Select Poetry.

THE POOR AND THE RICH.

She covered him over, her five-year old;
"He will never know poverty more,"
she said,
As she patted the curls of his boyish head;

"No feet'll be bare in the winter cold;
"No crying for bread, no wearisome hours
Of labor ill-paid, from sun to sun;
No murmuring oft when the work is done;

Shut up from the sun, and the birds, and the flowers.

"From the rich and the lofty, no look of pride;
There'll be time to study and time to grow
In the beautiful gardens the angels know;
It is well, it is well, that my boy has died."

"She covered him over, her five-year old;
"He is safe, he is safe," she sadly said
As she patted the folds of his narrow bed,
And kissed the cheek that was white and cold.

The room was as gorgeous as palace hall,
And fragrant with flowers of the richest hue;
Cameles and roses, and violets blue;
And golden hangings upon the wall.

"He will never be spoiled by a life of ease;
No sin will entangle his sunny hair;
Or crimson his cheek that is now so fair;
No wife in her sorrow will drink the lees
Of a poisonous cup; he is safe, my child!
My tenderest one! I am satisfied;
Ah! better, far better, my boy had died
Than living in pleasure by sin defiled!"

* * * * *

For rich, and for poor, there are ills to bear;
The waters are bitter for both to drink;
There are sorrows and burdens from which we shrink,
And the angels have weighed us an equal share.

Interesting Story.

A GENTLEMAN.

The horse-car stopped at a crossing, and a news-boy jumped on the platform.

"Have a Times, Enquirer, Press?"

"I'll take a Times," said one of a group of school-girls.

"Oh, Jenny!" said another. "From such a little monster!"

An old gentleman who was reading glanced up from his pamphlet. The news-boy was a dwarf, and a hunchback. His face, which was bent back on his shoulders, twitched suddenly at the girl's words, but he did not look toward her, as he stood waiting for his money. The old gentleman's grave look of rebuke answered the girl.

"It makes me sick!" she said, with a look of disgust. "The conductor ought not to allow him to come on board."

The boy turned and looked at her steadily. Everybody on the car expected a torrent of vile abuse, but he said, gently—

"If the Beast was not here, the people on the car would not appreciate the Beauty at her real value," and then bowing to her, he went out, amid the smiles of all the passengers.

The old gentleman—who was a well-known physician, Dr. Avery—followed him, but he was already out of sight.

"Who is that boy?" he asked the conductor.

"His name's Willy, and his route is on this street. I don't know anything more."

"He has an educated voice and he showed good breeding and sense just now."

"No doubt. The other news-boys call him 'Gentleman Bill.' Everybody likes him. We conductors give him the freedom of the cars on this street."

A few days afterwards, Dr. Avery was on a car late in the evening, when Willy came in, carrying a large bundle of papers. He said none, and turned to go out, looking discouraged and anxious.

Dr. Avery stopped him, drew out a paper, and handing him a piece of silver, said, "Never mind the change."

"No, thank you," said the boy, smiling, as he gave it to him.

"Why not, young independence?" "I don't need aims, sir. I really get on very well. And if I did?"

"You would not take it?"

"My father was Charles Gilbert. I ever had to do. Good-evening, sir!" and touching his cap the little hunchback swung himself off the car.

Dr. Avery after that often met the boy, who puzzled and interested him,

There was nothing morbid in him; he was always ready with a laugh or a merry answer. His voice was controlled and gentle, and there was a fine courtesy, a tact, a delicate feeling, in all his words, that we do not find sometimes in those who call themselves gentlemen. In spite of the boy's wretched clothes and patched shoes, Dr. Avery found himself talking to him as to an equal, and always thought of him as his little friend.

Late one night, when it was storming heavily, he met him, trudging down Chestnut street.

"You have a hard life, my boy," he said, kindly.

"Not so hard as you think, sir," he said, cheerfully. "I am never sick an hour. Then I do a better business than other boys because of—this," glancing down at his deformed body.

"Oh!"

"The doctor was confused for a minute."

"Have you any plans, Willy?" "Do you ever look forward?"

"Yes, Oh, I have it all planned out! If I could save enough to start a street-stall of books and papers, then after a year or two I would be able to open a shop, and then a big store. Some men who began that way in Philadelphia have become publishers, and live in beautiful houses of their own."

"Hillo! Do you care for fine houses?"

"Not for myself, sir."

He became suddenly silent, and at the corner of the next street said, "Good-night!" and ran away.

A moment later, Dr. Avery heard cries and shouts in the direction Willy had taken; but such things are common in a great city. He hurried home.

The next morning, looking over the paper, he read:

"A little hunchback news-boy, known as 'Gentleman Bill,' was knocked down by a run-away horse last night. Dr. John pronounced the injuries mortal. The lad was taken to the Penn Hospital."

Dr. Avery was soon beside the cot on which the mishapen little body was laid.

Willy looked up, trying to smile. "It is not so bad as they say, is it? I can't die now. I have too much to do."

"What have you to do, my boy? Let me be your friend; let me help you, if I can."

"I thought you would come, maybe. I haven't anybody to come. The boys are good friends, but they couldn't do anything now."

"I have come, you see. Tell me what I can do, my boy."

The lad waited until the nurse had passed his cot, and then whispered—

"It's Letty, sir. She is my sister. I have her out with a farmer's wife near Media. She goes to school there. It takes all I can make to pay her board and buy her clothes. I like to see her look nice." His mind began to wander, and he began to mutter at intervals.

"If could start the stall—the shop—a carriage for Letty."

The doctor was forced to leave him. When he came back in the afternoon, he was rational, and when the doctor wished to go for his sister, said—

"No, don't bring Letty here. She mustn't know how poor I am. When I go out on Sundays to see her I have my good suit on. She calls me a 'swell.' Yes, she does," laughing, but with tears in his eyes. "I went once with some papers to a Quaker boarding-school for girls near town, sir. They were such lovely young ladies, I always thought I'd send Letty there when I could get the money. But now!"

Dr. Avery found out his story by degrees. He and Letty were the children of a planter near Savannah. Their mother was in Philadelphia during the war. Her husband was killed, and slaves and property were gone. She struggled for years, teaching and sewing, to support them, and at last died, leaving Willy in charge of his little sister.

"And your name?"

"My father was Charles Gilbert. Dr. Avery drew his breath quickly. "I knew Charles Gilbert in Savannah long ago. No wonder your voice seemed familiar, and that I was drawn to you so strongly. But you are my friend for your own sake, my boy."

That evening Dr. Avery sent a long despatch to a lawyer in Savannah, where he had once lived and still had business interests. He took two of the principal surgeons in the city to examine Willy.

When they had gone out for consultation, the boy lay, holding his hand, watching the door, breathing quick and hard.

"Do you want to live, Willy? You have had a hard life, my child."

"Oh no, no! I did not think it hard! I have so much to do for Letty!"

"Had you never any plans for yourself?"

The boy turned his gray eyes thoughtfully on him. They filled with slow tears.

"I used to think—if I could be a scholar—a gentleman, like my father—but—"

"If you do not live, my boy," said his friend, trying to reconcile him to death, "God will take care of you. This poor little body won't be against you any longer."

"It is not against me here!" said Willy, vehemently. "It is not me. Everybody knows that. If God will only give me the chance to do something in the world, the body won't stand in my way." He muttered after a while again, "It is not me."

Dr. Avery was called out to hear the verdict of the surgeons. When he came back Willy gave one look at him and sank back, covering his face.

"There is still a chance, my boy, though but a slight one. I think it best to tell you the exact truth. Morning will decide. Would it comfort you to have Letty with you? I have brought her to town."

"Yes! yes! It doesn't matter now that she knows I am a poor little news-boy."

Letty was a sturdy, red-checked little woman, whose every word showed a heart full of love and a head full of good sense. She patted and soothed Willy, while he clung to her, and then said cheerily—

"Now, dear, you must go to sleep. You are not going to die. The doctor doesn't know how strong you are. The nurse says I may sit her and hold your hand, and in the morning give you your breakfast."

For days the boy lingered between life and death. One morning, after the doctors had made their examination, his old friend came to him, and taking his hand solemnly, said—

"Willy, God has given you the chance you asked for to do something in the world. You will live."

When he was able to be removed, Dr. Avery took the children to his own house. He laid before Willy a statement of his father's affairs that he had received from Savannah, which showed that enough could be recovered from the wreck of his estate to yield a small income for the children.

It proved to be enough to educate Letty at the Quaker school to which Willy dreamed of sending her, and to give him a thorough training in college and the law-schools.

They both always came home, as they had learned to call Dr. Avery's, in the vacations. When Willy came back at the end of his course, with the highest record of his class, he said to his old friend—

"All that I am or may be in life, I owe to you."

"No, my boy. I never should have noticed you more than any other of the hundreds of newsboys but for the honor, self-control and good-breeding that you showed. A true gentleman will be a gentleman in any and all circumstances in life. God helped you to keep yourself separate, and above all the hard circumstances."

Willy's eyes grew dim. "If my friend, and God can see the man inside of me, I am satisfied," he said.

His dream in life does not seem unlikely to be realized. It is character that wins and tells.

A Historic Scene in Holy-wood Palace.

The Queen is seated at supper in the small cabinet that communicates with her bedroom. It is a tiny chamber, not more than twelve feet square, and yet there are present in it several others besides herself: her brother and sister, Lord Robert and Lady Jane Stewart, the natural children of James V.; Arthur Erskine, captain of his guard, and others of her household, and David Rizzio. The rooms below are those of the Lord Darnley. The cabinet, as we have said, opens into the Queen's bedchamber, and this, again, communicates with that of the King by a narrow winding-stair made in the thickness of the wall, and descending to the floor beneath.

The Queen's bedroom, moreover, on the side removed from the cabinet, opens into the spacious audience-chamber which is reached from the landing of the principal staircase.

Darnley had to-night supped earlier than usual, and when Ruthven entered his room the King was waiting his coming. Morton and Lindsay had remained with their retainers to guard the approaches to the Palace. Darnley and Ruthven were presently joined by two others, Ker of Falconside and Patrick Bellenden; and then by George Douglas. At eight o'clock the five stealthily mounted the secret staircase, and are standing in the Queen's bedchamber. There is now but the door of the cabinet between them and their victim. Darnley is the first to enter. Timorous and irresolute, how last he nerved himself for this deed? His eyes tell that he has been drinking; but as he takes the lock in his nervous clutch, his heart fails him, and he draws back from the door. But there is time. The prey cannot escape. Is there no boding of danger in the minds of those within? None. They are perfectly secure. Supper is finished and the Queen has commanded Rizzio to play some favorite air. The Italian is preparing to obey, and Mary converses with her sister, the Countess of Argyll.

The noise of the wind reaches the chamber in mournful howling, and the walls seem to shake with the storm.—

There is a hand on the outside latch—the slightest possible sound—but no one marks it. It was the wind. Mary Stewart still speaks with her sister, and in another moment the Italian will have commenced his song. But the door opens, and Darnley enters and seats himself beside the Queen. And what did Mary? When her estranged lover, he who should ever have cherished her, rendered this to her the first mark of kindness he had shown her for many a weary day, what did she? She turned and embraced him. Oh, Henry Stewart, the steel of yonder assassin has no greater pang than this!

But the illusion was short-lived. In less than a minute after the entrance of Darnley the door of the cabinet again opened, and Ruthven, clad in full armor or stood in the presence of his Queen. Pale and haggard with a disease under which he sank into the grave, the desperate baron had come upon his errand of death. Mary Stewart was alarmed. She turned to Darnley "What is it?" she said. He replied, "It is nothing." He would have drawn back even now, but it is too late. Mary appealed to Ruthven, and commanded him to say what was his business with her, that he intruded himself on her privacy in that guise, and at such an hour. Ruthven replied, "Let yonder man David come forth; he hath been here over long." "What offence hath he done?" "What offence?" "An it please you," answered Ruthven, "he's a heinous offence to your majesty's honor, to the King, your husband, and to the nobility and commonwealth." The Queen replied that if anyone had charge to bring against Rizzio he should be exhibited before the lords of Parliament to be punished if in any sort he had offended. She then commanded Ruthven, under pain of treason, to void him forth from her presence; but in the meantime Douglas, Falconside, and Bellenden, armed with daggers and pistols had crowded into the room, and were menacing their victim. Ruthven, disregarding the order to retire, now approached Rizzio to lay hands on him; but the nervous Italian took refuge behind the Queen, and in his despair clutched at the pleats of her gown, crying out to her, "Madame, je suis mort! Ginstia! ginstia! l'aveuve ma vie!" The gentlemen now pressed on, but Mary tried to save the unhappy secretary from their weapons, which were a moment turned against herself. One of the assassins placed his cocked pistol against her breast, and swore that he would shoot her if she did not desist. Others struck at Rizzio over her shoulder with their daggers, and in the confusion the Queen fell, and the table was overturned and fell on her. Rizzio still clung to her dress, but Darnley forced open her hands and compelled him to loosen his grasp. The rest now seized him and pulled him away, Darnley in the meanwhile holding Mary in his arms that she might be able to make no further resistance. The poor trembling victim, still crying out to the Queen to save him, was thus hurried from the cabinet, and dragged through Mary's bedchamber and across her presence-chamber to the landing of the great staircase. Here were Morton and Lindsay and others of the conspirators waiting to receive him.

It was the intention of some to keep him till the morning and then hang him; but George Douglas, unable to restrain his rage, struck him with Darnley's poinard, hissing between his teeth, "That is for the King." Having once tasted blood, the assassins, like beasts of prey, were roused to fury; they fell on the poor wretch with the rage of tigers, and in a few seconds they had stabbed him with sixty wounds. So perished Queen Mary's French Secretary, the Italian, David Rizzio.

DEATH.—Mr James Dykens, who had the misfortune to have his hand so badly crushed a short time ago, while coupling cars, has just been presented with a purse containing forty-three dollars, and thirty-five cents, by the railroad employees and his other friends. —Western Chronicle.

Choice Imported and Domestic Cigars at 5, 4, 5, 7, 8 and 10 cents at J. M. SHAW'S 35.

FROM THE WEST.—Mr William Elderkin who has been for the past four years in the Northwest is spending a short vacation in Wolfville, his old home. He is at present in the employ of the C. P. R. where he has been for the last year or two. We are glad to see his familiar face among us again.

Clear Cases from 25 cents to $3.00 Pipe-stem and Meerschaum from 25c to $5.00; Tobacco pouches from 50c to $2.00. Just the thing for Christmas presents at J. M. SHAW'S N.B.—A fine stock of Imported and Domestic Cigars.

ILLUMINATION.—On New Year eve Witter's Hall presented a very pretty appearance. Every window in the building was filled with rows of wax candles and the front windows were trimmed with very handsome goods. The chief attraction appeared to be in the window of the millinery department where, small orange-blossoms and other appropriate trimmings, a wedding scene in miniature was presented. Taken altogether the building looked very pretty and its appearance was very flatteringly commented on by all. Our townsmen seem determined to keep abreast of the times and his endeavor to please his customers is duly appreciated.

The Celebrated Electric Dyes are the most lasting of all colors. Warmed strictly pure. 10 cents at Druggist and Crocers.

WEDDING BELLS.—One more of our young ladies has joined the number who have taken upon themselves the honors of wedlock, and has swelled the list to twelve. On Tuesday Miss Bella Rockwell, daughter of Mrs A. L. Rockwell, and sister of our townsmen Mr P. P. Rockwell, was united in marriage to Mr D. P. Best, of Brooklyn Street, in the Baptist Church, assisted by the Rev. G. E. Day. The bride was attended by Miss Annie Best, and groomed by Mr Torry. A large number of the friends of both bride and groom were present and the whole affair passed off very quietly and well. The happy couple will reside at Cannon. Our best wishes are with them.

Wolfville, Dec 17, 1886

Local and Provincial.

THE RINK.—The Rink was open for the first of the season on Wednesday evening. The ice was in good condition and quite a large number of skaters were present. The Rink was lighted by the electric light.

Manitobas at Borden's. The Manitoba is a very high cut, wool-lined, waterproof Overshoe just the thing for deep snow.

Borden has just received another lot of those famous American Overshoes—Waterproof, Automatic Fasteners and Heel Plates.

TAKE NOTICE.—If your razor is dull, take it to J. M. Shaw's Barber Shop, and he will put it in first-class order for the small sum of 15c. 10

Gaspereau.

On Christmas-eve a very pleasant Concert and Christmas-tree was held. The special design was to increase the funds of the Sabbath school and at the same time to afford profit and pleasure to both old and young. The following programme was carried out:

Reading, The Old Man in the Stylish Church, Miss Bessie Vaughan. Reading, Christmas is Coming, Miss Annie Benjamin. Reading, Time of Need, Master Rugg Vaughan. Reading, Beautiful Things, Miss Gertrude Caldwell.

Reading, His Mother's Songs, Miss Etta Benjamin. Reading, The Moose and the Cake, Master Wilbur Vaughan. Recitation, What is Most Beautiful, Eight Little Girls.

R. alog, Was it a Little, Miss Bessie Freeman. Dialogue, Embalmed Sunshine, Three Girls.

Reading, His Mother's Prayer, Miss Florence Benjamin. Reading, Rev. Mr Freeman.

Reading, The World, Miss Lena Benjamin. Reading, Annie's and Willie's Prayer, Miss Ivy Exeles.

Tableau, The Christian Races, Dialogue, Aunt Martha's Ruse, THE CHRISTMAS TREE.

Then followed the distributing of presents. Mr Martin, of the Barrel Factory, appeared in the guise of Santa Claus, and acted his part admirably, and to the great satisfaction of all. Mr. White announcing his special regard for the children, a goodly number of the older ones shared his favor. Amongst the gifts were a beautiful table for the pastor from the Sabbath-school, besides other valuable offerings from friends for his family. A nice far can was presented to Mr. Douglas Benjamin, the leader of the choir, as a small token of the public appreciation of his services. The hall was well-filled and everyone seemed to enjoy the entertainment, and left with the conviction that it could not easily be excelled. The financial outcome was $16.00. ONE PRESENT.

Colchester.

Christmas passed off quietly; the day was rainy in the forenoon; Rev. James Steddie lectured in Oldfellow's hall, Great Village, in the evening; subject, "The Jews."—A Christmas Festival at Bas River on the 24th ult. was quite successful, including fancy sale, refreshments, entertainment by members of Juvenile Temple, etc.—The Debert Baptists cleared $50 at a Christmas-tree.—Accidents have been severe; Mr. Jas Hill, Economy, had his arm broken by a falling tree a few days ago.—We are pleased to see by the ACADIAN that the temperance people of your enterprising town are working vigorously against the ruin fond, and wish them every success in their efforts to destroy the destroyer of millions. The narrow sects mentioned in your paper brings to mind the thought that this is not the worst accident during the past year by him who "puts the bottle to his neighbor's lips." The temperance people have much work yet to do, and let us hope that the record of '87 may be one that we may all look back to with pride. N. E. M.

If you wish to color wool, cottons, silk or feathers, use the new Electric Dyes, Strongest and Best in the world. 10 cents at all dealers.

Everybody's Friend.

He was that from his cradle in a negative, passive sort of way. He never cried and asserted his rights but lay still and sucked his thumb and blinked and stared at the great world as if trying to solve the riddle of being in it.

Treachery.

You sit on the shore with the great ocean before you—the surf breaking so gently on the sands that the sounds make a dreamy, monotonous music—the water shimmering in the sun as if they were never to foam and rage again—plank or beam or spar lazily floating beyond the bar.

Free Trade.

The reduction of internal revenue and the taking off of revenue stamps from Proprietary Medicine no doubt has largely benefited the consumers, as well as relieving the burden of home manufacturers.

Still Another.

DIPHTHERIA CURED.—I hereby certify that Minard's Liniment cured my daughter of a severe and what appeared to be a fatal attack of Diphtheria, after all other remedies failed, and recommend it to all who may be afflicted with that dreadful disease.
