had come within striking distance of The importance of the victory from other than military points of view is added to the significance of the extreme rapidity of the operations, and the stimulus to the efforts of the Allies everywhere will be very great. It is armies and not cities that are the objects of generals in this war, and the evident demoralisation of the Turks here and before the Rus sians in Persia will encourage military observers to look for still more startling developments in the near fustartling developments in the near future; but to those of a romantic turn of mind there is something incongruous though not unattractive in this strange mingling of the old world and the request of the visitor, believing the pay in the workings of fate that the new, in the workings of fate that have made a modern battlefield of the has learned that the club room people city of Haroun el Raschid. More than one hand, we fancy, will reach for the volume of the encyclopaedia containing "Baghdad," or explore the bookcase for the once familiar and enchanting "Arabian Nights." Add to this feeling, which to us is one of poetry and romance alone, the religious fanaticism of the east, centuries twent the most of previous dealings between the poetry and romance alone, the religious fanaticism of the east, centuries city of Haroun el Raschid. More than knew nothing about the transaction ous fanaticism of the east, centuries , and multiply it a thousandfold, and some idea may be obtained of the sensation that must have taken hold of the Mohammedan and Arabian world in the past few days. Baghdad has declined considerably from its old commercial greatness, but its re-ligious importance is tremendous, and the blow to Mohammedan, or rather Turkish, prestige is severe and wil lend impetus to the wide Arab revolt which seems only in its beginning. We shall be surprised if we do not hear of it again on the shores of the Red Sea, where it burst out omineusly last summer.

The cables state that the Russians have occupied Sahna and are driving on Bisutun, for which, if the atlas prove confusing, we may write Sevendij and Bistan. This news indicates that the two armies are clearly converging upon Mosul, about two hundred miles further up the Tigris. If they can there effect a junction, and the Grand Duke has forces enough at the Grand Duke has forces enough at his command for a campaign in the north, the Turks will be in a very bad way indeed. Persia will be freed of them and Mesopotamia speedily overrun by the Allies. The great distances involved make it premature to think of Constantinople, but it is not distances that count but armies. The publishment of the property of the court of the property of the property of the property of the court of the property overrun by the Allies. The great distances involved make it premature to think of Constantinople, but it is not distances that count but armies. The distances are in fact in our favour. The Turks, probably numerically inferior, have a huge and many-sided front to defend, and even now it looks as if the reinforcements for their Haghdad army will not arrive in time to save it from decimation. The slow preparations of nearly two years are preparations of nearly two years are now being justified, and the British and Russian armies are embarked upon an ambitious campaign which gives every promise of brilliant successions. Their casualties were not heavy, but dying and wounded lay in the area across which the advance had been made. It was then that the Red Cross men of the Ancient Colony's Regiment came into prominence, and those who had into prominence, and those who had stood by in the front line trenches sprang into action. What matter the bursting shrappel and the bick. prang into action. What matter the Mouland is doing very well at St. Dunstan's, and writes that he is going bursting shrapnel and the high explosives that the Hun threw over in his savage retallation, there were dying and wounded and they must be brought in. Into that danger zone—under shell fire, the stretcher-bearers from "Ours" plied their work, gallantly and thoroughly. One instance of their real heroism might well be recorded. A stretcher, with a wounded Border soldier, was being carried down from the front line when a shell burst, killing one of the bearers and wounding two others.

Immediately three men jumped out of the trenches and took the places of the others carrying the wounded man to the dressing station. This is by no means the first instance of the heroism of the R. A. recognising that Germany is still My personal surmise is that the German Government did not deliberately seek to bring about a rupture insult. of their diplomatic relations with the United States. They simply took that risk because they had what they conceived to be a larger end in view.

The Germans perceive most clearly that after the failure of their insolent peace manoeuvres they can only hope together without reason. They besix months. If they can accomplish their purpose, they are meanwhile not inclined to trouble very much about the United States.

The German policy of sea warfar month is desperate and criminal, but not in the least mad. It is plainly the outcome of long and deep calculation. The widely prevalent theory that Germany has sought to force war on the United States merely in order to enable herself to yield to the whole world in arms does not bear examination. The Germans still think they can snatch some sort of victory.

No Government in their senses who wanted to win would deliberately try to range another 90 millions of people against themselves. The German authorities have evidently been guided by two main considerations. They have persuaded themselves, on the sia and Serbia, and before she struck evidence of the last two and a half and failed at Verdun. States probably will not fight.
