POETRY.

Two Singers.

"Come, thou fount of every blessing!"
"Twas a maiden sang that hymn,
And she sang it without ceasing,
With a voice that had a ring
Like the clear note of a bell—
Yet of feeling—not a trace.
"Come, thou fount of every blessing,
Tune my heart to sing thy grace!"
Yes, the face was fair to see;
But the great poet had impression
That the words which come so free
Were the heart's sincere expression.
"Teach us some celestial measure
Sung by ransomed hosts above";
But she lingered not for the treasure
Of her Lord's unchanging love.

"Come, thou fount of every blessing,
Tune my heart to sing thy grace!"
"Twas a woman, old and feeble,
Sang the words so full of praise.
"Thee the notes were cracked and broken,
And the eyes with age were dim,
Yet the eager face gave token
Of the faith that was within.
Ah, she trusted in Him wholly,
For she felt the need of Him;
And her spirit was but lowly
As she crooned the blessed hymn.
So she sang, in happy measure,
Of the joys that were to come;
For she hoped, by his good pleasure,
Safely to arrive at home.

Ever to the Fore.

It doesn't matter where you go,
In your car its ringing—
"She's my Annie, I'm her Joe!"
That's being driven by.
That everybody's singing,
Everybody knows the thing;
Everybody's spoony—
Says the small minority.
That's being driven by.
Organs grind it on the street;
Mr. Dennis Mooney
Keeps awake upon his beat
To whistle Annie Rooney.
In the woods the plovers sing,
Sing the song without the words;
Cats upon the garden fence
Render it with stress intense;
Even young Baboony
Now and then utters his cane
From his mouth, adjusts his brain,
And, in accents full of pain,
Hums "Miss Annie Wooney."

SELECT STORY.

AIMEE.

They were poor. They lived on the lonesome, malarial swamp lands that border Bayou Brun, their house was a two-roomed log cabin—"double pen," as they call it down South. But this was a big enough nest for them. They were only three in number—he, she and it. He was Herbert Gray—fair, well-made, and twenty-eight; it was the baby, girl—a tiny image of her father; she was his wife and the mother of the blue-eyed baby, though she was only a child herself—not yet seventeen.

She had been his pupil in the school he had taught for two years on the banks of the river. He boarded around among his patrons, and it chanced that while he was an inmate of the Widow Lercant's home a malignant fever broke out in the neighborhood. Herbert Gray was forced to disband his school; they were taken ill, and was brought back from Death's door by the careful nursing of the widow and her one child—pretty, curly-haired, brown-eyed Aimee. He recovered, but his good nurse took the fever from him, and died, leaving Aimee alone in the world, homeless, and with no means of support, for the place they had lived upon was mortgaged for its full value to their commission merchant in the city.

It was inevitable, though terribly unwise, that the school-teacher should marry his young pupil. She was left in his charge by her dying mother, who had led her life through caring for him; she was so heart-broken, so friendless and forlorn that pity took possession of Herbert, and pity soon grew into a tenderer feeling for the sweet, clinging child.

He married her, as the only solution to the problem—what to do with her; and giving up his school that had dwindled sadly, he leased a little farm at a very small cost, because it was back in the swamp, and took his child-wife there, together with three cows, the two horses, and a few sheep that were all her possessions.

They had been married nearly three years—years of hard work and privation, but also of happiness. The two were happy in their log-cabin home, on the lonely, murky bayou, in the heart of the sombre wood; for they had youth, love and hope. It was a great hope that built its nest in this humble home. A hope of fame and fortune, that should come when the world had read the book the young ex-school-teacher was writing in the intervals of clearing land and plowing in the fields of corn and cotton. Ever since his college days, Herbert had been scribbling essays, poems, sketches—some of which were published in the local papers. Soon after his marriage he began to write something on a larger plan. At first he meant only to write out a strange, half-wild conception, born in his brain on a misty, melancholy day of autumn, when he was picking cotton on the banks of the bayou.

He began to write it at noon that day as he was resting, after his frugal dinner, eaten beneath a great, yellowing pecan-tree that overhung the bayou. That evening by the light of the little candle Aimee had moulded, he read what he had written aloud to her, and her praises induced him to go on with his story. Every evening he read to her what he had been able to write in the interval. It was decided that the story should be a book, so fast had it grown in the imagination of its creator.

Aimee was so interested in it, so anxious to have it perfect, that she forgot her natural timidity and made suggestions and criticisms, out of her own instinctive sense of art, which helped the young author more than he realized.

At length the book was finished; the last page was read by the light of the candle made of wax of the wild bees, taken from the hollow of a poplar-tree. Then Herbert made a journey of a day on horseback to the nearest town, that he might send the precious manuscript by express to a well-known publisher in New York.

It went, freighted with many hopes and anxious fears. Aimee felt as though she was sending out her own darling baby to find favor in the eyes of some one who alone could give it leave to live.

Every character in the book was a real flesh-and-blood being to her. She had read few books. Nature and her own quick instincts and strong feelings had been her teachers. She thought Herbert's story the finest thing that had ever been written. She was sure no publisher could refuse to take it.

Herbert was not so certain. He knew more of the world than his child-wife, and doubt mingled strongly with his hopes. He was thrilled with joyful surprise when, after weeks of anxious waiting, the letter came, announcing that the book had been accepted, and would be published at once.

It was the something new that the blaise public is always craving. Its plot was unique; the style, though crude, was vigorous; the humor fresh; the ercole and negro patois happening to hit the rage for dialect, while the local flavor gave a spice of realism to the story.

Old Mrs Craven will stay with me; her grandson can help Ben pick out the cotton and feed the horses. I couldn't get ready to go. Women have to have so many little things; and if I did not look nice I would shame you, dear. I know I could never be made to look like the beautiful women in the fashion book they sent you. I suppose all the ladies in the city look like them. No you must go by yourself. Write at once, and say that you will come, and don't bother about me and baby."

Herbert did go, and Aimee was left behind. He would be back in two weeks, he said. It was seven weeks before his tall shadow fell across the cabin threshold, and then he was a changed being.

His wife saw the change that had come over him the moment her eyes rested upon his face. She felt it the instant his lips met hers in the kiss of greeting. He had escaped from her possession. Her instinct told her so. He was dissatisfied with her; he was ashamed of her. She was looking badly. Sunburn and malaria had made her skin shallow and shrunken, her lips pale, her hair dry and harsh. She had worked very hard while he was gone, looking after everything—milking cows, feeding chickens, and even helping to get out the cotton when old Ben prophesied that the bright spell of October weather was sure to end in a storm which would spoil the white fleeces hanging from the balls. Her hands and face had suffered from weather as well as from the "dumb chill" that visited her every day.

Moreover, the baby had been sick and was cross and wakeful. She sighed as she felt what a contrast the poor cabin and she herself must be to Herbert, who had been seeing so many elegant drawing rooms, so many beautiful women in lovely, flowing robes, with white bare arms and bosoms, and hair piled in some wonderful way upon their dainty heads.

She could never, never be like them, she thought, as she looked down in despair at her ill-fitted calico gown and her feet in thick common shoes. She dared not look at herself in the little cracked mirror. It made her heart-sick to see her image there and contrast it with the pictures in the fashion book.

Herbert continued to be changed. His home, his wife, his child seemed hopelessly ugly and common and backward, after the glimpse he had had into the elegance and refinement of society in the city. He had been the guest of a popular publisher; he had written the successful book of the season; he was fine-looking, intelligent, impressive—above all, he was new. He had brought with him some of the wisdom and roughness of his native woods, and this gave a piquant charm to his manner and a freshness to his talk for the fair society women thirsting for a new sensation and coveting the clat of chaining the literary lion of the hour to their chariot wheels.

They plied him with subtle flatteries; they dazzled him with the display of their seductive beauties and the luxury of their toilets, their habits, their boudoirs.

He was intoxicated—he gave himself up to the spell of the present. He was like one in a dream, and his first awakening had been when he came in the sight of his cabin home, and saw his poor little sorrow wife in her faded calico frock and sun-bonnet come flying to meet him with the baby in her arms.

"You ought to go," she said. You ought to go at once." He looked at her, then at the child fretting and hanging to her skirts. "What would I do with you, and that young one? he said, in a sudden cruel impulse, his sneer giving emphasis to his words.

She did not answer. A faint tinge came into her poor, pale cheeks, and she caught up the baby and bent her face to its yellow head to hide her tears. She scarcely heard when he tried to soothe her over what he had said by adding:

"I don't think either of us three would be ornamental to New York society. I am going to move away from this sickly swamp, but we will not go to the city. I'll give that up."

Presently he took his gun and went off into the woods. Then Aimee proceeded to carry into effect a purpose that had drifted into her mind and fixed itself there—rooted in her despair and her self-sacrificing love for the man whom she believed she was hampering in his career. When Herbert returned late that afternoon, he found his dinner on the table, but Aimee and the child were nowhere to be seen. Beside his plate he found a note in Aimee's school-girl writing:

"DEAR HERBERT," it said,—"We are gone, baby and me. I have taken one hundred dollars from the money-drawer; the horses and cows that were mine will pay you for it. Don't try to find us; don't be angry or feel badly. We must never come back. It is best so. We would only be a clog to you. I love you too well to do that. You are ashamed of us. I don't blame you. I am only sorry. Go to New York and make a big name for yourself. I will hear of you far off, if I am living and be glad and proud. Good-bye, and may God bless you.

"AIMEE."

Herbert was conscience-stricken. He got on his horse and hurried to the river, but the boat that Aimee had known was due that day had been gone three hours, and Aimee and her child were on it.

He took the first boat, which came twenty hours later, and went down to the city. But he failed to find the object of his search. No one could tell him what had become of Aimee and her child after they left the boat. He was free now to sell his lonesome place in the cypress swamps of Bayou Brun, and go to the bright, beautiful, intoxicating city, there to feed on the smiles and praises of fair women, there to lay the foundation of fortune, fame, and happiness.

interest which few perhaps comprehend who have not tried the experiment. Those proposing to do so should lay the foundation by sowing the best seed procurable—both single and double. Chater's strain of the latter is still unrivalled. Sown in garden loam in March or April, the young plants will be large enough to transfer into permanent positions by September. A shoeful of sand placed around them before winter closes is of great benefit, preventing a tendency to rot about the stem in early spring. The plants will flower the second year from seed. The seeds from these first blooms being carefully ripened and planted in the same way, will afford a great many novelties if the collection is at all numerous.

Racing With Wolves.
Many a thrilling tale has been told by travelers of a race with wolves across the frozen steppes of Russia. Sometimes only the picked bones of the hapless traveler are found to tell a tale. In our own country thousands are engaged in a life and death race against the wolf consumption. The best weapons with which to fight the foe, is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This renowned remedy has cured myriads of cases when all other medicines and doctors had failed. It is the greatest blood-purifier and restorer of strength known to the world. For all forms of scrofulous affections and (consumption is one of them) it is unequalled as a remedy.

THE ACADIAN

WOLFVILLE, N. S., SEP. 19, 1890.

The Annual School Meeting.

The annual school meeting will be held on Monday, Sept. 29th, inst. "the meeting to be called by the trustees, or where none exist, by the Inspector, by notice posted in three public places within the section five days previously, signed by the trustees or the inspector as the case may be. It is important for all who need a school, and indeed for all in the section, to give their attention to the matters to be considered, previous to the time of meeting. Upon the action of this meeting depends, to a great extent, the character of the school to be sustained for the incoming year. After organization the first item of business is to elect a new trustee. A majority of votes—more than half—is required for this election. The candidate should be one of the most reliable and best men of the section. He should have an interest in providing a good school. He will make a better trustee if in addition to his other qualifications he have a half-dozen or more children of his own to educate. Let all who want a first-class school decide upon such a man and come prepared to elect him. The trustees should report, in detail, the financial and educational operations of the year just closing and the requirements of the section for the ensuing year. There is every reason why the ratepayers should have the fullest information concerning the disposal of the sectional funds. Common courtesy and justice demands this and the law requires it. Furthermore the trustees or their secretary should make up the accounts of the year and hand them over to the auditors three days before the meeting, and furnish them with vouchers, &c., so that they may examine into the legality and correctness of the accounts and make a full report thereon to the meeting. The meeting should be satisfied with nothing less than this. The ratepayers are required to decide what amount shall be assessed upon the section for school purposes. It should be the aim to provide well for a school for whatever length of time the section can afford it, during the school year; and to base all calculation on having only a good school for the time it is held. To have that kind of a school a liberal salary must be voted to secure the best teacher possible, provisions must be made for putting the school-house and premises in order and securing a supply of necessary maps, apparatus, &c. A really good school cannot be expected unless all the surroundings are favorable. Nothing less than a comfortable, attractive, well ventilated, clean school-house, supplied with all the latest apparatus and appliances for successful work, and presided over by a teacher or teachers who are qualified to do their work according to approved methods and whose characters are certified as unexceptional should be contemplated. The trustees are required to forward to the inspector of schools, within one week after the annual meeting, a copy of the minutes thereof, duly signed by the chairman and secretary of the meeting. To do this it will be necessary to have the minutes read and adopted by the meeting before it is adjourned or they will be the chairman and secretary's minutes and not those of the meeting.

Could not some scheme be devised to put our cemeteries in better condition? Willow Bank is far from being what it should be. By the expenditure of a liberal sum of money it could be made one of the prettiest cemeteries in the province. The old cemetery is also in a condition far different from what we would like to see. Situated as it is, in the centre of the town it is a good advertisement of the enterprise and care of the people, and should be in a condition that would lead people to form a good opinion of us. We believe if an effort were made a sum sufficient to put both cemeteries in good condition could be easily raised.

The water commissioners inform us that the work is progressing favorably and that the water will soon be turned on. This week some of the hydrants have been put in and others are ordered. The water has already been turned on into part of the pipes and the whole service will be tested at an early date—possibly to-day.

Minard's Liniment for Rheumatism.

Horton Landing.

Forty-two boys at Acadia Villa School and more applications. A fine class of boys from all parts of the Province. The old school-room will no longer hold them. Mr Patterson is building a new one two stories high, with bedrooms above and a frost proof cellar beneath. Mr Patterson's orchard will yield one hundred barrels of marketable apples for which he expects the neat little sum of $400. He has the finest patch of cabbages in the Co.

A small patch of raspberries returned Benjamin Newcomb $80 cash, and all sold in the local market. The land is a little moist and the berries were abundant, large and delicious.

Since the close of the strike at Sprighill a cargo of coal has arrived at the wharf and sold for $3.50 per ton. A number of men have been some weeks at work on the west abutment of the iron railway bridge across the river. Work can only be done at low water and is necessarily slow. Trains have been going very slowly across the bridge. When the work is finished we would respectfully suggest to the managers to set the men at work on the station and tear it down, and replace it with a nice neat, new building such as the people at every other station on the line now enjoy. Horton Landing Station is a disgrace to the line. It is time it was converted into "Acadian Relics" and handed over to Joe Edwards for his friends from the "Bean Hub."

Warden Curry has been busy allotting Horton's share of the appropriation for Kings Co., out of the last $300,000 borrowed by the government, to the roads in this township. Work has been done on the road crossing the dike to Long Island, a strip east from Edward Tremblin's, at Wallbrook, from Horton bridge to Avonport, at Reid's corner, up the mountain and on east. The work will be well done, as I observe there is plenty of grit used. Some people say all the overseers or those sections are torpid, but that must be a mistake. I know one man among them is called a "kicker" (what ever they may mean) and no tory ever kicks, so there must be one grit overseer at any rate. Well, it's a good thing to have good roads especially if one owns a fast horse.

Capt. Charles Curry has a fine large chestnut mare that moves well, and Mr Patterson has a brown horse that goes very like a trotter when "Fon" has him in the sulky. Mr P. also owns a fine colt by Confidential Clarley, and a bay horse by All Right. When these meet the fast Lamberts at Grand Pre there is fun on the road.

Miss Edith Curry, telegraph operator, has been promoted to the office in Digby. P. W. Curry keeps one of the neatest stores in the county, and his stock of goods is always selected with a judgment and good taste second to none. He is doing a good business.

The school-house here since the new wing was added is very commodious and comfortable. Miss Ella Gillmore is the teacher, and though this is her home she is in many respects the most successful and popular teacher who ever taught in the section. I observe she has some pretty potted plants in bloom in the windows. This is a good idea, why can't every teacher resolve himself or herself into a committee to improve the school-house and grounds and make them more attractive to the children.

Guests from Bermuda have been staying at Capt. Tuzo's, and Capt. Shaw, of Simson & Shaw, ship brokers, New York, with wife and daughter, at Dunedin Cottage.

F. G. Curry is loading potatoes for Havana.

Cornwallis News.

The talk of the big dike being built across to Long Island has again been revived. It is said that the C. V. Railway company intend sending a delegate across to England to try and induce capitalists to undertake the scheme.

Cattle are now to be seen on the dikes all along the Canard river. The after-feeding was not very heavy, but there was a great demand for it owing to the bare condition of most of the pastures. In some cases the feed of a cow sold for $5.50 or $13.75 for a yolk of oxen. The grass does not sell for a certain sum per acre here, as on the Grand Pre, but certain competent men or owners assess the feed, the best and earliest cut dike being allowed more than the poor and late mown. This appears to be a fairer method than the other.

The bridge across the Grand Dike between Church St and Canard has been sufficiently completed so that teams could pass over safely the first of this week. The old bridge was allowed to remain until long after it was really safe to cross, and when it was torn up the beams holding up the planks fell down by their own weight. This bridge has been closed for a fortnight, owing to the contractor not having sufficient time to get the timber for its construction as soon as the bridge was pronounced unsafe.

Considerable road money has recently been spent in various parts of the township. The hill near Mr E. L. Collins', Port Williams, has received a heavy coat of gravel, and for a time it will be very difficult to go up there with a loaded team. The hill by Mr Chas Harris' on the road to Canning has been lowered and considerably improved. Some work has also been put on the road over the Wellington dike.

Messrs J. E. Lockwood and A. E. Eaton lately drove all the way from Canard to Truro, taking part of two days for the journey. They left their horse and carriage there, and returned by rail.

Apples appear to be trumps this year as regards prices. Gravensteins have sold as high as $3.75 per bbl. It is said $3.50 has been paid for some orchards where the apples were mostly all of a superior kind.

We learn from an exchange that a gentleman who bought largely of Annapolis Valley apples last season found some curiosities in some of the barrels marked No. 1. Among other things he mentions one piece of trace six feet long, one clevis without bolt (he wants the bolt put in next time), one piece of old buffalo robe, two sheep skins, one old curry comb, one old horse brush, with divers and sundry other articles too numerous to mention. It is also stated that he has all these hung up on the wall of his warehouse. "The apple packer" should beware. As the packing season approaches he should endeavor to lay in a store of grace for that time of temptation. It will never do to mix such articles as are mentioned above with apples, or the patient consumer will in time lose his taste or that fruit.—Exchange.

The St Clair Tunnel, an iron tube twenty feet in diameter and six thousand and fifty feet—a mile and an eighth—in length, is a Canadian enterprise, planned and carried through by a Canadian. The Victoria, Lachine, Coteau and Sault Ste. Marie bridges are also Canadian enterprises; and the first steel steamers on the great lakes were put there by Canadians, and from St John to Victoria it is Canadian ability and not that of Americans, which has left its impress upon commerce both national and international, and has overcome the natural barriers to both.—Winnipeg.

It looks now as though there would be a general election this fall.

BEATS OUR DOCTORS —AND— PIERCE'S INSTITUTION.

LOWER ECONOMY, JUNE 25th, 1890. Mr J. B. Morton, Bridgetown, N. S.: DEAR SIR,—I hereby certify that I was troubled with Chronic Diarrhoea for five years, which was brought on by liver and stomach trouble. During that time I had treatment from five doctors and a month's medicine from Pierce's Institution, Buffalo, all of which did me little or no good. Last November I commenced taking Dr Norton's Dock Blood Purifier, at which time I was unable to work and all of my food went to water, did not eat any meat of any kind and had given up to die. I only used two bottles of the medicine and am now well and strong, and would highly recommend it to all who are affected as I was. Yours truly, CHARLES W. McLELLAN.

VOUCHED FOR. Of this case I am personally known to the facts and assure you that your medicine has done a great deal of good to many in this place.

More tourists and summer boarders than ever before. There is no hotel, every private house that would accommodate boarders got them and many more were sent away. A hotel is greatly needed here. This is the historic spot, the site of the old "Acadian Village home of the happy," and has greater attractions for Americans than any other place in Nova Scotia. Enquiries for accommodation are continually made of Mr Borden. A summer hotel would be filled during the whole season. There is a round ten per cent in it for anyone who has the necessary cash and capital. Chase & Co., Fullertons, and F. G. Curry, and their agents are buying potatoes. Competition is keen. They are loading at the station in barrels for Havana, price 50cts. for large and 30cts for small. Potatoes will be one dollar a bushel before they grew again. The farmers here are holding their apples for shipment. The first shipment from Nova Scotia was made in the S. S. Damara last week 13th-30c barrels gravensteins. One carload at Port Williams and the rest from west of Kentville. The next will be a large shipment by the Monday on the 28th. Speculators are trying to buy, but people are holding back and figures are very high.

A Successful Student.

Miss Fannie Thomas, daughter of William Thomas, Esq., Upper Canada, is meeting with marked success both as scholar and teacher. She recently resigned her position as preceptress of the Baptist Seminary, St Martins, on account of ill health. She remained in the seminary three years, and was universally loved and respected. Last January she returned to Boston to complete a course of study, and there made many friends. As a student she was faithful, painstaking and ambitious, sometimes overtasking her strength; but her strong will carried her through the year. She was the first woman upon whom the degree of Master of Arts was conferred. Her rank was always high and she was first to receive the degree. Several colleges offered gain honors.
