not detract from this natural charm. Old Timmins, a fiery wisp of nerve and sinew, with a fringing whisker and large blue eyes, had worked him-self into a confidential fury. "An' don't ye say nothin,' he urged, at the moment of laying his hand upon her sleeve. "Don't ye open yer head. I like to finish up them kind o' jobs and no questions asked. Jane Ann'll be tickled to death. You mark my words. O'ny when anybody's tryin' to do anything, it's nothin' but talk, talk, talk. Ye get sick o' talk." "Well," said Angeline slowly, in her meditative voice, "I'll make up my mind." "So dol" called Ezra, in the act of turning away from her. "You make up your mind."

That his daughter heard, and ejacu-lated "My soul!" from her vantage ground. Then she watched the part-ing, her father's alert, somewhat triumphant nod and Angeline's thoughtful attitude. Ezra came absently toward the house, and she met him at the door. His cheeks were flushed a little; his eyes were brivht-ened; and he chuckled briefly to him-self. But on the threshold, where Jane Ann confronted him, he stopped with a little jerk and immediately seemed to wither into lower stature, while the light faded out of his face. "Oh," said he, weakly, "that you, Jane Ann?"

"Now, father," said Jane Ann, in an extremity of impatience, "who should you think it was? You hold on a minute an' let me get the broom. Hangin' round the road till your feet are all caked over! My soul! I should think you'd ground 'em into the dirt!"

She seized the broom as if it were a weapon, and administered a brushing that looked like castigation. She was strangely like her father in a way betraying no inward likeness at all. Of the same size and facial con-tour, nature had yet added some aggressiveness to her outline, so that, as they stood there together, she seemed to represent an active principle, some kinship wherein he was only passive.

"There!" said she, desisting. flushed with the vigor of her onslaught, "you come in now. I want you to set a spell an' git cool." She return- looked his guilt. But the conscious-ness made him a little factious.

"They took hands like children and scurried down the path."

"You dunno's anything? You've been talkin' out there in the ro'd under everybody's face an' eyes, for twenty-five minutes by the clock, an' you dunno's she said anything! Father. I should think you was pos-sessed!" "Well," said Ezra, falling into the meekness which is more exasperating than revolt, "I dunno but I be." "But what she say?" pursued Jane Ann, with an intensity not to be ignored. "Father, what does make you keep so close?"

Ezra was aware that he wanted nothing more than secrecy, and he

after her to think it over, so't anybody can hear it way in here-father, I should think you'd feel pretty small!"

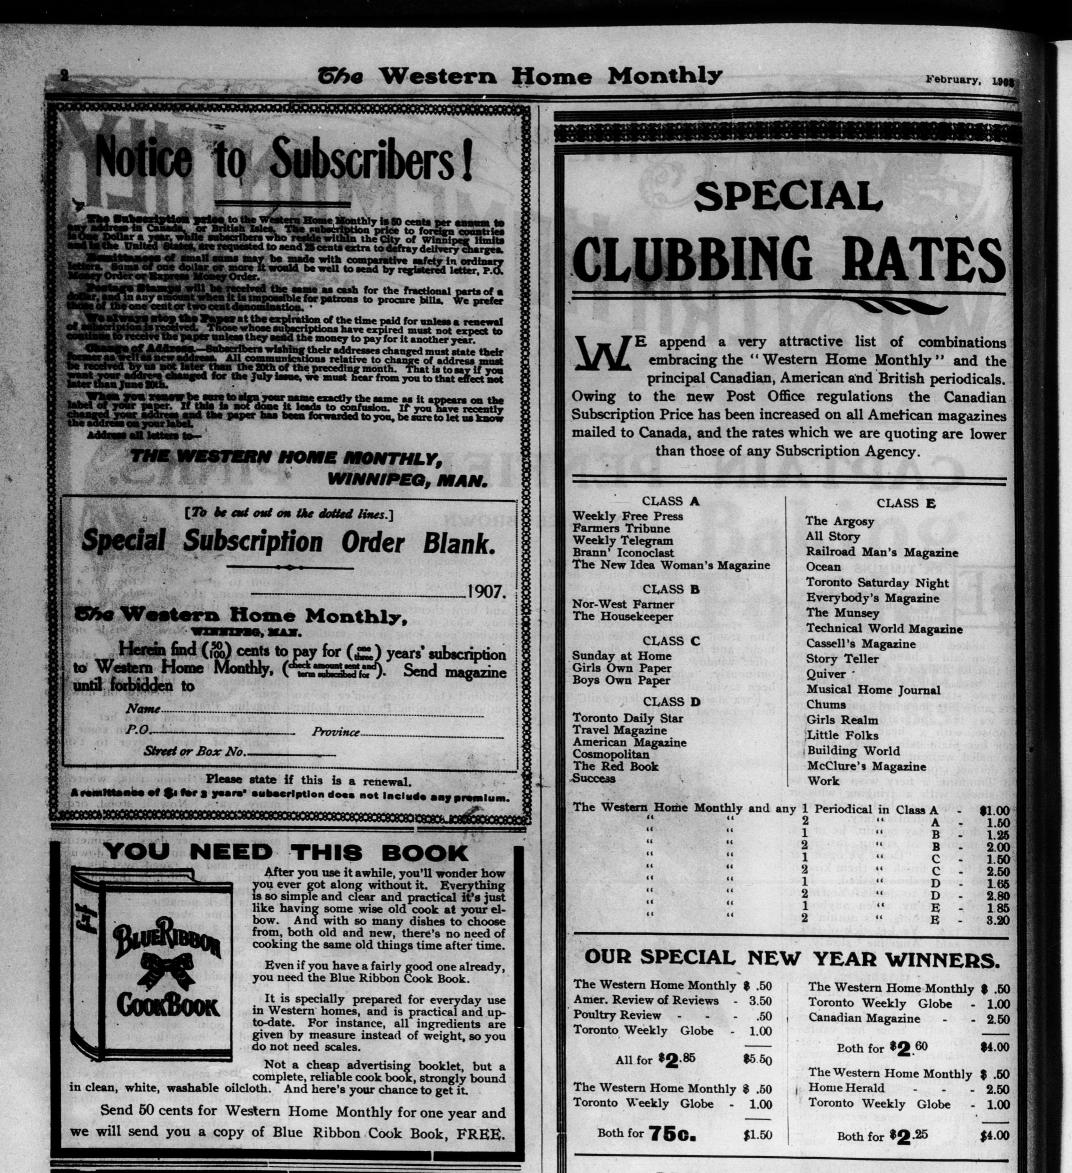

Ezra started up from his chair, and Ezra started up from his chair, and fumbled for his hat. His hands were trembling. His mouth worked a lit-tle. But Jane Ann was the last per-son to guess whether he was moved by guilt or anger. She was used to raising whirlwinds without realizing very keenly what damage she did. Her father had taken his hesitating way toward the door. He always had the air of avoiding something had the air of avoiding something as he walked about the room, when Jane was present. Martha Penfield looked up and smiled at him in a neighborly way. She was only five or six years young-er than he, and she had known trouble, yet she seemed miraculously

"I kinder wanted to set out some pinks," she explained. "But I don't seem to make much headway, an' that's a fact."

Ezra took her trowel and essayed

"You're real good," said the widow. "I hate to trouble you, but I ain't got any menfolks to turn to now. Yes, I thought I'd have the whole top here set over with pinks. He was ter-rible fond of 'em."

Her eyes filled with tears, and she evidently forgot Ezra, save as one vaguely con-cerned in her trouble. through a kindred misery. Ezra followed her glance to the headstone, and he read the date.

"Sho !" said he, meditatively. "Six year ago! I did'nt know the Cap't 'd been gone so long as that ! "

' It seems a good many times six to me," said the widow, crying a little. "Mebbe you think its queer I never set out any flowers before. You see I kinder liked the grass; but this year it come over me I wanted to do some little thing for him, more to make up my mind than anything else. But you know how 'tis, Mr. Timmins. It was an old subject of common talk that her husband, Josh Moxom, became a peddler to escape the crisis of domestic life. The town knew also that Jane Ann was goaded by visions of a stepmother, and that she goaded her father in turn. But the widow never harped on unpleasant themes. "So you're livin' with Jane Ann?" said she, with a cheerfulness proportionate to his need.

"I dunno whether I'm livin' anywheres or whether I'm only stayin'." The words rushed forth unbidden. For the two years of his bereavement he had not opened his poor heart to human friendliness, and now it would be heard. "Jane Ann's house is terrible small, so I stay there nights when Josh is off on the cart; but when he comes home, I sleep over t' the old place. house. "The day went softly on about them. It was June, and the woods on the upper heights were thick with on the upper heights were thick with leaves. Everywhere there was the smell of earth and the pungency of bark and root. Their talk flowed quietly, touching often upon the dead, but as if the dead were living. At that moment the two felt neither "Yes," pursued Ezra quite happily, grief nor loss, because an according sympathy made all things one. It seemed not long before a shadow cleared off the headstone, in a way that Widow Penfield knew. She had been here many a noon in sorrowiul musing and seen it fleet away, and she did not heed the twelve tremb-ling strokes from the old church ling strokes from the order tower. "It's twelve o'clock!" she said, rising hastily. "I dunno what's be-come o' the day." Then, as Ezra rose, too, with some difficulty, she smiled at him and said, "I guess we're both on us a little stiff. We're gittin' on in years." Ezra watched her down the path and remembered what a pretty gir she had been when he and his with were courting.

she had been when he and his wife were courting. "She's a good woman, too." he said aloud, "a real good woman." He was a little late at the dinner table, and Jane Ann, parceling out greens before him, asked him brisk-ly, "Got the lot done." "Nol" said Ezra. He began upon his dinner with great appetite. Some-thing had stirred the air about him and fanned his life to quickened flame. "No. I left the scythe up there."

risen, Ezra got up from his bed where he had been lying dressed, and stole downstairs and out at the back door. He went softly round the house to Jane Ann's window, and listened there. She was breathing regularly, and at the sound his own breath came again. Then he stepped along the path across the orchard to his shed, and got out the spade and wheelbarrow. In a rich corner of the garden he set the barrow down, and began pulling u his early corn. When a spot was clear, he set his spade into the good rich earth, and heaped his barrow with it. For the first time in years he felt the joy of living. He was doing something far from his accustomed groove, and it brought the scent and echo of a bygone youth, when even common things were half unproven. Some slight peril attended his way, for if Jane Ann should, for any reason, seek him in his chamber, she would not rest until she found him. With the fatalism of the hunted, he knew Jane Ann would prove invincible. But he piled his barrow high, stuck his spade into the earth, and went February, 1908

of his good will, and not quite know-ing how to tell him so. Ezra felt a curious desire to keep her. He took an eager step or two. "Say, Mis' Penfield" he implored. She stopped, but he had nothing else to add. It's goin' to be a real nice day, re-marked the widow. "I thought, one spell, 'twould cloud over; but on'y look how bright it is. I wish't I'd brought up some newspapers to shade them pinks till they get watered." Ezra was grateful to her for talking about common things. He hardly knew what other things he wanted to talk about, though it seemed as if there must be many. But when she turned away again he spoke hastily: "Marthy Penfield, I s'pose you think everything's over and done with, when a man's as old as I be!" The widow looked at him in a genial kindliness. "Some things may be over," she said, gently: "Some ain't. You have just as good a time as vou can!" Ezra amazed himself because he seemed suddenly to be pleading a cause which, until now, had not existed Something came flooding unon him. after the repression of these two years, to tell him he was victim of a great injustice under Jane Ann's rule. The June earth seemed still to be his, and tears burned his aching eyes. He looked down at his hand, strong yet in spite of its knotted ugliness. It was not an old hand. It still had power to grasp and hold. With a motion of unconsidered dig-nit, he pointed to his wife's grave.

"There's nothin' on earth could make me believe she wanted me to be thorned to death," he said. "She'd be the last one-His voice failed him, and the wid-

Then she took up her basket again, and hurried down the walk. Ezra aid not look after her. He stood gazing in a dazed fashion at the upon the walk. Then a new cunning was born of his necessity, and when Jane Ann came forth, her shawl over her head, he was nowhere to be found.

"Father!" she called, but no one answered. She looked up the road, and down the road. There he was, walking toward Angeline Pratt's. Jane Ann sped afr. He went but slowly, and she overtook him on a crest of rising ground. "Father," she said, breathlessly, "where you goin'?"

"I dunno exactly," returned Ezra, with a calmness half defiance.

"Well, if you're goin' down to Angeline Pratt's I'm goin' with ve, that's all."

Ezra stopped, and though he spoke with a studied gentleness, his voice held some new meaning not quite familiar to Jane Ann. "Then," said he, "I ain't goin' any wheres." He turned about, and Jane Ann followed. She was amazed. Up to this moment he had never once questioned her rule, and now he had, in a measure, turned against her. She sat in silence with him until the dusk fell and the whip-poor-will came forth, and when the stillness bore to heavily, she said, in spite of herself: "Father, I dunno what's got into

Jane Ann could not sing, and not knowing whether her father did it well or ill, she always had some hesitation in encouraging what might be a too youthful effervescence. As soon as the benediction had been pronounced, the Widow Penfield hurried away, though others were clustering about the minister in a feudal group. Jane Ann was there, and Angeline Pratt. Ezra looked at Angeline in the light of his daughter's apprehensions, and found her comely. For some reason he compared her with Martha Pen-field. He smiled to himself satirically, and at that moment Angeline looked at him. Her eyes were dark-er than usual, her face less calm. "I be'n hopin' to see you," she said, in a rapid undertone. on Cap'n Penfield's grave. At twilight that day, Ezra, the milking done, sat down upon the front doorstone to think, and there he grew uneasy. Presently he arose and sauntered down the path. It was borne in upon him that up in the burying ground the Widow Penfield was watering the pinks, and he was in haste because there was much to say to her, though of what nature he could not tell. "Father," called Jane Ann, "where you goin'?"

Her chores were finished, and she stood in the front door, immaculate in her chocolate calico, and morally invincible. His old acquiescence returned upon him. He halted in the path and answered weakly:

"I'm goin' up to the buryin' ground."

"You wait a minute," said Iane Ann. "I'll go, too."

He had never pictured himself as rebelling, even through guile; but new companionship had made him stronger. His wife was standing by him, mysteriously translated through a living woman's sympathy.

The next day was Sunday, and Ezra walked to church with his daughter. Once or twice in the service he wondered if Martha Penfield were in her pew, and when they arose to face the singers in the last hymn, it was some queer comfort to see her shinv silken back and her neat braids of hair. Ezra sang loud and tunefully. His daughter glanced up

"Yes. I want to hurry right off." She paused, and Sunday though it was, Ezra knew the next word lay with him.

"Will ye do it?" he asked, and Angeline nodded.

Ezra spoke rapidly, for Jane Ann's eye was upon him.

"You meet me to-morrow at ten, in Squire Nudd's office. Don't ve say one word." "Father!" Jane Ann was calling. Ezra followed her unspoken will and turned away from Angeline to the minister's outstretched hand. He had erred-so said his gentle soulbut son ething within him made transgression sweet.

'Father!" said Jane Ann, as they were walking home together. "Everybody's talking about Mis' Penfield's pinks. She's got the Cap'n's grave all set over with 'em. What if we should try some? Her lot's so near,

"You let the lot be," said Ezra, gruffly. "I ain't got the weeds out on't yet."

Jane Ann stole a look at him, and Ezra frowned. He wondered how selves respected. It was on Wednesday that he slipped away while Jane Ann was strain-, ing the milk, and hurried up to the burying -ground. There she was, the Widow Penfield, trim and comely, watering the Cap'n's pinks. She greeted him with a comfortable smile, and then glanced over at her plants with the air or introducing them to their benefactor. But Ezra them to their benefactor. But Ezra could not choose his words. He al-most heard Jane Ann behind him. "Marthy Penfield," said he, be-seechingly, "What if you should set up housekeepin' with me in the old Pratt house? I've got the deed on't here in my pocket. It's yourn. Everything I've got in the world is yourn. You come, Marthy. I'll be real good to ye."

real good to ye." Mrs. Penfield set down the watering pot and looked blankly first at Ezra and then at the pinks. She was trying to read in their blue-green leaves some measure of reproach, as if they spoke for Cap'n Penfield there below. But she could find none. All she could do was to say "There! there! You mustn't say such things as that."

"But you will, Marthy!" urged Ezra. "You got to. We could have a real good time livin' along to-gether. Them two—" he gave a comprehensive sweep of his arm, as if he included their means the same time. if he included their unseen guardians in the talk, "they'd be the last to be-grutch it."

The widow looked very pretty, a little pale, and pathetically moist about the eyes. But she glanced again at the pinks, and they decided her.

"I can't, Mr. Timmins," she said, firmly. "No, I can't!" and she took up her neat skirts and went hastily down the hill, leaving the watering pot behind her.

Ezra sat down and regarded it. but not altogether mournfully. Some strange obstinacy was springing v^n within him. It was not hope; it was rather a new belief in the mutability of given motions. of circumstance.

That night when he went to bed,

Jane Ann was very gracious. "Folks say Angeline Pratt's goin' out West to live," said she. "Goin' to start right off!"

Ezra made no reply, and Jane Ann, with some compassion for him as a rejected lover, sponged bread that he might have rolls for breakfast.

The next night and the next Ezra kept his tryst in the burying-ground, but Martha Penfield was no longer there. Yet the watering pot was gone, and the pinks were flourishing. She had been there, at least. But on the third morning Ezra was on the spot at eight o'clock and he saw her coming up the hill. He stood behind the old Price monument, and Martha Banfald when he stepped out before Penfield, when he stepped out before her, gave a little cry. Ezra lost no time.

"Marthy," said he, "I ain't a-goin' to take no for an answer. You come along o' me. We'll be terrible snug in the old Pratt house. I've bought it right out, furniture an' all. You come."

"No!" said the widow, with an air of one who has deliberated. "I can't. don't feel to change my state."

"Don't ye think I'd do well by ye?" he queried, anxiously. "It ain't that," replied the widow, tremulous at last. "It would be you if 'twas anybody; but as for second marriages, I never had much opinion of 'em-"

Ezra looked sorrowfully into the distance. Then his gaze fled back again, and it was full of horror. He had seen Jane Ann. She was plod-ding up the hill, bearing a basket of plants. He seized the widow's arm.

"Look a-here!" he breathed. "She's coming'! Jane Ann! Let her once set eyes on ye an' I might as well be dead an' in my grave. I can't change a word with ye without pain' for it ten times over. You slip down t'other path with me, and we'll run into Parson True's. We can be married afore she sets her eyes on us.

Marthy, you come!" "The ideal" said the widow, brid-ling a little. "Haste makes waste, Mr. Timmins. There's got to be a license."

"Here 'tis, right in my pocket," said Ezra, trembling. Jane Ann was half way up the path. She had stopped to rest, and turned, in the doing, to regard the view below. "I got it when I went to town to meet Ange-line an' settle up about the house. I didn't know how long 'twould be afore I could git away agin. Marthy, you come."

Martha giggled.

"Hurry up, then," said she. They took hands like children and scurried down the path.

Jane Ann, toiling up the hill, heard the pattering of their flight and glanced across the intervening grave. At first she hardly believed those keen, quick eyes of hers. Yet she knew the wiry figure, the scanty coat, hitched up a little in the back, the threadhare overalls the threadbare overalls.

"Father!" she called, involuntarily, but the pair fled on. "Father!" cried Jane Ann. "Mar-thy Penfield! Father!"

She set down her basket and fled after them, down her basket and hed after them, down the grassy path, across the little gully where the spring flows at the foot and into the dusty road. There sat her father and Martha Penfield in the butcher's wagon, driving down the hill. They had "caught a ride," and their very backs were clothed with triumph.

Jane Ann sank upon the roadside, her hand upon her heart. "My soul!" she groaned, and then again, "My soul! The Widder Pen-field!"

A Cowboy's Christmas

By ZENAS DANE.

December days in Western Alberta. There was not much snow, but the ground was frozen hard, and a strong, fierce wind, unhindered by hill or tree, swept across the wide waste of dreary plain on which the little town of Cochrane stood, a picture of dreariness and desolation.

The streets of the town were deserted, excepting for the occasional appearance of a man or boy hurrying, with head bowed against the wind, to or from one of the two or three little stores in the town, or, it might be toward a small, square-tront building at the end of one of the short streets, a building above the door of which was the word "Hotel," in bold black letters on a white board, Two or three lean, shivering horses, bridled but without saddles was bridled, but without saddles, were hitched up in front of the hotel. Double lines of iron, stretching far away toward the east and the west. marked the course of the railroad to which Cochrane owed its existence. South of the town there was a little wooden depot painted a dull brown.

There was but one passenger train a day from the east, and it would have taken a colder day than this to have kept most of the men in the town from going down to the little station to see he train come in. This was their one diversion, the one break in the dull monotony of their uneventful lives. In the summer time the women and children often came with the men. To-day unusual interest seemed to be felt in the incoming train, and when the smoke from its engine was seen fully ten miles away, the men lounging around the stoves in the stores and hotel, as well as those in their own houses, buttoned their coats up to their chine culled their hats and case down houses, buttoned their coats up to their chins, pulled their hats and caps down around their ears, and hurried away to the little depot, where they congre-gated around the stove, engaging in one general topic of conversation. "I tell ye," said old man Dilly, "if this here railroad company knows what it's about, it'll send an agent here what it's about, it'll send an agent here what has some grit. That there Tom Henson never was fit to keep no railroad station in a cowboy country. Them cowboys from over on the Bad Lands Country never'd treated Tom the way they did if he'd just a-spunked up to 'em an' showed a little clear grit, stid of tryin' to beg off like he did. If there's anything a cowboy natchelly de-spises it's an out an' out coward." "Wal, I dunno," replied Joe Fraser, the postmaster, who had just come into the station with a very flat mail-bag in his hands. "I dunno ez Tom could of done much diff'rent from what he did. You take a lot of half-drunk cowboys out on a tear, and I tell you they're a hard lot to handle."

they're a hard lot to handle. "Oh, I know, I know," assented Mr. Dilly, smiling grimly. "Plague take 'em! But it don't help a feller none to it limber inted an' wilt before 'em. 'What'll the women be a-doing next? "What'll the women be a-doing next? "Well, I've an idee she'll wish she'd kep' to dish-washin' an' other proper female work 'fore she's been here long," Them cowboys That sort o' thing just ags them on. Hello, Kearney; how much'll you take in trade fer a ticket to Paris? I'm thinking of goin' fer the present soshel season.' He grinned at the facetious remark of Mr. Dilly, but made no reone was one of the coldest of | moniously fled from the town three days before.

The cowboys on the ranges, lying on all sides of Cochrane, made frequent visits to the town during the winter months, and at each visit "took the town," as the inhabitants expressed it, a proceeding that began in the drinking of a great deal of whiskey at the hotel, and ended in their racing at breakneck speed on their half-wild bronchos up and down the streets, firing off their pistols, hooting and howling, and doing anything and everything contrary to law and order.

On their last visit, after going to one of the grocery stores and helping themselves to a case of canned oysters and a box of crackers, they concluded to go to the railway station for an informal party in the waiting-room,

The terrified agent, a young man newly arrived from the east, thought they had come to visit some sort of punishment on him, and began to beg for mercy, an unwise proceeding that resulted in his being ordered out of the town on the first train, and he gladly went.

The men hurried out to the long platform as the train came in, and when it had come and gone the only passen-gers it left were a small, slightly-built woman dressed in black and an ex-woman uressed in black and an ex-tremely pretty, bright-eyed little girl, with a profusion of yellow curls falling down to her shoulders. "He didn't come," said old man Dilly, to a neighbor. "Thought better of it, I reckon. Wonder who the wid-der is?"

The "widder" came forward, holding the little girl by the hand. "Is Mr. Kearney here?" she asked

"Is Mr. Kearney here?" she asked of one of the gaping crowd. Kearney, standing near enough to hear the question, said: "I'm him, ma'am." She held out her hand, and gave the crowd an electric shock by saying: "I'm the new agent and telegraph operator from Winnipeg." "Well, sir," said Mr. Dilly, speaking of the affair afterwards, "you could of knocked that hull crowd down with a feather when that woman said that." The crowd stared in unbroken sil-The crowd stared in unbroken silence until the new agent and her little girl had gone into the ticket office; then the men hurried back to the town, each eager to tell the amazing news to those who did not already know it. The women of Cochrane, for years remote from the great centers of civil-ization, and far behind in the progress of the age, were greatly scandalized. Mrs. Dilly, who had been crouching over the fire most of the day, suddenly became heedless of the cold and, throwing an old shawl over her shoulders, faced the wind and ran with flapping garments to the farthest end of the street to talk the matter over with Mrs.

Ferguson. "Did ye ever hear of the like in all yer born days??" she asked, excitedly. "What'll the women be a-doing next?"

"Nop," replied Kearney, "but he'll be a chap that no Alberta or Saskatchewan cowboys can skeer off, you can depend on that. I told the comp'ny to send on a reg'lar terror if they could find one. 'Spect he'll come bristlin' with pistols and knives." Kearney was "boss" of the section

She had been a telegraph operator and had learned bookkeeping before her marriage. When her husband died, and left her dependent upon her own efforts for a livelihood for herself and her little girl, she felt obliged to go back to her old occupation, but with the determination to secure as soon as possible some situation where she could have her little girl with her.

The railroad officials knew her to be a bright, fearless woman, and when the vacancy created at Cochrane by young Henson's flight was made known to the company, Mrs. Hartman was offered the position.

"My 'what?"

"Yer daddy, er—yer pa?" "Oh, my papa? Why, don't you know? He's up in the 'ky—with God." A solemn look came into her pretty face, and her voice faltered as she spoke, with one little round white arm lifted upward, a finger pointing towards the sky.

A rear door of the sitting-room opened as the child spoke, and, a few seconds later, the amazed cowboys saw a little woman dressed in black, with a face slightly pale, standing beside the little girl.

"Good evening, gentlemen," she said, a little nervously, at once recognizin.g the character of her visitors. "Dia you want tickets? There will be no more trains to-night."

"We didn't want no tickets," replied Big Jake, evidently somewhat non-plussed. "We jest dropped in to make a sorter frien'ly call on the new agent, an' git acquainted." "You are very kind," said Mrs. Hartman, recovering her self-possession and speaking in the most cordial tone. "If you will come in I will make you a cup of coffee, after your cold ride. I am the new agent." "What?" said Big Jake, "you the new agent?" Then, giving his shoul-of a year's growth," said Big Jake, dismounting at the depot door, while his companions followed him.

lt was after dark, but bright lights shone through the white-curtained windows of Mrs. Hartman's rooms. All was still within when the men flung open the door of the waiting-room and marched in hooting and yelling like Sioux Indians.

One of them was about to kick open door leading into Mrs. Hartman's sitting-room, when it slowly opened, a flood of light streamed into the dark waiting-room, and in its yellow glow there stood a sober-faced little girl of four years, with her bare feet peeping out from beneath a trailing white nightgown, and a tangle of yellow curls hanging down to a scarlet knitted shawl thrown hastily around her shoulders. Her face wore a look of wonder more than of affright as she said: "What you want' mens?"

rocking-chair and laughing heartily, as she told the incident to Mrs. Dilly and Mrs. Ferguson, who had so far overcome their prejudice against the "fe-male agent" as to spend one or two evenings a week in her cheery little sitting-room.

There had been few religious services held in Cochrane. There was no church in the town, and but one or two ministers had visited the place in a missionary spirit, and they had been so unfortunate as to offend the cowboys by making them the object of special sermons, and speaking some plain truths, in a way that was instantly resented by the cowboy element, and future meetings gave rise to such disturban es that it was advisable to discontinue them.

Soon after her arrival, Mrs. Hartman gathered a number of the children and their mothers, with three or four men, into the depot one afternoon and organized a Sabbath school, and a little later Mrs. Dilly went around among her neighbors with this surprising news:

"There's going to be meetin' in the hall over the postoffice Surday night."

"What kind of meeting?"

"Preachin' meetin', I reckon: but I don't know who's goin' to preach, on-less she does it herself, an' I ain't a mite o' doubt but she kin do it."

When Sunday night came, the little hall was filled. The most of those who made up the congregation were drawn thither through curiosity, no doubt. Even John Sanders, the owner of the hotel had come, since his usual Sunday evening visitors had failed to appear, and he concluded that he'd "go down to the meetin' an' keep 'em com-p'ny." There's likely to be "some fun," he said, if the cowboys should happen to ride into Cochrane during the meet-

Mr. Wardner, one of the store-keepers, announced a hymn, "Jesus, Lover of my Soul," at the beginning of the meeting. Other songs were sung, with Mrs. Hartman at the piano. Mr. Wardner talked for a few minutes, and then Mrs. Hartman stepped forward on the little platform.

At that moment there was a disturbance on the stairs outside; the noise of heavy boots was heard, and Mrs. Ferguson trembled as she whispered to Mrs. Dilly:

"Land of goodness! It's them cow-ys!" The door was thrown open boys!" with a good deal of unnecessary noise, and Big Jake and his companions crowded into the little hall. "They did look dreadfully sheepish," as Mrs. Dilly said, when they saw who the speaker was, for the worst of cowboys will display a rude sort of chivalry in the presence of women, and they have enough of the spirit of true manhood to be influenced by that undefinable magnetism that all truly good women exert by their presence alone. When Mrs. Hartman said: "There are seats here in front; won't you come and take them?" they lifted their hats, strode silently forward, took the chairs indicated, and sat quietly through the meeting. "And I've an idee it wouldn't have been healthy for anyone else to have made a noise," said Mr. Ferguson.

After that Sunday evening the cow-boys did not come into Cochrane for some time, but, as Christmas drew near, Mrs. Dilly and others began making prophecies as to what would likely occur on Christmas day.

"They kem into town last Christmas," said Mrs. Dilly to Mrs. Hartman, "an' the way they did carry on was a caution. They jess rid right over ev'ry-thing an' ev'rybody. They fired off their pistols, an' hooted an' yelled like crazytics the hull endoorin' night."

It seemed as though Mrs. Dilly's dire forebodings might be realized, for a dozen or more of the cowboys dashed into the town in the most hilarious manner on Christmas eve, and rode direct to the hotel at one end of the town, where special preparations for their entertainment had been made by the proprietor.

An hour after their arrival, when they were becoming particularly merry, the door of the hotel opened, and Mrs. Hartman, hooded and wrapped in a long black cloak, came into the room with a telegram in her hand. "See, here, boys," she said, "there has been a dreadful accident twenty miles down the road. The eastern passenger train has been thrown from the track by a broken rail, and several have been killed and a great many hurt, and most of the cars have been burned. They have telegraphed here for help. I noticed that there were many women and children on the train when it left Cochrane. How many of you will go?' Big Jake stood before the bar, a glass

It was a very cold night, with the wind roaring and sweeping over the white plains.

It's cold enough to freeze a brass image," said Mrs. Dilly, thrusting her head out into the frosty air, after hearing the news, "but if Mis' Hartman kin ride twenty miles to help the mangled an' sufferin', me an' Mis' Ferguson kin, too, an' we will. So you hurry up an' hitch our critters up to the bob-sled, Jonas Dilly, an' I'll just pile in my feather-bed an' all our buff'lo robes, an' we'll git there all right, an' do what we kin fer the needy, which we'd ought to do at Christmas, if at no other time, pore souls!"

Big Jake took the lead, and Mrs. Hartman kept close to his side. As many as twenty horsemen came on behind, and they were followed by half a dozen sleds, the Dilly turnout in the

It was almost daylight when the res-cuing train came, and the first rays of the morning sun shone over the plains before the train pulled away with its sorrowful load or dead and injured. Then the party from Cochrane turned their faces homeward.

their faces homeward. "Them cowboys was ez tender an' ez sensible ez wimmen," said Mrs. Dilly to Mrs. Hartman, before they started homeward. "I'd no idee it was in 'em to act so. I hope they won't spoil it all by goin' back to Cochrane an' carin' on up at John Sanderses." "I'll see to that," replied Mrs. Hartryin' man, knowingly, and she did. "Now, boys and ladies," she said, bowing toward the Dilly sled, "you're all tired out, I know; but not too tired to eat a good Christmas dinner, if one is set before you, and if you men will take possession of my sitting-room and the station, Mrs. Dilly and Mrs. Ferguson and myself will do likewise with the kitchen, and we'll see what there is in a big Christmas box I received yes-terday from my old farm home back in Ontario." "And here's the key to my grocery store, which may supply anything that's lacking," said Mr. Wardner. Tables were set in the waiting-room of the depot, and a wonderful dinner came from Mrs. Hartman s kitchen, and afterward there was music and singing, and great Christmas cheer and merriment. Cecil and Big Jake became greatly interested in each other, and when, at dark, the cowboys mounted their horses, they did not ride up to John Sanders', as Mrs. Dilly had feared they would, but they rode swiftly away over the plain toward their own homes. "It was surprisin'," said Mrs. Dilly afterward, "but I don't s'pose there's a man livin' that aint got some good streaks in 'im, if a body only knows how to find 'em, an' Christmas is a good time to bring 'em out."

TO CURE FITS OF SNEEZING .- A COTrespondent of the British Medical Journal says: During the recent rapid changes of the temperature I caught a severe cold in my head, accompanied by almost incessant sneezing. unfortunate nose gave me no rest. The slightest impact of cold air, or passing from the outside air into a warm room equally brought on a fit of sneezing. In vain I shuffed camphor and pulsatilla; the light catarrh still triumphed over me. At length I resolved to see what the maintenance of a uniform temperature would do toward diminishing the irritability of my Schneiderian membrane, and accordingly I plugged my nostrils with cotton wool. The effect was instantaneous; I sneezed no more. Again and again I tested the efficacy of this simple remedy, always with the same result. However near I was to a sneeze, the introduction of the pledgets stopped it at once. Nor was there any inconvenience from their presence, making them sufficiently firm not to tickle, and yet leaving them sufficiently loose to easily breathe through." This is really worth knowing, for incessant sneezing is among the greatest of smaller ills, and it seems only a rational conclusion to hope that this simple plan may furnish the most efficient remedy against one of the most distressing symptoms of hay-fever.

In two minutes they were all in their saddles, and Mrs. Hartman said:

"Ride over to the depot first, and get some bedding and old linen for bandages, and other things that will be needed. I'll run down to Mr. Wardner's store and to my neighbors' houses and get all I can for us to use after we get there.'

Big Jake turned in his saddle, and looked down on the little woman standing in the snow, with a fierce, cold wind blowing her garments around her. "Us?" he queried, "who's us?" "Oh. I'm going, too," replied Mrs. Hartman. "I'm used to horseback rid10

Put Your Seed Grain Through Chatham Grain Pickler

And you will be protected from Smut in your Wheat next year.

We offer this machine with an absolute guarantee.

It will pickle thoroughly Wheat at the rate of 60 bushels per hour; Oats at the rate of 70 or 80 bushels per hour. It is faster and more effective than any smut machine on the market and the price is the lowest of them all.

It will last for years and can be used with either Blue Stone or Formaline mixtures.

Brandon, Man., Nov. 28, 1907. The Manson Campbell Co., Chatham, Ont. Dear Sirs,—I beg to advise you that I made a test of the new Chatham Revolving Pickler with 10 bushels of wheat, which we ran through and pickled thoroughly in ten minutes. I might say I have used the Pickler for years and have seen several other Picklers used and I think this by far the best I have had anything to do with. I can cheerfully recommend it to the farmers in want of a first class pickler. Yours truly.

The Courting of Mirandy

By James F. B. Belford.

There were other girls-French, breed and Canadian-not count- ship of years should be broken up. ing Sleepy Star, the pride of old Prairie ing Sleepy Star, the pride of old Fraine Dog's teepee; but Mirandy was easily first. And she deserved to be. Big-bright and bouncing, with glorious eyes, sparkling with life, which looked at you fully and frankly. Long, lustrous hair, which swept behind her like a cloud as she urged her wiry little cayuse over the grass. Light as a fawn in the dance, merry and cheerful in company she was at once the delight in company, she was at once the delight and despair of us all-excepting Old and despair of us an excepting one Sam, who had wooed and won a two hundred and fifty pound French half-breed, and young Tibbets, who was fresh from the East, and had been caught smiling and crying before a photograph. But though we all loved Mirandy, and were, individually and collectively, ready to fall at her feet, it was still painfully apparent that some of us were bound to be disappointed. And as time went by, one by one, most of us gradually dropped out of the run-ring. Not that we loved Mirandy less, but that we realized the hopelessness of our case. At last only two were left,

There was no doubt in any one's | their friendship. Bill was determined to win her, Jack was just as resolute, but that was no reason why the friend-They had a perfect understanding on the matter. Each had his own particular night on which he "set up" with Mirandy, and the other never intruded.

Bill took her to the service in the schoolhouse one Sunday, and sat beside her in the narrow seat, holding one corner of her prayer-book, or singing the same hymn, looking as happy as a clam, while Jack was back in the corner with the boys. And the next Sunday with the boys. And the next Sunday they would exchange places, Jack get-ting the prayer-book and Bill the cor-ner. If Bill drove her to the Temper-ance Lodge, Jack escorted her to the spelling match. Even at a dance they broke even, and divided round dances and breakdowns impartially. Since and breakdowns impartially. Since they had to oppose one another, they, at least, would fight fair.

And Mirandy, you couldn't see any difference in the way she treated them. It must have been trying for her-we always felt it must have been. Either of these chaps was just about all a fellow ought to be, and, take it all and, try as we would, we could no: dis- | 'round, it was a living example of "the cover which was to be the lucky man. embarrassment of riches. Bill Simmons owned a good claim, with a decent shack, a good string of country for its races at the fall fair. ponies, and a nice bunch of cattle. He The Agricultural Society had laid out was a tall, good-looking fellow, rode as pretty a half-mile track as any well, danced well, and was always ready for anything that came along. Jack Fraser was shorter by three inches, but fine-looking and well set up. He was equally well endowed with land, ponies and cattle, and was reputed the toughest man in a scrap in the country. Both of them were madly in love with Mirandy, which was only natural, but what did seem strange was that, in spite of their rivalry, they were the best of friends. Generally, when two fellows are after the same girl, each of them just yearning to lie down and let her trample on him, there isn't much love lost between them. But Bill and Jack were different. They had struck the country together, had lived on the same claim, in the same shack, for three years, eating each other's bannock and pork, and were known far and wide as the "two chums. When you saw Bill anywhere you could safely reckon Jack was not far away. And if Jack got into a row, as he sometimes did, Bill's tall figure was sure to shoot into sight presently. And Mirandy made no difference in Broncoville is known all through the could wish to run over, and we had some mighty good horses, too. About a week before the fair came on, we heard that Jack and Bill had settled to run their ponies in the mile race, and that the losing man was to give up all claim on Mirandy. Jack had a little black pony and Bill a buckskin. Both of them were known to be fast, but their owners, being such chums, had never raced them against each other. But now on the speed of the black and buckskin hung the fates of the boys and Mirandy. There was a crowd at that fair. The news got pretty generally around the county, and every man, woman and child just naturally left everything and turned out. They came in democrats and in wagons, in buggies and in Red River carts, on sulkies and on horseback, on driving horses, mules and oxen, and old Pen Tripp had hitched his muley cow into the hay-rake and driven her in. There must have been a thousand people in Broncoville that day.

lack better than Bill, and vice versa, and each backed the man he knew best. There were other horses running, but no one gave them the second thought. So when old Bob Clark, the hotel keeper and leading sport of the town, rang the bell for the mile race, the whole track was lined-men, women, children and Indians, just bracing themselves and yelling.

Mirandy was there. She was sitting in the parson's buggy, where she could see the whole course, and the people looked first at the horses and then at her. But it might have been a slow race for a bag of chop for all the dif-ference you could see in Mirandy. The parson was a young man the bishop had just got out from the East, a bit of a tenderfoot, of course, but great on football, and a fair good sport in his way. He liked a good horse, and a day after elk or chicken, and was not a bad fellow for all his surplice.

But I ve got away from the race. The ponies started well together. You could see by their looks that the boys were dead in earnest. Crouched low over their horses' necks, their faces white and set, they meant to ride for all that was in it.

Round went the horses, and when they reached the judges' stand for the first half-mile Bill and Jack were neck and neck, with the rest of the field nowhere. Everybody cheered again, that is, everybody but Mirandy. She sat there quiet as an oyster.

At three-quarters of a mile both were going strong and still even, when a measly yellow Injun dog ran out right in front of Bill's pony. Down went the bronco, and Bill went twenty feet up the track on his face, almost in front of the parson's buggy, where Mirandy was sitting. Quick as a flash the par-son jumped from the buggy and grabbed Bill, pulling him off the track. The rest of the horses came on with a rush, and I don't know to this day who won that race, for I was watching Jack. Just as soon as he saw Bill's pony fall, he set himself back in the saddle and pulled in his horse. He had that horse stopped and was by Bill's side almost as soon as the parson pulled him on to the grass. And you never saw a man look worse than Jack did. Bill was scratched and bloody, covered with dust, and the wind pretty well knocked out of him, but Jack was ghastly. I thought sure he would tumble over when he knelt by Bill. The doctor ran up and felt Bill all over, said there were no bones broken and that he would be all right in a day or two; and then Jack got right up and whooped. And the cheerful manner in which he kicked Howling Coyote across the track when that smoke-scented warrior wanted pay for his dog was an exhilarating treat.

When the crowd got over its scare. we began to wonder how this would affect the Mirandy question. The general consensus of opinion arrived at was that this game was a draw.

Jack took Bill home with him, and looked after his stock till he got over his shaking up. The parson drove Mirandy home. Things ran on much the same as before that race, all that Febr

And the betting! Not so much on the horses as on the men. Some knew

We were all still wondering which of the boys would get Mirandy finally. when we heard they were going to have another try for it. Each of them had a good smart team, and they were regarded as the two best axemen in the county. And so, when we heard the new plan of campaign, we were not much surprised. This was the idea: They were to start from the parson-age, each with his team, sleigh and axe, at ten o'clock Wednesday morning. drive to the woods from there, cut a measured cord of green poplar, bring it back to the parsonage and pile it, the first man done to be the winner, the stakes the same as before.

Well, of course, we all wanted to see the result, so we arranged a social that night at the school-house, which was just across from the parsonage. That was the most popular social ever held in Broncoville. The Ladies' Aid made a big thing that night. The schoolhouse would not begin to hold the crowd. Not that the crowd wanted to stay in. They'd rush in. pay their money, grab a paper bag full of sandwiches and doughnuts, and rush out again to look up the North Road. And there they stood, munching the doughnuts and gazing. It was a long wait.

"Ought to have been here an hour ago," said Bob Campbell, and the crowd grunted assent. Even old Prairie Dog, who had come over on the chance of a tuckout, seemed anxious. But perhaps he was figuring on the amount of broken victuals that would fall to his share.

But at last, through the moonlight, a team was seen coming. Not slow and steady, as if drawing a load of green wood, but furiously, both horses on the run. A yell went up from the crowd, "They're racing." The parson had been in the schoolhouse talking to the women, but at the noise he came running out and the rest followed him, all except Mirandy. She filled up Prairie Dog's bag, which that thought-ful red man had brought on the off chance.

The team came up with a rush to the door, and there was Bill, driving, but no wood. In his arms he held Jack, pale and speechless, his foot nearly sliced off by his axe. After it was bound up, and Jack made comfortable in bed, Bill told the story. They had just about finished cutting their wood, and were both working like mad, when Bill heard a yell and lookup saw Jack pitch off his log into the snow. He rushed over, and found his chum with the blood pouring out of a big gash in his foot. He fixed him up as well as he could, but it took a long time, and then started for town.

Well, of course, we were no farther ahead. It did seem as if Mirandy never would get married. It was a trying situation. Kept us all puzzling while Jack lay at the parson's with his game foot, and Bill did his chores as well as his own. Spring came, the crops were put in with a rush, as they have to be out here, and then we had a few weeks to think things over.

Bill and Jack agreed that the third time would be the charm, and settle the affair, one way or another. They had talked a long time as to how they would decide. Jack wanted to spin a quarter, heads or tails, for first chance, but Bill wouldn't hear of it. He said it wasn't chivalrous. He had been reading a lot about the old knights and their ladyloves, in the spare minutes between Jack's chores and his own, and he said "Mirandy can give points to any of them girls they made so much fuss about in the old days, and beat them, hands down, and it ain't fair to her if we let ourselves be laid over by any knight that ever wore an iron pot.'

And Jack gave in. But it bothered them what to do. You see, there's no dragons, nor giants, nor enchanted castles nowadays, and King Arthur himself couldn't earn his salt at the knight business. But after much studying they got hold of a scheme. The wolves had been mighty bad in our county for the last year or two. You couldn't keep a sheep, and the way they gathered in the chickens and ducks was a terror. It may have been because Bill heard Mirandy saying that her last turkey-hen had disappeared the night before, but, anyway, they decided that for the next two months they would hunt wolves, and the man with the biggest pile of scalps should go in and win. From that on, you could hear the pop of a rifle most any time, day or night, and soon wolves got to be scarce as hen's teeth. They shot wolves, trapped wolves, poisoned wolves, and incidentally about half the dogs in the settlement. Bill found a den and dug up about eleven young ones, but Jack got back with two litters of five each and one old one. Excitement again ran high. Old Mosey Pool bet his lame mare against Joe Willow's brindle ox on Jack. The boys said nothing but kept popping away. They drove all through the county, and the wolves fairly had to take to the bush. The two months wore through, somehow, and Jack brought his pile of scalps over to Bill's for the final count. It happened that about fifty of us dropped in, promiscuous like, on Bill that morning; so we saw the count. First we counted out Jack's pile. Old and young, there were just ninety-seven scalps, all told. I saw Bill turn

Bill looked at Jack, and Jack looked at Bill. They shook hands and went out to the stable, intimating that we needn't follow, and we didn't.

Presently out comes Bill's driver. They hitched him into the buggy and started for Mirandy's place. I wasn't there at the finish-Bill drove Would Marry After Due Consideration. Edmonton, Dec. 14, 1907. Editor.—I would like to correct a july number, namely: "An Old Sleuth's" letter. I know the country and people well enough to be able to tell you that he is only "bluffing." particularly about his cook and his property. So much for that. I see by your correspondence column that many subscribers express their opinion about the work you are doing in getting the young people acquainted. May I say that I highly approve of the idea? We Western people know far too little of each other. But as for setting acquainted with a view to matrimony, that is an entirely differ-ent matter. I do not see how any sensible or self-respecting man or wo-man could take a step that meens so over the line, we get a good example of "marrying in haste and repenting at leisure," but there is no divorce court to free an unhappy or unsuitably matched couple. The result is ob-vious.

I greatly admire the character of I greatly admire the character of many of your correspondents as por-trayed by their letters, while others would invoke the pity of almost any one by their mournful tales of lone-liness. Still, I could not believe that whatever the apparent necessity (and I am well used to Western life, both in city and country), a hasty marriage is excusable.

I wrote solely to try and in-terest them with cheery news and papers. I have received mementos from many foreign places, Maita, Gi-braltar, West Africa, South Africa, East Indies, West Indies, Jamaica, Aden, Singapore. Though I knew none of my correspondents personally, I may say I've received some honorable of-fers and as such have treated them, for I believe (with Bon Amie) that marriage is too sacred and not pos-sible without a mutual personal ac-quaintance. As I before stated I am coming out to Canada, so I am giving my former correspondence, up. Hence my turn-ing up in your columns. If any of the lone West bachelors care to write, I will answer with pleasure. In conclusion I may say I've fallen in love with your magazine and have decided to send it on here atterwards to some friends who owe the same thing. I am Protestant, 30 years; don't ob-ject to tobacco, only cigars. Yours truly "Honor Bright."

Sympathize with Lonely Bachelors.

Sympathies with Lonely Bachelors. Neepawa Dec. 23, 1907. Editor.—Have you any room for an-other girl who would like to see all those bachelors wanting wives get them and the right kind? But when I see them asking for correspondents it always makes me wonder whether there are no girls living near them or if they were the right kind of fellows they would not need to advertise. Some of them write good letters any-how, and others seem to think a girl should have every accomplishment and yet be willing to go out on a home-stead where, ten chances to one, she won't get a chance to use them. I do not blame the bachelors for wanting wives as it must be very lonely for them, and no wonder they set wild and woolly. I am only a working girl, and am quite independent of any man but I would like a home of my own. I think I am a fairly good housekeeper and cook. Am fond of housework. Am not yes and a hasty temper. "Wild Plum."

Would Write Friendly Letter.

Would Write Friendly Letter. Rangemore, Village, Staffs, Eng., Dec. 10, 1907. Editor.—I expect you will be sur-prised to have a letter from England but I should like you to know that all my family think your paper a splendid one. The correspondence column is very amusing. My brothers are having the book sent to me. Four of my brothers and my eldest brother's wife have gone to Canada since April 5th last year. As the half of our family (we are 8) are over there you will understand that we are very interested in anything Canadian. I can hardly expect that you will find room for this in your valuable paper. The eldest of my brothers that have gone is 27 and the youngest 17. I am not writing on matrimonial thoughts intent, so need not send a description of myself or my age, but I will tell you I come somewhere between the boys in Canada. If there is anyone who would like a friendly letter from England and would write to me first I would be pleased to answer. Wishing your jolly paper every success, I will sign myself the name of my favorite flower. "Jessamine."

A Lancashire Lassie. Manchester, Eng., Dec. 10, 1907. Editor.—I don't know if you can find room in your interesting magazine for this epistle, but I trust so. A friend sent my sister the June number and I was so taken up with your correspon-dence column that I can't resist try-ing to get a little corner for myself, if possible. Nothing venture nothing win, so here goes. I am hoping to come out to Alberta soon, along with my family, what is left of us, as my father is already out and two sisters both married. They send us news from Canada that they termine his character: it makes no dif-ference whether he is a toil-worn tiller of the soil, or a prince, so long as he is a true gentleman. I do not believe in corresponding for purely matrimonial purposes, although I believe friendly acquaintance may be made that way. True love-matches-would there were more of them-are engendered of sight and a kindred feeling. I hope "Canadian Jack" will adhere to his good resolutions regarding a wife's happiness. The house-mother on a farm too often finds her life one of endless drudgery with few pleasures thrown in. I hope he may prove an ideal husband for some girl. I think most of your fun-loving boys who call themselves "bachelors" think of mar-riage as a speedy cure for that "lone-some feeling" without thinking that it means an establishment of a home whose influence will be feit in the na-tion.

An English Girl Writes. Edmonton, Alta., Dec. 18, 1907. Editor.—I saw the Western Home Monthly about two months ago. I am very interested in the correspondence columns, and I thought I would try my luck and see if I could get a letter. I am 19 years old, fair hair, grey eyes, about 5 feet 7 inches tall. dence columns, which are correspon-dence columns, which are certainly amusing. I should like to correspond with some nice young man, about 6 feet tall, with dark hair, not over 23 or 24 years of age; also one of good habits. I am not thinking about matrimony, as I am only 17. I weigh 122 pounds and am 5 feet 6 inches tall. I am very fond of music (play and sing), love dancing, skating and horse-back rid-ing. I have brown hair, hazel eyes, and am of fair complexion. As to looks, judge for yourself. I liked the letters from "Baldy" and "Buzz, the Barber," in the October number. Anyone wishing to cor-respond, please write first. My name will be found with the editor. "Nobody's Little Girl."

Maiden of Eighteen Writes.

Maiden of Eighteen Writes. Balcarres, Dec. 21, 1907. Editor.—I am a reader of your paper, especially the correspondence page. I think some girls are too hard on the bachelors. Some people think that if a man starts out in life baching it on a homestered he is of no account. I take a different view of the man who starts out to make a home for some happy lass and works hard all day, only to come in from work and get his own meals ready, tired and hungry. I am a farmer's daughter and would rather have a good living and honest bachelor anyday than a town whiskey sucker.

Brown Eyes Invites Correspondence.

A Pretty Fair Sample? Manitoba, Dec. 10, 1907. Editor.—Can you spare me a little space in your valuable magazine? I am not a subscriber, but my father is. I have read the W H. M. for some time now and am delighted with it. I am especially interested in the cor-respondence columns and thought I should like to say a few words to the members of the circle. I have been greatly amused over the question of what a farmer's wife ought and what she ought not to do. Now, girls, what does it matter if we do feed pigs and milk a few cows? I am at present living on a farm and although I do not milk, I often feed the pigs. Don't you think it is foolish to talk so? I am sure no true gentleman would ask his wife to feed pigs or milk.

to talk so? I am sure no true gentleman would ask his wife to feed pigs or milk cows if he could do it himself or get a man to do it; but there are cases when this is impossible. In my opin-ion, husband and wife should try to h l₂ each other all they can. Love is the only necessity. If they love each other, all else will be well. I won't criticise any of the letters I have read. They are all interesting. Studying the character of the writers affords me a great deal of amusement. I wish I could meet the gentleman who described his ideal of life on a farm. "Canadian Jack," I think he called himself. I quite agree with him.

Brown Eyes Invites Correspondence. Carstairs, Alta., Dec. 20, 1907. Editor.—I take great pleasure in reading the correspondence page of the W. H. M., and I would like to join the circle. I have read letters from some backelors who would rather have a slave than a wife. They seem to think that after a woman gets her house-work done, she should help outside, and sometimes before she gets it done, and then she has to finish after sup-per, when she is tired out with her day's work in the field. For my part, I think a woman's place is in the house, and that the man should help her with the heavy work. I am a young lady, 17 years old, I have dark brown eyes and hair and am 5 feet 2 inches in height. I would be glad if any of either sex under 23. waswer it with pleasure. "Brown Eyes."

have my say. They all write about their virtues and accomplishments, so I suppose I must do the same. I am a farmer's daughter, 19 years of age, with dark brown hair, grey eyes, and a nose that has a peculiar tendency to turn up. Weight 117 lbs. As for accomplishments, my dear old Dad calls me his "Jack of all Trades," for I have had a try at almost every-thing belonging to housework, and can feed the pigs and milk the cows when necessary; have even had a turn at driving the binder, and topping a stack of wheat, but found it rather ex-hausting work. Am very fond of music and can play quite a few instru-ments, organ, piano, violin, guitar, etc., but I like the violin best. What a conceited little vixen! I hear some one say. But what say you, boys? Can't let you imagine me a grumpy old woman yet, this world is so jolly. Wish "Buzz, the Barber" were here this winter when our skating and dancing commences. I'll wager he would have all the dancing he wanted. We are all fond of fun, and have some form of entertainment going on almost every week during the winter months. What a lot of people wanting to ret marifed! For my part. I have hardly given the matrimonial question a thought so far. Have always lived contented here in my good old home and am quite heart whole and fancy free as yet. Wonder who the Primee Charming will be who can wake the slumbering Cupid; hope he is good looking and not over sixtv-five. I, too, think people should not marry if they do not love each other. It is

Doctors and drugs have nothing to do with it. Youand GIN PILLS-have everything to do with it. GIN PILLS will cure you-if you give them the chance. Will you?

Now, don't say "I have tried so many things without getting better" or "I don't believe anything will ever do me any good." You have never tried GIN PILLS and therefore you cannot realize what marvels they can perform. Let them prove their worth. Give them a fair trial, Get 6 boxes (for $2.50)—take them faithfully—and see what a miracle they work in your own case.

There is no risk-no danger of spending money and getting nothing in return. GIN PILLS are sold on an unconditional guarantee that they will cure you or money refunded.

When you have finished the sixth box-if you don't feel well, look well, and cannot honestly say that all sighs of Kidney and Bladder Trouble have disappeared-simply take the empty boxes to your dealer and he will promptly refund your money. No affidavit is required. We will take your word for it.

That shows our faith in GIN PILLS. Try them and let them prove what they can do for you.

Dr. McLaughlin's Belt will do this for You.

Dr. McLaughlin.

Dr. McLaughlin. Dear Sir,—I have been cured of all the distressing symptoms of the disease, or complication of diseases, from which I was suffering. My bowels have been natural from the first day after wearing the Belt until now. I began wearing it on May 9th of this year, and have not had any pain in my be k nor dull, heavy feeling in my head since. I feel much improved in mind and in memory. I have gained in weight, and have been working hard and continuously. I would not do with-out the Belt for a good deal I wore it regularly for two months, and owing to absence from home have only worn it occasionally since. I have postponed sending a final report to see if the effect is going to be a lasting one, and I feel that it will. Mrs. Klippert has also worn the Belt, and has derived great benefit from it. With gratitude to you for your kindly interest and advice, I subscribe myself. Your well and well-wishing patient.

Your well and well-wishing patient,

Wm. F. Klippert.

What would you give to have your old vim back again ? What would you not sacrifice to feel as you did a few years ago; to have the same snap and energy, the same gladsome, joyous, light-hearted spirit and the physical strength you used to have? You know you are not the same man, and you know y u would like to be. You might as well be. It's easy. I am making men out of wrecks every day, and I can make you as good a man as you ever were with Kathleen's Valentine.

When Dick Howell's fortune took of her to cheer him in the long days to unto itself wings and flew, he knew come. not whither, everyone who knew Dick immediately took it upon himself to prophesy that he would either go to the dogs and die an outcast from society, or else would worry along in obscurity for a year or so and then quit this life with a broken heart.

Instead of doing either of these things, Dick took the one small talent he possessed and put it to its most practical use; he taught music.

"Which is rough enough on Dick, Heaven knows," as his one-time friend, Jack Gilligan, remarked one day, "but think what it must be on the neigh-bors!"

Dick's music teaching was not a success. He did not make a good living at it, and he soon grew weary to death of trying to hammer the science of notes and bars into unmusical heads, and finally he stopped giving lessons and left the city.

Most people thought this was because Dick was not satisfied to retrench grace-Dick was not satisfied to retrench grace-fully and come down in the social and now-now, God help him!-he was

One year before he had carried her valentine to her-a bunch of the rarest, freshest violets that could be found. He remembered, too, how charming she had been on that evening, and how many times he had been ready to say the words he was glad now had been left unsaid. Of course she cared nothing for him now, because he could not give her position and a full allowance. He judged her from the standpoint that many of his friends had taken when he had lost his fortune, and in this way he wronged the girl, as many a one has been misjudged.

A year passed, and poor Dick had seen much of the world. He had ob-served its seamy side, not at a respectful distance, but at uncomfortably close quarters, and though the experience had aged him, it had also softened him.

From teaching he had gone to playscale; the truth was, he was in love pounding out songs for music-hall sing-with a girl whom he would never dare ers, while the smoke choked him, the

to ask to marry him now that he was | lights dimmed his eyes, and the coarse poor.

As has been tritely remarked before, poverty is no disgrace, but it is decidedly uncomfortable for the party most interested; and though Dick tried to tell himself that his failure in a financial way was nothing, a mere trifle, his heart m.sgave him, and he spent more than one unhappy evening cursing the fate that had so ruthlessly turned her back on him. At first the surprise and excitement had deadened the pain of the real heart agony at losing the girl of his choice, but by and by, when he had settled down to cheap lunches and cheaper boarding house accommodations, the old longings came back upon him too strongly to be resisted. He went away, and no one took the trouble to ask where he had disappeared to. The public memory is apt to be short when the private purse is likewise. She was a beautiful girl, and a truly good one, this girl that he loved, but worshipping her at a distance, as he had secretly done for two years, he had not sounded her heart. She always welcomed him cordially and smiled upon him in such a happy, winning manner that he felt sure she did not find his society a bore. All this came to him on St. Valentine's eve, as he passed and jests and odor of stale beer made him sick. Yet there was no choice for him; it was this or starve, and, though Dick was a gentleman, he did not care to die like one, if dying of starvation embodied that idea of a blue blood's demise.

For a moment he could not answer, then, drawing his hand across his eyes hastily, he answered: "Kathleen! Yes, it is I, but you-

ADDRES

To-night, as he was crashing away at the accompaniment of the latest song success, rendered by a painted, powdered young woman, with a shrill, cracked concert-hall voice, Dick began to think of a certain evening, two years before that very night, when he sat near a true girl, a sweet, womanly girl, who wore his valentine offering of violets on her breast. He forgot for the moment the surroundings, his own shabby appearance, and again stood on the threshhold of what seemed a happy, useful life. Suddenly, as his thoughts took this turn a girl stood beside him, not the girl with the shrill voice, and the music stopped.

With a white face Dick sprang to his feet, hardly believing his eyes, while the growling of the audience and the excited voices of the proprietors of the place told that something unexpected had happened.

But he did not turn to see what it on St. Valentine's eve, as he passed and repassed her house, looking up at the windows, hoping to catch one glimpse quietly and happily—yes, happily—into Among the best needle workers in quietly and happily—yes, happily—into

"It means that you have been a fool-ish, wicked boy," said she softly, plac-ing her hand in his again, "and that some time ago I determined to find you. Do you remember what you told me-what your eyes told me-that last night on the stairs? Well, so do I, and, Dick, I couldn't stand it when you went away. I have enough for us both-and, dear, I do love you! Now will you understand? I have searched for you for months, Dick. Do not humiliate me by refusing to come with me now." Dick, still dazed, stood on the walk, when a boy in threadbare clothes came down the street crying for sale the last remnant of hs day's wares, a bunch of violets.

"My valentine," cried Kathleen, and Dick, now thoroughly roused, dived deep into his pocket, found enough to buy the flowers, and sent the boy home happy.

A Pair of Ghosts.

By MARIAN F. STOCKTON.

The winter night was clear, and with that delightful sharpness in the air that makes young spirits buoyant. 'The snow crackled crisply and musically under my feet. The white roads looked very inviting in the gleam of the starlight, and I pictured myself flying over them in our red sleigh, with Jenny Carroll by my side, all tucked in snugly with buffalo robes to keep her dear little self warm. She had promised to ride with me at moonrise, which would be at nine o'clock. It was now seven, and I was on my way home from the village store. I was doing so well on the farm, that I thought I was justified in ask-ing Jenny to be my wife, and I felt sure that she cared for me a little; perhaps not enough, though for that-I could not be certain. At all events, I intended to ask her, for she was not likely to tell me unless I did; and, as I walked home in the starlight, I concluded it would not be amiss to ask her this important question that very evening, during our ride.

An extinguisher was clapped over my buoyant spirits at the supper table, by the announcement that our horse was dead lame. We had but one horse at that time, but he was a fine, spirited creature and a first-rate trotter; and that he should have contrived to get something into his foot on that particular day was certainly most provoking. There was no help for it, however. The foot had been doctored and tied up, and there was an end of him for that night. It was a great disappointment to me, and I knew it would be to Jenny, for the sweet little thing loved sleighing as well as she did sugar-plums. "I must have a horse from some-where, father," I said, "for I promised Jenny Carroll a ride."

"That's unlucky," said father, "for Jim Bent and Fred Hackett are both going to take their sweethearts sleighing, as I happen to know. I don't know where you can get a horse, ex-cept at Carrolls'."

"Oh, that will never do!" I said. "I have it! I'll ask old Andrew Sprin-ger to lend me his horse. Davy is venerable and rather stiff in the legs, but he will do on a pinch."

"Don't build your hopes on that," id father. "Old Andrew is very said father. cross-grained."

'Yes, but I am a special favorite, and he has already loaned me Davy three times. It comes in my way occasion-ally to do him a favor."

I saw that father was incredulous, but I felt sure I would get the horse. So I tramped willingly enough over the snow, for I did not mind a mile walk to please Jenny, and, returning, I could ride the horse. I was not long in reaching Andrew Springer's place, where I found everything as still as the grave. I had not been there for a month. There was not even a dog to greet me with a bark. Everything about the place was old; the house, the stable, the itbuilding the tences. and Andrew was very old; he had two servants older still; and the age of Davy, the horse, was put at fabulous figures by the villagers. But, somehow, all these old things seemed to possess amazing vitality, and there were certain legends current among us young folks, all tending to show that old Andrew was a very successful practitioner of the black art. We took pleasure in pretending to believe these stories, though we knew well enough that Andrew was nothing in the world but a crusty, musty, stingy old man. For some reason he had always been especially gracious to me. and, as I was the only individual he favored, with his smiles, I plumed myself very much thereupon. But when I entered his room, after my brisk walk. I found him looking as sour as a crabapple, and just about as hard and knobby. Old Chrissy, his maid-servant, had opened the door in answer to my knock. Her face was puckered into more wrinkles than she had hairs on her head : and her light, fishy eves had a peculiar cost in them which did not add to the beauty of her countenance,

She looked especially ugly that night, I thought; and as she flared the candle up in my face she gave me a sinister glance and vanished into the darkness without a word. This was of no con-sequence, for I knew which was Andrew's room. I found him in it, busily engaged writing in a dilapidated old ledger, by the light of a tallow candle. "Good evening, Mr. Springer," said I. "I will not interrupt you. I came to see if you would lend—""

He looked up quickly and interrupted "Lend, indeed !" he said, snappishly.

'No money coming in, and-"It is not money I want," I said, interrupting him in my turn, "but your horse

'Oh, my horse! old Davy?"

"Yes, old Davy. I will take good care of him, and not drive him fast. "Now that's a different thing from money, ain't it?" he said, good humoredly, and then he began to chuckle. "You're welcome enough to old Davy," he added, presently; "but my man don't live here, and has gone away for the unlocked it, and we both entered. No I entered and examined the third. sooner were we inside than the door went to with a bang, and out went the light!

"I turned the open side of the land tern out," muttered Chrissy, "and now

I'll have to go back and light it." "No. you won't," said I, sharply. Open the door, and I'll find the horse." "You can't do it," said Chrissy, as she opened the door and slipped out. Bang went the door again, and 1 was alone in the pitchy darkness.

The darkness did not terrify me, but I was immediately conscious of a vague feeling of uneasiness, as if there were something "uncanny" about the place. It was foolish, of course, but I felt as if I should breathe more freely outside, and in a few minutes I would return and get the horse without waiting for Chrissy. The door opened with a latch, I noticed, and after some fumbling I found it, lifted it up, and pushed against the door. It was locked!

I whistled and walked up and down the narrow space near the door, trying to think that this was only an odd freak of old Chrissy's to keep me from doing any mischief, but my courage grew less with every moment. I recalled the looks and actions of both master and servant, and now these seemed fraught with sinister meanings. They could not supnight, and if I go to the stable with pose I had any money. What diaboli-you I'll be laid up for a week. But I cal purpose could they have for doing

If was clear enough that I had been enticed into the stable for some evil purpose. The ugly stories I had heard about old Andrew rushed into my memory, and I was thinking that, perhaps, his mysterious reputation was due to a blacker art than any we had fancifully ascribed to him, when I heard directly opposite to me the hoarse breathing of a horse. I listened breathlessly. There could be no mistake; and, to put the matter past doubt, I heard him rubbing against his stall. How could I have overlooked such a great creature as a horse! The idea was absurd. But I could distinctly hear the breathing and the rubbing, and I rushed into the stall without regard to kicks. It was as empty as before! While I stood ir-resolute I heard the same rubbing noise in the last stall, and immediately after a faint thumping of hoofs on the floor. I knew now the situation of the stalls, and I flew around to this last one, but I found nothing. What could it mean? Had a phantom horse taken up his abode there? Had Chrissy been abode there? Had Chrissy been frightened by these ghostly noises, and had she locked me in there to find out whether I could also hear them? Just here there came a heavy stamping and an impatient pawing very near me. That could be no phantom. It was a flesh and blood animal of some kind, and, moreover, it was certainly in the next stall. But when I walked in I encountered only vacancy, and, on examining the first stall again, I found it to contain nothing.

I had never put any faith in ghostly apparitions or ghostly noises, but now that my skepticism was compelled to face this mystery, I think it must have given way, for I felt as if little lumps of ice were chasing each other down my back, and my heart beat loudly. At that moment old Andrew, with club, pistol, or whatever murderous weapon he might select, would have been welcome to me compared with this phantom horror. I must have had a grain of courage and a small fraction of common-sense left, for I tried to convince myself that there was nothing frightful in the breathing of a horse, whether phantom or otherwise. What harm could that possibly do me? But this question did not stop the beating of my heart or check the lumps of ice.

Even this last flickering spark went out when, standing within the middle stall, close by the manger, with my hand upon it, I distinctly felt the board move, as the phantom horse rubbed its head against it; and immediately after the head was raised, and there came from out the empty air a loud whinny close to my ear!

"He cowed down on the floor, and shrieked: 'Oh, good Lord! It's Davy! Help! Chrissy.'" guess Chrissy will go with you. She is | as tough as a pine-knot."

In vain I protested that I could find my way to the stable and the horse if he would furnish me with a lantern. "It was a crooked way," he said, "and Chrissy did not mind going." I remained in the room while he went into the kitchen, and he soon returned and told me Chrissy was ready, upon which I took my leave of him with many thanks for the service he had rendered me. I found Chrissy in the kitchen, opening cupboard doors and peering under shelves and grumbling with all her might. It presently appeared that she was searching for a lantern, which she at last produced-a forlorn old concern, with one of the glasses out. In this lantern she stuck a lighted piece of candle, and declared herself ready. was impatient enough by this time, and insisted that she should give me the lanfern and let me go alone to the stable, but she declared that she must obey her master's orders. I thought perhaps old Andrews had hidden some of his gold in the stable, and they were afraid I had come to search for it. The way to that stable certainly was "crooked," and it seemed to me that the stars gave very little light, and the lantern only shed a feeble gleam; but we reached the door at last, and Chrissy away with me? I knew nothing about the stable or the buildings around it, and there was no house within half a mile.

Suddenly I conceived the brilliant idea of taking the horse out of the stall and bridling him. I had brought a bridle with me, intending to ride the horse back home. It was not quite clear to my mind what I would do with him. I think it was my purpose to jump on his back and use him as a weapon of defence. And then it occurred to me for the first time as strange that during all the noise at the door, and my walk-ing and whistling, I had heard no movement whatever from the horse. Apparently our proceedings had not aroused his attention. I groped along, feeling for the stalls -very cautiously, for I had a reasonable fear of receiving a kick if I came suddenly near old Davy's hind legs. I found the first stall, and slipped quietly in close to the side, until I reached the marger. Here I was safe, and I began in a coaxing tone. "Whoa, old Davy! Whoa, sir!" and stretched out my hand. I encountered only vacancy. I fe't along the floor with my feet. There was no litter of straw and no horse lying down. I felt my way into the second stall, where I went through the same forms I had in the first, and

I could bear no more. I rushed to the window, shook the shutter frantically, and rattled the rusty bolt with the desperation of terror. The whole thing gave way, and fell with a crash into the yard, and I lost no time in vaulting out. The moon was shining brightly to raise my spirits, and I ran swiftly from the horrible place. I did not go home, but to the Cariolls', who lived much nearer. Disordered in dress, but still more disordered in mind, I burst into their family circle and told my tale.

Simon Merval was there, and as soon as I had finished, he exclaimed:

"Why, old Davy died two weeks ago! I know it, for I hought his skin."

"Then you really did see a ghost-I mean hear one?" cried Jenny, most de-lightfully excited. "But if you had to meet a ghost, it is a great pity that it was that of a horse!"

After the matter had been talked over for a few moments, and I had become calmer, it was decided that Simon, the two Carroll brothers and myself should at once return, armed with different weapons, and explore this mystery; for, though I gave up the phost theory as with the same result. You Are To Be The One to say whether it has or not, whether it did its work or failed, whether we are right or wrong. We leave it entirely for YOU TO DECIDE. You get the evidence, weigh it carefully during thirty days, note your bodily feelings and then pass your calm judgement upon it. It is ALL left to you.

The only evidence we want to put in your hands is a full-sized one dollar package of Vitae-Ore, enough to last you one whole month's time. This package we want you to use, at our risk and expense in sending it, to PROVE TO YOU what Vitae-Ore is, to prove to you what Vitae-Ore will do for you, to prove to you how Vitae-Ore cures. This is all the evidence we offer, for a trial proves its power.

You Can JUDGE It BY What It Does.

You Can JUDGE It BY What It Does.
All we ask is a fair verdict. We say if you are sick, if you are not feeling right, that you need Vitae-Ore. We say that one package of Vitae-Ore will prove its power in curing disease, and therefore send it to you on trial without payment of a cent, you to be the judge. You judge it by judging HOW YOU FEEL after you have used it for one month.
You know if you feel better, if you sleep sounder, if you digest your food easier, if your Stomach and Liver do not bother you, if your Limbs and Back do not trouble you, if your Heart does not disturb you, if your Kidneys are acting right, if you are stronger, more active and have more red blood in your veins. You can easily judge after one month's trial if HEALTH is returning to your body. If not, YOU DO NOT PAY, Man not for words, and if the work is not done to your satisfaction, you don't pay a penny. You alone are to be the judge. We take all of the risk. You are the one to say "YES" or "NO." Read our thirty-day trial ofter, read what Vitae-Ore is and write for a dollar package on trial.

Our 30-Day Trial Offer! If You Are Sick we want to send you a full sized $1.00 package treatment, by mall, postpaid, and we want to send it to you on go days' continuous of vant a penny-we just want you to try it, just want a letter from you asking for it, and will be glad to send it to you. We take absolutely all the risk-we take all chances. You don't risk a penny! All we ask is that you use V.-O, for go days and pay us $1.00 if it has helped you, if you are satisfied that it has done you more than $1.00 worth of positive, actual, visible good. Otherwise you pay nothing, we sak nothing, we want nothing. Can you not spare 100 minutes during the next go days to try it? Can you not give s minutes to write for it, s minutes to properly prepare it upon its arrival, and 3 minutes each day for 30 days to use it. That is all it takes. Cannot you give 100 minutes time if it means new health, new strength, new blood, new force, new energy, vigor, life and happiness? You are to be the judge. We are satisfied with your decision, are perfectly willing to trust or your honor, to your judgment, as to whether or not V.-O, has benefited you. Read what V-O, is, and write today for a dollar package on this most liberal trial offer.

WHAT VITAE-ORE IS.

Vitæ-Ore is a mineral remedy, a combination of substances from which many world's noted curative springs derive medicinal power and healing virtue. These properties of the springs come from the natural deposits of virtue. These properties of the springs come from the natural deposits of mineral in the earth through which water forces its way, only a very small proportion of the medicinal substances in these minerals peing thus taken up by the liquid. Vitæ-Ore consists of compounds of Iron, Sulphur, and Magnesium, elements which are among the chief curative agents in nearly every healing mineral spring, and are necessary for the creation and retention of health. One package of this mineral substance, mixed with a quart of water, equals in medicinal strength and curative, healing value many gallons of the world's powerful mineral waters drunk fresh at the springs.

GORRIE. ONTARIO. We owe much to Vitze-Ore, my husband my brother and myself, and in recommending it to our friends and neighbors we try only to repay a small part of the debt. For many years I suffered with a sore back; it hurt me to bend it, to pick up something from the floor; at times the pain would be so bad I could hardly move. Then Sciatica developed and the misery I suffered was indeed something terrible. I tried every medicine and treatment which I thought would do me any good, but got very little benefit. I was almost without hope of relief when I saw the

A NEW RECORD ESTABLISHED!

The Great-West Life Assurance Company has pleasure in announcing that its new Business in Canada for 1907 exceeded $ 1,000,000,-the largest amount ever written in Canada by any Company, and thus a new record is established.

It is highly significant that this great business has been secured at LOWER COST than in any previous yearand a further advantage is found in the fact that the death rate for the year has been unusually low. These conditions prove the wisdom of the conservative methods adopted by The Great-West management.

The high rate of interest earnings on investments has been well maintained-with the natural sequel of low premium rates and high profits to the Policy-holders.

fireside, yet it was evident that some evil plot had been hatched in the stable. We walked very rapidly, and were soon at the stableyard, into which we crept cautiously. I peeped into the window, but I could see nothing, for the moonlight did not penetrate far into the stable. After listening a moment, and finding all was still, we quietly climbed through the window and took our station in one of the haunted stalls. I was anxious now for the ghostly noises to recommence, but the phantom creature remained most provokingly quiet.

"They will be sure to think that I have imagined it all, and a pretty laughing stock I'll be!" was my not very pleasant reflection. But in a few minutes my apprehensions on this score were relieved, for the rubbing noise commenced with more violence than it had before; but it was not in the stalls, or very near them, and was unaccompanied by any of the former manifestations. It soon became evident that it was caused by the pushing open of a door over a wooden floor. This could scarcely be a horse, either real or ghostly; and it must be an inner door, for the outer one would have let in the moonlight.

There was a breathless moment of suspense, and then we heard a man's footstep falling on the floor. The lumps of ice again began chasing each other down my back. This was worse than the ghost. Here was the danger that had been prepared for me! I did not doubt that it was Andrew come to murder me! It was horror I felt-not fear. There was nothing to fear with four against one. But I thought what might have been but for the friendly window. Tramp! tramp! went the footsteps over the floor, but they did not seem to come any nearer. Presently we heard the door-latch lifted, then 'the door was shaken. "Confound it!" cried a voice, which I recognized as Andrew's. "While I have been playing a trick on Marston, that old witch has played one on me." I could hear the boys tittering near me, while Andrew rattled at the door, and the lumps of ice gave place to a tingling sensation of shame. But a happy thought came to me. I whis-pered, "Keep quiet!" and, with a stick of wood, which was one of our weapons, I made a few strokes on the floor, imitating as nearly as I could, the prancing of a horse.

The old man instantly became quiet, and I felt sure that he was frightened, more than I had been, probably, for he knew his horse was dead, and I had been ignorant of the fact. Then I Then I made a few more pawings, and breathed hoarsely.

"Oh, Lord!" muttered Andrew. "What is that?"

Here I rubbed against the side of the stall with all my might, and then commenced stamping toward the old man; and, as I approached him, I broke into what was intended for a whinny, though the boys said afterward it was more like a bray.

Andrew was too thoroughly fright-ened to be critical. He cowed down on the floor, and shrieked:

"Oh, good Lord! It's Davy! Help! Chrissy! Help! Don't hurt me, Davy! I killed you to save you pain. I gave

One of you get out of the window, and unlock the door; I expect the key is in it. Come into the house, and I'll give you some hot mulled cider."

I sprang out of the window, and found that the key had been left in the door. I released the prisoners, and we all proceeded to the house, where we found Chrissy fast asleep by the kit-chen-stove. She started up in aston-ishment at our entrance.

"I was just a coming to let you out, Mr. Springer," she said. "I was kind o' in a doze." "Doze!" said Andrew, angrily;

"you've slept like a rock for half the night, and left me to freeze!" "And serve you right," muttered the old woman, "a-playing tricks at your time o' life!"

While Andrew was brewing the mulled cider, he told us that old Davy being dead, he had bought a younger and more reliable horse, which had not yet been sent home. He had been thinking that very day that Marston might sometimes worry him by borrowing this horse, as he was the only one who ever did ask for the loan of old Davy. He didn't believe in trusting young men with valuable horses to go sweetheart-ing with. Sending old Davy, he didn't mind so much. And when I appeared that evening, asking for the horse that had been dead two weeks, he was "mightily tickled." He began to think if he could not turn it to profit, and he contrived the plot which he had carried out. He had never known anybody so brave he couldn't be scared by a ghost. He arranged it all with Chrissy when he went into the kitchen. She pretended to look for the lantern, and led me the longest way to the stable, to give him time to get to the cowhouse, which adjoined the stable, on the side where the stalls were, the partition not running up to the roof, so that every noise made there could be distinctly heard in the stable. Chrissy was to put the lan-tern out, and lock me in, and in about half an hour was to return and quietly unlock the door. It was supposed that by that time I would be thoroughly frightened and glad to run away, and when I was fairly gone, Andrew would also leave. The entrance to the cow-house was boarded up, and there was no way of getting in or out except through the stable.

One of his youthful accomplishments had been whinnying like a horse, and so he had been able to play me a very clever trick. He had heard the noise of the falling shutter, but did not know what it was. But when all had been still in the stable for some time, he concluded I had gone, and attempting to go out himself found, to his surprise, that the door was locked. He had no idea he had been in there so long, he said in conclusion, and he thought he must have "dozed a little." Chrissy had certainly dozed, and entirely forgotten him.

The old man was so amused at the counter trick I had played him, and complimented me so much on my excellent acting that I could not but forgive him. He told me he should insist now upon my using the new horse whenever I liked, but of this generous offer I never availed myself. He urged us to stay and he would brew us an-

The boys could restrain themselves no longer, and burst into a roar of laughter, in which I could join, now that I had retaliated on old Andrew with his own weapons.

The old man scrambled up from the floor. "Is that you, Marston?" he said. "Who is with you?"

Here I gave him a brief account of events, taking care not to admit that I was in the least alarmed at what I had heard in the stable. I had found the window broken, the shutter open, and escaped, I said, carelessly, in con-clusion. And then I angrily demanded what he meant by playing me such a trick

But we were anxious to return and relieve Jenny's mind, for she doubtless imagined that we were devoured by goblins.

She was glad to receive us in safety, but was greatly disappointed to find that, after all, there was no ghost. "That is always the way!" she said; "the ghost stories that promise to be so delightful are all spoiled by some mis-erable explanation."

But she was not disappointed in another story I told her that evening. For I asked her to be my wife, and she said she thought it was a great deal nicer in a parlor than in a sleigh, and I thought so, too.

IMPORTANT For over 25 years we've been testing and testing to find out the best. We know what countries and places produce the strongest and best seeds in different varieties. We are the stoutest advocates of Northern-grown seeds, but within bounds. As a rule, the season in Western Canada is a little short for "perfect maturity" in vegetable seeds, outside of two or three varieties. How about the season 1907? Plenty of grain got the frost. Do you think tender vegetable seeds escaped? Seed may test close to 100% germination and still be inferior seed. The question is, is the germination quick and strong? Give us the strong germ of "fully matured" seed to start quickly or to hang-on when the game goes hard. WE WORK TO selected pure seeds, in hardy, early, prolific strains, grown as far north as safe to ensure perfect maturity with freedom from frost. This principle suits the grower who really knows seeds and explains in part the high position attained by our seeds among the best Market Gardeners—men who depend upon the garden for their living.

He liked to set at maught established conventional Like many other Like many other residents of Camp Hilarity, he was reticent regarding his past. It was known that he had come to Colorado known that he had come to Colorado from "the States" in what he called the "good old days of fifty-nine," and that he had been "mixed up" with every great boom in the Rocky Mountains since that time. He had a restless spirit and one that fed on excitement. Not even the weight of years could lessen his eager interest in a "boom." The old man had the reckless generosity of most miners, and had been known to share his last dollar with some "poor cuss" who had appealed to him. Indeed, there was much that was commendable in the old man, and at times there was something wonderfully winning in him. At the age of seventy, Dad Kinney had made and lost several fortunes, and was living a hand-to-mouth existence in Camp Hilarity, and no man in it was a happier exponent of good cheer. It was his boast that he never "squealed" over the misfortunes that had befallen him. Old Dad was a resident of Camp Hilarity long after the boom had subsided. A sudden and sharp attack of pneumonia had laid him low in his

One stormy night in December five or six of "the boys" fought their way against a wind with an edge like a blade, and reached Old Dad's cabin "just to be sociable," as Jack Harney said. Old Dad had given them his usual cheery and noisy welcome. He placed boxes and stools for them around the fire, and piled on a fresh supply of pine knots. He was on his "high horse" that night, as one of the men said. Suddenly he stopped in the midst of a jolly song and said: "Say, boys, you know what comes next week?"

"What for instance?" asked Big Andy

Old Dad scratched his head with its great shock of grisly iron-gray hair and said:

"Hanged if I ain't stumped for once in my life. We're all too near bed rock in our finances to do much, but I'll be derned if the day shall go by without something being did. Gimme a day or two to think the matter over, will ye?'

The next day was one of more than ordinary interest in Camp Hilarity, be-cause it brought the bi-weeky mail. Old dad rarely received a letter, but on this day there was one for him bearing the Denver postmark. It was in a bright yellow envelope addressed in a sprawling hand that the old man did not recognize. A storm was brew-ing and Old Dad hurried homeward as soon as he had received his letter and his Denver papers. Within the cabin he threw off his great bearskin coat and buckskin gloves with cuffs reaching to his elbows, and hung his big fur cap on a wooden peg in the wall. Then he lighted a tallow candle and sat down with it in one hand and the letter in the other. He glanced at the signature of the letter, and said to himself: "Old Bill Heffner! What in time

He did not finish the sentence, for a thin slip of printed paper slipped from the envelope and fell to the floor, and

"What's this? Why, it's—yes, by gum, if it ain't a check! An' for an even thousand dollars! Am I asleep or awake? What's it all mean?"

He turned to the letter for infor-ination, and read these words:

"Well, if that ain't bread cast on the waters I'd like to know what is,' said the old man, slowly nodding his head to and fro. "Bill Heffner's white, that's just what he is! I'll write and tell him so before I go to sleep this night. If this don't come in the very nick o' time, fer a two-dollar bill is the extent o' my cash boodle. I'll just fasten my feet to a pair o' snowshoes and scun over to Lead City and cash this near little slip o' paper to-morrow. I reckon it will make me about the flushest man in camp. Some o' the poor cusses ain't got a dollar to their names. Makes a kind of a tough outlook fer Christmas fer 'em.' He sat for a long time in silence betore the fire with the check in his hand. The letter dropped to the floor, but Old Dad held the check lightly between his thumb and finger. Presently he sat erect, slapped one leg with his open hand, and said: "I'll do it! I'll give the boys a Christmas blowout with this check, or a part of it! There ain't more than thirty of us left in camp. I'll invite the hull caboodle of 'em to dinner at Denny Thompson's tavern. It's many a day since Denny set up a dinner to that many, and I've my suspicions that he'll never git a chance to do it ag'in. I'll give the boys a dinner and a good time all round that will cheer them up for many a day."

morning and held a conference with Denny I hompson, proprietor of the Delmonico Hotel, the only building of two storeys in the camp. Denny fell in readily with Old Dad's plan and agreed to "spread himself" in the way of a dinner for the boys on Christmas day. Then Old Dad attached himself to a pair of snowshoes and slipped away down the gulch in the direction of Lead City, with two or three stout canvas ore bags on his back. These were for the purpose of holding a few 'gimcracks in the way of seegars an' sich" for the boys.

It was down grade all the way to Lead City, and Old Dad found himseif in that camp by ten o'clock. Lead City was almost as dead as Camp Hilarity, but it still had a daily mail, a bank and three or four paying mines giving employment to about one hundred men. There was a large and well-stocked general store, for the camp was the base of supplies for many miners in the gulches and small camps round about.

Having cashed his check ar filled his ore bags with "gimcracks," Old Dad started on his homeward way. This homeward journey would be slow-er and more difficult than had been the journey to Lead City. There would be some stiff climbing and the ore bags on the old man's back were heav "I feel sure-enough like a old Santy

There were some things in the bags on his back over which he chuckled merrily as he walked over the snowy His fun-loving spirit had intrail. His fun-loving spirit had in-duced him to make some queer pur-chases. He had in one bag a large and gorgeously attired wax doll he proposed to present to Big Andy Taft, who was six feet four and "tipped the beam" at two hundred and eighty pounds. Then he had a glittering toy rattle-box with a horn in the handle for Joey Moss. There were tin railroad trains and other childish toys for some of the trail. other childish toys for some of the other men, and several pounds of striped stick candy, with which Old Dad proposed to have "slathers of fun" at his Christmas dinner on the morrow. He was within a couple of miles of his cabin on his homeward way, and the sun, a great golden ball, was slipping down behind old Paradise Mountain, and the black shadows in the gulc'i were lengthening on the snow. Sudden-ly the old ly the old man stopped short on the trail. A thin column of smoke was rising on the mountain slope far above him. He saw it was coming up from among the stunted pines at the edge of the timber line, and an oath came from between his bearded lips.

"If that smoke ain't comin' from the little cabin on my Sweet Lavendar claim then I'm a liar!" he said, angrily. 'And if some sneak of a claim-jumper has jumped that claim of mine the Lord help him! Big Andy said yesterday that they had nabbed a couple of claim jumpers over in Stray Horse Gulch. It looks mightily to me as if one had lit down on my claim now, and I'll know whether he has or not be fore I sleep. It's going to be a moon-light night, and I shan't mind getting nome late. There'll be trouble if I find a claim-jumper on Sweet Lavendar. I have a feeling that its going to open up into something big in the spring." The nature of the "trouble" in store for the possible claim-jumper may be inferred from the fact that before he started up the trail toward the elaim he took a pair of villainous-looking pistols from his belt and examined them carefully to make sure that they were in perfect order. "A claim-jumper don't deserve no more mercy than a hoss thief," said Old Dad, as he went up the trail.

It was slow and difficult work climbing the steep snow-covered trail leading up to the Sweet Lavendar claim. The full moon came riding up above the highest peaks of the distant mountain range before the old man had gone half way up the trail. The stars came out and the snow on the mountain slopes began to glisten. The old man cast a long and grotesque shadow on the snow, and the trees took on queer

It was nine o'clock when he came within sight of the cabin. An angry oath escaped his lips when he saw a light streaming forth from the one little window beside the cabin door. He shook his head savagely and muttered dire threats against the "ornery cuss" within the cabin. Then he crept forth cautiously, with his hand on the butt of one of his pistols, ready to fire in-stantly should the invader detect his presence and come forth to open the attack. He crept up to the little window and peeped in, and as he did so his hand fell from the butt of the pistol and his mouth opened and closed in speechless surprise. He saw a careworn looking woman sitting by a smouldering fire on the hearth, mending a little stocking. Two other stockings were dangling from the rough pine board shelf on the chimney above the fireplace, and over in a bunk in a corner he saw the curly hads of two children sleeping under some oll grey blankets. He saw a rude pine cradle near the fireplace, and the woman rocked it gently with one foot as she passed the needle in and out the stock-Old Dad looked in on the scene ing. with gaping mouth and staring eyes. He saw the woman hang the third little stocking with the others, and then she put into each two or three little cakes, and into the largest stocking she thrust a poor little rag doll. It was apparently all she had, and the thought of her poverty seemed suddenly to depress her, for she burst into tears and stood before the little stockings with a corner of her apron held to her eyes.

Then Old Dad laid his hand on the latch of the cabin door. It yielded to his touch and the door opened. He stepped into the cabin, and when the woman turned with a half-uttered cry of affright, he pointed toward the sleeping children and said, softly: "Sh-sh-sh! I'm Santy Claws!" She sat down on an old chest in a corner, and watched him with staring eyes as he took the bags from his back, set them on the floor and drew forth a great doll, toys of several kinds, candy, oranges, nuts, raisins. He filled the stockings to overflowing and set the doll on the mantel. Then he took a purse from his pocket and dropped some shining yellow coins into each stocking. He looked not unlike a veritable Santa Claug, with his long gray beard and his bushy hair hanging to his shoulders. Before he went away he said quietly to the woman:

The body is mem-ory, imagination, spirit—soul—force;—in other words, character. Money may be the key to this world, but character is the key to eternity. A biographer of Tennyson records the following— "Some girl in his presence spoke of a marriage, lately arranged between two acquaintances of her own, as a 'penniles' marriage. How careless some people are in their conversation. Without re-gard for or reference to the nuture, they utter sentence after sentence, never dreaming that the human memory is prone to store away for future reference remarks carelessly made and words thoughtlessly flung off by a flippant tongue. A new danger for the careless conversationalist has recently developed, and that in connection with the telephone. It may be new to some people, but conversation over the telephone is not always a secret affair: The New York Even-ing Post mentions the following incident:---"A young woman in this city was recently urged by another to tell a secret over the telephone, but deanother to tell a secret over the telephone, but de-clined for fear she might be overheard. After a second urging, Central broke in cheerfully with, 'O go on; tell her; I won't listen.'" The same paper adds that to-day the police force and detec-tive agency make large use of the telephone in order to discover necessary secrets.

A man's character is not de-GET UP AGAIN. termined by the number of times he falls, but by the number of times he rises again. The great generals have been defeated again and again, but in the end they conquered. Our leading politicians have failed of a majority more than once, but they were determined to win and rule. The most unlikely man to be elected governor of Massachusetts was the odd and eccentric "Ben" Butler. He failed of election again and again, but one morning the citizens of New England awoke to discover that he was the chosen governor of the Bay State. Every famous writer has had a book rejected. Experience is a great teacher. And among the many lessons taught by experience is—sympathy. BAND WW TO TO what we have realized in ourselves we can more willy appreciate in others. In the hour of ironble in me have the sympathy of some mortal whose hear has been broken by a similar experience. Henry Clay Trumbull bearing that a neighbor with whom he had no acquisintance had just lost his daughter by death, stepped across the way and calling upon the unfortunate man said, "I do not know you but I know what you are passing through." What a splendid munifestation of sym-pathy. Listen to the words of the Rev. Charles Deems, with reference to the loss of his child: "It was as though I had been stabbed in the heart with a darger of ice. Oh, how different the far and the near! A quarter of a century lies between that death and this writing, but that dead babe to-day has more power over me than any living man. He walks the streets with me. He goes to all the vanish of infants. Before his death I did not know how to talk at the funeral of a babe. Now I know at least how to sympathize with the parents. When a man comes into my house and tells me with quivering lips that there is a baby lying dead in his home, I go with him, led by the hand of a little child whose mortal body was buried a quarter of a century ago." Great opportunities are not far away-they are as near as the blade of grass which touches the toe of your

A Southern preacher says con-cerning a parishioner: "When I was pastor in Knoxville, Tennessee, I went out to Third Creek Church on one occasion with some of my brethren. After dinner, we were standing out on the lawn, when our host said to us, 'Do you see that little mountain yonder? I sold that mountain to a company of men for forty dollars. Now, do you see

A FRIEND'S JUDGMENT.

When you are doubtful of yourself, it is very often safe to trus. the judgment of a sincere friend.

When others believe in you, why should you not believe in yourself? Luther as a young man had no faith in his ability to preach. He argued the question with Dr. Staupitz. Dr. Staupitz affirmed that Luther should preach. Luther said, "I had fifteen reasons against it, and fifteen more when they were done. 'Doctor,' I used to say, 'you want to kill me. I shall not live three months if you compel me to go on.' 'Our Lord.' the doctor would reply, 'Our Lord requires the aid of able men; He needs your services, and must have them.'" And so Luther became a preacher. Yes, and the greatest preacher of his generation. The old doctor was right; he knew Luther better than Luther knew himself. You remember that Knox was also crowded into the ministry. He only accepted a call when it was forced upon him. His friends recognized his ability long before he discovered himself.

The Canada of 1759. 途廉重奏奏 Few countries have, within modern times, been Few countries have, within modern times, been subjected to more sweeping changes in the matter of territory than has Canada. This fact is recalled to mind by the publication, through the Dominion Archives Department, of documents relating to the constitutional history of Canada—documents select-ed and edited by Prof. Shortt, and the Dominion Archivist. Included in these papers is a report prepared by Gen. Murray, for the information of the Home Government, in 1762—shortly after the acquisition of Canada by the British Crown. Gen. Murray says in this report that it was impossible to ascertain from the records which had fallen into his passession exactly what territories the French had claimed under the general name of Canada Gen. Cage, however, in a statement submitted with his possession exactly what territories the French had claimed under the general name of Canada Gen. Gage, however, in a statement submitted with that of Gen. Murray, declared that not only was the inclusion of the Great Lakes indisputable, but he believed the same was true of the whole course of the Mississippi from its head to the junction with the Illinois. This would take in where the city of St. Louis in Missouri now stands and cover as well what are to-day the States of Minnesota Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana and Ohio On the other hand, Canada at that time did not include the Maritime Provinces or the vast terri-tories now forming the Western Provinces of the Confederation. These were under British control, but they were not then part of Canada. The mar-vel of it all is that the French, with a settled popu-lation of little more than that of the present city of Brantford, were able even to maintain even nominal jurisdiction over a country with a string of posts covering Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, Detroit, Mackinac, and the great rivers of the Middle West -Toronto Glabe.

Marconi's Triumph.

Less than six years ago a young Italian inventor successfully established wireless communication be-tween the Isle of Wight and the Lizards, in Corn-wall, England. The distance is 183 miles, and scientific experts marvelled at Signor Marconi's achievement. Now there have flashed across the Atlantic Ocean wireless messages proclaiming to all the world that the transmission of "airgrams" had begun in earnest; that the commercial value of the service now took precedence over the experi-ments of the past. Three thousand miles of space to cross, and not an arm's length of outstretched wire to speed along the words that will work a telegraphic revolution! And more than this, the epoch-making message sent eastward by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, from the Nova Scotia station, and which reached Clifden, on the Irish coast, produced no undue excitement in the public mind. The triumph of Guglielmo Marconi would be incomplete to-day were the world to overlook the energy and patience that made possible what he accomplished. Like Edison and Bell, in their respective spheres and Edison and Bell, in their respective spheres and generations, this young Italian wizard worked in-defatigably until he reached his goal. Those un-initiated in the laboratory researches of the inventor can never fathom the periods of despair, the elusive-ness of that of which he is in quest, the moments when all that has gone before seems so much pervous energy gone wrong. Sir Hiram Maxim was among the first to congratulate the young inventor, and a message sent President Roosevelt by the Daily Mail of London was couched in terms that bespoke the satisfaction of the British nation be-cause of this further means to stretch forth friendly hands across the sea. Port Morien, bleak as it is, has written its name large on the page of history. The new era of telegraphic interchange will date from October 17, 1907.—London Telegraph.

Scots Wha Hae.

Macaulay observes that after James VI. of Scotland became James I. of England "Scotlish adventurers poured southward and obtained in all the walks of life a prosperity which excited much envy, but which was in general only the just re-ward of prudence and industry." Judging from the fact that Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman and his predecessor in the Premiership are both of Scottish origin, the Caledonians are still fairly prudent and industrious. TOW TRE BELL Labor in Japan.

The correspondent of The Manchester Guardian in Japan throws some light upon the industrial disquiet due to Japan's sudden leap from the simple arts and handicrafts to the employment of the most elaborate machinery in her workshops. The sudden change has proved extremely disastrous to the old artisan class; and the people have not yet adjusted themselves to the new era of machinery and whole-sale production. The consequent social discontent is widespread. But added to this is the heartless-ness of Japan's labor system; in fact, here is where the emigration movement gains its chief impetus. The worker is ground down to a degree that would not be tolerated in a western nation. The wage system is oppressive and bears particularly hard upon the women. Starvation wages are the rule even in Tokio, whose artisans are the best paid in the whole empire. The smallness of the wage has been recently intensified by the advance in the cost of living. Another thing is that the law does not control the hours of labor, and the condition of the toilers is said to be pitiable in the extreme. Fac-tory operatives work eleven hours a day, and railway men often are on duty twenty-four hours consecutively. Employers in Japan attach little value to the lives of their employees, and foreigners are shocked at the unnecessary risk and exposure

A Needed Parliamentary Reform.

One of the things that the Common's should have done, but did not do, when the chance offered, was to make provision for the shortening of the session. The "Harmless" Continental Drinking.

When a man dies from alcoholism, or when his death is hastened by the use of alcohol at some period of his life, it is always, except in too ob-vious cases, announced and recorded as due to something else. Only statistics gathered indepen-dently and in the scientific spirit can be counted on to give any approach to the truth. This has been attempted by the medical faculty in France with remarkable results. Those who travel in Europe continually tell us how harmless is the drinking in continental countries, and people who have been brought up strict abstainers regard resi-dence in France or Italy as so greatly changing the conditions as to make the precautions necessary in America not only needless but unwise. Yet what is the result of the statistics gathered by the French physicians who are presumably not temperance fanatics? Out of fifteen hundred deaths in hospitals and asylums, alcohol played a known part in one-third of the cases. The asylums taken alone showed a worse result, the alcoholic deaths being, in the case of men, one-half. In the general community the figure would be much lower than in these institutions, but if it could be ascertained it would probably produce a very serious impression on all well-wishers of mankind.—Montreal Witness.

Cows as Defenders Against Consumption.

The London Tribune has elicited some discussion of the relation of cows to consumption-an old notion, by the way. One writer asserts, on the authority of all the doctors he has known, that there is no instance of a cowman, a milker of cows, hav-ing died of this disease:-"Cowmen live in cowsheds during a great many hours of the night and day, and those cowsheds are said to be, of all places, the most crowded with tubercular germs. One would not wish to calculate the billions of these germs a cowman breathes on to his lungs in a year, if we accept the figures of those who deal in sensations. On the other hand, one can find in every district almost instances where grooms have died from consumption. The strange fact is that, whereas the cow can contract tuberculosis, the horse does not. Yet the man who is intimately associated with the immune animal yields to the dis-ease, whilst the man who is with the most common host of tuberculosis escapes it." This theory, it should be noted, was very commonly held about eighty years ago. Balzac in one of his minor novels makes his hero a consumptive who is cured by sleeping in sheds, and readers not familiar with the old belief might easily take it for an anticipa-tion of the open-air cure. It is a matter which it ought to be quite possible to test by statistics.-New York Tribune.

The Governor-General's appeal to the women of Canada to give the aid of their enthusiasm is notable for to give the aid of their enthusiasm is notable for its high earnestness. Truly, as he declares, patriotism cannot be improvised or created by cold reason, but must be implanted in the heart of the child. As Lord Grey has said, "There is no more sacred spot on the whole of this continent than where Wolfe gave up his life." We Canadians would be doing something for which posterity would hold us in but light account, if we allowed the height, where the greatest and most decision the height, where the greatest and most decisive event in our history took place, to have "its glory defaced by a factory"-again to quote the Governor-General-"and crowned by a jail."

Eastern Canada is ancient enough to have its good old times for is ancient enough to have its good old times for doubters in progress to point back to. Some interdoubters in progress to point back to. Some inter-esting contemporary records of Toronto in 1828 have just been published; they show that, with a population of only two thousand, York, as Toronto was then called, had sixty taverns, or one to every thirty-three persons, and that in the year mentioned there were herded in an underground cell in the jail three female lunatics, and the stench from their cell was complained of by the prisoners in the cells above. York was at that time a garrison town, and a scene of much social gaiety. There was much in the past that was desirable for fortune's favored few, and no one can deny the general pic-turesqueness of "the good old times," when the sordid and the cruel is ignored by the romancer or the picturesque historical writer, who is not concerned with the common people and their conditions of life. When any question of race preponderance—such as what is called "the yellow peril"—comes to the front, it tends to emphasize the tolerably obvious fact that unless a race, or a nation, is reinforced by continual births, it must tend to recede before the inroads made by death.

THE BIRTH PATES Deaths are continuous. OF THE NATIONS. whether births are continuous or not. some European countries the tendency toward decrease of births is very manifest. Less than half a century ago the populations of France and Gera century ago the populations of France and Ger-many were almost exactly equal, while that of Great Britain was much below both. Now France has less than forty millions of people, while Ger-many has more than sixty. France's population being practically stationary during recent years, while Germany's is increasing at the rate of nearly a million a year. In Great Britain the kint a million a year. In Great Britain the births exceed the deaths by 500,000 annually, and the population for the first time in history is greater than that of France; and this though the British birth-rate has fallen from 31 per 1,000 to 27. In Germany it has fallen in four years from 36 to 34. Ir. the United States the decrease in the birth rate has been so marked as to justify the conclusion that the increase in the population is due almost entirely to immigration. In Canada of late years the birth rate has been practically stationary, with the exception of the Province of Quebec. On the other hand, the birth rate in Japan has increased during the last twenty-seven years from 17 to 31 per 1.000. In China the universal practice of in-fanticide keeps the population approximately stationary: and though statistics from China must be largely guess work, we know enough to be sure that if ever infanticide is abandoned, the yellow race will have an enormous annual rate of increase.

But surely race suicide and race salvation are more But surely race suicide and race salvation are more than matters of mere numbers. No race has gone very far through just being numerous. Failure to improve the race condition, the race mind, is more serious than failure to increase greatly in mere numbers. It was no golden era in the development of mankind when in ancient Egypt the multitudi-nous population provided such vast arrays of labor for the building of the pyramids.

Statistics show that in the world's greatest cen-tres of population and wealth there is an astonish-ing increase of certain diseases, notably heart dis-ease and cancer, which seems to counterbalance much that has been accomplished in moderating the much that has been accomplished in moderating the ravages of contagious and infectious diseases. While the promoting causes are obscure and not well understood, there is evidence leading to a conviction that intense application and high-pressure living are the fundamental causes. In the world's great cities there are thousands of people overtaxing their own brains, training their children in intel-lectual hothouses, and living at a constant high strain; and the penalty of such living falls upon them with deadly effect. The simple life has its privations; it has also its compensations.

As a consequence, he adds, the Russian villages, which were never prosperous or enlight-ened, are sinking under the curse of drunkenness. From many of these village communities requests have been sent to the Government to close the dram shops before it is too late. But the Minister of Finance, in his latest official statement, declares that it is, on the contrary, "necessary to increase of Finance, in his latest official statement, declares that it is, on the contrary, "necessary to increase the number of places for the sale of drink, and that no restriction should be placed on the opening of new dram shops in towns and villages." The Government finds it doubly profitable to spread its vc dka among the people—financially, because of the enormous revenue brought into its coffers, and politically, because a drink-sodden population makes poor material for a revolution. poor material for a revolution.

GENERAL MANAGER'S ADDRESS.

We have come to the close of a year unprecedented in the history of financial stringency, and as it was worldwide in effect we in Canada have not escaped from the results of our own great expansion in trade, and the inevitable contraction of credit which comes as a check in the midst of prosperity throughout the country. Notwithstanding the unfavorable events of the year, the statements of the bank which we have pleasure in submitting are the best in its history. It is needless to say that with the present outlook we must again repeat the warning to you not to expect a repetition of such large profits. The check upon the volume of business has been later in coming than some of us expected, but it has now actually come, and with a disposition on the part of the public towards the liquidation rather than the creation of debt, the volume of banking business must decline and profits be correspondingly affected.

annum, and after devoting the large sum of $350,000 to expenditures on bank premises and making the usual provision for the Pension Fund, we have carried forward a balance of $75,912.10 at credit of Profit and Loss Account. Now that the Rest of the Bank equals the sum of fifty per cent. of the paid-up capital, our recommen-dation will be that transfers to that account be made in even millions and that in the meantime the unappropriat-ed profits should be carried forward at the credit of Profit and Loss Account. Our deposits during the year show a small decrease, namely, 111,000. The decrease is altogether in deposits not bearing interest which are composed of the fluctuating balances of various busi-ness communities, and are, therefore, in the nature of things subject to rapid changes. A year ago we pointed out that some of the deposits then held were of a temporary character, and we do this year also a considerable amount on the other banking institutions, a real shrinkage of deposits will probably re-sult through withdrawals of money which but for the present emergencies of trade would remain with us. On the other hand, our deposits bearing interest, being those of a more stable character have increased during the year $1,564,000. The administration of the affairs of the bank during the past year was fraught with unusual difficulties, but we look forward with confident ex-pectation that with our organization we shall be able to conserve and maintain a high standard of efficiency in the shall be able to conserve and maintain annum, and after devoting the large

the end of a very eventful year in the financial world it cannot be truth-fully said that any business man in Canada was without warning, even if Canada was without warning, even if he found himself quite unprepared for the new conditions he was called upon to face. Nor can it be truthfully said that the banks as a whole have failed to do as much for the borrowing public as the latter had a right to expect. Indeed, when we consider the rash and ignorant criticism of the banks heard in communities where the stringency in money has been most keenly felt, it seems almost as if it were useless to offer a signal of danger to the borrowing public so long as prosperity is in full force. A year ago this bank did its part in offering a warning which events have shown to be justified, but this warning was actually regarded as an evidence of total inability to underan evidence of total inability to under-stand the true business conditions in the West. Canada was doing more business than was justified by the money at our command at home or that could be secured abroad by the sale of the securities the country was creat-ing, although it was not producing even sufficient merchandise to meet the desufficient merchandise to meet the demand or building to any degree in advance of immediate requirements. We were, however, importing far in debt-paying and therefore excess of our exports, and generally mood, it will set aside a we were mortgaging our future, not, as a rule, in the case of each individual, municipality, industrial company, or railway, beyond what could be plainly justified if money were easy, but beyond what was wise, having regard to the world-wide condition of the money market which has been so marked in recent years. Now that the check upon our expansion, which we would not make of our own accord, has, in a measure, been forced upon us, we shall doubtless rapidly adjust our affairs to the new conditions, and I shall be sur-prised if we do not eventually conclude that as a borrowing country we have escaped the more serious troubles of our neighbors, have not failed to sustain the high credit Canada enjoys in Great Britain and elsewhere in Europe and that the banks, even if no more free from blame than other members of the business community, have really done all that could fairly be demanded. While Canadians have taken a natural pride in the great growth of their for-eign trade, which has increased from $257,168,000 in 1897 to $617,944,000 in 1907, some remark has seemed necessary each year upon the large excess in our imparts. For the year ending mid-summer, 1906, the two had so approxi-mated that the excess of imparts was only $37,660,000 in a foreign trade of $550,854,000, but for the year ending midsummer, 1907, we have an excess in imports of $101,601,000, our exports be-ing but little larger than for the pre-vious year, while our imports are about $65,000,000 more. The first three months following midsummer, 1907, showed no tendency towards improvement. We cannot build a third transcontinental railroad, in addition to providing for the large growth of older railroad systems; we cannot take care of an enormous and unprecedented inflow of immigrants; and we cannot build up new towns and cities by the hundred, without largely increasing our purchases as compared with what we have to sell. This is what we mean by mortgaging our future. After we make allowance for the wealth brought in by the immi-grants themselves and by the many men with capital who come, mainly, from the United States, to establish indus-tries or to become merchants or impor-tant farmers, the total of which must be very large indeed, the greater part sary each year upon the large excess in tries or to become merchants or impor-tant farmers, the total of which must be very large indeed, the greater part of the sum required to liquidate this excess of imports must be obtained from the sale of our securities abroad. The railroad corporations provide their share and generally in advance of its expenditure, but our towns and cities have of late years sold their bonds so readily that they have not hesitated to spend money in very large sums on improvements, the bonds for which can not as a rule be legally issued until the work is completed. At the same time many industrial companies have been spending money and depending on for-eign markets for the sale of securities with which to replace the capital re-quired for such expenditures. In orwith which to replace the capital re-quired for such expenditures. In or-dinary times such a course would not seriously inconvenience Canadian finan-ces, but coming in a year when the balance against us was so large, our crops below the normal, and the money markets of the world in the worst pos-sible condition for all borrowing coun-tries, it would have been strange if we had not experienced considerable dis-comfort. We can, however, congratu-late ourselves on the soundness of our business conditions apart from the lack business conditions apart from the lack of capital, and this has enabled Canadian enterprises to obtain money in European markets on easier terms than many other countries. The course we should follow in the immediate future seems plain. In all cases where im-portant expenditure for public or private works is contemplated we must be assured as to securing the capital before undertaking the work, and this doubtless means that we must go more slowly for a few years. Whether we like the discipline or not, the results will certainly be good for Canada in many ways. The scarcity of money arises from various causes. Roughly speaking if one man wishes to borrow, another man must have saved in a shape ready for investment. If the world is in a mood, it will set aside annually more savings than are needed; and if the world's trade is expanding and profitable, and extravagance is therefore general, the reverse will be the case. One great French economist has en-deavored to state the conditions of the world as they existed in 1906. He estimates the capital needed that year for new commitments as $3,250,000,000, and the world's savings available for investment at not more than $2,400,-000,000 to $2,800,000,000. There was therefore an enormous deficiency, and however near this may be to the actual facts, it illustrates in a forcible way what the world is trying to do, and why interest rates have risen and the prices of all securities, no matter how excellent, have fallen. When we look at ordinary commercial banking operations connected with the production and movement of commodities, we must realize that as against an increased gold supply, and the increased credit made possible thereby, there have been two factors tending to in-crease the load of credit to be carried, and, second, a great increase in the price of almost all articles. world has gone too far in one direcworld has gone too far in one direc-tion, and now we must look tor a mood of economy, in consequence of which personal extravagance will de-cline and savings increase, and the pace of the world's building operations pace of the world's building operations and trade movement will somewhat lessen. This will probably be accom-panied by a fall in wages, however regrettable, and by a fall in prices gen-erally, although the steady increase in the gold output of the world and the power of certain industrial organiza-tions may be opposing factors to any large and permanent decline.

MANITOBA, SASKATCHEWAN, AND AL-BERTA.

So much has been written and said about the crop conditions of the Prairie Provinces, and these conditions Prairie Provinces, and these conditions have varied so greatly in different dis-tricts and have changed so rapidly from time to time, that it is a relief and a pleasure to be able to report that the money result from all cereals will certainly be about $85,000,000, and will perhaps equal the result from the crop of 1906. Of course this is due to the high price set against the much smaller high price set against the much smaller quantity and the great loss in grades due to frost. Had the season been a normal one, and had prices, which are not appreciably affected by our crop, remained high, our Western farmers remained high, our western tarmers would have enjoyed a prosperity ex-ceeding anything they have known. Apart from the difficulties of trans-porting and financing the grain, the unfortunate feature of the crop has been that the results fall so unevenly as to districts. In the main the fair results have been enjoyed by those dis-tricts which could have borne poor crops, while the most meagre results have often come to the newest districts. Our estimate of the crop of 1906, which has since been verified by the latest returns of the actual outcome was 190,000,000 bushels of cereals, as compared with 167,000,000 for 1905. Our estimate for 1907 is 160,000,000, divided as follows:

Wheat-70,000,000 bushels. Oats-75,000,000 bushels. Barley-15,000,000 bushels.

With two years' increase of settle-ment this is not a good showing, but it is too slight a falling off to distress anyone living in the West. The average yeld per acre is, of course, low; wheat 14 bushels; oats 33, and barley 25. About half of the wheat will grade as fit for milling-No. 4 or better. Oats suffered more from frost than wheat, and about two-thirds of the crop is of the lower grades.

After a winter of severity, greater than had been known for a quarter of a century, the farmers succeeded, al-though a month later than for many years, in sowing an acreage as large as that of 1906. The growing season in Saskatchewan and Alberta was all that could be desired, but in southern Manitoba the rainfall was quite insufficient; so that, barring frost, it seemed as if the two Western Provinces would show excellent results and Manitoba would disappoint us. But frost came to the late-sown crops and did an amount of damage hardly recognized at the time, so that in the end Manitoba, where the conditions had improved, and southern Alberta produced the best crops both in quality and quantity. Apart from the peculiarities of the crop of 1907, the difficulties of market-ing the crop have been so pronounced and have caused so much discussion in the newspapers, that it may be well to refer frankly to some of them. The farmers blame the grain dealers as to price, both farmers and dealers blame the railroads as to car supply, and for the first time in the history of the North-West the banks have found it difficult, because of the many demands by borrowers, to release the money necessary to carry the grain to market. One might think from some recent criticisms that these difficulties had never been heard of before, whereas they have accompanied the marketing of grain and cotton in the United States, from time to time, through the entire history of its settlement. We have been proceeding upon the as-sumption that the railroads can carry to the point of lake navigation all the grain the farmers choose to market in the few weeks between threshing and the few weeks between threshing and the close of lake traffic, and that the banks can not only take care of this but also find the money for the entire grain the farmers choose to market in the few weeks between threshing and the close of lake trainic and that the banks can not only take care of this but also find the money for the entire chooses to sell if during the winter, and await the liquidation of such ad-vances in the late spring of early summer. Now we may as well recog-nize the fact that when the crop is materially larger both of these things will be impossible, even with an ordi-nary money market. The grain and cottom crops of the United States have been moved largely by European cred-its, in addition to local loans, and this has been a sound system financially, be-cause ultimately sufficient grain or cot-ton goes forward to Europe to liquidate such credits Of late years in the United States dealers have been able to move grain crops without much outside as-sistance, but not the cotton crop, and this is because the point of consum-tion for most of the grain is now at home and not in Europe, while a creat art of the cotton crop is still sold in Europe. We are a syoung country, with little accumulated capital relative-ly to our wants, and, like the United States of twenty or thirty years ago, we must use the credit of Europe to some extent for our grain carrying, re-deening such obligations as the grain be of twenty or thirty years or more own quite readily very large sums of money against grain in store, is be-cause for the last thirty years or more such places as Chicago and Minneapo-lis to assure the lender that he hand of a certain grade in the hands officers of which could have no object and, because of weighing and inspections upervised by the State, no power to dispose of the grain except in accor-dance with the State, countersigned re-cepts. The banking and clevator inter-estor of Winneps have been steadily en-surounding terminal recepts in Cana-da ceurity. . The making and clevator inter-estor of Winneps have been steadily en-surounding terminal recepts in cana-diance with the State, no power to dispose of the grain except of security.

of security. Winnipeg holds the second place in America in the volume of grain trad-ing, and everything which can be done to make this great department of our commerce work satisfactorily should have the patient consideration of all concerned. There seems to be little doubt that many of the provi-sions of the Dominion Art known as little doubt that many of the provi-sions of the Dominion Act, known as the Manitoba Grain Act, are unsatis-factory to the farmers, the railway companies, and the banks. Designed originally, no doubt, to protect the farmer, it can be so made use of by dishonest people as to cause to others serious delays in transportation and losses in money, and in the final re-sult it must hurt many more farmers sult it must hurt many more farmers than it benefits. So long as it is pos-sible for hundreds of orders for single cars to be placed in the names of people who have actually no grain to ship, it cannot be also possible for the elevator companies to get cars to ship grain with reasonable promptitude, or to place the blame for lack of cars with any precision upon the railroad companies. It seems clear that the Act should be entirely reconsidered and amended before we enter upon another season. In the cattle business the striking feature, of course, was the very heavy losses on the ranges caused by the severe winter. It will doubtless take two or three years for the stock of cattle, horses, and sheep on the ranges to get back to a normal con-dition. Meanwhile prices are likely to be good, even though dear money and lack of cars may affect the situa-tion for the moment. The fact that tion for the moment. After several years of abundant crops, we have to record a year in which in several parts of the North-West the larmers' results are quite unsatisfactory, but as a whole the country will receive a very large sum for its products, and the general re-sult to the three provinces will still represent prosperity, although on a diminished scale. entirely to their peculiar banking and treasury systems. In Canada we have an enforced revision of the Bank Act every ten years, and it is well to bear in mind that we are approaching the time when the discussion connected, therewith usually takes place. The situation bears little relation to that following the troubles of 1893, either as to currency conditions and standards, crop conditions, or volume of manufactured goods relatively to the demand, and, provided the usual crops are harvested next year, a very full measure of industrial activity should nevail throughout. North America, The marketing of the actual products of the field, forest, and mine of uself requires that large additions should be made to railroad equipment and that other building operations abould be carried out, and it the world generally can be induced on the one hand to ex-ercise its power of saving to a greater degree, and on the other to moderate comewhat the pace of its industrial ex-comewhat the pace of its industrial ex-comewhat the pace of all kinds

Of course, this does not mean to give these things as is so often done by fathers, to give in name but keep all the these things as is so often done by fathers, to give in name but keep all the proceeds and the right to trade or sell. As a boy in the country once aptly ex-pressed it to me when I asked him if the pigs were his, and his reply was, "Tom's pigs, and Daddy's pork." That is too often the way. The cow or calf or colt is Mary's or Harry's or Bob's until the father gets a good opportun-ity to sell it, and then it belongs to father. It is better not to give at all than to give it in such a way, though to be just, parents rarely do. Most of the animals said to belong to any par-ticular member of the family were never given to them by an over-gener-ous impulse but were claimed by the young people until they really be-an to think they were theirs. The father generally smiled and gave his silent consent to the arrangement, without, perhaps, ever thinking how seriously his silence might be taken, or that he was sowing the seeds for future dis-content. content.

WORLD WIDE"

Weekly reprint of Articles and Cartoons from the leading journals and reviews reflecting the ourrent thought of both hemispheres.

This remarkable and most readable journal has pushed its way, in a short time, beyond all expecta-tions-chiefly owing to the goodwill of its rapidly growing constitu-ency. Without wisdom of its own, "World Wide" reflects the wisdom of the age -the day-the hour-the moment. Without opinions of its own, "World Wide" beats to the tick of modern British and American thought. "World Wide" has found its place on the study table. Preachers, teachers, writers, and thinkers generally have hailed it as a new and most welcome companion. As a pleasant tonic-a stimulant to the mind-" World Wide" has no peer at the price, no equal among the journals of the day.

An effort is made to select the articles each week so that due proportion is given to the various fields of human interest-to the shifting scenes of the world's great drama, to letters and science, and beautiful things.

As someone has said "World Wide " is a feast of reason-an intellectual treat.

Regular readers of "World Wide" are kept in touch with the world's thinking.

WHAT OTHERS SAY.

PRINCIPAL PETERSON, LL.D., McGill University, Montreal, says:

"I am sure 'World Wide' ought to have a highly prosperous career before it, and the price at which the paper is offered to annual subscribers should put it within the reach of all."

S. E. DAWSON, Lit.D., KING'S PRIN-TER, Ottawa, says:

"I take a good many papers, but 'World Wide' is the only one which I read without skipping."

of Acadia University, says: "I look eagerly for your weekly col-lection of good things, and recommend the paper warmly to my friends. To a company of four men I exhibited your bill of fare and passed a favorable comment thereupon. Three of the four at once handed me their subscriptions. I beg to enclose the names and the amount." i beg to amount."

and compelling them to keep pace with older people. It is not an uncommon thing to see tiny tots of two and three years of age encumbered with heavy coats down to their boot tops, hauled along the streets by the arm and threatened or punished when they lag-ged. One case in particular I remen-oer, that of a woman hurrying into a store holding the hand of a little girl. The child could not have been more than two or three years of age, and the poor little creature was bent near-ity double. At first I thought she must be deformed, but upon following them I discovered that if just couldn't keep up and was literally limp from fatigue. On another occasion I overheard the following conversation between a moth-er and her little boy who had just re-turned from shopping and had entered the hall of an apartment. Block on the way to their own suite. It was the child's voice I heard first saying plaintively: "Mamma, I can't walk up stairs; I'm so thred." "Well, so am I," was the sharp re-joinder, and then there came the sound of little feet slowly climbing the stars. These are only two of many such inweil, so an 1. Was the sharp re-poinder, and then there came the sound of little feet slowly climbing the stars. These are only two of many such in-motice; in fact, it is impossible to walk down the streets of a city without see-ing the same thing many times over, and the question has occurred to me over and over again: Are the tiny feet that fail to keep up with our own a burden and a drag upon our lives? It is true the mother must go out ieave the children with, she must take on the or two children to care for is shopped for even a couple of hours with one or two children to care for is tired, perhaps more tired than they. But there is just this difference. The woman is tired by choice, while the children are dragged into it without even the choice of resistance. Granting that these fits ones are a trouble sometimes, who is responsible for that? Everyone knows that a baby cannot walk as fast as a grown per-son, and the time for the latter to con-sider their own comfort is before the little lives are brought them here, they are re-sponsible for their health and happi-ness, and this is not a burden imposed by some unseen power, but a respon-sibility they have undertaken. While mothers unquestionably have rights as well as children nothing can excuse the quelty to be met with on the streets of towns and cities every day. Give the little ones more time.

During the dissy Letters Wanted. days of the old year when the time from sunrise to sunset, was far too short to accomplish half the things the busy brain had planned, I could understand why no letters came to my corner, but now, when the mothers and daughters on the farm have more leisure than at any other time, I might expect to hear from the readers of the Quitet Hour. Some of these long evenings when the children are away to bed and the "god man" of the bouse has taken the newspaper and settled down by the stove to read, won't you take pen and paper and write me a dear homey let-ter such as only those can write whose hands are busy all day in toll for others?

It is as-tonishing to me the valuable, practic-able information farmers' wives have stored away in their brains and never think it of enough importance to pass along. You have learned so many, many things that might help other women and save them from having to find out by hard experience as you did it is not, I am sure, because you would not be glad to reach out the helping hand, but because you do not think the things you know of any importance. It would appear that for to Hips. models of form, if not of fashion, the woman of Burns-Jones has been chosen. The wo-man of to-day who is regarded as hav-ing a good figure is the woman who is siender to the point of extreme thin-ness, who has no hips and an extreme-ly small bust. The day of tight-lacing is past and the woman with a tiny waist and large hips and busts is old-fashioned. It is fashionable, as we have said, to be slender, but the next best thing is to have as little differ-ence between the waist and hips as possible. All the gowns accentuate these points in their clinging tend-ency, long lines and severely draped bodices.

Sleeves, too, are much to just obver the el-bow, for the dressier blouse and gown, and are hardly below the shoulder in in the evening gown. Tailor-mades and street dresses, generally, have long sleeves. There seems to be little pros-pect of a change in this fashion for spring. Attempts have been made, as we said a month ago, to reinstate the long sleeve, but women will apparently have none of them, excepting as previ-ously stated for the severe tailor-made.

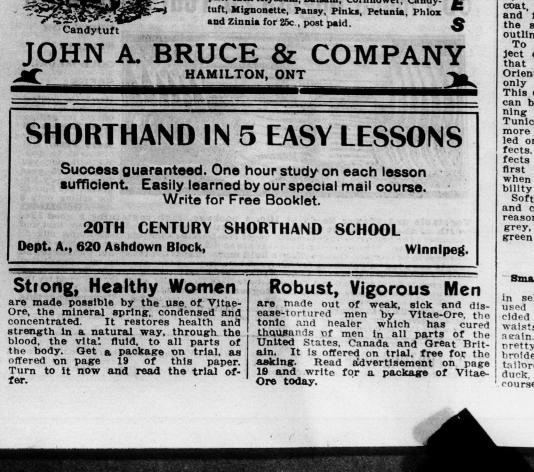

A new and decidedly Draped Shirts. novel feature is no-ticed in the latest skirts. I refer to the folds, or wrink-les, across the stomach that the new-est skirts display. Practically all the new French models show this feature, the skirts otherwise being long and straight, with a decided clinging tend-ency. This applies to even those of heavy materials. While the walking length pleated skirt is still in vogue, it is only smart for general utility wear, the dragging skirt with its queer wrinkled front being the latest. While on the subject of skirts, men-tion must be made of their elaborate trimmings, particularly at the bottom. On cloth gowns, yards and yards of braid are used, while lace or embroid-ery is employed on the dressier models. Braid manufacturers have great cause for rejoicing, since quantities of their product are in demand. Coats are heav-ily braided and outlined, a three-quarter coat, coming to a decided point, back and front and being much shorter at the sides, is a model on which braid outlining has been much in avidence. coat, coming to a decided point, back and front and being much shorter at the sides, is a model on which braid outlining has been much in evidence. To return for a moment to the sub-ject of draperies; it must be recorded that some of the effects are quite Oriental, chiefly those which drape not only the torso, but the hips as well. This extreme mode has found favor and can be seen at almost any smart eve-ning function, such as opera or ball. Tunic effects for wraps are becoming more and more in favor, and are rival-led only by the Japanese or kimona ef-fects. Satins are used for these ef-fects or fine soft broadcloth. The first requisite any fabric must have when bidding for favor to-day is plia-bility and draping qualities. Soft cashmere, marquisettes, crepes and chiffon cloths find favor for these reasons. For street wear elephant grey, Copenhagen blue and parsley green are the favorite shades.

from the front and with long sleeves with stiff cuffs. The little things of the tollette are worthy of attention also. Handker-chiefs, for example, now match the gown. Pure white ones, while of course, always correct, are not considered nearly as smart as the gaily bordered ones. A novelty is the silk and linen mixture in all-over check effects. These styles are also correct in men's wear. The majority of smart tailored suits have a tiny breast pocket from which the handkerchief peeps.

Another startling in-novation is the reviv-al of the gaily color-ed hose; even for street wear it is ex-tremely gay. The most fashionable high-buttoned shoes are of suede, to match the gown. Purple suede shoes, rev brown sreet and stated shoes.

tremely gay. The most fashionable high-buttoned shoes are of suede, to match the gown. Purple suede shoes, grey, brown, green and pastel shades are displayed by the leading footwear houses, and are worn by women who lead the fashion. Light-topped patent leathers are fashionable, as are also high-laced or buttoned tan shoes; these, especially when worn with the ex-tremely short skirt. Gloves, as we said before, should match the gown. With the evening and light-colored reception gowns, gloves of identically the same shade are much more elegant than white. Suede and glace seem to share equal favor. The latest novelties in purses is the small sliver purse, also a revival of a fashion in vogue half a century ago. These are not the link purses, but solid box-like affairs, resembling van-ity or cigarette cases. Just here we might mention, also, a New York fad that will be interesting to the Western women more as a cur-osity than as a model. I refer to the fashion of carrying canes, introduced by some well-known society women in New York. It is scarcely likely, how-ever, that this fancy will ever have a practical interest for our own women. Among the smaller novelties for everyday wear, the dog collar of black velvet ribbon, with a sliding clasp set with coral, jade, topaz or turquoise, is a prime favorite, especially with the younger set. These same velvet rib-bons ornamented with sets of slides in sold or silver, with or without stones, are also popular and make pretty birthday gifts for school girls, while a brand new cravat pin for adjusting and ornamenting the square cravat, worn with embroidered collars will go straight to the heart of any girl who sees or owns it. Thecklaces of odd form in wrought for general wear, while for more for-mal use dog collars of closely set stones and fine gold chains that hold artistic looking pennants are fashion-able.

artistic looking pennants are fashion-able. Very tiny open-faced watches are the newest revivals of an old fashion. A rather large but very thin specimen of this class for a man's use was only one-sixteenth of an inch in thickness, though it is stated that it contained a fine Swiss movement and was an ex-cellent timepiece. The women's watches were like small lockets and these also had Swiss movements and were said to be constructed to keep the time of day, even though they were allowed to swing loosely at the end of a jewel studded chain, after the present fash-ion. Whatever the question of their use, these small watches are decidedly ornamental, with their delicate enam-els and stone settings, and people who buy them can probably have other means of knowing what time it is.

In wash materials Small Checks. there are many lovely ideas. Small checks in self or contrasting colors will be used for shirt waists. There is a de-cided effort afoot to push the colored waists. The frilled front will be worn again. Handsome waists of white are bretty, with frilled edge with an em-broidered border in color. A good many tailored suits are shown in madras. duck, gingham or linen. These of course, have waists buttoning down

Cameos are fashionable as and make up charmingly for collars, bracelets and pennants, as well as in many other forms. Lapis lazuli is also in considerable demand for brooches and for necklaces, while coral has come back again and accords par-ticularly well with the same color, as used in fashionable trimmings and ac-cessories.

cessories. Carved tortoise shell and amber are the favorite materials for making up the combs that are a necessary part of every woman's coiffure equipment, and some of these surpass in attractiveness the more pretentious combs, set with gold and stones, though many of these latter are a very desirable addition to the coiffure for semi-formal wear.

Some of my read-tree Beason Why. ers will be asking if the editor man lost the copy and made it up with the scissors as he did once last summer. No, I am responsible this time. Of course, this general talk on styles and jewelry and what not has little of practical value to the woman on the farm, but this is really between sea-sons, and judging other women by my-self. I fancy once in a while they like to read fashion notes that are not strictly practical and still at the same time give little hints that may be use-ful even in remote corners of the great West.

Smallest in Ten Years. Mr. G. C. Armstrong, of the Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., has just returned from a trip through Minnesota and the Da-kotas, and after a thorough investiga-tion of stocks held in interior elevators and farmers' hands, reports they are the smallest in a decade. The crop was light, averaging under 12 bushels, and the strained monetary conditions ear-lier in the season, together with ideal weather and transportation conditions, and good prices have forced the wheat out much more rapidly than usual, and the same time last year there was a serious shortage of cars, besides which the traffic was badly congested by severe and stormy weather, while this year there has been an unusually mild winter and ideal weather conditions have prevailed all over during the marketing period. Boreign Crop Summary.

Smallest in Ten Years.

Foreign Crop Summary.

Broomhall—United Kingdom — Wheat that was seeded late and is weak shows the effects of the recent severe freez-ing, otherwise crop outlook favorable. France—Outlook for crops continues favorable. Supplies generally moder-ate ate.

Germany-The weather is too change-able and effect on the wheat unfavorable able. Roumania—Weather seasonable, cold; outlook satisfactory. Russia—Reports from the south show no improvement, while in the in-terior the outlook is less apprehensive, as there is plenty of snow. Australia—The latest estimates place exportable surplus at 16,000,000, half of which will go to Europe. This year's crop is estimated at 34 700,000; in 1906 the crop was 66,000,000, and of this amount 34,000,000 was shipped for ex-port.

Argentine Crop.

New York, Jan. 24.—The Herald has received the following cable despatch from Buenos Ayres: The optimistic re-ports regarding the Argentine harvest are fully confirmed. The wheat crop is splendid. There probably will remain about 116,000,000 bushels available for export. export.

At the Winnipeg Theatre the stock company were seen to advantage in a very fine repertoire of plays which em-braced "Tess of the D'Urbervilles." "Secret Service," "Jane," "Mistress Nell" and "Charley's Aunt." The leading roles were, as usual, in the capable hands of George Alison and Miss Warren and in the first named play the latter enjoyed a real triumph. After a series of comedies verging on dramas, "Charley's Aunt" came as a welcome relief and local theatre goers did not fail to make their presence "felt."

Grace George scored a big success at the Walker Theatre in Sardou's comedy, "Divorcons," and Winnipeggers will look anxiously forward to a return visit from this talented young actress. Early in the month Maude Fealy, fresh from her London and New York successes, made a great hit in "The Stronger Sex," being seen to even greater advantage than in "The Illu-sions of Beatrice" which she presented here last season.

here last season. Other attractions at this playhouse during the month included "The Rol-licking Girl," "The Alaskan," and "Happyland."

Winnipeg is to have yet another play-house, as plans are now in the archi-tect's hands for a new theatre which will be erected on Notre Dame Avenue next enring next spring.

Claude Hughes, assisted by local tal-ent, will put on a musical entertain-ment in Victoria hall, Grenfell, Sask, on February 25th. The programme will include solos, duets, choruses and glees.

Madame Keenan, of Regina, and a company of first-class entertainers ap-peared in Gull Lake on Saturday, Jan. 25th, and gave a very enjoyable enter-tainment which was largely attended.

The Winnipeg City Band is command-ing and holding the attention of music-lovers of this city by sheer force of its progressiveness and accomplish-ments. Each week sees an improvement in its rendering of the best music and Winnipeggers are becoming more and more proud of this splendid musical body.

The regular monthly meeting of the Brandon Art Club was held in the studio of Brandon College on Saturday, Jan. 11. The musical programme was as follows: Piano solo, "Albumlied" (Greig), Miss Lockhart; vocal solos, "The Dove," Miss Burnett; vocal solos, (a) "Wie Einst Im Mai" (b) "Chanson de Florian," Mr. A. F. Thornborough; piano solo, "Papillon" (Greig), Miss Lockhart; vocal solo, "The Angel at the Window," (Berthold Tours). Mr. Thornborough. Miss Hancock read an interesting and admirable paper on "Canadian Artists." She spoke of the different art societies of Canada and gave a short history of the Royal Can-adian Academy, which is doing much in Eastern Canada to foster art. Miss Hancock's paper was illustrated by views of some of the leading Canadian artists and of art exhibits.

The production of moving pictures of the Passion Play in the Lyric Theatre, Calgary, on Sundays has been discon-tinued. The management of the Cal-gary theatre gave several Sunday per-formances, which were advertised as in aid of the Holy Cross Hospital, charging an admission, Complaint was made to the Attorney General's depart-ment, and after investigation and a report from Chief English, of Calgary, the Attorney General wrote Mr. Willis, the manager of the threatre, pointing out that the performance on Sunday was an offence punishable under the Lord's Day Act, and stating that upon a repetition of the offence the mana-gers of the theatre would be prose-cuted. cuted.

Under the auspices of the Literary Society, an enjoyable evening's enter-tainment was held at Swan Lake on January 9th. A good programme was provided and much credit is due the committee, Miss Couch and Miss Mc-Laren, for their efforts in arranging the programme. Solos were given by Mrs. Render, Mrs. McCreath, and Rev. Mr. Price. Readings by Mrs. Cameron, Miss Hodgson and H. Goodwin. P. Skuse and D. Grey delighted the audi-ence by their selections, comic and sentimental. Mr. Hartley and Miss Pritchard presided at the plano. The president occupied the chair. Miss Cor-bett was appointed secretary for this 'term. It was decided to hold meetings every fortnight. The arrangement of the programme will be in the hands of Mrs. Gardner, Mrs. Cameron and Mr. Skinner, and we may rest assured that an excellent one will be provided.

IN THE BUSINESS WORLD.

The Bank of Commerce.

The Bank of Commerce. The annual meeting of the Canadian Bark of Commerce is looked forward to from year to year by the business world as a happening of more than the range of financial information that emanates from the president and breadth of the land. The report this wagazine and it would be well for our readers to peruse it very carefully and not the words of wisdom given by President B. E. Walker. His address is to confined to the ordinary details of the bank management, but deals fully with the economic and theoretical re-tis fortunate for Canada that Mr. Wal-ker is an economic student, because he has at his command an institution with agents all over the Dominion though whem it is possible and prac-ticable to get accurate data as to busi-ness conditions. Apparently these agents are utilized in gathering together so wuch valuable information which Mr.

are utilized in gathering together so much valuable information which Mr. Walker annually gives to the public. It is quite true that a year ago Mr. Walker, as president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, warned the busi-ness public of Canada that conditions warranted the exercise of great cau-tion. He spoke at a time when the crest of a wave of prosperity had been reached, and everyone was buoyant and optimistic. In this mood the public generally were not disposed to listen to words of caution. Expansion con-tinued and with it much extravagance, the results of which came home with remarkable suddenness. But if the public did not put on the brakes, the Canadian banks generally did so, and they came through the crisis without suffering any damage. Certainly this has been the case with the Bank of Commerce. The net profit of the bank for the year, $1,752,349, is the largest in its history, being 17½ per cent. on the capital. This, with the balance of $103,562 from last year, has provided for the usual dividend of 8 per cent. per annum, also for $350,000 written off bank premises account, and a balance of $675,912 carried forward to the credit of profit and loss. As to the future, Mr. Walker does not entertain any pessimistic views. He anticipates that the immediate fu-ture will bring a period of greater economy, due to a scarcity of money. More economy, he believes, will be practiced and as a natural consequence money will then accumulate until enough new money will be avail-able to bring the rates of interest down and furnish sufficient working capital to all deserving business in stitutions. In the meantime, he urges caution and he advises corporations and municipalities to be sure of their supply of money before they enter up-on expenditures. In discussing the banking affairs of the Dominion as fully as Mr. Walker supply of money before they enter up-on expenditures. In discussing the banking affairs of the Dominion as fully as Mr. Walker generally does, reference to the wild and foolish criticisms of the banks could not be very well avoided. But actual events have disarmed the critics, who are described by Mr. Wal-ker as "rash and ignorant."

footwear in the busy little town of El-mira. Ont, in a small factory 100 x 50 feet. The new firm perceived the market for a superior line of felt foot-wear in the North-West with its con-stantly increasing population and wealth and its favorable climatic con-ditions. They took advantage of the opportunity and from the first "El-mira" footwear "took." the business expanded rapidly, several extensions were made to the factory until finally a larger labor field was required, and to meet this requirement an immense factory was built at Berlin, Ont. The old factory is still retained and now this firm possesses two of the finest equipped factories on the continent, with the largest capacity of any simi-lar plant in the world, and larger than all other Canadian felt factories com-bined. Both factories are equipped with the best and most modern ma-chinery and skilled help employed, so that with the increased facilities the same high standard of "Elmira" brand of felt footwear may be expected to be retained, together with a more com-plete range of lines.

"SUCCESSFUL FARMING," by Wm. Bennie, Sr.

Bennie, Sr. Since the first publication of "Successful Farming," scientific agricul-ture has made rapid advance. Mr. Rennie has, therefore, revised his or-iginal work, adding to it much valuable information, which has been the out-come of his later experiences and in-vestigations in the practical science of agriculture. The book is now invalu-able to the Canadian farmer, in so much that it is the only practical work on Canadian agriculture that is pub-lished. At the same time, Mr. Rennie's scientific principles of soil cultivation, rotation of crops, etc., can be follow-ed to a profitable advantage in any country. Every department of the farm and farm home has been given the most thorough attention, and if farmers will carry out the easily-followed scientific principles, they may reasonably expect an increase in prof farmers will carry out the easily-followed scientific principles, they may reasonably expect an increase in prof-its and a saving of labor, which will add pleasure and zest to their daily duties.

English Pianos.

English Pianos. Thanks to the Preferential duty of late years and the enterprise of those in the trade here, we are getting more familiar with the better class English planos. The popular plano built for the English trade and climate being a moderately priced instrument selling for f30 ($150.00) is suitable only for the trade and climate it is built for, but the more expensive English planos are substantially constructed, will stand different kinds of climate, and give every satisfaction. It has, how-ever, been a matter of surprise to music lovers, why a firm like John Broadwood & Sons, of London, Eng-land, admittedly the world's finest plano builders, have not entered more extensively for the Canadian trade, shipping as they do, large numbers of their celebrated instruments to all parts of the world—Australia, India, Africa, Russia, China, South America, etc., and have a very large export business with Russia, where the cli-mate is identical with our own, and the houses have to be heated with fur-naces during the winter. This matter has now been energetically taken up by a Winnipeg firm of plano dealers and they have succeeded in completing arrangements for the sole agency of these world-famed instruments, which

OVER SIXTY YEARS OLD.

The "Witness" gives all the news that is worthy the attention of the average reader. It keeps its readers well informed on all subjects of interest. The cable, marconigrams, the telegraph and the telephone, together with a staff of competent edi-tors and reporters, all unite to make its news col-umns second to none. The "Witness" editorial pages are acknowledged by its readers on all sides to be both fair and forceful.

by its readers on all sides to be both fair and forceful. Reliable commercial news and quotations of the money, stock, and produce markets are features that make it of great value in the world of com-merce, finance, and agriculture. The "Witness" special departments, such as "The Home," "Literary Review," "Letters from Readers," "Boys' Page," "Children's Corner," "Queries," "Agricultural," "Horticultural," "Veter-inary," "Poultry," "Pets," "Medical," "Legal," "Numismatic," "Chess," etc., are ably conducted by specialists at a large expense, offering a most val-uable privilege to "Witness" readers. In 1846 the "Witness" was started by the late John Dougall, and its alm was to supply the Do-minion of Canada with the best possible newspaper. Few papers have head a continuous existence for over sixty years. Fewer still have held to the same family for anything like so long a time. The "Witness is certainly unique among the great metropolitan newspapers of the world.

WHAT OTHERS SAY.

FROM SIR WILFRID LAURIER. Prime Minister's Office, Ottawa.

"Whenever you differed from me, and thought me in the wrong, your criticisms derived all the greater force from my intimate conviction that they were inspired by sense of public duty." WILFRID LAURIER.

FROM THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION. House of Commons, Ottawa.

"The responsibilities of a public journal are not less than those of a public man. In fulfilling these, the 'Witness' has manifested, in an eminent degree, the qualities of courage and sincerity." R. L. BORDEN.

"The "Witness' was never better or more useful than it is today."—"Dominion Presbyterian," Ot-tawa, Ont.

"The 'Witness' is one of the most vigorous jour-nals of the Dominion."-"The Wesleyan," Ealifar. 'The 'Witness' does nothing small."-"Gazette," Picton, Ont.

"The 'Witness' editorials are models of fair-ness."—"Standard" Hawkesbury, Ont. "The 'Witness' is by far the most influential paper in Canada."—"Herald," Comber, Ont.

"Canadian Pictorial"

A CHARMING MAGARINE.

The 'Canadian Pictorial' is the best printed magazine in Canada. It is crowded with the most interesting pictures of recent happenings, pictures of beautiful or curious things, portraits of men and women in the limelight, pictures showing the kaleidoscopic development of our great Dominion— pictures that tell the facts as no type-printed pages ever could. It is the next best thing to travelling and seeing people, places and events with one's own eyes.

and seeing people, places and events with one's own eyes. The 'Canadian Pictorial' has simply bounded in-to popularity, and today boasts a larger circulation than any other magazine in Canada. It contains between one and two thousand square inches of pictures in each issue, and costs to produce a thou-sand dollars each issue—sometimes considerably more more

The more people are educated, the more they appreciate and value pictures of current events, for they convey so much information in so short a time. But the children also profit by and enjoy them them. We don't need to praise the 'Canadian Pictori-al.' We can leave that to others—to its subscrib-ers who, sending in their renewal subscriptions, cannot refrain from praising it—to other publish-ers who, knowing how vastly more expensive the production of such fine pictures is than many times the volume of poorest pictures or type pages, ex-press wonder at the value we are able to give, and overflow with compliments for the exquisite work and interesting features of the 'Canadian Pictorial.'

SUBSCRIBERS' APPRECIATIONS.

SUBSCRIPERS' APPENDIATIONS. "The 'Canadian Pictorial' gives great enjoyment to the home circle."—Mrs. A. H. Andrews, Belle-ville, Ont. "The 'Canadian Pictorial' reflects great credit on the publishers."—R. Wallace, Westwood, Mass. "A marvel for cheapness and excellence."—Rev. T. B. Darby, Carbonear, Newfounland. "The 'Canadian Pictorial' is invaluable,—Mrs. John Ellis, Chatham, N. B. "Your 'Pictorial' is worthy of national patron-age and encouragement."—Rev. W. Bowman Tuck-er, M.A., Ph.D., St. Johns, Que. "I am greatly pleased with the 'Canadian Pic-torial.' No true Canadian should be without it." —Geo. Martin, Penhold, Alta. "We are very much in love with the 'Pictorial.' " —Arnold Smith, East Mines, N. S.

PUBLISHERS' APPRECIATIONS.

"If you have not yet seen the 'Canadian Pic-torial' there is a great pleasure in store for you. The 'Canadian Pictorial' has no counterpart in its special field. It is the most expensively produced illustrated publication in Canada."—"Mail and Empire," Toronto, Ont. "Only $1.00 per year, but worth twice that amount."—"Reporter," Kingsville, Ont. "A delight to all picture lovers, and a great credit to Canadian workmanship."—"Daily News," Truro, N. S. "The illustrations are high class and the print-ing is in keeping."—"The Spectator," Hamilton,

"The Hustrations "The Spectator," Hamilton, "It bears out its undertaking to give its patrons only the highest class of work, and certainy of-fers them the maximum of pictures."—"Star," To-"Beautifully printed; the entire magazine highly creditable to the publishers."—"Evening Times," "Canadian Distorted Hamilton, Ont: "'Canadian Pictorial' pictures are fine; some fit for framing."-- 'The Mining Record. Stellarton, "The pictures in the 'Pictorial' are among the finest that have been produced. The whole maga-zine is one of abounding interest."-- "World," Van-couver, B. C. A paper for Sunday Reading

OVER 40 YEARS OLD

An Illustrated story-paper, of from 12 to 16 pages, published weekly, providing Sunday Beading for young and old.

By far the largest circulation of any religious publication in Canada, averaging for the past year considerably over 60,000 copies each issue.

The "Northern Messenger" is undenominational but warmly evangelical.

Its selection of stories, short and long, is greatly appreciated by its readers.

For Sunday reading it will be found both interesting and helpful. It has a large-type department for the little children learning to read. For this particular reason many parents, though interested in it themselves, subscribe to it in the name of their child.

Besides stories, poems, anecdotes, and such features of general interest, the Sunday School lesson is ably discussed. Temperance and good moral teaching has its place in every issue.

The influence of the "Messenger" upon the last two generations has been very great, and today it is greater than ever.

The "Northern Messenger" contains nearly the times as much reading as any other paper of the same price. same price.

WHAT OTHERS SAY.

"I desire to express to you the great satisfaction we have in the 'Messenger.'

REV. D. W. MORISON, D.D., (Lately Moderator of the Presbyterian Church in Canada).

"The 'Northern Messenger' is very much appreciated."

F. MCEWAN, Librarian,

Carleton Place, Ont.

"The 'Northern Messenger' is a splendid paper in its truly Canadian spirit, and is esteemed very highly. It is a marvel for the price." ARCHIBALD LEE, Grenville, Que.

"We regard the 'Northern Messenger' as a firstclass publication in all respects, and have taken it for a number of years."

6010-A Novelty in Shirtwaists.

6010—A Wovelty in Shirtwaists. The woman who seeks to get away from hackneyed ideas in shirtwaist modelling will find just what she de-sires in this pretty design, which shows a waist that can be made in either high or V neck and winn long or elbow sleeves. Tucks at the shoul-ders in back and front provide a be-coming fullness, and a novel and at-tractive feature is the pleated shoulder extension, which gives the long, un-broken line from neck to elbow that is so distinctive of the present modes. If not liked, however, this may be omitted, and the sleeve adjusted as shown in the smaller sketch. The

V-neck effect is obtained by omitting the yoke. Any preferred silk or wool fabric may be used for modelling the waist, 2¾ yards 36 inches wide being needed for the medium size. 6010—7 sizes, 32 to 44 inches bust measure. The price of this pattern is 15 cents. Special Offer—This pattern, with any one other pattern in this issue, together with one year's subscription to The Western Home Monthly—all three for 50 cents. 50 cents.

broadcloth was selected for making, a daintily figured Liberty silk being used for the blouse. The latter, pret-tilly smirred in novel effect, will be found most becoming, while the bre-telles—which may be omitted if de-sired—will add appreciably to the grace of the figure. The shirred sleeves may be worn in elbow length, or they may be extended to the wrist by the addi-tion of a deep cuff. The skirt is the new 12-gored model, having the front and back side gores extended to meet over the hips in yoke effect, the rest of the skirt being arranged in box-pleats. It may be made in round length or in a short sweep, as desired. This costume is suitable for develop-ment in any of the new materials, 3½ yards, 44 inches wide, being needed for the waist, and 6½ yards of the same width for the skirt. Two patterns—6011—6 sizes, 32 to 42 inches bust. 6012—7 sizes, 22 to 34 inches waist. The price of these patterns is 30c., but either will be sent upon receipt of 15 cents.

noon Wear. There are still many women who cling to the charming fashion of wearing a little fancy apron when sewing or serving afternoon tea, and indeed a woman never looks more at-tractively feminine than when so adorned. The pretty apron here illus-trated is just the thing to slip on at such moments and will be found so easy to make that it will doubtless be seized upon as an acceptable gift sug-gestion.

Starting Cuttings.

The woman who takes pride in the symmetrical appearance of her plants will find it necessary to prune them more than once during the season. Here will be a branch where none is needed. There will be a branch that persists in outgrowing all other branches. The unnecessary branch should be removed, that all the vigor of the plant may be thrown into the branches that are to remain, and the to vigorous branch should be short-ened to keep it in proportion with the rest of the plant. Both these branches and be made to take root, and form independent plants by inserting them in saucers of sand, which should be kept moist all through, all the time, and warm. Therefore, do not throw away any cutting. You can make use of the plant grown from it in next summer's garden. or, if you have no use for it, some friend will be glad to get it. I find it an easy matter to se-cure enough geranium plants each sea-son, from cuttings obtained in train-ing old plants, to fill the beds on the lawn. each summer. The same is true of heliotropes and salvias. I keep a vessel of sand in the greenhouse all the time to put cuttings into as fast as a love for fidewers never likes to throw away anything that can be made into a plant. There are always poor chil-drea in the community who will be de-lighted with a plant in the spring, They will get a great deal of pleasure value as well, to say nothing of the refining, uplifting influence which a flower always exerts. They were spinning yarns of the great north woods and finally it came to the old major's turn. "Gentlemen," he began, "you have all told stories of close calls in the great forests of the North. but I think my yarn will eclipse them all. Would you believe that I was once treed by one of the most ferocious bull moose that ever walked the woods? Well. gentlemen, I was, and to make matters worse, my ammunition gave out. As I thought of the loved ones at home tears came in my eyes, rolled down in the palm of my hand and froze as hard as marbles. A happy thought flashed through my mind. Taking the frozen tears I rammed them in my gun, blazed away, killed the moose, and then gentlemen, and then—" But just then the picture of Ananias fell off the wall.

A fig split open, moistened with water or milk, toasted and applied to a gumboil while hot, will bring quick relief.

If the stomach is weak and sensitive, hot water is more acceptable than cold when taken by the glassful.

Inhalations of compound tincture of benzoin or a few drops of sanitas oil in boiling water are effectual remedies for sore throat.

Try the effect of a teaspoonful of pure glycerine after each meal when suffering from obstinate indigestion. Mix the glycerine with a small quantity of water.

Listerine used as a mouth wash is most excellent in its effect upon gums and teeth. A drop or two in the water with which baby's mouth is rinsed every morning will prevent thrush.

The Japanese, who have lived for ages on a diet almost exclusively of rice and fish, drinking large quantities of water, prove the fact that simplicity in living is conducive to mental and physical activity.

Sea water acts as a stimulant on the nerve fibres of the skin, and is found to be very efficient in removing wrinkles. The sea salt which is kept in drug stores can be used with warm water in the morning toilet.

All furniture stores now have single beds in pairs, if so desired, and this plan, though new to some, will appeal to the thoughtful as more healthful and sanitary.

If your skin is very oily, sponge it occasionally with alcohol, but be careful not to use this too often. A little borax in the water in which you bathe your face is also good.

The quick bath every morning with tepid water, a handful of salt, and a good flesh brush, will injure no woman's health, but will, instead, make her feel bright, rested and refreshed.

Spend some time out of doors every | bed under which the "gude haus frau," with true German hospitality, submerges each individual, whether guest or house folk. There is no doubt that the time-old custom of double beds will in this century be more honored in the breach than in the observance.

FOR WHITE HANDS .- The white of an egg, beaten for a few moments-but not to a stiff froth-with a little powdered alum, is excellent as a means of making the hands white and soft. This should be applied just before going to bed, the hands being first washed in warm soap-suds, dried thoroughly with a soft towel, and then damped with the white of egg. The hands should then be encased in a pair of chamois leather gloves.

HOME-MADE TOILET WATER .- A' refreshing toilet water which may be easily made at home is composed of 19 ozs. of orange-flower water mixed with 1 oz. of pure glycerine and $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. of powdered borax. The ingredients should be added by degrees, constant stirring being necessary in order to mix them thoroughly together, when the liquid should be bottled and well shaken before it is used.

We have seen dyspeptics who suffered untold torments with almost every kind of food; no liquid could be taken without suffering; bread became a burning acid; meat and milk were solid liquid fires; and we have seen their torments pass away and their hunger relieved by living on the whites of eggs which have been boiled in bubbling water for thirty minutes. At the end of a week we have given the half yolk of the egg with the white, and upon this diet alone, without food of any kind, we have seen them begin to gain flesh and strength, and quiet, refreshing sleep. After weeks of this treatment they have been able, with care, to begin upon other food. And all this without taking medicine. Hard-boiled eggs are not half as bad as half-boiled ones, and ten times as easy to digest as raw eggs, even in egg-nog.

proportion. The changes in the substance of the brain which assist to thought and emotion would be impossible, were it not for the extreme delicacy of structure dependent on the water organized into its substance. A man who weighs 150 pounds carries about in his system more than 100 pints of water, and every particle of this water is in its own place and necessary to the powers and actions of life. In health an adult should pass about two quarts of water from kidneys, bowels, skin and lungs in twenty-four hours. At least this amount should be taken into the system every day to make good the loss, otherwise there is a drain on the body itself. Water serves a double purpose in the system, for not only does it hold in solution all the alimentary principles which are to nourish the body, but it also dissolves all the waste and worn out materials, so that they can be carried off. Those who drink very little water except in the form of strong tea or coffee almost invariably suffer from constipation of the kidneys and are fit subjects for rheumatism, to add the waves and billows of feather | Bright's disease and kindred ailments.

The Head of the Sphinz.

In Egypt, you know, there are great stone figures in the desert, called Sphinxes, and the word has known a half dozen meanings in history, but the most popular use of the word is to indicate a perfectly silent person who will not answer a question of any kind. Here is a Sphinx which can and will talk, a decided novelty, and, moreover, one you can introduce at a party of your friends with great success. First you must build your Sphinx. The dotted lines in the accompanying picture show how to construct a frame

The "DAISY" churn is fitted both with a foot pedal and with a bow lever, so that you may sit down to your churning or you can stand up to it and do it by hand. Besides the and do it by hand. Besides work, which should be of the lightest work, which should be of the lightest boards you can procure. Lath is the best, for it is strong and light, too, and the pieces will be just long enough for the longer pieces of your frame-work. This may be held together by ordinary carpet tacks of a large size, and can be put together in no time by a boy at all expert with hammer and nails. Get eight pieces of wrapping paper.

When the head has made the circuit of the room it should pause in the centre and announce that, although a Sphinx is usually the most silent of beings, this one will make an excep-tion on this occasion and will answer any question about some one in the room that may be asked it. Of course, the boy inside knows every one pres-ent, and he may make some sort of reply to any question concerning his friends which may be asked. The questions themselves will create a great deal of fun, for, as every one knows every one else, some very ridic-ulous things may be asked, and the Sphinx may double the fun by witty and unexpected answers.

A Task for Nimble Fingers.

Here is a bridge, and a pretty strong one, considering its material, which is made of matches, without using rivets, glue, string or any other fastening ex-cept friction made of matches, without using rivets, glue, string or any other fastening ex-cept friction. It is quite a trick to put it together, and the bridge builder must have pa-tience and a steady hand, but the re-sult is worth a little trouble. If you go about it in a haphagard, hit or miss fashion, even with the aid of the il-lustration, you will be pretty sure to fail and will soon vote the whole thing stupid and give it up, but the task is not so very difficult if you go to work in the right way. Lay a match on the table, and upon it, near the ends, lay the heads of two other matches, the other ends of which rest on the table. These two matches must lie at right angles to the ones first mentioned. They are the ones which start from the ground at the near end of the bridge in the picture, and the match on which their heads rest is the second cross-piece. Now across these two parallel matches lay a fourth match—the first cross-piece in the picture. Mext, lift up the match you laid down slip two more matches under it and over the one you laid down last (the first cross-piece in the picture). Lay the heads of these last two matches on another (the fourth cross-piece), and across them lay still another (third cross-piece). Now you have two links of the bridge done. Lift up the cross-piece, slip in turn more matches under it and lay over the third, add the next pair of cross-pieces and go on in this way, link by link, until you have five or six links. which will make a strong bridge of the arch too high, less makes it too nat. The matches should be long, strong and either square or quite rough. so that they will neither roll nor slip. As in all such tricks, it is advisable them carefully. This still better to use burnt matches of equal length. Toothpicks or any of equal length. Toothpicks or any of hickness may be used instead of matches.

Get eight pieces of wrapping paper, paste the edges of four pieces togeth-er, making a square of about six feet each way. Now draw on this square a face and head as large as the edges of your paper will permit. This done, form a similar sheet by pasting to-gether the remaining four pieces of wrapping paper, and lay the piece with the head drawn on it upon the other sheet. Then, with a heavy pair of selssors, cut through both sheets along the outlines of the face you have drawn. Now you have two sides of a face, which you may fit over your frame work, pasting the edges of the paper together everywhere but at the bottom. It is not necessary to paste the paper to the framework, as the peculiar shape of the frame and the paper will keep the paper from slip-ping. Cut a little hole where the eyes of the Sphinx should come, and over the hole paste a sheet of isinglass, which you can get at any hardware store for a penny. Now slip the paper over a chair so that the framework will rest upon the seat, and let it dry for several hours. When the paper has become thor-oughly dry, paint the face a soft pink, and the rest, the part enclosed in the heavy black line in the accompanying picture, a solid black. When this paint has dried the Sphinx is ready to talk. The head always creates a sensation when introduced at a party. Nothing is visible but the gigantic head above two feet. The boy holding it makes it bow gravely to the party by tipping it gently forward. A heart party would be an appropri-ate entertainment for St. Valentine's day. Heart-shaped wreaths of ever-greens, brightened with bunches of holly, would be suitable decorations. Cupids, made of sugar or wax, would be prety suspended over the refresh-ment table, by gold or silver cords. The sandwiches should be cut into heart shapes, and small, iced cakes, baked in the form of hearts, would please the children. The ice cream should be individual, and frozen in heart-shaped molds. The boy and girl draw-ing hearts of the same color are part-ners for the evening. An enjoyable game could be played by cutting out a large heart of red paper sewed or pasted in the centre. This is placed at a convenient distance. and with a small bow and arrow, each child tries to hit the bull's or heart's eye. Each one has three trials. The child coming nearest the black heart is presented with a prize—a silver heart stickpin or brooch would be pretty for a girl, and a cravat pin for a boy. The "booby," or consolation prize, could be a great pink and white sugar heart.

Glad Days.

Time to wander back a ways Down the dark and sunlit ways, Pausing here and there, Picking out the cloudless skie. Picking out the days you prize. Happy days and fair.

Dwelling on each old delight, Happy days and cloudy bright, Not the grieving or The sad days at all, at all; Days when happy voices call, Days you're thankful for.

Winter Evening Recreations.

Winter Evening Recreations. I will begin by telling of games that interest the small people. Hunt the thimble is one of which they never tire. One "hides" the thimble in some unusual place, but in plain sight, while the others remain in the kitchen or bedroom until he says "ready." Once the thimble was found in papa's ear, and sometimes when all the "good places" have been used, it is placed where it belongs, but where no one seems to expect to find it, on mamma's finger. finger.

Another little game they enjoy is "Occupations." They march in as large a circle as the room will permit, singing:

This is the way we sow the grain, Sow the grain, Sow the grain, On a springtime morning.

This is the way we hoe the corn, Hoe the corn, Hoe the corn, On a summer morning.

This is the way we wash the clothes, Wash the clothes, Wash the clothes,

On a Monday morning.

etc., suiting action to words until they and tired, when they close thus:

And then we go when Sunday comes, Sunday comes, Sunday comes, And sing in Sunday School.

when they all sit down and the whole family joins them in singing a Sunday school song. "Stage coach" is a great favorite, but one of the grown-ups must tell the story, first naming the children, the white horse, the black horse, the driver, the harness, the whip, the wo-man passenger, the baby, the bundle, the mail bags, etc.; each child jumps up and turns around when in the progress of the story the thing he represents is mentioned, and when the words "stage coach" are said all must leave their seats and each sit in ancher's place, as when "the stage coach started" or "the stage coach tipped over," etc. "Truit basket" is played the same, each child being named some fruit.

played the same, each child being named some fruit. Sometimes we have a real game of romps, "Pussy wants the corner," or "Blind man's buff." moving everything to the sides of the room. These games do not last long as the little folks must be in bed at $ o'clock, and are as much enjoyed by the older members of the family as any one, the older chil-dren often joining in. For the young people we have char-ades, sometimes acted, sometimes simply represented. A young lady named May standing before the com-pany with a cape over her shoulders was a geographical object, "Cape May." John, on the sofa, snoring under a sheet, represented "sheet music," etc. The acting charades may be left to the ingenuity of the young people. "Consequences," in which four per-son and an object, an act and a "conse-quence," with which each is to make a sentence, creates much amusement. For instance, one says, "John and Mary sang and the consequence was a terrible scare: "Emily used an axe and created a mix-up." "Frank and Mabel sawed wood until a cyclone struck them." "Harriet and James went fishing and the house burned down." Some of the unusual com-binations are decidedly funny, and often one who is quick-witted takes the liberty of naming his own conse-quence.

We undertake the training of other human souls before we understand the moods of our own and how to control them.

February, 1908

The happiness of our families, our homes and our entire lives is in daily jeopardy, because from the lack of self control, hasty words, unconsidered, unkind speeches escape us.

There are those who boast of their lack of self control, saying, "When I am angry folks know better than to stand in my way; "I can stand about so much, then look out;" "Wnen my temper's up there's no knowing what I may do," and other senseless, silly and shameless remarks.

Any person of intelligence and right feeling or instincts will be ashamed in-stead of boasting of a want of self-control. It is only the ignorant and vicious who can regard it lightly.

The power and influence for good that radiates from a properly self-controlled person is beyond estimation.

Whenever unpleasant conditions arise they are met cheerfully and borne patiently.

However hasty and unkind the words and manner of others, the one who has attained control of self is calm and pleasant and dignified.

The wife and mother who possesses such control is the tower of refuge and strength of her family, to whom they turn in every emergency for help and comfort.

Contrast such a mother and the at-mosphere she creates in the home with the uncontrolled, hasty, impetuous wo-man, who pets and rages at her chil-dren by turns, whose moods are so fitful and uncertain that they know not what to expect from her, and who naturally seek the sympathy and so-ciety of others outside the home. There is no truer saying than that "he who conquereth himself is might-ier than he that taketh a city." Is not such a conquest worth striv-ing for?

Muslin Underwear.

Muslin Underwear. Any of the combination garments that do away with draw-strings and belts about the waist are welcomed by the woman who cares to be well dressed. Neatness and trimness about the waist-line and over the hips are of as much importance as comfort, and while the combination garments can be bought very inexpensively at the stores, they can be made at home with the aid of a well-fitting paper pattern. Many women—especially those who are spare-built—fail to grasp the fact that fulness over and about the knees is of great importance. They strive for fulness and flare at the ankles, and pad or otherwise build out the hips; but they never seem to think that the knees are the really important angu-larities to be protected and rounded out. Notice half the women you see, how ungracefully the thinly-clad knees protrude through one's skirts when larities to be protected and rounded out. Notice half the women you see, how ungracefully the thinly-clad knees protrude through one's skirts when sitting down. To do away with this angularity, a woman should have ruffles on her short underwear, at this point, and the ruffles should begin on her petticoat about two inches above the knees, and she would at once no-tice a very great improvement in the set of her outer skirt at this point. In buying ready-made muslin under-wear, avoid coarse muslin and careless, coarse stitching. Unless paying a good price for the garment, it is best not to choose one having an over-supply of lace, or of open-work em-broidery, as very little laundering, even of a careful kind, will ruin it. Skirts and drawers naving draw-strings are better than those having bands, as the home-seamstress can adjust the gathers into plaits, side-stitched to a narrow bias band which fits about the corset an inch and a half below the waist-line, or lay the extra fulness in little gores, or darts, in order to fit it to the form. Or the skirt may be fit-ted to a close-fitting yoke at the top, and the extra length be taken up in tucks about the knees. Drawers should have three to five darts from the facing at top, each side, to fit the form, and should be

Heart and Home Talks. Nowhere is there such a need of perfect control as in the home and schoolroom.

The mother expects to control her children, the teacher her pupils, as the commander his army, before they have learned to control themselves, and the result is—failure.

HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS SUPERVISED BY THE CHEF OF THE MARRIAGCI, WINNIPEG

COOKING BECIPES.

Grusted Potatoes Cut boiled potatoes lengthwise into fairly thick slices. Dip well in beaten eggs, highly seasoned; roll in flour and fry in hot spider.

Molasses Ginger Bread — One-half cupful of molasses, scant one-half cup-ful of butter one-half cupful of sour milk, small teaspoonful soda, one egg, teaspoonful of ginger, two even cup-fuls of flour.

Boast Duck and Onions—Procure a pair of nice ducks, clean them well and put in a shallow baking pan. Season with salt and pepper, lard and a little water. Surround ducks with onions cut in halves and small slices of fresh ham. Set in a warm oven.

Frissled Beef—Shave beef very fine, put into a frying pan when good and hot, season with pepper and salt just before serving. Beat two or three eggs light and stir in, and you have an ap-petizing dish easily prepared for tea. Cold ham is also good.

Bice Mush—One teacupful of rice, half a teacupful of fine cornmeal and a little salt, well cooked in a pint and a half of sweet milk or water; when cold cut it into thin slices and fry or bake it in sufficient butter to prevent sticking to the griddle; serve hot with maple syrup. maple syrup.

Fish Balls—Two cupfuls of fresh boiled potatoes, mashed while hot. Take a piece of salt fish, soak over night and boil till tender and mince fine. There should be one cupful; then add the potatoes and two eggs. Season to taste, and drop from spoon into boiling deep fat.

Mashed Onions—Peel a dozen onions, blanch and drain them. Cook them in enough chicken or veal broth to cover them nicely until tender. Add a cup-ful of bechamel sauce and let it cook until thick and well reduced. Then rub the whole through a sieve. Add a little butter, season to taste and serve.

Dessert Puffs—Take one pint each of milk and cream, the whites of four eggs beaten to a stiff froth, one scant cupful of powdered sugar; add a little grated lemon peel and a little salt. Beat these together until very light, bake in gem pans, sift pulverized sugar over them, and eat with a sauce flav-ored with lemon.

range some of them in a loose layer in the bottom of a buttered baking dish. Sprinkle with pepper, salt, two tablespoonfuls of burter cut into little morsels. Repeat with another layer of potatoes and on top put a layer of but-tered breadcrumbs. Bake until well browned.

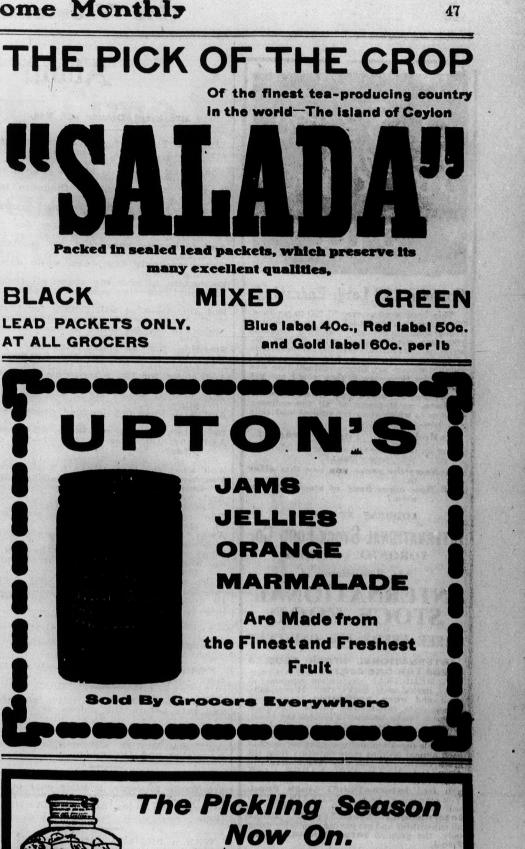

Bride's Cake—One and one-half cup-fuls of sugar, one-half cupful of but-ter, one-half cupful of sweet milk, two cupfuls of flour, one-quarter cupful cornstarch, six egg whites, one and one-half teaspoonfuls baking powder, one teaspoonful Baker's extract van-illa. Cream the sugar and butter; add milk, flour and cornstarch into which the baking powder has been thoroughly sifted; stir in the whites of eggs quickly with the flavoring.

Fairy Fudding—Over one-half box gelatine pour one cupful of cold water and let it doak one hour. Let one pint of rich milk come to a boil and add to it three well-beaten eggs and one-half cupful of sugar. When it thickens stir in the gelatine and in two minutes take from the fire and flavor with al-mond extract. Line a mould with stale cake, pour in the mixture and set away on the ice. Whip one pint of cream and pile on top; serve very cold.

Sweet Potato Croquettes—Select six or eight large, firm sweet potatoes, boil until tender, drain and put through fruit press, add salt, butter size of an egg and from a third to half a cupful of sweet cream, beat well; when cold form into croquette shape, roll into beaten egg and cracker crumbs and fry in hot fat until a nice brown. These, with sprigs of parsley, make a pretty garnish for fried chick-en or steak.

Orange Bavarois—Squeeze a sufficient number of oranges to produce a nalf pint of juice, including the juice of half a lemon. Add to this six ounces of sugar and stir until the sugar is dissolved. Melt on2-quarter ounce of gelatine in a little hot water. Add this to the fruit juice and stir until the mixture begins to set; then fold in a half pint of whipped cream. Have ready a mould lined with sections of oranges and fill this carefully. Put in a cool place.

Beat these together until very light, bake in gem pans, sift pulverized sugar over them, and eat with a sauce flavored with lemon.
Oyster Soup—Take a good piece of soup meat and boil it in a quart of water. Season with salt only. Make a hash of green onions, parsley and chervil. Fry this in hot butter; add flour for thickening, and pour the broth on the whole. Add two dozen oysters and branch of thyme, two bay leaves and a piece of strong pepper. Serve with toast.
Macaroni and Cheese—Break half a pound of macaroni into pieces an inch or two long; cook it in enough boiling or two long; cook it in enough boiling the together to cover it well; put in a good teaspoonful of salt and let it boil about twenty minutes, drain it well and well-buttered pudding dish. Upon this pieces of butter, a bit of salt, then more macaroni, and so on, filling the dish, sprinkling the top layer with a thick layer of cracker crumbs. Pour or milk. Set it in the oven and bake half an hour or until it is nicely browned on top.

Make sauce of four tablespoon-fuls of vinegar, one of mustard, two of currant jelly and one teaspoonful of lemon juice, mixed together. Pour over rabbit and serve.

Tomato Soup—One quart tomatoes, half pint cold water, pinch of soda, one tablespoonful chopped onion, one of parsley. Cook all together ten minparsley. Cook all together ten min-utes. Heat one cupful of milk, and make a cream sauce with one heaping tablespoonful butter melted and one of flour. Stir into the soup and cook ten minutes more. Strain and serve at once.

Coffee Macaroons—After blanching four ounces of almonds, pound them to a paste, moistening with four tea-spoonfuls of very strong black coffee; add the stiffly beaten whites of four eggs blended with one pound of pow-dered sugar; shape into macaroons, ar-ranging on paper-lined tins; bake ten minutes in a hot oven. While still warm press a crystalized cherry into the top of each little cake.

Savory Boiled Beef.—Take six pounds of brisket of beef, salt, one onion, piece of mace, long peppers, carrots and turnips. Place the beef in a large saucepan with the salt, an onion stuck with cloves, a piece of mace, six all-spice, carrots and turnips. Cover with water and cook slowly three and one-half hours; when done, slip out the bones and press till cold. Brush over with glaze and serve. with glaze and serve.

Finish with the rest of the broth, and for a top put on a rich crust, cut in diamonds or circles, which is better than a close cover. Bake till browned.

Peanut Wafers—For peanut jumbles or wafers grind a cupful of roasted and shelled peanuts until fine. Cream a rather liberal fourth of a cupful of butter, add half a cupful of sugar, us-ing likewise a liberal measure. Add the peanuts and a cupful of sifted flour. Moisten the mixture with a scant cupful of milk, or enough to make a stiff dough, about like pie crust. Flour a board and rolling pin, then roll out the dough until of wafer-like thinness. These jumbles should be so thin after rolling and cutting out that one can almost see through them. Bake on buttered pans in a brisk oven. taking care that they do not burn. They should bake until a nice brown and should, when served, be crisp like "snaps." They are delicious with a cup of fresh "brewed" tea and a slice of cream cheese.

Breakfast, Dinner and Tea.

What do I want for breakfast, dear? My wants are all in my mind quite clear; You—with your cheerful morning and a pretty dress, my thoughts be-gulle Into thinking of flowers; an earnest word That will all through my busy day be heard And make me sure that my morning light

Beams strongly true, e'en while danc-ing bright, Be certain to give me these, all these, And anything else you can or please.

But dinner-what will I have for that? Well, dear, when I enter, doff my hat, And turn to the table, I want to see you,

Standing, just as you always do, To make me lose all the forenoon's fret. And cheer for the afternoon's work to get;

Tell me all your news, and I'll tell mine

And with love and joy and peace we'll dine.

Be certain to give me these, all these, And anything else that you can or please.

And what for tea? Have I any choice? Yes, dear, the sound of your own sweet voice, And your gentle presence. I always

In the enervating life of yarded fowls, it is not safe to trust any cock after the second mating sea-son until the product of his pen has been tested. The male bird wears out much sooner than the female, and best esults come from one and two-year-old cocks for breeders. Probably it is not well to keep the cock too long from his mates; but always during his own moult he should be removed there-from; indeed, such birds in heavy moult show a distaste for the company and crowding of the hens.

Meat for Layers.

Meat for Layers. One of the best foods for making hens lay is lean meat. When the sup-ply of eggs fails stop all other foods, and feed lean meat or liver (any cheap meat will answer), and it will be found superior to anything that can be used. Green bone, containing a large propor-tion of lean meat, is even better, pro-vided the fat portions are removed from the bone. It will be found cheap-er than grain because it will make eggs. One reason why the hens fail to lay when they have plenty of grair is that they require a change, and meat supplies the needful. If the hens are fat, give one ounce of lean meat each day, allowing no other food for a week or two, and watch the results.

IN THE DAIRY.

- The three-minute churn is a delusion. Keep few good cows rather than
- many poor ones.
- You cannot afford to use cheap salt in your butter.
- Keep the cow's hide clean and free from barnyard filth.
- A scrub bull at the head of your herd means ultimate failure.
- The wastes in dairying come from apparently slight causes.
- The cow which will not eat abund-antly will not produce liberally.

The milk scale is as essential to lairy education as the keystone is to dairy edu the arch.

The value of a calf depends upon the treatment it receives, as well as upon blood.

Don't let the cow run with the herd while in heat. She disturbs them all. Confine her.

THE HORSE.

THE HORSE. Get the horses in shape for spring work. Give them work if possible, but plenty of exercise at all events. Over-haul the harness, fit up the collars, and see that the feet are in good shape. Don't jump into spring work without some sort of preparation, or there will be a lot of sick, sore shoul-dered, lame, or otherwise disabled horses. It will save loss of time and veterinary bills if you make prepara-tions, and don't expect the horses to be hardened up for work all at once, after a winter of idleness.

Clipping Horses.

Clipping Horses. The prevalence of pneumonia and colds in the spring of the year reminds us of a decided advantage in clipping horses. The long coat of hair that has been so needed for winter protection becomes the greatest nuisance in the spring. The long coat gets damp with perspiration and takes hours to dry. When cold air or a draught strikes the overheated animal the next thing in order is a case of pneumonia, a severe cold, or an attack of rheumatism, to say nothing of discomfort to the ani-mal. The clipped horse is clean, easily groomed, feels well, and works well. But it is well not to clip too early, and the clipped horse must sometimes be protected for a few days in case of un-seasonable weather.

Gas Manufactured from Farm Wastes.

For several years past a Chicago in-ventor, J. R. Coutts, has been at work with the idea of utilizing the waste products of the farm—straw, corn cobs, etc., for the manufacture of il-luminating gas. Success finally crown-ed his efforts and the first plant has been successfully established at Bea-trice. Neb. trice, Neb.

Beatrice is a city of 12,000 people. The new gas company opened for busi-ness without a single customer June 15, 1907. As a competitor there was an old established gas company furnish-ing gas at $2 a thousand feet. After a month of operation, the new company was lighting the city, had 300 meters installed, had fifty men instal-ling others just as fast as possible, and had 300 applications on hand. The machinery for the plant was de-signed by Percy Taylor, a young Eng-lish chemist, who is employed by the new company to continue his research-es for taking care of the by-products, which are said to be far more valu-able than the gas extacted from the material used. It is the intention of the men back of the new industry to branch out in all directions. forming local compan-ies and utilizing the materials which afare now thrown away by the American farmer. The company has bought the Yankton, S. D., gas plant and will in-stall the straw and cob system immedi-ately.

Tying a Hog.

To tie a hog is one of the most diffi-cult things in the hog raiser's experi-ence. To tie by the leg requires a rope or strap to be drawn up so tight as to cause pain if not real iniury. Now try this plan: Take a horse halter, slip over the hog's head upside down. then buckle the head stall securely around the hog just back of the fore-legs, and you have him safely halter-ed, in a way he cannot hurt himself. Then holding the strap and walking behind you can readily drive it any-

The Farmer Should Experiment.

The Farmer Should Experiment. We believe that every farmer should conduct an experimental farm of his own. The time has come when com-petition is so close, and new systems are fast coming to the front, that "hit to the wall, while the progressive, up-to-date farmers are reaping success. There are many problems in every-day agriculture which cannot be met except by the farmer himself, and in such cases he must work out his own such cases he must work out his own such cases be fore plants, and testing seeds before plants, and testing seeds before plants, and testing for himself. The subject of soil fertility and improvement is also one in which he can expect but little outside aid, and a few systematic ex-periments conducted on his own lands

To Prune the Top Limbs.

The boy who pruned the top limbs. The boy who pruned the top limbs of his father's orchard trees by walking on stilts did a stunt, but the man who thought of putting his pruning shears on stilts did a better thing. I saw him at work, cutting the tallest limbs with a pruning saw fastened to a six-foot pole. This beats climbing the tree, or using a stepladder, or even a balloon; he could do more and move quicker.

Opportunities for the Young Farmer.

Eighty-five per cent. of the graduates of agricultural colleges are reported as entering at once upon some agricultur-al pursuit, as instructors in agriculal pursuit, as instructors in agricul-tural collegés, agricultural editors, or in connection with the national de-partment. With new agricultural schools being established in every con-gressional district in some states, and at several points in many, the demand for trained instructors is bound to in-crease and the field, therefore, offers fine opportunities for ambitious young men.

OST Incubator-men talk loud about steady Heat and little about Clean Air. I can afford to talk both, and more besides. Because :--

The Peerless is the incubator that hatches with clean air,-the incubator that has real ventilation.

Now the quality of air an incubator-chicken gets before it's hatched is far more important than the quantity of food it gets after it hatches.

And many a poultry-for-profit venture has gone to smash by the carbon-dioxide route how you can make the Peerless earn its bad incubator air. Carbon - dioxide is a deadly gas every egg gives off as it hatches.

Open the ordinary incubator's door and sniff, -that sulfurous, musty, choking smell is carbon-dioxide; and it is poison to animal life.

There is no smell in a Peerless-the poison is continually flushed out of the Peerless hatching chamber by the Peerless natural, unfailing ventilation.

Remember that for almost 500 hours the chick breathes what air seeps through the porous shell. If that air is poison loaded, as it is in badly-ventilated ordinary incubators; that chick is stunted, its vitarity impaired, its vigor weakened.

It never can thrive as Peerless-hatched chicks, that breathe pure, clean air, do thrive.

Remember, too, that this is only one of fifteen plain reasons why the Peerless incubator not only hatches every chick that can be hatched, but gives those chicks the right start.

Every one of the fifteen reasons means the difference between money made and money lost in poultry-raising.

keep? Will it keep in a basement, and will the basement need to be made air-tight?—J. D. The best way to preserve beet pulp is to put it in a silo the same as corn is ensiloed. The air must be kept from it the same as any other green, sappy product to be preserved. In the absence of a suitable building a trench may be dug in the ground three or four feet deep and wide enough to drive a team and wagon through. Loads of pulp are deposited in the trench and when the mass is several feet above the ground the sides are shaped like a roof and the whole covered with straw and dirt to keep out the frost and air. A storm basement will do, provided it is air-tight and not too large a room. Pulp will not keep long spread out and exposed to air. It must be stored in compact form and protected from out-side influences. side influences.

The Irishman Scores One.

An American visiting Dublin told some startling stories about the height of some of the New York buildings. An Irishman who was listening stood it as long as he could, and then queried: "Ye haven't seen our newest hotel, baye ve?"

"Ye haven't seen our newest note, have ye?" The American thought not. "Well," said the Irishman, "it's so tall that we had to put the top stories on hinges." "What for?" asked the American. "So we could let 'em down while the moon went by."

French Money Didn't Count.

This is a story binn't count. This is a story of an American banker who left his son in Paris and informed his Paris bankers to meet the young man's drafts as they came along. It wasn't long before it became necessary for the Paris bankers to notify the indulgent parent that his account was overdrawn 100.000. The father, who had more or less contempt for things French, sent this reply: "If you mean pounds, send him home; if you mean dollars, tell him to be careful; if you mean those little things called francs, let him have all he wants."

Would Cost Her More.

"You naughty child, where have you been? You have been fighting again with Paul. Just look at your clothes! I'll have to buy you a new suit." "Don't say anything, ma. You ought to see Paul. I think his mother will have to buy a new boy."

Plenty of Time.

All rose but Tommy Twaddles. "And doesn't this little boy want to go to heaven?" "N-not yit."

Irving and His Cats.

A new story is told illustrating Sir Henry Iriving's kindness of heart. An old lady came to him asking employ-old lady came to him asking employ-ment. He telephoned to his business mana-ger, inquiring if there was any em-ployment at the theatre that could be found for her. The business manager aswered, "Absolutely nothing—nothing at all." Irving suggested that she might look after the cats. The manager tele-phoned back that there were already three women looking after the cats. "Well," said Irving, "you must find her something. Let her look after the three women that are looking after the cats."

Probably Pleased the Lady.

At an afternoon party in London, the hostess desired a novelty. She engaged a troupe of performing fleas for the entertainment of her guests. The party was a great success. When it broke up a loud wail rent the air. It was the voice of the impresario, frantic with excitement. "What is it? Tell me, I implore you," said the hostess. "Ach, madam. I has lost vun of my fleas. Vere has it gone?" At that moment a lady wearing a gray gown brushed past him.

At that moment a lady wearing a gray gown brushed past him. "Ach, madam, pardon," said the manager, greatly relieved, lightly picking some-thing from her shoulder. "vun of my artistes."

Shaved the Wrong Face.

An officer of a certain regiment was one morning inspecting his company on parade, when he came to an Irish-man who had evidently not shaved for some days. Halting in front of the man, he said: "Doyle, how is it you've not shaved this morning?" "Oi have, sorr," was the reply. "How dare you tell me that," said the officer, "with a beard on you like that?"

that?" "Well, sorr," said Paddy, "It's loike this. There's only one shaving glass in our room and there was nine of us shaving at the same time, and maybe Oi shaved some other chap's face."

Not Up in Horse Sense.

The person who advertised for "A man who speaks German and under-stands horses" was satisfied with the wording of his advertisement until the first applicant arrived. "Vell," said the would-be stableman, scratching his head, "I schpeaks Chairman all righdt, but I don't know dot I can un-derstand those horses. Vat languishes do tey schpeak?"

How Old is Fair Lillian?

"Exactly how old are you, anyway?" asked a friend of Lillian Russell. "I have a friend," replied the actress with apparent irrelevance, "who was born in mid-ocean on an ocean steamer. After she and her mother had landed, the steamer, on its return trip, blew up. So practically she has no birth-place. My age is that," she added after a pause.

The Betort Courteous.

"My dear," said Mrs. Mildly, as she dusted Mr. Mildly's table, "this would be a great deal cleaner world if there were not any men in it." "If there were not," retorted Mr. Mildly, "the women would do exactly as the Lord did—hunt around for enough dirt to make a man out of."

A Conscientious Workman.

A Conscientious Workman. Strong-Arm Tim is employed in car-rying bricks on to a barge. His strength is so great that his boss keeps increasing his loads until final-ly the gang-plank breaks and lands Tim and his bricks in the water. Tim rapidly sinks, but presently comes to the surface and shouts out, "Throw me a rope there, you spalpeens, youse!" While his companions are searching frantically for a rope Tim comes to the surface a second time and bellows out, "Here, there, youse loafers, if ye don't throw me a rope I'll be after droppin' some of these here bricks!"

A Human Biped.

"Justin, there's a man down here with a bill," called Mrs. Wyss to her husband.

"Gee whiz! let's go down and see him, Pop." exclaimed young Austin Wyss excitedly. "He must be a bird."

A Dark Outlook for Miss Simpkins.

A bark Outlook for Miss Simpkins. At an evening prayer-meeting in a Maine village the senior deacon, Do-minicus Jordan, arose to make appro-priate scriptural remarks about the death of Miss Simpkins. In conclusion the deacon said: "I respected Miss Simpkins, the members of this church respected Miss Simpkins, the citizens of this town respected Miss Simpkins; but now she's dead and gone to the Lord, and the Scripture saith, "The Lord is no respecter of persons."

He Cancelled His Error.

He Cancelled His Error. The man of this story is a very light sleeper, one who is easily awakened and who is a long time getting to sleep. In a Leeds hotel he had at last got sound asleep when a loud rap, re-peated, awoke him. "What's wanted?" "Package downstairs for you." "Well, it can wait until morning. I suppose?" "The boy departed, and after a long time the man was sound asleep again, when there came another resounding knock at the door. "Well, what is it now?" he inquired. "Well, what is it now?" he inquired.

This assertion can be verified by hund-reds who have tried it and are pleased to bear testimony to its merits, so that all may know what a splendid medicine it is. It costs you only 25 cents to join the ranks of the many who have been benefited by its use.

"What do you mean by that?" de-manded the large, red-faced woman. "I mean there has been no compul-sion on the part of your husband, has there there?" "Him?" she ejaculated, turning to look at the meek little man sitting be-side her; "I'd like to see him try to compulse me."

A Miraculous Birth.

A young man was being examined by a life-insurance official as to his fam-ily record. Among other questions the following was asked, "Of what did your grandfather die?" The applicant hesitated a few mo-ments and then stammered out, "I-I'm not sure, but I think he died in in-fancy."

From Dottyville.

Lunatic (suddenly popping his head over the asylum wall)—"What are you doing there?" doing there?" Brown-"Fishing." Lunatic-"Caught anything?" Brown-"No." Lunatic-"How long have you been here?" Brown—"Ten hours." Lunatic—"Come inside!"

When going at full gallop it can cover twenty yards a second, or about a mile a minute and twenty-eight sec-onds—a speed that comes very near that of a carrier pigeon. ENTERTAINING MISCELLANY VARIOUS SUBJECTS CLEVERLY TREATED needs encouragement a piece of chain is a frequent substitute for a whip. Many centuries ago, in Florence, the very first men who made a business of lending money were members of the great Medici family, whose coat-of-arms consisted of three gilt balls. When other men took up the same sort of business, they adopted the Medici arms also, and so the custom has con-tinued to the present day. An Old Man's Valentine. There is a blind girl in Nova Scotia, about thirty-five miles from Halifax, who has done such wonderful things in the last two years that the people have come to believe that she is a witch and are afraid of her. She can tell when a storm is coming, no matter if it is two weeks off. She can tell when schools of fish come along the coast; when anyone in the village is to fall sick; when anyone is to lose his cow or horse. If a crime is committed she gives a description of the criminal and sometimes tells where he is hiding. In July she predicted the loss of a steam-er on which her own father would be a passenger, and he was lost with the vessel. There are several species of fish, reptiles and insects which never sleep in the whole of their existence. Among fish it is positively known that pike, salmon and goldfish never sleep at all; also that there are several others in the fish family that never sleep more than a few minutes a month. There are dozens of species of flies which never indulge in slumber. Her gown—ah! NOTE.-

The smallest motor is that made by a German mechanic. It is worked by a battery deposited in his pocket, and he uses the motor as a scarf-pin. It is working all the time, simply to show that it is an actual working mo-tor. It is curious to see the little wheels revolving as the machine rests on the scarf.

What is claimed to be the largest single leather belt in the world has been made in Chicago for an American saw-mills plant. It was made from pure oak bark tanned leather; is 48 inches in width, three-ply in thickness, and weighs just 2.300 pounds. The belt is 114 feet long; it took the centres of the hides of 225 steers to make it, and each piece of this leather was sep-arately stretched before being placed in the belt.

An ingenious device has been invent-ed by an employee of the street rail-way in an American city and is being tested. Whenever a passenger stands on the lower step a buzzer sounds in the motorman's compartment and warns him not to start the car until the signal ceases, which it does the instant the passenger reaches the plat-form or the ground. Contact points are placed in the step which are passenger.

The British House of Commons and local representative assemblies are not the only places where word-spinning has developed into a fine art. In a recent session of the United States Congress 40,000,000 words were uttered in the seven months. The official rec-ord contains frequent instances of sixty columns of speeches for a six hours' sitting, an average of 165 words a minute. The Senate devoted seventy days to debate on the Railway Rate Bill.

Grow Peppermint.

Miss Mary Clark, of Galien, near Indianapolis, is the only woman in the world to enter upon the culture of a study of the plant and its culture, and so improved upon the methods employed by the veteran mint grow-crs that her farm of eighty-three acres is the best mint producer in the world. Miss Clark watches her crop so care-fully that she produces a higher grade of crop and more to the acre than any other mint grower, and in addition she attends to the other duties of her farm in Indiana, where she lives alone with her widowed mother. There are no men employed on the farm except in summer.

Be There a Will, Wisdom Points the way.-The sick man pines for relief, but he dislikes sending for the doctor, which means bottles of drugs never consumed. He has not the resolution to load his stomach with compounds which smell villainously and taste worse. But if he have the will to deal himself with the ailment, wisdom will direct his attention to Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, which, as a specific for indigestion and disorders of the digestive organs, have no equal.

At the railway stations in Russia books are kept in which passengers may enter any complaint they wish to make.

In the capital of Honduras all the houses in the poorer quarter are made of mahogany, which costs less than pine there.

The salmon is, for short distances, the swiftest swimmer of any fish. It can travel at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour.

An extraordinary addition has been made to the exhibition of inventions now being held in Berlin. A shoemaker, named Wagner, living in Strasburg, sent in a clock of the grandfather shape, nearly six feet high, made en-tirely of straw. The wheels, pointers, case and every detail are exclusively of straw. Wagner has taken fifteen years to construct this strange piece of mechanism. It keeps perfect time, a Berlin report says. The mattresses used in the German army are stuffed with little rolls of paper, and are said to be a great im-provement on straw.

General Information.

The largest mica mine in the world is located at Sydenham, Ontario, six-teen miles from Kingston. The prod-uct is mostly amber mica, with some silver amber, the highest quality mined. The mine is one mile from the upper end of Sydenham Lake, and the mica is transported in bulk from the mine by barge to the railroad at Sydenham, where it is shipped to Ot-tawa for trimming for the market.

With the final closure of the Colo-rado River, the great Salton Sink. which was inundated as the result of a poorly-constructed headgate of an ir-rigation canal, and rapidly converted into an inland sea, will gradually dry up. Inasmuch as there are practically no outlets for this vast body of water, the Sink must naturally evaporate to dryness. According to scientific opin-ion, the Salton Sea will dry up in about eight years.

Italy owns the world's three largest churches—St. Peter's, Rome; The Duomo, Milan; and St. Paul's, at Rome.

Milan, the centre of Italy for the moving picture machine trade, has al-ready about forty such theatres. Every available hall is being turned into a moving picture show. while nearly every second and third-rate theatre and "cafe chantant" finishes the eve-ning's entertainment with a few cine-matograph pictures. During the sum-mer months even the larger theatres are used. Locusts are proving hardly less de-structive in German Southwest Africa than the three years' rising of natives. A settler not long ago attempted to de-tend his little plot of land by digging all around it a ditch one yard broad and of equal depth, at the bottom of which he lit a fire. But the insects swarmed into the ditch till the flames had been extinguished by their accu-mulated corpses.

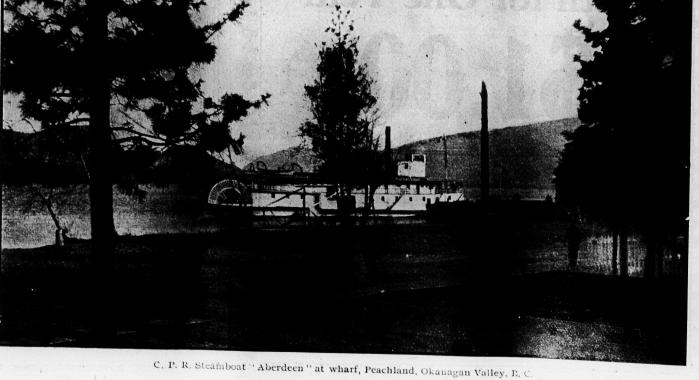

Instances of extreme old age are more common among those who exer-cise themselves with gardening than in any other employment.

Greenland was so called when first discovered by an exploring party of hardy Icelanders. The sight of this green oasis amid arctic wastes was the source of much pleasant surprise.

So many languages are spoken in the provinces of Austria-Hungary that in-terpreters are employed in the vari-ous parliaments to interpret the speeches of the delegates and make them intelligible to all the members.

A Calcutta paper tells of a doctor in a Bengal hospital who had a bearskin doormat. In a few days it was pluck-ed entirely bare. Whatever ailments the patients complained of, they re-garded a few hairs from the doctor's mat as more curative than the medi-cines he prescribed.

The aigret in a woman's bonnet is the crowning beauty of an egret mother. The collector seizes the bird while she is on her nest, with the young bird just hatched, and tears off her plumes and wings, leaving her to die beside her little ones, who, de-prived of her fostering care, also die.

One ounce Fluid Extract Dande-

One ounce Compound Salatone; Four ounces Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla ; Mixed and taken in teaspoonful doses after meals and at bedtime, is stated by a prominent physician to give most excellent results in kidney or urinary affli tions, and also in rheumatism and sciatica. The mix-ture opens the clogged pores of the kidneys, thus assisting them in their work of filtering all waste and poison-ous matter from the blood, and expels these in the urine. To allow this poisonous matter to remain means that it will settle in the muscular tissues or joints, and cause the untold misery known as rheumatism. The mixture is composed of harmless vegetable ingredients which can be purchased at any good drug store, and mixed at home.

TEMPERANCE TALK.

To Live.

Most of the things that worry us Don't matter much, Too many of us fret and fuss At every touch; There's nothing that's of great concern, Except to live, and love, and learn.

Suppose the world don't go our way, What of it, then? We have the better chance today To act like men: And still insist at every turn We're here to live, and love, and learn.

It isn't doing what we would That counts for most; It's being brave, and kind, and good, Amid the host; For better than to crave and yearn, Is just to live, and love. and learn.

We make too much of ease and joy And sordid gain; The things that vex us and annoy, The toll and pain, And every malady we spurn May help us live, and love, and learn.

And there is nothing else to fear. Of good or ill; Than just the failure of good cheer, And honest will: No loss need fright us if we earn More power to live, to love, to learn.

Science's Fight Against Alcohol.

That there are many ways of com-bating King Alcohol has been shown by a recent proclamation to the public, issued by German scientists. That is advanced with most positive-ness is a campaign of education, rather than prohibition or local option legis-lation. Teach this generation the complete lesson of alcohol, the scien-tists argue, and the next generation will be composed of total abstainers. Plans urged for decreasing the use of liquors include greater care in their employment as medicine, keeping children from indulging in drink and in schools with regard to the existing spread of alcohol as a beverage. It is proposed, too, to limit the drink-dulgence, "especially the too intimate connection between alcoholic indul-sence and society, as well as business. "Megotiations for employment, pay-ment of salaries, etc., should not take place in drinking houses." But the recommendations of these German students of the subject are not all negative. They have a good deal to do with the law of co-opera-tion. There should be greater facilities, hot all negative. They have a good deal to do with the law of co-opera-tion. There should be greater facilities, they assert. for the serving of other beverages to the public, such as coffee, moderate prices, and good drinking water and hot water for extracts, etc., wot only is the purpose to serve such non-alcoholic drinks in the crowd-ed sections of a city, but wherever men congregate for the pursuit of trade or employment. Serving depots, it is argued, should be established in connection with every large construction undertaking, such as the digging of canals, the building of railroads or any other great enterprises in which men are em-ployed by the hundreds and thousands. Of course, many men engaged in such work demand alcoholic stimulants and will not be content with a substitute. To these, the German scientistis argue, alcoholic liquors should be served only in certain hour at night. If possible, such finks should be served only in conjunction with food. But the scientific movement to dis-uon a total abstinence basis goes much farther. It has to do with the life and environments of the individu-al discontent have, as a rule, a distinct and direct bearing upon a man's habits of life. Improve the dwellings of the classes most likely to be caught in the grip of an alcoholic appetite is another of the methods these German scientists present to the consideration of the thoughtful world.

Meed a Touch of Mature.

The idea seems all right. The bright-er and happier and more comfortable a man's home is, the less he will de-sire to leave it, even for the attract-iveness of the public house. So the students of this subject have decided. Married men should have dwellings witn gardens—even a little touch of nature in the home life works wonders. There should be opportunities for re-creation and entertainment for the un-married, or those not living with their families. There should be a constant aim for improvement in domestic life —instructions in cooking and house-keeping for girls; good reading matter always at hand, and an encouragement of enlivening influences in the family circle.

of enlivening influences in the family circle. Then, they say, it is an excellent thing to awaken an interest in the pleasures of nature. All sorts of out-door excursions should be fostered; the establishment of public gardens, where only innocent pleasures and non-alcoholic drinks could be enjoyed, would go a great way toward solving the problem. Communities should encourage social intercourse, the formation of clubs for educational purposes, and various forms of recreation that can be made popular without an alcoholic adjunct. It is proposed to teach the alcoholic-drinking world, among other things, the tendency of free, easy and continu-ous drinking toward impoverishment. This, perhaps, will be one of the most difficult tasks before the German scien-tists. But, in addition the war plans almod ous drinking toward impoverishment. This, perhaps, will be one of the most difficult tasks before the German scien-tists. But, in addition, the war plans aimed against King Alcohol contemplate an additional arousing of interest in the pleasures of nature. People living in cities should take advantage of all means offered for excursions else-where; they should cultivate a liking for public gardens and parks, for out-door exercises and games, and all kinds of healthy sports. Social intercouse, lectures, the for-mation of clubs for educational pur-poses and visits to art galleries, mu-seums and industrial establishments are all suggested as means by which the alcohol thirst may be combated. In other words, if the mind is en-listed in activities that absorb and in-terest every leisure moment, there will be less demand for stimulants. Prohibition of the sale of liquor to habitual drunkards is urged. Lapses should be treated with severity. The treatment of drunkards should consist in an absolute abstinence from alcohol, which is facilitated by a treat-ment in an asylum. The creation of abstemious surroundings for family and club guarantees a safeguard against the influence of daily inter-course and mutual work. For incurable drunkards the scien-tists can only recommend proper asy-lums. But they believe few need drift into such asylums, if the subject is handled in a scientific manner.

A young housekeeper complained one day that her cakes were so often heavy. On inquiry the discovery was made that the oven was seldom hot enough when the cake went in. Whenever the cake was mixed and ready to bake it went into the oven regardless of tem-perature, and then the oven door was opened often to enable the cook to watch the progress. This difficulty was overcome by getting the right de-gree of heat before the cake was put in the oven, and then leaving the fire to do the rest, without being constantly watched. The next difficulty that pre-sented itself was that the oven was then often too hot and the temperature could not be reduced quickly enough to prevent the cake from burning. One of the best remedies for this difficulty is to put a small pan, or any low tin dish, filled partly with water, in the oven, and let it heat with the oven; in this way one will seldom have a cake burned on the bottom.

The Value of Charcoal.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Costs Nothing to Try.

Nearly everybody knows that char-coal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleans-ing purpose few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleans-ing purpose. Tharcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and car-ries them out of the system. Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables. Charcoal effectually clears and im-proves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic. It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh. All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmiess antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey. The daily use of these lozenges will in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey. The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but, on the contrary, great benefit. A Buffalo physician, in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I ad-vise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them: they cost but 25c a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets." More Terrible Than War!

More terrible than war, famine or pestilence is that awful destroyer, that hydraheaded monster, Consumption, that annually sweeps away more of earth's inhabitants than any other single disease known to the human race. "It is only a cold, a trifling cough," say the careless, as the irritation upon the delicate mucous membrane causes them to hack away with an irritable tickling of the throat. When the irritation settles on the mucous surface of the throat, a cough is the result. To prevent Bronchitis or Con-sumption of the Lungs, do not neglect a cough however slight as the irritation spreading throughout the delicate lining of the sensitive air passages soon leads to fatal results. If on the first appearance of a cough or cold you would take a few doses of

AND ADDRESS.

There are hundreds of cases of piles which have lasted for 20 and 30 years and have been cured in a few days or weeks with the marvelous Pyramid Pile Cure. Piles sufferers in the past have looked upon an operation as the only relief. But operations rarely cure, and often lead to fearful results. The Pyramid Pile Cure cures. It re-lieves the swelling, stops the conges-tion, heals the ulcers and fissures and the piles disappear. There is no form of piles which these little pyramids are not made to cure. The Pyramid Pile Cure can be used at home. There is no loss of time or detention from business. There is no case of piles so severe that the Pyra-mid Pile Cure will not bring relief. We make no charge for a trial pack-age of Pyramid Pile Cure. This sample will relieve the litching, soothe the infiamed membrane and start you on your way to a cure. After you have used the sample, go to the druggist for a 50 cent box of the remedy. Write today. The sample costs you nothing. Pyramid Drug Co., 139 Pyramid Bildg... Marshall, Mich.

LIFE'S COMIC SIDE TREATED BY CLEVER PENS

Just Being Happy.

Just being happy Is a fine thing to do; Looking on the bright side Rather than the blue; Sad or sunny musing Is largely to the choosing, And just being happy Is brave work and true.

"The only objection I have against the young man, my dear child, is that he has no noble ambition—no high or worthy object in life." "Oh, papa, how can you say so? He wants me."

"I thought you told me you were playing the heavy part in this spec-tacular drama?" "So I am." "Why, you don't even appear on the stage." "Oh, yes, I do. I am the hind legs of the elephant."

"How old are you?" asked the magis-trate of the woman who had been mixed up in a fight. "Five years younger than her that had me pinch-ed," said the woman. "Well, and what age is that?" "Ask her first."

"Going out of town this summer?" "No; but I'll have my regular relaxation." "What's that?" "Planning to go next summer."

"What kind of a looking man is that chap Gabbleton? I don't believe I have met him." "Well, if you see two men in a cor-ner, and one of them looks bored to death, the other one is Gabbleton!"

"Do you find it more economical to do your own cooking?" "Oh, yes. My husband doesn't eat half so much as he used to!"

Jones—"I understand there is trouble between Mrs. Poet and her husband." Smith—"Yes. He couldn't sell his poems and she couldn't eat them, so she left him."

Mr. Nurich (engaging valet)—"I warn you that I am frequently ill-tempered and gruff." Valet (cheerfully)—"That's all right, sir; so am I."

"I say, mamma, why did Mrs. Brown cry at the wedding today?" "Oh, because her dear daughter was getting married and leaving her." "And why did Mrs. Jones cry?" "Oh, because her dear son has left her."

her." "I see; and why did Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Simpson cry?" "Oh, because they have ever so many daughters to get married, and no sign of any of them going off."

"He's only a glazier, but he's a genius in his way." "Indeed!" "Yes; he has an infinite capacity for taking panes!"

"Henry is a brave man. The other night his wife thought she heard a burglar."

"And he went down-?" "No. He had the courage to tell her he was afraid."

An American and a Scotchman were on a high hill in Scotland, and the Scotchman was bragging of the extent of view

Speaker Reed wished to see a man on some pending legislation, and tele-graphed for him to come to Washing-ton. The man took the first train available, but a washout on the road made it impossible for the train to proceed further toward its destination. Going to a telegraph station, he sent this dispatch to the Speaker: "Wash-out on line. Can't come." When Reed read the message, he sent back this reply: "Buy a new shirt and come anyway."

A young lady from London was vis-iting for the first time a country farm. Seeing a cow looking very savage, she said to an old farmer: "Dh, how savage that cow looks!" "Yes, miss, it's the red parasol you are carrying," said the farmer. "Well," she said, "I knew it was a trifie out of fashion, but I never thought a country cow would notice it."

A man was complaining to some by-standers that he did not know what was the matter with his horses. He had tried everything he could hear of condition powders, and all other specifics—but to no purpose; they would not improve in flesh. A stable boy of Irish extraction, whose sym-pathies were aroused by the story, comprehended the situation, and mod-estly asked, "Did yes iver try corn?"

A Radical speaker said: "The Tories keep dragging the Home Rule red her-ring across our path, but it misses fire every time." It was a Unionist M. P. who, in a recent speech, spoke to the following effect: "This is the mar-row of the education act, and it would not to be taken out by Dr. Clifford or anybody else. It was founded on a granite foundation, and spoke in a voice not to be drowned by sectarian clamor."

As the new minister of the village was on his way to evening service, he met a rising young man of the place whom he was anxious to have become an active member of the church. "Good evening, my young friend," he said, solemnly; "do you ever attend a place of worship?" "Yes, indeed, sir; regularly every Sunday night," replied the young fel-low with a smile. "I'm on my way to see her now."

Amos J. Cummings and Ernest Jer-rold were once in a pilot-boat during a great storm. The former lay on a bunk, intently reading. The boat gave a fearful lurch, and careened until it seemed that she must turn completely over. "This is awful, Amos," said Jerrold. "I'm going to put on a life preserver, for I don't think the boat can stand it many minutes longer." "Oh, keep quiet, and let me read, Mickey!" said Cummings, never lift-ing his eyes. "The men on this boat draw a regular salary to keep her afloat!"

Mrs. Howard—Are you having trouble with servants?" Mrs. Terry—Dear me, no! I'm hav-ing trouble without them.

Helen was watching some files on the window-pane, when she called to her mother: "Mama, come and see if this is the bosom fly!" "The bosom fly, child! What kind of a fly is that?" "Oh, the one they sang about in church last Sunday—'Let me to thy bosom fly."

Jones met Smith on the elevated sta-tion at 110th street on a cold, bluster-ing day. Jones-Glad to see you, old man! Jove! but it's bleak up here, isn't it? Smith-Yes; but it's Bleecker, be-tween Eighth and Grand.

They tell a story about Dodd. the Standard Oil lawyer, when he was a struggling practitioner in Franklin. There was a Franklin minister who went gunning a great deal, and alto-gether was rather a sporting character. At a little church supper one night the minister was boasting about his knowledge of horses and hunting, his marksmanship, and so on, when Dodd interrupted him. "Your'e a good sportsman, are you?" he said.

"Well," said the minister, not sus-pecting any trap, "I am not a bad sportsman, if I do sav it myself." "Yet," said Dodd, "if I were a bird I could hide where there'd be no danger of your potting me." "Where would you hide?" asked the minister.

Discolored knife handles may be rubbed with brick dust and vinegar.

Clean enamelled baths with a flannel dipped in turpentine and sprinkled with salt.

Save beef marrow from soup bones to add to suet for puddings. Marrow is more delicate than suet.

Never clear soup until the day it is wanted; the stock should be made previously, but soup should be freshly clarified or it will be cloudy.

When making boiled starch, stir it round several times with a wax candle. This will prevent the starch sticking to the iron, and save much trouble.

To Preserve Fish.—Never lay one on the top of the other, but wring a cloth out of clean salted water, wrap the fish separately in this, and lay it on a dish. Keep in the coolest place possible.

The asbestos mitt is a valuable kitchen convenience for the woman who cooks with gas, as it enables her to easily and safely handle the uten-sils which become intensely hot over the gas flame the gas flame.

A short lamp wick may be lengthen-ed, so as to last a little longer, by pinning a strip of calico or flannel to it. The material is indifferent, as all that is required is something to con-nect it with the oil.

Carpets in rooms which are seldom used are apt to be attacked by moths. Salt sprinkled around the edges and well under the carpet before it is put down will generally prevent their rav-ages. Plenty of light and air should be admitted into the rooms, as moths favor close, dark places.

How to Catch Rats.—Here is some-thing simple, scientific and sensible, which a correspondent furnishes an agricultural paper. He says: "Cover a common barrel with stiff, stout, paper, tying the edge around the bar-rel; place a board so that the rats may have easy access to the top; sprinkle cheese parings or other 'feed.'

If one is so unfortunate as to have kerosene spilled on matting there is no necessity for her to be troubled about it, for if salt is sprinkled on the mat-ting where the oil has fallen and then allowed to stand a few minutes before washing up with warm water, the oil stain will disappear. This is better than ammonia and warm water and will do the work more quickly.

If it is desirable to keep fruit cake for a long time, the cake will be better if put in an air-tight tin rather than a stone jar. If it seems to get dry, the same plan that keeps your hus-band's tobacco moist will work nicely with the cake, that is, fresh apples with a slice cut from the top will make both cake and tobacco sufficiently moist to be desirable. Of course, the fruit must be changed now and then.

Soiled furs are easily cleaned by the hot cornmeal method. If the meal is applied very hot and rubbed thorough-ly into the fur it will collect all the dirt and grease that the fur has ac-cumulated. It is often well to allow the meal to remain on the fur over night. It can be whipped out with a light stick, and the fur is left clean and fluffy.

Any woman not able to 'dry her handkerchiefs, napkins, etc., In the open air, and distressed over their dingy appearance, can find a safe and sure remedy by keeping them, after rinsing, in a bowl filled with clear water, changing often during the day. When they are hung up the following morning you will be delighted with their whiteness.

A sure and safe way to remove grease stains from silks, is to rub the spot quickly with brown paper; the friction will soon draw out the grease. Or, lay the silk upon a table or board with the ironing blanket beneath it; the right side of the silk downwards; put a piece of brown paper on the top and apply a flatiron just hot enough to scorch the paper. This is more ef-fectual than any of the numerous compounds recommended.

Remember to sweep the carpets the way of the nap; to brush the other way is to brush the dust in. Attend to all stains as soon as possible. If left they will soak into the carpet and be very difficult to remove.

The application of castor oil to new shoes renders them as soft as a glove. It will also render the shoes as near waterproof as they can be made. We refer, of course, to the ordinary shoes, not those that are rendered water-proof in the process of preparation.

To clean white shoes get a box of camphorated chalk, mix it, as required. with milk, and apply with a flannel. Paraffin oil, applied on a soft cloth, is excellent for cleaning furniture. Use very little, and polish afterwards with a clean cloth.

Save orange peel. When it is quite dry it is an excellent thing for reviv-ing a dull fire, and, moreover, its pleasant odor makes it very valuable in a sick room. There it is best to throw a few bits on to a red hot shovel, and to carry it about so that the fumes may penetrate every part of the room.

Wet boots are often hardened and shrunk by being dried near the fire. Try this method: Lace or button the boots, fill them with dried oats, and leave them in a warm, but not hot, place. The oats inside will absorb a considerable portion of the moisture and the dry air of the room the rest. The oats may be used again and again after drying.

tompounds recommended. It often happens that woollen goods will be doctored with cotton. To dis-cover this there are several tests that can be made. One is the match test. By applying a lighted match to a sam-ple of the goods, the manner in which it burns will be evidence of its genu-iness. Wool will burn slowly, while cotton will go like a train of gunpow-der. Another test is to unravel the threads and the cotton can then easily be detected. To the experienced buyer the "feel" of linen is sufficient indica-tion of the quality, but for those who lack this knowledge, there is an old-fashioned test which our grandmothers used which is unfailing to show if there is cotton in the wool. Dampen the finger and apply to the surface of the linen fabric. If the moisture is seen on the other side you may know at once it is linen. If it is slow in coming through, without doubt there is an admixture of cotton. Another method is to unravel the threads, as in the wool test.

A tickling cough, from any cause, is quickly stopped by Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. And it is so thoroughly harm-less and safe, that Dr. Shoop tells mothers everywhere to give it without hesitation even to very young babes. The wholesome green leaves and tend-er stems of a lung-healing mountain-ous shrub, furnish the curative prop-erties to Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. It calms the cough, and heals the sore and sensitive bronchial membranes. No opium, no chloroform, nothing harsh used to injure or suppress. Simply a resinous plant extract, that helps to heal aching lungs. The Spaniards call this shrub which the Doctor uses. "The Sacred Herb." Always demand Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Sold by all druggists.
