Turning then to the indictment of Mackie and Ponton, His Lordehip said that the first question to ask was, Was Ponton a party to the robbery? There was no evidence that the was present was responsible for the act of any other done in the presecution of a common end. As to Mackie's position, he was as desply involved as the other two. There was the direct evidence of Parc against him. Then the judge recounted several corroborative incidents, such as the attempt at robbery in the winter time, and others, which point to Mackie's complication.

The bench made an important state of an ecomplice was in law sufficient to commit the accussed person. It was the outstanding the first part of a judge to advise a jury to be cautions and not to convict if there was no evidence against a man except the evidence of an accomplice. Yet, if the jury did convict, the conviction was good. He declared the finding of a true bill against a man did not con-

Concerning Ponton, His Honor said there were several things that appeared to be corroborative of the wridence of Pane. The key story was rung in. He thought the matter of the $10,000 of Government bonds was a coincidence. The noises heard in Ponton's room on the night of the robbery was mentioned as a corroboration, while it was said that Pontou's lack of money before the robbery and his pessession of at least $85 after was at least significant. This latter fact was, in the judge's opinion, on the line of the strongest kind of corroboration. He hinted that perhaps the Crown would have more evidence to produce.

The judge concluded his address with an eloquent appeal to the jurors to use their intelligence in the discharge of their duties and not to be blased in any way by any extraneous circumstance, or by their preconceived opinions. He desired them to consider this particular case in an energetic manner, on a high plane of themets and to depend upon the arthress.

to Jailer Vanluven, and it will rest with a jury of twelve of his peers whether he will leave the jail en route to the peni-tentiary or as a free but singularly un-fortunate young man. The Napanee branch of the Dominion Bank was enterfortunate young man. The Napanes branch of the Dominion Bank was entered and robbed of $32,000 on the night of August 27, 1897. The combinations of the yault and safe were worked, the combination numbers changed, and it was not until 24 hours after the commission of the deed that the burglary was discovered. The Pinkerton detective agoncy was given control of the case, and Detectives Dougherty and Wilkes, the men delegated to ferret out the robbery, after looking over the scene, at once arrived at the conclusion that it had its origin inside the bank. The arrest of W. H. Ponton, the teller, follewed on October 6, 1897. At the proliminary examination Ponton refused to elect, but the evidence adduced was not sufficient in Magistrate Daly's opinion to send accused for trial. Later, however, others were imported into the case, and the Magistrate committed the four accused for trial. This trial begins to-day, the judge having charged the grand jury yesterday.

The court room was jammed when London, Nov. 23. — Agoncillo, the agent of Aguinaldo, with his advisers, returned here from Parls yesterday. He is very indignant at the statements of Major-General Wesley Merritt, in reply to an arraignment of American officers made by the insurgent Junta to President McKinley and the American people. He is also angry at General Merritt's reference to the Filipinos as "children," and the general situation is displeasing to him.

Agoncillo does not think the Filipinos will again submit to the yoke of a colonial government, his instructions being to claim the recognition of their independence. When asked his opinion regarding the American proposal to buy the islands, he said the Filipino Government could not allow themselves to be bought and sold like merchandise, but, if the object of the moderate indemnity is that their recognition and peace be established, he thought the matter might be submitted to their consideration.

against one without speaking of the other.

The Judge's Remarks.

The judge defined the charge against Pare and Holden as one of burglary. He reviewed the history of the robbery, and atlantic Fisheries Committees are those by which most work remains to be believed there was corroboration of it that implicated Mr. Ponton, while there was evidence of a continuous effort on the part of the parties to rob the bank. He laid stress upon that part of Pare's evidence in which he says that the combination of the inner vault was known and the information had been given by Mr. Penten. This led the judge to remark that Pare was an accomplice. He made that the area of the parties to rob his own admission he was a villain. He had been guilty of one crime. Pare told a good many things that were said that would not be evidence except against those present when it was said, yet his evidence was good against Holden.

The evidence against Holden. Pare's evidence that some of the stolen property was found on Holden. Pare's evidence, so far as it related to himself, could be relied upon, as it was not to be encouraged that he would make himself country of the stolen property was found on Holden. would not be evidence except against those present when it was said. Yet his evidence was good against Holden. The evidence against Holden was that of Pare, which was direct, besides the further evidence that some of the stolen property was found on Holden. Pare's evidence, so far as it related to himself, could be relied upon, as it was not to be supposed that he would make himself out to be 'blacker than he really was, while it was good evidence against Holden, because it was corroborated by the money found upon the latter. In the matter of Pare and Holden it was the optnion of His Lordship that the grand try could do nothing other than juce them upon trial.

Turning then to the indictment of Mackie and Ponton, His Lordship said that the first question to ask was, Was Ponton a party to the robbery? There was no evidence that he was present when the act was actually committed. Yet always granting that Pare's story was true; everyone was a party who actually committe, or does, or omits to do an act for the purpose of committing an offence. Besides, this matter was in the form of a conspiracy, and each one was responsible for the act of any other done in the proceedurion of a common and.

Athens, Leeds County, Ontario, Wednesday, Nov. 23, 1898 Concerning Ponton, His Honor said there were several things that appeared to be corroborative of the evidence of Pars. The key story was rung in. He thought the matter of the $10,000 cf Government bonds was a coincidence. The noises heard in Ponton's room on the night of the robbery was mentioned as a corroboration, while it was said that Ponton's lack of money before the robbery and his pessession of at least $85 after was at least significant. This latter fact was, in the judge's opinion, on the line of the strongest kind of corroboration. He hinted that perhaps the Crown would have more evidence to produce.

The judge concluded his address with an eloquent appeal to the jurors to use their intelligence in the discharge of their duties and not to be blased in any way by any extraneous circumstance, or he their transponding duplions. He desired. GRAND JURY HAS THE CASE NOW

The Judge's Remarks.

The judge defined the charge against Pare and Holden as one of burglary. He reviewed the history of the robbery, and stated that if Pare's evidence was to be believed there-was corroboration of that implicated Mr. Ponton, while there was evidence of a continuous effort on the part of the parties to rob the bank. He laid stress upon that part of Pare's evidence in which he says that the combination of the inner vault was known and the information had been given by Mr. Penton. This led the judge to remark that Pare was an accomplic. He was different from the others in that on his own admission he was a villain. He had been guilty of one crime. Pare told a good many things that were said that would not be evidence except against those present when it was said. Yet his evidence was good against Holden was that of Pare, which was direct, besides the further evidence that some of the sidner property was found on Holden. Pare's vidence, so far as it related to himself, outle be relied upon, as it was not to be supposed that he was not to be made and Ponton, His Lordship said that the first question to ask was, Was Ponton a party be the mother of Pare and Holden it was the opinion of His Lordship that he part's story the money found upon the latter; has the opinion of a compriser, and each one was responsible for the act of any other was true, everyous was a party who actually commits, and offence. ### MONKEYS OF INDIA.

THE HAVOC THEY CAUSE BY THEIR

Monkeys in India are an unmitigated muisance, especially in the country. I have often come across in the jungles gal whole troops of them, whose depretions in fields and orchards were the despair of the unfortunate villagers. These troops always consisted of one huse male and about 100 females. The if it happens to be a male. The mother, if it happens to be a male. The mother, however, sometimes manages to hide the little one until he is able to get about and then sends him away before the big male catches sight of him. In this way it often happens that individual males are to be found living by emselves in single blessedness. Now, d of solitude after a time and perhaps believing in union as a source of strength, these bachelors often join together and form a pack of their own-as a sort of club. Then the fun begins. They want wives—very naturally. But how are they to get them? All the female monkeys of the country belong to the harem of some big brute or other. Clearly, the only solution is to attack such a harem, kill the gotha (the aforesaid big brute), and then divide the spoils. So an ultimatum is sent—and rejected. War is declared. The battle is a fierce one and often lasts several days. The party attacked always tries to retreat and often traverses severa angles, fields and even villages. But the pursuit is hot and vigorous, and at last a stand has to be made—sometimes in a village green or even an orchard of some country mansion. In the actual fight the females generally remain faithful to their lord and master and faitful to their lord and master and help him flercely against his numecods against his numerous against his numerous his nume

Now these battles cause sad havor to the fields and orchards of the country and often prove a positive danger to the people, for, though monkeys seldom at-tack men, were to the luckless one who deadly struggle. Moreover, when pressed by hunger, these ventures to come near them in their by hunger, these packs are not to be trifled with. You may not mind even the damage done to your orchard by hundreds of monkeys gobbling up everything they can lay their hands on, but this quite a different matter when you have to shut your doors and windows and stay in for days at a time because of

Consequently the object of the natives their leaders. Killing is against the dic tates of conscience, but capture is not, especially as the monkey is liberated in a short time, as will appear presently. So, when a pack is about, the natives emchard a bit of level space is selected and a hole dug in it, about 2 feet deep and 6 or 8 inches in diameter. A noose and o or simple in diameter. It does its made at one end of a long, stout cord and placed over the mouth of the hole. The cord is then passed through a pulley or ring attached to a tree close to the house and the other end held some distance away by a concealed person. The noose and about 10 or 15 feet of the cord are covered with sand. Then a nice, tempting banana is placed in the hole, and a number of rotten ones—covered, however with fresh skins-are strewn all over the ground near the hole.

When the pack comes, the females are too shy to venture out into the open space near the house, but the big gotha is a brave fellow. He sees the bananas on the ground, leaps down, takes up one, throws it away in disgust, then another, with the same result. Suddenly he notices the nice, tempting one in the hole, and plunges his arm in. Immediately the cord is pulled, the noose fastened on the arm close to the shoulder and the on the arm close to the shoulder and the monkey dragged willy nilly to the tree where the pulley or ring is attached. Then the hiding shikari comes forth, and, circling round and round the tree with the cord held tight in his hand, binds the unfortunate monkey safe and fast, all but the head. The pulley or ring is introduced not merely to bind the monkey to the tree, but also because it would be highly dangerous to drag the infuriated brute right up to a per son.

The monkey, however, is not killed.
Instead they lather his head and face, no special care being taken in selecting the finest soap or the purest water. The operation is an interesting one and a rce of great amusement—to the by-nders. The monkey, however, dodges his head about, only to get a good dose of soap in his eyes and mouth. Then he has enough of it, especially as he feels dreadfully achy all over and the cords cutting into his body every inch-to say nothing of the personal remarks and the highly adjectival language of the bystanders. He submits to his fate with eastern stoticism. His head is shaved clean as a billiard ball, and then the face as well, nice and smooth, like a race as well, nice and smooth, like baby's. Then they let him go. But alas, such is the vanity of life, his wives will not have him now that his beauty to gone. They disown him completely, sut him dead. Nay, they drive him away from the pack with contumely, with the ends of their tails—in the absence of domestic broomsticks. And thus, being without a leader, the pack is soon broken up.—Strand Magazine.

IN A TIGER'S MOUTH.

THIS MAN PLUCKED.

arewsome Encounter With One of Those Pierce and Daring Man Ent-ing Brutes That Terrorigs the Peo-ple of India.

The most strictly accurate and graphic accounts of man eating tigers in India fail to convey an adequate sense of the awful terror which these terrible brutes inspire in the breasts of the unfortunate villagers, whom they haunt like evil demons. In ordinary cases the tiger or leo pard attacks the village herds more or less; openly, and the herdsmen, finding that the enemy will, as a rule, retreat on being shouted at with vigor, are not in bodily fear all the time, although I have known instances of the herdsman being killed by a tiger that he had presumed to interrupt while enjoying a meal from one of his cattle.

They become more dangerous when they have tasted the blood of their victim and are not usually disposed to give it up withent a fight. I remember the case of a survey officer in India, who, being told of a "kill" near his work, went to inspect it unamed. The tiger, disturbed at his meal, rashed out suddenly at the party, and in his headlong flight the officer, most fortunately for himself, tripped and fell into some long grass and bushes. The tiger's attention being drawn to 'the natives, who were climbing trees like monkeys in a hurry, he made for them, allowing the officer to crawl away in fear and trembling as quietly as he could.

But in the case of the man eater everything is different. Having discovered his power to kill the genus home more easily than a big ape, he takes every possible advantage of it at every turn. Neither by night nor by dây are they safe, and life becomes one long terror, for whether the natives are working in the fielde or fetching firewood from the forest or water from the well, they know not at what turn they may be selzed.

the well, they know not at what turn they may be selzed.

I know of one man eater in Mysore that was credited with over 500 victims, and the government offered a reward of 500 rupees for his skin. He was so bold as to think nothing of bounding into a crowd of travelers on the high road in daylight and of carrying off either a pedestrian or the driver of a bullock cart from his seat. He was not content with the usual tactics of selzing his prey outside, but used to break into huts to get at it. Two English officers, friends of mine, who went after this scourge, were shown a hut outside a village inclosure wherea poor Dher. a low caste man not allowed to dwell withing them, had live if with his wife and infant. He was blird and one night, being awakened by a s range noise, began to fant He was blird and one night, being awakened by a s range noise, began to crawl and grope about the hut. He put his hand suddenly on the man eater, which had pushed the door open, killed the woman and child and was drinking their blood when the man's hand was laid upon him Doubtless suspecting a trap, he bounded out of the hut without touching the man What a picture for a Landser! But among the multitude of such stories
I venture to think that the following bears away the paim for grewsome horror, and its truth has been confirmed from many sources. I had it from a relative, the sources. I had it from a relative, the owner of the tea estate in Assam where it occurred. S—— B—— was not many years ago—and, for all I know, still is—the manager of a tea garden in Assam, where a man eater was in the habit of carrying off the estate coolies for his dinner, probably finding them much less trouble than a decror a pig. At last, emboldened, no doubt, by unhindered success in obtaining steps with the took teamwise, off coolies. no doubt, by unhindered success in obtaining victims, he took to carrying off coolies who were sleeping in the verandas of the manager's burghlow. Many traps had been laid for him, the bodies of his victims poisoned, watchers with guns on the look-but over the killed men, but so great was his cunning that he had escaped them all. Everything having failed, things had become desperate, and B—— and some of his planter friends determined to sit as for the tiger Aff the verands wich native blankate disguisings than, an exceedingly exciting business. for, be it remembered. citing business, for, be it rem red nothing for numbers, so that his ap arance might be too sudden for unstead; cared nothing for numbers, so that his appearance might be too sudden for unsteady nerves. One of the planters after they had sat a long time in breathless suspense entered the house for something that he wanted, and while looking for it was startled by a sudden terrible uproar in the veranda, which he had just left. Scitzing his rifle, he rushed, out to find all the party gone, but from the dark tea garden he heard the voice of S— B— calling out in agony: "Help! For God's sake, help! The tiger's got me! Help! Help!" Fixing his bayonet, he ran toward the

In his agony he rose to his feet, and after descending the steps of the bungalow was actually walking off with his hand in the tiger's mouth, to be devoured, when his friend, by his courage and presence of mind, rescued him from an awful death. The other watchers, utterly panic stricken, had made for the nearest door, and had it not been for the coolness of his brave rescuer B—— would have been added to the long list of the han eater's victims. After being ill for many months B—— recovered to tell the awful tale of how he had been "led away to be eaten."—Colonel G. H. Trevor in Wide World Magazine.

so appreciate one advantages that may be gained by the use of the mountain streams that abound in such regions. It is rare indeed to see any use made of brooks and wayside springs. This is the more remarkable, as their employment would be a great saving in time and labor to all those who press them into service. All over the country there are farms and country seats where a few days' labor and a comparatively trifting expense would solve the problem for years to come. Most of these streams would supply a small ram or a turbine, giving an abundânce of water in this way or working a pump placed in the already existing well. A small turbine requires but very little power and may be attached to an artesian well in such a manner as to give a water supply abundant not only for family use and stock but for irrigating purposes as well.—New York Ledger.

To think now of the liberty Stevenson took with Dr. Samuel Johnson when in his "Ars Tripler" he wrote of the lexicographer: "Already an old man, he (Dr. Johnson) ventured on his highland tour, and his heart, bound with triple brass, did not recoil before 27 individual cups of tea!" Was there ever such palpable inacturacy says some one in a sober English publication. Is it not historic that Dr. Johnson "never took more than 24 cups of tea at one sitting?" tea at one sitting?'

Stevenson then was very much to blame for having added three more cups to the doctor's tea swilling, for, as the censor intimates, there may be the fear that some day a careless writer will insist that Johnson swallowed 100 cups of Boher.—New York Times.

The Making of Citron. The making of candled peel or what wo call citron is a complicated process. A correspondent in Italy of The Table in The manie of desired process. A correspondent in Italy of The Table in London gives an account of a visit to a factory devoted to this industry. The fruit from which the finished product is made is like a large lemon eight or ten pounds in weight. It grows in groves in Corsica and Calabria upon trees about six feet in height. The first process is to cut the fruit in halves and take out the cores, which are discarded. The poel is then sealed in barrels of sale water for two or three weeks. It is then withdrawn and soaked for 21 days in a succession of sirups, beginning with eight parts of sugar to 20 of water until the final one contains 20 parts of sugar to one of water.

The fruit thus treated is then cooked in a number of large caldrons, where it simmers for 24 hours. When cool, it is skimmed, cooked again with fresh sirup, qoled and cooked athird time. While still hot it is packed in wooden boxes, in which it is sold by wholesale. The peel thus treated will keep for ten years, although the fresher it is the better. The slightly bitter flavor of preserved citron is caused by the soaking in salt water. Two hundred people are employed in the factory. The women receive 18 cents a day.

The Pathetic Story of a Tragedy the Alps.

The Pathette Story of a Tragedy of the Alps.

Many years ago I read a pathetic story, which is constantly recalled to mind as the duties of this compilation compel me to read the records of past years and reperties the long closed letters of my belowed and live over again the happy days when we were all in all to each other. I do not remember all the details of the incident which so impressed me, but the chief facts were these:

A married couple were crossing one of the great glaciers of the Alpine regions, when a fatal accident occurred. The husband fell down one of the huge crevases which abound on all glaciers—the rope broke, and the depth of the chasm was so great that no help could be rendered, nor could the body be recovered. Over the wife's anguish at her loss we must fraw the veil of silence. Forty years afterward saw her, with the guide who had accompanied them at the time of the accident, staying at the nearest hotel at the foot of the glacier, waiting for the sea of ice to give up its dead, for by the well known law of glacier progression the form of her long loss husband might be expected to appear, expelled from the mouth of the torrent about that date. Patiently and with unfalling constancy they watched and waited, and their hopes were at last rewarded.

One day the body was released from its

and waited, and their hopes were at last rewarded.

One day the body was released from its prison in the ice, and the wife looked again on the features of him who had been so long parted from her. But the pathos of the story lay in the fact that she was then an old woman, while the newly rescued body was that of quite a young and robust man, so faithfully had the crystal casket preserved the jewel which it held so long. The 40 years had left no wrinkles on that marble brow. Time's withering fingers could not touch him in that tomb, and so for a few brief moments the agod lady saw the husband of her youth as he was in the days which were gone forever. — C. H. Spurgeon's "Autobiography."

TO WEAR NEXT THE SKIN.

Comparative Merits of Several Mate-rials From a Hygienic Standpoint. Comparative Merits of Several Materials From a Hygienic Standpoint.

What are the comparative merits of silk and flannel for wear next the skin? Some say flannel in winter, but not in warm summer weather. Flannel, we are told, is apt to engender the cruption known as "prickly heat." Nevertheless it is probably a question of the personal constitution. In any case, those who wear flannel in winter should be careful about leaving it off in summer, as it prevents chills. The nonconductor of heat in clothing is chiefly the air in its pores, and a thick, heavy clothing is not necessarily so warm as a light but porous vestment which incloses a layer of air in its tissues. This last protects the body against cold in winter and heat in summer.

Perspiration, by evaporating the liquid of the body, tends to cool it and counteract the heating effect of sunshine, but if it is excessive a chill may ensue, for instance, by suddenly going into a cool place, and flannel tends to prevent this result, by absorbing the perspiration as in not act as a regulator, and it is probable that many escape colds or worse by wearing flannel and woolen undervests. Recent experiments of M. Leo Vignon, a well known chemist of Lyons, however, show that silk is over more absorbent of water than flannel. han flannel.

He firs, in fact, that 100 grains of cotton, flannel and silk absorb respectively 495,561 and 571 grains of water in the same time.

The "specific heat" or quantity of heat The "specific heat" or quantity of heat required by a body to raise its temperature one degree, which makes a body feel warm or cool to the touch, has also to be considered in this connection, and here flannel, especially old flannel, is preferable to silk, which is more sensitive to variations of temperature. Wool is therefore recommendable to those who are weak or sensitive to changes of temperature, but porous or spongy silk is also good.—London Globe

Why should Miss Griffin suppose the people of Canada to be syfficiently interested in a hospital ward in a town of New South Wales to contri-

The character of this philanthropic friend referred to, is somewhat peculiar also. It appears that the incentive to his generosity is the prospect of receiving an immense quantity of cancelled stamps. As the most of these stamps would be of the same denomination also. one case, would be no great eyil, but examine further.

There is an old Scotch proverb which ny mickles mak' a muckle, and it applies very nicely to this case Consider the number of people that by participating in this scheme will contrioute, not to the hospital in New South Wales, but to the post office revenue of Canada. Miss Griffin sends her letter to Mr. A and he sends it to his three friends, B, C, and D. Four perthree friends, B, C, and D. Four persons have now contributed. B, C, and D each send one to three other friends, adding 9 to the number. adding 9 to the number, and making 13 in all. Each of these 9 send a letter to three more, adding 27 to the number and making 40 in all. Continue the process 180 times, as the letter directs, and a number will be obtained many times exceeding the population of the whole world.

The scheme is manifestly a fraud and a humber will be processed in the process of the whole world.

The scheme is manifestly a fraud and a humber of the pumber on the scheme is manifestly as the and a humbug. The number on the accompanying letter cannot possibly be genuine. It is clearly one of the many impositions foisted in the name of Charity upon a too gullible public.

"A cofferdam 6 feet long, 6 feet deep and 8 feet broad was packed with blooks of cellulose made from the pith of Indian corn stalks. The material was supplied by an American corporation. A 6 inch solid shot was fired through the dam, striking it about 20 inches from the bottom. The shot passed clear through both the iron walls and the cellulose packing. Less than half a cellulose packing. Less than half a pound of cellulose was carried out by the projectile. The water compartment of the dam was filled, giving a pressure of the dam was filled, giving a pressure of nearly five feet of water on the perforated surface. In just half an hour a moist spot began to show on the outer surface of the dam, but it was evident the moisture had come along the bottom of the packing and not along the path of the shot. In four hours no water had come through the shot's path.

"The experiment conclusively demonstrated that a ship provided with a cofferdam packed as was the one used in the experiment could be perforated five feet below the water line without the least danger of the entrance of water."

He is always on the side of faith, but of a somewhat on the side of rath, but of a somewhat disturbed faith. He belonged to that "metaphysical society" which invited into its membership believers of all shades, with all shades of unbelievers, whose object was to raise and answer doubts about God and the future life He was the spokesman of the scientific doubt of the age, fluttering over the dovecots of faith, but hardly settling and resting and nesting therein.

One observes the contrast with this fluttering faith who reads the poems of Milton, with their abiding faith in the Inture life. This is the spiritual conrast between "In Memoriam" and "Lycidas." In Milton's requiem, even under its paganized form, there is a ro-bust and jubilant faith in God and sternal life. No question enters. The mind and heart are satisfied. The dear mind and neare are satisfact. In deal friend is beyond all doubt among the saints and choirs above. A Word About Hand Holds. The reins of a set of single harnes are each about 13 feet in length, those of a double harness about 15 feet. For business harness reins are made of leather, tanned black; the reins of carriage harness are made of russet colored leather.

Reins require to be very stout, and Reins require to be very stude, and they are almost always made of steer hide, the leather of which traces are made, these, however, being of more than one thickness. Occasionally lines for light or for cheap harness are made of cowhide, but not often. As a rule the of cowhide, but not often. "Men did not always stand about the campfire. It depended upon circumstances and on the weather. They met here, of course, at mealtimes, and there were times when men would stand around the fire and smoke and talk, and then it might be that the men would keep their tents, playing eards or smeking there, or mending their clothes, or polishing up their accounterments, so that there were times when the fire was quite deserted or when perhaps there might be seen there a solitary figure, a man who had come to light his pipe.

"But, though it might be deserted, the fire still burned. Sometimes on cold and windy nights the wind would blow it about and scatter it, and sometimes, when it was no longer attended, the rain would put it out black, but there was usually a living fire there by day and a bed of embers by night, and here was the soldier's hearthstone."—

Parrots Are Never Original I have read of a father who would not let his children tell their dreams because there is in such narrative too great temptation to wander from the truth. Parrot stories are too often like are sometimes; plainly to any whose knows the true talking power of these birds—made up entirely or greatly ex-aggerated. While the parrot has a certain unmistakable sense of humor, and is correspondingly wise, none of the various species is or ever was capable of the original wise and witty talk familiar to us in newspaper anecdotes.

In fact, the parrot is never original in speech. It is altogether imitative, and a bird that has never heard spoken

But, judging from parrots' clever use of what they learn to say, it is almost certain that they come to know in a measure the meaning of the phrases they learn.—Charlotte Boner in St. Nicholas.

Comparative Merits of Several Mate-Comparative Merits of several states rates rates regains the sex of such and flannel for wear next the skin? Some say flannel in winter, but not in warm summer weather. Flannel, we are told, is apt to engender the eruption known as "prickly heat." Nevertheless it is probably a question of the personal constitution. In any case, those who wear flannel in winter should be careful about leaving it off in summer, as it prevents chills. The nonconductor of heat in clothing is chiefly the air in its pores, and a thick, heavy clothing is not necessarily so warm as a light but porous vestment which incloses a layer of air in its tissues. This last protects the body against cold in winter and heat in summer.

Perspiration, by evaporating the liquid of the body, tends to cool it and counteract the heating effect of sunshine, but if rials From a Hygienic Standpoint

Perspiration, by evaporating the liquid of the body, tends to cool it and counteract the heating effect of sunshine, but if it is excessive a chill may ensue, for instance, by suddenly going into a gool place, and flannel tends to prevent this result, by absorbing the perspiration as in a reservoir, and checking the excessive action of the skin. A thin clicth would not act as a regulator, and it is probable that many escape coids or worse by wearing flannel and woolen undervests. Recent experiments of M. Leo Vignon, a well-known chemist of Lyons, however, show that silk is even more absorbent of water than flannel. than flannel.

He first, in fact, that 100 grains of cot

The "agrection heat" or quantity of heat required by a body to raise its temperature one degree, which makes a body feel warm or cool to the touch, has also to be considered in this connection, and hore flannel, especially old flannel, is preferable to slik, which is more sensitive to variations of temperature. Wool is therefore, recommendable to those who are weak or sensitive to changes of temperature, but porous Fascinating Power of Snakes.

Dr. A. J. Harrison, chairman of the Bristol and Clifton Zoological society, read some observations on the so called fascination of snakes before the recent meeting of the British association. His observations had extended over many years, he said, and he had come to the conclusion—confirmed by others—that there, was no fascination exercised by snakes over their prey. Ducks, hens, rabbits and rats placed in the cages of snakes on feed played about, hepped on the snakes, pecked at them and showed no signs of fascination or alarm even when they saw their played about, hopped on the snakes, peek of at them and showed no signs of fascination or alarm even when they saw their colleagues swallowed or crushed to death. Much of the popular belief about snakes—their size and their powers of fascination—was due to the myths of ancient history and poetle literature. The largest snake now in existence, or that probably ever existed, was only 25 feet long.—London Times.

France and Italy Have Entered Into Commercial Relations.

Paris, Nov. 22.—It was quite unexpostedly announced yesterday that a commercial treaty had been concluded between France and Italy granting mutually favored treatment except for ells goods, which will remain subject to the maximum tariff. A bill embodying the agreement will be submitted immediately to the Chamber of Deputeur.

The negotiations that have culminated in these arrangements have been on food for two years, but nobody believed that a definite agreement was pending.

It is believed that the Fashola affair was instrumental in inducing France to grant the necessary concessions, though it is noteworthy that the silk duties, which caused the breaking of the treaty in 1887, remain almost unshanged.

The negotiations have been conducted with the utmost secrecy. The exact effect of the concessions involved is not known as yet, but it is expected that they will have an important political influence for the removal of a long-standing 'friction between the two countries.

The treaty, it is noticed, was concluded during the absence of Emperor William from Germany, and there is much speculation regarding 13s probable result upon the European alliances.

Came as a Thunderclap.

London, Nov. 22.—The Rome correspondent of the Daily News says: "The sonclusion of the France-Italian treaty rame as a thunderclap. Looking to the hitherto strained relations between Paris and Rome, the treaty may be considered the important political event as regards Italy since the conclusion of the triple sillings."

The Pathetic Story of a Tragedy o

Many years ago I read a pathetic story,

Many years ago I read a pathetic story, which is constantly recalled to mind as the duties of this compilation compel me to read the records of past years and reperuse the long closed letters of my beloved and live over again the happy days when we were all in all to each other. I do not remember all the details of the incident which so impressed me, but the chief facts were these:

A married couple were crossing one of the great glaciers of the Alpine regions, when a fatal accident occurred. The husband fell down one of the hugo crevasses which abound on all glaciers—the rope broke, and the depth of the chasm was so great that no help could be rendered, nor could the body be recovered. Over the wife's anguish at her loss we must draw the veil of silence. Forty years afterwards as wher, with the guide who had accompanied them at the time of the accident, staying at the noarest hotel at the foot of the glacier, waiting for the sea of ice to glacier, waiting for the sea of ice to appear, expelled from the mouth of the torrent about that data. Patiently and with unfailing constancy they watched and waited, and their hopes were at last rewarded.

rewarded.
One day the body was released from its One day the body was released from its prison in the ice, and the wife looked again on the features of him who had been so long parted from her. But the pathos of the story lay in the fact that she was then an old woman, while the newly rescued body was that of quite a young and robust man, so faithfully had the crystal casket preserved the jewel which it held colong. The 40 years had left no wrinkles on that marble brow. Time's withering fingers could not touch him in that

TO WEAR NEXT THE SKIN.

Comparative Merits of Several Mate-Comparative Merits of Several materials Fesm a Hygiente Standpoint.

What are the comparative merits of silk and flannel for wear next the skin? Some say flannel in winter, but not in warm summer weather. Flannel, we are told, is apt to engender the eruption known as "prickly heat." Nevertheless it is probably a question of the personal constitution. In any case, those who wear flannel in winter should be careful about leaving it off in summer, as it prevents chilk. The nonconductor of heat in clothing is chiefly the air in its pores, and a thick, heavy clothing is not necessarily so warm as a light but provus vestment which incloses a layer of air in its tissues. This last protects the body against cold in winter and heat in summer.

Perspiration, by 'evaporating the liquid of the body, tends to cool it and counteract the heating effect of sunshine, but if it is excessive a chill may ensue, for in-

It is excessive a chill may ensue, for instance, by suddenly going into a cool place, and flannel tends to prevent this result, by absorbing the perspiration as in a reservoir, and checking the excessive action of the skin. A thin cloth would not act as a regulator, and it is probable that many escape colds or worse by wearing flannel and woolen undervests. Recent experiments of M. Leo Vignon, a well known chemist of Lyons, however, show that slik is even more absorbent of water that silk is even more absorbent of water than flannel.

He firsts, in fact, that 100 grains of cot ton, flannel and silk absorb respectively 495,561 and 571 grains of water in the 495,561 and 571 grains or water in the same time.

The "agreed heat" or quantity of heat required by a body to raise its temperature one degree, which makes a body feel warm or cool to the touch, has also to be considered in this connection, and here flannel, especially old flannel, is preferable to slik, which is more sensitive to variations of temperature. Wool is therefore recommendable to those who are weak or sensitive to changes of temperature, but porous Fascinating Power of Snakes

Fascharing Power of Snakes.
Dr. A. J. Harrisen, chairman of the Bristol and Clifton Zoological society, read some observations on the so called fascharion of snakes before the recent meeting of the British association. His observations had extended over many years, he said, and he had come to the conclusion—confirmed by others—that there was no fascination exercised by snakes over their prey. Ducks, hons, rabbits and rats placed in the cages of snakes on feed played about, hepped on the snakes, peoked at them and showed no signs of fascination or alarm even when they saw their played about, hopped on the snakes, peeked at them and showed no signs of fascination or alarm even when they saw their colleagues swallowed or crushed to death. Much of the popular belief about snakes—their size and their powers of fascination—was due to the myths of ancient history and poetic literature. The largest snake now in existence, or that probably ever existed, was only 25 feet long.—London Times,
