The enemy were thorseback when first shout upon shell taking effect among them at abo 1,500 yards distance, they rode off, au having dismounted under cover behin the hills, opened fire. From 12 o'cloc until dusk it was a rifle duel under cove The British guns from time to time too part in it, but the enemy's fire was severe that it was impossible to wor the guns continually, the men falling almost as soon as they stood up. Wit the sole exception of Lieut Parsons, wh was wounded late in the day, ever officer, driver, gunner and horse in th battery was hit. Shortly after th action began the guns were completel silenced for an hour. Some of the in fantry then assisted. One piece wa thus kept in action throughout the day and it was a dangerous duty, and those serving it had to be continually replaced The guns were actually whitened all over with the marks of bullets, and for any ody to stand up beside them was cer ain death. The enemy occasionall trept up to within 200 yards of the osition, but never attempted a rush the greater portion of the fight was atlistance of six or seven hundred yard The tactics of the Boers are described a admirable. They moved from flank flank, opening fire time after time tron unexpected positions. For the Britis to advance and charge at the point of th bayonet was quite impossible, for the would all have been shot down before reaching the enemy. The fight was with rifles, where the Boers wer's vastly su perior to the British troops.

P. S .- In my letter on the Franchise owing I presume to my bad writing, some of the figures had been mistaken. The chief errors were: the population of Dublin county should be 140,000 instead of 14,000, and of St. John City 29,000 instead of 2,900.

As Bright has been named, it may be well to quote a few sentences from his celebrated Manchester speech for the admirable. They moved from flank to flank, opening fire time after time from flank, opening fire time after time from the British to advance and charge at the point of the bayonet was quite impossible, for they would all have been shot down before would all have been shot down before reaching the enemy. The fight was with reaching the enemy. The fight was with the grave of the part of the state of the laws as present existed and said that some measure should be from history that every thing has been introduced to take the place of the garmischement act. In reference to the seat of Government question he said that unless certain honorable mentality—the direct instrumentality—of monarchs and statesman within the past minute the buildings would have been two centuries have done a great deal to con-quence of a policy which we all now regret and condemn, Irish patriotism, as apart from what is called patriotism in this country, has consisted in a large extent in hatred to landlords, and hatred of England."

"If." he says, "the Government had been to raise the flag of insurrection or discontent in Ireland as it would be for Prince Charlie again to appeal with his flag in Scotland." Irelands demands: "They—the Irish people—are demanding charge against any one of them in parthe overthrow of the system under which they as ert that there is no adequate reward for their industry and no security for the homes of their families." MR Entron, -In answer to a Justice I the Peace of Alnwick, I must say that e entirely fails to clear himself and his o Justices' of neglect of duty by saying that he did not buy or drink liquor in places where it is sold without license; for by his own admission he knows who is selling without license, because he says that perhaps not one of them would be able to ay the fine, as if that were merciful and just to Ireland, Iroland would be closely wielded at this moment to England as Scotland is,—and it would be as difficult Magistrates of Alnwick were in the knowledge of parties selling liquor without license and drinking in such places, I said what was true and did not make a ticular, although I could against more than one: therefore, I said Magistrates. That complaints have been made to some says, "the man who insults Ireland, or injures her, or tramples upon her, who denies her just rights, is an enemy of England as much as an enemy of Ireland."

Interpolation to some of them is also true. "Justice of the peace" thinks that by fining the parties it would be an expense on the County, it would be an expense on the County, but I fail to see it in that light, as there "One third of Ireland is owned by 292 are many of them able to pay.
