to the lessors of that property?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My impression is that the man's name is McNeill.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is the hon. Minister quite sure it is not the Hon. Geo. Murray, Premier of Nova Scotia. Was it not he who communicated with the hon. gentleman with regard to it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The lease was executed by me and it was not to the Hon. Geo. Murray.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Then it was only a few days ago since Mr. Murray was on the ground and found fault with the building not being put up properly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That will be the right of any good citizen.

The committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES 1898-99.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) presented a message from His Excellency the Governor General.

The SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

ABERDEEN.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ended 30th June, 1899, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," the Governor General recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,

Ottawa, 30th May, 1898.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HAGGART. What does the Government intend to take up to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We meet at 11 o'clock. I fancy we shall take up some small Bills, and then endeavour to proceed with the Estimates.

Mr. HAGGART. The Main Estimates?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 2.35 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 31st May, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 11 a.m.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 154)—from the Senate—to provide for the government of the Yukon district.—(Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière.)

Mr. McDOUGALL.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. FOSTER. I move, with the consent of the House, that the 5th and 6th reports of the Committee on Public Accounts, which were reported to the House and the printing thereof recommended, be printed forthwith.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). What are the subjects?

Mr. FOSTER. The Baie des Chaleurs Railway is one and the other is the case popularly known as Killam's cow.

Motion agreed to.

ADVANCE TO MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I beg to move that the House, at its next sitting, resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient that the Governor in Council may advance to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, in addition to the amount authorized by chapter 10 of the Statutes of 1896 (first session), to be advanced to the said commissioners, a further sum not exceeding two million dollars for the completion and construction of certain works in the harbour of Montreal, the said commissioners thereupon depositing with the Minister of Finance their debentures to an equal amount in par value to the advance so made by the Governor in Council, repayable within twenty-five years from the date of their issue and bearing interest at the rate of three per cent per annum, payable half-yearly.

Motion agreed to.

THE MAJOR GENERAL COMMANDING.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to bring up a matter affecting the conduct of the House some, to which I suppose there will be no objection, and I will be very brief. Yesterday or the day before, the right hon. leader of the Government read a letter from General Gascoigne in rebuttal or meant to be in rebuttal of certain remarks made in this House and which appear in "Hansard." At the time my hon. friend was reading it I had some doubts as to whether he was in order or not, but, relying on the support which Mr. Speaker gave to the reading, supplemented by his suggesting a motion to have the letter laid on the Table, I thought I must be wrong. I find, however, in looking the matter up, that I was not wrong, and in order that the matter may be before the House I think it well to read a paragraph taken from Parliamentary Procedure by Bourinot, at page 408:

It is not in order for a member to make extracts from books, newspapers or other printed publications as part of his speech, provided in doing so he does not infringe on any point of order. But there are certain limitations to this right; for it is not allowable to read any petition referring to debates in the House. In making extracts a member must be careful to confine himself to those which are pertinent to the question; it is not regular to quote a whole essay or pamphlet of a general character. Neither is it regular for a member to read a paper which he is asking the House to order to be produced.

Now begins the portion which bears directly on the subject:

Nor is it in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications, whether printed or written, emanating from persons outside of the House, and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member, or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the House. During the debate on the tariff in the session of 1877, Mr. Mills referred to the opinions of Sir Alexander Galt, formerly a member and Minister of Finance. Subsequently one of the Canadian papers published a letter from Sir Alexander, in answer to some of Mr. Mills's remarks; and proposed reading from the paper in question; but the Speaker interrupted him and questioned the propriety of this course—a decision entirely in accordance with the English rules of debate.

I think from that, my right hon. friend was not within the rules of order in reading the letter from General Gascoigne. I have no objection to General Gascoigne making his statement, which was not an intemperate statement at all, in a constitutional way, but evidently my right hon. friend was not aware of the rule in that respect, and I was a little surprised that the Speaker, who is so well informed on the rules, allowed the matter to proceed, and it was because he did so that I did not carry out my first intention of questioning the point, relying on his watch over the proceedings.

Mr. SPEAKER. The reason I allowed the matter to proceed was because it was based on a motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, which he moved and which was carried, and which appears in the Votes and Proceedings:

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, an Order of the House was issued to the proper officer for a copy of a letter from Major General Gascoigne, relating to certain statements made in Parliament reflecting upon him as Commanding Officer of the Canadian militia.

But the House will remember that when the leader of the House read that letter, I said to him: I suppose you will propose a motion that that be laid on the Table? And, of course, that was assented to unanimously as I understood, and the motion was put by me and was carried. That was the proceeding. The question of the propriety of the letter has not arisen until now that an hon. member refers to it. And I quite agree that if the paper had simply been read by any member of the House without a motion connected with it, it would not have been properly in order. That was the only way I could see to bring the proceeding in order at the time.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, Mr. Speaker, you will perhaps allow me to say that you, being in the Chair at the time know quite well that the letter was read without any attempt on the part of the hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to make a motion. The hon. gentleman did not make a motion, and it seemed to me that he had no intention of making a motion; nor do I believe he had at that time, though I do not know his motives. But he was helped by the kindly suggestion of the Speaker, and he made a motion, but after the letter was read. If that could be done, this rule of the House would become entirely inoperative, because all that a gentleman will have to do, in order to get a letter before the House from a person outside, is simply to make a motion and then proceed to read the letter. Now, is it the Speaker's opinion that a gentleman can make a motion at any time in order to have a letter from an outsider read? This is not a public document. I have no feeling in the matter, but I wish the matter to be understood.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I desire to deal quite candidly with the House. I stated yesterday that I had received a letter from General Gascoigne; and I thought it was due to him that his version of a matter which had been the subject of a debate here should be given to the public, and that his denial of certain statements that have been made should be laid before the House.

I regretted at the time that, perhaps through my own negligence, the letter had not been brought out while Sir Charles Tupper was present. I should have known that he was to sail on Saturday. But in the multiplicity of matters that I have to attend to—it may not seem unnatural to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster)—I did not have it clearly before my mind that his sailing on Saturday would imply his leaving the city on Friday. It was my intention to bring the matter up while he was here. I thought, as he was not present on Friday, that I would take the next opportunity to bring it up. I believe it was due to General Gascoigne that his version of the facts should be laid before the House. I am free to confess that I did not look at the precedents as to how the matter should have been done; and I am free to confess that if I had looked at the precedents and read the authority quoted by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) I might have taken a different way to bring the matter to the attention of the House. I can see the force of the hon. gentleman's observations. I think Mr. Speaker saw it. But no objection was taken at the time. If my proceeding was wrong, I suppose that we can say that if I was trespassing my hon. friend did not observe it at the time. At all events I have no fault to find with my hon. friend for bringing the matter to the attention of the House. It is a question that is well worth looking into. And I can say to my hon. friend that, I may have erred and trespassed on this occasion, I shall look over the matter again. I shall always only be too glad, whenever occasion may arise, if, as leader of the House I am astray in carrying out the rules of the House, to have my attention called to the matter.

Mr. SPROULE. Does not the hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) think it rather unfortunate—

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) allow me. I think it is the duty of the Speaker when a point of order is not raised, to try and assist those who address the House to remain in order, whether on one side or the other. If the Speaker is fortunately, right, I think that his assistance in this way is of advantage to the House. I think the House will remember that, only a few days ago I made a suggestion to the leader of the Opposition, who rose to move a motion distinctly out of order because he had spoken. I made a suggestion pointing out how he could place himself in order—by having the motion moved by somebody else—and the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) adopted the suggestion. So, I am not at all inclined to defend myself against the charge that I assist members in keeping order in the House. Of course, if a point of order is taken and the matter comes before me in that form, that ends the matter. But no point of order was taken, and I assumed that the leader of the House desired the letter to be brought properly before the House. I made a suggestion, and, no objection being taken, the motion was put and carried.

Mr. SPROULE. I was going to say, Mr. Speaker, that it was unfortunate that, as the matter stands, it will be quoted as a precedent. I think it would be well, if the Speaker feels that the rule followed was not absolutely correct, to avoid it being cited as a precedent in the future, it should be so stated. Coming from the high authority, it did, from the leader of the House, and assented to by the Speaker, though it was, in my opinion, at the time, entirely wrong, private members did not like to dissent from it, and therefore, it was allowed to pass.

The PRIME MINISTER. If I may be permitted, I would say that I should be glad if Mr. Speaker would take an opportunity to look over the matter and give us his opinion upon it. On the authority which has been quoted, I am not quite sure that I was in order. Of course, I think it is the duty of the leader of the Government to try, as far as possible, to maintain the traditions of the House, and if it so happens, that he himself errs, he should be the first to give an example of submission to the rules.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may say that I do not feel any doubt at all on the subject. As I mentioned before, if objection had been taken, it would have been a different matter, But the reading of the letter was out of order, and though the only way to bring it properly before the House was to move the motion that I suggested, and, as no objection was made to that, the motion was moved. It is no precedent for the reading of a letter without a motion. If the point of order is raised it should always prevail in a case of that kind.

Mr. FOSTER. The only good that will come out of this will be a little more care, and, if possible the elucidation of one point, which I confess, is not quite clear to me. If the rule is laid down that a letter from an outsider cannot be read in the House, is that rule to be made null and void by the simple moving of a motion by the member who wishes to read the letter? Surely, that cannot be. That is the point I would like to see elucidated. A notice of motion would be taken up, moved and adopted, but a motion at the moment, I should think, would be in order if any person objected to it. In the case that Mr. Speaker cited of his suggestion to the Opposition side, the point of order was taken as against Sir Charles Tupper that he had spoken, and it was suggested that I should make a motion. The point arises whether the Speaker is not the guardian of the rules of the House and whether, in all cases, as in some cases he certainly does, it is not the duty of the Speaker to keep the members in order, even though no one raises a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I agree with that too.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. DOBELL moved third reading of Bill (No. 142) to authorize the Quebec Harbour Commissioners to borrow money.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Dobell) was expected to give a statement, on the third reading of the Bill, of the expenditures, salaries, &c., of the Commission.

Mr. DOBELL. I am quite prepared to lay before the House the details of the salaries paid by the Quebec Harbour Commissioners. I stated when the second reading was taken, that the total salaries amounted to about $7,000; I find that the actual salaries paid amounted to $8,000. But I have received a telegram from Quebec stating that the salary of the engineer should not have been included in that amount, and that the salary of the engineer taken out makes the figures I gave absolutely correct. The total net revenue for the five years averages $34,000 a year, and the actual gross revenue averages about $66,000 a year. For the last three years the gross revenue has been increasing, and this last year the increase amounts to $5,000, and the year before showed an increase of $4,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend just give the amounts of the five years separately, gross and net ?

Mr. DOBELL. For 1893, gross $67,000, net $36,000 ; for 1894, gross $65,000, net $31,000 ; 1895, gross $66,000, net $35,000 ; for 1896, gross $70,000, net $36,000 ; for 1897, gross $75,000, net $32,000. The net, you will observe, for the last year is smaller in comparison than for the other years. That is accounted for by the large expenditure which was made for dredging the outer basin of the St. Louis Dock for which some $10,000 was spent and taken out of the revenue of the Harbour Commissioners.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, could the hon. gentleman give the details of the salaries for last year ?

Mr. DOBELL. The chief engineer gets $2,500. I think the secretary is paid $1,600 ; the harbour master, $1,600 ; one wharfinger, $800 ; and the other $600.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not make up the amount. I suppose there are the fees of the Harbour Commissioners.

Mr. DOBELL. There is a retaining fee of $500 for our legal adviser. Those are all the details they have sent me. I may explain to the House that there are charges now paid by the Harbour Commissioners that used to be paid by Trinity House, which relieves this Government of a considerable expense. These involve an expenditure annually of about $10,000 a year, which this Government is now relieved of.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any reduction been made in the charges on vessels in the last five years ?

Mr. DOBELL. No, they are exactly the same. But I may explain why we are asking this sum of money. Some years ago about 1,100 or 1,200 sailing vessels came to the harbour of Quebec ; in 1895 we only had 300 or 400 ; and last year I think we did not have more than 350. The trade of Quebec is being now done by large steamers. I may admit that personally I agree with the hon. member for York thus far, that I think we might reduce the expenses of the Harbour Commissioners, and I may promise that I will look into this matter next year. But the expenses to-day are not as heavy as they were some years ago, although they are still too heavy for the revenue. Any corporation only getting $30,000 revenue, ought not to have one-third of it taken up by expenses. But our trade is increasing, and I think we should show a better result this year, and we will try to cut down expenses.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the total at the present date ?

Mr. DOBELL. Nearly five million dollars.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

THE BERNE CONVENTION.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I desire to lay upon the Table of the House a copy of the Berne Convention. Perhaps the officers will present it to the Library. I also have great pleasure in meeting the application of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), who I am sure will be a most industrious student of the contents of this volume, if I present it to him personally, as I have much pleasure in doing, in the name of the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. The only remark I have to make is that I am sorry to say that it is only printed in the dominant language, that being French. I should like it much better if it were printed in the dual language.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 148) respecting the Transport Contract between Her Majesty and the Winnipeg, Great Northern Railway Company.—(Mr. Blair.)

Bill (No. 143) to amend the Canada Evidence Act, 1893.—(Mr. Fitzpatrick.)

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Canals, construction and enlargement—

Soulanges Canal—Construction..... $1,610,000

Mr. BERGERON. I see a large increase for 1898-99. Does that amount contain the damages which have been incurred by the land slide which took place a few months ago ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No ; there is nothing in this item to cover the cost of the landslide ; this is all construction.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. gentleman tell the House when this work will be completed, if there was any change in the contracts, and if so, the reason of the change ; also, the estimated cost ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The estimated cost of the whole Soulanges Canal is $5,000,000, in round figures. The department entertains the strongest possible hope, and unless the unforeseen occurs that hope I think will prove well grounded, that the work at the canal will be sufficiently forwarded to enable us to open it for the purpose of business next spring. That is the present expectation. We never can tell what will happen ; there may be difficulty arise which we do not know at this stage, but the engineers of the department express great confidence that, while the canal will not be absolutely completed in every particular, it will be sufficiently so to open it for navigation. In regard to changing the contractors, there were necessarily during the past year two changes made in the personnel. One was with reference to Mr. Stewart. He was not making such progress with the work as satisfied the department that he would be able to complete it, certainly he would be wholly unable to complete it within the time required. Another was with respect to Mr. Goodwin, which resulted in Mr. Goodwin practically stopping work. We had to take the contract off his hands. The contracts were relet, after due notice had been given, and the works so taken up by the new contractors are progressing vigorously.

Mr. BERGERON. No doubt the hon. Minister is sincere when he expects the canal will be opened for navigation by the date of navigation next year; but he will be seriously disappointed. It will take more than one year, probably two or three years to finish the canal. The land is very bad for a canal to pass through it, as the hon. gentleman may have noticed when the papers came up before him in connection with the last accident which took place there, the landslide. The hon. Minister says the canal will cost $5,000,000. It will cost much more. We had a long discussion in the House when it was decided to construct the canal on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, and predictions then made by some hon. members are being realized. It was a very unfortunate move on the part of the late Government; I am not blaming the present Minister, because he is not responsible. The land on that side of the river is very much of the same nature as that at the Cornwall Canal, where an immense sum has been expended for repairs, and we are going through the same experience in regard to the Soulanges Canal. It is being constructed across rivers, and the culverts have not been able to stop the natural course of the streams. When it was decided to build the new canal, the cost was estimated at $4,200,000. Already it has gone up to $5,000,000, and is not yet finished. The cause of the whole trouble—it may be ancient history to some hon. members, but I want to repeat it—was the decision to place the canal on that side of the river, and at the same time not widen and deepen the Beauharnois Canal, which is a good work and has cost practically nothing for repairs for twenty or thirty years, it being built through rock and solid earth. The estimates for building the new canal on the north shore were placed exceedingly low for the purpose of enabling the Government to make out a case in Parliament. The contractors, proceeding on those estimates, tendered too low, with the result of almost ruining Mr. Goodwin and Mr. Stewart, and increasing the cost to the country. I should like to inquire what is the extent of the damage done by the last landslide, and who will have to pay, the contractors or the Government.

Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My impression is that the whole of the material displaced by the slide has not yet been removed, and so far as the Government are concerned we have not paid anything. There is a question pending between the contractor and the Government as to whether or not the loss will have to be borne by them or by the Government. I am free to confess that I am inclined to the opinion that the contractors should not be expected to bear that loss. We have an estimate as to the probable cost of clearing out the prism of the canal and restoring the canal as far as possible to its former condition at that particular point on Raynor's section, and this, we judge, may be about $30,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who took Stewart's contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Ryan & Macdonald, the lowest tenderers.

Mr. HAGGART. Do the engineers anticipate any difficulty from any of the slides in the canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The engineer appears to be very sanguine that nothing in that direction will again occur, but after all that is only an impression; he may possibly not be right.

Mr. BERGERON. That is a very bad opinion too.

Mr. HAGGART. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) that the anticipation of the Minister as to the opening of the canal is entirely illusory. I know something about that work and the probabilities are that the canal will not be opened until the spring of 1900.

Mr. BERGERON. Put it back again unless the Government spend double the amount of money.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not a question of the expenditure of money, because we have asked for a sum that is sufficient if no mishap occurs. I can be only expected to speak the views of my engineering staff and they tell me with confidence that unless some casualty occurs the work will be sufficiently forwarded to enable us to do business on the canal next spring.

Mr. SPROULE. At what stage of advancement is the work now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has so far progressed that the chief engineer is of opinion that it will be ready next year, in the absence of anything abnormal.

Mr. HAGGART. Can the Minister give us any information as to how much the water was backed on the north side of the canal compared with the south, and whether these viaducts are sufficient to carry it off ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is the opinion of the engineers that they are, and that they have no doubt on that point. The viaducts are very well built.

Mr. HAGGART. I have noticed a statement made again and again by members of this House with regard to the amount of damages which Mr. Goodwin obtained from the Government in connection with this canal. What is the amount of the certificate given Mr. Goodwin by the department for the work, which certificate, I believe was approved by the Minister of Justice, and what was the amount of the verdict Mr. Goodwin obtained in the Exchequer Court ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The amount of the judgment was $73,000 or thereabouts, and of course the whole certificate ran between $300,000 and $400,000.

Mr. HAGGART. I beg pardon. The certificate was not in excess of the amount of the judgment. If my memory is correct Mr. Goodwin got his judgment just for the amount of the certificate given by the department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The amount of the verdict corresponds with the amount of the certificate which applied to that particular part of the work. I thought the hon. gentleman had asked me what was the gross sum.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Has that been paid yet ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has not yet been paid. The Department of Justice I believe is considering as to whether there ought or ought not to be an appeal. My impression is that it will not be appealed.

Mr. BERGERON. The Minister of Railways is hopeful that this canal will be opened next spring, and my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart, who I think knows more about it because it was under the late Government it was commenced, does not believe that statement ; I do not believe it will be ready for navigation before three or four years.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You are an unbeliever.

Mr. BERGERON. I have always been an unbeliever in that scheme. Not only has the canal to be finished but the locks on both sides have to be dredged to 14 feet before vessels of large tonnage can pass through. At the foot of the canal they will have to dig for a mile or two, and I am told that this spring the ice was there a fortnight after it had left the river. Unless the Government increase the amount of money they are taking for that work and put dredges on, the canal will not be ready for navigation before three or four years hence. Let the Minister take a note of what I am saying now and he will find that I am correct.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must be guided by the advice of the officers.

Mr. BERGERON. I have very little confidence in them from what I have seen.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So far as my experience has gone, I did not find that their calculations have been very much astray.

Mr. BERGERON. You will find that what I say is true.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Almost anything is possible in connection with a canal located such as this.

Mr. BERGERON. No doubt.

Mr. McDOUGALL. We had quite a lengthy discussion on the Goodwin claim in this House, and taking the advice of the then Liberal Opposition the Minister of Justice referred this case to the courts. What has been the cost up to the present time of that reference to the courts ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can give no idea. I presume the Solicitor General, if he were here, would know that.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it $10,000 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think it could be that.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I think you will find it was more than $10,000.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister is asking here for a large vote of $1,610,000, and it seems to me that he should give some information with regard to the present condition of the work. That information would enable us to exercise our own judgment with regard to the possibility of the canal being completed within the time expected. The Minister should give us some information as to what state of progress the work is now in when he is asking for this money.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I may tell the hon. gentleman that there was expended up to the 30th of June, 1897, $2,639,000, and from the 30th of June, 1897, to the 1st of April, 1898, $561,000. The expectation is that before the close of the present fiscal year there will be expended another sum, in round numbers, of $200,000. That will leave, according to the estimate, $1,600,000 to complete the work ; $3,400,000 will be the amount in full expended up to the end of the present fiscal year.

Mr. SPROULE. That statement shows the money expended, but it does not show the condition of the work. There must have been given to the Minister some outline of the work done, and he should give us some information as to how much of the work is done, and how much there is to do.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the report of the department for the year, I think he will see there set forth very much of the information which he desires. I can give him a statement of the amount which we estimate will be required to complete the different sections. On sections 1 and 2, which were taken out of Mr. Stewart's hands, there has been paid $517,000, and we estimate that it will take $300,000 to complete the work required to be done upon those sections. Upon section number 3, that is O'Leary Brothers' section, we have paid $193,000 and upwards, and there still remains to be paid, $36,000; but the work on that section has practically been completed, and we are waiting for the settlement of the final estimates to pay the balance. Sections 4, 5, 6 and 7, which were the Goodwin sections, are now under contract to Mr. Onderdonk; $386,000 has been paid to the contractors, and we estimate that $500,000 odd will finish the work. On section 8, which is the Raynor section, where the landslide occurred, there has been paid $236,000, and the balance to be paid, if the landslide had not occurred, would have been $23,420 to complete the work. On section 9, the Manning and Macdonald section, the amount paid is $100,000, and there remains still to be paid about $30,000. On section 10, which is under contract to Rogers and Taylor, $240,000 has been paid, and there is still to be paid, $30,000. On section 11, another of the Goodwin sections, there has been paid to Goodwin and the other contractors, $250,650, and there remains something over $50,000 still to be paid. On section 12, which was also one of Mr. Goodwin's contracts, and which is now let to Mr. M. J. Hogan, there has been paid $73,000, and there remains to be paid, $216,000. On section 13, which is Manning and Macdonald's, there has been paid $420,000, and there remains to be paid, $120,000 odd. That is the last section. Then, we have different items made up of lock-gates, swing bridges, steel bridges, and so forth.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the hon. gentleman tell us how many locks are on the canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Four lift locks, one guard lock, and a guard gate.

Mr. HAGGART. Has the hon. gentleman decided to put a guard lock on that canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Then you have changed the plans of the department?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, they were changed.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. HAGGART. What do you want a guard lock and a guard gate for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are not located on the same spot.

Mr. HAGGART. They are for entirely the same object. I am aware that the engineer in charge of the canal was in favour of a guard lock, but the necessity for it I could never understand. I suppose it was his urgent representation to the Minister that decided him to adopt it, though the department had decided to build the canal without it. I see that Mr. Onderdonk has a contract for building a portion of the canal. Was he the lowest tenderer?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He was the lowest tenderer who was willing to accept the contract. There was an offer below that, but in the notices we issued calling for tenders, the time was stated at a more remote date than we finally concluded upon. He was unwilling to take the contract and engage to have the work done within the time last specified.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What tenderer was that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. M. J. Hogan. He made offers for two works. He was willing to undertake one of them and complete it in time, but not both. The guard gate is on No. 4 section and the guard lock on No. 13. I am quite aware that my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways had rather a strong opinion against the wisdom of putting up the guard lock, and it is a question which gave me a good deal of concern: but I did not, I confess, myself have any expert or special knowledge to enable me to form a judgment on that question. The engineers of my department were strongly in its favour. I knew the hon. gentleman had disapproved of the guard lock, and I had a very careful examination made and took outside expert opinion, which was very strongly in favour of a guard lock.

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. gentleman will refer to two of the finest works built in America, namely, the American Soo Canal or locks at the Soo, and those on our own side, he will find that neither of them had guard locks. The engineers adopted the plan I intended to adopt of stopping the water coming in. These guard locks are condemned entirely by the American engineers as not being necessary and costing large expenditure. However, I suppose the hon. Minister was guided entirely by the pressure brought on him by the engineer in charge of the works, and who is strongly in favour of the guard locks. The hon. Minister states that the contract was let to a party lower than Mr. Onderdonk for one of the sections, but he objected to completing the work within the time required. Was that time the time mentioned in the advertisement for tenders ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was somewhat shorter.

Mr. HAGGART. How much shorter ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think about a year shorter. After the advertisements were published, we concluded that it would be possible to have the work done in a shorter time, and Mr. Hogan, while willing to do one of the works within the time, was not willing to undertake the other.

Mr. HAGGART. Was it not the duty of the department, under the circumstances, to ask for new tenders. Look at the disadvantage the other tenderers were under. You ask for the construction of a particular kind of work in two years, and after the tenders are in and you have found out the prices, you decide to have it done a year shorter, and you call for no further tenders. That opens the door for jobbery, for making arrangements between the contractors themselves, and the duty of the Minister, in fairness not only to himself but the contractors throughout the country, was to have asked for new tenders.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It seems extraordinary that after the department had considered the question and fixed the time necessary for the completion of the work and received tenders on the basis of that time limit, they should then change their mind. I think the committee ought to be given the reason, and that reason should be a very grave and important one, why the decision was thus suddenly changed. Too much cannot be said on the line my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has taken as regards the opportunity this opens up for irregularities.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no hesitation whatever in giving my hon. friend the information he asks. About the time the tenders were received, the Government came to the conclusion that it would address itself to the completion of the St. Lawrence Canal system at the earliest possible date. I had myself been led to the opinion that it would be in the public interest to have the work pushed so vigorously as to enable us to have a continuous waterway 14 feet deep, at the earliest possible moment. We decided if possible to get the work done by the spring of 1899, and I cannot see that the shortening of the time affords any ground for criticism. If we had invited the general public to tender for this work to be completed at a certain day, and then had privately agreed to extend the date to one of the contractors, the contracting public might very well have complained that additional time was going to be allowed, they would have tendered for a less sum for a longer time, because the more time you allow for the completion of a work the lower the contractor can afford to tender at. But this was entirely the reverse. We concluded to get this work done, if possible, in a year less than we had proposed. We said to Mr. Hogan, who was the lowest tenderer : We have decided to get this work done in a year less time, are you willing to complete it in that time ? He said : No, I will undertake the other contract, but could not undertake both. I have tendered on a longer date and will require more if I am to complete the work in less time. We went to the next tenderer, Mr. Onderdonk, and asked him if he was prepared to do the work in less time for the same price. He said he was. I laid the facts before the Governor in Council, and the Council approved of the contract being entered into with Mr. Onderdonk at the same price as he had tendered to do the work for at the longer term.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the difference in price between Mr. Onderdonk's tender and Mr. Hogan's ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My deputy says he thinks it was between $30,000 and $40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the point.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister is perfectly right in saying that the contractor would not do the work in a shorter period for the same sum as he would in a longer period, but the question then comes, how much more did the Minister pay above the lowest tenderer ? The hon. Minister is not certain, and he says that Mr. Onderdonk got between $30,000 and $40,000 more than Mr. Hogan. Under those circumstances it surely would have been the correct thing for the department to advertise again and get new tenders for the work. The parties who had tendered to do the work in three years were required to do it in two years. Any one knows that it costs more to do in two years than in three, but if a contractor gets the work at a far higher price than what the lowest tenderer offered to do it for, he may be fully compensated for the reduction in time. Tenders like that ought to be open to the public. Mr. Hogan finds that he is the lowest tenderer, while Mr. Onderdonk finds that he is within $40,000 of the lowest tender. The Minister changed his mind as to the time for the construction of the work. Now, I do not say that this occurred, but I am showing the possibility—Mr. Onderdonk says, I can do the work within two years. And he goes to Mr. Hogan, who says he will not do the work in the time, and, perhaps, he may take the $10,000 for dropping it, and the other gentleman will make $30,000 out of the job.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I ask if an estimate was made by the engineer of the department as to the cost of building the work in the shortened time, and may I ask further what that estimate was, and how it compares with the price paid to Mr. Onderdonk? If the time was changed, as it certainly was, the Minister should have had a new estimate as to the cost of completing the work. Otherwise he could not have reliable data for letting the contract for a much increased sum.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can say that the estimate which was made of the cost of completing the work was higher than the price we have to pay under the contract for building it in the shorter time.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What was the estimate?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot give the figures at the moment, nor can my deputy. We were short of time, as hon. members must realize, being behind, then. You cannot get tenders out and contract arrangements made inside of a month. Therefore, every moment seemed of importance. One thing hon. gentlemen may rely upon, and that is that the work having been thrown open and everybody having an opportunity to tender at the longer date, the Government got the work done certainly as cheaply as it could possibly hope to have it done, seeing that we were shortening the period by one whole year.

Mr. SPROULE. I remember very distinctly the strong exceptions that were taken to the conduct of the late Government when they shortened the time for building the Sault Ste. Marie Canal. And, at the time, it was held that one of the first necessities on the part of the Government was to ascertain by estimates of their engineer what additional cost would be incurred on account of shortening up the time. Now the hon. Minister says they had estimates as to the cost of the work for the longer time, and, because the contract made for the shorter time was no higher, the Government was justified in entering into the contract. But would it not suggest itself to his mind that if, having a longer time enabled the contractor to do it at a certain figure and he agreed to do it for the same figure for the shorter time, there must have been something wrong, for the reason that it must cost a contractor more to complete the work within a short time than within a long time? I remember that the increase in the various items of expense necessitated by the reduction in the time for completing the contract was given in the case of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal. The Government should have ascertained how much the work would cost and, not doing so, they did not know that they were not paying more than they were warranted in paying. I thought it was a sound rule then and I think it is now. I do not think that the Minister's conduct or his explanations will be satisfactory to the country.

Mr. MONTAGUE.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Under the present appearance of the work is the hon. Minister convinced that the contractors will complete it within the shortened time?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I am so advised.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the penalties be enforced?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Unquestionably, the work will be taken off the hands of a contractor who does not go on with proper despatch.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. Minister was kind enough to give us information as to the money spent under these various contracts. But, the work being paid for on progress estimates, it may be found that the work cannot be completed for the sum that the Minister thinks. I should like to know whether the money still unpaid bears such a proportion to the work still undone that it will pay for that work when completed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The chief contractors upon the work, remaining to be done are Ryan & Macdonald, Onderdonk & Hogan. The officers of my department tell me that these firms have on the ground sufficient plant and that they have sufficient organization, so that, proceeding as they have been proceeding, they will complete the work in the time—that is, as I have always said, sufficiently to enable the canal to be opened for business at the beginning of the next season of navigation. I do not see how it is possible for me to give my hon. friend further information. I have no photographs here that I can exhibit to show the hon. gentleman the state of the work.

Mr. SPROULE. Perhaps I did not make myself understood. There are a certain number of cubic yards of stone work to be done, so many gates to be built, so many locks, so many thousand yards of excavation. Surely, the progress estimates would show whether the work still to be done is proportionate to the money still to be paid, so as to show whether the money voted will be sufficient to complete the work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would gladly tell the hon. gentleman, though I think it would not be possible even with a very careful examination made by the officers of the department to make my hon. friend one whit better able to form a judgment as to the probable time for the completion of the work than he is now. He could not have the data upon which to judge of the value. The men who have been familiar with the work since it started, the character of the plant, the size of the organization, the amount of progress that has been made since they have been fully equipped, all afford information which has led the officers of the department to give me these assurances which I am now conveying to the House. I think these officers must be in a better position to form a judgement than anybody else.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the Minister is aware that there is no object in having this completed before the opening of navigation, because it could not be utilized unless all the stretches along the river were opened at the same time. When he states that it will be open to navigation the first of next spring. I suppose that all the other works which he has under contract on the St. Lawrence will be open at the same time, too; because there could be no object in shortening the contract from two to one years unless he was sure of the deepening of the St. Francis, the completion of the works at Cornwall, at Farran's Point, and the Rapids, and the Cornwall Canal. There is another thing I would like to ask the Minister. From evidence which was adduced in another place, it seems there has been an expenditure of over $20,000 for cement upon this canal. The officer in charge of the work says that it is entirely useless, that he does not intend to lay it upon the work. I would like to know from the Minister from what authority in his department he advertised for and took that cement for the construction of the canal? When I was Minister, the engineer in charge of the work protested strongly against the use of any such material for the construction of the works. I went over the works myself on the Cornwall Canal, and saw where they had been using cement of a similar character, and I thought it was a pity that the magnificent stone used in the construction of that work should be entirely useless on account of the fact that the cement which had been used was good for nothing. I took the opportunity of asking the engineer as to that matter, and his answer was that the cement was entirely useless. He said they employed about 100 barrels, but the rest did not come up to the standard and could not be used.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume my hon. friend is referring to the cement known as hydraulic cement, or Thorold cement. I can tell him at once how the department came to award a contract for this cement for use upon the canals. Tenders were invited for cement in the usual way, stating the character of the cement to be furnished, and that it would have to stand a test of 60 pounds after 24 hours setting. When the tenders came to be awarded, we found that an offer had been made by the Thorold people to furnish us cement, undertaking that it should satisfy the required test. In support of their claim that the cement was of good quality and could be properly used in the works on the canals, they furnished certificates from Mr. Monro, engineer of the Soulanges, and from Mr. Thompson, engineer of the Welland, and from Mr. Page, whom I suppose hon. members very well recollect. Mr. Thompson certified to us in the most explicit manner that he had used this cement in great quantities on the Welland works, that it was there still to show for itself, that it was of good quality, as good as could be desired, and he recommended that we might very properly use it on the Soulanges. A contract was awarded to the Thorold people for a portion of the cement required for the whole work, and in their contract they expressly undertook that the cement should stand the required test, and any cement that has been used on the canal has only been used, I apprehend, after it has been tested. I have seen the tests myself. I heard some complaints with regard to the cement, and before the cement which had been taken from the contractors was paid for, I went down to the Soulanges and the official there charged with the duty of making the tests, showed me the record of the tests, and I brought back with me, for the information of the engineer and for my own information, abstracts from the test book and from the records made by the officer, Mr. Green, of the tests made by him from time to time. Mr. Schreiber advised me that the tests were very satisfactory, some of them showing 58 and some 60 pounds, and it was considered that it complied with the requirements of the contract. I also brought some briquets up with me, and had them tested here by Mr. Perley, who was the officer charged with that duty in the Public Works Department, and the result was exceedingly satisfactory. I think that some of the briquets stood the test of 120 pounds after 24 hours setting; so I think it would be unfair and unjust to the Thorold people to say that their cement ought to be condemned. Possibly some of that which they furnished was not up to the test, perhaps from having been air slacked, as I infer from what I have recently heard. They delivered us more than we were able to use, it came in bags, and as a result I think it air slacked. At all events, there will be some loss upon that cement. But the contract required it should be of the standard, that it should stand this test, and if it stood the test, I do not see any reason why the cement should be condemned.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister must understand that cement is generally paid for upon the certificate of the engineer in charge of the works. It is his duty to test, not only a large consignment, but to make a test of every five barrels that he puts into the work. The engineer in charge of the work reports that it is unfit. What astonishes me is how the man has got paid. There is no certificate from the engineer on the Soulanges Canal showing that the cement is good, or that he received it at all. The amount is paid on the certificate of Mr.

Schreiber, who has not got the certificate of the engineer in charge of the work, but of an engineer, as he states, connected with the Public Works, an entirely different department. This shows that he must have had some information from the engineer in charge of the works that it is unsuitable. The engineer states before the Public Accounts Committee that he would not allow such cement into the work, that it is unfit for the work, and it still lies there. It could not have been tested, though I see from the Public Accounts Committee that over $20,000 has been paid for it.

Mr. BERGERON. Paid to whom ?

Mr. HAGGART. A person by the name of Battle.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister has told us that three engineers certified to the quality of the cement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I stated that the contract was not awarded for any Thorold cement until I had been furnished with certificates from the officers.

Mr. SPROULE. Were those engineers officers of the department ? I understand Mr. Thompson was superintending engineer of the Welland Canal. How did it happen that the Minister had Mr. Page's certificate, when he has been dead so long ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The certificate was probably given before he died.

Mr. SPROULE. There seems to be a nigger in the fence somewhere. Another feature is that while the cement was no use, it has been paid for, and the engineer in charge had reported against it. The committee must come to the conclusion that the cement was good or was not good. If it is good, proper care was not taken of it by the department. If not good, the certificates were not reliable. The country has, however, to bear the loss. These facts suggest either incompetence in the faithful discharge of duty by the Minister or laxity on the part of the officers. Whichever it is, the country will decide. The country will hold the Minister responsible for the loss, and will come to the conclusion that either the hon. gentleman or his officers failed to do their duty, or otherwise this loss would not have been incurred.

Mr. McCLEARY. I know something as to the quality of Thorold cement. If there is anything wrong about it, it is news to me, because this cement has a record extending over fifty years as being a splendid material, and really the best make of cement in this country. If there is anything wrong about the cement it has occurred accidentally, because the Welland Canal stands today as a monument of the quality of this cement. In the Welland aqueduct not a barrel of other cement has been used ; it has been used largely on all the locks, and hundreds of thousands of bushels have been used. I do not know why this cement did not stand the test applied to any other Canadian cement. Of course, it cannot be put in competition with imported cement, Portland or German, but for ordinary work, it is all right. I thought the late Government acted somewhat strangely in not using our native cement, they always taking the ground that it did not come up to the standard required by the engineers. I had interviews with the ex-Minister of Railways and his deputy, and the answer always given was that if the cement came up to the standard the department would use it. I think it is right that I should make this defence of the industry in the town where I live, which has a record for furnishing a good article and only what it is represented. The company make tests of their cement every day, as they seek to put a good article on the market. It is due to the men interested in this enterprise in my town that this statement should be made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When tenders were invited and offers were made of Thorold cement, I would scarcely have been justified, without possessing ample evidence, in deciding that the cement was utterly unfit for use on public works. How could I come to that conclusion ? I had evidence put before me that Mr. Page regarded the cement as being satisfactory. I will not say that any officer in the department contended that the cement ought to be used in all classes of work, but there was a considerable portion of the work, such as dry work and backing, for which it could properly be used. I had a statement from W. G. Thompson, superintending engineer. He represented to me in a most explicit way that it had been used by him for years, that it had been used on the Welland Canal, and he pointed to that work as showing that it had turned out well. I had a statement from Mr. Munro to the same effect. Mr. Gibson, M.P., who has had large experience in works of this kind, wrote me and saw me personally, and stated that he had used thousands of barrels and had found it a good article, and he would advise the department to give a contract for a portion of the cement required.

Under these circumstances, seeing that the cement had been used and was being used in various works connected with the department down to the moment the contract was let, I would not be justified in condemning that cement and saying that the department would not use any of it for any purpose, and that I would not afford a home industry in the country any recognition. That is the view I took. I venture to say there is not any of the hon. gentlemen opposite who have been criticising my course in that respect—and legitimately so, I suppose, if they can make a point out of it politically—I venture to say there is not one of them who would not have taken the course I did, seeing that the cement that was to be furnished must come up to the specification. I do not think it is customary to examine every five barrels of any kind of cement which is furnished, and my engineer informs me it would be impossible to make so continued and close an examination, but there is no question that from time to time sufficient tests were made in the judgment of those who had to do with the matter. I think that even now hon. gentlemen opposite ought not be too hasty in saying that the cement was unfit for use and ought not to be taken by the department. These gentlemen who make the cement have carried on their business with success for many years and have lived by the industry, and members of Parliament cannot express these hasty opinions without doing a very great deal of injury to the manufacturers. I confess that I am not sufficiently informed to express an opinion adversely to that cement, and I do not believe that hon. gentlemen opposite are so informed at this moment. I think that hon. gentlemen opposite ought to consider that those whose living depends upon the successful prosecution of their industry are entitled to expect that these gentlemen shall withhold such an unqualified condemnation of the product of their industry until the evidence justifies it. To say that Mr. Monro has condemned the cement does not by any means settle the question.

Mr. BERGERON. Oh, no.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Although I have a very favourable opinion of Mr. Monro's capabilities, yet we have to differ with our engineers from time to time. I had a question before me very shortly after I came into the department which I had to determine adversely to Mr. Monro's strong view. He said that a certain stone was not fit to go into construction, and he was fortified in that by the opinion of some other people, but there was a body of valuable opinion the other way, and I had to do the best I could in determining as between the differing opinions, and I came to the conclusion that there was good stone in that quarry and that it should be used. That stone has been used and the more I see of it the more convinced I am that I was right and that Mr. Monro was wrong. If I have been guilty of remissness in regard to this cement no one is more ready than I am to submit to the judgment of the House, and to take the full responsibility of any error that I have committed, but it should be borne in mind that the cement might have been good if it was used at the time, and that there may be no fault attached to the cement itself, but that the fault is due to other causes. For instance, a very large portion of the cement that was put in last fall was not used. It was, I think, carefully housed, but hundreds of bags of it got air-slacked and it became as hard as rock. That was not the fault of the cement, and I do not think it was anybody's fault in particular. The work was not, unfortunately, as far forward as we expected. There was a very large quantity of masonry which we expected Mr. Stewart would have completed last fall, as he was required to do under his contract, but, unhappily, Mr. Stewart failed to do it, and we did not have occasion to use the cement which we thought would have been required. It might be possible to complain that we ought not to have supplied ourselves with such a large quantity of cement, that we ought to know that Mr. Stewart might fail in carrying out his contract, but even if we are at fault in that respect, do not let us condemn the cement unless we know that there is reason for our doing so.

Mr. BERGERON. Oh, no.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) is, I am sure, fair-minded enough to withhold censure until he is better informed than he is at present. The Deputy Minister tells me that he has just received a statement from Mr. W. G. Thompson, of the Welland Canal, that during last and recent seasons he has used no less than 5,600 barrels of this very cement on the Welland Canal, and that it turned out to be excellent. That evidence ought to be sufficient reason why hon. gentlemen opposite should not be too hasty in condemning the cement. When you find it proven clearly that this cement was not fit for the purpose, then it will be ample time to express that opinion.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no one finding fault with the product of Mr. Battle or of anybody else, but what we contend is that the whole engineering department of the country protested against the use of this cement, and there is evidence in the department that the engineer in charge of the Soulanges Canal protested against it. I myself, in going over the work with the chief engineer, have seen, in the case of similar material furnished by Mr. Rathbun, that the engineer could put his stick the whole length into the cement, and that it was utterly unfit for beautiful work like that. I had to resist pressure brought by the Owen Sound people, by Mr. Rathbun, by Mr. Battle and by a dozen others, for the purpose of getting me to use that cement, because I thought it would be better to make these parties who manufacture the cement a present of the money and get good cement, rather than ruin the work. What we protest against is using material entirely against the advice of the engineering department. I will give you an instance of the use of such cement. In some of our works we did use it. We allowed it to be used on the Sault Ste. Marie Canal; but the contractors on that canal, Ryan & Co., had occasion to use Battle cement on part of their work. They were men who took a pride in their work, and they said to me, "The cement we are required to use is Thor-old cement, but rather than use it we will use proper cement and pay the difference out of our own pockets." What I protest against is the Minister taking the decision as to these materials into his own hands, and not being guided by his engineering department. Why does he force on the engineering department materials which are unfit for the work? And why is it that the Finance Department and the Auditor General's Department paid $20,000 for material for which they had no certificate of the engineer in charge of the work? The certificate they were forced to get in order to pay this man for his cement was obtained by the engineer or the deputy head of the Department of Railways from an officer of the Public Works Department. My advice to the Minister is this. This is a loss to the country, and let it remain a loss to the country. Rather than put that material into the work of the Soulanges Canal, pitch it into the river—the country will forgive you—and see that proper material is put in and a good job done.

The PRIME MINISTER. I see it is five minutes to one o'clock, and I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to, and committee rose and reported progress.

THE MAJOR-GENERAL COMMANDING —QUESTION OF ORDER.

Mr. SPEAKER. In reference to the discussion which took place this morning upon the question of order, it occurs to me that possibly it might not be clear what my opinion was on one point, which I think was suggested by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster). In the first place, I hope I made it clear that I did not think it would be in order to read the letter in question without a motion to lay it on the Table of the House. In the next place, I think the hon. member for York suggested a query as to whether any hon. member could at any time put himself in order in reference to such a paper by making a motion to lay it on the Table of the House. I think it is quite clear that an hon. member could put himself in order in that way, provided he gave proper notice of the motion, or the House unanimously agree to the motion at any time, as was the case on this occasion. The House did not object to the motion being put, but there was a unanimous assent to it, as occurs continually in reference to similar motions. It is only in that way that such a motion could be made either by a Minister or by any other member of the House. So that, I think the point is very clear and simple. I would also mention that hon. members will have observed, this session, at any rate, that when a Minister has desired, or has been requested, to lay on the Table any paper which is not in answer to an Order of this House for a return, the hon. member has, at my suggestion, generally, to put his action in order, made a motion that he do lay on the Table such a return. That has been done a number of times this session, exactly as was done in the case of General Gascoigne's letter. I would also like to say that when that letter was being read by the leader of the House, I mentioned to the Clerk that I proposed to make it regular by putting a motion—of course, with the assent of the House. I also mentioned to the Clerk that I thought that would be more fair, because it would give an opportunity for the discussion of the letter, which could not be had if it were simply read and laid on the Table. So that I think there can be no doubt at all on the part of any hon. member as to what the rules of the House are in matters of this kind.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, am I to understand that the ruling of the Speaker is this, that although it is laid down by the authorities on parliamentary procedure that an extra-parliamentary letter should not be read in Parliament, it may be read in Parliament on a motion of a member before the motion has been affirmed?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not understand it in that way, but what is constantly done here is this. Members constantly ask, as a matter of privilege to be allowed to read a newspaper article, for the purpose of giving it a denial; and what applies to a newspaper article would apply to a letter. That is done over and over again, as my hon. friend knows.

Mr. FOSTER. What I want is to be clear on the question. I find in Bourinot's book that a letter from an outside official rebutting something which a member of Parliament has said is not to be read in the House. Am I to understand that if I want to put such a letter before the House, I can do so by simply making a motion, and before that motion is passed, and without previous assent of the House I can read that letter? If so, the rule would have no force.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, is the rule this, that if I want to get an extra-parliamentary letter read, I must first state what I want, and ask the assent of the House, and if I get the assent of the House, I can then read the letter?

Mr. SPEAKER. The decisions which have been quoted to-day all refer to what has gone on in the course of debate. No motion could be made in those cases, and the reading of irregular matter cannot be put in order by any motion in the course of a debate. My impression would be, if the point arose, and if a motion were made after proper notice given, or made with the assent of the House, for leave to lay a paper on the Table of the House, it could be read after the motion was adopted.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Second Sitting.

TUESDAY, 31st May, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the 7th report of the Public Accounts Committee be ordered to be printed, and that rule 94 be suspended.

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANK.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the hon. Finance Minister whether he could let me know to-morrow what are the withdrawals during the month of May from the Post Office Savings Bank, and what are the deposits, either exactly or approximately? I rather think it will not be as easy to give me the latter as the former, but I suppose there will be no difficulty about the withdrawals. It would be instructive if we could have this week the withdrawals and the deposits so that we could see whether there is a deficit or a surplus.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). It would be difficult to give the information as this is the last day of the month, but so far as possible, before the session closes, I shall be glad to give it.

FRENCH LINE OF STEAMERS.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister how the negotiations stand with the Government concerning the French line of steamers which we heard of at the commencement of the session, and if we can expect anything to be done before the session is over?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry I cannot give any information, as the negotiations are pending.

THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask my right hon. friend whether he can confirm the report that a former member of this House has been appointed to the position of Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories? I refer to the member for Huron (Mr. Cameron).

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Cameron has been appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories.

THE CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. BELL (Addington). Has the report of the commission appointed to inquire into the grievances of the labourers on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway been ordered to be printed, and when may we expect to have it?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry that I cannot give any information to-day, but shall endeavour to do so at a later stage.

THE MONTREAL, OTTAWA AND GEORGIAN BAY CANAL.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. POUPORE. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to a very important matter which is now agitating a very large proportion of the public mind of Canada. I refer to the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal project. Last year I formed part of a deputation which waited upon the right hon. First Minister and his Cabinet with regard to that gigantic enterprise. We had on that deputation representatives from a large number of the boards of trade of Canada which had previously petitioned the Government to adopt some plan whereby the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal should be placed under construction at once.

At that convention some very prominent gentlemen from the various towns and cities of Canada pointed out the vast advantages that would accrue to Canada if the project were carried to completion. The proposition was that the Government should contribute aid towards the construction of this great enterprise, and the right hon. First Minister replied that whilst he did not at all undervalue the importance of the scheme, but on the contrary looked upon it as one of paramount importance to Canada, still the other obligations devolving upon the Government, such as the construction of works under contract and other projects seeking Government aid, made it impossible for them to take up the project of the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal. He did not, however, throw cold water upon the project on that occasion. He said he considered it an important project for Canada. When the deputation received that answer from the Prime Minister and his colleagues, the promoter of the recent agitation in connection with this scheme, Mr. McLeod Stewart, felt that if it were to be pushed forward it would be necessary for him to place himself in communication with the capitalists of England so as to devise means to raise the funds for carrying out the work. With a view of getting into immediate contact with the people, Mr. Stewart went to London and spent several months there. He not only interested the general public of England in this great enterprise, but he interested capitalists and prominent engineers in that country. So successful was he that, when a committee was appointed by the Senate, during this very session, to inquire into the benefits that would accrue to Canada from this canal, one of the witnesses there who came before that committee was Mr. Meldrum, the representative of S. Pearson & Son, Ltd., of London, known to be the largest contractors for public works in the world. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, and that of the House, I will read the report of Mr. Meldrum's evidence before that committee. But, before proceeding to do so, let me give a few words of explanation. This project is not a new one to the people of Canada. It was taken up in 1860, before confederation, by the Canadian Government of that day. That Government saw the importance to Canada of the construction of this canal. They had a survey made of the Ottawa River, in fact, the survey covered the ground from Montreal to the mouth of the French River, with a view to building a ship canal, so that sea-going vessels, instead of stopping at Montreal, might go through to Georgian Bay. At that early day, this was considered a gigantic enterprise. But, notwithstanding that, the far-seeing men of that period, realizing that the Ottawa River was one of the arteries of this country, one of the great inheritances with which Providence had endowed the people of Canada, offering a route to Liverpool a thousand miles shorter than any other, felt that it was necessary to carry this work to completion to cheapen the transportation to the sea of freight of all kinds. A considerable sum of money was expended on the project at that time. For instance, at the Chats Canal a large expenditure took place. Had it not been for the lamented death of the then representative of the county I have the honour to represent, the late John Egan, this project, I do believe, would have been pushed to completion at that time. Mr. Egan was a man of commanding ability, whose knowledge of these matters and skill in handling gigantic enterprises was recognized, not only on this continent, but in Europe. No greater mind lived in Canada at that time. He saw the necessity of constructing this canal and thus bringing the great lakes into direct communication with the Atlantic Ocean.

What has been done since 1860? What events have taken place in the history of our country since then? The greatest of all was the confederation of the provinces into one great Dominion. That absorbed the attention of the public men of our country until its accomplishment. Following this came the obligations incident to confederation and the carrying out of the great schemes devolving upon the central authority, the Dominion Government, by reason of it—the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the enlargement of the St. Lawrence canals, and other great enterprises. The attention of our best minds was devoted to these questions, and the canalization of the Ottawa River to Georgian Bay did not receive the same attention as before. But, quite recently, the question has been brought to public attention again. I say from my seat in this Parliament that Canada is indebted to especially one man for this. The future historian of this country will write a page in golden letters chronicling the work of McLeod Stewart. Mr. Stewart has been laughed at. But by whom? By men of our own country who have not taken the trouble even to learn by reading of the importance of this transportation question to Canada; by men who have not the brains, perhaps, nor the diligence to read up this vast subject and learn the magnificent endowment we have in that great water stretch, the Ottawa River. In discussing this subject, one is at once confronted with an argument which, to my mind, is senseless. I have been told: Why, Poupore, what is the use of talking about the Georgian Bay Canal? We have all the railways we need, we have the St. Lawrence canal system, we have all the conveniences for trade and traffic necessary for our country. Why talk about a thing that is just about as difficult of fulfilment as the building of a railway to the moon. Mr. Speaker, do you consider that a gentleman who would thus express himself knows anything of the history of this country? It is a well-established fact, and, if it be not known to all the members of this House, let me tell those who do not know it, that Canada receives only one-seventh of the vast volume of the western trade at its seaports. Where does the other six-sevenths of that trade go? Does it not go to build up the cities of the United States? Then, will not a thinking man say that we should seek to devise some means whereby we can get more of that volume of trade ?

Already we know that our railways and canals are able to handle more of that trade than they are getting. The moment we stop to inquire into that phase of the question, we are confronted with the irrefutable fact that we are now carrying all we are able to carry because of our limited facilities. Hence I say that the necessities of the moment demand of us to-day the solution of this problem, and that solution is to allow the men who are willing to come and spend their own money in developing one of the natural arteries of Canada, to touch the Georgian Bay district, thus shortening the distance between Duluth and Liverpool exactly 1,000 miles. What does that mean when you speak of a route for the transportation of all our natural resources ? It simply means a saving in expense. There is a principle admitted by all men who know anything about the subject, that trade will find the shortest and cheapest route to its destination. I do not think there is a man to-day in this House, nor is there a man in Canada, who will contradict that statement. The trade of a country will seek the shortest and cheapest route to its destination. Now, I can prove that by no less an authority than Mr. Walter Shanley, whose opinions as a civil engineer, I think, stand unquestioned to-day, not only in Canada but in the United States of America. Consider the achievement of that great engineer in constructing the Hoosac tunnel in the United States, he immortalized himself in that country, his name to-day stands in the United States as it does in Canada, a household word. The name of Walter Shanley, in point of scientific skill and knowledge, and in point of honesty and integrity, stands to-day unrivalled. I offer his opinion to this House. I do not want it understood that I am imposing upon my colleagues my own opinions on this question ; I simply ask my colleagues to give me ear for a moment till I show them what some of our great men say, both as to the possibility and as to the necessity of carrying out this gigantic enterprise, the necessity of making Canada what she ought to be, one of the greatest nations of the earth. Last year in England, where was there a Canadian who was not proud of himself as much when, at that great event, the Queen's Jubilee, he saw his country represented in so distinguished a manner by the right hon. gentleman the Prime Minister of Canada ? Sir, I say I felt proud on that occasion, and I would be failing in my duty as a Canadian if I were to say or think otherwise. I am one of those who, while not in direct political accord with the hon. the Prime Minister of Canada, am yet a Canadian who is willing to give credit where credit is due. I think Canada to-day is rated among the nations of the earth as one of the first ; in fact, to use a well-known poetical phrase, Canada is the brightest jewel in the British Crown. When we saw this country of ours represented in such a distinguished manner on that occasion by the right hon. the Prime Minister, we were filled with a greater desire than ever to make our country still more illustrious. Divine Providence has given us the wherewith to do it. Divine Providence has given us one of the main arteries of this continent. Now we, the representatives of the people of Canada, are simply expected to do—what ? Simply to do our duty and that duty is to make Canada one of the finest countries on the face of the earth. It is said we have a lot of railways, we have a magnificent canal system on the St. Lawrence route, and we have there all the means we need for the transportation of the produce of the west. But those who make that statement appear to forget that year after year the products of the west are simply doubling, as you may say ; year after year the resources of our great western country, both in Canada and the United States, are simply doubling. Therefore, if we do not double our facilities for handling those products, we are simply blocking up the development of our country, nor can the seaports of Canada ever become otherwise what they should be. I could show this by statistics, but it would be at the risk of tiring my colleagues. I do not wish to tire them, but this question is one of such importance that I think that even if the Parliament of Canada were to devote one afternoon to the consideration of this question, posterity will feel indebted to those hon. gentlemen who stood up in the House of Commons and considered this business proposition. We are not asked as a Government to put our hands into our pockets and to give to somebody else the money with which to construct this route. We find that Mr. McLeod Stewart has created a great interest in this question among the English public, and even in the English press we have seen some of the finest articles treating this question that have ever appeared in their columns. Again, Lord Dufferin, a former Governor General of Canada and one of the warmest friends this country has to-day, met Mr. Stewart on the occasion of his visit to London last year. Why, Sir, Lord Dufferin is in raptures over this scheme, as are all men of profound minds who have given it consideration, they think it is the making of this country. According to Mr. Shanley's statement before the committee, we find that we are now getting one-seventh of the whole western trade at our Canadian seaports ; and that gentleman shows that by shortening the route between Duluth and Liverpool 1,000 miles, we shall then get at least seven-tenths of the whole trade. Mr. Speaker, has any gentleman taken the trouble to inquire into what that means for Canada? If I were to quote the figures they would appear simply fabulous. But assume that we did not take seven-tenths of the whole trade, assume that we could only get another seventh, which is in fact too modest an estimate, let us consider what that means for Canada. As I have said, it is an established principle that trade will always seek and find the shortest and cheapest route to its destination. Now, it is clearly established, and I have never heard it denied, that the distance between Duluth and Liverpool via the Ottawa River is exactly 1,000 miles less than the distance via Buffalo, the Erie Canal and New York. Now, there is no reason in the world why a steamer leaving Duluth and passing via the Ottawa River should not travel, under the same conditions, just as fast as one that goes via Buffalo, the Erie Canal and New York. Then if that be admitted, it follows that a steamer via Ottawa will have exactly 1,000 miles less to travel to reach Liverpool. Now, what is the logical sequence of that fact? We are driven to the conclusion that a steamer which has 1,000 miles less to travel will reach its destination four or five days sooner than a steamer which has to go round via New York. Now it is evident to every member of this House that if we can save the enormous expense involved in running a steamer four or five days between Duluth and Liverpool, we are cheapening the cost of transportation by all that sum; and it being admitted that trade follows the shortest and cheapest route, the only logical conclusion we can arrive at is that trade will follow the route via the Ottawa River. What will that mean?

It means we shall have the activity, expansion and every advantage incident to the growing trade of a seaport. That is not all. Let us look at the development which must occur the very moment this work is constructed. You will leave Montreal and come to Ottawa, where we see only a small proportion of the electrical power capable of development utilized to-day. You go on further to the Deschenes, and on to the Chats, where we have the whole Ottawa River divided into immense water-powers, as is well known to some hon. members of the House. You go on some miles further to Portage du Fort, and next come to the grand Calumet Falls of historic importance. There you have a second Niagara. Those who may doubt my statement have only to take up the history of our country and see that I state a historical fact which cannot be controverted. I want to impress on my colleagues the vast resources which lie dormant, dormant because the representatives of Canada are dormant, because we have been dormant in the past, and if any words of mine, any efforts of mine will have the effect—I will not claim the credit of arousing our people to the obligations under which we are to the nation—I shall utter the words, and feel I shall have done my duty to Canada in bringing my colleagues to realize the great inheritance we have received from the hands of Divine Providence by having the grand Ottawa River in our midst.

In my opening remarks I made allusion to the fact that the representatives of an English firm had been heard before the Senate committee. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, and the forbearance of my colleagues, I shall read some of the statements made on that occasion. Mr. James Meldrum was examined before the special committee of the Senate appointed to investigate and report on the feasibility of and advantages that would accrue to the Dominion of Canada from the construction of a canal uniting the waters of Lake Huron with those of the Ottawa River. Mr. Meldrum made the following statement:

I am a member of the Institution of Civil Engineers of Great Britain, and head of the foreign department of S. Pearson & Son, Limited, who, I think, are the largest contractors of public works in the world.

We have been approached by Mr. McLeod Stewart as to whether we will undertake the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal, and my answer has been that provided the financial position is satisfactorily settled we are willing to undertake the construction of the works on a basis to be arranged with the company, and to give these works the skill and attention which have proved satisfactory to other governments. To establish our position as to our ability to carry out these works, I propose to give you briefly a list of some important works which we have recently constructed or are now constructing. We have recently completed the Blackwall Tunnel for the London County Council at a cost of about one million sterling, for which service the president of our company has been created a baronet. We have just completed the drainage of the valley of the city of Mexico by canal 25 miles long, and in places 90 feet deep, which has changed the whole area from a swamp into dry land, at a cost of about $10,000,000. At present we are constructing for the Admiralty of Great Britain, Dover Harbour, at a cost of about three millions sterling, which will convey to you that we are on the Admiralty list, which is the highest honour that a contractor can get. We are constructing Vera Cruz harbour for the Mexican Government. We have railway and dock contracts in England amounting, exclusive of the Dover harbour contract, to three or four millions sterling. We have just completed an arrangement with the Mexican Government by which we take over from them the Tehuantepec Railway from the Pacific to the Atlantic. We propose to build large harbours at each end and divert the whole trade of the Pacific to the Atlantic, to a new route. More within your own knowledge, we built and are part owners of the Halifax graving dock.

The Chairman.—What did that cost?

Mr. Meldrum.—I could not at this moment say.

Hon. Mr. Power.—It is a good work.

Mr. Meldrum.—I believe it is the only satisfactory graving dock on the east coast of America. Besides what I have mentioned, we are at present in negotiation with the Egyptian, Chilean, Argentine and Uruguayan Governments for other large works, amounting in all to about fifteen millions sterling. We have works in hand to over ten millions sterling, and are negotiating for fifteen millions more. As to the scheme before us, I can only say that I have read over the various descriptions of the works which have been prepared by the distinguished engineers engaged on the survey, and from these I see no engineering difficulty to prevent their execution. As to the commercial aspect, I think it would be presumptuous of me to offer any ideas at all to your committee. You are in a far better position than I to form any idea as to the commercial aspect. Our idea is this: that if the Canadian Government, the provinces and, probably, also the Home Government gave a certain guarantee on the proposed capital that we could undertake to assist in raising the capital in London, and in forming a company there, and ourselves execute the whole work. It seems to me undoubted that you are the best people to appreciate the advantage of such a canal: and that, therefore, if you are prepared to back your opinion in cash in the nature of a subsidy or guarantee, we are prepared to execute the works. I have attempted to give you an outline to show you that we have backbone enough to carry through such a scheme. As to the advantages of canals, some years ago I had occasion to report to one of the London banks on a railway in Holland, and there I found, what is generally known, that for low grade traffic which does not require any great speed, railways have no possible chance with a canal. Only a few of the through lines in Holland pay, where they compete against canals. I think I said I had not been over this route, I had been delayed in arriving here, and therefore am not in a position to criticise or give any opinion on the route or on the engineering details. Mr. McLeod Stewart has asked me whether for such a scheme, if the Government propose to guarantee the interest on the capital, it would be possible to arrange that interest should commence not on the beginning of the works, but on the opening of the canal.

A particular point to which I wish to draw the attention of the House is this:

On that point I have only to say that it is often done in Great Britain; it could be arranged that the interest on the bonds could be paid by the contractors during construction, and, of course, added to the cost of the contract, so that the guarantee of the Government would only become effective when the canal was open.

Now, that to my mind, in plain English means, that if the Government of Canada simply agreed to guarantee the bonds of the company at the very low rate of 2 per cent interest, then this canal company will undertake to carry out the construction of the project before the Government is asked to pay one single solitary cent. But, Sir, that is not all the business proposition which I have to propose to this House; for, in addition to that, the canal company will oblige itself to repay to the Government of Canada whatever moneys the Government shall have paid on account of interest for the canal company. The canal company will hypothecate to the Government of Canada the total result of the expenditure of that $17,000,000 as security for the repayment of whatever advances the Government shall make on account of interest. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the Government is asked to guarantee the interest on the bonds of a company who come to Canada with $17,000,000 of their own money to open up one of the greatest avenues of trade we have in this country, but the Government is not called upon to pay one single cent until that project is completed. Is that a fair and sound business proposition? Or may I put it the other way: Is not that a sound business proposition; so sound that you can go to private individuals with it and expect it to meet with fair consideration. Now, Sir, an appeal is made to the Government of Canada, to the representatives of the people of Canada who are sent here in the interests of the people to look after the development of the latent resources of the country; an appeal is made to them to contribute whatever in their judgment may seem best to develop the resources of Canada, and to make this country that which Providence destined it to be, one of the greatest countries on the face of the earth. I have quoted a portion of the evidence of Mr. Meldrum, the representative of this great contracting firm, and I have shown that all that the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Company ask is that the Government of Canada will pass a Bill at this session, guaranteeing interest on the $17,000,000 of the bonds of the company. And, Sir, when I say that is "all" we ask, it is because, in my opinion, it is hardly anything when you consider the amount of money that is going to be spent in Canada, and when you contemplate the vast result of that expenditure. With all our combined railway system to-day, and with all our great canal system, all that we can claim is one-seventh of the trade of that western country of Canada and the United States, but this canal once completed the story would be very different. We are now asked simply to sanction a scheme whereby that money, which is now ready, may be induced to come here to build a canal system which will tap that great western trade, and the Government of Canada is not asked to pay one single dollar, further than the conditional guarantee of 2 per cent on the bonds of the canal company for such time as the company is unable to earn sufficient revenue to pay its own interest. This work is to be undertaken by a practical combination of men known to be to-day the strongest contracting firm in the world, the firm of S. Pearson & Co., Limited. These gentlemen have undertaken gigantic enterprises and carried them to completion in all countries of the world: they are men who must know what the value of money is and what the value of a scheme is, and do you think they would take the chance of investing in Canada $17,000,000 of their own money unless they had good reason to hope and to believe that their project would be a success. These gentlemen grant a mortgage to the Government of Canada on the result of their $17,000,000 investment, guaranteeing the Government to refund every single dollar that is paid in interest, and they say further, the moment our canal is earning sufficient to meet our own obligations, we will not ask you to pay one cent, but we will pay you back the full amount of the interest you paid for us, with interest at 4 per cent. That exactly is the substance of the Bill which I propose to ask the right hon. the Premier to introduce before the termination of this session of Parliament. My reason for pressing that point is not an idle reason. I believe we should at once take the power to permit these men to come to Canada and spend $17,000,000, and my reason that such a Bill should be passed this session is because we find in that great country to the south that the people are not only spending $10,000,000 to make the navigation on the Erie Canal nine feet for the immediate wants of their trade, but they are considering now whether they shall make the whole canal navigation fourteen feet at an additional cost of $50,000,000, and there is still another proposition before them, one which I think will meet with the favour of the people of the United States, namely, that they should make their waterways twenty feet deep at an additional cost of $200,000,000. The progress of the people of the United States has been the marvel of the civilized world, and when we find these people willing to expend such untold sums of money in developing their waterways, are we Canadians, with as much pluck and vigour, with as much patriotism and as many resources as they have (though all our resources may be more dormant), are we going to refuse to open the door to the admission of $17,000,000 of private capital? Are we going to refuse to guarantee the low rate of 2 per cent interest on the bonds of that company, a request which is asked of us, not because the company wants interest, but because they want to be able to float their scheme, and to show the people of England that Canadians have confidence in their own country. That is why the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Company ask the Government to guarantee the interest on their bonds. Even though I may be accused of repeating myself, I must repeat: are we going to refuse to do so little when by doing it we can accomplish so much for our country? These people are willing to spend $17,000,000 to develop our natural resources in Canada, and in view of the fact that the people of the United States are not only spending $10,000,000 to make nine feet navigation on the Erie Canal, but are considering whether they should spend $50,000,000 more to procure fourteen feet; in view of that, are we going to refuse this request of the canal company, when by granting it we can secure for Canada the trade of the great west? But the question which is agitating the public mind there, even more than the other two questions, is whether the people of the United States shall spend $200,000,000 in making a twenty-foot waterway. When that people are putting forth such energy and making such sacrifices to develop their waterways, are we to refuse to guarantee the petty sum of $340,000 a year for a great national highway, with all the possibilities we in Canada possess? Are we to refuse to do that which the Almighty has intended we should do to develop the latent resources with which we are endowed? Mr. Speaker, I speak somewhat warmly on this subject, because it has been in my mind since my infancy. In 1860, when the first survey of the Ottawa River was being made, and when I was a mere boy, I looked forward with the hope that the day was coming very shortly when the people of Canada would realize the inheritance they possessed. I thought I could see that some day in the future the grand highway of the Ottawa River would be the main avenue of traffic to Liverpool. From the little knowledge I then had, gleaned from the engineers who were making the survey, I realized that it was a thousand miles shorter than any other known route. I felt that the people of Canada, through their Government, would some day realize not only the national character but the imperial character of this gigantic enterprise. I do trust, Mr. Speaker, that I have not been hoping all these years in vain. I do trust that we have reached the opportune moment. This country is noted to-day all over the world for the era of prosperity and progress through which it is passing. I do not know that that is entirely due to the change of Government that took place in 1896; but even if it should be due to that, ought we not to be thankful that a change of Government under these circumstances did take place? Though I am a Conservative, and though I adhere with a great deal of tenacity to my political principles, yet even at the sacrifice of my political principles I am glad to know that the gentlemen on the other side of the House have come to power if by their coming to power we have got these better times. I am glad to be able to make that admission. If they can make the wheat grow, I will hold up both hands and applaud them for it. Now, I am simply telling what is true, and I am willing to challenge any gentleman on either side of this House to controvert, or seek to controvert in the smallest degree, any statement that I have made. These statements are simply historically true. Now, in speaking of the development that must necessarily follow the construction of the Ottawa ship canal, I have not mentioned one of the greatest dormant resources that Canada possesses to-day. I even hesitate to speak of it, because it seems almost fabulous, and as if we were in dreamland. But the business facts are there, and I will bring them to the notice of yourself, Mr. Speaker, and my colleagues. It is computed upon a fairly easy and conservative basis—and when I say conservative I mean good—because every thing that is conservative must be good—by very eminent authorities that the electric power that will be developed between the city of Montreal and the mouth of the French River will amount to at least 2,000,000 horse power. If I wished to take the time to go into details, I am perfectly satisfied that I could convince any hon. member of this House who might doubt that statement, that it is absolutely true. It is predicted by scientists, men whose opinions we must not refuse to listen to—for we must remember that the discoverers of electricity and steam were laughed at and thought to be crazy—it is predicted by scientists that before ten years every passenger train on our trunk lines in Canada will be run by electricity wherever water power is available. This statement may seem very strange; but is it strange if you look upon it with the business eye, and consider that you have lying dormant in the Ottawa River a motive power which with the expenditure of a few dollars will enable you to generate such electric energy as will run railways between given points forty or fifty miles apart? If it shall be possible to save at least half the cost of running these railways, the men who own them are not going to neglect to avail themselves of such an opportunity. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and other railroads running out of New York are now being run by electricity, and wherever water power is available, you find that the process of operating railroads by electricity is gradually being adopted simply because it costs one-half less. Where a man can buy goods at half price, you may be sure that there he is going to do business, and it is exactly the same rule of business, applied to the operation of our railroads that is going to bring about the adoption of electricity as a railroad motive power. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to show you what this asset of 2,000,000 horse power of electric energy will amount to. The market price per horse power of electric energy to-day is from $20 to $25 per year; it is $20 in Montreal. Let us put this power at one-half that cost, at $10 per year per horse power, and what does this electric horse power amount to in dollars? We find that we shall have a revenue of $20,000,000, from 2,000,000 horse power of electric energy which you are going to develop by the construction of this canal. Is that all, Mr. Speaker? Why, I could take you to twenty or thirty different points in my own county and show you where we are going to develop some of the untold wealth that has been lying undeveloped there because it has been unknown. I could show you in my own county abounding wealth in various lines of coarse timber and minerals. I had the pleasure a week or ten days ago of taking some of my colleagues to a mine we are operating in my own county—and I am glad to say that I had friends from both sides of the House on that occasion; and they were simply amazed to see the deposits of mineral which we had lying near the surface. Go up to the Chats Rapids, where we have an immense water power, and you will find what is known as the Bristol iron mines. A company have expended a large sum of money in the development of those mines. They have for the present suspended operations, for the very good and sufficient reason that the cost of transportation prevents them from handling the low-grade product of those mines by rail. But were this canal constructed, those deposits of iron could be developed at a profit. Go thirty or forty miles further west to Portage du Fort and you will see some of the best serpentine marble you can find anywhere. So good is it that the people of Montreal haul it seven miles by wagon to Haley station and ship it to Montreal, and the only difficulty is that they cannot get half enough of it carried by rail from that point.

Now, what will be the consequence if we can get this canal put through so as to go right alongside that marble deposit. We have a resource right at Portage du Fort that will amaze people when they have the least idea of its vastness. These are only a few of the very many advantages that must accrue to the people of Canada, if that canal be constructed. It has been so often stated: Why, the people of western Canada are not in favour of your canal, and there is no use talking about it, for they will oppose it. I wish to dwell on that point, because it is one of the vital points. Why should the people of western Canada oppose the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal? Is it because they have not already traffic enough to handle with the facilities which they already have? Is it not a well established fact that the St. Lawrence Canal system, and the Grand Trunk Railway and every other railway we have in Canada, can only handle one-seventh of the whole trade? Is that a reason why the people of western Canada should oppose the making of another channel, which would prevent the six-sevenths of our traffic going to the United States, as it does to-day? Is it not rather the duty of the people of Canada as a whole to say: We can now handle only one-seventh of the western trade of Canada which goes to our seaports, and the other six-sevenths goes to the United States, and therefore we will take means to control the other six-sevenths also. Would not that be the patriotic thing to do? I say that the St. Lawrence Canals and every mile of railway in Canada, whether owned by one company or another, will have more than they will ever be able to handle, no matter how many hundred of thousands of tons may pass through the Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal, for the good reason that the increase in trade by the development of our western country is more rapid than the increased facilities we have to accommodate that increased trade.

If I have not made myself understood so far upon the various advantages that must accrue to Canada from the carrying out of this project, then my failure must be due to one of two things. It must be due to my inability to make myself understood or to the fact that my hon. friends will not believe what I am saying. But I do not ask a single colleague of mine in this House to accept my statement for anything. I want to be able to convince him that what I am stating here is the result of research and profound study by eminent men, qualified to make that study. Let us take the evidence of Sir William Van Horne before the Senate Committee. This, I think will convince you, Mr. Speaker, and all my hon. friends in this House, because Sir William Van Horne is a gentleman who is admittedly, not only not surpassed by any but not equalled by but few men in Canada in point of business and far-seeing qualities. What did Sir William Van Horne say in his evidence before the Senate Committee? He said:

I am of the opinion that the construction of the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal will benefit the commerce of the Dominion generally. Anything done to lessen the cost of transportation between Manitoba and the North-west and the seaboard must have unquestionably a beneficial effect. The trade of this canal would chiefly be in grains, food products, and mineral and other products; and the water power it would afford would result in the establishment of important industries all along its course in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. This canal would greatly increase the trade of Montreal and Quebec, and other Canadian seaports. It would also develop local resources by the utilization of the water power it would afford; and by cheapening transportation, this canal would have a good effect on the Canadian Pacific Railway, as it would create more traffic than it could take.

That is the evidence of Sir William Van Horne, whose opinions of railway matters will be generally accepted as equal, if not superior, to that of any other living man. He says that the building of the canal will not injure the Canadian Pacific Railway, but on the contrary would benefit that great institution. He says further, and I want to draw your special attention to this feature of his evidence, that the pulp and wood industries would be beneficially affected, as it would result in the utilization of all kinds of forest products, some of which are not now available because of the cost of carriage. Let me just on this point make this statement of what has come under my own personal observation within the last two weeks. I put myself in communication with an American pulp firm, with the view of finding a market for a large quantity of pulp wood on certain lands belonging to me in my county. I received a letter from that company making me this offer:

We will give you a contract for 125,000 cords per year of pulpwood, four feet long, for a period of ten years, and the price we will pay you for that wood, delivered at our factory, will be $6.75 per cord.

I immediately went into the question, and found that the cost of transportation from the point of cutting the wood would leave a net profit to me at the railway station of $3 per cord. In other words, I would receive for my pulp wood at the Waltham station $3 per cord. The cost of producing that wood and placing it at that station would be $1 to $1.25 per cord, so that I would have, even under those conditions, $1.75 per cord profit on that pulp wood, after paying all the expenses of transportation charges to the United States. Now, I asked myself this question. If by the construction of this Georgian Bay Canal, you pass a road within a mile and a half of that very point, is it not sure to follow that pulp factories will be established along this Ottawa valley, to which the cost of transportation, instead of being $3.75 to these factories in the United States, will be from 50 cents to $1. So that instead of being worth only $1.75 per cord profit to me, that same wood, with the construction of that canal, will be worth for myself and others similarly situated a margin of about $4 per cord profit. I mention this simply to illustrate one of the many other resources that the construction of this canal must surely develop.

Then consider our mineral deposits. Why, we have got at every step, from this very city, iron, galena, lead mines, serpentine marble, and up near Sudbury we have gold mines. Is it not reasonable to suppose that by the construction of this canal we are sure to develop every one of these mines, and to place within the limits of our own country smelters and concentrators that are to-day making fortunes in every country in the world.

I wish to mention one case that has come before my personal attention. I am a director of the Grand Calumet Mining Company. We are taking out galena ores and preparing to ship them to European smelters. We have to pay the smelters the same for treating it that we should pay if it were reduced into matte. If we reduced the ores into matte, the cost of transportation would be reduced as four to one. But we must ship the ore because we have not the smelters with which to treat it. The production of the ore is not sufficient to warrant the large expenditure necessary for the construction of smelters. But if we build this canal, we touch ore not only at the one point of the Grand Calumet. Stake out the line from this city to the Georgian Bay in ten-mile spaces and you will strike a mine in every space. You are going to develop the great electrical energy that I have spoken of, and putting it at half the market value of to-day you get an aggregate revenue from that one source alone, of $20,000,000 per annum. This may sound fabulous, but I am prepared to give the figures, and I defy successful contradiction of my statement. So you have the development of electrical energy, you have the mining industry, you have the pulp industry.

I now beg to quote a letter received by Mr. McLeod Stewart from Mr. T. Curtis Clarke, ex-president of the American Society of Civil Engineers. He says :

New York, Dec. 10th, 1897.

McLeod Stewart, Esq.,
Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company.

Dear Sir,—At your request, I visited Ottawa about a fortnight since to examine the condition of the plans, profiles and estimates which you have of the proposed Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal.

I found that with the addition of some surveys of no great amount or cost, the data you have is such that contractors can make intelligent tenders for the construction of the whole work. Were it necessary for engineers to come from England to get this information the cost would not be less than from £10,000 to £15,000 sterling, and one season would be occupied.

The time required to complete the navigation ready for use would, in my judgment, be less than the five years you have estimated, owing to the great improvements made in the last few years in the use of power drills and high explosives.

I learn from you that I shall be associated as consulting engineer with Sir Benjamin Baker, who probably stands at the head of the engineering profession in the British Empire. No engineer could be found whose opinions carry more weight, both with the Government and with investors.

I am also advised that you have made a provisional contract with the firm of Sir S. Pearson, M.P., in which he agrees to furnish all the capital required for the construction and interest until completion, if you get the moderate guarantee you ask for, and that he will also agree to postpone any returns from the capital invested until the Government shall be refunded interest paid.

The firm of Sir S. Pearson & Co. are financially able to do this, and that they should be willing to do it is the strongest proof possible of the financial merit of the undertaking.

That a canal with tolls should be able to compete with free canals would seem incredible, were it not for the vast prospective revenue to be derived from electric power along the Ottawa and French rivers. I say, as an engineer, that there is no place in any other civilized country, even Niagara Falls not excepted, where there is such an amount of water power available for electric purposes as here, as it can be used over and over again. This, it seems to me, is one reason why you are entitled to ask for Government aid, as there is nothing that will settle up and develop the country and cause the investment of foreign capital so quickly and extensively as this.

The managers of the Canadian Pacific Railway see this clearly and hence are, I believe, favourable to your scheme. Certainly their business between Montreal and Lake Huron would be vastly increased by it.

Hoping that I have made myself clear,

I am, faithfully yours,
(Sgd) THOMAS CURTIS CLARKE,
Past President American Society of Civil Engineers,
Member Institute of Civil Engineers.

Mr. Curtis Clarke estimates the cost of the work as follows :—

OTTAWA NAVIGATION.

New Estimate of 1898.

Estimate of 1860.....		$12,057,680
Deduct cost of work done below Ottawa.....	$2,255,687
Deduct engineering.....	574,175
		2,829,862
		$9,227,818
Add or increased excavation at Summit Cut, on account of Lake Nipissingue not being raised and larger size of section—
Earth, 2,148,000, at 35 cents.	$751,800
Rock, 4,477,000, at $1.	4,477,000
		$5,228,800
Estimate of 1860.....	2,028,000
		<hr/>
		3,200,800
		$12,428,618
This includes cut of new locks and excavation below Ottawa.	Add to enlarged size of locks.
	Old estimate—483,000 yard at $9	$4,180,000
	New estimate—700,000 yards, concrete, at $6.....	4,200,000
Add for increase of excavation along line.	Old estimate—1,443,000 yards at $1.15	$1,647,000
	New estimate, 1,800,000 yards at 90 cents.....	1,620,000
		<hr/>
Lengthening five locks of Lachine Canal from 250x45x14 to 300x45x14.....		500,000
Light houses, buoys, telegraph, &c.		250,000
3,000,000 bushel elevator at Montreal.....		1,500,000
Engineering and superintendence.....		735,000
		$15,433,618
Add 10 per cent for contingencies.....		1,543,361
		$16,976,979

Say $17,000,000 without interest.

N.B.—Mr. Forward, of Ottawa, estimates that if Lake Nepissingue can be raised five feet above L. W., there would be a saving of about two million yards of rock excavation.

Rock excavation on the Chicago drainage canal, including pumping, cost as per latest contracts, 59 cents per yard; so that $1 seems a liberal estimate, if the water can be excluded by cofferdams and the excavation laid dry.

The important points to be examined are :

1st. The summit cut.

2nd. The avoidance of the Rocher Fondu Channel.

3rd. The relocation of locks at Ottawa city.

4th. The enlargement of the locks below Ottawa.

(Sgd) THOMAS C. CLARKE,
Consulting Engineer.

Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Co.
New York, May 4th, 1898.

But what about the other feature of our canal, the transportation of troops and munitions of war to the western frontier for the protection of our country? One of the gentlemen who gave evidence before the Senate committee was Major General Gascoigne, and here is what the General said as to his opinion of the construction of this great waterway :

Major General Gascoigne.—I may state broadly, from a strategic point of view, I look upon this scheme as the most desirable possible. Of course, I should qualify my statements in this respect, that a great deal depends upon the depth of the water that you propose to make.

The Chairman.—The depth will be fourteen feet.

Major General Gascoigne.—I was going to ask for fourteen feet. If you make it fourteen feet deep, I can only say it will be of the utmost value, from a strategic point of view, to the country. I know the Imperial authorities look at it in that light also.

The Chairman.—Have you ever been over that route?

Major General Gascoigne.—No.

The Chairman.—But you know the general lie of the country?

Major General Gascoigne.—It is, of course, a thing we have looked at very closely, both at home and here, from a strategic point of view. Parts of the country I have been over myself, but it is quite sufficient to look at the map to judge of the enormous value of this route, from a military point of view.

The Chairman.—What depth of water would it require for the purpose of transporting your armaments through?

Major General Gascoigne.—Fourteen feet is what I should ask for. Fourteen feet would do me. I could do with less, but I should be very sorry to have less. Of course a torpedo boat does not require the same depth of water, but, at the same time, to get the full value of the work, from a strategic point of view, fourteen feet is the least I should ask for.

The Chairman.—What is the length of your vessels?

Major General Gascoigne.—I cannot tell you the full length, but the locks would have to be of considerable length. I am speaking from memory, but I think they should be not less than 120 feet.

The Chairman.—Three hundred feet is the length proposed, and they are to be forty-five feet wide.

Mr. POUPORE.

Major General Gascoigne.—That is excellent: nothing could be better. I feel perfectly sure that you would never regret the construction of such a canal. It would be of vast importance.

The Chairman.—You recollect that this Rideau Canal was built a great many years ago, with that object in view, by the Imperial authorities?

Major General Gascoigne.—Yes.

The Chairman.—And if it was necessary then, do you consider it is equally necessary now?

Major General Gascoigne.—Much more necessary now, from many points of view, which I think it would not be prudent for me to state here publicly, if you will just take what I have said from a strategic point of view. I cannot speak too highly of the value of this projected canal. I think it would be wise for me not to go into details, because I do not know how far my statements might be repeated abroad.

Hon. Mr. Power.—You may take it for granted that they would be stated as widely as possible.

Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell.—And exaggerated.

Major General Gascoigne.—I should like to confine my statements to the vast importance of the project, as I look at it.

Mr. Stewart.—Sir John Michel, who commanded Her Majesty's forces here in 1866, and Admiral Hope, commander of the squadron, went over this route the whole way by canoe and other ways, and when they came back they reported at a meeting held in Montreal that this canal was not only a commercial but a great military necessity for Canada. Are you of the same opinion?

Major General Gascoigne.—I am.

The Chairman.—Do you know the opinion of the military authorities in England?

Major General Gascoigne.—I do. It would be looked upon with the utmost pleasure at home if this scheme were carried out.

Hon. Mr. Power.—I take it that it is chiefly from the naval point of view. Since that time of which Mr. Stewart speaks, 1866, two railways have been built connecting the Ottawa with Lake Huron, and of course for the purpose of transporting troops, for instance, the canal would not be nearly as useful or valuable. It is valuable now chiefly as a means of getting ships through.

The Chairman.—And munitions of war.

Hon. Mr. Power.—They could be carried through by train. You would not think it is very necessary to have this canal for the purpose of moving troops east or west?

Major General Gascoigne.—Of course it would be a most admirable thing even from that point of view.

Hon. Mr. Power.—But considering the fact that there are two railways running from Ottawa to Lake Huron, do you think the canal would be largely used for transporting troops in case there was any difficulty and it became necessary to move troops?

Major General Gascoigne.—It was not the movement of troops that I had in my mind chiefly.

The Chairman.—But it would serve a purpose in that respect?

Major General Gascoigne.—Most unquestionably it would serve the purpose, but there are greater purposes than that which I have in mind.

The Chairman.—I suppose you could not have a route more remote from the frontier for transportation than this Ottawa route?

Major General Gascoigne.—Certainly not, and it is just for that purpose that I consider it important.

Looking at it from this military point of view, is it possible to find a system by which you could transport both troops and munitions of war so protected and guarded? It is very well to say that you can transport troops by rail, but we are exposed at different points to attack by the enemy. Going by the canal, you are travelling through the heart of our country entirely inland and protected absolutely from the attack of any foreign power. This is a feature that I think the representatives of this great Dominion should recognize. We should do our duty in dealing with this matter before this Parliament prorogues.

I would be very sorry indeed if I were considered as attempting to build castles in the air. Many people, in conversation with me from time to time, have said: Oh, this is too big a thing for the Ottawa valley. But, Sir, are we speaking alone for the Ottawa valley, when we advocate this great canal? Are we not speaking for the whole of this vast Dominion? Are we not speaking for the seaports of Canada? Are we not speaking for the growing trade of the great west, both Canadian and American? Look at the enormous figures of that trade on the great lakes, look at the tonnage that passed through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal alone last year, and compare it with what passed through the little canal that was built forty or fifty years ago. It is simply marvellous, it makes one feel proud of being a Canadian. We are not entitled to call ourselves Canadians unless we rise equal to the emergency and put forth the energy and brains with which the Almighty has endowed us in order to raise this country to the height and greatness which I believe Providence has designed it should attain. Sir, my sole desire on this occasion is simply to fulfil a duty that rested upon me as the representative of my county; but I feel that the same duty rests upon every member of this House, whether he lives in western Canada or eastern Canada. There is no sense in any objection raised from any particular section of this country. The question appeals as strongly to a gentleman living in western Ontario as it does to a gentleman living in the city of Ottawa, because, as I have said, we are only taking one-seventh of the trade that is growing up in the west. I find that while that trade is doubling every year, our facilities for handling that trade are not augmenting in the same proportion. We are neglecting our opportunities, because we possess one of the main arteries of this country, an advantage with which Providence has favoured us in this Ottawa River, and no greater river exists on this continent except the St. Lawrence itself. Sir, I was rather astonished the other day by a question a gentleman asked me while we were standing on a platform near here overlooking the Ottawa River. He said: Is this the Ottawa River? I said, Yes. Why, says he, it is as big as the Coulonge? The Coulonge, I answered, is only a tributary of the Ottawa River, one of the many tributaries of the Ottawa River, while the Ottawa itself is a river some 800 miles in length, running from James Bay to the seaboard. We have a continuous line of river and water stretches, all being navigable, and the question of this gentleman shows you how little he knew of the importance of the Ottawa River. The Coulonge is but a feeder of the Ottawa River; we have probably thirty-five or forty rivers equal to the Coulonge which empty into the Ottawa between this city and the height of land. Now, the advantage of the Ottawa River over the St. Lawrence, in so far as we are concerned as Canadians, is this: The St. Lawrence River is common to both the United States and Canada, while the Ottawa is entirely within the territory of the Dominion of Canada. Every improvement we make on the Ottawa will benefit Canada alone, but every improvement made on the St. Lawrence, whether it is made by the Americans or by the Canadians, benefits the traffic of both countries. In time of disturbance or war—a day which I hope will never come—the St. Lawrence River, being common property, the enemy would have as much access to it as we would ourselves. But take this grand Ottawa of ours, and who dare show their nose on it in case of trouble? Who, with any hostile motive, would dare put his foot on the Ottawa River? Mr. Speaker, I have tired myself out, and I know I have tired the House. But if there is any question, if there is any feature connected with this subject upon which hon. gentlemen would like any more light or any more explanation, I should be only too happy to reply to any such questions. I do not wish it understood that I am acting from any other motive than the promotion of the interest of this country. I have no interest whatever in the canal company, I have no interest, good or bad, with the gentlemen who are proposing to take up this project. I am simply addressing this House as a representative of the people of Canada, particularly of my own county. But in speaking on behalf of the people of my county in relation to this matter, I feel that I am also speaking on behalf of the interests of this whole Dominion, from the east to the west, and from the north to the south. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the House for the patient hearing they have given me.

Mr. BELCOURT. Mr. Speaker, during the early part of this session, I caused a notice of motion to be placed on the Order paper providing for the appointment of a committee of this House to act conjointly with the committee of the Senate, to investigate the project which has just been brought to our attention by my hon. friend from Pontiac (Mr. Poupore), which committee of the Senate has been engaged during the present session in hearing evidence concerning this scheme. The rules of the House prevented me from reaching my motion, and I seriously regretted that the session was apparently coming to a close without the attention of the House and of the Government being turned to this matter, until my hon. friend from Pontiac informed me yesterday that he intended to bring the matter up in the House to-day; so that what I considered at first a source of regret, has turned out to be a source of good fortune, because it has afforded the House the opportunity of hearing the very able and exhaustive argument of the hon. member for Pontiac. I have felt, and I feel now, that that hon. gentleman, on account of the avocation which he follows, on account of the personal experience which he has had, and on account of the knowledge he has of the country through which this canal is to pass, is in a position to discuss this matter with much more authority than I am. For half a century the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal has been constantly discussed. From the time the Duke of Wellington, in 1837—impressed with the great military advantages of this route—advocated its construction, down to the present day, the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal has been a live question. It has engaged the attention of the public, and it has engaged the attention of this House, I may say, almost constantly for many years past. It has engaged the attention of business men and of capitalists, both in this country and in the mother country. It has more particularly engaged the attention of engineers, and amongst them some of the foremost in the world. It is true that for a time this question has lain dormant, as my hon. friend has said, but that was owing to the fact that almost constantly for the last half century it has been overshadowed by other enterprises which have engaged the attention of the several Governments of this country. But, Sir, I assert with the greatest confidence that outside of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, there has been no enterprise advocated for half a century so closely bound up with the interests of Canada as the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal.

In our day and within very recent years this subject has been revived by Mr. McLeod Stewart, who with that tenacity, splendid courage and persistency which are so characteristic of the Highland race to which he belongs, has devoted almost every hour and day of his life for years in bringing this subject to the attention of the public and Parliament, and who has amassed such an amount of data and information and has brought in support of his scheme such convincing arguments that I am satisfied any hon. member or any intelligent Canadian, if he will give the matter his unprejudiced and unbiassed attention, cannot but be convinced that the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal is deserving the support of every Canadian. The information which Mr. Stewart has gathered, and which is at the command of everybody, is in many respects technical, and I feel I have not the authority to discuss it intelligently.

Then, again, the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Poupore) has covered the ground so thoroughly that I do not desire at this stage of the session, when every hon. member is desirous of returning to his home and affairs, to occupy the attention of the House at greater length than is absolutely necessary. I propose in a few words to endeavour to show that the construction of this canal is not only feasible and practicable, but that we have to-day the strongest evidence of its ultimate success. I feel that in a matter of this kind one is apt sometimes to speak with warmth and with a little more enthusiasm than is proper in discussing a matter of business such as this is, and I feel I am at this moment running the danger of speaking too warmly and enthusiastically about this project, perhaps all the more so because, like some other hon. members to whom reference has been made, I at one time was not a believer in the Georgian Bay Canal scheme. I confess that at one time I was very much inclined to look upon the promoters of the Bill as visionaries and dreamers; but when I looked into the question, desirous of satisfying myself as to its merits or demerits, in a very short time I came to the conclusion that the project was a very deserving one, and perhaps owing to my conversion to the scheme, because I am now a thorough and enthusiastic believer in it, I may possibly fall into the error of speaking too enthusiastically about it. But I shall endeavour to do so in sober and brief language, and to point out in a few words the advantages which this scheme offers to Canada.

The first point I desire to make is, that this Georgian Bay Canal scheme is one of Imperial importance. As was shown by the evidence quoted as having been given by the General commanding the forces in Canada, it has immense strategic importance. It is not a new project. The Duke of Wellington in 1837 was strongly impressed with the great advantages of this route. I am not a strong believer in war, I hold that, though the millenium is not at hand, the work of arbitration is bound within a very few years to supplant the work of the sword; but though not a believer in war, and though I wish and hope no war will ever fall to our lot, yet it seems to me that since Canada has taken its place among the nations of the earth, since our country has, within the last few years come into such prominence, and as all the eyes of the British world at all events are on this Dominion, since we desire to be considered a nation, that fact imposes on us new duties and increased responsibilities and certainly the obligation of taking such measures as are necessary to conserve our national territory, and it seems to me that no measure we could adopt at this moment to enable us safely to preserve our national heritage, would prove more effective than the construction of this canal, affording thereby an Imperial and military route to the interior, to the very heart of our country.

The second point I desire to make is, that this canal would ensure to the St. Lawrence and Ottawa rivers a great portion of the traffic to and from the interior of the continent and establish one of the greatest channels of commerce. It is well known that a very large portion of the immense trade of the west and north-west would be brought through the Georgian Bay Canal if it were constructed. My hon. friend has dwelt particularly on this point, and it is unnecessary for me to refer to it at greater length. It would also tend to the creation and development of numerous enterprises and manufactures in this vast territory. By the utilization of the immense water power on the Ottawa River, by the development of our mineral resources, which we are told are unlimited, by the development of pulp and other industries, a great channel of commerce would be created by the construction of this route. We all know what the lumber industry has done not only for Ottawa but for the whole Ottawa valley. We know the immense value of the timber limits north and west of the valley, which remain yet undeveloped, and which by the construction of this waterway would be immediately developed. It would open up to colonization an immense territory equal to the whole of New England, a territory which possesses as rich lands as are to be found anywhere in Canada, and it would undoubtedly establish the greatest stretch of open navigation on the whole continent. It would, to use what I think is a very apt expression, give a new front to northern Ontario and north-western Quebec. While I speak on this point I may refer to one of the objections put forward to the scheme. It has been urged that the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal would be in competition with the St. Lawrence route. I submit that if the matter is looked into carefully, the evidence given shows that this is not the case. I desire to read an extract from a statement written by a prominent gentleman interested in the subject, on this point. He said :

The Ottawa River navigation has met with some slight opposition arising from the mistaken idea that it was being urged as a competitor of the St. Lawrence canals, intended to supplant them, or to do away with the necessity for their enlargement. Nothing could be further from the attitude of its promoters, who do not ask that the St. Lawrence canals be deprived of one cent of public money which should rightfully go to them.

In our opinion, work on the Ottawa as well as on the St. Lawrence ought to be pushed vigorously and at once. The Americans are keenly alive to the value of handling the enormous traffic, and are making every effort to retain the whole of it for United States carriers to United States ports. While to this end they contemplate a deep waterway in the future, they are not neglecting to deepen the Erie barge canal to nine feet. And, following their example, we ought to neglect no advantage we possess. If they are beforehand with us it will be a difficult matter for Canada to retain that supremacy in the carrying trade of the northern part of this continent that nature has fitted her to achieve. The traffic to which we are fairly entitled by our position is sufficient already to fully employ both the Ottawa and St. Lawrence routes. These latter are really complementary, instead of competitive, both having Montreal for their terminus. The true rivalry is with American routes carrying trade to New York.

The shortness of the Ottawa route, and the very low rates at which freight can be carried by it, ensure that as soon as opened it will gain and bring to Montreal and Quebec a share of the through traffic that now goes to New York. Its local traffic also will be important and far in excess of that of the St. Lawrence canals. And every ton of through freight moved on the Ottawa River, as well as every ton of increased production of the Ottawa valley seeking export, will necessarily go to Montreal or Quebec for an outlet, not being liable to be diverted at numerous points, like the traffic on the St. Lawrence canals, which experiences exhaustive drains at Buffalo, Oswego and Ogdensburg.

On the same point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read to you the opinion of Mr. Walter Shanly, that eminent engineer, to whom my hon. friend (Mr. Poupore) has made reference. Mr. Shanly, in the evidence which he gave before the Senate, expressed himself in these words :

I believe the construction of this Ottawa Canal would greatly increase and benefit the commerce of the whole Dominion. It could not but assist the North-west beneficially in cheapening transportation.

I call the attention of my hon. friends from Manitoba and the North-west Territories to this part of Mr. Shanly's evidence :

It could not but assist the North-west beneficially in cheapening transportation, especially in affording same to the water powers along the route. The Ottawa valley might become the greatest flour-milling country in the world.

The trade would, of course, chiefly be in cereals. The effect both in Ontario and Quebec would be beneficial as stimulating trade generally.

Grain from Lakes Michigan and Superior could be laid down in Montreal at a lower rate and in Quebec at no higher rate than the lowest rate yet ever reached between the lakes and New York. Whatever benefits the country generally will not harm the railways. So this canal would have a good effect on the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway.

I may here say that I am informed on very good authority that as far as the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway are concerned, the owners of that road have not the slightest objection to this canal, but on the contrary are entirely in favour of it.

The New York Central Railway alongside the free Erie Canal increases its traffic and its earnings year by year, and it will do so when the canal has been improved (a work now in progress) to nine feet draught.

This canal will certainly be most beneficial to the lumber and wood-pulp industries.

The successful development of mining and smelting industries in the Ottawa valley, and especially of iron mining, is mainly dependent on cheap transportation that the projected Ottawa navigation will provide.

As between the lakes generally and Montreal, the season of navigation would be probably ten days shorter by way of the Ottawa than by way of the Welland Canal.

Mr. Thomas C. Clarke, the eminent engineer, who held the high and important office of President of the American Society of Civil Engineers has also furnished us with most valuable and interesting information on this matter. As late as the 10th December, 1897, Mr. Clarke wrote as follows:—

New York, 10th December, 1897.

McLeod Stewart, Esq.,

Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Co.,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir,—At your request I visited Ottawa about a fortnight since, to examine the condition of the plans, profiles and estimates which you have of the proposed Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal.

I found that with the addition of some surveys of no great amount or cost, the data you have is such that contractors can make intelligent tenders for the construction of the whole work. Were it necessary for engineers to come from England to get this information, the cost would not be less than from £10,000 to £15,000 sterling, and one season would be occupied.

The time required to complete the navigation ready for use would in my judgment be less than the five years you have estimated, owing to the great improvements made in the last few years in the use of power-drills and high explosives.

I learn from you that I shall be associated as consulting engineer with Sir Benjamin Baker, who probably stands at the head of the engineering profession in the British Empire. No engineer could be found whose opinions carry more weight, both with the Government and with investors.

I am also advised that you have made a provisional contract with the firm of Sir S. Pearson, M.P., in which he agrees to furnish all the capital required for construction and interest until completion, if you get the moderate guarantee you ask for, and that he will also agree to postpone any returns from the capital invested until the Government shall be refunded, interest paid.

The firm of Sir S. Pearson & Company, are financially able to do this, and that they should be willing to do it is the strongest proof possible of the financial merit of the undertaking.

That a canal with tolls should be able to compete with free canals would seem incredible, were it not for the vast prospective revenue to be derived from electric power along the Ottawa and French Rivers. I say, as an engineer, that there is no place in any other civilized country, even Niagara Falls not excepted, where there is such an amount of water-power available for electric purposes, as here, as it can be used over and over again. This it seems to me is one reason why you are entitled to ask for Government aid, as there is nothing that will settle up and develop the country and cause the investment of foreign capital, so quickly and extensively, as this.

The managers of the Canadian Pacific Railway see this clearly, and hence are, I believe, favourable to your scheme. Certainly their business between Montreal and Lake Huron would be vastly increased by it.

Hoping that I have made myself clear,

I am, faithfully yours,

(Sgd.) THOMAS CURTIS CLARKE,

Past President American Society of Civil Engineers.

Member Institute of Civil Engineers.

Mr. T. C. Clarke also stated in one of his reports to the Government that the great value of the Ottawa navigation is this:

Out of the 975 miles between Chicago and Montreal, 591 miles is an inland or perfectly protected navigation, leaving but 384 miles of open lake. In open lake a speed of 4½ miles an hour can be made by tows of barges. In the protected portion an average speed of ten miles an hour can be made. The cost of insurance by this route would be much less than by any other.

By the Welland and St. Lawrence route, there are 991 miles of open lake navigation, and but 297 of inland or protected navigation. The depth of the Welland and St. Lawrence Canals would limit the draft of barges to 13½ feet, which is too shallow for navigation in lakes such as Erie, subject to sudden violent storms. The rates of insurance would be greater, and the longer time required, owing to greater length, and slower movement through the unprotected parts, would more than make up for the 22 days of longer open navigation by the Welland route.

Now, Sir, it seems to me that with the improvement and equipment of the Montreal harbour, such as this Government propose to accomplish, the construction of this route would unquestionably create the safest, the cheapest, the best land-locked interior system of navigation to be found on this continent, or for that matter, on any continent in the world. In order to show that the Americans have not been slow in recognizing the great importance of this route, and that they even look upon it with envy and jealousy, I would like to cite here from the report of Major Symons, that eminent engineer, who was requested by the United States Government to prepare a report upon the waterways of America, and who carried out his work in a very exhaustive and able manner in the year 1897. I direct your attention particularly, Mr. Speaker, to what Major Symons has to say with reference to the Georgian Bay Canal. He says in his report to Congress in 1897:

It would open almost a direct route from Lakes Superior and Huron to the St. Lawrence, and shorten the distance between Chicago and Liverpool nearly 400 miles, thereby diverting a vast deal of grain, lumber and other carrying trade now enjoyed by American railroads and waterways. It would also open the settlement of great tracts of Canadian territory, rich in timber and mineral resources, and well adapted to the cultivation of wheat and other cereals, and would act as a magnet in drawing pioneers to north-western provinces like Manitoba, which Canada has so sedulously sought to fill with an industrious population. All this would mean increased competition for American producers, with odds it would not be easy to overcome. Moreover, the proposed Georgian Canal is not to be a canal merely suited to 1,500-ton barges. It is to be of a size and depth to admit of British gunboats being readily taken through to the great lakes for patrol service.

You will see that this eminent engineer, than whom there is none more eminent in the United States, not only looks upon the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal as feasible and practical, but he is strongly impressed with the immense advantages which are to be derived ultimately from its construction. He fears not only that it is going to create possibly the greatest commercial route on this continent, but if we read between the lines he also apparently fears that it is going to be of immense value as a military route. I should like now, Mr. Speaker, to give the House the opinions of two of the greatest Canadian statesmen, and in order to show that both political parties in Canada have looked favourably on this scheme and that it has not been advocated by one party more than another, I shall quote what was said by the Hon. Alex. Mackenzie and by Sir John A. Macdonald. This is what Mr. Mackenzie said

I am convinced that the true route for a canal to Georgian Bay is up the Ottawa, because that would give a great backbone to the country. If we had a fine canal capable of carrying vessels of war in that direction, it would be a splendid means of defence, as well as a great highway for the commercial products of the west.

And, again :

I am perfectly satisfied that the Ottawa valley presents the greatest facilities of any route on the continent for the transportation of the products of the North-west to the Atlantic Ocean.

Sir John Macdonald said :

The Ottawa Ship Canal and the Pacific Railway must be constructed,—

Mark the words, Mr. Speaker : The Ottawa Ship Canal and the Pacific Railway must be constructed, and Sir John Macdonald did not hesitate to place the Ottawa Ship Canal before the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The Ottawa Ship Canal and the Canadian Pacific Railway must be constructed, and no word would be raised against the great national work that would open up the western states and colonies to the seaboard.

It seems to me that if nothing else were said in this House than the mere citations of the opinions of these eminent men, that alone would impose on every member of this House the necessity of making himself acquainted with this scheme and would impose upon every Canadian the necessity of satisfying himself whether it is a reasonable, a feasible and a practical scheme. I have given the matter some consideration and it appears to me that the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal has now become an absolute necessity. It seems to me that it behooves Canadians to co-operate with nature and make this the great waterway of this continent. Why, Sir, what has the Ottawa River been from all time ? Was it not at one time the only means of communication from the seaboard to the interior ? Was not the Ottawa River the route through which the great discoverers of this continent, the heroic missionaries, made their way ? Was it not the route through which civilization and Christianity were brought to the interior of this continent ? We are simply co-operating with nature and availing ourselves of the great advantages which nature has placed at our hands, in improving this waterway, and making it the great waterway of this continent. It is the route which the voyageurs for centuries followed, and still follow. It is the route which reaches the great lumber fields of the north and the west.

Now, Sir, coming to things, perhaps, more material, I would like to cite a few figures to show the great advantages which are to be derived from the construction of this canal. First of all, it will be the shortest and most direct route from the Sault to the city of Montreal. Let me give you the figures. The distance between those two points by the St. Lawrence route is 1,348 miles, by the Georgian Bay route 980 miles, an advantage of 368 miles in favour of the Georgian Bay route. From Chicago to New York, via the waterways, the distance is 1,415 miles ; from the Sault to Montreal, via the Ottawa Ship Canal, the distance is 980 miles, an advantage of 435 miles in favour of this route. It would offer the least canal-ling, because on it there would be only 29 miles of canal, whereas on the St. Lawrence route there are 71 miles and on the Erie route 351 miles of canal. It would be the quickest route. The Erie route takes 192 hours, and the St. Lawrence route 138 hours, whereas the Ottawa route would take only 103 hours. It is the safest route. It is land-locked all the way. It is in the interior of Canada ; and in these days when we are speaking so much of Canadianism, when we want Canada for the Canadians, when it has been urged in this House, and very properly urged, that our railways and canals should as much as possible remain under our control, it is no small merit in this canal that it is an absolutely all-Canadian route. There is not half a mile of it that is not in our own territory. It is absolutely and altogether under our command and control. When the Intercolonial Railway was constructed, its rapid completion was considered necessary to form a link between old Canada and the lower provinces. I submit that the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal is necessary for the same reason : it is the natural link between the old provinces of Canada, Ontario and Quebec. There is nothing which to my mind will bring more closely together the commercial, financial and national interests of the two provinces than the construction of a canal of this sort; there is nothing that will bring the people of the two provinces more closely together or better promote interprovincial trade than the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal. It has been urged on the street and in the lobbies of this House that this is a local scheme, an Ottawa scheme. Well, Sir, it is not an Ottawa scheme; it is a national scheme; nay, more, it is an Imperial scheme. There is nothing local about it. It is truly and broadly national. Like my hon. friend from Pontiac (Mr. Poupore), I have not the slightest personal interest in this matter. My constituency is interested, and largely interested, in the construction of this canal, but Canada is as much interested in it as the counties which are contiguous to it. Now, Sir, while the scheme did not assume the definite shape which it has at last assumed, and in which it is presented to us to-day, I could understand that the Governments which preceded the present Government might have been very much in doubt whether they should go on with the construction of this work. But I say that there has been no enterprise submitted to the intelligence of the Parliament of Canada upon which so much data has been gathered as has been gathered in regard to this scheme. There has been no scheme ever proposed in Canada about which we know so much, or upon which we can with such certainty base our calculations. Why, Sir, everything has been taken into consideration. Not one or two or three engineers only have gone over this route; not simply common every day engineers, but the foremost engineers of this continent and Europe, have gone over this route by the dozen, and every one of them has pronounced in favour of it. The Imperial authorities have been immensely impressed with the importance of the construction of this route. Any one who, without prejudice or bias, looks at the details of this scheme and at the guarantees which are offered in connection with it, must be convinced of the absolute necessity of constructing this canal. Now, Sir, what is it that the Government are asked to do? It is asked to assume a very slight obligation. The largest and most substantial firm of English contractors are to-day prepared to come and spend $17,000,000 on this enterprise. They are prepared to bring their own money and spend it in Canada, because it is a part of this scheme that everything that goes into this work shall be Canadian—Canadian labour and Canadian goods. And what do these people ask? No bonus, no subsidy, in land or money. They ask for merely nothing, because, I say the mere guarantee of the interest at two per cent on the bonds of $17,000,000, which amounts to $340,000 a year, is a mere nothing; but that interest is to be paid only if the returns from the operations of the canal are not sufficient to pay four per cent interest on the bonds, and only so far as those returns are insufficient to pay that interest. What is more, this guarantee is to last for only twenty years; and at all times the first returns shall go to reimburse the Government for every cent of money which the Government are called upon to pay. Before these contractors, who are prepared to spend $17,000,000, and the shareholders of this company will have one single cent of profit from the canal, they are willing that the Government shall be paid every cent it has advanced. Now, I submit that if we can insure the expenditure of $17,000,000 in this country by merely guaranteeing the interest at 2 per cent, we are doing something for the good of Canada. But these people are prepared to do a great deal more. They are prepared to return every dollar that the Government may have to pay in guaranteeing these bonds.

Mr. POUPORE. With interest at 4 per cent.

Mr. BELCOURT. With interest at 4 per cent, as my hon. friend says. That is their proposition. It is no dream, no castle in the air, it is there in black and white. As Mr. Meldrum, the representative of the London firm of contractors told us in the Senate, they are prepared to begin now and complete the canal in five years, and in the meantime they do not ask for a cent. The Government is not called upon to pay the guarantee or any part of it until the canal is fully completed and ready to be operated. It seems to me that no proposition was ever submitted to this House, which presented itself with such clear and advantageous terms.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is away ahead of the Yukon.

Mr. BELCOURT. Yes, indeed it is. Central Canada will live long after the Yukon is gone and forgotten. I do not desire to make any reproach whatever to the Government, because I think they were bound to do what they did, but in this session alone we have expended nearly half a million dollars on the Yukon; and at our doors there is a scheme to develop a country which is bound to last long after the Yukon is forgotten. Why, therefore, should the Government not give this guarantee, particularly when it will be the means of bringing an expenditure into Canada of $17,000,000?

As to the ultimate success of this canal, the figures upon which this anticipated success is based are open to the inspection and examination of everybody. Anybody can satisfy himself that the canal is bound to be a success; and in any case what better guarantee could be asked than that this firm should be willing to spend $17,000,000 on this scheme? It seems to me that in that alone you have ample guarantee for its ultimate success.

I do not desire to prolong the debate, I feel that my good friend from Pontiac (Mr. Poupore) has stated the case with far greater ability than I could hope to bring to it. I wish to conclude in saying simply this, that I regret that owing to the lateness of the session and to the fact that my colleagues are naturally so anxious to return to their homes and business, it was impossible for me to move the resolution standing in my name on the Order paper for nearly three months I regret exceedingly that my colleagues were not afforded the opportunity of joining with the Senate committee and hearing the evidence given there during this session. I regret exceedingly that they were not, at an earlier stage, called upon to look into the information to which my hon. friend and myself have referred, because I fully believe that any hon. gentleman who has had the opportunity of doing so could speak just as enthusiastically of this project as did my hon. friend and as I am endeavouring to do. I beseech on behalf of this scheme the unprejudiced, unbiassed, close and earnest consideration of every member of this House, and I ask particularly the attention of the Government, being satisfied that when the matter is looked into, when it is sifted down and examined closely, there is no one in this House or outside of it who will not be absolutely convinced of the great advantages it offers. I know that this gigantic enterprise has its opponents and its enemies, and it would be a mighty poor one if it had none. I know that there are those who are sceptical and incredulous, and do not believe in the feasibility, importance and necessity of this work. I know more. I know that some persons, perhaps quite a number, do not hesitate to believe that Mr. McLeod Stewart, my good friend from Pontiac (Mr. Poupore), myself and others, in our enthusiastic support of this scheme, visionaries and dreamers. I have heard that said, but I am glad to know that those who say it are rapidly becoming few in number. I know that my good friend, Mr. Stewart, has been talked of by quite a number of people as a dreamer, but I am satisfied that the future will vindicate him and every one who has had the courage to stand up and urge the construction of this canal; and in the meantime Mr. Stewart, the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Poupore) and myself may well console ourselves with the recollection that in all days and in all climes men whose achievements have revolutionized the world—and I say this without the slightest desire of including myself in that category—have been looked upon as dreamers, as visionaries. The very men who came up this Grand Ottawa River three hundred years ago, carrying to this continent the light of civilization and christianity, the heroic missionaries, the undaunted pioneers and the brave discoverers of this continent were no doubt, in the estimation of their contemporaries, visionaries and dreamers, and yet they gave America to the world. I invite the brilliant statesman who to-day is conducting the affairs of this country in so able a manner, whilst making such a record for his party, to give to this matter his immediate and earnest attention, and I invite him to add another to the many laurels he has already won by lending the influence of his words and of his support to this truly and broadly Canadian and Imperial scheme.

Mr. CHARLTON. The question which has been brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Poupore) and discussed by the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) I desire to allude to briefly, and to present a few business considerations that it will be necessary to bear in mind while we are considering this most praiseworthy scheme. I avow myself, at the outset, a believer in the Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal. I believe in that work very thoroughly; and in my estimation we should concentrate our energies, so far as we make appropriations for public works, to the prosecution and completion of this great work. I, perhaps, do not approach the consideration of this question with the degree of enthusiasm that characterizes my hon. friend from Pontiac (Mr. Poupore) who lives upon the immediate line of the work and has perhaps a personal interest in its completion as well as a patriotic one, or my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) who resides in the city that will be largely benefited by the completion of this work and to which the work is of local importance. I am endeavouring to look at the question purely from a national standpoint; and looking at it from that standpoint, I believe that the construction of this canal is essential to the commercial prosperity of this Dominion.

My hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) has pointed out that it would be an Imperial route, in the first place, for military purposes in case of war which, Heaven grant we may never have. He pointed out, in his closely reasoned argument, that it would develop the resources of the country through which it passes and serve as a colonization factor and be an all-Canadian route exclusively within our control. All these are statements which I fully endorse. He also says it would secure to us a large proportion of the trade of the west. This is the most important consideration in connection with the construction of the canal, and the realization of that prophecy would depend very largely upon the character of the work. We must not flatter ourselves, when contemplating the possibility of constructing this public work and counting upon the advantages that it will bestow upon us, that we are undertaking a work of slight magnitude. We shall find that, if the Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal is to serve the purposes for which it is intended, it must be a very costly work, much more costly than is contemplated by the scheme now under consideration. It is to present business considerations in connection with this question that I ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments. My desire to see this work a satisfactory one, one that will accomplish the purpose designed, leads me to present some points to the House that have not been presented, and, possibly, have not been considered by the gentlemen who presented this scheme.

My hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) has referred to the report made by Major Symons, who was appointed by the United States Government to report on the waterways system. I have read that report with great care. I was much struck by conclusions arrived at by that high engineering authority. One statement made by him struck me with some surprise. He makes the statement that a canal from Buffalo to New York City of ten feet draft, admitting the passage of fifteen-hundred-ton barges, will furnish the cheapest possible route of transportation from the upper lake ports to the sea-board. He says that if a ten-foot canal with fifteen-hundred-ton barges were placed side by side with a ship canal of 21 feet draft, the ship canal could not compete with the other. That assertion seemed at first an incredible one. But if it be true, then the city of New York is preparing the best possible conditions for a cheap transit way for grain and other freight from the west to that city. A fact with regard to the marine of the upper lakes which is well known to those familiar with the facts is that vessels of 14-foot draft have become a back number. They are unprofitable. That class of vessel property which a few years ago formed the largest class of carriers is now not worth over 20 cents on the dollar. They have been crowded out by the vessels carrying 250,000 bushels of grain, five or six thousand tons of freight, and drawing from 18 to 20 feet of water. This class of vessel loading at Fort William or Chicago and transporting their cargoes at Buffalo, where they are transferred to elevators and thence to barges on the Erie Canal, are furnishing transportation at a rate with which it would be very difficult to compete. You can bill grain through from Chicago, Milwaukee and Duluth to New York City for 4½ cents per bushel. Added to this will be the elevator charges, the total cost of the transference of wheat from one of the upper lake ports to New York being almost 6 cents per bushel. We have gone on and made appropriations for the enlargement of the St. Lawrence canals to a depth of 14 feet. Every dollar of the millions put into this work has been uselessly expended so far as securing the trade of the far west is concerned. The canals will not serve the purpose of securing that trade. In order to enable Montreal to compete with the Buffalo route, you must have a line of communication that will enable you to bring the largest lake carriers to the wharfs of Montreal as they are now brought to Buffalo. If that is not done you have adopted an ineffective scheme for developing the trade. If the Ottawa Valley Canal is constructed upon these specifications now presented to the House, with a depth of 14 feet, it will not serve the purpose, it will not secure the trade; it will not compete with the Buffalo route; it will not lay down grain at the seaport at the price at which grain can be laid down from the west in New York.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHARLTON. Certainly.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Will the hon. gentleman tell the House what is the difference between the cost per bushel of wheat laid down in New York, and wheat laid in Montreal, both being seaports?

Mr. CHARLTON. I am not in a position to tell what the difference is.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It seems to me that that would be the best comparison. The hon. gentleman takes a seaport in one case, but not in the other.

Mr. CHARLTON. I can tell the hon. gentleman that, in consequence of the rates by Buffalo and New York being less than they are by Montreal, that line has secured about three-quarters of the Manitoba wheat trade. Whatever the rates may be, they are such as to draw the trade in that direction.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Let me point out that that might be accounted for by the fact that they have superior elevator accommodation in New York to that which is afforded Montreal.

Mr. CHARLTON. No, it is accounted for by the fact that the rate of freight from the point of shipment in the west to New York is less than the rate to Montreal, and by the additional fact that when the grain reaches New York City, in nine cases out of ten, the rates of freight to Europe are more favourable than from Montreal. Unless we provide means to overcome disadvantages that Montreal labours under—the disadvantage of being closed during a portion of the year, the disadvantage of having less ample vessel accommodation for the shipment of wheat to Europe; and the disadvantage of having slightly higher, if not considerable higher freight rates to Europe than from New York—it is useless to talk about making the Montreal route a competitor with the other route. You must make the freight to Montreal cheaper, or, at least, as cheap as it is to New York city—and you cannot do that with a 14-foot channel from Lake Huron to Montreal. You must enable the class of vessels that take a cargo of 200,000 bushels of grain into Buffalo, carrying it at a rate that the 14-foot vessel cannot carry it for, to reach the docks at Montreal, in order to compete with that rate. I point out these facts to illustrate the position I wish to take. As a friend of the Ottawa route, as a representative who desires to see trade diverted from American channels to our own channels, especially to secure and hold our own trade, I ask the House to consider this from a business standpoint, and to realize that we are not dealing with a question involving an expenditure of $17,000,000, but with a great highway of communication from the interior to the seaboard that will compete with the other lines and which, unless we make it compete, will be of no value to us except so far as it enables us to develop local resources along the line of the canal. The difference in the distance, of course, is a matter of some consequence. But the difference should not be measured by the actual difference in distance, because the passage through the Ottawa Canal would be much slower than the rate of speed down the lakes to Buffalo. The difference in distance, will not greatly add to the advantages of the route, so far as time is concerned, until you reach Buffalo, then there will be a saving in the time in getting through the Erie Canal.

What I rose to point out, and what I reiterate is that it is useless to spend money in a canal that will not compete with the other routes. If grain is laid down in New York at 5 cents by the Buffalo route, we must have a route that will compete with that rate, or it is useless to invest our money in it. I do not wish to go into the matter in details by quoting tables; but I will say, that if we examine this carefully, we shall be obliged to arrive at the conclusion that this enterprise is one that is meritorious and desirable, one that we should seek to embark upon as soon as our resources will permit. But it will involve an expenditure of probably more than $100,000 and we ought to look at it carefully before embarking upon it. Probably the time will come when the co-operation of the United States Government will be secured in the construction of this very line, which is the best commercial line and which would serve their purpose if it were continued from Montreal by Lake Champlain to tide-water upon the Hudson. The time has not come, I imagine, for undertaking this enterprise. We have got to think over it a little more carefully, and realize that the difficulties are of greater magnitude than we suppose, and that it will require more money than we thought. There is no use going into it until we understand all the circumstances thoroughly, and are prepared to make our scheme effective and successful.

Mr. MACKIE. I would like to say a few words in regard to this ship canal. This canal has been engaging the attention of the Government for something over thirty years, and I think the Government have spent $100,000 or $200,000 on the Chats Rapids, through the efforts of the late Mr. John Egan. But for some reason, the thing burst up and nothing has been done about it since. There is an opinion that there is not sufficient water on this route to the Georgian Bay to float vessels through. I may tell the House that I have floated lumber down all those streams between the Georgian Bay and Montreal, and there is any amount of water, no difficulty about that. Of course, at some points the water may be shallow, but there is a great deal of deep water on the whole route. If the Government had to furnish the money to construct this canal, I do not know that I would feel like asking them to undertake it; but when private individuals are willing to invest their money in this scheme, and only ask a guarantee of 4 per cent interest on that money, I would insist on the Government, at least, looking into the matter carefully. I hope they will give it their best consideration, and do what they can to promote it, as the cost, under the scheme proposed, would be so slight to the Government that it would be no extra burden on the country.

Mr. HAGGART. At this late period of the session, I will not make my remarks as lengthy as I would otherwise on the important subject which is before the House. I compliment the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Poupore) on the clear and incisive manner in which he has introduced this subject, and for the earnestness which he displayed; and also the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) for the clear, lucid and earnest manner in which he supported the motion. Years ago, when I was younger like those two gentlemen, I was a great believer, and am yet, in the Ottawa Ship Canal. I took advantage of an opportunity to go up the Mattawa into Lake Nipissing and down into the Georgian Bay, and I am fully convinced that of all the practical routes from the lakes to the ocean, the best route is the one proposed in the scheme outlined by the hon. member for Pontiac. Of course, there is the Trent Valley Canal, there is the Toronto Canal, and several other rival schemes, but none of them, I think, are equal in importance to this one. I was always in favour of that route, it was a scheme advocated by the Conservative party over twenty years ago. A canal was commenced there as an experiment, as the hon. member has shown, upon the Chats Canal, and it was the intention to build that route ultimately. As for the argument of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) that it will require for building that canal a sum running up into the hundreds of millions, that is all—I will not use the phrase that is applicable to it. The hon. gentleman has only to read the report of the United States engineers appointed for the purpose of inquiring into that subject, and he will find that instead of a 20 or an 18-foot navigation for inland canals to carry freight from the great lakes to the coast, either at New York or Montreal, they recommend canals of a less depth than we have adopted upon the St. Lawrence, a depth of twelve feet, which they think is quite sufficient for all practical purposes. It would be almost impossible to build a canal of twenty feet navigation down the St. Lawrence. You would not only have to canalize the rapids, but you would have to canalize the river itself, deepening the channel in many places. The depth which has been adopted by the Government for the St. Lawrence Canal is, I believe, the greatest depth that is economically of any value. The engineers appointed by the United States Government have entered fully into that subject, as well as our own engineers. The hon. member for Norfolk argues that vessels drawing eighteen or nineteen feet have driven other vessels drawing twelve or fourteen feet off the great lakes. That is perfectly true, but that is on the great lakes alone, and that is in regard to communication from one port on the lakes to another where there is no canal to pass through except the Sault Ste. Marie Canal. But where you have to utilize long stretches of land, or the banks of rivers, and it is necessary to expend large sums of money for canals, those who have thoroughly gone into the subject are of the opinion that the most economical depth for the purpose is that which has been adopted by the present Government. The hon. gentleman says: Look at Manitoba's wheat, look at the products of our great west going by Buffalo and by New York to Europe, instead of down our system of canals. The reason of that is simple. As long as you can send wheat from Buffalo as cheaply to Liverpool as you can from Montreal, the wheat will always travel by the cheapest and best route. If you can send grain from Buffalo to Liverpool as cheaply as from Montreal, what is the use of carrying it from Buffalo down to Montreal? Those are the economical facts in reference to this question. It is easy to understand why the present condition exists. The St. Lawrence is more difficult of navigation, there is a greater amount of insurance upon the St. Lawrence, and it is open only for about six months in the year, whereas the port of New York is open the whole year round. Then, vessels going by the St. Lawrence have only freight one way, going out; they cannot get return freight. In the case of vessels plying from New York, one of the principal returns to the vessel-owner is freight coming from Europe to New York; they can always get return freight; and vessels will go where they can get freight both ways. A bushel of wheat, when it arrives at Buffalo, can be sent to Liverpool as cheaply as from Montreal. The New York route is also an old-established route, and there are more commercial advantages for sending grain by that route. We all know how grain is carried from the western states to Europe. You can sell a load of grain, with the shipping receipt attached to it, anywhere between Chicago and New York just as well as if it was in an elevator in Albany, New York or Chicago. It is a merchantable article that can be sold in any markets, in any corn exchange, in the cities of the United States. However, we hope in time, by building this canal which will give a much shorter route, to overcome all these difficulties. I am of the opinion that the day will come when that canal will be built, not only for the purpose of carrying freight between the great lakes and Montreal, but for local purposes. As the hon. member for Pontiac said, the time will come when, although we have not the coal here for the purpose of smelting the large mass of mineral ores in this district, electricity will be used and the immense stretches of water from Montreal to Lake Huron will be thus utilized, and the day is not far distant when every road in this section will be run by electricity. I hope to see the day, and I am satisfied it is not far away, when instead of one or two trains running from this city to Montreal daily, we shall be able to jump on an electric carriage in front of the Parliament buildings every half hour or hour and start for Montreal or Toronto. This will be a more cheap means of conveyance than our present system of railways. There is a grand future for this country on account of its water powers, there being, as stated by the hon. member for Ottawa, not less than one million horse power along this particular canal route.

Mr. BELCOURT. Two million horse power.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know what the power is, but it is an immense power. We possess the finest power in any part of North America. It is the cheapest means of obtaining electricity for heat and power purposes. And there is an immense future for this section of the country, which was thought to be useless, whereas these primitive Laurentian rocks will at one time prove the most valuable part of the country. As to the feasibility of the Georgian Bay Canal, I had doubts in regard to its feasibility, because it must depend entirely on the water from the summit level of the canal. I thought at first, I did not look very carefully into it, that it would lie somewhere between Lake Nipissing and Mattawa River, where there is at present a canal four and a half miles long, and it is now stated that Lake Nipissing will be the summit level of the canal. If that can be accomplished by ordinary expenditure, the success of the undertaking is assured. Although the undertaking might not return one cent of dividend to the investors, I entertain the firm belief that on account of the cheapness of freight, if it were utilized for no other purpose than regulating the charges on the railways, it would be a benefit to the country, if it could be built, as I believe it could be built, for the sum of money stated. As to the financial part of the question, I did not follow up the explanations closely. I do not know about this work bringing in $17,000,000 of capital. The investment in the canal would be made on the security of the people here, and if money were invested it would be because the work was expected to be able to make a return. For my part, I do not think it will be, perhaps, the right thing to entrust this work into the hands of any private enterprise. If it should be built at all, it should be carried out by the Government, and the people of the country would fully support any Administration which by an ordinary expenditure each year would accomplish the desired object, an object very much desired in this section, and one which would do more to promote the development of the resources of the Ottawa valley than any other enterprise. Some hon. members, no doubt, will ask why I did not do something in that direction when head of the Department of Railways and Canals. I was anxious to build a lock or two each year, and in ten or twelve years thus accomplish the object in view. We had however, a Finance Minister who was very jealous as regards the expenditure of public money and kept a very tight line upon the spending departments, both Railways and Canals and Public Works; but I hope in this year of plethora, when everything is flourishing and money is abundant in every portion of the country, a fair portion of it, instead of being directed to the Yukon and distant points of the Dominion, should be applied to the Ottawa valley for the purpose of constructing this proposed canal, which is in the interest not only of the people of the Ottawa valley but of the inhabitants of the whole Dominion.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I am sure the House is under great obligation to the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Poupore), and also the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) for having brought before the House the very important question now under consideration. I have not gone deeply into the question brought to our notice; still, I have given some attention to it, and I do not hesitate to say that at some time this scheme will have to be taken up. But for the time being we are engaged in other works. I was very sorry that my hon. friend the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) made the statement he did, in so many words, that he had no confidence in the St. Lawrence route unless we go deepening our canals to 20 feet in order to secure the freight between the west and the east. The hon. ex-Minister of Railways has answered that argument, which had already been answered by the experience of the past. What has been the experience in regard to the Erie Canal, and that is not a 20-foot channel? The hon. member is losing sight of this fact, that the railways are becoming every day more and more important factors in the carrying trade, in the grain especially. There has been an evolution from the railway standpoint. In past days, when a car could carry 500 bushels, it was considered a remarkable feat; now that quantity is doubled. We have a living experience in the Parry Sound Railway. A few months ago, when I asserted before the business men of Montreal that the railway would carry 15,000,000 bushels of grain, I was nearly laughed out of the room; and yet that is an accomplished fact. Through the great industry and enterprise of Mr. Booth, we are going to have another railway bringing to the St. Lawrence route an immense volume of trade. I say the St. Lawrence route, and I use the term purposely. This route will be a great benefit to us if we will but take advantage of its possibilities, which we have not done in the past. We have built railways from the east to the west and deepened our canals, but we have not given accommodation necessary to receive and handle freight that is going into Montreal. I am sorry to say that Montreal has the worst harbour facilities of any great city in the world, and I have travelled a good deal. How can we compete against Buffalo, Boston and New York with Montreal equipped as it is? The hon. member for North Norfolk expressed surprise that so much grain trade was done at Buffalo.

Well, Sir, last year there were fifty-two elevators in full operation in Buffalo and there was not one in Montreal, and in addition to the fifty-two elevators in Buffalo there was an additional steam elevator which was being built by Mr. Hill. I say again, how can we expect that the trade will come to us if we do not provide facilities for it. I say that we have neglected our waterways in an incredible manner; I do not blame any one for that for we have been building railways which are a good thing in their way, but there is no doubt that we have been neglecting our harbour facilities and our waterways. Our harbours on the great lakes, at Collingwood, at Midland, Owen Sound, Goderich, and at other places should be deepened and properly equipped for trade. The port of Montreal, the port of Quebec, the port of St. John, the port of Halifax, all these national harbours should be prepared to handle as cheaply as our rivals do. But, after all, we have made wonderful progress. In spite of the inadequate facilities at our disposal, last year there were 27,000,000 bushels of grain exported from the port of Montreal, while the port of Boston only exported about 40,000,000, so that we have not done so badly after all. Our St. Lawrence route is about 500 miles shorter than the American route and we have the great lakes at our disposal. When you remember that the trade of these great lakes amounts to about 40,000,000 tons annually, and that we receive only a few thousand tons, you can see the great possibilities before us, because the Canadian route is the shortest and it will be the best when we have it equipped. I do not want to say much more on that question to-day, but I cannot help protesting against the assertion which my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has made. I say again, the St. Lawrence route is the shortest and we can make it the best.

Mr. POUPORE. You mean the Ottawa route is the shortest.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) has touched the point when he said that we must provide for cheap rates from east to west, and the port of Montreal on the St. Lawrence route is making a great deal of progress in that direction. A few years ago, we had to a large extent only tramp boats in the freight trade, but now we have steamers of 10,000 and 12,000 tons capacity coming from English ports to Montreal, and it is a well-known fact that the bigger the ship the cheaper the freight. The St. Lawrence channel is being improved from year to year, and that is one of the reasons why I have asked from Parliament this year a pretty large amount to go on with the dredging. Let us bring the largest possible ships from Europe to Montreal—and when I speak of Montreal I speak of Quebec at the same time—let us equip our ports and then we will assure for the St. Lawrence route a fair proportion of the immense traffic of the west.

Mr. POUPORE. Say something about the Ottawa River Canal.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not given much attention to that question as yet, and I generally speak of questions to which I have given consideration.

Mr. POUPORE. I would like to have some opinion on the Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have listened with a great deal of attention and interest to the discussion which has taken place, and especially to the remarks of my hon. friend from Pontiac (Mr. Poupore) and of my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt). My hon. friend from Pontiac has introduced this subject with a great deal of zeal and fervour. He believes in the scheme; he has given it, as he said, his attention from his early boyhood, and it is not extraordinary, therefore, that he should have reached the conclusion which he has expressed with so much positiveness. I might say the same with regard to my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) who has spoken in a similar strain. But it seems to me that my hon. friend (Mr. Poupore) has jumped rather quickly at his conclusions. He has asked us, that on this the very first time the matter is brought to the attention of the House, the Government should immediately bring forward a measure to guarantee interest at 2 per cent on $17,000,000 of bonds. As I understood him, he said that the canal company was ready to undertake the building of the canal provided the Government were prepared to endorse their bonds to the extent of 2 per cent per year for twenty years, and would not be called upon to disburse any money until the canal was in operation and in a condition to earn the subsidies.

Mr. POUPORE. No subsidies.

The PRIME MINISTER. In a position to carry freight and derive earnings, I meant to say. This, I must say, is a proposition which independently of all the accompanying circumstances seems to be a very moderate proposal. If there was nothing more than that, and if the conditions of success were assured, I could see no reason why the Government should not be ready to accept the offer of my hon. friend (Mr. Poupore). The question of transportation is the most important question perhaps which Canada has to deal with at this moment. The future of this country very largely lies upon this problem of transportation, and as has been stated by my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton)—although I do not agree in his conclusions nor in many of his arguments—the problem for us is to carry freight at cheap rates so as to compete with New York. The moment we have done that we have solved the problem. But how are we to do it? I have no doubt whatever that if the canal which is suggested by my hon. friend (Mr. Poupore) were built and in operation, it would undoubtedly be a potent factor towards the reducing of the freight rates. There can be no doubt as to that, but the question is: Have we before us the evidence that this canal can be built for the sum of $17,000,000, and have we the evidence further that it would be a commercial success? From the point of view of the engineer there can be no doubt that the scheme is feasible, because the authorities which have been quoted by my hon. friend (Mr. Poupore) make that point beyond question. I have no doubt at all either, that from the point of view of reducing the tolls this canal would also be a success. But I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Poupore): Have we the evidence before us that this scheme can be completed for the sum of $17,000,000, and have we the evidence before us that as a commercial venture it would prove a success? I submit to my hon. friend (Mr. Poupore) that we have not the evidence. But he may answer me this: What matters it whether or not you have the evidence that the canal can be built for $17,000,000; what matters it whether you have evidence that it will be a commercial success or not, for the Government is simply asked to guarantee the bonds and not to disburse any money until the canal has been put in operation. My answer is this, and I submit that in this the Government will have the support of both sides of the House: The Government should not give even its sanction or approval to any scheme unless it is satisfied in advance that the scheme shall be a commercial success. The Government should not give even its moral sanction or authority to a scheme, and thereby invite British capitalists to invest their money in it, unless there is a reasonable certainty that the money thus invested will yield a fair return.

Mr. POUPORE. Has the hon. gentleman any doubt as to that himself?

The PRIME MINISTER. I must say that I have no more knowledge on this subject than the knowledge which I have derived from the speech of my hon. friend, which is valuable, and from the articles of Mr. McLeod Stewart, who has devoted to this project the most commendable energy; but having read all that, I am sure my hon. friend will not find fault with me if I say that I am not yet convinced that the scheme would be a commercial success. Moreover, I must say to my hon. friend that on a question of this kind I would not act on my own judgment—I do not pretend to be an expert in such matters—but I would follow the judgment of experts who are more qualified than I am to form a judgment upon the question. I think it is at present premature to say that the scheme has reached the point at which the Government should step in, as the hon. gentleman wants us to do. I do not wish to refer to what has happened in the past for the purpose of recriminating in any way; but in the past we have been too forward in giving the countenance and authority of the Government to schemes which experience afterwards has proved were not feasible, from a commercial point of view. At the present time, unfortunately the bond-holders of the Chignecto Ship Railway Company are in a very unfortunate position, because they have been induced to invest their money by the moral sanction and authority of the Canadian Government. That is unfortunate in many ways, and my hon. friend will, I am sure, agree with me that it is the duty of this Government to take every means to see that no scheme is put upon the English market with its sanction, unless it has before it a fairly reasonable assurance of the commercial success of the scheme. When that is the position of this project, the Government will be prepared to look into it. Certainly the scheme is one that has merit in it. Assuredly, it is one that is not to be dismissed contemptuously. On the contrary, my hon. friend has made a case, and a case which the Government is bound to take into consideration; but he will agree with me, I am sure, that he can not fairly expect the Government at this time to take up the scheme, although he can expect the Government will give to it its very best consideration.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Railways and Canals, chargeable to capital—
Soulanges Canal—Construction..... $1,610,000

Mr. FOSTER. On the section that was the subject of discussion this morning, Hogan and Onderdonk's, what was the time allowed for completion at the time of the first call for tenders?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I do not want to be held to the day or the month, but I think it was to the last of December, 1899.

Mr. FOSTER. When the rearrangement was made as between Mr. Onderdonk and Mr. Hogan, the time was shortened until what period?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Until the spring of 1899.

Mr. FOSTER. Was any penalty exacted in the contract made with Onderdonk, in the event of his not having the contract finished in the spring of 1899?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The same conditions were imposed as are usual and customary in the letting of canal contracts. The tenderer deposited the amount required, and he would of course incur the risk of forfeiting his deposit. He would also incur the risk of forfeiting the drawback upon the progress estimates, and he would be liable under his contract to action in the event of his not performing it, and in the event of damages accruing to the Crown as the result of his non-performance.

Mr. FOSTER. These are the penalties which attach to any contract. There were no special penalties in this case?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, I want to know if it is usual in the department, before tenders are called for, for any work, to have an estimate of the engineer of the department as to the cost of the work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is usual and customary.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask whether, when the change was made and a private contract was entered into with Onderdonk on the altered terms, there was any estimate asked from the engineer as to the cost of the completion of that contract by the hastening of the season ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We did not ask for any further estimate on the subject. The necessary inference would be that the more you shortened the time, the more you would be likely to increase the cost of the work.

Mr. FOSTER. But the difference between Hogan and Onderdonk, as I understand, was some $40,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So my deputy tells me. I do not remember myself.

Mr. FOSTER. And the hon. gentleman did not think it was necessary to have an estimate again of that work to ascertain what increase there would be in its cost, owing to the shortening of the time and taking into account the fact that there was a tender on the longer time for $40,000 less. He did not try to ascertain whether or not the added cost of doing the work with greater rapidity would be equivalent to $40,000 or not. I have been following, as an interested listener, the criticisms on this contract and also with reference to the cement, and I cannot help but think that the business in both cases is rather serious. I am very sorry that the right hon. First Minister is not here and more members of the Government. It is very much like a farce that the millions of money which the Government and the service of the country call for are left to within three or four days of the end of the session, and then heaped upon us by $3,000,000 at a time of new estimates, when all spirit has fled the House, when everybody is wearied with the length of the session, when the benches are depleted, and the absence of those who have gone only serves to add greater restlessness to those that remain and a greater desire for rushing through the business that remains. I know that hon. gentlemen opposite were very earnest in their denunciations of that practice when in Opposition. For five or six years of the time of the preceding Government that was remedied very largely by the Estimates being gone into the first or second week of the session ; but that system has been changed by the present Government, and the Estimates are kept back until the dying days of the session. Why, when we were discussing the matter of the Soulanges Canal this morning, I took a survey, from time to time, of the opposite side, and found there was positively not a member on that side who seemed to take the least interest at all in the discussion.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). They were all in the committee rooms.

Mr. FOSTER. No, they were not, and those that were present were a goodly number, just as many as are here to-night, but not one took the least interest in the money discussions going on. The criticisms came from a few on this side, but there was no setting down to the main work of Parliament, the disposing of the $48,000,000, which the people have to raise by way of taxation. Now, it is hoped to have this House prorogued somewhere about the latter part of this week or the first of the next, and within four days of that hoped-for time the hon. Minister brings down $3,000,000 of new Estimates and throws them upon the House. Everybody knows that there can be no fair discussion of these, and it is not intended that there should be. They are kept back in order that they may be run through in a half-hearted way, with scarcely any members on the benches, and the Opposition has to do its duty and has been trying to do its duty, with reference to the Minister of Railways in criticising the estimate now under consideration. The two things which are developed are not creditable either to the Minister or the Government or the party which supports it. Here you have a very large sum to be expended in what is recognized, without a show of objection, as the great public work of the country, the canal system. From the earliest period, it has been the rule that the greatest publicity should be given to intended work, and that tenders should be a show of objection, as the great public works. We have the Minister and his department sitting down and taking council with each other and determining to call for tenders upon such section of the work to be completed within such time, and publishing the advertisement for the space of a month. The time comes when the tenders are opened, and the lowest tenderer is a gentleman by the name of Hogan. Everything is regular. The second lowest tender is $40,000 for the same work. Then, for no particular reason given, the Minister, of his own motion, comes to the conclusion that he will alter entirely the condition of that contract by shortening the time of its completion one season. He comes to the conclusion suddenly that a reason for haste has been developed, and that it is his duty to try and have this finished in the spring of 1899 instead of the autumn of 1899. Everybody knows that in a large work, where you have to do it within a certain time, the estimates are made upon that as a basis of cost. Everybody knows that if that has to be done in a shorter time the conditions are varied. It may be that they are varied to the extent of a large increase in the cost, and it may be that the time of completion makes but a very slight difference in the cost. Anyway, the only fair method by which the Minister can well perform his duty to the public is to leave it with the business sense of the contracting public. But the Minister did not choose to do that. After the tenders were opened and known and the gentlemen who tendered knew each other's figures, the Minister says: I am going to vary the conditions of the contract.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The figures were not known.

Mr. FOSTER. Were the tenders opened and the lowest tender announced?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, I venture to say that my hon. friend is not so simple as not to know, what everybody else in this House does, that when the tenders are opened and the lowest tenderer is notified, there is no object in keeping the figures concealed. The contractors talk to each other, and tell their figures to each other, so that they may be easily known, and as a matter of fact are known. Now, with the difference of $40,000 between Mr. Hogan and Mr. Onderdonk, and with this change in the conditions of things, the Minister decides that he will not go to the contracting public again, and ask them to tender on the new conditions, but he says to Mr. Hogan: I want this done in six months shorter time, can you do it? Mr. Hogan replies that he cannot. The Minister then goes to Mr. Onderdonk, who tenders at $40,000 higher, and asks him if he will do it six months earlier, and Mr. Onderdonk says he will.

Now, there is a way in which you could violate the spirit as well as the letter of tender and contract based upon tender. Why, if that is to be the policy that is carried out, everybody knows that collusion and combinations will be made. It is easily done, and the incentive is great. What could be more easily done, and where could there be a greater incentive in that it offers a man a chance to make a neat little pile. Mr. Onderdonk, whose tender is $40,000 above that of Mr. Hogan, may go to Mr. Hogan and say: You are $40,000 below me. The Minister has changed the conditions and wants the whole work done six months earlier. You say that you cannot do it. I will get $40,000 more for the work, and I will see that you do not suffer in the transaction. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) who is so innocent—and who has proved it so during his whole career—may say that this is showing too great suspicion of human nature, and that it is not in the heart of man to conceive any such guile as that. But I think the majority of business men who know what the world is will say that the Minister opened a door and issued an invitation—and backed that invitation up with the temptation of a very large amount of money—to just such an operation as that. When the Minister changed the conditions and found that there was a difference of $40,000 between the lowest tender and the next lowest, he should have taken another month and asked for tenders on these changed conditions, and let the public market value the change in cost under the new restriction of time. My hon. friend is very frank with the House. He gets up to say that, amongst all the Ministers, he is the one who will not try to shield himself; he will take the full responsibility, and, if he has made a mistake and involved the country in the loss of a great amount of money, he is willing to acknowledge it. That is very good for the peace of his own soul, but it does not help the treasury of the country, nor does it prevent the country from suffering loss.

Take the item of cement. I will venture to say that the hon. gentleman—who does not care for precedents and boasts in this House that he is not going to read up the history of his department—may take the history of the canal department under Mr. Page and from him up, and he will find that cement has been bought upon certain conditions; and these conditions are necessary in order that the department itself shall be guarded, but, more than all, in order that the public works in which the public money is spent, works of the greatest utility and importance, shall be properly built. It is a small matter if a man, in building his own house puts defective material in it, because he himself suffers the inconvenience and no one else. But, take an immense canal and put in bad material, and let there be a defect in the work which results in having to un-water the canal and in the stoppage of the business of the country on the great St. Lawrence route for one or two or three weeks, and the whole country has something to say to that. I venture to say that the hon. gentleman will go through the history of his whole department and he will find that there is one unvarying rule with reference to the material used, cement, for instance. That rule is this—as to the kind of cement we use, it must be the best and the best for that particular purpose; and the judge of whether it is the best for that purpose is not the man who has it to sell, but the engineer on the work. And what took place? Why, a transaction in which the Minister overrode the engineering department, in which pressure was brought to bear upon him to buy a large quantity of cement and pay for it before it was used, and not as it was being used.

The rule as to cement is that it is taken upon the test of the engineer in charge of the work. But $20,000 worth of it is bought in a lump, and that without such test, without the every day working test of the engineer. If I understood rightly the facts that were elicited in this case, the engineer of the works himself is opposed to the use of this cement. He does not certify that the cement is fit to be used here and does not certify that it is used. In fact, in his evidence before the Committee on Public Accounts he declared that it was not fit to be used for that work. But what happens? The Minister steps in ahead of his engineering department, a bold and risky thing for a Minister to do. The Minister has right to use his judgment upon the report that is given him by his technical officers, but, unless he can outweigh that by better technical authority than that of his own officers, he has no right to make a bargain for himself in such matters as this. But, in violation of that wholesome rule he bought and paid—at the solicitation of political friends, probably—for $20,000 worth or more of cement, and a large proportion of that cement lies to-day somewhere useless by the testimony of the engineer who has charge of the work, and the country is in a fair way to be done out of $20,000. Now, why did the Minister take that course? Why did he constitute himself the judge of the kind of cement that was to be used? And why did he pay for it in bulk, months and months before it was to be used, and so violate the wholesome rule which has been observed in that department heretofore? With a countenance so naive and innocent that it will work on almost any one's feelings, the hon. Minister says: It may be that a mistake has been made, if so I will own up and take the responsibility. But who takes the responsibility for the large sum of money lost to the country?

I say that the Minister of Railways and Canals has in both these cases gone aside from sound business methods, probably to the great loss of the country in each instance. It is these things which are cropping up in the hon. gentleman's administration which give point to the criticisms upon that administration; and these, together with the assertions made by the hon. gentleman, make it necessary for the Opposition at least—whether the Government benches are going to take any interest in this or not, I do not know—to call the attention of the Government of Parliament and the country to the condition of things as it seems to be established. It seems to me that it is a fair thing to say that the Minister would have consulted his own interest, and the interest of the country most certainly, if he had called for tenders when he altered the conditions, and, if, in the case of buying the cement, he had followed the old, sure method he would not then have landed himself in the predicament in which he is to-day, when the chief argument he has to give us is that the Opposition is trying to destroy the manufacture of native cement. That is not in question. If native cement for the purposes of building canals is as good as any other, by all means, put it to the same test, and use it. But, if it is not, we are not obliged, and it is not right, to hazard the public money in the first place, and the permanence and durability of the work in the next place, for the purpose of trying to give patronage to an industry, even though a Canadian industry. I do not know enough of the matter technically to express an opinion as to this question of cement. We are told that the Battle cement is good in its place; but, in this case, it has evidently not secured the certificate of the engineer, as the Minister himself has to acknowledge.

These are things that we ought seriously to think of. It makes no difference whether we are opposing or supporting the Government, we ought all to be interested in seeing that the wholesome rule of contract by tender and of buying cement upon technical engineering authority is carried out; and it does not seem that the Minister has carried this out in any particular.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not question for a moment the right of the hon. gentleman as a critic of the Government to call me to task in respect of my administration of the department, in any respect which commends itself to his judgment; but I do question very much the good taste, the discretion and the propriety of the hon. gentleman in undertaking to lecture independent members on this side of the House as to what their attitude should be during the discussion of these questions. It will probably be found amply sufficient for the hon. gentleman to direct his attention to his own course of procedure and conduct, and leave to the sense of right of the gentlemen who are sitting in front of him, as to whether they will listen or not to what may be said upon the subjects which are under debate. These gentlemen have to answer to their own constituents, and to their own consciences, as to how they will comport themselves in this House, and not to the judgment of hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, I take leave to say that the statement which the hon. gentleman has presented to this committee to-night in criticism of my conduct in respect, either of the matter of cement or the matter of letting the contract, is founded upon presuppositions which are not supported by evidence, which are the creatures of his own imagination, or which are the product of the suspicions with which he regards the conduct of his political opponents. The hon. gentleman starts out by assuming that there has been a deliberate purpose upon the part of the Government to delay discussion of these estimates until this late moment in the session, so that criticism of hon. gentlemen may be avoided. There is no evidence to justify that statement, not one particle. The Estimates were introduced and the discussion was commenced over a month ago, and if they have not been all discussed and dealt with before, it does not at all rest with the Government or any of the Ministers. There has been no disposition at all to avoid discussion. I think that when the time comes that the actions and conduct of this Government cannot be discussed in open day and in this House, the time will then have arrived when it is better that we should withdraw from the Treasury benches and let other men take our places. The hon. gentleman depicts me as very naive, and with a great appearance of frankness, trying to show in a plausible manner, as he says, which I expected would carry conviction, that I was perfectly willing to stand any condemnation that might result from any mistakes I might have committed in this matter. I made no such admission in this House or anywhere else. When the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) held out to me the terrible threat that the country would hold me responsible, why, I admitted in a spirit of concession to the hon. gentleman, that I was willing to take the consequences of my action. But it appears that to make an acknowledgment of that kind when invited by hon. gentlemen opposite who are disposed to crush me in this matter, is to act improperly in the judgment of hon. gentlemen. Well, I have to submit myself to the judgment of the House in that particular. Now, I want to ask the members of this committee who have heard the hon. gentleman criticise what took place with respect to the letting of this contract to Mr. Onderdonk in place of Mr. Hogan, I want to ask them whether the hon. gentleman could have based a more serious condemnation upon my course if, instead of reducing the time within which the work was to be done and getting it done for the price for which it would have been done in the longer period, if the work for the longer period had been tendered for, I had pursued the reverse course, and had extended the time, and given Mr. Onderdonk the benefit of the contract for the increased period without offering it to tenders. How much more severely could the hon. gentleman, in that case, have undertaken to condemn my course. Yet anybody can see that there is all the difference in the world between awarding a contract to a person who is willing to do it within a less period of time upon prices which he had offered to do it in the further and extended period, and allowing a contractor further time at the same price. Is it not self-evident that if a man is willing to do an important work involving a large amount of money for the same price within the specified time, that the public interest is being amply safeguarded if you give him the contract for the sum mentioned in the tender at the longer period? That is the view I took of the matter, that is the view my colleagues in Council took of the matter when the whole facts were presented to them. When the hon. gentleman says there was no reason for reducing the time, has he not actually ignored the statement which I made of the determination of the Government after due consideration, meeting as we thought the desire of the country to secure the construction of that great work as part of the whole series of the St. Lawrence canals, to secure their construction a year earlier than had been originally designed? We felt we were meeting the public expectation in that regard. When, therefore, we determined upon that, and that was not determined upon until after notices had been issued calling for tenders for the longer period, and when we found that we could get this work done within the shorter period without its costing us any more money, I want to know whether we were not justified in taking the matter up promptly and vigorously and losing no further time, and awarding the contract in the way we did. That is my judgment, I may be taking a one-sided view of the question, I may not be able to see it in anything like a judicial spirit, but it does seem to me that when the arrangement that was entered into was one which insured the earlier completion of the work, and we got it done for the same figure, I think that the hon. gentleman is going far afield in looking for an opportunity to criticise. Now we come to the question of the cement. What occurred with regard to the cement? The hon. gentleman assumes that the department intended that this cement should be used for all the purposes of canal work. Was there any statement made this afternoon by me, or any other statement brought out, which justified the hon. gentleman in making that observation. On the contrary, I know that is not the fact. The hon. gentleman assumes that I have over-ridden the judgment and opinion of the engineers of the department. I have done nothing of the kind. I have not stated, and I cannot truthfully state, that the action which was taken by the department was not taken with the concurrence of the chief engineer. I am free to confess that the chief engineer was of the opinion that the Thorold cement ought not to be used for a very important class of work, he would not allow it to be used in the locks, he would not allow it to be used in the weirs. We did not intend to use it in the locks or in the weirs, nor was it bought for that purpose. It was bought and intended to be used in certain classes of work where it could properly be used according to the judgment of the officials of the department, except, I may concede the opinion of Mr. Monro.

Mr. Monro has come to have latterly a very strong opinion against Thorold cement: he has also come to have a very strong opinion against the stone used for the locks on the Stewart section. But Mr. Monro is not the only officer of the department. His opinion was not concurred in by the chief engineer, and when we had the opinion of the engineer of the Welland Canal, Mr. Thompson, and when we had Mr. Page's opinion and the opinion of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), who has used many thousand barrels of this cement—when all these facts came to my knowledge I did not over-ride the judgment of the officers, but I agreed with their opinion, and I considered that I could very properly award a contract to the Thorold people for cement for portions of the works other than the locks and piers. The hon. gentleman stated that I had over-riden the judgment and opinion of my officers. I did nothing of the kind. The decision to allow the Thorold people a contract for a portion of the cement required, directly stipulating that the cement should stand the test, otherwise it should not go into the work and be paid for, was done with the concurrence of the officers of the department, whose opinion I did not venture to over-ride. Then the hon. gentleman suggested that the cement was paid by my order, again over-riding the judgment of the engineers, and that nobody had ever heard of such a case previously. The hon. gentleman does not know of the matter to which he has referred. The department has to pay very frequently for cement before it is used. The quantity ordered was not in excess, but within the quantity which the department considered would be required before the close of the season. Why did the department not require it? It was because Mr. Stewart, one of the contractors, failed to carry out his work where the bulk of the cement would have been used. The cement could not, therefore, be used on the work and was thrown on the hands of the department. The Thorold people were not responsible for that fact, but it resulted in the department being bound to keep the cement through the winter. Unfortunately it became air slacked, as I am informed the best cement will do. When we examined it in the spring we found that the air and dampness had hardened it into stone. This is proof that the cement was of good quality, for hon. members can now go and see hundreds and perhaps thousands of bags of that cement as hard as rock.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that all air slacked?

Mr. POUPORE. The hon. Minister means that the cement became hardened, which shows that it is good cement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what I intended to say. I have no technical knowledge on the subject, and I am not giving my opinion, but that of men who have knowledge and experience. I only know the Thorold people in a business way. I am not actuated by any personal or other considerations of friendship for them, but as a matter of fair-play to those gentlemen, it is not proper or becoming in members of the House, whose only object is to make a political point against their opponents, to condemn in this public way the products of well known people who for a large number of years have furnished an article which has been used on public works without a word of criticism and complaint. I have done none of these things charged against me. I did not over-ride the department. I would not be disposed to express my own opinion adverse to that of the trained officers; but the trained officers do not always agree, and sometimes it is necessary, as when doctors differ, that some one should come in and adjudge. Nor did I over-ride the officers in the matter of making payments. I do not know how the certificates came in. It is not part of my duty, in fact I have not time to follow up these details. I take it that the certificates came in proper shape and were satisfactory to the officers, and the money was paid after the proper evidence had been furnished. After hearing the complaints of Mr. Monro I visited the Soulanges Canal works and made inquiry, the chief engineer accompanying me part of the way. I went to the place where the tests were carried on and asked them to show me their records, and I brought away with me a memorandum of the result of my inquiries, and some briquets made from the cement in order that we might not only have the result of tests made there, but also the results of tests made here by our engineers, where we have perfect machinery for the purpose. I do not know how far these tests satisfied anybody else, but they satisfied the chief engineer that the cement was what the contract called for, and in due course he paid for it. He could not withhold payment through the whole winter and spring as a matter of justice and fair-play to the parties who supplied the cement. We received it from him under his contract, and it was not his fault that the cement was not used. And when a reasonable time elapsed and the cement was found to be what the contract called for a very considerable portion of the money was paid.

Mr. POUPORE. I would call to the mind of the Minister (Mr. Blair) that I myself was present at the time that test was made, and I bear testimony to the accuracy of the statement made by the Minister. The test was made in our presence and the whole question arose whether the department should use Thorold cement or Portland cement. I was not interested in the matter, and I can say that the test which was made at the time was quite as good as that of the other cement, and the Thorold cement being a Canadian product and being just as good as the imported article, I could not for the life of me see then, nor can I now, why that cement should not be used in preference to the imported cement.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not the question.

Mr. POUPORE. I rose to verify the statement made by the Minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I met the hon. gentleman (Mr. Poupore) when I was going to Soulanges, and I mentioned to him that there was some question as to the cement, and I would like him to come along. He came with me to the office, and I dare say made an inspection of the registers showing what these tests were. The contract provided that the cement should stand a certain test and it did. Now, we have to treat people who deal with the Government on some principle of fair-play, and I believe the country will justify us in doing so, and so long as I am at the head of the department I do not propose to do anything else. I had no interest in paying the parties if their cement was not of good quality, but I had every interest and every duty the other way. I was not satisfied that the testing apparatus at Soulanges was a perfect one, and knowing that Mr. Perley was a most excellent and skilful officer and had in the department the latest appliances with which to test the cement, I brought some of these briquets away with me which were made from this cement, and they were tested by Mr. Perley and after twenty-four hours' exposure in the water they tested 120 instead of 60, as guaranteed. Neither I nor the engineer could refuse to pay these people their bill nor any part of their bill, under the circumstances, after we had resorted to every possible expedient to satisfy us that the cement was of the quality contracted for. I have now the letter of Mr. Thompson, superintending engineer of the Welland Canal, addressed to Mr. Schreiber, in which he says :

St. Catharines, Ont., May 28th, 1898.

Dear Sir,—Referring to your verbal inquiry yesterday, when I was in your office, as to whether any of the "Battle Cement" had been used on the Welland Canal works in the last two or three years, and if so with what results, I beg to say that in the years 1895, 1896 and 1897 a total of 5,572 cubic yards of concrete formed with "Battle Cement" has been put in place in the east pier at Port Dalhousie, with good results where it was used as hearting. I will send you a sample of the cement on Monday, which I will take myself direct from the mill.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) W. G. THOMPSON.

The observations of the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) seemed to make it necessary that I should read this letter, and I believe it to be good evidence that this cement was proper cement to use.

Mr. GIBSON. I regret very much that I was absent in the forenoon when this discussion took place. I was rather astonished to hear of the statements made by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), although I should not be astonished at any statement made by him, because he spoke recently about this Government extending the time of a contract and allowing the contractors large sums of money, when he surely could not have forgotten that the Government of which he was an honoured member gave the contractors of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal a present of $100,000 to complete the canal within twelve months, but afterwards gave them an extension of time. Now, I may tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) that on this very Sault Canal contract the cement he is complaining of now was used to a large extent, and that, notwithstanding the fact that the specifications declared that no native cement should be used. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) also said: Go back to the good days when the Government established this matter of buying the cement themselves. I would like to ask the House who established the principle of buying cement by the Government? It was the present hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart), but the most of the public works of the Dominion, including the Welland Canal, were built of Thorold cement, bought by the contractors, and very properly so, because the moment the Government undertakes to supply the contractors with cement they must keep a stock of it on hand, for if the contractors are delayed for want of it they will very justly make a claim against the Government. What are the facts in connection with this cement that we hear so much about? Battle's people asked to be allowed to put in a tender for some of the work that was to be let on the canal. The Minister of Railways asked my opinion about the quality of the Thorold cement, and I am in the judgment of the House and the judgment of the country when I say that I have used 100,000 barrels of it during my life at one time or another, and I have yet for the first time to receive condemnation at the hands of any company that I have ever done work for. It may be true, as the Minister pointed out, that the cement was sent in bags, and before the close of navigation in order that a sufficient quantity of it might be on hand. I am not prepared to say that was a proper mode of taking care of the cement. My experience is that all cement should be put in barrels, and the best Portland cement is not only put up in barrels, but in wrapping paper within the barrels, and the barrels are tarred so that the cement may not become air-slacked. If my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) knows anything about air-slack, he would know that it would not become a hard lump, as no cement that is affected by air ever becomes a hard substance, but remains in loose condition.

No cement that would set would ever become a hard substance, because its hydraulic principle would be gone: but the fact is, that the cement had got damp and had become as hard as rock. In 1885, the Welland Canal was enlarged to fourteen feet depth of water, and two feet eight inches of masonry had to be put on the Welland Canal from one end to the other. I had some experience of that work, because I had the contract for section "J." and after an experience of seven years, during which the Thorold cement had been in use on the old work, I found that while we could remove the stone without much trouble, the moment we came to the interior wall where the cement had hardened, we could only take it out with ball drills, proving that the Thorold cement met the test imposed by the very authority the hon. gentleman quoted to-night, Mr. Page. Mr. Page's letters are on file, and I think that you will find that he as well as Mr. Monro and Mr. Thompson, at present the superintending engineer of the Welland Canal, all recommended this cement. I consider that the Minister was justified in buying the Thorold cement at the time he did. He paid no more for it than the contractors, and he was justified on the advice of his officers in procuring a sufficient quantity to do the work during the winter. If the contractor failed in his obligations to the Government, and the work was not carried on, was it the fault of the department or the Minister, that $20,000 worth of cement was lying in stock in the Government sheds, and that the work was not going on? Of necessity a large portion of the cement would be of little use; but if it had been used right along during the winter months, and if it had been kept under proper cover, I am bound to say, from the experience I have had of the Thorold cement, that it would have stood the test as well as Portland cement. One advantage of the Thorold cement is that it is fresh ground and fresh burned, whereas the Portland cement may be kept in storehouses for years, and may perhaps arrive in Montreal late in the fall of the year, though it may not be needed till the spring. No man can tell anything about cement until it is laid in layers, and the masonry is laid upon it. Then comes the test whether it will harden or not. I wish to say, in reply to the charges which have been made, that the last time the Minister of Railways was in Thorold, we had a test of the cement made in his presence, and it met a much higher test than the requirements of the specifications. This cement is not a new article in Canada. Thorold cement, to my knowledge, has been used on the canals of this country for over forty years, and this is the first time that it has ever been condemned, either in private or in public, to say nothing of its being brought up in a parliamentary discussion. It is quite proper to condemn the Government for buying too much cement or keeping it improperly stored; but I think it is hardly fair for an hon. gentleman occupying the position of the hon. member for York to stand up and condemn an article which he knows nothing about, and to condemn an honourable manufacturing concern which has been doing business with the people of Canada for forty years. So far as I can bear testimony to the worth and value of the Thorold cement, as manufactured by Mr. Brown for many years, and afterwards by Mr. John Battle, and now by his sons, I wish, as one having had something to do with it, both on public and on private works, to bear my testimony to the good article that they have furnished.

Mr. DAVIN. I would like to ask the Minister of Railways how soon after the tenders arrived in the office he determined to shorten the time?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not able to state how long before the tenders were received, authority was obtained for shortening the time for completing all these works. The hon. gentleman must bear in mind that a decision so arrived at is a decision of Council. It was a conclusion arrived at generally in respect of all the works then pending, some of which were let and some of them were not let. Those which were let were dragging their slow length along, the time for their completion in almost all cases having passed. I am not able to say whether it was just before or at the time these tenders were received that that conclusion was arrived at.

Mr. DAVIN. The reason I asked the hon. Minister the question was this. Obviously, the object of calling for tenders is to exclude the element of the ministerial will from the conditions of the contract, and after tenders are called for and are in, the very moment the Minister changes the conditions of the contract, that very moment he introduces an element that gives an opportunity for the very thing that the calling for tenders is intended to obviate. It opens up a possibility of that kind of bargaining which the people of Canada have desired to get rid of, for they have passed a law that tenders shall be called for. This Mr. Onderdonk is a man who has had some experience in the past in absorbing three or four or five big contracts and contractors; and seeing what took place, according to the account of the Minister himself, it is possible—I do not say that it occurred—that the moment Onderdonk found that he was the second lowest tenderer, being higher than the lowest by some $40,000, he would put himself in communication with somebody who would be able to introduce a new condition into the conditions of the contract, and would give an opportunity, to use a vulgar but expressive phrase, for a new deal.

I say that the criticism made by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) has not been met by the Minister of Railways. The member for York dwelt on the undesirability of the course taken with reference to introducing this new condition into the contract. He pointed out that it was capable of abuse, that it got rid of one of the safeguards of public morality which the system of tendering is intended to erect against corruption, and the Minister failed to overturn the position taken by my hon. friend. With regard to the first remark made by the hon. member for York, and which was commented on by the Minister of Railways, the member for York (Mr. Foster) very properly pointed out that surely it is a thing to make the people of this country pause to find that at the close of the session millions will be voted away with a light heart and the members of the great majority taking no interest whatever in the matter. I think if we could crowd those galleries with the people of Canada and could show them how, in the closing week of the session, millions are voted away rapidly, without any opportunity being given for fair discussion, they would come to the conclusion that a rule should be made to have the Estimates brought down early in the session and that the great work of the session should not be done perfunctorily but gone into with that degree of business scrutiny which the public interest demands. I do not propose to discuss this cement question because I do not profess to be capable of discussing it, but what is clear to the intelligence of every one is what was done with regard to changing the conditions of this contract.

My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) made a curious defence of the Minister. He said that the late Government lengthened the time of the contract on the "Soo" Canal. But that was obviously a very innocent operation. If a contractor takes a contract and it is found that he cannot complete it in the time fixed to remit his forfeit and extend the time is clearly a thing that does not throw open the door to what is undesirable. I do not say that anything undesirable has occurred, I do not make any charge of corruption, but I say that one of the objects of passing a law requiring that tenders shall be had and that the lowest tenderer shall get the contract, is to prevent corruption in ministerial places, and if the law is not adhered to, Ministers need not be surprised if they are sharply criticised by the Opposition or if the people throughout the country should be dissatisfied.

Mr. GIBSON. I was quite sure the hon. gentleman did not understand what I said, because the remark I made was this, that the late Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) gave the contractors on the Soo Canal $100,000 in order to get the canal completed a year within the contract time, and then paid the $100,000 but allowed the time just the same.

Mr. DAVIN. I understood the hon. gentleman perfectly.

Mr. GIBSON. With regard to the cement, there has not been a gentleman who has spoken on that matter who has charged any collusion or that any price was paid above the regular market price. In order to give some idea of the extent to which Thorold cement is used on public works throughout the country, let me give the following figures:—On the new Welland Canal, there were used 250,000 barrels of the Thorold cement. On the Soo Canal, 17,540 barrels, and I believe some 5,000 barrels have been added since this statement was made. On the Soulanges Canal, 22,000 barrels. The Grand Trunk Railway has used 50,000 barrels. The St. Clair Tunnel, 10,000. My name is mentioned here as having used more than 50,000. Sarnia, 2,000 barrels. Petrolia, over 2,000. The Edison Electric Light Company of Peterborough, 2,000 barrels. The Soo Pulp and Paper Company, 200 barrels. The Dominion Government have used in the concrete pier at Port Dalhousie 4,000 barrels, and the Victoria Power Company of Dunnville, some 600 barrels. This shows that the Thorold cement has certainly given satisfaction throughout the country.

Mr. HAGGART. The matter of the contract has been thoroughly threshed out, and I have already given my views upon it. There has been no new light thrown upon the cement question by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson). The Minister admits that his chief engineer recommended him not to use that kind of cement for lock or weir work. The gentleman who has charge of the Soulanges Canal and who was for 25 years, or nearly that, on the Welland Canal, and who knows the quality of Thorold or Battle cement as well as any other man in Canada, refused to use it on the Soulanges Canal or to certify that it was fit for the work. The Minister says he went to the office of Mr. Monro, for it was there tests were made, and he found that the tests were up to the standard. Why then did he not get the engineer to certify to that effect? He states that he brought a briquet of the cement up and had it tested in the Public Works Department. How could he get a test of it there? He is naturally not aware of the technical manner in which tests are made. One of the principal tests with reference to cement is a test for expansion. So delicate is the test in reference to that, that they put the cement in a small, thin glass phial, and if the cement expands in the slightest, although it may have all the texture and pressure qualities of the best English cement, it is rejected as entirely unfit for use. That test could not have been made on the briquet which the hon. gentleman brought up for the Public Works Department. I have never heard a word but that Mr. Battle's cement—what is known as native cement or water lime—is the equal of anything of its kind in Canada. There is no objection to it on the ground. The objection to it is that water lime or native cement is not the equal of Portland cement, and could not be used in works requiring first-class quality of construction. Every one throughout the country knows that cement is being used for sidewalks and for roads in every part of Canada. Has any hon. gentleman ever known water lime or native cement to be used for that purpose? Experiment was made in the use of this material on the Sault Ste. Marie Canal. What was the result? It had all the textile qualities, it stood the breaking and crushing tests, but it was a failure. Why, look at the testimony of facts with regard to the manufacturers of that article throughout Canada. We have as good water lime or native cement as is produced in Canada made right here in Hull. But the manufacturers found they could not sell it any longer, and they have gone into the manufacture of Portland cement. Mr. Rathbun was engaged in the manufacture of native cement, and we used a good deal of it on the St. Lawrence Canals. But it was condemned, and he has gone into the manufacture of Portland cement. And the same is true of the manufacturers in Owen Sound.

But the greatest fact is that the Minister could not get the certificate of the engineer to pay the money for the cement. He should either have rejected the cement or, if he thought the engineer in charge was wrong, he should have sent a person who was capable of judging or superintending the work and got a certificate from him. He was obliged to get the chief engineer to send in a certificate on the report of an officer of the Public Works Department, and then the money was paid. This kind of cement was rejected by the engineer in charge, though the engineer at the head of the department said that it was fit for other work than locks or weirs. I ask the hon. Minister if any was used in construction of the locks?

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My deputy informs me that there was not.

MR. HAGGART. I may be mistaken, but the information I had with reference to the matter is that it was used for concrete for the bottom of the locks. This material was rejected by the engineer on the works, Mr. Munro, who, if any man in Canada does, should know the value of native cement, having used it for twenty-five years. He was superintendent of construction of the Welland Canal, where it was used again and again. He said it is entirely useless, as he told me himself, for first-class work in building canals. Against his advice it was sent to the works, and without the report of an engineer upon which works as to whether it was found to be up to the quality, even as native cement, the payment was made. And we have the statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals that, through a contractor who was not prepared to go on with his work as quickly and as efficiently as he ought, the cement is a direct loss to the country.

MR. SPROULE. I understood in the early part of this discussion, that certain tests were made of the cement, and I would like to ask how frequently these tests were made?

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My information, as received from the Deputy Minister, is that the usual custom in the past is that the engineer on the works does not certify to the tests having been made of the cement, but he certifies to the delivery of the cement, and, I take it that the presumption is that the cement is of proper quality or it would be certified otherwise. Now, my deputy tells me, notwithstanding all that the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) has said, that there was not a test of one pound of cement used on the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, that, in fact, they had not the apparatus for making the test.

MR. GIBSON. They removed the engineer so that they could do as they liked.

MR. SPROULE. My distinct recollection of the evidence brought out before the Public Accounts Committee is that tests were made several times, and the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) objected, according to my recollection, that the tests were not made every second or third day. He contended that while you might use a barrel or two that would be all right, you might then strike a barrel that contained bad cement. For this reason, frequent tests were necessary. I think I am right in saying that.

MR. GIBSON. I am sure the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) does not wish to misrepresent me before the House. The position I took in regard to the matter was that they had allowed Thorold cement to be used while they were paying for Portland cement, which the specifications called for.

MR. SPROULE. I think that the hon. gentleman objected on the ground that 60,000 barrels, if I remember well, of Thorold cement was put in. It was claimed that for certain work it was as good as the other, but they paid for Portland cement. His other contention was that the cement must be tested periodically at short intervals or it could not be known if it was up to the standard. If this were so on the Sault Canal, it must be so in this case. If any test was made and the cement found satisfactory, why was it that Mr. Munro condemned it afterwards? And if he condemned it, was it because it had hardened or because he had tested it and found that it was not up to the strength?

I understood the Minister to say that it stood the test of 60 pounds to the inch. I think that used on the Sault Ste. Marie Canal stood a test of 60 or 72 pounds, and that was considered to be a low average. In the case of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, while it was shown that the Thorold cement might be suitable for backing up and concrete work, the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) contended it was not suitable for face work for which Portland cement was required. This cement may have been good enough when it was laid down, but on account of its being laid down in sacks instead of barrels, it was exposed to the action of the air, and suffered deterioration, and therefore this $20,000 is lost to the country for want of proper care on the part of the Government. That might happen, and still the Government might be excusable because the work was not done in the time they anticipated. But they should have instructed their officers, in the event of the work being delayed, and in view of the risk of the cement deteriorating, to take precautions to preserve the cement in such a state as that it should be fit for use. The engineer must have known that the cement does not keep as well in sacks as in barrels. Now, was it understood by the Government that the cement was intended to be used shortly after its delivery?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, we expected to use it before the close of the season's work. The statement that there was $20,000 worth gone to waste, is away beyond the mark, because a large quantity of it was used in the work, some 4,000 or 5,000 barrels were used. We have got 8,000 barrels on hand now, which we have reason to believe is in good condition, and we are having it tested. If we lost the whole amount that was in bags, the loss would not exceed $8,000. It would probably be $6,000 or $7,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not wish to do the Minister an injustice. I was basing my remarks upon the fact that the engineer had declared the cement to be unsuitable, and that $20,000 was the amount paid for it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I presume the Government fully expected that the contractor would proceed with the work, and if he had done so, probably the cement would not have been lost. But, after accepting the cement in bags with the hope that it would be used if kept over winter in that condition, certainly it would be lost, the engineer in charge was to blame for not reporting at once to the department the condition of that cement. I do not know whether the engineer reported that fact to the department or not, but if he did not report that the cement was in danger of deterioration by being left in bags instead of in barrels, so that precautionary steps could be taken,

I think the engineer is decidedly in fault, and that he deserves to be dismissed.

Mr. BERGERON. It is unfortunate that when the Government are found in fault, hon. gentlemen should attempt to cast the blame upon their officials. I heard the testimony of the chief engineer in the Public Accounts Committee, and I heard him say there were 20,000 barrels of cement deposited upon the Soulanges Canal, which was not good. His certificate was never asked for; on the contrary, the money was paid without his certificate being obtained. The cement that was deposited there was not good and it is there still. There were $20,000 worth of cement paid for which should not have been paid for without his certificate.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will state to my hon. friend that such a course of procedure as he indicates has never been taken.

Mr. BERGERON. That is the statement, under oath, the other day, of Mr. Monro, the chief engineer. Now, I want to ask my hon. friend, starting from the point that 20,000 barrels of cement had been left there that could not be used, was that cement replaced by some other cement that could be used, and was any more money paid for this new cement?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was no replacing of the cement.

Mr. BERGERON. But the chief engineer says this cement was not used.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. gentleman must have misunderstood the evidence which Mr. Monro gave, because he could not say accurately that there were $20,000 worth of that cement received which was not used.

Mr. BERGERON. I want the hon. Minister to understand that I am not blaming him in what I say. I gathered the other day from the testimony of the chief engineer that $20,000 worth of cement had been deposited on the Soulanges Canal for the works of that canal, which he had not accepted, for which he had never given his certificate, which he did not look upon as good cement, but which was paid for, because we find the expenditure in the Auditor General's Report. Now, if that cement was not used, has it been replaced?

Mr. McMULLEN. I rise to a point of order. My hon. friend, who is an old member of this House, knows perfectly well that it is unfair to quote evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee before it is published and in the hands of the members.

Mr. BERGERON. It is here.

Mr. McMULLEN. I challenge the accuracy of the statement of my hon. friend, I do not think he makes a wrong statement intentionally. Now, how are we to decide as to whether he is accurate? We can only do it by the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee, and that is not yet printed nor in the hands of the members. It is unfair to quote evidence unless hon. members have the same evidence in their hands. I am not saying that the hon. gentleman did this intentionally, for I am sure he conscientiously believes the statement he made, but I have no recollection personally that such a statement was made.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right that it is out of order to refer in the House to the proceedings of a committee until the report of the committee is before the House. But we are now in Committee of the Whole, and we are endeavouring to find out the truth, which is in the public interest. I recollect that Mr. Munro stated the other day before the committee that cement to the value of $20,000 was deposited on the banks of the Soulanges and was useless. I do not need the evidence to quote from, I remember the statement made. Mr. Munro may have been mistaken. I should like now to know if any other cement has been bought, and from whom?

Mr. SPROULE. As the point of order has been raised by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), I may say that the report was laid on the Table. And so the hon. member for Beauharnois had a right to refer to it and quote from it.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the report was on the Table, the hon. member could use it and quote from it; but it has passed from the Clerk's hands and is now in the hands of the printer. If the hon. gentleman had quoted from it when it was on the Table, other members would have had an opportunity of quoting from it.

Mr. SPROULE. It is in the possession of the House, and an hon. member can quote from it. I ask the ruling of the Chair on the point.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no fault to find with the hon. member's quotation; he is giving his recollection of what occurred and is no doubt honestly doing so. If it should turn out that his memory is at fault, it can be easily corrected, and we can get at the facts. I take it that the hon. gentleman has the impression that Mr. Munro stated at that inquiry that there were $20,000 worth of cement delivered on the work which was not used and is no good. My information is that if Mr. Munro made that statement it was not accurate, and when his attention is called to it no doubt he will make it right, because I am sure he would not wish to make any misstatement. I believe from what the chief engineer now tells me that

Mr. McMULLEN.

4,000 barrels and upwards of the cement were used on the work, that there are 8,000 barrels of cement in barrels which has not been used and which has not undergone any change and is no doubt good. So the difference is between the quantity delivered and those 4,000 and 8,000 barrels. There is no question of replacing the cement.

Mr. BERGERON. Has other cement been bought since?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are buying cement all the time. The quantity of the Thorold cement was only a small portion of the whole cement used in the work. Portland, German and Rathbun cement were also used.

Mr. BERGERON. I desire now to ask the Minister if there are any arbitrators at work on the canal. There was a commission of arbitrators appointed under the previous Government, and when hon. gentlemen opposite came to power they were dismissed and others appointed. Are the new arbitrators at work, or have they been dismissed lately?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We retired them or terminated their engagement. There are now no valuers employed on the Soulanges Canal.

Mr. BERGERON. Has their work been finished, or will new arbitrators be appointed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There may possibly be some instances in which we shall require valuation of work done, but I think it has been practically closed.

Mr. BERGERON. Would the Minister state why the last commission was cancelled?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Because we felt their work was substantially terminated, so that we could dispense with their services.

Mr. BERGERON. That was the only reason?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Cornwall Canal—Enlargement..... $150,000

Mr. HAGGART. How much will be required to finish this work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. After the present vote, the expectation is that about $25,000 will be required to complete.

Farran's Point—Enlargement..... $325,000

Mr. HAGGART. What is the fall in the river which the canal is intended to overcome?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. About 3 feet 6 inches.

Mr. HAGGART. I believe there is not any necessity for constructing this work. The canal will be no use after 14 feet navigation has been secured, for there will be plenty of water in the river, which will be utilized by the vessels then going up and down. The present canal is large enough to meet the needs of transportation at the present time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There may be a difference of opinion on the point. The decision of the department was made, and it has been necessary to proceed.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When does the hon. gentleman expect the work on the Onderdonk contract on the Soulanges to be completed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In the spring of 1899.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When does the Minister expect to complete the work on the whole canal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. By the opening of navigation in 1899. I have always introduced this qualification, that while the canal might not be wholly completed, it will be sufficiently advanced for purposes of navigation.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then the hon. gentleman states that he is perfectly confident that we may expect to have a uniform depth of 14 feet by the spring of 1899.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I am so advised.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). What is the length of those large locks in the Cornwall and Soulanges canals ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All the locks, except two, are of the uniform length of 270 feet between the gates.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). They have to lock in the other places going east and west and they only lock here going one way. Why is it necessary to go to this extra expense of $200,000 for each lock, when they only lock there going one way ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was advised that they could get up there with a whole tow, whereas as to the others they could only get up with half a tow.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). This would cause an additional expenditure of $400,000, which at 3 per cent would amount to $12,000 a year. It would appear to most anybody that it is absolutely unnecessary to go to the expense of putting in there two large locks.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I felt extremely reluctant myself to authorize the construction of these additional locks, but Mr. Rubidge urged very strong reasons in their favour. The chief engineer concurred in Mr. Rubidge's opinion, but I still felt reluctant, and I took the responsibility of asking Mr. Shanly to give me his best judgment upon it before I authorized the construction of this lock. Mr. Shanly's opinion was entirely in harmony with that of Mr. Rubidge and the chief engineer.

Mr. HAGGART. I enter my protest against the building of any such lock as that. If our canals are ever to be utilized for practical purposes we must adopt the American system of each barge having its own propelling power, and doing away with tows of barges altogether. The locks at present in use on the St. Lawrence are plenty large enough for the barge traffic. The canals were enlarged not for barges but for utilizing these steamboats which have become quite common on the upper lakes. The idea of a boat with consorts is being done away with altogether. If you are going to divert the trade to the St. Lawrence you must do away with the system of barges, and I tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) that in my opinion there was no necessity at all for the building of these two large locks. They are not utilized by barges going down, and if you want to use your canals in the most economical manner you must have a propelling power of at least ten knots an hour, for if I remember rightly the strength of the current at these two particular points is in the neighbourhood of four or five knots.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am bound to say that the weight of opinion is against the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) on that question. We took occasion to have Captain McDougall come down here before we decided with regard to the vigorous prosecution of this work. Captain McDougall is admittedly a man of very large experience, engaged in transportation on the lakes all his life, and he expressed an opinion decidedly the reverse of that of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart). From what I have learned with regard to Captain McDougall it would be difficult to find any person who has had a larger experience and who is able to form a more competent judgment on this question.

Mr. HAGGART. I have no doubt that the Minister will get every barge owner from Kingston to Montreal of the same opinion. They have the barges at present and it is in their interests to have that opinion, but these barges are going out of use. You are not deepening your canals to 14 feet and lengthening your locks to accommodate barges, but to accommodate a larger class of vessels which will be entirely used on these canals in a few years.

North Channel—Straightening and deepening..... $250,000

Mr. HAGGART. This is another work which I must enter my protest against. Immediately above the Galops Canal in the American channel there is a width of nearly two miles and an ample depth; and for the purpose of getting a channel through our own territory it is proposed to expend about $400,000. Under the Treaty of Washington we have as much right to navigate that water as the Americans have, and there is no need of the expenditure of one dollar for the deepening of the north channel. I know that this is one of the pet ideas of Mr. Rubidge; but there is no difficulty in going to the head of the Galops Canal through the American channel, and this expenditure is a pure waste.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The channel which the hon. gentleman speaks of is a very circuitous channel, involving a bend of considerable length. The information I have received is that it would cost more to clean out that channel and make it fit for navigation than it would to change the north channel as we propose. That is the information furnished to me by men who are supposed to be competent to form a judgment on the question.

Mr. HAGGART. The American channel is now used by every boat that goes down. The north channel is used by only one boat of very light draft. My information is that all that is necessary is to blast off a little point on an island to go direct to the Galops Canal. If the charts of the channel are correct, there is more than fourteen feet of navigation from the head of the Galops Canal through the American channel.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The transportation men are unanimously crying out in favour of the deepening of the north channel, and the information of the department is that in the channel the hon. gentleman speaks of there is not more than eight or nine feet of navigation.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman can easily verify it. An accurate survey of the channel has been made by the coast surveyors of the United States. I venture to say that he will find that there is over ten feet of water from the head of the Galops Canal.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has the Minister examined the survey of which my hon. friend speaks?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I went over the surveys with my deputy before this work was authorized, and I was satisfied, from the information furnished to me, that we had to do either one thing or the other.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does the hon. gentleman remember the depth of water mentioned in the survey?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not, but I am informed that eight or nine feet was the general depth; and, as I am reminded by my deputy, the superintending engineer, Mr. Rubidge, who went into the question, submitted an estimate of the probable cost of deepening the channel sufficiently around the bend to afford navigation.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is the hon. gentleman positive as to the eight or nine feet of depth?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am speaking, not from memory, but from statements now made to me by my deputy.

Mr. HAGGART. There were two plans submitted to me. One was for the deepening of the north channel, and the other was to blast a point off a small island. But at present all the vessels go down that way, and it is not necessary to deepen the channel at all. This surely must be a mistake. The Galops channel was deepened to the depth which the canal has at present. That was intended to be used by vessels going down the river without going into the canal at all. Surely you would not have deepened the Galops channel if the entrance to it was not deep enough.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I would like to call the Minister's attention to the fact that he has made no attempt to justify the expenditure of $400,000 on the 800 feet lock I spoke of, other than that the engineer reported in favour of it, and he accepted the report of the engineer. Here is another expenditure of some $300,000 or $400,000 for deepening this channel, and he has the same justification for it. That official appears to be a very expensive official. I think the Minister should have a better explanation for the expenditure of so much money when he comes and asks this House to vote the money. The late Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) is well acquainted with that section of the country, and when he says that it is not necessary to incur that expenditure, I feel satisfied that he knows what he is talking about. I got up to say that if the Minister has no other justification for this work than to say that his official recommended it, he may be a very expensive official, and I think it is time the matter should be looked into.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am very sorry the hon. gentleman does not think my explanations are very satisfactory. I am sorry he says that I offered no explanation why this work was proposed. Not only was it the advice and opinion of Mr. Rubidge, whom I found in the department and who was the engineer under the ex-Minister of Railways, and has had a very lengthened experience—probably a larger experience with reference to the St. Lawrence waters than almost any other man in the country—but it was the advice of the chief engineer as well, and I went outside these and got the opinion of a gentleman whose name has been mentioned here to-day in the highest terms, Mr. Shanly, and he concurred in the opinion of these two officers of the department. That, I think, ought to be a fairly satisfactory explanation why this work was taken up, and I am sorry it does not satisfy my hon. friend.

Mr. HAGGART. As to the engineer in charge I have nothing to say. He is a very efficient and trustworthy officer. He may be extravagant, as my hon. friend from Glengarry (Mr. McLennan) says, but I have every reliance in his judgment and he has been a long time on the work. I am sure that he believes thoroughly that this is the best course, but he is a thorough Briton and looks upon the question from a national point of view. He believes in having the channel in our own waters. It is useless to point out to him that we have the right of navigation of the St. Lawrence as well as the Americans; he has set his heart upon that deepening. I have been over the ground several times and examined the charts and came to the conclusion that no such expenditure at all was required to make the canal efficient. I would like to have the report of Mr. Shanly approving of this particular work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not say that we had any report from Mr. Shanly with respect to the north channel.

Mr. HAGGART. I understood that Mr. Shanly concurred in the opinion of the engineer as regards this particular work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, on that question I did not have any opinion from Mr. Shanly at all.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There seems to be a direct point of dispute between the late and the present Minister as to the depth of the channel. Will the hon. gentleman look up the figures?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall do so, but do not wish to be understood as putting my recollection in opposition to what has been said by the ex-Minister. I did not say that I recollected that 8 or 9 feet was the depth, but I am reminded by the Deputy Minister that that was the general depth at the end of the channel.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman will admit that it will make a material difference if he finds there is fourteen feet of a natural channel.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am quite sure that there is not, but not quite clear as to the 8 or 9 feet.

Mr. HAGGART. Was not the Galops channel, that is the one outside the canal, down the rapids, intended for a navigation of 14 feet?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. It runs parallel to the canal going down there. There is not 50 yards divergence going down the Galops rapids and into the locks. If there is 14 feet depth to the channel, there cannot be but a very short distance to go from it into the canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How does that effect this question?

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman says there is only 8 or 9 feet navigation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say that the channel in the bend which we shortened, by what we agree is the north channel, contains water to about that depth. I am not speaking of the Galops channel.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister must understand that in order to get into the Galops rapids, you come down the American channel, and have 14 feet navigation all the way to the Galops rapids. The divergence is not 50 yards at the most from there into the entrance of the Galops Canal, and the Minister says that in order to get from the entrance of the Galops Canal into the American channel, there is only a depth of 8 or 9 feet. If there is any low water of that kind, it would be only over a distance of 50 feet, provided the channel is deep enough to take the boat into the entrance of the rapids, which undoubtedly it is.

Galops Channel—Straightening and deepening $50,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is for removing rocks.

River reaches..... $50,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is the St. Regis section, and it is for clearing out the boulders and dredging.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is it done by contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Lake St. Francis—Removal of boulders. $50,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This has been let by tender.

Trent Canal—Construction..... $600,000

Mr. OSLER. Apparently this Government has money to burn. I know that I am speak ing against the idea of many of our friends, but the spending of the country's money on building a six-foot ditch connecting these lakes is perfectly inexcusable. I have a steam launch on Lake Simcoe, and I believe I am almost the only one who will use this canal connecting with Lake Simcoe. It is absolutely throwing away the money of the country, and because money has been spent in the past on this work is no reason we should spend more on it now. I protest against the expending of money on such an absolutely useless piece of public work. This canal will never be of any use. It will never pay the wages of a lock keeper. I am very sorry indeed to see that a better policy has not been adopted in connection with this canal by the present Government.

Mr. BENNETT. As the hon. gentleman who last spoke (Mr. Osler) comes from the city of Toronto, I almost expected a wail to go up from him, because, at present it must be admitted if credence is given to statements in the public press that the city of Toronto is finding itself cut off, on all sides, by other towns and cities which are securing the trade which once the city of Toronto thought was its own for all time to come. If the proposal were made to make a canal from the city of Toronto to Lake Simcoe, my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler)—

Mr. OSLER. Would vote against it straight.

Mr. BENNETT. But, in deference to the wishes of his electors he would rather have to applaud it, though his own conscience was against it. How he would compromise with his conscience I would not like to say.

Mr. OSLER. I would not compromise; I would vote against the proposal.

Mr. BENNETT. However, I do not propose to speak at any length on the merits of the Trent Valley Canal. The proposal has been so long before the public, and so much work has been done on the canal, that it has become a matter of necessity for the interior navigation of the province that the work should be completed. And, while it is quite true, that the depth will be only 6 feet it must be borne in mind that the Erie Canal, with no greater depth, carried millions and millions of bushels of grain to New York. I hope that when this canal is constructed my hon. friend from West Toronto will go over the route. He will see that, instead of being a series of locks and canals it is a series of locks connecting lakes and rivers. I need not say much, because the Minister of Railways and Canals himself most commendably, went over the route a couple of years ago. The result of his observations was to convince him that the enterprise was a commendable one. I would like to ask for some details of how this $600,000 is to be expended?

Mr. OSLER.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. About half of it will be required for works that are already under contract, in the Peterborough and Lakefield districts. The other $300,000 we propose to expend in constructing a hydraulic lift instead of building a number of locks, thus following the Belgian pattern. We think it would be more economical in construction and we are sure it will be more economical in its working.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the contract been given for the construction of the lift lock.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No; the time for receiving tenders expired to-day, and I have not seen the tenders.

Mr. HUGHES. I was surprised when the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) got up and made an exhibition of himself in regard to the Trent Canal. This is not the first time that in this House and out of it that gentleman has made an exhibition of himself in regard to matters that do not centre in the city of Toronto. It is within the memory of the whole of us that that hon. gentleman occupied a prominent position in the city of Toronto, when not only the Board of Trade but the City Council quarrelled with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Thirty thousand people who would otherwise have been added to the population of the city of Toronto were driven to the city of Montreal, by the blundering stupidity and incapacity of the public bodies of the city of Toronto. I will give you another instance. When the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway Company were seeking a bonus from the Dominion Government, these gentlemen from Toronto put on their silk hats and frock coats, and came here to assist in getting the bonus for that road. What for? To take away trade from the city of Toronto? Every move they have made in that connection for years has been in the wrong direction. If they pursue this policy for many years longer, if the sensible people of the city do not step in and interfere, I am very much afraid that the grand old city of Toronto, the Queen City of the west, under the management we have seen exhibited in the Board of Trade and in the City Council, will degenerate into a country town, if not into a country village. The hon. gentleman says the canal will be of no use. How does he know? Has he ever read the report of the commission upon it? Has he ever investigated anything in relation to the canals in this country and other canals? Has he ever been down the Erie Canal, or ever considered that that waterway which, though only four feet and a half in depth, as compared with the Trent at 6 feet, and not half the width of this, has greatly helped to make the city of New York, has built up the city of Albany, and the city of Buffalo, and has helped to reduce the city of Toronto to where it stands at this moment? That canal would not be parted with for millions every year by the farmers of New York. But we do not pay much attention to what such gentlemen say. The work is going on; and, I am satisfied when completed this canal will be one of the grandest institutions, not only for the Dominion of Canada, but even for the very city that this hon. gentlemen (so far as this matter is concerned at all events) misrepresents. I am delighted to see him solicitous about the money of the people of this country. But the hon. gentleman did not speak of the cost to the people, nor did the member for Toronto rise in his place in the House to protest when $3,200,000 was given in bonuses to roads in the North-west in which the hon. gentleman is interested. Upon that subsidy at the present time, the taxpayers of this country are paying no less than $160,000 a year, for roads owned by him or by organizations with which he is connected. And all what for? For the benefit of the country? We did not oppose it. But these roads are not doing one-tenth part of the good to the Dominion as this canal will do when it is completed. However, I did not rise here to defend the Trent Valley Canal. There was a commission appointed years ago to investigate that matter. I would like the hon. member for West Toronto to read that report. Much as we may respect and admire him in some things, he must excuse us if we do not get down upon our knees and bow at his dictum, when he says that this canal will not pay the salary of a lock-keeper. We do not want it to pay the salary of a lock-keeper. What we want it to do is to bring trade. Why, there was not a man attempted to gainsay what was stated by the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Poupore) this afternoon that the city of Toronto as well as other districts should speak favourably of the Mattawa Canal.

I stand here now to say that my vote and my voice shall go heartily in support of a Mattawa canal, not because I am willing to forego the construction of the Trent Canal, but because I believe that it will cause a city to arise at the entrance to the French River which will benefit my county, the same as if you promote the city of Montreal to have two or three million inhabitants, it is going to benefit the county from which I come. If the Ottawa valley is prosperous, it will have a tendency to make the Trent valley prosperous. We see new towns springing up on the shores of the Georgian Bay, and we see the city of Ottawa prospering. Why? Because Mr. Booth has had the pluck and the energy to extend his road down to Parry Sound, thus opening up that country, and we heard to-day that 50 million bushels of grain are going to come by that route to the city of Montreal. We who live along the line of the Midland Railway between the town of Midland and the Bay of Quinte, see every siding up and down that railway filled with Grand Trunk Railway freight cars laden with grain from Chicago, because there are not enough elevators, and they cannot get vessels in Montreal to take it across the ocean; so the cars are side-tracked up and down the country. At present American shippers are beginning to realize the great benefit of that route. I am satisfied that when the Mattawa canal is constructed, and when the Trent Canal is constructed, as it will be in a few years, the shippers of the United States will send their freight over that very same route, and it will prove for all time to come a great service as a through route as well as a local route. Let me give you one example. In the town of Peterborough there are large bridge works that made a tender for the Sault Ste. Marie bridge some years ago. They were cut out of that tender simply on account of the freight. The freight from the town of Peterborough to Sault Ste. Marie was several thousand dollars higher, for the same quantity of iron, than it was from Belgium to Sault Ste. Marie. The through rate from Belgium to Sault Ste. Marie was lower than the local rate from the town of Peterborough. Had we had our waterway at that time, the people of our district would have had an opportunity of filling that tender. There are thousands of people living along the line of that canal, just as many as there are in the city of Toronto, and people who contribute as much to the welfare of this country. But let me say that I am not charging the people of Toronto with being actuated by the narrow views that appear to actuate certain gentlemen who claim to represent the city of Toronto. The people of Toronto themselves are broad-minded and patriotic, they are willing to see other parts of the country get their fair share of public advantages, people who see that the upbuilding of Midland, Lindsay, Orillia and Peterborough means the upbuilding of the city of Toronto. I know that the merchants of Toronto desire to see the prosperity of those towns, and they are not actuated by any of those narrow cheese-paring policies which we unfortunately see in various persons. Now, the freight rates on grain from the district are greater than they are from the west. The Iowa farmer gets his grain landed in New York and in Liverpool cheaper than the farmer of Simcoe or Victoria counties. Why? Because he has the waterway to the city of New York by way of Buffalo and the Erie Canal. So that the farmers of Simcoe and Victoria counties, and those other Midland counties to-day, are labouring under disabilities as compared with the farmers of Illinois and Iowa, simply owing to the fact that they have no water communication with the front. However, that is coming, we are not at all afraid of that. But there is one thing that I regret to see. The Minister, having spent $300,000 last year, is only asking for an additional $300,000 this year. When the Minister of Railways and Canals took office he found, I think, tenders calling for the construction of a section between Kirkfield and Lake Simcoe. It is not a difficult section to construct, and as soon as it is open for navigation, there will be uninterrupted communication through Victoria and Peterborough counties down to Campbellford, within a few miles of the Bay of Quinte. In other words, these broad central water stretches will all be connected, and there will remain only the two ends to open down into the main waterways. I would respectfully impress upon the Minister the necessity of taking this into consideration, and calling for tenders for that section as early as possible. My hon. friend the Postmaster General knows the great advantages that will be conferred upon the community by the completion of that section. No doubt the Minister has been over the route and knows it well, and I hope he will not allow the persistent calls for money from other parties, to cause him to neglect this work and allow it to hang fire as it was unfortunately neglected by my own friends when they were in office until the late Minister (Hon. Mr. Haggart) took it up with much vigour. I hope the Minister of Railways and Canals will push this work to a speedy completion, and if he does, he will never have cause to regret it, for a large portion of the country will be benefited. I do not see any allowance in the estimate for the drowned lands along the Cameron Lake and other lakes in Victoria County.

Mr. BENNETT. How much will it cost to finish the Lakefield section? Will that be built this fall?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The expectation is that it will be completed during the coming fiscal year. We estimate it will take about $300,000.

Mr. HAGGART. In speaking of that work, I understood the hon. gentleman to say that tenders were being asked for the construction of a lift lock in this particular section, on plans of the character of something he saw in Belgium.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are three or four of those lift locks in actual operation in Belgium, one a short distance out of Brussels, which I saw myself.

Mr. HAGGART. Has the Minister got plans, specifications and details of these locks, so that parties tendering will know exactly what they are going to build?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BRITTON. Will the Onderdonk contract absorb the whole amount asked for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. HUGHES.

Mr. BRITTON. Assuming the whole amount, $600,000, to have been expended, how much more will be required to complete the canal in accordance with the views of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If he means the cut we are now making through to the lake, the canal could be finished for about $1,000,000 in addition to what we are now asking.

Mr. BRITTON. So $1,600,000 will yet be required to be spent. I do not value this canal so highly as do some hon. gentlemen who have spoken. It would pay a great deal better to buy out all the wheat that the county of Victoria, through which the canal passes, produces than proceed with the canal to help them to get it to market at a cheaper rate than at present. I do not under-value work of this kind. Any work of this kind must to some extent benefit the country, but a work commenced so long ago as this was, and with the spasmodic efforts made to finish it at a large expense of public money is very disappointing to the people. It was commenced before confederation, and there has now been expended on it no less than $2,301,539, according to the last report of the Minister of Railways and Canals. We have now as the product of that expenditure only 21,145 tons of tonnage passing through the canal during last year, while the total amount collected was only $823,62. I am free to admit that the amount of toll collected on an unfinished work is not a fair estimate of the value the work will possess when fully completed, and yet it affords some indication of the probable traffic of the canal when completed. The cost during the year for repairs was $22,343, a very great many times the amount of the tolls collected. Perhaps we cannot stop when a large amount has been expended without having more expended in order to get the benefit of the expenditure already made; yet I cannot let the item pass without at any rate saying that this work is not a work so much in the interest of the country that we need expend on it so large an amount when the money is so much more required in other places.

Mr. HUGHES. I am very much pleased to see the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) on his feet. I have a distinct recollection of visiting that town some four years ago and speaking to some forwarders and suggesting they should have elevators. Nothing of the kind, they said, Kingston did not need them and would not have them. To-day Kingston has gone crazy over elevators and has no less than three. This merely indicates that the views of these gentlemen may change. Of course, there is a little bit of selfishness in Kingston. We know that the Montreal

Transportation Company makes Kingston one of its termini, and there tranships its grain into barges to go down the river. This brings grist to the Kingston mill. If the hon. gentleman will look beyond the end of his face, he can very readily see that the Trent Canal would benefit Kingston, and the Toronto people might see that they would be benefited by carrying a branch to Lake Simcoe. Kingston need have no fear that this canal will injure that city. They have their graving docks, and every vessel sailing the lakes has to be repaired there.

Mr. BENNETT. What was their income from the graving dock last year?

Mr. HUGHES. The Government are trying to sell it. Not a barge can pass Kingston without benefiting that city. Let the hon. gentleman remember that only three years have elapsed since he and all Kingston were condemning elevators, saying that a floating elevator would do, and yet they are all elevator crazy to-day and have now three in that city, and therefore I hope Kingston and its worthy member will in another year or two ardently support the Trent Canal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could ask the hon. member for Kingston to apply the same calculation he made in regard to the Trent Canal to the Rideau Canal.

Mr. ROGERS. I am very glad some other hon. members agree with my views as regards this canal, especially as the member for West Toronto and lawyers and professional men do not as a rule take my view. There is a feeling through the country against this work, and that feeling is expressed by many members privately. It is not a feasible scheme and cannot be consummated so as to produce any benefit compared with the outlay. We all know its history, and that we were led to believe that expenditure on it would cease after the contracts let by the late Government had been finished. Its total cost would be over four million dollars to complete. When the delegation was here last year, I asked one of the delegates what were the natural waterways and the depth of the entrances. He replied that the depth was about three feet and it was proposed to increase the depth to seven feet; whereupon I asked him what was intended to be done with the drowned lands. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) has said that already claims are coming in for damaged land and he expected that these claims would be pretty heavy. There is a great deal of that country in flats and valleys composed of the best of land, and that would be drowned by this water being raised seven feet. We know the history of the Rideau and the Tay Canals as regards damages for drowned lands. We know that the Rideau Canal has been built about 60 years and we are not done paying for damaged lands yet. Last year this Government had to pay a sum awarded by the late Government seven years ago, to different parties who had their lands injured. In my own constituency to-day they are getting up petitions asking for compensation for drowned lands, and it is their right that they should get this compensation. I was in hopes that some of the damages on this canal were paid, but it appears that it is only now commencing. If in this canal that is now to be constructed we have to pay for damaged lands for sixty years hence, the original cost of building the canal will only be a small matter as compared with the immense sums spent for damages. The day is past for these little side show canals of six feet of water, and I am sure that many of the members who are advocating the Trent Canal know very well that it is a foolish scheme. We do not expect a canal to pay a surplus revenue into the treasury of the country, but we think it ought to pay for its working expenses. We know that the Rideau Canal is a regular sink hole for public money, and that its maintenance and operation cost us more than $50,000 a year above its earnings. Surely we do not want to perpetuate that state of things. One of the hon. members of this House who represents a constituency along that Trent Canal said to me recently: I have to support it, but I know it is a farce.

An hon. MEMBER. Name.

Mr. ROGERS. The hon. gentleman is, I believe, within hearing of my voice now. The great majority of members in private conversation express themselves that this expenditure is useless, but they are anxious to get a few votes in their counties and so they will vote for it. It is said that some people do not look beyond the tip of their nose, and many members of this House who are supporting this scheme do not look beyond the tip of their noses when they are voting this large sum of money. I do feel that the Government will not be supported when they go before the country if they continue voting large sums of money for this Trent Valley Canal. I am very glad that the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) is opposing this scheme. This Government has been influenced in the past by what the Toronto Board of Trade has said, and I think they should be influenced now. Here is the resolution with reference to the Trent Valley Canal, passed by the Toronto Board of Trade on the 5th of April last:

(Special to The Journal.)

Toronto, April 5.—At the meeting of the council of the Board of Trade yesterday the report of the Transportation Committee on the Trent Valley Canal was that the expenditure thus far on this system of waterways, with a view of creating a thorough and efficient route between the Georgian Bay and Lake Ontario has been unwarranted and unnecessary.

They recommend that the council should strongly urge the Government not to grant any further sums of money for the carrying on of this work, the expenditure on which in the end can result in no practical benefit to the country. The council acted on the report and appointed the president to make representations to the Minister of Railways and Canals in accordance with the resolution.

In view of this expression of opinion from the great city of Toronto, and in view of the fact that the majority of the rural constituencies will vote against this canal when their representatives go before them, I do not see what ground the Government has for continuing to spend money on it. I believe the Government will feel it at the next election if they do, and I know in my county they will feel it. There is an enormous expenditure every year, and we know that the Estimates brought down this year are very heavy and we talk tariff for revenue, but if they go on spending money like this it will be protection with a vengeance, and I say the sooner they call a halt the better for themselves.

Mr. OSLER. I do not think that any of the four members from Toronto will suffer very much by the threats of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes), because I do not think there will ever be water enough in the Trent Valley Canal to drown the shortest member coming from that city.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a very large expenditure and we ought to have some explanation from the Minister with regard to the progress of the work, and what he proposes to do if this large amount is voted for the coming season.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have already stated that $300,000 of this amount would be required to pay the balance that would be earned by the contractor under the existing contract between Lake Wood and Peterborough, and the remaining $300,000 is the sum which we estimate will be required to cover the cost of the hydraulic lift.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the Minister to say that it would require about $1,000,000 in addition to this, before the canal is available. What depth of water will he have in the canal then?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Six feet. The exact estimate of the amount that will be required to complete the canal to the lake is $900,000. We will have six feet of water after that is carried through. We have let no contract since I came into the department; we have simply been paying for the work done under the contract then existing.

Mr. HUGHES. I think it is six feet on the sills, but you have provision for eight feet.

Mr. ROGERS.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a clear foot, I take it, but we have six feet on the mitre.

Mr. SPROULE. This is to pay for the work under contract when the Minister came into power?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, with the exception of $300,000 to cover the hydraulic lift.

Mr. SPROULE. When will that hydraulic lift be put in?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A year from the present spring is the earliest date, but it might be along in the fall.

Mr. SPROULE. Notwithstanding the probability of incurring the displeasure of the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes), I may say there is a well-grounded impression in the west that this canal will not be as valuable as some people seem to expect after all this expenditure, and that the country will not get an ample return for the money. There is no doubt that all these highways of commerce are valuable, but the question arises whether the benefits will be commensurate with the cost. I have heard a great many comments about this canal in the west for several years past. I do not like to oppose it, because it might prove to be valuable, even with no more than six feet of water. Some hon. member suggested that after this expenditure of a million dollars was made, there would be enough water to take up that trunk which the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) would not take, if he could convert it into a boat. If the canal had only six feet of water, it would be of very little use, especially when we are having our canals deepened, and vessels of a greater draft of water are being constructed every year, because this would involve transshipment from one kind of vessel to another. If we are finding it necessary to deepen all our canals to fourteen feet, we are not likely to get much trade for a canal with only six feet of water.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am a little surprised at the range which the discussion has taken with regard to this canal. As for me, I am not looking for votes for it at all. To show the limited view of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers), with regard to the expenditure of money, I would like to ask him how much revenue the Kingston dry-dock has paid? It seems strange, too, that the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) should object to any money being expended on this canal. I would like to ask him how much revenue has been received in return for the money spent on the harbour of Toronto? It seems to me hon. gentlemen ought to have broader views on a question of this kind. I dare say that fault is found with this expenditure in that part of the country which the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) represents, because some people are so small that they cannot see the advantage of an expenditure of money unless it is right at their own doors. We know that this canal would serve a large section of country the produce of which cannot be got out because it costs so much to ship it by rail that it does not pay to export it. I do not agree with the hon. member for East Grey that a six-foot canal is of no use. We know that the great bulk of the grain from the western states is sent through the Erie Canal. I think this canal is going to be a great benefit to this country, and it does not follow that six feet of water is not sufficient. I would like to ask the hon. member for Frontenac how he expects to have a revenue from a canal of which only the centre is completed. The hon. member is very much alarmed at the expenditure of the Government. Of course, he is talking to the great party of patriots he represents in this House; but every time the expenditure of the Government comes up, he votes for it like a man. I suppose he will point to the eloquent speech he has made to-night as an evidence of how economical he is, though he has voted for every dollar the Government has proposed this session. This canal is not going to be of special benefit to my constituency, which borders on Lake Ontario; but if we are not going to benefit from it directly, we know that from every expenditure to develop the resources of this country, every constituency in the Dominion of Canada is benefited indirectly.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to say something in reply to the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane), whose strictures are uncalled for. If the member for East Grey were in the habit of objecting to expenditures in different parts of the country when they are not made lavishly, he might have some reason for his contention to-night. The question I raised was whether the return would be commensurate with the expenditure. From the information we have, when that canal is completed, giving a depth of five or six feet of water, there will have been an outlay of about $3,250,000; and the great question for any member of this House to ask is, will the country receive a fair return for that large outlay? We are voting over half a million dollars for this work to-night. It has been going on, as one hon. member said, since confederation, that is over thirty years, and the expenditure must continue for several years longer before it can give us uninterrupted navigation. I say that is a fair question to ask, and it is not asked from any narrow-mindedness because the canal does not benefit my section of the country. That is a matter which does not affect my view of the question. If there were a proposal to cut a canal from the Georgian Bay to a point near Toronto I would support it very strongly, because if we could get such a canal, with a depth of fourteen or sixteen feet of water, it would be very valuable as a means of carrying the grain of Manitoba and the west at a much less rate than is possible at present. It may be that I am not as well informed as some hon. members with regard to what has been done on this work, but from the meagre information at my command, I have been very strongly inclined to the opinion of late years that the expenditure we have been making on it has not really been a very wise expenditure. I think we could expend the money in many other ways that would yield a much larger return and be of more benefit to the country at large.

Sault Ste. Marie Canal—Construction.. $45,000

Mr. SPROULE. What work is going on in the Sault Ste. Marie Canal now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a large and unsightly pier at the entrance which I think the House is unanimously of the opinion ought to be removed at the earliest possible date. Then it was necessary to make some arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company looking to the construction of a new bridge across the canal. That, of course, can only be undertaken after we have made a satisfactory arrangement. The expectation is to replace the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge with a bridge of a larger span, which would cost $65,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. Minister propose that the Government shall pay all the expense of removing that and building a larger span?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. It would seem only fair that the railway should bear a portion of the expense from it as well as the country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is the younger construction, and the principle which governs in these cases is if you are running a canal over or under or across a railway track and a bridge becomes necessary, you have to furnish the bridge. If, on the other hand, you have a canal, and the railway company desires to lay a track across your canal, they have to pay for the bridge.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood, when the incorporation of that company was had that the land had been practically taken possession of for the canal, that was before the railway company built their bridge, and therefore the Government would be practically the first owners of the ground necessary for the canal, and when the right to build a bridge there was given, it was given subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, so that that bridge might not in any way interfere with the navigation of the canal.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the hon. Minister taken any steps about removing the pier in that canal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, we are taking that pier out of the canal. That is what we have been making desperate efforts to accomplish. I propose to have it out before the close of the fiscal year, if possible.

Lachine Canal—Enlargement..... $125,000

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is for deepening it between Côte St. Paul and Lachine. We are getting a full depth of 16 feet there. This week will finish it.

Lachine Canal—Deepening River St. Pierre $15,000

Mr. HAGGART. This is the old vote for the deepening of the River St. Pierre, which I have contended, again and again, the Government have nothing whatever to do with. It has not interfered with the building of the Lachine Canal in the slightest. It is for deepening that portion of the St. Pierre River from the Lachine Canal to the St. Lawrence River. It was again and again urged upon the late Government, but whatever their iniquities were, they never committed such an iniquity as this. They refused it again and again.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a revote, and the balance required for this purpose. The hon. gentleman will recollect that sums were paid in times past for damages which resulted from the need of just such a work as this. Nobody can deny, who has seen what has been done and can form a judgment as to what will be accomplished, the fact that the completion of the work will prove very beneficial. The leakage from the canal has led to large claims for damages in the past, and these have been paid. Since, however, this work has been undertaken, sufficient is already established to show the existence of a grievance and the cause of these damages will be entirely removed.

Mr. HAGGART. This does not interfere at all with the leakage of the canal. That has been paid for over and over again. The canal has been ditched on each side to carry the water into this River St. Pierre. This is a river that runs under the Lachine Canal. We improved it and built a ditch at the enormous expense of $300,000 or $400,000 from the village of Lachine down to the tunnel that goes under the canal. This money we are voting now is for the purpose of deepening the river from the Lachine Canal to the River St. Lawrence. I cannot understand how it is possible at all that the building of the Lachine Canal should interfere or affect that river in the slightest between the Lachine Canal and the St. Lawrence. It may be a work of use to the municipality, but what the Government have to do with an expenditure of that kind I cannot understand.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How would it be possible to carry away the water or leakage to the canal by other means than we now use ? Would not the deepening and straightening of the route of this river be the most natural and reasonable way for carrying off that leakage.

Mr. HAGGART. The leakage from the canal is but a trifle in comparison with the water that goes down the River St. Pierre. When the proposition came up before me, I brought down the late Sir John Abbott, who was Premier at the time, and showed it to him and he would not allow a cent to be expended for that purpose. There is not a single justification for it. It is a purely local work, and if needed, should be made by the municipality alone.

Grenville Canal—Enlargement..... $45,000

Mr. SPROULE. What kind of work is done here ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand from the engineer that the effect of the falling in of the sides has been to fill up the canal and the effect of clearing that out would be to deepen the water.

Mr. SPROULE. What depth of water will there be when this is cleaned out ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Nine feet.

Mr. SPROULE. Will this sum cover the whole work ? What is the estimated cost of completing the work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The estimated cost of the work is $90,000. There has already been spent about $23,000, from the beginning of the fiscal year up to the first of last month.

Mr. HAGGART. Is this part of the old contract that Mr. Goodwin had, and is he the contractor for finishing the work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He was the contractor, but the work was taken off his hands and is now in the hands of other contractors.

Mr. MONTAGUE. When was the contract let ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A little over a year ago.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The contractors were the lowest tenderers, I suppose ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I have already furnished to the House information as to the tenders.

Intercolonial Railway Extension to Montreal—To pay rental to Grand Trunk Railway Company and Drummond County Railway Company, for railway from Chaudière to Montreal, to be operated as part of the Intercolonial Railway..... $210,000

Mr. FOSTER. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he should allow this matter to stand.

Chambly Canal—To build a swing bridge at Ste. Thérèse Island..... $2,000

Mr. HAGGART. Was there a bridge there before?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, a ferry. We propose to put in a steel swing.

Mr. HAGGART. And will $2,000 do it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is estimated that it will do it.

Trent Canal—
To remove blasted rock above Hastings. $2,500
To construct one dump scow..... 700

Mr. HUGHES. I would ask the hon. Minister if there is to be a vote for clearing out the Lindsay River. I do not find anything there or in the Supplementary Estimates. In case the hon. Minister may not remember, I may remind him that there is a great deal of log towing on these waters in the Victoria district, a considerable portion of the logs being hardwood. If they are not well fastened, they drop out and sink, and there are a number of them in the bottom of the river. The steamers passing up and down, some of them large vessels carrying as high as 400 passengers, frequently strike these sunken logs. I worried the late Minister of Railways and Canals on this subject, until his hair turned gray partly on account of it—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. With what success?

Mr. HUGHES. No success, though I think I did better than my hon. friend on the Trent Valley Canal. There are twenty or thirty steamers on these waters and they are constantly passing up and down.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are a great many excursion parties.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes, every day.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister how he proposes to do the work of removing the blasted rocks above Hastings? Will it be done by contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not thought of that yet.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to press for an answer with regard to the Lindsay River. This is not in North Victoria.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid I must say to the hon. gentleman that no provision is made this year. It is late to take the matter up now. What does the hon. gentleman suppose would be the probable cost?

Mr. HUGHES. There is an estimate in the department, made two or three years ago, I believe, and, according to that estimate, as I understand, the work will cost about $5,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that subject will have to be deferred, but I shall be glad to give it consideration during the year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I take it, from the statement of the hon. Minister that these are the only Estimates for the year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These and the Estimates brought down last night.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And these Supplementary Estimates—are they finally final?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. So far as we know at present.

Cornwall Canal—To repair recess platforms and tail bays, locks Nos. 15 and 17 $10,000

Mr. HAGGART. Is this work to be done by contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is for repairs. No contract is let. I know of no reason at the moment why a contract should not be let; but I would not like to be held to that definitely.

Mr. HAGGART. We must have a promise that the Order in Council providing that works costing over $5,000 shall be done by contract shall be strictly adhered to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not like to make a definite promise of that kind. This is for repair work, and it may turn out, though I do not say it will, that it would be very unwise to issue specifications and call for tenders. I should be disposed to ask for a contract if I can do so safely and properly.

Williamsburg Canals—

To provide a combined gate and stone lifter to be used on river reaches.... $5,000
To build one pair of lock gates for lock. 4,000

Mr. HAGGART. Is this done by the workmen on the canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My first expectation is that we will ask for tenders for both of these works.

Murray Canal—To provide a floating landing stage at collector's office..... $1,000

Mr. COCHRANE. I would like to ask the Minister if he is aware that the bridge tenderers on this canal who have built houses for themselves on the canal, have been turned off and their houses are useless to them. All the officials on the Murray Canal, with one exception, have been dismissed, and I would like to know from the Minister why they have been dismissed. The Minister of Railways and Canals will recollect my speaking to him last session about the hardships in connection with dismissal of bridge tenders on that canal, and I think he told me then there would be no officials removed from that canal without his sanction. The hardship put upon these men is such that I do not think anything like it has taken place before in the history of Canada. When the late Government asked for recommendations and I recommended men for the position, I was given to understand that if these men built houses, the Government would allow them rent for the houses, the same as they did to men that had to rent houses. When these men were appointed, I never dreamed that any official would be removed. I recollect that county for the last 30 years. When the Mackenzie Government was in power that riding was represented alternately by Mr. Keeler and Mr. James L. Biggar. There has never been an officer dismissed in that riding, by either a Liberal or a Conservative Government. I supposed when these men were appointed and two of them built houses on the canal, that they would live there as long as they performed their duties; but to my utter surprise and disgust they were turned off without a moment's warning. I would draw the Minister's attention to the case of one man named Wesley Goderich. He built a house that cost $600 or $700, he improved two or three acres of the canal reserve, and fenced it in with wire fencing, and this man was taken out of his house, removed to the western bridge, and a new appointee was put on the bridge and put into his house. I can say to the Minister that no one who knows this man can say that he was an offensive partisan. I do not believe any body knows how he voted. He was a man in weak health, and I may say that all my recommendations on that canal were men for whom it was a charity to give them the appointments, because it put them in the way of earning their living when they were physically unable to earn it in the ordinary walks of life. This man has been turned out of his house; I never supposed that a Government calling itself a Reform Government would perpetrate such an iniquitous job. I do not blame the Minister, because I think he told me he was not cognizant of the fact. This man was allowed to remain on the canal until this spring, and now he has been turned off, as well as turned out of his house. I think a deputation waited upon the Minister in reference to a man named Johnson. He also built a house on the canal, and he has been dismissed from the canal, and his house is no benefit to him whatever. I would ask the Minister if that is the way he is treating officials that were appointed in good faith, and who have discharged their duty faithfully and well? There has never been any complaint against these men. I have never said a word about it before, because I was fearful that the only man left on the canal would be turned off. The last man turned off was John Clouston, as fine a man as there is in my riding. He got that position as an act of charity, and I am fearful that he will become a charge on public charity. He was an old and faithful servant who did his duty well, but to my utter surprise, I got a letter the other day stating that John Clouston was dismissed, and a young man who is able to earn his living in other spheres, was put in his place. I would ask the Minister if he was consulted in reference to the removal of John Clouston from that canal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not recollect the name, but I will try to ascertain.

Mr. COCHRANE. Can the Minister also tell me what he proposes to do in reference to these men that have been turned off the canal, and who have put their money into houses. It appears to me a great hardship that these men who built houses under the late Government should be turned off the canal, and their property left there, no good to them whatever. Let me tell the Minister that there never was a man, either Grit or Tory, ever removed from office in my riding. I have represented that riding for 16 years, and the only man that ever got an increase of salary was a Liberal by the name of Fowler, a custom-house officer in the village of Colborne, appointed by the late Mackenzie Government. That man is in office to-day, and we never dreamed of such a thing as his removal. I hope the Minister will take John Clouston back again. Johnson, I may say, put every dollar of money he made on the canal into his house, it is a nice little house, worth about $800 or $1,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is Clouston's age?

Mr. COCHRANE. He is about my age.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will look into this.

Mr. COCHRANE. I will promise the Minister that if he restores this man, and if the Liberals are turned out of office, I will remember some of the hon. gentleman's friends in mercy when we get into power.

Mr. FOSTER. I really think the hon. gentleman has no need of pleading before the Minister. His mere statement of a case like that, a case that must have been done without the knowledge of the Minister should bear its own rectification. Surely when bridge tenders are appointed and build small houses and are supposed to be permanent and put their earnings in those houses, there should be some very good reason why they should be turned out. It seems most inequitable and unjust, and it is coming pretty low down in the spoils system business. The officers who do that should be expostulated with, and the mere statement of the case should, as I have said, bring its rectification.

Mr. HUGHES. Some time ago I observed that some two-penny half-penny business was going on in my riding. Every man with an office worth $100 a year was being turned out, and yet I found in other ridings they were not being turned out. The system was that the local member, or the Grit candidate, if he was a man of that class, kept poking away to secure the man's removal, by saying that the man was absent from his post and so on. I know one case in which the Minister of Railways was actually deceived in regard to a man in my own constituency, and did not know the circumstances. I am satisfied that if the Minister knew the facts of the cases, he would not interfere with them.

Mr. HAGGART. The remarks are rather too kind to the Minister. In my riding, without the slightest complaint being made, he turned out two bridge tenders and put in two new ones. He did more. He sent a circular to the representative of the neighbouring constituency saying that he could have all the offices at his disposal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Who did that?

Mr. HAGGART. You did.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is entirely in error.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman may turn up the Debates, and he will find that the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Frost) made the statement regarding the Minister, but the hon. member did not recommend the change of a single man. That is bringing politics down to a pretty low level. Many of these men were appointed thirty or forty years ago, and some of them were old Imperial officers on the canal. I notice the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Frost) is now in his seat. I state that the hon. gentleman received a circular from the Minister of Railways asking him to nominate parties for different positions on the canal even when not a single complaint had been made against any of them. The hon. gentleman had knowledge enough and charity and good sense enough not to change any of them. But in my little place two very efficient persons, without any charge having been made against them, were removed and two others were put in their places.

Mr. BRITTON. There is a great deal of misunderstanding in regard to persons dismissed or said to have been dismissed on the Rideau Canal. At the end of the season, after this Government came into power, it was given out that all persons on the Rideau Canal had been removed from office, and a great deal of talk was occasioned all over the country. But as a matter of fact, those men have not been accustomed to be employed during the winter, because there is nothing for them to do, and although expectations were raised on the part of many Liberals that those places would be filled by them, the old officers were in nearly all cases re-employed. So, although the accusation went out against the Minister of Railways and Canals in regard to dismissals on the Rideau Canal, it was not a fact, for in nearly every case—I do not know about the cases mentioned by the hon. member for Lanark—but, speaking generally in regard to employees on the canal, they were re-employed during the following summer.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. member for Leeds and Grenville (Mr. Frost) I think will not say he received a circular from me to the effect that he had a free hand and was to set aside the employees of his section of the canal. I think if the hon. member so understood the matter he was in error. The hon. gentleman and I unquestionably had some conversation on the subject, and he was aware that the intimation had gone out to the superintendents of the different canals stating that they should advise the employees when they left the service in the fall, that it would not necessarily follow that they would be employed in the spring. I think a circular went out from the different officers, or some of them, that was in many ways very objectionable, but I had not seen it before it went out, otherwise I would have had it corrected. Before the following season opened, the spring of 1897, I put myself in communication with nearly all the members representing portions of counties on this and other canals, and among the rest with the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Frost). There was not one of the members, I think, to whom I did not say that I hoped he would exercise a careful judgment in the matter, and so far as the employees who had been in the service was concerned, I think the hon. gentleman will say that I relied on his discretion and judgment in not asking me or insisting on any more interference with the re-employment of the men previously employed than was absolutely necessary. I was very well satisfied with the way in which the hon. gentleman advised me in the matter, and I think he will say that I did not go beyond expressing these views to him, that I did not issue any circular and made no statement and did not treat the matter in the sense in which the hon. member for Lanark has stated.

Mr. FROST. I might just say in respect to the matter that I had several conversations in regard to employees on the Rideau Canal, so far as regards my constituency, with the Minister of Railways and Canals, and in all those conversations I gathered from him he desired that no employee should be removed. That was my impression, and I stated that I did not care to remove any employees in my constituency, that they were men of worth and good character and had been on the canal for a number of years. The Minister very kindly concurred in everything I had done and approved of it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Did the hon. gentleman receive any circular from me?

Mr. FROST. I never received a circular. I received a list of employees from the department. It went out to all the members along the Rideau Canal. I took it for granted at the time that it was simply for my information, and also that as a certain number of the employees were only temporary and their services were always dispensed with at the end of the year or the 15th of December, it was understood that these men were not necessarily appointed again in the spring, but as they were all good men I did not move for having any of them at all displaced. I just left the list as I got it from the department. There was no pressure brought to bear on me for the dismissal of any of them, and I am happy to say that with the exception of one man who was not able to attend to a certain bridge on the canal by virtue of his infirmity—a new bridge being built there at the time which he could not handle—I think there have been no employees dismissed in North Leeds and Grenville, not one.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And that most of the temporaries were re-employed.

Mr. FROST. All the temporary employees were allowed to remain just as they were when the present Government came into power. I may say that so far as the Minister of Railways is concerned, this has been done with his full concurrence and I might say his desire in the matter. There has been no pressure brought to bear upon me by any Minister in any of the departments, post offices or anywhere else. I have never interfered with any postmaster, with any canal employee, with any Inland Revenue officer, with any one of the officials in the constituency of North Leeds and Grenville. Everything is there to-day as it was, except in one or two cases where deaths occurred, and where we appointed our own friends as anyone would naturally expect.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. And I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Frost) is just as strong in his constituency as if he dismissed them all and put others in their places.

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. FROST. I have always understood that we were under British Parliamentary Government, and where it was not necessary to dismiss a man for cause, such as incompetency, I have allowed him to remain just where he was.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FROST. For my part I have always opposed making any dismissals of any kind except for incapacity or something of that sort, and I must say that all the officials in North Leeds and Grenville, so far as I know are performing their duties as well as anyone could perform them. I was not willing to interfere with any of them, and in whatever I have done the Minister of Railways always concurred.

Mr. HAGGART. I did not say the Minister brought pressure upon the hon. gentleman (Mr. Frost) to dismiss any of them, that would be going too far, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Frost) knows that every employee on the Rideau Canal is temporary.

Mr. FROST. Not all the lockmasters. Mostly all the lockmasters are on the superannuation list.

Mr. HAGGART. These would be lockmasters appointed to ten or twelve years ago when the Order in Council was passed making them temporary employees. They are temporary now and every man on the list the Minister sent the hon. gentleman, who was appointed during the last ten or twelve years was a temporary employee. No Conservative member who ever represented any constituency on the Rideau Canal ever had influence enough to get any of these temporary employees removed. They were continued permanently and unless the department officials recommended their dismissal for neglect of duty or other just cause, they were never dismissed under a Conservative Government. My statement was that all the employees in the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Frost's) constituency on that list were temporary, and he had the right to choose their successors. Although the hon. gentleman (Mr. Frost) did not exercise the option given to him, that option was exercised in my riding. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Frost) disavowed having anything to do with it, but two bridge tenders were dismissed, against whom no charge was made as political partisans. I do not consider that would have been a sufficient charge to dismiss them on, unless they were offensive, because a poor bridge tender has the right to exercise his vote, and express his opinion if he thinks fit. He need not be offensive nor need he go to a meeting to interrupt a political opponent, for perhaps if he did that he would be dismissed by a Conservative Government. But he always had the right in this country before the era of the present Government to exercise the franchise and express his opinion if he wished to. The sending out of these circulars by the Minister of Railways, undoubtedly suggested the inference that the hon. member for the constituency might select the successors of these employees if he so wished, and that is a new doctrine introduced by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair).

Mr. FROST. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) is misrepresenting the case to a certain extent. The document that was sent out by the Minister of Railways was more for the purpose of discovering if there were more officials than necessary upon the canals. It was not for the purpose of turning out any officials to replace them by Liberals, but with the idea of economy. There was one appointment made by the late Government in my constituency that was entirely unnecessary, and that appointment, I think, was cancelled but no new appointment was made. In reference to the two bridge tenders in the town of Perth, of course the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) knows I had nothing to do with either of those cases. I know nothing about them at all. In North Leeds and Grenville there was a third man appointed to swing a bridge, a year and a half before the bridge was built. He was doing absolutely nothing there. There was only one lock upon which there were two men, and those two men had plenty of time to attend to one lock and the bridge, but still the late Government appointed a third man when there were not two hours work per day for the two men already there. The services of that man were dispensed with in the interests of economy, and as I understand it, that circular was sent just to see that such waste of public money did not occur. Of course I know what I said on this particular question at the first session, but I think I was taken up wrongly on the statement I made. I know how it reads in the "Hansard" as I have read it over. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) took me up at the time, and commented on it to the disadvantage of the Minister of Railways and Canals. I did not think it worth while at the time to reply to his comments. At the same time, I understood the circular to mean that where there were any unnecessary employees on the canals, their appointments could be cancelled. There was only one in my constituency cancelled, and that appointment has not been filled, and is not likely to be filled. I have not recommended any because I believe that the two men we had at Jones' lock can carry on the work without any difficulty, having very little work to do.

Mr. HAGGART. I listened to the hon. gentleman when he made the statement some time ago, and it was on that statement that I made the statement in reference to the Minister. Here is what the hon. gentleman said :

And to-day, what is the result? In my own constituency, where there is scarcely a Liberal office-holder, not one single man has been discharged. I know that on the Rideau Canal, where there were over twenty-two officials suspended last fall, when the Minister himself gave me a list, and I could put any official in that I liked—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FROST. Certainly I could. I had that privilege; but what did I do?

Mr. HAGGART. I am not accusing the hon. gentleman of doing anything wrong. What I said was that the Minister gave him a list, and he had the right to exercise the privilege of discharging every man he chose in his constituency; but I paid him the compliment of having the good sense not to dismiss any man, though power was given to him by the Minister to do it.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I think it is very unfair to speak of the Minister of Railways in that way. If there is a reproach to be made against the Minister it is that he has not dismissed more men than he has done. We on the Intercolonial Railway have asked him time and again to put out very partisan Tories, and he has refused to do it. To see how lenient he has been to his opponents, it is only necessary to look into his office. He has even gone so far as to keep as his private secretary the same man who was the private secretary of his predecessor, and as his other secretary the man who was the private secretary of Sir Mackenzie Bowell. Hon. gentlemen opposite should be the last to reproach the Minister with having dismissed some Tories. We have reproached him for not having put out enough, and I hope he will put out some more before long.

To defray expense of an exploratory survey to ascertain the most practicable route for an all-Canadian railway from some point on the existing railway into the Klondike district..... $40,000

Mr. FOSTER. We would like to have an explanation of this?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This sum is an estimate of the probable cost of an exploratory survey from Edmonton through the passes and towards the Pacific coast. It is quite impossible for one to indicate with any degree of definiteness along the beds or courses of what rivers it will be desirable that the surveying party should pass; but in a general way the parties will likely seek the Peace River, and perhaps they may follow up the Nelson to the Liard, and then proceed west; or they may perhaps run along in a more southerly direction. The first survey will probably be divided into three parties, and they will probably be able to give us during the present season a report which will be of value and answer our purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman does not propose to go to the Pacific coast, does he?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Pretty close to it, if we can. A second item, it will be observed, provides for an exploratory survey from the Stikine River to some port on the coast. It is our expectation that the surveying parties will likely strike a common point somewhere between the Stikine River and the seaboard upon the Pacific coast of British Columbia. If one can form anything like an accurate judgment at all from the map and from the information that is available as respects that country, it is not unlikely that somewhere to the south of the Stikine River the parties surveying from the east and seeking a line from Edmonton as a starting point would intercept a line which would be found practicable from the Stikine River to an ocean port.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose this is to carry out the view of a railway as propounded a few days ago by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). In replying to some hon. gentleman, he said that the Stikine road would be a portion of a line of railway which it was proposed to build from Edmonton, so that the Edmonton people would have the advantage not only of a road to Dawson City, but also of one to the coast. I suppose this is for the purpose of carrying out that scheme.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, it was indicated, I think, at a very early period in the session that the all-Canadian route, when extended south of the Stikine, would form part of the line of railway from Edmonton running through the Rockies to the west.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the Yukon costing us in the current year for all services?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it is in the Estimates for the coming year. It amounts to between $600,000 and $700,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Outside of what Mackenzie & Mann have to get?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Up to the present time our receipts from the Yukon have exceeded the expenditure.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the report true that a fiat has been granted to Mackenzie & Mann for any damages?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no foundation for the statement.

Mr. BLAIR.

Intercolonial Railway—

To increase strength of iron bridge.... $50,000

Mr. FOSTER. What conclusion have the the Government come to? I hope they have come to the conclusion to follow the practice of the preceding years and charge that to income rather than to capital account.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is hardly worth while to reopen the discussion, but I would not wish to be taken as assenting to the proposition that this it at all contrary, or if it is, only in a very limited sense, to past experience. It will be impossible to withdraw this item, and I must ask the committee to pass it.

Mr. FOSTER. Then let it stand. There will be certainly a long discussion on it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Why not reserve the discussion for concurrence.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection.

Intercolonial Railway, including Montreal Extension..... $3,650,000

Mr. HAGGART. This item shows an expenditure of $550,000 in excess of what it was. That pre-supposed that there is to be a large amount to be expended on the Montreal extension

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is operating expenses.

Mr. HAGGART. If you will give us the latitude of discussing this item on the other No. 138, we have no objection to passing it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will discuss the Intercolonial in the widest possible way on No. 138.

The Department of Militia and Defence, including $2,400 to J. W. Borden, $2,800 to Lieut.-Col. D. A. Macdonald, and $1,400 to Lieut.-Col. Guy, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary..... $41,250

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this? Why is $1,400 given to Lieutenant-Colonel Guy? Is that a new appointment, and why the exception to the Act?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The reason is that Lieut.-Col. Guy has been a second class clerk at the maximum of his class and he has been promoted to the position of first class clerk without any increase of pay, and, as he had never passed the civil service examination, it was necessary to do it in this way. He was brought into the service some years ago, I think originally from the Imperial service at Halifax. He also served under the Provincial Government of Nova Scotia, then, after confederation, under the Dominion Government at Halifax. Then he was transferred to Ottawa as a second class clerk. He has been a long time in the service and has been a faithful officer. As he had reached the maximum of his class, I thought it only proper to make him a first class clerk. though, for the present, he gets no increase in his pay. With regard to Lieut.-Col. D. A. Macdonald, he has been a first class clerk for many years and has been at the maximum of his class, receiving only $1,800 a year. Lieut.-Col. Macpherson had been the director of stores at $3,000 for many years. I have combined the positions formerly held by Lieut.-Col. Macpherson and Lieut.-Col. Macdonald into one position, giving $2,800 for services for which formerly $4,800 were paid, thus effecting a saving of $2,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) superannuated Col. Macpherson?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, at $1,500. But it seems to me that, to some extent, at least, superannuation should be charged as against the sums which the officer himself has paid in, he having been a contributor to the superannuation fund for many years. He was an old officer, and some time ago had passed the period when he might have been superannuated. At any rate, whether it is to be admitted to be a saving of $2,000 or less, a considerable saving has been effected by this change.

Mr. FOSTER. Lieut.-Col. Macpherson is still competent for active duties, is he not?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The services are being as efficiently performed now as they were before by one officer, and we are saving a certain amount of money.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that Lieut.-Col. Macpherson is already superannuated?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, since last September.

Mr. FOSTER. There was a question about the appointment of Mr. Borden, as the hon. Minister will remember.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I remember. I stated to the House that I had the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice, approved and endorsed by the Minister of Justice, that this appointment was a proper one to be made as a technical appointment under section 37 of the Civil Service Act. I promised the hon. gentleman I would bring that opinion. I have brought it for the benefit of the hon. gentleman and the House. Perhaps I had better read the correspondence that took place.

An hon. MEMBER. Read the Minister of Justice's decision.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps it would be better for the hon. gentleman to read the letter sent to the Minister of Justice. That will give us the grounds on which the Minister acted.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is suggested that I should read the whole correspondence. It is as follows:—

Ottawa, 8th July, 1897.

E. L. Newcombe, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Justice,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I desire to appoint in charge of the accountant branch of the Militia Department an expert accountant possessing special technical knowledge. I find that such a step is absolutely necessary in the public interest.

Will you kindly give me your opinion as to whether I have power under section 37 of the Civil Service Act.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) F. W. BORDEN.

Ottawa, 10th July, 1897.

Dear Mr. Borden,—I have considered the question submitted by your letter of 8th instant, and am of opinion that the proposed appointment may be made under section 37 of the Civil Service Act, upon the certificate of your Deputy Minister, in compliance with that section.

I have submitted the matter to the Minister of Justice, who concurs in my view.

Yours sincerely,

(Sgd.) E. L. NEWCOMBE.

The Honourable

F. W. Borden, M.D.,
Minister of Militia and Defence,
Ottawa.

(Confidential.)

Memo. for Minister of Justice.

Dr. Borden spoke to me privately about a change which he contemplates in his department. He proposes to superannuate his accountant and replace him by an expert accountant from a bank, the latter being possibly over age, at all events not having passed the civil service examination, and, therefore, not being qualified for appointment in the usual way. He also, I think, proposes to pay him the same salary which the present accountant is receiving, which would be in excess of the minimum salary of a chief clerk, which the present accountant is. The latter, I believe, receives $2,400, which is a chief clerk's maximum. I asked Dr. Borden to write me a letter so that I might submit the matter to you, as, if the Auditor General should object, the case would have to go to the Treasury Board, and then your opinion would be required. I attach his letter hereto.

Such an appointment can, I think, be made under section 37 of the Civil Service Act, if the Deputy Minister will give the certificate there required. There can, I should think, be no doubt that the qualifications of an expert accountant are technical within the meaning of this section. If that be so, the examination may be dispensed with, and the age of the candidate would be no disqualification. Further, as to technical officers, the Act places no limit as to salary.

If you concur in this view, I will advise Dr. Borden accordingly.

The matter is, I believe, somewhat urgent.

Ottawa, 3rd August, 1897.

The Honourable

The Minister of Militia and Defence.

The undersigned has the honour to recommend the appointment of Mr. J. W. Borden, aged 40 years, to the position of chief clerk and accountant of the Department of Militia and Defence, at a salary of $2,400 per annum, vice Mr. Cornwall Herbert O'Meara, superannuated. The qualifications requisite for such office are wholly technical, and are not possessed by any person now in the service of this department, and that it is in the public interest that the civil service examination be wholly dispensed with in this case. Respectfully submitted.

(Sgd.) C. EUG. PANET,
Colonel,

Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to say a word with reference to the permanent corps in the way of suggestion, not criticism. I wish to call attention, first, to the horses for the batteries of artillery and for the squadrons of cavalry. The number of horses is quite inadequate. The Quebec battery have only enough horses for two guns. The Kingston battery only two span for each of six guns and for one wagon. The full complement is three teams to each outfit. It would have been a splendid opportunity to advertise Canada if this battery were sent to England and—on this subject I will have something to say later on—the horses were to find their way into the Imperial service.

Another suggestion about horses in annual camp is this: Horses now get $1 a day and men get 50 cents. A horse is worth $25 to $50, so that a man in a few years pays for his horse. I will suggest that the horse be paid the first year at the rate of 50 cents, the second year 75 cents, and the third year let him be paid $1, and stand at that. There is really as much training required for a horse as for a man. In reference to the pay of officers of the permanent corps, that is now fairly good for subalterns, but very low for officers of senior rank. Take a third class clerk in some of the departments here, he is paid more than the officers commanding some of the batteries. In some of the permanent corps in the service, officers who risked their lives in the North-west rebellion, who have given technical study to the art of the profession, are all paid salaries in commanding these squadrons, or batteries, or infantry corps, that do not compare with the salaries of third class clerks. A chief clerk gets $2,400, a first class clerk gets $1,800. It would be fair to have the officers commanding troops or squadrons or companies hold the rank of chief clerks. They certainly require much more skill than clerks. Take the officer commanding the battery in the city of Quebec, or in Kingston, he has need to study up his profession, and yet to-day that officer commanding the battery in Quebec, and the officer commanding the battery in Kingston, or the squadron in Toronto, each is actually paid less than third or second class clerks, in the departments at Ottawa. These clerks in Ottawa receive pensions, but those men who are soldiers in every sense of the term, receive no pension whatever. These are some of the points that I would submit to the Minister for his consideration.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman for the suggestion that he has made. I must confess that I was not aware that in the matter of horses the pay was so far below what it ought to be. With regard to the pay of officers, the hon. gentleman is quite right, although he knows perfectly well that our officers in this country are paid rather more than the officers of the same rank in the Imperial service.

Mr. HUGHES. For senior officers?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am told so.

Mr. HUGHES. I think the hon. gentleman will find that an officer who serves as lieutenant for a certain number of years, and reaches the salary of $3, if he becomes promoted to be a captain, is degraded in pay. He gets the honour, but he falls back to $2.82 a day.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. But the hon. gentleman must remember that a provision was made some time ago, by which, after an officer had served, I think, his four years, he should receive an extra 50 cents, and after eight years, 50 cents more. Then if he is given the second 50 cents, I believe it does happen that after promotion he gets slightly less pay than he did before. But the difficulty in our service is the slowness of promotion. Our service is very small, our officers are all in good health, we have no wars to kill them off, and so they remain, and promotion is very slow indeed. But there is a great deal in what the hon. gentleman says. Employment, particularly in the artillery branch of the service, is technical, and requires men of first-rate ability, and no doubt some of those men are grievously underpaid. Particularly is this so in the case of officers commanding districts. Take a district like that of Montreal. When I came in I found that the district officer in the important district of Montreal, required to live in that city and keep up a certain amount of style becoming a lieutenant-colonel, and compelled to do so, or try to do so, on a paltry $1,800 a year. We have changed that, and improved it by giving him a house, light, &c., equivalent to an increase of $500 a year in respect of allowances. But even now I think his pay is altogether too low. I am giving attention to the matter, and perhaps another session I will be able to bring down a scheme which will remove some of those defects.

Mr. HUGHES. I am not finding fault with the Minister. I am merely making suggestions. I believe the Minister is doing everything he can to bring the force up to a proper standard, and I compliment him for it. While I am on this question of the permanent corps I wish to make another suggestion. The question of colonial troops in the Imperial service has engaged the attention of the House before to-day. I notice that in another place the matter has also been put before the people of Canada in reference to the 100th regiment. I will take the liberty of telling the Minister what I think would be a proper plan to pursue in connection with this. We Canadians should be willing to do our part in contributing corps to the Imperial service; whether we pay for them directly or indirectly is a matter of detail. Take for instance the infantry corps. Let the permanent infantry corps of the Dominion constitute the 1st Battalion, and let this be sent off on active or foreign service, or on garrison duty for the Imperial Government. Also let the battery of artillery now in Kingston be sent on similar service and a new one be constituted into a 2nd battalion, the same as the English territorial districts now are. The 1st battalions or batteries are usually sent outside the district, the 2nd battalions are recruited at the headquarters of the various districts. In this way Canada would still have a permanent corps at home, and still have her active service corps abroad doing duty for the Empire. In this way our officers and men would get experience abroad. I recognize that it would take some time to bring this about, possibly a year or two more, but we will, I hope, see that done. Then I would suggest that in case the other proposal be not adopted that an exchange be made. For instance, why should not some of our corps be transferred with some of the British corps, the same as the Minister has already done between Quebec and Halifax? British artillerymen are now garrisoning the city of Quebec, and the Canadian artillery are garrisoning Halifax. Take the battery in Kingston, which is an excellent corps, with the exception of lacking its full complement of horses. Taking the horses in the two batteries, they would easily make a squadron. Fully horse the battery and let it be sent in exchange with an Imperial battery. Our men would compare favourably with any in the Empire. The difference in the pay here and elsewhere is very little, and it would no doubt be met by the men. The experience abroad and the novelty would do much to improve our men. I trust this matter of the formation of a colonial brigade or a colonial force in the Imperial service will receive the early consideration of the Government.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think the observations made by my hon. friend are sufficiently important to require some attention from me. In regard to the question of repatriation, as it might be called, of the 100th Battalion, that is a very important and interesting question, and is now being considered by the Government. It was brought to the notice of the late Government just before they went out of power, and it has been under our attention from time to time, the difficulty being to decide what portion of the expense should be borne either by the Government of this country or by some locality, Toronto, Ottawa or another point which might desire to have the battalion headquarters fixed there. With respect to the question of exchanges, that is a very important one indeed, and it has been carried out to some extent already. An exchange has taken place between a company of the Royal Infantry of the permanent corps at Fredericton and a company of the Imperial forces at Halifax for a period of three or six months, and it was very advantageous to our permanent corps and perhaps equally to the Imperial troops. When I was in England not long ago, I had the pleasure of meeting some of the military authorities there, and I found they are very keen about this matter of exchanges. We are now making an exchange between our artillery at Quebec and the artillery at Halifax. If the matter is to be carried further as suggested by my hon. friend, and that is very earnestly hoped for in the old country, at the Horse Guards and the War Office, it will be necessary to make arrangements that it shall not be for a shorter term than one year. We could prepare a company and send it over to England for one year, and this is something to be looked forward to and might be attained in the near future.

Rifle Association grant $37,000

Mr. HUGHES. I suppose there is no decrease in the Association grant?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. HUGHES. What arrangements have been made with the Association?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Cartridges cost to manufacture, from $25 to $30 per thousand. We have decided to issue them at $15 per thousand for rifle practice.

Miscellaneous and unforeseen..... $15,000

Mr. HUGHES. I presume the vacancies among officers and men caused by the troops sent to the Yukon will be filled after the 1st July?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, as regards the officers, not as regards the men at present.

Dominion Cartridge Factory..... $65,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. What is the reason of the increase of $6,000 in this vote?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is due to the change in rifles in use. The materials for the present cartridges cost more than formerly.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not wish to be understood as objecting for a moment to the participation in any ceremonial for a prominent personage by the militia, provided they choose to attend. Recently the militia were given permission to attend the funeral of Cardinal Taschereau. I am not finding fault for permission having been granted. I understand, however, that considerable fault was found that officers and men of a different faith to that of Cardinal Taschereau should have been required to present arms, not only to the body, but to some form or ceremonial of the church. I also understand that two or three years ago a Protestant ecclesiastic of the highest standing in the city of Quebec, Bishop Williams, died, and like permission was sought by the officers and men of the regiment, of which he had been chaplain, to attend the funeral. Does the hon. Minister know that that permission was refused to the militia? If so, what is the reconciliation of the conduct of the Militia Department in refusing to allow the men to turn out and honour their old chaplain, Bishop Williams, a Protestant bishop, and permitting the men to turn out and attend the funeral of Cardinal Taschereau? I do not find fault with allowing them to turn out with their arms at that or any other similar ceremonial, but I should like to obtain an explanation of the matter.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I received an intimation this afternoon that that question might be asked and I endeavoured to get the information. I think I am able to give full information with regard to what took place on the occasion of the funeral of the Cardinal, but I have not been able to ascertain that any application was made to the department with reference to the funeral of Bishop Williams. I am now having the matter looked into in the department and I will get the information, if there is any, at a later date. As to what took place at the funeral of the Cardinal, I have here the correspondence and the orders issued. I was not aware that arms were presented or that anything out of the ordinary course was done, but I think it is better that I should read the correspondence to the committee so that every one may know exactly what occurred:

13th April, 1898.

District Officer Commanding, Quebec.

I am mailing permission for Militia, including permanent corps, to attend the funeral of the late Cardinal Taschereau.

ADJUTANT GENERAL.

From Adjutant General of Militia

To District Officer Commanding
Military District No. 7, Quebec.

Headquarters, 13th April, 1898.

Officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the Royal Canadian Artillery at Quebec and of the Active Militia, who can be spared from duty, desiring to attend the funeral of the late Cardinal Taschereau, in uniform and with side-arms, will be permitted to do so, without expense to the public.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

(Sgd.) M. AYLMEER, Col.,
Adjutant General,
General Officer Commanding.

Adjutant General of Militia
To District Officer Commanding
Military District No. 7, Quebec.

Headquarters, 15th April, 1898.

Sir,—Adverting to my instructions of the 13th instant, permitting the Militia to attend the funeral of the late Cardinal Taschereau in uniform and with side-arms, I have the honour to inform you that the officers, non-commissioned officers and men will be permitted to attend with arms. It must be understood that the attendance at this parade is entirely voluntary.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) M. AYLMEER, Col.,
Adjutant General of Militia.

A. G.,

I understand that instructions have been issued. I understand that the wish expressed by me will be carried out, viz., that as I find there is a general desire on the part of many of the troops to pay honour to the deceased, I am willing to allow it on the distinct understanding that the attendance at this parade is to be purely voluntary.

(Sgd.) W. J. GASCOIGNE,
Major General.

15-4-98.

18th April, 1898.

Captain F. Pennée, Chief of Police, Quebec.

General Officer Commanding regrets that he has no power to authorize the firing of minute guns at funeral to-morrow.

ADJUTANT GENERAL.

Mr. HUGHES. In reference to the Bishop Williams case, the matter was spoken about to me at the time of the funeral of Cardinal Taschereau, but I did not then bring it up.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How long is it since Bishop Williams death.

Mr. HUGHES. A few years ago, but I heard nothing of it then.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It was prior to 1896; I could have had nothing to do with it.

Mr. HUGHES. I am not finding fault in that respect with the Minister. It was under the Administration of the Conservative party.

Mr. GIBSON. Your own friends.

Mr. HUGHES. I know that. At the time of the funeral of Bishop Williams an application was made to the Militia Department and the answer wired back by the General Officer commanding was "certainly not." I know that to be the case so far as one can know without being cognizant of it personally. When the application was made for the Cardinal's funeral there was as one might naturally expect considerable feeling over it. The fact that the volunteers, both permanent corps and militia were merely granted permission to attend, it was not an order, raised no feeling whatever, but the objectionable feature of it was their being ordered to carry arms and ordered to present arms at some especially religious part of the ceremony peculiar to the Cardinal's own church. Some people thought that was utilizing the militia in a religious service, especially as the Militia had been refused permission to even walk in uniform at the funeral of the Protestant bishop a few years before. That certainly created some feeling amongst the militia. I draw the attention of the Minister to this fact; if the militia are to be turned out to the funeral of a bishop of the Roman Catholic Church, then as an outside pillar of the Methodist church I certainly insist that the same honour, and it is an honour, shall be conferred on the president of any Methodist conference, should he unfortunately be called to depart this life; or, in the case of the death of the moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly.

Mr. GIBSON. Never mind that; the Presbyterians will take care of themselves.

Mr. HUGHES. I suppose the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) will look after his own interests. It is my opinion that this whole business should be kept out of any connection with the militia. This one little incident in Quebec has done a great deal of harm. I know that many broad minded men, men who have nothing to do with anything bigoted, men who would have been delighted to attend the Cardinal's funeral even if they had not been ordered, and delighted to pay homage to the remains of such an eminent citizen as he, they did not like this in view of the refusal some years ago to allow the militia to attend the funeral of the Protestant bishop.

Gratuities to officers..... $15,000

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to have an explanation of these gratuities.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The gratuities are to three officers, namely, Lt.-Col. Maunsell, Lt.-Col. Smith and Major Rivers. Col. Maunsell is going out on account of the age limit. He is one of the district officers commanding District No. 8, New Brunswick, and the school at Fredericton. He gets $7,000, Lt.-Col. Smith, of London, gets $4,000, and Major Rivers $1,800. Major Rivers is, however, employed at present at headquarters, and I do not know whether the idea will be carried out in his case or not. At any rate if the money is not required it will not be used.

Mr. HUGHES. If Major Rivers should be retained permanently in the Militia Department, and I hope he will because he is a very efficient officer, would he not still get that $1,800?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think he would. If he served in the military branch of the department I think he would not, but if he enters the civil service he would simply retain his present rank, being transferred from the permanent force at Quebec to serve here. I think that is his present position.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the Minister the details of Col. Smith's $4,000?

Mr. MONTAGUE. He is a good officer, is he not? Why are you retiring him?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Age limit. I have not the details here, but I may tell the hon. gentleman the principle on which these retiring gratuities are made up. An officer receives 10 per cent of the salary he is enjoying at the time he retires for every year he has served. I see that Colonel Smith's allowance is fixed at $4,300.

Mr. HUGHES. How many years would he have served?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am unable to give the number.

Mr. HUGHES. Colonel Smith entered the service a number of years ago. He is a very efficient officer, and he acted as Brigade Major in the third military district, his home being in Cobourg. Was his period of service while he was Brigade Major counted in his years of service?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Oh, yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Then, on the coming into power of the Liberal party in 1874 he was retired for a time. I would like to know whether his services prior to that time has been counted?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Colonel Smith seems to have served as a district officer from the 12th of January, 1872, to the 1st of May, 1876, then as commandant Royal School Infantry to the 19th of July, 1887 and district officer commanding No. 1 to the 1st of May, 1898. I presume the calculation was made up from these dates.

Mr. HUGHES. The reason I am asking is this, that on the principle laid down by the Minister I have figured that Colonel Smith's allowance should be over $5,000. I hope the Minister will allow this item to stand instead of the other one.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would like to put in a plea for the locality in which I live. We have a splendid battalion in the county of Haldimand, as my hon. friend knows. It has been under the command of one of the best officers in province, Colonel Davis. In the district from which I more particularly come we have a first-rate company, I think, No. 5. The number of the battalion is 37. This company was taken hold of a number of years ago by a young man named Captain Rastwick, who has brought it up to a high state of efficiency, but he is handicapped by having no drill shed. A short time ago they had premises rented, but a fire came along and wiped out the whole thing. I hope the Minister will see that the conditions are such that he can give us a drill shed.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The general orders provide that the district shall contribute a site and bear a portion of the cost. I had the pleasure of seeing the battalion to which the hon. gentleman refers two years ago at the camp of Niagara, and it is really a first-class battalion. I think there are at least two Indian companies in it, as fine men as I ever saw. In view of the splendid efficiency of that battalion, I shall be very happy to do what the regulations will permit towards assisting in the construction of a drill shed.

Mr. GIBSON. That reminds me of a telegram I received this afternoon from the secretary-treasurer of the Collegiate Institute of St. Catharines asking if the Government intended to provide anything for a new drill shed for that city. In 1866 the drill shed was put on what is known as city property, which is now occupied partly by the collegiate institute and partly by the drill hall. The city is prepared to contribute $1,000 towards the removal of the drill hall, as the space is needed for the collegiate institute and for other schools in the neighbourhood. I understand that an inspection has been made of the drill hall and it is not in such a condition that it is possible to remove it. I hope that if the Minister cannot see his way this year to provide a drill hall for St. Catharines, he will do something next.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The matter to which the hon. gentleman refers has been under my consideration. I would have been very glad if it had been possible to put a sum in the Estimates this year to construct a building in St. Catharines. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, who has charge of that particular matter, will, I am sure, bear me out in saying that I have used my best influence with him. In the present year it has been unavailing, but I hope that in the near future we shall be able to do something towards a drill shed for St. Catharines.

Mr. HUGHES. The matter of armories, not drill sheds, for a certain corps that wishes to be armed with the Lee-Enfield rifle has, I believe, received the attention of the Minister. As it is not possible for him to build armories in very many localities, may I ask what arrangement might be made to have the Government pay the rent of a suitable building for battalion headquarters or store of arms? In the case of the 8th Hussars, I think the rent was honestly due by the Government; but there are a number of companies in exactly the same position, and if one officer is to be paid rent for a building for the store of arms, every other officer ought to be paid, or the Government should build the armories. I do not know whether the Minister can this year build an armory in the county of Victoria. The battalion in that county, according to the report of the inspecting officer, stands ahead of every other rural or city corps but one regiment that was inspected by Colonel Otter. I am sure that if the hon. member for South Victoria (Mr. McHugh) were here he would endorse what I say.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend will understand that the Dominion would have a pretty heavy bill to pay if we undertook to pay rent for armouries for all the battalions in Canada—something like 100 of them. The hon. gentleman knows that there is now an allowance to the rural battalions of $40 for each company for the care of arms, and I always understood that the captain takes care of the arms and provides a place for that purpose, which is included in the $40. The idea now of the headquarters staff is that this should be changed and that a central armory should be fixed upon where all the arms belonging to a given battalion could be taken care of. If that is done, the $40 will be withdrawn probably from the captains, and be used, as far as possible, to pay for taking care of the arms.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) has made a strong appeal for a very good battalion, and both the hon. gentleman and his county and battalion have received a great deal of consideration in the past. I hope that when the hon. Minister undertakes to make provision for efficient battalions, he will consider the most efficient battalion probably in the province of Ontario, the 22nd of Oxford, which never received any consideration from my hon. friends opposite when in office but have always had to pay their own way.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Have they no drill shed?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No, and there was no use inquiring for one. I hope that the Government will look into the matter more fully and do some slight justice to those who have been neglected for years.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am very much obliged to my hon. friend for having called my attention to this matter, and I assure him that it will receive my most favourable consideration. I can sympathize with him, having stood shoulder by shoulder with him for many years in any wants he has experienced. I can quite sympathise in the view that to a very large extent charity should begin at home; and when we are providing drill sheds for our battalions, I shall not lose sight of his important battalion and his important county.

Mr. HUGHES. Our hon. friends opposite have only themselves to thank for anything that transpired in relation to militia matters during the eighteen years they were in Opposition. It was their party that began the breaking up of the militia, and I regret exceedingly that the Liberal-Conservative party never had the backbone to re-establish the proper policy, and I commend the present Minister for having returned to the old policy of the Liberal-Conservative party prior to 1873. I would make a suggestion to the hon. Minister. Rural battalions, such as the Oxford battalion, do not require drill sheds, but what they require are armories at battalion headquarters. I see that my hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland) has a public building in the estimates, and I am pleased to see it. In the town of Lindsay, we propose to utilize the part of the public ground, and when putting up public buildings in Woodstock or Liverpool or elsewhere, the Government could very properly provide an armory under the same roof, where the arms could be conveniently placed at little cost. One thousand dollars would build a very efficient place where the arms could be brought and kept, and you would have an armory for each company in every district of the Dominion.

Pensions payable to Mounted Police, Prince Albert Volunteers, and Police scouts, on account of the rebellion of 1885..... $2,920 66

Mr. HUGHES. Might I ask whether the widow and family of the late Captain French get a pension?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will call the attention of the right hon. First Minister to the matter.

Resolutions to be reported.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 155)—from the Senate—to amend chapter 11 of the Statutes of 1897 and to restrict the importation and employment of aliens.—(Mr. Fielding.)

Bill (No. 156)—from the Senate—respecting the identification of criminals.—(Mr. Fielding.)

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We shall proceed with the Estimates.

THE DISMISSAL OF MR. DUNDAS.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Before the House adjourns, there is a matter I would like to bring before the attention of the Government and especially of the Postmaster General. It is in reference to the dismissal of a mail clerk by the name of Dundas who was employed on the railway between Palmerston and Southampton. Some time in the election of 1896, I believe, Mr. Dundas, though not taking an active part in the election, yet, owing to some influences became connected with it, and in an election trial he was found guilty of corrupt practices, and, of course, was disqualified from holding his position. I have had applications made—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I will remind the hon. member that on a motion to adjourn of this kind a general debate cannot be brought on. If the hon. gentleman only desires to put a question—

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am only going to ask a question. I understand there are extenuating circumstances, and if the matter were reported to the judges I think some solution of the difficulty might be found and Mr. Dundas, who was long in the service, and against whom no complaints were made, might be restored to his position. I would like the Postmaster General to give his attention, as it seems to be the desire of the people generally that the case should be dealt with leniently by the Government. Mr. Dundas has already suffered almost two years, and I think his case is worthy of consideration. I thought the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) would have brought this up and I have waited until near the end of the session before calling the attention of the Postmaster General to the matter.

Mr. GIBSON. I have received a great many communications from friends of Mr. Dundas at different points from Southampton to Hamilton. Mr. Dundas was in the mail service for 24 years, and during that time he was not 24 days absent from his duty. I know him intimately, and I feel perfectly safe in saying to the Postmaster General and to members on both sides of the House that if he had been asked for assistance in the general election, Mr. Dundas would have just as readily given $20 toward my election or that of any friend of mine as he did to that of the hon. member for North Bruce. I understand that the money he contributed was not used for corrupt purposes. If I am correctly informed, the money was given to a man by the name of Scott, who, if report is correct kept the money. However, an injustice has been done Mr. Dundas, and I trust that the Postmaster General will take the matter into his consideration. If it is not possible to reinstate Mr. Dundas—as I believe, in fact I have a certificate from a doctor that Mr. Dundas, through lifting heavy mail matter for so many years is suffering from hernia—and if he is unable to resume his duties as a mail clerk, I think that, after all the years of good service he rendered to the country, he should be entitled to receive superannuation, having contributed to the fund for such a long time. This is an act of justice that will meet with the approval of his own political friends and of all who know him.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I heartily concur in what has been said. A number of people on both sides of politics, strong partisans on both sides, have spoken to me about this case. I did not bring it up, because it has nothing to do with the district from which I come, and I thought it would be brought up by other hon. members. All the parties from whom I have heard express regret that, owing to unfortunate circumstances, Mr. Dundas lost his position. At the time the trial took place, I think, parties on both sides of politics who read the proceedings felt that it was a considerable hardship. I join with the hon. members who have spoken in hoping that the Postmaster General will extend to this gentleman all the consideration he possibly can.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I am not aware of the particulars that led to the report of the judges, but after what has fallen from the lips of the hon. gentlemen I will have an inquiry made and see if the facts behind the report will warrant a reconsideration of this case. All that appears of record which is also on the journals of the House is that the judges on the trial reported Mr. Dundas guilty of corrupt practices.

Mr. LANDERKIN. He contributed some money.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That does not appear on the report presented to the House. There are, of course, corrupt practices and corrupt practices. It may well be that the moral guilt might be very different although the technical consequences so far as the trial is concerned are the same. Therefore, I am quite willing to have every inquiry made to see whether there are extenuating circumstances. If there are, I shall be only too glad to recommend them for consideration of His Excellency.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.30 a.m. (Wednesday).

Mr. GIBSON.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 1st June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

DRUMMOND COUNTY RAILWAY.

Mr. LISTER. I beg to present the second and final report of the Special Committee appointed to inquire into the expenditure of subsidies granted to the Drummond County Railway, and into all negotiations and transactions between the Government of Canada or any member thereof or any person on its behalf, and the Drummond County Railway, or any director or officer or person on the company's behalf, relating to the acquiring of the said railway by the Government, together with the evidence.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish my hon. friend (Mr. Lister) would move that the report be printed forthwith.

Mr. LISTER. I move that the second and final report of the Drummond County Railway Committee, together with the evidence, be printed forthwith, and that rule 94 be suspended.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that should include the proceedings before the committee as well as the evidence.

Mr. LISTER. I agree with that, and I would move that the proceedings also be printed with the report and the evidence.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION OF SUPPLIES FOR THE YUKON CONTINGENT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to say that the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) did not keep faith with me—I do not say it offensively, no doubt he has forgotten it—in regard to his promise that, before the Estimates of his department were reached, he would lay on the Table the papers relating to the contract for the transport of militia supplies over the Northern Pacific by the port of Seattle and the Boston and Alaska line. I am anxious that, before the remaining item of the Militia Estimates is reached, that promise should be implemented. I desire, also, to say that Colonel Prior, one of the members for Victoria, has sent me a telegram, evidently to bring to the attention of the Government the same point. The telegram says :

Am credibly informed Boston and Alaska Company have no ocean steamer ready to take Selkirk supplies. Does not contract call for sailing 20th May? Also no river steamers. Can you ask for contract, as informed it allows goods to be delivered Dawson instead of Selkirk, at same rates, namely, $300 per ton. Canadian Development Company here ready and willing to take goods June 9th, $250 per ton, also to convey Evans and his contingent Lake Teslin to Selkirk.

I desire to call the attention of the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Militia, to this matter, I think it would be convenient, if when the papers are brought down, such additional information is brought down as may be necessary to inform the House with regard to the subject of this telegram.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Without dealing fully with the subject mentioned by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), I may say, in the absence of my colleague, the Minister of Militia, that the officer of the Government at Vancouver, Major Perry, is now making an investigation into the question of the ability of the company to carry out the contract.

IMMIGRATION LITERATURE—CORRECTION.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would call the attention of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to the fact that in one of his immigration pamphlets there occurs the same misrepresentation of Western Assiniboia that occurs in the larger book and that I called attention to the other day.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). It is a reprint of the same. I will have it corrected, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) having called my attention to it.

ALIEN LABOUR LAW.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I beg to remind the Prime Minister that some days ago he agreed to lay upon the Table the instructions issued to the officers appointed for the purpose of carrying out the Alien Labour Law.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Yes, I think I shall be able to give them to my hon. friend (Mr. Montague) this afternoon or to-morrow.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. MARTIN. I would remind the hon. Minister of Public Works of the Order of the House agreed to on the 18th April last for a return showing the amount spent by the Government in the years 1896-97 and 1897-98 on private piers and wharfs.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I will see that the papers are brought down to-day.

ST. JOHN BRIDGE AND RAILWAY EXTENSION COMPANY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved second reading of resolution adopted in Committee of the Whole on Friday 27th May last respecting the payment of the money advanced by the Dominion Government to the Saint John Bridge and Railway Extension Company, under and by virtue of Chapter 26 of the Statutes of 1893.

Motion agreed to, resolution read the second time and concurred in.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 157) respecting the repayments of the moneys advanced to the St. John Bridge and Railway Extension Company.—(Mr. Fielding.)

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

The House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 71) further to amend the Weights and Measures Act.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. FORTIN moved in amendment:

That in the province of Quebec, when potatoes are sold or offered for sale by the bag, such bag shall contain at least 80 pounds.

Amendment agreed to.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I would like to explain to the committee—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried, carried.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There are several other amendments which I had prepared, but since I find that the members are unwilling to let me introduce them now, I will let them drop.

Mr. CLANCY. We cannot afford to pass over such a matter lightly. I desire to ask the Minister of Inland Revenue if he proposes to drop the other proposed amendments during the present session.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It was my hon. friend amongst others who compelled me to drop them by calling "carried." We will now have to wait until another session.

Bill as amended reported and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—SHIRT AND COLLAR INDUSTRY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MONK. Before that motion is carried I desire briefly to call the attention of the Government and of the Minister of Finance to the state of an industry which requires, I think, the serious consideration of the Government. I refer to the shirt and collar industry. As the House is aware, that is an industry which has been built up under the tariff which existed previous to 1877, and which has been qualified as the National Policy. The industry had no existence and held no position whatever in this country before the National Policy was introduced; and its products, shirts, collars, blouses and cuffs, were imported from Europe and from the United States. The moment the industry was given sufficient protection, a considerable number of manufacturers came in from the United States, and a number of skilled employees as well. I might give, as an instance, the case of Williams, Green & Co., an American firm who, as soon as the new tariff was introduced in 1879, established themselves at Berlin, Ontario. That firm, finding that the tariff gave them sufficient protection, started an industry employing 300 operatives, most of them coming from the United States. That industry, as the Minister of Finance is well aware—because I know he has given the subject considerable study, and that representations have during the last two years been made to him—that industry progressed considerably, and as it stands to-day, it employs within the Dominion of Canada over 8,000 operatives, who receive, on the average, wages of $4 a week for sixty hours. Ninety per cent of these operatives are females, a very large proportion of them are the sisters, wives and daughters of our farmers in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. In the immediate vicinity of Montreal, there are a very large number of farmers' wives and daughters employed by the shirt and collar manufacturers in the city of Montreal, and to whom this industry is a very great boon indeed. I said the wages were $4 a week for sixty hours; the House is perhaps not aware that these wages are greatly in excess of those paid in Europe for similar work. In Europe the wages are only $2.20 per week of seventy-six hours, and it is a well-known fact that there are no operatives so poorly paid as the seamstresses in England. As to skilled labour, the operatives in this industry command wages of about $1.50 per day, and there are a very large number employed in the factories in the city of Montreal, as well as in the adjoining district.

As to the capital engaged in this industry, statistics will bear me out when I say that over $1,500,000 is invested in the shirt and collar factories of this Dominion. The wages paid annally exceed $1,500,000, and the annual sales amount to $2,500,000. The material purchased in Canada by the manufacturers is of the value of $500,000, and the raw material brought in from elsewhere and employed by the manufacturers in the Dominion exceeds in value $250,000. As the Minister of Finance is well aware, there is no combination in this industry. There are a number of rival factories, and it is well known that the consumer gets fair value as regards the goods which are the products of those factories. The American and foreign manufacturers get their raw material at from 25 to 30 per cent lower than the raw material can be obtained by ourselves. They have cheaper money, machinery at first hand and their general charges are lower. It seems to me these circumstances invite the particular attention of the Minister of Finance, because, as the House will remember, when the new tariff was brought down the hon. Minister stated that whatever might be his own views in regard to the opposing theories of free trade and protection the Government were anxious not to sacrifice in any way existing industries, and that was the governing principle under which the present tariff was framed. Let us look for one moment at the condition of the tariff as it was previous to the introduction of the present arrangements. Under the tariff as it existed under the previous Government, shirts, collars, cuffs and blouses received a protection of 25 per cent. Shirts had, in addition, a specific duty of $1.00 per dozen; collars, 24 cents per dozen; cuffs, 24 cents per dozen; and blouses, $1.00 per dozen. The change introduced by the new tariff is very considerable. Upon all the articles I have just named the duty is a uniform one of 35 per cent, less, of course, the preferential duty in favour of the countries which have the benefit of that preference. As regards the raw material under the previous tariff, printed shirting was 30 per cent. The changes increased the protection up to about 35 per cent. Dyed shirting was 30 per cent; it has been increased to 35 per cent. Linen shirting was 20 per cent, it has been increased to 25 per cent. Woven shirting was 30 per cent; it has been increased to 35 per cent. Bleached cotton was 22½ per cent; increased to 25 per cent. Soap, under the previous tariff, bore a specific duty of one cent per pound, and that has been maintained. Starch under the previous tariff, was one and a half cent per pound; this also has not been disturbed. As to the protection afforded the industry on whose behalf I am speaking, it has been reduced under the present tariff, whereas the protection afforded to the raw material has been considerably increased. It seems to me that this discrimination is unfair. I do not intend to weary the House, particularly at this stage of the session, by showing in what ratio the business of the cotton factories has increased since the present tariff has been in force; but it is a fact which can easily be borne out that the cotton industries at the present moment are most prosperous, that their earnings have been considerably raised, and not only have they been able to pay large dividends, but they have been also able to greatly improve their plant; they have been running continuously, and have been able to lay aside for their shareholders, in practically all cases, large rests. On the other hand, the shirt and collar manufacturers have, I think, satisfied the Minister of Finance that since the existence of this tariff they have, in reality, when purchasing their product in Canada, paid the cotton producers the full amount of the increased duty, and have very often been obliged to purchase outside of Canada their raw material. I believe that the situation of this industry at the time the tariff was being framed engaged seriously the attention of the Minister of Finance and I base my hopes for some change in the present tariff on the declaration he made at the time, that the tariff he introduced was a tentative tariff, to a certain extent, and if the evidences manifested themselves he and his Government would be only too anxious to afford relief where relief was justifiable and necessary. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Finance is well aware that last year he himself brought down a modification of article 355a of the tariff relating to cottons, by which under an article, which was subsequently abandoned by the Minister of Finance, some relief would be afforded to the shirt and collar manufacturers. The remarks made by the Minister of Finance at the time that article was by him abandoned are reported in "Hansard" of 1897, at page 4182, and they go to show that the Minister, as well as the Government very reluctantly abandoned that article, and declared there was really, under the tariff as then framed, a substantial grievance existing as regards the shirt and collar manufacturers, but that conflicting interests at the time—and I believe the conflicting interests were the cotton industries—obliged the Minister to abandon that amendment, the effect of which was to give some relief to the shirt and collar manufacturers. Since then the industry has been steadily declining. I only state the fact, which is borne out by the daily publications of our leading newspapers, when I say that the products of foreign manufacturers are actually flooding our markets and rendering all competition by our manufacturers almost impossible. It is sufficient to open the journals of our principal cities to see that very large quantities of collars and shirts received from foreign countries are advertised for sale at prices that defy competition by our own manufacturers. I may state the case of Eaton & Co., of Toronto, to whose advertisement my attention has been called, who advertise men's collars at 60 cents per dozen, to the number of 2,000 dozens, they being Barker's brand, made in Troy, United States, and which collars are sold there at 25 cents each.

It is evident that under such a tariff as that which brings into our markets goods for slaughter from the markets of the United States, of England and of Austria, it is impossible for our own manufacturers to maintain themselves. The shirt and collar manufacturers of the Dominion have recently held a meeting in Montreal and they have resolved: that the Government should be appealed to once more praying for some measure of relief during the present session of Parliament in favour of their industry, upon the ground I stated a moment ago, that foreign goods are now coming into Canada to an alarming extent, and even before the full measure of the preferential clause has been in force. They consider that after the 1st of August the loss in both capital and labour will undoubtedly be serious if legislation is not passed which will enable them to compete successfully with goods from abroad.

Now, Sir, what do these manufacturers propose as a relief in the present damaged state of their trade. They have made alternate proposals. In the first place they submit as a remedy an increase in the present ad valorem duty to the extent of 20 per cent, which would afford them sufficient protection; and another remedy is to restore the former specific duties which were their protection, and which is not an insufficient one. There is also submitted by them—and their deliberations I think have been brought to the consideration of the Government—the reduction of the duty on all cottons and linens, to shirt and collar manufacturers; also specific duties on soap and starch in order that the difference in duty of 20 per cent a very fair difference I think, should exist between their raw material and the finished article. Failing some of these remedies which they have submitted to the consideration of the Government, they find themselves unquestionably obliged to have recourse to a general reduction of wages in all their factories throughout the provinces of Ontario, and Quebec; a reduction which would be very detrimental to the interests of the 8,000 people engaged in this industry. What I think the Minister of Finance might do would be to have recourse once more to the article which he himself brought down to the House last year, and which was afterwards laid aside. I refer to article 355a the text of which I have not been able to procure, but which reads in this sense:

Printed and dyed cotton to be admitted at 15 per cent to be cut into shirts, collars, cuffs and blouses, in bond under Government supervision.

It is not asking too much from the Government to ask some protection for this industry, especially when we see in what a flourishing condition the cotton factories are. It seems only just that an industry such as this of shirts and collar making, should not be left to perish unprotected by the Government. If we refer to the United States tariff we find that this industry receives a very considerable amount of protection. If the Minister of Finance and the members of this House will take the trouble to refer to article 258 of the United States tariff of 1894 they will find that the protection under that law was 40 per cent, and that under the Dingley Bill it has been increased to 50 per cent upon collars and cuffs. Under the present American tariff the following duty is placed upon shirts:—

Shirts valued at not more than $1.50 per dozen have a protection of 60 cents per dozen and 15 per cent ad valorem. Shirts valued at more than $1.50 per dozen and not more than $3 per dozen have a protection of $1.10 per dozen and 15 per cent. Shirts valued at more than $3 per dozen and not more than $5 per dozen have a duty of $1.50 per dozen and 15 per cent ad valorem. Shirts valued at more than $5 per dozen and not more than $7 have a duty of $1.75 per dozen and 35 per cent ad valorem.

It will be seen that the ad valorem duty under the present tariff in the United States upon shirts is 63.32 per cent. I believe, Sir, that the representatives of this industry have in a far more clear manner, because they are more conversant with the subject than I am, made representations of their grievances to the Minister of Finance. I believe they have made these representations to the right hon. the Prime Minister himself, and have received from him the promise that their grievances would be attended to, and although I know that the session is about to close and that the members of the Government are extremely busy, yet I think the restoration of article 355a framed last year by the Minister of Finance would commend itself to Parliament, and I sincerely hope that in the interests of the city of Montreal and of the large number of people interested in this industry, farmers' wives and daughters who are residents in the surrounding counties of Jacques Cartier, Laval, Hochelaga, Terrebonne and Laprairie, the Minister of Finance will see his way clear to introduce in the Ways and Means resolutions the modifications of which I have just prepared.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I am very much afraid, Mr. Speaker, that at this late stage of the session it will be difficult, if not indeed impossible, to re-open the consideration of the question in the manner indicated by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). Though I referred to the late period of the session, I confess that even though the matter were brought to my attention at an earlier date, I think the difficulties in the way would have been so very considerable as to possibly prevent the accomplishment of what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) desires. There is really nothing much that can be said to-day that is new on this question of the shirt and collar industry. All the information which my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has referred to has certainly been laid before the Government very fully last session, and to some extent during this session. The situation is simply this: The shirt manufacturers find that in purchasing what they call their raw material, it bears a duty of 25 per cent on white cottons and

Mr. MONK.

35 per cent on coloured cottons, while the duty on the finished article is 35 per cent, being the same rate as on the coloured cottons which they call their raw material. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) has several times in his argument spoken of cottons as the raw material. Of course in a discussion of the tariff question we are apt to constantly get into the difficulty that what is one man's raw material is another man's finished product. There is no such thing as raw material for the shirt manufacturer. That which my hon. friend calls raw material is the finished product of the cotton manufacturer. Therefore, if we are to reduce the duty on that so-called raw material, we are reducing it on a finished product of another manufacturer; and which of these two manufacturers can best bear the change is of course a fair question for consideration. Last year, we did propose an amendment at one stage, such as that quoted by my hon. friend as 355a in the tariff resolutions, whereby we proposed to fix a special duty on cotton goods for the use of shirt manufacturers. The idea of having a special rate on goods to be used by manufacturers was found to a considerable extent in the tariff before, and to some extent it still remains. There are, however, difficulties in the way of working that out. In the first place, it would have been, I think, an advantage to the large manufacturer of shirts rather than to the small one. The proposal was to allow materials to be imported and cut in bond under the supervision of a customs officer at the reduced rate of 15 per cent. The Customs Department found that it was very difficult from their point of view, in fact, the Minister of Customs said it would not be worked out; but even if there were no difficulties from the customs point of view, this plan would have imposed disadvantages on the smaller manufacturer of shirts, while the larger manufacturer would be able to profit by it. For these two reasons, we found that we could not proceed on that line. One of the difficulties in the discussion of all those tariff questions is that we differ as to what is the effect of a high tariff. Men who oppose a high tariff generally consider that when a high duty is imposed on an article, the home producer of an article of like character will take the full benefit of it. Therefore, the free trader or the revenue tariff man generally adds the duty to the price. The advocates of a high tariff usually dispute that, claiming that the duty is not added to the price, but that its effect is simply to secure a home market without the price being affected; though I notice that whenever a protectionist comes to use an article manufactured in Canada, he insists that the duty is added to the price; and so, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) says that the cotton manufacturers take the full advantage of the tariff on their cotton, and in that case the duty is to be added to the price. I call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that in using that argument he is rather cutting the ground from under the feet of the gentlemen who usually associate with him in the advocacy of protection. We were told last year by the cotton manufacturers that that was not done—that the additional duty did not increase the price of cottons. We were told that they would not take full advantage of that duty, but would produce their cottons at a fair price and would give such terms to the shirt makers as would remove all cause of trouble. Of course, that was a mere understanding between the cotton manufacturers and the shirt industry. I remember at one interview, when we were fortunate enough to get both industries together, which is always an advantage in dealing with the tariff question, the cotton manufacturers intimated that their facilities were such that they would be able to produce cottons at a reasonable rate, and that the shirt manufacturers would have no trouble in buying from them. I am told that the shirt manufacturers claim that that understanding has not been carried out, but that the cotton manufacturers have charged the full amount of the duty. However that may be, the remedies suggested are three. One is that to which I have already alluded—making a specially low rate for the importation of cottons for manufacturing purposes, and cutting them in bond. The disadvantages and difficulties in the way of that I have already mentioned. The second is that we shall add 20 per cent to the duty; that is to say, where we have a duty of 35 per cent on shirts and collars, we shall call it 55 per cent. I doubt if many hon. members on either side of the House would advise us to adopt a change of that kind. The third suggestion is that we should adopt the system of specific duties. The representatives of the shirt and collar industry have generally put forward the specific duty as the one they prefer. The chief advantage of a specific duty is that you are able to charge a very high duty without letting the public know what it amounts to. There are at present specific duties in the tariff, and I am not prepared to say that they are the best features of the tariff; but if we were to adopt the suggestion of the shirt and collar industry and impose specific duties which would amount to 55 or 60 per cent, and in some instances more, I am inclined to think the public would say that we were going far beyond the limits of legitimate protection. That the shirt and collar industry is placed at a disadvantage as compared with some industries, I am prepared to admit; but while the duty on cotton goods is 25 per cent—I am speaking of white goods—the duty on shirts and collars is 35 per cent, so that there is a difference of 10 per cent in their favour. I am aware that the duty on coloured goods is 35 per cent, and the duty on shirts and collars is the same.

But the labour must be considered, because, although the duty is the same the difference in value may give a reasonable protection to the industry, and that is exactly what has happened in the case of the shirt and collar industry. The manufacturers buy a certain raw material bearing 35 per cent duty, but they are protected on the article they manufacture to the extent of the labour that passes into it. That, of course, will be admitted. It is only a question whether that is sufficient, and in some branches of the industry, under the tariff, undoubtedly, the protection afforded them is more than that. I do not see that we are in a position to offer any relief. If the situation is not, in all respects, as favourable as some would like, I am afraid that the divergence of opinion as to what are the remedies will lead to difficulties. Any one of the three proposals would be open to grave objections. While I sympathise with the position of my hon. friend representing the interests referred to, I do not think the position of the shirt and collar industry is quite as bad as he pictures it. If he means to say that it is not in as good a position as some industries, still it is in a fair position, and it will be found that this industry will have a fair chance to do business. Though it may not make as much money as in past years, still it will have as fair a share of the business as it could reasonably expect. Even if it is not in as good a position as some industries, I am not in a position to adopt any of the three remedies proposed.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sorry that the hon. Minister of Finance has had to meet this demand with a blank refusal, especially in view of what the right hon. leader of the Government repeatedly promised to the shirt manufacturers. I imagine that the starting sentence of my hon. friend was just by way of padding, namely, that he would not be able to do it because of the late period of the session.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I added that it would not have made any difference in any case.

Mr. FOSTER. These demands were put fully and fairly before my hon. friend very early in the session, and the real reason of the hon. gentleman is what he last gave, namely, that the Government did look into the matter and came to the conclusion that they were powerless to help the industry. I am not going to take a long time at this end of the session in arguing the question. It has been argued out here on previous occasions. The Government has had the whole measure of this matter stated to them. They put themselves in a certain position on the very first announcement they made to this House. A tariff commission was appointed consisting of the ablest men which the Government had in their ranks. That commission spent three or four months travelling through the country, interviewing all these various industries, and then sat down and made up their minds with reference to this and other things. They came to the conclusion that they would give the cotton manufacturers protection and did so. Then they took up this most important industry, and came to the conclusion that it ought to have a fair measure of protection, and gave it that by putting a certain duty on the manufactured product, and allowing what the Minister cavils at as their raw material to come in at 15 per cent instead of 25 or 35 per cent duty. That was what the Minister and his colleagues thought reasonable justice to be meted out to the shirt and collar industry. Why was that not persisted in? Why was that entirely taken away as the basis of protection and the full protection kept upon cotton manufacturers? Why was the shirt and collar industry discriminated against? We have the raw cotton brought in—which is undoubtedly a raw material—free, and we have 35 and 25 per cent protection for the manufactures of this raw material which is brought in free. Whether you call this manufactured product a raw material absolutely or not, it is the raw material out of which shirt-makers make their goods. They find in some instances no difference in duty between what they get as protection and what they pay as a duty on their raw material, and in other cases the difference is only 10 per cent; but the hon. gentleman must take cognizance of the competition and the difference in the prices of labour at the sources of competition, and when he takes into account the fact that our operators are paid here at the rate of $4 per sixty hours, whilst European operators are paid just about half that rate, and also takes into account the cheaper raw material that the makers in European countries get, you will find that the competition is based upon conditions which make peculiarly hard against this industry. My hon. friend, I suppose, fully and fairly estimates the importance of this industry. It is a popular industry, more than perhaps almost any other he could name. Out of it many families of our country and city people make their living, the work being largely done in their homes. Eight thousand operators are a large number to depend on an industry; and under all these conditions I think the Government have not fairly dealt by the industry when they place it in a position in which it is clearly discriminated against.

What have we to-day? We have to-day advertised in this country American collars and cuffs and shirts at prices which are away down may be below the cost of production. I find here, for instance, in an immense store in the city of Toronto, advertisements from time to time of first-class American collars, which are sold at the rate of 5 cents apiece and which are 25 cent collars under the current regular prices. But these are bought from the American producers, and are placed upon the market in hundreds of thousands to compete with our own products. What competition can be fairly kept up by our own shirt and collar makers under the conditions which have been named? A tariff of 35 per cent on the valuation I have given is simply no protection at all. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs what is the valuation he puts upon these articles for customs tariff? Does he put 35 per cent upon what is presumably the wholesale cost, when these can be sold at 60 cents per dozen? If so 35 per cent on 5 cents per collar is a very small protection against such abnormally low prices. For this branch of industry, a specific duty is the only fair duty and is not burdensome for the consumer, and the hon. gentleman ought not to be afraid of specific duties. His tariff bristles with them. He says he does not think they are model duties, but he has no business to keep them in his tariff if they are not. No superstitious fear exists in his mind or that of the Minister of Trade and Commerce against specific duties, for they are found on every page of their tariff. I have not made the calculation, but I dare say that over one-third of the items bear specific duties, taking them altogether.

I think it is particularly unfortunate that this industry should be put in the position in which it is. I have a statement put before me, for which I believe I am able to vouch, that the hon. First Minister, before the election, specifically promised his friends among the shirt manufacturers that the shirt duty would not be unreasonable or unfair, and since this tariff has been brought down it is stated to me that he specifically promised his friends among the shirt manufacturers that these duties would be made right. Now, he is leader of the Government, it is his Finance Minister who alone can bring down a measure to right the wrong. Does the promise of the right hon. First Minister count for nothing after the election is once over, or are these gentlemen stating what is untrue when they state specifically that they have letters in their possession conveying this promise of the right hon. Premier? Surely if the right of the case is with the manufacturers, as affirmed by the Government when they brought down their tariff, and the Government gives away that right only under pressure, and if the head of the Government makes a promise and reiterates it, and fails to carry it out, I think the Government is in a pretty hard position. I think they are in a position which they cannot justify on grounds of tariff right and reasonableness, because they have cut that ground from under their own feet. Nor, on the ground of political faith being kept, can they refuse to right this which I consider to be a wrong, and which, I am afraid, is going to sacrifice one of the best and most popular of our industries. This industry employs a capital of one and a half millions, pays wages of one and a half millions, has annual sales to the extent of two and a half millions. It is an industry distributed among the families of the country. For all these reasons, it is an important factor in the life and business of the country, and I think more regard should be paid to it than the Finance Minister and the Government appear to have paid. Why did they not stick to what they declared to be right as a matter of tariff? Why did they recede from it? For political reasons? Then, the reasons were not worthy reasons. Why has not the Prime Minister implemented the promise he gave? Because of superior pressure? A Prime Minister ought to be ready to implement his promise against all pressure; or he ought to leave his position as Prime Minister.

TREATMENT OF WORKMEN ON THE CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Before the motion is carried, I wish to introduce notice to the House of a matter which, I think, is of the greatest importance; and which, as I understand, can only be remedied by bringing it up in this way. It is, of course, well known to the country and to the House that a great deal of complaint has been made of the manner in which the men that were employed on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway have been treated by the contractors or by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. So numerous and important were the complaints made, that a commission was appointed, and I believe, has recently reported to the Government as to the nature and extent of the maltreatment that the men had suffered at the hands of these parties. These matters that were investigated by the commission are largely matters of wages and exactions—

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Bell) will allow me a moment. At this time of the session when the grievances that members have to present must be presented tersely and in large numbers, I think it is of the utmost importance that the Minister representing the departments affected should be represented here.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I may observe that when my hon. friend, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) left the Chamber, the hon. member for Pictou was not on his feet, and a totally different subject was being discussed. However, I have sent for the Minister of the Interior, to whose department I infer this refers. Or is it in the department of the Minister of Railways and Canals?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Both Railways and Justice—the Solicitor General should also be here.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Unhappily, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) can well understand, members of Parliament and other parties are continually sending for Ministers, and it is sometimes difficult to refuse them, although the practice is a bad one, I know.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to supplement what I said, with this: The leader of the Government, at such a time as this, ought to be in the House. I know that the calls upon him from outside are many and pestering, but it is the duty of the Prime Minister, at this particular time, to be in the House, where the people's representatives are. We lose the force of a protest when the leader of the Government is away. Because there is no responsibility amongst the subalterns.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). The complaints investigated by the commission largely referred to matters of a material character—wages, exactions, impositions and so on. But the matter I have now to bring to the attention of the House is more serious, being a case in which, apparently, something almost equivalent to murder has been done through neglect or wrong doing on the part of some persons in connection with the company, and it refers further to the fact, that, apparently attempts made by interested parties to secure justice in this matter have been defeated.

I think I cannot do better than to recite the facts in connection with this case. Two young men belonging to the county which I have the honour to represent were employed on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. They were taken with diphtheria, a very deadly disease. As far as we can learn, they were left about two weeks without treatment and without medicine. They were then sent away, in the month of January, in the coldest part of the winter, a distance of 110 miles, although they had almost reached their dying moments, in an open conveyance, without food, without medicine, without attendance, without stimulants—without care of any kind except, simply, that they were transported. Something like three days was occupied, through various misunderstandings, in making this journey. At the end of three days, these young men were placed in a box car on a railway siding, or at the end of the track laid by the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, and were left there to die, apparently unattended, and without any one being responsible for them. An hour or two after they were left there, a passer-by heard men moaning and complaining. He entered the car and found the men apparently dying. He succeeded in persuading one of the officials representing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to send to the neighbouring town of Pincher Creek for medical assistance. The doctor was induced to leave

Pincher Creek, and did so almost at the risk of his life, because, I am informed by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), who was on the ground, that there was then prevailing one of the most severe storms of the season. The doctor found them in a box car lying on the floor, without light, and the only heat they had was from a box stove in which they were trying to burn hay and coal. The doctor states that the smoke in the car was so dense that he was unable to enter, and had to leave the door open for a time before going in. On entering, he found one man dying. He did die in a few moments. The other was not so far reduced, and, in the absence of anything else, and, as the man was asking for something to relieve the pain, he administered an injection of morphine, which gave him some temporary relief. I think I cannot do better than give the words of the doctor himself—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) state the name of the medical gentleman?

Mr. BELL (Pictou). It was Dr. Mead.

Mr. DAVIN. I have had some correspondence with the Minister of Railways and Canals in this matter, and I think the hon. gentleman should be here.

Mr. FOSTER. If this had happened in Bulgaria, the whole country would have been aroused over it; but these men are only Canadians, so it does not matter.

Mr. BELL (Pictou)—reading—

I found the young men in a common box car with some hay to lie on. They had a box stove, and were trying to burn coal and hay in it. The smoke was so bad I had to leave door of car open some time before I could breathe or see. One man, MacDonald, was almost pulseless and speechless, just dying, at the far end of bunk. The other, Fraser, was lying on floor close to stove to try and keep warm and be out of way of smoke. He could hardly speak, and gasped out something—"Ease—pain!" I asked for stimulants, but was told there was none. I then asked for milk, but same answer. I then asked what they had got, and I was told water. I asked for a lamp to examine men by (they had only a dirty stable lantern), and got same answer as before. As I had nothing else, I gave Fraser an injection of $\frac{1}{2}$ grain of morphine as a stimulant. He revived a short time, and asked me if he could not sue the company for their brutal treatment of himself and chum. I went back to agent's car to see what could be done, and told him that if they died before getting to MacLeod I should hold an inquest. I was not in car five minutes before a man ran in and said MacDonald was dead and Fraser much worse. I went back to box car and found what he said was true. I stayed with Fraser till the end, and ordered agent to sidetrack car that I might hold inquest on the bodies. I sent Dr. Harwood out to make a post mortem examination, which showed that they had died of diphtheria and pneumonia.

Now here we have the facts that immediately preceded the death of these men. I have already mentioned that they suffered from a depressing and deadly disease for nearly a fortnight. They had been in camp without treatment during that fortnight and had finally been sent a distance of 110 miles in the month of January in the winter, in an open conveyance without medicine or medical attendance, without care of any kind. They were compelled to occupy something like three days in making that journey in the depth of winter; so I am sure it is not going too far to say that these men were really murdered, and if any individuals could be held clearly responsible for their death, there is no doubt that an action for manslaughter would certainly lie against them. But the more serious part of the matter is to follow. These men are dead and I am sorry to have to say that I believe that the father of one of them was brought to the grave by the shocking circumstances of his son's death, for he died a very few weeks after learning this awful news. It would be thought that such an occurrence having taken place in a civilized and Christian country, it would be impossible that such facts could have been kept from public knowledge, and that justice would have been done; but on the other hand, I regret to have to state that, apparently, whatever power has been brought to bear at all, has been brought to bear to suppress the facts, and to prevent any knowledge being obtained by which the guilty party could be brought to justice. I will briefly recite the facts. Dr. Mead, in pursuance of the statement made by him, began an inquest on the following day after the death. He had the bodies examined, the report of the medical man who examined the bodies showed they had died of diphtheria and pneumonia, the pneumonia, probably, resulting from the exposure they had suffered. The doctor then, as these men had died at a point long distant from where their sickness had begun, adjourned his inquest. The death of these men occurred in the night between the 23rd and the 24th of January, he held his inquest on the 24th, and adjourned it until the 1st of February, as the witnesses had to come a long way. The day before the inquest he states that a lawyed named Wood, from Macleod, called on him and tried to get him to drop it on legal grounds, and later, the doctor states, this man Wood offered some very improper inducements to him to abandon this inquest. These statements I shall not make now, because I hope that the result of bringing this matter to the public notice will be the appointment of a commission who will bring out the facts as they should be. Wood attended the inquest and, according to the coroner, was exceedingly obstructive, and threw all the difficulties he could in the way of making an inquiry. As some of the witnesses had not attended, the coroner further adjourned this inquest until the 7th of February. On that day, as he says:

I was served with notice of prohibition, and so adjourned till February 21st. Not having heard from the judge on that day, I had to adjourn sine die. I was served a few days ago with a notice forbidding me to go on with the inquest.

That is to say, the injunction was confirmed by Judge Rouleau, of Calgary, I understand. Then he says :

That means stopping the inquiry altogether, as no other coroner could take over my jury.

Of course, I cannot say as to whether that is legally correct. Then he says :

No one would care to dig up bodies that had died of such a disease as this kind. If any one else did go on with inquiry, I think it would now be difficult to find the witnesses. A great part of this you will find given before the C.M.P. Commissioner.

Mr. BRITTON. Does he state the grounds on which the prohibition was granted ?

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Dr. Mead, who began the inquest was the only man who practically was in attendance during the last moments of their lives, and Judge Rouleau says, at least I understand that the ground he gives for his decision is that Dr. Mead should have been a witness at the inquest. Now the decision finally given by the judge, was not given until the 28th day of March. The first day upon which the inquest was held was the 24th day of January, so that two months were allowed to elapse before this judge confirmed his ruling in the matter. The effect of that was precisely, I presume, that it became utterly impossible to secure those witnesses that were material. In two months these witnesses had gone to their homes, they could be removed by interested parties from one part of the country to another, and scattered everywhere, and the result of this long delay is that now it has become almost impossible to secure evidence necessary to bring home the guilt in connection with these men's deaths, to the proper parties. Now, I am sure no more important matter has been brought before this House during this session. Here we have two young men, brought up in my own county, whom I knew personally ; as good citizens as you could find in the Dominion of Canada, brought up in Christian homes, in comfortable, happy homes, and condemned to die like dogs, or worse than dogs, through the cruelty and neglect of some parties or other. When, in addition to that, we find the processes of law are used, not to secure justice, but to perpetuate injustice, I think it is time that the Parliament of Canada should interfere and say that the citizens of this country shall not be treated so brutally. I was going to suggest that the Government should take this matter up. I presume some of these questions have been raised by the coroner as to whether a subsequent coroner could take his jury and go on with the inquiry. But there must be some process by which the Government of Canada can issue a commission that will at least make it impossible—I hope that will be the result—that any such an occurrence can happen in the future. It is impossible to help these poor fellows now, they are gone beyond mortal aid ; but it should surely be the care of the Government that no matter in what remote locality of Canada such an occurrence may happen criminal conduct of this kind should not go unpunished. I do not wish to reflect upon any person. I know this matter was brought to the notice of the Justice Department some two months ago, because I find that a telegram from Dr. Mead addressed to the Department of Justice on the 9th of February, informs the department that his action as coroner had been interrupted, and that he had been summoned to appear at Calgary to argue, by counsel, I presume, before Judge Rouleau, and he asked the Government to employ counsel to represent him. I find that the request of his was refused. Subsequently I believe argument was made before Judge Rouleau, but it was by a lawyer of Calgary, acting entirely upon his own responsibility, not instructed, I believe, nor having his remuneration guaranteed by the Government or any other person whatever. I understand that Mr. Bennett argued the case before the judge. He came into the case at the request of Dr. Mead. The great wrong done was the delay which occurred, and which, under the circumstances, rendered it almost impossible ever to gather together the witnesses upon whom would rest the responsibility of proving the circumstances attending the death. I hope the Government will take this matter under their consideration. It is important to our future as a civilized country that it shall not be possible that such cases can occur again in the western country. I shall be glad if hon. members who are acquainted with the facts will express their views to the House, and I may say that the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), who was on the spot, did all he could at the time to see that justice was done. I shall be glad, as I said, if hon. members acquainted with the facts will supplement my statements, in order that the Government and the House may be impressed with the importance of adopting all possible means to remedy what is certainly a most cruel wrong.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I should like to add a few facts that have come within my own knowledge. I was glad that at an early period of the session the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) took this matter up. From communications I have had with parties on the spot and with friends of the deceased I can corroborate all the hon. member has said. This was not an ordinary case. All that the hon. member has said about the character of the young men is true. They had gone to Manitoba, they had worked there and then they tried their fortunes on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. They were not only young men of excellent character and had funds with them, but the father of Fraser and the father of McDonald were men possessing substantial means, being among the best farmers in the county of Pictou, and any notice sent to them would have enabled not only the company but the authorities to have advanced any sums of money required to look after the boys, even if they had not had a dollar. The fathers together are worth $10,000. The young men were not tramps, but they had been brought up in good surroundings, possessed good education, and besides their fathers were able to provide for them. They did not need to leave home; they were not young adventurers, but they had pluck and energy, they were such young men as the county of Pictou sends out by the hundreds to the west seeking their fortunes. Fraser was engaged in the Steel Works and received a substantial salary, while the other was helping his father. There was no attempt made to hold any communication with the fathers in New Glasgow; in fact the very first notice was a notice to the civic authorities to find out the fathers of these young men, after the young men had been sick two weeks at least. There are two features of this case, that are not only deserving of the Government's notice, but are sufficient to lead the Government to take some action. First, there was the conduct of those in whose employ the young men were. I need scarcely say that when a man employs a young man he is bound to look after him, if he has means; or if not, then he is bound to see that the young man gets means from his people. But outside that plea, the common dictates of humanity would tell a man to look after such a youth. These young men were temperate, they were excellent workmen, and no men could have given better satisfaction. The Government could not look after those responsible for the dreadful state of things that occurred, when those sick young men were locked in a car that was not fit for an animal. I would like to know—and on this point I speak with reservation—whether the judge who granted the order granted it with all the facts before him. No doubt he did what in his opinion was right. But it was very unfortunate indeed, if the facts now presented to the House were known, that there was not some person attending the court to see that the case should be fully argued. It might be difficult in that part of the country to get another coroner except the medical man, and I fail to see that because the coroner only knew the facts as to how these men died, he should be unable to hold an inquiry. I understand there was no coroner except this medical man. The ground of the injunction was that the coroner held an investigation and he was the doctor who alone saw the young men in their last moments, and that he could not act as coroner because he had evidence to give. Are we to suppose that we have arrived at this point that when in a locality there is no other coroner except the doctor, who happens to attend the case and happens to be able to give evidence of the last moments of the dying man, he is not to be permitted to hold an inquest simply because of his knowledge of the case? Among our neighbours to the south it appears to be the rule that no man can be a juryman unless he shows to the court that he is ignorant. I urge there should be strong and immediate action by the Government. I care not whether the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are responsible, or the judge or anybody else. I want every young man in this country to know as a result of the decision which will grow out of these two particular cases that he can go to any part of the Dominion and feel safe. What opinion would prevail in the eastern part of Canada, in Quebec and Ontario, if it became generally known that if young men of good character became sick out west, they might be put in a box car sent east, occupy it for three days without proper wraps or medical attendance, and allowed to die? Is that going to promote immigration to the west? Will our young men go there, unless they obtain security and protection. I strongly urge on the Government that no time should be lost and no efforts spared to find out the guilty parties in order that such a case may not occur again. I speak with some feeling. One of the men who died is a relation, and the other is well known to me; but irrespective of that fact, no two better young men ever left the county of Pictou, and I also know that the aged father of one of them so soon as he heard the facts died of the effects of receiving the news. While this may not be a reason why the Government should take action, I simply mention it incidentally as showing another side of this sad story. I hope no effort will be spared by the Government in dealing with the matter.

Mr. OLIVER. I regret very much having to say anything on this matter, but I think the House will admit that under all the circumstances I would be lacking in justice to myself if I did not state the facts as I know them in this particular case, and also the action which I took in the matter. As has already been stated, the case occurred in the district which I represent, and it is of importance not so much on account of this particular case in itself, as from the fact that this was but a sample case of what was occurring on the works on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway all last summer, according to the best information I have received. I supposed that this matter would have come before the House in a regular way by the presentation of the report of the Crow's Nest Pass Commission. The commissioners were almost on the ground at the time this occurred; they covered the whole route of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, and the facts as to the treatment of the sick men must be within their knowledge, so that if the report were before the House I should think hon. gentlemen would be thoroughly informed in regard to the condition of affairs that existed. But as that report is not before the House, and as this question has come up, and as I have certain personal knowledge of this particular case I will take the liberty of stating the facts as I know them. The men on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway were taxed 50 cents per month out of their pay for medical attendance, and the medical attendance provided was that the manager of the construction of the line contracted or hired certain physicians to give medical attendance to the men, these doctors being placed in charge of the men on certain sections.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that rule made by the sub-contractor or by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. OLIVER. It was made by Mr. Haney, the man who managed the whole business for the Canadian Pacific Railway. Mr. Haney hired the doctors and gave each doctor a section and paid the doctor such salary as he could arrange with him, and I may say the general impression is that Mr. Haney, or the company for whom he was working, had quite a margin of profit between the amount the labourers paid and the amount paid the doctors for medical attendance.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I understand from information obtained by the Government solicitors at Lethbridge, that one doctor named Mewburn had control of the medical attendance and I think he employs subordinates. I think the contract was directly between the Canadian Pacific Railway and Dr. Mewburn.

Mr. OLIVER. I regret to say that I am compelled to differ from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell). While Dr. Mewburn had charge of several sections, he did not have charge of the whole of the work as I understand it, or if he had he certainly was not the contract doctor. He was hired just as the other doctors were, and the company were the contractors with the workmen for medical attendance and benefited to the extent of the difference between the price paid to them by the workmen, and the price paid by the company to the doctors. But the company in providing medical attendance such as it was, did not provide hospital accommodation, and as everybody understands, medical attendance under such circumstances without hospital accommodation is of comparatively little value. As a matter of fact all last summer men had to be transported from any point upon the work where they were found sick, to hospital at Macleod, and if the hospital at Macleod was too full they were taken on 35 miles further to Lethbridge. That is to say, men suffering from typhoid fever were brought from the Crow's Nest Pass 50 miles to Macleod, and if the Macleod hospital was not ready to receive them they were carted on 35 miles further to Lethbridge. I do not know how many of these men died when they got to hospital, but it was considered to be a most remarkable thing by the people who lived along the road and were acquainted with the circumstances of the case, that so few, if any, of them died under that process of transport. It was fully expected by those who saw the process going on that the lives of men would be sacrificed from day to day. However, as a matter of fact, I believe the deaths of these two men were the first which occurred in transport. I happened to be at Pincher Creek the night the men died. I drove to Pincher Creek from Macleod on the day they drove the sick men from Crow's Nest Lake to Pincher Creek, and the character of the weather was such that during the last hour of our drive to Pincher Creek, although it was broad daylight, we could not see twenty-five yards ahead of us, because of the severity of the storm. These men did not reach Pincher Creek until after darkness had set in and the House can gather from what I have said what the weather was like for the transport of sick men in their condition. Though the town was only four miles away and all necessary treatment could have been got in the town, they were dumped into the box car to be transported next morning to Macleod hospital. The doctor was called out in the storm which I have described and the men died as has been already related. That part of the story is told and I do not wish to dilate on it more than to say again, that this was not an isolated case, but a sample case. It was a specimen of the treatment which was systematically accorded to sick men along that road, and was in the estimation of all men whom I met living along that road, a disgrace to civilization.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. I make that statement irrespective of anything in regard to the general treatment of the labourers, because many of the men who spoke to me had little sympathy with the labourers as regards their ordinary treatment, but they said the hospital accommodation was a scandal and should be looked after.

Now, Mr. Speaker, while this is a sufficiently painful part of the subject, there is still something more painful, and it is to that I am compelled to allude in my own justification. This case occurred in the constituency I represent and came under my own personal knowledge. It was, I suppose, part of the duty of a member of Parliament to see that justice was done to people in his constituency, and I am compelled to go so far as to state some of the steps I took in order that I may justify myself before the people concerned. I can assure the House that the matter was laid before the Department of Justice by Coroner Mead at the earliest possible date.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
When was that?

Mr. OLIVER. The date stated by the member for Pictou (Mr. Bell). Some weeks afterwards a merchant from Pincher Creek who happened to be on business in Ottawa brought the matter to my attention again. I supposed that, of course, in the ordinary process of the law the matter was being attended to, and that there was no question but that the Department of Justice having such a case brought to its notice, would attend to it. When this gentleman from Pincher Creek called here he asked me about the case, and we both went to the Department of Justice to see what progress had been made. We were referred by the Minister of Justice to the Deputy Minister, and the Deputy Minister informed us that he had no jurisdiction in the matter, that he had no control over the coroner, that he could not provide any funds to argue against the injunction being granted, that, in fact, he could do nothing whatever. It seemed to me that he considered the matter of no interest to him or to the public generally. I pressed the matter upon his attention from time to time until the injunction was confirmed; and by that time, as the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) has said, the possibility of securing evidence that would be satisfactory in carrying on the case had passed. The railway manager had of course taken means to disperse, as far as possible, the men in his employ who would have been able to give evidence in the case. There is no doubt that the injunction had been secured for that very purpose, and that the object of it was attained; for, if the question were re-opened, it would probably be impossible, owing to lack of evidence, to secure a conviction, which I believe could have been secured, and would have been secured, if the case had been proceeded with at the proper time. I wish to say further, in my own justification, that when the Deputy Minister of Justice informed me that the injunction had been issued against Coroner Mead because he had been in medical attendance on these men, I at once suggested to him that if there was any danger of that injunction being confirmed, Coroner Mead might be withdrawn and another coroner put in his place. The Deputy Minister told me he had no authority to do so. I pressed the matter further, and finally it was suggested to Dr. Mead that he might withdraw and let another coroner take his place. The coroner offered to withdraw if asked by the department to do so; that is, he left it to the department to decide. But he was not asked to withdraw, he did not withdraw, another coroner did not take his place, and the matter remains as it is. This is a very painful statement for me to make. I do not wish to drag in any officials of the Government; but if it comes to a question whether or not I have done my duty in this matter, I am not going to lie under an imputation for the sake of any official of the Government.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The matter that has been brought to the attention of the House divides itself into two phases. The first relates to what took place after the death of these two men, and brings into question the action of the Department of Justice, the judge, and all who had anything to do with it. Manifestly, it is impossible to discuss the action of the Department of Justice in the absence of the representative of that department in this House, the Solicitor General, and in the absence of the papers referring to it, which would give us an accurate knowledge of what has been done. If my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) is correct in saying that the ground given for the injunction which appears to have been issued to prevent the coroner from proceeding with his investigation, was the only ground given, I have no hesitation, as a lawyer and a lawyer having had some experience in the administration of justice, in saying that it strikes me as somewhat remarkable that the injunction was issued, and the House will be entitled to a full explanation of that circumstance. That part of the matter, I assume, will be taken up and explained to the House at a later date by the Solicitor General. I do not think anybody could listen to the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), and the corroborative statement by the hon. member for Guysborough, without feeling that a very serious occurrence had taken place—an occurrence which, while it affected only two men in the first place, is yet of such importance that it fully deserves the most careful attention of every member of this House. The whole question of the treatment of the labourers upon the Crow's Nest Pass Railway came before me in my capacity as a Minister having charge of the work of immigration—in this way. I had arranged for the employment of a certain number of Welsh immigrants upon the Crow's Nest Pass Railway under a special arrangement. They were brought out and employment was procured for them on that railway. Some of them wrote letters to the Welsh papers complaining of the treatment they had received. Information came from various sources that the men were not being properly treated, and the statements made in the papers seemed to be so well grounded that the Government deemed it its duty to authorize a proper inquiry. We issued a commission for that purpose. I received the report of the commission a couple of weeks ago. In the press of business I was not able to get time to read it until last night, when I completed a careful examination of the report, and I expect to lay it on the Table of the House to-day.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That commission does not cover this case, does it?

The MINISTER OF THE CROWN. I will refer to that in a moment. I will, of course, only deal with the question so far as it affects the treatment of the labourers on the line of railway. I may say that although the report of the commission only refers somewhat briefly to the death of these two men, yet it corroborates pretty fully the statement which the hon. member for Pictou has made. In advance of the presentation of the report, I desire to say that I rose from a very careful perusal of it, having read it through two or three times to make sure that I had got the purport of it, fully and accurately, with a very strong feeling that there had been gross and inexcusable negligence on the part of the persons who had been responsible for the death of these men, and gross and inexcusable treatment of other men on this line of railway. I have not so far been able to form a definite conclusion as to where the responsibility should be placed; but I have no hesitation in saying that the railway company and the manager of construction, whatever may have been the arrangements between them and the contractors, cannot possibly escape responsibility in connection with this matter. My judgment is that when the railway company appoint a manager of construction and engage in the construction of a great public work, having had great experience in such matters, and knowing all the difficulties that are likely to arise in connection with the employment of large numbers of men, particularly in a practically uninhabited section of country, they are responsible for making such arrangements that the men will be treated at least with common humanity; and I state most distinctly for myself that when the House comes to examine that report, I think it will feel that there has been gross negligence. The report of the commission and the evidence which was taken will advise the House of the facts of the case.

I am pleased to say that the report of the commission seems to have been excellently prepared. It brings the facts to a head in a very concise form. The action of the Government was this. They appointed a commission with Judge Dugas as chairman. The reputation of Judge Dugas is, no doubt, well known to members of this House. We selected him as a suitable man to conduct the investigation, from his legal knowledge and experience and general reputation, and the thoroughness and care with which the investigation was conducted amply justify the judgment of the Government. We added to the commission Mr. John Appleton, the president of the labour union of the city of Winnipeg, as being a man who would represent the labour element, not perhaps in a direct sense, but in whom the labouring men of the country would feel that they had a representative who would be interested in seeing that there was no attempt made to slur over or suppress any grievance on the part of the labouring men. In addition to these two gentlemen, we placed on the commission Mr. Frank Pedley, the superintendent of immigration, who would have special knowledge of the interests of the immigration department and its work in connection with these men. We thought, therefore, that the commission was well and fully constituted for the work it had to do, and I think it made a very thorough investigation of the whole matter.

I have reason to believe that in every way it was just as full, impartial and complete as possible, and the House will, therefore, be placed in the position of having not only the conclusion of the commission, but a very full statement of the evidence taken carefully, not only at different points on the line, but in Winnipeg, Ottawa and Montreal, where men were to be found who had been working on the line, and thus have a complete statement of the facts available to every member. So far as any action on the part of the Government is concerned, I am not prepared to express any opinion as to what legal power the Government possesses to deal with the matter. Within my recollection no similar case has arisen, and before coming to a decision the Government would have to give the matter its most careful consideration.

So far as regards the particular matter to which my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) has referred, respecting the action of the Department of Justice, that will be closely and carefully looked into at once, and every endeavour made to see that justice is done.

I want, before I sit down, to say that I fully agree with what the hon. gentleman has said, and also the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), in relation to the distressing nature of the circumstances, and that if anything the House can do to place the legislation of this country in such a position that no such occurrence can possibly occur again, the Government will see that it shall be done without any regard to parties or politics.

Mr. DAVIN moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 1 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Second Sitting.

WEDNESDAY, 1st June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE LONDON AND LAKE HURON RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. LISTER. I move that the rule respecting Private Bills be suspended for the purpose of enabling me to introduce a Bill respecting the London and Lake Huron Railway Company. He said: Some three or four weeks ago a Bill incorporating this company was passed through this House and the Senate. A section of the Bill had been struck out in the Railway Committee, under a misapprehension of the Minister of Railways and Canals, but when the Bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole that section was reintroduced in the shape of an amendment which was adopted. Through some inadvertence, however, the amendment was not initialed by the chairman, and when the Bill went to the printer, he left it out altogether, and the Bill passed this House and also the Senate, without the amendment. I now ask the House to allow me to introduce a distinct Bill providing for the amendment that was agreed to by the Committee of the Whole, omitted by clerical error.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). As this amendment was left out through a clerical error, there can be no difficulty in our consenting to the motion, but I would like my hon. friend to state the nature of the amendment.

Mr. LISTER. It is the usual statement inserted in the case of the incorporation of electric railway companies. It asks for power to enter upon a highway with the consent of the municipalities and put up poles and pay damages for any injury to trees.

Motion agreed to, and rule suspended.

FIRST AND THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 158) respecting the London and Lake Huron Railway Company.—(Mr. Lister.)

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—PRINTING OF REPORT.

Mr. FORTIN moved:

That the report of the investigation held into the administration of the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, now before this House, be ordered to be printed, and that rule 94 be suspended.

Mr. LARIVIERE. Mr. Speaker, this is a departmental affair, the investigation having been ordered by a department of the Government; and I do not think that this House should be saddled with printing of the report—for it will be charged against our contingencies account. It should properly be borne by the department that ordered the investigation. There are other investigations of a similar character, and, if we establish this precedent, we shall be expected to follow it with regard to other investigations that are held.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I would observe to my hon. friend (Mr. LaRivière) that though this report is purely departmental, the House has taken possession of it, having asked for its production; and it is now before the House. If the report were not now part of the archives of the House, there would be force in the contention of my hon. friend. But as the House has made it part of its own archives, we are simply following the precedent in the case of the Kingston Penitentiary, in which case, if I remember aright, the same thing was done.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, that was made part of the sessional papers.

Mr. LARIVIERE. I think my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is, perhaps, in error when he says that this report is before the House. We are supposed to have a copy. But I do not think that the House ever ordered the original report to be brought down. The original is supposed to remain in the department to which the report was made.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is as broad as it is long. If the report is brought down, it will be printed by the House as part of the sessional papers. So there would be no saving.

Mr. GIBSON. This matter was before the Printing Committee. We have established the rule that the clerk of the committee shall go to the various departments and find out what papers laid upon the Table of the House are to be embraced in the reports of the departments. We were informed by the clerk of the committee that this report was to appear in the report of the Department of Justice. I understand, however, that as before this report of the Department of Justice appears, another year will have passed, a number of hon. gentlemen are anxious that this should be printed as a special report and copies placed in the hands of members of both Houses of Parliament. The committee, so far as it was concerned, was influenced by the consideration indicated by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière). We simply lay the facts before the House, and it will be for the House to say whether this is to be printed or not.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of Mr. Fortin.

Mr. LARIVIERE. I object to the suspension of the rule, Mr. Speaker. The matter has come before the Printing Committee, and it has been dealt with there. The request of the hon. member was discussed in committee, and we ascertained that the Department of Justice was going to print that report.

Mr. SPEAKER. As the hon. gentleman makes objection to the motion, it cannot be moved at present.

PETERSEN FAST LINE SERVICE.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the leader of the Government, or the Minister who has the matter in charge, if there is any late word as to the success of the Petersen fast line company. Is there any late information with reference to the progress that that company is making towards a contract?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). No later information has been received up to date.

PROPOSED JOINT COMMISSION WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. FOSTER. I see that our hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) is back again from his short and I hope successful visit to Washington, and I think that the House and the country as well would be very glad to hear any statement he may be prepared to make with reference to what eventuated in Washington as a result of his final visit.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The suggestion made by the hon. gentleman is a perfectly natural one. Of course the House being in session, it is proper that it should be put in possession of all the facts so far as I am able to give them in this matter. It is within the knowledge of the House that at the request of the Premier and of my colleagues, I went to Washington to have some preliminary negotiations with the authorities there looking to the establishment of a joint commission between the two countries for the purpose of settling existing differences which have been unsettled for years back. I went with that determination and with those instructions, and had interviews with the President and with the officers that were specially appointed to meet the British ambassador and myself to consider these different questions. We sat in consultation every day while I was there, and went over these troublesome questions one after the other, discussing them generally, and I am glad to say, in a very cordial spirit of good-will and amity. I can frankly say that the best of disposition was shown on the part of Mr. Kasson and General Foster, who represented the President on the occasion, to discuss with great fairness all those several questions. After lengthy and prolonged discussions we came to an agreement, which was put in proper form and duly signed by the several gentlemen on the commission, and which has been forwarded to each of the Governments of Great Britain and of the United States for their final approval. I have no reason to doubt that that approval will be given in both cases, and if it is, there will be a joint commission appointed by the Governments of the United States and of Great Britain which will meet at an early day for the purpose of discussing and settling and putting in the form of a treaty if possible, all the several questions which were discussed at our preliminary meeting. The city of Quebec has been chosen as the place of meeting, and I think the Canadian people will be satisfied with the choice of the place. From expressions which dropped from the President and others with whom I was brought into consultation, I have no doubt that that commission will be composed, on the part of the United States, of gentlemen of very distinguished standing in that country. I am pleased to say that so far as I was able to gauge the public opinion with which I came in contact, there never was a time, as it seemed to me, more favourable for a fair meeting of minds and a discussion of these difficult and unsettled questions, and I am not without hopes that if a commission is formally constituted, they will be able to arrive at a solution of all, or, at any rate, of nearly all, these questions, which will be generally satisfactory to the people of both countries, and will promote largely the good feeling and harmony which should exist between these two great English-speaking peoples.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course Canada will be represented on that proposed commission?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, yes. I may say to my hon. friend that the number of commissioners was not finally settled upon, but it is distinctly understood that Canada will be adequately represented on the commission.

Mr. FOSTER. If I may be allowed a single word, without entering into a discussion, I will take the opportunity of congratulating my hon. friend on the success of his mission in its preliminary stage, and while doing that, I think I may justly congratulate the Parliament of Canada and the electors whom we represent, on what I think may be claimed as a more satisfactory condition of feeling between the two countries. I do not think Canada ever had anything but the most friendly feeling towards the United States in all these matters which have been in a certain sense in dispute between us. I am not so sure, however, that the public men of the United States have always sufficiently well understood us Canadians and our interests in these questions, and have sympathized with us as they should have done. But I am happy to know that at present, from different causes there is a fair prospect of prominent people in the United States so far entering into sympathetic relations with us as to bring about the settlement of these questions. Nobody, I am sure, will withhold what congratulations are due to my hon. friend; everybody will be very happy indeed if his visit results in initiating a settlement of all the questions which have disturbed the good relations which should exist between the two peoples.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I must express to my hon. friend my entire satisfaction, and more than that, my gratitude, for the words he has just spoken as to the success of my hon. friend and colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. It is quite true that in the past our relations with our neighbours have not always been as cordial as they should have been, but perhaps it is just as well at this moment not to inquire who was in the wrong or who was in the right. I think we can say that from this moment the past had better be forgotten, and the present indications are such that we may hope that in future amity and peace will prevail between the two nations, and that the cordial relations which now exist between the United States of America and Great Britain will extend wherever there are nations which have acknowledged, or still acknowledge the sovereignty of England.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I want to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries whether he can say more definitely whether this commission is to cover, as he expressed it, all existing differences between Canada and the United States, or whether only special subjects are to be referred under the agreement?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I may say to my hon. friend that the commissioners on both sides brought forward those questions which they deemed to be unsettled, and they were formulated in a protocol.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Can the hon. gentleman give the heads?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not yet made a report to my colleagues, I must officially make that first; but there will be no secret about it. It is to be submitted to the Imperial Government and to the United States Government. Of course I would not feel justified, without special permission, in laying it before the House. But I may say to my hon. friend that the mode of proceeding was to take up each subject separately, and then we put in an omnibus clause which I hope will be satisfactory.

ALIEN LABOUR LAW.

Mr. MacPHERSON. I desire to ask the Government whether it is their intention to appoint some officer in Hamilton to keep an eye on the Alien Labour Law. We are all aware of the recent mission of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I desire very much to know from him whether efforts have been made to abolish this abomination on both sides of the line.
Mr. FOSTER.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The Government have taken no steps to appoint an agent to carry out the Alien Labour Law at Hamilton, and their attention has not been called to the matter. But I have good reason to hope and believe that after a few months there will be no cause for such appointment.

RECIPROCITY IN WRECKING.

Mr. BRITTON. I want to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to a motion I have on the paper in regard to some minor matters of difference between the United States and Canada, in regard to the operation of the law in respect to reciprocity in wrecking, and also as to the rule of the road in respect to passenger steamboats, as equipment. Did those minor matters come up for discussion, and are they within the scope of the commission to be appointed by the two countries?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I will just say to my hon. friend that I should hardly like to be questioned as to whether this or the other subject came up for consideration, but I will go this far and tell the hon. gentleman that I do not think any good will arise from the discussion of the question, as the matter has been under advisement.

OTTAWA RIFLE RANGE.

Mr. MONK. I desire to ask the Minister of Militia if he can possibly give an answer in regard to firing at the rifle range, to which I called attention.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I have much pleasure in being able to inform my hon. friend that orders were given yesterday to stop all firing over that range for the present.

ALIEN LABOUR LAW.

Mr. CLANCY. I desire to call the attention of the First Minister to a subject in regard to which I have received considerable correspondence, namely, the appointment of an officer with respect to the enforcement of the Alien Labour Law. The hon. gentleman a day or two ago gave a list of persons appointed, six of whom were appointed in the Niagara Peninsula, one at Toronto, one at Windsor, one at Parry Sound. I have had many requests for the appointment of an officer at Wallaceburg, which is very near the frontier. There is no officer at Chatham or Sarnia. I hope the Minister will take the matter into his consideration, and have an officer appointed at Wallaceburg, or some point near there where he would be easily available.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I must say to the hon. gentleman that my attention has not been called to Wallaceburg. I will note the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. McCORMICK. I should like to ask the name of the officer appointed at Parry Sound.

The PRIME MINISTER. I gave some information to the House on the subject a few days ago, information I had received from the Department of Justice. I cannot remember whether or not Parry Sound is in the list. I shall be glad to make inquiries.

VOLUNTEERS OF 1866.

Mr. HEYD. I have received a dozen letters with respect to the position of the volunteers of 1866. I went over to the Militia Department and obtained the necessary answers in different cases. I presume other members are receiving letters asking for certain information. The men want to know when the medals will be granted, who will be entitled to them, and how they will be able to prove their identity, and so on. If the hon. Minister will make a statement, which may get into the public press, he will satisfy the public and save members of the House much trouble.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The hon. gentleman will observe in the Supplementary Estimates an item to provide for payment for medals which are intended to be given to the militiamen who served in 1866 and 1870. I had intended when the item came before the committee to give explanations, and it would perhaps be well to wait until the Estimates are considered.

REPATRIATION OF THE 100TH REGIMENT.

Mr. HUGHES. As the question of the repatriation of the 100th Regiment is engaging attention at Toronto, Hamilton and other cities, I desire to take up the subject at some time that will meet the convenience of the hon. Minister. I propose to do so either on going into Supply or when the Supplementary Estimates are considered.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I think it would be more convenient to discuss the matter on the Supplementary Estimates.

SUPPLY—LABOURERS ON CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DAVIN. A few days ago we had from the right hon. Prime Minister an eloquent appreciation of Mr. Gladstone, and the feature in Mr. Gladstone's character that the Prime Minister dwelt on as formative, as salient was his abhorrence of wrong. His heart swelled and burned at the thought of injustice, and the Prime Minister gave several instances. However impatient we may all be to get back to our homes, as we are, I do not think when we are ready to give our sympathies to the sufferers by oppression in Bulgaria, this House will consider a few moments wasted in bringing before the House what may prove to be the first real step against oppression in the future, and, if possible, securing redress for the wrong which has been done. Unfortunately some wrong has been done that cannot be redressed, such wrong as the hon. member for Pictou called attention to, where life was lost. My hon. friend called attention to the loss of two valuable lives. But even a more cruel case occurred in regard to one who was a resident of the constituency whence I come, and who leaves behind him a wife and family. He was killed undoubtedly in a way that gives him, in my opinion, legal redress. But you can imagine nothing more helpless than a poor man going to the Crow's Nest Pass, making a contract with a powerful contractor like Mr. Haney, and there having one of his friends fall by his side. When you tell him to go to law, probably he has not the money to do so, he is afraid of litigation. I hope the result of the discussion brought up by the hon. member for Pictou will be that some policy will be introduced by the Minister of Railways, because I still hold that this question belongs to the Department of Railways, and that a Bill will be submitted and become law which will enable the Minister to guard in future against such occurrences as have taken place in connection with the building of a portion of the Crow's Nest Pass road. I wish to call the attention of the House for a few moments to the peculiar position of the men who were taken to work on that railway.

An arrangement seems to have been made between Mr. Haney, the head contractor and the sub-contractors, under which Mr. Haney was to get the men to work, although ultimately they would work for the sub-contractors and be paid by them. I, for one, will frankly say that nobody could complain of the way in which the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) spoke of this matter to-day. Evidently he has glanced over the report, and the report has made on his mind an impression that will be on the mind of every man who knows the facts, that great wrongs that have taken place in Canada, taken place in this free country, taken place at a time like this in a colony of Great Britain, and we ought in this Parliament to guard against such things ever happening again. I wish to call the attention of the House to a few sentences of this report of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway Commissioners :

A general system has been established by Mr. Haney, applying to contractors and sub-contractors alike, and which may be summed up as follows :—

“Scale of wages to 1st February, for ordinary labourers, fixed at $1.50 a day, they paying $4 a week for board. Since the 1st of February wages have been raised to $1.75 a day, and board to $5 a week.

One authoritative witness was examined as to the scale of wages, and he gave evidence that it was $1 and $1.50 a day, and from $4 to $5 a week was charged for board, so that this scale of wages made by Mr. Haney would not seem to be just.

Transportation to Macleod fixed at 1 cent a mile, to be charged in all cases, and to be deducted from wages, though at the latter part of September, being in need of men, instructions were given to agents at Winnipeg to send 500 men free of transportation. This order remained in force during two weeks, the rule being to charge 1 cent a mile, the contrary being the exception.

One of my friends to my right, Mr. Speaker, asks me to call your attention to the way some members on the Government side are going on while a question affecting the lives, eye, and the liberties, of citizens of Canada is being brought before the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. members will be good enough to keep order. I do not think it will tend to shorten the debate at all if order is not kept.

Mr. DAVIN. The report goes on to say :

Reception agents were appointed at Macleod to receive, board and lodge the men as they arrived. When intended for the company's service, men were charged transportation only from Macleod to the work, being boarded free in the meantime, whilst those allotted for service under contractors, if sent to the works by the company, cost of transportation either by rail to Macleod or from there to the work, and board, would be charged to contractors, who afterwards deducted such cost proportionately from wages.

There were certain agreements made, and the report on page 10 says :

The board for the company's men is supplied by contract by Mr. Smith, the board due by the men being deducted from their wages and paid to Mr. Smith.

I want to call the attention of the House and especially of the Government, to this statement, that the men could be discharged at any time without notice by the company.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid the hon. member is not confining himself to a discussion of the question which was raised by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell). I do not think it is quite regular to discuss the report on the question before the House.

Mr. DAVIN. If you, Mr. Speaker, will recall what the Minister of the Interior said you will be aware that he widened the scope of the discussion, and in any case it is as broad as it is long, because I have had correspondence with one of the departments about the death of a man of great respectability, who lived near Maple Creek, and who went to work on this Crow's Nest Pass, and if I cannot refer to the fact now, I will have to take another opportunity. The report says :

Men can be discharged at any time without notice by company and contractors, whilst the men are to give 15 days' notice when intending to leave work.

Now, Sir, I hold that there should be no jug-handled arrangement like that. I hold that if the men have to give fifteen days notice, justice should demand that they should get fifteen days notice if discharged, especially when they were taken thousands of miles away from their homes.

Fifteen days of back pay is kept until final settlement.

Public hospitals used at Lethbridge, Macleod and Nelson. Company's hospital at St. Eugène.

At various points on the line there are stations for accommodation of men with mild forms of disease, and those on their way to the hospitals.

Where you had four thousand men the head medical officer got some $2,000 for attending to their sanitary condition, and therefore there is no excuse whatever if the medical attendance was not all that was desirable. It is laid down in the report, and it is in Mr. Haney's evidence, that two pairs of blankets are necessary for comfort in that country, and anybody who knows anything of the North-west, knows that in August in that district, or in fact in any part of the North-west, two pairs of blankets are required for comfort. Now, Sir, it seems that it having been found that men could not be hired under the conditions first fixed by Mr. Haney, the report says :

It having been found that men could not be hired under conditions first fixed by Mr. Haney, subsequent telegrams were exchanged between Mr. Haney and Mr. J. B. Charleson, when finally on the 20th July Mr. Haney gave orders to the latter to hire 100 good axemen at $20 to $26 per month and board, with 6 cooks at prices fixed in the previous telegram, to wit : from $40 to $50.

One Herménégilde Magloire Roy was then charged by Mr. Charleson to hire these first 100 men, and the result was that on the 24th July, Roy started with 115 men, which, by his deposition, he acknowledged having hired at $20 to $26 per month and board, and food to be furnished them on the journey. With the exception of a few, all the contracts which Roy had signed were blank as to wages, and the reason given for this was that the rate being from $20 to $26, it was left to Mr. Haney to fix the amount according to the ability of the man. Still, there were some contracts specifically fixing the wages at $26, as Roy considered the men hired thereunder as particularly good axemen, who, besides, refused to sign unless the amount of their wages which they were to receive would be specially settled. The length of service and character of work generally also were not specified, but they were all told verbally that they were to work as axemen and be paid as such. Roy states that having specially asked Mr. J. B. Charleson as to the fare, he answered that it would be all right, understanding this to mean that it would be free, and that this is what he represented to the 115 men he engaged.

Mr. FOSTER. Who engaged these men ?

Mr. DAVIN. A man named Charleson.

Mr. FOSTER. What had he to do with it ?

Mr. DAVIN. He was told to do it by Mr. Haney. The report goes on :

He also understood and represented to the men that they would be fed on the road, that their time would commence from the day they arrived at Macleod, and that there they would be furnished with blankets. On leaving, Mr. Charleson gave him tickets for the men, and also handed him $40 to buy them food for the trip. Having reached Macleod on the 28th July, at 8 p.m., Roy reported to Mr. Harwood, the accountant of the company, and there tried to obtain blankets for the men, but failed. At Macleod those men were kept nine days idle, and on the 6th of August they were ordered to leave for Crow's Nest Lake, at a distance of 70 miles. During the nine days kept idle at Macleod, the men were under tents and without blankets, the company stating they had none in stock, and the men complained of suffering from cold during the nights. On or about the 23rd of August these men, hearing that the company intended to deduct their fare from Ottawa to Macleod, and transportation from Macleod to the works, took advantage of the presence of Mr. Haney at Crow's Nest Lake to send a deputation of two (one Frenchman and one Englishman) in order to inquire about the same, and as to whether they would be paid for the nine days passed at Macleod. But, according to the report of these two men, no satisfaction could be had, and one of them, Laferriere, with one Dupont, was the day after discharged. In his testimony, Mr. Haney said they had been reported to him by P. Nash, under whose charge the men were, as being ringleaders, and that this was the reason for his discharging them.

So that the moment those two men went to complain that they had been deceived and that the contract as they had made it was not being carried out, instead of getting any satisfaction, when they went back to camp, they were discharged, with a view, no doubt, of putting an end to anything like that. Now, I should like to know who this Mr. Charleson is—whether he is connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway, or with any of the departments of the Government.

An hon. MEMBER. The Public Works Department.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not see the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) here, and I will postpone that question until he is here. The commissioners report :

This charging of fare under the circumstances, and after the representations made by Roy to these 115 men, the non-payment of wages from the time they reached Macleod to the time they began work at Crow's Nest Lake, and the charges for transportation, were the first principal causes of discontent.

Other reasons were that having been hired as axemen, they had to work with pick and shovel for weeks, and having been engaged for the month at $20 to $26 and board, they were deducted for Sundays and for days they could not work owing to bad weather.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. DAVIN. No, it is not carried. It is far too important a matter to treat with levity like that. These men, although they were hired for the month, were kept there in enforced idleness for a space of nine or ten days, and they were not allowed for that time. It was deducted from their pay.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. DAVIN. Oh, no, it is not carried. Mr. Speaker, let me say one word in passing about the demeanour of this House. I think the right hon. gentleman will bear me out in saying that the demeanour of this Opposition is very different from the demeanour of the Opposition which the right hon. gentleman used to lead with such distinction in this House. I think he will bear me out that this Opposition does not manifest towards the Government or any member of the Government, or in fact towards the humblest member on that side anything like the demeanour—I will not use the word that would properly characterize it—that used to be manifested by that Opposition. When you scratch a Russian you find a Tartar, and apparently even the sweets of office and the sunny side of victory cannot change the qualities that made that Opposition so rowdy in other days.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, of course, it is desirable and we all expect that there should be order in this House, but we also expect that distinguished members of this House should be the first to give the example ; and I think my hon. friend is not giving an example of good order when he is reading from a report that has not yet been laid on the Table of the House.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that I was doing anything contrary to order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I certainly think the hon. gentleman is extending the debate beyond its proper scope when he is reading from and commenting upon a public report which the other members of the House are not in possession of. I admit that the Minister of the Interior, who in connection with the question that was under discussion, referred to the contents of that report, was bound at once, upon the request of any hon. member, to lay it upon the Table of the House ; and no doubt he will do so. I think he said he would do so. But until that is done, I think it would be at least exceedingly inconvenient, and would not conduce to the regularity or the shortening of debate, to engage in a discussion of the report.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, Mr. Speaker, if it is not in order, and if the Government side of the House are restive under the bringing out of these facts, I certainly shall not transgress against order to bring them out. I have read the report carefully, and what I find is this: There is evidence that the lodging of the men who went there, their protection against the weather, the precautions taken to preserve their health, were simply disgracefully insufficient, and above all that the remuneration was so arranged and the truck system was so carried out, that after the men had worked 12 months, they would not have $5, although they had gone out there in order to be able to send money back to their families. All these things were of such a nature as to constitute a most glaring outrage on common justice and humanity. Some things have taken place at the Crow's Nest Pass which are not mentioned in this report, and the Government will have to go beyond that report. They will have not merely to take steps to guard against things of this kind in the future, but if possible to see that when valuable lives are lost in consequence of wrong-doing on the part of persons employed by this company, enfranchised and subsidized by this House, compensation must be given to the families of those persons who were injured.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. Minister of the Interior, when speaking for the Government had taken the course I expected, it would not have been necessary for me to say a word concerning those saddest of all facts that have ever been mentioned in my time on the floor of the House of Commons in connection with the good government of Canada. The harrowing circumstances related by members behind the Government benches and by my colleague from the county of Pictou (Mr. Bell) are fully corroborated by Coroner Mead and the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), who took such a very active and energetic part in endeavouring to move the authorities of this country to take immediate steps for the bringing to justice of the parties responsible for the atrocities that were committed. With these statements before him, with a full knowledge of the facts that were pressed upon the Department of Justice privately as well as by members in this House, with the knowledge that a notice of motion covering this subject was given as early as the 18th March, with the action taken subsequently by my colleague from Pictou (Mr. Bell), who on no less than two occasions drew the attention of the Government to this culpable or criminal negligence on the part of those connected with the death of these two men,

Mr. SPEAKER.

Macdonald and Fraser, employed on a public work subsidized by this Parliament, I did expect the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), confessing as he did that his own attention has been drawn to this subject, and his sympathy moved by documents that he had read, to announce that the Government would take prompt action and use all the resources and power at their command to probe this matter to the very bottom. Instead of that, he gave expression to doubts regarding the power of the Government. Although he has sat here ever since the subject was brought up, although those deaths occurred as far back as January last, although the facts were before the Government, although the Government knew that some one was trying to suppress information that would bring the guilty parties to justice, forsooth, the Minister of the Interior, on this 1st of June, raises doubts as to the power of the Government to interfere. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) told us that all the comfort he got from the Department of Justice, when he pressed the matter on them in his well-known energetic manner, was the reply that it did not seem to be a matter pertaining to that department. I shall not go over the sad history of these cases. The facts have been mentioned by my colleague (Mr. Bell), and the hon. members for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) and Alberta (Mr. Oliver) have corroborated his statement. I shall, therefore, not deal with these facts, but there are others, which are not mentioned for the first time now, but which I deem it necessary to bring to the attention of the House in order that they may see why all these quirks and quibbles were brought to the front in connection with the administration of justice in the territory, and how it was that an injunction made abortive the coroner's inquest, attempted to be held at the outset, and at a time when it was possible to obtain all the facts, and certainly possible to obtain much more information than can now possibly be got in any shape or form. The coroner was prevented by an injunction from the court of the North-west Territories from holding an inquest simply because he had acted as a humanitarian, in his capacity of doctor of medicine, by attending the dying hours of this poor man. The fact that he had acted in this way was taken advantage of by some parties, and as we have been informed by the Minister of the Interior, the result was that the investigation he attempted to hold was frustrated by an injunction. At the same time, while these technical objections were being raised and the object of Dr. Mead was being frustrated, he was approached by parties connected with the employment of those two young men, who suggested to him that it would be more in his interest if he abstained altogether from following the matter up. When these parties were told by Dr. Mead that if he did not then act, the result might be that the matter would have to be dropped, because the exhumation of the bodies of these diphtheria cases would be almost impossible or useless later on, and because the witnesses would have disappeared, they said: "So much the better." With the facts detailed in that connection by Dr. Mead, and in a letter I have before me, he stated that a full report was sent by him to the Department of Justice, with this attempt to buy or threaten the coroner in the first place, then the successful resort to the courts, we stand face to face with the fact that, through the fault of some one, it seems to me through the fault of the Government, this extraordinary and unfortunate delay has taken place. When I say the fault of the Government, I have some reason for saying so. The Government had no doubts as to their powers to appoint a commission, to spend public money without a special vote of Parliament. When the case of some poor underpaid officer in the service of the Government was charged with being a political partisan, the Government was quite clear as to its powers to send commissions to every part of the land. When the Attorney General of Manitoba, then expecting to get into this Government, thought he could fasten upon his political opponents charges of corruption in the general election of Manitoba, such as stuffing ballot boxes, $19,000 could be snatched—partly out of the public treasury and partly from other sources, but, in the end, out of the public treasury, every dollar of it—to hire Pinkerton detectives in the United States and send them all over the province of Manitoba, to engage counsel by the score to go upon what they termed a fishing expedition and seek to fasten upon somebody offences to be punished by imprisonment up to two years; but in the case of the death of these two men under the circumstances mentioned by my hon. colleague from Pictou (Mr. Bell), there were doubts as to the powers of the Government to ferret out and expose fully the circumstances under which these deaths occurred. I do not know of a case that could be set before the department that should command more prompt and careful attention than this very case. Unless this sort of thing can be exposed, unless it can be shown that the efforts of parties interested, or whoever they were, to cover up the facts will be unsuccessful what a black name that part of the country, and in fact, all Canada will obtain wherever the facts are known. I trust that before this subject is allowed to pass from the consideration of the House, the Prime Minister himself will give us that which not only are we entitled to from him under the circumstances but which his own judgment should prompt him to give—an assurance that an immediate examination and inquiry will be entered upon, whether by special commission—which it is undoubtedly within the power of the Government to issue—or by exercise of the authority they have exercised in cases not as much in need of it in the interest of the country to employ detectives or officers or special men to probe this matter to the very bottom. I am suggesting, of course, nothing new in dwelling upon the serious circumstances connected with the horrible fate of these men. After the statement made by the right hon. gentleman's own colleague, even with the partial information on this subject contained in the report of a commission not charged specially with inquiry into this subject but into the general question of the treatment of the men on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, I trust that the hon. Prime Minister will not allow the subject to be disposed of or to pass from the attention of the House without giving a frank and explicit assurance that the case will not merely engage the attention of the Government, but that the Government will use every means at its command to expose all the facts and to make sure that the guilty parties, if any are guilty, shall be brought to justice, and such an example made as will prevent such cruelty—amounting to murder—being again perpetrated in our land. Every one knows how cruelties not half so great as those these men were subjected to, when inflicted upon British seamen in times happily gone by, being made known to the British Parliament, brought about legislation and such prosecutions as wiped out this disgrace from the history of the Empire. Even with regard to dumb beasts, this Parliament has shown the spirit of the people by legislation to prevent brutes being treated with cruelty when sent by ship or by railway. Here you have the case of men, Canadians, young men in the prime of life assisting in the construction of this public work, subsidized by this Parliament, having gone far from home in the hope of bettering their condition, subjected to treatment not merely sufficient to kill them, but so cruel and so horrible that the like of it will hardly be found in any place outside of Siberia.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not intend to offer more than a very few remarks upon this question. I may say that in my capacity as the editor of a newspaper in Winnipeg, I have received a great many reports with regard to cruelties practised upon the men employed in the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. Now, I have not read the report of the commissioners, not having had the opportunity of doing so; therefore, I cannot speak with regard to the scope of that report. But it seems to me that it is the bounden duty of the Government to inquire into the cost of the road. I have been informed by different parties who, I think, are in a position to judge, that the Canadian Pacific Railway has built the road, at least, up to Kootenay Lake for the subsidy that this Parliament has granted to the company. Now, if that is the case, it shows that the company has been enabled to grind the face of the poor workingmen in that country. There is no doubt as to the evidence on this point. Men, almost by the score, who have been obliged, because they could not secure enough money to pay their way, to walk the entire distance from the scene of their work back to civilization, have complained most bitterly of the treatment received—in some cases of the food, in some cases of the places they have been obliged to sleep, and so on. It is only fair, if the country has paid for this work that the men should receive proper treatment, and it should be the duty of the Government to inquire into this question fully and carefully. I may say also that I have it on the best authority that the contractors have been treated most shabbily by the company.

I know as a matter of fact that a number of contractors who went out there hoping to make a fair living, have been obliged to leave the work, claiming that not only did they not make any money but they lost the little they had when they went there. In one or two cases contractors failed and were unable to pay their liabilities, and left the men who worked for them without sufficient money to return to civilization. I am also informed that some other contractors still remain in the mountains with the promise, it is said, of a reclassification of the work which they have done, in the hope that they would be able to secure sufficient to pay their honest debts and return to civilization. Now, with regard to the death of these two men, a young man who was employed on that work came down on the train, I think, which followed these two men. I met him in Winnipeg, and he informed me that these men were placed in a box car and left there to die, without anybody to attend to their wants, and without the attendance of a medical man. It is well known that every employee of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway has been obliged to contribute 50 cents a month of his wages to pay for medical attendance; and it seems an outrage and one that the Government should carefully investigate, that these men, after paying this fee monthly, were left to die in that manner. I hope, speaking on behalf of the people that I represent, that there will be the most searching investigation, and that whoever is responsible for the brutal treatment accorded these men, will be properly punished.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I had not the advantage of being present this morning when this matter was first discussed. I think, however, it is proper, from the standpoint of the Department of Justice, that I should state the facts that were brought out, and that I should state to the House what is the responsibility that attaches to us. On the 8th of February last, Mr. Mead, the coroner who was appointed by the Government of the North-west Territories, not by the Government of the Dominion of Canada, held an investigation into the cause of the death of these two young men. During the course of this investigation, a notice was served upon him to restrain him from proceeding further, by way of an injunction. So soon as he received notice of the application for the injunction, he communicated with the Department of Justice, and then for the first time the attention of the department was drawn to the matter. On the very same day, the 8th of February, he was asked whether he was willing, of his own accord, to retire from the investigation, so that some one else could be substituted against whom the charges could not be made that were made against him. The injunction was taken against him on the ground that he was a person interested; that is to say, that he would be a competent witness himself, as he was the party who attended the deceased at the time of their death in the box car at Pincher Creek. The ground upon which the injunction was applied for was that he, having attended the deceased himself, should have been a witness at the investigation instead of acting as a coroner. Immediately upon receipt of that information, and upon the statement by the coroner that he did not wish to withdraw—and, of course, there was no way open to us by which we could force him to withdraw—we then communicated with the agent of the Department of Justice, Mr. Coneybeare, for a full statement of all that had taken place. He reported on the 24th of February, and then for the first time I appeared myself on the scene. I asked Mr. Coneybeare to instruct the Department of Justice on all the facts, so that we might be able to form an opinion ourselves as to whether criminal proceedings might be adopted against the parties connected with this transaction. Mr. Coneybeare reported fully all the facts connected with the matter, and the conclusion of his report is in these words:

I could not recommend instituting criminal proceedings until the responsibility was more definitely located.

We made inquiry then for the purpose of locating more definitely the responsibility, as our agent suggested. It appears from the facts reported to us that these men were in the employ of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway Company, or rather of the contractors in the mountains. They took diphtheria in the mountains, and they were immediately put into a van and removed from that section upon which they were then working, so that they might be taken to the hospital at Lethbridge. They came down from that section and passed through the two adjoining sections before they reached the place called Pincher Creek, on the way to Lethbridge where this hospital was. Our information is to the effect that after they left the place where they were working, they were taken from the van and put into a car.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They were placed in a box car.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They started out in a van and came part of the way in a van, and then they were removed into an open wagon, and were brought in that open wagon down to Pincher Creek, where they were taken from the open wagon and put in a box car. These are the facts as they really occurred. Now, it is impossible to conceive, on the face of it, more cruel treatment than this. At the same time you have to realize that from the time they left the mountains until they reached Pincher Creek, where they were placed in a box car, they were amongst labourers who were afraid that these men would communicate the disease to them. The fact is that from the time the men first started they were left without any care or attendance whatever until they reached this box car at Pincher Creek, and this was in the month of December or January. When they came into the box car they were there for about two hours before they died, Dr. Mead being in attendance. Now, on these facts, which I do not mitigate, for which I offer no excuse, I ask hon. gentlemen opposite to indicate the course they would follow. What are we going to do about it? Where is the criminal proceeding to be adopted? Where is the criminal remedy which they can indicate to us? We sought for it at the time, not only sought for it, but instructed our agent in the locality to make full inquiries into the matter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Did not Mr. Coneybeare indicate a course?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No. I have here the report of Mr. Coneybeare, dated the 24th of February, which I am willing to give to my hon. friend.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The point I refer to is the last paragraph, in which he says:

Under these circumstances the only course open would be to appoint a special commission to investigate the matter, if it is to be proceeded with, and in view of the circumstances attendant on the case, which certainly go to show that these men were shamefully neglected, I believe it to be advisable that some effort should be made to ascertain who is to blame.

CONEYBEARE.

That is dated the 15th of April.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have not seen that letter, it has never been brought under my notice, and I do not believe the Minister of Justice has ever seen it either.

The PRIME MINISTER. There can certainly be no complaint made of the manner in which my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) has introduced this matter to the House. He has done it in very temperate language, simply calling the attention of the House to the facts, and has invited the Government to take action upon the matter. I cannot say that I can give the same commendation to the remarks of the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), because he gave me the impression that he had in his mind not so much securing a proper remedy as impugning the conduct of the Government in this matter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I certainly consider the Government blameworthy—I do not deny that.

The PRIME MINISTER. In what manner was the Government blameworthy? Where did their responsibility commence? At a certain time in February their attention was called by the coroner who was holding an investigation on the deaths to the fact that his jurisdiction had been interfered with by judicial proceedings. I have no opinion to offer at this moment as to the merits of the action taken by Judge Rouleau. But it is a well known rule of this House that judicial proceedings have to be considered with respect, and we must assume that Judge Rouleau acted in a proper manner in the performance of his duty. The Solicitor General has stated that it was impossible to do anything more. The action suggested by the senior member for Pictou, which might have been done and should have been done, was the appointment of a commission to investigate into the facts. The Government, he said, was not chary about issuing commissions, that they had appointed commissions to investigate offences of partisans, officers, and so on. But my hon. friend forgets, and he should not forget, that at the very moment of which he speaks the Government had appointed a special commission to investigate these matters; the Government at that moment had a commission specially authorized and empowered to investigate into the grievances of the men who had been engaged to work on the Crow's Nest Pass road. It had been sitting for some time, and had been appointed months before, not, however, on these complaints, because they had not been called to the attention of the Government. But complaint had been made to the Government and published in the press that men engaged to work on the railway were not treated in a humane manner, and acting on the complaints then made, the Government appointed a commission to investigate them. It was a commission well organized and it discharged its duty properly. The hon. gentleman should have remembered also that the commission had no power to investigate this case, because the commission was issued before this case occurred, still it was proceeding when this lamentable occurrence took place, and the commissioners investigated it as far as they could. There is a report on the subject by the commissioners. They have taken the subject into consideration, they have investigated the facts and given their opinion. I have only this to say, that the report of the commission is satisfactory or not satisfactory. It will be laid on the Table to-morrow, and I invite the attention of my hon. friend to it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It hardly deals with this subject.

The PRIME MINISTER. If it is not satisfactory, we shall have to deal with the matter in some other way, but my hon. friend will have an opportunity, after reading it, to answer the challenge given by the Solicitor General to indicate what action should be taken by the Government. If the report shows sufficiently where the guilt is, because it is beyond doubt that a most lamentable occurrence has taken place and those two young men were brought to premature death by ill-treatment, it is quite possible a charge of murder, or if not murder of manslaughter will lie. We know that wrong has been done, we know that parties have suffered, we do not know who are responsible. If the report is not satisfactory, we shall be ready to investigate the facts, and if possible to bring the guilty parties to that justice they deserve. We can do nothing more at this moment. An hon. member opposite stated a few moments ago that the law of this country was adequate to protect the lives and property of the inhabitants, whether a citizen or an alien, but though we may be in that position, we may have to implement the law in order to bring the administration of justice to bear where the law is not sufficient to mete out adequate justice to everyone. The laws are sufficient in the old parts of the country, such as Ontario and Quebec, but in the mountainous regions of British Columbia it may be quite possible that the general law, which will be sufficient in the older provinces, is inadequate in that portion of the Dominion. Certainly the administration of the law has been inadequate in this instance. The Government have no intention but to give the matter their best consideration, and I have again to say to the junior member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) that the Government have no fault to find with the manner in which he brought the case to the attention of the House, which he did in a calm and judicial manner and in a manner which will engage the attention of the Government.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Before the House resolves itself into Committee of Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Supply there is a matter to which I would like to refer for a few moments. I desire to call the attention of the Government, and more particularly the attention of the First Minister, to the fact that a very important Bill has been introduced in the British House of Lords concerning copyright by Lord Herschell, and this Bill has received its second reading. The passage of this Bill may most materially affect the copyright interests of Canada. If the Parliament of Canada has the power, as I think it has, to enact and enforce such copyright legislation as may be necessary for the Dominion, this Bill needs no further consideration; but if the right of Canada to legislate on the question of copyright is to be restricted in the future as in the past, then I think we are bound to consider the effect of the Herschell Bill on the publishing interests of this country. Let me point out to the House a few facts in connection with this question of copyright and emphasize these views in connection with the Herschell Bill. There has always been doubt as to the legality of copyright by simultaneous production in Great Britain and the United States. The Herschell Bill dispels this doubt. The noble lord proposes that simultaneous publication in any part of Great Britain and the United States shall secure copyright throughout the entire British Empire. This provision, as the House will see, gives a direct and important advantage to the American publisher. Under this clause the American publisher need no longer send his stock of books across the sea to London and issue them on the same day as he issues his stock in New York and Boston in order to secure British copyright throughout the British Empire. Oh, no, the American publisher has under this new regulation merely to send his books to any Canadian point across the international boundary line between Canada and the United States in order to secure copyright throughout the British Empire. At the present time I am advised there is considerable doubt whether an American author can obtain copyright in Great Britain without manufacturing in Great Britain. On this point I am also informed that the British law is not very clear. A British subject may secure copyright in Great Britain by the British law, but it is not clear that an alien may secure copyright in Great Britain. At the present time Great Britain is most liberal in its terms for copyright with foreign countries. Great Britain, with France and Germany and other foreign countries is a member of the Berne Convention; an international copyright convention which this country unwittingly joined through the profound—I might almost say criminal ignorance of the Canadian politicians of that period. The United States was asked to enter this Berne Convention, but the American Government is more mindful of the interests of its workmen than was the Canadian Government, refused to enter. Despite this refusal on the part of the United States, Lord Herschell in his Bill proposes to be still more liberal. He actually proposes to grant copyright throughout Her Majesty's dominions to any person whether he is or is not a British subject, and without any condition as to manufacture. Another, or rather a second part of Lord Herschell's Bill requires special attention. Her Majesty in Council may modify this new Act as applied to Canadian legislation, provided that British authors are protected in their works first published in other parts of the British dominions. Should this clause allow Her Majesty to assent to our copyright legislation no fault is to be found with it, but should this not be the case—and I do not think that from past experience we can afford to take any chances—I would impress upon this Government the necessity of immediate action, by a protest against that part of this section of the Act that prohibits the importation of foreign reprints of British copyright books, unless the Canadian Government undertakes to collect a royalty and to stamp every copy so imported with the words "foreign reprint."

Royalty duty has not been collected in this country since 1895, thanks to the action of the late Sir John S. D. Thompson, but it looks to me very much as if we should have to recede from the position we have taken and once more act the part of toll-gate keeper for the British publisher. The third part of Lord Herschell's Bill is also very important. By the present Imperial Act Her Majesty in Council is permitted by Order in Council to grant copyright to foreign countries in any case where the foreign country grants copyright to authors whose works are first produced in the United Kingdom. Lord Herschell in his new Bill substitutes the word "published" for the word "produced." This substitution of a word in ordinary conversation is as a general rule a trivial matter, but it may make a most material difference in the reading of an Act of Parliament. The word "produced" in the present Act means that the book must be manufactured, if not written, in the United Kingdom, but if Lord Herschell substitutes the word "published" for the word "produced," he lays wide open the gate to the American publisher, and wipes out a very definite term to replace it by a very indefinite term.

If in the future Her Majesty's advisers should include the United States of America in any order in regard to copyright, this House can see that it would give a decided advantage to the American publisher. In fact the Dominion publisher would not be in the race at all. I am anxious to hear the opinion of the Government upon this important question. I am the last man to weary this House, but on so grave a question as copyright at this particular juncture, I cannot sit here without entering my protest. The publishers, the printers, and all concerned with copyright in Canada, have struggled for ten years to have a just, a fair, and an equitable copyright Act passed. When the Liberals were in Opposition they were our bosom friends in this struggle, and now that they are on the sunny side of the House I hope they will not turn around and be our enemies. The hon. gentleman (Sir James Edgar) who presides over the deliberations of this House was our champion, but owing to his position as Speaker, his voice is sealed as far as debate is concerned, although I am sure, in fact I know, we still have his good wishes. The only man who fought for us on the Conservative side was the late Sir John S. D. Thompson. Had he been spared we would have had copyright, but he is gone, and we are again in the field of battle fighting for our lives with no friend save the Solicitor General, on the side of the Copyright Association. We are as far off the goal as we were in 1888, when we commenced the agitation in the time of Sir John Macdonald. I may say that that gentleman always regretted his action in leading this country into the toils of the Berne Convention. Sir John Thompson in due and proper form gave the required notice and demanded we should be free from the terms of that convention. The Colonial Office was notified, but the Colonial Office laughed and said: What we have we hold; and the death of our champion ended the struggle. Surely this state of affairs cannot be allowed to continue. It cannot be that this Government, this Liberal Government, that when in Opposition took so much interest in copyright will refuse our just claims to a Canadian copyright law, or decline to protest against this British Bill which may knock out what little life we have left in our endeavour to do what we can for our Canadian book-making industry. An Act acceptable to Great Britain has been for the past three years in the office of the Minister of Justice. This Act which embodies all the points of the Hall-Caine agreement was prepared and revised by Mr. Newcombe, the Deputy Minister of Justice, who is thoroughly versed in the question of copyright. It is too late, I am aware, to expect legislation upon this subject this session, but in connection with this Herschell Bill I hope that the Government will make a prompt and energetic protest against the clauses in it concerning colonial importations and copyright. I can only hope that the next Address we hear from the Throne at the opening of Parliament will contain the welcome announcement that the long-neglected question of copyright will be dealt with at the next session, so that the wrongs and the injustice that the printers, the publishers, and the allied trades concerned in copyright have suffered for over half a century in Canada, will be righted.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I feel that the House and the Government perhaps, owe a debt of gratitude to the hon. member (Mr. Ross Robertson) for having brought this very important question up at as early a stage as was consistent with his opportunities. The Bill of Lord Herschell, to which he has referred, is one which certainly will very considerably modify the present Imperial Copyright Law, and will to a certain extent at all events affect the Canadian position in regard to this matter. I confess, Sir, that it was only when I received notice that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross Robertson) was going to bring this matter up, that I took occasion to look into that Bill. It is an unfortunate fact that some years ago the papers and all documents connected with copyright while copyright administration is still in the Department of Agriculture, were transferred to the Department of Justice.

The copy of the Bill which was sent to our Government was sent to the Department of Justice, and did not come under my immediate notice until I discovered it there. The hon. gentleman has spoken of our right to enact copyright in Canada. I do not think any Canadian is prepared to forego that right, or to allow it to be lessened in any way. At the same time, we cannot shut our eyes to the facts of the case, and we find that the Imperial authorities are not prepared to allow of any amendment to our present Copyright Act. We have contended, and I fully concur in the hon. gentleman's opinion, that they are not justified in taking that position; but I believe that the present condition of affairs is such that were we to enact a copyright law, the courts of the land, and certainly the Privy Council, if the question were carried there, would decide against us. The result would be that contentions of all sorts would arise in the courts upon the copyright question. The hon. gentleman, a few moments ago, alluded to the present Deputy Minister of Justice as one who is thoroughly conversant with the copyright question. I have under my hand a memorandum written by that gentleman, in which he says:

The validity of that contention, however, although upheld on our part, has been denied by the law officers of the Crown and also by some of the Canadian courts, and I do not doubt that the Judicial Committee would decide it against us should occasion arise. If, therefore, the Bill which I drafted some time ago were enacted and allowed to go into operation, as I am convinced it would be by the Colonial Office, the question would soon arise in the courts as to its validity; and while from tactical and other reasons we should not in the first instance ask for Imperial confirmatory legislation, yet we should be driven to do so should our Act be pronounced ultra vires by the Judicial Committee.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON.

Now, Sir, if we require not only the consent of the Imperial Government of the day to our legislation, but confirmatory Imperial legislation, it is very doubtful indeed if we could obtain that, even if the Government of the day were favourably disposed towards us; because we know that at present the public opinion of England is very jealous indeed in regard to copyright legislation in a colony which might interfere with the Imperial copyright law. Under these circumstances, it seems to me that we shall have to go easy, and try to attain our ends by careful negotiations and conciliatory methods. The hon. gentleman has characterized Canada's adhesion to the Berne Convention in no measured terms, which I do not wish at all to add to. It is, I believe, unfortunate that Canada is within the Berne Convention. Apparently, it is impossible for us, without the concurrence of the Imperial authorities, to escape from that position which a former Government here placed us in, without the endorsement or consent of the Parliament or the people of Canada. The hon. gentleman alluded to section 38 of this Bill, which provides:

Her Majesty the Queen may, by Order in Council, direct that this Act shall apply to literary and artistic works, or any class of literary or artistic works, first published in the foreign country or countries named in the Order, in like manner as if the works had been first published in the United Kingdom, and thereupon subject to the provisions of this Act and of the Order, this Act shall apply accordingly.

The hon. gentleman appears to fear that under that section the United States might be given privileges in the British Empire which they have not now. I hardly think that is likely, because there is no doubt that the intention of the section is that the privilege thus accorded shall be reciprocal; and judging from the position which the American authorities have always maintained with reference to copyright, there is no probability, at all events for some time to come, that they will give reciprocal privileges to the British Empire. Reciprocal privileges would mean that subjects of the British Empire would be able to obtain copyright in the United States, without manufacturing or producing the copyrighted work in that country; and up to the present time there is no indication that the United States would listen to any such proposal. The hon. gentleman seems to fear this Imperial Bill very much; and I confess that, on reading it very hastily, as I have only been able to do this afternoon, it appears to me to be one which we shall have to take into our serious consideration, with the view of taking such steps as we may find necessary to protect Canadian interests before the Bill becomes law. But I would again refer to the memorandum of the Deputy Minister of Justice, which will perhaps to a certain extent relieve the anxiety of the hon. member. Mr. Newcombe says :

From my standpoint I do not consider that our position will be less favourable if Lord Herschell's Bill be enacted than it is at present. On the other hand, I consider that the Bill would facilitate matters, inasmuch as it provides for the bringing into force of the Canadian statute by the Imperial Order in Council.

There is a clause in this Bill which provides for an Order in Council endorsing and bringing into force a colonial statute, a provision which at present does not exist in the Imperial Copyright Act.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman read that ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is section 35, and reads as follows :—

Where an Act or Ordinance shall be passed in any British possession respecting copyright in any literary or artistic works first published in any other part of the British dominions, Her Majesty the Queen in Council may make an order modifying this Act, so far as it applies to that British possession, and to any literary or artistic works so published, in such manner as to Her Majesty in Council seems expedient.

Provided as follows :—

Before making any such order in respect of any British possession, Her Majesty in Council shall be satisfied that the British possession has made such provisions as it appears to Her Majesty expedient to require for the protection of authors of works first published in other parts of the British dominions.

If this Act is interpreted and carried out in a spirit of concession or of justice to Canada or other colonial British possessions, this provision would be greatly in favour of colonial British possessions. Should this Act be carried out in a hostile spirit, then, of course, we would be in no better position than we now are, perhaps not even in so good a position.

The hon. gentleman asks what the Government will do in view of the introduction of this Bill. I may say that while I am not prepared at present, the Government not having discussed this question, to say positively on what line we will act, I can assure the hon. gentleman that we will try and see that the interests of Canada are thoroughly safeguarded, and if any protest or action on our part will have that effect, we shall be sure to take it.

I may further say that this question of copyright has been to some extent considered by the Minister of Justice and myself and other members of the Council during this session. Unfortunately, in the pressure of business, we have not been able to come to any definite conclusion, sufficient to justify us in introducing legislation this session. This question is one of the most intricate that can be taken up. It is one I confess not to have in any sense or way mastered. I have only just touched on the threshold of it, but I trust in the future to get a better grasp of it. The Government intends considering the question and may also enter into communication with the Imperial authorities so that we hope to be in a position, in the earliest period of next session, to introduce a Bill which will meet with the approval of the Imperial authorities and remove the difficulties which seem to surround the subject at present. The Deputy Minister of Justice has at present a draft Bill which he considers will be acceptable to the Imperial authorities, and, I understand, is acceptable, in a general way, to the Canadian Publishers' Union, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that in any negotiations which the Government may undertake, the interests of those gentlemen, as well as the public at large, will be thoroughly considered and every effort taken to safeguard them as much as possible.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Why should not the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) advise that the action of the late Sir John Thompson be continued with regard to the Berne Convention? We gave notice, in due and proper form, to the Colonial Office, but they refused to entertain our notice. This Government has the power to withdraw from the convention. The previous Government was assured that they could, on a year's notice, step out of that convention, and yet we have never been able to free ourselves from it. I think that the first step the Government should take would be to point out to the Colonial Office that we have the right to withdraw from the Berne Convention, that we have given a proper notice of withdrawal, and should be able to withdraw more especially as we are not actually in that convention, owing to the fact that we have not yet provided the necessary legislation to bring us within its circle.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is quite correct. The Parliament of Canada has not implemented its adherence to the Berne Convention which was given some years ago. I think when Sir John Macdonald was Premier. The hon. gentleman says that Sir John Thompson gave notice to the Imperial authorities that we desired to withdraw, but the Imperial authorities would not accept that notice, because certain Imperial interests stood in the way. I confess that that part of the question has not come under my study, and consequently I am not able to say anything positively with regard to it. I, however, promise the hon. gentleman that we will look into the matter, and if we can accomplish something in the interests of our country, we will not fail to do it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to add a word to urge upon the Government, not merely the policy of looking into this subject generally, but of grappling with the issue that is really presented to us, broader and larger than any particular Bill. What we attempted to do, in the time to which the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Robertson) has referred, which was the time when Mr. Newcombe's draft Bill was prepared and when he made his special visit to the Colonial Office, was, without taking issue on the general question of right, to try whether it was possible to obtain the assent of the Imperial authorities, not to the measure adopted here, subject to the Governor General's proclamation in 1889, but passing that by, not asking the full powers which we claimed through Sir John Thompson, that we possessed, but to such a measure as would be satisfactory to the publishers and authors in Canada, short of a full measure of what we asked. It was no doubt impossible to obtain that legislation. The draft Bill that my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Robertson) and the Minister of Agriculture referred to is a draft Bill of Mr. Newcombe's, which he thinks ought to be satisfactory to the Canadian interest, and which he has reason to believe will be satisfactory to the Colonial Office, but I was satisfied, after hearing Canadian interest, that that draft would not satisfy them at all. We talk of ourselves as a nation, and yet there is this extraordinary feature in connection with the British North America Act, according to the interpretation of the law officers of England and contrary to Sir John Thompson's opinion, that while we are admitted to have full powers with regard to legislation on patents, on an almost similar subject we are told that our wings are clipped and that we cannot legislate as the Canadian people desire. The reasons are notorious. I venture to say that they are not Imperial but are founded upon a very influential and selfish interest, the authors and publishers of London, who have been conspicuous in their opposition to any movement this country has ever made to obtain the powers we ought to have, as an independent self-governing country, in regard to all matters of this character. In everything else we are given authority, but the powerful influence, represented by some of the greatest names in literature, opposes us when we come to discuss this subject with the Colonial Minister. I venture to say that if that influence were out of the way, many a British Government that has resisted us, Conservative and Liberal, would willingly have acceded to the strong representations made. I would suggest to the Government to leave questions of detail and claim at the hands of the Imperial Government, declaratory legislation, if necessary, giving us the full powers, which we claim to hold, under the British North America Act, with regard to copyright just as we have with regard to patents.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). If I may be permitted just one word, I would say that my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) suggested a moment ago that we had given notice of withdrawal from the Berne Convention and that, therefore, we have the remedy in our hands, so far as Canada is concerned—that we have only to insist to the Imperial authorities that we want effect given to the notice of withdrawal. But that notice was given seven years ago. If it was not acted upon there must have been some cogent reason for it. My hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has just given the reason. The reason is that there are powerful interests, and interests which none can afford to disregard altogether, pressing upon the British Government to insist that the Berne Convention should not be altered. My hon. friend from Pictou has stated that some of the most illustrious names in literature take a deep interest in this matter, and up to the present time their representations have been strong enough to make the British very reluctant to have the Berne Convention interfered with. The Berne Convention was made principally for the protection of authors. It was the strong literary sentiment of Europe that brought that convention into existence. It is very unfortunate, I think, and very much to be deplored, that the United States have not been willing to join the Berne Convention. Had they done so all this trouble to us would have been avoided. But the United States have refrained from joining the Berne Convention, and so we find ourselves placed in a somewhat false position. But I understood that this matter was satisfactorily compromised, some few years ago, by what has been called the Hall Caine Convention. And, if I understood aright—and I wish to be corrected, if I am wrong—my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) was satisfied with the Hall Caine Convention if brought into legislation.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. We were satisfied with the arrangements made with Mr. Hall Caine at the interview held in the Department of Agriculture, at which my hon. friend from Pictou was present.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am satisfied with that. It is a satisfactory compromise, and I think we can give effect to it. My hon. friend from Toronto, if I understood him, thinks that the recent legislation introduced in England by Lord Herschell would make it impossible to carry into effect the Hall Caine Convention. That is the burden of the impression he has attempted to make upon the Government. So far as his question is concerned, the Department of Justice do not agree with my hon. friend; they take issue with him directly. The Department of Justice and Mr. Newcombe, who has given great attention to this subject, I can speak with authority when I say, are clearly of opinion that the Act introduced by Lord Herschell will not interfere with the arrangement known as the Hall Caine arrangement, but that that arrangement can be given effect to by legislation. That is the view which we intend to press upon the British Government. The question, as my hon. friend from Toronto knows, is not one of a very wide import. It is important as it affects an important class, but it is more important to that class than to the people generally. But the questions involved are of a character to have given this Government and preceding Governments the greatest amount of anxiety; and so far it has not been possible to find any satisfactory arrangement. The first arrangement we have been able to find which will give satisfaction is this Hall Caine arrangement; and I repeat that the Department of Justice is of opinion that the legislation introduced by Lord Herschell will not prevent the carrying into effect of that arrangement and we intend to press it upon the British authorities.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I would like to ask to be permitted to say a word in answer to the Prime Minister when he says that this is not an important matter.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, I did not say that. I said it was important to one class of the community, the publishers. But my hon. friend (Mr. Ross Robertson) will agree with me that the general public do not take the same interest in it as the publishers do. This is a question upon which we have not been able to enlist very strongly the sympathy of public opinion.

THE DUTY ON RUBBER GOODS.

Mr. OSLER. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring before the Government a matter which has caused grave injustice to a large industrial enterprise in this country, an injustice which the Government could at once remedy, and which, I think, they are bound, in common honesty, to remedy without hesitation and without delay. When the tariff was brought down, item 214, the duty on rubber boots and shoes, rubber belting, rubber cement, was reduced to 25 per cent. That was agreed to by the House. But when the tariff came to be printed, by an error, the duty was placed at 20 per cent and not at 25 per cent. The attention of the Minister was drawn to this, but, so far, nothing has been done to correct this clerical error, which has resulted in very serious inconvenience and loss to a large manufacturing industry in this country. I think the Government need only have their attention called to this matter to remedy it at once. I do not think that it is a state of things that should be allowed to stand for one day after the Government's attention has been called to it. I am sorry to say that the Minister of Customs' attention was called to the matter last year and also this year as early as April; but, so far, he has neglected or refused to take any action. In common honesty and fairness, I think, the Government should at once correct that clerical error.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I will take a note of what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) has said. The matter, he said, was mentioned to the Minister of Customs. I am not in a position to make a further statement than to say that what the hon. gentleman has said will receive the best consideration.

MILITARY CAMP IN BEAUHARNOIS.

Mr. BERGERON. I desire to put a question to my hon. friend, the Minister of Militia and Defence. Some of his friends are circulating in my county the statement that the camp was to be held at Beauharnois this summer, and with this everybody seems to be well satisfied. They say they have an intimation from the Minister of Militia and Defence that the camp would be held there if it were not on account of me. I desire to ask the hon. gentleman if it was his intention to hold camp there, and tell him that I should be very glad if he would do so.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) that no representation of the kind attributed to me has been made by me. I am not able to say positively where the camp is to be held. But I am under the impression that some arrangement was made some time ago with St. Johns by which the Government is under some obligation to hold the annual camp there, where it has been held for the last two or three years. There is not the slightest truth in the statement that my hon. friend had in any way interfered with the camp being held at Beauharnois.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Supreme Court of Canada—For the purchase of law books and works of reference for the Supreme Court Library.... $4,000

Mr. FOSTER. Why this increase of $1,000?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This sum is placed at the disposal of the judges of the Supreme Court for the purchase of law books, and it has been found necessary to increase the vote for that purpose. I do not think any of those who are familiar with the Supreme Court library will find that $1,000 additional would be wasted. It is simply to improve the library.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I may say to the hon. the Solicitor General that in the Supreme Court library I think there are some uncompleted sets of American reports, they have been completed up to a certain date, and then have been discontinued for some reason. It is evident that the uncompleted series is practically valueless, because you never can rely upon them. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he might inquire whether it would not be in the interest of economy to complete those books.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It does seem to me almost unaccountable that we should have in the Supreme Court any uncompleted sets, because it is evident they would be valueless. They should either be disposed of or else completed.

Mr. FOSTER. Who expends this money?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is expended practically by the judges. There is a little of go-as-you-please about it. I think it is as well that the judges should understand, now that Parliament has discussed the expenditure of this sum of money, that they should see that they get full value for the money expended. I have made some inquiry, and I find that each judge practically gives an order, without conference with other judges, for such books as he thinks should be brought into the library. It occurred to me that this matter now having been brought to the attention of Parliament, the judges should be asked to take more care, and that some control should be exercised by the chief justice of the court over the expenditure. It would probably be proper that no books should be bought except after full conference by all the judges, and with the sanction of the acting chief justice. A report is made to the Justice Department of the purchases each year, and this goes to the Auditor General.

The Exchequer Court of Canada—Contingencies, judge's and registrar's travelling expenses, salaries of sheriffs, printing, stationery, etc., and $50 for judge's books $4,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. With the consent of the committee, on some other item, though not as germane as this, I would like to make some observations in regard to the case of Judge Spinks. I want to save my right on the Supplementaries.

To Charles Morse, for furnishing reports of Exchequer Court decisions to leading periodicals, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act..... $50

Mr. FOSTER. Is Mr. Morse an employee?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He is reporter of the court.

Penitentiaries—St. Vincent de Paul.... $96,200

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask my hon. friend if the atmosphere is quiet at St. Vincent de Paul?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, I think that we can safely say that the difficulties are over now.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax.)

Mr. BERGERON. When will we get the printed report of the investigation?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The committee decided not to print that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. A motion was made this afternoon to have the report printed, but it was not disposed of.

Mr. BERGERON. I think the Department of Justice should print that report. I do not see why the House should be called upon to order its printing. The Department of Justice should pay for it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think we have paid quite enough.

Mr. BERGERON. Can the hon. gentleman state the total cost of the investigation?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. $17,000. I expect to provide for it in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman remember how much he estimated the cost would be when he first brought down the proposition?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. About $10,000. I find I made an error in regard to $2,000 salary being given to a local judge in Quebec; the amount should have been $1,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What was the reason of the decrease?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The former judge received $2,000, but when a new judge was appointed his salary was placed at $1,000, the same amount as was received by the judges of this class.

Mr. GILLIES. Has the hon. Solicitor General given any attention to the question I brought to his attention during a former session, the necessity of affording greater facilities for carrying on Admiralty suits in the Exchequer Court? On the Atlantic coast collisions frequently occur and the cases are carried to the Exchequer Court, but parties living at a considerable distance from Halifax are subjected to a great deal of inconvenience. Before a ship can be libelled and a case put into the Exchequer Court, the party engaged has to go to Halifax, take an affidavit before the registrar, have a writ issued and sent to the place in question, but in the meantime the ship may have sailed away and be out of the jurisdiction of the court, and the claim therefore lost. This inconvenience is apparent and the expense is a grievance that this Parliament should remedy. What I suggest is that jurisdiction should be created in the county court judges ad hoc. I would suggest that these judges be empowered to take affidavits of any applicants and issue warrants for the arrest of ships, which thereafter would be obliged to furnish security. Subsequently the litigation would proceed before the Admiralty Court judge, he being the Chief Justice in the province of Nova Scotia. When the new Admiralty Act was carried in 1891 I brought to the notice of Sir John Thompson the facts I have stated, and he stated that the power to create further courts was vested in the Governor in Council and that the matter would receive attention a little later. Shortly after that Sir John Thompson died, and the matter has been left in abeyance. The Solicitor General, being well acquainted with the Admiralty practice, will undoubtedly be able to realize the great inconvenience to which petitioners are subjected in the manner I brought to his notice. Sometime ago the hon. gentleman said he would give the subject his attention and consideration. I now desire to inquire, does the department contemplate placing in the county court judges authority to act in the manner I have indicated, and give them power to take affidavits for the arrest of ships.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I quite see the difficulty pointed out by the hon. gentleman, and it seems to me it would be very easy to remedy it. I think the best plan to adopt would be to have registrars appointed to issue warrants in the different localities. All the request in reality is to secure the issue of warrants for the arrest of ships, and subsequently the matter would be dealt with by the judge of the Exchequer Court. I desire to have any amendment proposed submitted to the judge of the Exchequer Court, and I will give an undertaking that before next session there will be an amendment in that direction.

LYMAN DARTT—REMISSION OF SENTENCE.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It will perhaps be as convenient at this time as at any other time to bring to the attention of the hon. Solicitor General and of the House the remission of the sentence on Lyman Dart. This young man who, I believe, is of the age of seventeen years, was tried before Mr. Justice Ritchie with a jury for the murder of an Armenian pedlar, and he was defended by counsel of great ability and experience, and after a trial which occupied some days, and upon evidence which was nearly altogether circumstantial, he was found guilty of murder and sentenced to death by the judge. The defence that was put forward at the trial was a denial that the prisoner had any connection at all with the murder. The pedlar in question, an Armenian who had not been in the province for any great length of time, was walking along the highway about a mile and a half from Green Oak, in the county of Colchester. He was shot and fell dead instantly, and he was found lying at the side of the highway by the driver of a mail coach. An inquest was held, and upon information which then came to light, and upon information which was subsequently acquired by means of a detective, this young man was placed under arrest. The grand jury found a true bill against him, and the case came on to trial in the ordinary way. It will be necessary in order to make myself intelligible to the House, that I should give some statement of the facts, and I cannot do this better nor in a fairer way than by reading the report which the trial judge made of the facts as they appeared before him in evidence at the trial. This is what the judge reported to the Minister of Justice upon an application by the prisoner for a commutation of the sentence or, in the alternative, for a new trial. He says :

The important facts that were proved on the trial are briefly as follows :—

In the afternoon of Saturday the 25th day of September last the body of Ashard Deron, a travelling pedlar, was found dead on the highway about a mile and a half from the Green Oak post office, in the county of Colchester. There were no inhabited houses within half a mile ; on one side of the road, the right hand side, going towards Green Oak from Princeport, the bushes came down to within a few feet of the road, on the other side was a cleared field. The body was found lying on its face with the head turned towards Green Oak, and a box and a pack such as pedlars carry were lying on the road, one on each side of and close to the body.

It must be apparent, therefore, and indeed it is conceded by every one who knows anything about the case, and this is a concession, no doubt, in favour of the prisoner, that the motive for the murder, if it were a murder, was apparently not robbery.

There were no tracks visible near the body, but those of the deceased, nor any indications of a struggle, and none of the pedlar's effects had been touched. On examination of the body, it was found that he had been shot from a point behind, and a little to his right, with a gun loaded both with shot and ball. The ball had passed through the body, severing the spinal cord on the right side of the centre, and shots of two sizes had struck the body and both packs. Pellets of shot, battered and out of shape, were found in the clothes and hat of deceased and in both packs. The body when found was still warm. On the next day (Sunday) about noon, a man picked up on the side of the road, about thirty-five yards behind where the body was found, and about six yards to the right, and on the edge of the wood, three pieces of newspapers, which had the appearance of having recently formed part of the wadding of the gun.

Then the learned judge goes on to point out in detail what I think it is not necessary for me to read in full to the House, the circumstantial evidence upon which the jury found the prisoner guilty. That circumstantial evidence may be briefly stated as follows : This prisoner was proved to have been out that afternoon, shooting near the spot and at the time this pedlar was shot ; there was in the house in which he lived the Boston "Globe" of a particular date, and the pieces of paper wadding found by the side of the road where the gun which killed this man had evidently been discharged, fitted in to the remainder of the newspaper found in the House; the shot with which the man was struck corresponded with the size of the shot which the boy had in his possession, and the bullet with which the man was killed was such a bullet as might have been formed by a bullet-mould which was also in the boy's possession. The boy was seen proceeding from near the spot in a very hurried manner a few minutes after the firing, on his way to his foster father's house. All these circumstances are more or less outside of the case now, for the reason that after the boy was convicted he made a confession that the pedlar came to his death by the discharge of the gun which was in his hands, and he set up the theory that the shooting was accidental. Now, throughout the case, from first to last, and during the inquest, and after this shooting was bruited abroad, this boy contended from the very inception of the case until after his conviction, that he had nothing to do with this man's death and knew nothing at all about it, and his counsel, a gentleman of great experience, during the trial of the case cross-examined on that theory, and that theory alone, and cross-examined for the purpose, as will be apparent to any one who examines the evidence, of showing that the man came to his death, not at the hands of this boy, but at the hands of some other pedlar with whom it was suggested deceased may have had some quarrel.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Was not the suggestion made that the man came to his death from a gun fired by this boy, but not intentionally or fired at him?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That suggestion was made after the boy had been convicted and when his confession was taken down by a clergyman in writing. But from first to last during the trial no such suggestion was made, and counsel did not go on the theory that this boy shot the man accidentally. Counsel went on the theory, under the instruction of this boy, and on that theory alone, that the gun which was discharged and killed this man was not discharged by this boy. That is most important to be borne in mind. Now, I may say in passing, that I am not able to understand the report of the Minister of Justice in this case, for more reasons than one, and I would like here to bring to the attention of the learned Solicitor General, or to the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if he proposes to deal with the case—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not propose to deal with it, but I was interested and was following the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden).

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would be very glad if the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) would take an interest in it, because it seems to me that the way in which this case has been disposed of does not add any lustre to the administration of criminal justice in Canada.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Do you mean by the courts or by the Government?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). By the remission of this man's sentence; I pass no reflection at all upon the trial judge. The Minister of Justice, in dealing with this case, has apparently misunderstood what was reported or suggested by Mr. Justice Ritchie, who tried the case, and if the papers have been brought down in full, then the Minister of Justice has misunderstood or misquoted the confession of this boy, because the greater part of the report of the Minister of Justice is made up with extracts from that confession, which I cannot find among the papers at all. I do not understand that the boy made more than one confession. The Minister of Justice quotes from a confession which is not in the papers, and he gives incidents which are not in the confession that was brought down. In fact, the extracts embraced in the report of the Minister of Justice and purporting to be quotations from the confession of this boy are about twice as long as the entire confession of the boy which is brought down here, and verified by the affidavit of the clergyman. It may be that it is owing to the mistake of some official that there has not been brought down another confession, but it will be apparent to any one that what I state with regard to the quotations is literally the fact. Either there is another confession, or the Minister of Justice has drawn upon his imagination, as he certainly has drawn upon his imagination when he undertakes to quote from the reports of Mr. Justice Ritchie. As I have said, this boy made a confession after conviction, and the confession is probably not in the boy's words, but is a confession which was taken down by the clergyman of whose congregation he was a member. I will read what the boy's confession is, and I will say, in passing, that so far as the papers brought down show, it has not even the verification of an affidavit in support of its truth from the boy himself. That such a verification would be sufficient to enable the Minister of Justice to deal with this as a jury would deal with it, surely no practical lawyer in the House would for a moment pretend—no right of cross-examination, the evidence not given viva voce, not given before the tribunal who had to deal with it—and yet it lacks even that poor verification; and that confession alone, so far as I can understand the report of the Minister, forms the ground on which he has ventured to open the prison doors and to tell this man to go forth and have his liberty, without any proper trial before the tribunals of this country, of the sole question which should have been tried by the jury, if the theory which the boy puts forward now is really a correct theory.

In passing, I would venture to suggest to my learned friend the Solicitor General and to other members of the Government that when returns such as this are brought down, it would be very useful, and would save a great deal of the time of members, if they were accompanied by an index. A confused mass of papers are brought down, not arranged on any system, very often not arranged in the order of their dates or in the order of their connection with each other, and without any index, with the result that every member who has to consult them occupies about three times as much time to get at their purport as he would do if they were accompanied by a proper index made by some official before being brought down. I have myself taken the trouble to page this return, and make an index to it.

The boy's confession, which was made in the presence of the clergyman and the jailer, and was dictated to the clergyman, is found at page 33. It is dated the 19th of December, 1897, and is the only confession I can find among the papers. It is as follows:—

I, Lyman Dartt, on the 25th day of September, 1897, left my home at Green Oak for the purpose of shooting, and during the afternoon I passed the mouth of Beaver Brook road, continuing down towards Princeport to the top of Fisher's Creek Hill, so called. While there I heard a noise in the bush, caused, as I afterwards learned, by cattle. Supposing it to be caused by a fox, bear or other large game, I took from my pocket a bullet, which I had carried for some weeks, and put it into my gun on top of the shot load. While going through the woods a twig caught the hammer of my gun, causing it to discharge. I was carrying the gun at the time in my right hand, in a nearly horizontal position. I was just coming out of the bush on to the highway. I heard a cry or groan, and on coming out to the road I saw a man lying on the road a little distance in front of me. I did not stop to see who he was. I did not know until I saw him on the road that there was a man so near to me. I had not seen him, but I knew by the groan and by the direction of my gun when it discharged that I had shot him. I became frightened, and went rapidly and directly home, keeping as much as possible in the cover of the bush. I reloaded my gun after I reached home. I saw some boys that day near the top of Creek Hill, but do not know whether they knew me or not.

These are the boys who identified him at the trial as having come shortly after they heard the report of the gun, from the direction in which it was fired. It goes on:

An investigation was carried on, and during the sitting of the court at which I was tried and found guilty, my fear grew stronger.

His story about fear is absolutely inconsistent, as I shall show from the report of the trial judge, with his demeanour at the trial. There, as Mr. Justice Ritchie said, he appeared perfectly calm and self-possessed, the most unconcerned person in the room, and when he was arrested he gave the same indication of being thoroughly self-possessed. He said he expected to be arrested, because he had heard some talk about it. The confession goes on:

This, coupled with hope of acquittal, sealed my lips, so that I made no confession until this time, except verbally to the keeper of the jail last night before I could sleep. This I now make to my pastor, Rev. Lewis W. Parker, to be taken in writing.

When I was dealing with the report of the trial judge, I should have mentioned what he said at the end of that report. This is what he does say:

Viewing the case from the standpoint of a juryman, I would have been unable to concur in the verdict given.

The learned judge explains afterwards, in his report on the confession, a copy of which was sent to him, that what he meant by that was that on the evidence the boy should have been found guilty of manslaughter, and not murder. The trial judge never for a moment, either on the evidence given at the trial, or from the boy's confession, thought that the prison doors should be opened, and the boy sent out into the world again, without the slightest inquiry into the truth of his confession, which admits that in some way or other the man came to his death from a gun which this boy discharged.

Mr. McCLURE. Will the hon. gentleman read the sentence just preceding the one he has read?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax)—

No motive whatever was shown for the crime. It did not appear that Deron had been in the settlement before this, or that the prisoner had ever seen him. Even if the pedlar came to his death from a gun in the hands of the prisoner, the circumstances proved are, in my opinion, quite as consistent with the view that the killing was not intentional, as that it was premeditated.

That was entirely a question for the jury on the evidence. It is not necessary to prove a motive to find a man guilty of murder. If there is a motive, that makes the case stronger; but if a man shoots another without any motive at all, if it is not shown to have been accidental, he may be found guilty of murder, because he is supposed to know the consequence of his act. Once you prove the killing, if there is no explanation of it, or if the accused puts forward no theory to show that the discharge of the gun was accidental, the jury are justified in finding the man guilty of murder. The judge proceeds:

Perhaps the prisoner's silence militates somewhat against this view, but that may, I think, be accounted for by his fear of the consequences if his story were not believed. He was only seventeen years old.

As I said before, the boy's confession was sent to Mr. Justice Ritchie, and he has reported upon it, and that report I will read, because I think it is important.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 126) respecting the Saskatchewan Railway and Mining Company, and to change its name to the Saskatchewan Pacific Railway and Mining Company.—(Mr. Landerkin.)

Bill (No. 125) to incorporate the Ottawa Interprovincial Bridge Company.—(Mr. Belcourt.)

Bill (No. 137) to revive and amend the Acts respecting the International Radial Railway Company.—(Mr. MacPherson.)

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. MONK. I desire to ask the Prime Minister if he has decided anything in relation to the Bill referring to the Champlain and Chambly Canal?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have not. I propose to deal with that the next time we take up the consideration of private Bills, as well as with two other Bills that I have asked to be allowed to stand, those relating to the Dawson City Electric Lighting and Tramway Company and the Dawson City Electric Company.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

LYMAN DARTT—REMISSION OF SENTENCE.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Chairman, I was about to bring to the attention of the House the report of Mr. Justice Ritchie on the prisoner's confession. That report is to be found on page 41 of the documents that have been brought down, and it is as follows:—

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a communication from the Deputy Minister of Justice, inclosing a confession of Lyman Dartt and other papers. These papers did not reach me until late this afternoon, probably in consequence of the detention of the trains by the snow.

I have fully read over Dartt's confession, with the annexed affidavits, and would submit the following observations:—

The story is somewhat improbable, but no doubt the homicide might have happened as stated by Dartt. There are also some inconsistencies between his story and the evidence given in the case, but a more careful inquiry might fully remove them.

The hon. Minister of Justice states in his report to Council that the confession is quite in accordance with the evidence given in the case. But Mr. Justice Ritchie says there are some inconsistencies between Dartt's story and the facts brought out in evidence. And now he proceeds to point out what they are:

For instance, Fisher Creek Hill is where the boys were standing. Their evidence is that the man (now presumably the prisoner) came out of the bushes near the Casey house, and passed along the road towards Green Oak, followed by Deron, who was only a short distance behind him, until they both passed out of sight of the boys. If the prisoner went into the woods again, and he must have done so if his story is correct, it was some distance from Fisher Creek Hill. He could only have remained in the woods a very short time, not long enough to hunt for any game, or Deron, who was close behind him, would have passed along the road and got beyond all danger.

After the men got out of sight, two of the boys followed them, and when they got to the Casey house they heard the gun and saw the smoke.

So, in that very remarkable and important particular, the confession of the prisoner which the Minister of Justice says is in accordance with the evidence, the trial judge says is not in accordance with the evidence at all.

The reason given for loading with ball does not commend itself to me. I don't know what view a jury would take of it, and it may be the true reason.

Indicating most conclusively that he did not think the Minister of Justice would assume the function of a jury, and on the strength of an unsworn statement deal with a matter that should be dealt with on sworn evidence in the presence of the prosecutor for the Crown and subject to cross-examination.

The country is open, with no extensive woods near it, and the probability of there being a bear there at all, or even a fox so close to the highway at that time of day, is extremely slight.

As regards the direction of the shot, &c., it is impossible to premise anything without having the spot where the gun was discharged carefully examined, and the difference in level between that spot and the place where the body was found definitely ascertained.

Well, as I understand the report to Council of the Minister of Justice, he imagines that all these matters are so definitely set forth in the statement of the boy given by way of confession that he is in a position to deal with them. The trial judge has the correct view, that you cannot deal with matters of that kind until you have accurate measurements made and further evidence given. Then the learned judge continues as follows, with a great deal of force:—

The most extraordinary thing to my mind is, that, assuming this story to be true, the prisoner allowed the inquest and other investigations to go on without giving any information, when his evidence and a carefully conducted examination of the locality made within a day or two of the death would in all probability have satisfied the public of the correctness of his statement. He does not give one the idea of his being a nervous boy, or one that would be unduly alarmed at a matter of this kind. During the whole trial he seemed very cool and collected, and was apparently the most unconcerned person in the court-room, but I should judge not in the slightest degree wanting in intelligence.

Therefore, you have a boy, who, according to the learned judge was of remarkable self-possession for one of his age, and not in the slightest degree wanting in intelligence, a boy who throughout the case, from beginning to end, puts forward the theory that he had nothing to do with the killing of this man, and who, when he is convicted puts forward this unsworn statement and finds it cogent enough to enable the Minister of Justice to send him out of prison without further investigation.

If the jury were satisfied that Deron came to his death by the discharge of a gun in the prisoner's hands, I thought the verdict should have been one of manslaughter only, as I supposed the death was caused by the careless use of the gun in firing at something near the public highway.

That explains, as I said it would explain, the remarks of the learned judge at the trial that he did not agree with the verdict of the jury. He did not agree with that verdict for the simple reason that the killing was probably a case of manslaughter—that it was mere recklessness on the part of the boy, who possibly had no intention of killing the man, but aimed at him in mere recklessness or had been guilty of such carelessness as to constitute the crime of manslaughter. But the learned judge did not indicate in any way that the boy should be discharged as an innocent person—for the effect of the remission of the sentence is to give a verdict of innocence after the jury had given a verdict finding him guilty, and properly finding him guilty upon the only line of defence that he put forward at the trial.

But if the confession of the prisoner is to be believed, the alleged offence is not a culpable homicide and he should be discharged.

But does any one suggest that the Minister of Justice should assume the function of a jury and try the case upon the unsworn statement of this boy, upon a confession which, if it could be used, if it could be brought forward in favour of the boy could only be brought forward, it seems to me, as a reason for giving him a further trial in respect of a defence which he might and should have put forward at the trial of the action.

Now, it seems to me that this case, after all, lies within a very narrow compass. It is now admitted as a matter of fact that this boy shot the Armenian, though he persistently denied it until after the trial. According to his counsel he did not even indicate this line of defence to his counsel, either at the inquest or during the trial. He did not ask the jury to pass upon this question of accidental shooting. The only question in the case upon the evidence and the admitted facts is whether or not the shooting by this boy was accidental, and that is a plea which the boy, though defended by able counsel, did not put forward at the trial at all.

Now, the jury upon the abundant evidence—of a circumstantial character, it is true—because Mr. Power, in his report, admits that the circumstantial evidence was sufficient to justify the verdict of the jury that it was by the discharge of a gun in that boy's hands this man came to his death, then the jury, upon abundant evidence of a circumstantial character, found him guilty. He now puts forward in defence his confession which, according to the view of the learned judge at the trial, is not consistent with the evidence which was given at the trial in many important respects. Then, what is the position of the Minister of Justice? Let us turn to his report, which is to be found at page 29 of the documents which have been brought down. In the first place, he quotes that concluding portion of the report of Mr. Justice Ritchie, which I have already read to the House, and then he says:

Upon a careful perusal of the evidence taken at the trial, the undersigned concurs in the view expressed by the learned trial judge in the conclusion of his report, that the facts proved are entirely consistent with the view that the killing of Deron was unintentional and unpremeditated.

It appears that the learned and hon. Minister of Justice has fallen into an error as to what the judge's view really was. He seems to think that the view of the judge was that the prisoner should be discharged and sentence should be remitted. On the contrary, the judge explains in his statement that his view was that the prisoner should have been convicted of manslaughter. I must say in explanation of the remarks I have already made, the report of the Minister of Justice that I now for the first time observe that he apparently did not receive the report of Mr. Justice Ritchie until after he had ordered this prisoner's discharge; in fact, he got this prisoner discharged. I believe, almost before counsel had time to earn his fee by coming up from Truro to be heard. The prisoner was discharged without waiting for a report from the trial judge with respect to his view of the confession—because I observe that the report of Mr. Justice Ritchie upon the confession is dated the 26th of February, and it is on the 24th or 26th that the telegram is sent down to discharge the prisoner. Indeed, this was not a case which could wait the ordinary course of the mails—a telegram was sent down to open the door of the prison and discharge this man. No one out of the many persons who signed the petition with respect to the sentence imposed upon this boy, except the Minister of Justice, seemed to think it was a case in which sentence should be remitted; one and all of them asked, either that the sentence should be commuted to one of imprisonment, or that there should be a new trial. His counsel puts forward the contention, so far as I can understand the affidavit, that there should be a new trial in the case upon the newly-discovered evidence, if you like to call it that, though it is not newly discovered so far as the prisoner is concerned—upon this statement which has been kept back by the boy during all this time, and is now brought to the attention of every one, including his counsel, for the first time. Then the Minister of Justice, in his report, proceeds to state that the boy was a stranger to Deron, and that therefore as is quite true the meeting must have been accidental. It may or may not have been true, because the evidence shows that the boy, about fifteen minutes before this shooting, was told that a pedlar was going up the road, and he was asked whether he would not like to have certain articles which were in the pedlar's possession, some musical instrument, a mouth organ, or something of that kind, and he made some profane remark about it. Then he proceeds to deal with what I have mentioned before, that none of the goods of Deron were taken, that they remained intact. Then he goes on and quotes the confession. I again point out that there must be something omitted in these papers, because he quotes two type-written pages of confession, and the papers brought down indicate that the entire confession is something less than one type-written page. I imagine, therefore, that there must be some other papers, because it is hardly conceivable that the Minister of Justice can have invented all this which he quotes. I cannot find it among the papers, it is not in the confession brought down, yet it is here in the report of the Minister of Justice. Perhaps my hon. friend will be able to explain that. Then he proceeds again:

The statement of the prisoner exactly coincides with the evidence given at the trial.

I have read the report of the trial judge, who says that it does not, who says he regards it as an improbable story, and points out in what respects it does not coincide with the evidence given at the trial. Then he concludes by saying

That he concurs in thinking—

I do not know with whom he concurs, with some person unknown——that the prisoner, upon the evidence submitted, was entitled to a verdict of acquittal, and that his confession since made rationally accounts for the shooting of Deron, for which no motive at the trial was disclosed.

The whole question of motive is entirely foreign to the point with which the Minister was dealing. The question of motive has nothing at all to do with the case except as an element of probability on one side or the other for the jury. The Minister of Justice seems to indicate that in his opinion it was not murder unless there was a motive. I do not so understand the law nor the definition of murder in the Criminal Code. Now, what would be the position of this matter if it went before a court having power, as courts have in many cases, not civil cases, either to order a new trial or to order judgment for the defendant? Take a civil case. Suppose a party had put his case forward in court on one line, and on one line alone, and a jury, upon sufficient evidence, as this was sufficient evidence, had found against him, and then he went before a court upon affidavit, in such a way as would lead the court to believe in the probability at least of his statement, that another line of defence would have resulted in a judgment in his favour, would it be imagined for a moment by any person having the least knowledge of the principles upon which courts of appeal deal with matters of that kind, that a court would order judgment under those circumstances for the defendant? The very utmost that man could get—he would not get it in the civil case—but the utmost he could get under circumstances of that kind, even in a criminal case, would be a further investigation. It would be going very far, under circumstances of this kind, to say that he should be allowed even the privilege of a further investigation after he had taken his chances in the way in which, as I have indicated he did take his chances. But in view of the value of human life and the bare possibility that his story might be correct, it might be competent, and no one would complain if the Minister of Justice had availed himself of the provision found in the Criminal Code, in section 748, to direct a new trial and place this man in such a position that those things with which the Minister was not in a position to deal, could be dealt with by a jury—no one, I am sure, would have had the slightest criticism to make upon the Minister of Justice if he had adopted that course. I do not suppose there are many in the House who would have criticised him very much if he had commuted the sentence to one of imprisonment, although I do not think that would be a logical course to pursue under the circumstances. The circumstances, if they entitled this prisoner to any consideration, entitled him to a new trial; that would be a logical and proper course to pursue. But to say that under the circumstances of this case, this man is to be tried by the Minister of Justice upon his new, unsupported, uncorroborated and unsworn statement, I think indicates that the Minister of Justice takes a view of this controversy which will not be participated in by any lawyer in this House who has any practical acquaintance with criminal justice in Canada. Suppose this boy had made a confession and stated that this shooting was done in self-defence, would any one for a moment take the view of the Minister of Justice that it would be within his competence, or a proper function for him to exercise, to try that question himself, and to say that that boy should go forth as innocent out of prison? Would not any one say, under the circumstances, that the proper course would be, if anything could be said in favour of the boy, to grant him the right to have tried by a jury the question which he should have put forward in the first instance, and that in extending to him that favour and that clemency, you were going to the very utmost possible limits that you could properly go. I regret that I have been compelled to speak as I have of the action of the Minister of Justice in this case, for whose abilities and character I have the utmost possible respect; but I feel I would not be discharging my duty as a representative in this House if I had not occupied to the extent to which I have the time of the House in bringing this matter to its attention, and I trust the action of the Minister of Justice in this case will not at any time in the future be invoked in favour of any proceeding of this character.

Mr. POWELL. Was the boy sworn, and did he give evidence in his own behalf?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The boy did not go on the witness stand at the trial.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sorry I did not hear the whole of the discussion which has arisen on this question. I would not pretend to speak with authority upon it, but as a member of the Government and one of the advisers of His Excellency, and having had to advise in this matter I think I owe it to the Administration to put before the House the view which guided us in arriving at the decision we reached. I may say to the hon. gentleman who has just criticised the action of the Government that there is no duty perhaps which it is more painful to exercise and which brings such a sense of responsibility upon those whose duty it is for the moment to advise the chief of the executive, than that of reviewing capital sentences. When a case of capital punishment is brought before us, where the fate of the life of man practically lies in the hands of those who for the moment are the advisers of the Crown, I need not say that we always approach it with a good deal of nervousness and trepidation; and if there is a principle of British law which should apply to the administration of the criminal law it is that it would be far better that ninety-nine guilty should escape than one innocent man should suffer the dire penalty of death. Leaving aside altogether the confession made by the prisoner after the trial, when he was under sentence, if the case had come before us simply as it was submitted to the jury, it would have been very difficult, so far as I am personally concerned, for me to have confirmed that sentence, in fact I would not have confirmed it under the circumstances as revealed to the jury; but with the confession of the prisoner, I certainly would not have consented to have the sentence of death carried out on this boy. The hon. gentleman has stated the boy is intelligent and cool. I admit all that. I think the boy is not remarkably intelligent, but still is possessed of a good deal of intelligence and coolness, but we must remember that he was a lad only 17 years old. Therefore, the verdict of the jury, as the case was presented to them, was quite proper; they could not come to any other conclusion than that which they reached, because the only question submitted to them was whether the boy had killed the Armenian. That was the bare question submitted to them. The question of motive, of other incidents which might have thrown light on the facts which ultimately came to be weighed when sentence had to be reviewed, did not appear at the trial. There is no doubt the case happened in this way. This boy went out shooting, leaving the house to shoot partridges. He heard some noise in the distance. There was a rush and a noise and he thought there was big game. The hon. member for Halifax said that country was open, and that the idea that the boy would look for his game under such circumstances was absolutely preposterous. It may have been preposterous to a man advanced in life, having knowledge of life, but certainly for a mere lad to have entertained such an opinion was not extraordinary. He thought there was big game. He put a bullet in his gun in addition to the charge already in it. Finding it was not big game but simply cattle, he wanted to take from the gun the bullet, but he could not do it and went away. Then accidentally, as I believe, the trigger was caught in a branch, the gun was discharged accidentally and the pedlar was shot in the road. Then the boy was scared. He ran away, never said a word to anybody, never opened his lips. Everybody inquired, who killed the man? The circumstances pointed forcibly to the boy and it appeared clear that nobody else could have done it. He was arrested, put upon trial, but never gave his confidence to his counsel. The circumstances were such that the jury could come to no other conclusion than that he committed the deed. The question might have arisen, what was the motive? It could not have been revenge, because he did not know the pedlar. Neither could it have been covetousness nor a desire for plunder, because all the goods of the pedlar were found on his person. It was ascertained that whoever killed the man, he never approached the dead body, for there were no traces of footsteps near the body. The man who killed him evidently had run away. The jury did not inquire whether there was any motive for committing the act, because the simple question submitted to them was, who was the author of the killing, who did it? And the jury simply came to the conclusion that the guilty party was the boy and could be nobody else. Under these circumstances the jury brought in a verdict of guilty. When the poor boy found himself face to face with the consequences of his act and his indiscretion, he did what he should have done long before. He should, when arrested, or at all events at the trial, have stated the circumstances. He would have shown greater wisdom and intelligence if he had surrendered himself and stated the facts such as they were presented afterwards. But his intelligence was of that character which supposes that if there was no witness to the commission of an act of killing there could be no verdict of guilty rendered. He was under the impression that no one having seen him, the circumstances being such that he could not be pointed out as the author of the act, if he did not speak he would escape conviction. But he was convicted. If he had been a brighter boy, more educated and possessed of a larger mind he would have come to the conclusion that under the circumstances the best thing to do was to make an open confession of everything that had taken place. But, being brought face to face with the consequence of his act, then the boy made a confession, and I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) does he not think it impossible to explain the killing of that man by any other circumstances than an accident. There cannot be any motive given for that killing. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) has submitted for consideration as to whether there was manslaughter or murder, but under the circumstances this question does not arise, because admitting that the boy committed the killing with the gun which was in his hand, you cannot find any reasonable motive for the act, and the advisers of His Excellency had to advise as to what should be done with a lad of seventeen years old, who undoubtedly by an act of his had killed a man, but for which killing there was no possible motive, no motive of revenge, no motive of plunder, no motive of gain to the boy. I ask any hon. member in this House, what would he do if he had to deal with a human life under such circumstances? My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) argued that suppose this boy had been tried in a civil action, and that he had acted foolishly in not disclosing the whole of his case and in not giving his defence, and the jury passed upon it, the hon. gentleman asked would anybody think of reopening the case. Certainly not. If it had been a civil case nobody would have tried to step in between that man and the courts, but on the contrary it was a criminal case which involved the life of that boy and the question arose: Were we to send him to abide by the consequences of an act which was an accident, and as to which he was foolish enough not to give his defence to his counsel. Whatever may be the technicalities of the law in this respect, for my part I would not hesitate to take the course which was taken. It may be that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) may happen to be Minister of Justice in the remote future, and when he himself has to assume the responsibility of passing upon life and death, he will I believe always take the merciful side rather than the technical side of the case.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As the right hon. gentleman has made an appeal to me with regard to one or two matters I would like to add a few words. It is apparent that I have not made myself clear to the right hon. gentleman, because he has followed exactly the line of the Minister of Justice. He says, in the first place, that there was only one question submitted to the jury, namely, as to who actually occasioned the killing. If I could for a moment believe that, I would be the first to say that there at least should be a new trial and probably a remission of the sentence. But I think I know Mr. Justice Ritchie too well to suppose that in instructing the jury he did not give to them explicit direction as to what constituted the crime of murder, and what they must believe before they could find a verdict of guilty. The right hon. gentleman presumes something which could not possibly have taken place. Mr. Justice Ritchie in directing the jury would tell them what constituted the crime of murder, and he would tell them distinctly what they must believe before they could find the man guilty. My right hon. friend cannot take refuge in any such idea as he has suggested, for it is absolutely inconceivable. The right hon. gentleman recites all these things that the Minister of Justice has recited in his report, and he says, having regard to all these things: We could not confirm this sentence. But the right hon. gentleman does not have to confirm anything. The sentence does not require any confirmation by the Government. The question is as to whether the clemency of the Crown shall be exercised either in remitting or commuting the sentence, or giving a new trial. Let me point out to the right hon. gentleman that if the question which he says was the real question in the case, was not submitted to the jury, whose fault was it? The Crown proved their case when they proved the killing. It was for the prisoner to submit this question to the jury. Suppose that I granted to the right hon. gentleman his argument so far, what would follow from it? He seems to think that the Government ought to try this question which he says was the real question. The Governor in Council is not to try such questions; the Governor in Council has no such functions; the Governor in Council simply considers whether it is a proper case for clemency to be extended to the prisoner, and in a case of this kind, where it all depended upon the statement of the prisoner which had not been put before the jury at all, which had not been sworn to before the jury, where the prisoner making that statement had not been sworn and had not been cross-examined; the Governor in Council should not have undertaken to decide the issue of fact. I say that the criticisms which I have made have not been met by the right hon. gentleman. My point is that if there was a case for clemency, it was a case for a new trial and that is what section 748 of the Criminal Code is for. I do not find fault with anything the right hon. gentleman has said. All I say is: That these grounds on which the Minister of Justice has relied were considerations for the jury; these were not considerations which would in any way justify the Governor in Council in taking the steps they did take. My right hon. friend also says that it is impossible to state that there was any motive. I repeat again that it is not necessary there should have been any motive. The people who live near this boy and who know him very well have not much doubt about the manner in which this shooting took place. The jury of the county are the best judges of that. And suppose the boy were reckless or careless, does the right hon. gentleman say that he should go out free as an innocent person, as he has gone out without any further investigation. The right hon. gentleman takes up my illustration with respect to a civil case, but he must remember that if you are dealing with greater interests on one side you are also dealing with greater interests on the other side. You are dealing with the question of this boy's life, but you are also dealing with the question of the Armenian's life, and therefore while you may, because the boy's life is in question, grant a new trial which you would not do in a civil case; nevertheless you shall not say that where a human life has been sacrificed, that the case shall be taken away from the jury of the country who are the proper persons under the law and the constitution to deal with it. I venture to suggest these conclusions to the right hon. gentleman, because it seems to me, with every possible deference to his remarks and giving them all the force which his great experience as a lawyer would entitle them to, he has not met the case which I ventured to put before the House in regard to this matter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Mr. Chairman, some members of the committee perhaps may not understand, from the observations made by the right hon.

leader of the Government, that the question raised in this case by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) is not as to whether it was a case for the exercise of the clemency of the Crown—whether the youth of the boy and the evidence as a whole should have been considered by the Government when dealing with the sentence of death; but the question raised by the hon. member for Halifax is one of the most important in connection with the administration of the criminal law that has ever come up in this Parliament or in the English Parliament. I can recollect when the Criminal Code was before the House of Commons, and this novel principle, involving the right of the Minister of Justice to order a new trial, was under consideration, there was in the minds of some a great fear lest the new departure might be so radical as really to endanger the safety of the public, and make crime more common in the country. The Minister of Justice at that time, Sir John Thompson, as hon. gentlemen will recollect, recognized the delicacy of introducing that novel feature into our criminal laws. I recollect very well his expression, either in or out of this House, that it would be hard to conceive of the circumstances under which that power would be exercised; it would have to be exercised in the most careful manner. Yet, this and other cases are now being discussed; and not only are leading men at the bar in Canada hearing of them with surprise, but the public interest is largely aroused in regard to what is becoming somewhat a frequent, some think too frequent, exercise of this extraordinary power, which was given to the Minister of Justice to be exercised in extreme and extraordinary cases. In order to show what was felt on the subject, let me refer to one or two things which were stated when this very machinery for granting a new trial was under consideration; and the committee will see how foreign it was to the framers of the Act, or to any member of the House who took part in discussing the changes being made in the law, to suppose that a Minister of Justice, in dealing with fresh testimony, or in reviewing the circumstances of a case, would have thought for a moment of ordering the prisoner to go scot free. The circumstances under which it was suggested that a Minister of Justice might be warranted in ordering a new trial were of an extreme character. For instance, I remember that the present Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) asked in committee whether it ought to be open to a prisoner to show that there had been an improper interference with the jury, even after the verdict. He was informed that that would be dealt with later on. Mark you, this was not a power to re-try cases in the Privy Council, sitting as a court of appeal. A provision was made for that. The courts of the land are to deal with questions of law, and the Privy Council sitting as a court of appeal could review such questions ; but the provision in question had reference to the powers of the Crown to pardon or remit sentences or to order a new trial. The section was founded upon the examination made by the eminent commission in England which reported on the subject of a Criminal Code for Great Britain ; and this was the paragraph on which we framed the provision giving this extraordinary power to the Minister of Justice :

The result of the inquiries of the Secretary of State may be to show, not that the convict is clearly innocent, but that the propriety of the conviction is doubtful ; that matters were left out of account which ought to have been considered ; or that too little importance was attached to a view of the case, the debating of which was not sufficiently apprehended at the trial. In short, the inquiry may show that the case is one on which the opinion of a second jury ought to be given. If this is the view of the Secretary of State, he ought, we think, to have the right of asking a new trial on his own undivided responsibility.

Not under the circumstances detailed tonight by the Prime Minister—not the right to let the man go scot free ; but the right of asking a new trial. Then, such members as the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) spoke in the discussion on the clause in question. That hon. gentleman said :

If the court should refuse to grant a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the weight of evidence, then application could be made to the Minister of Justice, and if there was any doubt he would direct a new trial.

Sir John Thompson said in regard to this :

If the Minister of Justice saw that the case was cognizable by the court of appeal, he would decline to exercise his power ;—

That is, in other words, he should decline.

—but after the decision something may arise to throw doubts upon the conviction.

That was the case, as it seemed to the members of the Government, when this prisoner made his confession so contrary to the former line of his defence. It was sufficient to make a case of doubt, and it would have been arguable whether with that document and nothing else, the Crown would have been warranted in exercising the power under this clause in the code. Later on Mr. Lister said :

It is much better for the Minister of Justice, in case he thinks justice has not been done, to be in a position to direct that a new trial shall take place, than to decide that the verdict of the court was wrong.

Hon. members will, therefore, see that that was the idea that prevailed when this statute was passed—that if it was supposed that the jury was wrong, the advisers of the Crown should not review the decision of the jury, or sit as another jury and decide finally and for ever that the jury was wrong ; but if they thought the jury was wrong, they could exercise the right of directing a new trial ; and that is all that was intended. I feel confident, therefore, that this action on the part of the Government has startled a great many people in the country. The hon. gentleman who has brought this subject to the notice of the committee has not suggested that this was a case for the exercise of clemency. No one has suggested that. But the point which seems to be extraordinary, and which has not to my mind been satisfactorily explained by any one as yet, is how, under the circumstances, that man, who was regularly found guilty of a crime, the judge who tried him declining to suggest in his report that it was a case where justice had so miscarried that the sentence should be remitted—how in such a case this man could have been thrown back into the community as a free man.

The danger is, in all those cases, that if an impression prevails among the criminal classes that there are such chances as occurred in that case of producing further evidence without cross-examination, that will increase instead of repress criminal tendencies in the community. It is notorious that all those acting on behalf of the prisoner never expected a pardon. What they hoped was that, taking into consideration the facts which are not in dispute and were commented on by the judge in his report, and the youth of the prisoner, there would be a sentence of something like 10 or 12 years imposed instead of the extreme penalty of the law being carried out. It was no surprise to me to be told that after this pedlar under the circumstances detailed, had been killed, and the man who shot him pardoned, all the remaining Armenian pedlars doing business in Colchester County, N.S., immediately took the train and left the country.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I am sure it must be a matter of very deep regret that these pedlars should have departed from the province of Nova Scotia, but I may say that I regret very much the tone of the remarks made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) and the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). This was not a question of extending clemency. It was a question of application to this man's case of certain well known principles of criminal law. He was either guilty of murder or innocent. There was no middle course to take. To talk about sentencing a man, who is innocent, to imprisonment for ten years, is worse than insult. He was either guilty and should have suffered the penalty of the law or he was innocent. There was no suggestion of manslaughter in the evidence. There was no room for a verdict of manslaughter. There had been no trouble between the parties, no ill-feeling, no motive ascribed to the prisoner. The victim lay there, with all his money upon him and his chattels untouched. The absence of motive was clear. There was not a shred of evidence on which a motive could have been founded. That boy was guilty of murder or he was innocent. Let me tell my hon. friend that this case engaged the grave and serious attention of His Excellency's advisers a very long time. Among them there were a good many men who have had a great deal of experience in criminal cases, some who have been attorneys general in their provinces for ten, twelve or fourteen years, and there was not a shadow of a doubt in the minds of any one of them, when the evidence was read, of the innocence of that boy. There was no proof of guilt, there was not a suspicion of evidence to show that the boy shot him intentionally. There was entire absence of proof to show that he shot with intent to kill. Now, we come to the point of law. Were the facts as proved at the trial, and which are not disputed, consistent with his innocence? I need not ask my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) what the answer would be if the conclusion was that the innocence of the boy was consistent with the facts proved. What is the duty of a judge? What is the duty of a jury? It is not a question of mercy with them, not a question as to whether they would like to do this or that. The duty of a judge is to tell the jury that if the facts as proved are consistent with his innocence, they must discharge him. There is not a possibility of doubt about that. What were the facts? My right hon. leader has stated them. The boy, a stripling of 17, was out shooting in the woods, and a man going along the road was shot by the gun he held in his hand. The boy had never seen him before, there was no feeling between them, and the boy never touched his chattels or valuables. There was no motive shown for the shooting, and the judge reported the matter to the Government in the following words, and that is what led me to make up my mind on the question absolutely:

No motive whatever was shown for the crime. It did not appear that Deron had been in the settlement before this, or that the prisoner had ever seen him. Even if the pedlar had come to his death from the gun in the hands of the prisoner, the circumstances are, in my opinion, quite as consistent with the view that the killing was not intentional as that it was premeditated.

If that is the law, then there is an end to the matter. I assume that the judge did charge the jury in these words. The jury had a duty to discharge and that was to acquit the prisoner. There was no room for doubt. When the facts proved at the trial are just as consistent with the man's innocence as with his guilt, it is the duty of the judge to charge the jury to acquit him.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the position of the hon. gentleman that if the facts are consistent with guilt or innocence, and the jury finds the accused guilty, then the prisoner has the right to expect that he will be pardoned by the Crown?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My position is perfectly plain as a matter of law, and the hon. gentleman will find it laid down in every elementary book on criminal law. I am in accord with the best writers on the subject and the best decisions. My opinion is this, that if the facts as proved are consistent with the man's innocence, it is the duty of the judge to tell the jury to discharge the prisoner. That is my opinion of the law, and I have never seen it questioned before, and I have seen many a man discharged on that view of the law. A great deal has been said about the statement or confession, so-called, of the young lad afterwards:

The young lad's silence (the judge said), perhaps somewhat militated against this view, but I think that may be accounted for by his fear of the consequences, if the story were not believed. He was only 17 years old, and viewing his case from the standpoint of a juryman, I would have been unable to concur in the verdict given. Here is the report of the judge:

I cannot concur in the verdict. I think the evidence was consistent with his innocence. I think his silence should not be held against him.

And when these three reports were made by the judge, there was not a shadow of doubt left in the minds of His Excellency's advisers as to what course they should take. It is not a case where doubts might be raised as to its being a case of manslaughter, for which a man might get ten years. It could not be manslaughter. I have read the evidence carefully and listened to the report read by the Minister of Justice, and under the evidence given, the verdicts could only have been murder or innocence. The judge said the evidence was consistent with either, and the boy's silence should not be taken against him, and that he did not concur in the verdict of guilty. All these facts taken together, there was but one course for the Government to take. There was no new trial necessary, because there were no new facts disclosed. The boy made a statement of his whereabouts, and that statement happened to coincide with the facts as proved at the trial.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend has hardly given one fact straight so far.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The facts which I have given and which my hon. friend has the courtesy to say are not straight, are facts I have read from the report. I do not think I misread this statement, and I say there was no new trial required, because there was no new evidence.

The statement made by the boy was a statement consistent with the evidence given at the trial. He made an explanation of how it came that the gun went off; and the evidence given by the doctor is that the wound found in the man's body shows that the gun, when it was fired, must have been fired with the butt on the ground, because the bullet went upwards, instead of downward or inward, as would have been the case if fired from the shoulder, because the man was going down hill. All these facts did not leave any doubt in our mind. We did not see the necessity of a new trial, and the judge having reported as he did, we thought the case conclusive.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will have to say a few words in reply to the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies), as he has been good enough to speak of the spirit in which I dealt with this matter. If I made any remark about the hon. gentleman not giving the facts correctly, I hope he will pardon me. I think I approached this matter in a perfectly fair spirit. I endeavoured to do so, and not to be extravagant in the statements I made. The hon. gentleman has stated, as the last of the reasons on which he depends, that the story of the boy as given in this statement is consistent with the evidence at the trial. I do not suppose that the hon. gentleman understands the evidence better than Mr. Justice Ritchie, who presided. I do not know whether he claims that he does or not. I have pointed out, as he would have understood if he had done me the honour to listen to me, that the trial judge says the story is not consistent with the evidence given at the trial. Therefore, that part of the hon. gentleman's reasons go. Then the hon. gentleman says that it could not be a case of manslaughter. The hon. gentleman speaks of the great experience of the gentlemen who are members of the Government. I do not deny their experience. But I do not know that any of them has had more experience than Mr. Justice Ritchie, or that any of them knows more of the case than he. In the report which I read in the hon. gentleman's hearing, and which he has apparently forgotten, the judge said that the verdict should have been a verdict of manslaughter.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not see it. That report was not before us.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman had not been in such a hurry—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We had the judge's formal report which he sent in answer to the request that he should give an opinion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I should think that in dealing with a matter of such importance as this, after sending the confession to the trial judge, they would await his answer before letting the man out of jail. If they had had the patience to wait two days longer, they would have had the report of the trial judge, in which he said that the verdict should have been manslaughter, a verdict which the hon. gentleman says is preposterous. Does the hon. gentleman say that he understands the criminal law better than Mr. Justice Ritchie?

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who is he?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He is judge of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) have given a verdict of manslaughter?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would have agreed with Mr. Justice Ritchie that the verdict should have been nothing less than manslaughter, and only by distorting the facts would it be possible to make anything less out of it. Mr. Justice Ritchie is entitled to the respect of the Government and the country of which he is the judge. And, when I quote the statement of the trial judge that the verdict should have been one of manslaughter, I make the best possible answer to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that a verdict of manslaughter would be preposterous.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. To whom did he make that report?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). To the Minister of Justice. And, if the Government had waited two days, they would have had that report before them. And the hon. gentleman stands up and tells Mr. Justice Ritchie that his opinion of this case is preposterous. That is the effect of it. To say that his opinion of this case, after trying it, and with his experience on the bench for fifteen years, with a very much longer experience, I venture to say, than the hon. Minister in both civil and criminal practice, is preposterous, is really an extraordinary justification—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I took his own report.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am taking his own report, too.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You can reconcile them, perhaps.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). His own report, made in answer to the Minister of Justice, says that in his opinion the jury should have found a verdict of manslaughter. The hon. gentleman talks about courtesy, but I do not think there is very much courtesy in standing up and saying that the opinion of a learned judge—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I hope my hon. friend will not say that I said that about Mr. Justice Ritchie. I never heard of this report that the hon. gentleman speaks of. I read Mr. Justice Ritchie's report that the evidence was consistent with the man's innocence, and if so, he could not be convicted of manslaughter.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And I read in the hon. gentleman's hearing the statement of Mr. Justice Ritchie—

Mr. McGREGOR. Did the judge give two written opinions?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am endeavouring to deal just now with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I will deal with my learned friend (Mr. McGregor) later on. I am pointing out that in the report sent to this Government in response to the Minister of Justice, Mr. Justice Ritchie says that there might have been or should have been a verdict of manslaughter I will get his exact words, I read them before.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not hear it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then, the hon. gentleman should not have undertaken to deal with it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I tell the hon. gentleman that it never came before the Government. A report of Mr. Justice Ritchie which came before the Government, and on which we acted, stated that the evidence was consistent with the man's innocence.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman, perhaps, does not understand me. I read here in the presence of the hon. gentleman what Mr. Justice Ritchie said about the verdict of manslaughter, and I said that, after I had read that report and brought it to his attention, the hon. gentleman rose in his place in the House and said that any such view as that would be preposterous. And I have said that, when the hon. gentleman undertakes to speak of courtesy, he might bear in mind that it is not a very courteous way to speak of one of the judges of the country, of whose Government he is a member. Now, the hon. gentleman went further and said that the facts stated in this confession were consistent with the evidence given at the trial. I suppose he did not hear me when I read from the report of Mr. Justice Ritchie that the statements were not consistent with several of the facts brought out in evidence at the trial. My hon. friend seems to think that there is no question in this case except whether the man was guilty of murder or wholly innocent, that no question of manslaughter can arise. Let me point out to my hon. friend the position of this boy. He must remember, in dealing with the question of motive, that the boy had denied his guilt and only makes his confession after he had been convicted. This is a most important circumstance to be taken into consideration in connection with the motive or in connection with the facts that might lead to manslaughter. Suppose he was using his gun in a reckless and negligent manner. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that he would not be guilty of manslaughter unless—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Unless you prove, and there was not a scintilla of evidence to show that, he had handled his gun in that way that would make him guilty of manslaughter.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am glad the hon. gentleman says that, because it leads up to what I was coming to. When you have the facts proved by the jury and found by the jury that this boy, with the gun in his hand, shot his man, and the only defence put forward was that he did not have the gun in his hand, and did not shoot this man, the burden of proof was on the boy to show that the shooting was accidental.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is new law to me.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If one man brings another to his death by means of shooting, and there is no explanation given of the shooting, or the reason for it, the jury are perfectly justified in bringing in a verdict of murder or of manslaughter. In a case of that kind where the death is proved of one man at the hands of another, that is an end of the question. The burden of proof after that, so far as motive is concerned, is upon the prisoner himself, if he wants to get rid of a verdict of manslaughter, at least. In this case my hon. friend seems to put out of sight altogether the fact that the very ground on which this man was discharged from prison by the Government, was not put forward by the prisoner at the trial, and the jury were not asked by him to pass upon it. That is a point which my hon. and learned friend has not met, and it is for that reason chiefly that I say that any extension of the clemency of the Crown should have been by granting a new trial.

Mr. McCLURE. I would not venture to say a word on this subject except that I have some personal knowledge of the circumstances which it is evident some hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House, are not familiar with. I am bound to say at the outset that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) is perfectly correct when he says that the decision of the Department of Justice was received with considerable surprise. I entirely concur with the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) in saying that nobody ever expected such a decision, and nobody ever asked for it. But I am bound to say also that I do not think that the hon. gentleman has presented any clear or conclusive argument to show that the decision is wrong. He undertakes to say that the decision of the Department of Justice is in some respects inconsistent with the report of the trial judge upon this case. I am unable to gather that from my reading of the report, or from my knowledge of the facts of the case. Before any confession had been presented, before the judge knew the contents of that confession, he writes to the Minister of Justice a report in which he makes this statement :

No motive whatever was shown for the crime. Even if the person came to his death from a gun in the hands of the prisoner, the circumstances proved are, in my opinion, quite as consistent with the view that the killing was not intentional as that it was premeditated.

Then I want the House to notice this statement, because it appears to be somewhat inconsistent with the later report of Mr. Justice Ritchie :

Perhaps the prisoner's silence militates somewhat against this view, but that I think may be accounted for by his fear of the consequences if his story was not believed. He was only seventeen years old. Viewing the case from the standpoint of a jurymen, I would have been unable to concur in the verdict given.

That was the report, given before he knew anything about the confession. Yet I want you to notice particularly that after the report of the confession has been given, Mr. Justice Ritchie thinks it was very remarkable, if this statement is true, that the boy did not say something at the inquest or at some of the proceedings of the trial. Yet before he knew anything about the confession, he had himself given a very substantial reason why the boy did not give that confession before. Now, after the confession is given, it is sent to Mr. Justice Ritchie, and he sends back a second report upon which the hon. gentleman comments at considerable length. In that report for the first time in his reports of the trial Mr. Justice Ritchie puts forward the view that the verdict should have been manslaughter. But I wish him to pay particular attention to this part of the report where he says : The story is somewhat improbable, but no doubt the homicide might have happened as stated by Dartt. Then he goes on to point out one or two inconsistencies between the confession and the facts as proved at the trial, and I want you to notice what those inconsistencies are. In one respect, perhaps, a little local knowledge of the circumstances will enable you to see how little there is of inconsistency. He places great stress upon this fact : He says it was very improbable that this boy would expect to find large game in that vicinity. Now, I undertake to say from my knowledge of the circumstances, that it not only would not have been very improbable for a boy of 17 to expect to find bears in any place where there is woods, but as a matter of fact, it would not have been very surprising if he had found a bear in that very spot, for they have been seen in that locality.

Mr. McCLURE.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That merely proves that my hon. friend would have been a very good witness for the defence at a new trial.

Mr. McCLURE. I am not talking about the evidence given at the trial ; I am talking about what the judge undertakes to say is an inconsistency. The statement which I make is not inconsistent with any statement made at the trial. This question of large game did not arise in the trial at all. This theory was not put forward at the trial, and I want to impress upon the attention of this committee this important fact, who is to blame for it I am not going to say, but it is a fact that in the report made to the Department of Justice, the judge who tried this case puts forward the view which I have read to you here, to the effect that the facts as proved were as consistent with the view that the killing was not intentional, as that it was premeditated. But I listened to that trial very carefully and read the reports carefully, and I find it strange that view was never presented to the jury. I can understand why the defence did not, because they relied upon the plea of denial. The prosecution had nothing to do with it. I do not wish to criticise the action of the judge, but I do say it is somewhat peculiar that that view, which was strongly presented to the Department of Justice, never was presented to the jury upon the trial.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose the reason of it was that the defence rested entirely on the line which he had suggested, and would not feel it competent for him to put that forward to the jury.

Mr. McCLURE. That may be a satisfactory explanation ; I am not going into the legal aspect of the case. But I say that up to the present moment, while there has been presented in the papers here most conclusive evidence that that man was shot by a shot from a gun held by that boy, there has been to this hour not one tittle of evidence presented that the boy fired that shot intentionally. We have had a lot of talk about motive. The judge says that there is no motive ; that is very true. The hon. gentleman answers that it is not necessary to prove motive. I agree with him it may not be necessary to prove motive, but it is necessary to prove more than who actually did the shooting, it is necessary to prove that he did it intentionally. Where is the evidence that he did it intentionally ? I grant you that he did it, but the circumstances are perfectly consistent with the theory of accident. If they be perfectly consistent with the theory of accident, what right has the jury to assume that if the boy shot the man, he did it intentionally ?

As the judge said, it was open to them to assume that, although there is no proof he did not do it intentionally. True, the argument was not taken advantage of, but it was open to the parties to use it. Another view of the case is this. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) thinks there should be a new trial. That would be a very dangerous course to see followed in a case of this kind. What is the argument? Here is a man tried and found guilty, he presented a certain theory to the court in his defence and a certain line of evidence; the court convicted him and he was condemned. Afterwards it is stated on behalf of the prisoner that he did not state the truth to the court, and that if another chance is afforded him he will present the truth and prove his innocence. That would be a somewhat dangerous precedent to establish—to say, give a man a new trial because at the time he was convicted he did not tell the truth, and if he now gets a new trial he will tell the truth and be acquitted. There is difficulty in pursuing that line; yet the hon. gentleman undertakes to argue in that way and declares that the young man should have had a new trial and not a commutation of sentence. I am not pleading the question, but I am bound to say, that the action taken struck me with some surprise, and yet the hon. member for Halifax has not made that successful attack which I expected he would do when he rose to present the case, because I say that to-day there is but one theory and one set of facts put forward which will explain satisfactorily why and how the boy did the shooting, and that is the theory of accident. Is there a jury, a counsel or a Governor General, who would assume that a boy sixteen years of age, without the slightest provocation and without any inducement known would go out in broad daylight and shoot a man on the road, leave him there and not return?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is that a question for a jury or for the Governor General in Council?

Mr. McCLURE. I submit it was a question for the jury. I say further that under the Criminal Code as it stands to-day, the hon. gentleman cannot deny that it is also a question for the Minister of Justice. The section is a somewhat peculiar one, and the code is to blame more than the Department of Justice. It reads as follows:

If upon any application for mercy of the Crown on behalf of any person convicted of any indictable offence, the Minister of Justice entertains a doubt whether such person ought to have been convicted, he may instead of advising Her Majesty to remit or commute the sentence after such inquiry as he thinks proper by an order in writing direct a new trial at such time and before such court as he may think proper.

If the Minister of Justice entertains any doubt as to whether the boy was proved guilty or not, leaving out the confession and everything but the bald evidence, what has he the option of doing? He may, instead of remitting the sentence, order a new trial. If he does not entertain any doubt he may remit the sentence. If the Minister and the Government are of the opinion that without doubt the boy is innocent, and viewing all the circumstances, if it is plain and clear that the only explanation is that the boy did the shooting accidentally, is it not a duty incumbent upon them to remit the sentence and discharge the boy, which, while it may have surprised the public and the hon. gentleman, as it certainly did surprise me, is yet a course consistent with the theory of the law and the duty imposed on the Government under the law.

Mr. BRITTON. On hearing this case so ably presented by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), it seems to me it would have been a judicial murder if this sentence had been carried out. I cannot think for one moment that on the facts presented to the House any other than the exercise of the Executive clemency should have been carried out in a case of this kind. The hon. gentleman must know, as all of us do who have had to do with the administration of the criminal law that if there are two theories as regards the killing, one consistent with innocence and the other with guilt, there must then be doubt in the mind of the jury or the court which tried the case. It is not a question of mercy or privilege, it is not correct to say that the prisoner was entitled to the privilege, for it is a right that must be exercised in his favour. If there are two theories there cannot be a conviction. So, is not the whole case ended when the judge reports—I do not care whether he made one report or two reports to the Government—and in that report says, first, he is not satisfied with the verdict, and, second, that the facts established on the trial were consistent with accident. If they are consistent with accident, they are consistent with the innocence of the defendant, and if so, then it was not a mercy extended, it was a right that had to be extended, and the statement had to be admitted that if those were the facts this man was not guilty and should not have been found guilty. I submit further that in dealing with this question we are not dealing with that much-discussed section No. 748 of the Criminal Code, which gives the Minister of Justice power to order a new trial. There is great difference of opinion in regard to that section, and whether we have the right in Canada to have that privilege or duty placed on the Minister of Justice. This is not a case of the kind, but such a case as came before the Government long before the Criminal Code was passed, a case in which the Government were called on to decide on the application of a prisoner for executive clemency, whether the sentence should or not be carried out. It was dealt with on the facts that came before the Government, and they were, first, that the shooting was consistent with accident, and then a conviction for murder or for manslaughter—because it is just as inconsistent for manslaughter as for murder if the shooting was accidental—was wrong, and a conviction made under such circumstances should be set aside and the man set at liberty. The only other question was as to this man's subsequent confession after the trial. How often does it happen, especially with young men, when they are brought face to face with the killing of a fellow-being that they think no one saw them, they will deny everything, accidental or otherwise, in connection with the shooting; and having made the first mistake, this young man persistently followed it down to the trial and it was not until after the trial that the prisoner told the truth. But in making that confession it was not done with the intention of basing upon it an application for a new trial, and it was consistent with the theory that the shooting was accidental. Under these circumstances and the report of the judge made, and the only report the Government could act on, showing these two points, first, that the judge was not satisfied with the verdict, and second, that this view was not inconsistent with accidental killing, I submit that no other course could have been fairly followed by the Government then to have left the young man go perfectly free. It is well known as a principle in the administration of criminal justice, that where there are two theories equally consistent with all the facts of the case, one consistent with a man's innocence and the other consistent with a man's guilt, we are obliged to give the benefit of the doubt to the prisoner. Nothing more than that was done in this case, and it would have been a monstrous wrong on the part of the Government to have dealt with this case in any other way than they did deal with it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The importance of the point raised by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) justifies me in saying just one word. I stated to him the ground on which His Excellency's advisers advised that the clemency of the Crown should be extended towards this young lad. I challenged my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) to question the law, apart altogether from the question of mercy. Those who watched the hon. gentleman in his reply to me must have noticed that he entirely evaded touching that point. My learned friend from Kingston (Mr. Britton) has put the point so clearly that not only every lawyer but every layman must thoroughly understand it. My hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. McClure) has quoted the words of the judge: that the evidence was consistent with this shooting having been purely accidental, and I put it to my learned friend (Mr. Borden) and he did not grapple with that point as I humbly believe he was bound to, that if that was the evidence as the judge reported it, the judge was bound to submit it to the jury and the jury were bound to acquit. One word more. When I scouted the idea that this boy on the evidence could be found guilty of manslaughter, and challenged the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) to put his reputation to the statement in this House that he thought that evidence justified manslaughter, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) was silent and did not dare to commit himself to such a statement. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) said there was a statement made by the judge, and behind that he sheltered himself, but the hon. gentleman who took the responsibility of bringing the Government to the Bar of this House for having been guilty of the miscarriage of justice; the hon. gentleman did not dare to take the responsibility of saying that he believed the evidence justified a verdict of manslaughter. Let me present the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) the Criminal Code. No one knows better than he does, for he is a lawyer of great experience and I recognize his ability and experience; no one knows better than he the definition of murder in the Criminal Code, and he knows what reduces that crime of murder to manslaughter. I ask the attention of the House for a moment while I read the section which defines the reduction of murder to manslaughter, and then I will ask, is there a man in this House who will say that the ingredients which reduce the crime of murder to manslaughter were present in this case or could possibly be found in the evidence.

Culpable homicide, which would otherwise be murder, may be reduced to manslaughter if the person who causes death does so in the heat of passion caused by sudden provocation.

Is there a suspicion of that here? Could it be sustained if such a verdict was found; I trow not.

Any wrongful act or insult, of such a nature as to be sufficient to deprive an ordinary person of the power of self-control, may be provocation if the offender acts upon it on the sudden, and before there has been time for his passion to cool.

Was there a suspicion that any of these facts were present in this case. Let my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) now take the responsibility of raising in his place.

Mr. POWELL. I will ask the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) if he has ever heard of the indictment of a person, or of a corporation, or negligence resulting in death.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not talking about negligence resulting in death.

Mr. POWELL. But that constitutes manslaughter.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am talking about the code which defines what murder is, and defines the circumstances which reduce murder to manslaughter.

Mr. POWELL. Will the hon. gentleman pardon me. In the latter clause of the report of Mr. Ritchie, he says :

I thought the verdict should have been one of manslaughter only, as I suppose the death was caused by the careless use of a gun fired near the public highway.

I thought under criminal law that constituted manslaughter.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend (Mr. Powell) is perfectly entitled to his opinion, but if he will point out one scintilla in the evidence which would justify a verdict of manslaughter, I will surrender the case. There was not before the jury the suspicion of a hint of negligence.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) understand that the Criminal Code in giving that definition of manslaughter, altered the law from what it was before ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know whether the intention of the codifier was to alter the law as it was before, but the code in my opinion lays down the correct definition of what was murder and what will reduce it to manslaughter, and if I recollect aright this code is copied word for word from the English code in that respect. I have never found any lawyer nor any one else find fault with the definitions I have read. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Britten) has stated that the carrying out of that verdict would have been judicial murder ; nobody has any doubt about that. But they suggest that manslaughter might have been found, and I say with very great deference to my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) that there is just as much cause to find a verdict of murder on the evidence as there is to find a verdict of manslaughter on the evidence. I lay it down as a cardinal law which nobody dare challenge : That where the facts as proved are as consistent with the innocence of a man as with his guilt, that man is entitled to be discharged. I never heard that principle questioned in a court of law, and if it is questioned here I will produce the highest authorities from the text books of the writers of Great Britain and of America to justify my statement. It is on that crucial point the judge says that the facts were as consistent with the accidental firing of the gun as with it having been fired premeditatedly. That being so, the judge was bound to charge the jury in the words he reported to the Minister of Justice, and the jury were bound to find in accordance with that charge "not guilty."

Mr. POWELL. At the risk of delaying the passing of the Estimates, although I recognize the great desire on the part of all the members of the House to get home as quickly as possible, I shall direct the attention of the House to this question for a very few moments. No one will question the fundamental principle of the criminal law as announced by the Minister of Marine. He has stated it very well, and were I called upon to state it I would simply say that the rule of criminal law is this : That where there is a parity of reasonable probability between the prisoner's guilt and innocence, there should be no conviction. We all, I think, agree on that, and I accede to the statement of the Minister of Marine, as I presume that is about the statement of the principle he meant to make to the House.

Where the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is wrong is in the application of the rule that where there is a parity of reasonable probability there should be no conviction. What the hon. gentleman adduces are matters in respect of which there is a presumption of evidence—not an irrefutable presumption, but a prima facie presumption of evidence—that they exist. These are matters such as the connection between cause and effect, which is presumed. There is a prima facie presumption of fact that an act is an intelligent act, that a man means what he does. It is necessarily so, otherwise you could not try any cases at all. How could you possibly enter into a man's motive ? As was said by Chief Justice O'Brien long ago, in homely but rather vigorous language, "the devil himself cannot tell what the motive of a man was." We will take this case : A man is found dead in a field who has been killed through violence without doubt ; an individual is last seen with him ; there is proof that cannot be gainsaid that no other individual was near him. It is nonsense to assert that the law of this country is so lame that the individual last seen with the man cannot be convicted of either murder or manslaughter, unless there is positive evidence that the killing was intentional. The jury can draw the inference of intention as well as of commission of the act. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries will have to revolutionize the whole theory and administration of English criminal law if he wishes to set up such a contention. There is no doubt that as a matter of law the individual under such circumstances could be convicted. Whether or not his conviction is just, whether or not there were grave doubts as to the prisoners guilt under the evidence, whether or not it would be indiscreet to inflict the death penalty—these are questions not of law, but considerations which may or may not call for executive clemency. The hon. gentleman says there is nothing to establish a motive. I am not going to argue that point at length ; but I will merely mention two or three facts which clearly show intention or are evidence of intention. In the first place, before this deed is committed, this boy is heard using harsh language concerning the victim of the crime ; after the crime is committed, he does what ? He tries to conceal his act, he lies about it; and the fact that a man who is charged with a crime does not tell the truth about it, but falsifies facts concerning it, is an evidence of a motive. The party threw himself on the court on a certain line of defence, that he did not do the act. That line of defence was false and unsuccessful. After he fails in that, he wishes to go before the court on another line of defence that he did do the act, but not intentionally. Give his confession and claim all the force we can, and what does it mean? It means that this matter has not been submitted to a jury, and should be submitted to a jury to decide whether the act was intentional or accidental. That is a matter, not for a judge, but for a jury alone. Now for the principles of law that should guide the Minister of Justice in such a case as this. The provision that is incorporated in our code is from the report that was made by the commission for the revision of the English criminal law. The British Parliament never adopted it, but it has been adopted in this country. Look for one moment at the opinion of those very eminent men who drafted the English code. It can be best gathered from the parts of commissioner's report, which I shall read:

It must also be remembered that a court of justice in deciding upon such applications would, in order to avoid great abuses, be obliged to bind itself by strict rules, similar to those which are enforced in applications for civil cases on the ground of newly-discovered evidence. Such applications cannot be made at all after the lapse of a very short interval of time, and are not granted if the applicant has been guilty of any negligence; and this stringency is essential to the due administration of justice and to the termination of controversies. It would be unsatisfactory to apply such rules to applications for new trials in criminal cases.

The law is there discussed by the commissioners very ably. On an application to quash a conviction, no matter what the ground is, if that ground was not taken, but could have been taken at the trial, and the fact that it was not taken was due to the negligence of the party, then it is not a ground for quashing the conviction. The greatest effect that could be given to it would be a ground for a new trial through clemency. With regard to the power proposed to be given to the Secretary of State in England, which has been given here to the Minister of Justice, the commissioners say:

Experience has shown that the Secretary of State is a better judge of the existence of such circumstances than a court of justice can be. He has every facility for inquiring into special circumstances; he can and does, if necessary, avail himself of the assistance of the judge who tried the case and of the law officers. The position which he occupies is a guarantee of his own fitness to form an opinion.

The report winds up by saying:

Mr. POWELL.

The result of the inquiries of the Secretary of State may be to show not that the convict is clearly innocent, but that the propriety of the conviction is doubtful; that matters were left out of account which ought to have been considered, or that too little importance was attached to a view of the case, the bearing of which was not sufficiently apprehended at the trial; in short, the inquiry may show that the case is one on which the opinion of a second jury ought to be taken.

After mentioning a series of cases, they say: "In short, it may be a case which the opinion of a second jury should be taken." That is what this case is, and there can be no reason at all why the Minister of Justice acted in this case as he did. While I agree to the proposition of law stated by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, it has no application whatever to this case. It is preposterous to say that because it was possible that the act might have been done innocently, therefore the man should be discharged. If that principle were applied in such cases as this, you would not have a man convicted once in a thousand years, because, as Chief Justice O'Brien says, it is impossible to know a man's motive. But back of that there is this fact, as stated by Mr. Justice Ritchie, that there was or may have been negligence in the handling of the gun. The fact that a man does a thing and damage results is evidence of negligence without anything further. Again, pointing a loaded gun at another being prohibited, if a man simply points a gun at another without intending to shoot at all, and the gun goes off, he is guilty of manslaughter. The whole matter resolves itself into this—that the case should have been left to a second jury, and if the administration of justice in this country is going to be so poorly guarded that a man who meets another in a byway, where no one sees him, and murders him, and is pardoned because there is no evidence of any motive, beyond the commission of the offence, I can assure this House that the crime of murder will be much more frequent in this country in the future than it has been in the past.

Dorchester Penitentiary..... $48,700

Mr. CALVERT. In connection with the Estimates for the Department of Justice, I desire, even at this late date, to call the attention of the committee for a few moments to an expenditure in connection with that department. I refer particularly to the expenditure in connection with the late London election trial, and I may say that I regret very much that my hon. friend for London (Mr. Beattie) is not present, because I am sure he would agree with me in what I have to say in reference to this question. I asked the House for an order, which was granted some time ago, for copies of the account of Mr. H. H. Robertson, registrar of the election court trial held in London in the fall of 1897, determining the right of Thomas Beattie, Esq., to sit as member for the city of London, in connection with the said trial, vouchers and certificates and all correspondence relating thereto. I may say in connection with this that under section 41 of the Dominion Controverted Election Act, the judges are empowered to employ stenographers, and the expense thereof shall be considered as costs of the case and chargeable to the unsuccessful party. Section 43 of the same Act provides that the judges shall forward to the Speaker of the House of Commons a copy of the evidence or notes of evidence taken at the trial, and by an Order in Council dated 22nd December, 1875, the fees to be paid the registrar of the election court for a copy of the notes sent to the Speaker of the House of Commons shall be 10 cents per folio of 100 words.

Now, you would expect that with the liberal allowance of 10 cents per folio and with the system of type-writers now in use, whereby several copies can be made at one and the same time, no further charge would be made to the original cost. The stenographer engaged in connection with the London election trial was Mr. Nelson R. Butcher, and he was ordered by the judges to make a copy of the evidence. He did so, and presented an account for 7,962 folios at 10 cents per folio, or $796.20. He also presented an account for $180.60, being for twenty-one days employed as stenographer and travelling expenses in connection therewith, or a total amount of $976.80, and the trial judges issued an order ex parte, without the knowledge of the petitioner, that this large sum of $976.80 should be paid out of the $1,000 deposited by the petitioner, and it was so paid. Then Mr. H. H. Robertson, registrar of the election court, and the son of one of the presiding judges, received a copy of the evidence from the stenographer, which he got for nothing, mailed the same to the Speaker of the House of Commons, and presented his account to the Department of Justice for a similar amount to that already paid. The Auditor General, when he received this account, refused to pass it for the full amount, but reduced it by 451 folios, or from 7,962 to 7,511, and the Government paid Mr. Robertson $751.10 for a copy of the evidence that he had received for nothing, and which he had simply mailed to the Speaker of the House of Commons.

As I understand it, the expenses that shall be paid by the unsuccessful party, so far as the stenographer is concerned, are $5 per day and travelling expenses, and that the charge for copying the evidence shall be paid by the Government, and when Mr. Robertson received from the Government this $751.10, the petitioner certainly expected that the money taken from his deposit would be returned to him, less the expenditure of $5 per day and travelling expenses due to the stenographer. But Mr. Robertson refused to return the money, and the counsel for the petitioner applied to the trial judge on the 8th November, 1897 to hear evidence why this money should be returned, and the judges refused to hear evidence.

In order that the House may be placed in full possession of the facts, I must ask your attention, Mr. Speaker for a few moments while I read part of the correspondence, which will make it perfectly plain that an injustice was done in this case. The first communication was from the solicitors for the petitioner.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman tell me what interference he suggests, either on the part of this House or the Government?

Mr. CALVERT. I ask that if it is at all possible this money should be returned and the Government should take some steps to have it returned. If not, we have an Order in Council of over twenty years' standing that I do not think is of any importance at present, and if nothing more can be done, we could have that amended or wiped out entirely, and in the future would not have expenses of this kind imposed on the petitioner or the Government.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Nothing, however, can be done in this case.

Mr. CALVERT. I am not sure of that. I will read part of the evidence, and the hon. gentleman can see whether the Justice Department can do anything or not.

London, Canada, November 10th, 1897.

The Right Honourable Sir Oliver Mowat, Minister of Justice,
Ottawa.

London Election Petition.—Fewings vs. Beattie.

Sir,—We beg to say that we are instructed to write you as to the payment of the stenographer's charges in this case, under the following circumstances:—

The court stenographer at the trial of this petition was Mr. Nelson R. Butcher. Upon the fiat of the trial judge he received out of the petitioner's deposit $976.80, of which sum $180.60 were for 21 days' attendance and travelling expenses, and $796.20 were for making copies of evidence. For this payment Mr. Butcher made and delivered to the registrar of the court, Mr. H. H. Robertson, three complete copies of the evidence taken at the trial of the petition, of which one copy is now at Osgoode Hall, a second copy is in the hands of the trial judges, and the third copy was sent to the Speaker of the House of Commons under section 43 of the Dominion Controverted Elections Act.

Mr. H. H. Robertson thereupon made out his bill against the Government for his services as registrar, in which he charged (under the tariff as fixed by the Order in Council of 22nd December, 1875) 10 cents per folio for a copy of the evidence, and it was allowed, and actually received from the Government, in addition to his charges—$751.10 for a copy of the evidence (Auditor General apparently not finding as many folios of evidence as Mr. Butcher had charged).

The firm of Kerr, McDonald & Davidson, as well as ourselves, had some correspondence with your department during the present year, and we were advised, as we understood, that the unsuccessful party should pay the stenographer's per diem allowance and expenses, and that the charge for copying evidence would be defrayed by the Government out of the grant for legislation, and that the registrar of the court, on receiving the tariff allowance of 10 cents per folio should settle with the stenographer for copying the evidence, or if payment for this had been previously made out of the petitioner's deposit that the registrar should refund the amount received by him therefor.

Acting on this advice we caused an application to be made to Mr. H. H. Robertson to refund the sum of $751.10 received by him as above, and when he paid no attention to this request, counsel for the petitioner and respondent made an application to Justices Ferguson and Robertson, the trial judges, for a direction that Mr. H. H. Robertson should bring the above mentioned sum into court. Then application was made on Monday, November 8th, but their Lordships positively refused to hear it, or even to allow it to be discussed.

We ought to mention that on the 19th of December, 1891, a number of the judges of the High Court of Justice for Ontario assumed to make a rule for payment of the stenographer's charges out of the petitioner's deposit. This rule appears to be contrary to the statute, but if it means that the judges pay the stenographer out of the deposit for copying the evidence, it must mean that they pay him for as many copies as they need, and especially for the copy which the judges have to forward to the Speaker of the House, and that the amount so drawn from the deposit should be subsequently made good by the amount paid by the Government for such copy. Considering the manner in which copies of evidence are prepared, and that in practice four or five copies cost no more than one copy, it is little short of an outrage that the judges should pay the stenographer $796.10 from moneys in court for two copies of evidence for their own use, and expect the department to pay as much more for the third copy required by the statute.

We submit that the respondent and the petitioner have been treated unjustly and illegally by the judges and the registrar, and as the latter are accountable only to Parliament, we beg to lay the facts of the case before you, and we venture to ask that the moneys improperly taken should be made good by the Government from the parliamentary grant for legislation, or from such other moneys as may be voted by Parliament for the purpose.

We have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servants,
(Sgd.) MACBETH & MACPHERSON.

When the Department of Justice received this communication they immediately wrote to Mr. Robertson setting forth the facts of the case as presented in the communication from Macbeth & Macpherson, and Mr. Robertson answered Mr. Newcombe in this way:

Hamilton, November 24th, 1897.

To the Deputy Minister of Justice,
Ottawa.

Re London Election Petition.

Sir,—I had the honour on the 20th instant to acknowledge the receipt of your favour of the 18th instant.

Mr. CALVERT.

You are correctly informed as to the payments to me, as registrar, at the above trial, of $751.10 for one copy of the notes of evidence annexed by me to the report of the court to the Speaker, being at the rate of 10 cents per 100 words, payable under the Order in Council of the 22nd of December, 1875, but you have been misinformed in the representation that the court stenographer was paid for the same copy out of the petitioner's deposit, or for the copy in respect of which I, as registrar, received payment. The court stenographer has, in addition to his expenses and daily attendance, been paid for one copy only out of the deposit, at the rate of 10 cents per 100 words, which was required to file of record under rule 51 of the general rules made by the judges under the Controverted Elections Act (for which the Order in Council does not provide), and not for making three copies as has been represented to you.

I do not think it is necessary for me to read all the letter sent me by Mr. Robertson.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
You had better read it all, in justice to him, as you are making a charge against him.

Mr. CALVERT—

Section 41 of the Controverted Elections Act provides that:

"The judge may, in his discretion, employ a shorthand writer to take down the oral evidence given by witnesses, at the trial of the petition, and the expense of employing such shorthand writers shall pay costs in the case."—27 Vic., chap. 10, sec. 51.

In furtherance of this provision, on the 19th of December, 1891, the judges of the Supreme Court then on the rota for the trial of election petitions passed the resolution, of which the following is a copy:—

"December 19th, 1891.

"Present:

"Osler, Ferguson, Rose, Robertson, Falconbridge, MacLennan, MacMahon and Street, J.J.

"As to the reporters' charges in the Dominion election cases:

"The judges who tried the petition will certify to the accuracy of the account of the reporter. The reporter will then apply to a judge of the court in which the petition was filed and the deposit made, who will, by his fiat, or order, direct payment of the account out of the deposit.

"The reporter's charges, in the opinion of the judges present, should be taxed to the successful party as part of his costs of the cause, and should be treated as actual disbursements in respect of evidence, taxable in ordinary action between party and party, within the meaning of subsection 4 of section 52 of the Controverted Elections Act, as amended by the Act of 1891."

And although I am in no way responsible or answerable for what the judges may order, yet as I know what the practise has been since that time, I may, for your information, point out that acting on this, all the judges assigned to try election petitions have since then given fiats authorizing payment of "the expense of employing a shorthand writer" out of the deposit, and "such employment being adjudged to include actual travelling expenses, board, and the usual rate per folio allowed by the tariff, for extending the notes, never in any case, however, exceeding the rate of 10 cents per 100 words, for one complete copy of the notes."

It is admitted that in no case under this rule are the parties prejudiced, for the reason, first, that such expenses are by the statute declared to be "costs in the case," so that the successful party is entitled to tax such as disbursements against the unsuccessful party, and recover them with his other costs for which he obtains judgment. In case petitioner is successful, he would be entitled to tax such payment as disbursements against the respondent, and, on the other hand, if the petition is dismissed and the petitioner ordered to pay the costs, the respondent may tax such expenses against the petitioner, and the amount with such other taxable costs to which he may be entitled, would first be deducted out of the deposit, and any balance over would go to the petitioner. In case the deposit is not sufficient to meet the whole amount for which respondent has judgment, he would be entitled to execution against the petitioner for the balance. That is clearly the law as determined by the judges.

Owing to the extreme length of the London cases, and to the fact that the court, under the amended law, is composed of two judges, instead of one, each of the judges required a copy of the notes of evidence, when judgment was reserved for the purpose of determining the case. but the stenographer charged, and was paid out of the deposit, for but one copy in all, at the rate of 10 cents per 100 words.

Upon the decision come to by the judges in December, 1891, as above set out, every judge assigned to try an election petition has since acted, and granted fiats for "the expense of employing the shorthand writer," as indicated, to be paid out of the petitioner's deposit, the registrar, at the outset, making an arrangement on his own account, for the furnishing or providing the copy of the evidence to be annexed to the report to the Speaker, and which I, as registrar, forwarded by direction of the judges, to the Speaker, and for which, as registrar, I was entitled to 10 cents per 100 words under the Order in Council before referred to.

The registrar is not paid out of the deposit or by any fiat or order of the court.

Speaking generally, it may happen that the unsuccessful party is not a man of substance, and the successful party being unable to recover the amount of his judgments, if he should be the respondent (by reason of the thousand dollar deposit not being sufficient to pay the whole of this taxable cost), might just as well call upon the Government to make good the difference as to require the amount paid to the registrar, under the Order in Council, for the copy of the evidence which he has to furnish for the Speaker, to be paid into court to supplement the deposit, which it is submitted cannot be done so long as the law is as it is.

I submit, therefore, with great respect, that, so far as the registrar is concerned, there is no force in the claim made by either the petitioner or the respondent in regard to the amount which has been paid to him for the copy of the evidence forwarded to the Speaker.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) H. H. ROBERTSON,
Registrar.

Immediately on receipt of this, the Deputy Minister, Mr. Newcombe again wrote to the stenographer, as follows :

November 27th, 1897.

Re London Election Trial.

Sir,—A question has arisen with regard to the payment of $751.10 to Mr. Robertson, registrar of the court, for copy of the evidence furnished to the Speaker of the House of Commons. It has been represented to me that you were the court stenographer at the trial and that you were paid out of the petitioner's deposit the sum of $976.80, of which $180.60 were for 21 days' attendance and travelling expenses, and $796.20 were for making copies of the evidence. It is stated that for the consideration of $796.20 you furnished to the registrar three complete copies of the evidence, of which one copy is filed of record, another copy is in the hands of the trial judges, and the third copy was sent to the Speaker. I have communicated with Mr. Robertson, stating the facts as above, and he replies that I am misinformed. He says that you were not paid out of the petitioner's deposit for the copy which he sent to the Speaker, and says that you have been paid for one copy only out of the deposit at the rate of 10 cents for 100 words, which was the copy required to be filed of record ; and I understand him to say that he had an arrangement with you on his own account for the furnishing of the copy which was forwarded to the Speaker. In these circumstances I would like to have a statement from you as to whether you furnished three copies of the evidence to Mr. Robertson, and if so, whether you were paid or expect to be paid anything for those copies in addition to the amount which you received from the petitioner's deposit. Was there any and what arrangement between you and Mr. Robertson by which he was to pay you an additional amount for the copy sent to the Speaker ? This matter is important for two reasons : (1) If the facts are as represented to me by the solicitors, it would seem that Mr. Robertson had received an amount of $751.10 to which he is not entirely fairly entitled, and (2) because it seems to show the necessity for an amendment of the present Order in Council, to prevent similar occurrences in the future.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) E. L. NEWCOMBE,
D. M. J.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. To whom was that addressed ?

Mr. CALVERT. That was addressed to Mr. Butcher, the stenographer. Then Mr. Butcher replied to the Deputy Minister of Justice on the 10th of December, 1897, as follows :—

E. L. Newcombe, Esq., Q.C.,
Deputy Minister of Justice,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter re the London Election trial, and in reply beg to say that I shall be glad indeed to give the facts concerning the reporting. I have been away on circuit at the Hammond murder case, and other courts, hence the delay in replying.

The court engaged me to report the case in the usual way ; by that I mean in the same way as all reporters have been engaged for this purpose as far back as I can remember.

Nothing was said as to terms, because I understood I would receive the same rate we have always received for this work, viz., $5 per day and expenses, and 10 cents per folio for my transcript. Nothing was said as to the number of copies, but I intended to give the best service that I could to the judges for the 10 cents. If the case had been an ordinary one as to length and judgment given at the close, I would have expected to have supplied each judge with a copy and have received 10 cents. This case turned out to be an extraordinary one as to length, and there were adjournments from time to time, which necessitated that each judge should have a copy before him of as much as I could have ready. I took the precaution to make a number of copies in case anything should happen to the judges' copies, or in case I had an opportunity to sell extra ones.

I knew, of course, that the registrar would forward, as he always does, a copy, and receive his 10 cents, as has always been the custom, and I do remember saying to Mr. Robertson he had better forward a copy, or deposit it in some place of security, because it would take three months to make another, and that my disbursements had been $500 or over.

The judges required their copies for use in preparing judgments, and of course would mark passages and make their own private notes in the margins, and in order that they should be able to do this, I bound up our own office copy, which I gave to the registrar, without charge, and I presume this is the one he sent to Ottawa.

Mr. Robertson was not to pay me, nor has he paid me, nor will I receive payment for anything supplied to him in this connection. You ask if Mr. Robertson had an arrangement with me to supply him with the copy he forwarded. To this all I can say is that I knew he would forward a copy and be paid under the Order in Council, and that I would receive nothing for it.

Strictly speaking, I suppose for the 10 cents the courts would only have asked from me one copy, but I knew 10 cents would be all I would receive, and for it I wanted to give the best service that I could. The case turned out so extraordinary as to length and circumstances, I really had to give more than value for the ten cents, or put the judges to inconvenience. When Mr. Robertson says there was an arrangement between us as to his having a copy, he is no doubt correct, because it was an understood thing, though I do not remember any words passing. I intended to do this as in all other cases as far back as I can remember: the registrar gets his copy for nothing, so far as he is concerned.

Some reporters have dickered with the registrar for the sale of a copy, and in order that the registrar should not be able to get a copy from which to have another one made to forward, I understand, have delayed filing the records until it was too late to have one made. This friction causes inconvenience to the judge. I adopted the other course, of giving good service to the courts. The registrar gets his payment as registrar, and I have not considered I was entitled to anything as registrar; but I have always thought the Order in Council should be amended so that the stenographer would be paid by the Speaker, and that the judges would not have to pay the stenographer out of the deposit.

You say this matter is important, and on behalf of the reporters I fully concur. It is not my place to criticise any payment to the registrar, but by reason of this double system of paying for transcripts the reporter has had to work for less than a fair remuneration, and has had to rely upon his chance of selling copies to the parties, and in the London case, by reason of the fact that I was paid out of the fund, I supplied counsel with copies at a nominal sum, so that in that way they had the benefit, to a certain extent, of the payment from that source. In the London case my disbursements must have been about $500, while the work would have equalled a month's session of the House of Commons, and it took us several months to get it out, with the aid of our whole office staff.

Mr. CALVERT.

It is fair that I should state that before the application was made, the petitioner's lawyers in London wrote me saying they wished me to understand they considered me entitled to all I had been paid.

I supposed the fact is that the provision for paying the registrar for a copy has reference to a time when there was no shorthand writer, and when he had to make a copy from the judge's notes and forward. If the reporter receives the 10 cents instead of the registrar, though he cannot work for 10 cents with profit, yet I think it will be a fair payment by the Government, and he must look for his profits in supplying copies to the parties, unless the Government should see fit to make it 15 cents for four copies, and let the parties have their copies gratis.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

NELSON R. BUTCHER.

Now, after receiving that communication, the Deputy Minister of Justice sums up the whole case in this letter to the solicitors at London:

15th December, 1897.

London Election Petition.

Gentlemen,—Referring to your letter of the 10th instant, I have the honour to inform you that I have corresponded with Mr. Robertson and Mr. Butcher, the stenographer, and find that the facts as set out by you appear to be substantially admitted. In these circumstances it appears to me the retention by Mr. Robertson of the $751.10 which he received is quite improper, and payment to him would, I have no doubt, not have been made had the attention of the Auditor General been called to the matter before payment. As the matter stands, however, Mr. Robertson holds the money, and I presume (although I have not made a formal demand upon him) that he will decline to repay it. There is, as you are aware, an Order in Council of 22nd December, 1875, which provides that the registrars shall receive among other payments "for a copy of the notes of evidence under section 29 and of any other documents required by the judge to be copied for the Speaker of the House of Commons at the rate of 10 cents per 100 words." That provision was made, I assume, at a time when stenographers were not employed to take down evidence, and when the practise was for the judge to take the evidence himself and file it after the trial, in which case the registrar would be the proper person to make the copy and receive payment. The reason for the rule that the registrar should be paid for a copy has, however, practically disappeared with the introduction of the shorthand writer into the trial, the real intention of Council doubtless being that the officer who did the work should be paid for the copy, and I have no doubt that justice would be done in the present case by the registrar depositing the money to the credit of the petitioner's deposit, inasmuch as the stenographer has been paid out of that fund all that he claims and expects to receive in respect of transcribing the evidence and furnishing copies.

I am very much surprised to hear that the judges would not consider an application to compel the registrar to so deposit the money. Since they have refused to do so, however, I have been unable to devise any means by which you can compel the registrar to make the deposit or to refund the money. I think if any reasonably hopeful course could be suggested that the department would be willing to adopt it, but under the letter of the Order in Council which, I believe, has been heretofore consistently acted upon, the registrar was entitled to the payment, and legally, I suppose, was not less entitled because he got the copy which he furnished for nothing. If that be so, we would fail in proceedings to make him refund, and of course the department has no locus standi to take proceedings to compel him to account to the petitioner.

I will be glad to consider any further observations or suggestions which you may have to make upon the subject, but I must add that I do not see any reason arising out of the circumstances of this case on account of which the Government should recoup the deposit. The money has been paid in the only way in which the Government ever undertook or became liable to pay it, and if the registrar declines to make the proper application of it, that would seem to be a matter between him and the parties beneficially entitled, and although we would be willing to do what we reasonably can to ensure the proper disposition of the money, yet we cannot, I think, assume any further liability. I may say, further, that the difficulty, so far as the parties to the proceedings are concerned, seems to arise principally from the rule made by the judges that the stenographer's charges should be paid out of the petitioner's deposit. I am considering the authority of the judges to make such a rule, but as at present advised, I am of opinion that it is inconsistent with the statute and therefore ultra vires.

I have the honour to be, sirs,

Your obedient servant,

(Sgd.) E. L. NEWCOMBE,
Deputy Minister of Justice.

Macbeth & McPherson, London.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the expenses in connection with this trial were enormous. Of course the trial lasted a long time, and the expenses for which the Government are responsible were also very great in comparison with other election trials, the London election trial exceed them all. Take, for instance, the South Brant trial where two judges were employed in each trial the same as London, and each judge received $100. The expenses in connection with South Brant, all told, were $248.75; in connection with North Brant, $365.52—this is the amount of money paid by the Government. East Durham, $236.45; North Grey, $227.15; East Northumberland, $240.63. In connection with the London election trial we paid for the judges, $200; sheriff, 21 days, $105; sheriff, four notices, $6; advertising, "Free Press," London, $3.60; advertising, "Advertiser," London, $3.60; 7 constables, 21 days, $1.50 each per day, $220.50; crier calling cause, 60 cents; administering 131 oaths, $19.65. Then we paid Mr. Robertson for 24 days $144; paid Mr. Robertson as registrar, $23.65; paid Mr. Robertson, hotel expenses, $55; paid laundry for Mr. Robertson, 40 cents, making a total of $223.05 paid to Mr. Robertson for twenty-four days during which he was engaged in connection with the trial. Then he also received $751.10 for simply mailing a copy of the evidence he received from the stenographer to the Speaker of the House of Commons. Then the petitioner was called on to pay out of this fund to Mr. Butcher, the stenographer, $976.80. So we have these two young men employed twenty-four days, and giving other twenty-four days for copying the evidence we have these men receiving a total of $1,950.95, a sum equal to that paid to two "Hansard" reporters who spend four months in this House, or equal to the indemnity of two members who spend a similar portion of the year here. I think the judges acted wrongly in this case. Whether these claims were justified or not, and the deputy Minister of Justice has his doubts on the point, I would ask the Government if it is possible that they can take such proceedings as will result in the money being returned to the treasury and from the treasury to the petitioner, who, I think, is entitled to it; and if not, I think the Department of Justice should at all events wipe out the Order in Council, which cannot be of any use in the present state of affairs.

Kingston Penitentiary..... $167,000

Mr. BRITTON. In regard to Kingston penitentiary, what is intended by addition to prison equipment, $5,400?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. A new wing has been built, and it must be equipped and rendered fit for use by providing beds and furniture.

For a line or lines of steamers to run between St. John or Halifax or either and the West Indies and South America.... $78,000

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if any representations have been made to him with respect to the character of the steamers on this route? There is a feeling that the steamers which are employed for this work are not up to the requirements of the service. A very severe competition comes from New York, and certainly the influence of the department ought to be exerted to give us better steamers. There is a very good subsidy paid for this service, but nevertheless the steamers are not at all up to the requirements of modern travel. They are not only slow but they are not fitted up as they should be. It is quite apparent to every person that the West India trade has not developed as it should, in view of the assistance given to the West Indian steamers. There is complaint also that the Ontario people are not making use of the facilities which are afforded to them by this service to develop the trade between Canada and the West Indies. However, I am not so much concerned with that as I am concerned with the desire of the people of the maritime provinces that better steamers should be employed.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Ellis) that some complaints have been made. This service, however, is under a contract which lasts for a period of five years, and the service appears not to have been worse during the last year than it was heretofore. I have made a note of what my hon. friend (Mr. Ellis) said, and I will certainly call upon these gentlemen to show cause why they cannot improve their service so far as the terms of the contract fairly permit us to require it of them.

Steam service between Victoria and San Francisco $5,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is done with that money now?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is a kind of treaty obligation. It was part of our original obligation to British Columbia that we should retain this communication between San Francisco and Victoria.

Mr. FOSTER. Formerly the vote was much larger.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. My hon. friends, from British Columbia have not made any complaint of the service. Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) any experience of these steamers in his peregrinations?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I may say they are very good boats and give a very good service.

Mr. FOSTER. The question is the benefit of spending $5,000 on a steamboat service at this date when you have trains running daily to carry the mails.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I grant you, but this is a treaty obligation.

Mr. FOSTER. There is an obligation and the amount of money formerly was much larger, but as a result of the expression of opinion that took place, this vote was reduced on the idea that the money would be more beneficial for other services in British Columbia than this one, such as a service running north rather than running south.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I apprehend we should have the consent of the British Columbia legislature to change the vote.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand, but I do not think it would be difficult to get that.

Steam communication during the season of 1898, i.e., from the opening to the closing of navigation between Gaspé Basin and Dalhousie $12,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is the "Admiral" running there now?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No, I advertised for tenders and Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

the steamer "Monticello" got the contract as being the lowest tenderer.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they performing a similar service?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, at a lower rate.

Mr. FOSTER. I must say my hon. friend has got a very excellent boat.

Steam communication during the season of 1898, i.e., for not less than 32 full round trips, between St. John and Halifax, via Yarmouth and other way ports. $7,000

Mr. FOSTER. Is the trip continuous from St. John to Halifax by the same steamer, or is there transshipment to another steamer at Yarmouth?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The line is a continuous one in the sense that it is conducted by the company, but there is transshipment at Yarmouth.

Steam communication from 1st July, 1898, to 30th June, 1899, between Quebec and Gaspé Basin, touching at intermediate ports $5,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he has under consideration the subject of granting any subventions to steamship lines to South American ports?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No. As the hon. gentleman will see in the Supplementary Estimates, we have one or two propositions to submit to the House, but we do not propose any subsidies for steamship lines to South America.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I did not ask whether the Government intended to propose them, but whether they proposed to consider the subject.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I cannot say that it is under consideration. It may possibly be taken up, but at present the reports made to us would hardly warrant us in coming down to the House and asking for additional subsidies.

Mr. FOSTER. What, in brief, were the arduous labours of Mr. Sheppard?—I do not mean to Mr. Sheppard; I mean to the country.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity of perusing Mr. Sheppard's report, which is published in the last report of the Department of Trade and Commerce. It does not occupy more than 150 pages according to my recollection.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the hon. gentleman save me that labour by stating in brief the substance of Mr. Sheppard's report?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. To say the candid truth, Mr.

Sheppard's report was not very encouraging to our hope of doing much trade in South America, except possibly in the Argentine Republic. There, he thinks, there is some opening, and the Government will have an agent who will endeavour to do some work there. Certain lines of our manufactures might be introduced into the Argentine Republic, such as agricultural implements. On the whole, I think it was well to reconnoitre the region. There does not appear at the present moment to be any great apparent opening for extending the sale of our manufactures in South America—not as much, in fact, as we had hoped. That is, no doubt, partly due to the fact that political complications have very much disorganized the Brazilian market, in which at one time we carried on some trade. On the western coast we are very much handicapped in the matter of cheap rates. German ships that sail from Hamburg lay down goods there at rates which are almost ridiculously low. We might do something in Mexico; there is possibly a chance there; but, as the hon. gentleman is aware, on the east coast, the Americans have a great advantage over us by reason of the much greater nearness of their ports and their superior facilities in the matter of railway communication. Two or three great lines of railroad coming from various parts of the United States centre in Mexico. There might be something done in Mexico on the ground that the Mexicans would be glad to trade with Great Britain or with Canada, rather than from our inherent natural advantages. We are making inquiry to see what can be done. Still, I am bound to say that the results of Mr. Sheppard's investigations, except in the Argentine Republic, are not very encouraging.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the hon. Minister tell us what the reconnoitering cost in the way of salaries and expenses?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It cost a good deal. Mr. Sheppard was paid—I am speaking from recollection—something like $2,800 and his expenses for the time he spent. Travelling in that region is, of course, pretty expensive, and his expenses amounted to from $300 to $500 a month, according to circumstances.

Mr. FOSTER. How many months was he away?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Seven or eight months, I should think, and a month to compile the report.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the total cost?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The total cost, I suppose, would amount to $7,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is a good deal more than the trade will be in the next quarter of a century.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Not altogether; but I am bound to say that it would make a reasonable percentage of the profits of the trade we are now carrying on in those countries. But it was probably worth while incurring the expenditure for the purpose of ascertaining what was possible to be done, and I am bound to say that Mr. Sheppard took great pains to satisfy himself and the commercial public on that point. In course of time some results may flow from his labours; but the immediate results were not very encouraging.

Mr. FOSTER. While I can congratulate Mr. Sheppard on a pleasant and agreeable voyage, with certain financial results to himself, I am certain I cannot congratulate my hon. friend on the expenditure of $7,000 or $8,000 on that wild-goose chase.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think there were some trips of my hon. friend to the West Indies and elsewhere that had no more apparent results.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend might have got from records in current histories, and from the trade returns of other countries, just about as much information as Mr. Sheppard brought, and that $7,000 might have been used in a much more advantageous way. How much per day, might I ask, did Mr. Sheppard get?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. $10 or $12 per day, I think, and expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. A very nice trip. I suppose in the meantime the Government got rid of any little trouble they might have had if the trip had not been taken.

To provide for the Administration of the Chinese Immigration Act, including remuneration to Trade and Commerce and Customs officers.....	$ 3,500
To meet Canada's proportion of expenditure in connection with the International Customs Bureau.....	600
Commercial Agencies, including expenses in connection with negotiations of treaties or in extension of commercial relations	20,000

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend evidently contemplates excursions in some other far-distant region. What is the increase of $5,000 in the last item for?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Various expenses have been charged to this vote at various times—for instance, expenses connected with trade negotiations with the United States or elsewhere; and at present I have a considerable number of new applications. For example, there appears to be some reasonable chance of developing a considerable trade with South Africa in a number of articles which we produce; and we shall probably have to send somebody, but at more moderate rates, that I can answer for, to investigate the prospects in that region. Then, strong applications have been made to me with respect to sending some person to the West Indies to see if my hon. friend's recent generousities there will be productive of any good results. These two, and possibly one or two matters which may come up, will be likely to absorb at least $5,000, I am afraid.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very glad to hear my hon. friend make the admission that the trips that may be inaugurated during the coming year may not be so expensive as, for instance, the South American trip. But why should we send some one to South Africa? Has not the member of the Cabinet from Quebec done South Africa already? Has the face of the country changed so completely since his trip that some one else must be sent to reconnoitre the land? Or is not sufficient reliance put upon his report? It does seem like a want of confidence in him by his colleagues, and a want of confidence all the more remarkable since he has a large business experience not to be expected from the generality of persons sent scouting down South America. I do not see why any money should be spent with reference to that country. As to the West Indies, after the extreme generosity of the Minister of Finance and the extremely friendly way in which his generosity was met by the Island of Jamaica, which proceeded to put up the duties on bacon and other agricultural products, it might be well to spend some money in sending some one to see the Governments there. I am not sure, however, that it would not be better, if the hon. gentleman himself would perform mission work upon the gentleman by his side.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I ask if the member of the Cabinet without portfolio made any official report on his mission to South Africa?

Mr. DOBELL. My visit to South Africa was entirely for my own pleasure and experience.

Mr. FOSTER. And the profit of the country?

Mr. DOBELL. That is always my first aim in everything I do, and I may say that I brought back from South Africa an offer from the Government of the Cape of Good Hope to join Canada in subsidizing a line of steamers to Cape Town. At that time there was no line of steamers leaving this continent at all for Cape Town, but a line was being arranged from New York, and the gentlemen who were carrying out that scheme offered to go to Canada if Canada offered them the subsidy which they suggested and of which Cape Town would pay its share. At that time the Opposition were my friends.

Mr. FOSTER. And are yet. We do not cherish any bad feeling.

Mr. DOBELL. And I reported to them the scheme, which, I believe, was well worthy of their attention, but just at that time they were greatly in love with Australia, and did not think there was room for a second opening. A line of steamers was established between New York and Cape Town, to make monthly trips. That service has since been increased to a fortnightly one, and this spring a gentleman came to New York to establish a weekly service from that city to South Africa. Yet we have no service from Canada to that country. I do believe that South Africa would afford a field for a large portion of our surplus manufactures and agricultural implements. It would take also large quantities of flour and other products of the field, and I think it is a place worthy of our serious attention during the next two or three years.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce any report from Ecuador recently?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There are possibilities, no doubt, but on the western coast of South America we find ourselves considerably handicapped by the operations of German merchants who succeeded in inducing their vessel owners to give them extremely cheap freights, much cheaper than we can obtain either from British Columbia or Canada.

Mr. INGRAM. What is the item to provide for the administration of Chinese immigration?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There is a tax per head on Chinese coming to this country, and that is collected under the supervision of the officers of the Trade and Commerce Department.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The last sub-item in this item, for commercial agencies, including the expenses connected with the negotiation of treaties, &c., shows an increase.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I was just explaining to the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) how that was likely to be expended. It will be expended chiefly in promoting trade with South Africa, and probably also in sending some gentleman to the various West India Islands.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There was a discussion as to whether Canada should have a commercial agent at Washington. This is not intended for that purpose?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No. That was a larger question which was raised. It is one which has been discussed here before, and that is the extreme desirability—an opinion I still entertain—of having some one attached to the British Embassy, who would directly represent Canada—having a diplomatic agent in Washington in connection with the British Embassy.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has that been decided on by the Government?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not opposed to a grant for commercial agencies, providing that the money is spent really in fields which show some prospect of being remunerative in the way of increased trade. But if this vote is merely to give jaunts to these who have rendered party service to distant fields, that will not be the intention with which it was initiated. There is one remark made by my hon. friend which I would ask him to think over and that is as to the use of this money for travelling expenses to and from Washington. It was not the intention, when this vote was inaugurated, to ask it for that purpose, but for commercial agencies, pure and simple. These trips are in the way of treaty making, and I think the expense should come under a separate item and not be taken out of this vote.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The Auditor General is extremely careful in his construction of any votes of the kind and very apt to bring us up short.

Mr. FOSTER. The trouble has been that heretofore—I do not know how it is now—the Government were successful in having a very tolerant Minister of Justice.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We may have to use some portion possibly, in the absence of a distinct appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. On the face of it, this is not meant to be used for Minister's travelling expenses.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. In anything connected with the promotion of a trade treaty, it seems to me it would be appropriate.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If a Minister goes to Washington on a trade matter, it is pretty hard to charge that to his travelling expenses.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not charged to his travelling expenses in connection with his department, but is charged against him for the specific purpose for which it was used. It is shown as the expenses of the Minister, but for such and such a purpose. It is very easily arranged. I know my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) is somewhat sensitive on this subject, since his European trip.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think I am quite right in being sensitive. If I am travelling in the Dominion on the business of the department. I charge my expenses to travelling expenses of the Minister. But suppose, as was the case the other day, I am sent outside of Canada to represent my colleagues in a matter not having to do with my department more than any other. I do not see that I should charge my travelling expenses in the same way. It would not be fair to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the hon. gentleman know that it has been done before? It would appear as the Minister's travelling expenses on his trip to Washington.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I would draw a distinction as between a matter relating to a matter of trade, a settlement of a boundary or something of that kind, which could not be charged fairly to commercial agencies.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. Minister (Sir Louis Davies) has given us a statement we are all delighted to hear, that we are to have a commission, probably sitting in Quebec, to deal with these international questions. The hon. gentleman will have to have a vote for that, I suppose?

Mr. FOSTER. I see that the vote here has been increased, and reads: "commercial agencies, including expenses in connection with negotiations with treaties or in extension or commercial relation." I see that what I said was not strictly germane.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is this increased vote intended to cover the expenses of that commission?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Some portion of it might be applied to that purpose. Of course the expenses incurred in a matter of that kind would depend entirely on the length of time the commission happened to sit. But hon. gentlemen, I think, will agree with me in one thing and that is that any commissioners who come here as guests of the nation should be properly and handsomely entertained.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am sure we would all agree to that. It was in no spirit of criticism that I asked the question.

Mr. GILLIES. I happened to be absent from the Chamber, but before we pass from the Department of Trade and Commerce, I would ask the hon. Minister a question. I may not be here when the Supplementary Estimates are being discussed, and I desire some information on the subject. I would like to tell the Minister—perhaps he may not be aware of it as he is necessarily not so familiar with the matter as I am, that this service was performed for some years by the Bras d'Or Steam Navigation Company. That company have gone out of business, and the route of this service has been taken up by some other people. I desire to know from the Minister what company or association or person has entered into a contract with the department for the purposes of this service ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. As this item has been dropped and the subject might come up under items 42 and 43 of the Supplementary Estimates, and as I did not expect to take this matter up to-night, I have not the information at hand, but if the hon. gentleman will come to the department to-morrow, I will give him any information I can.

Mr. GILLIES. I would dislike very much calling at the department when the hon. Minister is not there, as I have done on several occasions.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I must have been attending the committees. But if my hon. friend will come at 10.30 to-morrow, I will endeavour to meet him.

Mr. GILLIES. I will keep the appointment.

Inspection of Staples—For the purchase and distribution of standards of grain and flour and other expenses under the Act $1,500

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend the ex-Controller of Inland Revenue (Mr. Wood, Brockville), wishes to be present when this item was taken up. If the Government have other items with which they could occupy the time, I should be glad to have this postponed.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). I have been speaking to my hon. friend (Mr. Wood, Brockville), the remarks he wishes to make he can make on the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. MONTAGUE. A special time might be set for this discussion.

Mr. DAVIN. In the early part of the session, I asked the hon. Minister whether he intended to take any steps to settle the question of the standards of grain and inspection and he told me it was under consideration. Will he tell me what has been done ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not know that I understand to what my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) alludes. We have a committee appointed to settle the standards. They met last fall and they will meet again this fall. I have not heard any complaints as to the way they settled the standards. The only complaints in connection with the inspection of grain can hardly be laid to the charge of the inspector. It is easy to mix the different qualities of grain after the wheat has been inspected and sent away from Port William or Port Arthur, and I do not think that any system of inspection could prevent that.

Mr. GILLIES.

Mr. DAVIN. What I referred to is this : There is a feeling that the standard question has not been solved and there is a very strong feeling against the mixing of scoured grain with the grain coming from the west and from Manitoba. This mixture makes a good wheat, no doubt, but a far lower class than the grain that could be furnished from the west and Manitoba. There is a strong feeling amongst a large class of farmers that the buyers, the traders in Liverpool, should have a standard of our North-west and Manitoba grain entirely undiluted by this discounting and admixture that takes place at Port William. At an early part of the session I asked the hon. gentleman if he would consider the question generally with a view of coming to a more satisfactory solution of this matter. I can assure the hon. gentleman that there are still some people in the west who think that a better arrangement can be made than even that which has been made. I know very well that the board is representative of the classes who are interested in this question ; nevertheless there is a feeling on the part of the farming community that though they are represented on that board, somehow or other they are not so represented but that interests antagonistic to them can pretty well have their own way.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I want to know exactly what my hon. friend wants. Does he object to the way in which the standard gauge is fixed by the board that meets at Winnipeg every fall ?

Mr. DAVIN. I say that board should be thoroughly representative. I do not think there is a single representative from so large and important a wheat-growing district as Western Assiniboia on that board. I know that some men taking a great interest in this question, feel that the efficiency of the board is lowered in consequence of the name of Mr. T. B. Baker having been omitted from it. He is one of the best wheat men in any part of Canada, a thoroughly practical man, a man who handles a large amount of grain, who has built elevators of his own, and who has the entire confidence of the farmers in the community where he lives. His name used to be on it, and I am afraid he has been omitted from the board for no other than unworthy reasons. When, in 1896, I spoke to my hon. friend about the constitution of that board and mentioned Mr. Baker's name he invariably said to me : Go and see so and so—mentioning the name of an hon. member in this House from a contiguous constituency. But the Minister must know that it was impossible for me to go to another member of this House when I wanted to deal with the Minister himself about the management of his department. I would appeal to the Minister to consult with Mr. Miall, who knows what an efficient man Mr. Baker is, and see if he cannot put Mr. Baker on the board. But there is the larger question of a grain standard. When I raised the question in the early part of the session, the hon. gentleman assured me that he intended to consider it, and that he would have a scheme forthcoming that would present a better solution of what I admit is a complex and difficult question. I am surprised to hear him say now that he considers the arrangement made for the grain standard last year as final.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have not the remotest idea who Mr. Baker is. The hon. gentleman does not appear to have any reason to complain of the way in which the standard was made up at Winnipeg, only he complains that Mr. Baker is not on the board. Well, I did the best I could to make a representative board by making it one-half of farmers, and the other half representatives of the millers and dealers. I thought it was only fair to give a large representation to the farming community who are really the producers of the wheat. I am wholly at a loss to understand at this moment why my hon. friend complains of the composition of that part of the board which represents the farming interests, that is to say, one-half of the board. Since this session began, I have received a large deputation of gentlemen interested in this very same question, but I do not remember that my hon. friend accompanied that deputation, though I know that nearly all the western members were there. We had a thorough consultation of the whole question, and I may say that the only cause of complaint I could learn was, not in settling the standard of the grain, but in the way grades of grain are mixed after it had been inspected. We all found there was a great difficulty in preventing that, when once the grain leaves the elevators, or when it is put on board ship after being inspected, or when not inspected at all. There is certainly a very difficult question to deal with in order to keep up the reputation of the grain by preventing that mixture. But even that meeting of representative men was not able to suggest any remedy.

Mr. DAVIN. Of course that is part of the question. But my hon. friend will recollect what he used to say to me in 1896 when I went to him and asked him in regard to the constitution of that board, he would say to me: Go and speak to so and so—as if an irresponsible member of this House was the master of his department.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I hope my hon. friend will not think I am wanting in courtesy. What I told my hon. friend probably was to this effect, that he was equally interested with the other western members representing the farming community, and they should be able to agree about the composition of the board to the satisfaction of themselves and the public.

Mr. DAVIN. I am afraid my hon. friend has forgotten what took place. I went to him three times in regard to one matter, which was a subject of public importance. In each case he mentioned that I had better go and speak to some other member, naming him, which I of course would not do. We are not fresh from an election and there is no prospect of a by-election, so the hon. gentleman will probably feel more free than he was in 1896, and I urge on him to consider whether a representative cannot be placed on the board from Western Assiniboia, and I cannot name a better representative or one who will commend himself more to the support of men on all sides than T. B. Baker.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I desire to point out an anomaly that occurs with respect to the Inland Revenue Act. In 1891 section 31 was substituted for section 130 of the Act. That was repealed and another section was substituted by the Act of 1895. Then in 1897 the same thing was done. The Act of 1891 was repealed and another was substituted, but no notice was taken of the Act of 1895. So you have the Act of 1891 twice repealed, and the Act of 1897 repealed, but no notice is taken of the Act of 1895. Confusion might arise and it is desirable to remove this anomaly.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The Bill was carefully prepared, and perhaps the hon. gentleman will point out the section in question.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will send a memorandum to the Minister.

Post Office—Outside Service—Increase of salaries of 105 letter carriers at $30 each and 24 clerks at $40 each..... $4,110

Mr. FOSTER. I desire an explanation of these increases.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). These increases apply to all these servants who have salaries less than $450 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. What was their former status?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The increase is $30 a year, and this will bring them up to $480.

Mr. FOSTER. Is not this practically giving the statutory increases to these clerks?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know whether it could be called statutory, but we are giving each of these servants $30. This increase is given to those having a salary of $450.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the hon. gentleman adopting the principle that this increase may be given, but for the time being it will be limited to a certain range of salary?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Government has not recommended to have this increase of $30 apply generally beyond those enjoying salaries of $450, but it does not say that this increase must stop at $480, and it will be quite competent to go to higher salaries on a future occasion. I do not think that $480 is adequate in some parts of the country, for example in British Columbia. It would not be fair to have an arbitrary standard throughout the Dominion as the cost of living varies.

Mr. FOSTER. The Government started out by boldly declaring that the statutory increases were to be a thing of the past. They were given by the late Government and would not be given by this Government. While during the first year the Estimates showed increases in departments presided over by particularly strong or persistent Ministers, these second year Estimates show in almost all the departments that the Minister picked out certain clerks and gave them statutory increases. Now comes the Postmaster General and by wholesale methods gives these statutory increases to 150 or 160 men in his department, while in other departments young men who are not receiving $480 a year, but whose work is more beneficial than that of these men, do not receive any increase. It just illustrates what we declared would be the result, namely, that it would come to be a matter of favour on the part of different Ministers, and not a uniform practice, because it would vary with the temper, persistency or power of the individual Minister. I am afraid my hon. friend will find he is doing the very thing to disorganize the service, which is a very bad thing to do, and is entirely depriving it of anything like uniformity. I do not want it to be said in reply that I am opposed to the letter carriers receiving this money. My theory is that they should have received this amount in the course of their regular increase. I am pointing out what the effect will be ultimately in the service. We shall find young men just as worthy, and whose work is more onerous, refused this increase of $30 or $50, while in other departments it will be given, and this does not advance the morale of the service, but destroys it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I appreciate the tenor of the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) but I would point out to him the difference between a liberal increase of salary to men who have very small salaries, and increases to men whose salaries are perhaps in excess of the value of the services rendered. When you come to the class of men who are paid $450 or less, the value of the services must be very small if they are not worth $480. But, if a man is doing the same work and is paid $1,000 for it, some discretion ought to be exercised before you would allow an automatic increase to take effect, and the statutory increase practically was an automatic increase.

Mr. FOSTER

Mr. FOSTER. It always had to be voted, and so has this?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, but it became a matter of form. It seems to me that if a letter carrier or messenger is worth keeping at all he is worth $480 after a couple of years in the service. Speaking for myself, I would say that the great difficulty in the past has been in not having the salaries commensurate with the services. It would have been better if there had been appointments of men to do particular duty carrying with the office certain titles, such as if we had a class of men known as shorthand writers appointed as such. It does seem to me that the system is not good, of calling them all clerks, and of allowing a man by the automatic principle to rise to the position of first class clerk, when he is still doing the same work as he did when he entered the service at $400 a year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I want to call the attention of the Postmaster General to a matter which I am sure he will see to once his attention is called to it. The hours at which most post offices are compelled to be open varies at different places chiefly dependent on the time at which the mail arrives. I have a post office in my mind where a short time ago the mail in the morning was despatched for the cities at nine o'clock, and the office was opened at eight o'clock so that business men might register their letters and secure post office orders if they required to do so. The mail from the cities with which the town does business arrives, the night before at between seven and eight o'clock, and the post office closes at eight o'clock, so that business men cannot transact business in regard to registered letters or post office orders that night. Now the train service has been changed and the mail departs in the morning at half past eight. The postmaster instead of opening the office at an earlier hour has posted a notice requiring the people who require to register letters or secure post office orders to do it the night before. That is a very serious inconvenience and practically delays the transmission of registered letters for one day between that point and the city of Toronto, all for the convenience of the postmaster who receives a good deal larger salary than the postmasters at many points in the neighbourhood where the post offices are open at five and six in the morning. I refer to the village of Dunnville. I have had complaints with regard to this matter from business men, and all I ask is that the Postmaster General, as I am sure he will feel in duty bound to do, will require that so long as the present train arrangements exist, that the post office shall be open at the hour of, say seven o'clock in the morning, instead of at eight as at present.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think that is a most reasonable request.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) will have it done.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will have it done.

Post Office—Miscellaneous expenses.... $212,120

Mr. TAYLOR. Before this item is adopted I wish to draw to the attention of the Postmaster General to a matter which has arisen in connection with the dismissal of a postmaster. I refer to Mr. Williams, of Seeley's Bay. The question of his dismissal has been thoroughly threshed out in the House but since the discussion I have received a letter from one of the most prominent Liberals in my county, namely, Mr. McCutcheon, from Seeley's Bay, which I propose to read. When this matter was up before I submitted the following question to the Postmaster General:—

Was a petition, signed by nearly all the residents of the surrounding district, presented to the Postmaster General protesting against any change being made?

I do not know whether a petition was signed by nearly all of the residents or not.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is immaterial.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. On that point, I would say that, though a petition was presented, it was never brought to my knowledge until to-day.

Mr. McCutcheon, of Seeley's Bay, writes as follows:—

Seeley's Bay, April 28th, 1898.

Mr. Geo. Taylor, M.P., Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I was very much pained on reading Mr. Mulock's answer to your question, "Was a petition, signed by nearly all the residents of the surrounding district presented to the Postmaster General protesting against any change being made?" And his answer was that although a petition was received it was never brought to his knowledge until that day, April 14th, 1898. Now, sir, I hold an acknowledgment from the Postmaster General of said petition by him, dated December 17th, 1897, which I inclose you. That there has been underhand work in this matter is very evident, and that Mr. Williams was wrongfully dismissed from the office. I trust this thing will be thoroughly investigated and justice done all concerned. It is not true that Mr. Williams removed himself to Smith's Falls, that his daughter carried on the business of the post office in his absence in a very satisfactory manner to all concerned is a fact. It is also true that Mr. Williams has an interest in a branch store at Smith's Falls, that he spends his time between the two places. But that he did supervise the post office at Seeley's Bay as well, as when his time was given to Seeley's Bay alone, it is also true that the public in general was well satisfied with Mr. Williams as postmaster, when there was over 100 genuine signatures on the petition sent by me to the Postmaster General, praying that there be no change made, given by Reformers and Conservatives alike, all getting their mail at said office, and none outside. I would address the Postmaster General on this matter, but fearing he might never see my missive I refrain for the present, seeing you have taken the matter in hand, I will leave it with you. Hoping Mr.

Williams may be reinstated postmaster at Seeley's Bay.

I am, yours,
(Sgd.) F. McCUTCHEON.

I may say that Mr. McCutcheon has been the standard bearer of the Reform party in that section. He is one of the most respectable and prosperous farmers of the neighbourhood, living within a mile of Seeley's Bay. He incloses to me a letter which I will now read. Having been the first signer of the petition to the Post Office Department, the answer was directed to him. It is as follows:

Post Office Dept., Can.,
Ottawa, 17th Dec., 1897.

Messrs. Jas. McCutcheon, Geo. Collinson and others,
Seeley's, Bay, Ont.

Gentlemen,—I am directed by the Postmaster General to acknowledge the receipt of your communication praying that the present postmaster of Seeley's Bay may be retained in office, and representing that the situation to which it is proposed to remove the post office would be an extremely inconvenient one, and, in reply, to inform you that the subject to which you refer will receive due inquiry and consideration.

I have the honour to be, gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,

W. D. LESUEUR,
Secretary.

This proves conclusively that the petition came to the department on the 17th of December, although when the Postmaster General answered the question in the House as to whether a petition had been presented to him, he said it had never been brought to his attention until that day. I may say that Mr. Williams, the postmaster who was dismissed without cause, is one of the most respectable men in this or any other section of the country—a gentleman occupying a high position, a member of the Methodist Church, a class leader in the church, an advocate of temperance, and in every way one of the best living men in the country. Yet this gentleman is thrown out, though his family are living there and attending to the telegraph office and the telephone office, and carrying on a store—his wife and daughter being there, and he devoting his time between Seeley's Bay and Smith's Falls. Every Conservative and every Reformer in the neighbourhood signed the petition. The office has been removed to an inconvenient place at the west side of the village, and a gentleman who has had no experience in handling letters or dealing with post office orders has been appointed postmaster. I believe that when the next election comes round, if for no other reason than the injustice that has been meted out by the Postmaster General to Mr. Williams, every Reformer in that section of the country will resent it, whether the candidate be myself or somebody else. Notwithstanding that, I would like to see Mr. Williams reinstated, and the people left to vote as they see fit. But I can tell the Postmaster General that if this state of affairs continues, the hon. gentleman and his friends will hear from the people there the next time they have an opportunity to cast their ballots.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the hon. Postmaster General tell me who is the mail carrier at Valleyfield at present ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman that just now.

Mr. BERGERON. The contractor who used to carry the mails between the post office and the stations—the St. Lawrence and Adirondack station on the south side and the Canada Atlantic on the north side—was a man named Leduc, and he did the work to the satisfaction of the public and the department. When my hon. friend came into office, he cancelled that contract, and I want to know from him the names of the contractors who are carrying the mails now. There are two, and they do not do their work properly. If my hon. friend does not know their names, I will tell him. The man who carries the mails between the post office and the Canada Atlantic station on the north side is named Rapin. He does the work for a very small price, and does it very badly. The other contractor for carrying the mails between the post office and the St. Lawrence and Adirondack station on the south side, is a man named Laniel. He took the contract at such a small price that he completely abandoned it a year ago, and the mail is now carried by a carter, who goes to the station every day for his own purpose, and who carries the bags just when it suits him. He throws them into his carriage, and after driving his passengers around the town, and after finishing his own work, he condescends to bring the mail bags to the post office. I want to tell my hon. friend, as he will be interested in knowing it, that the service, though done very cheaply, is done very badly. In fact, it is looked upon there as a perfect scandal—the way the mails of Her Majesty are dragged about, and only brought to the post office when the carrier has finished his own work. I am surprised that my hon. friend has not these names. He should have them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no doubt the facts are as my hon. friend says; but the people apparently have not found fault with the service, for I have not heard of any complaint from them yet. I suppose they have left my hon. friend to take this opportunity to call my attention to it; and as he has done so, I will look into the matter. As to the remarks of my hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), on the Seeley's Bay transaction, which does not come up as altogether a novel circumstance, I would say, with regard to this letter of acknowledgment of the petition, that I am sure that no one who is familiar with the departmental routine would assume that because of the phraseology of this communication, I had any knowledge of the receipt of the petition. This document is a receipt filled up in a printed form, commencing with the words in print, "I am directed by the Postmaster General to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the." That is an ordinary printed form, and one of the staff has filled it up as a matter of course. There are thousands of communications coming to the department, directed to the Postmaster General, which he personally never sees; and that was the case with the petition in question. I can only repeat what I said before, that the change of postmaster at Seeley's Bay was made because the postmaster had ceased to reside in the town.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, he resides there yet.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The evidence before the department showed that he was living at Smith's Falls, forty miles away.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does not a man live where his family is ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The postmaster is supposed to personally perform the duties of the office or to personally supervise them, and he could not supervise the duties of the office at Seeley's Bay while living at Smith's Falls. The evidence shows that occasionally on Saturday night he returned to Seeley's Bay; but he was certainly not carrying on the work himself or supervising it. That is a rule that I did not originate. It was a rule I found in the department, made by my predecessors; I recognized it as a wholesome rule, and applied it in this instance. I regret that a good Liberal should have taken offence, but our loss is my hon. friend's gain, and therefore personally and politically he can only rejoice at my having made what he conceived to be a mistake.

Mr. DAVIN. I should like to ask the hon. Postmaster General what is his course of procedure when instituting inquiries into the conduct of postmasters in the west. I understand that when complaints were sent in to him, he would write back to the complainants stating either that he would send on somebody to investigate or else ask them to send in statutory declarations, and decided the cases on these declarations.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There was no regular course, but every effort was made to get at the truth. In some cases where charges were made, copies of statutory declarations were sent to the postmasters, accompanied by copies of charges, and they were required to return answers under statutory declaration: in other cases, I sent out Mr. McLeod, of Winnipeg, to investigate.

Mr. DAVIN. Did he conduct the investigation at Battleford? Mr. Mercer was the postmaster there.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That was last year. My recollection is that the postmaster's wife had been postmistress during the absence of her husband. Was she a niece of the late Sir John Schultz?

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend is confusing Prince Albert with Battleford. What took place at Battleford was this. Complaints were sent down to my hon. friend against Mr. Mercer, and my hon. friend instituted an inquiry. He sent copies of affidavits to the postmaster at Battleford, and I would like to know if Mr. McLeod was also sent out.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not remember.

Mr. DAVIN. With regard to the Prince Albert case, I have in my hand a comment on that from the Prince Albert "Advocate," the organ of the present Government in Prince Albert. I know that when the hon. gentleman removed Mr. Way from the postmastership, the feeling among Liberals and Conservatives was that it was a very high-handed proceeding, and the Prince Albert "Advocate" thus comments on it:

THE POST OFFICE AFFAIR.

A general sensation was caused in Prince Albert last week when the rumour went abroad that R. B. Way had been dismissed from the position of postmaster, and Mrs. Charles Mair appointed to the office. Mr. Way says he has not, up to the present, received any official notification of the change, but the rumour may be taken as correct as Mr. Way, in a curt note from Chas. Mair, sr., was told to hold himself in readiness to relinquish his office on September 1st. There appears to be no charge against Mr. Way, the only grounds apparently for his removal being that as Mrs. Mair had held the office some four or five years ago, she should be reinstated. This is all the information that can be obtained regarding the matter at the present time.

Almost all citizens in the place are a unit in denouncing this high-handed proceeding, and whoever may be responsible for it. The position is one of importance and trust, and must not be interfered with unless on the grounds of grave irregularities, and under no consideration will the public suffer it to be bandied about at the will of politicians who may feel inclined to meddle with it for any reason. This smacks much too strongly of American jingo politics to suit our fair-minded, justice-loving Canadians.

If Mr. Way had been removed for cause, no one could reasonably have criticised the action, as it would have been the correct proceeding, but no cause is given. Let us look into the matter, go back into history a few years, and judge by matters of record whether his removal and this appointment is fair or just. Some fifteen or sixteen years ago, when Mr. Way became identified with the post office, Chas. Mair, sr., was postmaster. Mr. Way acting as assistant, which position he held creditably for a number of years, doing all the work in connection with the office, even when Mr. Mair had left the country and engaged in business in the United States.

Citizens after a season became clamorous for a resident postmaster, and Mr. Mair, being unable to hold the position longer, resigned, when influence was brought to bear with the result that his wife, who was yet a resident here, was appointed to the position. Mr. Way meanwhile discharged the whole duties of the office, the postmistress only appearing to sign the weekly report necessary to be forwarded to the department. After a time Mrs. Mair, finding she could not attend to the duties herself, and the office at that time being hardly self-sustaining, resigned, and Mr. Way was appointed to the vacancy.

Now the Mairs, after an absence of several years, turn up and usurp the office which they grossly neglected when it was placed under their charge. Will they do better by it now than they did previously? Why the change had been made, or what was the motive which prompted such action is a mystery to every one, and we voice the sentiment of the entire Liberal party in this district in entering a vigorous protest against turning out a faithful servant without cause, and placing a responsible trust in the hands of parties who utterly neglected it when they previously held it. Should the appointment be insisted on, the citizens are talking of drafting a memorial to Postmaster General Mulock, to be forwarded through our representative, Mr. T. O. Davis, M.P., against an appointment which is most obnoxious to them.

And the opinions and desires of a community must be respected. We belong to free Canada, but if this sort of work goes on, our vaunted superiority of public office over our neighbour to the south must disappear, and our institutions will sink to the lowest depths of degradation to which a power, wrongfully exerted, can drive them.

Of course, I am not endorsing the personal criticism in this article, but merely citing it as an instance of public opinion. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether the memorial was presented to him by Mr. T. O. Davis, and whether Mr. Davis urged the prayer of the memorial on him, and what decision he came to?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is a year since this matter was brought to my notice, and therefore my hon. friend will excuse me if I should perhaps not remember all the details, but I think I remember with accuracy the case that was laid before me. Mr. Mair, the postmaster at Prince Albert, was obliged from ill-health or some misfortune, to move to California, and his wife was appointed in his place. She continued to hold the office for some time, but efforts were made to take it from her. I am not aware that there is anything of record showing that she did not give perfect satisfaction. But she alleged that she was induced to sign a resignation under coercion, that she was informed by a person whom she regarded as reliable that he had undoubted information that she would be dismissed, and that she had to choose between dismissal and resignation. She yielded to the coercion and resigned from office. She said she had been badly treated, and I thought she had been. As to what evidence I obtained in support of the case, I cannot say from memory, but I remember quite well consulting the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) and having his confirmation of the facts as narrated by the postmistress. I have never heard of any memorial protesting against the change. If any has reached the department, it has never come to my notice. I will make inquiries and tell the hon. gentleman to-morrow if such a memorial has reached the department.

Mr. GILLIES. As the matter of dismissals is up, and as I have an extraordinary case in my county relating to the Post Office Department, and as I failed at the proper time to get the information that I sought, I feel compelled to try if possible to get from the Postmaster General the information that at that time he failed to furnish me. I refer to the dismissal of Roderick Ferguson, late postmaster of Lower L'Ardoise. I will be obliged if the Postmaster General will give me information with respect to that case. I certainly fail to understand it. It would be an injustice to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) for me to fail to bring the case to his notice, because there is a deep seated conviction throughout my constituency that the hon. gentleman must have acted on information the truth of which he had not sifted to the bottom; because, if he had, I am disposed to do him the justice to say, he would not have dismissed this man. This is a large section in my county. Now, on the 21st February last, I put the following question on the Order paper:—

1. Who is the postmaster at Lower L'Ardoise, county of Richmond, at the present time?
2. When was the present incumbent appointed?
3. Who was his predecessor in office?
4. Why and when was he removed?
5. At whose request?
6. Were any complaints in writing against the late postmaster filed with the Government or the Post Office Department?
7. What was the nature of these complaints, and by whom were they furnished?
8. Was an investigation afforded the late postmaster before removing him from office? If so, by whom was the inquiry held?

These are perfectly legitimate questions, and they were properly put. They were called on several occasions, but they were not answered until the 7th March, being asked to stand for one reason or another. On the 7th March the Postmaster General gave me the following reply:—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock.) The present postmaster, Daniel C. Mathieson, was appointed on the 30th September, 1897. His predecessor in office was Roderick Ferguson. Certain complaints having been made against him, they were communicated to him in order to afford him an opportunity of replying thereto, which he did, pleading guilty to all of said complaints excepting one—an immaterial one—it was not thought necessary to hold an inquiry.

But the Postmaster General had not any reply to my question if the complaints were furnished or forwarded to his department, and if so, by whom, and what was their nature. He assumes at once they were all admitted, except an immaterial one—he does not say what it was or what any of the complaints were. Then I gave notice at once in the regular way, of the following motion:—

Order of the House for copies of all correspondence, inspectors' reports and all documents respecting the dismissal of Roderick Ferguson, late postmaster at Lower L'Ardoise, Richmond County, and the removal of the post office to the store of Joseph Mathieson, late M.P.P., for the said county of Richmond; also, copies of all letters recommending Daniel K. Matheson as successor to Mr. Ferguson; also, copy of the writ of summons issued out of the Supreme Court of the province of Nova Scotia against the said Daniel K. Matheson for corrupt practices in the general local election of the year 1894; also, copy of the judgment of Mr. Justice Henry, dated 3rd July, 1895, condemning the said Daniel K. Matheson, the present postmaster at Lower L'Ardoise, in a penalty of $400 and costs for corrupt acts committed by him in said election, and of which he was found guilty by the judgment of the said Mr. Justice Henry, one of the Supreme Court judges for the province of Nova Scotia.

That notice of motion was given on the 17th March, and was called, from time to time, but the Postmaster General asked that it should be allowed to stand.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. GILLIES. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. He will find that in "Hansard."

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I never saw it before.

Mr. GILLIES. It was called from time to time until the 9th of May, when I dropped it, because I found it was not the intention to pass it; and if it remained on the Order paper I would not be allowed to discuss it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I never asked that it be allowed to stand.

Mr. GILLIES. The Postmaster General is mistaken. It stood at his request. What I say is absolutely correct.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what are the facts? Mr. Ferguson, the late postmaster, was one of the most respectable men in my county. He held the position of postmaster from the time it became vacant in 1886 until he was dismissed last September. He conducts a large mercantile business in the county where he resides, and he is municipal councillor for that district, one of the most intelligent men in that county. He was dismissed on the 30th of September last, for what reason I do not know. The Postmaster General did not answer my inquiry, therefore I am at a loss to know why he was dismissed. On the 20th of September, Mr. Daniel K. Matheson was put in his place. This young man, in 1894, was proceeded against in the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia for corrupt practices in the election that was held in March of that year. The cases of corruption that took place in that election were so glaring that the party to which I belong could not tolerate them without an endeavour to have the law vindicated. Among those that were proceeded against was this very man Matheson, whom the Postmaster General appointed to succeed Mr. Ferguson. I will read the writ that was issued in the Supreme Court and served upon Matheson, and out of which grew the suit that was tried before Mr. Justice Henry, the judgment of which case I asked for in this return :

1894—A No. 113.

In the Supreme Court.

Between John Morrison, plaintiff, and Daniel K. Matheson, defendant.

Victoria, by the Grace of God, &c.

We command you that within ten days after the service of this writ on you, inclusive of the day of such service, you do come and appear and be entered for you in an action at the suit of John Morrison, and take notice that in default of your so doing the plaintiff may proceed therein and judgment may be given in your absence.

Issued at Arichat the 6th day of August, 1894.

N.B.—This writ is to be served within twelve calendar months from the date thereof, or if renewed, within six calendar months from the date of the last renewal, including the days of such date and not afterwards. The defendant may appear hereto by entering an appearance either personally or by solicitor at the prothonotary's office at Arichat, in the county of Richmond.

The plaintiff's claim is :

(1) That the defendant is indebted to him in the sum of $400, being the forfeiture provided in and by section 68 of chapter 5 of the Revised Statutes of Nova Scotia, 5th Series, for the offence of bribery, which offence the said defendant was guilty of between the 15th day of February, 1894, and the 15th day of March, 1894, within the said county of Richmond, wherein the said defendant hath acted contrary to the provisions of said chapter 5 of the Revised Statutes of Nova Scotia, 5th Series, in connection with the election of a member for the House of Assembly for the said county of Richmond, holden on the 15th day of March, 1894.

(2) That the defendant is indebted to him in the sum of $100, being the forfeiture provided in and by section 66 of chapter 5 of the Revised Statutes of Nova Scotia, 5th Series, for hiring and paying for horses, teams and carriages, cabs, and other vehicles for Joseph Matheson and one Simon Joyce, candidates at the said election, for the purpose of carrying a voter or voters to or from the polling places—which offence the said defendant was guilty of between the 15th day of February, 1894, and the 15th day of March, 1894, within the said county of Richmond, wherein the said defendant hath acted contrary to the provisions of said chapter 5 in connection with the said election.

That writ was served by the sheriff of the county of Richmond and was endorsed thereon as follows :—

This writ was served at L'Ardoise on the defendant, Daniel K. Matheson, on the 10th day of August, 1894.

Endorsed, 11th day of August, 1894.

Fees : Record, 10 cents ; travel, $3.40 ; service, $1 ; total, $4.50.

This case, as I said, was tried out before Mr. Justice Henry at Arichat, and Matheson was found guilty of corrupt practices as alleged in this writ of summons, and was subjected to a penalty of $400 and $100 costs, and was also disfranchised for five years. I will read to the House a copy of the judgment that is now entered in the Supreme Court at Arichat, as follows :—

In the Supreme Court, 1894, A No. 113.

Between John Morrison, plaintiff, and Daniel K. Matheson, defendant.

This action coming on for trial on the 6th day of June, 1895, and this day in the presence of counsel for the plaintiff and defendant, upon hearing the evidence of Urgel Burkey and Charles Burkey, Martin Campbell, Wallace Preyent, John Campbell, D. K. Matheson, the defendant, and James Potty, taken on the oral examination and what was alleged by counsel on both sides, the said cause having been tried before the Hon. Mr. Justice Henry, at Arichat, in the county of Richmond, and the said judge having ordered that judgment be entered for the plaintiff for the sum of $400 and costs. It is this day ordered and adjudged that the plaintiff recover from the defendant the sum of $400 and costs to be taxed.

The costs, as I said, were over $100. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is a full record of the proceedings against this man D. K. Matheson, whom the Postmaster General appointed on the recommendation of some one, I presume, residing at Lower L'Ardoise. Now, I refer the Postmaster General to our Act upon controverted elections, under which this man was prosecuted, 51st section, chapter 5 :

Any person other than a candidate found guilty of any corrupt practice in any proceeding in which after notice of the charge has had an opportunity of being heard, shall during the five years next after the time at which he is so found guilty, be incapable of being elected to and of sitting in the House of Assembly, and of voting at any election and of holding any office at the nomination of a lieutenant-governor or any municipal office, or of being appointed or acting as a justice of the peace.

I do not bring this matter up in any factious spirit. I only want to know from the Postmaster General now how he came to dismiss Mr. Roderick Ferguson from the post office at Lower L'Ardoise, and appoint in his place a man who was fined $400 for corrupt acts in a recent election in the county, a man who is incapable of being elected to or sitting in the House of Assembly, a man that cannot vote at any election for any candidate, and a man that cannot hold any office at the nomination of the Lieutenant-Governor, a man that cannot hold any municipal office, and cannot be appointed justice of the peace. I think it is only fair to the district in which that young man is who was appointed postmaster and who labours under all these disqualifications, that the Postmaster General should state the reasons for the change. I repeat, that I do not bring it up in a partisan spirit, but it is only fair to the Postmaster General himself that he should tell the committee on what principle he acted, how he came to appoint the partisan who labours under so many disqualifications and is on record for having been guilty of corrupt practices.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not seen the notice of motion to which the hon. gentleman refers, and I did not ask it to stand, but probably it stood as many motions are asked to stand, if they are debatable, or in my absence one of my colleagues may have asked that it be allowed to stand. I shall consider it my duty to examine the records and lay on the Table of the House all papers that bear on the question, and then the hon. gentleman will be furnished with all the information. I have not the faintest recollection of the details. I never heard of this action to which the hon. gentleman refers or the disqualification of Mr. Mathieson from holding any office in the gift of the local legislature. That circumstance in itself does not, however, technically disqualify one from holding a Dominion office, although some people might think it affects his personal fitness. I have made note of the matter, and I will endeavour to bring down the papers to-morrow.

Mr. GILLIES. I am not sure that I will be here when the Supplementary Estimates are discussed, but in case I am not, I will state now the position I would take then. I have given the committee the facts and have spoken from the original records as to this man's disability. In view of these facts I ask the Postmaster General if he will cause an inquiry to be instituted, and if the facts I have stated are borne out by the result, he will cause a change to be made in the person who holds the office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not able to answer the question now. As regards the question of removal, it is unnecessary to have an inquiry on that point as it is not necessary to prove an admitted fact. The hon. member will have the opportunity of considering the charges and admissions and deciding on the action to be taken. As to whether a man should be removed from a Dominion office because he is disqualified under a local Act involves the opening up of another question. There are no doubt persons holding office who have been disqualified and are not entitled to vote for members of Parliament in another province or in the Dominion. I submit that the disqualification for a political offence does not per se disqualify a man from being a fit and proper person to act as postmaster.

Mr. GILLIES. I understand the position taken. The Postmaster General will admit that he did not know he was appointing a man resting under all these disabilities. The hon. gentleman removed one partisan and he has appointed another. He will acknowledge that he was seriously misled and badly advised. I take it that the Postmaster General would refuse to remove a man and appoint a partisan in his place. The responsibility now rests with the Postmaster General. I have brought the facts to his notice and I hope he will never commit a similar error again.

Mr. McALISTER. I wish to refer to the closing of the Oak Bay Mills post office in the county of Bonaventure, near the town where I live. In April I placed a question on the Order paper referring to the closing of the office. One of the questions was: "When was the office closed?" The answer I received from the Postmaster General was that it was closed on April 1st, 1897. But I found on further information being received from the postmaster at Oak Bay Mills and the receipts of the post office inspector, who closed the post office, that it was closed on March 13th, 1897.

Mr. BERGERON. Was it after the elections?

Mr. McALISTER. Four days before the elections. The 1st of April was a few days after the elections, and 13th March a few days before. I do not accuse the Postmaster General or the officials of having wilfully given a wrong date, but they have given a wrong date notwithstanding, whether in error or not, it is not for me to say. If the date given by the Postmaster was correct and the record shows the office to have been closed on 1st April, then the office was illegally closed by some subordinates without the authority of the Postmaster General.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does the hon. gentleman remember why the office was closed?

Mr. McALISTER. I think a political reason is the only reason that can be assigned for it. Last year I asked for all the correspondence in regard to the closing of the office, and the only correspondence I got was covered by two letters signed by the Minister of Public Works, which I will read. One is dated Ottawa, March 5th, 1897, and reads as follows:—

Dear Mulock,—I spoke to you yesterday of the postmaster of Oak Bay, Bay des Chaleurs. The present postmaster has attended the Conservative convention and the Liberal candidate has made a complaint against him. I showed it to you. Now, Mr. Guite wires to me that there is no need of a post office at Oak Bay, and that it should be closed at once.

I inclose Mr. Guite's telegram. I think it should be acted upon, if your officers agree.

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) J. ISRAEL TARTE.

The second letter is dated Ottawa, March 10th, and reads as follows:—

Ottawa, March, 10th, 1898.

Dear Mulock,—Our friends from Bonaventure strongly insist that the Oak Bay post office be abolished. They state that it is only maintained for the benefit of one offensive partisan. I think you had better comply with the request made by our friends and, in the interest of economy, abolish that post office.

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) J. ISRAEL TARTE.

Hon. William Mulock, Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BERGERON. Who signed that letter ?

Mr. McALISTER. It is signed, J. I. Tarte, who I presume is the Minister of Public Works. I asked for all the correspondence, telegrams, and so forth, referring to the closing of this post office, and that is all I have received. I asked later for the telegram, and the Postmaster General told me he could not find it, and of course I accept his word for that. It is very singular that there is no report of the inspector or of any officer in that district, stating that this post office was kept for the benefit of an offensive partisan, as the Minister of Public Works calls him, or recommending that the post office be closed. Further than that, one of the questions I asked in April was : What was the revenue from the Oak Bay Mills post office, and the revenue from the Oak Point post office ? And the answer I received was :

The revenue for the year ending 30th June, 1895, from Oak Bay Mills post office was $75 ; for the year ending 30th June, 1896, it was $71 ; and for the half year ending 31st December, 1896, it was $41.

The revenue from the Oak Point post office for the same dates was for the first year, $39.69, for the second year $39.27, and for the half year $22.25.

Mr. BERGERON. And yet it has not been abolished.

Mr. McALISTER. The revenue from the Oak Point post office was little more than half the revenue derived from the Oak Bay Mills post office which the Minister of Public Works says was only kept open for the convenience of one offensive partisan. That of itself is sufficient evidence to show that the Oak Bay Mills office should not be closed. Now, the fact is that the postmaster at Oak Point was a partisan. He was not what the Minister of Public Works would call an offensive partisan, because he was a supporter of the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Guite), whom I am glad to see in his seat now. The hon. member (Mr. Guite) who says that the Oak Bay Mills office was kept open for an offensive partisan and that it was in the public interest it should be closed, would be nearer the truth if he had said, that it was in the interest of party and in the interest of party heelers who supported the hon. gentleman (Mr. Guite) that it should be closed. I do not wish to say anything harsh against the hon. member for Bonaventure, but when he recommends that this post office at Oak Bay Mills should be closed, I think he is ignorant of the wants of the people in that locality, or otherwise he is guilty of wilfully doing an unjust act to that portion of his constituents. I do not think the hon. member (Mr. Guite) ever was at Oak Bay Mills before the election when he went seeking votes, and I do not think he has ever been there since, and further, I question very much if he knew that that district was in his county at all. The distance between the Cross Point office and the Oak Point office is seven miles which distance is without an office at all, and around Oak Bay Mills, there were 22 families served by that office all the year round, and in addition there were 40 transient men working there who received their mails at that office. When that is taken into consideration I do not think it can be said that that office was kept open for the benefit of one offensive partisan. It was kept open for the benefit of a large community there, the largest community between Cross Point and Carleton, a distance of forty miles. If the postmaster at Oak Bay Mills had been a supporter of the hon. gentleman from Bonaventure (Mr. Guite) that office would never have been closed. The mails at the present time are carried by the Baie de Chaleur Railway and Oak Bay Mills is only about 100 feet away from the station so that no expense would be incurred in conveying the mails to the post office, whereas at the present time the mails have to be carried a distance of a mile and a half to the Oak Point post office. That is of itself a strong reason why the Oak Bay Mills post office should be opened, and if it were in the public interest or in the interest of economy to have any office closed it would be the one at Oak Point. I do not say that the Oak Point office should be closed, for I know nothing about it, but I do know that the office at Oak Bay Mills should be kept open. If it is necessary for the people in any community to support the Government in order to receive what is due to them from the postal service, then the sooner the people of this Dominion know it the better. I do not think the Postmaster General wishes to be unfair, but I do say that the manner in which that post office was closed was arbitrary and unprecedented. I do not think that in the history of the Dominion you can find another instance where a post office was closed on the strength of a telegram or recommendation from "our friends" as the Minister of Public Works called them. A report should have been had from the inspector before any action was taken. If the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Guite) persists in refusing to recommend that this office be open and that justice be done to an important part of his constituency, I think the Postmaster General should have an investigation made and get a report from unprejudiced officers, who will desire to see justice done. Another office that has been closed in my county is at Jacket River. I do not think that office was closed from any partisan spirit. It was closed, I think, after some consideration; but it is situated in an important section of the country, and it served a great many people along the coast. The closing of that office has been a great inconvenience to a thickly populated district, as well as to a large settlement in the rear. I think a memorial was sent to the Postmaster General, largely signed by the inhabitants, asking that it should be reopened. I would ask the Postmaster General if he did not receive such a memorial?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot say from memory.

Mr. McALISTER. I am informed that such a memorial was sent, and I hope the Postmaster General will give the matter his favourable consideration.

Mr. GUITÉ. (Translation.) As I have just heard my hon. friend from Restigouche (Mr. McAlister) complaining about the Oak Bay Mill post office having been closed at my request, I deem it my duty to give the reasons why I have taken such a step. This post office was of small importance, being kept open only in the interest of a few individuals who could without any trouble mail their letters at the nearest post office, at Oak Point.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) What is the distance between the two places?

Mr. GUITÉ. (Translation.) About two miles. In that portion of my constituency, over a distance of 22 miles, between Oak Point and Metapedia, there are six post offices for the accommodation of a population of 1,383 inhabitants, while throughout the whole county of Bonaventure there are forty-five post offices for the accommodation of a population of 20,835 people, which gives for the whole county a ratio of one post office for every 463 people; while for the western portion of the county of Bonaventure, in which my hon. friend for Restigouche seems to take such an interest, there are but 1,383 inhabitants, which gives an average of 230 people for every one of the six post offices now in operation. It was at my request that the Oak Bay Mills post office was closed, as in the public interest it was not considered as needed. I am not aware of anybody having complained about its being closed, and I do not know of any petition being sent to the department to the effect of having it reopened. I am at a loss to understand why the hon. member for Restigouche takes such an interest in the post offices of the county of Bonaventure. He has just stated that, if I asked for the closing of that post office, it was because I was ignorant of the real state of affairs.

Mr. McALISTER.

The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken. I may tell him that I am well posted as to the number of post offices in operation in my constituency and about the localities where they are most needed. I did not take that step without knowledge, and I venture to tell him that the public are perfectly satisfied as well as the Government. I have also pressed upon the Government the desirability of opening other post offices in more convenient localities and I hope I will succeed in having some opened at several points in my constituency. For instance, in the parish of Maria, where I live, we have but three post offices for a population of 2,433 souls, and I think we should have at least the double of that number.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I would ask the hon. member for Bonaventure for what reason he did not ask for the closing of the Oak Point post office, the revenue from which is little more than half the revenue derived from the post office which has been closed at his request?

Mr. GUITÉ. (Translation.) I will tell the hon. gentleman why I did not ask for the closing of that post office: it is because Cross Point is thirteen miles distant from Escuminac, and the Oak Point post office is midway between those two post offices. I thought it preferable to close the Oak Bay Mill post office so as to give everybody an equal chance.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With regard to the inquiry why Jacket River post office was closed, I will make full inquiry, and give the hon. gentleman the information at a later stage. As to the Oak Bay transaction, I presume he has had a full explanation from the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Guité). It is within two miles of Oak Point post office, and not necessary. However, I will make inquiry of the proper officers, and see whether they consider that that office is necessary in the public interest.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the Postmaster General for an explanation, if he can give it, in reference to the appointment of a postmaster at the town of Gravenhurst. A short time ago I put an inquiry on the Order Paper in reference to the matter, and the facts of the case, partly to my own knowledge and partly from information given to me by responsible people, are about as follows. A Mr. J. P. Cockburn, formerly postmaster at Gravenhurst, a gentleman of about fifty-five years of age, according to the statement of the Postmaster General, resigned the position and his son, a young man, I am informed, of twenty-three or twenty-four years of age, was appointed in his place. The Postmaster General, on coming into office, took very high ground, making the statement publicly that if it could be shown that any wrong-doing or collusion was practised under his department, he would cause inquiry to be made in every case, and in the event of such inquiry proving anything of the kind, just retribution would follow. In pursuance of that policy, he found a grievous complaint against the appointment of the postmaster at Cobourg, a Mr. Guillet, and a commissioner was appointed to inquire into that appointment. If my recollection serves me, it was proved that the predecessor of Mr. Guillet, for a consideration, had entered into an arrangement by which he resigned his office, and Mr. Guillet was appointed. On the finding of the commission, Mr. Guillet was dismissed from the office. Now, here is a case of which the Postmaster General had full notice. He could have found from the reports what was the age of Mr. J. P. Cockburn. The town of Gravenhurst is a considerable town. The office is not an unimportant one; the salary, I assume, reaches about $1,000 a year; and the Postmaster General, before making a change, involving the retirement of a man in the prime of life and the appointment of his son, must have had fair notice; and he should be in a position to state, for the information of the House, and more particularly for the information of the people of Gravenhurst, whether this was done under any arrangement between Mr. Cockburn and his son. I know that the protests on the part of the people of Gravenhurst against the change, are very deep—not from Conservatives, because it is not a matter in which they are interested, for no Conservative would have obtained the position; but I have had remonstrances made to me by prominent Liberals in the riding, who believed that the Postmaster General would conduct matters in his department fairly and above-board. They complain bitterly that an arrangement of this kind should have been made between the two Cockburns without any reference to the Liberals of the riding. Although the appointment was made on the recommendation of Mr. H. H. Cook, who has the patronage of the county, I think it is only fair to the Liberals of the town that the Postmaster General should state to the House what the circumstances of the arrangement were; and if the facts are not known to him, then I say, that following the precedent laid down by him in the Cobourg case, he is in honour bound to institute an inquiry by a commission and ascertain what reasons existed between the two Cockburns for the change. I may say that surmises are on foot in the town of Gravenhurst. It is said that Mr. J. P. Cockburn claimed the appointment for his son as a recompense for his resigning in his favour. Whether that is true or not I do not know; it can only be ascertained by a full and searching inquiry. But I say that the Postmaster General, having had notice of the facts, was put upon his guard that there was something, to put it in the mildest terms, at least, in the nature of a colourable transaction between the two Cockburns.

What explanation has the Postmaster General to make of the changes made.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not aware of having made any such declaration as my hon. friend mentions. With regard to the Cobourg case, it was stated by reliable persons that a consideration had been given in order to procure the resignation of Mr. Robertson, the then postmaster. A very positive statement was made, accompanied by detailed particulars as to the transaction. It was not mere suspicion, but the evidence of those who declared that they knew all the facts. Upon that statement a commission was issued and an inquiry was made, and the result my hon. friend knows. My only duty is, in all cases, to carry out the law; and though I do not profess to be always equal to the task, I always endeavoured to do so. With regard to the Gravenhurst case, I know nothing whatever of the transaction, except what appears in the department. I never saw the former or the present postmaster, and have no recollection of having ever had a word of communication with them, directly or indirectly, and I know nothing about the reason that led to the resignation of the father and the appointment of the son.

Mr. BENNETT. About a year ago certain charges were preferred against Mr. Goffett, who was then postmaster at Orillia. The result was that it became regarded a very well authenticated fact that Mr. Goffett had been dismissed. Mr. Melville Miller was openly spoken of as his probable successor, and it was admitted by Miller that he had as good as received the appointment. It was stated in the local papers that Mr. Miller would be installed in office in a few days. I am now referring to the year 1897. At that time a special remonstrance was made to the Postmaster General by a gentleman very prominent in Liberal circles in Orillia, who came to Ottawa and protested against the appointment of Mr. Miller. This I know to be the fact from having been told so by that gentleman himself. Owing to that remonstrance, the Postmaster General, fearing that the dismissal of Mr. Goffett and the appointment of Mr. Miller would have a very detrimental effect on the approaching elections, which were anticipated at an earlier day than they were held, the appointment of Mr. Miller did not go into effect. The old postmaster was continued in office until 1898, when, owing to some happenings which I need not detail, his services were dispensed with. Then Mr. Miller was appointed, and I wish to ask if in 1897 he had been recommended for this position, in or about the month of April, by Mr. Cook. I would also ask if the appointment was not made then owing to the remonstrance that it would affect the election, then anticipated. The appointment was therefore postponed until 1898. It is a matter of comment in Orillia that Mr. Miller carried round this appointment in his pocket for a year, and it was only made public after the local elections were disposed of. In the light of future events, it would have been probably more in the interests of the service if Mr. Goffett's services had been dispensed with in 1897. It is a fact that Mr. Miller, in March or April, 1897, had been promised a position by the Postmaster General and recommended by Mr. Cook, and was the appointment delayed until after the approaching local elections?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no objection to give my hon. friend every information. Mr. Mellville Miller never received any promise or communication authorizing him to suppose he was going to be appointed postmaster until he was appointed a very short time ago. My hon. friend is aware that the former postmaster was not conducting the office in the interests of the public for a considerable length of time, and well founded complaints were made against him, and I presume that the community recognized the fact that this office was at least in danger, and many thought I should have removed him long before I did. About that time I received a communication, I think, from Mr. Cook representing Mr. Miller.

Mr. BENNETT. That would be in 1897.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This recommendation was in the event of a vacancy. I suppose that when I received that letter people were aware that a vacancy was probable, owing to the conduct of the officer, and in that event Mr. Cook recommended the appointment of Mr. Miller, but I did not create the vacancy at the time, because the postmaster had a good staff in his office, and I hoped that they would take care of it, and it would not be necessary to make a change. I therefore made no change until the circumstances happened to which my hon. friend referred; and until I directed a telegram to be sent to Mr. Miller announcing his appointment, I had arrived at no conclusion whatever. In fact, when the charges were made against the postmaster many thought I should have acted more promptly and dismissed him at the preliminary investigation. But I felt that it would not be fair to prejudice his case before another tribunal or to prejudice him in the eyes of the community by appearing to assume his guilt. Hence I resisted the, perhaps, not unreasonable pressure on the part of those who were more cognizant of the local circumstances than I was. I felt it my duty to resist the pressure and to retain him in office. If the charges which were under investigation this spring had turned out favourably to him I should not have felt warranted in disturbing him in his office.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. BENNETT. As I understand the Postmaster General, in the year 1897—I am not referring to the troubles which happened to the postmaster this year—charges were preferred against the postmaster of alleged wrong-doing in the conduct of his office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not say that charges were made in a formal way. I think I had communications of various kinds referring to him. In fact, I think the community had come to the conclusion the year before that he was not a fit and proper person to remain in the office. My recollection is that I sent the inspector to Orillia with instructions to inquire whether the general conduct of the postmaster was regarded as so notoriously bad as to make it amount to a public scandal to leave him in office. I think it was about that time, probably, that the public may have thought that he was going to be dismissed. The inspector did give me a report, and I threw the veil of charity over the man and left him in office a while longer.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to show that the action of the Postmaster General has been rather remarkable. In the year 1897—as I understand it—and I wish to be fair—complaints were made as to the conduct of this officer.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, the conduct of the man himself outside of office.

Mr. BENNETT. You can hardly dissociate a man and his office in that way. His department, it would seem, was such that the confidence of the public was lost to him in his office. The postmaster was complained of and these complaints found their way to the ears of the Postmaster General and were regarded so seriously by him that he thought it his duty—and, of course, he was quite within his rights in what he did—to send the inspector for the division to inquire into these charges. And the report, if I understand him correctly, was that the charges were only too true. Now, in view of these facts it seems strange that the Postmaster General did not see fit to dispense with the services of the official at the time. He has made the statement that he was aware of alleged lapses in the conduct of the postmaster as far back as nearly a year before his final dismissal. The public there can judge of the facts as stated here whether or not it was to meet, as alleged, certain party exigencies, that the office was kept in that condition for nearly a year, against the protest and remonstrances of a large part of the community.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) with absolute frankness and without qualification or reservation that political considerations had nothing whatever to do with the retention of the man in office. I will submit it to himself as a member of the legal profession what I ought to have done under the cir-circumstances. It was stated that the postmaster had committed a certain offence, not in connection with the post office at all.

Mr. BENNETT. If the Postmaster General will pardon me, I am referring to the complaints of 1897.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. So am I. It was stated he had committed certain offences not connected with his duties as an official, but what are regarded as offences against society and good morals. I had to consider what my duty was not only to that officer but to all officers under similar circumstances. Speaking in the abstract now, I would submit to the committee: What is the duty of a member of the Government under such circumstances? You cannot issue a commission to try a man on a charge that is capable of being tried in a court—that is not the duty of the Government. If it is a case that is cognizable in a court, let the court take notice of it; and, after the decision of the court, it will be the duty of the Government to act or not as the result demands. But if a public officer's character was so questionable that the public regarded it as a scandal that he should be retained in office, then I should be warranted, in fact my duty would be to remove him from office. But I could not try a private issue in that way. So I sent the inspector with instructions to visit the most respectable people in the town, not men in politics at all, but the clergy and others specially interested in looking after the moral condition of the people, and to bring a statement whether or not they regarded the postmaster's conduct as sufficient to disqualify him from being postmaster. The officer made that inquiry, and the result did not warrant me in dismissing him. The report did not satisfy me, that to allow the postmaster to continue in office would be a scandal. It is my recollection that it was shown also or that I was informed that he had a wife and children, and this circumstance had also to be considered. But I do not know what his politics are and no politician ever spoke to me on the subject of his being removed or retained on that score.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) think that we have been in this atmosphere long enough?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do think we have done a square day's work. I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Resolutions to be reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.25 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 2nd June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

AWARD TO THE DOMINION ATLANTIC RAILWAY.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved that the House, at its next sitting, resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution:—

Resolved, That it is expedient to ratify the award of the Honourable G. W. Burbidge in favour of the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company, and to authorize the payment to that company of the sum of one hundred thousand dollars for the commutation of its privileges with respect to the drawback of customs or import duties.

Motion agreed to.

GRANT TO THE PROVINCE OF MANITOBA.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House, at its next sitting, resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolutions:—

1. That it is expedient to provide that the sum of two hundred and eighty-four thousand four hundred and fifty-six dollars and forty-seven cents, being the cost of the erection and furnishing of the Legislative Buildings and Government House at Winnipeg, which sum was charged against the "Province of Manitoba debt account," may, on the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, be credited to the said account, and that the interest payable to the said province on the said first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, on the balance at the credit of the said debt account shall be calculated on the balance at the credit of the said account after the said sum of two hundred and eighty-four thousand four hundred and fifty-six dollars and forty-seven cents has been credited thereto as above provided.

2. That it is expedient to provide that the Government of Canada may, on the said first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, pay to the Government of the province of Manitoba the sum of two hundred and forty-one thousand eight hundred and thirty-six dollars and twenty-nine cents, being the sum of the amounts which would have been payable to the province of Manitoba by the Dominion, in excess of the amounts actually paid as interest from time to time payable on the balances at the credit of the said debt account, had the cost of the erection and furnishing of the said Legislative Buildings and Government House at Winnipeg not been charged against the said debt account, together with interest at the rate of five per centum per annum on each of the amounts so payable, in excess of the amounts actually paid, from the date when the same would have been payable to the said first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight.

Motion agreed to.

BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson) moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider the following resolution :

That the provisions of chapter six of the statutes of 1897, intituled "An Act to provide for bounties on iron and steel made in Canada, shall be held to have come into force on the twenty-third day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven."

Mr. FOSTER. I would like the hon. Minister of Customs to give us an explanation of this resolution.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. When the tariff resolutions were introduced on the 23rd of April last year, as a matter of course, they went into operation at once. At that time the duties on iron were reduced, and the tariff resolutions provided that the bounties that were given upon iron should be increased. It was intended that the increased bounty should take effect at the same time that the tariff resolutions took effect; but through an oversight, that was not provided for, the new scale of bounties became payable only after the Act had become law by the assent of His Excellency. That made a period from the 23rd of April to the 29th of June during which the old rate of bounty on iron would have to govern under the law as it stood. But as hon. gentlemen can understand, the import duties having been reduced, the price at once fell to that extent; and this is simply to declare that what was intended at the time that the Bounty Act was introduced, should have effect given to it.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend thinks it is right, if it was the intention of the Government that the bounty payments should date from that time and if, by an error, legislation was carried through which did not provide for it, he should come down to the House and remedy that error. I think the hon. gentleman is quite correct in coming to that conclusion. The good faith of the Government, though often it does not get into the legislation, ought to get into the legislation, and my hon. friend is, of course, doing right in remedying the defect, even at a late date. But I want to call the attention of the Minister of Customs to another point which is, if anything, somewhat stronger than this, although the matter is not so important a one. When the tariff was brought down, as my hon. friend will see, it placed upon rubber belting a duty of 25 per cent. That was done after deliberation by the Government, they set rubber belting at 25 per cent, they passed that into legislation, and that legislation went through the House to the Senate. But in its passage to the Senate, or on its passage to the ultimate signature of the Governor General the figure 25 was changed to 20 and rubber belting has been under the disability of a 20 per cent duty from that time up to the present. I believe there is no doubt at all that 25 per cent was intended to be placed upon rubber belting, and was placed upon it by the resolution, and was placed upon it by the Act which ensued on those resolutions, and was passed through this House. Now correspondence has taken place. These gentlemen certainly have a right to ask the Government to put them in the position that they were given by the legislation as it passed this House. But, more, they made sales and carried on their business transactions for a certain length of time on that basis, and they were involved in great trouble with their customers, their customers saying to them: You represented to us that rubber belting was 25 per cent; we have bought, and now we find that it is only 20 per cent. All these things taken into account would show, I think, that if my hon. friend wishes in this case to correct an error, which he is perfectly right in doing, he ought to do it in the other case, too. Aside from the merits of the question which were settled when the hon. gentleman brought down and carried that tariff through the House, there is the good faith with the manufacturers themselves. I would strongly recommend my hon. friend to carry out what was the intention of the department, and to make the rectification in the case of rubber belting as well as in this case. The correspondence shows, and the legislation shows, just how the error crept in, or at what stage it crept in. I suppose it was merely a clerical error.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think my hon. friend was not in the House yesterday when this matter was up.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the error hardly occurred in the way the hon. gentleman mentioned. However, the substantial result was as he states, and as I stated yesterday. I would be very glad to consider the matter, though I am not able to give a definite answer at this moment. It may be still treated before the final stage is made. I will look very closely into it, and as the Minister of Customs has had it before him, with the information he has received and that which has been given to us in the House, I think we shall be able to give an answer within a day or two.

Mr. McDUGALL. I would ask the Minister of Customs whether the resolution before the House has anything to do with regard to the application made by the Nova Scotia Steel Company for some changes in the bounty provisions for the industry of that company.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not sure what the hon. gentleman has in his mind. I do not know exactly to what he alludes.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I understand the Nova Scotia Steel Company put in an application for an extension of the time of the bounty with a view to going on with further works in the province. They are arranging for the building of extensive works in my constituency, but their construction will depend largely on the concessions granted. Does this Bill provide for the concessions asked? I understand several deputations from the company have been here during the present session. What does the Government propose to do?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am aware that representations have been made to the Government on the subject. This Bill, however, simply deals with the amount of bounties due to certain companies. There has been some difference in this regard, and there are due to the Feronia Company, and one or two iron companies, a sum amounting altogether to $6,000. This Bill deals with that matter alone, and does not involve any extension of the principle of bounty.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not think the Feronia works got the full benefit of the term of five years.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This resolution covers the point. It was intended that the bounty and the change of duty should take effect at the same time. The tariff, however, took effect immediately it was adopted by the House, whereas the Bill respecting bounties took effect at the end of the session. There was therefore a period between the two dates and thus the company was placed at a disadvantage, and that is dealt with in this resolution.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was there not a distinction in regard to bounties payable in respect of new industries and those which had already received bounties? For instance, the period was running in such a case as that of the Feronia Iron Works. The Hamilton Works would, of course, come in, and they were entitled to the bounty for a longer period than the Feronia Works.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Under the Act the bounty was applicable only to steel ingots made in Canada prior to April 23rd, 1902. The Act only extends to 1902 for any industry.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Under the original Act the bounty was for five years from the date of the starting of the furnace.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I regret to find the Government have not seen fit to grant to the people engaged in that great steel industry the concessions they ask, which I do not think are too great. They want the bounty to extend for a longer period of years, but at the same time they would be subject to reductions after a certain period, or after the period set out in the present Act. If the bounty regulations were not changed after a certain period, they would get no bounty and new works will not get much advantage. These people entered into negotiations for the starting of a large branch of their industry in the county of Cape Breton. The people of Sydney offered a bonus, I am informed, of $50,000. They also offered exemption from taxation for a long period of years, for twenty-five years or more, and were willing to make reasonable concessions in respect to land. These facts go to show the importance of the industry in the eyes of the people of that constituency. The advantages to be gained by establishing that industry in the county of Cape Breton are great, as the company will be able to get ore and coal cheaper, and thus make their business more profitable. Different ores are, however, required, and these can be obtained from Newfoundland, which the company are unable with equal convenience to do for their head works at Feronia. The coal industry, moreover, is not so prosperous as it should be. Not more than half the number of coal mines are open in Cape Breton to-day that were seven or eight years ago.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. How as to the output?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I quite agree that the output is increasing, but it does not come up to the rate of the former increase of the mines, owing to the manner in which the mines are operated at present, with the exception of the old Sydney mines which is not in the new organization. We have coal development carried on under very different circumstances now as compared with formerly. Where ten men were employed years ago, one man does the work and produces as large a quantity as the greater number; but the mines are not worked to their capacity, and therefore we call on the Government to encourage industries in the neighbourhood of the mines which will furnish a market for larger quantities of coal. The two best-producing mines in the county have closed down during the last twelve months, and all the people engaged are scattered throughout the province and many have left the country altogether.

Mr. SPEAKER. This is a motion simply to effect a change in the law making certain bounties retroactive. It is not a motion that opens up the general question of bounties and dealing with coal lands, and I do not think a debate can be permitted on those subjects. The discussion has gone too far already, and it must be limited to the question dealt with in the motion.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am ready to submit to your ruling, Mr. Speaker. In my opinion the resolution should be extended. If it provided that the bounty should be extended for a longer period than is provided in the original Act, it would cover the matter of which I complain. That is why it is that I took advantage of the opportunity to refer to this question and if, Mr. Speaker, you will not permit me, under the rules of the House, I shall have to submit.

Resolution considered in committee, reported, and read the second time, and concurred in.

BOUNTIES ON IRON AND STEEL.

Bill (No. 159) to amend the Act to provide for bounties on iron and steel made in Canada (Mr. Paterson) was read the first and second times, and reported.

COLD STORAGE—CONTRACTS WITH STEAMSHIP COMPANIES.

Bill (No. 149) to authorize certain contracts with steamship companies for cold storage accommodation, was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I move to strike out the word "steamship" in the third line between the words "Manchester" and "liners." The company with which I am making this contract have changed their title by striking out the word "steamship."

Section amended.

Bill, as amended, reported.

GOVERNMENT OF THE YUKON DISTRICT.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton) moved second reading of Bill (No. 145)—from the Senate—to provide for the government of the Yukon district.

Mr. DAVIN. What is the explanation of this Bill?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The explanation can, perhaps, best be given by simply referring to the clauses. The Yukon District, comprising the territory north of the 60th parallel of latitude in the North-west Territories, and west of the watershed, was erected into a judicial district by a proclamation bearing date the 16th August, 1897. Section 2 of the Bill provides that this judicial district shall be separated from the North-west Territories, and constituted a separate territory under the name of the Yukon Territory. Section 3 provides for the appointment by the Governor in Council of a chief executive officer, to be called the Commissioner. The fourth section provides that the Commissioner shall administer the government of the territory under instructions from time to time given him by the Governor in Council or the Minister of the Interior. That follows the old North-west Territories Act. Section 5 provides that the Governor in Council may, by warrant, appoint a number of persons, not exceeding in the whole six, to act as a council with the Commissioner. Section 6 defines the legislative powers of the Commissioner in Council, following also the principle of the old North-west Territories Act, and gives the Commissioner in Council power to make ordinances for the government of the territory, the power being limited to the power that is exercised by the legislative assembly and the Lieutenant-Governor in Council of the North-west Territories. Section 7 provides for the forwarding of the ordinances to the Governor in Council, and for the power of disallowance.

Mr. FOSTER. Do the ordinances have the force of the law before they are reviewed by the Governor in Council?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the objection to having all such ordinances reserved?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The delay. It was considered impossible in the old days in the North-west Territories to follow the other practice, and it would be still more so in this case. Section 8 is a copy of the provisions of the old North-west Territories Act, giving the Governor in Council the power to make ordinances for the peace, order, and good government of the territory. In the exercise of the power conferred upon the Governor in Council by that section, the Governor in Council would be exercising residuary jurisdiction over and above the jurisdiction possessed by the Commissioner in Council. The clause of the old North-west Territories Act is followed word for word in section 8. Section 9 provides that the laws relating to civil and criminal matters in the North-west Territories shall be the laws relating to civil and criminal matters in the Yukon district, except as they may be altered by competent authority hereafter. Section 10 provides for the constitution of the territorial court which will be established for the administration of justice. Sections 11, 12, 13, 14 and 15 also refer to the court. Section 16 provides that the Commissioner of the territory, each member of the council, each judge, and each commissioned officer of the North-west Mounted Police, shall, ex-officio, possess the powers of one or two justices of the peace. Section 17 provides that no person shall be summoned or sworn as a jurymen on any trial in the territorial court unless he is a British subject. Section 18 provides that every lock-up, guard-room, guard-house or place of confinement provided by or under the direction of the North-west Mounted Police force, or the regular military force, or municipal body, or by the commissioner or commissioner in council, shall be a penitentiary, jail, or place of confinement. Section 19 provides that all persons possessing the powers of two justices of the peace shall also possess the powers of coroners. Section 29 is an administrative provision, providing for the power of appointing officers for the administration of justice, and providing how they shall be paid. Section 21 provides that in case of the death of the commissioner the senior member of the council shall act as commissioner until his successor is appointed. The general scheme of the Bill is to adopt as far as possible the principles of the old North-west Territories Act. The only radical departure from that is, I think, that we have not provided for any elective members of the council. I think the House will agree with me that in bringing in a tentative measure for the Government of the district, until matters become more settled, and we know more about what kind of a community we shall have to govern, it would be extremely foolish to undertake to provide for a system of popular representation, especially as all the information we possess goes to show that perhaps nine out of every ten persons in the district are aliens, totally unacquainted with our method of representation, and the population will in all probability be a very nomadic character, at least for the present. It is intended to be a tentative measure, to clothe the Government with power to maintain order and administer the country for a year or two until we shall have a better opportunity of knowing what kind of a community we shall have to provide laws for. As a matter of course, if a permanent population establishes itself in the district, some representative system similar in principle to what was given to the North-west Territories will have to be provided later on.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman makes a deviation from the old North-west Territories Act that he has not mentioned. The clause in the old North-west Territories Act corresponding to section 5 here, not merely provided for the number of councillors, but provided that certain persons should be ex-officio members. I do not know that it is a very important detail; but this clause gives the appointment to the Governor in Council, which means practically the Minister of the Interior, whereas the corresponding clause in the North-west Territories Act of 1875 provided for five councillors, including ex-officio three stipendiary magistrates. I have carefully read the Bill, and I consider that it meets the needs of the Yukon district pretty well. But I would ask the hon. gentleman to consider whether it would not be well, for instance, to make the judge and one or more magistrates ex-officio members of this council. In instituting a Government for the Yukon district, the hon. gentleman has a great advantage that was not possessed by the Government of Canada in framing the original Act for the government of the North-west Territories; because he is able to apply to the Yukon district the body of carefully considered law which now exists in the Territories. Nevertheless, I think it would be well for the hon. gentleman to consider whether it is desirable for him to keep in his hands the power to appoint every member of the council. I saw that it was suggested in another place that the Government ought to give some guarantee that the miners would be represented. I am strongly inclined to leave this question entirely to the Government. I do not think, from what we know of the workings of the old council, that it would be very advantageous to put in a clause that would enable miners to elect a man to the council. When the time comes to introduce those elective element into the council governing the Yukon, I hope there will be a possibility of making arrangements that will work better although I think that the transitional method of government in the North-west Territories worked pretty well. Still, there were inconveniences connected with it, and I believe that with the experience of the past, the hon. gentleman, if he wanted to legislate on that particular phase of the government of the new territory, would be able to make a marked improvement. So far as I have been able to study the Bill, it seems to me, with this qualification, to meet the needs of the situation, but I think it would be an advantage if the hon. gentleman would, in committee, change this 5th section so as to have two or three persons who would be ex-officio members of the council because of their position. Even that will minimize the autocratic position of the Commissioner, which is very desirable. Suppose we were to pass the Bill as it is, what will happen? The power of appointing these six persons will be entirely in the hands of the Government, which means absolutely in the hands of the Commissioner, because the Government will appoint those he recommends, or if they do not, will be declaring a want of confidence in their representative, in whom they must have entire confidence, if he is efficiently to govern that country. In the past those men who were ex-officio members of the council were independent of the Lieutenant-Governor, and they were thus in a position to give him better advice than if they were absolutely his creatures.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I quite admit the desirability of providing that permanent officers of the Government might be ex-officio members of the council, but the difficulty is that these officers are likely to be very busily engaged, and possibly might not be able to give any time, for the first little while at any rate, to the discharge of the duties of members of the council. There is also the difficulty of the extreme slowness of communication, which makes it necessary to have the members of the council stationed in the one place for a considerable length of time, so that they will be able to transact expeditiously the enormous amount of work they will have to do. There are about 40,000 people in the district now, and it is possible that there will be 50,000 or 60,000 there before the winter, and the amount of work which the council will have to do in preparing municipal and other regulations will be very great, and I thought it would be hardly fair to impose the necessity of attending the sessions of the council on officers engaged in very important judicial or administrative duties. I will go this far, however, in the way of meeting the hon. gentleman's suggestion. I will provide that judges of the court may be designated as ex-officio members of the council, but would not be prepared to include any other officers of the Government.

Mr. DAVIN. Does my hon. friend mean that there will be an enormous amount of work for the judicial and other officers of the Government or for the council?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think there will be an enormous amount of work for both just at the beginning. I have no doubt that the judge who is there now will be for the first year very much overworked. My information is that there was a very large number of cases waiting for trial when he got there, because there was some difficulty in having them proceeded with through there being no means of putting them in shape for trial. As to the duties of the council, practically everything has to be done. Municipal and sanitary regulations and all the other little things that will turn up in a totally new community, where everything has to be done in a hurry, will take up all their time, and members of the council will have their ability and energy taxed to the utmost.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 5,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I move that the following be inserted as subsection 2:—

Mr. DAVIN.

Each judge of the court shall be ex-officio a member of the council; but the total number of council, including the judge or judges, shall not exceed six.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 18,

Mr. FOSTER. What does the Minister mean by "policy" of the penitentiary in subsection 2?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I followed exactly the provision of the old Act. I do not think it extends the meaning at all.

Bill, as amended, reported.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved second reading of Bill (No. 150) further to amend the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If it would suit the convenience of the Government, I should be glad if they would take up some other order in the meantime. I have said all I wish to say on the subject myself, but the hon. member for Montmorancy (Mr. Casgrain) desires to speak on this subject. He happens to be out of the Chamber at this moment. Could this order be postponed until this afternoon? Or could this stage be taken now and the committee stage left until the afternoon?

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Bill is read the second time, I desire to say that there is no provision in it for ameliorating the condition of the judiciary in Manitoba and the North-west Territories.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is a provision respecting the judge in Manitoba. I would refer the hon. member (Mr. Davin) to section 7.

Mr. DAVIN. I confess that I only judge by the resolutions, not having had an opportunity to read the Bill. We have five judges in the Territories. But, though the expense of living in that country is far higher than in any other part of Canada, these judges are paid only $4,000 a year apiece. Long ago it was understood by the members coming from the Territories that provision would be made for a chief. It is very desirable, when you have five judges, that you should have a chief. We have a senior judge who has all the work of a chief thrown upon him, and yet he has neither the salary nor the dignity of a chief. I think it is not treating the Territories well, when a change like this is made to leave this bench without the dignity that belongs to the bench in other parts of Canada, and without emoluments suitable to their position.

We ought to take into account the cost of living and the large amount of work they have to do, and the very least they should have is $5,000 a year. Under any circumstances, we should have the senior judge elevated to the position of chief justice. It is due to the Territories, it is due to his long service, and an additional thousand a year is well earned by him. I must say that in my opinion we ought to record a protest against the great addition to the cost of judicial administration in this country provided for by this Bill. Especially did it strike me in hearing the opinions of hon. gentlemen from Quebec, on both sides of politics, and gentlemen whose fitness to express an opinion on such a subject is undoubted. They state that in that province there is a large portion of it where there are a great many more judges than are necessary, though in other portions of the province we are told that judges have quite enough to do, and that in Montreal they are overworked. I think the Government should withdraw this Bill, and next year bring in one dealing justly with the judiciary all over the country, if necessary, to raise the incomes of those judges in Quebec, and most certainly in parts of the country where living is much more expensive. But what can we think of a measure brought in by a Government pledged to economy, which adds enormously to the cost of judicial administration in the province of Quebec, when we have it in evidence that that province is over-manned with judges, and that those judges are over-weighted with the amount of leisure on their hands? Sir, it is a monstrous thing for any Government to do, but it is especially monstrous for a Government of economy. I will not move the six months' hoist to this Bill; there is too strong a majority of economists opposing it.

Mr. COCHRANE. Mr. Cameron is not there.

Mr. DAVIN. Of course, the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Cameron), who was my friend, is now also my king, and I must not speak evil of dignities, but bow to the ruler of those vast Territories. I see before me still many economists; I see that the "Sun" newspaper of Toronto especially goes in for economy, and pats the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) on the back, calls him its white-headed, economical boy for the remarks he made on the resolution on which this Bill is founded. I will throw out a challenge to that hon. gentleman. If he will move the six months' hoist, I will support him, or if he will second the motion, I will move a six months' hoist, and I think, with aid from both sides of the House, we may be able to make a break, and stay a little the extravagant down-hill course of this Government. Anyway, I protest against this Bill. I say if you are going to have this legislation, behave justly, and remunerate the judges of the Northwest Territories properly, because, according to the schedule of remuneration given here, they are not remunerated properly. Deal with this question in a comprehensive way, take back your Bill, and reorganize the judicial districts in Quebec. Don't let this country have the spectacle of such a scandal, for it is nothing else, as we see in this House, members rising up in their places and telling us that half the judiciary of Quebec have not enough to do, and yet we are adding to the expenditure, raising the salaries, increasing the number of judges with the highest salaries. I must say it is done with a very light heart. I must compliment the Government in that they are able to face anything like this, any extravagance, any tergiversation, with a smiling countenance, and with apparent confidence that the people will bear with it. If the people bear with it, the hon. gentlemen will have a certain amount of justification; but it seems to me that I see the handwriting on the wall, and that the day of reckoning may be much nearer than hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches imagine.

Mr. FOSTER. I am opposed to this Bill from start to finish, and I propose briefly to give the reasons why. I will qualify that statement by saying that I do not mean that in many cases we are paying our judges too much, but on the other hand, we are paying many of them too little. Whilst it is true that the salaries of many of our judges are not sufficient, I believe that it is incontrovertibly true that the amount of money that goes out of the public chest for the administration of justice, is quite enough, if not too much—that is the position I take. I will appeal to the inner sense of my hon. friend the Solicitor General, if he will not, if he makes an honest statement in this House—and I am sure he would make no other, if he felt it were politic to do it, if he were not restrained from doing it—if he would not say that in the provinces of this Dominion too much is paid for the justice that is administered, and that the crying want is reorganization and a redistribution instead of further squandering the public funds in the administration of justice. What are we paying for the administration of justice? We are paying out of Consolidated Revenue, $98,375, and we are making payments authorized by statute of $694,400, a total of $792,775. We are crawling closely up to a million dollars for salaries of judges and allowances of judges in this country. I take it upon myself to state in this House that in province after province judges are falling over each other in their numbers, and they are not all doing an honest year's work for the wage they are getting, not because the judges are not good men, but because they are too numerous, they are badly distributed. I am not going to except my own province when I make that statement. Any business or legal man will tell you that in many of the provinces a redistribution would give a better apportionment of the work and more money to do it, and it would leave this Parliament and the country in a position to pay judges what they ought to receive for the high services they render. What sums are we paying at the present time? In the Supreme Court there are six judges receiving salaries amounting to $43,000 and a registrar at $2,600, giving a total of $45,600. There is the Exchequer Court with one judge at $6,000, six local admiralty judges, now attached to the Exchequer Court, at total salaries of $6,400, a registrar at $2,000, making a total of $14,200. In Ontario high courts there are fifteen judges with salaries of $79,000, and 64 county judges with salaries of $142,300; there are allowances to the high court judges of $13,000, and allowances for the county court judges of $12,800, or together in salaries $221,300, and in allowances $25,800 for the judges in Ontario. Next we come to the province of Quebec, and in that province they are all high court judges. There are 37 high court judges, getting salaries of $170,000. In Ontario the total salaries of the high court judges and the county court judges amount to $221,300. In Quebec the country has to pay 37 high court judges $170,000 in salary and $16,000 for allowances. In Nova Scotia there are seven high court judges with salaries of $29,000 and six county court judges receiving $16,400, and travelling allowances $1,400, making $45,400, with allowances of $4,000 for the high court judges. In New Brunswick there are six high court judges, with salaries of $25,000, and six county court judges with salaries of $15,000, making for salaries $40,000 and allowances $4,000 for high court judges, and $1,200 for the other judges. With great modesty, but yet holding an opinion on the subject, and knowing that we have good judges in New Brunswick, I may express my honest belief that half of the judges could do the work of the province. If that proposition holds with regard to New Brunswick, I believe it also holds with respect to Quebec and many of the other provinces. In Manitoba there are four high court judges and five county court judges, the former receiving in salaries $17,000 and the latter $14,000, or a total of $31,000. In British Columbia there are five high court judges, receiving in the aggregate $31,000 for salaries, and five county court judges receiving $12,000 for salaries, or a total payment for salaries of $33,000. In Prince Edward Island there are three high court judges, receiving in salaries $10,400, there are three county court judges, receiving in salaries $7,200, making a total of $17,600, and allowances amounting to $600. In the

Mr. FOSTER.

North-west Territories there are five high court judges with salaries aggregating $20,000, five sheriffs with salaries of $2,500, making a total of $22,500. So in Canada we have 178 judges, two registrars and five sheriffs to whom a total amount is paid in salaries of $640,800, and allowances paid under statute $53,000. In the amount to be voted this year there are also some allowances and I had not taken into consideration this statement.

I want to emphasize my opinion as a layman in contradistinction to the doctrine set forth by the hon. Prime Minister, that this Parliament is reduced to the position that the opinion of a province must prevail with respect to the judges and judiciary of that province. I hold it true that the legislative authority which does not have to provide the money is never the safest kind of power to be absolute in the arrangements it may make whilst another legislative power provides the funds and assumes the responsibility. I must stand in opposition to that position and as being in accord with the hon. Solicitor General when I say it is the bounden duty of this Parliament to check the extravagance of provincial legislatures, pushed by party followers seeking high office, for with this temptation before them they can provide positions at the expense of the public funds of the Dominion and reward party men. The legislature of Quebec, and I take that province as an example, knowing as well as it knows the necessity that the judicial system of the province is crying out for reorganization, yet in the face of that cry, and every business man in the province is conversant with it. The provincial authorities are creating new judgeships. And yet the right hon. First Minister comes here and announces the doctrine: Make all the judgeships you like, reward all your party friends; we are the superior power, but we will humbly bow to your decision and ask the taxpayers of the Dominion to pay the salaries. Stated in plain English, that is the position which the Prime Minister takes, and he is the first Prime Minister who has taken it, and I doubt whether any Prime Minister after his time will assume his position. The Prime Minister himself, if he knows anything about judicial matters in the province, as he unquestionably does, knows there is a crying need for reorganization. How is the right hon. gentleman helping the movement along? By building buttresses and bulwarks straight across the path of any one who wants to reform the judiciary. He is placing vested interests in the province of Quebec or any other province as a bulwark against the effort of any man who wishes to reform it; he is adding to the public expenditure and is adding an unnecessary number of judges and is placing most effective obstacles in the way of reforming the judicial system in the different provinces. I have stated that there was good ground for saying that in order to get the best judges it is found difficult with the salaries at the command of the Government to take able lawyers from active practice and put them on the bench. I grant that. I think, however, it may prove true that sometimes the best lawyer does not make the best judge on the bench, and we have a very good class of judges in this country for the salaries we are paying, and I doubt whether if we paid $1,000, $2,000 or even $3,000 more it would be sufficient to take the first-class men and the most prosperous and popular lawyers from the firms with which they are connected and place them on the bench. At the same time I am willing to state that my conviction is that we might pay more in salaries to the judges. But, so long as I have a seat in Parliament I will oppose the paying of more salaries to the judges of this country, until we first reorganize the judicial system and put it upon a basis which is reasonable. We cannot do it, says my right hon. friend; no, we cannot in a way, but we can in another way, and at least what we can do is to strengthen the hands of those in the provincial legislatures who recognize the evil and wish to cure it. But I say to my right hon. friend that he will never accomplish it by making the doctrine current throughout the country, that we are just here for the purpose, in this respect, of registering the decrees of the provincial legislatures, and by additional judges and additional salaries blocking the efforts for reform and reorganization. I do not want to say anything harsh with reference to the judges. They are men like the rest of us. The judiciary of this country, on the whole, I believe, stands high. We ought to pay them well for the work they do, and we can do that by the money that we now pay if we only had a proper system of distribution. I think when we come to the conclusion written on our estimates that $800,000 of the people's money goes for salaries of judges and allowances, we are paying quite sufficient. If we have not a proper distribution, let us use influence to get it. My right hon. friend can use his influence with the provincial legislatures when he wants to. He can do it in Quebec when he likes, he can do it in Manitoba; he says he will do it in certain important respects. My right hon. friend is now all-powerful in the province of Quebec. How great the impetus he could give to the reorganization of the judicial system in that province were he to use his personal and public influence in that direction. I am certain that my hon. friend, the Solicitor General, would hold up both hands for the reorganization of the judicial system in the province of Quebec, and while I am speaking of that province. I speak of it because it has been brought up, and not because I am singling out the province of Quebec in any respect. I do not want to take up the time of the House further, but there are my views and that is why I am opposed to the Bill.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) expressed considerable doubt as to the opinion entertained by the Prime Minister, and he said it was not to his knowledge that any other Prime Minister had ever asserted in this House such an opinion.

Mr. FOSTER. Not so extreme an opinion.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I will read for my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) the opinion expressed by Sir John Macdonald in 1880 in connection with the appointment of Supreme Court judges in British Columbia, and it will be found at page 119 of the Commons Debates for that year:

The burden of administration of justice is thrown on the provincial legislatures; and when such powers are given them exclusively, we having no right to interfere with their powers, it is assuming a very great responsibility for us to say: Although you declare certain judges are wanted, and have passed an Act constituting a particular court, we refuse you the means required to carry that policy into effect. I quite understand we are not obliged to grant salaries, and, if it was proved to the consciousness of the House that beyond a doubt the legislature of any province had made appointments solely for the purpose of creating new offices, and getting the advantage of them in the expenditure of the salaries, we shall be justified, on reasonable evidence that that was the design of the legislature, in refusing to gratify that wish and motive. But it is not suggested here that that is the case.

That is exactly what the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Let me deal with this Bill in detail. In the first place, so far as the number of judges in the province of Quebec is concerned, I venture to make the statement that to some extent the number might be reduced, but in order to enable us to do that it would be absolutely necessary to reorganize our entire judicial system. That reorganization, as we know, can only be carried out by the local legislatures. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) said that the present Prime Minister has great influence in the province of Quebec, and that by a judicious exercise of that influence, he might bring about a better condition of things there. Let me point out what has occurred. In the province of Quebec a few years ago we had one of the strongest Governments in point of majority we have had for many years, namely the deBoucherville Government, afterward succeeded by the Taillon Government. In that Government the present hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) was the Attorney General. He introduced a Bill for the purpose of reorganizing and redistributing the judicial districts in our province, and notwithstanding that the Government introduced the Bill through their Attorney General, and had a majority of from 25 to 28 supporters, the Bill never got beyond the second reading, and the Bill had to be withdrawn. The reason was that in our province the people are wedded to their judicial system. We have got what is known as a decentralization system; the judges have districts assigned to them and they are supposed to reside in their districts. I am prepared to admit that in some cases two of these districts might be merged into one, and if the judges resided in their districts as the law requires them to do we would then have an ideal system in the province of Quebec. The judge of the high court in our province is called upon to administer justice in a case in which the sum of $1 is involved, just as in a case where there is a million dollars involved. He may be called upon to try petty larceny where the amount involved would be 5 cents, and also at the same assizes try a case of murder. The range of their duties are greater than is the range of the duties of the judges in the other provinces. They are called upon to perform more important duties, and I think upon the whole we may safely say, if I eliminate the question of the travelling expenses, that we have in the province of Quebec a number of judges of whom any province might well be proud.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The whole trouble in our province arises from the fact that a system has grown up; a system for which this Government is not responsible—and I think it proper to draw the attention of the House to the fact that when we are called upon to account for this enormous expenditure that is going on in the administration of justice, up to the present time there has not been any increase for which this Government is responsible. We had to take the condition of things which we found in existence, and dealing with that condition of things; how are we going to remedy it? The only remedy that is within our power as a Federal Parliament to apply and can apply is with regard to the travelling expenses. That is the only thing we can remedy, and we intend to remedy that. My hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) made his whole attack on this Bill from the standpoint of the province of Quebec, and he spoke of the increased expenditure that would be involved so far as that province is concerned, if we pass this Bill. I draw the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact, that the whole expenditure, so far as Quebec is concerned, resulting from the adoption of this Bill will be about $7,000, and if the Bill is applied, as I think it should be applied, the result will be a saving instead of an increase, because of the change that this law will bring about in connection with the travelling expenses. The only two judges we are called upon to appoint in Quebec is a judge for the district of St. Francis and an additional judge for the Superior Court in Montreal. Now, the appointment of a judge in the St. Francis district is not the result of legislation for which we are responsible. It is the result of legislation introduced into the local legislature by my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), by a former Conservative Government in the province. It is not legislation that I blame, I say it was necessary, and I am prepared to justify that legislation. But when the friends of my hon. friends opposite introduced that legislation they made it necessary for us to do this, and hon. gentlemen have got to remember that not only was the legislation introduced into the local Parliament by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), but that in the session of this Parliament in 1896 the then Minister of Justice (Mr. Dickey) introduced a resolution to provide for the salary of this judge.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Was that concurred in by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster)?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, it was necessarily concurred in by hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, Sir, under these circumstances it seems to me we cannot be held to too strict account for our action in connection with this. I can point my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) to the correspondence that took place at that time between the then hon. member for Sherbrooke, then Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Ives) and the Department of Justice. Mr. Ives asked that this judge should be appointed and Mr. Dickey moved that provision should be made for his salary, and provision was made so far as it was possible to provide in that session, by the introduction of the resolution.

Under these circumstances it seems to me hardly fair that we should be so closely criticised by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster). While I agree with him in much of what he has said, I cannot agree with him in holding this Government exclusively responsible for that appointment. The appointment was a necessity. There are three important districts in our province—the district of Quebec, the district of Montreal and the district of Sherbrooke. The district of Sherbrooke is one of the most important districts in our province, and the judge of that district is overworked. The late Judge Brooks, a gentleman well known in this House, for he was for many years the member for Sherbrooke, was on the bench for several years, and I venture to say it was by reason of the arduous nature of the duties he had to perform as a judge that his health gave way and he came to a premature end. He first resigned, and a short time afterwards he died. To my personal knowledge he was overworked. We now have Mr. Justice White, a man who is eminently qualified for the position he fills; and I have received letters from him asking me to have an additional judge appointed for that district, because it is impossible for him adequately to perform the duties assigned to him. Then, take the district of Montreal. I venture to make this statement, that there is more business done in Montreal than there is in the whole province of Ontario. If my hon. friends will look at the list of cases before the Supreme Court, they will find that in the last three terms of that court there have been more cases from the province of Quebec than from all the other provinces put together.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that is only latterly, not usually.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I say for the last three terms, notwithstanding the fact that from the province of New Brunswick any case may be brought involving $200 and from the province of Ontario any case involving $1,000, while from the province of Quebec only cases involving over $2,000 may be brought. The whole difficulty in the province of Quebec arises out of the unfortunate habit contracted by our judges of charging travelling expenses to which they were not fairly entitled.

Mr. FOSTER. How does that affect the distribution?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. In this way, that if our judicial system were carried out in the spirit as well as in the letter, each judge would reside in his own district, and he would not have any travelling expenses.

Mr. BERGERON. Suppose he has nothing to do?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Then the district should be abolished. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) knows that one of the strongest governments we ever had in Quebec—I mean strong in its majority—tried to change the system, and they could not get their Bill beyond the second reading. They dare not submit it to the test of the House.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend knows why.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Because our people are so thoroughly imbued with the idea that they must have the paraphernalia of justice under their eyes.

Mr. FOSTER. But you take away from them the paraphernalia of justice by not keeping the judge in his district.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is what we want to provide against by this Bill. We say that the judge shall not leave his district at his own sweet will or without the consent of the chief justice.

Mr. FOSTER. It is awfully hard on the judges.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It may be, but it is absolutely necessary.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is destroying their usefulness.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is not, because the chief justice of the court should have control over his puisne judges, and should know what they are doing. The chief justice is responsible for the proper administration of justice by his court in the province; and we say that he shall determine when a judge shall leave one district and go to another, and the judges will not be free to do so at their own sweet will. We have expended in the province annually about $21,000 for circuit allowances; this year we ask for only $16,000, and we hope to keep well within that mark; and as an additional expenditure there will be $4,000 for the district judge in Sherbrooke and $3,000 for the circuit court judge in Montreal. The additional judge for the Sherbrooke district is a necessity to which my hon. friends are committed, for they went as far as they could to make the appointment. We say that we shall so control the expenditure for circuit allowances that the public exchequer will not suffer from the appointment of these two additional judges for the province of Quebec. We have also to deal with certain judges of the province of Ontario, and it is very strange that with the exception of the remarks of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), we have not heard a word against the increase in that province, although it amounts to $7,200 as against $7,000 for the province of Quebec. I do not make any complaint that we are not blamed for that increase, but I want to explain the reason of it. In the province of Ontario, the county court judges and the junior judges must have the same qualifications; yet the county court judge, after I think three years service, is entitled to $2,400, in addition to which he has all the surrogate fees and the other emoluments attaching to his office. The junior judge, on the other hand, though required to have the same qualifications and to perform the same duties, is required, in addition to the duties assigned to the county court judge, to attend the division court. What is the result? In the province of Ontario last year only 357 cases were tried in the county courts, whereas in the division courts, presided over by the junior judges, 52,204 cases were tried. The junior judge has to do all the travelling, and to incur an expenditure far in excess of the amount allowed him, and gets $2,000 a year, whereas the county court judge gets $2,400, and the fees I have mentioned. It seems to me that there is no justification for continuing that state of things. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) seemed to take rather a curious stand when he referred to the increased expenditure involved by this Bill in the province of Quebec, and at the same time asked that there should be an increased expenditure for Manitoba and the North-west Territories. It does not seem to me that his position is quite logical.

Mr. FOSTER. That is like your protection position.

Mr. DAVIN. No, I repudiate that. My position is perfectly logical.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have no doubt it is quite logical, but it does not appear so to the ordinary mind.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the fault of the ordinary mind.

Mr. DAVIN. The ordinary judicial mind.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am very much pleased indeed that there has been some discussion in this House on this question of judges, because I have to go before the judges every day of my life when away from here, and therefore have to be a little careful in what I say about them. Still, I feel that it is proper—speaking now entirely of my own province, for I know little about administration of justice in other provinces—that the judges should understand that those who pay them expect to receive a fair return for their money, and it is proper they should know that the eyes of Parliament are upon them, and that they who are called upon to administer justice do not stand aloof from this Dominion and are not above criticism and may expect in the future to be criticised as they have been this session. Honest, just and fair criticism is as necessary to the proper administration of justice as to anything else.

The total expenditure resulting from this legislation will amount to $26,900.

Additional judges in Court of Appeal.	$5,000
Increase to one judge in the province of Quebec (Judge Taschereau).....	1,000
Additional puisné judge for the St. Francis district, province of Quebec.	4,000
Additional judge, Circuit Court, Montreal	3,000
Judge of the Yukon district.....	4,000
Junior judges, Ontario, 18 at $400....	7,200
County Court judge for Halifax.....	600
County Court judge, Queen's, P.E.I....	600

Mr. FOSTER. What is the salary of the Halifax and Charlottetown judges?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It was $2,400, and will now be $3,000, and that will make their salary the same as that of the county court judge of St. John, N.B.

District judges, Ontario, additional amount for travelling expenses.... $500

They used to be allowed but $100.

Five additional judges at $300 each.. $1,500

Mr. FOSTER. Is the jurisdiction of that county court in Prince Edward Island over the island?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Over the county and city.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has the Solicitor General had recently any correspondence with the Attorney General of Ontario as regards the question of junior judges? He is perhaps aware that some time ago an Act was passed by the Ontario legislature asking that the appointments of these judges should be restricted very much, and the hon. gentleman knows that afterwards, when his right hon. leader formed his Government, that Act was repealed, just adding to the convenience of hon. gentlemen in power.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not quite appreciate the force of my hon. friend's remark, but I would draw attention to this fact, that there are only twenty county civil judges in Ontario, and that two vacancies were not filled there—in Ontario and Waterloo—because the requirements of the statute as to population are not met in those counties. This shows that we are endeavouring to stick as close to the law as we can. So far as the judge of the Court of Appeals of Ontario is concerned, the Act 60 Victoria, chapter 13, passed the session before last, provides that the Court of Appeal of Ontario shall consist of the chief justice and four other justices; and that appeals from the decisions of the divisional courts on matters affecting controverted elections shall be brought before five judges, so that the court was absolutely blocked by the additional judge not being appointed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The same legislature which made the block has the appointment of the judge.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not mean to say that that is the case, but to a perverted mind it would appear so.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is not a charitable suspicion.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I might point out to the hon. gentleman, now that he has come back to the fold, and become again one of us, that a court of appeal consisting of four judges is very unsatisfactory.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That court has worked well, and I understand is a very satisfactory court.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No doubt; but a case recently came before them, in which there were two judges against two, and that is not satisfactory. As a rule, the judges of the Court of Appeal of Ontario are men of the highest standing, and it is one of the courts which is held in the highest respect, but I do not know of any other country in which a court of appeal consisting of four judges is satisfactory.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. One or two subjects have excited considerable interest. For instance, the hon. Soli-ditor General suggested that it was curious that so much had been said about the Superior Court judges of the province of Quebec and so little about the county court judges of the other provinces. The reason, I take it, is this. This Bill does not propose to increase the number of county court judges in Ontario, and there is no statement with regard to those like the one I read to the committee, when considering the resolution on which this Bill is founded, and that was the opinion of the Attorney General of the province of Quebec, who said that they already had more than sufficient judges in that province now, but the trouble was the reorganization or the question of the redistribution of work. Take, for instance, that sentence to which I attach tremendous importance, and which will be sufficient until met by a specific statement:

At least in a dozen districts there are judges who have not more than three months' work a year, while in the district of Montreal, and so on.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This Bill, which makes it necessary to appoint a judge for the district of St. Francis, was passed when my hon. friend opposite, the member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) was Attorney General of the province of Quebec, and it is at his request that the resolution was introduced.

Mr. BERGERON. Does my hon. friend mean to say that Mr. Casgrain asked for the appointment of a new judge or simply for the appointment of another judge at Sherbrooke, to be taken from one of the other judges?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. A new man entirely.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not believe that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Read the statute, and then perhaps you will believe it.

Mr. BERGERON. When the hon. member for Montmorency is here he may explain it himself.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not care whether Mr. Casgrain represented a Conservative or a Liberal Government in the province of Quebec, the fact is that the Attorney General of Quebec endeavoured to meet the abuse which has grown up there, and which is due to the fact that there it has been allowed to exist, and that around it the affections of the people have grown and all that kind of thing. If you go on adding to that system, of course no Attorney General of Quebec will find it an easy thing to reduce the expenditure of federal money in that province. Then, the right hon. Prime Minister particularly—for he has not the support of the Solicitor General in that view—attempted to come to the rescue and said that unless there was a case of fraud proved on the part of the local legislature of Quebec, it was the duty of this Government to shut its eyes to extravagance in the number of justices. We have nothing to do with whether they are required or not. The local legislature creates the judgeship and our duty is clear—it is simply to supply the money. And the Solicitor General's main argument is that Sir John Macdonald on one occasion said so in this House. But that speech of Sir John Macdonald was made, curiously enough, when the leader of the present Government and Mr. Blake were strongly opposing the Bill introduced by Sir John's Government to provide salaries for additional judges. These gentlemen then opposed in a most vigorous manner the proposition of the Government. Proof was given as to the necessity for the provision of these salaries. The Senate on that occasion, I think, threw out the Bill altogether.

Mr. SPEAKER. As we have to adjourn at one o'clock, perhaps the hon. member (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) will move the adjournment of the debate.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Second Sitting.

THURSDAY, 2nd June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BOUNDARIES OF THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 160) respecting the boundaries of the province of Quebec. He said: The Bill is for the purpose of ratifying a conventional boundary on the north and north-east of the province of Quebec, which was agreed upon between the Government of the province of Quebec and the Government of the Dominion, and ratified by an Order in Council of this Government, under date of the 8th of July, 1896. The Bill is not yet drafted, and I ask the indulgence of the House to introduce it in blank.

Mr. SPROULE. Is not that somewhat unusual, to allow a Bill to be introduced without presenting any Bill?

Mr. SPEAKER. It can only be done with the consent of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The Bill is merely formal, the subject is well known. Of course, if the hon. gentleman takes objection, it cannot be introduced.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not wish to object.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 159) to amend the Act to provide for bounties on iron and steel made in Canada.—(Mr. Fielding.)

Bill (No. 149) to authorize certain contracts with steamship companies for cold storage accommodation.—(Sir Louis Davies.)

Bill (No. 154) to provide for the government of the Yukon district.—(Mr. Sifton.)

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fitzpatrick for second reading of Bill (No. 150) further to amend the Act respecting the judges of the provincial courts.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is a very bold thing, perhaps, to enter at this moment upon an argument at any length touching this measure, but there are one or two references I have to make to fortify the position I took in connection with this subject. The argument is much relied on by hon. gentlemen opposite that there is absence, so to speak, of responsibility on the part of the Government in connection with the proposition for the increase of the judiciary in the different provinces, and I think neither the right hon. leader of the Government nor the Solicitor-General in their references to the argument used by Sir John Macdonald presented the case as fairly as the facts required. For instance, the position taken by him on that occasion was really taken by several, and he did not content himself with stating that the duty here was perfunctory when an increase of the judiciary took place requiring us to provide a salary; but he used that argument among others to this extent only—and I quote only a short portion of his speech on that occasion:

As a general rule, I think we may safely trust to the discretion of the provincial legislatures in this regard.

Mr. SIFTON.

1880 is a long time ago. Between 1867 and 1880 these increases in the number of judges had not reached anything like the increases that we are now face to face with in 1897. But the present Minister of Justice did not so construe the language of Sir John Macdonald in 1880, to which reference has been so often made, because, speaking of that debate on another occasion, the present Minister of Justice said:

Certainly, when county courts were wanted in Nova Scotia he (Sir John A. Macdonald) did not take exactly the same view as to the functions and duty of the House in the appointment of judges, and in providing for their salaries, as on the present occasion. I remember that, then, the friends of the hon. gentleman in the other House rejected the proposal to provide for the payment of the judges in a court which the people of Nova Scotia though necessary for the due administration of justice.

Constantly from 1867 down to the time the present Liberal Administration came into power, their leading men, including their Minister of Justice, and their Minister of Justice in the preceding Liberal Administration, Mr. Blake, and their leader, Mr. Mackenzie, supported always, and notably by the Prime Minister of the present day, by the Minister of Trade and Commerce himself, all took the line that it was the bounden duty of this Parliament to check any approach at extravagance in regard to the appointment of judges by the local legislatures. When they rely upon that one argument used by Sir John A. Macdonald when he laid it down as a general rule that we should trust to the discretion of the local legislatures, they have the satisfaction of knowing that from 1880 down to the day of his death, Sir John A. Macdonald never used that argument, never proceeded upon that theory, but he and every Minister of Justice who succeeded him, and notably in the case of Sir John Thompson, not only pursued the other line of investigating and examining all the cases which were brought up, but he explained to Parliament, without demur, with opposition on the part of the right hon. leader of the present Government, with the consent of this House, with the approval of this House, he explained why they had not appointed judges created by the provincial legislatures, notably, for instance, in the case of British Columbia, where years were allowed to elapse, and the excuse for delay given by Sir John Thompson, without any expression of disapproval from a single member of Parliament, was that there had not been, in his opinion, any reason for the appointment until he came down and asked for a resolution to authorize the introduction of a Bill to provide for the salary. So that with the exception of that little discussion in 1880, there is not an argument to support the present view thrown out from the Treasury benches as to the perfunctory duty on the part of the federal legislature in providing salaries. No appointments were made, but on the contrary the practice has been consistent until the accession of the present Administration to power, of carefully examining the why and the wherefore, the reason and the necessity, and the conditions existing, before coming to this House and asking for an additional appropriation.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Did not Mr. Dickey make that investigation?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am coming to that argument, the last weak prop on which the hon. gentleman landed. He found that Mr. Dickey had introduced a resolution, and I will deal with that point before I sit down. I have shown how strongly the view I have expressed has been entertained and has been regarded as the consistent view of Parliament, how it has been supported by the Liberal party before the present day; but at the present time or in the present era of their history hon. gentlemen opposite seem not merely to abandon their promises, but the traditions of their party are treated with the utmost contempt. For instance, Mr. Blake, in 1887, is reported as saying:

He did not think it in the public interest at that time, without further complaint of the inefficiency of the administration of the law, to appoint another judge.

Mr. Blake made that statement in reply to Sir John Macdonald, and it was made on 19th February, 1877. When Mr. Mackenzie was leading the Liberal party, he on another occasion said he desired to know if the Government considered the demand from the legislature of British Columbia a proper and reasonable one. There had been a Bill reorganizing the judiciary in the very early days of confederation in the province of British Columbia, and Sir John Macdonald came down to this House to ask for the necessary provision to make the reorganization effective. Mr. Mackenzie said he did not think that because the local government had power to create courts, we had nothing to do but fill those vacancies as soon as they were created. Speaking on the subject at some length, he said later on:

This House should not agree to a proposition of this sort merely because the local government of British Columbia thought it necessary to have two more judges appointed to act in that province. Some grounds should be given on which this House should exercise its wise discretion, and he looked to the Minister of Justice for further information.

Sir John Macdonald's speech in 1880 has been referred to already. The Minister of Justice at that time thought it was necessary to go further than merely say the local legislature had acted, and the hon. gentleman said:

Irrespective of the increase of expense, the local legislature gave very strong grounds on the point of necessity, showing that parties charged with crime had to undergo, often, twelve months' imprisonment before they could be tried, and, in many cases, then proven innocent of the charges.

The hon. gentleman proceeded to give reasons, which appeared to have weight, in favour of the proposition put forward by the province. The present Secretary of State, Mr. Scott, is on record in this matter. He said:

It does seem to me that the Government has yielded probably to local prejudice in this particular case, to the fact that the British Columbia legislature passed the Act and sought to change the system. The Government have yielded rather too lightly in face of the large expenditure entailed on the country by the administration of justice in that province.

Again, referring to Mr. Blake, these are the views he expressed as an interpreter of the British North America Act. He said:

I have always maintained, while I have had the honour of sitting here, that we are not bound, simply because the provincial legislature proposes the appointment of a judge, to provide a salary.

In a few words the hon. gentleman expressed what I have attempted to say in many words, that so long as this Parliament provides the salaries, contrary to the view Mr. Blake then entertained, there will be extravagance, and increasing extravagance, instead of the extravagance being stopped. The present Minister of Justice spoke on the subject. Mr. Mills said:

I think the House is exercising an independent power in undertaking to vote this money, and when the hon. gentleman asks the House to provide for the payment of additional judges on him devolves the responsibility of showing it is necessary.

So I say that though the argument referred to was used on one occasion by Sir John Macdonald, contrary to these views I have indicated, and which brought out the strongly expressed views of the Liberal party, the practice has been consistent with these views, and even in the 1880 case reasons were given for the appointment and they were not met, as the action of the provincial government is met now by the official statement of the Attorney General of the province, made only four years ago and shortly before those additional judges were created, that a large proportion of the judges of the court already had only three months' work in the year. The member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), who held the office of Attorney General in the province of Quebec, now states that some of the judges have only one month's work to do in the year. Let me come now to the authority for the statement I made and consider the view held by Sir John Thompson. The other view referred to had been abandoned in his lifetime by Sir John Macdonald, and Sir John Thompson, speaking of a Quebec appointment on 23rd April, 1894, said:

The Act was left to its operation, although the Government did not concur in the statements made in the preamble thereof, as to the insufficiency of the Court of Queen's Bench, as now constituted, to perform its functions, and it was expressly stated that such action was not to be taken as an expression of opinion on the part of the Dominion Government that the appointment provided for by an Act should be made. The French Canadian senior member of the Montreal bar presented a petition in that sense, and also asked that the claims of their nationality be considered in any appointments to be made.

There can be no doubt that these quotations from "Hansard" show there had been a meeting of minds as to the independence of this legislature regarding the voting of salaries for judges created by a certain province. We had the admission, that the Government in asking Parliament for supplies of this character were bound to show good cause as in every other case. For a long time there had been a statute providing for the appointment of additional judges in British Columbia, and it was not until 1894 that Sir John Thompson asked this House to vote the salaries. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) then leading the Opposition asked in the debate simply: "what is the increase," and no demur was made to the principle involved in the following observations of Sir John Thompson:—

Mr. LAURIER. What is the increase?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The object of this resolution is to provide for another county judge for British Columbia, in the Kootenay district. That district was created a county court district by the provincial legislature several years ago. It has not been thought necessary to make the appointment, but it is deemed expedient to take the powers now, owing to the increased population of the district, and the population going there is of a class that requires the attendance of a court of justice.

I can abundantly show from the records that that was the position when the present Government took office, when they suddenly and in a most extraordinary case where there had not been action of the executive in Manitoba in order to create a judicial district and which in that province required the passing of an Order in Council only; such was the hurry to appoint Mr. Prendergast a judge that the Government came down pell mell and discovered before the supplies were granted that they had preceded the action of the local authorities, and simply at the request of the Attorney General had asked for money to pay an additional judge. It was after that, there was an additional district carved out under the general Act by the local government of Manitoba. It was then necessary for the right hon. gentleman to shelter himself behind this argument that his party had successfully contended against from 1867 down to that date. The Solicitor General now suggests that in connection with the provisions for an additional judge in the province of Quebec, Mr. Dickey, when Minister of Justice, put a resolution on the paper proposing to ask the House to make provision for that judgeship. The answer to that is complete. No action was taken upon it, because Mr. Dickey did not state that that resolution had either the approval of the Government or the assent of the Crown. As is not unusual, a Minister may in advance of the decision of the executive put the necessary notice upon the paper, and it is not until he moves a formal stage in the House that it is required of him to state that the executive has taken steps to obtain the assent of the Crown.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). My hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has either imagined or magnified the differences which he supposes to exist between hon. gentlemen on this side of the House and himself as to the construction of the British North America Act. I have never understood from any of my colleagues, either in Opposition or in Government, that they considered the duties of this Parliament in the voting of judges' salaries to be either perfunctory or automatic. I have always understood from my leader and from my colleagues, that they had a clear and definite understanding on the subject, and that, as the Parliament of Canada, we have responsibilities in voting these salaries which we cannot ignore. The principle which we endeavoured to lay down a year or two ago, and which I understand my right hon. friend insists on now, is this: That the duty of the central Government is to take care that there is no improvidence on the part of the provinces in the exercise of their power to create judicial districts.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not think that is the Prime Minister's position.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have a very clear recollection of the right hon. gentleman laying down that position, and almost in the words I used. We cannot ignore the fact that the British North America Act has created mutual powers and duties with respect to the administration of justice. The provincial legislatures are charged with the administration of justice in the provinces, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of the provincial courts, both civil and criminal. We are charged with the appointment of the judges and the payment of the judges' salaries, and it goes without saying that if there was an improper or improvident exercise of this power by a provincial legislature, this Parliament would stay its hand and pause before voting the necessary money. It would be a great misfortune if the idea became prevalent that there was any difference between the leaders on either side of the House as to this important matter, and I do not think any such difference exists. I do not understand either, that there was any intention to force the perhaps hasty view expressed by Sir John Macdonald in 1880 beyond the particular case he had before him, or to lift his language into that of the enunciation of a general principle. I think he was merely applying his remarks to the particular case he had before him, and I am glad to know that on both sides of the House there is an almost unanimous feeling that our duties are not perfunctory or automatic, that we have the responsibility of examining into each case when the legislatures of the provinces act, and that if after examination we find that the exercise of their power has been improvident we will not vote the money. I challenge the correctness of one remark made by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). He said that so imbued was this Government with the novel idea which they had introduced in 1896, that they proposed to provide for the salary of Judge Prendergast before a judicial district was created for him. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is wrong in that. Under the law of the province of Manitoba power was vested in the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to create a judicial district.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is what I said.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Lieutenant-Governor in Council did exercise that power.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I speak on the authority of my right hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick), and it bears out my recollection of the facts, and in addition to that the Attorney General of Manitoba made a full report advising this Government of the necessity of the appointment. We had every antecedent condition fulfilled. The legislature gave the power to the Executive Council to create judicial districts, the Executive Council exercised their power; the Attorney General of the province in an elaborate report explained satisfactorily to the central Government the necessity of the appointment of a judge, and then, and not till then, this Parliament was asked to vote money for the payment of the salary. I am glad to know that after all our discussion is largely academic. I am glad to know that no argument has been advanced that we should not vote the salary for an additional judge in the Court of Appeal in Ontario. It is acknowledged, I believe, that this is a court of very high standing, and that the legislature thought the number of judges of that court being four, that it was inconvenient.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to refer to this question of fact, and perhaps it will refresh the mind of the Solicitor General. In 1896 the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) argued on the assumption that the Manitoba executive had acted, and I said:

But after the subject had been more fully considered, and the Solicitor General had made his last statement, it appears that this proposition has not even been considered by the executive of the government of the province of Manitoba, but that there happens to be a general Act in that province whereby the Governor in Council may carve out and add to the judicial districts for county court purposes. Apparently, from the Attorney General's telegram and the papers laid before the committee last night, the Executive Council may, in the future, so decide.

I go on to show that according to these papers the executive action had not been taken, and that there was merely a request from the Attorney General.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My recollection is that the Order in Council had passed, and I am strengthened in that belief by the Solicitor General, who knows the facts. I was proceeding to call the attention of the House to the fact that our discussion on both sides has been largely academic. Practically no opposition is offered to the provision for the payment of a new judge for the Court of Appeal of Ontario. Nobody challenges the action of the Ontario Government in creating that additional judge, and nobody challenges the duty which lies on us, under the circumstances, of providing for his salary. So far as that is concerned, the House is at one. Then, we have the judge for the Yukon district, the necessity for whom, and for making provision for the salary of whom, is not challenged. And so with the judges in the province of Quebec; I will leave that matter to my hon. friend to discuss. Now, I am coming for one moment to a matter which is not in the Bill, and which I regret is not in the Bill; that is, that it does not make provision for an increase in the salaries of any of the Superior Court judges throughout the Dominion of Canada except, I believe, in a very special case in the province of Quebec, where an anomaly existed. There has been a very serious anomaly existing as between the salaries of the Superior Court judges of the province of Prince Edward Island, and the salaries of the judges in the adjoining provinces. The matter arose in this way. When the province came into confederation, the judges had been accustomed for years to collect fees for chamber work done by them, and in a very improper way, in my opinion, and I think that opinion will be concurred in by all lawyers. They eked out the salaries which were paid to them by the Dominion Government, by the collection of fees; and when that fact was brought to the attention of a former Minister of Justice he wrote a letter to the judges of Prince Edward Island, expressing his opinion that that practice should cease. Of course, it should not cease without provision being made for commuting the fees which they had been accustomed to receive, and increasing their salaries by the amount of the commutation. That letter was written, and the judges were glad that it was written; for it is not a pleasant thing for judges to sit in chambers and have their clerks collect fees from them. Lately the provincial government of Prince Edward Island brought to the attention of this Government the fact that those fees belonged to the province, and that the provincial exchequer had been improperly deprived of them, and when the matter was argued before Council, it was acknowledged that their claim was absolutely good. I have no doubt that a claim will be made for the fees which had been collected by those judges ever since the province came into confederation. These gentlemen said, "It is your duty to provide proper salaries for these judges, and not attempt in a surreptitious way to make the province pay a part of their salaries." I was in hopes, when my hon. friend the Minister of Justice introduced this Bill, that he would have in it a clause to remove this anomaly. My absence from the capital prevented that being done, which I believe would otherwise have been done. The Minister of Justice told me that he intended to take that matter up. I rose for the purpose of making this explanation why this anomaly is continued, which Government after Government have acknowledged to be indefensible; and I hope that the first moment any legislative action is taken with respect to the salaries of any of the Superior Court judges of the Dominion, that anomaly will be removed, and the salaries of the judges of Prince Edward Island placed on the same footing as those of the judges of the adjoining provinces.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I wish to set the matter right as between the hon. gentleman and myself. The hon. gentleman did not accept the quotation from my own speech in 1896; but I find in "Hansard" his own speech when he read the papers and showed that the Executive had decided to act. There being then no dispute between us, he said:

We have the intention of the Government expressed clearly as to the judicial district they propose to create, and the reason why.

The hon. gentleman will now perhaps accept the statement I made that no judicial district had been created for Judge Pendergast; but the Solicitor General said that it was intended to create one.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I desire to make a few remarks only on this subject, especially so far as the Bill concerns the province of Quebec. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) said the discussion was almost academic. This is not quite correct, for I am sincerely of the opinion that there is no call whatever for the increase in the number of the judges of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec. There are some provisions of the Bill with which I am in accord. For instance, I think the Solicitor General is quite right in giving an additional $1,000 to Mr. Justice Taschereau, who exercises his functions in the city of Montreal, like the other Montreal judges, and also in the district of Terrebonne. I think he is also quite right in providing a salary for another judge of the Circuit Court of Montreal. We who practice in Montreal know that the arrears of the Circuit Court are enormous. When a case comes on in that court, it is almost impossible to find the witnesses, and in some cases the parties are dead, so long a time has elapsed since the case was instituted. With regard to the other provisions of the Bill referring to the province of Quebec, I take the stand which I have always taken, that the system in that province is wrong; and this Government should do something, either by conference with their friends in the provincial government or otherwise, to bring about a complete reform in the system. Something has been said—I am sorry I was not here at the time—about the reforms I endeavoured to introduce while I had the honour of being Attorney General of the province of Quebec. I brought the measure to which allusion has been made, twice before the local legislature—first, in 1893, and again in 1894. My hon. friend the Solicitor General was mistaken when he stated that it was because the reforms were unpopular that I had to withdraw the Bill without its being read the second time. In all the endeavours I made to bring about those changes, I had the very valuable assistance of my hon. friend the Solicitor General. He was with me from the start, and encouraged me, and if he could at that time have led more of his supporters in the House, the Bill would have been carried.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would say to my hon. friend that I am still of the same opinion.

Mr. CASGRAIN. In 1893 the Bill was read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole. The reason why the Bill did not then pass was because I was asked by a great number of the members of the bar of the province of Quebec to allow the measure to stand over for a year so that it might be studied by the bench and bar and others most interested. To that request, I acceded, and therefore the Bill was not passed that session; but when I introduced it, I knew very well that I would not have the support of lawyers from the rural districts, and that was the reason why I approached my hon. friend, the Solicitor General, and some leading lawyers in the House, and asked them if they would make up the deficiency in my party by coming to the rescue in order to carry the measure through the House. I was promised that support, and I must say that my hon. friend the Solicitor General was true to his promise, but unfortunately, when the Bill came up in 1894, the other hon. gentlemen who had promised me their support thought it was not in the interest of their party to vote for it, and therefore, with the number of hon. gentlemen from my own side whom I lost, because they were always averse to any measure which they thought would centralize the judges in Quebec, Montreal and Sherbrooke, and which would make it very difficult for them to be ever appointed judges, I was obliged, if not to withdraw the Bill, to leave it before the public for another year, and it was referred to the committee on legislation. This measure now before the House, in so far as the province of Quebec is concerned, is not needed. There are already thirty judges of the Superior Court in that province disseminated all over the province. Ten were assigned to the city and district of Montreal and four to the city and district of Quebec, and the others are supposed to reside in their special districts. When I brought my Bill before the local House, I had very carefully prepared statistics on which I based my opinion, and on which I claimed that the House should make this radical reform in our system. These statistics are true to-day as they were then, and they go to show that there should be certainly no judge added to the number already appointed. Here are the figures of the average number of writs issued yearly in each district, in the years 1877, 1878, and 1879, and I have also similar statistics for the years 1889, 1890 and 1891. I may say that the system which prevails in the province of Quebec was introduced in 1854 by the late Sir George Cartier, and this has continued to exist without any amendment except the increase in the number of judges. It is a system which is completely out of date, and should certainly not be allowed to exist any longer. Here are the statistics for the years 1877, 1878 and 1879, of the average number of writs issued yearly in the Superior Courts in the various districts, in cases of $400 and over :

Arthabaska	38
Beauce	22

That is, 22 suits taken out in the district in a year.

Beauharnois	18
Bedford	55
Chicoutimi	5
Gaspé	2
Iberville	26
Joliette	10
Kamouraska	33
Montmagny	23
Montreal	900
Ottawa	25
Quebec	398
Richelieu	58

Rimouski	21
Saguenay	3
St. Francis	126
St. Hyacinthe	25
Terrebonne	30
Three Rivers	42

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. One judge had two suits a year.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes, and in some of the districts which are enumerated here, the number of writs now issued is still less than it was in those years. Take, for instance, the district of Montmagny, it is a well known fact that judicial business has decreased there enormously, owing especially to the law which was passed not very long ago, by which the county of Bellechasse was detached from the district of Montmagny and concurrent jurisdiction given to the court of Quebec over it.

Let me give some statistics for the years 1889, 1890 and 1891, and I am sorry I have not statistics for the later years. During these years, the average yearly number of writs, in cases of $400 and over, issued by the Superior Court, was as follows :—

Montreal	470
Quebec	104
Ottawa	20
Joliette and Terrebonne	39
Three Rivers and Richelieu	56
Chicoutimi and Saguenay	4
Gaspé and Rimouski	19
Kamouraska and Montmagny	59
Beauce and Arthabaska	39
St. Francis	104
Bedford and Beauharnois	64
St. Hyacinthe and Iberville	53

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have an official return which shows that in 1890 there were 3,965 cases in Montreal ; in 1891, 4,443 cases ; and in 1892, 4,540 cases.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The figures I am giving now are those of cases of $400 and over.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We do not try small cases under $400.

Mr. CASGRAIN. For the same year, the average number of cases under $400 was as follows :—

Montreal	282
Ottawa	13
Terrebonne	7
Joliette	16
Richelieu	16
St. Francis	63
Beauharnois	18
Bedford	20
Iberville	15
St. Hyacinthe	17
Quebec	63
Three Rivers	17
Saguenay	1
Chicoutimi	2
Gaspé	3
Rimouski	3
Kamouraska	7
Montmagny	28
Beauce	9
Arthabaska	14

I am sorry I have not any statistics for the later years, but the judicial business in the province of Quebec has decreased. There are not as many cases now in the rural districts as there used to be. It seems to me that when a proposition is made to this House to vote a salary for another judge, thus increasing the number of judges in that province, the Government are asking this House to do something which is absolutely useless and imposing upon the country a useless expenditure of $4,000 per annum. Of course, I know the argument can be made in this House, which I believe my learned friend made this morning. It is true that in 1894 or 1895—I forget which—I, as Attorney General, was constitutionally responsible for the law which was passed in the province of Quebec giving one additional judge to the district of St. Francis. I am sorry to say—and I say it without any hesitation—that that law was a mistake, and that I was wrong, and at the time I knew I was wrong, but, unfortunately, there are some things which have to be done, and a crisis cannot be brought on every time a Minister does not agree with his colleagues. Hon. gentlemen on the other side are in the same position in which I was when I introduced this law in 1894. There was no use for it, because if it be true, as it is, that in the district of Sherbrooke there is too much work for the resident judge, it is not necessary to propose this law, because article 2321 of the revised statutes of the province of Quebec provides :

Whenever the despatch of judicial business in any district requires the services of more judges than there are in such district, or whenever the sole judge in any district is unable to discharge his duty for any reason whatsoever, the chief justice, after having been informed thereof, and having conferred with his colleagues of the locality in which he resides, shall, according to the determination they may come to, require one or more of the judges of districts other than those of Quebec and Montreal, to discharge their duties temporarily in such district for the holding of any term or of the court, provided that such judges can absent themselves without injury to the administration of justice in their districts.

It is a well known fact that the judge in the adjoining district, Judge Lynch, of the district of Bedford, has certainly not sufficient work to occupy all his time or half his time.

It is true, he goes and sits in Montreal now and again, but, if there is such a necessity to have another judge in the district of St. Francis, all that has to be done is for the chief justice to appoint, for instance, Mr. Justice Lynch of the district of St. Francis to help Mr. Justice White. He would have jurisdiction in the district of St. Francis ; he has now by law ; but he would exercise his functions in the district of St. Francis and would have ample time to exercise the same functions in his own district. But suppose there is some inconvenience in putting into operation article 2321, if the Government called the attention of the Quebec Government to the fact that this is a useless expenditure to make this difficulty might be obviated. It seems to me it would be very easy for the Government if they do not want to go to the extent of making the radical change that I suggest, at least to propose this change and give the district of St. Francis and the district of Bedford to these two judges, Mr. Justice Lynch and Mr. Justice White. There are other judges in the same position as Mr. Justice Lynch. Take, for instance, the judge at Sorel, the judge of the district of Richelieu ; take the judge of the district of Beauharnois ; take the judge of the district of St. John—all these judges have leisure time and could very easily go to Sherbrooke and sit there, each of them, at least three months in the year. So, it seems to me this Government would be doing a wise thing and would deserve well of the country if, under the very favourable circumstances under which they are they should say to the Government of the province of Quebec : We will not appoint this judge, but we want to come to some understanding with you by which you will change the system, the old, out-of-date system, which you have in the province of Quebec.

Something has been said of the salaries of the judges in general, and the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) said that the salaries were too low and the judges too numerous. There is no doubt of that—the salaries are ridiculously low. Take, for instance, the city of Montreal. Anybody who knows how expensive living is in the city of Montreal must know that the judges cannot live on the pittance of $5,000 a year that they receive. What is the consequence ? The consequence is that they are obliged to do other things than exercise their functions as judges. Some are testamentary executors. I do not think that is quite a proper thing for them to do, and it takes up a great deal of their time. Others are professors in universities. There are other things also that judges do to make a little money and to try to bring their incomes up to what is necessary for the expenditure which they have to make in order to live in Montreal. Now, if the number of judges, instead of being increased were decreased, then, it seems to me, the Government could bring in a measure increasing the salaries of the judges. And, apart from a very few members, I think that such a measure would be well received in this House ; and I think it would be well received by the country at large. Now, I submit that I have shown conclusively by the statistics I have furnished the House, that an additional judge is not necessary ; and, therefore, this very economical Government is voting $4,000 a year quite uselessly. It is no answer to my argument to say that it was I who had the law passed in the province of Quebec increasing the number of judges. If I was wrong, that is no reason why these gentlemen should do wrong. They should rather seek to correct the wrong.

I have no quarrel with the Government on account of the appointments to judge-ships in the province of Quebec up to this date. Mr. Justice Langelier is certainly an ornament to the bench, and, since his appointment has given the greatest satisfaction to the bar and to litigants. In Mr. Justice Lavergne, we have a most painstaking and conscientious judge; and Mr. Justice Lemieux has certainly the varied experience both in criminal and civil law to make him an excellent judge. But I wish to warn the right hon. Premier that if the appointment which is mentioned as about to be made for the district of Arthabaska is made, the right hon. gentleman will be doing a thing he will regret, and will be raising to the bench a man who has no business there and who certainly will not be a worthy colleague of the gentlemen who are on the bench in the province of Quebec to-day.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) has certainly spoken with a candour for which he is entitled to some consideration. But the very candour of his remarks shows the difficulty and deficiency of our system. At the present time, as has been remarked already more than once, under this system we have the duty settled upon us of paying the judges, while the duty of organizing the courts is placed upon the local legislatures. Of course we have to act upon the acts of the local legislatures. But, in the matter of organization of the courts, we are largely to be guided by the opinion of the Attorney General of the province at the time, who recommends the changes. If the Attorney General, who recommends the changes to the Federal Government, and who asks the legislature to vote in favour of the appointments of the new judges and the organization of districts, at the same time—not three or four years afterwards but at the same time—has the candour to say to the Federal authorities: While I put this on the Statute-book you must not mind it; it does not represent my own views, but, in this matter, I am simply acting from political motives—if the Attorney General does that, he naturally relieves the Federal Government of very serious difficulties. But my hon. friend will not be offended, at me or at the Government, I hope, that we took his action as meaning something, that we thought that when he was exercising the great and important powers of Attorney General of the province of Quebec, he was not deceiving the public but was acting upon his own judgment. Of course, we may have been blamable in one thing—and that was believing that he was serious when he told the legislature of the province of Quebec that they should have another judge put upon the bench. We thought we had to deal with an hon. gentleman who had reputation at stake and was honest in intention. We could well understand if he were to say that he had since changed his views. But he tells us, with great candour: I was merely acting from political motives. And he goes on to suggest that we were proceeding upon the same motives. I leave him his suspicion and his acts. We took him seriously. I must say, to the credit of the hon. gentleman, that his views, though they were, at that time—I was going to use perhaps a harsh adjective—they were not so devoid of force and value as he would have us think at the present time. I must tell him that he has no reason to disparage himself on this occasion, he is well supported by authority, and he does not do himself justice when he belittles his own judgment as he has done. He was not in the House, I think, the other day when I quoted the opinion on this subject of the appointment of a second judge for the district of St. Francis, of no less a person than the chief justice of the district of Montreal, Sir Melbourne Tate, in the month of September last. I will quote his opinion again for the benefit of my hon. friend:

While it is right and proper that justice, civil and criminal, should be administered in each district, I do not know of any paramount reason why a judge should be required to reside in any of these districts, with the exception of St. Francis, and perhaps Ottawa. In the former, the work is too heavy for one judge, who has several circuits to attend besides the one at the chef lieu.

Now, I take occasion at once to agree with the statement which was made a moment ago by my hon. friend, that the work could be done, not by a second judge to reside at the chef lieu in Sherbrooke, but by Mr. Justice Lynch, or any of the other judges residing in adjoining districts. But that is not the view taken by the chief justice himself. Mark his words:

While it is right and proper that justice, civil and criminal, should be administered in each district, I do not know of any paramount reason why a judge should be required to reside in any of these districts, with the exception of St. Francis.

So the chief justice of the Superior Court in the district of Montreal is of the opinion that a second judge should be appointed under the statute made by my hon. friend, and that in order to discharge his duties, he should reside in that district. Therefore, my hon. friend had no occasion to disparage his own judgment as he has done, because I may say that his opinion on such a subject is as good as that of any one in the province of Quebec. Now, is not the opinion of Sir Melbourne Tate conclusive that in this case there is not, as was stated by my hon. friend, any political or sinister motive on the part of this Government, but we are simply acting in the best interest of the administration of justice in the province of Quebec, and especially in the district of St. Francis? My hon. friend stated a moment ago that there were judges in the province of Quebec who had very little work to do, and I am prepared to admit that. But I must say that unless he is able to modify the geography of the province, there must always be there certain judges who will have less work to do than others. He has referred to the case of Gaspé, and according to his statistics, the judge for the district of Gaspé has almost nothing to do. The hon. gentleman stated that in one year the judge had only two cases to try. I think he gave statistics for the year 1889-90. The Solicitor General has just placed in my hands a report of the judicial statistics of the province published in 1895, showing that in the previous year there had been in the district of Gaspé 44 Superior Court cases taken out.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That was a very exceptional year, to my own personal knowledge.

The PRIME MINISTER. If only two writs were issued in 1891, was not that also an exceptional year?

Mr. CASGRAIN. I gave the statistics of six years, and that was the average.

The PRIME MINISTER. Let it be so, and if it be so, there is very little work for a judge in Gaspé. I find that in 1897 there were 31 cases, but I will take the argument of my hon. friend as he made it a moment ago, that there is very little business in the district of Gaspé, not enough to occupy the time of one man. But how would he remedy it? The district of Gaspé is a peninsula, at one end of the province, with no railway communication except with a small portion of the district. Under such circumstances, it is impossible not to have a judge resident in the district of Gaspé. A judge has been resident there from time immemorial, and I do not think that justice can be administered in the district of Gaspé unless you have a judge residing there, and unless, as I said, you could modify the physical geography of that part of the province, we shall have to submit to such exceptional conditions. It is only yesterday that our attention was called to the case of two young men who came to their death under most cruel circumstances. Somebody is guilty of the death of these two men, guilty either of murder or of manslaughter, and yet justice could not be done because there is no judge in that territory.

Mr. FOSTER. There was a judge.

The PRIME MINISTER. If there had been a judge who had only two cases to administer, justice would have been vindicated in the case I refer to, though probably the hon. gentleman would criticise the expenditure. But I must say to my hon. friend that there is a great deal to be said in favour of the legislation which he introduced some years ago in favour of remodelling the judicial system of the province of Quebec. I am in favour of that principle, and I do not see why members representing rural districts should object to it. I do not think the case was fairly presented to them. But if my hon. friend is to change the number of districts and remodel the administration of justice in the province of Quebec, and if he is to base his reform upon the province of Ontario, though I could not believe that was his object, he would have to decrease the number of the Superior Court judges, and he would have to create County Court judges. The province of Ontario does not contemplate that judges should be resident in the city of Toronto, and that there should be none in any other part of the province. The system in force in Ontario contemplates that there should be County Court judges distributed all over the province to administer what I may call summary justice, to answer to the instant demands which may be made upon them. But the judges of the Superior Court reside in the city of Toronto, and go from district to district to administer justice only in the higher class of cases. My hon. friend would have to do something of that kind. Let him remember that in the province of Quebec there will be 37 judges of the Superior Court, after his legislation is passed, and 3 judges of the Circuit Court, 40 in all; whereas in Ontario, there are 64 County Court judges, and 15 Superior Court judges, or 79 in all, administering justice in the same manner as do the judges of Quebec. These 79 judges in Ontario perform the same work which is performed by the 40 judges of the province of Quebec. But the Superior Court judges in the province of Quebec have to administer justice in all classes of cases, from suits of $1, as was stated by the Solicitor General, to suits of $1,000,000; whereas the judges of the Superior Court in Ontario only administer justice in certain classes of cases, in what I may call superior cases, and the inferior cases of justice are administered by the County Court judges. Now, there are in Ontario just double the number of judges, less one, that there is in Quebec. There is not in Ontario double the population of the province of Quebec, there is not even one-third more. So my hon. friend will see that if he were to carry out his project he would have not only to diminish the number of districts—in which I am at one with him—but he would have to organize some such system of county courts as they have in Ontario. He would have to increase the number of Circuit Court judges and diminish the number of Superior Court judges. So far I am at one with him, and if I had the honour of being a member of the local legislature when he introduced his Bill, I would have held up both hands in support of it. But that legislation did not carry. My hon.

friend introduced his Bill twice, and I accept every reason he gave why these measures were not carried out. He carried it once to Committee of the Whole, and then he had to withdraw it; and why? Because, as he said, he could not carry it against members representing the rural constituencies. They are a powerful body, they constitute a majority, the city members are a minority; and so long as the rural members are of that opinion, it is not possible for the hon. gentleman or any one to carry out this scheme of reform. I regret it very much.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I said I could not carry it against the rural lawyers. The rural members, not of the legal profession, generally were in favour of the Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know whether they were lawyers, for lawyers have not a very good name. If they acted as a majority they appear to have been able to prevent the hon. gentleman carrying out his views. Let me put the case in another form, with the modifications now made by the hon. gentleman. So long as the lawyers in the local legislature are opposed to the measure, not even the hon. gentleman himself could carry out the reform. So the argument in favour of reform must be decided by the lawyers, and the hon. gentleman would be able to carry out his reform except for the lawyers from the rural constituencies. Let us rather say that so long as the public opinion of the province is not in favour of this reform it cannot be carried out, but when public opinion is in favour of the scheme the lawyers themselves will have to come down and submit. The hon. gentleman says we might have a conference with the local government on this subject. It is strange how hon. gentlemen opposite have suddenly become reformers. Confederation has been in existence about thirty years. During that time the Conservatives have been in office no less than 25 years, and during all that period they never thought of carrying out the scheme of reform that is now being pressed on our attention. Let me say that I hope it will not take so long for the Reform party to take up and carry this reform as was occupied by the Conservatives in considering it. The Conservatives—shall I say what is in my mind—are not much good at anything, but they are not worth anything at reform. The hon. gentlemen are sure to bungle it, for the reason that they are not sincere.

Mr. BERGERON. Still you have taken our policy.

The PRIME MINISTER. We have now a Reform Government in Ottawa, and a Reform Government in the province of Quebec, and a better day has dawned on the future of the Dominion. In the meantime, what is our duty? It is simply to act in consonance with the judgment of the province, as expressed by the voice of its legislature. We cannot do anything else. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is also a reformer in his way. He has taunted me for what I have done and said I was a Conservative. I may blame myself that I am too much of a Conservative. I am a Conservative to this extent—I want to maintain the constitution of the country such as it is. It is not perfect, but we must endeavour to work it out with all its deficiencies, and one is regarding this very subject, that the body which has to spend the money has not also to devise the manner in which it shall be spent. That is the devise of the constitution. It is a strong defect, and perhaps we may have to apply ourselves to the task of remedying it. In the meantime I say to the hon. member for Pictou that I am so much of a Conservative that I shall endeavour to believe under any circumstances, until it is proved on the floor of this House to the contrary, that the local legislature is sincere and truthful; I shall be willing to take its recommendation and accept the recommendation as the honest expression of the will of the province. When an hon. gentleman who has held the position of Attorney General of the province of Quebec makes such a confession as he has made, I must bow before his word; but at all events so long as that proof is not forthcoming, I shall always believe when a statute is passed by the local legislature that it is the honest expression of the wishes, wants and desires of that legislature. But there may be at some time an attempt made to deceive us. The hon. gentleman has told us that there has been an attempt made to deceive. We would be bound, of course, to act in order to meet those circumstances. The hon. gentleman says we should come into conflict with the local legislature. If we were to follow his opinion we would disregard the act of the legislature; if we did not it was not in accordance with our view and judgment, we would review its legislation, we would assume it was wrong if it was not according to our way of thinking and according to our standard of right. If we adopted such a system, confederation could not be worked. We would have the same conflicts they had in the United States in respect to state rights, and we do not want that state of affairs, but we need, as much as possible, united action between the provincial and the central Governments.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman acted on the opposite principle in 1877 in the case of Leeds and Grenville. At that time Mr. Blake, speaking as Minister of Justice of the Government in which the right hon. Prime Minister was a member, gave as his reason for opposing the action of the provincial legislature that the Government were not convinced of the necessity of the Act.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman honours me too much; I was not a member of the Government in 1876. I have enough sins to bear without being called upon to answer for the sins of others.

Mr. BERGERON. The hon. gentleman was elected in the fall of 1877 as a Minister.

The PRIME MINISTER. That was not in the session of 1877. I have only this to say in conclusion. I have stated my opinion, over and over again, that our present constitution, so far as this matter is concerned and other similar matters, is not only imperfect, but is a source of great danger to the country. Some time or other, and perhaps sooner than later, the Parliament of Canada will have to be asked to invite the Imperial Parliament to amend the constitution and remove what is admittedly a great danger to us as a people, but so long as the constitution is as it is, it behooves every true Canadian to endeavour to prevent friction between the federal authorities and the local authorities.

Mr. McNEILL. I am afraid if the right hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat and I were to discuss the question which he opened a few moments ago as to whether Conservative policy or Reform policy was the better policy for this country, we might not altogether agree. I am afraid I should not agree with my hon. friend in thinking that the Reform party was the only party that could reform, and the Conservative party was unable to do anything well. However, that is not just what I propose to discuss at the present moment. I want to take up a moment or two of the time of the House in expressing my views with respect to the question now before the House. With a great deal that has fallen from hon. members on this side of the House I agree. I agree entirely in thinking that it is, to say the least, anomalous that we should be called upon to provide the funds to pay judges, for the appointment of whom we are not responsible.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They may be responsible for the appointment, but not for the necessity of the appointment.

Mr. McNEILL. The local legislature declares that a judge is required for a certain district, and it seems anomalous that we should be called upon to defray the expenses of that judge without our having the power to decide whether the judge be necessary or unnecessary in that district. It seems to me that as matters now stand, what we have to decide in any particular case is whether or not the recommendation which is made to us is a good one, and whether there be need for the additional judge. So far as the province of Quebec is concerned, as to the local affairs of which I am to some extent ignorant, I have listened very carefully to the views that have been expressed on both sides of the House in reference to these two judges whom it is proposed to appoint. I learned from my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) that he approved of the appointment of this additional Circuit Court judge at Montreal. I suppose there is no hon. gentleman in this House whose view will have greater weight than that of my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain), who was Attorney General for the province, and so we may put that question as to the Circuit Court judge aside. What fell from my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) certainly impressed me very much with regard to the St. Francis district, because it would seem that all that was necessary was to have brought a judge in from another district to assist the present judge in overtaking the work. But, from the remarks of the right hon. leader of the Government, it would seem that the very highest authority in the province has distinctly stated that another resident judge is necessary for the district of St. Francis.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not interpret the words of Sir Melbourne Tait as does the right hon. the Premier. Sir Melbourne Tait meant that another judge should be appointed for Sherbrooke, but not necessarily a resident judge.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, a resident judge.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Then, let the judge for the district of Bedford reside in Sherbrooke, and that will cover the point perfectly.

Mr. McNEILL. It seems to me that the words read by the right hon. the Premier did imply that Sir Melbourne Tait thought there should be a resident judge there. I do not know as to the possibility of bringing in another judge who is not already appointed to the district of St. Francis, nor do I know that this House is competent to deal with that matter. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) say that we have the power to compel one of the other judges to reside in the St. Francis district?

Mr. CASGRAIN. No.

Mr. McNEILL. Then, it comes back to the point which has been admitted on both sides of the House, that there is not that arrangement of judicial districts in the province of Quebec which there should be. However, we are face to face with the fact that we require a resident judge in the district of St. Francis, that we have not the power to transfer another judge to reside there, and the question is: shall we, so far as we are concerned, leave that district without this necessary additional judge? I think this would be a desirable time, when the right hon. gentleman and his party are in power, and when probably the best possible results would flow from it, that there should be a conference with the local provincial authorities, and that an effort should be made to re-arrange and redistribute the judicial districts in the province of Quebec. In the meantime, as I have said, we are face to face with the fact that for the administration of justice in the district of St. Francis an additional judge is required, and the question for us is whether we shall do our part and give this additional assistance which is asked. It has perhaps been to some extent lost sight of on this side of the House, that while we are asked to provide this additional money for these two judges, yet the Government are taking steps to make a reduction in the expenditure, in the matter of the travelling expenses of the judges, which will more than cover the additional amount necessary to provide for these new appointments. I have spoken in regard to the province of Quebec with a good deal of diffidence, but only after having listened to the discussion with the greatest care that I could lend to it. I must say this frankly, that while I have not that implicit degree of confidence in the measures of hon. gentlemen opposite which perhaps some hon. gentleman behind them may have, I do think, so far as this measure is concerned, that the Government are scarcely subject to the accusation of having brought it in for political purposes. That is my view, and I am not afraid to state it here or anywhere else. In the province of Ontario we have a number of senior judges who are, or rather have been. I believe, every one of them, political opponents of hon. gentlemen opposite. All of these men, or almost all of them, were appointed by Conservative Administrations; and when the Government have introduced a measure to increase their salaries, no man can say that it has been introduced for political purposes. It can only be introduced because they believe that in this matter they are doing what is just and right. I am quite satisfied that they are doing so; and, for my part, knowing what I do of these judges in the province of Ontario, I think I would be very derelict in my duty if I did not rise in this House and say that I was very glad to see this measure of justice accorded to them, and thank the Government for having accorded it. These gentlemen have been discharging most onerous duties for many years past, and if this measure of justice were not granted to them, they would be paid now at a much lower rate of remuneration than any other judges in Canada. They are doing a great deal more work than the senior county judges in Ontario; and yet they are receiving much less remuneration. They have been the revising officers under the Franchise law; and they are being deprived by the new Franchise Act of the remuneration they received for the revision of the lists. They are receiving to-day the same salary they received a quarter of a century ago, although since that salary was decided upon, their jurisdiction has been very much extended, and their work and the importance of their work have enormously increased; and it is only right and proper that their services should receive the degree of consideration they are now receiving from the Government. With regard to the additional judge for the Ontario Court of Appeal, I must say that I think that also is wanted. That court is a court which I think every person who has given any consideration at all to the matter will agree to be one of the most efficient courts to be found anywhere within Her Majesty's dominions. I have not yet heard any one venture to cast the slightest aspersion upon that court, either as to the efficiency or the diligence of the judges. We find that the work of that court is about a year in arrear, and something must be done to deal with that condition of things. The statute passed by the provincial legislature provides for an increase in the number of the judges by one, so that in case of a press of business, the court may be divided into two by taking a judge from another court to act with the judges of the Court of Appeal. So that, so far as my province at least is concerned, I think the course that has been pursued by the Government is one that deserves the support of this House. With regard to the proposed judge in the Yukon district, I presume no one will deny that that is an increased expenditure that is necessary. While I do not profess to understand all the difficulties with regard to the province of Quebec, and while a measure of this kind is no doubt open to criticism—for no Government can introduce a measure of this kind without being open to criticism—still, for my part, I endorse the course the Government have taken on the whole, and I am very much obliged to them for the course they have taken in reference to my own province.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I think I should make a personal explanation. I understood the right hon. Premier to say that I had pleaded guilty to having wilfully misled the people of the province of Quebec and this Parliament in passing the law to which reference has been made. In order that there may be no misconception, I want to state the facts as they really are, and in doing so, I will not give away any secret which I should not give. It was well known that my policy at that time was not to increase the number of judges of the Superior Court in the province of Quebec, but, on the contrary, to reduce the number to sixteen; but after the two endeavours which I made to bring about the reform of which I spoke had failed, then, as it was thought necessary by the other members of the Government to have two judges residing in Sherbrooke, the law was passed. As I said, I was constitutionally responsible for it, but at the same time it was well known that that law was against my policy as stated in the House and in the country.

The PRIME MINISTER Mr. Speaker, just one word on this point. My hon. friend says that his personal views were in favour of a reduction, but he yielded to the views of his colleagues. I can come to no other conclusion than that his views were one way, and the views of his colleagues the other way. It often happens that the members of a government are not all of the same mind; but after matters have been discussed, a policy is adopted. The policy adopted at that time was to increase the number of judges by one. The measure introduced by my hon. friend was to amend article 2315 of the Consolidated Statutes of the province of Quebec, which article provided that the Superior Court should be composed of a chief justice and thirty puisne judges. This number was increased by one judge, making the number thirty-one. Then the hon. gentleman introduced an amendment to section 2319, which provided that there should be one judge in the district of St. Francis. His amendment provided that there should be two judges in that district, one to reside in the town of Sherbrooke. But my hon. friend comes now and tells us that his own judgment was different. If so, he yielded to the judgment of his colleagues, and introduced that Bill; and now will he tell us that we are not to give effect to the legislation which he introduced, if not upon his own judgment, in deference to the judgment of his colleagues in the Government?

Mr. ANGERS. (Translation.) When the resolution preceding this Bill was introduced, I called the attention of the House to an anomaly, or rather, to an injustice which I thought should be remedied. But, as upon that occasion, the hon. Prime Minister was not in his seat, I think I am warranted in repeating the remarks I then gave utterance to.

The injustice I have alluded to is this: that two rural judges, Mr. Justice Gagné, for the district of Chicoutimi-Saguenay, and Mr. Justice De Billy, for the district of Gaspé, are paid a lower salary than their colleagues receive, $3,500, while the latter receive $4,000. Why not put those judges on the same footing as the other judges? In their capacity of judges of the Superior Court, do they not enjoy the same jurisdiction? I may perhaps be told that they have less work to do than their colleagues have. To this I may reply by invoking the argument resorted to by some hon. gentlemen in order to justify the increase of $1,000 granted to Mr. Justice Taschereau, with the consent of this House. As his colleague, Judge Taschereau, Mr. Justice Gagne has to administer justice in two districts, and the number of cases he has to try is more considerable than they are in several other districts. Let me give a few statistics. But in this connection I may say that this is a ground on which I feel that one ought to tread with caution, since I have heard the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), when speaking on this very matter, giving statistics to show that in 1889 and 1891 there had been in the Superior Court in the district of Saguenay only two or three cases taken out. Those figures, are, to tell the plain truth, highly fanciful.

Mr. CASGRAIN. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman wishes to know where I took the statistics I have furnished the House. Those statistics were prepared from the official reports showing the judicial business done in the different courts of the province. I have drawn them from the speech which I delivered on the floor of the Quebec Legislature, when I introduced the Bill of 1893. Those statistics were furnished by the officials of the Attorney General's Office, and they are based on the reports which we had received.

Mr. ANGERS. (Translation.) I did not mean to say that in giving those statistics to the House the hon. gentleman had largely drawn upon his fancy, but that they are incorrect. I am a practising lawyer in that district, and I speak with knowledge. I have before me the statistics published in 1894 and 1897, and from those statistics I am able to show that, if it were fair to give Judge Taschereau an increase of salary on the ground that he is doing more work than some of his colleagues, I say that the same argument holds good in the case of the judge for the district of Chicoutimi and Saguenay. If the argument applies in the one case, it ought also to hold in the other case, and, to my mind, it is unanswerable.

To refer again to those statistics, it seems that for the year 1894 there were six cases tried in the Superior Court at Chicoutimi, and I must say that I am surprised at the small number of the writs issued. The way in which those statistics are prepared may perhaps account for this, because here is, I suppose, the way they proceed in preparing those statistics. They only take into account the cases which have been initiated and tried during the year, leaving aside the cases inscribed prior to that date.

Let me give some further statistics showing the number of writs issued in 1894 in some judicial districts: 1894—Chicoutimi, 6; Saguenay, 22.

I leave aside the cases of $100 and $200 tried at Hebertville and Baie St. Paul in the Circuit Court.

Let us now pass to some other districts, and give the writs issued for the same year: Arthabaska, 22; Beauce, 23; Joliette, 26; Kamouraska, 21; St. Hyacinthe, 18.

Let us now take the statistics for 1897: Chicoutimi, 16; Saguenay district, 18; which gives a total of 34 cases. Arthabaska, 20; Beauce, 32; Beauharnois, 34; Rimouski, 18; Richelieu, 16.

Now, I say, without fear of successful contradiction, judging from the quantity of business done, that a gross injustice is being done to the judge of Chicoutimi and Saguenay in not putting him on the same basis as the other judges, and that his salary should be increased to $4,000. I further say that to contend that the salary of the judges of the same rank should be fixed on the basis of the work done seems to me a mistaken policy of economy and one little consonant with the sound principles of political economy. In my opinion, the rule to be acted upon in this matter is that judges of the same jurisdiction should receive the same salary. For, if you act upon the principle that the salaries ought to be fixed according to the amount of work done, there would follow from those premises this consequence, that a judge appointed to the bench with a salary of $4,000 for a district where there are 200 cases to be tried in the year, would be liable to have his salary curtailed, if he had only 100 cases to try the next year. Another reason why the number of cases tried is not the best standard by which you may form an estimate of the competency and attainments of a judge and determine the salary he is entitled to, is this, namely, that in the trial of ten cases a judge may perform a larger amount of work and show greater legal ability and attainments of a higher order than another judge would do in trying forty cases. It is not only the quantity of cases tried that you should take into consideration, but also the quality of the work done; and a judge who has given forty good decisions is entitled to more credit than a judge who has rendered a hundred bad ones. Such things will occur in spite of all. Some judges have an unlucky hand, while there are others who were born under a lucky star. I have just pointed out how to obviate such consequences and troublesome complications. Put all the judges of the same class on a footing of equality by giving them the same salary. I think the arguments I have addressed to the House are most cogent reasons why the Government should accede to my views, and I trust they will see their way clear to remove the anomaly and the injustice which I have pointed out.

Mr. CASGRAIN. (Translation.) If the hon. gentleman will excuse me, I think he should not forget that the judge for Chicoutimi and Saguenay has to travel over long distances during the most inclement season of the year, and that is another consideration which should not be lost sight of.

Mr. ANGERS. (Translation.) I may remind the hon. gentleman that, upon a former occasion, I drew the attention of the House to that point, and I agree with him that it is a consideration which should not be overlooked. As I have already stated, it took Justice Gagné eight days to cover the distance from Malbaie to Quebec, about 90 miles.

As far as the administration of justice is concerned, I have listened with much interest to the remarks fallen from the hon. gentleman who addressed the House. For my part, I am in favour of remodelling the judicial system of the province of Quebec and putting it on a basis which is reasonable; and, as stated by the right hon. Prime Minister, that is a duty which devolves upon the local legislatures. All this House has to do is to take the condition of things which is in existence in each province.

Now, I wish to refer to certain strictures passed by some hon. gentlemen upon the judges of the province of Quebec. These gentlemen seemed to insinuate that judgeships in that province were made sinecures; that our judges had very little work to do, and were living on an extravagant scale, when compared with the justices in the province of Ontario. Let us again refer to the judicial statistics, and see whether the imputations cast on the judges of the province of Quebec are well founded or not, and also whether the praises bestowed on the Ontario judiciary are in strict accordance with the facts.

First, as to the matter of travelling allowances, I am free to confess that in a few cases an exorbitant amount was charged, and I think it regrettable that such a construction should have been put upon the proviso of the statute, "except that three days' absence at least shall always be allowed for." What are the facts? I find that in the province of Ontario, last year, the judges drew in travelling allowances the sum of $27,500. And yet I think I am safe in saying that in the province of Ontario travelling is much less expensive than it is in Quebec, as the whole province is served with railway facilities, while the cost of travelling in several districts of Quebec is much larger, owing to the lack of railway communication. Yet in spite of all these railway facilities, the judges in the province of Ontario last year drew $27,500 for travelling allowances, whereas in the province of Quebec there were paid out in travelling expenses to the judges only $21,012.

There is another point which some hon. gentlemen emphasized, when they represented the judges in the province of Quebec as sinecurists with hardly any work to do. What are the facts, Sir?

There are in the province of Ontario 80 judges, whereas there are only 41 in the province of Quebec. Now, the population of Ontario is 2,114,321, while that of Quebec is 1,448,535, and from those figures it may be inferred that the judges of Ontario have more leisure time than those of Quebec have. I do not mention here the propensity of our people to litigation, which, all things being alike, ought to create more work for our judges.

I wish also to say a word or two concerning the salaries paid to the Quebec judges, as some hon. gentlemen seem to be under the impression that the judiciary in the province of Quebec is more burdensome to the public treasury than that of the province of Ontario. In 1896-97, I find that for salaries to the judges in the province of Ontario there were paid out $221,900, whereas, to the judges of the province of Quebec there were paid only $180,000 in salaries, which gives a difference of $41,900 in favour of Quebec. Those statistics speak volumes, and I submit them to the consideration of the House.

While I am on my feet, I wish to touch upon a last point, to which I may revert later on, in Committee of the Whole. It is an amendment which I would suggest to the Bill now under consideration. At the last session of the Quebec Legislature the following enactment was passed:—

The three judges of the Court of Review are, however, taken from all the judges of the Superior Court of the province, at the discretion of the chief justice or acting chief justice, as the case may be.

As will be seen, all the judges of the rural districts are called upon to sit in review at the discretion of the Chief Justice. The Solicitor General has justly provided for the travelling allowances of those rural judges who are requested to sit in review. But, in my opinion, the best way to give full effect to that law was to embody in the Bill the very same words of the local statute which authorizes these judges to attend the court. I must express my regret at the present Bill not having been worded in the very terms of the provincial statute; because this Bill provides for the payment of travelling allowances only when it is certified by the Chief Justice or judge discharging the duties of Chief Justice, that the attendance of such judge was necessary by reason of illness, incapacity or absence of one of the judges resident at Montreal or Quebec, as the case may be.

Mr. CASGRAIN. (Translation.) This clause practically overrides the Quebec statute.

Mr. ANGERS. (Translation.) It does, but this clause the only object of which is to meet the case provided by the provincial statute, does not go far enough.

Mr. SAVARD. (Translation.) It is not my intention to participate at any length in the debate now in progress; but, as this question particularly concerns the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay which I have the honour of representing here, the name of which has been introduced into this debate by my hon. friend from Charlevoix (Mr. Angers) when he spoke of Mr. Justice Gagné, I deem it my duty to say a word or two. I must say, from the very outset, that in equity—and on this point I agree with the hon. member for Charlevoix—the judges for the districts of Chicoutimi and Gaspé are as much entitled to an increase of salary as Mr. Justice Taschereau, whose salary by this Bill, is to be increased to $5,000, but I hasten to add that, in my opinion, all our judges are sufficiently remunerated. In my opinion, Mr. Justice Gagné is sufficiently recompensed by the salary of $3,500 which he gets, and Judge Taschereau who is paid a salary of $4,000 gets an adequate remuneration for his services. If Judge Gagné is dissatisfied with his present salary, there is but one course open to him: let him step down from the bench and I have not the least doubt but that there will be found in both districts people willing to succeed him on the bench, and as well qualified as he is to fill up that position.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) Here is a suggestion.

Mr. SAVARD. (Translation.) As to the matter of judicial business, there is no doubt that the judge for the district of Chicoutimi has as much and even more work to do than the judges of Arthabaska, Rimouski, Gaspé and Beauce have to do in their own districts. But, although the judge for Chicoutimi may have more work to do than the judges of the districts I have just mentioned have, that is no reason why he should get an increase of salary. I think he is sufficiently paid, and so are also the other judges. In my opinion, it would be preferable for the Government to amend their measure not as suggested by my hon. friend, but in an opposite direction. It would be far better, according to my way of thinking, to curtail the salaries paid to our judges. The result would be that we would no longer see some of our colleagues seeking high offices and we would no longer hear the supporters of the Government saying that their colleagues are endeavouring to be raised to the bench or to some other position. Although, on principle, I am opposed to an increase in the salary of judges, still I believe that the honourable Judges Gagné and DeBilly are as much entitled to that increase as Judge Taschereau is. Judge Taschereau is no greater ornament to the bench than are his colleagues, Judges Gagné, DeBilly, and Larue. We are told that Mr. Justice Taschereau has to administer justice in the district of Terrebonne. Now, by the fact that he has continued to live in Montreal, where his presence is tolerated, he is not entitled to an increase of salary. The same favour was granted to Judge Gagné who resides in the town of Chicoutimi. The hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Angers) has adduced as a reason in favour of giving an increase of salary to Mr. Justice Gagné the fact that he has to travel and thereby incur some expenditure.

Mr. ANGERS. (Translation.) I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; he should not put into my mouth the very opposite to what I said. I never invoked as a plea in favour of my demand the expenditure incurred by Mr. Justice Gagné. Like the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) I only touched upon that question in order to point out the hardships which the judge has to undergo in travelling over long distances in his district, without my taking into consideration the expenditure involved.

Mr. SAVARD. (Translation.) I was just coming to that point. Did the hon. gentleman mean to complain on behalf of the judge about the hardships experienced by the latter in attending to his duties in the district of Chicoutimi, or else did he pretend to say that his expenses were too large? The hon. gentleman has laid great stress upon the hardships which this judge has to undergo in the discharge of his judicial duties. I may tell my hon. friend that, from my practical experience of the counties of Chicoutimi, Saguenay and Charlevoix, it does not take eight days to travel from Malbaie to Chicoutimi. Since we have had a Liberal Government at the head of affairs in this country, a Government pledged to a policy of progress, the trains have run regularly three times a week between Quebec and Chicoutimi in winter, and we have a steamboat running every day in summer, so that Judge Gagné could have saved a great deal of time, by travelling in the cars. If he has found it more convenient to travel during such snowstorms as we have had last winter, I fail to see why the Budget should be answerable for it, and why this House should be invited to vote an increase of salary to the honourable judge.

Mr. BERGERON. (Translation.) He should wait till the storm is over, to travel.

Mr. SAVARD. (Translation.) As everybody knows, during the snow storms which raged last winter, some hon. gentlemen took three days to cover the distance from Montreal to Ottawa. The hon. member for Charlevoix should not forget those facts. If Judge Gagné, when called upon to administer justice to the intelligent electors of my hon. colleague from Charlevoix, has deemed it more convenient to travel in the way he did, it was, no doubt, because he wished to avail himself of the opportunity to visit Quebec and Montreal on his way to Malbaie, the county town of the district. I have quite frequently travelled over that road and I speak with knowledge. I am satisfied that an ordinary man could cover that distance on foot in two days. I was surprised at hearing the hon. gentleman say that Mr. Justice Gagné had taken a week to cover that distance, and I am not far from believing that the good faith of the hon. gentleman was abused. I agree with the hon. gentleman who shares with me the honour of representing this judicial district in the House, that there exists a certain anomaly from the standpoint taken by him in dealing with this question, and, should the salaries of the judges be readjusted, I have no doubt but that steps would be taken to remedy the grievance complained of. I fail to see why, when the salaries of judges were originally fixed, the judges for the judicial districts of Chicoutimi, Saguenay and Gaspé were not put on the same footing as the other judges. Probably this was owing to the fact, and the hon. gentlemen will no doubt agree with me that, at that time, the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, as well as that of Charlevoix, were not represented in this House, as they are to-day, by members able to press upon the Government the merits of their respective districts. I fail to see any other reason for the existence of that anomaly, because had it been pointed out at that time, I have no doubt but that it would have been corrected. The districts of Chicoutimi and Gaspé are the two largest districts in the province of Quebec, if not the most populous or the most commercial; and in view of the considerable hardships which the judges have to undergo and of the expenditure involved in travelling they should have been put on the same basis as the other judges. I shall not trespass any further upon the indulgence of this House, but while I am on my feet, I wish to say this: I am glad to see that the Bill now before the House does not provide for an increase of salary in favour of the judges of Chicoutimi and Gaspé, because such an increase, to my mind, would have been at variance with the interests of the county. If those two judges against whom I have not a word to say, are under the impression that they are not adequately paid for their services, let them step down from the bench, and, at all events, the administration of justice will not suffer from such a step.

Mr. BERGERON. I wish to remind my hon. friend the Solicitor General that he omitted, no doubt inadvertently, to answer the question I put to him the other day, and which was again put to him to-day by the member for Charlevoix (Mr. Angers). It was with regard to a conflict of jurisdiction between this Parliament and the Quebec legislature. This resolution provides, so far as the court of revision is concerned:

But no travelling allowance shall be granted to any judge requested to sit in review, under section 1 of chapter 20 of the statutes of 1898 of the legislature of Quebec, unless it is certified by the chief justice or judge discharging the duties of the chief justice in the district, that the attendance of such judge was necessary by reason of the illness, incapacity or absence of one of the judges resident at Montreal or Quebec, as the case may be.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am of opinion that, take for instance the district of Quebec, the four judges are quite competent to dispose of all the cases that come before the court of review, and I can see no justification for the additional expenditure entailed by bringing in outside judges to assist in the performance of that duty. My right hon. leader, however, drew my attention to this clause of the Bill, and expressed the opinion, in which my hon. friend shared, that perhaps we are going beyond our powers in introducing the legislation in its present form; and in order to comply with the request of my leader and my hon. friend, I have amended the Bill so as to make it read:

Shall be certified by the chief justice or judge discharging the duties of chief justice in that district, that the attendance of such judge was necessary in his discretion.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that this Act was passed by the Quebec House last session at the solicitation of the county judges.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It had the unanimous support of the bar.

Mr. BERGERON. A great deal has been said about the system of our judicature in the province of Quebec, and I do not want to take up the time of the House by repeating what has been said. I want, however, to emphasize the fact that our system really needs amending. The other day I asked my right hon. friend whether, since we are called on to pay, it would not be proper that he should confer with the local authorities, and in the course of the discussion today the right hon. gentleman mentioned one way by which he could force the Quebec legislature to confer with him on this question. We are not obliged to vote this salary. The Quebec legislature may ask for one or more judges, but we are not obliged to vote the money to pay them. It was decided by this House, under the direction of the late Sir John Thompson, that we need not grant the nomination of the judges they ask for if we do not think they are needed. The right hon. gentleman spoke of the address of Sir Melbourne Tait, chief justice of the province of Quebec. I was present when the chief justice gave that address, and have read it, and I did not understand him to say that there should be new appointments, but merely that there ought to be two judges in Sherbrooke. There are sufficient judges in the province of Quebec at present to provide for two at Sherbrooke by taking one from somewhere else. This new appointment is purely and simply a political one, and hon. gentlemen opposite are taking advantage of the law passed in Quebec a few years ago to make this political appointment.

The PRIME MINISTER. Have we the power, if we called on Mr. Justice Lynch to discharge the duties of a second judge in the district of St. Francis, and if he refused, to compel him to do so?

Mr. BERGERON. I do not say that, but I say that if the Government would refuse to appoint a new man, the chief justice would have to apply to the Quebec legislature to have one of the judges not required in the other districts sent to Sherbrooke. We are legislating here for the whole country, and we should do so on business principles and not on party exigencies, and although the present Government is not responsible for the existing state of things, that does not make it any better and does not justify us in doing anything to continue it. There are now sufficient judges in Quebec—

Mr. CASGRAIN. There are too many.

Mr. BERGERON—but the work is badly distributed. In Montreal the right hon. gentleman knows that there is as much as and probably a great deal more, litigation than in all the rest of the province, and my hon. friend the Solicitor General has gone so far as to say that there is more than in the whole province of Ontario. There are not sufficient judges in Montreal. Three or four more there would only enable the courts to keep up with the work from day to day, but there are judges in the country who have nothing to do. Is it not time therefore that an effort should be made to have the system changed? Let me give you, Mr. Speaker, for the edification of members from the other provinces, an evidence in support of what I say. We had a judge in Montreal, who was respected and esteemed by everybody and who has lately been raised to the position of Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Quebec. I refer to Mr. Justice Jetté. He was looked upon as one of the most painstaking and distinguished jurists in our province. Whether the salary paid to him was insufficient or not, I do not know, but he not only acted as judge, but also as professor at Laval University. I have no doubt that it was not because of the paltry salary paid a professor that he so acted, but because he was fond of study and the teaching of law, but all the same the time devoted to his professorship was not given to the study of the records in the cases on which he sat. More than that, he also administered the Beaudry estate, for which he got a salary, and though I am equally inclined to think that it was not for the salary that he did the work, nevertheless the time he had to give to it was not spent in the study of his judicial records. What was the consequence? It was that when he was appointed Lieutenant-Governor, in over eighty cases which he had taken en délibéré, the délibéré had to be discharged, to the great expense of the clients and inconvenience of the lawyers, and had to be tried over again. Out of these eighty records, there was one case that had been pleaded in 1886, and which had been kept en délibéré by Mr. Justice Jetté ever since. The case had to be pleaded over again, and on Monday last judgment was rendered by Mr. Justice Gill of Montreal. Yet Mr. Justice Jetté was one of the best judges in the province and enjoyed a reputation which any man might envy. What takes place in Montreal to-day? Judges come in from the country and preside in the Montreal court. That I believe, is a good thing, because some of these judges have told me themselves that if they remained entirely in their own districts, where they had work for only one or two months in the year, they would get rusty in their law. Because it is a good thing for the judges to be occupied and greatly occupied. It is a good thing for them to go to Montreal. What they charge is very little in comparison with the services they render. But when they go to Montreal, do the judges in Montreal work as hard as they should? Altogether for the reasons I have given, I contend—and I call the attention of my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) to this point—that we are voting $4,000 a year needlessly. This represents a capital which we are virtually throwing away. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain), who has been Attorney General of Quebec, says that we have too many judges. But the judges are badly distributed. Now, I would like some improvements in certain particulars. Take, for instance, the case of election trials. In Ontario, when a judge goes out for an election trial, he gets $100, whether the case lasts a day or a week. In Quebec, the judge is paid $6 a day. And these are judges of the very same class and do the same work, and in each case it is in the administration of a federal law. There should not be this invidious distinction to the disadvantage of the Quebec judges. I call the attention of the Solicitor General to this matter. It is an anomaly and should be changed.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. By whom are these payments to judges made?

Mr. CASGRAIN. By your Government.

Mr. BERGERON. I will give the hon. gentleman an example. A judge in Montreal goes to an election trial in Soulanges and is paid $6 a day for three days, or $18. A judge from Toronto goes to Prescott, which is a neighbouring county, and he will sit one day and receive $100.

The PRIME MINISTER. Where is that law? And who is responsible for it?

Mr. BERGERON. The right hon. Prime Minister said a few moments ago that he was becoming a Conservative. I am afraid he will go too far in that direction. He used to call himself a Reformer; and a man ought to be a reformer when there is something to reform.

The PRIME MINISTER. Show us the law.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend the Solicitor General knows that that is the law.

The PRIME MINISTER. I question the statement, because I cannot conceive that such a law can apply to one province and not apply to the other. If any statute of this Parliament provides that $100 shall be paid to a judge in one province for holding an election trial it ought to be the same for all the provinces.

Mr. BERGERON. That is what strikes me.

Mr. BRITTON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) is quite right. It appears in chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes, section 13:

There shall be paid to the judges for travelling allowances, the sums following, that is to say:—

In the province of Ontario:

To each of the judges of the High Court of Justice of that province, one hundred dollars for each time he holds any court for the trial of causes, in any county except the county of York and the city of Toronto.

In the province of Quebec:

To each of the judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, and for each term (appeal side and criminal side) attended by him elsewhere than at his place of residence, one hundred dollars.

To each of the judges of the said Court of Queen's Bench, for attending any other court, for each day he is absent from his place of residence, six dollars.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The reason for this is quite apparent. In the province of Quebec the trial ought to be held by a judge living in the district. But in Ontario, the judges live in Toronto and have to travel to where the election trial is held. If our judges would do their duty and live in their districts, there would not be any difficulty about this.

Mr. BERGERON. I repeat the argument I used before, which my hon. friend evidently did not hear—that it is a good thing for the judges to go out of their districts and to sit in Montreal and Quebec, and hear cases pleaded by good lawyers. I contend that this difference that I have pointed out in the payment of the judges is an anomaly.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is no anomaly about it.

Mr. BERGERON. Now, there is another question I wish to put. When a judge of the Superior Court in the province of Quebec is called upon to go and sit in the Court of Appeal as they often are, will he be paid $6 per day in the same way as the judges of the Court of Appeal are to be paid when they travel?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I hope he will not be paid at all. He is not entitled to anything. The judges ad hoc should be taken from the districts in which the case is tried.

Mr. CASGRAIN. But the judges in Montreal have all that they can do.

The PRIME MINISTER. Paying them $6 a day will not give them less to do.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The judge ad hoc should be taken from the court in which the judge sits. With fourteen judges in Montreal, if we cannot get one for such cases, it will be a very strange thing.

Mr. BERGERON. The idea in the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Fitzpatrick's) mind seems to be that a judge in Quebec or Montreal is different from a judge in the country. But the judges are appointed for the Superior Court of the province of Quebec, and they should be on the same footing, not only as judges but in the opinion of lawyers. Moreover, there are judges in the country who are better administrative judges than some of those in Montreal.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The judge ad hoc is appointed out of the Superior Court, and I say that the judges of the Superior Court ought to take a man from the district and not put the country to the expense of paying for travelling expenses.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Then a man would have to be called from the country to take the place of the judge in Montreal.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There are fourteen judges in Montreal.

Mr. CASGRAIN. And every one of them has more than he can do.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not wish to take up more time. I have done my duty in calling these matters to the attention of the Prime Minister and the Solicitor General. My right hon. friend spoke of reform and said we on this side wanted reform. That is true. My impression is there are more reformers among Conservatives than there are amongst the Liberals. What have the present Government reformed since they came into power? They have taken the policy of the Conservative party, but in trying to carry it out they have spoiled it. My right hon. friend said he was becoming a Conservative. That is generally the fate of those who get into power. They are great democrats, great reformers, in Opposition, but when they get into power they are Conservatives, which is quite natural. But my hon. friend said something just now which might have been left unsaid. He said he had become pretty much of a Conservative in consequence of standing by the constitution. Let me tell him he has forgotten something about the constitution. There is an article in the constitution called article 93; and since he has become a Conservative on account of standing by the constitution, I want to read that article to him. The Minister of Public Works forgot that article when he went to Winnipeg:

Where in any province a system of separate or dissentient schools exists by law at the Union or is thereafter established by the legislature of the province, an appeal shall lie to the Governor General in Council from any Act or decision of any provincial authority affecting any right or privilege of the Protestant or Roman Catholic minority of the Queen's subjects in relation to education.

My hon. friend has forgotten this, because he has violated this article of the constitution. He will have to become a little more Conservative.

Motion agreed to.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Nothing was said by the Solicitor General in regard to an extraordinary provision in clause 1, a retroactive subsection of that clause, which involves the compulsory retirement of judges, although they received their commission in the usual way.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The provision is a very ordinary one, it seems to me, that no person shall retain his office as a judge of a county court after he has completed the 75th year of his age. That applies to judges now appointed.

Mr. CASGRAIN. When a judge holds Her Majesty's commission during good behaviour, how can the hon. gentleman change that? I do not think it was ever done before, it cannot be done. You are giving retroactive effect to this law, affecting judges who are appointed under certain circumstances, and with a written pledge that they should have such and such a salary during the time they acted.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is a most vicious thing in principle. Look at the position the judges of the land are placed in, and for the first time. They become actually creatures of the Administration, though they are supposed to be absolutely independent of the executive. That has been the position of English judges all along. Some of the ablest men in Ontario have served as judges long after the age of 75, and some judges of the Supreme Court of Canada are serving now over the age of 75.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They ought to have been removed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Ontario judge I have in my mind left the bench at a very advanced age, at a time when he was universally regarded to be the most brilliant judge who adorned the bench at that time. The hon. gentleman does not appreciate the great constitutional importance, under the British system, of having a judiciary absolutely independent of the executive. You appoint judges for life, for instance, as these judges have been appointed, and then for the first time you fix their term of service at the age of 75, thereby introducing a new order of things which indicates to the judges of the land that if the Government can shorten their term at that age, they can shorten it at 60, or 50 years of age. Therefore, the reasons which have always led us to keep the judiciary absolutely independent of the executive, cease to prevail in this country. Up to this time, we have followed closely the English example, and the English policy, that a judge's office cannot be interfered with by the executive in this way. I would like to know if the hon. gentleman can give us a case in England, or in Canada, or in any of the old provinces, where the term of a judge has been shortened by the legislature. I have given a good deal of attention to this subject, it has been discussed in connection with the great age at which some judges have continued to serve. I have not found in any research a case under the British system of government where the tenure of a judge was affected after his appointment by Act of Parliament.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not understand that the hon. gentleman questions our right to legislate in this way, but he questions the propriety. I would ask the hon. gentleman to allow me to read the law as it now exists :

Every judge of a county court in any of the provinces of Canada shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, hold office during good behaviour, and his residence within the county or union of counties for which the court is established.

A judge of a county court may be removed from office by the Governor General in Council for misbehaviour, or for incapacity or inability to perform his duties properly, on account of old age, ill-health or any other cause.

The Governor in Council has a right to remove any person who is incapacitated for performing his duties through old age. If he has got that right, has not this Parliament got the right to legislate in such a way as to fix the limit at 75 years of age ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is hardly an arguable question. But there is a case where the legislature, on the appointment of a judge, defines what it means by inability, it is following really in the line of good behaviour. For instance, if a judge, after such an examination as a commission would make, showing that he was unable to perform his duties, no doubt, in the case of County Court judges, that being ascertained by a commission, he might be removed by impeachment, if he presumed to remain on the bench after his incapacity was declared. That does not affect the general principle that I refer to as having prevailed so long. But here you say that though a judge is in good health, though he may be the most brilliant man on the bench, as was the Ontario judge I referred to, after he reaches the age of 75, he must be retired. But you make this legislation retroactive, and if you can do that, you practically intimate to other judges that their independence is gone, because unless they remain in sympathy with the executive, it is possible the executive may limit their judicial career by making the age 70.

Committee rose and reported progress.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

JUDGES OF THE PROVINCIAL COURTS.

(In the Committee.)

On section 3,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I move that this section be struck out. It seems to me that if there be anything in the argument of the Prime Minister the last clause of this section is unconstitutional, for it is fixing the salary conditionally. I know it is in the local law.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). It is Federal law. It is paragraph 4, chapter 138, which provides that the chief justice of the Superior Court shall receive $6,000, the senior puisne judge residing in Quebec, if the chief justice resides in Montreal, or the senior puisne judge residing in Montreal, if the chief justice resides in Quebec, an addition to either salary of $1,000. That has been the law for years, and is in the revised statutes. If this section were struck out there would be no increase of the judges' salaries.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is simply following up the argument I made, and this section fixes the salaries.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The only increase here is that of $1,000 for the judge of the district of Terrebonne. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) does not raise the constitutional question now.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No. Amendment negatived.

On section 6,

Mr. BRITTON. I think there is a little misapprehension in the House in regard to judges' salaries in Ontario, and this is perhaps an opportune time to say a few words on the matter. The main object of this clause is to increase the salaries of the junior judges after three years of service to $2,400, which will make their salary in all $2,600. The junior judges of Ontario have no addition in any way to their remuneration except it be where there is a reference direct to them, whereby they supplement their salaries to some considerable extent. But the senior judges of the county courts are very differently paid, and in many cases they are very amply paid for the work they do. They have a direct salary of $2,400, an additional allowance of $200, and they have of course the surrogate work. Whether that work is paid for by fees or by commutation the amount is a very considerable addition to their salaries, ranging all the way from $400 to over $1,000 in many cases—I am speaking now exclusive of the county of York. In addition to that they have certain fees pertaining to the duties of their office. The senior judge is a member of the board of county audit and is paid a per diem allowance for that. He is also the selector of jurors for which he is paid a per diem allowance. He also has the revision of the voters' lists, although the junior is competent also to take that work, and for that he has travelling expenses and a per diem allowance when he goes outside the county town to attend to it. In addition to all these, the senior judges as pertaining to their office have references directly to them, and in no sense can it be said that the senior county court judges of Ontario are underpaid for the work they do. I am not saying one word against these officers because the county court judges of Ontario embrace very many able and painstaking men in their ranks; men who are doing a very large amount of work, although they are not overworked by any means as a class. The salary of a judge of the court of appeal as provided in this Bill is $5,000, but as some hon. members know each of the Supreme Court judges of Ontario has an additional $1,000 paid him by the province of Ontario, so that his direct salary is $6,000, and then each of these judges who goes on circuit has $100 allowance for each court he attends. The Supreme Court judges, outside of election trials attend probably eighteen courts during the year, and this gives them an allowance of $1,800, when as a matter of fact probably their expenses in attendance on those courts will not exceed $300. The judges of the court of appeal do not go on circuit, and therefore they do not get the $100 allowance in the ordinary work of their court, but when holding election trials they get the $100. There is, therefore, a direct addition to the salaries of the Supreme Court judges in Ontario of $1,500, which with the $6,000, makes $7,500 for the puisne judges, and the pay is not so small as it seems when we are discussing the matter simply as to a question of salary. One word as to the amendment which was passed in 1897 by the provincial legislature and which made it necessary for the appointment of this additional judge to the court of appeal. The constitution of the court was changed by the Act of 1897, and that made it impossible to dispose of cases of appeal from the divisional court to the court of appeal, except by a court of five judges, and so that Act has tied up the business before the court of appeal and there has been a dead lock so far as the cases from the divisional court are concerned. Therefore it is waiting the provision for the salary of this judge and his appointment in order to do the work. This Parliament is in no way to blame for that. I fancy it would be quite proper for the provincial legislature while they proceeded to add an additional judge to the court, to have made the Act apply only as to work which afterwards come before it, and in the meantime cases could have been disposed of before the four judges. In that way these cases in which there were appeals from the divisional court, need not have been tied up as the hon. the Solicitor General mentioned.

On section 1,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Although I appreciate and sympathize with the desire for speed, I want to fortify what I said before. I know of no such interference with the independence of the judiciary ever attempted in this Parliament, and I have looked up the only case that seems to approach it in the English House, which was in regard to an inferior court; and the delicacy with which any action of this kind touching a judge of that inferior court was taken, fortifies the objection I made in regard to subsection 2 of section 1, which reads:

The subsection so substituted shall apply as well to judges now holding office as to judges to be hereafter appointed.

That is to say, the Government propose to interfere with the tenure of office of all the judges who were appointed under specific conditions, and for a specific term. I say that is a breach of faith; it is entirely unwarranted; it violates one of the most sacred principles of the English constitution; and if these principles are to be considered as important now as they have hitherto been regarded in England and in Canada, I am at an entire loss how this provision can be persisted in. I do not question the propriety or fairness of fixing the limit suggested for all new appointments; but I am at a loss to conceive where we obtain any right or reason to lay hands on the vested rights of these judges, and by that means attack their independence, and indeed the independence of the judges to be appointed, of every court, by enunciating the policy for the first time that these judges may have their tenure of office affected by the Government of the day, for any reason which to them seems good and sufficient. I find an immediate reference to this subject in Todd, where the history of the agitation that brought about the complete independence of the judiciary from the executive is treated in this way:

Previous to the revolution of 1688, the judges of the superior courts, as a general rule, held their offices at the will and pleasure of the Crown. Under this tenure there were frequent instances, from time to time, of venial, corrupt, or oppressive conduct on the part of judges, and of arbitrary conduct—in the displacement of upright judges, and conniving at the proceedings of dishonest judges on the part of the Crown, which gave rise to serious complaints, and led to several attempts, during the seventeenth century, to limit the discretion of the Crown in regard to appointments to the bench.

Then, later on :

One step only remained to place the judges in a position of complete independence of the reigning sovereign, and that was to exempt them from the rule, ordinarily applicable to office-holders, whereby their commissions should be vacated upon the demise of the Crown.

The lawyers of the House are, of course, familiar with the legislation which took place to bring that about. Then, Todd, later on, discussing the tenure of the judges, says :

The legal effect of the grant of an office during good behaviour is the creation of an estate for life in the office. Such an estate is terminable only by the grantee's incapacity from mental or bodily infirmity, or by his breach of good behaviour. But, like any other conditional estate, it may be forfeited by a breach of the condition annexed to it—that is to say, by misbehaviour. Behaviour means behaviour in the grantee's official capacity

And he proceeds to discuss that phase of the question. Rightly or wrongly, we have given these judges that high estate, for the purpose of putting them in a position where they could act with the most complete independence of the Government of the day or of any political party, knowing that with these conditions their rights would be safeguarded by the common consent of Parliament. The only case I can find that comes at all near this proposition, and that can yet be distinguished easily from it, is a case that arose in the Imperial Parliament in 1867 ; and in that case, we shall see how quickly the Government appreciated the delicacy of interfering in the slightest way with the office of a judge, for the Bill I am going to refer to could have been justified on the ground that the duties of the office were so increased, in the case of an inferior court, that it could be said that the judge holding the office was incapable of satisfactorily performing them. They were dealing with a specific office and a specific judge, whose tenure of office it was proposed to interfere with because it was proposed to add to the duties of the office and to its importance, and the statement in support of the Bill was that the present incumbent was not fit to discharge those duties. This is the case :

Upon the introduction of a Bill to extend the jurisdiction, alter and amend the procedure and practice, and regulate the establishment of the Court of Admiralty in Ireland, with a view to bring under the cognizance of this court matters of common law in relation to which the presiding judge had no professional experience. Ministers being of opinion that the judge would be incompetent to discharge the additional duties, introduced a clause into the Bill to repeal his tenure of office, so as to permit of his removal at the pleasure of the Crown.

The Bill in that case proposed to remove this judge on the ground of his incapacity, which is not the case here at all. This Bill arbitrarily fixes the age for retirement at 75, whether the judge is capable or incapable, and applied that to judges now holding office. The English Bill provided that he should be entitled, on his retirement, to receive an annuity equal to his full salary. Under those circumstances, the Bill was carried by the majority of the House. I shall read what Lord Cranworth, when that Bill was introduced, said :

Lord Cranworth said that the judge of the Admiralty Court in Ireland held office under an Act of Parliament, which made him irremovable, except upon an Address from both Houses of Parliament ; his tenure was, therefore, the same as that of the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench ; yet for the first time in the annals of English history the enactment which fixed his tenure on this footing was to be repealed by this clause, in order that he might be immediately removed. If this gentleman was an unfit person to discharge the duties of the office, it would be proper to say so ; but the judge defied anybody to show this. There had been a constitutional safeguard against the removal of judges, and it was now proposed to take it away.

I think I need not elaborate that, but it fully confirms the position I take, that even in that case—a case of almost admitted incapacity—the Bill itself was so criticised by Lord Cranworth, though it was amended so as to provide that if, in the public interest, it was desirable he should be removed, being guilty of no misconduct, then he should get his full salary on retirement. That, however, is not the proposal of the hon. gentleman, and his Bill therefore has not the merits involved in that proposition. Under it Parliament can lay its hand on judges capable of performing their duties, and the hon. gentleman will not say that the judges on the county court benches and in other courts in Canada to-day are not as able as ever in their lives to perform their duties. The proposal is that they shall be absolutely retired, contrary to the conditions on which they were appointed and without any consideration, such as was decided to be necessary in the case I have put. I say that this is a radical proposition and not supported by the British Parliament or any Canadian Parliament I am aware of.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is a great deal in which the hon. gentleman has said, but it seems to me that there is no violation of any principle and no attack on the independence of judges in this Bill. All that we do is to say that a judge appointed under a statute which provides that if he become incapable from age to perform his duties, he may be removed, shall instead be removed when he has attained 75 years of age and thus avoid any inquiry.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As to the future that is a strong position.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My right hon. friend has to admit two things. First, that we have a constitutional right to do this, and secondly that it is a wise precaution for the future. The only objection he takes is that it is an interference with the quasi contract entered into between the judge and the Government of Canada, and I admit there is a great deal in his contention, but I submit there is no sacrifice of principle.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I shall take the opportunity of moving on the third reading of the Bill, if this clause carries, that this section would be amended by adding to the 11th line after the words "provided that no person" the words "hereafter appointed," and to strike out of the subsection 2 of that section 1 the words "as well as the judges now holding office as"

Mr. McNEILL. Does my hon. friend mean to say that it is to be retroactive? Are we to understand that the judges who have been acting for years on an understanding with the country, are to be now treated on a different basis?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Under the law as it now stands, any county court judge holds office during his good behaviour, but he may be removed from office on proper investigation, either for misconduct or for inability from any cause to perform his duties. The intention of this amendment is to provide that he shall when he has reached 75 years of age, ipso facto cease to be a judge.

Mr. McNEILL. Even if he is still able to perform his functions of judge efficiently and there be no excuse for dismissing him.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Without any reference to that whatever.

Mr. McNEILL. Is not that a terrible proposition?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is unprecedented as well as terrible.

Mr. INGRAM. How many judges are there on the bench 75 years of age?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There are two cases, one over 90 and the other over 80, and each of them is absolutely unable to perform his duties.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then they can be removed under the present law.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Those are the only two cases I know of.

Mr. McNEILL. Some of the ablest and best judges we have ever had, in the mother country, at all events, were very much over the limit of age my hon. friend has laid down here, and it seems to me to be a very cruel thing to make this clause retroactive.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend will bear in mind that there are not many Lord Ushers and there are a good many Justices Stevens. There are only one or two judges that have gone beyond the age of 80 who are of any use. There have been a great many under 75 who ought to be removed, and a few years ago a very serious agitation arose out of some things that transpired in reference to Mr. Justice Stevens, that pointed to the necessity for such legislation.

Mr. McNEILL. My hon. friend has referred to a limit of 80 years, but I am speaking of 75. Perhaps the most efficient judges we have had at Westminster were over 75.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I admit that it is quite a radical change.

Mr. McNEILL. If the judge is unfit to perform his duties, he can be removed under the existing law. Would it not be better to accept the suggestion of the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) and strike out this retroactive part of the Bill?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I quite appreciate the point made by the hon. member for Pictou, that he does not wish this to be made applicable to those holding office; and I understand him to say that he will, on the third reading, move an amendment to meet that point.

Mr. McNEILL. If my hon. friend would agree to it, it could be moved now.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I cannot consent to that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved that in section 1, line 1, after the word "person" the words "hereafter appointed" be added, and in section 2 of same section the words "as well as the judges holding office as" be struck out.

Mr. BRITTON. I am not going to argue the point taken by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). But I think there is a great deal in it. This is certainly an interference with vested rights. My hon. friend the Solicitor General has omitted to notice what may be the effect of this with regard to superannuation. The superannuation clause provides that if, after service of ten years as county judge, a man suffers from any permanent disease or disability, he can be retired on a two-thirds allowance. But after service of 25 years, he may voluntarily retire on a two-thirds allowance. This Act provides for the compulsory retirement of a judge at 75 years of age. But if a man has been appointed late in life, he may be retired without any provision being made for superannuation allowance at all. I should think that that would not be the intention. There ought to be a saving clause to protect the man who has attained to the age of 75, and to assure him that he shall not be retired without some superannuation allowance.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have a great deal of doubt as to the wisdom of this clause as regards future appointments. After what the Solicitor General has said, I think there is all the greater reason to doubt its wisdom. He has said that we have not many Lord Eshers, but we have had a great many Lord Stephens. I suppose the hon. gentleman meant we have not had many judges who have been able to discharge their duties after arriving at the age of 75 with the intelligence which the place demands, while we have had a great many cases of men under 75 who have failed in their mental faculties. That simply indicates that you cannot fix any time limit which will do justice even generally. One man may be as young at 75 as another at 60. We know from observation, those of us who are much before the courts, that that is the case. Many a judge, after he has attained the age of 75, discharges his duties with more vigour and greater capacity than many a man 20 years younger. I think the best way would be to leave the matter as under the present law, and allow a judge to continue to discharge his duties up to any age within which he is capable of discharging them efficiently. I admit that sometimes difficulties arise owing to the fact that a judge may not understand that he has become unfit to fill his place with efficiency. But I think it would be far better for the country that we should grapple with cases of that kind, however unfortunate it might be, rather than fix a definite time limit within which judges must be retired. By such a definite time limit we cannot receive any certain indication whether a judge is or is not capable of then discharging his duties. We know that in judicial life and in political life and in all walks of life. Who would have thought, for instance, of discharging Mr. Gladstone from the duties of political life because he had attained the age of 75 years. It was after that time that some of his greatest political work was done.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How many Gladstones are there ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Not many, perhaps. But the point is that we should not fix this time limit so as to exclude any Gladstones of the law. Be they many or few, the law as it stands, contains a perfect security on that point, because, if a judge becomes incapable of discharging his duty, he may be removed from his position. Therefore, I submit to my hon. and learned friend the Solicitor General that this is not a good policy even with respect to future appointments, and certainly I agree with everything that my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has advanced in respect to those judges who are already on the bench.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We shall have to consider very carefully the question of superannuation. I have not had my attention drawn to that point until this evening. We will look into it more fully, and, to-morrow, I will be able to say how far we ought to go in this matter.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has stated that there are two judges who may be affected by this subsection. I wish to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the case of the senior judge in my county, who is 75 years of age, and as competent to discharge his duties as he ever was. Some months ago, rumours were circulated to the effect that if the senior judge would not ask for superannuation, they would find means of forcing him to leave the bench. It strikes me that this section was prepared largely in view of that fact. Only two other judges, one of them something like a hundred years of age, will be affected by this subsection. Now, when the resolutions for this Bill were placed on the Order Paper, we found that the money consideration in the resolution would affect only one or two county judges in the county of Ontario. I consulted the Solicitor General with respect to that point, and he assured me that it would not—

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The only one affected is the county judge of Elgin, who receives $2,600. But he was appointed previous to confederation, and we cannot interfere with his salary.

Mr. INGRAM. Having sent resolutions to the judge to assure him that he would not be interfered with, I find that this section is introduced in the Bill. I suppose that the hon. gentleman has a perfect right to do this, as the section does not involve a money consideration. But the effect of this would be to compel this judge to leave the bench, though he is as competent to-day as he ever was to discharge the duties of a judge.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Might I suggest to the Solicitor General that if this section is made to apply to judges now upon the bench, it might be well to consider whether those retired compulsorily at 75 years of age should not receive salary in full. That would, to some extent, meet the difficulty that my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has suggested.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am heartily in favour of this section. I think that when a judge has served his country until he has arrived at the age of 75 years, it is time for him to have a rest. While there may be a few judges in the county who are quite competent to discharge the duties of the office at 75 years of age, yet, where there is one competent there are two or three incompetent. I know that there are in the province of Ontario many judges who ought to have been superannuated five years ago. I think this clause is a very good one, and I hope the Solicitor General will insist on carrying it through. I only regret that this section does not apply to all our judges. There are courts not more than a hundred miles from the city of Ottawa in which are judges who ought to have been retired five or ten years ago.

I think it is all nonsense to talk about men who are seventy-eight, eighty and eighty-two years of age and over, being able to sit and try the most important cases, cases that affect the welfare of the people of this country. I say it is absurd to argue that such men are competent to discharge the duties of that position. I think the provision is a wise one, and that there is no hardship, because these men will be retired with, I suppose, at least two-thirds of their salary for the rest of their life. It is time that they should retire then, and let somebody else take their places. Before I sit down, I want to refer to one statement that was made by the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), which, if correct, ought to receive the most careful attention of the Solicitor General. I am amazed that the hon. member for Beauharnois and the late Minister of Justice should have allowed such a state of affairs as that which existed for many years in this Dominion; I refer to his statement that when the present Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec took office there were over eighty records of the courts that had been adjudicated upon, and upon which no decision had been arrived.

Mr. BERGERON. Not adjudicated upon.

Mr. CAMPBELL. One of them, I understood him to say, had been argued as long ago as 1886, and when the present Lieutenant-Governor took his position, these cases had all to be tried over again, the witnesses to be called, and arguments to be reheard, at an enormous expense to the client. Such a state of affairs is simply disgraceful.

Mr. BERGERON. I want to correct my hon. friend. The witnesses had not to be called again, only the arguments had to be reheard.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then, it is not quite so bad, but I say the late Minister of Justice, who now argues so strongly against this Bill, and condemns the Government for rectifying an injustice that he had allowed to prevail for many years, is very inconsistent, and ought to receive the censure of the people for having neglected the interests that were entrusted to his charge. Why did not the member for Beauharnois bring this matter up? He sat in this House for years, and allowed that state of affairs to exist, and never raised his voice in defence of the people of this country; and I venture to say that if there had not been a change of Government, he would have been silent to-day. I hope the Solicitor General will give this matter his serious consideration, and put a stop to such a scandalous state of affairs as has been disclosed in the province of Quebec. As for Ontario, I have no doubt that a little overhauling of the judges in that province will have a very wholesome effect upon them, as well as upon the people of this country.

Amendment (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) negatived: Nays, 28; yeas, 44.

Mr. POWELL. I made a suggestion to the Solicitor General, but I do not see that any notice has been taken of it. In the province of New Brunswick a county court judge is appointed, not for a judicial district comprising a number of counties, but for an individual county, and the wording of this Act speaks of the court of the united counties. It has no application to the province of New Brunswick at all. Strange to say, the Solicitor General is not responsible for it, by some means, it has been re-enacted two or three times.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. So far as that portion of the section is concerned, I have not touched it at all. The law remains as it was in 1873 when the judges were appointed.

Mr. POWELL. But the Solicitor General will agree with me that the statute has been absurd.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Would my hon. friend suggest a remedy?

Mr. POWELL. By adding a few words like these: Resident in the same county for which the judge has been appointed.

Bill as amended reported.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATIONS.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 76) to provide for the abolition of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, and for the retirement of members of the civil service.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Section 2 of the Bill was held over, and also section 5, section 2, subsection b. Many views were expressed by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House as to whether it was a fair proposition to apply the means to any persons now in the service, and in order to do no injustice, the Government has decided to defer to the views presented by hon. gentlemen, and make the Bill wholly applicable to those hereafter appointed to the service. It is proposed to allow persons who have been more than ten years in the service up to 1st January, 1899, in which to elect to accept the provisions of the Act. I move that the clause be amended so as to read as follows :—

2. This Act shall apply instead of the Civil Service Superannuation Act—

(a) To every person hereafter appointed to the civil service ;

(b) To every person now in the civil service who, before the 1st of January, 1899, with the consent of the Governor in Council, elects to accept the provisions of this Act in lieu of those of the Civil Service Superannuation Act.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand, then, that those who have been in the service ten years will have the option of coming under the Act up to 1st January, 1899 ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is optional with them, but the consent of the Governor General in Council is necessary. There is nothing compulsory about it.

Mr. BELL. This does not affect the provision regarding those who have been less than ten years in the service ?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is compulsory only on those who come in after the Bill becomes law.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It applies to new appointments.

Section as amended, agreed to.

On section 5,

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I move to strike out in section 5 the third and fourth line and to substitute 4 per cent instead of 5 per cent per annum as the rate of interest.

Mr. McMULLEN. I must enter my protest against the proposed rate of interest. I do not think 4 per cent should be allowed when the Government only gives 2½ per cent to depositors in the savings banks. I move in amendemnt to reduce the rate to 3 per cent.

Mr. ROGERS. I was willing that the rate should remain at 4 per cent if the ten-year clause had remained in the Bill. That clause should not have been changed. I am, however, in favour of paying 3 per cent, and I second the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. I have some sympathy with my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen), and I should be glad if he would explain the principle on which he moves in amendment that the rate be 3 per cent. Does he mean to say that civil servants are only half per cent better than depositors in savings banks, and on what principle does he give half per cent, and not one per cent or one and a half per cent more ? If there is a good solid principle behind his amendment, I might feel inclined to vote for him.

Mr. SPROULE. I feel like going almost the length of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen)—though I would not be against giving them 4 per cent—but the hon. member (Mr. McMullen) did not assist us in trying to keep the interest on the poor man's savings in the Post Office and Government Savings Banks up to 3 per cent, and on the contrary spoke in favour of it being cut down to 2½ per cent, while for my part I was very much against that proposal. I have always been opposed to reducing the rate of interest on the poor man's savings in the Government banks, because those moneys belong to the smallest wage-earners in the country. If I had the power of moving an amendment to the amendment, raising the Government rate of interest on savings banks deposits up to 3 per cent, perhaps, I might join with the hon. member (Mr. McMullen) and we would make the rate 3 per cent in both cases.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is right in my opinion that we should allow small depositors, such as artisans and mechanics, in the Government savings banks the same rate of interest we have to pay for money which we borrow in the markets. I hope that yet the Government may see their way clear to do that. I consider it costs us about 3 per cent to borrow money including all charges and we should not allow the civil servants more than that rate. They are the best paid class in this Dominion, taking them all in all, and there is no place they can get 4 per cent on their deposits. If we allow them 3 per cent we allow them a very good rate considering that we have to bear the expense of taking charge of the fund. Three per cent is all they are entitled to.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) has evidently not given this matter much consideration. He should remember that he is speaking of money which is taken from the civil servants against their will and which is worth a great deal more than 4 per cent to them in many cases. He is not speaking now of funds which men have accumulated and wish to invest, but he is speaking of money which civil servants require for their daily use, and no doubt many of these civil servants will have to borrow money and pay from 7 to 10 per cent for the use of it. It is perfectly absurd to draw a parallel between this civil service fund and money which people throughout the country have saved and wish to place in safe-keeping with the Government. Circumstances are altogether different. For my part I would much rather move an amendment to the Postmaster General's amendment, that the rate be restored to 5 per cent as it was originally intended. Any ordinary man who has no money to save would look upon it as harsh treatment if he were compelled to give up part of his earnings and receive only 4 per cent interest on it.

Mr. GIBSON. I agree that it is not fair to compare the rate of interest allowed by the Government on the money retained from the civil servants, with the rate of interest paid to ordinary depositors, because you are compelling the civil servant to give up part of his earnings. Surely if the Government does that it is only fair that the rate should be augmented by the additional 1 per cent or 1½ per cent. The idea the Government has in view, as I understand, is to encourage the civil servants to provide money when the time comes for them to retire, and in my opinion they should be allowed a liberal rate of interest on that. I feel like my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) that some encouragement should be given to the civil servants in carrying out this idea. I have always felt that it was a hardship that when civil servants paid into the superannuation fund for a number of years to provide against a rainy day, that when they died their families were left destitute, it was a great hardship that they got no return for the money thus invested. In this respect the present Bill is an improvement on the old law. The idea of the Government is to encourage thrift amongst the civil servants so that when they retire they may have some money to draw upon, and in this connection it is only fair that the Government should allow them 4 per cent.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not agree with the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) that it is any hardship on the civil servants to retain this money from their salaries. As the Bill originally stood compelling those who are under ten years in the service to come under its operation, I felt that it was hardly fair not to give them 4 per cent. But as the Bill now only applies to those who will enter the service hereafter, only it is no hardship to allow them 3 per cent because they know what they are doing when they enter the service. There are many other avocations in life which they can fill if they think these terms are not fair. Perhaps this might be an incentive to many who are looking for civil service positions to look to some other calling in life, and if it did that it would do a great deal of good. I agree with the hon. member for North Wellington that 3 per cent interest is quite enough, especially when you are only allowing 2½ per cent to depositors in the Government savings banks.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to add a word by way of explanation for fear that I may have been misunderstood. In speaking on the second reading of this Bill, when I drew attention to the fact that the Government were allowing 5 per cent on the investments of the civil servants while they only allow the labouring man 2½ per cent on his deposit, I did not intend to convey the impression that I was opposed to giving the 5 per cent, but it was rather with the object of convincing the Government that the rate of interest they were allowing the investors in the Post Office and Government Savings

Mr. GIBSON.

Banks was far too low. In my judgment the Government would be justified in paying a higher rate of interest than the ordinary under such circumstances, so that small investors who put their savings in the possession of the Government might be encouraged to thrift.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I would remind my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) that there is a good deal of difference between allowing money to be deposited and withdrawn at the will of the depositor at a few days' notice, and receiving and retaining for a generation the deductions from civil servants' salaries. The depositor can withdraw the money whenever he can place it to better advantage and get a high rate of interest, but the civil servant is obliged to allow his money to remain. I would also say to my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) that the 4 per cent proposed to be allowed here is quite a drop from the allowance contemplated by the Superannuation Insurance Act. By that Act, which was passed in 1893, 6 per cent compounded is allowed on deposits in the insurance fund; and in like manner the amendment made to the Superannuation Act in 1893 estimated 6 per cent as the basis upon which the moneys of officials would be received and held. So that in this Bill we are making some progress in the right direction, in the view of my hon. friend, in reducing the rate from 6 per cent to 4 per cent.

Mr. McMULLEN. The deduction which is made from the salaries of civil servants should be held as a guarantee of good faith and efficient service on their part. In many of the departments they do not give any security, and this is the only security which the country really holds for the faithful discharge of their duties. If they were called upon to give bonds, and pay annually to secure those bonds, that would cost them about as much as the deduction from their salaries.

Mr. McDUGALL. How is this a security?

Mr. McMULLEN. This is no security at all. It should be held as a security, but it is not. Under the Bill a deduction of 5 per cent per year is made, and that is returned to them with 3 per cent added, whether they act faithfully or unfaithfully. There is no provision that if they get into difficulty and have to resign, or if they become dissipated and have to be dismissed, this money shall be held. I maintain that if we return to them what they have paid in with the 3 per cent, we are giving them all they are entitled to; but to my mind, there is no argument for returning the money to them with 4 per cent, and without any security.

Sub-amendment (Mr. McMullen) negatived: Yeas, 2; nays, 51.

Amendment agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. For convenience of book-keeping, it is proposed that this Act shall come into force on the 1st of July, commencing with our fiscal year. Therefore, I propose to add the following as section 10 :

This Act shall take effect on and after the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 157) respecting the repayment of the moneys advanced to the St. John Bridge and Railway Extension Company.—(The Minister of Finance.)

SUPPLY—THE COPYRIGHT QUESTION.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, before the House goes into Supply, I beg to call its attention to a statement made yesterday afternoon by the right hon. the First Minister in the discussion on the copyright question. The right hon. gentleman, referring to the Hall Caine convention of some years ago (I quote from "Hansard") said :

My hon. friend from Toronto, if I understood him, thinks that the recent legislation introduced in England by Lord Herschell would make it impossible to carry into effect the Hall Caine convention. That is the burden of the impression he has attempted to make upon the Government. So far as his question is concerned, the Department of Justice do not agree with my hon. friend; they take issue with him directly. The Department of Justice and Mr. Newcombe, who has given great attention to this subject, I can speak with authority when I say, are clearly of opinion that the Act introduced by Lord Herschell will not interfere with the arrangement known as the Hall Caine arrangement, but that that arrangement can be given effect to by legislation. That is the view which we intend to impress upon the British Government.

Now, I made no statement whatever with regard to the Hall Caine settlement being interfered with by the Lord Herschell Act, and therefore the opinion of the Department of Justice and the Deputy Minister of Justice was not pertinent in that particular regard. Another statement of the right hon. First Minister, and the statement to which I more particularly wish to allude, was this (I quote from "Hansard" again) :

The question, as my hon. friend from Toronto knows, is not one of a very wide import. It is important as it affects an important class, but it is more important to that class than to the people generally.

Now I am perfectly certain that nothing was further from the mind of my right hon. friend the First Minister than any intention to create a wrong impression, but he must know that the interests concerned in the copyright business are not only not class interests, but affect some of the largest trade industries in the country. He must be aware that in the making of paper there is invested capital to the extent of millions of dollars and with it immense labour interests which are as well largely concerned in this copyright question. He should know that the trade of type-setting, whether by machine or hand is an important branch of work which will be largely benefited by the passage of a copyright Act. He must also know that the printing business generally, the electrotyping, the stereotyping and the bookbinding interests of this country are all closely allied with the work of book-making and are directly affected by the passage or non-passage of a copyright Act. In fact, the question of copyright has a direct bearing on the labour of every one concerned with the paper and printing trades, from the humblest individual who picks the rags on the street to the highly-paid artist who illuminates the books which are made out of these rags. It is not a question of a class appealing to or dealing with a class, but concerns a large and important constituency which may be benefited to the extent of tens of thousands of dollars per year if encouragement be given to the labour that produces the literature of the country—yes, and upon the success of which depends the intellectual condition of the people. The statement of the right hon. the First Minister is not like the irresponsible statement of an ordinary member of Parliament, but is made, to a certain extent, with a warrant of authority and attested, so to speak, with the sign-manual of the Government by the First Minister. Indeed, it may be looked upon as an official utterance, and the greater weight it carries, the more danger of a false impression being created in not only this country, but also in Great Britain. I think the right hon. the First Minister should revise his opinion—or at least I think he should do so to prevent the impression being made upon the publishing interests of this country and on the minds of friends in Great Britain, that the publishing interests are limited to the important but small extent spoken of by the right hon. gentleman in the discussion yesterday, whereas it really concerns ten or twelve of the greatest industries of this country.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I owe it to my hon. friend to tell him very frankly that I appreciate the motive which has led him to make the remarks he has just given utterance to, and he certainly has said correctly that nothing could be more removed from my intention than to create the impression that this question of copyright is not an important one. I fully agree that it is a very important one, not only to the publishers—and it is that class I had in my hand yesterday—but to the different industries he has just enumerated. But I call the attention of my hon. friend to this. Important as this question is to the several industries, it is so complex, so little understood, if I may say so, that it has not yet engrossed public opinion as it might have done, and as other questions of lesser moment have done in the past and may still do in the future. That was all I intended to say yesterday on the subject; and in so far as my remarks have led to a false impression, I have only to thank my hon. friend and to tell him that I stand amply and well corrected by the remarks he has just made.

THE POSTMASTER AT BATTLEFORD.

Mr. DAVIN. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House and especially of the right hon. First Minister to circumstances that I think will excite his interest and surprise as well as the interest and surprise of the House. Last year, some time in the summer, an effort was made by certain persons at Battleford to get rid of the postmaster there, a man named Mercer, and complaints were made to the Postmaster General. The Postmaster General insisted that before he would give judgment on the alleged misconduct of Mercer, he should have affidavits before him; and thereupon one Skelton, one Dewan and one Daunais made a statutory declaration on which the Postmaster General acted. The Postmaster General, very fairly and honourably, sent copies of the affidavits, to Mercer to ascertain what reply he had to make. The moment these declarations came into the hands of Mercer, he at once did what you would expect under the circumstance, seeing that they did not contain a word of truth. He took steps to have Skelton, Dewan and Dunais prosecuted, and they were brought before the police magistrate and committed for trial. When the time came on to try them, an adjournment took place at their own request, and I am not sure that it was not at their own wish that a judge was brought from an outlying district, thousands of miles from Battleford, to try them. They were tried in October, and Skelton and Dewan were found guilty of perjury. Daunais' trial was postponed. A very able lawyer, Mr. T. C. Johnstone, prosecuting counsel for the Government at Regina, was retained for the defence, and he went to Battleford and defended them, and raised several points, which were noted by the judge. An appeal was then had to the full court at Regina which sat in December, and which took from December to February to consider its judgment. In February that court gave judgment, confirming the conviction of the two men, Skelton and Dewan.

No sooner was it known that the full court at Regina, which consisted of the ablest judges I think in Canada—certainly three of the ablest judges in the west—had confirmed the judgment unanimously, than a meeting took place at Battleford, and there was great indignation with the judiciary of the North-west Territories for daring to sustain that conviction, meetings were held at the house of Major Cotton, and it was openly stated that a new trial would be had. I call the attention of the Prime Minister to this peculiarity of the case—that before the trial was completed by judgment these persons said they would get a new trial, and they prepared statutory declarations, which were duly sworn, and Skelton started for Ottawa. A telegram was sent to me from Battleford, and a letter was sent to me from Regina from Mr. Norman Mackenzie, who had assisted the Crown prosecutor, because those who were interested in the carrying out of the law thought it was advisable that Mr. Mackenzie should be at Battleford during the trial. Mr. Mackenzie wrote me what was taking place. Early in March I went to see the Minister of Justice and saw him in his room near the Senate Chamber. I congratulated him cordially and sincerely on his having become a member of the Government, and then I told him why I came to him. He told me that up to that time, he had received no papers, no affidavit, no application—and, as a fact, he had not. I said to him: If you receive any papers or application in this matter, will you let me know? He said he would. I said: You will do nothing ex parte? He assured me he would do nothing ex parte, and before he would arrive at any decision he would hear me. Well, I may tell you, Mr. Speaker, that even then I was puzzled to know how any application could be made, under what law, how the Minister of Justice could hear any person or read any paper in regard to that trial. Where was his authority, judgment not having taken place, and, therefore, the trial not completed?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) say that the Minister of Justice has entertained an application?

Mr. DAVIN. What I said was that I did not see how he could, because the trial was incomplete. Well, a considerable time passed, and the next I heard of it was when I received a telegram first, and subsequently a letter from Battleford saying that Skelton, one of the convicted, had come to Ottawa, had brought affidavits, had seen the Minister of Justice and had gone back and declared that he was to get a new trial. This was before the trial was complete. I went at once to the Solicitor General and saw him two or three times. The result was that I wrote to the Solicitor General a letter recounting to him the promises of the Minister of Justice. I did not hear from the Solicitor General for some time, and so I went to see him. I called at the office several times and after considerable interval—which I find by the documents was from the 21st April to the 10th May—I got a letter which I will read to the House. It consisted of an extract from a letter sent by the Minister of Justice to the Solicitor General. The letter is as follows:—

Ottawa, 10th May, 1898.

Regina vs. Skelton.

Dear Sir,—On receipt of your letter of 21st April last, I communicated with the Minister of Justice, who wrote to me yesterday to the following effect:—

“In reply to the inclosed letter I beg to say that Mr. Davin called upon me with reference to this case some time ago. I told him that no action further than to obtain the papers relating to the trial had been taken, and he asked me that he might have an opportunity of being heard before a new trial was granted, if I had the question before me. I told him I was prepared to hear anything he had to say in reference to the subject, and I am ready now to hear him any time he chooses to call.”

Yours truly,

(Sgd.) C. FITZPATRICK.

Well, of course the writer of that paragraph had completely forgotten what had taken place. No papers could possibly have come at the time I first went to see him, and none had come, as a fact. The moment I got that letter I went and saw the Minister, of Justice and he gave me an appointment and he heard me, and I told him that the extract from his letter sent to me in the Solicitor General's was quite inaccurate. He told me he had received an affidavit and had no objection to let me have copies and he would tell me his decision. The moment he said that, I took from my pocket one of the papers I had, and with a pencil I began to take down in shorthand what he said. This is what the Minister said:

I have no objection to tell you how I regard it. The 145th section of the Criminal Code is that which gives a definition of perjury. I doubt whether it is perjury under this section. But section 147 is that under which, as it seems to me, the Minister of Justice might be properly called on to interfere. That section requires that that statement of the declaration shall be one authorized or required by law. An inquiry ordered by the Postmaster General, a statement made, is not one authorized or required by law. Such an inquiry is not a judicial proceeding nor an administrative act required or authorized by law. Then, what was alleged seems to be true. They state in their affidavit that the jury was packed, that this man Mercer was guilty of partisan conduct.

I said to him it was impossible I could make any statement or argument until the papers were before me, but incidentally pointed out that it was impossible under our system in the Territories, to pack the jury, as a large number of names were taken, and six of these were chosen by lot; that the judge was a complete stranger in the district and one of the ablest lawyers and best judges on any bench, a man who, in holding the balance of justice would not lean a hair's breadth to one side or the other. I asked him as to the statement that what was alleged seemed to have been true. He replied: “This man Mercer seems to have had the voters' list in the Conservative committee room.” I said that was impossible. I said the voters' list was posted up and added that the statement was not only untrue but that it was physically impossible to see any document so as to swear to it from the position that Skelton was proved to have been in. However, I said, until I see the affidavits I can make no argument. He promised me the affidavits forthwith. Well, the right hon. gentleman knows that I have been asking for copies of the affidavits and could not get them. The time for these men to come up for judgment arrived on the 16th of May last, and when they came up for judgment the Crown prosecutor rose and said that he was instructed by the Attorney General to ask that the judge postpone sentence until the next sitting. Now, let us see what section 748 of the Act says:

If, upon any application for the mercy of the Crown on behalf of any person convicted of an indictable offence, the Minister of Justice entertains a doubt whether such person ought to have been convicted, he may, instead of advising Her Majesty to remit or commute sentence, have such inquiry as he thinks proper by an order in writing directing a new trial at such time and before such court as he may think proper.

Now, I want to point out to the Prime Minister that this section provides only for a new trial. First in order is the application for the mercy of the Crown. There can be no application for the mercy of the Crown until the man has been sentenced. So this clause implies that the man for whom any application is made to the Minister of Justice shall have been convicted and judgment pronounced. But here an application is made with an affidavit and entertained by the Minister of Justice. Now, I will give my own view of what this clause 748 signifies. Before this enactment there were sometimes wrong convictions, and then the mercy of the Crown purged the conviction and the sentence, but the man was a pardoned criminal. Undoubtedly the reason why the English commissioners put this 748th clause into the code was to provide for the case of an innocent man who should be tried and wrongfully convicted, and to provide that such man should not be placed in a worse position than he was before. That is to say, that if he was innocent, the Attorney General in England should order that he would have a new trial, and having a new trial before twelve of his countrymen and being acquitted, he would go free. But this section, though not warranting the conduct of the Minister of Justice, goes much further than was, in my opinion, necessary. It allows the Minister to make an inquiry: he need only entertain a doubt, he need not be convinced of the innocence of the man. He may grant a new trial where, but for the section, he would have felt it his duty to advise a pardon. A new trial is a substitute for either a remission or a commutation of sentence. It gives the widest possible scope, after sentence, to the Minister of Justice. He may make inquiry if he thinks fit to hear new evidence, but again I repeat, only after sentence. Now, I am to some extent in the dark as to the application made to the Minister of Justice, because he has not furnished me with the affidavits. But from what the Minister told me, and which I took down in shorthand, if he had let me see the papers I should possibly have objected to the locus standi of the applicants, and denied his jurisdiction to hear an application for a new trial until after sentence. It is perfectly clear, from the remark he made bearing on evidence, that he considered the weight of evidence, and I would remind the Minister that by section 747 a new trial may be applied for to the Court of Appeal on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the weight of evidence. Was it a fit thing, then, for the Minister of Justice to come to an ex parte decision on so important a point? Did he consult his colleague, the Solicitor General, an experienced criminal lawyer? Did he get a report from any of his officers, from Mr. Power, for instance? The affidavit of the accused impugns the jury. Should not the Minister of Justice have heard the other side, if he was to hear the case at all? Was the Minister of Justice as well able to judge of the weight of evidence as those who heard it given in open court? I press this further view on the Prime Minister, who is himself a lawyer. Section 747 provides an appeal to the Court of Appeal on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, and by implication excludes the Minister from entertaining an application against conviction on the ground that it was contrary to the evidence? There is no provision on record for revising the decision of the Minister of Justice. He can do as he pleases, yet I think he is not justified in hearing an application in regard to a possible sentence that is still in the future. I wish to show what his position is. He was not courteous in regard to this matter, and I am sorry for it. When I was in the habit of meeting him as a member of the House I always met the hon. and learned gentleman on good terms, and had the highest opinion of him. I am surprised at his action, because I always found Mr. Mills a courteous member in this House, and the impression he left on me was that he was a courteous and kind-natured man. The hon. Minister certainly promised me the affidavit. But I have got it, though not from him. That affidavit read as follows:—

(1) That the trial of Skelton and others took place on the 29th and 30th of October, 1897.

(2) That the parties have reason to believe that the persons comprising the said panel were not indifferently chosen, but that the party who furnished the names thereof to the trial judge was biased and suggested names with a view to empanel a jury that would be unfavourable to any of the accused.

(3) That of the said list five were Liberals and the remainder Conservatives, and that the deponents are convinced that the majority of the persons so selected and placed on the panel comprise those and those only that had a bias against the persons charged.

(4) Of the five Liberals on the said panel, the Crown prosecutor challenged four, and directed one to stand aside.

(6) One of the jurors rendering the verdict was Charles DeGear, a dismissed Dominion official.

(7) The private prosecutor, Mercer, was also a dismissed Dominion official, and he retained an advocate associated with the Crown prosecutor. That objection being raised to the appearance of the said advocate, Mackenzie, the Crown prosecutor informed the learned judge that Mackenzie was associated with him in such prosecution, took part in the trial examination, and cross-examined witnesses.

(8) That the deponents are convinced that the accused did not have a fair or impartial trial, and verily believe that they are not guilty of the charge preferred against them, and believe that if they had been tried by impartial jurymen they would have been acquitted.

(9) That the defendants first elected to be tried by jury, but after the panel was exhibited elected to be tried by the judge without a jury, but the judge refused to try the accused without the intervention of the jury.

The Crown prosecutor is a strong Liberal, and, therefore, could have no party feelings. That is the affidavit which is in the Department of Justice, and has been received by the Minister; and if my information is correct, he saw Skelton when here and heard him make his argument. In the middle of May, Skelton was before Inspector Bazin, J.P., in Battleford, accused of cattle stealing. He asked to be sworn, and in the course of his remarks he said that he was a person who had considerable influence with the Liberal party—and he would seem to have considerable influence with the Liberal party if, with a sentence for perjury hanging over his head, he could come to Ottawa and be heard by the Department of Justice, and get the Minister of Justice to do the extraordinary act of hearing an application presumably under section 748, which only authorizes the Minister of Justice to hear an application if the sentence has been completed. I want to call the attention of the House to what took place when these men were tried. This is the indictment:

J. M. Skelton, of the town of Battleford, in the judicial district of Saskatchewan, in the said Territories, stands charged—

(a) For that he said J. M. Skelton, on or about Friday, April 16, 1897, in a certain solemn declaration made voluntarily before one John Cotton, one of Her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the North-west Territories, did falsely and corruptly declare and state of J. B. Mercer, of Battleford aforesaid, to the effect and in the words following, that is to say: "We know that the said J. B. Mercer kept in the Conservative committee rooms the Battleford list of voters that had been made out and posted by the enumerator. This, we believe, was done to allow the Conservative committee to examine and revise such lists, and also to prevent their being always open to examination by the public, as required by law. And that by such action injury was done to the Liberal candidate. He, the said J. M. Skelton, being then duly authorized by law to make any statements or solemn declarations.

The further counts in the indictment I do not read, because they were struck out.

Mr. Chisholm, for the Crown, objected to the change, as the expense of summoning a jury had been incurred, and no change in the substance of the charge had been made since the defence had made their choice to be tried by a jury.

The calling of a jury was next in order. Twenty-three jurors had been summoned so as to give a chance of having a new jury on each of the cases to be tried. When they had answered to their names a lively skirmish took place, and the limit of challenge, both peremptory and for cause, was soon reached. J. A. Fraser was allowed to withdraw from the panel on the ground that he was agent for Mr. Mackenzie, the counsel for Mr. Mercer, the private prosecutor. The following gentlemen were finally accepted:—

J. C. DeGear, Alex. Sutter, R. W. Latimer, J. N. Pomerleau, Otto Morin and J. Michael.

The jury having been sworn, Mr. Chisholm addressed them, and read and explained the clauses in the Criminal Code bearing on the case of J. M. Skelton, which they were about to try. He also asked them to divest their minds of any impressions that might have been formed as to the guilt or innocence of the accused, and to confine themselves strictly to the evidence that might be laid before them. The trial was then proceeded with.

John Cotton, sworn: I am a superintendent in the North-west Mounted Police and an ex-officio a justice of the peace for the Territories, and was such on the 16th of April last. I recognize the declaration now shown as one that was made before me on April 16, by Skelton, Daunais, Lattour and Dewan; the signatures were made before me, and I recognize that of J. M. Skelton as having been made before me. I wrote the declaration at the dictation principally of Skelton. I was writing and the others were talking, and I cannot state positively who made the dictation. I am not sure whether some of it was written, or whether some of it was given me to copy; the document was read over to the parties before they declared to it. (Here the declaration was filed in evidence.) I see a memo. in lead pencil that was not on it when taken. I acknowledge my signature; all but the pencil memo. was on it when the document was declared.

He describes in detail under the cross-examination of Mr. Johnstone, how the declaration was made, and then Mercer was sworn:

J. B. Mercer, sworn: I am a druggist by profession; I recollect the last general election; I was then postmaster at Battleford, but am not now; I was notified by the department that my services were no longer required. I first heard of the declaration when I received a copy from the department; cannot remember when I first saw it; I got it by mail from the Postmaster General; did not ask for it. I know it to be a true copy of the declaration filed to-day. I recollect the official voters' list used at the Dominion general election on June 23, 1896; know of two copies being posted up—one in the Albion Hotel and one in the post office; saw the one in the post office every day during the time I was in town, and never knew it to be tampered with. People coming in and out of the office could see it; no complaints were ever made to me that it had been tampered with. I never removed or tampered with that or any other voters' list during that election, and never kept in the Conservative committee room a list of voters that had been made out and posted by the enumerator; never took an enumerator's list of voters to the committee room. During that time a list was made out from one that was made up by the enumerator; it was not an official list, but one that I made myself. I saw a partial official list in the committee room; it was in possession of Mr. Littlefield, the enumerator. As far as I know it never left his possession while in the room. I saw Skelton come to the door of the committee room once only. He stood outside the door and did not enter. I am not certain, but think Littlefield and R. C. Laurie, enumerators, were present, and were working on the list. As I remember it was not fastened, but was in loose sheets; do not think the list was completed at that time. If the list was there I had nothing to do with it. Did not see any one with Skelton when he came to the door. From the position I was in I do not think it possible Skelton could have read anything on the table. (The plan of the building was here submitted, and the position of the parties present indicated.) I was at the back of the table; the relative position of the parties as indicated is correct. I was at the back of the table. I measured the distances in the room. From the ground to the doorstep was nine inches; from where he was Skelton could not have told whether the papers he saw on the table were lists or no; I tried myself, and my eyesight is pretty good. Skelton may have been there oftener than once, but I did not see him. A list was posted in the Albion, and I frequently saw it. There was also one in the post office, but I never tampered with either of them. Littlefield, the enumerator, used it as his office; but not before or after the election. Littlefield had no office in town at the time. He lived half a mile or more from the committee room. I don't know whether or not he used the committee room for making up and revising his lists or not. Any alterations to be made in the voters' lists were made on those posted in the Albion or the post office; the enumerator told me so, and that is all I know of it. Skelton came to the committee room between 2 and 3 p.m., when Littlefield and Laurie were there. I don't know what Skelton wanted, but was told he wanted to see the list; did not see Young there. The list was closed about 9 p.m. on Saturday, but I did not care. I was at the committee room after 7 p.m., when I had closed my shop, but don't know how long.

Don't know if Littlefield or the lists were there or not. (A diagram of the room was produced on which witness indicated the position of the parties at the table.) Witness was sitting at the table on which was a partial list; the two enumerators only were present; they were working at the list and I was busy making out voters' certificates and doing general secretary's work. I was doing this when Skelton came to the door. Did not tell Littlefield not to give Skelton the list or any information he might ask for. When I left Littlefield was still working on the list. I took a part in the election, and canvassed, but not publicly. Last saw list in my office when I closed up on Saturday at 7 p.m., and it remained posted until after the election was over. Believe the list made in the committee room was the one used at the election; the enumerator was bound to post two lists and keep one. Littlefield's list was in his possession all the time, and was not in the committee room all the time. Did not examine the list when it was in the committee room. I copied my list off the one in the post office.

I wish to say that in accordance with the Act, the list, the only list with which the electors are concerned, is the list that is posted up, and it is required to be posted up there at a certain time in certain public places and it would be a criminal act to remove that list until after the elections. Malcolm Young, sworn, deposed—and mark you, Mr. Speaker, this is from a member of the Liberal committee, who says that he never went to see the lists and failed to find them.

Malcolm Young, sworn: To Mr. Chisholm—I was a member of the Liberal committee in the campaign of 1896; I was asked to look after the voters' lists; saw one at the Albion Hotel and one at the post office; never went to see the lists and failed to find them. I went to the door of the Conservative committee room in company with Mr. Skelton about 2 p.m. on Saturday; went to speak to the enumerator and saw Mercer there. I did not go in, and do not remember if Skelton did. I noticed on the table some big sheets of paper, but could not say if there was writing on them; could not tell whether they were voters' lists or not. Never went to see the lists and failed to find them. I never knew of the declaration until Mercer got it back from Ottawa. I saw papers I took to be the voters' lists, but they were not in Mercer's possession, but in the enumerator's.

E. C. Laurie, sworn, deposed: The centre of the table is nineteen feet from the door. A person of Skelton's height could see on the table from the door. Did not know that Mercer had voter's lists there. The lists we were working on were in charge of Littlefield. Never knew Mercer to have any charge of any books or lists there except the committee books.

What I want to point out is that the centre of the table was nineteen feet from the door, and the floor was nine inches from the ground outside, and what Skelton swore was that standing outside the door and looking in, he was able to distinguish the voters' list on the table nineteen feet away. He must have had such a magnifying glass as Sam Weller spoke of which would enable him to see all round a corner.

Littlefield, sworn, deposed: Was enumerator for North Battleford at the election in 1896; posted one list in the Albion Hotel and one in the post office eight days before the election, and they remained posted until after the election. I saw them every day, and never found them missing when I looked for them.

Mr. DAVIN.

The Minister of the Interior, who is a lawyer, and is familiar with the Act passed two or three sessions ago, knows that this list being posted up eight days before and remaining there the enumerator entirely filled the condition of the law.

On Saturday before the election I was in the Conservative committee room preparing my revised list; Young and Skelton called in the afternoon; R. C. Laurie was working at his own lists and also helping me; Mercer had nothing to do with my lists; the Conservative committee went by their own private lists; Young and Skelton only came as far as the door; the second time they called, I went to the door and say Young, who wanted to see my lists; Mercer never had my lists in his possession, and a person at the door could not see what papers were on the table; my business was to keep the revised list in my possession.

J. E. Beliveau, sworn—To Mr. Mackenzie—I reside in Battleford and keep the Albion hotel; was proprietor at the time of the last Dominion general election and remember seeing voters' lists posted in the hotel and in the post office, and saw the one in the Albion right along and would have noticed it if it had been removed; changes were made on it every day by Littlefield, but it was never removed until it had been posted the time required by law; last saw the list in the post office the night the lists were posted when Mercer was closing the office.

All this shows that the enumerator had acted carefully, according to the requirements of the Act. Now, it is not necessary that I should read the evidence more in detail. The House will see that the case was proved to the hilt.

This closed the case for the Crown and the defence called no witnesses. Mr. Johnstone renewed his objections—1. That the charges are not laid as they should have been; and 2nd, That the evidence adduced does not support them.

His Lordship said clauses B, C and D were not well laid, and the charge would have to rest on clause A.

Mr. Johnstone—There is no evidence to go to the jury; the copy of the declaration is not evidence against Skelton. "We know" does not mean that we all know, but that two or three may, and that may not necessarily include Skelton. The declaration was ambiguous. It did not follow that Skelton knew; two out of four might know, and he might safely sign.

His Lordship said all who signed the declaration must be amenable to the penalties just as much as if each one had said "I know."

Mr. Chisholm for the Crown spoke, and then Mr. Johnstone, and then his Lordship gave the case to the jury; and I may say of Judge Wetmore that on the bench of Canada, in any province, there is no abler or more upright judge. These are the questions that he put to the jury:

1. Was the declaration false;
2. Did Skelton know it to be false; and
3. Was it made with intent to deceive.

If you find that it was false, that Skelton knew it to be false, and that it was made with intent to deceive, then you must bring in a verdict of guilty.

The jury retired, and after a short absence brought in a verdict of "Guilty."

Skelton was admitted to bail in the sum of $500 for himself and two securities in $250 each to appear at a sitting of the court to be held on the 16th of May next.

In the case of the Queen vs. Dewan, the evidence was practically the same as in the other case, so that I will not trouble the House with reading it. I have told the House all that occurred; but I want to point out one or two facts before I sit down. On the 12th of March I received a letter from Mr. Mackenzie, of Mackenzie & Brown, dated the 8th of March, in which he said:

Dear Sir,—You will likely remember the perjury cases that arose last year in Battleford against J. M. Skelton, Thomas Dewan and Charles Daunais out of false affidavits declared by these three men for the purpose of removing J. B. Mercer, a Conservative, from the postmastership at Battleford. These cases were set down for trial for August, but they asked for an adjournment, giving as their reason that the counsel was unable to attend. The adjournment was granted and the case was fixed for October. At the trial every technical objection conceivable was raised. The jury found Skelton guilty in his case, Dewan was convicted in his case, and Daunais' trial resulted in a disagreement. The judge overruled the accused's objections at the trial, but stated a case for the Court en banc here. The points were all argued again in December, and in February unanimous judgment was given overruling the objections and sustaining the convictions, so that now the three men come up in May, Skelton and Dewan for sentence and Daunais for a new trial.

Immediately on getting that letter, and also a letter of the 3rd of March from Mr. Clinkskill, which I have in my hand, I went on the 12th of March and saw the Minister of Justice, and I wrote to Mr. Mackenzie what the Minister of Justice had stated to me, that nothing would be done ex parte and I got the following letter on 18th March, 1898, from Mr. Mackenzie, of Mackenzie & Brown:

Dear Mr. Davin,—I am in receipt of your favour of the 12th instant and am very much obliged to you for the trouble you are taking in this matter. I noticed in the papers a discussion on the proposed amendments in reference to granting new trials, and certainly think the move was a wise one. If the Minister of Justice had agreed not to act ex parte, I agree with you it would hardly do to bring the matter up on the floor of the House, as you would have an opportunity of looking into the matter before any decision could be given by him. It is impossible for me at present to send you copies of the judgments of the full court as it will be some days before I could get them completed. Some days ago I sent R. F. Chisholm, the Crown prosecutor at Prince Albert, copies which will probably now be in Ottawa, and as reporter for the "Canadian Law Times" I forwarded duplicates to that report so that you will probably see the judgments in full in the next issue of the "Law Times" as quickly as if I forwarded it to you and in time for you to act on it.

And so on. I have here the "Law Times," volume 18, No. 8, for May, 1898, containing the judgment of the full court in this case, which will be found on page 205:

Crown case reserved by Wetmore, J., upon an indictment and conviction of the defendant for perjury and heard by Richardson, Rouleau, and Scott, JJ.

The original charge was that the defendant at Battleford, on or about the 16th day of April, A.D. 1897, in a certain solemn declaration made voluntarily before a justice of the peace in and for the North-west Territories, did falsely, wilfully, and corruptly declare and state of J. B. M. to the effect and in the words following, that is to say: "We," meaning the defendant and others, "know that he," meaning J. B. M., "kept in the Conservative committee rooms the Battleford list of voters that had been made out and posted by the enumerator. This, we believe, was done to allow the Conservative committee to examine and revise such lists, and also to prevent their being always open to examination by the public, as provided by law, and that by such action injury was done to the Liberal candidate."

Upon the defendant being arraigned upon this charge, he applied, before pleading to it, because it did not allege, in the language of s. 147 of the Criminal Code, that the statement set out in such paragraph was one authorized or required by law to be made on solemn declaration; and because it did not allege that the statement was made with intent to mislead; and because the offence set out was not founded upon the facts or evidence disclosed in the depositions taken at the preliminary examination, and the charge was not preferred by the Attorney General nor by his direction nor consent, nor with the consent of a judge; and because the preliminary inquiry was held against three persons, including the defendant, and not against the defendant alone.

The judgment then recites what took place, and then proceeds:

At the preliminary examination of the defendant before a justice of the peace, after the examination of the witnesses for the prosecution, the defendant was addressed by the justice in these words: "Having heard the evidence, do you wish to say anything in answer to the charge? You are not obliged to say anything unless you desire to do so, but whatever you say will be taken down in writing, and may be given against you at the trial." Whereupon the defendant made a statement, but, before making it, he was, at his own request, sworn. The statement was taken down in writing and signed by the defendant, and was offered by the Crown in evidence and received at the trial, against the objection of the defendant.

Section 147 of the Criminal Code enacts that "every one is guilty of an indictable offence * * who, being required or authorized by law to make any statement, oath, affirmation, or solemn declaration, thereupon makes a statement which would amount to perjury if made in a judicial proceeding." Perjury is defined by s. 145, and one of the ingredients of the offence is that the statement must have been made with the intention to mislead. By s. 611, s.-s. 3, it is provided that the statement of a charge may be in any words sufficient to give the accused notice of the offence with which he is charged, and form FF in the schedule, which expressly refers to s. 611, gives examples of the manner of stating offences under it, while s. 382 provides that the forms, varied to suit the case, or forms to the like effect, shall be deemed sufficient in law.

Held, that the forms FF are intended to illustrate the provisions of s. 311, and their effect is not confined to the offences stated in them; and, as, if the charge here had contained an allegation of intent to mislead, it would not have been given the defendant any better notice of the offence than he had, it was unnecessary. The statement in Taschereau's Criminal Code, p. 675, dissented from.

2. That the charge was founded upon facts and evidence disclosed in the depositions taken before the justice on the preliminary examination; that such preliminary examination was sufficient for the purpose and that the fact that it was held against three persons was immaterial, there being separate informations, but only one inquiry.

3. That the trial judge had power to allow the charge to be amended as it was amended; the Crown counsel had the right under s. 11 of the North-west Territories Amendment Act, 54 and 55 V. c. 22, to substitute another charge in respect of the same offence, and having that right, he could amend the original charge, instead of substituting a new one. In the North-west Territories the Crown prosecutor is the accuser, not the grand jury, as in England.

4. That the trial judge was justified in refusing to allow the defendant to withdraw his election. Regina vs. Brewster, decided by this court, followed.

5. That the defendant's statement made before the justice was properly admitted in evidence.

6. That the offence as charged and proved was an indictable one under s. 147 of the Code. The object of s. 26 of the Canada Evidence Act, 1893, was to provide a means by which certain statements not authorized to be made on oath could be verified. The permission to receive a solemn declaration includes authority to make it.

7. That the objection that the personal pronoun "we" was used in the declaration was not a good objection. Each one of the declarations may be taken to have alleged his own personal knowledge of the matters set out in the declaration.

I think I have placed this matter sufficiently before the Government. It is an extraordinary thing that before judgment by the Court came one of the men down to Ottawa, armed with a declaration, and the Minister of Justice thinks that under section 748 he has the power to hear their application for a new trial, and he does hear it, and he tells a member of this House that he received affidavits and promises to give him copies—which, however, he has not yet given him—and tells him what his view is, and his view seems to be that the application was, to some extent, based on the ground that the conviction was contrary to the weight of evidence. But, as I pointed out to the right hon. gentleman, the Minister of Justice was estopped from hearing any application of that kind from section 747, which expressly provides for an appeal to the Court of Appeal, when the verdict is against the weight of evidence. Under section 748, the application to the Minister of Justice must be for the mercy of the Crown, but how there could be an appeal for the mercy of the Crown until there was some reason for extending mercy I fail to see. A more practical end can be reached probably from what I have done to-night, than if the judgment had been pronounced and action had been properly taken, because now we may be able to prevent a gross miscarriage of justice through the Justice Department. These men have not yet been sentenced, and expect to escape through their great influence with the Liberal party. One of the men who was up the other day before the magistrate for cattle-stealing swore that he had great influence with the Liberal party. No doubt, he has been a very active man, and we have here apparently political influence introduced for the purpose of interfering with the course of justice. I place the facts before the House, and though I have been very badly treated by the Minister of Justice, I still feel that there may be possibly some explanation, because I am surprised that so kindly a man as I knew him to be in this House should have promised me those affidavits and not given them to me. But, at any rate, I have done my duty not merely to the North-west but to the whole country, because the whole country is interested in the way this Criminal Code is administered by the Department of Justice.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I owe it to my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) to give him a few words in answer, and they must be a few words only after the long statement he has made in reference to the case. Though I have not given of late much attention to my profession, still, upon the statement he has made to-day, I owe it to myself as well as to him to tell him that he has been labouring under a very serious misapprehension, of which fact he will be satisfied on hearing what I have to say. Before I come to that, however, I desire to say that I cannot follow him in the gossipy matters he has introduced in this debate. He has taken upon himself to state that there was a caucus at the house of Major Cotton and that Major Cotton had been heard to say that there would be a new trial—

Mr. DAVIN. I did not say that Major Cotton said that.

The PRIME MINISTER. Somebody in Major Cotton's house and in Major Cotton's hearing, then, and that all the Liberals about Battleford had been saying that the administration of justice would be interfered with, that the law would not be allowed to take its course, but that somebody, a power behind the throne, would see to it that James Skelton went scot free. All that is gossip. There is no statement upon which anything can be based, no record or other evidence has been introduced to prove the statement. Moreover, if introduced, they would not be relevant at all to the matter in hand. My hon. friend has complained, and it is not the first time he has made the same complaint before the House, that he has not been treated by the Minister of Justice with the courtesy which the Minister should have extended to him. In my opinion, if any one has reason to complain of the treatment received I think it is not my hon. friend so much as the Minister of Justice. What was the statement made a moment ago by the hon. gentleman? That he went to the Minister of Justice, and while engaged in a private conversation with him discussing this question in a friendly way, my hon. friend took out his pencil and was taking notes—

Mr. DAVIN. Will my hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) allow me. I stated that I took a paper out of my pocket and made notes upon it. Those notes were made openly in the presence of the Minister of Justice.

The PRIME MINISTER. I must say that my hon. friend's views of courtesy and my own do not agree. My hon. friend was discussing the question with the Minister of Justice in a friendly way. I take it that this was a private conversation which, whether noted or not, should not have been revealed.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not take the view that this was private.

The PRIME MINISTER. I take a different view. Of course, it is a free country and every one has a right to his own view on matters of courtesy as on everything else. But I hold that the Minister of Justice has more reason to complain that there has been want of courtesy on my hon. friend's part than my hon. friend has reason to complain of the Minister of Justice.

Now, the hon. gentleman has stated on more than one occasion, and he repeated it this evening, that the Minister of Justice had promised him a copy of the affidavits which were to be placed in his hands.

Mr. DAVIN. Which at that time were in his hands. He promised them first before they came and subsequently he told me that I should have them, and he promised them again when I saw him at the right of the Speaker's Chair.

The PRIME MINISTER. All I can say is that had I been in the place of the Minister of Justice, I would not have given my hon. friend a copy of these affidavits, nor would I have promised them. Of course, the Minister of Justice acted differently, and I have nothing to say. But I would not have given copies of the affidavits under similar circumstances. Here was a case between the Crown and James Skelton. My hon. friend had no interest in the case and no more right to ask for these affidavits than anybody else in this room. When the Minister of Justice had taken action, and the hon. gentleman could call that action in question and review it. But, until the Minister of Justice gave his decision, nobody had the right to intervene in the case. But if the Minister of Justice promised the hon. gentleman these affidavits and afterwards neglected to implement his promise, that is a case between my hon. friend and the Minister as to which, of course, I have nothing to say at this moment. But I come to the gist and gravamen of the charge made by my hon. friend. He says that the Minister of Justice interfered with the case after conviction and before judgment, to prevent sentence being pronounced against James Skelton.

Mr. DAVIN. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I will state the charge. The charge I make is that the Minister of Justice, is without any authority from any Act of Parliament to receive an application from persons convicted before sentence had been pronounced, and next that he has done what my right hon. friend says—interfered with the course of justice.

The PRIME MINISTER. During the trial, that is to say before the sentence of the court was pronounced, the hon. gentleman says, somebody, let us say James Skelton or somebody else on his behalf, lodged an application with the Minister of Justice. And I must say to my hon. friend that he stated, and stated correctly, that on the 16th May, when the case was again called to be proceeded with, the agent of the Minister of Justice, who is the Attorney General, stated that he had received a letter of instructions from the Attorney General not to go on with the case but to suspend it to another term. Now, that is the gravamen of the charge he makes against the Minister of Justice.

He says that the Minister of Justice was not within his duty, that he could not have acted until sentence had been passed under the terms of sections 747 and 748. I have only this answer to make to my hon. friend, and he will see that he has been labouring under serious misapprehension. The Minister of Justice is the Attorney General for the North-west Territories, he is the prosecutor for Her Majesty. The Minister of Justice is the Attorney General for Canada, he has jurisdiction in all the courts of Canada, he is the prosecutor wherever Her Majesty brings suit, and he was prosecuting that indictment against James Skelton. If the Minister of Justice was the Attorney General prosecuting that indictment in the court at Battleford against Skelton, the case was in his hands, and he was simply within his rights when he gave instructions to his agent to postpone the case. If that case had been brought in Manitoba or Quebec or Ontario, where the Attorney General is the Attorney General for the province, and upon an indictment, the prosecutor is then the Attorney General for such province, and the Minister of Justice could not have interfered in the case, he could not have ordered a suspension of proceedings. But as the Attorney General for Canada was prosecuting that indictment, he had power to stay the proceedings or to go on with the case. The Minister of Justice having received the complaint that the jury had been packed—I have no opinion to offer at this moment upon that point—but application having been made to the Attorney General, whose agent was prosecuting that indictment at Battleford, saying that the jury had been packed, the Attorney General ordered his agent not to proceed with the case until he had an opportunity of investigating that allegation. That is all there is to this case. I need not tell my hon. friend that the Attorney General prosecuting the indictment against James Skelton, was quite within his rights when he ordered a stay of proceedings until another term.

Mr. DAVIN. I may be permitted, I think, by the House—

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. SPEAKER. Only by the unanimous consent of the House.

Motion agreed to and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Immigration—Salaries of agents and employees in Canada $40,000

Mr. DAVIN. On May 23rd we went through in one night an immense mass of estimates, and they were passed without discussion on the understanding that on this one item that was reserved, we could discuss anything connected with the Department of the Interior. I think the Minister of Finance will bear me out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know that I said we could discuss everything in the Department of the Interior, but it was understood that everything comprised within these items could be discussed, that we should not be tied to any one.

Mr. DAVIN. What we want to discuss is immigration just now. I want to say to the Minister of the Interior that, looking over the reports of the Interior Department in regard to immigration, I find that a large mass of immigrants coming into this country are Galicians. Far be it for me to say anything against any class of men, no matter how poor they may be. I find from the reports of the department that up to December, 10,864 immigrants came in, of whom 4,363 were Galicians. The hon. gentleman will remember that the Galicians that were taken up to Yorkton were miserably poor, and were declared by persons who were well acquainted with them to be unfit for settlement. Not only that, but we have the authority of an hon. member of this House, a supporter of hon gentlemen opposite, who, speaking of this Galician immigration said:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

“This is not an immigration, it is a deportation.” It seems that we are not getting from Galicia the best Galicians.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Who is the gentleman that used that language?

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). I received only to-day a letter from Yorkton complaining bitterly of that Galician immigration. The fact is that we are getting an ineffective immigration, and the amount of money spent on immigration is much larger than the results we obtain from it. In one place after another we find men employed apparently for the purpose, not of inducing immigration, but of rewarding supporters. For instance, in the State of Michigan, we have Mr. James Grieve, who was a member of this House.

Mr. MCGREGOR. And a good member too.

Mr. DAVIN. He was appointed, however, by the party which declared that members of Parliament should not be rewarded.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. DAVIN. No members were to be rewarded for their services; we were not to have any nepotism.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. OSLER. It is too bad that we cannot have reasonable common sense courtesy shown by members on the back benches.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I ask members of the committee to listen to the discussion.

Mr. DAVIN. At St. Paul we have Benjamin Davies, a relative of the honoured and titled gentleman who presides over the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and he has a salary of $1,500 a year. He is a brother of the Minister, and was put right into St. Paul as immigration agent.

Mr. CLARKE. Who is that?

Mr. DAVIN. He is a brother of a Minister, who was one of the loudest denouncers of nepotism when he was on this side of the House. Then we have T. O. Currie, at St. Paul, with a salary of $1,200, and J. Crawford, in Kansas.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is Currie?

Mr. DAVIN. He was an organizer in the west. Thus we now have a large number of gentlemen compared with the number that were formerly employed, and the results are very small compared with this large expenditure.

Mr. MCGREGOR. They are coming.

Mr. DAVIN. They are coming like the swift service across the Atlantic. That has come with great rapidity—we have heard about it for three sessions. One of the great men of the Government has been across the Atlantic, but he has not given us a fast line yet. There is one M. V. McInnes, at Detroit, with a salary of $1,500. Then there is Mr. Swanson and W. G. White at good salaries. We had this matter up in the committee, but no satisfactory explanation whatever was given. It will be remembered that one of the most eloquent members of the Liberal party was dissatisfied with the settlement of the Manitoba school question and had to be provided for. Mr. Devlin was sent to Ireland. In England the staff has been changed. In Scotland also the staff has been changed, and even from the Governor General's home an agent has been sent to Scotland. The Scotch are the best immigrants, they are not surpassed and rarely equalled.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
Next to the Irish.

Mr. DAVIN. No, I will not put them next to the Irish. I consider the Scotch among the very best immigrants that can be brought into this country. What has been the result of these efforts? We have had a total number of immigrants from England of 1,519. The total number from Ireland was 69. This was the beggarly result of taking one of the most eloquent members from this House, but one who might prove dangerous, and sending him to Ireland. Of Scotch there were 205. Of Germans, who are also among the best class of immigrants, 520; Scandinavians, 474; immigrants from the United States, 712. The Galicians number 4,363. Can the Minister of the Interior tell the committee how much Kaleslaw, the Austrian agent, is paid?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
There is no such agent in the service. The only agent in Austria is Prof. Austeroff, who receives $600 a year and some allowances.

Mr. DAVIN. We are told by Mr. Smart that he receives $2,500 a year and allowances. If the Galician immigration is a deportation, and these people are being excluded from Galicia, why should we pay to bring them here? The result of the immigration efforts in the United States was only 712 immigrants, and this was the result of giving large salaries to brothers of Ministers and others. Mr. Jury has sent over 1,000 immigrants from England, while the great bulk of our immigration came from Galicia, the number being 4,363. I saw in a paper the other day that an immense cargo of these people were bound for Canada, and I may say that the people of this country consider it a very serious matter, if these people, who are certainly not ideal immigrants, are to be swarmed over the entire North-west.

Mr. SPROULE. I noticed with a good deal of interest the account given of the Galicians who were brought to Canada, and especially did it attract my attention after reading an article regarding the very destitute condition of these people of the North-west. And, when I heard the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) give a description of the class of people who reach this country from Galicia, I could well understand how it was they were in such a destitute condition. It occurred to me that they were not by any means the right class of people to bring to Canada. We have enough indigents of our own to draw upon the charity of the people of this country for their support, without bringing in these people from the eastern countries. I have here a newspaper which gives a description of some of these Galicians, and now that we are voting money for emigration it is, I believe, well that I should read it. This quotation is from a Winnipeg paper who had a correspondent at Yorkton, and it is dated 9th February:

Yorkton, Feb. 9.—Having heard that the people of the Galician colony at the Beaver Hills, west of Yorkton, were in a most desperate condition, your correspondent obtained the services of an interpreter and left town for the colony in order to ascertain for himself the facts of the case, which are as follows:—

At noon on Sunday, the 6th instant, I came to the first of the Galician hovels, 32 miles out from Yorkton. This was a dug-out, about 9 x 11 feet, and from floor to ridge pole about six feet. In this wretched abode—which resembled a rabbit burrow more than anything else—lived, or rather existed, for some five weeks in fearful agony poor Stefan Panchuik with both feet and one hand rotting off—yes, literally rotting off—from the effects of frostbite. There is not the slightest exaggeration in the statement. The men who lifted him off his rude couch of hay laid on poles to bring him to Yorkton can testify to the truth of it. One of them told me that he could never forget the sight he saw when he entered the hovel and discovered Panchuik lying upon his elbows and stomach with his feet elevated, and seemingly wearing a pair of black slippers; but upon a closer examination he found that what he took to be slippers were really Panchuik's feet, the line of demarcation between the living and dead flesh consisted of a rather deep furrow of about a third of an inch in width of a pinkish hue and exuding pus and putrid matter, the stench of which was unbearable. This gentleman also told me that Mrs. Panchuik insisted upon accompanying her husband to Yorkton, and upon arrival of the party at Theodora, the lady of the house discovered Mrs. Panchuik to be in a most pitiable condition, as she was clad on this night—which was one of the coldest this winter—in only a sheepskin coat, chemise, serge rug, and long boots without stockings. The coat had no buttons, and the front of the coarse linen chemise was open. How the woman escaped being frozen coming that eight miles passes comprehension. That her state was not discovered by the gentlemen who were moving Panchuik was due to the darkness of the night. Before proceeding further on the journey she was supplied by kind willing hands with sufficient clothing. If this case had been attended to in time, this "poor victim of misplaced confidence" might possibly not be in the position he is to-day, viz., a cripple, who is without means of support. Mrs. Panchuik told me, through the interpreter, that having baked the last flour in the house her husband said he would walk to Yorkton and try to get work, so that they would have something to eat. She made him take two of the loaves for the road, saying that she would try and get some flour for herself and children from the neighbours until he came back. He was unable to obtain anything in Yorkton, and started for home on foot, as he had come. Weak from long fasting, he got tired, then got wandering about, and, as a result, was lost for two days and one night. She said: We have eaten nothing but flour and water, with a little milk, this winter, and the flour is bad. She said that Mr. L—— had brought them a little meat while her husband was sick. I was told by her that in Galicia they always raised plenty of vegetables and pigs, and never had to live on bread and water over there. There was no furniture of any description here, except a few rough seats; the stove was made of mud. No blankets or bedding. I got a sample of the flour (?) here; it was either middlings or shorts, but certainly not flour. Mrs. Panchuk told me that this was what the Government issued her.

The next place visited was also a dug-out, about 10 x 15, with walls about 3½ feet high. In this house slept every night four families. No partitions or privacy of any description; no blankets; a few pillows, and hay was all I saw in the way of bedding. Food—bread and snow water. I was told here that the shipping agents in Hamburg had sent circulars through Galicia urging the people to sell out and come to Canada, as the Queen of England would give them everything needed for a start as a loan, and all that they would need was sufficient to pay their passage and $10 to pay for the land. I asked them to give me one of the circulars; but was told that a man named McKorski or McCrosky in Winnipeg, had got them from them as soon as they arrived. One of the men, named Tanasco Muskoluk, said that Mr. Genik told them in Winnipeg that if they came out here they would get a cow for each family, some hens and a year's provisions of flour for all, of which they understood they would have to pay later on when they were able. Muskoluk said that they wrote for this, but as yet they have only got a little flour. This man also told me that his baggage is at the station at Yorkton, and that as he is unable to pay the charges on it, he has not any clothing for himself, wife or children, except the inevitable linen shirts and what he is wearing. I then visited a place where two families were living in a dug-out about 12 x 12—13 souls in all. Food, same as in other cases, with the exception of a little milk, obtained from a cow with a diseased udder, one side of which is so badly ulcerated that they cannot milk on that side. No bedding; mud stove; children look unhealthy; I was told that the children slept on top of the stove to keep them from freezing. These people were told by the shipping agent to sell their sheepskin coats as this was a warm climate and they would not need them. They say that they never experienced such a cold winter as this.

I visited several other places that day, but to describe each place would be too monotonous, as all the places were, as regards food and bedding, in the same sad plight, the only difference being that some had a little more shorts than others. One place I came to on the following day I must describe. It is the residence of Mr. Handibuboa. House, "dug-out," 12 x 14, mud stove, mud roof, mud bed, and mud and wattle door!!! This man must be ingenious, to say the least of it. He told me the same story as regards promises made in Hamburg with this difference, that he says Mr. Genick, and a dark-complexioned officer in Winnipeg, whose name he does not know, repeated these promises to him in Winnipeg, namely, that he would receive from the Government a team, wagon, plow, harness, and a cow, and that he would be helped until he was able to get along. He said that he was sorry that he had left Galicia, but he hoped for better times. He has one child, and it looks very delicate. Handibuboa said that if it was not for the help he had received from the English settlers, that they would have starved.

When I arrived at the next place, which was Wan Hlayi's, they were just preparing the last flour in the house for that night's supper, and did not know where they were going to get their breakfast from. While I was at another house the next morning, on my way to Yorkton, a woman arrived who had just walked over from her own house, about two miles distant, to borrow a meal of flour. She came in crying, and said that her two remaining children were starving, and that she did not know what to do. She volunteered the statement that one of her children had died before Christmas for want of proper food, and she was afraid the others would die too. I asked several of the English-speaking settlers their opinion of these people as settlers, and in every case was uniform that the Government must be crazy to imagine that these Galicians, without any money or means of subsistence, will be a benefit to the country. They say that they will have to leave if the Galicians stay, as they cannot see them starve before their eyes, and it is impossible to give them effectual help without ruining themselves. The land that they are settled on is more suited for stock-raising than farming, and stock-raising is a little too much for the means of these people, whom the hon. the Minister of Interior referred to in his address to the people on the occasion of his last visit to his pets at this place, as the most "desirable class of emigrants that ever came to "Canada." He surely must have meant "undesirable," and if he did most people will agree with him.

On my return to Yorkton I was told that Mr. McCreary was looking for me, and also that that gentleman had denied my report as being incorrect. I met him at his request, and also, on being asked by him to furnish him with the names of the destitute, I replied that I would do so with pleasure, on one condition, which was that he would forward relief to them. He said, "I have seen your interpreter, and have engaged him to go with relief in the shape of beef and flour to-morrow." On this I sent him a list of the names. Judge of my surprise the next day to find that so far from keeping his promise, that my interpreter, Mr. Grunert, should go with the relief, that no relief was sent. Mr. Genick, the Government interpreter, refused to take Mr. Grunert, and left himself for Beaver Hills in a light rig, taking with him some 25 pounds of beef, and I believe one bag of flour.

This corroborates the statement made by the hon. member with regard to the class of people who are sent to Canada. I understand that two nationalities inhabit Galicia. Those of German descent, are industrious and well-to-do people, and they are becoming crowded in the country, while the poorer and more helpless class, who are unable to do anything for themselves, are being sent out. That Government, with the desire to keep the better class at home, advertise the advantages of the North-west of Canada for the poorer class; and, with the assistance of the steamship companies, they are sending to Canada a class of people who are practically paupers and are not likely to succeed. I think we are wasting our money in bringing out this kind of immigration. We have enough destitute people of our own to support, without bringing in the paupers of other countries. The information given by the Deputy Minister was that last year 4,363 Galicians were brought out. First, an attempt was made to settle them in colonies by themselves, but it was found that it would be injudicious to do that, for fear many of them might die of starvation. Therefore, it was decided to distribute them amongst the English-speaking people of the country; and they have been a great burden to these people, who with their humane instincts, will not allow them to die of starvation. But it is a great mistake to impose that burden upon our people. We were told that there were altogether 10,700 immigrants brought into the country last year, of whom 4,363 or nearly half, were Galicians; 1,519 were English, the class of immigrants who are suited to our country, and who seem to get along, no matter in what part they settle; only 69 Irish, and we regret it that there were not more of them, because they make good settlers; 205 Scotch; 520 Germans, and a few Scandinavians. This was the immigration of last year; and for that we are keeping up an army of agents at a very great cost. When we look at the number of people we have employed as agents, in Great Britain and Ireland, in European countries, and in the United States, it seems to me that we are getting a very small return for our very large expenditure, especially when we consider that nearly half of the whole number we got last year may fairly be regarded as paupers, who are likely to be a burden upon our people from the time they come into the country. We have an agent at Detroit, Mr. McGinnis, who gets $1,500 a year. I have not been able to ascertain how many immigrants he has brought in. Then we have Mr. Grieve, an ex-member of this House, whom I met in North Grey, and who I understood was doing the work of the Government in anticipation of the salary he was to receive. He gets $1,200 in Reid City. Another, a Mr. Bennett, gets $900. Another, a brother of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), whose smiling face is before me, is pensioned on this country to the tune of $1,500, and is sent to the western states to do immigration work there. We have not seen whether he has succeeded in sending in any. He is engaged in South Dakota. Then we have a man named Swanson, who gets $1,500. W. J. White gets $1,800; W. Ritchie gets $900; Caven, $900; Crawford, $900; T. O. Currie, the great Patron organizer, who did his work so effectually for the Reform party in 1896, is now receiving his reward to the tune of $1,200 a year and expenses. Then we have Father Paradis, who gets $600. In Great Britain we have Mr. Jury, the celebrated atheist of Toronto, who is stationed in Liverpool. How many immigrants he has succeeded in bringing to this country we do not know. In Wales we have Mr. W. L. Griffith. In Dublin we have another ex-member of this House, Mr. Devlin, who gets $2,000 a year, and who with all the other agents in Ireland has succeeded in bringing to this country 69 Irish immigrants during last year. In the north of Ireland we have Mr. Webster, and in Londonderry we have Mr. O'Kelly. In Glasgow we have Mr. Murray at $2,000 a year, and in Inverness, Mr. Stewart, at $100 a month. We have agencies at Paris, Birmingham, Bristol, Dublin, Dundee, Glasgow, Liverpool and London, and last year they succeeded in bringing to Canada 1,519 English, 69 Irish and 205 Scotch immigrants. That is the sum total of the immigration from the British Isles, the only immigration of any value that reached the country. Before hon. gentlemen opposite came into power, we were told that they were going to boom immigration, and they have boomed it by expending a large sum of money and giving employment to their needy political supporters, who are to-day getting their rewards for the active work they did during the last election. But the great question to my mind is, has the country received an adequate return for this large expenditure? Will the country be pleased to know that these men are pensioned upon it to the amounts I have stated?

Mr. WALLACE. What about their other expenses?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know; I have not totalled them up. I wanted to get the aggregate expense, but I could not get it. I am told, however, that it is twice as much as it was in any previous year. If we could ascertain the aggregate expenditure, and divide it by the number of immigrants that have come to the country, we would find that each immigrant we get costs to the country a large amount of money. I believe that we are warranted in stating, from the information we possess, that these Galicians are not suitable to this country, and the Government are not justified in bringing the paupers of other nations to have them supported by the liberality of Canadians. Immigrants from the British islands are always welcome, and the same may be said of Germans and Scandinavians. Of the latter we have very few coming of late, but the expenditure is kept up just the same. I think the Minister of the Interior should give us some information with regard to the operations of his department in this line. We would like to know the total number of immigrants brought to Canada last year.

I think that for the thousands that have been given us of English, Irish, Scotch, Galicians, Germans and Scandinavians, we should know what we have had to pay. If the hon. gentleman would be good enough to give the total number, then we could arrive at an approximate estimate of what each immigrant cost the country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I feel that I ought to give the committee as much information as I can, and I shall just briefly give the figures. The number of immigrants we got in 1896 from all countries was 16,833. In 1897 there was an increase, the number being 19,304. Up to the end of April, 1898, it was 5,216. To make a comparison between the three years, I might give the figures for the first three months of each year. From the 1st January to the 30th April, 1896, there were 3,776; from the 1st January to the 30th April, 1897, the number was 4,294, and for the same period this year, it was 5,216. So that there is a fair amount of improvement and progress. The number has almost been doubled from 1896 to 1898. The information is perhaps of more value, if we take the number of immigrants arriving in Manitoba and the North-west Territories at the points of entry and who are agriculturists. I find that in 1896 the number was 4,196. In 1897, the first year for which I could in any way be held responsible, the number was 10,874. And for the first three months of 1898, it was 15,605, showing 15,605 in the first three months of this year as compared with 4,196 in the whole year of 1896. My hon. friend asked what has been the result of the work in the United States. His reference to the agents we have there are quite correct, so far as the names are concerned, and I have this to say of them that I think we have an intelligent, capable, and hard-working lot of agents, who are doing the very best possible to secure a desirable class of immigrants to our North-west country. They succeeded in getting, during the first three months of this calendar year, something like 4,000 agricultural settlers, who went to Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and I regard that as an extremely satisfactory result.

My hon. friend referred, with some degree of particularity, to the question of the Galicians. I will have to share with the hon. gentlemen upon the other side of the House the honour of discovering the Galicians. Out of a total number of settlers in Canada who came here in 1896—and we would not, I fancy, be held responsible for any of the immigration work done in that year, because no steps were taken in that branch of immigration by this Government until the beginning of 1897—there were nearly 3,000 Galicians. The total number was 16,835. During the period when the hon. gentleman's friends were in power, they had therefore also entered, to some extent, into the Galician industry, and while it is true that

Mr. SPROULE.

4,000 came last year, 3,000 came during the last year for which the hon. gentlemen are responsible. I do not blame them for what they did in connection with Galician's immigration, and I do not share, in any degree, the views of the hon. gentlemen with regard to the undesirability of these people. Having spent the greater portion of my life in the North-west, I have had the opportunity, to a very considerable extent, of familiarizing myself with the conditions of life there, and therefore know pretty well the class of people we must get if we are ever going to settle that country with an agricultural population. I do not share the belief of the hon. gentleman who has spoken adversely of these people. I remember distinctly when the Mennonites and Icelanders came to Manitoba, and I remember that at that time almost the same kind of criticism was addressed to these people that has lately been made against the Galicians. But we have found that although the Mennonites and the Icelanders were not a very attractive lot of people when they came to the North-west, yet after overcoming the difficulties of the start on prairie life, they became the most valuable settlers we have in Manitoba and the North-west. For my part, having seen all classes there, I have no hesitation in saying that the Galicians compare quite favourably with the Icelanders or Mennonites when they first came. It is true that a certain number of camp followers will gather around any large body that may move in any direction, and the same thing occurs in connection with the bringing of people from central Europe. If the agents collect with care 1,000 or 2,000 people whom they consider desirable immigrants and forward them through the agencies placed at their disposal, it follows that along with these people is bound to come a certain number of other people whom the agents did not collect and for whom we are not responsible. The result is that when these parties come out, let us be as careful as we will, there will be a certain number not possessed of sufficient means to make a separate start. It is a complete answer to the charge that these people are paupers to point to the fact that the Canadian Government has never contributed a dollar to their passage money nor has the Government of Austria.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the Deputy Minister to say that they would subsidize steamship agencies to bring them out.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Our general policy is to pay a bonus to steamship agents for all the bona fide immigrants they take to this country. That applies to the Galicians as to the Germans and others.

Mr. SPROULE. In Galicia to get rid of them, they pay also fees to the steamship companies to take them out of the country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I never heard of it, and I do not believe it. If that were so, I would have known it. My information is to this effect, that not only is that not so, but that there is a constant struggle going on between our agents and those acting in the interests of other countries that desire these people, particularly the South American Governments which are making efforts to get them. To telegraph to our agent that we do not desire these people, would result in the agents ceasing to make an effort to send them here, and they would go to some country in South America. I have taken some pains to make an examination into the condition of these people, and the probability of their making successful settlers, and I have come to the conclusion that they are a desirable class of settlers, and that it is desirable for us to continue to a moderate extent, for some little time, the work that is being done in that direction.

In the first place these are people who, for generations, have been agriculturists. My hon. friend will remember that the agents of the late Government once or twice made the serious mistake of collecting people from the cities. That could only result in disaster. People collected from among the unemployed of the cities will not likely become successful agriculturists. The result in this case proved it. But these Galicians have been agriculturists for generations, and when they are placed on the land and given a fair and reasonable opportunity to get on, they do get on. They do not go into farming on a large scale; they are not what we call wheat growers nor what we call ranchers. But they start in such a way that they are able to make a living, and I have no doubt that in a very short time they will be reasonably prosperous and that before long they will develop into a thoroughly prosperous agricultural community. These people are not the proletariat that they have been represented to be. They are people of good physique and of fairly good agricultural knowledge and fairly competent in a mechanical way. Moreover, they are people of good moral habits, who will never in that respect give us any trouble whatever. I fancy that a community of these people will be found as good-living a set of people as is to be found in any country. I went last year myself—I was sorry I could not go earlier in the season, but I went there in the fall—to visit the colony at Yorkton. I went from shanty to shanty and saw these people in the houses they had built for themselves. If my hon. friend had been with me he would have had an entirely different opinion from that he has expressed. I consulted the managers of the road and the most intelligent men I could find in the neighbourhood where these people had settled, and, while I have no doubt there are persons who are prepared to criticise adversely anything done that is a little out of the ordinary course, I find an almost unanimous consensus of opinion in favour of the work done. Mr. W. R. Baker, manager of the Manitoba and North-west Railway upon which the town of Yorkton is situated, who knows everything they have done and whose company transported them under his own supervision, told me that he was satisfied with what was done and believed that these people would be good settlers. I am able to say further that numbers of men who were interested in this question—because the people in the west are greatly interested in the question of immigration—have gone up and examined the people for themselves. My hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) who is in the House at this moment, at first shook his head and told me that he had grave doubts about these Galicians who had come out. He went up the Dauphin line, examined the settlements, and came back with this opinion entirely changed, and said he was satisfied that it was desirable to continue the work, because the people would be good settlers. It may be that some such an occurrence as that mentioned by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has taken place in regard to one or two of these people. But I can tell the hon. gentleman that we have been receiving these people now for three or four years. In 1896, 3,000 came in; in 1897, from 4,000 to 5,000, and there has been a very considerable number this spring; but so far we had never known that any of them have starved to death, having managed to eke out an existence, and their condition is improving. The amount of money we have spent in giving them a start is comparatively a mere trifle. Now, I wish to impress my hon. friend with this idea—that it is no light matter to succeed in this work of immigration. And if we think that we are going to people the prairies of the North-west without taking a great deal of trouble, we shall find ourselves mistaken. If the hon. gentleman will look into the history of the western railways he will find that they have spent an amount of money and taken trouble to bring in population that would surprise him. We are told by leading men connected with western railways, that for every head of a family settled along the line of the railways through the agency of these companies, the companies have incurred an average expense of $500. If the hon. gentleman will take the 15,000 settlers who have come in during the last three and a half months and divide them into the amount of money expended, he will find that we are working to vastly greater advantage than the railway companies of the west. I am free to say, while I do not desire to take more credit for it than I am entitled to, that I feel greatly encouraged with the success our agents have met with. I think we should be doing wrong to Canada if, when a movement has begun and we have succeeded in improving the conditions of affairs as much as we have in a year and a half, we should relax our efforts and run the risk of going backwards. In 1896, when hon. gentlemen opposite had nearly ceased their efforts, immigration had nearly ceased. In one year the late Government spent over $500,000 in promoting immigration. We have never contemplated asking Parliament for such a large amount of money. But the hon. gentleman will find that in proportion as the expenditure on immigration has become smaller the immigration has fallen off. For ten years there was an average expenditure of about $225,000 a year, but, in proportion as the expenditure was reduced, the immigration fell off. If this vote were wiped out, instead of 15,000 coming in in three months, next year there would be only 2,000 or 3,000, and, in the following year there would be practically none. Wherever we are doing work we are contending against active and enterprising agents, and there is the strongest competition in every place where any effort is made to secure immigrants. I have had in my mind specially, during the work that has been done, the necessity of taking only agricultural immigrants; and, so far as I know—in fact I am in a position to state positively—no inducement has been held out to any person of any other class to come to this country. I believe it would be a mistake to induce others to come. So far as the difference in nationality is concerned, I may say to my hon. friend that the results in Ireland have not been satisfactory to me. But this is because of the fact that the agents who were working there have been labouring under very great difficulties. My hon. friend from West Assiniboia brought before the House last year the fact that when Mr. Devlin went to Ireland he was met with a most violent attack from the home rule press, and it was made almost a political question that no person should give him any aid or comfort in inducing people to leave Ireland.

Mr. Devlin addressed himself to overcoming that difficulty with great determination and with great success, and he finally succeeded in getting the very press that had been denouncing him to acknowledge that there was merit in his work, and it was worth while for the people to listen to what he had to say. I have great hope that in the course of a little time he will succeed in giving us a number of desirable settlers. We have to remember that our efforts are somewhat like those of an army. We fire off an enormous number of bullets, not expecting that every bullet is going to find a billet, or kill an enemy. We have to direct our work to those places where we think it is likely desirable results can be accomplished; but we do not think that it is desirable to stop at once because at first large results are not accomplished. If, in the course of another year, no substantial results are accomplished in Ireland, then, of course, it will be desirable for us to withdraw our staff from that place. The expenditure in connection with the Galician immigration is not large. The salary of Professor Oleshow, the only agent we have, is $600 a year. We have paid so far for the work he has done for us, $2,600 for printing and expenses, and we require to pay him under the arrangement which we have made with him, a bonus of $2.50 a head on those that are actually landed in this country.

Mr. SPROULE. How much per head to the steamship companies which bring them out?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We do not pay anything to the companies. The ordinary passage is about $20 across the ocean; we contribute absolutely nothing to the passage of an immigrant. The one principle that I have proceeded upon has been that if a man was worth having, he could pay his own passage to this country. We have not assisted the passage of any immigrants with the exception of one party of servant girls, who were brought out under the supervision of Mrs. Livingstone, and whose passage money is to be repaid. It was simply an advance for a short time, and I am satisfied the arrangement will result in the repayment of the money.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he had paid a bonus to steamship companies for each passenger brought in.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not to the steamship companies, but to the booking agents. I may explain that these booking agents in Europe are not in the employ of the steamship companies in the ordinary sense, though there are, of course, salaried agents. The experience of railway companies and governments that have had anything to do with continental immigration is that if you do not pay the usual bonus to the steamship agents you do not get anybody. The agents, for instance, book immigrants at these European ports. If word went over there that we were not going to pay the usual bonuses, they would simply boycott Canada within a month, and we would not get a single immigrant from those ports until we renewed the arrangement. When I say not a single immigrant, I mean none of the class of people that are generally known as immigrants. It is one of those things which every one learns at once, on turning his attention to this subject. We cannot ignore the booking agents.

Mr. INGRAM. What control has the department over the class of immigrants that come to this country, if these people themselves get bonuses? I read in this report:

The sub-agents receive commissions according to the following scale, namely: For every male adult (18 years or over) $3, for every female adult $2, and for each person under 18 years of age $1, payable on the exchange of certificates issued by the sub-agents to their clients for settlers' rate tickets on the Canadian Pacific Railway, thus insuring their actual arrival in the country, the certificate being exchanged at the boundary.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The bonuses to the booking agents do not apply to sub-agents in the United States. We have a number of agents in the United States, and I may say that we have endeavoured to apply the same rule, and to follow the same practice in the United States which the western railways have followed in the province of Ontario. Gentlemen who are familiar with the history of the province of Ontario for the last fifteen or twenty years know that for many years the railway companies in the western states had arrangements with the ticket agents of the Canadian railways in the province of Ontario, and that these ticket agents were the most active agents in sending out people from the province of Ontario to the western states. That practice resulted in tens of thousands of our best people going to the western states. We have endeavoured to turn the tables upon them, and we have employed a large number of their agents in the western states in the same way upon commission, and so far with desirable results.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman will remember that a few years ago strong objections were raised to immigrants coming from the old country, such as mechanics and labourers who are not employed upon farms in the North-west Territories. We understood that the bonusing was discontinued by the late Government and that the present Government had again introduced that system of granting bonuses to settlers coming to this country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have not commenced that system again.

Mr. INGRAM. Is there a system of granting these agents a certain sum per head for each immigrant induced to come to this country?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The practice which the hon. gentleman referred to was the practice of assisting with passage money. Objections were raised to that, it was said that persons thus brought out were practically paupers. The principle of the objection was this: That if a man had not enough money to pay his own way to this country, he was so nearly a pauper that he ought not to be brought here. We have not gone back to the system of paying or assisting passages. The payment to these booking agents is not a payment upon the passage money of the immigrant at all, but it is in the nature of a payment to him as an agent to work up immigration and bring the people here.

Mr. INGRAM. Are these agents instructed not to encourage skilled mechanics?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, they have positive instructions not to encourage anybody except agriculturists, and so far as I know they follow that rule.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see the hon. gentleman has expended about $40,000 under the head of Canadian agencies. We all expected, when he assumed the control of his department, that he was going to inaugurate a vigorous system of immigration. In view of the amount of money that is being expended I have no doubt he is endeavouring to do so, but I find by the Auditor General's Report that at Quebec we have a small army of men employed and paid large salaries; but not satisfied with paying them salaries, the department clothes them as well. W. Anderson is paid $730 salary, that is $2 a day, but, in addition, he receives a summer suit costing $15, a winter suit costing $25.50, rubber coat, $5, rubber boots, $4.50, boots, $5, cap, $3.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am following the example of my predecessor; there has been no change.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think that is an innovation.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No. They are men employed in the buildings and they are given uniforms. I think it is quite proper, as did my predecessor, that these men should be in uniform, because they are recognized as the men in charge.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is a large staff. F. X. Beaulieu, 33 days at $1.50; summer suit, $20.92; rubber boots, $4.50; rubber coat, $5.50; boots, $5; cap, $3. There are fourteen of such agents or employees.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Most of them are men employed around the immigration sheds, and are paid the same as labourers.

Mr. TAYLOR. All these men are furnished with summer suits, winter suits, rubber coats, the total expenditure being $11,443. I find in Ontario the expenditure was $1,301. For Canadian agents the large sum of $40,000 is expended. When a man is paid $2 a day he should furnish his own uniform, and the department should not be called upon to furnish them with winter uniforms, rubber coats and boots.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Did not the late Government furnish these men with boots?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, I never saw it done before.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Have you read the Auditor General's Reports?

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman can refer, if he pleases, to the Auditor General's Report, and he may endeavour to find items to contradict my statement that this has not been done before this year.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There has not been any change in the practice of furnishing clothing to men around the immigration buildings.

Mr. SPROULE. I am glad to notice that the Minister has learned after a few years' experience what those who preceded him knew long ago, but it was interesting to hear the hon. gentleman speak to-night and give various reasons why we are unable to get more immigrants to this country and the importance of making heavy expenditures in the immigration department.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think the hon. gentleman ever heard me speak or ever read any remarks made by me and reported in which I spoke in any different sense.

Mr. SPROULE. I remember what has taken place for many years back in this House when the hon. gentlemen now on the treasury benches condemned the increasing amount expended for immigration, and when the amount was reduced until during the last year of the late Administration there was expended only $98,000 or $100,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You did not obtain any results from the expenditure.

Mr. SPROULE. The results were equal in proportion to the expenditure to the results obtained during the last year. We did not have such a large immigration of paupers. When the Minister of the Interior said we expended $500,000, and kept coming down and down, it must be admitted that we did so because hon. gentleman opposite were condemning us and saying that our own people were not employed in the country, that those we were bringing in left in a little while, and there was no justification for the expenditure. Do hon. gentlemen opposite contend to-day that the people we are bringing are remaining in the country? The expenditure is altogether too large. The first thing done by the Minister of the department was to increase the expenditure. I do not blame him for that, but I blame hon. gentlemen opposite for their inconsistency; while they had been for years condemning the expenditure made, they now defend the increased expenditure by the present Minister. Their inconsistency, however, is quite in keeping with their actions in the House during the last few years. When the Minister of the Interior has stated that among the Galicians no one has died from starvation, what importance does the hon. gentleman attach to the information I read? Does he attach no importance to it? A party who went there with an interpreter, after spending one or two days in the district, stated there were seven, eight or nine families in the most destitute condition any one could possibly imagine; that at least one child had died of starvation, and if the woman, who travelled two miles to borrow flour, had failed to secure it, another child according to her statement, would have died shortly afterwards. I say in the face of these statements, and I have every reason to believe them correct, it is difficult to understand how the Minister of the Interior can say that the immigration of Galicians has been a success and he knows of no cases of want in the country.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Your party brought in the Galicians first.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Kent (Mr Campbell) appears to have no better answer than a simple interruption, which is not relevant. In the face of that fact, we must come to the conclusion that the Galicians are not a suitable class. No doubt a certain percentage are suitable, a small percentage is to be found among any class of immigrants who are suitable, but I believe the great bulk of the Galicians are unsuitable. I believe they are only paupers sent out of their own country and brought here, and they become indigent and dependent on the charity of our people.

Some hon. MEMBERS. How will they vote?

Mr. SPROULE. Hon. gentleman opposite will know more about that than I do. They always manage to corral the foreigners, the Scandinavians and Galicians, and get them to vote as they want—whether they buy them I do not know. I do not know their politics and I care less. The question is, are they suitable citizens in this country and will they succeed? They become a burden on us as soon as they reach Canada, and I consider it is a matter of some importance to endeavour to prevent a large number of these people coming here to fill up the country and add to the burdens of our people. All that we can bring from the British islands are desirable immigrants, and we should get as many of them as possible. I do not wonder that so few English-speaking immigrants have come here, because for years past hon. gentlemen opposite have instructed them, through their speeches, that Canada was a good place to avoid, and now when these gentlemen want them to come to Canada, they cannot get them. I do not want to be understood as opposing a liberal expenditure on immigration, but I remind the right hon. gentleman that he and his friends have for years opposed a liberal vote for immigration in this House, and in order to satisfy them the Conservative Government cut down the appropriation until it was only about $100,000 a couple of years ago. We are to spend double that amount this year, but the return we are getting for that $200,000 is very small. The country requires immigrants, and I hope we will do better in the future. I can only say that up to the present time this Government have not been able to show the Canadian people that they have been very successful in their immigration policy.

Mr. OSLER. I must say, Sir, that immigration is one of the most difficult problems the Government have to deal with. I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) in some of his remarks. Although I do not live in the North-west, I have very large interests there, and I keep very closely in touch with what is going on, and I have come to the conclusion, from what I have been able to gather, that so far the Galicians have been, on the whole, a good class of settlers. I do not think it would be wise to encourage a too rapid immigration of these people, for I believe they should be brought in slowly so that they may be absorbed in the country from year to year. I repeat that the information I have received from my friends in the North-west is to the effect that, taking them altogether, the Galicians are a good class of immigrants. In bringing 4,000 or 5,000 men such as they into a strange country, of necessity there will be cases of hardship. I am quite sure that in the original settlement of Ontario there were cases of hardship, and many, I dare say, died, and some, doubtless, of the pioneers were frozen to death. In the consideration of a question such as this, we should not look too closely to individual cases of hardship. I must say, Sir, that I was very much pleased with the speech delivered to-night by the Minister of the Interior on immigration. It is a difficult question to deal with, and I give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) credit for doing the very best he can in the premises. To my mind, satisfactory immigration does not so much depend upon the amount of money expended as upon the price of the commodities that are raised in the country to which you bring your immigrants. During the last ten or twelve years the price of grain has been so low that it gives the key-note to the want of settlers in the North-west Territories. I guarantee that if my friends on the Government side will keep up the price of wheat to 80 cents a bushel in the North-west, they soon can stop spending any money on immigration, for the immigrants will go there of their own accord. While it is very desirable to get immigrants into the North-west and while, so far, the Mennonites and that class of men have been prosperous and desirable settlers, I think it would be an unwise thing to bring in too many Galicians in one year. Four or five thousand a year is quite as many as that country can absorb.

Mr. SPROULE. How does the Minister (Mr. Sifton) justify paying a bonus of $5 each for the Galicians, and only $2 each for the English, Irish and Scotch immigrants?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We pay on the same scale that others pay to the continental agents, namely, $5, and we pay on the same scale as others do to the English agents, namely, $2. We do not feel disposed to raise the rate, and if we lowered it we would get no immigrants.

Mr. SPROULE. Are the Canadian Pacific Railway authorities, who own so much land in the North-west assisting in any way to bring immigrants to the country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The operations of the Canadian Pacific Railway are entirely separate from those of the Government, and while our people come in contact with theirs once in a while, I cannot give any detailed statement as to what they do. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company people claim that they spend a large amount of money in immigration.

Mr. SPROULE. Do they make any reduction in the cost of transportation?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They give us a very low rate and they give our agents free transportation. When our immigrants get stuck at Winnipeg, and have not got their tickets right, the Canadian Pacific Railway very often carry them for nothing. They do everything they can for us without getting any profit out of it in many cases.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) complained that when the Liberals were in Opposition they objected to the expenditure of money for immigration. I can tell the hon. gentleman that any person who is familiar with the facts will agree that the Liberals had good reason to complain about this expenditure in past years, for, as a matter of fact, notwithstanding the amount of money spent yearly in seeking to promote immigration to the North-west, that country did not actually hold the natural increase of its population, more people left the country than were brought into it. The money was wasted: the immigrants did not remain there, and many of them were no good anyway. In one case, we had an instalment of Jew pedlars sent from Chicago, who were no use as settlers, and who in some cases took to thievery, and were obliged to be maintained at the expense of the country. But, Sir, under existing circumstances, it is wise that we should go in for a vigorous immigration policy. The conditions have entirely changed in the North-west within the last year or two. We are having good times in Manitoba and the North-west, and the people who are going in there are staying there, and the population is rapidly increasing, and making substantial progress. Whether or not it be that Providence is acting in conjunction with my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, the fact is that at the present time the North-west is in a prosperous condition. Excellent progress is being made, and if we can get our vacant lands settled it will be money well spent even though it costs us a large sum. Now, Sir, with regard to the Galician immigration. Along the line of the Dauphin Railway, I had an opportunity of observing how these people were progressing, and the general verdict of the settlers is that these Galicians are making substantial progress. I am disposed to agree with the member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) that it might not be well to send too many Galicians in at a time. But these lands have remained vacant for many years, and if these people continue to make the progress they seem to be making now, then I think the Minister of the Interior is to be commended for encouraging the Galician immigration. I do not say that they are the most desirable settlers, but they have come in to take up lands which long lay vacant; they are assimilating with our own people, and I believe in the end they will make reasonably good settlers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) took exception to the statement of the Minister of the Interior with regard to the practice of providing clothing in Quebec. He said it was quite an innovation, and was not to be found in the previous reports. I have sent for the Auditor General's Report for 1895-96, and I find the summer cap and the winter cap, the $18 overcoat and the rubber boots—the whole outfit which my hon. friend referred to.

Mr. OLIVER. The question of Galician immigration is like almost all other questions, in that its appearance depends chiefly upon the point of view; and it is quite possible that those who come into more intimate connection with the Galician immigrants may look upon their immigration with a different eye from those who have not had that opportunity. As one who has come perhaps more intimately into connection with them than any other member of the House, I may be allowed to say a word or two. It was to the district I represent and the town in which I live that the first Galician immigrants came. Near that town is a large Galician settlement, and therefore I have had opportunities of observing those people that perhaps have not fallen to the lot of other members of the House. The point I wish to make in regard to this matter of foreign immigration I will try to make by illustration. It has been hinted in this House to-night that an objection exists to the importation of mechanics to this part of the country. I believe there is such an objection. The people of this part of the country object to the public money being used for the purpose of inducing such immigration; and that objection was considered so valid that the immigration of mechanics has ceased. Our position in the locality I speak of in the west is, that our trade is working on the land, and the immigration which provides more workers on the land than the employers can employ or pay wages to, is not a desirable immigration for us. In any new country, in our new country at any rate, there is always a very large proportion of poor settlers—people who come in the hope of being able to earn enough money from their richer neighbours to start them on their farms. When too large a number of that class of people come in, it becomes practically impossible for many of them to succeed in that way. That is our position in regard to this Galician immigration. A large number of these people have come in, and in a large majority of cases they have been in very poor circumstances—in such circumstances that they were compelled either to work at any wages they could get, or starve. The consequence is that their advent into that country means that the young men from the eastern provinces of Canada who might desire to go up there and take farms, hoping to start themselves by wages earned from their richer neighbours, are practically debarred from doing so. So that to-day if a young man from Ontario asks, "What are the chances of my going to Edmonton and earning something there to start me on a farm?" the only answer that can be given to him is that the chances are not good, and that the reason is there is an overplus of cheap labour there, in the shape of this Galician immigration. As I say, this matter all depends on the point of view. It may seem to people here that the country can be built up satisfactorily on these terms; but it does not seem so to us there. To our minds, you are not succeeding in building the country up to the extent that you think you are, because the presence of these Galicians to a certain extent prevents the presence of those young men who, being our own countrymen, would be more desirable settlers. That is the position, as I understand it, with regard to this immigration of a poor class of people.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You do not want to weaken the other parts of Canada, do you?

Mr. OLIVER. I will make this statement, although it is not pertinent to the question, that of all the countries in the known world, the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have been the greatest fields for emigration within the past twenty years; that is to say, they have lost a larger proportion of their working population to their neighbours to the south than any other part of the world has lost to another country. It seems to me that instead of our shutting our eyes to that plain fact, it would be business for us rather to try to direct this natural overflow of our own people to the settlement of our own country, instead of letting it drift to the United States; and in doing that, let us not think that we are weakening our own country, but rather strengthening it.

Mr. INGRAM. How would you do it ?

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman may answer his own conundrum.

Mr. INGRAM. If the hon. gentleman will excuse me, I know that that is a very pertinent question with the labouring classes of this country. It is a difficult problem to solve, and we would like to know what to suggest to the Government. It is with the best of feeling that I ask the question.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not prepared just now to give an answer to the question, which was brought out on the spur of the moment. Perhaps at another time I may be able to do so. If the statement I make is irrefutable, it is for the hon. gentleman himself or any one else to suggest a remedy. A member of society in this part of the country who, owing to circumstances, is not able to use his natural abilities to the fullest extent, and has that opportunity opened to him by removing to that part of the country, from being a dead weight becomes a profitable producer of wealth for Canada. Instead of weakening the country you strengthen the country by giving him that opportunity. In past years we have been losing our population by tens and hundreds of thousands, so that to-day there is in the United States nearly as large a population of Canadians and descendants of Canadians as there is in Canada. I do not think we can gain anything by shutting our eyes to that fact. We are to a certain extent shutting the door in the faces of our young men who desire to move to that country, by inducing what is to a great extent a pauper immigration, which for evident reasons is as undesirable in that country as it is in this. Now, I do not wish to discuss the matter at any length; but I think it is only fair that the House should be informed in regard to the nationality of those people.

It has been said that the Mennonites and Icelanders are agriculturists and that, therefore, as a natural consequence, the Galicians, being agriculturists, are also good settlers. Well, these people are of the Slavonic race, entirely different from the Mennonites or Icelanders. They are the native population of Russian-Poland, of which Galicia forms a part, and although they are and have been agriculturists from time immemorial, the Russian Government, about a hundred years ago, actually induced immigration into Russia from Germany of Mennonites, the progenitors of those who afterwards came to Manitoba, for the purpose of improving agriculturally the country of which these Slavonic people are the natives. Russia imported German farmers for the purpose of making the country more productive than the native Slavonic farmers were able to make it, which is fair evidence of the respective values of the two peoples, and which shows that the Germans are, in the nature of things, much more desirable than the Galicians, although both are agriculturists. In the case of the Austrian province of Galicia; that is settled partly by Germans, who were brought in by the Austrian Government because the original owners of the soil were not satisfactory farmers. And the Germans have increased so much, that they and the native Galicians crowded each other, and it became a question for the Austrian Government whether the Germans or the Galicians should leave the country. The Germans began first to leave and some of them came to Canada, but the Austrian Government, taking alarm at this movement, took measures to stop it and replace it by a movement of Galicians, so that we are informed to-day by the Deputy Minister of the Interior that we can get thousands of Galicians from Galicia but no Germans whatever. That is why I used in this connection the word "deportation" instead of "immigration." It is a movement of population urged by the Austrian Government for the purpose of actually getting rid of these people, and it is only fair that the House should understand these facts. It is not fair to make a level comparison between these people and the other races, and particularly not fair to make a level comparison between their value and the value of our own people. It will be found that the feeling is very general in the west—among the people where I live at any rate—that our own people are the best, that the best the country has is not too good for them, and that if there is any preference, they are the parties who should have it. And if the question is whether our own or some other people shall have the country, no matter how good the others may be, our people should have it and should not be crowded by pauper immigration.

Mr. DAVIS. My hon. friend from Alberta does not seem to have any great love for the Galicians. He starts in by saying that they are going to furnish cheap labour for the settlers of the west. Well, that is what we want. Transportation costs us so much and we have to haul so far that we must have cheap labour, and cheap labour is a thing that farmers in these times will be glad to have. With reference to the Galicians I want to get all I can into the district I have the honour of representing. I believe that they will make first-class settlers. It will take a while to get them into the hang of things in this country, but they are thrifty people who will adapt themselves to its conditions and become as good settlers as we can get, provided they are placed in a proper manner. I do not think they should be settled among other people but in colonies, placed in close proximity to other settlements where they can learn the ways of the country, and then in a short time they will make good settlers. I tried this year to get a colony of them into the district of Saskatchewan, close to the colony of Mennonites, and I am confident that if they settle there, they will give a good account of themselves. The Mennonites, I think, is the best class of immigration we can get into the west. It is the best we have got so far. We have immigrants from all parts of England and Scotland, and all over the world, but those Mennonites are the most thrifty settlers we have got. In one district 70 families settled at a place called Rusthern. They have only been there five years, and this year they exported 100,000 bushels of wheat, sold at 70 cents a bushel, or $70,000, making $1,000 per family. And that is for wheat alone, not taking into consideration the stock they sold; they raise great quantities of cattle and also go in for dairying. This year they built a large roller mill and paid for it themselves, without help from anybody, and are shipping their flour to British Columbia. There are some shrewd business men among them, storekeepers, who handle the wheat and ship it out. If the hon. Minister of the Interior would get us more of that class of settlers, he would be doing a good thing for the country. I am sure that we would like to get all the Canadians we can because the Canadian is the best settler we can get, but that is merely displacing population, taking it from one place and putting it into another. What we want is to get people from the outside, if we are going to increase our population and our resources as they ought to be increased. We have all classes in my district—English and Scotch—

Mr. TAYLOR. And the Irish.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, a few came from Galanogue. The Scotch are about the best we can get and the Irish come next, and the English make very good settlers, too, but I cannot say as much for the settlers brought in from the other side of the line by the late Government. The hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) said that the Government are spending a great deal more than was spent by the late Government on immigration. I must say that if they do not spend it to any better effect than the late Government did, we might consider it thrown away. I have a little experience of what they did. They brought in a lot of delegates, who travelled around the country having a good time. Some gentlemen with a little pull would get appointed immigration agent and be given a trip for the good of his health to the United States, and there he would see some of his friends and take them junketting through this country at the country's expense. Then they went away and that was the last we saw of them. Another class of settlers which these hon. gentlemen brought in was a class of Frenchmen from old France. They are from Paris, the most of them—boot and shoemakers, tailors and all kinds of tradesmen, including a good quantity of cooks. They were settled on some lands, and they knew so little about farming that they planted grain with a pick axe. If that is the best style of settler the late Government brought in, I would much rather have the Galicians.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What about the Jews?

Mr. DAVIS. We have only two or three in my district, the majority went up to Calgary. I would rather have the Galicians than those who plant grain with a pick axe. However, I think good progress has been made this year. Between 12,000 and 15,000 immigrants have gone into the North-west this year, and before the fall we will probably have as many more. I am sure the Minister of the Interior is doing all he can to settle the country, and so far he has been very successful.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) who has just sat down was very pointed in his objection to the removal of people from one part of Canada to another as not being good policy. He has also told us a great deal of the progress and prosperity of the German settlement at Rosstown, but he forgot to tell us that the Mennonites of this settlement came from the constituency of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), the case proving my theory that that class of people do make the best settlers.

Mr. DAVIS. In reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) I may say that I believe a few of these Mennonites did come from Lisgar, but the majority came direct from Russia.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. This question of immigration is a very important one in Manitoba and the North-west, and I think every credit should be given to the present Minister of the Interior for what he has done to promote immigration to our country. I was somewhat amused at the remarks of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) We have heard a good deal from that hon. gentleman this session about Edmonton and the Edmonton district, and I hope that the hon. gentleman will live long to tell us about the beauties of his district. But he unconsciously perhaps rather gave that district away when he said that agriculturists were not wanted there, that the very class of people we desire to come into Manitoba and the North-west, the people who can go on the land, who will join the great army of producers who support us all, are not wanted there. That is another argument against the policy pursued by the late Government of bringing people in and putting them in far-distant districts where the country is new and where there are not markets offering such advantages as are to be found in Manitoba and many parts of the North-west Territories. In Manitoba we hire agricultural labourers, and we can take any number of Galicians and furnish them with employment, because we have people who are capable of paying wages; people who have succeeded in agriculture; who are settlers in every sense of the word—they have settled on the land and they can settle their wages bills.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rutherford) agree with the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) in his opinion of Frenchmen.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. In my opinion the hon. member for Saskatchewan is quite right. He referred to the fact that these people came from the city of Paris. I do not care what city they came from, whether it be Paris, London, Dublin or Glasgow, we do not want them in the Northwest. We want people who will cultivate the soil and become good farmers. I might say that it is my experience, after many years' residence in that country, and I think my statement will be endorsed by every one who has observed the progress of the country, that every man who has received an agricultural training, and is capable of working and economizing, can go into any portion of that country where he is within the reach of a reliable market and can make his way with his own two hands and nothing else. There is no country in the world where the poor man who desires to work and is industrious and economical can succeed so well as he can in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories.

Now, with reference to the Galicians, I wish to say a few words. When I first saw these people I was not favourably impressed with them. I do not think that any one would be favourably impressed with people who have come across in an immigrant ship and an immigrant car, seeing them near the end of their journey. Their costume is peculiar and their appearance strange. But one thing notable about them is that they have very fine countenances. They are intelligent-looking people, and, after only a few months' residence in the country, it is wonderful to see the change in their dress and customs. I took the trouble to go up twice to the Dauphin settlement and look at these people. I found they were getting along well. They were able to adapt themselves to the circumstances of the country much better than does the average immigrant that we get from Great Britain. One thing they understand clearly, that it is necessary to keep warm in winter. They build their houses warm and comfortable. They are not paupers. There may be some paupers among them, I suppose, but the majority of them have some money. They are getting along well. They are very industrious, and I have every reason to believe that they will continue so. I am sorry that the hon. member for Alberta has deemed it his duty to give his district such a bad name, although we have heard a great deal in praise of it from him during the session.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to reply to the Finance Minister, who referred to the Auditor General's Report of 1885. I have turned it up here and I find I am correct in my statement that there has been an innovation. In 1895, the staff, consisting of nine men, were supplied with a uniform suit. In 1897, this economical Government increased the staff to fourteen, and not only furnished them with a uniform suit, but two pairs of boots and rubber coats. But in 1895 you cannot find a pair of rubber boots or leather boots.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I found the rubber boots.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to give a short item of the report of the Minister of the Interior in support of what I said in regard to these Galicians. He speaks of them as Ruthenians. He says:

A number of settlers from Austria, called Ruthenians, have come out recently, some at the instances of Professor Oleskow, but many on their own account. They appear to be closely allied with the Galicians, several parties of whom from time to time arrive here. They speak a language difficult to interpret, very few strangers having heard it. Their circumstances are poor, many being entirely without means. A number arrived here after winter had set in, and, as it was impossible to send them away from the immigration building in a perfectly destitute condition, it devolves upon the department to accommodate and feed a few of them until the spring, or until they can be otherwise provided for. This is accordingly being done, and the cost is but trifling. This, however, is a condition which was never contemplated, and steps should be taken to prevent its occurring again. Our agents at points of embarkation should be instructed to watch for any contemplated movement on the part of the Ruthenians, and be empowered to prevent them from coming unless provided with the necessary funds to carry them over at least a year or two.

That is the report of his own agent, and I think it justifies everything I said with regard to it.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to refer to what was said by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy). He tried to make capital out of the fact that I said something about French immigration into my district. As I understood him, he thought to make out that I brought nationality into the question. I was not even thinking about nationality. I merely said that these people were from Paris, and I would rather have a Galician, because he is a farmer, than a man who knows nothing about farming. We have some farmers from old France, and they are good farmers, as good as can be had in any place. What we want in the Northwest Territories is not cooks or tailors or anything of that kind, but farmers, whether they come from France, Germany or Russia.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) saw fit to put words into my mouth that I did not use. He intimated that I had said it was not desirable for agriculturists to come to Edmonton. The idea I wished to convey was that it was not desirable for pauper agricultural labourers to come to that district. We want agriculturists, but we want those who are able to employ labourers, not those who are only seeking employment for their labour. If there is employment for the Galicians in the constituency of Macdonald, the hon. gentleman should put in a petition and have them dumped off here. I merely ask that they be not sent to a place where they cannot all get employment, and where they crowd out other men who need employment.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not say anything against the Galicians; I complained of the disproportion between the Galician immigration and the immigration from Scotland, Ireland and England. Can the hon. gentleman say what proportion the Galician immigration bears to the immigration from the United Kingdom?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Of the 15,605 entering Manitoba and the North-west Territories as agricultural settlers who have reported to our officers, 1,372 were Galicians. The hon. gentleman will remember that I only started to work at the immigration branch about the 1st of January last year, and the result of that work would not manifest itself much until the beginning of this year.

Mr. DAVIN. How is the rest of the 15,000 made up?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not got all the nationalities divided, but from England we had 1,147 up to the 30th of April, during the first three months of this year; 70 Irish, 203 Scotch, 293 Germans. The balance of the 15,000, with the exception of the Galicians, were not grouped. 164 came from Scandinavia and a large number from the United States.

Mr. DAVIN. As regards immigration from the United States, the more we get of it the better it will be for the country. Any that we have had, both under the late Government and since this Government came into power, have been perfectly satisfactory. But it seems to me the personnel of his staff in the United States is open to the criticism that there is an element of favouritism in it. Now, I want to ask the hon. gentleman about his Canadian agents. What about the agent, R. L. Alexander, at Calgary?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have forgotten about him.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. gentleman no sooner came into office than he dismissed him.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I remember distinctly answering the hon. gentleman last session about that. I recommend him to look up my answer in the "Hansard."

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. DAVIN. The answer was to the effect that his services had been dispensed with, and we got no reason whatever.

Mr. SPROULE. What kind of literature is the hon. gentleman distributing, and in what countries?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I hope the hon. gentleman will spare me from giving a description of the immigration pamphlets. I will send a sample of each one to the hon. gentleman in the morning.

Mr. SPROULE. Could he give us an approximate idea of what kind of pamphlets they are distributing?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman has seen the hand-book, surely. We take the portion of the hand-book which relates to the western portion of the country, and circulate that. Our method in the western states is simply this. We advertise in the newspapers, and that secures communications from persons who desire to settle here. Then communication is opened with the department here, and we send our pamphlets to the addresses furnished by the outside agents. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the exact cost for printing and advertising. The printing is done in the Bureau here. In England it is done through the High Commissioner's office, and this year the estimate is $10,000.

Survey of Indian*reserves..... $500

Mr. DAVIN. When the Indian Bill was before the House on the second reading, I asked some questions about the management of the Crooked Lake Indians, and the reason for removing the Indian Commissioner's Office from Regina to Winnipeg, or from a central point in the Territories to Winnipeg. The only reason the Minister gave was that Mr. Forget said that he would rather go to Winnipeg. My information is that he did not recommend that his office be changed to Winnipeg, but he wanted to be removed to Ottawa. I make the statement now that I am fully convinced Mr. Forget recommended that he and his office be removed to Ottawa, and he expected to be removed here. There is no logical ground for removing the Indian Commissioner from the centre of the North-west Territories, where almost all the treaties have been made, to Winnipeg, where there is only one and a half treaty. Any one looking at the map will see that there are about six and a half treaties in the Territories compared with one and a half and two treaties in Manitoba. The majority of the treaties are in the Territories, and it is well known that Indians require to be brought into contact with what they call the head man. They were accustomed to come to the Indian Commissioner's Office and meet him, and had a good effect on the government of these wild tribes. Crooked Lake reserve is in a wretched condition. During 1897 those Indians who were accustomed to raise crops that took prizes at the exhibition and who had progressed as farmers, became demoralized, no longer do any farming and will not stay on the reserves, all because of the changes made in the personnel and management by Mr. Forget. Any one who will read Mr. Forget's report, embodied in the Indian report, will find that he admits that things are not in a satisfactory condition.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
That the crops were not good.

Mr. DAVIN. I have a letter from a person who is thoroughly acquainted with Indian matters, and he says he never saw the Indians so discontented. In his letter he says:

I must say that I never saw the Indians in such an unsettled state of mind, and yet I hear Mr. Sifton say everything is going on well and the Indians were never so contented.

The Indians have been looking out for Mr. Forget this whole winter, and no sign of him yet.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
I hope they are not going to tomahawk him.

Mr. DAVIN. They may even do that, but I would not like to have him scalped.

He has promised to go round and see the Indians on the reserve; but he is not yet here. I am of opinion that a great many will leave for Turtle Mountain and Montana, and many of the Indians brought over from Montana have returned.

Mr. COWAN. I rise to a point of order, and ask that the document be laid on the Table.

Mr. DAVIN. There is something the matter with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan). The state of the Crooked Lake reserve now is even worse than is described in this letter. There was a very prominent gentleman from Grenfell here a while ago and he told me it was impossible to exaggerate the demoralization on these reserves. I repeat what I said on a previous occasion, that it is not this year you will find the result of the policy of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton), but it is next year or the year after you will know the fruit it will bear. I should like to have from the Minister a statement as to why it is that Mr. Forget has been placed in Winnipeg. The theory in the west is that the Minister was about to act on Mr. Forget's advice and was going to bring Mr. Forget to Ottawa, but having previously moved the land office from Winnipeg, he found he had brought a hornet's nest around his head and in order to soothe them he gave them the commissioner's office and located Mr. Forget at Winnipeg, greatly to his chagrin.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) is entitled to the information he asks for. To relieve his anxiety in regard to my comfort, I may tell him that I am not subject to any criticism for the removal of the commissioner's office, but Winnipeg being a little larger than Regina it does not attach much importance to the presence or absence of an officer of that kind. I cannot say that Mr. Forget did not suggest that he should come to Ottawa. I had a great many conversations with Mr. Forget and I would not be prepared to say that he did not suggest it, but I do not remember that he ever made that suggestion to me. Whether he suggested it or not I never had the slightest idea of removing Mr. Forget to Ottawa. He was removed to Winnipeg precisely for the reason I gave the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) before, namely, because he could do his work much better from that point. I received a letter similar to that which the hon. gentleman read, complaining of the state of the Crooked Lake Reserve, and I took occasion to have a careful examination into the matter, the result of which was that it was found there was nothing whatever in the statement. I think I can produce that report of the state of the reserve which was made in consequence of the inquiry. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) will find that the gentleman who inaugurated the proceedings with regard to the Crooked Lake Reserve is not a political friend of his, but rather a political friend of mine whose hopes of securing an office on that reserve did not materialize. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) will remember that a few days ago he was holding me responsible for crops which were not good on the Crooked Lake Reserve last year, and he held me responsible for that in consequence of changes which I made on the 1st of July. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has been thinking the matter over since and seeing that I could not be responsible for the condition of the crop last year he takes to prognosticating what is going to happen next year. I submit that neither he nor I can tell what the crops are going to be next year.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has taken exception to the commissioner's office being removed from Regina to Winnipeg, and the ground of his objection is that if the commissioner's office were at Regina in the centre of the Indian reservations, the Indians could see the commissioner more frequently. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin) has lived many years in the Territories and he is well aware of the fact that not one out of a hundred Indians ever see the commissioner more than once in two years, no matter whether he lives at Regina or Winnipeg. The hon. gentleman talks about the demoralization on the Indian reserves, but I am quite sure he will admit that the changes made at Battleford and elsewhere have been beneficial. The last year the old officials were there four or five hundred head of cattle died.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a point of order. I think the discussion should be confined to the item.

Mr. McCLURE. I should like to inquire of the Minister whether this item covers anything for new schools in the province of Nova Scotia, and if not, I wish to press upon him the importance of making early provision for the establishment of some new Indian schools in that province? The Indians of the North-west are of immense importance, but there are Indian reserves in the province of Nova Scotia where there are large numbers of children, sufficient to maintain a school, and no school has been established, except those which are established by charitable funds. I wish to impress upon the Minister that if this item does not cover money to establish schools there, he should make that provision at an early day.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The item does not contain any appropriation for the purpose to which the hon. gentleman has referred. There is considerable difficulty attending the working of the Indian business in the province of Nova Scotia; but it has not been the policy of the department in past years to spend a large amount of money on Indian education there, and I have simply followed that policy. I shall be very happy to discuss the matter with the hon. gentleman, with the hope of possibly doing something next year; but at present I am not able to say anything more definite.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister to a case which I think has been before him for some months, with reference to an Indian woman who is a patient in the insane asylum in the county of Cape Breton. The authorities of the county have been called upon to pay the cost of keeping her, and I understand that a claim has been sent by the municipality to the department, and I want to know what the Minister proposes to do with that claim.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not at this moment remember the details of the claim.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I called the hon. gentleman's attention to it by letter, and he simply acknowledged my letter, and said that the matter was before the department. It is the duty of the department to support the Indians, and this patient should not be a burden on the municipality. I maintain that the Minister ought to give the information to the House.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I had entirely forgotten the particular circumstance to which the hon. gentleman referred, and he would probably admit that that is not at all remarkable; but my impression is that it has not been the custom of the department to pay for the keep of Indians under such circumstances. My impression is that I decided against the payment of the claim; but I will look up the papers in connection with it and give the hon. gentleman the decision arrived at, and the ground on which I came to the decision.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Does the Minister pretend to say that an insane Indian pauper becomes a charge to a municipality or county or to any other authority outside of the department of the Interior?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not remember the exact circumstances of the case or the decision I gave, and the hon. gentleman will have to wait until I have an opportunity of looking up the papers I cannot compel my memory to recall it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It is not necessary that the individual case should be remembered at all. The principle is the same. If an Indian becomes an insane pauper, I want to know if the rule of the department is to provide for that Indian pauper. Here is a principle involved, and I want to know whether it is the obligation of the Department of Indian Affairs to maintain and support that Indian pauper, or is it the obligation of the municipality or county?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman has asked me a fair question, and I will give him my answer. I think it is the obligation of the municipality.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I beg to differ with the hon. Minister. Why does the Department of Indian Affairs undertake to provide for those Indians who are unable to provide for themselves? It is in duty bound to do so.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not at all. I would refer my hon. friend to the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), who has a large Indian settlement in his constituency, and who I am sure can give the information.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They are not insane Indians there.

Mr. McDOUGALL. This is the case of an insane Indian pauper, and I maintain that it is the duty of the Department of Indian Affairs to look after that Indian pauper.

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). I would ask the hon. gentleman if he is sure the woman is an Indian. I am told they are not pure Indians down there, but half-breeds, and therefore they would not be treated as Indians.

Mr. McDOUGALL. My impression is that if the hon. gentleman was down there he could not tell the difference.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I want to controvert the statement of the hon. member for Haldimand that the Indians in his constituency are not insane. I think they are all insane, because they voted for him.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), in coming to the defence of the Minister, said that I could not deny that the dismissals made in the Indian Department in the north had been beneficial. I utterly deny that anything like propriety has been followed—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We are now discussing the items concerning the Indians in the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario. We shall come later on to the item for the Indians of the North-west Territories.

Mr. DAVIN. Have we not the right to deal with the whole question on any item?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When there is an item providing for the appropriation of certain moneys for a certain part of the country, I think we must wait until we reach that item before discussing it.

Mr. DAVIN. Why did you not call my hon. friend from Saskatchewan to order?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I did.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I suppose the hon. Minister of the Interior will look into the case suggested by my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall).

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman put the question as to whether there was an obligation on the part of the department, and I said I did not think there was. If it came to a matter of law, the municipality is liable, but not the department; but as a general rule, where there is sufficient appropriation for it, the department has provided for a case of that kind.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Why does not the hon. gentleman provide a sum in the Estimates now for that purpose?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is a provision in the Estimates of this year for the relief of that class; and if the case mentioned was brought before the department and laid over, it was laid over because there were no funds, but it will be considered first at the commencement of this year.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am quite satisfied with that statement.

Mr. SPROULE. I see an item here for the removal of a lot of Indians from Oka to Gibson, $200. There has been an item every year for years in the Estimates with regard to the removal of these Indians. When does the hon. gentleman expect to have the last of them removed, and how much will it cost?

Mr. MONTAGUE. That was fully explained last year by the present Minister of the Cabinet without portfolio (Mr. Dobbell).

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think the movement is almost stopped now. It is very unlikely that any more will go up.

Mr. SPROULE. I heard a year or two ago that they were coming back to Oka as fast as you took them out. At the rate they are moving back and forth, this item is likely to appear in the Estimates for twenty years longer.

Department of Indian Affairs—Manitoba and North-west Territories $729,052

Mr. DAVIN. I want to say with reference to the dismissals on the Saskatchewan, that it is quite clear they were dictated by partisan views. Take the dismissal of Williams, a thoroughly loyal man, and his replacement by a rebel. Nolin and Lepine were two rebels. Lepine is now dead, and the Minister was so ashamed after the appointment had been made—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No such appointment was made.

Mr. DAVIN. It was made, and after the papers criticised it, it was undone again.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It was not done at all.

Mr. DAVIN. P. J. Williams was the son of an Ontario farmer and a loyal man, who had served his country and the Indian Department well. Danna is employed still by the Indian Department, although he is at present under one of the greatest criminal charges that can be brought against a man. If we go to the west, you will find that Grasse was dismissed from the Indian Department service, although an efficient man. All over the territory we have dismissals from the Indian Department which cannot be justified, and were clearly dictated by the view as to the political complexion of the parties taken by Mr. Forget. Take a very cruel case, the dismissal of Dr. Orton; could the Minister defend that? When he was asked why Dr. Orton was dismissed, he answered that he was not competent.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I said that he was unfit for the office, and I say so now.

Mr. DAVIN. So far as I ever heard, he was a most efficient medical man.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not say anything against his medical skill, but I say that he was unfit for the office.

Mr. DAVIN. I was told that he is an efficient medical officer and did his work well. Take the employment of Dr. Edwards, in Regina. Personally I have the greatest respect for him and I have no desire to criticise him personally, but he is employed at a large salary to do the work that was being done by two or three medical men, at much less cost and more efficiently than it could be done by one man. You had Dr. Cotton in the jail at Regina and Dr. Willoughby at the industrial school at very small salaries compared with the salary of Dr. Edwards. The only reason that I can think of for the dismissal of these gentlemen is that they were Conservatives. And the Government wanted to put in a Liberal. That is, of course, contrary to the promise made to us that none but offensive partisans would be dismissed. These men were not offensive partisans. I would like to know also why Grasse was dismissed. He was on the Stony Indian reserve forty miles west of Calgary. There was no charge against him. I should like to know also why common courtesy was not shown to Dr. Orton and, if he had to be dismissed, why he was not treated according to precedent. He complains bitterly of the way he was treated. And why is Daunais kept in the employ of the department with a criminal charge hanging over his head?

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). In reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davin)—

Mr. DAVIN. I want a reply from the Minister of the Interior—

Mr. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). I wish to say a word about the dismissals in the Saskatchewan district. The hon. gentleman mentions Mr. Williams. The only reason the hon. gentleman complains of this dismissal is that Mr. Williams was, he says, a loyal man. He did not say when he was loyal or how. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is aware that for some time Mr. Williams was totally unfit to perform the duties of his office, being paralyzed. About 400 head of cattle died on the reserve during the last winter he was in the employ of the department causing a loss to this country of about $12,000. I do not blame Mr. Williams, as he was not able to discharge the duties of his office. A five young man was appointed in his place, one thoroughly acquainted with Indian work and he has given a good account of himself. In the Battleford district, under the former Administration, there were eight farm instructors and they cost the country about $60 a month each. Four of these have been dismissed, and the other four are doing the work and doing it more effectively. Then, take Duck Lake. There was a clerk there costing the country something like $1,000. His services has been dispensed with and the agent has to do the work. The agents' salary has been reduced by $300. Taking the three districts, you will find a saving of over $5,000 a year by the changes made by the Minister, and the work is being done much better. There is one item I would like to have stand over, and that is the item for industrial schools.

Mr. DAVIN.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it on concurrence.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice in item 212, $5,000 is charged for travelling expenses, but there is no similar charge for the other provinces.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount of travelling to be done in British Columbia is very great. We have no inspectors in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, so there is no charge for travelling expenses. In Manitoba and the North-west Territories the travelling is charged to general expenses, and as to Ontario and Quebec, the hon. gentleman will find under item 213 two inspectors, one of Indian agencies and one of timber, and travelling expenses of these officers.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. Minister has not given me an answer with respect to Dr. Cotton and Dr. Willoughby.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The doctor who formerly attended the Muscowpetung agency and who was, under the new arrangement given the File Hills and Touchwood agencies, received a salary of $600 a year, and the medical attendance of the Assiniboine agency was given, on call, by a doctor who was paid for each visit. The expenditure in the Assiniboine agency varied. Up to April, 1896, Dr. Willoughby was paid for actual attendance on the pupils of the school. At the rate for which he was so paid for the months of January, February and March, 1896, his services would have called for a payment of $744. An arrangement was made by the department which had nothing of a permanent nature in it, under which he did the work for $40 a month. This brought the medical work of the school and the two agencies to a little under $1,200. The salary Dr. Edwards is getting is $1,400, but he is required in return for that to make regular visits instead of waiting until he is called for. It is for that purpose that he was given a larger salary.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not about time we were closing business for to-night?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Let us get through the main estimates. We must get through some time. There is nothing here of a controversial nature, nothing calling for discussion.

North-west Mounted Police..... $353,759

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the policy of the Government was to reduce the force. What is the full strength of the force now, and what is the policy of the Government with regard to keeping that up in Manitoba and the North-west Territories?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The policy of the Government is the same as that announced last year, that is, to keep 450 or 500 in the North-west Territories against the 750 that were kept there before. The balance of the force is going to be employed in the Yukon territory.

Government of North-west Territories....$357,859

Mr. DAVIN. In regard to that I want to point out that the time has come when we should no longer have to send our insane patients to the Manitoba side. We ought to have a vote in the Estimates for the local government so that they can have care of our own patients. The expense is too great to send them from the Territories to Manitoba, and it is altogether an unbusiness like way of doing it. I would ask the Minister if he is going to drop the arrangement and give a grant to the local government for the purpose of dealing with our insane patients?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It would be impossible for me to make a positive statement of the intention of the Government. We recognize that the existing arrangement is not a permanent one. The people of the Territories cannot be expected to be kept in the same position as they are now in. It is a matter we will have to deal with at an early date.

Mr. SPROULE. We want to know something about the number of schools out there. I see there are $282,000 for schools. How many of these schools are you keeping up, and what is the number of children in each of them?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is in the nature of a subsidy to the Territorial Government, it is paid to them, and they distribute it. It is just like a provincial subsidy.

Mr. SPROULE. You do not have anything to do with the schools?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Nothing to do with them at all.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the present party came into power I tried to impress upon their predecessors that the amount put into the Estimates for the Government of the Territories is quite inadequate.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman ought to give us credit for increasing it.

Mr. DAVIN. In fact, at present, on the basis of the subsidies to the provinces, calculating what the Territories should have had from the beginning, there is owing to the Territories at this moment by the Dominion Government a million dollars.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Every province makes the same claim.

Mr. DAVIN. I urge on the Minister that any work that can be properly done by the Government of the Territories can be better done by that Government than by this Government. The Minister, I believe, realizes that. Therefore, I hope he will, as soon as he can form a calculation as to what the Territories are entitled to on the same basis as the subsidies given to the provinces, put the young giant of the North-west Territories into his true position, and give him his freedom in the true sense.

Services of North-west Mounted Police in the Yukon Provisional District.. $346,250

Mr. DAVIN. This is a very large sum, though I suppose it is not in excess of what it should be.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This sum is made up by a calculation of the Controller of the Mounted Police as to how much it will take to convey, pay and maintain 250 men there. He has figured that out mathematically, as carefully as he can.

Dominion Lands—Chargeable to income $94,233 25

Mr. DAVIN. I want to ask the Minister concerning his treatment of certain officials in the land offices of the North-west Territories, and amongst others, to call his attention to the case of Dobbin, of Regina. In regard to John Dobbin, I made a strong appeal to the Minister, and not only did I, but I believe the Liberals appealed to the Minister in his favour. Here was a man who had served the country well, against whom no charge of being an offensive partisan could be made, and yet this man was dismissed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Our unfortunate friend, Mr. Dobbin, had his services dispensed with because it was evident he had taken a very active and effective part in assisting to elect my hon. friend. When his case was up he had so many friends on the other side of the House that I was quite sure the ground upon which I had removed him was well taken. I did investigate his case, and came to the conclusion that the charge was well founded, that he had taken a very active part in promoting the hon. gentleman's election. He was removed for that purpose, and I did not see any ground for reinstating him.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I suppose the Government appointed a gentleman who had not taken any part in the elections.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister has reorganized the Interior Department. Can he furnish information with respect to the number of employees in the commissioner's office and their salaries?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The commissioner's office at Winnipeg has been abolished.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the commissioner's salary?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. $3,200. We have abolished the office at Winnipeg and placed the commissioner in the inside service here.

Mr. DAVIN. Who is the commissioner?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Burgess was the commissioner. His place has not been filled yet.

Mr. SPROULE. Do the Government intend to appoint another commissioner?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Who is the superintendent of mines?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The same officer, Mr. Pierce.

Mr. DAVIN. I desire to ask about the dismissal of John Walker, caretaker of the basin at Banff?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I consulted with the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) about this staff, and I think, though I cannot say positively, that he informed me that Walker was not an efficient officer and recommended his removal.

Mr. DAVIN. The information I have is that the member for Alberta did not want the man dismissed. Here is a letter signed by Frank Oliver. It is dated Edmonton, Alberta, July 13th, 1897. It is addressed to Mr. John Walker, and is as follows:—

Your letter of 6th instant to hand. I very much regret to have lost your good opinion, but I beg to remind you that an investigation was held into park affairs generally, as it was thought desirable to make certain changes. I can easily understand that those changes do not meet the approval of the parties affected; nevertheless, I hope they will be for the better.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I now recollect that Mr. Stephenson was sent to the park to make an investigation, and he reported at considerable length. I went over his report with the member for Alberta and certain changes were decided on and Walker's removal was one of them.

Mr. DAVIN. Here is another letter dated November 23rd, 1896, from Mr. Oliver. It is as follows:—

I do not expect that Walker will be interfered with unless the charges can be substantiated, or unless some change is made in the department of the park. I am glad you gave the information in regard to Walker's predecessor.

In the investigation which took place there was nothing proved against Walker, who was an innocent and an efficient man. I have here a copy of the petition that was forwarded to the Minister. It asks for his reinstatement, the petitioners stating that they were unaware of the cause of the dismissal, that during the whole time Walker had been in his position he had been a most courteous official and had rendered good service, that he had not shown the slightest feeling of partisanship in any election contest, and that the petitioners comprised both parties in Federal politics, and they submitted that Walker should not be dismissed without charges being made and investigated.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman knows that in cases of this kind everybody signs petitions.

Mr. DAVIN. I cannot take such a view of my fellow-citizens.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have had a petition in a certain matter signed by a prominent gentleman, and I shortly afterwards received a counter petition signed by the same name.

Mr. DAVIN. That is a joke. Here you have three pages of names certifying that this man was a good officer and never took part in politics.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There was no question of partisanship; the officer was inefficient in the discharge of his duty.

Surveys $150,000

Mr. SPROULE. In what localities are the surveys to be carried out this year, and how many survey parties are going out?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We will have thirty or thirty-five parties out. About $21,000 will be expended in the Yukon district, about $6,000 in British Columbia, and the remainder in Manitoba and the North-west, where we try to keep a little ahead of settlement.

Expenses of delimiting the boundary between Canada and the United States. $25,000

Mr. SPROULE. What progress are they making with regard to this?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have taken this appropriation from year to year, but during the last three or four years only a small proportion of it has been expended. It is possible that during the coming year the whole vote may be expended, in view of the fact that an arrangement is going to be made to endeavour to bring the matter to a conclusion.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is one of the matters to be referred to the commission?

Mr. SPROULE. Is this for the commission, or have you surveyors delimiting the boundary in the Yukon district or what?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It has nothing to do with the Yukon district. There are several points in the maritime provinces and British Columbia where the boundary line has not been fully settled.

Cost of arbitration respecting the accounts between the Dominion of Canada and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec (payments on account of services rendered may be made to members of the civil service, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act)..... $5,000

Mr. SPROULE. In what state of advancement is the settlement of these accounts to-day.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The matter has made some slow progress and the best sign of its coming to an end is that the appropriation this time is smaller than usual.

Mr. SPROULE. That is practically no information at all. We have known for years that the progress is very slow. The provinces are very anxious about this matter, especially the province of Ontario, and they look to the explanations given during the voting of these items for information as to what position they stand.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the provinces quite understand that the process is a very slow one.

Resolutions to be reported.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I understand the Minister of Finance intends to take up the resolution respecting the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal then some small Bills, and then Supply.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 2.20 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 3rd June, 1898

PRAYERS.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

MANITOBA DEBT ACCOUNT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolutions:—

1. That it is expedient to provide that the sum of two hundred and eighty-four thousand four hundred and fifty-six dollars and forty-seven cents, being the cost of the erection and furnishing of the Legislative Buildings and Government House at Winnipeg, which sum was charged against the "Province of Manitoba Debt Account," may, on the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, be credited to the said account, and that the interest payable to the said province on the said first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, on the balance at the credit of said Debt Account may be calculated on the balance at the credit of said account after the said sum of two hundred and eighty-four thousand four hundred and fifty-six dollars and forty-seven cents has been credited thereto as above provided.

2. That it is expedient to provide that the Government of Canada may, on the said first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, pay to the Government of the province of Manitoba the sum of two hundred and forty-six thousand four hundred and forty-five dollars and forty-four cents, being the sum of the amounts which would have been payable to the province of Manitoba by the Dominion, in excess of the amounts actually paid as interest from time to time payable on the balances at the credit of the said Debt Account, had the cost of the erection and furnishing of the said legislative buildings and Government House at Winnipeg not been charged against the said Debt Account, together with interest at the rate of five per centum per annum on each of the amounts so payable to the said first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight.

Motion agreed to.

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved:

That when this House adjourns at the second sitting on Friday next, it shall stand adjourned until Saturday at eleven a.m., and that there shall be two sittings on that day, one from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., and the other from 3 p.m. until the adjournment of the House, and that Government Orders shall have precedence at such sittings.

Motion agreed to.

MONTREAL HARBOUR WORKS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider a certain proposed resolution respecting an advance to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal in addition to the amount authorized by Chapter 10 of the Statutes of 1896 (first session).

Mr. FOSTER. I think it would be well to have some explanation with respect to this resolution, and as fully as possible. Two millions is a large amount of money; it is a loan, but there are consequential considerations which I think make it necessary we should know very clearly what is proposed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The importance of providing adequate facilities for handling the great volume of trade which passes through the port of Montreal is one which will be generally recognized. It is the great summer port of the Dominion, and a very large part of the trade of the country passes through it. I am glad to know that with the improvement of trade, a still greater future is before it, and without dwelling on this point, the House will no doubt agree that whatever is reasonable and necessary to provide for harbour facilities should receive the support and assistance of the House. The form in which Parliament has hitherto granted assistance to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal has been by lending its credit so as to enable the commissioners to borrow money on terms more favourable than they otherwise would obtain. In that way substantial help has been given to Montreal while not imposing any burdens on the Dominion treasury. Two years ago an Act was passed appropriating for this work $2,000,000 as a loan to the Harbour Commissioners at 3½ per cent interest. A considerable portion of that loan was applied to the payment of outstanding indebtedness, part to the Dominion Government itself; altogether, $1,190,000 of the $2,000,000 has been drawn, and there is at this moment another sum of $100,000 which has been authorized, and so practically we have $700,000 left of the $2,000,000 authorized in 1896. That sum is, of course, entirely inadequate to provide for the increasing trade of the port; indeed, at the time the loan of $2,000,000 was agreed to, it was generally understood that it was only partial, and that probably it would be necessary at no distant date to have the amount enlarged. It is proposed by this resolution to authorize a loan of $2,000,000, and in this case, owing to the improvement in Canadian credit, and the better opportunity afforded for providing money without imposing any burdens on the treasury, we think we can do a little better by fixing a lower rate of interest, and therefore we propose that this loan to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal be made at 3 per cent, the Government receiving debentures by way of security for the amount. The resolution speaks only of the amount to be loaned, that being necessary as a basis for a Bill; but when the House comes to deal with the matter by Bill provision will be made as to the manner in which this money shall be expended. It will provide that out of the $2,000,000 authorized by this resolution, $750,000 shall be applied to works at what is called the east end of Montreal, including the construction of a dry dock. The remainder is to be applied to the construction, as far as it may go, of the works on the plan which has already occupied very much attention in Montreal, and which is described and known as plan 12a, which has received the approbation of the mercantile community there. The only additional fact which I need state is that all the works carried out under the operation of this resolution and the Bill founded on it will have to be constructed ted to the Minister of Public Works and approved by him, as under the Act of 1896. With these brief explanations, I think the matter may be placed before the House, and if any information as regards details of the proposed work is required, the Minister of Public Works, who has given great attention to the subject, will be glad to furnish it.

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to ask if the Government proposes to attach a condition to the loan and to thus far restrict the Harbour Commissioners? I think it is necessary at this time that we should be given some details regarding that part of the work for which $750,000 is kept out; what it is, what has been determined in regard to it and the plans?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). In 1890, plan known as No. 6 was approved by the Department of Public Works. There had been some hesitation and delay before approval was given. A commission composed of engineers had been appointed, but ultimately they came to the conclusion that this plan was the best, and it was approved. Speaking generally, it consisted of building what are commonly called the guard pier, in widening the shore wharf and erecting four wharfs varying from 1,200 to 1,500 feet in length. Up to date, plan No. 6 has not been carried out; although that plan was approved in 1890, nothing has been done, except the building of the guard pier. I call the attention of the ex-Minister of Finance to this matter because, after discussion, I think we will all agree that the policy now being followed, which is only the consequence of what had been practically decided upon by the late Administration, is the proper one. Plan No. 6, I say, was approved in 1890.

Mr. FOSTER. Was it not in 1896?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, it was in 1890. Plan 6 was approved; but instead of going on with these plans, the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal went on spending about a million dollars on the Windmill basin, an expenditure which was never authorized. Those who say that plan No. 6 was the best and that it was urgent, that it should be proceeded with, cannot very successfully explain the delay which has taken place. However, I will not dwell at any length on that point. Sufficient it is for me to remind the House and the country of the admitted fact that the port of Montreal is one of the worst equipped harbours in the world. Every one who has travelled is unfortunately obliged to recognize that fact, and yet the harbour of Montreal is the most important harbour in Canada. When I took office I found myself in this shape. In 1896 the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal had come to the Government and had received from them an authorization for an advance of two million dollars;

one million to be applied to pay their floating debt and the other million dollars to be applied to carry out works with the approval and consent of the Minister of Public Works. The Windmill basin had been begun and was so far advanced that although it had never been authorized by the Government I thought it would have been a very bad policy to stop that work, and so I allowed the Commissioners to go on. I may say here that in 1894 the Harbour Commissioners had applied for an advance of $4,000,000, and I have got in my hand an extract from the minutes of the Harbour Commissioners' meeting which refers to that application, and which reads as follows:—

Extracts from the minutes of a monthly meeting of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, held on the 10th April, 1894.

Present:—Henry Bulmer, Esq., Chairman; Hon. Edward Murphy, Victor Hudon, Richard White, W. W. Ogilvie, N. A. Hurteau, Esquires; J. O. Villeneuve, Esq., Mayor; C. H. Gould, L. E. Morin and Andrew Allan, Esquires.

The following motion was then made by Mr. Hurteau:

That in view of the rapidly growing trade of the harbour of Montreal and the imperative necessity for providing for its certain early extension and in view of the financial position of this Board, as shown by the accompanying memoranda, and to enable the Commissioners to meet the obligations already assumed in the carrying out of the plan number 6, keeping faith with the city of Montreal, and to grant such facilities as will ensure the continued successful competition of Montreal with foreign ports by avoiding the possibility of additional charges upon the shipping and trade of the port, be it resolved:

That an application be made to the Governor in Council for such assistance as will enable the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal to secure, in addition to the $1,000,000 for which they have present authority, a further sum of $3,000,000 bearing interest at a rate not higher than 3½ per cent. This sum to be used during the next four years for the following improvements:—

$2,000,000 to complete the arrangements with the city of Montreal and sanctioned by the Governor in Council, and known as plan No. 6, with the proposed wharfs at Maisonneuve; $1,000,000 to build an inland basin at such place in the eastern end of the city as may, upon examination, be found most advantageous, and $1,000,000 to complete the basin at Windmill Point, and other parts of the harbour not included in plan No. 6.

That a committee consisting of the Chairman, the Mayor, W. W. Ogilvie, N. A. Hurteau, Richard White and any other member wishing to join, be named to proceed to Ottawa and urge upon the Government the granting of the assistance referred to in the foregoing resolution:

After consideration the resolution was carried on the understanding that the Commissioners' claim against the Government of $1,000,000 must not to be lost sight of, and that the increased expenditure involved would not cause the harbour dues to be increased.

That the chairman be requested to go to Ottawa and arrange for an interview between the Government and the deputation.

Certified a true extract.

(Sgd.) ALEXANDER ROBERTSON,
Secretary.

Now, Sir, the deputation appointed by this resolution came to Ottawa, and, as I have said, the Government did not see fit at the time to grant that application, and instead of granting them an advance of $4,000,000, they simply allowed them an advance of $2,000,000. Out of this $2,000,000, $1,000,000 went immediately to pay the floating debt of the Harbour Commissioners, and out of the last $1,000,000, as my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has stated, $300,000 has been employed to carry out works, but, I repeat, none of that money has been employed to carry out plan No. 6, with the exception of the guard pier. No wharf has been built, and the shore wharf has not been widened. Well, Sir, the Harbour Commissioners, in view of the increased trade that has come to us have again applied for assistance. We had a great deal of discussion as to the plans to be adopted, and I may say that I gave my best consideration to that important question. I did not act on my own judgment, for I am not an expert in harbour improvements, although I took the trouble to visit some American harbours, and although in the past I have visited some European harbours. But I took advice from the best available authorities, and last year when the manager of the Bristol docks came to Canada I had a great deal of intercourse with him, and visited the harbour in Montreal in his company. There was with us a gentleman whose name I forget for the moment, but who is the manager of one of the great Liverpool docks. I may say that the manager of the Bristol docks went so far as to call upon the Prime Minister with me and to beg him not to accept plan No. 6, as it had been accepted years ago, but to carry out a more modern plan. Let me remind the House that when plan No. 6 was prepared about ten years ago, the ships which were then visiting the harbour of Montreal were of a comparatively small size, ranging in capacity from 4,000 tons to 6,000 ton at the utmost. To-day there are vessels visiting the port of Montreal with a carrying capacity of between 10,000 and 12,000 tons. Circumstances have changed since. We are deepening our canals; we are every year improving the St. Lawrence channel, the carrying capacity of trans-Atlantic vessels is increasing every year, and consequently we have to grapple with quite a new condition of affairs, and that is the reason why plan No. 6 which, in the past, might have been a good plan would be a very bad plan to-day. The main features of plan No. 6 were long wharfs, 1,500 feet long and narrow basins 300 feet wide between long jetties 1,200 and 1,500 feet long. When our canals are deepened, and big ships from the ocean and big ships from the west come to Montreal to exchange their freight, it would be quite impossible for these big ships to move freely in those narrow basins. It must not be forgotten that a great part of the grain trade in Montreal will have to be handled with floating elevators, and between the docks the big ships I have spoken of and the elevators will have to be accommodated. That is the reason why, after having carefully considered and discussed the question, I made up my mind that plan No. 6 could not be carried out in the interest of Canada. Under plan No. 12a, instead of erecting four long piers, with narrow basins, we intend erecting three wharfs of a moderate length, with wide basins.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose my hon. friend means the Harbour Commissioners when he says we?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. I only say we, because I am obliged to give my assent to their plans. The exact dimensions of the wharfs, as shown on plan No. 12a, to which I have assented, are as follows:—The first wharf, near the entrance to the Lachine Canal, that is, 1,000 feet from the entrance, is 1,000 feet in length and 300 feet in width. The basin between this pier and the second pier will be 590 feet wide. The second wharf will be 1,020 feet long on one side and 980 feet wide on the other. Between this pier and the third pier, there will be a basin 570 feet wide. The third pier as shown on the plan would be 850 feet long on the inside and 800 feet long on the other side. I may say I intend again discussing the length of this pier with the Harbour Commissioners, for this reason, to which I call the attention of every man interested in the future of our trade. Between the end of the guard pier and the end of this pier, there would be an entrance of only 590 feet in width, which I think is not great enough. Between the Lachine Canal and Victoria pier, the last pier, there is a distance of 3,600 feet, and it is in that distance that the improvements as shown on plan No. 12a will be carried out. As to this plan, there will be no more difficulty. The question is finally settled, only this one point remaining in abeyance. The Harbour Commissioners will have to decide, with my approval, whether the piers will be high level or low level piers. My own personal opinion is that we should have low level piers, that is to say, a little higher than we have now. My opinion, backed I do not say by a majority of the Harbour Commissioners, but by a great many business men, is that if we erect in the centre of the harbour of Montreal high level piers, which will be 27½ feet above ordinary low water, there will be a great danger of driving away from that part of the harbour craft of a moderate size, and the commercial community of Montreal have no interest in doing that—very far from it. Still, I will not force my views on that point on the Harbour Commissioners. I am sure they will consider the matter with the utmost care.

Mr. BERGERON. May I ask my hon. friend one question? So far as low level is concerned, is there not something to be taken into consideration in connection with the loan of the city of Montreal?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. These works and the shore works might be built at a low level without interfering in any way with the protection works which will have to be built, simply as a parapet, on Commissioners' Street. The idea under these plans is, as I have said, to erect these works and at the same time to widen the shore wharfs. The present width of the shore wharfs varies from 100 feet to 40 feet. In other words, they do not give sufficient accommodation to the trade. Last year I saw with my own eyes freight from the west carted from cars at a cost of 40 and 50 cents a ton, because there was no accommodation on the wharfs. There were no tracks available and no handling facilities. We intend, then, to widen the shore wharfs to a width of 240 feet from one end to the other, so that we shall be in a position to equip these shore wharfs with railway tracks and all modern appliances, as we shall also equip the other wharfs. Then, instead of carting the freight from the cars to the ships, as we are doing to-day, at a great cost and to the great detriment of Montreal, we shall be able to load and unload directly from the cars to the ships and from the ships to the cars, as is done in every properly organized port in the world. Last year, in company with the chief engineer of my department, Mr. Coste, and a few friends, I visited the wharfs in the port of Boston, and I saw there a ship loading at one time hay, cattle, grain and general produce, because alongside of the wharf there was an elevator, near the wharf there were cattle yards, and the ship was directly connected by rails with the cars.

Well, we intend doing the same thing in Montreal. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) has asked why it was that in the Bill $750,000 is to be applied to works in the eastern part of the harbour. The Bill will also contain a provision that plan No. 12a be included, so that there may be equal justice to all. In other words, the proposal of the Government is this, that all the works necessary to equip the harbour of Montreal with modern equipments be carried out at the same time in the west and in the east. Plan No. 12a will be carried out immediately. I am anxious that the Harbour Commissioners should proceed at once with the work because we have lost too much time already, so that the Bill will contain provisions for the carrying out of plan No. 12a and also for future improvements. My hon. friend, the ex-Minister of Finance, no doubt will agree with me that when we ask that the port at the foot of the current be equipped immediately, we are following the only reasonable policy that can be followed at present. This part of the harbour is the most favourable for the locating of elevators. We cannot think of locating grain elevators in the centre of the harbour, and we intend to build one or two wharfs which shall be equipped with all modern appliances, and we expect that grain elevators will be built on the shore. There is a splendid site there to erect grain elevators. There will be plenty of water, with a little dredging, and we should mature some plan of equipping one or two wharfs in the eastern part of the harbour and placing the railway companies in the position to erect elevators there, and thus give to the grain trade a chance to settle in Montreal. What have we seen lately? For lack of accommodation in the harbour of Montreal, the Parry Sound and Arnprior Railway were obliged to locate their elevator at Coteau. Mr. Booth told me last year that if we would equip the harbour at Montreal, he would send his trains there, but that at present he cannot do so because there is no accommodation for such a trade. When our canals are deepened and the full swing of the grain trade will be in operation, I make this prophecy that we will ship from the port of Montreal 100,000,000 bushels of grain yearly. The St. Lawrence route is the shortest, and if we equip it in such a way that it will be the best, there is no reason why we should not handle an immense quantity of grain in Montreal. To-day we cannot handle that trade with any chance of success, because in matters of trade the cheapest route is the best. As stated in the House a few days ago, the St. Lawrence channel is being improved from day to day, and in a year or two it will be improved more than it is now. Our canals will be completed, and new elevators are being erected everywhere. At Owen Sound, Port Arthur, Coteau and Kingston, &c., we will spare no efforts to direct that trade to the St. Lawrence route, and it is with that great object in view that I have been looking at the improvement of the harbour of Montreal. Out of the $1,000,000 that remain by virtue of the Act of 1896, I have now in hand $700,000 at the disposal of the harbour commissioners. The city of Montreal has voted a million as its share of the improvements. We propose to-day to make a new advance of two millions to the Harbour Commissioners. Those three amounts added together form $3,400,000. Mr. Préfontaine, mayor of Montreal, and one of the members of the harbour commission, tells me, at the last meeting of the harbour commission, Mr. Kennedy estimated that the carrying out of plan No. 12a will cost about $1,800,000. The Harbour Commissioners have in hand $3,400,000, out of which they will have to use $750,000 for works in the eastern part of the harbour, and the balance will be required to complete the Windmill basin and other improvements that they may choose to carry out.

Some discussion has taken place as to the dry dock. It has been said that we should not insist on building a dry dock in Montreal. I am very much surprised to hear the criticism made on that work. There is not a well organized harbour in the world that I know of which is not provided with a dry dock, and the attention of the Government has been repeatedly called to the great urgency of erecting a dry dock in the city of Montreal. I hold in my hand a number of petitions sent by the commercial community in Montreal. In 1894, the following petition was forwarded to His Excellency the Governor General in Council:—

We, the undersigned, representing the various steamship lines and the shipping interests generally at the port of Montreal, beg to represent to Your Excellency in Council:

The disadvantage of not having and the absolute necessity of the speedy construction of dry docks is borne in upon us more and more each season of navigation. As each season brings its crop of disasters, it shows the greatest disadvantage we labour under in not having up-to-date dry docks to accommodate ocean steamers of the present date and those of much greater length and tonnage which may be naturally looked forward to. An important port of the size of Montreal without a dry dock for ocean vessels is a strange anomaly.

We know of no port with the annual tonnage of the port of Montreal that has no dry dock to accommodate large vessels, which here seem to be entirely ignored.

Now, since I took office, memoranda has been sent me. In June, 1897, a petition was sent to me, from which I will read :—

Wherefore, because the port of Montreal is a natural and most important port of the Dominion, and because all other harbours throughout the country have been made at the cost of the Government, your petitioners humbly pray Your Excellency in Council that the Dominion Government will undertake and proceed with such work in the central portion of the harbour as will afford increased wharf accommodation, and also construct at some convenient point dry dock facilities.

In February another petition from the same party was sent to me. They insisted that the Lévis dock be lengthened, and they concluded by saying :

That the incoming council be requested to keep in view and urge upon the Dominion Government the necessity for dry dock accommodation in the city of Montreal for ocean vessels of the largest class.

As I said in 1894, the Harbour Commissioners, when they applied for an advance of $4,000,000, had decided that $1,000,000 of that advance would be employed in building an inland basin in the eastern portion of the harbour. Instead of the inland basin, to which objection has been taken, and which doubts had been expressed, we intend to set a dry dock able to accommodate the largest ocean ships. A dry dock is not an expensive work when it is properly designed and carried out, while the inland basin would have been a very expensive work indeed.

These are the main features of the scheme we have now before us. There has been a good deal of discussion since 1888 as to the improvements in the harbour of Montreal. There are different interests in the city of Montreal. I beg to remind the House and to remind those who have not carried out the work they should have carried out, that the interest of all the money that has been spent on these harbour works, as a point of fact, must be paid by the trade of the old country. There is a vast amount of trade of Canada passing through Montreal, and it is on that trade that the money is raised to pay the interests on the money which has been spent and which is to be spent on the prospective improvements. There are some people in Montreal who are opposed to any improvements. I am sorry to say so. I have been in close touch with the business men of the city during the last year as to these works. There are private interests which have been fighting any improvements, because they think these improvements would destroy their own trade—just as the cabmen have in the past fought against electric railways and street railways. We have to pass over the heads of these men in the interest of the country. We have to make Montreal a national harbour in the broadest sense of the word. And it is from that point that I have endeavoured to act. For me there is no east end and no west end ; there is only the harbour of Montreal, the great national harbour. And I am glad to have found that a great deal of interest has been taken in these works in all parts of the country. I have received hundreds of letters, I may say, from shippers, from farmers even, in the west, complimenting me on the stand I have taken and on this question. I have endeavoured to stand by the broad national policy of Canada for the Canadians. I say I have received letters from farmers. All the west is interested in these works. If we improve the harbour of Montreal in such a way as to handle freight cheaply and quickly, the low rates that will be charged will mean better prices for the producers, better trade for the country, and better results for all those who ship from west to east or from east to west.

I think I need not say more at this moment. I shall be very glad indeed to answer, either when we get into committee or now, any question that hon. gentlemen desire to ask. As I have said, it is better that we should understand the question thoroughly.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to ask a question. Before we go further in the discussion, I desire to know what would become, under this new plan, of the little island called the Island of Millions, opposite the harbour ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) calls the Island of Millions, is what is designated on the plan as the guard pier. That guard pier was built with a view to making, in the centre of the harbour of Montreal, a still-water basin. Of course, the wharfs will be built on the north side, where they are now. The first idea was not to build the guard pier to the Victoria bridge, but that plan has been changed, and the gap which had been left will be filled in this year so as to allow railways to circulate freely on the guard pier. The first idea was to leave a gap so as to allow the water from the lake to come down to the harbour and clean it. But the guard pier has been built so near the Victoria bridge that that method of cleaning the harbour had to be given up. Moreover, the erection of the Windmill basin changed the position altogether. The water that flowed through the small gap between the Victoria bridge and the guard pier did not flow into the harbour of Montreal.

The current went right down to the St. Lawrence. Provision is made in these plans for a new sewage system that will drain the harbour from one end to the other under the shore work. The position of affairs, as I said, has been altogether changed by the Windmill basin, which was not authorized, but that we find there, and that we cannot destroy. Although it will not represent the large amount of money which has been spent upon it, it will be found after all to be a work of some utility. But the guard pier was considered and is still considered by the Harbour Commissioners as a primary necessity in those improvements, the idea being to dredge all the area between the wharfs and the guard pier so as to make a large still-water basin. It is expected that later on wharfs will be built alongside the guard pier, and that the Grand Trunk Railway, because we do not see that any other railway will take advantage of it, will circulate freely its trains on that guard pier.

Mr. BERGERON. Did not an idea prevail that some wharfs would be built, that that guard pier would be a wharf and be used as such?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

Mr. BERGERON. It seems to me that this new idea, carrying the tracks and bringing the cars over there, would be to do upon that pier what he intends to do upon the other pier.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so. That is the reason why, when visiting the work last year with the manager of the Bristol docks, and with Mr. Wainwright and my chief engineer, I came to the conclusion that now that the works had proceeded so far, the gap as intended was out of the question, and it was better to utilize that guard pier, which is a mile and a quarter long, upon which to circulate trains, and to build a wharf alongside of it.

Mr. BERGERON. How much work will be required to finish that guard pier and put it in working condition? As it is today, it would be impossible to bring any vessels there. It will have to be provided with wood on the south side. What is the depth of water there? what is the width of the pier? and how could sheds be erected there, and still be in a workable condition when the cars are passing?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The first need is to dredge the basin so as to allow ships to go near the guard pier, because to-day there is scarcely any water there. The width of the 27-foot channel is really 500 feet now. We take part of that channel to build the new wharf, and we will have to dredge the basin between the guard pier and the new docks. The dredging will serve at the same time to fill the wharf. As to the cost of making the guard pier a workable pier from a commercial standpoint, that is a matter that we have not to deal with now. The Harbour Commissioners will have to deal with it later on. I suppose that the Grand Trunk Railway will be very glad indeed when the guard pier is completed, to be given accommodation and running facilities on the pier, and do that at their own expense. The new works, as I said, will be equipped with switches, with rails and so on. My notion is that those rails and those switches on the wharfs should be under the immediate control of the Harbour Commissioners, so that no particular railway may have a monopoly. From one end of the harbour to the other, all railways should have equal rights, and that is a reason why railway accommodation should be placed directly under the control of the Harbour Commissioners.

Mr. FOSTER. At this time there is no available opportunity left for me to notice the many glittering generalities in which my hon. friend indulged, or his prophecies with reference to this matter, or the bit of universal fireworks with which he ended his exposé in the appreciation of the east and the west which had been showered upon him for the stand he had taken. There are some things in which we might agree; there is one thing in which I hope that my hon. friend would agree with me. I think the circumstances at this hour and place ought to afford an object lesson to every sensible man in this country. Here we are within two days, or three days at most—in two days if the Government could have its way—of the prorogation of this House. We have—I counted them a moment ago—a beggarly remnant; and I hope I am not reflecting upon any hon. member when I say this, of the magnificent House of Commons of Canada, to the number of twenty-five or twenty-eight.

Mr. ELIAS. But two important committees are meeting this morning.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot help that. Two committees are meeting this morning and this House is meeting simply because the Government has not imported business methods into its conduct of the House of Commons, and are trying to crowd everything within two or three days of the end of the session, thus compelling us to come early in the morning, interfere with the sittings of committees, and to sit here until early next morning. Under these conditions, for a government to bring down a vote of two million dollars, whether it is a loan or an absolute gift, is politically indecent. There is no doubt in my mind about that. This matter of the harbour commission and of Government aid, is no new thing as in Yukon, which crops up in an instant on a plea of unexpected circumstances. This is a matter which has been before the Minister since he became a Minister, and has been before Ministers before he became a Minister. But the hon. gentleman concludes that it is best, for what reason I do not know, to leave the whole of this immensely important matter over to the Friday preceding the Saturday on which the Government has asked that the House should finish its business, which I believe it is impossible to do. Is this a business Government or is it not? If it is a business Government, I appeal simply to business men—Is this a proper way in which to vote public moneys? Is it a proper way to treat the city of Montreal? My hon. friend may answer me: But this is a loan, and the loan will be paid back. It may, or it may not. I cannot disassociate my mind from the antecedent history in these matters. I cannot disassociate my mind from certain statements which have been made by the Minister of Public Works himself. The Minister of Public Works was most fortunate if he did not leave the impression upon the public mind within the last year that he proposed at least that the city of Montreal should have its harbour works largely done for it out of the public treasury, not by way of loan, but by way of absolute gift, on the plea that it was the commercial metropolis of the whole Dominion, and that the burden should fall entirely upon the Dominion. I say, if the Minister did not mean to leave that impression upon the country, he was most unfortunate in the methods of his expression in place after place, and in city after city in this country. The harbour of Montreal has been an example to the people of this country who have had to do with the Government in the way of a public loan. It has made harbour loans and paid interest, and it owes the Government nothing. But there are other examples which are not so gratifying and pleasant to contemplate, and if by any manner of means this Government either by implication, such as the Minister has thrown out, leads the people of Montreal to the conclusion that this, though shadowed under the form of a loan, is really to be an amount appropriated as a gift; or if the Government by annexing conditions which the business people of the city do not think should be annexed to this transaction, take a certain proportion of this money and apply it to different sections of work to which the business people think it should not be applied and leave a moiety or less of the loan to be used for legitimate purposes, but the whole amount of interest to be paid, and consequently weakening and overburdening the revenue receipts of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, one of two things must happen: either the port of Montreal will be overburdened and consequently become an extra dear port; or the Government must come to the rescue and to make it cheap must remit the loan and change it into the form of a gift. With regard to that matter this is not the time to enter into a discussion of it. There are very many things to be said in favour of Montreal as a potential port, as a national port, which would naturally enlist the sympathy of members of this House on both sides. If I may be pardoned a personal allusion, I may say that since the very first time I met in an official capacity the business men of Montreal and the Harbour Commissioners, I have had full sympathy with their desires and aspirations, and I am not at all inclined to say that I would not treat the city of Montreal in this respect in the broadest and most generous way which this Parliament could possibly treat it, consistently with the interests of the rest of the Dominion. What I complain of is this, that the hon. Minister has precluded this Parliament taking any sensible cognizance of his plans and purposes. It is impossible to do it in the state and condition which at this late hour of the session supervenes. My hon. friend comes down to-day with a resolution and plan and goes into elaborate explanations. I for my part demand that before I am called on to vote on this resolution I shall have an opportunity of looking into these matters. I am not a technical authority, neither is the hon. gentleman; but every hon. member, and especially those who take an interest in these works, can form an opinion from a more or less thorough investigation, as to what is proposed. When an hon. gentleman has the plan before him and gives explanations, it is after all Greek to the rest of the House, and independent members must have some opportunity of looking into these proposals before we act as business men in the premises. So the hon. Minister is not treating Montreal and its interests fairly in neglecting to bring down these proposals early exposing them to the House and allowing members taking an interest in them an opportunity of examining the plans, of making suggestions if they are weak, or if they are perfect, of giving them hearty and earnest support. I appeal again to the right hon. leader of the House, and I say he is not treating this country and this Parliament fairly as a leader of the Government in postponing these important subjects until the very last and dying hours of the session. I am bound to take cognizance also of what appears in the public prints. One objection I have to this proposition is that the Government come down with a condition. The Harbour Commissioners are appointed in a certain way, and they are fit for their positions or not fit. They must be to a certain extent under the supervision of the Government, but I hold that so long as we have Harbour Commissioners and we expect them to do their work as such, we must place on them the responsibility of preparing their plans and recommending their plans and carrying them out, and we should not interfere with them, unless there comes a collision between those plans and what may be considered to be for the general interests of the country. Then the supervising power of the Governor General comes into force. But that is very different from sitting down to consider the recommendation of any one Minister and laying out a plan and saying that the Harbour Commissioners may obtain a loan and pay interest thereon, but at the same time to attach a condition that the Harbour Commissioners shall make the expenditure in a certain place and under certain plans of construction. What do we know of those plans of construction after the half hour exposé of them by the Minister? What appreciation of them can we obtain when we are called upon to adopt a certain condition, whereby we are rendered perfectly impotent and it is made altogether impossible for members to give an intelligent vote on these propositions because of the lack of time for investigation and examination. The Minister of Public Works applies a condition. He has a theory of his own. It may prove to be one of the best theories, and it is said to be supported by a certain number of people. He may be right or wrong in that matter, but we cannot take the opinion of the Minister of Public Works given during a half hour speech and vote blindly, taking his assertion at its full value and throwing the responsibility upon the Government. That is not quite the way in which these things should be managed. When I look at the public prints there is a great diversity of opinion on this subject. I am bound to take cognizance of what appears in the public prints, and I am bound to take cognizance especially as to what appears in the public prints of the city in which these works are supposed to be carried out. Those public prints give us the idea of a considerable diversity of opinion prevailing, a diversity of opinion at first existing it is said among the members of the Government. When the hon. Minister of Public Works was using the word "we" every other minute, and saying what "we" are going to do, he did not look particularly lovingly towards his colleague to his right (Mr. Fisher), but perhaps he had the editorial idea of "we" in his mind, and from long use and wont he was thinking he was in his sacred sanctum penning a pungent editorial for his daily paper, and he used the word in that sense. My hon. friend beside him was said to be guilty of rank fanaticism. They seem to be now united, and Mr. Bickerdike and some of the others, are they all at one now? It does not appear to be so. The Board of Trade of Montreal is not at one with this scheme, and this is the case with respect to other public bodies. Many prominent and old business men do not appear to be at one with the hon. Minister on this scheme, and that pious and godly paper of long standing, wide circulation and great influence in every part of the country has actually passed its opinion upon the Minister of Public Works, and to a reflected degree upon my hon. friend, who is commonly supposed to be the watchdog of the treasury, whom the Huntingdon Gleaner and all other old guard journals have been elevating on a pedestal and kneeling down before him as the guardian in all matters of financial policy and expenditure while the present party is in power.

Mr. FOSTER.

The "Daily Witness" speaks of this thing openly as a boodling transaction, as a job, and couples my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte), the hitherto irreproachable Minister of Public Works, as being in some way connected with the scheme; in a way which is not healthy for the body politic and will not be good for the future business interests of the city of Montreal.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The "Witness" cannot prove what it says.

Mr. FOSTER. How many short months ago was it that my hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works, had all his war paint on, feathers fluttering in the breeze, tomahawk bared and glittering, after a certain candidate for the mayoralty of the city of Montreal; but that is all now buried in the common idea of the area at the east end, which is to be turned into a glorious graving dock, and as two brothers they are pushing the scheme towards its ultimate and final completion. Well, Sir, there are some words uttered by the Montreal "Witness," which being a godly and pious paper, must be taken as true.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As gospel.

Mr. FOSTER. Must be taken as true until they are very fully disproved. No one can deny that the Montreal "Witness" has been a very powerful supporter of the Government at present in power; sometimes asserting the claim of being an independent paper, and sometimes standing by that claim for a day or so. I notice, however, that the Montreal "Witness" ultimately always comes to the point of final support of the Liberal party, and although I would not predict in this case, I should not be surprised at all if after this immense outburst, we may find a month or two later that the "Witness" had even come to see that this which it now declares to be entirely bad, may have some redeeming features about it. However, this article is worded so strongly that I am not going to say that that will happen; but what does the "Witness" say? It heads its article: "A crippling plan and a political job!" and it says:—

A CRIPPLING PLAN AND A POLITICAL JOB.

Last fall, when the question of the harbour's improvement was being discussed the "Witness" exposed pretty thoroughly the designs of Mr. Tarte in attempting to force his crippling plan upon the city and commission in place of the more commodious one which had the approval of all the interests concerned. We showed clearly that Mr. Tarte's anxiety to restrict the shipping accommodation in the central portion of the harbour was with the end of creating an apparent necessity for the useless expenditure of money at Hochelaga, where there are already more wharfs than are used, and these of recent construction. We also pointed out that there was a scheme to saddle the public with the expenditure of huge sums of money in connection with harbour expenditure, if possible, upon docks at Maisonneuve. This scheme was proposed by men principally connected with the management of the Canadian Pacific Railway, at the suggestion of the late Mr. Hurteau. Sir William Van Horne, the president, was a shareholder in the company; so was Mr. Shaughnessy, the friend and benefactor of Mr. Tarte;—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Which is not true.

Mr. FOSTER (continuing to read)

—so was Mr. Osler, the legal director of the Canadian Pacific. Mr. Préfontaine was also at that time a shareholder in the company. This precious organization is called the Montreal Land Improvement Company, and it bought up some of the land of the site of the proposed docks, with very much more in the neighbourhood. Mr. Préfontaine sold out his stock in the company in a very ostentatious fashion, loudly declaring that one of his reasons for selling was that it was not proper for him as a member of Parliament to have an interest in a scheme benefiting by grants, but that his sale of his interests would leave him free to work for the scheme. It was said by Mr. Tarte's defenders at that time, if not by Mr. Tarte himself, that he was opposed to this dock scheme, and that anyway Mr. Tarte was not likely to promote a scheme in which his enemy, Mr. Préfontaine, was deeply interested.

Very smiling enemies they appear to be now. (Reading)—

We do not know whether Mr. Préfontaine's sale of his interests freed Mr. Tarte also from scruples about aiding the scheme, or whether Mr. Préfontaine and Mr. Tarte have reached an agreement, but anyway it is plain enough to-day that Mr. Tarte and Mr. Préfontaine are hand and glove in the scheme. Mr. Tarte, as Minister of Public Works secures the granting of a loan of two million dollars at three per cent to the Harbour Commission on condition that half of it shall be expended upon the dock scheme, and Mr. Préfontaine does his part by trying to induce the Harbour Commission to accept the loan on this condition.

If the Harbour Commission accepts the loan it will saddle itself not only with the responsibility for this precious piece of boodling jobbery, but for the paying of the interest not only upon the expenditure upon Mr. Tarte's crippling plan of harbour improvement, but also upon the cost of the political jobbery of Messrs. Tarte and Préfontaine.

These are very strong words.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Very.

Mr. FOSTER. They come from a very candid friend, and their candour and their strength together make it impossible for us as public men to ignore them. (Reading)—

It is asked to sanction and begin a scheme which will in the end probably cost it millions of dollars upon an advance of one million dollars by the Government. Mr. Tarte is treating the commission in this matter of harbour improvement as if it was a prodigal spendthrift, and as if he was a usurer making exploitations upon its necessities. He offers it one million dollars to spend upon its own needs upon condition that it accepts and pays the interest on another million, and spends it upon political jobs. Mr. Préfontaine and Mr. Mackay, who assured the business men of Montreal that if they accepted the crippling plan of Mr. Tarte the cost would be borne by the Government, are not now ashamed to let the commission know that, having accepted the crippling plan upon that condition, the Government is not going to fulfil the condition they undertook on its behalf, but is going to make the commission, that is, the harbour business, bear the burden. Mr. Préfontaine tells the commission that the increase in business is expected to pay the increased charges incident upon the extravagant expenditure upon Mr. Tarte's crippling plan and the boodling dock project.

We give in another column a history of the Quebec graving dock, which, under Mr. Tarte's old party and during the time that Mr. Tarte was a leader in that party and manager of the funds, was a source of such profit to political jobbers as to throw a sort of halo of glory around similar projects in the eyes of all such boodlers. The Montreal dock scheme is beginning well and under good auspices. It is extraordinary that Mr. Tarte should have been able to induce Sir Richard Cartwright to propose a loan of two millions, guaranteed by the Government, one million of which is to be spent upon a project which has not yet been planned out, for which there have been no regular estimates or engineer's designs, and with which a jobbing scheme is very manifestly connected. It is discouraging to all who hoped for pure, honest, economical government to find Sir Richard Cartwright taking the place of Mr. Tarte in proposing this most iniquitous loan to Parliament, as he did yesterday. If he has not only become complacent toward expenditure upon political jobbery, but willing to lend his reputation for honesty as a shield to Mr. Tarte's reputation in the House in order apparently to render the House less suspicious as to the proposal, to whom is the country to look for defence against dishonesty and extravagance?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Stop. What is that? I would like to ask my hon. friend to read that again. What is he talking about my proposing a loan?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) is anxious to hear it again.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I will ask the House to pardon the repetition, and I will read it for the benefit of my good friend:

The Montreal dock scheme is beginning well, and under good auspices. It is extraordinary that Mr. Tarte should have been able to induce Sir Richard Cartwright to propose a loan of two millions, guaranteed by the Government, one million of which is to be spent upon a project which has not yet been planned out, for which there have been no regular estimates or engineer's designs, and with which a jobbing scheme is very manifestly connected.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It does not matter, because I do not shirk any responsibility, but I did not propose the loan, as a matter of fact.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright, for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), gave notice that the resolution would be taken up at another time.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is a little error.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will have to interrupt my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), and to read an authority on a point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. But let me satisfy the colleague of the right hon. gentleman.

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot, because it is against the rules of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Would my right hon. friend be guilty of such discourtesy to his colleague (Sir Richard Cartwright) as not to allow me to gratify his curiosity.

The PRIME MINISTER. I want to call the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) to a rule of the House, to which he called my attention the other day, and which reads to this effect:—

No member, in speaking, can refer to anything said or done in a previous debate during the same session—a rule necessary to economize the time of the House. Neither is it regular to refer to arguments used in Committee of the Whole, nor to an amendment proposed in the same. Neither may a member read from a printed newspaper or book comments on any speech made in Parliament during the current session.

I think my hon. friend is reading from a news article commenting on the proceedings of this House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Did you remember that rule the other day when you read General Gascoigne's letter?

The PRIME MINISTER. I did not; and I am afraid my hon. friend did not. I do not want to press the point; but the observance of the rules of debate sometimes depends on whose ox is gored.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) read on. Let him read George Washington Stephens' article.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very glad my hon. friend is not going to deprive the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) of the pleasure in store for him, and I will now proceed, I suppose, with the permission of the House. Says the Montreal "Witness":

The Montreal dock scheme is beginning well and under good auspices. It is extraordinary that Mr. Tarte should have been able to induce Sir Richard Cartwright to propose a loan of two millions, guaranteed by the Government, one million of which is to be spent upon a project which has not yet been planned out, for which there have been no regular estimates or engineer's designs, and with which a jobbing scheme is very manifestly connected. It is discouraging to all who hoped for pure, honest, economical government to find Sir Richard Cartwright taking the place of Mr. Tarte in proposing this most iniquitous loan to Parliament, as he did yesterday. If he has not only become complacent toward expenditure upon political jobbery, but willing to lend his reputation for honesty as a shield to Mr. Tarte's reputation in the House in order apparently to render the House less suspicious as to the proposal, to whom is the country to look for defence against dishonesty and extravagance?

Now, my hon. friend has a kind and loving heart, I am sure, although it took many of us a long time to discover it. It took a revolution in the political life of this country to take off the rather indurated layers which interpose between my hon. friend's genuine goodness of heart and its manifestation to the public. But will my hon. friend, in the face of that appeal, fall any longer to come to the rescue? and will he allow such ardent supporters of the Montreal "Witness" and the Huntingdon "Gleaner," to call in vain, and to say in the end, "Well, he is asleep, or he is walking, or he is talking, and cannot listen to us—our god is useless." Now, Sir, as to my hon. friend's point of order, I am inclined to think it was not correctly taken. I am not reading from an anonymous criticism of any remarks which were made in this House. I am reading what a public paper says as to a business project, and I think I am perfectly in order in reading an extract from the public press, a book, a document or anything of that sort with respect to a matter of this kind.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If not, you are in very good company.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, most illustrious company I am in; and if Mr. Speaker will be as kind to me as to my hon. friend, after I am through, he will amiably suggest that I can put myself in order by moving a motion with the consent of the House. But the "Witness" is not the only one, nor is this the only occasion on which it has taken up this matter. The "Witness," in a succeeding issue, takes it up again, and goes into it most thoroughly. I am not going to weary the House by reading a second article or a third article. There is sufficient in the first to make plain what the public press is saying about it. But there was a meeting of the harbour commission, and we had the interesting testimony of others. We find that the mayor, who is, I believe, ex-officio a member of the harbour commission, was present. A discussion took place. Mr. Bickerdike made a statement there which throws light upon a reputed occurrence which took place between certain members of the Government and certain gentlemen from Montreal, and in which very heated expressions were said to have been used, and some very strong language indulged in, and in which, if it is true, the czar-like pretensions of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) were most fully and most distinctly made known; for I believe it is stated that he turned round, with threatening dexter finger to my polite and sauve and quiet friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), and said to him, "Have you forgotten, Sir, that you were elected by my influence?" and when the fourteenth member of the Cabinet ventured to say something in the same line of condemnation of the dock scheme, his dexter finger was then pointed to the member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) and he gave him a gentle reminder that all he had to do was to turn over his little finger, and farewell to all political prospects of that hon. gentleman.

Mr. BERGERON. That is quite correct, too.

Mr. FOSTER. And my hon. friend says that is quite correct.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Are you sure? Well, it is not correct.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, it is well to have a czar in the Cabinet, but it is not pleasant for the junior members of the Cabinet that his pretensions should be published in such a way.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Will the hon. gentleman have the goodness to tell us on what authority he makes these statements?

Mr. FOSTER. They were made in an interview—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In a Tory paper in Quebec.

Mr. FOSTER. In "L'Evenement;" and to show the inherent probability of them, we find that the most potent, consistent and fair Liberal paper in the province of Quebec believes that what the Tory paper stated is true. There, Sir, you have concurrent testimony, and everybody knows that concurrent testimony is the strongest possible testimony. It cannot be conspiracy, you know, because they are not friends together, and consequently the inherent probability is rendered all the more apparent. But, Sir, Mr. Bickerdike is not a myth; he is not a reputed interview in "L'Evenement;" he is not an imaginary shadow in the office of the Montreal "Witness." Mr. Bickerdike is an entity; he is a very potential entity; he is a very potential Liberal entity in the city of Montreal; and Mr. Bickerdike states in so many words that the Minister of Agriculture is not in favour of this east-end dock scheme; and he takes occasion to say so to His Honour the mayor and a member of the Harbour Commission. Mr. Bickerdike says:

The Minister of Agriculture himself told me that he considered the commissioners should be free to spend the money where it would be of greatest benefit to the port. He had confidence enough in the commissioners, the majority of whom were put into their positions by the Ministry, to be sure that they did not desire to cut their own throats. He, Mr. Bickerdike, was certain, if the Government were left alone, that it would lend the money unhampered by such restrictions as now proposed, confident that the commissioners would use it wisely and without any sectional bias.

Mr. FOSTER.

Who is the troublesome individual that, according to Mr. Bickerdike, will not leave the Government alone? Where is he? Was he after the Government or some member of it? Is there now a combination between one member of the Government and that worthy individual to go for some other members of the Government, to call forth this plaintive cry from Mr. Bickerdike, that if somebody, name not given, would only leave the Government alone, the Government might be trusted to do right. Mr. Hodgson also threw a little light on this matter. Mr. Hodgson is also a good friend of hon. gentlemen opposite, perhaps a little too frank sometimes, and probably not versed in politics to such a degree as to lend caution to his utterances on some occasions. Mr. Hodgson says:

I was much opposed to the idea at first, but after hearing the whole facts of the case and the feeling of the Minister of Public Works, I changed my mind. My idea was that plan No. 12a ought to be completed, and that any further works must be down there, but I know that the Government is desirous of getting the thing through in its present shape, and I understood the dry dock alone is only a matter of two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. Bickerdike.—Let me understand you, Mr. Hodgson. Do you assert that the Premier and the Minister of Agriculture are in this thing?

What thing? It must be this scheme which the "Witness" characterizes in such candid language—

Mr. Hodgson did not reply in the affirmative.

Then, Mr. Bickerdike says again:

In spite of anything that has been said to the contrary, Mr. Thompson, it is not the Government which is doing this.

It is that troublesome individual, I suppose, who will not leave the Government alone, and whose constant endeavours, day and night, are directed to turning them from the path of rectitude in which they desire to walk, according to their pre-election pledges. But the mayor of the city shows a broad spirit, when there is a suggestion by Mr. Thompson that this matter may lie over for a little while until he can see what his constituents think about it. The mayor says:

The Mayor.—What is the use, Mr. Thomson? You have made up your mind to oppose us, and so it would be the same thing if the vote were taken now.

Mr. Thomson.—No, sir. If my constituents are of a different opinion from me, I promise to come back and vote for you, although it would be contrary to my opinion and much against my judgment.

Mr. Bickerdike.—Let us adjourn for two days, and learn what the public thinks about it.

The Mayor.—What has the public to do with it? The important fact for us to remember is that the session closes on Tuesday night next, and no adjournment is possible if this thing is to be put through.—

Of course this gentleman who troubles the Government and tries to turn them from the path of rectitude knows exactly when we are going to adjourn.

—Besides, gentlemen around the table had had an opportunity to consult the Government, and they knew that it was this or nothing, so what was the use of acting like children?

Mr. Thomson expected that indignation meetings would be held unless more time was given, it was not fair.

The Mayor.—What do I care for your indignation meetings; no indignation meetings would disturb me at all.

The mayor does not care for the public, they having nothing to do with it, he does not care for indignation meetings, such meetings do not disturb him at all. So long as he can get his friend the Minister of Public Works to put this part of the vote through and the city council to put the other part through, and the scheme is allowed to run, the public may be blanked. Indignation meetings—what effect have they upon him? Now, I have read this to show what is appearing in the public prints, and to show this House that there are circumstances connected with this which render it in the highest degree necessary that time should be given for a thorough discussion and investigation. We have no time now for that. We are asked to vote this and to vote it to-day, with the House rather empty and with the unrest and desire prevailing to leave which the approaching end of the session always brings. Two things I want to be brought out from this. In the first place, I think the Government is taking great responsibility upon itself, when it endeavours to force its preconceived plan and methods as conditions of the loan, which it will give on no other condition. I want to ask my hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works, if, when he comes down for a vote of $750,000 in the shape of this loan for a certain work, he has his engineer's estimate and plans of the work and everything connected with it? Why, he would not ask this Parliament to give him a vote for a $10,000 post office without having his plans and estimates before this House. Has my hon. friend the engineer's plan and estimate of the cost, or is he going upon generalities, investigation and plans which are to be carried out and improved in the future?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No work will be begun without a plan being carefully prepared. We only want to have it provided that $50,000 will be taken out of that advance to equip works in the eastern part of the harbour and also towards constructing a dry dock. When the Bill is in committee, I intend to make an amendment to this effect. I am anxious that the works in the harbour shall begin immediately. We are all agreed as to that, and I shall move an amendment, because there are no plans ready for the dry dock, that two or three months be given to prepare plans of the dry dock and to equip the piers in its eastern part. I am anxious that the work shall begin immediately in the centre harbour, according to the plans which have been approved by all the commercial community of Montreal. The present plans have been approved by all its commercial bodies, but I will move an amendment to that effect that two or three months be given to prepare for the eastern work, so as to allow the immediate commencement of the work on the plans which have been approved. As to the plans for the dry dock, it will not take much time to get them. We are only deciding that a certain part of them will be applied for works, the plans of which will be prepared.

Mr. FOSTER. That shows what is the cardinal weakness of the plan. Plan 12a is to be carried out. It has the assent—whether it has the cordial assent or not—of the different bodies—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It has the hearty assent of all these who have not private interests to serve in Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. It is said that this assent was given to a certain plan which the Minister approves, under the idea that by this compromise Government aid will be obtained for the work. That statement is made.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This plan 12a is less expensive than plan No. 6 was, so that there was no more reason why the Government should carry out that plan than that the Harbour Commissioners should agree to it. This plan 12a is less expensive, and it has been adopted, after consideration and after having consulted such men as the manager of the Bristol docks and the manager of one of the great docks of Liverpool and the commercial bodies of Montreal, who have given their approval to it. Now that they have approved it, we are ready to go on.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not taking any exception to the expenditure on 12a plan, which is apparently sanctioned by the different bodies. It has been accepted as a compromise, and therefore can be proceeded with. Everybody is agreed as to plan 12a, and the Minister's action is perfectly clear and satisfactory to Parliament on that basis. But on the other hand, there is strong opposition to this dry dock.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, there is not.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend may seek to minimize that opposition by saying that it is only the vested or selfish interests which are opposed to it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Private interests.

Mr. FOSTER. In the last analysis, you will find that in all these schemes there are interests which you may call selfish. All interests nearly are so, but it does not settle the question at all to say to this House that the strong, prominent, clear-headed business men who set their faces against the scheme, are simply selfish. Their interests are bound up with those of the city and port.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The vast majority of the business men of Montreal and ninety-nine per cent of the public opinion of Montreal are behind my scheme to-day; it is only those who are prejudiced, and whose private interests are served by not having any improvements carried out in Montreal, who are fighting it now. And I say that there are only men who are prejudiced or have private interests at stake, and who desire to have no improvements carried out for Montreal who are fighting us.

Mr. FOSTER. I will leave my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) to settle that with the business men. I take things as they appear. I will not say that all the business men who oppose this scheme are moved by blind prejudice or any other unworthy sentiment. They, no doubt, have their interests, and these interests are large and legitimate. Before the hon. Minister of Public Works turned over a stone in Montreal these men and their predecessors were building up the business greatness of the port.

Mr. EDWARDS. It is not the business men of Montreal, but the business men of the country, the producers and shippers that build up the harbour and the business of Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Edwards) directs my attention to one end of the proposition, which is quite true and all the truth, unless you look at the other end of the proposition.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These people have left the port of Montreal in the most disgraceful condition of any great port in the world; and all to serve private interest. I do not speak of all our business men, of course, but I say that a certain clique in Montreal have prevented improvement in order to serve their private interests. Plan No. 8 was approved about ten years ago, and it was through their efforts that it was not carried out. They were afraid that great navigation companies would come, that big ships would seek the harbour, and ruin their trade.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) will thank me for allowing him to make another speech in the middle of my own remarks.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all right. I am going to leave this matter to be settled between my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) and the business men. I think it is a somewhat severe statement, however, to characterize the solid business men in Montreal as he has done. What I think the hon. gentleman would be perfectly justified in doing would be to get the land to carry what is agreed upon, plan 12a. But does the hon. gentleman know that the lands are purchasable, and at what cost they can be purchased? Because, as I understand it, the lands have to be bought. Neither the city nor the Government own this property.

Mr. FOSTER.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am glad my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) calls attention to that. I may say immediately that the syndicate with which the hon. member from Maisonneuve (Mr. Préfontaine) was supposed to be connected, and with which the "Witness" connects my name, though they know perfectly well that I have not a cent of interest in it, does not own one foot of land in the place where these works are to be located. There is an abundance of land. The works already built belong the Harbour Commissioners—all the wharfs and the water front. If it is necessary to buy land, it will only be for the dry dock, which will require very little land.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) must not take up too much of my time—though I am glad to have the information he gives. I did not raise the question whether the improvement company owned the land upon which the dry dock was actually to be built. I raised the general question. The harbour commission does not own the land, I understand.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Therefore, the land will have to be bought or expropriated. Nothing definite is known as to the price. The hon. Minister of Public Works knows nothing about that, nor does the harbour commission. But everybody knows that the moment this improvement is definitely decided upon there will be a rise in the value of real estate.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are not going to say where the works will be located.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) has stated that the land syndicate does not own property in the vicinity where this public work is to be built. But those who own land in that vicinity, there can be no doubt, will be greatly benefited, because there will be an increase in value. What I want to point out is that the Minister of Public Works, or the harbour commission, has not the land, nor has the hon. gentleman the engineer's plans nor an estimate of the cost. They have nothing but a project; and that project is opposed by reputable business men and great business interests in the city of Montreal. When it suits my hon. friend he can quote the board of trade as a very important body; but when it suits him he minimizes it, and says that it is selfish and prejudiced.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that. I said that some of the men who have been opposing these improvements have been influenced by their private interests.

Mr. FOSTER. When the hon. gentleman makes an assertion of that kind, it would be only just that he should name the persons who are selfish and prejudiced and not leave that assertion to cover all.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am doing that too.

Mr. FOSTER. It is unfair that every opponent of the scheme should be left under that imputation. He should not use that argument unless he is quite willing to exonerate those who are not moved by prejudice, and he can only do that by naming those who are. The hon. gentleman is a man of strong opinions, and he makes his statements, as it were, ex-cathedra and very strongly. That is not always a fault in a man, but it sometimes does injury to others. From this time, the business men of Montreal will be trying to settle the question which of them are working through selfish interests and who are exonerated from that charge. Now, I think my hon. friend should be willing to allow that portion of his scheme to remain until the next session of Parliament. He will not interfere with the work of the plan 12a, the part that is approved by the business community; and by doing so he will avoid incurring the suspicion of rushing something through Parliament which is denounced by the press that supported him and by business men of Montreal, who have reputations and large interests. When he has engineers' plans and can give us an estimate of the cost of what he proposes to build, we shall have something to go upon. But the proposition he lays before us to-day, I think, under the circumstances, he ought not to press to a conclusion. I hope my hon. friend will consider my suggestion.

Now, with reference to the greater question—it must be remembered that if you are ever going to get anything from the port of Montreal—and we all have high hopes of it—you must try to have a port as cheap and as well equipped as possible. A port that is not equipped, though it is cheap, is not of much use; while a port that is well equipped, if its charges are very high, has but little chance in the competition for trade. In proportion as you load up the harbour commission with what they think are works not germane to their business, you make it necessary for them to impose heavy charges. The ultimate result of this is to throw the burden on the country. The business men want to see a graving dock included among the improvements, but they do not want to be compelled to add the interest upon it to the charges of the harbour. Let the Minister of Public Works treat the port of Montreal as generously as he has treated the city of Quebec and other ports. Where is there a dry dock that has been built in any city by the people of that city? In Kingston the dry dock was built and is owned by the Government. In Quebec the dry dock was built and is owned by the Government. What the business men of Montreal have a perfect right to ask is, that if the Government wants to have a dry dock, and, if we, in consultation with them, think it well to have a dry dock, this scheme should be disassociated from the works that the commission has to carry out with the loan that is here proposed, and the revenues of the commission not burdened with these charges. In doing that he will not do anything that will militate against the harbour of Montreal, he will not be equipping works which, as I have before mentioned, the board of trade is opposed to.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS, and the Chamber of Commerce approved of it.

Mr. PREFONTAINE moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Second Sitting.

FRIDAY, 3rd June, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

QUEEN VS. SKELTON—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to make a personal explanation. Last night I called attention to the fact that I had received a letter from the Solicitor General, in which there was a paragraph taken from a letter of the Minister of Justice, saying that he was ready to hear me at any time in regard to the case of the Queen against Skelton. I had an appointment with the Minister of Justice and went to see him, that is, I saw him at the suggestion of the paragraph quoted in the letter from the Solicitor General, saw him to hear me in regard to the case of the Queen against Skelton.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is this a personal explanation?

Mr. DAVIN. A personal explanation, I am not going to argue anything.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is it correcting a report of a speech?

Mr. DAVIN. No, it is not correcting any report, it is a personal explanation.

Mr. SPEAKER. If it is of a purely personal character, the hon. gentleman is in order, but he must be careful not to introduce anything that will involve discussion.

Mr. DAVIN. It is a purely personal explanation. As I said, I went to see the Minister, and he began to say to me: I will tell you my opinion, I will tell you my views. Thereupon, I took up a paper the length of a foolscap envelope, and began to take down what he said. He looked at me taking it down in short-hand. At the close of the conversation, I said to the Minister it was impossible that I could make any argument without having the papers before me. Now, the right hon. gentleman, in reply to me—I have no doubt it was said in the hurry of debate, in fact, I find it hard to believe that the right hon. gentleman would deliberately make the suggestion that he will find he did make—he said that the Minister of Justice would have cause to complain of me for taking notes of a private conversation. The right hon. gentleman will see that this was as purely a public thing as if I went into the Supreme Court to argue. I was representing certain people of the North-west in regard to a public transaction, at the invitation of the Minister, who said that he was ready to hear me. Of course, the right hon. gentleman only knows me in this House, he does not know me intimately, privately, but he knows many friends of mine. I do not think it would deliberately occur to him that I would do anything ungentlemanly, especially so ungentlemanly as to take a surreptitious note of a private conversation. It was entirely a public matter, and I say with deference to the right hon. gentleman's judgment, that I think he owes it both to himself and to me to set the matter right.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly owe it to the hon. gentleman to give you frankly my views of the question as he has presented it. My impression was, from the way he had put his case, that the interview which he had with the Minister was altogether private. I cannot admit, for my part, that the hon. gentleman represented the people of the North-west Territories at that interview, but of course I am giving my own opinion merely. The hon. gentleman knows, and I do not know, the conversation which he had with the Minister of Justice. To me it seemed like a private conversation, but if he judged at the time, and if he led the Minister of Justice to understand that the matter was not a private interview, but a public conference, of course I have nothing more to say upon the subject. That is a question of appreciation for my hon. friend and the Minister of Justice. In my opinion, when I spoke, it was a private conversation, but I accept the statement of the hon. gentleman that it was not a private conversation, but a public conference with the Minister of Justice, and so far the matter ends.

GRANTS IN AID OF PUBLIC WORKS.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 161) respecting the payment of grants in aid of the construction of public works.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps the hon. Minister will explain the Bill.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Bill is framed for the purpose of enabling the Government in certain eventualities to make payments on account, or, what would be a more accurate description, to make payments on progress estimates of amounts granted in aid of public works. We have found in one or two instances that companies which have actually earned very large amounts have been unable legally to collect them, and the Government have been consequently legally unable to pay them by reason of the fact that the section which under the existing Act has to be completed fully for a distance of ten miles, has not been wholly completed, through no fault of the contractors, no inability on their part, but by reason of circumstances wholly beyond their control. The Bill provides:

Whenever by an Act of Parliament a grant in aid of the construction of any work has been made payable on the completion of sections thereof or otherwise, the Governor in Council may authorize payment on account thereof according to progress estimates to be furnished by the engineers of the department of Railways and Canals, notwithstanding that the work so aided, or any section thereof, has not been wholly completed, where the non-completion thereof is not due to delay on the part of the contractors or to pecuniary causes, or to causes within the reasonable control of the contractors, and where the amount proposed to be paid as having been earned by the contractors will not be less than $64,000, after withholding from the amount which would be earned by the completion a sum sufficient in the option of the Minister of Railways and Canals to cover the cost of completing the whole of such work or the section thereof with respect to which payment is being made.

The sum which is named in the Bill is the limit of the whole subsidy now authorized in regard to ten miles of the road at the increased rate, under the special clause introduced last year. The circumstances under which the difficulty has arisen are these. We had applications from the Canadian Pacific Railway for payment of a large amount in respect to their contract, and it was found they could not be paid for sections continuously by reason of the fact that there were some portions of the work on the section which they were yet required to do under contract, the cost of which would be very insignificant in amount, but which, though insignificant, would have to be done before payment for the whole section can be made. It was felt by the Government that with proper safeguards, such as have been introduced in the Bill, by which not less than $64,000 could be paid at any time, after making sufficient allowance for the completion of the work, no public interest would suffer, and that the company prosecuting the work under a contract might reasonably be aided to that extent.

Mr. SPROULE. That Bill would allow the Government to dole out the subsidy as the work proceeds.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not to any very great extent. The amount to be paid under the circumstances would not be less than $64,000, which meets the double subsidy for a full mileage of ten miles. So the Act could not be made applicable in a great many cases or in a small way, only where the work is a very large one, and then only under the conditions which are contained in the Bill, where the work has not failed of completion through any fault of the contractor in any way.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to express an opinion on the Bill on the mere explanation so far given, but I want to call the attention of the right hon. leader of the House to the matter. We had a certain promise that all the important legislation was down and there was nothing else to be laid on the Table of the House at this late date except some unimportant or local matters. As I catch the object of the Bill it is a most important measure and one which requires very serious consideration. I may overrate its importance; but I would suggest to the hon. gentleman whether it would not be better to postpone legislation of this kind at this stage of the session. We have gone along very well for twenty-five years, and I think we might go to the next session without undertaking such legislation as this. It is departmental, of course, but it has to do with the moneys of the country expended on great public works. We have had a settled policy, and this proposal is to make a very radical change in the system we are pursuing. It is worth the consideration of the House whether it would not be better to defer the Bill until next session.

The PRIME MINISTER. I suggest that the Bill had better be read the first time.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The PRIME MINISTER. I can quite understand that the Minister of Railways will appreciate the reason adduced by the hon. member for York. But I also hope that hon. gentlemen will come to the conclusion that the Bill is absolutely harmless, that it does not introduce any new principle, but simply facilitates as to companies earning subsidies the power of drawing moneys on works in progress. There has been no difficulty generally in respect to the payment of subsidies on sections of ten miles, but I understand that in certain parts of British Columbia the difficulties of construction are very great, and I trust after a conference between my hon. friend and the Minister of Railways, the Bill will be allowed to pass.

Mr. FOSTER. I throw out the suggestion—but let the Bill be read the first time.

Mr. HAGGART. The law was formerly as it is now proposed to be enacted, but it was changed to secure the safety of the department and the public, and it was provided that until a section of ten miles was completed no payment should be made. If this Bill were passed, any railway company could get a certificate of the engineer for four or five hundred dollars and they could ask from the Government different amounts, which although practically secured, would result in the work never being done. I can see difficulty with respect to the Crow's Nest Pass road in regard to making advances without a ten mile section being absolutely completed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And Victoria Bridge and other works.

Mr. HAGGART. Even with the present law the hon. gentleman has been able to get over the difficulty in regard to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway and other works. There is a way to overcome it, as the hon. gentleman knows.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Only partly.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

TRANSPORTATION OF SUPPLIES TO THE YUKON.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I should like to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the promise he made at the time the Minister of Militia promised to bring down papers touching the arrangements made for the transport of supplies to the Yukon. There were some papers which the Minister of the Interior promised to bring down, as well as those which the Minister of Militia promised to lay on the Table. The Minister of Militia has brought down a memorandum of the papers in his department, but none have come from the Minister of the Interior.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I will see if there are any papers, and if so, I will bring them down.

CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT—CHANGES IN OFFICIALS.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall) has mentioned in the House once or twice that he was not able to reach a motion of his asking for a return of changes in the officials of the Customs Department, amongst others in Cape Breton County. I have prepared a return so far as it relates to the Customs Department, and I move for leave to lay it on the Table of the House.

Motion agreed to.

YUKON MINING LEASES.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the order of the House in reference to mining leases. The hon. gentleman was good enough to facilitate the information to a certain degree by giving the names of applicants and of those to whom leases had been made. I would like, however, to have the information as to the general correspondence. It may not be possible to bring it down this session, but I would ask him to have it prepared so that it may be procurable at as early a date as possible. I do not want it left over until next session.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I gave instructions that this return should be prepared as rapidly as possible, and it is being done now.

MILITIA CONTRACTS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has the Minister of Militia the papers yet in regard to the contract for supplies to the troops?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I will inquire in the morning.

MONTREAL HARBOUR WORKS.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into committee to consider a certain proposed resolution respecting an advance to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. gentleman from York (Mr. Foster) I beg to state at once that the first objection that he makes to the resolution now before the House does not, in my opinion stand, in view of what the former Government, of which he was a member, did in 1896. In that year, a law was passed by the Government in which the member for York was Finance Minister, and in which the precaution that he pretends is necessary to introduce into this Bill, did not appear. He says that no plans are provided for part of the work to be executed under this loan, and as a matter of fact no plans were provided in the law which he himself assisted in passing in 1896. I read the following clause from the Act of 1896:—

5. The corporation may borrow the sum of one million dollars, or its equivalent in pounds sterling, for the purpose of paying and redeeming the said Montreal harbour bonds and debentures now held by the Government of Canada, and the said demand loan due by the corporation to the Government, and all bonds or debentures issued by the corporation now outstanding and falling due during the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-six, and all loans and advances made to the corporation, and all interest due on any such bonds or debentures, loans and advances,—and also a further sum of one million dollars, or its equivalent in pounds sterling, for the purpose of constructing, extending and improving the wharfs, structures and other accommodations in the harbour of Montreal, in such manner as the corporation, with the consent and approval of the Minister of Public Works, deems best calculated to facilitate trade and increase the convenience and utility of the said harbour.

There is nothing whatever provided in that law as regards plans, and there is not a word mentioned as to how this million dollars was going to be spent. I am credibly informed that no plan of the work proposed to be done was ever presented to the Government at that time. Therefore, the reproach of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) against this part of the resolution providing for the expenditure of $750,000 in the east end of the port of Montreal, does not hold water. I go further and I say, that the resolution now before the House provides all the guarantees necessary that the port of Montreal will be equipped as it should be, and that it will answer the demands made on the Dominion Government ever since 1889 when the question of protecting Montreal against inundations, as well as harbour improvements generally, were discussed and agreed upon between the interested parties. I repeat that this Bill offers all necessary guarantee, and it is a result not only of the representations that were lately made to the Government both by the Harbour Commissioners and the City Council of Montreal, but it also answers the demands that were made by former Harbour Commissioners. One would imagine from the speech made by the hon. member (Mr. Foster) and the articles which he quoted from a certain newspaper in Montreal, that the scheme of dry docks and shipping accommodation in the east end of the port of Montreal was something extraordinary, or, as the newspaper called it, a piece of political jobbery. Let me tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) that there is nothing at all new in the project. It is exactly in conformity with the resolution of the harbour board passed on the 10th April, 1894, which was placed in the hands of the Government then. I regret to be forced to make these long citations, but it is necessary that I should do so in order that I should put the case clearly before the House and the country, for it is important that all the facts should be perfectly known. The resolution of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal to which I refer, is as follows:—

Extracts from the minutes of a monthly meeting of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, held on the 10th April, 1894.

Present:—Henry Bulmer, Esq., Chairman; Hon. Edward Murphy, Victor Hudon, Richard White, W. W. Ogilvie, N. A. Hurteau, Esquires; J. O. Villeneuve, Esq., Mayor; C. H. Gould, L. E. Morin and Andrew Allan, Esquires.

The following motion was then made by Mr. Hurteau:

That in view of the rapidly growing trade of the harbour of Montreal and the imperative necessity for providing for its certain early extension and in view of the financial position of this Board, as shown by the accompanying memoranda, and to enable the Commissioners to meet the obligations already assumed in the carrying out of the plan number 6, keeping faith with the city of Montreal, and to grant such facilities as will ensure the continued successful competition of Montreal with foreign ports by avoiding the possibility of additional charges upon the shipping and trade of the port, be it resolved:

That an application be made to the Governor in Council for such assistance as will enable the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal to secure, in addition to the $1,000,000 for which they have present authority, a further sum of $3,000,000 bearing interest at a rate not higher than 3½ per cent. This sum to be used during the next four years for the following improvements:—

$2,000,000 to complete the arrangements with the city of Montreal and sanctioned by the Governor in Council, and known as plan No. 6, with the proposed wharfs at Maisonneuve; $1,000,000 to build an inland basin at such place in the eastern end of the city as may, upon examination, be found most advantageous, and $1,000,000 to complete the basin at Windmill Point, and other parts of the harbour not included in plan No. 6.

That a committee consisting of the Chairman, the Mayor, W. W. Ogilvie, N. A. Hurteau, Richard White and any other member wishing to join, be named to proceed to Ottawa and urge upon the Government the granting of the assistance referred to in the foregoing resolution.

After consideration the resolution was carried on the understanding that the Commissioners' claim against the Government of $1,000,000 must not be lost sight of, and that the increased expenditure involved would not cause the harbour dues to be increased.

That the chairman be requested to go to Ottawa and arrange for an interview between the Government and the deputation.

Certified a true extract.

(Sgd.) ALEXANDER ROBERTSON,
Secretary.

Following that proceeding of the Harbour Commissioners in 1894, other resolutions were adopted in the same sense. The Harbour Commissioners appointed two of their number to see at what price and on what conditions they could buy the land necessary for the inland basin. They came to Ottawa, and had an interview with the Government. The Government did not give them any satisfaction, but let the matter drag until 1896. In the meantime the matter was not lost sight of. I have here a copy of a petition signed by twenty-eight members of Parliament, some of whom have still seats in this House. That petition is dated the 12th of July, 1894, and one of its clauses reads as follows:—

That the inner basin constructed near the limits of Hochelaga and of the town of Maisonneuve, with its entrance by way of Ruisseau Migeon, would be of incalculable advantage to navigation and commerce.

That a system of dry docks constructed at that same point would also be of incalculable advantage and benefit.

This is signed by twenty-eight Conservative members of Parliament, among whom I notice the name of the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron), the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope), and some others who have since become Senators. So that the question of a dry dock, the question of an inland basin, the question of improvements in the eastern part of the port of Montreal, were considered as a whole by the people of Montreal as far back as 1894. As I have stated, the Government did not act until 1896, and the result was the law which I have just quoted. This law, having been passed without specifying in any way how the money should be spent, it naturally follows that the Government were acting on the representations made to them by the Harbour Commissioners, by the members of Parliament and by the shipping interests in 1894. The shipping interests sent a petition to the Government, representing how necessary it was to have dry docks in the east end of the city of Montreal. This petition was signed by the Union Marine Insurance Company, the Standard Marine Insurance Company, the president of the Board of Marine Underwriters, the British and Foreign Marine Insurance Company, the Reliance Marine Insurance Company, and by all marine insurance companies, by all the shippers and steamship proprietors, and by many others interested in the trade of Montreal, and not only Montreal, but of Canada. There was also a petition dated the 6th of July, 1894, and signed by over 1,200 citizens of Montreal, to the same effect. There were resolutions passed by the city council of Montreal time and again, setting forth these facts, and insisting that something should be done. As I have stated, nothing was done till 1896. But the difficulty was that the Harbour Commissioners, being granted only $1,000,000, were put in this position, that with that sum of money they had to execute the improvements contemplated under plan No. 6, and all the other improvements as well, though the improvements under plan No. 6 were contemplated to cost over $2,000,000. The dispute began among the Harbour Commissioners themselves. They did not know where to expend the money. They said, what is the use of starting, for instance, to widen Commissioners Street or to extend the wharfs in order to allow the city to go on with works to guard against inundation? So they went on patching a little here and a little there, and spending a part of the money in the Windmill basin, but doing nothing of real utility. The result is that the harbour of Montreal is really in a worse condition to-day than it was in 1894 or in 1896, before the loan of $1,000,000 was granted to the Harbour Commissioners. The Harbour Commissioners have spent barely $200,000 of that money, and there remains still in the hands of the Government $810,000, of which about $100,000 is due for work that has been done, so that there remains to be applied, according to that law, $700,000 in round figures. Now, the Government say that on representations made to them during the month of April last, they have considered the whole matter. It is a very complicated one. The first proposition that was laid before the Government in April last by the Harbour Commissioners was to the effect that the Government should assume the interest on the debt due by the Harbour Commissioners, which debt amounted in round figures to $3,500,000. This debt was contracted for harbour improvements in former years, and bears interest at different rates, some of the bonds which are redeemable in eight or nine years, bearing as much as 7 per cent. The interest account of the Harbour Commissioners is, in round figures, $165,000 per annum. The Harbour Commissioners said to the Government: If you advance us $3,000,000 more, including the $700,000 still available under the law of 1896, and consolidate that debt at 2½ per cent interest, a little less than you are paying—for, I understand, the Government have borrowed money at 2½ per cent—the interest account of the Harbour Commissioners will not be increased; we will continue to pay the same amount of interest every year as we are paying now, and we shall have at our disposal $3,000,000 to be spent in the improvements we contemplate. It meant that the Government would have contributed for the first eight or nine years about $50,000 per year, which contribution would decrease according as the bonds were redeemed and replaced by 2½ per cent bonds. The Government could not see their way clear to do that. It would have involved the payment to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal of about $1,000,000 in the course of the next 23 years. But instead of that, the Government said to the Harbour Commissioners: We will advance you $2,000,000 immediately, and leave you the right to spend the balance of the $1,000,000 you have the right to borrow under the statute of 1896, but we will make the interest 3 per cent. Their offer really amounts to this. Suppose the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal would borrow the $2,800,000, as well under the law of 1896 as under this proposed legislation, their interest account would be increased by about $80,000 a year. We are not, and the Harbour Commissioners understand that perfectly well, going to spend this $2,800,000 all at once. That is impossible, even if the commissioners desired to do it. The money will be spent in about three or four years. How are the Harbour Commissioners going to meet the interest? We calculate, like good administrators, that the revenue will go on increasing. If we had kept the tariff as it was two years ago, our revenue would have been 20 per cent more, because it was reduced to that extent. But even taking the revenue as it is, the increase this year shows 40 per cent up to date compared with last year. So that we calculate that as the revenue is increasing, we will be, when these improvements are finished, in a position to meet the interest without charging anything more on goods carried to and from the port. This is a reasonable ground to take, but some of the Harbour Commissioners who oppose the scheme, say: Oh, we have plenty of accommodation, and rather than see the interest account increase, we would prefer to have no improvements whatever. That is a very small, picayune policy. It may suit these gentlemen who have some kind of business in the port to-day, but is one which should not be adopted by this Government, especially when they consider that the port of Montreal is the national port of the Dominion. Will anybody pretend that the port of Montreal can be considered really a port fit to compete with foreign ports, without being equipped with the necessary improvements?

The common sense plan, plan 12a, which is a modification of plan No. 6, and which gives better accommodation at reduced cost, is the plan agreed upon, and the first thing to do is to carry that plan to execution. The execution of that plan will cost, according to the estimate of Mr. John Kennedy, given at the last meeting of the Harbour Commissioners, held on the 31st May last, about $1,800,000, or $100,000 less than the amount that will be at the disposal of the Harbour Commissioners after deducting the $750,000 for the improvements in the east and the $700,000 which the corporation of Montreal is bound to contribute for flood inundation protection. So that the interest account is not changed at all, if part of that money is applied to a dry dock and deep water wharfs in the port. These gentlemen who go before the Board of Trade and the Corn Exchange of Montreal and say that the Government should assume the whole debt and pay all the cost of these improvements, are either not sincere or not logical. If this would increase in any way the interest account of the Harbour Commissioners, I would understand their opposition, but it does not. If you do not make these improvements, will you have what we require, namely, a fully equipped port? Everybody will say that you will not. I know it for a fact—and I say it from my seat, but am not allowed to mention the name—that one of the largest milling companies in the country is ready to build an elevator and even a mill in Montreal, in that part of the harbour where they can have access to deep water wharfs. They cannot have access now because the wharfs, except the one which is used by the Montreal Sugar Refinery, are all low water wharfs. Although they cost $700,000, some of them are perfectly useless because the water is not deep enough. In order to accommodate, not only the trade of these people who have done a fair business around Montreal since a number of years, but the trade that we contemplate bringing to that port, we must have deep water wharfs, and we cannot have them elsewhere than in the eastern part of the city. You are not going to build these deep water wharfs beyond Victoria Bridge. You are not going to take out 27 feet of rock in order to build deep water wharfs beyond that bridge. It would be nonsensical to talk of such a thing. So it is admitted that the only place we can build them is at that eastern part of the island; and as the jurisdiction of the Harbour Commissioners extends to Longue Pointe, there is lots of ground to be taken.

It is all very well, when fictitious opposition is made, to cry out that this is proposed because some parties have land in that part of the city. If allusion is made to me, let me say that I have more property in the west, towards St. Henri, than I am interested in, in the other end of the harbour. I do not look at the question from that point of view, but as one of public benefit to the whole city and the Dominion. Is it in the interest of the trade and commerce of the country that the port of Montreal should be properly equipped? If it is, and if this will not change the financial position of the Harbour Commissioners as regards the interest account, why should there be any opposition to it? There is opposition, not to the scheme itself, but to the dry dock proposal, by some parties who give as their reason that these docks have been built in Quebec and elsewhere by means of money from the Dominion treasury. If the Government were disposed to give us $500,000 to build that dry dock and administer it and enjoy the revenue from it, that would be satisfactory, but they are not disposed to make us a grant of that amount. They are ready, however, to meet us half way and advance the $2,000,000, with the $700,000 we have at our disposal already, on certain conditions. We are interested, and so is the Government, in having this national port fully equipped as it should be, and they insist that the money shall be expended in such and such a manner. Is it a better guarantee for the trade of the country that it should be that way or that all these should be left out? Some days ago I was arguing this point with one of the opponents of the scheme. He said: Drop the dry dock, drop the deep-water wharf, and I will vote a million for improvements. This gentleman is the representative, I regret to say, of large shipping interests. I said: My dear sir, that would only be playing into the hands of those who say there is jobbery in this and that the money is going to be squandered. The only guarantee that this money will be properly spent and applied to the improvements necessary to make the port of Montreal what it should be, is to fix it by law. The Harbour Commissioners and the Minister of Public Works, whoever he may be, will be obliged to obey the law. I think that is a fair way of arguing it, and is the only way to put the question.

Now, I do not want to answer what has been stated in the newspapers about this question—there is no use in that. The report of the meeting I attended, which appears in the "Witness," or some other paper, has been referred to. If the arguments they use are no better founded than the report of that meeting, they cannot have much force. The report, for instance, says that I said that I did not care about public opinion. The idea that a man who has been in public life for 25 years, and who occupies the position I do, by the unanimous choice of my fellow-citizens of Montreal, would say that I do not care what public opinion is, would be to ruin myself politically and as a citizen of Montreal. What I stated about public opinion, and what is wrongly reported is this: One of the gentlemen said that if we voted the money in that manner, there would be an indignation meeting. I said: Sir, I defy you to call an indignation meeting, and for every thousand persons that you have there, I will have a hundred thousand to support me in the stand I take on this question. He did not accept the challenge, and he will not accept it. But the opposition, as I have said, is illogical and unreasonable, and I am afraid it is even worse; I am afraid that it is narrow-minded. I am afraid that certain people fear that the trade and commerce of Montreal and of the country will expand in such a way that their fleet of steamers and canal boats will not be able to compete. We have heard of these small jealousies before. For instance, three years ago a great firm of shipowners, the Elder-Dempster Company, began to send their steamers to the port of Montreal, steamers with a tonnage of as much as 12,000 tons. When that was mentioned first, all these narrow-minded people pooh-pooed the idea. They said that no such steamers would come to Montreal for more than one season, that they would lose so much money that they would be taken off the line. But the steamers have come for the last three years, and this year the fleet is composed of 15 steamers. They have kept on coming and increasing, and still there is complaint that they have not the necessary accommodation. It is the same way about elevators. These people say: It is all very well to talk about elevators. There is an elevator of 150,000 bushels—I think that is the capacity—and it does not pay. How then do you think that elevators with a capacity of half a million bushels will pay? So it goes—we must not have elevators, we must not have harbour accommodation; it is always the same narrow policy preventing the expansion of the trade of the country and of the port of Montreal. Of course, it is too bad that we should meet with such opposition; but it must be faced and overcome in the regular way, by the force of public opinion.

Now, it has been stated by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) that the Government, and the Minister of Public Works particularly, were guilty of having delayed the adoption of the plan during the fall of 1897. In answer to that I want to say that the Government have acted with more diligence than their predecessors. Representations have been made only lately to the Government by the Harbour Commissioners and the city. The last memorial was sent on the 19th of April last. So, the Minister and the Government have not been guilty of delaying this important matter even during the session. But, as regards the adoption of the plan during the summer of 1897, let me say that the Harbour Commissioners, the Board of Trade, the Corn Exchange and the Chambre de Commerce could not come to an understanding as regards the modifications to be made in plan No. 6. They knew very well that that plan had to be modified. It had been made in 1889 or 1890, and approved by the Government. But the conditions were changed entirely and it had to be modified. It was not until late last fall that we could come to an agreement. But suppose the Minister of Public Works had told the Harbour Commissioners to go on with the plan, they would have discovered that it would be useless to proceed with the money they had at their disposal, that they could do no effective work to carry out the arrangement which had been made with the city. So, instead of being accused of delaying the work, the Minister of Public Works has taken the necessary precaution to see that these works should be executed in a proper manner and according to the plan which would give the accommodation required. The hon. member for York has thought proper to refer to some little difference of opinion between the Minister of Public Works and myself. But on this question we have always been in accord. The Minister of Public Works has taken a broad view of this question from the beginning. I have had many interviews with him, and he has always declared that, in order to render justice to the country and the port of Montreal, he would never accept any but a comprehensive plan which would cover all the improvements necessary. I give him credit for that. I know the energy he has. He has carried his point. Now, under this law, if it passes, we know that we shall have the harbour of Montreal equipped as it should be.

Now, there may be personal differences. But this is a question of public interest, not only for Montreal, but for the country, and these little unpleasantnesses can be left aside. There is no suspicion to be cast on the line of conduct I have followed in this matter, nor on the conduct of the Minister of Public Works. Perhaps I may be allowed to draw attention to another phase of the question. It is not only the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal and the trade of the country which are interested in these improvements. You must go back to 1890, and look at the arrangement that was made between the city of Montreal and the Harbour Commissioners, with the sanction of the Government. The city has just suffered from heavy damage from floods in its trade and commerce to the extent of a million dollars, and the people decided to do something to protect the city against these inundations. They consulted engineers, they appointed a commission, they consulted all the interested parties, railway companies, and so forth, and they came to the conclusion to adopt the plan that I have mentioned, plan No. 6, the completion of which would entail upon the city an expenditure of a million dollars. The city went before the legislature and obtained power to borrow a million dollars to execute certain improvements, in conjunction with the Harbour Commissioners, to protect the city against inundation. This Bill was submitted to the people, who voted for it. Thereupon, what did the city do? Not only did the corporation borrow a million dollars, but spent nearly $500,000 in preliminary works, in providing a temporary dyke, in changing the sewerage system, in widening Commissioner Street, in building tunnels to communicate to the railways, under Berri Street and Beaudry Street, and other works, amounting altogether to over $500,000. So that the city having made this arrangement in good faith with the Harbour Commissioners, which was sanctioned by the Governor in Council in 1890, went on that spent, as I say, over $500,000. I forgot to mention the pumping stations which were established. There was a temporary dyke which cost in round numbers over $200,000. This dyke was erected on Commissioners Street, it was considered at the time too narrow. This dyke was supposed to last for five years, and was built of earth and timber. But it has proved to be useless, so much so that when the city was threatened with another inundation last spring, if the water had risen six inches more, the city would have been inundated, and the dyke would not have served to keep the water from overflowing the streets. The pumping engines were working splendidly, the surface water and the sewer water were all disposed of, but if the flood had risen six inches more, the lower part of the city would have been inundated. Now, the city is in this position, and we have stated it in our memorial to the Government. We say that we have spent over $400,000 in temporary works to prevent inundations. We have contributed besides to certain works of the Harbour Commissioners nearly $250,000. There is only one thing left for the city to do, and that is to claim back those moneys and do its own work with whatever plan it may have on hand. The aid granted by this resolution is given to the Harbour Commissioners and settles the whole matter. The city will be in a position, as soon as the plans are completed, to carry out its part of the work and to pay over to the Harbour Commissioners what it owes on the guard pier. I am aware that in certain quarters there is dissatisfaction because the Government have shown sufficient business ability to make this arrangement. However, this arrangement will make the Government popular in the city of Montreal. This question has been pending for over twenty-five years, and now it is going to be settled once for all, and the credit of the settlement will to a certain extent belong to the Government. Certain parties are not satisfied. Well, we cannot help that, we are perfectly satisfied. If it was necessary that this scheme should be submitted to the general public of Montreal, it would be endorsed by 90 per cent of the population. The only difficulty, as I have said, is on the part of the Corn Exchange, on the part of the underwriters, and of the Board of Trade. But the Chambre de Commerce de Montréal has passed a resolution favouring it in the most formal manner. The only difficulty with these other public bodies is this: They say, if you want the dry dock let the Government pay for it. When they say that if the city wants dry docks the Dominion Government must pay for them, then the Dominion Government has a perfect right to say: If you do not want the arrangement that has been proposed, we cannot grant the assistance that you ask us to give. We are advancing you two million dollars at 3 per cent. We are making a fair offer and we are settling a difficulty which has been pending for the last ten years. We are doing justice to the city of Montreal and effecting a great improvement on behalf of the general trade of the country. I know that the proposition to build dry docks is called a piece of jobbery, but that cannot be helped. I have here a report of the council of the Board of Trade for 1897. Time and again the attention of the Government was brought to this question. Here is a petition that was sent to the Government on the 27th of June, 1897, by the Board of Trade of Montreal, signed by John McKergow, president, and Mr. Hadrill, secretary. I will read one clause:

That inasmuch as the commerce of this country and of the western states will follow the St. Lawrence route when proper facilities are afforded, it is desirable in the general interests of this Dominion that the port of Montreal be promptly provided with all necessary harbour and dry dock accommodation.

This petition was duly approved by the Board of Trade of Montreal. But now they say: We do not want these dry docks, they are no longer necessary, if you ask us to pay for them. Of course, if you pay for them, they are necessary. Is that logical, is that reasonable? There was another resolution passed by the marine underwriters, signed by Mr. E. L. Bond, who has published the correspondence this morning in the "Herald," and who takes the same line of argument that I have just mentioned. He admits that the dry docks are absolutely necessary, but thinks the Government should build them:

Little or no progress has been made towards the extension of the dry dock at Quebec or the establishment of one in the vicinity of Montreal. These matters appear to have been overshadowed by the discussion on harbour improvements.

So that it is everywhere admitted that the dry docks are necessary. In the report of the previous year we find a similar opinion expressed by the underwriters:

The necessity for increased dry dock accommodation, so as to take in the larger class of steamers now coming to this port has been frequently emphasized during the past season, and the association has approached the Department of Public Works, strongly urging that a dry dock suitable for modern vessels be built at Montreal as soon as possible, and that, to some extent, to meet the present need, the Quebec dock be enlarged.

That dock is only 400 feet long and cannot admit the large steamers running at the present time. As to the construction of a dry dock at Montreal, that is absolutely necessary. The only objection that could be made to the scheme would be that instead of a wet basin, as was proposed in 1894, which would have involved an expenditure of probably two or three million dollars, it is intended to have a dry dock, which is more necessary at the present time. The Government should be congratulated on the stand they have taken in the matter. They are coming to the help of the trade of the country, and they are settling a question which should have been disposed of long ago. No later than last year I happened to mention the proposed establishment of a dry dock in Montreal in the House. I subsequently received a letter from Mr. E. L. Bond, as follows:—

Montreal, 8th June, 1897.

Dear Mr. Préfontaine,—In my capacity as a member of the council of the Board of Trade, and president of the Board of Marine Underwriters, I desire to acknowledge our appreciation of the stand you have taken in connection with having any additional dry dock accommodation given to the port of Montreal. A large dock is a decided necessity, and the port of Montreal certainly deserves recognition. If the underwriters can be of any service in backing you up, kindly let me know, and whatever influence we have will be brought to bear.

Faithfully yours,

E. L. BOND.

R. Préfontaine, Esq., M.P.,
Ottawa.

Mr. Bond is president of the Marine Underwriters. I have here a resolution adopted by the Chambre de Commerce, as follows:—

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE DISTRICT OF MONTREAL.

Special Meeting of the Council.

Wednesday, 1st June, 1898.

The Hon. Alphonse Desjardins, Chairman.

After consideration the following motion was made by Mr. J. X. Perrault, seconded by Mr. Damase Masson, and carried, without a dissentient voice:

Resolved,—That this chamber affirms again the imperative necessity of building a dry dock, as well as that of extending the deep water wharfs in the Bay of Hochelaga, so as to allow elevators to be constructed and trains to circulate upon them, in compliance with the motion proposed by His Honour the Mayor of Montreal, now under the consideration of the Harbour Commissioners.

Certified a true extract.

S. COTE,
Secretary.

This resolution endorsed in the most formal manner the scheme as now submitted. As is well known, I stated many times that there are some people who are not satisfied. We cannot help that; so long as the majority are satisfied, the Government will have done its duty. It is proposed by the Minister of Public Works, in order to afford a further guarantee that plan 12a shall be carried out at once, to submit an amendment to the Bill, providing that two months be allowed to prepare plans and estimates for the dry dock and deep water works. It is perfectly right that all guarantees necessary should be given in order that the public may be satisfied. There is no question as to one part of the city being antagonistic to another part of the city. Those who live in the east end are as good citizens as those who live in the west or the upper part of the city, and it is no question of east and west but of the whole city. I would not be faithful to my duty if I did not, as representing both the city and the harbour of Montreal, ask fair-play for every part of the city. I do not represent the west or the east. I am in favour of plan 12a and the improvements in the centre of the city being proceeded with at once and without further delay, with the necessary guarantee that all parts of the scheme shall be carried out. As I have stated repeatedly in other places, this Bill will have the effect of relieving the burdens of the port of Montreal.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not desire to prolong this discussion, but one or two remarks made by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) call for a little rejoinder at my hands. I may say, in the first place, that with regard to the question of the construction of a dry dock at Montreal, the contradictions of sinners have been many and great. So far as I have been able to ascertain, the real ground of dispute between eastenders and westenders is not so much whether a dry dock should or should not be built, but it is whether the Dominion or the city of Montreal should pay the interest on the outlay. That appears to be the principal object in dispute, an object which most of us need not very particularly concern ourselves about. But I have to say to the hon. member for York that I think he acted unjustly and without due regard to his own dignity and position in the House when he availed himself, sheltered by an anonymous article in a newspaper, whether respectable, pious or temperance, to virtually bring charges of boodling against my hon. friend, which he was not willing to father himself. I do not consider that a fair mode of carrying on political warfare.

Mr. FOSTER. It was not an anonymous article.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Was it signed by anybody?

Mr. FOSTER. It was an editorial.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. An editorial is anonymous. It may have been written by Tom, Dick or Harry, and it does not involve the fact that it was written by the editor or signed by him, and there is some reason in the French practice of articles being signed with the names of the writers. But I want to call the attention of the House to this fact. In the article read by the hon. member for York, and incorporated in his speech and to a very considerable extent under the shelter of his personality, though he did not attempt to make the charge direct, the charge amounted to this, that a conspiracy to defraud the public treasury was alleged against two hon. members, the hon. gentleman who has just spoken and my hon. friend beside me. I am not going to be the conscience keeper of anybody but myself, I am not going to undertake to dictate what an hon. gentleman sees fit to do on his responsibility, and I am not going to allow myself to be placed in the position of dictating to my fellow colleagues what schemes they should recommend to this House or to Council. When a scheme is recommended I shall judge it to the best of my ability. If it is not in the public interest, I shall oppose it; if it is in the public interest, I shall support it; but I shall not be influenced one hair's breadth in my judgment of any scheme presented in this House or Council by any anonymous accusation brought against any friend of mine or even against any enemy of mine. At this very moment there is before this House a report, the adoption of which will presently be moved, which contains these words: "The chairman of the committee on the Drummond Counties Railway Investigation asked the two Conservative members at the close of that investigation what they had to say as to the question of the charges of corruption made over and over again in every organ of hon. gentlemen opposite against my hon. friend and other members of the party. And, Sir, what was the answer made to those charges then? On the part of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart)—and he will correct this statement if it is not correctly made—the hon. member said, "We never made any charges of corruption." The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) stated: "Candidly I never heard anything in the House about corruption." If those charges were not directly made in this House, I think they were insinuated by a great many members who spoke on the subject. They were insinuated in other places and more than insinuated. They were taken up and and the changes rung on them from one end of the country to the other. My hon. friend was held up as a corrupt man, and it was declared there was a corrupt bargain in regard to this Drummond Railway contract. What did the Government do? On the first day of the session they gave hon. gentlemen who were their accusers every opportunity to prove their charges, and for four months they had the chance, if they dared, of coming forward and substantiating a charge against my hon. friend. These cowardly slanderers who did not hesitate to circulate this calumny under the disguise of anonymous charges in the press, never dared to appear before our committee; never dared to advance a charge against my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte). That, Sir, should be a lesson to hon. gentlemen opposite, and especially to a gentleman who occupies the position of the hon. member for York (Mr.

Foster), not to incorporate under the guise of a newspaper editorial charges of boodling or corruption which he is not prepared to substantiate himself. And I say to my hon. friends opposite: If any of you believe that in this proposition made by my hon. friend beside me there lurks any germ of boodling or corruption, come forward like men and demand an inquiry and you shall have an inquiry. Speaking for my colleagues, I pledge my word that if any of you dare to father that charge, if any of you dare to allege corruption, you shall have an opportunity of either substantiating it or being disgraced as calumniators. But unless hon. gentlemen are prepared to do that, they have no right, directly or indirectly by innuendo or in any shape or way, to bring forward a charge that they are not prepared to prove and substantiate.

Now, Sir, one other point, and only one. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) complained, not altogether I think unreasonably, that this important measure had been brought down at a very late period of the session. Under ordinary circumstances I would admit that there was a good deal to be said for that contention, but I want to call the attention of the House to this fact: Never—and I speak with knowledge—never, I think, in any single session of Parliament since confederation, have there been so many days devoted to the consideration of Government business, and Government business alone, as there have been during this session of four months. Never have I known such a close attention to and so many days granted to Government business. Never had the Opposition so many chances to bring forward any charges or discuss any matters; never were opportunities more wasted. Now, Sir, I do not at all say that during the last week or ten days the hon. gentleman from York (Mr. Foster) has wasted the time of the House; but I am in the judgment of the House, whether the greater part of the last ten days has not been consumed in discussion of very trivial subjects, to the injury and prevention of discussion on other and much more important matters. Had the Government been allowed, this measure would have been brought down a week ago. Had the Government not been interfered with by motions—which I must with all due respect to the gentlemen who moved them, characterize as very unimportant—the hon. gentleman from York (Mr. Foster) would have no occasion to complain of the difficulty of discussing this measure at full length. Possibly I might venture to suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) opposite, that although I acquit him for the last ten days or fortnight, during a long period of the session he himself occupied an unreasonable length of time, and I think I remember not less than four speeches of four hours duration by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster).

Mr. FOSTER. Your memory is too long.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is inconveniently correct, I am afraid. I recollect on one occasion when my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) was delivering a somewhat fiery address on the subject of the misdoings of the present Government, I took occasion to send to the library for the orations of Demosthenes, and I found by actual calculation that the four phillipics of Demosthenes had occupied just exactly the same space as was occupied by one attack of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster).

Mr. FOSTER. Demosthenes never had such a set of sinners as you to look after.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That may be. But there is a distinction, too, the difference being, that the orations of Demosthenes have lasted for 2,000 years as models of vituperative eloquence, and I am rather afraid my hon. friend's (Mr. Foster) won't last for two thousand minutes.

But, Sir, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) objects to my reference to these Pagan classics, I may tell him that I compared him the next time with another book. I took the revised version of the scriptures and I carefully scanned the length of space occupied in "Hansard" by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), and I found that the least of his speeches occupied precisely the same space as was contained in the revised version aforesaid, by the whole book of Job with the Lamentations of Jeremiah thrown in. Now, I would just say to my hon. friend: He is a good debater, but I would suggest to him that he be merciful as he is strong, and I do say that in my judgment he would be twice as effective if he were exactly half as long.

Mr. BERGERON. If the present Government stay in power for any length of time to come I can tell them they will see many Jobs and lots of lamentations in Canada. I shall not refer just now to the Drummond County deal, for that will be a matter of discussion later on; but I may point out that the composition of the committee which inquired into that transaction offered very little inducement to persons to bring charges against the Minister of Public Works or any other Minister. I know that my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) is a just man, and I would remind him that when the late Government held certain investigations in 1891 there were lawyers employed by the Government who acted for and against those who were accused, a thing which was not allowed in the Drummond County investigation. My hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) has said that were it not for some frivolous discussions in the House this resolution might have been brought down a week ago. Let me tell him that he is making a mistake in that. It could not have been brought down before, and it is only brought down to-day because my hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Pré-fontaine), who is a very clever man, has been able to give two or three days respite to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, so that he may have this Bill passed through the House and then make them swallow the contents of it.

I regret very much that in a discussion of this kind we are not allowed to proceed with it entirely as a matter of business, and without ting-tinting it with political colours. Hon. gentlemen in this House who have heard the discussion and who do not thoroughly know the working of our harbour board in Montreal may be somewhat surprised, and I do not wonder. It looks something of a mystery, and I remember that years ago when I first came to Parliament it was a mystery to me. I thought it extraordinary to see the amount of money that was being spent by gentlemen who were not responsible to anybody, and when Parliament was called to help the harbour board one way or another, nothing could be answered in the House to give information to the representatives of the people as to how the money went. But, Sir, whatever they be, we have a harbour board in Montreal and the condition of affairs existing there now seems very simple to me. I do not believe there is a member in this House, from whatever province he may come, who would not approve of everything which has been said both by the Minister of Public Works and by my hon. friend (Mr. Préfontaine) in favour of our doing everything possible to put the port of Montreal in a position to render to the country—I say the country generally and not the city of Montreal alone—what is expected from it by Canadian trade. I go further, I am ready to sanction everything that has been said by the Minister of Public Works and by my hon. friend (Mr. Préfontaine) in favour of having docks in the city of Montreal, whether you put them at Maisonneuve or elsewhere; and I admit frankly at once, that Maisonneuve is the only place to put them. I say further, that we should facilitate the building of elevators and of everything else in that direction which would increase the capacity of the Montreal harbour for the accommodation of the great trade which is coming to it. But, Sir, in what position are we? We know that what the Government is doing to-day is simply granting help by a guarantee to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal to enable them to borrow money, for which we are responsible, at the rate of 3 per cent. We do not give them money. There is a body called the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, which is composed in the majority of friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, gentlemen in whom they have confidence. I think they are men in whom we should have confidence; if they are not, surely hon. gentlemen opposite are responsible. These gentlemen say to the Government: We desire to borrow money; you are good enough to guarantee the interest on that money; we borrow that money to beautify the harbour of Montreal, or, to speak more correctly, to put the harbour of Montreal in a proper condition; but if you attach a rider to that, where is the good you are doing to us? The Harbour Commissioners say: We want $2,000,000 to put the harbour in a proper condition; you are ready to guarantee the interest on that money; but why do you want us immediately to take $750,000 for a purpose which may be very good—for we believe there should be dry docks and as many elevators as possible, to facilitate the shipping of the millions of bushels of wheat which we would like to see pass through Montreal from western Canada and from the States; but we do not want to provide all these things with the money which we have at our disposal for the improvement of the harbour proper. It seems to me that is quite natural. Why has not my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), or my hon. friend the mayor of Montreal (Mr. Préfontaine) impressed upon the minds of the Harbour Commissioners the reasons which they have given here in Parliament. I understand that the gentleman who is most opposed to the plans of the Government to-day, Mr. Bickerdike, is one of their best friends. Now, I do not want the House to suppose that this is a fight between the east and the west. I hope the days of such fights in Montreal are over. It is not a fight between English-speaking Montrealers and French-speaking Montrealers; and I think it would be put an end to immediately if my right hon. friend who, in the last election, carried nearly seven-eighths of the seats in the district of Montreal, would come down here with a motion asking Parliament to vote a certain amount of money to build dry docks in the harbour of Montreal. Why should the Harbour Commissioners be called upon to provide them out of their own money? Because, I repeat, we do not give them a cent. If they gave $750,000 to build a dry dock in Montreal they would be giving their own money. They say to the Government: We would like to see dry docks, but why do you not build them out of public moneys as you have done at Kingston and at Quebec? It seems to me that we could arrive at an agreement in this matter if the Government of the day were really impressed with the idea of the Minister of Public Works, that these dry docks are absolutely necessary, which I believe is true. The Minister of Public Works has said many good things here this morning in favour of the harbour of Montreal; but I think he would have rendered a great deal better service to the harbour of Montreal if, instead of making these fine speeches, he had been at work, even two years ago, helping to get the harbour of Montreal put in a proper condition. There is no doubt there has been a division among the Harbour Commissioners themselves. They had a plan called plan No. 6. I am not conversant with the different plans; but I have read that the majority of the Harbour Commissioners were in favour of that plan. But the Minister of Public Works has been able to drive them to accept another plan. My hon. friend from Maisonneuve (Mr. Préfontaine) said a short time ago that plan No. 12a was generally accepted. Well, it is generally accepted; but some of the Harbour Commissioners are not in favour of it. They say that they are willing to accept plan No. 12a, which is the plan of the Minister of Public Works, rather than have nothing at all. But to say that they are perfectly satisfied with it—I would like to hear every one of them say that before I would believe it. Now, I want to say to the members of this House from the other provinces that the harbour of Montreal stands in a peculiar position. It is a national harbour; it is the harbour of the whole country; it is the harbour through which everything that goes to western Canada or that comes from western Canada passes; yet, if you look at the public records of this Dominion, you will find that not a cent of public money has been expended for that harbour, in the proper sense of the word. With a Board of Harbour Commissioners, a body that has been recognized in years gone by, and that is recognized to-day by the present Government, I say it does not look like the action of business men to fight that board, half the members of which have been appointed by the Government, or to do what my hon. friend from Maisonneuve has insinuated just now—refuse them a cent of money unless they accept the conditions imposed upon them by the Minister of Public Works and that hon. gentleman. This morning I heard the Minister of Public Works speak of the Windmill Basin as having been built without having been authorized. It struck me at the time as a pretty strong assertion, and I see by what I heard my hon. friend from Maisonneuve read that the Windmill Basin was asked for and accepted by the Harbour Commissioners and authorized in 1894.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.
No.

Mr. BERGERON. That is what the hon. gentleman read. I took a note of it at the time, because I could not understand the statement of the hon. Minister of Public Works. We know that the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal cannot make an expenditure of money where it has not been authorized; and when my hon. friend from Maisonneuve tried a few moments ago to raise a political discussion over that, saying that it was a most popular move on the part of the Government, it struck me that my hon. friend, if he had thought a moment, would have known that the Harbour Commissioners who passed those resolutions in 1894 in favour of a dry dock at Maisonneuve were Conservatives; while those who refused to build dry docks at Maisonneuve, the particular work which my hon. friend seems so anxious to have carried out, are Liberals. So that, if the move is a popular one, there is a diversity of opinion on the subject between the present Government and the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, who are, most of them, nominees of hon. gentlemen opposite. My hon. friend from Maisonneuve said a moment ago that Mr. Bond had written a letter to the Montreal "Gazette" of this morning—and he wrote something similar in a roundabout way a short time ago—in favour of dry docks at Maisonneuve and everything else my hon. friend advocates. The merchants of Montreal are all in favour of those works, but they want the Government to construct them. I also favour the dry docks at Maisonneuve, the elevators, and all the harbour improvements the Minister of Public Works desires. I say it is a proper answer of Mr. Bond to say to the Government: We want these improvements to be made out of Government moneys, and not out of the moneys of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

I believe that the hon. Minister of Public Works waited until this period of the session because that adjourned meeting of the Harbour Commissioners will allow the Government to put through their measure, and when it becomes law, as probably it will, they will say to the commissioners: Accept our gift of a guarantee with the rider put on it—that is, take $750,000 out of your money to build docks or you will not get any.

Mr. HAGGART. I wish to make a personal explanation in reply to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. If he had taken the evidence and read the full text of it, given before the Drummond County Railway Committee, he would perhaps have better understood my remarks. If I remember rightly, Mr. Lister, who is the chairman of the committee, asked me and Mr. Powell if we had any further evidence to produce in reference to the charge of corruption against the Minister of Public Works. I told him that I never heard any such charge having been made in this House. He replied that if it was not made in the House, it was made in the country and in the press. I answered that the only charge I noticed in the press was that implied in the remark of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), that if these charges of corruption were investigated, it might be found that others than the Minister were interested. That was the statement I made, and Mr. Powell spoke with reference to a charge being made in the House.

Mr. LISTER. The exact words are given, which were used by myself as well as those spoken by the hon. gentleman and his colleague. They are in the report and speak for themselves.

Mr. HAGGART. But it is only a part of the conversation that is in the report.

Mr. LISTER. It is all there.

Mr. HAGGART. I beg your pardon; it is not.

Mr. PENNY. The question of the Montreal harbour is a very vexed and difficult one, and I am very glad that the Government have found some solution. The solution they have reached is one that should be accepted by all who are anxious to see the improvements carried out as speedily as possible. The hon. Minister of Public Works has now reached a conclusion which, in my opinion, he should have reached a long time ago. He has now decided what he thinks is necessary for improving the harbour of Montreal, and if he had done this about a year ago, he would have prevented a long and bitter controversy. The absolute necessity of doing something to improve the harbour is acknowledged on all sides. What we require is to have the harbour equipped with modern wharfs and appliances. We require wharfs which will permit lines of railway to run as near as possible to the ship's sides and on which elevators can be built. There is a great deal more grain passing through the port to-day than ever in the past. The Parry Sound Railway is bringing in a great deal, and other sources are bound to add to the quantity. I was told only a short time ago by a gentleman interested in the carrying trade that if we had been able to handle it and if he could have found out that the canals would be opened early enough this spring, most of the Leiter wheat, which went to Europe, would have passed through the harbour of Montreal. Montreal is the furthest inland ocean port to-day, it is the business metropolis of Canada, and on its welfare depends that of the whole country. That is why the Harbour Commissioners are asking the assistance of the Government. It is very unfortunate that a question which should never have been raised was introduced into this controversy. I refer to the jealousy between the east and the west. There is absolutely no foundation for the supposed jealousies between these two ends of the city. There is as much English capital invested in the east end of the city of Montreal as anywhere else, and lately a great deal of French Canadian capital has been invested in the western portion of the city. The proposition now before the House is, in my opinion, a very good one. The greater part of this money will be spent in the west, or older part of the harbour, and the smaller amount in the eastern part. I know it is contended that the latter expenditure is unnecessary; but if we are to increase the export trade of the country through the port of Montreal, we must provide improved wharfs, on which elevators can be erected, and that part of the harbour is the only portion where this can be done. Objection is also made to the dry dock; but, as has been pointed out, the underwriters and the shippers there have asked for it, and if the building of a dry dock will reduce the rates of insurance on vessels coming to Montreal, that alone will be a very great advantage, because the high insurance rates are one of the great drawbacks to the St. Lawrence route. Marine insurance is very onerous to importers and exporters. For my part, I am in favour of the proposed scheme. It will give Montreal what it requires in the way of improved wharf facilities, and I am satisfied that when finished it will please all parties. There is only one other point I would like to refer to. I have not seen the Bill, but the hon. Minister of Public Works promised me that a clause would be inserted, providing for equal facilities to all railways running into the harbour, and I hope that any elevators which may be built will be opened to all railways carrying grain.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not care to say much about this, because there is a great deal in it of which I know nothing, but there does seem to be ground for suspicion that this scheme is not altogether right. The broad fact that an excited and animated controversy has taken place between the mayor of Montreal and the Board of Commissioners—and, if we may believe what we see in the press, between different members of the Cabinet—with regard to how this expenditure is made and where it shall be made, justifies the suspicion that there is something wrong. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), with a good deal of warmth, sent a challenge across the floor of the House. I thought it was as empty a challenge as I had heard for a long time, and it seems to me rather humiliating, coming from the source it did. I should certainly have expected better from that hon. gentleman. It appeared that the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) this morning read extracts from a paper giving the impression that there was a suspicion of corruption connected with this transaction with either the Minister of Public Works or the present mayor of Montreal. It seems to me that when you find in any respectable and responsible paper like the Montreal "Witness," an account of what took place at a meeting, we are justified in believing there is something in it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Make a charge, then.

Mr. SPROULE. It is well enough to say: Make a charge. We may not be in a position to make a charge, but we find that those who ought to know most about it make very strong insinuations. This newspaper is responsible for every line it writes, and nobody knows that better than the hon. Minister of Public Works and the mayor of Montreal, the hon. member for Maisonneuve

(Mr. Préfontaine). I read this article, not very carefully, I admit, but the inference I drew from it was that the present mayor of Montreal, a member of this House who advocates this loan, owns a lot of property in the very locality where it is proposed to spend this money, and the Government is asking this House to vote the money on certain conditions, one of which is that a certain amount of it shall be spent in that locality. The Harbour Commissioners do not believe that it would be wise to bind themselves to spend the money there, and the Montreal "Witness" insinuates, as I understand it, that if the money is so spent certain parties will benefit, one of them being the mayor of Montreal. The Minister of Trade and Commerce gets up and says: I dare you to make your charge, when he knows that we are not in possession of sufficient information to make a charge; but, if we can believe the reports of what took place, we have enough to justify a very strong suspicion. According to the "Witness," the mayor of Montreal proposed a resolution embodying his proposals. But Mr. Bickerdike objected to any section being named:

The mayor replied that he was anxious not to have the phrase "east end" used, as there were some who objected to everything that was proposed for the east end, and others who objected to anything being done in the west end. As for the bogey of dear land raised by Mr. Bickerdike, he could sell the commissioners plenty of land at ten cents per foot.

Mr. Bickerdike (Innocently)—But not on this very section, I suppose?

The Mayor.—Yes, on this very section.

Mr. Bickerdike.—I thought so.

He could not sell the land unless he owned it. So, when we see this hon. gentleman helping to pass a Bill in this House to give a loan to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal on condition that they shall spend part of the money in the locality where he owns this property, is there not justification for the suspicion that there is a transaction behind by which he is to profit? Does not this arouse such suspicion as to justify us in calling attention to the matter, so that the hon. gentleman may have an opportunity to make such explanations as will justify his course or satisfy the House that there is nothing in the statement in this paper. With regard to the other statement of the paper, it seems to me pretty strong:

Mr. Tarte and Mr. Préfontaine are in such haste in rushing through their political job that they ask the Harbour Commission to commit itself to a project which has never been undertaken by the commission, for which no site has been chosen, for which there are no plans, the cost of which has not been even roughly estimated, and the commission to bind itself to proceed with the expenditure upon the unplanned, unconsidered work as fast as it proceeds with the work in the central portion of the harbour, which has been demanded, considered and planned, and even half executed, during the last fifteen or twenty years. There is one thing that was made very plain yesterday, and that is that the Government as a whole has not required that the commission shall commit itself to this dock jobbery. We should judge from Mr. Bickerdike's statements that the Premier and the Minister of Agriculture were opposed to the job, and that Mr. Tarte alone in the Government is trying to force the job through. The commission is apparently to get the two millions for expenditure as it thinks best, and should not commit itself.

I confess that that is my own opinion—it should not commit itself. The Harbour Commissioners are charged with the responsibility of doing this work and of spending this money so as to be of the greatest benefit to the trade of the port of Montreal. Is it likely that this money will ever be returned to the Dominion treasury? From the experience of the past, I think we may reasonably say that we do not expect it will ever be paid back. It is true that the interest may be paid upon it, as the Harbour Commissioners, I understand, have always promptly and honestly paid their interest. But suppose that, as is intimated here, the shipping of the port should drop off, or that improvident expenditures should prevent them from paying the interest, what then? The Government would have to forego the collection of this money, principal and interest; that is, we should virtually have to make this a gift to the city of Montreal. I do not object to the expenditure if it is made properly and wisely and under proper precautions. But I do hold that the Harbour Commissioners, who are charged with the responsibility of looking after it and laying it out, should be the best judges where the money should be spent. I do not think we should vote this large sum and surround it with conditions such as are desired by the hon. Minister of Public Works and the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Préfontaine).

Mr. DESMARAIS. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I regret that I am not conversant enough with the English tongue to address the House in the language spoken by the majority in Parliament, so as to make myself perfectly understood by all my hon. colleagues. Still, as the representative of one of the most important constituencies of the city of Montreal, I deem it my duty to give expression to my views, while at the same time voicing the opinion of my constituents on the question now under consideration.

There seems to be a perfect consensus of opinion on one point, namely, that the time has come to equip the Montreal harbour with all the necessary improvements worthy of its commanding importance. There seems however, to exist a difference of opinion on one single point. But I submit that the cause of this difference of opinion is not such that it ought to prevail under the circumstances; because it is only private interests which are opposing the measure brought down by the Government.

Mr. SPROULE.

I will not undertake here to enter into a review of the Montreal harbour question. My hon. colleagues are conversant with what has transpired within the last few years in this connection; they know the struggles that have taken place and the personal differences that now exist concerning this vexed question. They are aware of what occurred when a plan was adopted for the carrying out of such improvements as were considered useful and even necessary by all parties. The experience of the past may assist us in reaching a conclusion as to whether the Government have taken the proper steps under the circumstances. They had to solve a problem of the utmost importance. All are agreed as to the imperative necessity of carrying out the contemplated improvements of the harbour of Montreal. For years past, those works have been deferred to the great prejudice of the trade and shipping interests of that city. The Harbour Commissioners have wasted valuable time, without reaching a reasonable conclusion, such as could be expected from business men. And while they were debating and trying to reach a conclusion as to the scheme to be adopted for carrying out the contemplated improvements of our harbours, they went on spending about $4,000,000, whereas, with half that sum they could have secured much more advantageous results.

Everybody admits that plan 12a submitted by the hon. Minister of Public Works is the best, and it has met with general approbation. As just stated by the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Préfontaine), while all were agreed as to the imperative necessity of those works in the interest of the general trade of the country, they went on arguing and spending. Those who are familiar with the harbour of Montreal, fail to understand why such huge sums of money have been expended, against the very nature of things, to build a harbour between the Victoria Bridge and the Windmill. A very large expenditure would have been saved had those works been constructed in that part of the harbour which affords the greatest natural facilities, and where the current is less swift. It would have cost much less to carry out this scheme of shipping accommodation and the improvements required by those interested in the carrying trade.

While millions were being spent on that part of the harbour, they went on debating upon whether it were advisable to build a dry dock, wharfs, elevators, in order to provide the necessary accommodation for the railways which enter the city at the east end. Meanwhile, the grain and coal trade were suffering from lack of accommodation. And even now, when the imperative necessity of the speedy construction of those works is borne upon us, they still go on deliberating upon the desirability of carrying them out, without reaching such a conclusion as would be calculated to promote the interests of the harbour of Montreal; and should the Government be willing to let the matter drag, those gentlemen would continue arguing and debating the question for years and years, and public interests would be sacrificed to the private interests of a few narrow-minded individuals. Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly proper that all guarantees necessary should be given, under the circumstances. What are the objections which are urged against this scheme? They say: The Harbour Commissioners ought to know best what plan is more likely to meet the needs of the harbour. They say further: We want those improvements to be made by means of money from the Dominion treasury, and not out of moneys contributed by the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal. Now, I ask, what money did the Harbour Commissioners personally expend? What capital have they invested in that corporation? What personal sacrifices have they made? No, Sir, the Harbour Commissioners are but trustees appointed by the Government to administer those moneys in the public interest: The Government are entitled to know, and we also, as members of this House are entitled to know whether those trustees, whom we have appointed to that place of confidence, are fulfilling their duties to the extent demanded by public opinion. As I said a little while ago, in framing our future course, we ought to benefit by the lessons of our past experience.

The works included in plan No. 12a will not be built in a single year. It will take two or three years to carry them out. The money will be spent in proportion as the works are built. And meanwhile the development of the business and shipping interests will only be promoted in proportion to the extent that those improvements will be carried out. Meanwhile, I say, the enormous flow of grain trade which now passes through the port of Buffalo and other American ports could be diverted towards this country, if the harbour of Montreal was equipped so as to handle it. Now, the interests of a large portion of Montreal are bound to suffer just to give satisfaction to some parties who are interested in a certain part of the city. In my opinion, it is good policy to provide that all the works necessary will be carried out at the same time. Some people feel surprised at hearing it said that the Harbour Commissioners do not know their own mind about those improvements. The resolution now before the House does not say: you shall not carry out the plan of the dry dock or the wharfs necessary, but it merely says: You shall carry out the plans approved by the Minister of Public Works. The same thing was done in the past.

I heard a little while ago, the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) say that, after all, he did not know whether this loan of two millions was merely an advance or an ab-olute that the Government was making to the Harbour Commissioners. For my part, I think it comes to the same; and I submit that those who supply the money have a right to tell the commissioners: You shall spend that money in such or such a way. I will go further, Sir, and say that, had not the Government provided for the necessary guarantees being given, I believe that public opinion, in Montreal, or a large majority of the voters would have protested against what they would have considered as a want of foresight on the part of the Ministers. I represent a division of Montreal which is in the east end of the city; but in that division is found the Bonsecours Market, opposite the centre of the Montreal harbour. The east ward which is also included in my division, is in the centre of the city. I am speaking here from the standpoint of the general interests of the city of Montreal, although I more particularly voice the opinion of my own constituents, among whom are to be found not only French Canadians but Englishmen, Irishmen and Scotchmen. I think that out of a majority of 1,369 voters who registered their votes in my favour at the last election, twenty-five per cent were men who did not belong to my nationality. So, I am not speaking from a sectional or racial standpoint, but from that of the general interests of Montreal. Now, I say that when we find men appealing to sectional or racial prejudices, we have the right to resent those heated appeals and to put a stop to them, whenever we find that they are detrimental to the general interests of the country.

In view of our past experience I believe that the Government have taken the proper course in adopting the resolution which is now before the House. They were bound to do so, in order to give satisfaction to public opinion and to the business men of Montreal who endorse this scheme. The hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Préfontaine) has read to the House the resolution passed, on the 1st June, by the French Chamber of Commerce of Montreal. The gentleman who presided over that meeting was the Hon. Mr. Alphonse Desjardins, one of the colleagues of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) in the late Cabinet. It was certainly not in order to make political capital that Mr. Desjardins acted in that way. This resolution was carried without a dissentient voice, and apart together from party politics. Those who accuse the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House of introducing politics into this question are the very men who are open to that reproach. It was the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) who introduced party politics into this debate, as shown by his speech. The hon. gentleman is in favour of the building of a dry dock, and of the contemplated harbour improvements, but he wants those improvements to be made out of Government moneys. What are the facts of the case? The Harbour Commissioners are going to have two million dollars at their disposal, and, as a matter of fact, the Government only requires them to apply that money in a certain way. They say to the commissioners: "You are going to have $2,750,000 at your disposal for harbour improvements. You shall apply a portion of that sum to the building of the works which you consider necessary in the east end of the city." That is the only condition required. They say that the Government are trying to make political capital out of this question. Sir, I have no hesitation in saying that this is a progressive policy, one which everybody endorses. As to the insinuations which have been made, the hon. gentlemen who have thrown them across the floor of this House have done so, in order to make political capital. The hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) has just read to the House an editorial published in the Montreal "Witness" in which charges of boodling are brought. Those of us who live in Montreal and are familiar with what transpires there are at a loss to understand on what ground those insinuations are based. Those gentlemen approve of the contemplated harbour improvements; they say that the trade and shipping interests would be greatly benefited by the building of deep-water wharfs, on which elevators could be erected; they also favour the construction of a dry dock; but they no sooner hear it said that the works are going to be carried out than they cry out that it is a piece of political jobbery, because the mayor of Montreal happens to have some property at Hochelaga. If the mayor of Montreal owns property in the centre of the city he is also interested in lands in the west and east. From the fact that a gentleman represents the city of Montreal in this House, owns property in that city and is interested in its general progress is he debarred from devoting his attention to the measures calculated to bring about the execution of those works?

That those improvements must be carried out leaves no room for doubt in the minds of the people; but some people no sooner hear it mentioned that those improvements are about to be carried out than they cry out that it is a political job; they use this cry of boodling as a bugbear, as a scarecrow set up to frighten birds from the fields. They thus hope to frighten timorous minds. They resort to insinuations. They say: "Such and such a fact has transpired; therefore there ought to be something wrong in that transaction; something contrary to the public interest." Such are the tactics resorted to by those people, while claiming that those improvements are an imperative necessity for the country. I fail to understand why the "Witness" voices those insinuations, and that paper I am sure would find it difficult to prove those charges of corruption. They are ready to admit that it is necessary to build docks, wharfs, elevators and to equip the Montreal harbour with up-to-date improvements, in order to bring in all the trade possible; but, as I said, they no sooner hear of those works being about to be carried out, than they raise the cry of corruption. Such language, Sir, if I may say so, is preposterous, nonsensical. If, instead of introducing the resolution now before the House and to which those gentlemen object, saying that the Government ought to build those works out of public moneys; if, I say, the Government had granted but $1,500,000 to the Harbour Commissioners for the carrying out of plan 12a, and had appropriated $500,000 for the construction of a dry dock or some other improvement in the east end of the city those same gentlemen would have got up and cried out: What! is it true that the Government are going to build a dry dock, wharfs, docks, elevators in the harbour of Montreal. Years ago, when the roads were bad, they used to say that it was Papineau's fault. This illustrates well the fact that do what they will, the Government are always to blame. I am not going to weary the attention of the House longer this evening. In my capacity of representative of one of the most important divisions of Montreal, I have deemed it my duty to voice the expression of my constituents. Liberal as well as Conservatives, who all endorsed the policy of the Government on this question. I may say that we are all delighted with the measure introduced by the Government and which is now under consideration, nay more, I undertake to say that, if the Government had not adopted the sound policy which the hon. gentlemen opposite have found fault with, it would have been my duty to vote against this measure, out of respect for the opinion of my constituents and in order to protect their interests. All the members for Montreal are satisfied with the guarantee and the conditions annexed to this measure. This shows how strongly the large majority of the population of the great metropolis feels on this subject. Surely, we may as justly pretend as the commissioners themselves that we represent here the public interests of the city of Montreal. I have no hesitation in saying that we are more responsible than they are for the general interests of Montreal and of the country at large; and it is our duty to declare that we endorse in the most formal manner the action taken by the Government in this matter.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I listened with some surprise to the remarks of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) who was not above repeating what he has done on many former occasions, that is, suggesting wrong but hesitating to make a charge. We are engaged in considering a scheme of national importance. Coming from the west, I can say that I know of no proposition laid before Parliament this session or last session that, in my judgment, so intimately concerns the development of our country as the one now inviting the attention of the House. Yet we find hon. members, the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) beginning it, followed by a good pupil, the member for East Grey, who, without having the courage to make a distinct charge, would perhaps paralyze this great movement by playing the role of Iago, dropping poison where he is afraid to come out boldly and make a charge. This public work concerns not merely Montreal but every part of Canada, at all events, every portion of Canada that contributes any commerce. I think all Canada may be said to contribute commerce for the east and to draw commerce from the east. There is no portion of Canada that more needs development to-day than the harbour of Montreal. This is of national importance. Canada is rich in harbours. We have Halifax, Quebec, St. John, Sorel, Three Rivers, Montreal, but of them all there is none of such commanding importance as Montreal. We of the west are producing as never before, grains, live stock, products of all kinds, and we seek a market. There is only one way in Canada by which we can export our products, they must go down through the great lakes and into the St. Lawrence for thousands of miles, or they must find their way through American channels. We in the west seek to unite the provinces, to unite the whole Dominion, by pouring our streams of commerce down through its natural highway, the St. Lawrence. Yet hon. gentlemen are found to-day seeking to gain some little temporary partial political advantage by seeking to create a halt in this great movement by suggesting wrong-doing. Sir, hon. gentlemen have a distinct duty to perform, a duty to the country, they owe a duty to Parliament and a duty to their own colleagues. The member for East Grey cites a paper which, he says, suggests wrong-doing, but he would not father the charge. He does not know, he says, as much as the writer of that paper knows. Sir, the writer of that paper is amenable to the subpoenas of the land, the writer of that paper is amenable to the order of this House.

Mr. SPROULE. That is just what I said.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The writer of that paper may be compelled to come before this House and prove, if he can, the truth of anything that is suggested. And yet an hon. member is found in a cowardly way to read the article—

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I ask that that statement be taken back. I never was afraid of expressing my opinion. I ask your ruling as to whether that expression is proper.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Let me discuss the point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair; Chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). I understand the hon. gentleman wants to speak to the point of order.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I understand the point is taken that I have no right to use the term cowardly to a member of this House who suggests wrong on the part of the Government, but takes shelter behind an editorial and will not take the responsibility, he suggests wrong without making a charge in this House. Is that courageous or it is cowardly? Which is it?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair; Chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). I do not think that the expression is out of order.

Mr. SPROULE. I desire to appeal from the ruling of the Chair. I move that the Speaker be called in, and we will have his ruling.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Rather than delay the proceedings of this House—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPROULE. I insist on the Speaker being called in.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I understand my hon. friend from East Grey desires to appeal from the ruling of the Chair, and I understand that my hon. friend who has made use of that expression wants to withdraw it.

Mr. FOSTER. There are two points. The Chair is filled now by a gentleman who has made a ruling, we want to know whether his ruling is correct, so that Mr. Speaker may put a gentleman in the Chair who will give a correct ruling in this House.

The PRIME MINISTER. Does my hon. friend mean to say that when the ruling of the Chair has been appealed from, there can be no debate?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, my hon. friend is ready, and he has my full concurrence, in saying that he wishes to withdraw the expression entirely.

Mr. SPEAKER takes the Chair.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, I rose to a point of order a few moments ago, and desired the ruling of the Chair as to whether the expression "cowardly" used by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) towards a member of this House, is in order. The Chair rules that it is, and I appealed from his ruling to yourself, whom I have the pleasure of now seeing in the Chair.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I presume I can also make a statement.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is a question of order before me now, and any hon. member has a right to speak on a question of order.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The point of order, I presume, if you, Mr. Speaker, had been in the Chair, would not have been raised. But as you were not in the Chair, perhaps I may be permitted to state the facts. The facts are that in your absence, the hon. member for East Grey quoted from an editorial of a paper insinuating that the Government was guilty of some corruption or improper dealing in connection with the proposed grant to the harbour trust. The member for East Grey declined to make a charge, because he was only quoting from hearsay and, therefore, was not possessed of information that would warrant him in making the charge. In speaking to the House on this question, I said that this was not the first time that similar tactics had been resorted to by hon. members opposite.

Mr. SPROULE. And by yourself also.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am speaking now of hon. gentlemen opposite. The words used, I thought, were actuated by a cowardly spirit, the hon. member quoting what he would not father, in distributing what he thought was poison without he himself being responsible. At the same time I was prepared, and I am now prepared to say, that no one more desires to conform to the rules of debate, and for that reason I say that if the remark is regarded as unparliamentary, or even if not unparliamentary, as I will not import unnecessary acerbity into the debate, I withdraw the expression.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not discussing the question of order. The hon. Minister is going on to inform you, Mr. Speaker, what he thinks in regard to an hon. member. The opinion does not amount to much, and we can well be spared it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am very glad the question is settled, as I like all questions of this kind to be settled in the House, and the expression, which certainly transcended the rules of debate, has been withdrawn by the hon. member who used it. With regard to appeals to the Chair, the Chair is assumed as being in his place all the time, and this is not an appeal. In this case the Chair has only given fuller consideration to the point than was expressed from the Chair a few moments ago.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not understand you, Mr. Speaker, to give any ruling.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Now that peace has been restored—

Mr. FOSTER. I should like to know what penalty has to be meted out to the other Chair.

Mr. MULOCK.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. To come back to where we left off the debate, I may say that if I used an unparliamentary expression, I cannot alter my opinion, whatever it may be, and I think hon. gentlemen opposite should have the courage of their convictions, if they have them, and put them on record before the House. I am desirous, coming from the west, to see this public highway developed at the earliest possible moment; but I am not desirous of seeing the development at the expense of the honour of Parliament, of the Government and of the country, and if it takes ever so long a time, I would desire to see the fullest possible investigation as to any possible wrongdoing before Parliament is committed to this proposal. This is the time for hon. gentlemen opposite to make their charges. If they have no charges to make, let us proceed to deal with the business of the country as it should be dealt with. I say in regard to this proposition that it is one in which the west is chiefly concerned. Montreal has a direct interest in it, but not more so than the grain-growing portions of the Dominion, Manitoba, the North-west Territories and Ontario itself. It is, therefore, a work of national importance, and while hon. gentlemen may express a doubt whether the Montreal Harbour Commissioners may continue to be able to pay interest on the bonds, even if default were made, about which there is no ground for apprehension, I should like to know if there could be any better expenditure of public money than that made in promoting the great national highway, the harbour of Montreal and the St. Lawrence. We are pouring out millions to deepen the canals; we have spent $40,000,000 on the Welland Canals and the St. Lawrence. For what purpose has the money been spent, except to bring our produce down through the St. Lawrence, past the harbour of Montreal to the sea; and this is a necessary work if the money already expended is to bear fruit. So I cannot understand any member from western Canada, especially if he comes from an agricultural district, seeking to delay or obstruct a movement of this kind, which is not only advantageous to the locality but is a matter of pressing importance to all parts of the country.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may be permitted at the outset to give an explanation. The hon. ex-Minister of Finance has thought fit in the great interest that he takes in me, as he has said frequently, to read an article from the "Witness." Pressure of business has prevented me from reading that article. But I will make this statement: If the "Witness" will state in a clear and distinct manner that I am interested, directly or indirectly, to the extent of one cent in any part of the city where the works are to be constructed, if I have a dollar of interest in this scheme, if I am going to derive one cent of benefit, I will proceed against them to-morrow morning. There cannot be a clearer statement than that I now make. I will state this further: If the ex-Minister of Finance will state out of Parliament that I am interested directly or indirectly in this scheme, I will prosecute him also.

Mr. FOSTER. I will state here and outside that I believe the hon. Minister is interested in the scheme.

The PRIME MINISTER. We will now wait until the hon. gentleman repeats it outside.

Mr. FOSTER. I will repeat it outside. I will take my hon. friend and walk along the corridor with him and tell him I believe he is interested in this scheme.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that I am financially interested in this matter?

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Here is the kind of politician we see. He has made a statement which, if I had not challenged him, might have been interpreted as a direct accusation against me. I ask him again the question, which I have asked him on some other occasions: is he acting in a manner worthy of a political leader of men? He knows I have not one cent of interest in the scheme, that what the "Witness" insinuates is altogether untrue, and yet he comes before the House and by stating I was interested in it, has tried to create in this Chamber and outside an impression that I was financially interested in this scheme.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman may laugh.

Mr. FOSTER. I really did not think my hon. friend was so much in earnest as not to see the point of the statement I made. I am afraid he has altogether misunderstood me. I think he will come to understand my statement in a little while; but there might be some one who did not understand the spirit in which this was said on my part and so might misunderstand it. When the hon. gentleman rose and asked me with such an earnest air if I would state in this House he was interested in the scheme, I rose and said: Most certainly the hon. gentleman is interested in the scheme. I could not conceive the hon. gentleman coming before the House urging in such an earnest and forcible manner the adoption of this scheme without being interested in it; and I am surprised the hon. gentleman did not see the joke, but he was apparently too much in earnest to see it. It may be trifling, but sometimes we pass a joke of that kind. But if the hon. gentleman understood me to say in my last statement that I would state in the House or outside that he was corruptly interested, then, of course, I would not want that impression to be on his mind or prevail outside. Of course I do not want that impression to be on his mind. I suppose I am too serious to make a joke with my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte), but I tried to make a joke with him then. Now with reference to the other. I stated before I read that article why I read it. I said: This is a responsible public paper, and not in one edition but in two or three editions it has followed up that line of statement and argument; and I said: That paper being a supporter of the hon. gentleman, it is something which it is worth calling his attention to. I read it and called his attention to it. I made no statement nor did I insinuate that the hon. gentleman himself was financially or corruptly interested at all. I would not make such a statement unless I had grounds for it, and if I had grounds for making it I would make it very quickly.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I accept the explanation in the very same sense as that in which it is given. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster), however, must not forget that he read an article in which I seemed to have been accused of some improper motive. I state again that I have no personal interest in that scheme, either direct or indirect. The Montreal "Witness" has been conducting a very violent war on me in connection with that scheme. I am very sorry indeed to have lost the friendship of that influential paper. When I made up my mind that the plans for the improvement of the Montreal harbour would cover not only the west end, but the whole harbour, I was told that if I did not yield to the pressure that was brought upon me, that if I went outside the centre of the harbour to make improvements I would be driven from political life. Well, I like political life; I am very fond of it. I do not deny, but before I would yield to any threats like that I would rather twenty-five times over be driven out from this House. I said to those who threatened me: I will go right on doing my duty to the best of my ability, and that I have done. The "Witness" has been very unfair to me, and if it were permitted to use a strong expression, I might say it has been shamefully unfair. I never deserved the treatment that I have received from that paper. I excuse them to a large extent because when that warfare was begun against me last year Mr. Dougall was away, and the paper was in the hands of a man who should never be at the head of a great newspaper. So much for the "Witness."

Mr. FOSTER. Go for it in "La Patrie."

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. "La Patrie" is all right, and is making first class war against my friends on the other side of the House. It has been stated in the "Witness" that there was great trouble in the Government as to that scheme. All those who know how newspaper work is done, and I know something about it, cannot fail to understand that the report which has been copied from "L'Evenement" is altogether incorrect; taking it as a whole, there is not one word of truth in it. My colleagues and myself are on the best possible terms. There was no fight between my excellent colleague the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) and myself. We have agreed to the scheme which is now before the House. He has agreed to the plan, and it is true I have agreed to some suggestions that were made to me, and the plan as it is propounded in the resolution has the full approval and sanction of every member of this Government.

Mr. FOSTER. It must have, before you could go on with it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think it is necessary for me to say anything more.

Mr. HAGGART. There is a part of the resolution which I do not understand. The $2,000,000 is for the purpose of assisting two schemes, one known as No. 12 and the other to build a dry dock. As I understand $750,000 is for the dry dock and the balance of $1,250,000 for plan No. 12. Can the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal take $1,250,000 for part of the scheme without going on with the dry dock?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The $750,000 will be employed in building wharfs in the eastern end and in the erection of the dry dock. The balance will be employed in carrying out plan No. 12a, and for improvements which may be later on decided by the Harbour Commissioners. This $2,000,000 is supplemented by $700,000 that still remains in my hands and by the $700,000 that is at the disposal of the city of Montreal. The works in the centre of the harbour are closely connected with the flood protection works of the city of Montreal, for which the city has voted $1,000,000.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman did not understand me. I want to know whether the total grant is dependent upon the two works being built.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Or whether one can be built independent of the other.

Mr. TARTE.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. There is a clause which provides for that.

Mr. HAGGART. It does not appear in the resolution.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will read concurrently in the Bill.

Resolution to be reported.

CIVIL SERVICE SUPERANNUATION.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock) moved third reading of Bill (No. 76) to provide for the abolition of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, and for the retirement of the members of the service.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I wish to move:

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that the order for the third reading be now discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House, to be amended by inserting the word "five" instead of "four" in section 5.

The effect of this amendment is to increase the rate of interest to 5 per cent as it originally stood in the Bill. Under the circumstances, the money taken under this system from the civil servants may be regarded as a species of life insurance fund. To fix the rate of interest on that at any point less than the civil servants could secure by investing that money in an ordinary life insurance company would seem to me to be unfair treatment of the Government employees. If I am not mistaken, the basis upon which almost all the life insurance calculations are made when it comes to be a question of re-insurance, is a basis of 4½ per cent at least.

I therefore feel that the country could very well afford it to give the civil service employees the benefit of the rate of 5 per cent. I know, from conversations which I have had with many members of the civil service, that they regard it as unfair that they should be required to place in the hands of the Government money on which they will receive only 4 per cent. The money to them is worth a great deal more. Many of them are so placed as to be able to realize even more than 5 per cent from their moneys when managed by themselves. During the discussion of this matter in committee, the question of the proper rate of interest to be paid on these moneys was mixed up with the question of the rate of interest paid by the Government on the deposits in the savings banks of the country. The question whether the Government have done right or wrong in reducing the rate of interest on the savings banks deposits has been settled, and cannot now be discussed; and it is unfortunate if that reference to it has had the effect of lowering the rate to be allowed on the moneys compulsorily taken from the civil service, and which may be regarded in the nature of life insurance investments such as are supposed in well-managed companies to make a return of about 5 per cent. I think it would be only fair and reasonable that the Government should make these men as well off when they place their insurance investments in the hands of the Government as they would be if they resorted to the ordinary life insurance companies of the country. I therefore make this motion which I have placed in the hands of the Speaker.

Mr. FOSTER. Whilst I will vote for this motion, because it proposes to bring the Bill back to the original intention of the hon. Postmaster General, I am very strongly opposed to the Government taking the advantage of young men who come into the service of imposing upon them the condition that they shall, whether they wish to or not, invest a certain amount of their earnings in an unremunerative way; and the more so because this amount of money, with the accrued interest, is not meant to be held as any guarantee for the conduct of the individual or the employee. If it were to be so held, the Government might have a stronger reason for adopting this provision than they have; but in reply to an amendment or a suggestion of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), it was decided by the Minister and accepted by the House, that this money should be absolutely the money of the employee, not to be held as a guarantee of his conduct, or to be forfeitable as a penalty. The Bill simply provides for making a compulsory investment for the young man. Now, let us see how it works. Suppose the young man is getting a salary of $800, and suppose he is thirty years of age, five per cent of his salary amounts to $40 a year. Why do you take that? In order that, if he dies, his family may have something coming for their support. Now, suppose that instead of making him pay the $40 a year, you give him the privilege of going to the Finance Department and investing a portion of that in a $2,000 policy at the rate allowed by the Finance Insurance Department, that young man could, if the rules allowed him, get a policy of $3,000 with the 5 per cent that you are making him invest in our 4 per cent investment. If one month, two months, five years, six years afterwards, that young man were to die, his family would draw $3,000 for their benefit.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Suppose he does not die.

Mr. FOSTER. If he does not die, he is earning his salary.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not necessarily.

Mr. FOSTER. And he is having at the same time the option of making a better provision for his family in the event of his death, and is having the investment of his own funds. This young man, we will say, has for four years invested his $40 a year in this compulsory way at 4 per cent, and will then have in the funds for his wife and family $175 or $180. With what equanimity can the hon. Postmaster General look that young man's wife and children in the face, and reflect that had it not been for his law the young man could, with that 5 per cent of his $800, have made a provision of $3,000 in hard cash for his wife and family? I want to present that view, and I think it is a strong view. If you want to make a man provide for his wife and family, make it necessary for him to take out insurance in some reputable society or company in the insurance scheme of the Finance Department which has been provided by Parliament; and let him invest his money as he pleases, or in a way which would result in a hundred or a thousand times greater security than you offer for his wife and children in the event of his death. I think this is really a hardship; and as you do not hold the money as a guarantee of good conduct or as a penalty it seems to me that you ought not to mulct these young men in this way. Let them be the judges of their own investments, or if you wish to make an absolute provision against death, make it necessary that they shall take out insurance.

Mr. BRITTON. The man's health or his family history might not allow him to take life insurance.

Mr. FOSTER. Then he would have the option of investing his money in some other way, as he might think best for himself.

Amendment negatived, and Bill read the third time and passed.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

LAKE CHAMPLAIN AND RIVER ST. LAWRENCE SHIP CANAL COMPANY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 99) to incorporate the Lake Champlain and River St. Lawrence Ship Canal Company.—(Mr. Préfontaine.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. CHARLTON. This Bill is one which, I think, in the public interest, should at least be allowed to stand over until next session. Of course, the provision is made, I understand, that the consent of the Governor General in Council and a proclamation is required to carry it into effect. I have always maintained that government by Governor in Council is a kind of government to be avoided, except in exigencies; and under the circumstances surrounding this measure, I doubt whether it is in the interests of the country, or whether the circumstances of the case render it necessary or advisable to take that course with regard to this measure. I should be very far from wishing to be understood as objecting to the investment of capital, or to the prosecution of an enterprise, conceived and carried forward in the public interest, and I disclaim any attempt to play the part of an obstructionist; but I think there are grave reasons why this Bill should be at least carefully considered, and I do not see, unless I had different light on the question, how I can abate my opposition to it. The question of promoting commercial relations between the west and the seaboard and of securing to Canadian routes of transit as large a proportion of that great and growing trade as possible, is one of extreme importance. Those familiar with the trade of the great lakes must be struck with not only the enormous magnitude of that trade but with its rapid increase. A fraction of that trade only, the trade from Lake Superior passing through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, employs more than twice the amount of tonnage that passes the Suez Canal annually. That is only a fraction of the trade, the greater portion going through the ports on Lake Michigan. This carrying trade of the illimitable west is a commercial prize of the first importance, one to the importance of which the American forwarders and merchants are fully alive. In 1824, that far-seeing statesman, DeWitt Clinton, projected the Erie Canal for the purpose of wedding the waters of the great lakes and the ocean at New York. That canal was a means of making New York the emporium of this great western trade. That trade has mainly followed that route since that time and follows it at present. Buffalo, last year, handled 160,000,000 bushels of grain that passed through that port in transit on its way to the seaboard. A large proportion of that enormous flow of trade went down the railway lines and a very large proportion also went down the Erie Canal. It is evident that a trade which makes the city of Buffalo the fifth commercial port in the world is a trade the importance of which is a matter of great consequence to us, and the carrying of which is also a matter of great consequence; and if we wish to secure that trade or any considerable portion of it to the seaport of Montreal, we shall have to adopt methods of a very costly character, and there is one work only which will secure it. If Canada constructs a ship canal or a canal admitting vessels of a draught of 20 feet of water, from Lake Huron to the dock at Montreal, this grain can be laid down in the city of Montreal for but a fraction more than the cost of laying it down at Buffalo. Montreal is an ocean port, while at Buffalo it must pay the charges of transport from Buffalo to the seaboard, which, by the canal, is three cents per bushel. This would give to Montreal advantages which would secure to it, during the season of navigation, a large portion of that western trade. I believe that this canal will be constructed, and I believe that Canada will secure from the construction and operation of that canal a very large portion of this western trade. If that canal ever is constructed, then it follows, as a matter of necessity, that there shall be an extension of it to the Hudson. And if that time ever arrives when the Ottawa ship canal is an accomplished fact, and when it is found necessary to extend that canal southward to the Hudson, if this charter now under consideration is granted, and this company becomes the possessor of this valuable franchise, we shall have an embarrassing factor in this case, which it will cost this Government a great deal of money to remove and which it will be necessary for this Government to remove.

There are two classes of franchise. There is that class sought for by capitalists and enterprising men, who propose to engage in the construction of works that are of public utility and desirable in every sense, in the interest of the country. There are others which are sought for, not in the public interest primarily, but in order to secure to those seeking them advantages not legitimate, as advantages that may be properly sought for by capitalists. This would be a valuable franchise. Whether the parties who secure the charter proceed with the work or not, in the event of the construction of the Ottawa Valley Canal, they would be in a position to dictate terms to the Government or to embarrass the Government in any course that it might, in future, desire to take for the extension of that canal southward. I think, in view of the magnitude of the interests involved, and in view of the fact that we may legitimately become competitors for that vast trade, which, as I said, was represented by 260,000,000 bushels of grain in transit through the city of Buffalo alone, and which is growing year by year, and in view of the possibilities of the future, I hold that we should consider very carefully and in all its bearings any application of the kind embodied in this Bill, the effect of which is to hand over to a private company control of that route or a portion of it. For these reasons, I am very firmly of the opinion that the granting of this charter is not in the public interest, that it would place the parties who seek this charter in an advantageous position and enable them to make out of it, ultimately, a very large sum of money, and make it at the expense of the country. I have no desire to impede business operations or to embarrass those desiring to invest money in anything which is conducive to the public interest, but I am so firmly of opinion that we ought not to proceed at this stage of the session with such a measure that I feel it my duty to move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is probably a good deal in what the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) says in regard to the national interests involved in this measure. But when the Bill was considered in committee it was thought that these interests were protected. There is no immediate prospect of the Government undertaking to build this work. Public works of this nature are often undertaken by private capitalists when the Government will not or, probably, for various reasons, cannot entertain the proposition. If the development of the country were left altogether, so far as works of this kind were concerned, to the Government and the expenditure of public money, I dare say we should have very slow development. So the principle has been adopted in the past of granting franchises and allowing companies that can raise the capital to go on with works of this description. In case it may be thought desirable that this canal should be taken charge of by the Government of the country, there is a clause which provides as follows:—

Her Majesty may at any time assume the possession and property of the canal and works, and all the rights, privileges and advantages of the company, all of which shall, after such assumption, be vested in Her Majesty, on giving to the company one month's notice.

It appears to me that that does away with the objection that has been raised that the public interest would be endangered by granting this franchise. I suppose that the Government would have the right to take the work out of the company's hands in any case, but the section I have read provides specifically that this may be done. In the committee it was proposed, and I thought it had been so decided that the Government should be at liberty to take this work off the company's hands on payment of the actual cost of construction. Then, in further answer to the position taken by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) it has been provided, in view of the present state of the country and the circumstances connected with the development of canals, in view of this being an international scheme, in view of the commission that is to be appointed, and in view of the interest taken in these matters, that this Act shall not come into force or have any effect except on proclamation issued by the Governor in Council. Thus, before anything could be done by the company, the Government would have an opportunity to consider every phase of the question as to whether it was desirable that the company should be given this privilege or not. It was considered by the great majority of the committee that this would be protection for the country. It certainly throws the responsibility upon the Government to say whether or not the Act should come into force. Though there might be something in what the hon. gentleman says in a general way as to guarding the interests of the country in regard to works of this kind; but I am inclined to think that unless this Parliament granted franchises of this kind, we should have very slow development. In looking over the public works that have already been built, we find that nearly all have been first undertaken by private companies. Even the Welland Canal, if my memory serves me right, was started by private individuals who could see further ahead and were more willing to invest moneys than the Government of the day. We see charters granted to companies now being created to build canals and other public works. If it is in the public interest that that policy should be changed and that the Government should undertake these works, the hon. gentleman's position is a strong one. But I am not sure that it is not in the public interests, at the present time, that private individuals who take a different view from that taken by the Government or who are able to raise money when the Government does not feel like spending it, should be allowed to undertake these works. Such a work as this would require a very large amount of money, and an amount, which, probably, it would be difficult for the Government to get from Parliament for such a purpose. With the provisos that are introduced in this Bill, I think it might well be passed and leave it to be considered by the Government, say on the advice of any future commission or in any way that may be deemed desirable, to decide whether or not the proclamation shall be issued bringing the Bill into force.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). When this subject was before the House a few days ago, I stated that the Government would look into the matter, would consider the powers asked for under this charter, and determine whether or not the Bill should be allowed to go into operation even with the restrictions, which are to a certain extent safeguards, that are provided in it. But I have only to call attention to the 5th section to convince the committee that under no conditions can the Bill be allowed to go into operation as it is now framed. The powers given to the company are these:

The company may lay out, construct and operate a canal from some point on the south shore of the River St. Lawrence to some point on the Chambly Canal, the Richelieu River or Lake Champlain.

These powers are of the widest possible character. They can choose any point on the whole south shore of the St. Lawrence without any restriction. They can locate their canal east of Montreal or west of Montreal. They can locate one end of their canal on the Chambly Canal, or on the Richelieu River, in Canadian territory, or on Lake Champlain, which would be in American territory. Under these powers, there is one consideration apart from those mentioned by the hon. member for Norfolk. A canal could be built from Lake Champlain to the St. Lawrence west of Montreal, and pass entirely by the city of Montreal. Now, I am sure it is not the intention of the committee that if a canal is ever to be built to tap Lake Champlain in American territory, and thus to carry the waters of the St. Lawrence to the Hudson River system or to the ocean—it is certainly not the intention of Parliament that such a canal should pass altogether away from the city of Montreal. If a canal is to be built, it seems to me it should stipulate that the terminus on the St. Lawrence should be near the city of Montreal, so as to bring into that city the trade which the canal would obtain. I pointed out to the promoter that under these terms it would not be possible for the Government to allow the Bill to pass. Still, I do not think the committee would be justified in adopting the motion of my hon. friend from Norfolk, which would absolutely kill the Bill. I think the best thing is for the committee to rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, so as to allow the promoters to take whatever course they may think fit to adopt, and I make such a motion.

Committee rose and reported progress.

DAWSON CITY ELECTRIC COMPANY.

The House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 118) to incorporate the Dawson City Electric Lighting and Tramway Company.—(Mr. Morrison.)

(In the Committee.)

On the preamble,

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Will the promoter of the Bill explain its scope, and the powers which are sought to be obtained by it?

Mr. FOSTER. Is the Bill as it appears in our book of Bills the same, or nearly the same, as it came from the committee?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). It first came before the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee, and, as I understand, it came to us in the form in which we have it here. But we amended it largely, and inasmuch as it asked for power to construct a tramway, we sent it to the Railway Committee afterwards. I have not seen the Bill as reprinted at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As the Minister says, the Bill was referred to the Railway Committee, but only to consider that clause

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

referring to the building of a tramway. The committee amended and passed the clause giving them power to build the tramway, and to that amendment the chairman agreed. Probably it will be found satisfactory to the House.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Did not the Private Bills Committee make a lot of amendments?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, a great many.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then, we cannot understand it.

Mr. MORRISON. The amendments which were made were very simple, in my opinion, although they may have been somewhat lengthy. The first amendment of any importance was made to section 9, requiring the consent of the Governor in Council. There was only one amendment to section 8, and that was in the last line.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think it is unfair to ask this committee to consider a Bill that has been amended in two committees, these amendments not being printed, and the members of the committee knowing nothing about them.

Mr. MORRISON. It was quite proper to send the Bill to the Private Bills Committee, and there the question arose with reference to a railway or tramway, and it was decided to send it to the Railway Committee. There the only important amendment was that made in section 9, requiring the consent of the Governor in Council. I think the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is quite mistaken when he says that large and important amendments were made. In section 8 there was only a literal amendment, changing ten shares to forty shares. The amendment to section 9 reads as follows:—

The company may, with the consent of the Governor in Council, subject to such regulations and restrictions as he may impose or direct, so that the navigation of the river shall not be injuriously affected.

This amendment was made in the Railway Committee. The Bill is emasculated very much, but that simplifies the matter. Sections "c," "e" and "f" of section 9, are all cut out. There are slight amendments to various other sections. Then, there is a new clause added which reads as follows:—

The company shall not commence the construction of any one of such lines of tramway until the proposed route thereof shall have been approved by the Governor in Council, and provided that as to any portion of any of such lines as shall lie along or through any mountain pass or river gorge, or portion of either of them, having, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, room only for one line of rails, every other railway or tramway company whose authorized line necessarily runs through such pass or gorge, or portion of either of them as aforesaid, shall upon such conditions, terms and regulations as the Governor in Council from time to time makes in that behalf, also have the right to operate its line of railway or tramway by the exercise of running powers or otherwise as the Governor in Council determines over such portion or portions of the line of the company hereby incorporated as shall lie along or through any such pass of gorge, or portion of them as aforesaid.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I submit that we are going on with a Bill that has not been reprinted and which contains a number of amendments.

Mr. MORRISON. I think the hon. gentleman will understand from my short explanation what the amendments are.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman who is the promoter of the Bill understands the Bill and the amendments, but I submit there is not another hon. member who can understand from the hon. gentleman's explanation the amendments and how they apply to the Bill. There is no use in consuming time further.

Mr. MORRISON. It is not unusual, I think, to proceed with amendments to a Bill without having the Bill reprinted. It is immaterial to me whether this Bill goes over or not; but I do not see any difference between this Bill and the other Bills that I have seen passed without being reprinted, and that very recently.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have no objection to the Bill itself. It has, however, been the rule that when a Bill has been emasculated, it should be reprinted in order that members may understand it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not think it is quite fair to say that it is the rule to have Bills reprinted when amendments are made. When this Bill was before the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee it was carefully considered, and some amendments were made. Then it came before the Railway Committee with respect to clauses relating to tramways, and amendments were introduced. Those amendments, I think, can be understood by the committee without reprinting them. It seems rather unfortunate at this stage of the session that any difficulty should have arisen, but if there is no other objection to the Bill, I think the reprinting of the Bill with the amendments should not be pressed.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I have no objection to the Bill.

Mr. CASEY. There is no rule about reprinting. If any one objects to the Bill he may, of course, ask to have it reprinted; but unless there is some special opposition offered, I do not see why we should not trust the various committees that have dealt with it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was no special opposition to the Bill in the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee; but my recollection must be very faulty if the Bill now before me has not been materially altered since it left that committee. I should like to ask the hon. member with respect to section 8, which gives the powers to the company. We struck out the subsections. This is not the Bill as it passed the Private Bills Committee. We inserted some other clauses.

Mr. MORRISON. The amendments are there.

Mr. SPROULE. When this Bill was before the committee we recommended that it be reprinted as changed and remodelled. If we pass it at the present time, we pass it in the dark.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is fair to say that my recollection was correct. Section 8 has been altered, and nearly all the subsections struck out. The section now provides that "the company may, with the consent of the Governor in Council, first had and obtained, and subject to such regulations and restrictions as he may impose so that the navigation of the river shall not be injuriously affected, take, divert and appropriate at such points on the Yukon River," &c. The words "and its tributaries" were struck out. The powers asked for were very large powers, and those granted were very much limited, and they were surrounded with restrictions to protect the public interests. I was quite satisfied the committee never allowed the Bill to pass in its present shape.

Mr. MORRISON. I did not understand that such was the objection of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The Minister, on his own confession, must have known the amendments had been made; so I cannot understand the philosophy of his contention.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am dealing with the Bill as it stands here. The Bill as it is here is not the Bill as it passed through the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee.

Mr. MORRISON. I did not contend that it was. I cannot see why the hon. gentleman should object to the amendments not being read.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not object.

Mr. FOSTER. There are very many members who are not on committees, and they surely should not be cut off from the right to look carefully after legislation. An hon. member takes up his Bill book and studies a certain Bill that will come up, and then he finds that the Bill has been radically changed and altered completely. Is a member to be simply at the mercy of the hon. gentleman who is promoting the Bill, and is he supposed during the few minutes when that hon. member is explaining the amendments to be able to gather their effect? That is not legislation. Of course it has been done. The House has more than once taken Bills which had been materially changed and put them through on the faith of the promoters. But it is a slovenly mode of legislation. As it is we make mistakes in legislation, and we are none too careful in regard to Bills for private companies, which are too economical often as regards reprinting amendments to their Bills. My hon. friend rather testily said that he did not want the Bill to pass if the committee were not willing to pass it. The Bill, however, may yet be reprinted, and there is plenty time to pass in view of the present state of public business and the new Bills that have been brought down by the Government, and there may be Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday in which to get it through. The legislation of private committees would go more easily if amendments were printed and placed before members, but some of the companies apparently wish to do as little printing as possible. I do not want to block the hon. gentleman's Bill, which may be a good one. There was a clause in the original Bill allowing the company to take the waters of every river flowing into the Yukon, which was preposterous. I was prepared to deliver a light gun charge against it on that ground, but I find there are other things in the Bill. I object to this system which is creeping in during the last year or two more than ever before, of legislation by Governor in Council. This kind of legislation which puts everything into the hands of the Governor in Council for the methods of carrying it out, ought to be pretty carefully considered both on the grounds of the executive itself as well as upon the grounds of parliamentary control. In some cases it is absolutely necessary, but in many cases it may be very vicious. If the Bill is urgent and cannot be reprinted, I do not wish to interpose a direct objection that it shall not go through, but I do think that the Government should give it to be understood that these things must be before the members in legible and perfect shape.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend (Mr. Morrison) seems to be labouring under an entire misapprehension of my position. When I saw the Bill as it came from committee, I was disposed to object to it going through, because I was under the wrong impression that the amendments inserted in the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee had not been inserted. I assure the House that the Bill received a great deal of consideration from the committee, and the only reference to the Governor in Council was in the first place that they were limited to take the water from the Yukon River, and in the second place, that they must submit to the Governor in Council a scheme showing that the quantity of water they took could not in any way interfere with the public use of the river. I thought with these limitations there was no fear of the public interests being injured by the Bill.

Mr. MORRISON. I do not wish to be placed in the position of being apparently the first to violate these rules. I do not wish to be put under any obligation to hon. gentlemen on either side of the House in regard to this matter, and certainly after what has been said if these hon. gentlemen wish to urge it, I would be very pleased to see the Bill reprinted, but I will of course take very good care to see that other Bills are treated in the same way.

Mr. FOSTER. There will be no Private Bills Committee until Wednesday, and the hon. gentleman may have a slim chance of getting the Bill through. I would advise him to pocket the little remarks we have made and go on with it.

Mr. MORRISON. I do not want to be lectured.

On section 9,

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is one feature of this section which requires a little more consideration. Hon. members will observe that in sub-clause (a) it is defined that this company shall have power to do certain things within a radius of 15 miles from Dawson City, and subsection (d) authorizes the construction of tramways within the aforesaid district and limits. I was unable to be present at the meeting of the committee on account of the necessity of attendance in the House here, but I think this clause requires more consideration. In the absence of any definite knowledge as to Dawson and its surroundings, and in the absence of any municipal authority there, this provision might be attended with future results of an injurious character, if we were to set these companies afloat with power to lay tramways whenever and wherever they please. It may be possible that Dawson will become quite a town.

Mr. FOSTER. It might be 15 miles around.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It might; no one can tell what the possibilities are. It may be that the town site will become exceedingly valuable, and therefore, I do not think that the urgency can be so great that we would be justified in this Parliament now in giving this company power to construct tramways in the manner set out in this Bill. I have myself quite a strong objection to it, but having called the attention of the committee to the fact, I do not wish to offer any strenuous opposition, nor do I wish my hon. friend (Mr. Morrison) to suppose that I would be adverse to having this Bill pass. I do think that portion of the Bill ought to be eliminated, and ought not to be pressed.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the Government intend to allow them to erect a dam across the Yukon River?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No power is given to them for that.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, the amended Bill gives them power.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The dam would not be across the river.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a tremendously wide clause. You are dealing with a country of which you do not know the future possibilities; but one thing is known, that the rights of this company extend for a radius of 15 miles around Dawson City, a city which is just beginning its career. Its career may not be a great one; but it may be a very notable one, and at its very birth-time, you are taking away from what may be a future municipality, all its rights and powers with reference to these matters, and handing them over to a private company. I do not see how you are going to get water power on the Yukon River for electric light unless you dam the river, and surely the river is not to be dammed.

Mr. SPROULE. I objected to this provision when the Bill was before the committee. It seems to me that it is giving this company all the water powers within a radius of 15 miles around Dawson City.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is confined to the Yukon.

Mr. SPROULE. Taking Dawson City as a centre, the company will control the water powers for 15 miles, as I understand the Bill. If any other company wanted to use any water powers within that radius, this company could prevent it, for you are practically giving it a monopoly of these things. We can see in the city of Ottawa and the city of Hull what a monopoly like this can do; it gets the city absolutely at its mercy. I regard this as very dangerous, and as introducing the principle of monopoly, which should never be allowed. Because these powers are given in a section of country that we know very little about, they are all the more dangerous on that account.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman's criticism might be applicable to the Bill as it was first introduced; but there are two controlling elements which dissipate his criticism almost entirely. The first is, that the power is not granted within a radius of 15 miles on all the tributaries to the Yukon, but it is confined to the Yukon. The second is that in erecting any works the company must not interfere with the naviga-bility of the river. Consistently with not interfering with the navigability of the river, they can have the power, and with that condition I do not see any objection to giving them the power.

Mr. SPROULE. That shows the importance of having the Bill reprinted, as we do not know what changes have been made in it. If all the objectionable features are eliminated, I have no objection to its passing.

Mr. HAGGART. Who is to be the judge whether the works of the company seriously affect the navigability of the river or not? They might erect these works, and they could not be removed. The only recourse against them would be an action for damages. They should not have the right to erect a dam on a navigable stream.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The right of navigation is a paramount right, and we preserve it in the Bill. If the company erected a dam which interfered with the right of navigation, there would be no need for an action for damages, for anybody could knock it down.

Mr. HAGGART. Under the Bill the company have a statutory right to erect the dam upon a navigable stream, and it could not be removed unless it seriously affected the navigation of the river.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They have not a statutory right absolutely, but a limited right, subject to the right of navigation. They are not to interfere with navigation.

Section agreed to.

The time for the consideration of private Bills having expired, the House proceeded to Government Orders.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 146) to amend and consolidate the North-west Irrigation Acts of 1894 and 1895. —(Mr. Sifton).

CUSTOMS ACT.

Bill (No. 152) further to amend the Customs Act was read the second time and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The Act limits the granting of ships' stores to vessels sailing for a longer voyage than thirty days, and that limit is expunged. We are also adding a provision by which we may regulate and determine what ships' stores may be used by a vessel when in port.

Mr. FOSTER. Are you enlarging the list of what you call ships' stores?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We are enlarging the class of vessels which may be entitled to take ships' stores.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). And also extending the different classes of goods known as ship stores.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That would depend on the regulations. We do not vary in that respect from the old plan. Departmental regulations will have to be considered and determined just as at present. It is not intended to enlarge with reference to the kind of goods that may be used. The primary object of the first clause is to take away the time limit of vessels. It has not been closely followed, and if a law is found inconvenient it should not stand in the way.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Your object is to do away with the time limit of thirty days. It seems to me it is rather dangerous to make the time unlimited, because in that case you furnish a ready excuse for a shipper to purchase a large supply in bond. If I recollect the experience of the department, it was that this clause was abused heretofore by shippers purchasing in bond a larger supply than they actually needed, and they were suspected of doing so for the purpose of disposing of them, and the revenue was defrauded to that extent.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That will have to be guarded against in the regulations that are framed. The probability is we will make regulations that such quantities may be allowed for such and such a period, according to where the vessel may sail.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Extending the privilege in this way will make it much harder to guard against abuse.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the Minister here has opened the door much too wide. The thirty-day limit might be continued, or, at least, there should be very strong safeguards. Take the vessels on our inland waters on the boundary, and serious abuses may arise. Take a ship going from Windsor to Detroit, or from Windsor to Port Huron, and then touching at a dozen Canadian ports until she reaches the Sault, where she will touch at the American side as well as at the Canadian. Under this Bill, I do not see how the Minister can prevent that vessel from doing what is practically a coasting trade. The Minister could not well make regulations that would be contrary to the Act, and coal, for instance, could hardly be excluded by regulation. This Act will take away from the Minister the power which he and the Government ought to have to control these matters. Ships' stores are very extensive. They include supplies of every kind—coal, rope and cordage and many other things. There is even tobacco. The Minister might, probably, exclude that if he pleases; but I think that tobacco was included in ships' stores when I was Controller of Customs. There are some articles, such as coal, that he could not well exclude.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is provided in that Act that the Minister of Customs may define and limit the kind and quantity and class of articles arriving in Canada as stores of vessels. The points that the hon. gentleman has made must be considered by the Minister and the regulations made so as to avoid the difficulties he has pointed out.

Mr. WALLACE. But the hon. Minister could not exclude coal, for ships, in certain localities particularly, would need to have that provision.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What point does the hon. gentleman mean?

Mr. WALLACE. Say, for instance, the city of Montreal, where, I am informed, a large proportion of the coal is imported from Pennsylvania. The Minister could not exclude coal without making the restriction universal. But if he allows that in the inland waters, there will be a large loss of revenue.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is true, but the hon. gentleman will admit that we can regulate the quantity. There have been cases under my predecessors where the 30-day limit has not been adhered to.

Mr. WALLACE. The 30-day limit is too long, and to abolish that limit altogether is no improvement.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think it is safe. I shall act in a conservative way with it. The matter has been pretty well thought over by my deputy, who thinks it well that we should amend the law in this way. As the hon. gentleman knows, things have been done for which there is no express statutory authority; and it is better to have the power vested in the department. I quite admit that one must be very careful about the regulations that are made so that the privilege may not be abused.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). As I recollect, the advantage to the country of this privilege has always been doubtful. It was granted to our vessel owners and ship owners, in order to enable them to purchase goods in bond for ships' purposes. I think that the experience of the two departments is that this was abused even with the 30-day limit. The shipper had to make an affidavit or declaration that he had not purchased more ships' supplies than would last 30 days, and, as I recollect, we always thought that too long. It is a surprise to me to find that that limit is to be abolished.

Under this, power might be given to take on ships' stores for six months.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wood, Brockville) has in mind the question of revenue. But it is desirable that we should secure to Canada what trade we can. There would be no object in having the law so framed that we should not only lose the revenue but lose the trade. If you do not give them facilities for purchasing in this way, they go to another country to purchase, and we lose the trade, and the revenue too.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It is just a question of so restricting the privilege as to guard the revenue against loss. Take the article of tobacco, which the Department of Customs declared was properly an article coming within the terms of ship's stores. I am satisfied from my recollection of the experience of the Inland Revenue Department, that we felt that a loss ensued to the revenue on account of the privilege accorded to shippers regarding tobacco as an article of ship's stores, but inasmuch as under the old law and regulations only a supply to last for thirty days was allowed, the loss to the revenue was limited. But I fear there will be a greater loss where there is no time limit; in other words, the declaration that the ship's officer will now have to make will be for a ship's voyage. The department heretofore could say to his application: Very well, but this must be only for thirty days; having regard to the size of your vessel, number of the crew, and so forth, we can form a fair opinion of the quantity of ship's supplies you require for thirty days' voyage. Now, the difficulty is going to be that you will be entirely at the mercy of the shipper who makes the declaration as to the length of the voyage.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Every precaution will be taken in that way. I think it will be quite competent for us to frame such regulations as will guard against any abuse in that direction.

Mr. WALLACE. What other changes were made in that clause?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is a definition of spirits, limiting the kind and quantity and the class of articles arriving in Canada, and the spirits which may be used on board such vessel in Canadian waters, or which may be treated as surplus stores of vessels. That is dealt with in section 166 of the Act, but it does not define the quantity that may be used as ship's stores when the vessel is in port, and we think it is desirable that power should be taken to limit the quantity that will be allowed to be consumed and to be treated as ship's stores when the vessel is in port, and if they have any excess, duty will be paid upon it.

Mr. BRITTON. Is there similar legislation in the United States in reference to Canadian goods warehoused there and delivered to American vessels? This seems to me to be legislation in favour of the importation of American goods warehoused here and delivered out for use on vessels free of duty.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I would not speak positively, but I think they have regulations in reference to ship's stores similar to this. The hon. gentleman, perhaps, knows as much about that as I do; my impression is that they have something corresponding. But our object is to take power to define and to limit the quantity of goods that may be used, so that an excess may not be brought in.

On section 2,

Mr. HAGGART. How do you arrive at an allowance for evaporation?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is no provision in the customs law to cover this point. Many representations have been made with reference to it, and we propose to follow out the English practice in this respect, at least not going beyond a certain point. The evaporation or loss is reckoned upon a regulated scale for the time the spirits are in bond.

Mr. HAGGART. I cannot understand how the hon. gentleman will apply it to the customs on importations. Supposing an article is purchased seven years old in England. After that, there is no allowance for evaporation. Then it comes here and you make an allowance for evaporation.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We only make an allowance for evaporation and absorption by the wood, so much a year while the spirits are maturing. I am not ready to state exactly what the maximum allowance is, but if I am not mistaken, I think after seven years, when the spirit has been allowed to mature for that time, the allowance is as high as 21 per cent. But we do not make that allowance without being certain that it reaches the maximum, and if we find it is below the maximum, of course we only allow the actual allowance. But there is a maximum that in no case can be passed, even though the loss be greater than that maximum.

Mr. HAGGART. I want to draw attention to this fact, that spirits imported may be bought in England which have been subjected to the maximum allowance for evaporation of seven years, and after that there is no allowance. You bring it over here and put in bond, and again commence to make an allowance up to 21 per cent.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is for the loss while it is in our bond.

Mr. HAGGART. That is the actual loss, but you must remember that the limit is fixed in England. It is not only for the purpose of allowing for evaporation, but after a certain time it is to prevent frauds, and there is nothing to prevent 21 per cent being taken out, taking out another allowance after the allowance is made in England.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The observation of the hon. gentleman will be useful to me, and I am glad that he has made it. It will be upon my mind when we are making regulations in reference to this matter. I apprehend the point he makes, and I am glad he threw out the suggestion.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I understand the Minister to say that the allowance will be reckoned upon the deficiency which exists at the date of entry in the warehouse on its arrival in this country, in other words, during the period in which it is in bond here.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Will the hon. gentleman tell me upon what principle the allowance is reckoned?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is according to the time limit that we may have taken. For instance, when in casks of 20 gallons and upwards, for one month and in special cases, it is from $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent to 1 per cent; for two months, 1 to 2 per cent; six months, 1 to 3 per cent; one year, 3 to 4 per cent; two years, 4 to 6 per cent; seven years, 5 to 8 per cent.

Mr. WALLACE. I never heard such demand for the legislation proposed. If there has been any difficulty, I never heard of it among importers.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. My hon. friend may have been more fortunate than myself. I have had a good many complaints made in regard to losses. Some of these entailed very great hardship. At the present time these losses cannot be dealt with unless claims are made and proved before the Treasury Board.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). The privilege of allowing importers to keep spirit in bonds is altogether for the benefit of the importers. In some of these cases, especially when spirits are kept one, two or three years, the Government is practically acting as warehouse keeper.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. All the bondings are for the convenience of merchants. Wines and liquors pay very heavy duties, and when leakage occurs it is an important matter. Bonding liquors is not, however, a special privilege granted to liquor importers, for any other goods can be bonded.

Mr. WALLACE. In the case of other goods which have the same privilege, there is no shrinkage. Such goods may be destroyed while in bond, whereas spirits and wines will become matured. The proper course to follow in case of loss is to have it proved before the Treasury Board. I should like to know the reasons why the Minister has submitted the present Bill.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. On account of shrinkage incident to the bonding of wines and spirits, involving loss, which is not the case with regard to other goods, and also the high duties placed on liquors. We have simply followed the English practice, and in my opinion it is the proper practice, due care being exercised that no undue advantage be taken of the revenue.

Mr. WALLACE. Spirits are improved and not destroyed by age, as is the case frequently with other goods, and yet if the importer finds his goods destroyed he has to go before the Treasury Board and claim compensation, whereas in the case of liquors the department can deal with it off-hand. There is no justification for treating liquors in a more favoured way than any other class of goods. The Minister has not justified his course by saying that he is following the practice in England. It is probably an old law there, which they will shortly have to repeal, and there is no evidence that it is satisfactory. There might be circumstances in England justifying such a law, which do not exist in Canada. In England liquors are kept in bond for a much longer period. Besides we are employing lockers who visit the warehouses every day, and we are making a very small charge in the shape of a tax. An importer can place goods in bond, have a locker at his service every day and pay the duty when he takes them out. For example, a man can put in bond DeKuyper's gin, which costs only 25 or 26 cents a gallon, but the duty is ten times as much. He can go around and sell it for $2.50 or $2.75, although he has only paid about 25 cents a gallon for it. He can make the transaction a cash one, and then pay the duty and take out the spirit. We should not give the importers any special advantages, and there is no justification for the Minister's action.

Mr. HAGGART. I think this is in the Inland Revenue Act instead of the Customs Act in England.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not particularly wedded to it, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace), in his experience, thinks it unwise, I have no objection to let it go out.

Mr. WALLACE. I think it unwise, or I would not object to it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not share the hon. gentleman's fear, and I think there are cases occurring in which it would be convenient, without loss to the revenue of any kind. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) objects to it, we will drop the clause, as I want to get on with the Bill.

Subsection "q" struck out.

On subsection "r,"

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). This subsection is entirely new. There were some regulations adopted by the department as to empowering collectors at the different ports to act as tea testers to some extent, and I wish to ask if this section contemplates the appointment of an inspector of tea?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Not necessarily. The present mode of testing tea is by analysis, which is a tedious process, and it is proposed to depart from that and to have recognized standards of tea which can be obtained from the department, so that wholesale houses may send these standards to their buying agents. They can then purchase tea that may be imported into the country with some assurance. This is a system that is adopted in the United States at present. We find it impossible under the present system of analysis to overtake all the samples that are coming in. A great many inferior teas have been offered in the country, and we have to be more careful and rigid in our inspection. We think this provision will very much facilitate the work of the department in that respect.

Mr. WALLACE. I am quite in sympathy with the object of the Minister, but I think this means of carrying it out a failure. The system of analysis discovers, if there are any substances injurious to health in the tea and you cannot tell that from appearance or from standard samples. We know that other vegetable leaves are incorporated with the genuine tea, and that there is artificial colouring brought in, so that the standard would be of no use in detecting these things. I am, of course, in favour of every means of keeping deleterious teas out of the country. Can the Minister inform us when this system was introduced into the United States, and whether it has been successful?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I trust the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) will not object to this clause, for I am sure if he were in the department now he would find how necessary it is. These standards are to be prepared for the convenience of the trade, and the wholesale trade are very anxious to have them. They do not want to run the risk of making large purchases of teas which may be rejected when they reach Canada.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the standard be the poorest quality they can import?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, it must not be below that. If a man buys teas equal to the standard it would be a guarantee that he was moderately safe in making the purchase. But if there are any deleterious subjects introduced into the tea or any artificial colouring, we still have the other test, and we are not obliged to admit such teas. These standards will be of a certain use in giving assurance that when they bring such tea to Canada it will be allowed in. If the tea they bring in is up to the standard in some respects and below it in other respects, it could not be considered as being up to standard.

Mr. WALLACE. I understood the Minister to say that the wholesale grocers had asked for this?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, they want these standards.

Mr. WALLACE. And these standards are the poorest quality of tea that you will permit to come into the country?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, they will be standards of the different kinds, and anything below them will not be fit for importation or consumption.

Mr. WALLACE. Although the Minister tells us that this is the plan adopted in the United States, I would like to know whether he has any knowledge that it has been successful there in accomplishing the object intended. While their laws are very elaborate in many respects, I know that our laws are quite superior to theirs with regard to most of these matters.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I have a good deal of sympathy with the object aimed at by the Minister in this clause, but I think it is likely to be more honoured in the breach than the observance. Suppose that the department adopt certain standards which will represent the lowest quality of teas of the respective classes which can be imported into the country, and suppose that a consignment of tea is landed at the port of Montreal, and the collector thinks the tea does not come up to the standard, while the importer is of opinion that it does; the real question whether this Act will be workable or not will depend on the correctness of the test then made. I submit that the only accurate test that can be made will be to send the tea to the official analyst, and detain the consignment in the meantime, because neither the opinion of the collector nor the opinion of the importer will be sufficient to settle the point.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think the hon. gentleman will admit that by adopting these standards we have gone a great way in lessening the difficulty in this matter. No doubt we shall find some cases in which we may have to resort to analytical tests; but I can assure the hon. gentleman that this test has been applied in the United States, and in many cases the tea has been rejected and has not been allowed to be sold in the country. The temptation is to send such tea to Canada, and we have been forced to make a regulation that in the case of teas imported direct upon a through bill of lading the appraisers of the various ports shall use their own judgment, and need not send a sample of the tea to Ottawa unless they doubt its fitness for consumption; but that in the case of all teas coming from the United States which have not passed the test there, a sample must be sent here to undergo the analytical test. The trade have asked for this, and we thought it wise to adopt it. As soon as it is known to the trade that any tea that has not come up to the standard in the United States will be detained here and cannot be delivered until a sample is sent to the department and undergoes an analytical test, these teas will not be bought.

Mr. WALLACE. One thing that might be done would be to declare that any tea that was rejected in the United States could not prima facie be imported into Canada.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is what we have done.

Mr. WALLACE. Why not put it in this clause?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is not necessary. We gave instructions to that effect to the collectors.

Mr. WALLACE. The instructions to the collectors are not a warning to the importers. Put it in the Customs Act, so that the importers can read it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The trade know it thoroughly now.

Mr. WALLACE. And the man who gets a copy of the Act in a foreign country and sends the goods here, would be put on his guard, too.

Subsection agreed to.

On subsection "s,"

Mr. HAGGART. Have we not power now to carry goods in bond through the United States?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The Act is not as explicit as it will be when this clause is adopted. This is to give clear and definite authority for the transportation of goods in bond under regulations when carried outside the limits of Canada, with the intention of carrying them into another part of Canada. The section 245i of this Act provides for the transportation of goods in bond through Canada; but there is no clear and specific clause dealing with the transport of goods in bond when they pass out of Canada to come back again; and this is to make that clear.

Mr. HAGGART. You have the privilege of sending goods in bond from one part of Canada to another part of Canada through the United States.

Mr. PATERSON.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This does not affect the bonding privilege, but it makes clear that if goods go out of Canada and return to Canada, they may be admitted free of duty, as if the passage was wholly through Canada. The Deputy Minister of Justice gave his opinion that there was not as clear and express authority as was desirable.

Mr. WALLACE. This business is carried on to an enormous extent, and the practice has been, when a car goes out of Canada, to have it sealed at the boundary with the seal of the Canadian customs, and when it comes into Canada at another point, the seal of the Canadian customs is broken, and the goods are admitted free.

Subsection agreed to.

On the preamble,

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to call attention to a fact which has been stated to me, that goods shipped from Port Arthur and other points, intended for export, are counted twice in our exports. I am told that the amount thus twice counted will exceed $4,000,000, so that the excellent showing which the hon. Minister made with regard to exports is, if this statement is true, unduly magnified. I called the attention of the Minister to this at the beginning of the session, and I presume he has made some inquiries.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I mentioned it to the officers of the department, and they said it was not the case.

Mr. WALLACE. I was informed that our own wheat was shipped from Fort William as for export, and that same wheat was shipped to Montreal as for export. I would like to have a statement of the number of bushels from each port, and any further information, and not simply the statement of the officers that the report is not true.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If the hon. gentleman had asked me for any such statement, I would have had it prepared.

Mr. WALLACE. I supposed that in a matter of such grave importance, the hon. gentleman would have had a complete investigation made.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that a different system prevails now with reference to tabulating these facts than what prevailed when he was in office?

Mr. WALLACE. This is not tabulation.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well, in the system of tabulation, or in any other respect.

Mr. WALLACE. With regard to the export of corn, a change has taken place, because the conditions are different.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. But you were speaking of wheat. We do not grow corn in Manitoba.

Mr. WALLACE. I had better ask the Minister that question.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is none that I am aware of.

Mr. WALLACE. But suppose there is no difference in the method of tabulation, it is not the method of tabulation, but the information which the officers get there that would cause the mistake. The conditions are changing from year to year, and the arrangements are not the same last year as they were three or four years ago. The Minister should be able to tell us whether, when a cargo of wheat is shipped from Port Arthur on to Montreal, and then sent from Montreal across the Atlantic, that shipment is credited to our exports twice. I am led to believe that it is, and we ought to have from the Minister something more than a verbal statement from his officers here, who would probably not know anything about it.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). There is a good deal in what the ex-Controller of Customs has stated. It is not the fault of the Minister at all and might not be the fault of the department, but due to the condition of the law. I would suggest that the Minister would refer more particularly to the statute governing the outward clearing vessels. Masters of vessels clearing from the port of Montreal have to give detailed statements of their cargoes to the collector of customs, and masters of vessels with outward cargoes, clearing from Port Arthur, have to give similar statements to the collector of customs at that port. Therefore, you will find the same cargo credited twice to our exports. I think a mistake may have arisen in this way.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If the hon. gentleman thinks so, I will inquire, but I do not.

Mr. WALLACE. Here is another case. A cargo leaves Fort William for Buffalo, and another cargo leaves that port for Ogdensburg. The cargo sent to Buffalo is put into a bonded warehouse, either for export to New York, or anywhere else, by whatever route the owner finds it most advantageous to ship, for Buffalo is a central point from which you can ship by the St. Lawrence, New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia or Boston route. They find that the most convenient and profitable route is by Montreal. It is taken out of bond and goes down to Montreal and gets credit at Montreal for being an export of Canada. But it received credit at Fort William as being an export of Canada. And here are perhaps a quarter of a million of business credited twice as exports of this country.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. For what port would the vessel from Fort William get her clearance?

Mr. WALLACE. For Ogdensburg.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Not for Montreal?

Mr. WALLACE. No. It could not get a clearance for Montreal, for it could not go to Montreal, as the canal is too small. But, being shipped to Ogdensburg, it is shipped to a foreign country, and gets credit as being an export. It is there put in a bonded elevator, and is thence transferred to small vessels to be taken to Montreal. There it gets an outward entry on the Atlantic steamer, and is credited again as being an export to Liverpool. The Minister, I am sure, has no means of disproving that.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I can only say that, if it prevails now, the comparison is not affected, because it prevailed when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) was in office.

Mr. WALLACE. That will hardly be accepted—

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I say it is the same for purposes of comparison. I do not accept the hon. gentleman's statement as being in accordance with the facts. I will inquire into it, for, of course, this is a subject worthy of consideration.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman is making a guess at it and cannot state anything of his own knowledge.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is what I am told by my officers.

Mr. WALLACE. But the hon. Minister has not been informed on the matter.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) mentioned the matter before, I spoke about it to my officers, and they told me that the same system was in operation now that had been in operation before.

Mr. WALLACE. But, as there were no shipments by this route before, the argument would not apply, and the system of crediting these exports twice would affect the comparison. This system of sending via Ogdensburg is of recent origin. The same remark will apply, to a very large extent, to the exports at Buffalo.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There were exports by Buffalo before.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, but not one-quarter as much as to-day. The exports in that way have grown wonderfully in these years. And the hon. Minister apparently has no answer except to say that it was the same under former Governments, and that can scarcely be considered an answer.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not see how it is possible that exports can be entered twice.

Take, for instance, a cargo of flour, of which I have exported a good deal. Before the cargo can leave the station you have to get an outward entry showing the destination and route of the flour. But if it goes via Montreal, it goes through and no entry is made in Montreal; the entry is made when you get the outward entry from the collector of customs at, say, Toronto. If a cargo of wheat were shipped from Fort William to Buffalo, it could not leave without having an outward entry showing that it is consigned to some foreign port, and that would go with the cargo. I do not think that any Canadian wheat that goes to Buffalo is reshipped to Montreal. It would go to New York. It might be consigned direct to Montreal for export, in which case an outward entry would not be required until it went to Montreal. Then, you would have to get your papers and show the export in Montreal. I do not see how it is possible that double entries could be made.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) cannot see it. Others may be able to see it. For instance, he may have a cargo of flour at Toronto Junction to send away. Of course, he has a destination for that flour. He has sold it in Newfoundland or in the maritime provinces or to be sent to England. In the latter two cases, it would be an export, and the destination would be shown on the bill of lading. But, in the case I have mentioned of wheat sent to Buffalo or Ogdensburg, the grain is sent to be placed in the elevator in bond. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) says that no Canadian wheat goes via Buffalo. I would like to ask the hon. member for Kent what becomes of every vessel of more than fourteen feet draught that takes wheat from Fort William or that takes Canadian wheat from Duluth?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I said that no Canadian wheat went to Buffalo and was then reshipped to Montreal. Of course, plenty of Canadian wheat goes via Buffalo and New York.

Mr. WALLACE. That is a point I positively contradict. I am asking, suppose a vessel of more than fourteen feet draught takes Canadian wheat from Duluth to Fort William—

Mr. MCGREGOR. It goes in bond. You understand it without haggling so long over it. It must go to a bonded elevator in Buffalo if it is to be reshipped to Canada.

Mr. WALLACE. Anybody knows that, the hon. gentleman is not giving any information to the House.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I do not think you are.

Mr. WALLACE. Perhaps not. I am trying to give a little information to the hon.

Mr. CAMPBELL.

member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) and to the Minister of Customs, but they do not seem to be very receptive. I am not going to attempt to give any to the hon. member for North Essex, because that is too large a job.

Mr. MCGREGOR. You cannot do it on wheat.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for Kent said there was no Canadian wheat that went via Buffalo. What authority had he for making that statement? Every cargo of Canadian wheat that comes down Lake Erie, if the vessel is more than 14 feet draught, it can not go through the Welland Canal, it has to be transhipped on the cars and sent to Buffalo and put into an elevator. There are enormous quantities that come down in the fall, and instead of leaving it at Fort William for the whole winter whence they could only remove it by a long line of railway travel, they bring it to Buffalo where they have elevators and whence they can send it to American ports or to Montreal or Halifax. It goes there and is stored there. Suppose a million bushels come down in a vessel, that is not going through to England, it may be sold in Canada, it may go to Toronto Junction or anywhere else. I know that large quantities have come from Buffalo, it is put on a smaller vessel at Buffalo and comes down through the Welland Canal to Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence River, and then loaded on an Atlantic steamer at Montreal. It is charged as an export when it leaves Fort William and is shipped to Buffalo, is it not? Most likely it is, because it cannot be shipped in any other way. It must be shipped as an export there. Then when taken out of bond it is identified as Canadian grain, and is brought down the St. Lawrence and unloaded there. In these cases when it was from Montreal, an export entry is made of it in Montreal, and the same bushel of wheat becomes an export at Fort William and an export at Montreal, and is charged twice in the Trade and Navigation Returns. The Minister of Customs says: Suppose it does, that does not amount to anything because that happened when you were in office. Well, that is hardly a very complete reply—that your predecessor had not looked after those things. But those matters were not of consequence at that time as they are to-day, because the export of those grains were not so large, the thing was then just beginning to go in those routes, and because attention had not been called to it. But that is now a very important matter, I called the attention of the Minister to it months ago, and I think we are entitled to a report showing how many bushels of wheat came to Port Arthur along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is only one inlet from the North-west to Fort William, for Canadian grain. It would be easy to ascertain how many bushels of that had gone out from Fort William as exports, and how many bushels of that had gone out from the port of Montreal. It is something that could be easily traced. The Minister has the machinery in his department to trace it, he has not done it, but he said he asked his officials and they said such a thing could not be. The Minister should give it a specific attention, and be able to communicate the facts to us. There is nothing more important than to have an exact knowledge of those things, and if there are any defects and they are pointed out, they should be remedied at once. Another matter that is quite in line with this is with reference to importations of corn. I made a statement, copied from the returns which the Minister placed in my hands in the early part of the session, of the exports from and imports to Canada for the last three months of the calendar year of 1897, which showed that a very large quantity of corn was being imported into Canada and entered for home consumption, and the hon. gentleman opposite stated that was exported from the country again. Well, the Minister did not say so. If he had, there are two things to which I would call his attention. The first is that this was entered for home consumption and was so stated in his report, and it could not have been the other way, because if it were in transit that would be mentioned. Goods are entered in transit, quoted in transit, when they are actually in transit through the country and come, say, to the ports on the Georgian Bay, Owen Sound, Collingwood, Midland and Parry Sound, say American corn coming to the port of Montreal or to Boston by Canadian railways, and shipped there. These goods are in transit, they are so stated in the manifest, in the entries, and they are not entered for home consumption at all. But if it be that they were entered for home consumption, that they were actually in transit and were entered for home consumption, then what occurs? That we get a great deal of Canadian exports, say of 10,000 bushels of corn, not one bushel of which was grown on Canadian soil. If it is American corn that is just passing through, then the Minister of Customs is taking credit for the export of a Canadian produce which is not a Canadian product at all.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That has no connection with this section.

Mr. WALLACE. I think it is germane to this section. The fact of goods passing through American territory and coming back to Canada and vice versa, is quite cognate to the clause which is now under discussion.

Bill, as amended, reported, and read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS AND FISHERIES PROTECTION ACT.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson) moved second reading of Bill

(No. 153) further to protect the customs and fisheries.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Perhaps the hon. Minister will explain the changes between the Bill and the existing law?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This is a new Bill giving powers with respect not only to customs but to the fishery preventive service. It adopts certain provisions lacking in our present law. It is framed on the provisions of the English and American law on the same subject. The necessity of these provisions has led to the introduction of the present Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Bill considered in committee, reported and read the third time and passed.

DOMINION ATLANTIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

The following resolution was considered in committee, and reported:

That it is expedient to ratify the award of the Honourable G. W. Burbidge in favour of the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company, and to authorize the payment to that company of the sum of one hundred thousand dollars for the commutation of its privilege with respect to the drawback of customs or import duties.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 162) to confirm a certain award in favour of the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second times, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

IDENTIFICATION OF CRIMINALS.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved second reading of Bill (No. 156)—from the Senate—respecting the identification of criminals.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Would the Solicitor General give us a short explanation of the Bill?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The idea is to introduce the Bertillon signaletic system which is used for the purpose of identifying criminals. This legislation is introduced, as the result of a conference held in Toronto by police officers, and it has been recommended to us by Mr. Sherwood, Commissioner of the Dominion Police, an officer in whom we have great confidence in matters of this sort. The expenditure will not exceed $100 in the beginning for each of our penitentiaries, and then Mr. Sherwood anticipates that for an additional expenditure of $75 a year we shall be able to carry the system out. We will not only have the photograph of each criminal but such measurements of his body as will enable any criminal past eighteen years of age to be identified; it being an established principle in medicine that a man after 18 years old does not change so far as certain features of his body are concerned. There is to be a central bureau at Ottawa where the police officers throughout the country will send the result of their examination of criminals, and there has been an arrangement entered into, especially with Chicago and New York for an exchange of these measurements.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is a capital system and I believe its introduction will assist in the suppression of crime. I saw the system in operation in Paris where it has been wonderfully successful, and where it has been carried out in a very perfect manner. The results obtained from it certainly justify its introduction in Canada.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It seems to me that the words in this clause would sanction the introduction of a very objectionable system in French criminal law which takes place before the juge d'instruction where the prisoner is subject to examination and cross-examination. While that may be all right in France it would be very objectionable in connection with our British system.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is not the intention, and it would be very deplorable if we introduced the procedure adopted by the juge d'instruction of France. I do not think that could be considered as part of the Bertillon system. I have here a card giving the result of the application of the system with physical measurements, and so forth, and it does not give the age of the prisoner, so that apparently they do not ask him a single question. The only thing that would be asked the prisoner under this form would be his nativity and occupation.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think those questions must be in connection with an examination made outside of the room, for I saw a prisoner who had just been arrested brought into a room, and from start to finish not a question was asked nor a word said to him, nor did he open his mouth. He was simply directed where to sit. A photograph of him was taken, his foot was measured, a certain part of the arm, his head, and so forth. After that he was taken to another place, so that perhaps I was wrong. Then the judge in the court had this card to assist him in his inquiry. I may say that in that case there were some hundreds of thousands of these cards put away in drawers, and it took Dr. Dawson only from eight to ten minutes, after the measurements of this prisoner were given to him, to find the record of the man, who had been arrested and convicted of a crime previously.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). May I ask the Solicitor General whether the system is sufficiently defined by this name?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Of course, I must speak with some degree of caution on this subject, because I do not feel that I am possessed of sufficient information to enable me to speak positively; but I know that it is invariably described as the Bertillon signaletic system, and in the report of the conference of which I have spoken it is so referred to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, I think it is extremely desirable that the system should be introduced here. The only doubt I have is as to its being properly identified by this name. There is provision in the Bill that the Governor in Council may, by Order in Council, make provisions with the same object in view; but it might be necessary to go into the question of fact as to what system it was, so that it might be advisable to have something in the Bill to define the system by means of this card.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The system is so universally known by the name given to it in the Bill that there is very little danger of misapprehending it. I may say that when the system was introduced in Ontario, it was described by the same words as are used here.

Mr. HAGGART. Does this apply only to convicts? or, if a person were simply arrested, would he have to go through all this process?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I may say to my hon. friend that I would not be a party to any attempt to subject to these measurements a person who was simply arrested, perhaps having been out in the evening. So far as we are concerned, we cannot make it apply to anybody except persons who come under the criminal law, and who are liable to be sent to the penitentiary.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

IMPORTATION AND EMPLOYMENT OF ALIENS.

Bill (No. 155) to amend chapter 11 of the statutes of 1897 intituled, "An Act to restrict the importation and employment of aliens," was read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This Bill is designed to amend the Alien Labour Law of last session. Section 9 of that Act says :

This Act shall apply only to such foreign countries as have enacted and retained in force laws or ordinances applying to Canada of a character similar to this Act.

It becomes necessary to prove the existence of these laws in foreign countries, and the Bill now before the House simply proposes a means of doing so.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY—THE HONEY LOCUST PLANT.

The FINANCE MINISTER (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. McLAREN. Before going into Supply, I wish to draw the attention of the House to a couple of letters I have here—one from the Stratford Hedge Fence Company, and the other from the Brantford Hedge Fence Company—with regard to the manner in which the San José Scale Act is affecting their business. I shall first read the letter from the Stratford Hedge Fence Company :

Stratford, Ont., May 30, 1898.

A. F. MacLaren, Esq., M.P., Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—We have written the Minister of Customs, requesting him to have honey locust plants placed on the exemption list, as we are obliged to import them in order to carry out our contracts with farmers, the supply in Canada being exhausted. We, therefore, find the operation of the Government's action prohibiting the importation of nursery stock to be extremely embarrassing, and take the liberty of writing you to express our desire that you use your influence and that of your friends in inducing the Government to grant exemption towards honey locust plants, which are not affected by the San José scale.

It so happened this year that the Brantford Hedge Company had provided for their business by sowing, in 1896, honey locust seed, which was expected to produce plants enough for their own requirements in 1898, 1899 and 1900.

By arrangement this company divided with the other five companies the whole of these plants, so that the demand was nearly met this year, but at the expense of using plants under the standard size and at the same time using up the stock that was required for 1899 and 1900. The position that the whole six companies are in is, that they have made contracts with thousands of farmers amounting to hundreds of miles of hedge, to supply plants to replace in 1899 and 1900, to say nothing of the new planting.

The session is about closed, and it is absolutely necessary that we should have this matter provided for at once. It would be folly for the companies to send out salesmen to secure orders for fence before being assured that the plants would be forthcoming. The magnitude of the business may be judged from the fact that there are thousands of miles of hedge fence already planted, and a very large amount of capital, mostly that of farmers, invested in the business. Trusting you will do your utmost in this matter, we are,

Yours very truly,

STRATFORD HEDGE FENCE COMPANY (Limited).

Per WALTER MILLER, Secy.

The following letter I have received from the Brantford Hedge Fence Company :—

Stratford, May 31, 1898.

A. F. MacLaren, M.P., Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—We have found the operation of the Government's action in prohibiting the importation of nursery stock to be extremely embarrassing. We have hitherto imported from the United States nearly all the honey locust plants we require, although we have grown some plants in Canada. It so happened that the Brantford Hedge Company had provided for their business by sowing in 1896 honey locust seed, which was expected to produce plants enough for their requirements in 1898, 1899 and 1900. By arrangement this company divided with the five other companies the whole of these plants, so that the demand was nearly met this year, but at the expense of using plants under standard size and at the same time using up the stock that was required for 1899 and 1900. The position that the whole six companies are in is, that they have made contracts with thousands of farmers, amounting to hundreds of miles of hedge, to supply plants to replace in 1899 and 1900 any that are missing from the hedge row, to say nothing of the new planting, and there are no honey locust plants left in Canada. The season is about closed, and it is absolutely necessary that we should have this matter provided for at once. It would be folly for the companies to send out salesmen to secure orders for fence before being assured that the plants would be forthcoming. The magnitude of the business may be judged from the fact that there are already thousands of miles of hedge fences already planted, and a very large amount of capital, mostly that of farmers, invested in the business. Trusting that you will do your utmost in this matter, we are

Yours very truly,

THE BRANTFORD HEDGE CO. (Limited),

A. J. McPHERSON,
Sec. Treas. and Mgr.

I may also state that I telegraphed Mr. McPherson, who is at the head of the Brantford Hedge Fence Company, asking him if he had ever found any of the San José scale on the honey locust plant. He replied as follows :—

Have made inquiries of nurserymen and others, and have not heard of any San José scale being seen on honey locust. If you can't get exemption, secure Government inspection of plants before shipment.

A. J. McPHERSON.

The proposition of these gentlemen is that if the Government cannot grant exemption of the plants, they should send an inspector across the line to inspect the plant before shipment. I spoke to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), and to the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), with regard to this matter. My hon. friend, the the Minister of Agriculture, replied as follows:—

Ottawa, June 2nd, 1898.

Dear Mr. MacLaren,—I have conferred with Dr. Fletcher, the Dominion Entomologist, in regard to the request of the Stratford Hedge Fence Company, and find that it is impossible to grant what they ask. I inclose you copy of Dr. Fletcher's memorandum in regard to it.

Yours very truly,

SYDNEY FISHER,

I will now read the memorandum from Mr. Fletcher:—

Memorandum for the Hon. Minister of Agriculture in re Honey Locust for Hedges.

This question of exempting the honey locust has already been considered by the department, and the entomologist believes that the Minister's opinion that this tree should not be exempted from the provisions of the San José Scale Act is in perfect accordance with actions already taken by the department. One large company has been to considerable expense cabling to Europe for plants, and the Stratford company has made large sales this year at advanced prices to meet the present demand. There will certainly be some little delay in the filling of these orders, but the inconvenience to this industry cannot be compared to that in other lines of horticulture.

For the present I regret to say that I must urge the Minister strongly not to relax in any way the restrictions of the Act.

J. FLETCHER,

Dominion Entomologist.

I do not know that I need say anything further with regard to this business. We have thousands of miles of this hedge fence in western Ontario, and the stoppage of erecting those fences entails great loss to our labouring population. A great many men are employed in this industry, planting, trimming and wiring the fences, and I would strongly urge the Government to adopt the suggestion of having these plants inspected in the United States before shipment. By taking this precaution, I am confident that all danger of infection would be avoided. It is too bad that this business should be stopped, more particularly when so many of our farmers are members of these different hedge fence companies and deeply interested in them. What makes the hardship still greater is the fact that a great many hedges were more or less destroyed last winter and the plants are absolutely required to repair the damage.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I agree with my hon. friend from Perth (Mr. MacLaren) that this is a very unfortunate matter. A great many miles of this fence have been planted throughout the province of Ontario, and as hon. members know this matter of fencing is a very serious and expensive one to our farmers in many sections of the country. A number of the fences which they formerly used were too expensive, and consequently many farmers adopted this locust plant for fencing. What success has attended the experiment. I am not at present able to say, but I have seen many miles of it—very little of it over a few years old—which appear to be quite successful wherever treated properly. The House will see how important it is to the farmers that this industry should be encouraged. I can add very little to what my hon. friend has said, not having personal knowledge as to whether plants are likely to be attacked by the San José scale or not, but the parties interested assert very positively that the plants have never been attacked by this pest. If that be the case, it is just possible that the officers of the department are more strict than is necessary, and we know from experience that in our departments officers are liable to have hobbies and sometimes carry them to extremes. The matter to be settled, I think, is as to whether the officials in the department, who report that this plant is subject to the attack by the San José scale, are right or not. Then as my hon. friend has said, in view of the demand for this important purpose of fencing, some arrangement might be made until this question should be definitely settled to establish a system of inspection. That would satisfy the parties interested. I quite agree with him that the large number interested in this business are the farmers. A great many miles of this fence have been planted. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will take this into serious consideration and try to see that no injustice is done and encouragement is given to the planting of the honey locust fence.

Mr. CHARLTON. This question has assumed a rather peculiar form, Mr. Speaker. The San José Scale Bill which passed this House was passed at the solicitation, I understand, of nurserymen. At that time I opposed the passage of the Bill on the ground that the very course that it is now urged should be adopted could then have been adopted with safety—that is the adoption of a system of inspection of stock and the taking of precautions such as have been adopted in the state of New York and other nursery centres in the United States. It seems from papers read by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. MacLaren) that the parties now pressing for the removal of those stringent regulations are nurserymen or, at least that a nurseryman has placed a paper in my hon. friend's hands. This establishment has sold all its own stock and desires to continue the business of filling orders, and to do so, find it necessary to import stock from the United States. They put their case in the hands of the hon. gentleman who has presented it so ably to-night. I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that precautions can be adopted which will render the importation of that stock quite safe. But I have no doubt that the importation of all nursery stock could be rendered quite safe. I had no doubt of it when the Bill was passed. The nursery stock of New York is certified by the state entomologist—not only stock to be exported, but stock sold for domestic consumption—to guard against the San José scale. And if in addition we had a system of inspection here, and required these nurserymen, as they offered to do, to bear the expense not only of that inspection but of fumigation and any other steps that might be necessary for safety, I hold now, as I did when the Bill was passed, the importation of this stock could be rendered safe, and that it should be permitted. My hon. friend from North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) says that the farmers are interested in this matter with reference to the honey locust. So they are, and they are interested also in the matter of setting out peach trees, plum trees, apple trees, and so on, and the effect of the law has been, I understand, to increase the price of nursery stock to the extent of about 40 per cent. I understand that the nurserymen of the Welland district and other sections where we have nurseries, instructed their agents, less than a week after the Bill was passed, to increase the price of the stock orders for which they were soliciting, to the extent of 40 per cent more. Of course, it is perfectly proper to guard against the introduction of this pest. I believe the pest was introduced upon one occasion from a nursery in New Jersey, and obtained a foothold. Great care should be taken; but I do not believe that the stringent and drastic measure adopted by my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) was entirely necessary. If the regulations in force are to be mitigated and set aside in reference to the honey locust, there is as good reason for setting them aside in the case of all nursery stock. I believe that the honey locust is as liable to be infected from this pest as the plum, apple, or peach, and that precautionary measures taken with reference to the introduction of the honey locust can be as well applied to the introduction of other nursery stock. If it is in the interest of the farmers of Canada that the introduction of this hedge plant should be permitted, because the supply is exhausted and they desire to get it, it is as much to their interest to allow the importation of other stock. If the regulations are to be set aside, I do not think that any exception should be made in the case of the article under discussion. As to the degree of loss or the extent of calamity that would follow the exclusion of this stock for use as a hedge plant, I am very doubtful that a great amount of damage would be inflicted upon the country. I do not know the character of this hedge fence, but I am doubtful whether it is not like some other plants that have been in use for a time and have gone out of use. I remember, as a farmer, that, years ago, willows were said to make a good fence, and hundreds of miles of willows were planted. They grew 30 or 40 feet high and were useless as a fence, unless you stretched barbed wire between them. They shaded the fields and took the strength of the soil for a rod on either side. They had to be taken away in most cases, and the farmers had a great deal of trouble in extirpating them. I do not know the qualities of the honey locust, but I do not think it will answer the purpose as well as the Osage orange. But I think about as good a fence as any is a line of cedar posts with woven wire. If the Minister of Agriculture grants this petition, I would counsel him to go further and remove the disabilities that rest upon farmers with regard to other stock, which he may as safely do as to remove the disability with regard to the honey locust.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to ask the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to cases of this character. In my constituency there are some men who ordered nursery stock before they had any intimation that this Bill would be passed. They ordered it under such circumstances that the property in the stock passed to them when it was put on board the railway train. When the stock arrived at the border it could not come into this country, and the result was, that it was destroyed and these people have had to pay for it. Now that is neither more or less than the expropriation of the property of those people for the benefit of the country, and I think in all fairness that those who have suffered in this way ought to be compensated for any loss resulting from the passage of this Act. If they have ordered their stock so that they are bound to pay for it, and that stock cannot come into the country in consequence of the passing of this Act, it is clear that they are sustaining a loss for the benefit of the whole country, and are in the position of a man whose property is expropriated for the purpose of a railway or any other improvement. I would like the hon. gentleman to take cases of that kind into consideration.

Mr. ERB. As a practical farmer, and one coming from the neighbourhood of Stratford, from which this request comes, and as having some practical knowledge of this hedge plant, I desire to say that I do not altogether agree with the importance that some attach to this question, as appears in the letters that the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. MacLaren) has read. I had some of this hedge plant on my own farm, and speaking for the locality in which I live, I make bold to say that its prohibition from this country will not be much regretted by the farmers. My own experience with this plant, and I may say that the experience of my neighbours has been similar to my own, is that this plant is not suitable for hedge purposes, in our locality at any rate. I have yet to hear of a single farmer who has this hedge who has given a second order for the same kind of fence. It is a plant that makes a very uneven growth in our soil, and even where it has attained a sufficiently strong growth, we find that the plant is very liable to be barked by the mice and the rabbits. I have had a stretch of that fence barked by mice last winter, and many of my neighbours have met with the same experience. Therefore, I do not think it would be right, simply because the hedge fence companies ask for this, that the Government should make any exception in the case of hedge plants on the representations that have been made. I will admit that some farmers may be interested in having this hedge plant introduced, but they are men who have put their money into hedge fence companies. The farmers as a rule, in my locality, at any rate, are not very much concerned about the introduction of this plant or its prohibition. I would not like to see the Government make any exception in the case of this plant that they are not willing to extend to nursery stock, for I think the fruit industry is far more important than that of hedge fencing.

Mr. CAMPBELL. While this subject is under consideration, I think it is only right for me to say that a large company in the county I have the honour to represent have invested considerable money in this hedge fence, and it is a serious matter to them indeed, for the Government to prohibit the importation of their stock. I think I could not do better than read a letter which I received the other day from them:—

Chatham, Ont., June 1st, 1898.

Archibald Campbell, M.P., Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—We have found the operations of the Government's action in prohibiting the importation of nursery stock to be extremely embarrassing. We have hitherto imported from the United States nearly all the honey locust hedge fence plants we required.

We have been incorporated as a company by the Ontario Government with a paid-up capital of $25,000, and also have on hand with the farmers of Essex, Kent and Lambton, contracts to the amount of about 125 miles. These contracts have all been planted out, besides a large number of new contracts for planting in the spring of 1899, none of which can be completed unless the Government allows the importation of the honey locust hedge plant, which, if they do not, will mean the failure of the company, as well as being responsible for the non-fulfilment of our contracts, which will mean a loss of thousands of dollars, not only to our company, but to the farmers of this section of the country, and we are only one of six companies in this province who have been placed in the same lamentable position.

Then again, the honey locust, as a hedge plant, has a history of over 2,000 years, and which has never been attacked by a blight of any description, and remains free to-day. Then again, the state of Illinois, from which our plants are imported, is said to be free from San José scale. Mr. A. E. Windsor, of Havana, Illinois, the man from whom we buy our plants, grows no kind of nursery stock except the hedge plants, nor is there any nursery within fifty miles of his farm of any description. Hoping you will use your influence to have this embargo removed from our fence plants, we remain,

Yours truly,

THE CHATHAM HEDGE FENCE CO. (Limited).
B. D. WALLACE,
Secretary.

This letter fully explains itself, and it requires no further comment from me. The House can readily see, and the Minister will no doubt note the fact, that it is a very serious matter with them. Having had contracts before the prohibition of this plant was passed, they are put in an embarrassing position, and I trust that some means can be taken by the Minister to enable them to continue their business and fulfil their contracts. I have no doubt the matter will receive his best consideration.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have watched the progress of the honey locust fences in our locality since they were first introduced. I was asked at one time to go down into the county of Oxford and examine the fences there, and come back and report favourably, but unless I would promise to report favourably, I need not go, and I did not go. It is seven or eight years since these fences were first introduced into the locality where I live, and not a single farmer has ever given a second order for such a fence. Every one I have talked with considers that a fraud has been perpetrated upon them by the agents who sold them the plants. A great many of these fences have been ruined by the mice. In three or four townships where a large number of farmers tried that kind of fence, I do not know of a single one that serves the purpose, and wires have had to be strung along the fence. It is no benefit to the farmers of our locality, so far as I know. The members of the hedge fence companies are mostly people in the cities and towns, the shareholders are mostly inhabitants of the cities and towns. There is one company in Stratford who sent their agent to me time and again to try and decoy me away from my brother farmers and to give them an order, but I never did anything of the kind. I say to the Minister that if it is in the interests of this country to keep the San José scale out, he should not allow himself to be turned aside from that object by the representations of these hedge fence companies on the ground that their hedges are not infected by this scale.

Mr. CLANCY. There are a great many farmers who have planted this kind of fence, and the question is whether the companies who are engaged in the business should be shown some consideration. It must be remembered that this legislation has been passed very suddenly. It may be said that it is put upon fruit trees as well, and that the one is not in any worse position than the other. It has not been shown that the honey locust is affected by this scale. That being the case, under close inspection it might be admitted. I am not going to press its admission on the ground so much that contracts have been entered into and should be fulfilled, because the general interests of the country might be so important that this should not be done; but as it has not been shown that the plants are attacked, it might be brought in under careful inspection. It is imported by few persons, and therefore the difficulty of dealing with a large number of small quantities would be obviated. It might be allowed perhaps to come in from parts of the country which are known to be entirely free from the scale, such as Illinois. The hon. Minister shakes his head, but my information is that it is free. The plant is yet on its trial, and we should not be too hasty in condemning it. I have seen very good fences made of it. It must also be remembered that our fencing material is rapidly disappearing, and perhaps this might prove a useful fence for the country. If it is excluded for a considerable number of years, it must be remembered that so much time is lost to the farmers, because long periods are required to produce fences. I hope if the Minister can arrange any reasonable way to admit this plant under proper precautions, it should be done.

Mr. GILMOUR. I entirely agree with the remarks that have fallen from the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Dilman) and the hon. member for Huron (Mr. McMillan), and in my opinion the Minister should not be lax in his precautions to prevent the importation of this fencing material into this country. If we should prohibit any trees coming here at all, we should stop the honey locust. It has come in, to a very great extent, during the last few years, and if a rest is given to its importation, the farmers will better understand this plant, and think less of it for fencing purposes. The fencing is not of much advantage, as it requires attention every year. In the old country hedges have been abandoned on account of the rise of wages. I hope the Minister will not relax the precautions taken regarding the importation of this fencing material, because I consider that if importation was prohibited for a few years it would be better understood by the farmers of this country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I wish to thank the hon. members who have spoken on this question, because I think among them they have pretty clearly given an answer to each other, and practically there is very little for me to say. I will, however, make a short statement of the facts since the San José Scale Act was passed, I have applications from almost all parts of the country and all interests, and I might say in behalf of almost every conceivable plant, to allow special exemptions from the Act and to enable certain individuals to have the privilege of bringing in that particular plant. I need not say that had I listened to these temptations the San José Scale Act would have been entirely inoperative. The fact is, that this plant belongs to the family of acacia, and is specially named as one of those families subject to the scale; and while I cannot state positively from any special knowledge, that the honey locust is liable to scale, it belongs to the family specially liable to scale, and it would be very extraordinary if it escaped on every occasion. As to the question of the value of this particular plant for hedge purposes, the question has been pretty thoroughly threshed out to-day. There is evidently a divergence of opinion, and it is not my purpose to decide it. The plant is one I do not know myself. It will not grow in this part of the country or where I live, it being far too tender for this part of Canada. It is possible to grow it in the southerly and more favoured portions of Ontario, but there is a very serious objection to it in the minds of many people. The difficulty has been pointed out by the hon. member for Norfolk, that if we allow one class of plant liable to the scale insects to come in and prevent others, we are really committing an injustice. We must, I think, be consistent in the working of this Act, and as the Act was originally passed for the express purpose of defending the country, our horticulturists, tree-growers and farmers, from the introduction of this most dangerous and insidious enemy, I conceive it is my duty and the part of wisdom to try and carry it out and so accomplish the object for which the Act was passed. It is not very easy sometimes to resist the importunities and representations made, but I am glad to know that up to the present time, at all events, those who made applications have seemed to be satisfied that the interests of the country, however their own individual interests might be affected, should be protected, and it would be a matter of extreme regret if Parliament, even if there is any doubt existing in the matter, having decided to enforce the Act, should, during the last days of the session, seek to do something that would impair the efficiency of it. A suggestion has been made as to inspection, and also as to fumigation. As I said at the beginning of the session, if there is any reasonable scheme which can be successfully elaborated by which the opportunity can be given to continue the importation of stock from abroad, I shall be glad to work out such a scheme; but the testimony of those working in the United States, where the various states have tried to protect themselves against each other, has been on the part of the most noted and eminent authorities, entymological and botanical, that inspection is inefficient and fumigation is dangerous. If, however, after a year's experience, we find anything can be done to remove the evils we found existing during that year, I shall be only too glad to work it out. I think, however, it would be unfortunate if, as regards this particular plant, we should relax our efforts, and I must ask hon. members to concur in that view.

Motion agreed to, and the House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To provide for the purchase of 500 copies of the "Parliamentary Companion" .. $1,000

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I propose to change the name of the book from the "Parliamentary Companion" to the "Parliamentary Guide."

Mr. FOSTER. When was the last "Parliamentary Companion" issued?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it was immediately after the general election of 1896.

Mr. FOSTER. It took in the members elected in 1896.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, up to the general elections.

Mr. FOSTER. How much does the edition cost?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The usual practice has been that the Government purchased 500 copies at $2 a copy.

Mr. FOSTER. Why are we now issuing a Parliamentary Companion if we had one after the elections of 1896?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The work, of course, is not confined to the Dominion Parliament, and since that time we have had three provincial elections, and in all probability we shall have another before the work is out. It is desirable that the book should be complete not only as respects the Dominion Parliament but as respects the provincial legislatures. It is not unusual, I believe, to have an issue between elections as affecting the Dominion. This is a new edition to be published.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is publishing that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is to be published by Mr. Magurn.

Mr. FOSTER. It has been usually published by some one else, has it not?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The last volume which was purchased was issued by Mr. Gemmill.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Mr. Magurn alone in the publication of this book, or is Mr. Gemmill associated with him?

Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think they were to some extent associated, but I believe now they are not. I believe Mr. Magurn is proposing to issue this book himself.

Mr. FOSTER. On material he gathered himself?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. So I understand.

Mr. FOSTER. I was looking for some information I had, and my information amounts to about this; that there was an arrangement by which Mr. Magurn was to get the thing piloted through if the information was gotten up by somebody else, and that after it had proceeded a certain distance, Mr. Magurn having succeeded in piloting it through, the other collaborateur was not so successful in getting the arrangement carried out upon which the joint business was commenced.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not in a position to state what the arrangements was between Mr. Magurn and Mr. Gemmill. All that I know is that Mr. Magurn announced his intention to issue the book and the Government now recommend to Parliament the purchase of 500 copies. What may have occurred between Mr. Gemmill and Mr. Magurn is a matter I do not know anything about.

Mr. BERGERON. Who are those books to be given to?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it is the custom to give one to each member and senator.

Further amount required for printing notes $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. What is the reason for the increased number of notes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The appropriation in the estimates for the past year was $35,000, but owing to the large increase in the circulation it became necessary to have a larger quantity of notes, and we find that $45,000 will be required for the coming year. For the following year, however, we are only asking $40,000. Of course if there should be some unusual extension of the currency we might in the Supplementary Estimates of next year require more.

Mr. FOSTER. How are these new notes comparing with the old in the matter of wear?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not had the matter brought to my notice, but I believe they are equally durable.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman get a report on the durability of the notes. I suppose the Minister is aware that the execution of the new notes is not nearly up to the execution of the old notes?

Mr. FOSTER. It is a matter of very common opinion throughout the country, and if my hon. friend had any careful supervision he would find that these new notes are not so durable as the old. I have seen some of them bleaching right out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not had my attention drawn to any difficulty about the quality of the notes. The officers of my department keep a close eye on the quality, but they are of course not experts, and I will be glad to have a more careful inquiry made. If the notes are not up to the standard I shall see that the contractors are obliged to make them so. I have heard no complaint of the quality of the notes.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. There has been great complaint about the figure "one" on the dollar bill. It is not neat enough, and in some cases has been changed into a four, and there has been a good deal of dissatisfaction in the country as numbers of people have been cheated.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The figure "one" is naturally unsatisfactory to a man who would like to have a four dollar note. The only difficulty I have heard in regard to the figures has been that an attempt was made to raise the notes by taking tobacco stamps which happened to be nearly of a similar colour and transferring them to the Dominion notes, so that in a few instances people were imposed upon. My attention having been drawn to that I am having the $1 notes so altered that the word "one" will appear so often that it will be difficult to mistake it.

Mr. HAGGART. What supervision is there over the manufacture of those notes and stamps. If I understand it aright it is let by contract to the party who prints them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. In England there is a very accurate account kept of the manufacture both of notes and postage stamps. It is done under the supervision of the Inland Revenue Department, and it is so close that it almost amounts to a suspicion that someone may possibly do wrong, so that the greatest possible supervision is exercised. When I was Postmaster General it was our intention to get the stamps manufactured in England by the same person who manufactured them for the British Government, and the British Government offered to give the same supervision over them through its Inland Revenue Department as they do in regard to their own stamps. Of course, the printing and manufacturing of them will have to be done here; but there ought to be some more accurate supervision than there is at present.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is no change in that respect from the practice of my predecessor. But I quite agree with my hon. friend that we cannot be too careful of the supervision; and I shall be very happy if any method can be devised by which it can be improved.

Governor General's Secretary's Office—
Further amount required for contingencies $2,850

Mr. FOSTER. This makes the total for sundries $13,900. Last year the amount was only $11,300. What is the reason for the increase?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not the explanation at hand.

Mr. FOSTER. Let the item pass, but bring the explanation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I shall be happy to give it on concurrence.

Queen's Privy Council for Canada—Allowance for private secretary to Hon. R. R. Dobell, to be paid notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act $600

Mr. FOSTER. Who is this secretary?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The secretary of Mr. Dobell, who is also an officer in the Privy Council Department is Mr. Hawkins. I may say that Mr. Dobell pays him a much larger salary than this. This is a proportion of the amount. Besides attending to the duties of private secretary to Mr. Dobell, who spends his time entirely at the capital during the session and has a good deal to do, although not a holder of a portfolio, Mr. Hawkins also renders services as a clerk in the Privy Council.

Mr. FOSTER. But while he is acting as private secretary to Mr. Dobell, he does not do any work in the Privy Council?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. FOSTER. But he draws his salary in the Privy Council?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the only public money he receives. Mr. Dobell pays the remainder of his salary.

Mr. FOSTER. Has Mr. Geoffrion a private secretary?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He has not. He is not able to spend as much time at Ottawa as we would like him to do, or as Mr. Dobell does.

Department of Inland Revenue—Further amount required for contingencies..... $150

Mr. COSTIGAN. On an understanding, which I believe has been arrived at, that members shall have the privilege of speaking generally on any item in the Supplementary Estimates, not having taken part in the discussion of any of the Estimates before, I venture to make a few observations in order to lay my views before the House on the subject of increases, especially in the Department of Inland Revenue. I will begin by stating that I regret exceedingly that the Government have changed the manner of payments to the civil service generally in connection with the increments fixed by law up to the present time. There may have been a laxity in the manner in which the law was carried out before; but in my opinion it would have been better to have improved the practice than to wipe out the system, which was a non-political means of giving to every official a fair increase proportionate to his work, standing and efficiency. That, however, I look upon as something that has gone by; I only mention it en passant. But there remains another matter on which I feel very much more earnest; that is, the increment that is claimed by the excise men in the Inland Revenue Department. While I do not want to say anything to minimize the claims of the inside service as affected by the changed policy, I do not intend to try to make a case in favour of the excisemen, which I believe will show their claims to be away beyond and above the claims that can be put forward by any other branch of the service, and so strong that I think the Government will find it necessary to give them very serious and favourable consideration. The civil service law provided a minimum salary at which the clerks entered in each class, and fixed a maximum which they could reach by annual increments. The salaries of excisemen, without exception, are fixed at a minimum of $500 with a maximum of $1,000, without classification, it being left optional with the Minister to give an exciseman on entering the service, $1,000 if he considers it wise to do so. The House will see the difference between their position and the position of the clerks in the different departments in that respect. All the clerks in the different departments are graded as first-class, second-class, third-class, special class and chief clerks, with a minimum and a maximum salary for each class, and means provided by which, after a clerk reaches the maximum in one class, he may pass out of that to the next higher class. In the excise service the law left a wide margin, providing that the salary of an exciseman might be $500 or might be $1,000. In view of that condition of things, the Inland Revenue Department, during the time I had the honour to preside over it, thought it would be much safer and more in the interest of economy, and in the interest of the country, not to amend the law, but to supplement the law, and a set of regulations were made and adopted by Council, which gave them the effect of law, by which, not the civil service law nor Parliament, but the department itself, arranged three different classes of excisemen and fixed the maximum salary of a third-class exciseman at $750. Another restriction was placed on that service. Before a man could receive an appointment at all as a third-class exciseman, he was obliged to undergo a technical examination, which was more rigid and severe than any other examination prescribed in the public service. Only after having passed that examination could he be appointed as a third-class exciseman, and then he could only be appointed; on probation at $500.

Then he could be only appointed on probation at $500, and he could not be confirmed in his position until he had served to the satisfaction of the department for six months. At the end of that term, if his services was satisfactory, an Order in Council was required to confirm him in the position of a third-class exciseman at $600 a year. In other words, having passed the examination, he entered the service as a probationary exciseman. He entered at $500 a year, and was paid that rate until his probationary term of six months was served. Having succeeded in becoming confirmed in his position by Order in Council, he then drew a salary of $600 a year, and received $30 per year increase until he reached the maximum fixed—not by law but by the department—at $750. When he reached that maximum he might continue in the service another 20 years without an increase, unless he passed the next higher and more difficult examination, which entitled him to the grade of a second-class exciseman. Therefore, he had to serve six months before he could start at $600 per year. Then he had to serve five years as a third-class exciseman, before he could reach the maximum of that class, namely, $750, and the only means by which he could be promoted to the next higher grade was by passing a higher and more difficult examination. When he passed that rigid examination and became a second-class exciseman, his salary was $750, and he was entitled to receive $30 per year increase until he reached the maximum of that class, which was $850. Having reached $850, he might remain in the service twenty years longer without a single dollar being added to his salary, unless he passed the still more rigid examination, entitling him to rank as first-class exciseman. Then his salary went on increasing until it reached the maximum of $1,000, which would imply a service of about twelve years.

Parliament has not changed its mind because the item in the Estimates is worded the same as it always has been:—

Salaries of officers and inspectors of excise, and to provide for increase depending upon the result of excise examinations.

It does not say that the increase is optional or by choice, but that depends on the result of the excise examination. Parliament having voted that item, I believe its intention was to keep faith with these men, and pay those who have passed the examinations and complied with the conditions imposed on them, the increases to which they are entitled. I say it would be an act of cruelty to these men if, after having imposed such regulations as made it impossible for them to get a dollar of salary or a dollar of increase except by that slow process I have described, we were not to give them any benefit when they had performed all the conditions required by these rigid regulations. I would regret, so far as my share of the responsibility goes, the initiation of a set of regulations tending so much to keep down public expenditure in that particular service, if such glaring injustice to these men was to be the result. Had these regulations not been passed, and the law been left as it was, will any one dispute this fact that, in a great many cases at least, men's ability, their efficiency, their influence, which we all know must count for something, would have secured their appointment at the maximum of $1,000 on entering the service, and for the last twelve years the country would have been paying these men $1,000 right along. But by these regulations, which were not obligatory under the law, which the Civil Service Act did not require, but which were made in the public interest and the interest of economy, the department placed these men in an exceptional position. I do not want to prolong the discussion. I think I have made myself clear as to the facts of the law and the object for which these regulations were introduced, and I have nothing to add, without reflecting or drawing unpleasant comparisons or underrating the work of any other branch of the service of the country. I have no hesitation in saying that the excise service in Canada will compare favourably with any class of public service in this or any other country I know of. Trained from the bottom to the top, submitted to most rigid examinations, acting under discipline from the start all the way through, they are the most trained officials in the public service to-day. And necessarily so, because the department presides not only over one but a group of technical subjects, that require technical knowledge to be efficiently managed. Therefore, I hope that, so far as the increment in this department is concerned, there will be no question at all about the excisemen. I do not put their claim on the ground of giving these men what they deserve as a matter of favour. They were made to come in at the lowest rung of the ladder, when the law did not require that, and we have exacted from them five, eight and ten years service to reach a point, which they might have reached much sooner within the law, but which was kept back from them for years by the regulations which the department passed. When they have performed their part of the contract faithfully, I hope there will be no disposition to deprive them of the little advance that comes so slowly in the course of years of faithful service.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Following up what my hon. friend has just said, I would point out to the Minister of Inland Revenue that the case made out by my hon. friend does not, in any sense, come within the meaning of the statutory increase of the Civil Service Act. That is one thing, but the case put by my hon. friend is quite another thing. As he stated truly, the officials in the Department of Inland Revenue enter at a very much lower salary generally than the officials of any other department in the entire service. As he has stated also, they go through an educational process from the time they enter until they reach the maximum of their respective classes. These rules were founded upon common sense and reason, because this being an educational department, the officials, in so far as their knowledge goes, have very much the status of a profession. A set of regulations was deemed necessary in order that only those should receive an increase in salary who would study and become worthy of it and fit to discharge the somewhat, if not altogether, technical duties, appertaining to the work of that department.

Now, there is a broad distinction in the treatment that should be meted out to the officials of the Inland Revenue Department, and to the officials of any other department, in so far as concerns paying the statutory increases. It is more a breach of contract in the case of these officials than in the case of the officials of any other department. I hope that this matter, having been brought to the attention of the Minister, he will see the justice of the contention that they should be paid the sum that was specially voted by Parliament for this purpose. It is wholly unlike the case made out here respecting the officials in other branches of the service. Whatever force there may have been in the argument so very strongly advanced by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) and other gentlemen on that side of the House as to it being a matter wholly optional with the Government whether the ordinary statutory increase should be paid or not, there is no doubt that Parliament having specially voted this money for increments to the civil servants connected with the Department of Inland Revenue, there is no justice in withholding it.

Mr. LARIVIERE. I have on several occasions called the attention of the Government to an outstanding claim against the Department of Inland Revenue in connection with the McCarthy Act, which, some years ago, was put in force in Manitoba. Officials were appointed by this Government to put that law in operation, whose wages were never paid. I had expected that the Government would have in the Estimates an amount sufficient to cover the whole outstanding claim. I think it is almost a shame that the Government should have a man claiming back wages for such a long time. He was appointed by the Government, as I have said, and should have been paid for the services that he was called upon to perform as inspector for the district I have the honour to represent. The name of the claimant in this case was Mr. Allaire, of St. Boniface.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. An order was passed as far back as 1885, which appears to have settled that matter. But I took the trouble to inquire of Mr. McGee, the Clerk of the Privy Council, in order to see that Order in Council; and they have not been able to find it. So the matter remains as it has been since 1885. I have done everything I could, because there is really some fairness in the claim. My hon. friend (Mr. LaRiviere) knows that I have taken a great deal of trouble about it, and I am ready to continue, if there is anything that can be done.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I know I have given the Minister a great deal of trouble, and he has very courteously looked into the matter at my request. We had a return brought down three or four years ago at my request, in which return the name of my friend of St. Boniface appears as having a claim against the Government. The information was secured from the department over which the hon. gentleman presides. There must be some records there, as the return was brought down with Mr. Allaire's name.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I would ask the Minister if he is not going to say something about the claim advanced with regard to the payment of yearly increments.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I cannot say more than what appears in the Estimates, which have been adopted, and which show clearly the way in which I considered the matter. The amount has been voted, and the reason for it is admitted in the Estimates, and I sincerely hope that there will be no reason for the officers, who are certainly entitled to it, having any reason for complaint.

Department of Justice—

Salary of Hector Verret at $200 per annum for 44 days from 3rd February, 1898, to 18th March, 1898, both inclusive, $24.11; to increase salary of Messenger G. R. Cleland to $360 per annum from 1st January, 1898, $30; further amount required for contingencies, $2,500; total.... $2,554 11

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this large deficiency of contingencies?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). In 1896-97 there was an overdraft of $2,300 on account of contingencies, and this appropriation is for the purpose of covering that overdraft and restoring the balance.

Mr. FOSTER. But how did my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) come to make that overdraft?

Mr. LaRIVIERE.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I made an inquiry about it, and my investigation resulted in this—that it has been the custom in the Department of Justice, for several years past, to overdraw this account.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. gentleman made a sufficient estimate for next year?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Department of Public Works—

To pay C. O. Beauchemin & fils, for 12 volumes, entitled "Rapports Judiciaires Revisés du Judge Mathieu," (ordered by the Hon. J. A. Ouimet, Minister of Public Works, 24th December, 1894, $72; further amount for printing and stationery, $700; total..... $722

Mr. FOSTER. What particular use does my hon. friend (Mr. Tarte) make of these books?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have found the account for the books and had to pay it.

Mr. BERGERON. Where are the books?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know.

Mr. BERGERON. How about stationery and printing?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The appropriation of $7,245 was subdivided as follows: Printing and stationery $3,100, sundries $4,145. We do not spend that amount for sundries but we have not enough for stationery and for printing.

Department of Marine and Fisheries—To provide for clerical assistance for balance of fiscal year, 1897-98, printing and stationery and sundries $2,200

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of the increase?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. According to a memorandum supplied to me, as to the first item, part of the salary provided is paid out of the contingency vote which was not provided in the estimates. A stenographer had to be supplied in connection with the Behring Sea case. Concerning printing and stationery, from the extension of services in connection with the department, the amount placed in the main estimates is not sufficient. The item for sundries is made up of telegrams, postage, newspapers and travelling expenses.

Department of Militia and Defence—To pay Lieut.-Col. MacDonald the difference in salary between that of first-class clerk at $1,800 per year, and that of chief clerk and chief superintendent of stores, at $2,800, from 1st October, 1897, date of taking over the work, to 30th June, 1898, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary, $750; clerical and other assistance, $1,000; printing and stationery, $1,400; sundries, $500; total..... $2,900

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. For a number of years a certain amount of money has been taken from the vote for the next year. This is the smallest amount that we can get along with. Clerical assistance is partly due to the fact that we have extra work now in looking up the names of persons who are entitled to receive a medal to be given to the men who served in repelling the Fenian invasion of 1867 and in 1870. As for printing and stationery, I am informed by my deputy that every year we had to take a vote really from the next year.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to hear an explanation from the Minister as to the cause of the increase of salary of Lieut.-Colonel MacDonald from $1,800 to $2,800.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The office held by Lieut.-Colonel Macpherson at $3,000 a year and the office held by Lieut.-Colonel MacDonald at $1,800, have been combined into one office, and we are now paying Lieut.-Colonel MacDonald $2,800 for doing the work that we were formerly paying two officers $4,800. Lieut.-Colonel MacDonald took the duties over on the 1st of October, and since that date he has been discharging the duties of the two offices.

Mr. WALLACE. I think that is no explanation. If Colonel MacDonald does not require to work over hours, he can easily perform the duties of his office. I am certain there was no necessity for the two officers to perform the duties that Colonel MacDonald is performing very easily. He has a large staff of officers who do the work that is required. To say that he is performing services that two men were paid for, is to say that one or the other of them, or both, did not have much to do. I think he will be amply paid by the minimum salary of a chief clerk in the department. The Minister has not said that he is doing two men's work.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I quite agree with my hon. friend that it is better these men should have plenty to do. But the fact is that Colonel MacDonald is now doing the duties which he has done for the last twenty years, and in addition the duties which were performed by Lieut.-Colonel Macpherson for the last twenty years.

Mr. WALLACE. Does he work double hours, or do it all in the same time?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I said that for eighteen years we have had two officers, one receiving $3,000 and another receiving $1,800. The one office having been abolished the work would be performed by Colonel MacDonald, who was receiving $1,800; but I thought it would be fair to fix his salary at $2,800 for performing the duties of the two offices, and I do not think that is more than he should receive. As regards the staff, there is no increase. The work is being done by one less highly-paid official than during the last eighteen or twenty years.

Mr. WALLACE. The great saving effected is that Col. Macpherson gets a superannuation allowance of $1,800—

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Almost exactly $1,500.

Mr. WALLACE. $1,800, he having had ten years added, and that amount with $2,800 salary paid to Colonel MacDonald, gives a total of $4,600. The pay of the two officers was $4,800, and this economical Government has thereby effected a saving of $200, and the work cannot be as efficiently done now as it was performed by Colonels Macpherson and MacDonald together, because Colonel Macpherson was known as an efficient and excellent officer. Even according to the Minister's own figures, the present expenditure is $4,300, or a saving of $500. The Government could have saved $600 more by giving the new appointee the minimum of a chief clerk, $2,200, and they would have obtained as efficient services. It must also be remembered that the departments watch each other, and jealousy is aroused when officers in one department find they are only receiving one-half or one-third the salaries of similar men in the Militia or other departments. I can tell the Minister that in Ottawa there are many as intelligent and diligent clerks as Colonel MacDonald who do not receive half his salary. Great dissatisfaction is caused by giving an increase of salary as in this case of $1,000.

Supreme Court of Canada—Additional salary to Mr. Justice McGuire as Judge of the Yukon judicial district at rate of $1,000 per annum from 16th August, 1897, to 30th June, 1898..... $873 97

Mr. FOSTER. What is the salary paid to Mr. Justice McGuire?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is he allowed living expenses?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There will be a provision in the new Act, if I am able to get it through, to pay such sums for living expenses as may be decided by the Governor General in Council. There will be special provision made for the Yukon district.

Mr. GILLIES. I desire to take this opportunity of calling attention to the position of the county court judges in the province of Nova Scotia. When county courts were created in 1876, the salaries paid then were the same as now. The jurisdiction at the time the court was created was very limited. The extent of the jurisdiction was in civil matters of assumpsit $500 and in other matters ex contractu, $400, and they had no criminal jurisdiction whatever. As time went on the civil jurisdiction was extended, and a few years ago, when the Speedy Trials Act came into operation, a very wide criminal jurisdiction was conferred on the county court judges. The Solicitor General is aware that when any criminal matter occurs between term, it is brought to the notice of the county court judge. When a prisoner is brought to jail, the sheriff must notify the county court judge, and immediately he has a trial. In county court district No. 7, which includes the counties of Cape Breton, Richmond and Victoria, which is of large extent and has a population of about 70,000 people, and where there is a great deal of criminal litigation, as the hon. Solicitor General will see from the reports in the department, the judge presiding in that district, Judge Dodd, is kept pretty much employed the year round in trying criminals. When the jurisdiction under the Speedy Trials Act was placed in the hands of the county court judges no provision was made for travelling expenses, and the amount of $200 for this purpose is the same as it was when the Act was passed in 1876. I call attention to this, and I hold it is very unfair to ask county court judges to go, every time they are notified, very long distances to try prisoners when there is no provision whatever made for their expenses. The same argument would apply to the adjoining district No. 6, comprising the counties of Inverness, Antigonish and Guysborough, presided over by Judge McIsaac. It is a hardship on the county court judges to call upon them to travel to Sydney, Arichat, Antigonish, Port Hood and Guysborough every time they are called upon, while no provision is made to meet their expenses in carrying out the law. I would like to ask the Solicitor General, more particularly in view of the fact that I brought the matter before him personally some time ago and he was disposed to listen to the application only he feared the extra expense; is it his intention next year, because I suppose he cannot do it this year, to make some provision for an increase in the travelling expenses of the county court judges in Nova Scotia?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. As my hon. friend (Mr. Gillies) is aware, the judges in the county courts of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick receive $2,400 a year and in addition $200 for travelling allowance. In the province of Ontario until the Bill of this session was introduced the junior judges only received $2,000 per annum without expenses, so that the judges of the maritime provinces had an advantage to the extent of $400 a year, over the junior judges of the province of Ontario. In future the judges in Ontario would get exactly the same amount as is paid to the judges of the maritime provinces. I cannot very well see any reason in favour of the maritime provinces that would not apply with equal force to the province of Ontario, and my hon. friend will see at a glance what that would amount to.

Mr. GILLIES. The Solicitor General will bear in mind that in Ontario they have two judges, a senior and a junior judge for nearly every county.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Not quite.

Mr. GILLIES. There are sixty-four county court judges in the province of Ontario now. They do not travel beyond the territorial bounds of their counties but in the province of Nova Scotia they are district judges properly speaking, because every circuit extends over a combined number of counties. District No. 7 is comprised of the large counties of Cape Breton, Victoria and Richmond, and District No. 6 comprises the large counties of Inverness, Guysborough and Antigonish, with only one judge in each district. In the province of Ontario each county would have a judge, and therefore the cases of Ontario and Nova Scotia in this respect are not at all parallel. Again, the Solicitor General will remember that when the county or district courts were created in Nova Scotia the salaries then were the same as they are now, and also the amount allowed for travelling expenses was the same as at present.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That applies to all the judges.

Mr. GILLIES. It should also be borne in mind that the conveniences for travel is not so perfect in Nova Scotia as it is in the province of Ontario, where you can ride from one part of the province to the other in railway cars. The county court judge in Ontario does not go beyond the confines of the county for which he is appointed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He may be called upon to do so.

Mr. GILLIES. Yes, in special cases, but in Nova Scotia the judges travel over a large territory and are consequently subject to a heavier outlay than a county court judge in Ontario. In District No. 7, Mr. Justice Dodd had to travel last week over 150 miles to hold a court, and then he was called upon to go to Baddeck and he had to travel 150 miles in another direction. No county court judge in Ontario has to do that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am not in a position to give my hon. friend (Mr. Gillies) any undertaking that would be of any value without consulting with the Government. I draw my hon. friend's attention to the fact that there seems to me some resemblance between the case referred to in the maritime provinces and these cases in Ontario where they have got what they call district judges. These district judges are appointed in the district north of Lake Superior, and they have an immense area to cover and receive for travelling expenses $500 or $300 more than the county court judges, because of the exceptional position they occupy, the arduous nature of their duties and the very large district to which they are assigned. There might be some resemblance between this case and the case mentioned by my hon. friend (Mr. Gillies). I wish, however, my hon. friend to understand that I can give him no promise that the judges of the maritime provinces will be brought up to the position of these district judges in Ontario. There seems, however, to be some reason for making a comparison between the two cases.

Mr. GILLIES. My hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) might also consider that if $200 was considered sufficient travelling allowance twenty years ago when the duties of these judges was so much less than they are now, surely considering that they have to respond to every call made upon them under the Speedy Trials Act, their case now is deserving of some consideration.

Mr. BRITTON. The salary of the Yukon judge is increased from $4,000 to $5,000, and I understand travelling expenses are to be paid, but I suppose the judge will now be assigned a place to reside in and that his travelling expenses will only be allowed from that place, and his living expenses will not be allowed in addition to the $5,000, of course after his installation.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The discussion on this matter will, I think, be more appropriate when we come to the Bill which provides for the very point my hon. friend (Mr. Britton) refers to. I do not think any one will cavil at the propriety of increasing the salary of the judge of that district from $4,000 to $5,000. The question of the living allowance will be discussed in the Bill.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It might be worth the while of the Solicitor and the Department of Justice to consider the question of grouping some of the smaller counties in the province of Ontario.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We cannot do that; it is within the power of the provinces. That is one of the anomalies we are called upon to deal with.

Mr. BRITTON. There is a grouping in our county so far as the work is concerned. There is an arrangement by which the judges now do one another's work. There is provision made by the province of Ontario, I believe, although I speak subject to correction, by which they are allowed additional fees for doing work in other counties. They are allowed travelling expenses and a per diem allowance. They go into other counties as a means of supplementing their salaries.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is not a matter in the power of this Parliament, but it is certain that there are counties in Ontario that have not work enough for a county judge, and they ought to be combined with other counties.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think that in Ontario there should be districts uniting several counties, so that the county judges would go round a certain circuit. I think that would be better both for the bar and for those who are forced to go to law. I know that in some counties there is a good deal of feeling with regard to county judges practising in their own districts. It is supposed that they sometimes give advantages to favoured lawyers. I do not know whether that is the case or not, but I think it would be better if the provinces were divided into districts and the judges were to go around those districts.

Mr. WALLACE. I see by the accounts which have been brought down that Mr. Justice McGuire is helping himself to all kinds of necessary clothing—boots, overcoats, fur coats, waterproof coats, socks and all the rest—and is charging them to the Government. The Government have paid the bills to the amount of hundreds of dollars; and now it is proposed to give him an increase of salary of $1,000. This gentleman gets $5,000 a year, and I presume that his duties are very much like those of a county court judge. His qualifications are no higher, at any rate.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, they are. He is a judge of the High Court of the North-west Territories.

Mr. WALLACE. Does that make his qualification higher? The county judges have to have ten years' experience as barristers, and they have to pass the same law examination as other judges, who, no doubt, would be very glad to take county court judgeships if they could get nothing better. I rose to make a gentle protest against this increase in Judge McGuire's salary, which, I think, is an entirely unnecessary piece of extravagance.

Legislation—House of Commons—additional amount required..... $38,500 90

Mr. POWELL. I do not like to complain very much; but I wish to state that the arrangements made for sessional clerks are not of much practical benefit to the members of this House. For the first time since I have been a member of the House, I have had occasion to resort to their room and make use of the sessional clerks, and I found that the capacity of those men were utterly inadequate to any respectable demand. I had to take the work away, and shall probably have to pay for it myself, for the Drummond County Committee did not certify it so that it could be paid by this House. I am complaining now in all truthfulness, and not in any spirit of magnifying a little deficiency. A portion of the work done for me by these people did not even approach respectability.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. What was the character of the work ?

Mr. POWELL. Typewriting and stenography. I am not nice about these matters, and I say without fear of successful contradiction that any one of the numerous typewriters I have had in my office in the last ten years is worth the whole lot that I saw there engaged in the work I asked to be done. The only respectable clerk I heard about was one who was turned away on the ground of being a political partisan. In the appointment of sessional clerks, I think some little regard should be had to men's qualifications other than their political status. I do not care whether they are black, gray or green, Tory or Grit, so long as they can do the work. It seems necessary that some examination should be had before men are taken on the staff. If you go into that department with a piece of work that requires any skill, you will be so disgusted that you will not repeat the action.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They have plenty of experience, for two-thirds of them have been there for years.

Mr. POWELL. Whether they have had much experience or little I do not know. I am simply calling attention to the fact that you cannot get work done there. Mr. Borden (Halifax) and I had about twenty pages of typewriting which we wanted to get done. We could not get it done there in a way that would be fit to look at, and we had to apply to a stenographer outside in the city, and had to pay for the work out of our own pockets.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would say that I have had some work done there, and it was quite satisfactory ; but it was done by a man who has been quite recently appointed. The staff of sessional writers, as the hon. gentleman knows, are permanent officers of this House. They are not changed every time the Government is changed. He will find men there to-day who were there ten years ago.

Mr. POWELL. I am not stating anything about their political complexion. I do not know whether they have been there ten years or twenty years. I only know that my experience of consulting them on this occasion has been such that I will not consult them again.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Now that we are discussing this item, we may as well understand what work these clerks are to perform. I wish to ask whether it is intended that they shall do secretarial work for members ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I was a member of the House for some 13 or 14 years before I became a member of the Government, and I applied several times, as my hon. friend did, to ascertain if I could not get any work done by the sessional clerks, and I was invariably told no.

Mr. WALLACE. You should have gone for information to the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen).

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know of any member who has had any sessional clerk doing secretarial work for him.

Mr. FOSTER. I know of one who is a close friend of the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think the statement made by the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) is a very serious one. I regret that neither the Speaker nor the Clerk happens to be in the House, because efforts were made by the present Government to improve the status and character of the sessional clerks, but we were powerless in the matter, as a resolution had been passed by this House, as far back as 1891, declaring that, in the opinion of the House, the sessional clerks should be placed on the same footing as civil servants, and not liable to dismissals on a change of Government. None of the clerks have been dismissed by the present Government.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I know of one sessional clerk who was appointed at my request, and who was certainly one of the best stenographers in the province, and he was charged with taking part in my election and was dismissed without any investigation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not by the Government. A civil servant who devotes his time to politics instead of his work is liable to dismissal.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). This man was a sessional clerk.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Whether he was a sessional clerk or not, if he makes himself obnoxious to members by taking a violent part in elections, he is liable to be dismissed. What I am pointing at is the more serious matter brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) I hope the Clerk of the House and the Speaker will take note of it. If these men are incapable, as my hon. friend has said they are, it is in the public interest that they should be dismissed. I must say that some years ago, when I was acting on one of the very large committees, I had occasion to have work done by the sessional clerks, and I found that they did their work fairly well. If the staff now do not do their work well, it is time a change was made. But the Government are powerless in the matter.

I was anxious to get a clever young man appointed as sessional clerk, but could not succeed, nor has any of my colleagues been able to get any one appointed. These appointments are made by the Speaker of the House and the Commission on Internal Economy. So far as that commission is concerned, they never gave any authority that any of these clerks should be employed in a private capacity, as it is suggested they are.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Speaker had occasion to go away early and did not think we would reach this item, but he left me a memorandum. It does not happen to deal with this particular aspect of the case, and I would rather the item stood over.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Even if the item be allowed to stand, I feel called on to say this. I have had the honour of sitting here a great many years, and I think I have called very seldom upon the sessional clerks to do any work. I do not dispute the case of the complaint of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell). He may have been disappointed in the character of the work done, but I think he went too far when he said that there was not a man of any capacity on the staff. I have personal knowledge of some of the men in that branch of the service, who are competent, reliable and courteous public officials, and it is only fair that I should bear this testimony on their behalf. My hon. friend may have met with the men who did not give him the satisfaction he had the right to expect and furnished him with cause for complaint, but it is unfortunate that he should make the sweeping charge that there was not a man on that staff fit to be retained there.

Mr. FOWELL. I meant my remarks simply to apply to these with whom I came in contact. I never subjected the individuals to an examination as a whole. I simply spoke to three or four whose work was brought under my own personal observation and the work they sent in was done in the way I have mentioned. There may be very good men on the staff. I was simply speaking of the stenographers and typewriters. I do not know how many there are.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are 25. The number is limited to that by resolution.

Mr. POWELL. I have never seen 25 in there. I have only seen four or five.

Mr. BERGERON. They are distributed through the committees.

Mr. POWELL. I am speaking of the four or five who work in Mr. Stewart's room.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are eight or ten there.

Mr. POWELL. Four or five applied for the work, and it was done so unsatisfactorily that we gave up sending it to them. If I have made a statement too sweeping, owing to my ignorance of the sessional staff, I would be sorry that it should be held to apply to the good men. The suggestion I would make is this, that those who are employed there as stenographers or typewriters should pass some kind of an examination so that we could have some guarantee of competency.

Mr. INGRAM. We have a man in No. 6, who comes on duty very early in the morning and remains on duty, in some cases, until daylight the next morning. It is very unfair to expect him to do his duty, under the circumstances to the satisfaction of those who occupy No. 6. A second man should be employed to relieve him at times.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He has no longer hours than the ordinary messengers below.

Mr. INGRAM. He is at his duty at all times, and the messengers below are not.

Mr. ELLIS. This item governs "Hansard," and the Speaker has nothing to do with that. I want to call attention to the very great cost of "Hansard," but I had perhaps better let it stand until the leader of the Patrons (Mr. Rogers) is here. I would like to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in three years the "Hansard" has cost $177,000.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. If the item is to stand, why not take up this discussion when the item comes up again?

Mr. ELLIS. It is not worth while. We can finish this discussion in a short time.

Mr. BERGEON. Then if the item stands, the whole subject will probably be gone over again.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Let "legislation" generally stand.

To provide for unforeseen expenses of special committees of the Senate at the present session of Parliament, printing debates and contingencies..... $5,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know who stands sponsor for the Senate in this House that we can get an explanation of this vote?

Mr. FOSTER. I think we shall have to ask the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) to stand as sponsor for that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a general vote for Senate purposes. First it appeared as a vote for the committees, but it is a vote for general purposes.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think we should have some further explanation, something more definite. Is this to pay some lawyer's fees or what is it for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Part of it is to pay for committees. Whether that includes payments to lawyers or not, I am not aware.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think we ought to have that explanation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If you had it, what better off would you be ?

Mr. McMULLEN. We are not bound to vote it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman wishes it to stand, I will be glad to have it stand.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall this item be adopted ? Carried.

Further amount to pay outstanding accounts in connection with Territorial Exhibition held at Regina, 1894, including $3,625.97, being a re-vote, the same having lapsed in 1896-97..... $4,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does that cover all these Regina accounts ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, all those that were reserved to be inquired into, and also one or two accounts that have come in since it was known that the Government were paying these accounts. I have asked for an amount somewhat larger than the total in order to cover any others that may come in.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is the Minister ready to give a guarantee that this is to be the end of the presentation of these everlasting exhibition accounts ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is a grand thing to know that.

Quarantine—To pay a gratuity to W. Mc.K. McLeod, late inspecting physician at Sydney, N.S..... $500

Mr. McDUGALL. I would like to ask an explanation of this vote.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say that Dr. McLeod, inspecting physician at Sydney, N.S., wished to resign and placed before me the fact of his long service of 14 years, and some facts in connection with the reasons why he was not put upon the superannuation lists. He was appointed in 1883, and he informed me in a letter in which he suggested his resignation that he had not known, when he was first appointed that he could be put upon the superannuation list ; and when he found it out, it was too late for him to go upon the list. And, while it is true that he had not paid into the superannuation fund, I think, in view of his services, he was entitled to a small gratuity. Therefore, I propose to give him $500 on his resignation.

Mr. McDUGALL. I do not object to paying this amount to Dr. McLeod. I believe, in view of the way in which Dr. McLeod was treated that he should have had a larger amount. The hon. Minister will remember that a year ago I called his attention to the way in which he dealt with the quarantine officers at the port of Sydney. At that time the hon. Minister undertook to dismiss the quarantine officer at the port of North Sydney whose duty it was to board all the vessels that came to port requiring inspection. The Minister then ordered Dr. McLeod, who was then living in the town of Sydney and near the quarantine hospital, which it was his duty to attend, to leave his home and residence there and go to live in the town of North Sydney to take the place of the man he had discharged. I knew perfectly well, at the time, the plan that was in view on the part of the Minister or, at any rate, on the part of those who were advising him. The aim in view from the start was to get rid of Dr. McLeod and put a friend of the party in his place. It was not expected by any of those who knew Dr. McLeod that he could conveniently or possibly leave his home on Sunday and go to North Sydney and undertake the work of boarding ships. His health had somewhat failed some time before, and he was not equal to doing the work at North Sydney and also attending to the quarantine hospital. I knew what the outcome would be. The hon. Minister dismissed a very popular, energetic young doctor at North Sydney, whose duty it was to board vessels, and asked Dr. McLeod to abandon his home and property in order to do this work. When the Minister explained his plan I knew it was quite impossible that it could be carried out as he proposed. Dr. McLeod, not being able to do the work the Minister ordered, was obliged or advised to resign. When he took office 14 years ago he gave up his practice or lost it in consequence of devoting himself to the duties of his office, when he resigned, of course, he could not get back his practice. He consequently had to go to the States and he is in the States now. The hon. Minister goes to work and appoints a young doctor of short experience to the position. The new doctor that was appointed is a brother of the Premier of Nova Scotia, the Hon. George Murray.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The name of the Premier of Nova Scotia is Murray, the name of this doctor is Rynders. I do not think they are brothers.

Mr. McDUGALL. They had different fathers, but they had the same mother. I consider that the treatment that Dr. McLeod received at the hands of the committee, was not at all fair, and the treatment of the doctor he first dismissed on the plea of economy, was most unfair. He was one of the most popular young men in the county, belonging to one of the first families. If it was on the plea of economy that the Minister discharged Dr. Johnson, when he found that Dr. McLeod was obliged to retire, why did he not reinstate Dr. Johnson? The whole scheme was planned with a view to put another man there.

Mr. McMULLEN. From the statement the hon. gentleman has just made. I think we are justified in striking out this $500 altogether. He says that the doctor was not capable of performing his duties.

Mr. McDUGALL. I did not say that, I said that the condition of things was made so difficult for this doctor that he could not do the work. His health had failed, and he was obliged to abandon it. I contend that the amount of $500 is insufficient, and that the gentleman who was treated in this way should have had greater consideration.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think in view of Dr. McLeod's long services, for whatever reason that he chose to resign, we should not drop this vote. I confess the statements of the hon. member are entirely new to me. I was not aware of the circumstances which he has described, therefore I am not responsible for them. I would be sorry to strike out the item. I think it would not be fair in consequence of the long services of Dr. McLeod.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to say a few words upon this item of $720 to Mr. W. H. Lynch, for 12,000 copies of "Scientific Dairying," placed in the department in 1888, and not paid for. I have thought for a good many years that if ever there was any man in this part of the country that deserved well at the hands of this Government and the country, and who was treated somewhat shabbily, it was this Mr. Lynch. I have known him since he came around in 1881, and have always regarded him as one of the most energetic and able men who ever took a hand in the promotion of the dairying interests of Canada. My first recollection of him was when he was lecturing down in the maritime provinces and afterwards in Ontario. About that time he was brought before the Committee of Agriculture and Colonization, and gave evidence which we regarded as most valuable. Through the persuasion of several members of the committee and of others who were interested in dairying, he was induced to commence writing letters and giving lectures on dairying. I believe he gave his first address in New Brunswick about that time on the methods of butter making. He was then writing letters to agricultural papers. I collected a great many copies of them for several years. The idea was to continue to agitate so as to induce the Government to establish a dairy commission if possible, or appoint a dairy commissioner. Shortly after that he made a visit to New York and there met for the first time, at Cornell University, with an expert who came along with him and gave a lecture in the city hall of Ottawa, at a gathering of the Fruit Growers' Association. This Prof.

Arnold was regarded as the ablest man in his business on the continent of America. That agitation was continued until 1882, and for the first time he published a pamphlet called Scientific Butter Making. I remember looking carefully over that pamphlet, and getting a number of copies for distribution, because every one who got a copy of it spoke of it in approving terms, and many who did not, applied for copies afterwards. It seemed to be in their estimation one of the best works that had been got out. He then went into Ontario, where he was invited to give lectures before the Board of Trade, and the organization who developed into the Department of Agriculture. He addressed an association in Toronto at that time. The Dominion Government commenced to agitate the question. The Committee on Colonization was then the Committee on Immigration and Colonization, and it was changed to the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization, and he was invited by them to begin an agitation for a Dominion dairy association. I remember the opposition that was offered at the time, it was to the effect that as the provinces were doing the same kind of work there was no need for duplicating it by the Dominion. He wrote another pamphlet on butter and cheese which was published about that time. There was somewhere about 70,000 copies published, and we got a large number for distribution. About the year 1888 there was a call made for a convention. This was through his agitation. I remember being with him when he got up his first circular which he sent out to the dairy associations of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, and, I think, Manitoba. He succeeded in bringing together the most interesting company of men engaged in that line that I ever saw in the capital. We had a most valuable meeting which lasted for one or two days, I forget which, and the result was that a committee was appointed to wait upon the Government and ask for a vote to establish a dairy department and appoint a dairy commissioner. The Government did not see their way clear at that time to do it, but a request was made to put a small item in the Estimates to defray the expense of publishing and distributing a report of the meeting. At that time the Postmaster General made provision for its free distribution through the post office. I think $2,000 were put in the Estimates for that purpose and the dairy association was organized. The application made to the Government resulted ultimately in the appointment of a dairy commissioner and the establishment of the Experimental Farm. I remember feeling strongly in favour of the appointment of Mr. Lynch as dairy commissioner. I talked to him about the matter, and he made the most unselfish speech I ever heard. He said: I have been engaged for some years in promoting this work, and though I have received very little return for assisting in organizing the dairy association which culminated in the request presented to the Government being granted and the appointment of a dairy commissioner being decided upon, yet it would look too much as if I had been making an office for myself, and I could not accept it under any consideration. Mr. Lynch has done most valuable work, for which he has received little or no recognition. He drifted away from this part of the country and I did not see him for several years. A work was got up by him for the Government of which they took several thousand copies, and there was, in addition several thousand copies issued and stored away in one of the departments and laid there for several years. He expected to have been able to sell them, but did not succeed at the time, and I know he borrowed the money to publish the book through some mistake or forgetfulness. The parties in charge of the department overlooked the fact, or forgetting that he was the owner asked me to tell the members of the committee that if they wished for copies for distribution they could get as many as they liked. I distributed 3,000 or 4,000 amongst the committee, and I was told members could obtain copies there. We were not aware that the books had not been paid for, and I was very glad to accept the invitation to distribute them to the farmers of the country. They were much appreciated, and I heard only recently that the books had not been paid for. I see a very small item in the Estimates for the payment of those books, $720. From my personal knowledge of the transaction, and I have some knowledge of it, because I was requested to ascertain the cost of publishing a number of copies, the Government will not pay one-fourth of the cost. As one who takes an interest in the work in which Mr. Lynch is engaged, I think he is receiving a very meagre compensation for the work. It is only due to him that I should say this, because I have always regarded him as the pioneer so far as regards the establishment of the dairying department on the Experimental Farm. He was the first man who went to England to ascertain what products were suited for that market, and in what shape and condition they should be put up for the market. He is not in any way connected with the department, and if a favourable opportunity presented itself it would only be justice to him and an act of kindness to employ him where he would be of service to the Government and to the country, and I have no doubt if they paid him a handsome salary the country would regard it as defensible, and not only an act of kindness but an equitable act in behalf of a deserving man.

Mr. McMULLEN. The statement made by the hon. member justifies me in moving that this item be struck out. The hon. gentleman stated that he got 3,000 or 4,000 copies of this book and circulated them in his constituency. Members of Parliament usually have to pay for the stuff circulated in their constituencies. The gentleman is well deserving of the speech he delivered on his behalf. The hon. gentleman said he got 3,000 or 4,000 copies.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not.

Mr. McMULLEN. I took a note of it.

Mr. SPROULE. I said I got 3,000 or 4,000 copies for distribution, and I distributed 1,000 or 2,000 myself.

Mr. McMULLEN. You said you distributed 3,000 or 4,000 copies.

Mr. SPROULE. I distributed them among members of the Agricultural Committee, not among my own constituents.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the hon. gentleman got the material, he has a right to pay for it. I find this item is for a debt contracted in 1888, ten years ago. I cannot understand why the Minister of Agriculture should load up his Estimates with items contracted ten years ago, and give Mr. Lynch, regarding whom the member for East Grey has been speaking in laudable terms, payment of his account, and that it should fall to the lot of the Reform party to pay such an account. I am surprised that the Minister should have agreed to pay the account. I do not think we should pay it, or at all events, the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) should pay half of it. I move that this item be struck out on account of the statement made by the hon. member for East Grey.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman is distinctly unfair, and whether he intended to misrepresent me or not he has done so. It was understood that the books were free, and they were given among members of the committee, who distributed them to their constituents. After that I was instructed that a number of copies remained and could be had for distribution. I notified the committee and told them where to get them, and I got some myself. Everybody had the right to do so. We believed they had been paid for, and we distributed them believing they were for free distribution. I got no more than any other member.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend must have known that those pamphlets were furnished and that the gentleman would have to be paid for them. We want to know why they have not been paid for before this. The present Government is asked to close up the accounts of hon. gentlemen opposite and pay accounts contracted ten years ago, especially accounts spoken of in such terms by the hon. member for East Grey. If there was any man whose services appear to have been appreciated by hon. gentlemen opposite, they were those of Mr. Lynch and he should have been paid by them. Why did they leave it to the present Government to pay him, and leave the account unpaid for ten years? I got none of those pamphlets. The hon. member for East Grey distributed them among his own friends, and I have no doubt every rate-payer in East Grey got one of them. Why should we be asked, after ten years, to pay the debt? It is outlawed and should not be paid.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The item is worded in a very peculiar way. I never heard anything about the pamphlet when I was in the department.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Lynch's work has been described somewhat by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). Mr. Lynch wrote the pamphlet in question and those of us who were members of the House of Commons at the time when he was doing his dairy work in this country know very well what immense services he rendered to the farmers of this country and to the dairy interests. The facts are these. Mr. Lynch wrote a book called "Scientific Dairying" which was for a long time the vade mecum of dairymen, not only in Canada, but in the United States. He had an edition published of something over 100,000 volumes and the Government agreed to take 75,000, leaving some 30,000 on his hands. He sold a portion of these to the different local governments, and the publisher tells us there were about 15,000 left which the publisher wished to get rid of, and obtained leave to put them in the Department of Agriculture buildings. Mr. Lynch tried to get the Government of that time to take them, but they were not prepared to take any more, because, I suppose, they thought 75,000 copies would do the work. About that time Mr. Lynch went to the west to engage in mining business.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Oh, that's enough; he wants the money badly then.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The reason this matter never came up since is that Mr. Lynch has been away. He came back not long ago, and knowing him as I did in times past, and the valuable services he rendered to the country, I felt it was only just to pay for these books which were utilized by the people of the country and served the purposes they were intended for. This vote pays for 12,000 copies which were not in any other way accounted for, at the rate he was paid for the 75,000.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In view of the statement of the Minister of Agriculture, the statement of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) was altogether unwarranted. We did not order the books and we contracted no debts. This is a gratuity.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The members of the House took these books and sent them to their constituents. I do not suppose they knew they were extra copies above the 75,000 ordered, but the members utilized them because the people of the country demanded that book.

Mr. McMULLEN. The matter appears to be getting worse all the time. The Minister (Mr. Fisher) has attempted to explain why we should pay this. It appears Mr. Lynch left this material in the Department of Agriculture and actually when he was away in the west, hon. gentlemen opposite, the hon. member for Grey included, raided the place and took the stuff.

Mr. FOSTER. Aply assisted by the present Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. McMULLEN. The present Minister of Agriculture had nothing to do with it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. And the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) shared in the spoils.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) says he received some benefit from this material.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) is putting words in my mouth which I never used. He is either getting so deaf or so completely blind to what is fair that he is bound to misrepresent.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can hear and see just as well as the hon. member (Mr. Montague) can and perhaps a little better sometimes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. You used to see better when you were in opposition.

Mr. McMULLEN. There was gross neglect on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite including the member for Haldimand who was Minister of Agriculture. If this is an honest debt it should have been paid long ago.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The present Minister of Agriculture admits it was not a debt and so far as I am concerned I never heard of it.

Mr. McMULLEN. To put it in a mild term hon. gentlemen opposite apparently appropriated this man's property, and the hon. member for East Grey appears to have got an allowance of three or four thousand copies. The Minister of Agriculture of the time should be held responsible for he allowed this man's stuff to be stolen.

Mr. SPROULE. Then the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) shared in the plunder, because I think I can prove from the records of the department that he distributed these books himself. At that time the young man in charge of the department notified me as chairman of the committee on agriculture to announce that these books were there for distribution. He was not aware that they were not paid for. I made the announcement in the committee and the members went and got them, including the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen).

Mr. WALLACE. The matter can be very easily settled because I have a very good recollection that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) appropriated the other 75,000 pamphlets himself, the Government having paid $720 for the 12,000. I remember very well that he had nineteen of the twenty-five sessional clerks engaged for three weeks sending them out to his constituents and friends in the country. The member for North Wellington should pay for the 75,000 and the Government will pay for the 12,000 which were distributed equitably amongst the members. Anyway I do not see why the hon. member (Mr. McMullen) should make such a fuss about $720 when he is voting $49,000,000, going it blind in every instance, and out of that $49,000,000 the only thing he raises a row about is the $750.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am not surprised at the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) making such a grossly exaggerated statement.

Mr. WALLACE. Solemn truth.

Mr. McMULLEN. I presume there was a certain portion allotted to me out of the 75,000 copies.

Some hon. MEMBERS. How many.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is so long that I do not remember.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, I do.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have sat in this House for sixteen years and I can honestly declare that I never stole any man's stuff yet, and others cannot say that. They appropriated this man's stuff, to use a mild term, and they have allowed him to remain unpaid for eight years, and now they ask the Government to pay.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the Minister intend to do with this $5,000 for the Omaha Trans-Mississippi Exhibition?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is an agricultural exhibition at Omaha and I am preparing an exhibit to send there.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who is the commissioner?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have no commissioner. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior has several immigration agents working in the western states, and they will be at the exhibition. I am sending only one man to the exhibition to look after the exhibit. I think we shall be able to make a very creditable exhibition of the products of Canada there.

Cattle quarantine—Further amount required for compensation for the slaughter of hogs and sheep, and all expenses connected therewith..... $12,000

Mr. MONTAGUE. We ought to have an explanation of this.

Mr. SPROULE.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am sorry we have had to pay so much for the slaughter of hogs and as compensation. This amount appears large, partially because a very severe outbreak of hog cholera took place towards the end of the last fiscal year, and the accounts did not come in until after the appropriation was settled and voted by this House. We had to pay about $5,000 in the first two or three months of this fiscal year, which ought to have been charged in 1896-97.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What percentage do you pay?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When the hogs are actually diseased, we pay one-third. When they have been in contact and exposed to the disease, and have to be slaughtered to prevent them spreading the disease, we pay three-fourths. Some times hogs when opened are found to be not diseased, and they are sold.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The proper way is to cut the pieces out.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think my hon. friend, as a surgeon, would recommend that.

Mr. SPROULE. That is what they did at the Humber.

Mr. McDUGALL. When did the hog cholera break out?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It broke out in the last fiscal year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is the country pretty free from it now?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have had hardly any cases during the last three months, but I may say frankly that when the hot weather comes the cases generally increase.

Mr. MONTAGUE. What has been done in the way of slaughtering animals affected with tuberculosis?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is no compulsory slaughter for tuberculosis. When anybody asks me, I send an officer or authorize a veterinary surgeon in the neighbourhood to test cattle for that disease. I do that free of expense, for the purpose of encouraging the people to make the test. We have warned them distinctly that they will not get compensation, and we require them to sign a formal request to the department when they ask for the test. At the same time, the law requires that any animal which is proved to be diseased must be quarantined and isolated. When I came into office I found the impression prevailing in my department that when an animal was affected with tuberculosis its slaughter was compulsory. I did not myself look into the matter for some time afterwards; but I found that some officers misinterpreted the law. I did pay compensation to some people who had been instructed to slaughter their cattle, but the moment I found that the law did not require slaughter, but simply isolation, we gave a warning to that effect to everybody whose animals were found to be diseased; and since then I have refused compensation.

Mr. INGRAM. How long ago was that ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot tell the exact date, but it was early last year.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the hon. gentleman will look into a case, I will give him, privately, the name of a man who, a few years ago, was compelled to slaughter a whole herd of cattle, and who did not receive any compensation. I hope he will deal with that case as he has dealt with the others.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman state how the veterinarians are paid for the examination of hogs ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have once or twice appointed men by the month. When a severe outbreak took place, and we found that we were employing men practically all the time, I made an engagement with them at so much a month. Otherwise, they were paid so much a day for the time they were occupied.

Mr. McDougall. Was the hog disease confined to certain districts, or was it general ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hog cholera was almost wholly confined to the western part of Ontario. I regret to say that lately there has been a severe outbreak in British Columbia, no doubt imported from the United States. The disease is very prevalent in the United States, especially in the west, where hundreds of thousands of dollars, I dare say millions of dollars worth of hogs have been slaughtered in consequence. This question of hog cholera has occupied more of my time and given me more worry and bother than anything else since I have been in office; but we have been able to confine the disease to the western part of Ontario by the most stringent regulations. Once or twice it has spread to other districts, and in almost every instance it has been traced directly to the purchase of hogs in that district. For instance, one of the first cases after I came into office was in the county of Glengarry, where 250 hogs had to be slaughtered. The disease was traced directly to a carload of hogs which had been purchased in western Ontario and brought down there. Another case of the same kind was discovered in the county of Huntingdon in the province of Quebec.

Mr. SPROULE. Did you pay anything for those slaughtered at the Humber ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know anything about that. The hon. gentleman must not import into this Parliament the politics of his own province.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not importing politics at all. The law provides that when animals are affected by disease, they shall be slaughtered.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can only tell the hon. gentleman that no application was made to me for compensation.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the hon. gentleman came into office the law provided that certain inspectors would be appointed to inspect cattle going out of the country, and grant certificates, so that they could go in to the United States. I asked the hon. gentleman if he would appoint inspectors in two localities from which cattle were being exported at the time. The places are Shelburne, Markdale, Flesherton and Dundalk. The law contemplates a proper inspection and a certificate being given. But the way it has been carried out is simply a farce. I am told that they send to Owen Sound and get a certificate from a man who has never been within twenty-five miles of the cattle, and that goes along with the cattle.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Is that correct ?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman will give me, privately, the information, I will take steps to see that that kind of thing is stopped.

Mr. SPROULE. I can give the hon. gentleman the information and the name of the veterinarian from whom the certificates are got. Unless a good veterinary surgeon is appointed, the shippers, who send their cattle out usually twice a week, will be obliged to bring in a veterinarian from outside or send the cattle on without a certificate and have them inspected at Toronto or somewhere else on the way. That they could not do, and, in the absence of a veterinary surgeon, they were obliged to do the next best thing they could.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Will the hon. gentleman write me a line about this.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. Minister says we have nothing to do with the Humber piggery.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot inform the hon. gentleman whether any of our inspectors inspected any of the hogs in the Humber piggery, because we have a good many certificates coming in, and I cannot say whether one came in from that place.

Mr. INGRAM. When that matter was investigated by the Public Accounts Committee of the Ontario Government, the evidence went to show that it was through the negligence of the Dominion officials those hogs were sold. I would like to ascertain which Government is really to blame for the killing or the selling of hogs that were not fit to be eaten.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It was proven distinctly that they were all fit to be eaten. Both Dr. Sweetapple and Dr. Smith proved this.

Mr. INGRAM. According to the evidence, that is not the case. The person who killed the hogs swore positively that they were unfit for human food, and I want to draw attention to the fact that the committee was comprised of partisan friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, and on that account a proper summing up of the case was not given out to the public.

Mr. CAMPBELL. At that investigation, Dr. Smith, the Dominion inspector, and Professor Sweetapple both declared that they had examined those hogs and passed them and that they were not unhealthy. More than that, Mr. Hunter, the man who bought the hogs and sold them—

Mr. INGRAM. And who dared not produce his book.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it likely he was going to buy diseased hogs? He had every one of them examined, and swore they were perfectly sound and fit for food. More than that, every man who bought them, in Toronto and elsewhere, came forward and testified that they were in proper condition.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. That is not borne out by the evidence. I challenge the hon. gentleman to produce the account book of Mr. Hunter, giving the names of the persons to whom he sent these hogs. If he can, he can do more than the committee could. Why did not Mr. Hunter produce the book? Because he knew that if he did, it would ruin his business, and for that reason he declined. That pork was sold to the citizens of Toronto and Montreal—diseased pork at that, as proved by a competent man who knows what are diseased hogs. The hon. gentleman has said that Dr. Smith and Dr. Sweetapple examined these hogs. They did nothing of the kind. They examined a certain number but not them all. If they had, they would have found diseased hogs among them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You can very well leave that to the people of Toronto and the surrounding country. Mr. St. John, who brought that up in the legislature and made it a question in the late election in the county of York, at every meeting held, was defeated by a large majority.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman ought to know that Dr. Smith never examined one of them after they were killed.

Mr. INGRAM.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes he did.

Mr. SPROULE. Dr. Sweetapple examined a portion of them, and two of the men who killed them swore that they were diseased, and the one taken away was diseased.

Mr. POWELL. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture on what principles public moneys can be given as compensation for the slaughter and quarantining of animals and refused for the slaughter and quarantine of nursery stock. I called his attention not long ago to the case of an individual who lost some hundreds of dollars in nursery stock, which he had purchased before the passing of the San José Scale Act, and the hon. Minister said he could not see any principle on which it could be paid for. To my mind it is impossible to distinguish between the two cases.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Was it diseased?

Mr. POWELL. It is not allowed to come in at all. I imagine it was not diseased, but my hon. friend has lost his nursery stock. He suffers a loss of two or three hundred dollars.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Why not send it back?

Mr. POWELL. It was paid for.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The question of diseased animals is settled by Parliament, the Minister having been authorized, under certain conditions, to pay compensation. There is no such statute in connection with nursery stock. I must say that, so far as the compensation is concerned, the practice has been for some time back to pay compensation for hogs. That was done on the ground that if this disease be circumscribed and localized it would be well worth the while of the country at large to pay for that circumscription and localization. It has been found practicable to localize the hog cholera by the methods carried out. I have been asked why cattle killed by reason of tuberculosis were not compensated for. Tuberculosis is not nearly so prevalent as people thought. I may take this occasion to say that since I have been testing animals for tuberculosis. I have been most gratified to find that the prevalence of this disease is not nearly so great as was supposed.

Mr. POWELL. And not one-quarter so bad as in Holland.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My officers have found not much more than 5 per cent of cases of disease. And I may remind the House that, as a rule, the test has been made where there was some sort of suspicion that the disease existed. When we began testing wild statements were made that from 25 to 50 per cent of the cattle-in the country were diseased. The percentage is so small, as the disease is spread over different parts of the country, and it is impossible to localize it, and therefore it was not thought advisable to compensate for cattle killed.

Mr. POWELL. I understand the statement of the hon. gentleman that there is a statute in the one case and not in the other. I would suggest to the hon. Minister that, while he has no authority from Parliament to pay, yet it is only fair that, losses having been suffered by these people, this should be taken into consideration by the Government, and an item introduced in the Estimates compensating them. I do not mean at the present session, but hereafter. I recognize the difficulty of dealing fairly with these people, and the great danger of the Government being imposed upon with absurd claims.

Mr. INGRAM. This item ought to stand until we have this evidence before us.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is another item in the next Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. It is now past two o'clock, and I think we have stayed here long enough.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I would ask the hon. gentleman to consent to the votes for the Railways and Canals Department. I have the Railway Committee to attend to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. It is absolutely impossible that we can go further. We are meeting every morning and sitting late every night.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It will not take long.

Mr. FOSTER. It will take so long that we simply cannot do it. Besides our men are away. I must appeal to my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) not to keep the House any longer.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. An intimation was given to me that hon. gentlemen opposite were as anxious to stay as we were. But if they think we have gone far enough, I will not press them to go further.

Resolutions to be reported.

REPORTS.

Report of the Minister of Justice as to penitentiaries of Canada, for the year ended 30th June, 1897.—(Mr. Fitzpatrick.)

Annual Report of the Department of Public Printing and Stationery, for the year ended 30th June, 1897.—(Mr. Fisher.)

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What will be taken up to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The final stage of the Montreal Harbour Bill, some smaller Bills and then Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend able to say about the time the House is expected to prorogue?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have hardly felt able to form a definite opinion until we see the progress made with the Estimates. I am expressing my own opinion simply when I say I think we can prorogue on Thursday—possibly earlier.

Mr. FOSTER. All legislation is down that we are to have this session?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I stated that there would be no more Supplementary Estimates. But I have learned that there was an omission of one item—Intercolonial accommodation at Lévis. It is a re-vote.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman is to bring down other Estimates, I would remind him that one of our fellow members has been very ill for a great part of the session. I refer to Major Beattie, of London. I would ask my hon. friend whether a sum could not be included for at least a portion of the time he has been ill.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the Estimate is printed and the Message received, and will be ready in the morning. However, we will consider the matter.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 2.20 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, June 4th, 1898.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MONTREAL HARBOUR WORKS.

The Resolution adopted in committee on the 3rd instant, respecting an advance to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal in addition to the amount authorized by Chapter 10 of the Statutes of 1896 (first session), was reported, read the second time, and concurred in.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 163) to grant further aid to the Harbour Commission of Montreal.—(Mr. Fielding.)

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 155)—from the Senate—to amend Chapter 11 of the Statutes of 1897, intituled, "An Act to restrict the importation and employment of aliens."

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 157) respecting the payment of the moneys advanced to the St. John Bridge and Railway Extension Company.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Additional amount for publishing debates (re-vote $6,949)	$20,000
Additional amount to cover expenditure during recess for French translation (including Experimental Farm Report, $468, and report of Dairy Commissioner, $250)	$20,000
Additional amount for sessional clerks, including two clerks for Whips' rooms	3,000
	3,568

Mr. MONTAGUE. We might, Mr. Speaker, say a word this morning as to what are the duties of the sessional clerks as regards the requirements for work for the members.

Mr. SPEAKER. I had not the pleasure of hearing the objections that were raised last night, but briefly speaking there are 25 sessional clerks appointed between the provinces as they used to be before I became Speaker. Among those there are eight who are employed exclusively in doing the work of the Post Office during the session, and in that way we avoid having permanent clerks appointed there. The sessional clerks are under the direction of the Clerk of the House, but under the immediate direction of Mr. Stewart, who distributes the work among them that may be required to be done during the session for the convenience of committees and of members.

Mr. FOSTER. Could we get an idea as to what are the privileges of members with reference to these sessional clerks? I have been in Parliament since 1882 and for my part I have never had a line of writing done by a sessional clerk. I have never thought that I could get it done, but I am here to state that there are members of this House who simply have clerks of their own on the sessional staff. I do not hesitate to refer to names; I refer to the member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Domville). The young man whom he has brought here has been, if I am not very much mistaken, practically a clerk for the member himself. There ought to be some method of measuring the hours of attendance of those clerks and the work that a man does, and if Parliament is going to give each man a private clerk it would be a splendid thing no doubt if the country wants to do it. I go into my own room and work my fingers off writing, while another member has practically a private clerk. There is no doubt about that and it is known to be so.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That is the point I wish to discuss, because it certainly is the case that some members of the House use these sessional clerks as secretaries, while others are regarded as having no right to do so.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I may say that my experience is somewhat in the other direction. I have never had anything to do with the clerks directly, but I have found Mr. Stewart, who is in charge, singularly obliging, and very prompt with the work I have given him to do—for instance, in making extracts from some report in the library for the purpose of a debate here, or copies of returns to the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is not private work.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. On every occasion when I have sent to him, I have been surprised at the promptitude with which he has performed the work, and I supposed that was the purpose for which these clerks were there.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I made a statement across the House that I had not got any work done; but if the hon. gentleman understood me as saying that I had never had any return copied, that is a mistake, for I understand that that is what the clerks are there for. I have had dozens of returns copied.

Mr. LARIVIERE. That is my experience also. I have had returns copied; but I understand that some of the clerks are employed in private rooms as private secretaries. At any rate, they are not in the sessional clerks' room.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We will inquire as to the fact. The hon. member to whom reference has been made is not here to answer.

Mr. SPEAKER. My information and knowledge on the point is quite different from what the hon. member for Provencher

(Mr. LaRivière) states. Attempts have been made by members who thought the clerks were not busy, and could be taken into their rooms, to have the use of them in that way; but the Clerk of the House and myself, after talking the matter over, have absolutely forbidden that. There was one attempt of this kind rather persistently made. It was mentioned by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster). The hon. member referred to is not in the House; he thought, I suppose, that that was the use of the clerks. My own experience, before I was in the Chair, and when I sat on the opposition side of the House, was exactly the same as that of the hon. member for York. I really did not know that members could properly get as much work done in that office as they can; and I think it is quite proper that any member who desires to have copied public papers or returns or anything to facilitate the public business of the House, should have the right, not to get a clerk and take him away, but to go to Mr. Stewart and place the matter in his hands; and he will attend to it very promptly. I think the clerks are quite efficient too, because it has been our effort, in filling vacancies, to get stenographers and typewriters. I think the efficiency of the staff is a good deal greater than it was.

Mr. CLANCY. It seems to me that there might be some restriction imposed in this respect. The work of copying returns seems to be well understood. There is many returns that are not ordered to be printed, because they are not of sufficient public interest; but they may be copied. With regard to individual members getting other work done, there is great danger of going over the line. I confess that it is very difficult to draw the line at the right place; but there is no doubt that no member should use a clerk for his own private work.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman knows that often a return is brought down which is not of sufficient importance to be printed. He wants it, I want it, somebody else wants it; we cannot all have it at the same time; and unless copies are made by Mr. Stewart, the return would be useless. So that I think members have a right to have copies made of such return.

Mr. CLANCY. I quite agree with that.

Mr. SPEAKER. Since I have been in the Chair, I think it was last session, I found that members were in the habit of sending their voters' lists and other things to the office to be copied and entered in pass-books. I will not say on which side of the House the hon. members to whom I refer sat; but I thought that should not be allowed, and I stopped it.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I think it is quite reasonable—and I speak without prejudice, because in all my life I have never used a clerk for any purpose. Gentlemen in the position of the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) and other prominent members of the Opposition, should be allowed some clerical assistance. I would have found that useful myself on some occasions when sitting opposite, and I think none of us would object that it should be fairly and fully understood that the leading members of the Opposition should have one or two clerks put at their disposal. Their position is becoming a recognized one, I hope they will long continue to fill it, and I want to make them comfortable.

Mr. ELLIS. I understand that this item covers "Hansard," to which I would like to call the attention of the House. I do not desire to make any attack on "Hansard," but I would like to call the attention of the committee to the steadily increasing expenditure for it. As I stated last evening, in the last three years "Hansard" has cost the country $177,000; and since 1891, it has cost altogether $364,000. The expense steadily grows, and I think there ought to be some effort made to limit it. I do not want to pronounce a sweeping judgment on the speeches; I do not want to be a censor as to what speeches should be published and what not; but we know that in the committees of the House there are long discussions which are really not of great importance, and which take up time. Sometimes, I think they are simply made to occupy time; and the question is whether these ought to be printed or whether any restraint should be put upon them. There is no doubt that among a great many members on both sides of the House there is a feeling that "Hansard" has become too expensive, and I know of a great many members who would vote for its abolition. The hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) thinks "Hansard" is a part of the history of the country. There may be a difference of opinion about that; but if it is a part of the history of the country, these are times in which a condensed history is more valuable to the people than one extending over many volumes. I would like one or two hon. gentlemen who are prominent in the House to give some expression of opinion on this subject, because the evil has become so great that some day or other it may have to be grappled with in a summary way.

Mr. FOSTER. How is that extra expense incurred—because more volumes are printed, or because there is a larger staff?

Mr. BERGERON. In one year there have been two sessions. Taking the hon. gentleman's figures since 1891, the cost would be $37,900 a year.

Mr. ELLIS. I will give the details of the expenditure. In 1890-91, it was $31,369; in 1891-92, $72,252 ; in 1892-93, $50,605 ; in 1893-94, $32,202 ; in 1894-95, $49,733 ; in 1895-96, $69,812—that would apparently include two sessions ; and in 1896-97, $58,050. It is really a very large expense. I may say that the reporters' salaries have not increased. They have run at about $17,500 a year since 1891. The expense of translating was $17,575 in 1892, and $20,304 in 1896-97. There is a much greater variation in that. The expense of printing is also subject to fluctuation on account of the number of words used in the session. For instance, last year it was $15,556, and the year before, apparently including two sessions, it was $34,130.

As a member of the Printing Committee and of the Committee on Debates, of which my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) is also a member, we find that there are constantly increasing little demands for these additions, which it seems almost impossible to resist and which, in the number of years I have been here, have added considerably to the cost.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. This question is one that has been brought to the attention of hon. members from session to session. I do not agree in what my hon. friend has said in regard to the continued increase in the cost of "Hansard" being a criterion of its actual cost. If an increase has been made in the cost, it is simply because of unavoidable circumstances. In one of the years mentioned by my hon. friend, we had two sessions. In another we had a very long session, and in order to satisfy the members of this House extra copies of a very long debate—the debate on the school question—had to be printed so as to distribute to the members of this House a certain number of copies. The bulk of the increase in the cost of "Hansard" is simply in the printing. And my hon. friend has just shown, by giving the figures, that the salaries of the reporters have not been increased nor those of the amanuenses, and the cost of translation was only increased by the fact that we had two sessions in one year, and by the extra allowance given the translators in the long session of 1896.

This question of publishing the debates of Parliament has attracted the attention not only of this House, but of the Imperial Parliament as well. In the Imperial Parliament, before they had what is now called the "Hansard," after the name of Mr. Thomas Curzon Hansard, who founded that institution, they had to make up a parliamentary history of the proceedings of both Houses compiled from the reports of newspapers and other historical accounts of what took place in the Imperial Parliament from the year 1066 until 1803. It was only in 1803 that a regular official report of the debates was published in England, and this work was afterwards entrusted to Mr. Hansard, who published the official report from 1878 to 1888. In 1888, a special joint committee of both Houses was appointed to consider the propriety of publishing a full report of the debates in the British Parliament. The "Hansard" at that time only covered the debates that took place after 12 o'clock at night, and during the sittings of the House in committee. These were compiled with the reports in the leading newspapers, and the whole was published in a concise form. That, however, proved unsatisfactory, and an inquiry was made by a special committee, before which several of the leading English statesmen, including Lord Salisbury, gave their opinion that the fullest and most complete reports of the proceedings of both Houses should be printed for distribution. In fact, most of these men insisted on not only a full report but a verbatim report, giving the exact words of the speaker. This, of course, brought out some objections. It was even stated that it might so happen that in a British Parliament some members had not mastered the English grammar sufficiently to speak the language as it should be spoken, but it was stated that such faults might be corrected, but that the report should, with that exception, be verbatim. Here is a portion of the report :—

Such a system exists at present in many foreign countries (that of giving full reports) and in many of our colonies, and there is much to be said in its favour. It would undoubtedly secure a complete and accurate record of parliamentary debates, which might be of historical value and interest.

It is, however, necessary to realize and, if possible, to formulate clearly the nature and character of such official report. The committee have arrived at the conclusion that an official report must be verbatim, and, except, perhaps, as to gross grammatical errors, uncorrected.

This was the opinion of the committee.

That the reports must be verbatim, because the length at which each member should be officially reported cannot be left to the discretion of the reporters, nor would it be desirable to impose on any committee of Parliament or department of Government the responsibility for condensation of speeches.

The report must be uncorrected, except as to grammatical errors, because, if produced as it should be, under conditions ensuring as nearly as possible absolute accuracy, further corrections might involve the alteration of what has actually been said, and would so far prejudice the credit and interest of the report.

It will be seen by this that not only was it decided that a full report of the debates, in spite of the cost of the same, should be published, and I may say that the cost there is a great deal more in proportion than it is here. It costs a great deal more, even taking into account the proportionate lengths of the reports and the lengths of the session, to report the debates in England, and in the United States as well. The officials in connection with such reports receive larger salaries in Great Britain and the United States, and even in some of our sister colonies of the British Empire. Therefore, I say that our "Hansard" is, on the whole, not costing more than it should, under the circumstances. I have here the evidence of Lord Salisbury, given before that commission, and with the permission of the House I shall read a portion of it, which is not very long. But before I give that, let me refer to a very interesting part of the report of the committee itself, which is as follows:—

The debates in Parliament form a most important, if not the most important, part of our history. It seems absurd and false economy on the part of a great nation to leave to chance the records of the most important factor in the making of its history. As time goes on, the materials for such a record decrease instead of augmenting. There is a steady deterioration, we will not say in the character, for that in some papers is still very high, but in the amplitude of the parliamentary reports in the daily press. Some thirty or forty years ago, the reports of the speeches in Parliament were almost verbatim in every single one of the morning journals; now the reports of even important speeches, except in the case of the "Times," are brief, almost to lines.

The historical student will find an almost verbatim report of the maiden speech of the late Lord Beaconsfield on 7th December, 1837, in almost every one of the morning papers of that period. As Lord Beaconsfield was but a private member when he made that speech, and for many years afterwards, the speech, if delivered now-a-days, would be unrecorded, or recorded in but a few lines.

But the committee do now ground the desirability of an official and full report upon the material thus supplied for the history of the leading members of Parliament, though the growth or change of their opinion is an important and interesting part of the history of their country. A proper record of parliamentary proceedings would likewise be an excellent guide to the study of the changes in the manners, ideas, opinions and legislation of the country. The history of a parliamentary debate is similar to the description given of a newspaper. The first day it is read with eagerness, the next day it is thrown away; after the lapse of some years it is worth its weight in gold. The ancient volumes of "Hansard," imperfect as they are, are often intensely interesting reading, for the light they throw on dead statesmen or past condition of society, legislation and controversies. In an age which has seen the growth of a truly scientific method of historical study, it is curious to find that the desirability of a full report of parliamentary proceedings should still be in question.

The proposal that the reports should be mainly made up, not by independent reporting, but from reports culled from the different newspapers, means the whole dependence on newspaper reports, in face of the undeniable and universally acknowledged deterioration of these newspaper reports.

The existing reports collected by Mr. Hansard, though perhaps as good as could be expected under the circumstances, are yet so far from excellence that many members have ceased to even open the reports of their speeches which are sent to them for correction. Knowing that the reports, in any case, would be travesties of what they had said, they were indifferent as to whether the travesty was great or small, and refused to take interest in, or accept any responsibility for, the report. Such a state of things deprives "Hansard" of almost any authority.

Under any system but that of a verbatim report, the majority of speeches—all those, in fact, except the speeches of Ministers of great position and of great oratorical power—will be usually reported in the third person. A report in the third person is a bad report, not merely, nor indeed so much, because it is unduly brief, as because it is an incorrect report. The third person report has the tendency to bring down all speeches to a monotonous and dull level, for it is the individual reporter who is represented in them, and not the different speakers, diverse in temperament, thought and diction. Behind the report in the first person the reader can see the personality of the speaker. Such a report of a speech has colour, reality, the variety of life, while a report in the third person is bad, not only because it is too brief, but because it gives a false impression, and is, therefore, in the higher sense, an incorrect report.

This will enable hon. members to appreciate more fully the value of a verbatim report from a historical point of view. Recurring to the statement of Lord Salisbury, of which I spoke a moment ago, I quote the following question and answer:—

Lord Salisbury was asked, "Have you any observations to make to the committee with regard to the effect of the imperfect reporting of the House upon observations made by you in your official capacity?" And his answer was, "I think the reporting of the House is defective, and that its defects frequently have injurious effects upon the public interests. The observations made by Ministers in either House of Parliament are taken as official statements of the most precise and formal character, and they are, consequently, if they affect any questions of importance, telegraphed at once to any part of the world which may be interested in the subject-matter to which they relate. Those Ministers, therefore, whose departments concern external affairs, Ministers for Foreign Affairs, for India, or for the Colonies, frequently find that the statements which they make in Parliament are telegraphed at once, as reported, either to foreign courts, to the colonies, or to India. With respect to the colonies, I know nothing; but it has sometimes happened to me that statements of mine, misreported either to India, or to foreign courts, have produced considerable misconception, and it has more than once happened, though not frequently, that that misconception, before it could be corrected, has produced results which I regretted."

Now, Sir, this is just on account of the fact that the portion of the debate published up to 12 o'clock was taken from the newspapers, instead of being reported by the official reporters of the House. The committee then not only decided that the reports should be verbatim and uncorrected, but that they should cover the work in committee, which is found there to be as important as the debates with Mr. Speaker in the Chair. This investigation took place in 1888, and it was decided that from that date all the reports should be in full and should cover debates on: 1. Private Bills. 2. Debates in committee on Public Bills. 3. Debates in Committee of Supply. 4. Post mid-night debates. So as it has been found in the British House of Commons that the fullest and most accurate report of their proceedings ought to be published in the "Hansard," I do not see why we should go back on an institution that, I may say, is cited as a model in other countries; for in his report in 1888, Canada is mentioned as having a full report of the debates of its House of Commons, and cited as an example. As we have been cited as an example in the mother Parliament, I think it will be a very bad step on our part to undo what has secured to us such a good reputation.

Now, there may have been complaints about certain parts of the work, but I believe—and I may say I speak from experience, having had the honour of occupying the chair of the Debates Committee during the last Parliament—we have the best staff of reporters that can be secured in Canada. Our reports, I may say, are a model; and it must be a surprise to other members, as it has been to me that the poor speeches sometimes made by them are turned out so well and so nicely in the reports of the debates—not that the reporters change the sense of the speeches, but that they put them in such an acceptable shape that the members may be proud of them. The members of our staff of reporters have been selected, irrespective of their politics, from among the best men on the staffs of the newspapers. They are men who received a good training even before their appointment, and since they have been grouped together they have improved by experience, and now a member cannot notice any difference between the part of his speech reported by one reporter and the part reported by another. They run, as it were, in the same groove, and they have gained such experience that their reports, as I have said, are a model.

Now, with regard to the cost of the Official Report of Debates, I repeat that the cost is mainly in the printing of the same. The printing of the debates, I may say, has not been controlled by the committee. We send our copy to the Printing Bureau and, whatever charges are made by that bureau we have to stand, whether they are high or whether they are low. Whether those charges can be reduced is a question which I intend to bring before the Debates Committee next session if I have the honour of still being a member of the House and of the committee. I shall look carefully into this matter and I hope, with the co-operation of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Ellis) that we may, perhaps, find a means of reducing the expense of the printing of our debates.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I may say that I supported the introduction of "Hansard" in this House some twenty-two years ago. I thought at that time it would be well to preserve for future reference the speeches that were made here. I do not know that I have changed my views very materially since, although I notice that the expenses are increasing very largely. I have an idea that this vote has an important bearing upon the cost of legislation, and influences it very largely. The hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) asked for explanations as to the cost of "Hansard." I think that in various ways the cost of "Hansard" not only increases in itself, but it increases the cost of legislation generally. It is said by some, although I will not say so, that it prolongs the session, that it means the multiplication of speeches, that many speeches are made on the same subject and are almost identical in character and are recorded in the "Hansard." Comparing the "Hansard" in this country and in the old country, I find that in this session so far—I do not know how many pages of "Hansard" there will be before the session is over—in May, however, it numbered 6486 pages. I find that in the British "Hansard" last year there were 6151 pages.
Mr. LARIVIERE.

Mr. CLANCY. How long was the session in each case?

Mr. LANDERKIN. The session in the old country generally runs six months; I believe sometimes seven or eight months. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) knows the length of the session there, probably, as well as I do. I would not undertake to state it definitely. But there is a less copious—

Mr. MILLS. Do not they count by columns here and by pages in the British "Hansard"?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not say whether they counted in columns or pages, I am giving you what I have got as to the cost of these prolonged sessions and the increased cost of legislation. If there is an increase in the cost of legislation it is largely due, perhaps, to the existence of "Hansard." The hon. member for York is anxious to know about the increased cost of "Hansard." I think I can satisfy that hon. gentleman. I have had special actuaries engaged in looking over the "Hansard," I believe they were conscientious men, computing the number of speeches that were made in the House. They have made a report to me and they report that they did not find a single day, in which the member for York had not spoken.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the hon. gentleman if it was late in the evening?

Mr. LANDERKIN. It was late in the evening. I understand they found that the member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) had not spoken for four days this session, and they came to me in breathless alarm to ask if there was anything the matter with him during that time. I believe there should be an allotment of space in the "Hansard," there are some gentlemen in the House who monopolize nearly the whole of "Hansard." I can point out three gentlemen on that side of the House who have taken over a fourth, nearly a third, of the whole "Hansard" during this session, and I will give you their names. I suppose they are proud of their efforts. I notice the hon. member for York, on one subject, made 37 speeches, and they were all long, and were all taken down in the "Hansard." And they were very good speeches. They say that he doesn't often speak without saying something, but he says it over and over and over again. Now, I will give you the result of that hon. gentleman's labours during the present session and the session of 1897. In 1897 the member for York made 1,453 speeches in this House, that is an average of 25 speeches a day. That is a pretty good effort for a man of his size. I don't wonder he is thin. I don't wonder that he looks like Cassius; he is long drawn out. He filled 363 pages of "Hansard." He spoke as much as 30 and 3-7ths of the members of the House during that session.

Mr. BERGERON. Three-sevenths?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is the hon. gentleman asking me who was the three-sevenths?

Mr. BERGERON. I see what you are after.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) spoke 1,023 times, he was a good second. He is eligible for the Queen's plate next year, but he did not win last year. He occupied over 250 pages last year. The hon. member for East Grey, my colleague (Mr. Sproule), made a very good third. I think with a little coaching, which I will be able to give him during the recess, he will overtake the member for York. He spoke 290 times last session, and filled over 100 pages of "Hansard." So that between these three illustrious statesmen they occupied nearly a third of the "Hansard" of that session. Now, is that fair to their colleagues over there? There is the member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), he is thirsting for fame, why not give him a chance? He only spoke 250 times this session. There is the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), he is getting his spurs whetted. Why not give him a chance? I believe on all law questions he advises the Opposition. Now, there is an injustice in this. I will just ask the members of the House whether they think it is right that three members should monopolize nearly a third of the "Hansard" when other members have an equal right with them? Now, the cost of legislation, in 1897, was $1,134,772.04. Of this, the hon. member for York is responsible for $162,110. The "Hansard" cost $70,000, and he is responsible for $10,000 of that sum. He is going to be the most expensive member in the House. Now, we will take this year. The session is not ended, therefore I cannot furnish complete figures. But hon. gentlemen opposite threaten us with more speeches. They say: If you don't do so and so we will make more speeches. They have been making speeches and speeches, and after a while we will see how they total up. I will show you the practical results, so that they may be published in the constituencies. For 1898, the actuaries who were engaged in the compilation of these figures, told me that they could not find some copies of the "Hansard," and they do not make a full report; but so far the results are very gratifying to these three gentlemen. I find that the member for York spoke this session, and that was up to about the middle of May, 1,066 times.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not yet up to the standard.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think, though, that when we get a full report—there has been some pretty good days lately—that he will get up to the old standard. The member for West Assiniboia came a better second this time, he spoke 792 times, I think in the last few days he has been gaining very rapidly. The member for East Grey has made 409 speeches this year. I understand these three gentlemen have taken up this year a third of the "Hansard." I think if we were to add the member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), we could safely say that the four of them have taken up a third of "Hansard." Now, is this not a serious matter? I notice this session that the member for York made 47 speeches on one subject, and they were all the same. That is a pretty good record, they are all down in the "Hansard." I will not say they were not good speeches. But it was time the gentleman should give others on that side a chance. There is the hon. member sitting opposite me (Mr. McDougall), he is burning with speech. Sometimes he is crowded out. The hon. member for Beauharnois is not in it, so to speak, either, he has no chance. These three gentlemen I have mentioned take up almost the whole of the time of the House, about one-third of the "Hansard" is filled with the efforts of those gentlemen. Well, if this is going to continue, I don't wonder at the cost of legislation; I do not wonder at the session being prolonged when hon. gentlemen, not feeling just as gentlemen should feel when they are associated with other gentlemen in the legislation of this country, want to crowd all the others out. I do not believe in this monopoly of "Hansard." It will come to this, that there will have to be a committee, and there will have to be an allotment of space. If such things go on much longer. I think the innate sense of right and wrong should govern the members of this House, and they should not intervene in debates on every conceivable occasion. How is it in England? I have not made a calculation, nor have I had one made for me, but I venture the statement that if you take the English "Hansard," you will not find a member of the Government nor a member of the Opposition who have intervened in debates nearly the number of times that those hon. gentlemen have done here, and the English sessions are twice as long as ours. Now I think the member for West Assiniboia has told us several times this session that if certain things were not done he would keep the session a month longer. I think I have heard others say the same. The hon. member for West Assinibola made a long speech. Going home he was standing by the gate, when a reporter passed, and he heard this soliloquy:

My name is O'Davin,
I soon will be havin'
The House to myself
If I keep on this way.

My words are abundant,
My speech is redundant—
I can speak from the morn
Till the close of the day.

If we heard the soliloquy of the hon. member for York, it would be the same as that of the hon. member for West Assiniboia and also of the hon. member for East Grey. I rather take pride in the hon. member for East Grey—I think he is running the race with talkers. Sometimes it has been said that language was given to conceal thought. That is the view the hon. member for York takes of it. With his display of language he can conceal his thoughts just as well as any one I have ever heard of. I hope after this time the hon. gentleman will endeavour to conceal some of his language so that it will not appear so often in "Hansard." If he would only conceal his language as he does his thoughts, he would become an admirable statesman. It is continuous talking. It may be considered by these hon. gentlemen that they are forging to the front, and that by the number of speeches they deliver they are going to outclass others. I do not know how the country will take it, but they are very expensive members of the House, and if there is any increase for legislation, the blame for that increase must fall on those hon. members.

Mr. BERGERON. You had better repeat your remarks in regard to the hon. member for East Grey, who has just come in.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I was praising the hon. member for East Grey when he was not present. His arrival has spiked my guns. After all the herculean efforts on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite we have had a general election and thirty-one by-elections, a list of which I have here.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the election in Bagot?

Mr. LANDERKIN.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is all right.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. member for Bagot died in March. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) was here.

Mr. BERGERON. I have been here every day, and you have not been here.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You have been here day after day and month after month.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the hon. member forgotten the parliamentary rule?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not mind the House taking exception to my wasting my time on the hon. gentleman, and I will come to order. As the hon. gentleman has referred to the election for Bagot, I will give some facts. The hon. gentleman was here at the time when the late lamented member for Bagot died. He hesitated day after day and week after week, and a month and a half elapsed before he officially mentioned the death of that respected member, and then blamed the Government for not bringing on an election. If the constituency is disfranchised temporarily I lay it at the door of the hon. member for Beauharnois, who had not the courage to make the official announcement of the vacancy caused by the late member's death. When he did call attention to the vacancy, he wanted the election brought on so that the old list might be used, which had been prepared by themselves. He did not think of the new voters, he wanted the election held on a list four or five years old. That is what I have to say about the Bagot election. We have had thirty-one by-elections since the general elections. Hon. gentlemen opposite have had the advantage of the "Hansard" for the purpose of recording their speeches; but they have lost eight seats since the general elections. The wave or reaction that set in swept their friends away at every by-election, with the exception of two. In twenty-nine out of thirty-one by-elections the people have come to the support of the Government led by my distinguished friend, Sir, Wilfrid Laurier. They know and the country knows that it is in the interest of Canada to perpetuate that reign, and I must tell hon. gentlemen opposite that they can go on and speak by the hour, by the day, by the week and by the month, so long as this Government conducts the affairs of the country in the business-like manner in which they have commenced, so long will they continue to preside over the destinies of the Dominion.

Mr. BERGERON. Have you got your promise?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I heard the hon. gentleman say, and he did so in a boasting manner, that Sir John Macdonald promised to make him a Senator.

Mr. BERGERON. No, he offered it to me.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. gentleman boasted of it in this House and in his speeches, and now he says to me: "Have you got a promise?" I do not look for promises, I look for performances.

Mr. BERGERON. We are having one now.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I believe it was Sir Mackenzie Bowell that offered him a seat in the Cabinet, after the seven angels had gone out of it. I like to drop that name "traitor;" the Premier used it, but I am not so bitter in politics as he, and I simply say that when those seven angels fell from the Cabinet then a place was offered to my hon. friend. I have heard him interfering in debates occasionally on that subject. I would advise the hon. gentleman, who has been promised so many things and got nothing, to hold his tongue.

Mr. BERGERON. Promise and offer are not the same thing.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In regard to this item under consideration I think there should be some supervision exercised over "Hansard,"—some fair-play over the distribution of the speeches in "Hansard." I do not believe in three members monopolizing one-third of that beautiful volume. I think the other members should have a chance. I have known hon. members rise half a dozen or a dozen times behind one of those hon. gentlemen, who would look back and say "Sit down, I have the floor." or words to that effect; and the poor supporter would crouch down, while little Billy Bennett had not a chance to speak for a month—

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I mean the hon. member for East Simcoe. I take it back.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order. I have no objection, if the leader of the Government is willing at this time of the session to have time wasted on altogether irregular matters, that he should take that ground; but the very discourteous way in which the hon. gentleman has gone into the subject will very likely lead to reprisals. The Chair would consult the interests of the leader of the Government if he would keep hon. gentlemen opposite to the point under discussion. I have noticed the Chairman has been very particular in keeping gentlemen on this side of the House to the point.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do that every member has the right to speak in the way he thinks proper so long as it is within the rules. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) imagines that it is part of my duty as leader of the Government to supervise in advance speeches which are delivered, I have not that view. My hon. friend (Mr. Landerkin) has made a speech in which there was a good deal of reason and in which there was a good deal of general good-natured badinage, over which there is no reason to get angry. Of course, he made use of an expression which was not parliamentary, and for which he expressed regret and withdrew at once.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That is another speech which the hon. member (Mr. Foster) has got embalmed on "Hansard." It is about the best speech he has made, because it is the shortest, and if he continues in that line it will be very acceptable to the House. What I would like the member for York (Mr. Foster) to do, and what I would like my friend and colleague from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) to do, and what I would like my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) to do, is to give the other members of the Opposition a chance to see what they can do. Let them make their speeches for "Hansard," but do not do it all themselves. This is one of the most important items in the Estimates. It is for the House to consider the increasing cost of "Hansard." If there is not to be some regulation of the "Hansard" which will prevent hon. gentlemen on one side or the other repeating and repeating their remarks, and getting them printed at the expense of the country, I think the time has come when the subject should receive the serious attention of the House. It is all right that members should have their views placed before their constituents, but I believe there is a grievance in the present system. I do not say that I am opposed to the continuance of "Hansard," but if two or three men are to monopolize the "Hansard," such a state of things should not exist, and I ask the House and the Government to consider this question with a view to remedy the wrong.

Mr. LARIVIERE. The impression appears to exist that the length of the session depends upon the "Hansard." Now, to refute that I wish to put on record a statement of the length of the different sessions of Parliament since 1841, that is, for 56 years, with the number of days that the session lasted, and the difference between the length of the session before "Hansard" was published, and the length since "Hansard" has been published. The sessions were just as long before "Hansard" was established. This work has been prepared with a great deal of labour by Mr. Alphonse Desjardins, one of our official reporters, and prepared at my request, when I was chairman of the committee in the last Parliament. Mr. Desjardins has since completed the work of bringing it up to date. This table will be very valuable for the information of members of the House, and I would ask the privilege of handing it to the official reporter without reading it so as to save time. It is as follows:—

Mr. CLANCY. After the speech we have heard this morning from the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) the House might well consider whether it would not be a proper thing to abolish "Hansard." I am comparatively a new member of this House, and therefore will not pretend to dictate as to what should be done, nor offer an opinion upon it, but I say that the "Hansard" would become a very useless record of the House if it were to be devoted very seriously to such speeches as we have heard from the hon. member (Mr. Landerkin). I am not disposed to say that the speech has not been delivered with a great deal of characteristic humour that belongs alone to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Landerkin). He really has no parallel, and I do not know any other hon. gentleman that we could compare him with. I appeal to hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House if the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) has ever seriously devoted himself to a Bill or a measure in this House, or has risen in his place to offer any useful suggestion as to legislation. He certainly has not done so since I have come to the House. The hon. gentleman has been in the House, I am told, for 25 years, and I do not believe that he can show that he has made one useful or serious speech, or that he has applied himself earnestly to bring about useful legislation. It ill-becomes him to set himself up as a critic. I do think we should consider whether we should maintain "Hansard" any longer, if it is to be the receptacle for such things as we heard this morning.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is a pity that when we were discussing a serious question, seriously as to the "Hansard," that a measure of party feeling should be brought in. For my part I want to put myself on record as being favourable to the abolition of the "Hansard" entirely. The local legislatures, especially that of Ontario, have no "Hansard," and I find no fault amongst the members as to the manner in which the debates are published by the enterprise of the daily press. On going to the library I find that a very good record of the debates of the House exists in clippings from the daily press before the "Hansard" of this House was published. There can be no comparison made between this Parliament and the Parliament of Great Britain as regards its "Hansard." The debate of the Parliament of Great Britain is real debate, and if this House could be brought to the level of the Parliament of Great Britain as regards the length of speeches, and as regards the character of its debates—I mean as to condensation—I should be favourable to the existence of "Hansard," but as it is I am opposed to the existence of "Hansard" and will vote for its abolition. I think this House may very well next session appoint a committee of inquiry into the whole matter, when I feel that a majority of the members who desire to promote business will be found to hold the views which I am expressing now.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. My hon. friend (Mr. Montague) has referred to the record of the debates which took place before "Hansard" was established. He must remember that in these days the newspapers devoted a good deal more of their space to political matters, but to-day, with the exigencies of giving news from all parts of the world, and with the facilities for obtaining that news, the newspapers are compelled to condense the reports of Parliament. You will notice that the reports published in even the leading newspapers of to-day are condensed in such a manner that in fact only a very few important speeches are published, and even these are shortened. They do not, and cannot devote the same amount of space to us that they were able to do in former years, on account of the diversity and the amount of news they have to publish in order to satisfy their readers. Therefore, if "Hansard" were abolished, the newspapers could not afford to give more extended reports than they do to-day. In fact, I wonder how they can give to the proceedings of this House so much space as they do, with the number of subjects they have to deal with.

Mr. TALBOT. I simply rise to say that I give my entire approval to every word that has been uttered by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), and I think the country at large is back of him in what he has said. The "Hansard" would be all right if it were a correct illustration of what is said in this House; but unfortunately we have a revised edition, in which members who have said things they are sorry for take means to have those parts of their speeches struck out. I consider that the revised "Hansard" is not a correct proof of what is said in this House, because I find that some members strike out almost entire columns of what they have said.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I wish to say that the hon. member is mistaken with regard to that, because it is well known that the "Hansard" committee have a rule that enforces on the reporters the necessity of not allowing any alterations to be made in speeches. Corrections are allowed, but no alterations are allowed to be made, and no member is allowed to strike out any portion of a speech which he may have delivered.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to say a word on this question. I believe it would be quite proper to abolish "Hansard" altogether unless we can bring the expenditure within a reasonable limit. I concur in what has been said by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague). A very respectable account is published in the newspapers of the utterances in the Ontario legislature on both sides of politics. A very fair report of what was done in this House was published in the newspapers before we had a "Hansard" at all, and it would be done again. With regard to the staff we have, I desire to say that I think a more efficient staff could not possibly be got. I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Haldimand in that regard. I think our reporters are equal to any who can be produced in any part of the world. With regard to the shortening of debate, if we could apply the closure in this House, as is done in England and in the United States and prevent long speeches on all subjects, and bring a debate to a close, it might be possible to reduce the expenditure of "Hansard." Certainly something should be done in that direction, or else "Hansard" should be abolished altogether. I think a great deal of the printed material which is sent to the members of the House might also be done away with. Since I have been a member of this House I have received as much stuff as would fill a very large library, a large proportion of which is useless to me. I was in the office of a member of Parliament a short time ago, and I noticed that he had about a cord of stuff there which was never opened, because it was still tied in strings. I asked him why he did not open it. He said he had not time, and that the stuff was a nuisance to him, and he did not know what to do with it. The printing and paper for all that has to be paid for. In the statement of the cost of "Hansard," I presume that the cost of printing and material, such as paper and ink, is not included. Unless a considerable reduction can be made, I would be in favour of abolishing "Hansard" altogether, and leaving the publication of reports of the proceedings of this House to the enterprise of the press.

Mr. SPROULE. I think hon. members would like that very much, if we could make it retroactive, to extend for about fifteen years back.

Mr. CASEY. I have very little sympathy, in fact I have none, with this cry about the expense of "Hansard." It is the easiest thing in the world for any one to get up and say that such and such a thing is expensive and we ought to abolish it. That is no way to approach a question of expenditure. The question is, whether the thing obtained is worth what it costs, I have no hesitation in saying that the publication of our debates has been worth what it costs, even while I admit that those debates contain a vast amount of rubbish, to which I have probably contributed my share. But, Sir, with all the rubbish, the absolutely needless stuff that has been crammed into them, they do furnish the means of holding men to what they have said in this House, and maintaining a record as between the Opposition and the Government and individual members of the House. It is absolutely impossible to preserve that in any other way. The talk about the press reporting us is merely nonsense. The press only reports what the reporters in the gallery believe will be interesting to their readers, and that report is again cut down by the editors before it gets into the papers.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). It would not be so if "Hansard" were out of the way.

Mr. CASEY. It would be exactly so if "Hansard" were out of the way. It was exactly so before "Hansard" existed, and when the hon. gentleman was not in this House.

Mr. WOOD (Hamilton). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. CASEY. The first year the hon. gentleman sat in this House was 1874, and that was the first year in which we had a "Hansard."

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). We had no "Hansard" in 1874.

Mr. McMULLEN.
