Britain's Herculean Task

The Official Eye Witness with the British Army has issued a warning against the suggestion that the Germans are a beaten nation. He says that they are still well organized, have abundant resources, are fed up with illusions, and are still confident of ultimate success. No intimation was needed of the magnitude of the task that is before the Allies, but, if there were, this surely supplies it. In addition there is also vivid indication that the area of the war will spread in the near future, and that countries now experiencing unrest in their attitude of neutrality will break in on one side or the other. This, of course, means further withdrawals from agricultural and industrial activity. It also indicates greater shortage in Europe of all kinds of foodstuffs, grain, vegetables and live stock, and of horses. This depletion will have to be made up from countries that are enjoying the blessings of peace. One of these is Canada. It is our bounden duty to see that Britain shall not, as far as preventable suffer from a lack of foodstuffs or of such other useful material as this country can produce. In other words, both men and women are called upon to put forth their best efforts so that when the time arrives any deficiency can readily be met. The accomplishment of this does not necessarily imply extra labor, but it does particularly suggest more care in preparation of the soil and in the selection of seed, and in attention to the breeding and rearing of live stock. Towards this end the conferences promoted in connection with the production of the countries at the Patriotism and Production campaign and the bulletins, pamphlets, records and reports that are to be had on application to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, will greatly help.

Can't Lose Hair

Twenty Years From Today a Bald-headed Man Will Be An Unusual Sight.

One of the most prominent druggists of America made a statement a few weeks ago which has caused a great deal of discussion among scientists in the medical press.

He said: "If the new hair grower, Mildredina Hair Remedy, increases its sales as it has during the past year, it will be used by nearly every man, woman and child in America within eight years."

When Mildredina Hair Remedy is used almost universally, dandruff will disappear and with its departure baldness, itching scalp, splitting hair and all scalp diseases will follow and twenty years from now a bald head will be a rarity.

There is only one way to cure dandruff, and that is to kill the germ. There is only one hair preparation that will kill the germ and that is any head where there is any life left; Mildredina Hair Remedy. This unusual hair restorer with its record of thousands of cures will grow hair on it will cure dandruff, stop falling hair and itching of the scalp in three weeks or money back.

It is the most pleasant and invigorating tonic, is not sticky, or greasy and is used extensively by ladies of refinement who desire to have and to keep their hair soft, lustrous and luxuriant. Allies Pressing Home Jaws of Mighty Vise

PARIS, March 19.—Two great drives against the German army in France are under way, one being conducted by the British, the other by the French.

In the La Bassee district, where hundreds of thousands of British troops are massed, the British are latterly away at the German lines in an effort to pierce them and press on to Lille.

In the Champagne district, between Rheims and the Ardennes forest, the French have concentrated their efforts to pierce or drive in the German lines.

Relentless fury marks the assaults on both districts, and it is estimated that in all easily 1,000,000 men are engaged on these two sectors of the battle front. Things have gone badly for the Germans, since the Allies began pressing home the jaws of this mighty vise. The invaders have been driven from Neuve Chapelle, Lepinette, Aubers and Maple-garbe, by the attacks of the British and in the Champagne, the Germans have been driven back mile after mile near Les Mesnil, Perthes, Beausen-Jour and Souain.

The real object of Emperor William's visit to the French front is believed to have been to inspire his troops, by his presence. It was reported that the Kaiser had gone to a point near Lille to take part in an important council-of-war, but a more likely belief is that the German Emperor, rendered fearful by the recent successes of the Allies, has gone to the front to inspire his men to fresh aggressiveness and courage.

What's in a Name?

THE OLDE FIRME of Heintzman & Co. have not been making pianos for the past sixty five years without their name on a piano meaning something.

Equipped as they were with unusually large financial resources, they have at all times been able to command the choice of skilled workmen, the employment of the most useful and costly machinery, and the selection of lumber with its necessarily vast accumulation for thorough seasoning purposes. They have used only first-class ivory upon their keys, none but the finest veneers, and exclusively the choicest materials throughout.

It was inevitable that these favorable circumstances add an undeviating adherence to the highest ideals in the art of piano manufacture over this long period should produce a prestige for the name "Heintzman & Co." akin to the hall mark on sterling silver.

Great Cities of the World

CONSTANTINOPLE, THE CAPITAL OF TURKEY

For purposes of observation a number of "fire towers" have been erected in Constantinople, where watchers stand on the lookout for signs of conflagrations. From the utilitarian standpoint they are far from being efficient, but from the top of the highest one, the Genoese Tower, one may get a magnificent view of the City of the Golden Horn. To the north is the bold sweep of the inlet—more like a river than a bay—where many vessels are coming and going, though the Golden Horn, being capable of accommodating 1,200 large ships, is seldom crowded. To the east, the waters of the deep blue Bosphorus separate Europe from Asia. The snowy minarets and marble domes of the mosque, which number about eight hundred, gleam among the vivid foliage of gigantic plane trees and lofty palms, to all of which the purple of the far-off mountains forms a harmonious background.

Constantinople is built on a point of land jutting out into the Sea of Marmora, and at the West, from side to side of the little peninsula, is an ancient, lofty, double wall, containing six gates, to admit to the city those who approach it from landward. At one time this was a very fine example of mural architecture, but it has to a great extent fallen into ruin. There are cemeteries extending from this western wall. So many trees have sprung up in these that they have become regular forests, and are looked upon not only as being ornamental, but as forming pleasure grounds for the people. It is a very ordinary sight to see picnic parties outside the ruined wall, in the shadow of the tall, dark cypresses. Here may be a Kurd, sitting on a tombstone, rolling a cigarette after having eased his back of the huge burden he was carrying, or a curious tourist using a similar seat as a point of observation.

But though the Turkish capital presents many beauties to the eye of the beholder who takes a general view from the harbor or from the summit of a lofty tower, he finds on more intimate acquaintance that its charms are fully counterbalanced by things that are sordid, repellent and inconvenient. The streets are narrow and zigzag, hardly any two of them running parallel for a distance worth mentioning. They are roughly paved with cobblestones, between which is dust or mud, according to the weather. They have no system of street cleaning but for hundreds of years the swarms of dogs, which are seen everywhere out of doors, have been the city scavengers. The canine population seems to be almost equal to the number of human inhabitants, so, there being so many of them, they perform their task very well. The houses are, for the most part, low and poorly built, with windows high up in the wall, invariably covered with a lattice-work of cane, or even heavier bars.

That the water supply is poor, that the lighting is poor, that the streets are poor, that the city is allowed to fall in disrepair, may be attributed to a large extent to the fatalistic belief of the Turk. Serenity is the keynote of his character. Is his coffee cold? Is his tobacco wet? Is his brother thrown in jail? Well, what is to be done? He smokes a cigarette and leisurely proceeds to attend to his affairs with a clear brow. Why should he attempt to change things? Kismet—it is fate! If he wishes to take a train, he probably goes to the station when he gets ready, regardless of any printed schedule, and there he waits until the train goes. "Allah permitting, he will ultimately arrive."

This may lead to the inference that the Turk is not a good business man. He decidedly is not. Trade and commerce and the various business enterprises of the whole country are mostly in the hands of Jews and Christians, while the native usually pursues a career in the army or civil service. The role of merchant in a bazaar, where he may sit calmly with his legs crossed, drinking coffee with would-be customers, or smoking a bubbling water pipe or cigarette, is also eminently suited to his taste. In this capacity he will probably try to make easy money by ridiculous overcharges, but the initiated invariably haggle over prices.

There are hosts of bazaars in Constantinople the most important being called the Great Bazaar. It is like a city within a city. Passing under one of many brick archways, you enter an avenue, with stalls on each side of the wide passage. Going farther in, you pass through arch after arch, finding yourself in a regular maze of streets, tortuous lanes and mysterious alleys. Light penetrates dimly through windows high up in the wall or through apertures in the red-tiled roofs. At night all the outside entrances are closed, being furnished with heavy iron-bound gates, so that the merchant may wind his way homeward knowing that his goods are secure.

In one street you will pass rows of stalls that seem exactly alike. They are alcoves about two feet above the level of the pavement, lined with unpainted shelves, on which are heaped untidy piles of books, the only system of arrangement that is apparent being that the large ones are at the bottom and the small ones are on the top. Variety is afforded to the scene by the shopkeepers, garbed according to their different nationalities. Bohemian, Ethiopian, Turk, Arab and Persian sit reading and pondering. At intervals a Mohammedan will prostrate himself with his face towards Mecca; another will sit quietly counting his beads. Upon inquiry you will probably find that this latter practice is not a matter of religion, but merely an expedient to pass away the time. These grave, pre-occupied men pay no more attention to possible customers than they do to the dogs which nose hungrily around the damp streets looking for a morsel to eat.

A traveller tells of becoming friendly, after several visits, with a bookseller, a Persian in a green turban and light blue broadcloth robe with his beard dyed a brilliant scarlet with henna. He displayed with pride the more ancient of his wares, which he regarded fondly. Of new books, however, he had a perfect horror. His stock-in-trade consisted of works on theology and philosophy, histories, biographies, poetry and a very few stories. Manuscripts were his most treasured possessions, for here, as it is all over Turkey, something written is regarded as being much more valuable than something printed.

The Koran has a prominent place at all the book stalls, from the pocket edition selling for about $10 to the huge volumes written by masters of calligraphy, valued at $300. But if you would not call down upon you the wrath of the pious Mohammedan, do not ask him to sell you the sacred volume. He will be furious if you mention or ask for a price in this connection, as the sale of the book would be a sin against God. You must approach the matter tactfully, asking the man if he will present it to you. This question he will welcome, replying that he will gladly do so if you will in turn make him a gift of $25 or $125, as the case may be, and thus, his mental attitude being properly adjusted, the deal is consummated.

threading your way among the crowds who throng to the bazaars to handle their various needs supplied, you will see many other interesting wares. There are rich gold and silver embroideries, brocades and damasks that proclaim their eastern origin carpets and rugs woven in nomad tents, village homes or town factories, footgear, pearls and precious stones, Turkish Delight and other edibles.

It is well known that the Turk is very proficient in making sweetmeats and very eager to eat them. He particularly enjoys candy, olives and rich preserves of dates and figs. But his most famous dish is perhaps Turkish coffee, of which he drinks great quantities. Each cup is made separately over a charcoal fire, and the liquid almost as thick and sweet as syrup, is served boiling hot in small china cups. Coffee is an important part of every meal, every social function, every business transaction and every official discussion.

The mosque of St. Sophia, with its enormous dome and graceful minarets, is a striking example of oriental magnificence. The interior is particularly gorgeous, containing costly marbles, fine columns and brilliant mosaics. It was originally a Christian edifice, being dedicated on Christmas Day, 535 A. D. Later, when the crescent superseded the cross upon its lofty dome, many of the mosaics were plastered over, so that the building might be rendered suitable for Moslem worship, but during this century it has been restored.

Five times a day, as was ordered by the Prophet Mohammed, the muezzins ascend the spiral stairs of the minarets and go out on the high balcony. Then from minaret to minaret is repeated the call to prayer, commencing with "Allah Akbar," which is reiterated four times. Five times a day also, preceding their devotions, the people perform their ablutions, washing their hands, forearms, face and feet in running water.

The Moslem day lasts from sunset to sunset, which is confusing and disconcerting to people who have any regard for the value of time. However, most of the Turks have not, though some of them carry watches, one side telling what is, to them orthodox time, and the other showing the hours by the ordinary European system. One great difficulty with the former, is that it needs regulating every day, and an odd question that you sometimes hear is, "What time is noon today?"

The Galata Bridge is a bridge of boats reaching from the city proper to Galata, one of its suburbs. It is crossed by 150,000 people daily, and upon it one gets an excellent opportunity to study the motley crowd. Here you may hear the voice of a beggar reciting the Koran or asking for "hacksheesh" in a long-drawn-out wail. A negro woman in a bright green mantle passes by; the saka, or water-carrier, goes of his way to deliver water from house to house or furnish a drink to the thirsty passer-by; itinerant hawkers abound; coffee can be bought on almost every hand; hamals, or porters, stagger by, bent almost double by the huge burdens they carry. Turbaned Arabs, Armenian priests in cassocks and tall black hats, strings of horses and donkeys, all heavily laden, natives wearing the inevitable red fez, form part of the procession. Though the throng seems great upon the bridge, it is easy to make one's way across compared with the fierce struggle a walk becomes if you go into one of the narrow streets that is much frequented.

There is no rule of the road, and everyone fights his way through as best he can, progress being also delayed by the dogs, which lie or stand around almost too lazy to get out of the way to escape being trampled upon.

In different parts of Constantinople are to be found khans which are lodging houses for transients. There is no furniture to speak of, for the oriental traveller carries his own bedding, rugs and utensils. For anything further he seeks out a coffee-stall or cook shop. Those most frequently found in the shelter of the khans are pilgrims and traders with their merchandise, donkeys, mules, horses or camels. They are, therefore, quite important as trade centres, and a great exchange of news and ideas is carried on as well as of goods.

The chief gate to the Sultan's Palace is the "Sublime Porte," and this term has come to signify the Turkish Government. When we read in the newspapers that the Porte has been asked for an explanation of some of its actions, it means that the Government of Turkey, which has its headquarters at Constantinople, has probably been called to account for some atrocity committed by the "unspeakable Turks."

Where the Money Goes.

To the Editor:

In my last letter I drew attention, to the statement of the finance minister of Russia, that financing the great war had been made comparatively easy, owing to the savings of the people, since the liquor traffic was prohibited. We have had many examples on a smaller scale, that the liquor traffic brings poverty and that prohibition brings prosperity and ability to pay taxes. But here we have a demonstration of the effects of prohibition on such an immense scale, that no doubt can be left in the mind of any one of moderate intelligence.

No wonder prohibition brings prosperity. Last year Canadians spent over a hundred millions of dollars in drink. That is the exact sum that the Government requires to carry on our part in the war. But money spent in drink is like water spilled on the ground, that cannot be gathered up again. Money spent in drink cannot earn money to pay taxes or do anything else. Better if it had been burnt, for then it would not have made criminals and lunatics to be a burden on the taxpayer and would not poison the babes to the third and fourth generation. The Germans have been styled baby killers, but the great baby killer is alcohol in any form. Science has shown that a much larger portion of the babies of drinking, not to speak of drunken, parents die before their second birthday, than the children of abstaining parents.

It has been shown that every dollar spent in drink, does on an average a dollar's worth of harm. So that Canada is probably two hundred million dollars worse off every year, than if she had prohibition of the liquor traffic. At that rate it is easy to see that Russia can finance this immense war, when prohibiting the use of intoxicants of any kind. If drink had been allowed as before, there would have been great suffering, and want in Russia, and the conduct of the war would have been very much hindered for lack of money.

Remarkable Results of the New Tissue Builder Tonaline Tablets in Many Cases of Run-Down Men and Women

PROVE IT YOURSELF BY BUYING a box of Tonaline Tablets NOW.

"By George, I never saw anything like the effects of that new treatment, Tonaline Tablets, for building up of weight and lost nerve force. It acted more like a miracle than a medicine," said a well-known gentleman yesterday in speaking of the revolution that had taken place in his condition. "I began to think that there was nothing on earth that could make me fat. I tried tonics, digestives, heavy eating, diets, milk, beer and almost everything else you could think of, but without result."

Any man or woman who is thin can recover normal weight by the best new treatment, Tonaline Tablets. "I have been thin for years and began to think it was natural for me to be that way. Finally I read about the remarkable processes brought about by the use of Tonaline Tablets, so I decided to try myself. Well, when I look at myself in the mirror now, I think it is somebody else. I have put on just forty pounds during the last forty days, and never felt stronger or more 'nervy' in my life."

Tonaline Tablets are a powerful inducer to nutrition, increases cell-growth, food, increases the number of blood corpuscles and as a necessary result builds up muscles and solid healthy flesh, and rounds out the figure.

For women who can never appear stylish in anything they wear because of their thinness this remarkable treatment may prove a revelation. It is a beauty maker as well as a form builder and nerve strengthener. Tonaline Tabs cost $1 for a 50-days' treatment, at druggists, or mailed by American Proprietary Co., Boston, Mass.

A Billion Wheat Deficit

According to reliable statistics there are tied up at the present time about two billion bushels of wheat, the production of the countries at war. This is in the vicinity of half the world's total production of wheat. A recognized authority argues that granting that the warring nations produce a one-half crop in the coming year, a deficit of one billion bushels will still be shown. The three countries upon which the filling of this deficit of one billion bushels will rest are Canada, the United States and Argentina. The combined output of these three countries is only 1,245,000,000; their exportable surplus would, of course, be much less, so it can easily be seen that the question is not one to be easily solved, and it behooves Canada to increase her productions as much as she possibly can, for when the war is over, Canada begins to re-establish itself and the nations undergo a process of rehabilitation, the demand for all breadstuffs must be enormous.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24, 1915

The Red Cross organization had its origin in the benevolent and sympathetic thought of a Swiss gentleman, Henri Dunant, at the time in 1859, of the battle of Solferino...

So great was the sympathy in various quarters with the suggestion of Mr. Dunant, that an international convention was called to meet in Geneva in 1860, to take the question into consideration...

When a war begins each belligerent must notify each of its enemies of the names of the Societies which it sends to the field to aid in the work of caring for the sick, the wounded and the dead...

The value and magnitude of the work done by these Societies in connection with the regular medical staff of the different armies can hardly be estimated...

This gives no account of the dead and indicates faintly the appalling need.

False reports frequently travel fast and far, and do great injury to a good cause. We are therefore very pleased to publish the following extracts from the Report of Relief work for the Victims of the war in Belgium...

"It is not true, that the Germans have been appropriating, to their own military uses, food-stuffs sent by the United States and Canada. The members of the Commission charged with the distribution of relief in Belgium, together with several disinterested investigators who have looked into the question, report that the Germans are facilitating the passage of the barges by which the supplies go down the Belgian canals...

"It is not true as stated in certain press reports, that the Germans are imposing a heavy tax on relief supplies entering Belgium. These supplies are in absolutely free of duty."

"It is not true, that the wealthy citizens of Belgium, were they so disposed, could buy enough food this winter to feed the Belgian population. There is no money in Belgium. Rich and poor are alike bankrupt."

"It is not true that the Belgians could earn money to feed themselves 'if they would not only go to work.' There is no work to do, except perhaps digging trenches and assisting in making military supplies for the conquerors. Being a manufacturing nation, Belgium depends upon imports of raw material and exports of finished material, and upon coal. There are no exports nor imports, and there is no railroad traffic to haul coal to the factories. Existing railroad traffic will scarcely suffice to serve the Belgian cities this winter with enough coal to keep the inhabitants from freezing."

The report also states that it will take from 80,000 to 90,000 tons of food a month to feed Belgium this winter. This calculation is based upon a ration of ten to twelve ounces of the plainest food a day for each inhabitant remaining in the country. This is probably the smallest allowance on which life can be maintained.

Mrs. John Logan, Chairman of the Committee in Washington which is conducting the canvas for the Belgian Relief Fund says she has received several pieces of knitting which have come from the men of the American Navy. An officer of the battleship Florida accompanied a woolen scarf with a note which said, 'My kindest regard to the fellow who is to wear this scarf. I have no better way of showing my feeling for him than to make a piece of wearing apparel for him myself.' The name of the officer was erased from the note before it reached the Committee, but his naval rank was still legible.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, conducts a large Printing Establishment and Book Room, in Nashville, Tenn. The business is under the direction of a 'Book Committee,' the Chairman of which was until recently Mr. John A. Patten. It appears that this gentleman has been advertising quite extensively a kind of wine, the medicinal value of which he described as very important. But, some time since the 'Journal' a publication of the American Medical Association, asserted that an examination of this wine proved that its most valuable ingredient is alcohol. Other papers published this information. Mr. Patten entered suits against them for $200,000 to $300,000. While the suits were pending, however, Mr. Patten was plainly told that the vending of a medicine containing twenty per cent of alcohol was inconsistent with his position in the Church and it would be wise for him to resign, before further action was taken. Mr. Patten prudently resigned. It is time for every branch of the Christian Church to shake itself clear from all complicity, direct, or indirect, in the sale of a beverage whose principal ingredient is alcohol.

OBITUARY

MRS. AWARD L. BROWN.

(From the Winchendon Courier) After an illness that had confined her to her bed for a few weeks, Mrs. Award L. Brown of Front Street, passed away Monday afternoon, in the village of her birth, Port Lorne, Nova Scotia. She had been there but a few days, having been called by her mother's impending death.

Mrs. Brown was the daughter of Joseph and Lucy Cropley, having been born Sept. 26, 1864. Her early life and the first years of her married life were spent in Port Lorne. They then moved to Winchendon, where the home has been ever since. Mrs. Brown was one of that all-too-rare type of home-makers, and her self-forgetfulness and devotion to others was the chief part of her living. She was a choice example of that admirable Acadian type we have learned to associate with the women of the land of Evangeline.

She was an honored member of the Baptist Church, who also honored her church. Her many friends found her ever true and loyal, with a gentility and warmth that were unvarying. Universal sympathy goes out to the husband and seven children, upon whom the loss falls so heavily. Funeral services are to be held at the home this afternoon at 1.30, conducted by Rev. Sumner Bangs of the Baptist Church, assisted by Rev. C. E. White of the North Church. Burial will be in Riverside.

It will be agreed by all who were present that anything these enterprising High School girls undertake is done in a most efficient and pleasing manner.

A number of the friends of Miss Nora Anderson entertained her at a "Nickle Party" last Thursday evening. Bridgetown fire insurance agents have been notified that a 20 per cent increase will take effect on all new business after April 1st, in the following sections of the town: On both sides of Granville street from the Arpoteau to Church Street, and on both sides of Queen Street from Granville Street south to Albert Street on the west, and Rink Street on the east. This increase is general all over the province. Farm rates having advanced from 1.35 to 1.50 per $100. The reason for this advance is the fact that the fire loss in the province was the heaviest last year of any part of Canada.

The death of Edwin Gates, late sheriff of this County, occurred at his home in Annapolis Royal last Sunday, March 21st, at the age of 81 years. Mr. Gates had been in failing health for some time past, and but a few weeks ago resigned the office of Sheriff, which he had held for upwards of twenty years. He was straightforward and honorable in his dealings with his fellowmen, and in his official capacity was considered, yet did his duty at all times. The funeral which was held yesterday from his late home, was attended by a large concourse of friends, showing the esteem in which he was held. He is survived by a widow and five children.

THE GHOST OF BURY CHURCHYARD

WRITTEN BY LYNNE REID

I wish to state most emphatically, I do not believe in ghosts. That is to say, I do not believe in the so-called apparitions from another world, spirit rapping and so forth.

About every ghost story if properly investigated might yield a logical explanation. To state a case in point:— A few years ago when visiting among friends in the neighborhood of Bury, Sussex, I had a most startling experience together with my host's son, Dick Rose.

The sleepy little town, boasts an old ruin of the Tudor period that was once a famous abbey. A portion of the tower enriched with shrouding ivy, and the crumbling walls of the main body of the building, yet remain.

"About the time of my visit, the little town had been stirred to its depths by persistent rumors of frequent ghostly appearances in the old churchyard. Eye witnesses, sober men of unimpeachable veracity had stoutly affirmed the truth of the rumors.

"A large farm in this locality had lately been acquired by a man named Leigh. He was a man of grumpy temper and most unprepossessing appearance. About six feet in height, stoop shouldered, receding forehead, extremely flat nose, protruding ears, long arms, his huge hands reaching about to his knees, and how legs. In short he resembled nothing so much as one of the great apes.

"I remember the first time I ever saw him. Dick and I, with Towser, Dick's dog, were strolling along the pathway through one of his fields, that led to the river. Alongside the path was a steep bank much frequented by rabbits and overgrown with wild flowers, ferns, sedge and hazel bushes, furze and creeping vines.

"Mr. Leigh seemed very much annoyed at finding us there. He threatened to sue us for trespass and also to give us a good beating should he ever find us there again, and promptly chased us out into the main road. But I am afraid neither threats nor fear of the law, would have kept us from exploring that cave at the first opportunity.

"After dinner with a few white pebbles to mark our way, a bite of luncheon and two candles, we were ready. We found the mouth of the cave without any difficulty and after noting that the coast was clear we started in, to investigate. What was our amazement to find about ten feet in, a stout wicket gate, with hasp and padlock. Luckily or unluckily it was unlocked and we passed through with never a thought that we might not find it so easy to return.

Mine Sweeping in the North Sea

(J. J. Bell in the 'Daily Chronicle') Morning of Christmas Eve, early, and a change in the weather. A still air and a clear sky full of twinkling stars. On street and quay an icy film overspreading the sleeky slush. Here and there a glimmer of light from harboured shop or dwelling-house, but never a lamp for guidance of mariner or landsman.

Presently he was looking down on Bob Twenty's mine-sweeper. There was some stir on board. On the deck by the indifferent lights of a couple of lanterns, men were doing things. He hailed the nearest.

"Well, I dunno. Ye don't show it much." "Feared to show it, maybe." "Why d'ye do it?" "Couldn't say for sure." The man turned back to his task, mumbling over his shoulder: "Next best job to shootin' Germans—eh?"

stone since the war started. Only weighs nineteen now, and amazin' light on his feet. Livin' on shore, waitin' for a new trawler that's fittin' out for him—all modern conveniences and so forth, and a first-class cook. Hopes to be goin' up Iceland way in 'bout a fortnight."

"'But what 'bout his old ship?" "I'll tell ye what Henry told me, and he looked too sad for to be tellin' a lie. 'Twas month o' November, and they had started out for the fishin', and 'twas a fine clear day, and nothin' whatever in sight—till somebody spots a dan in the water. Now 'twas an odd part o' the sea for a dan to be in, and they supposed, natural enough 'twas adrift. Happy Henry brings her close up to it, and then he sees 'tis a nice good dan, and 'twould be a pity to waste it. 'Might as well pick it up, 'says he; and the others says the same. So accordin'ly they proceeds to pick it up. Put 'twouldn't come. 'Why?' says Henry, 'if the thing isn't jammed and fixed after all! Well, then, we'll just get the moorin's too!' And then, instead o' thinkin' calmly for a minute or so, they gets sorter angry at it, and in less 'in no time they has a line hitched on to it and round the winch. 'Heave-away!' yells Happy Henry, smilin' once more, as if he was a-goin' to get the V. C. for savin' a blushin' old dan, and presently the two chaps larkin' ovet the bows cries, 'It's a comin, boss, it's a comin!' And they was right! It come, sure enough, but wi' a bit more moorin' 'n they'd expected. For after the dan comes a—mine, and afore a soul could say aught 'twas bang on the starboard bow. . . She sank in 'bout ten minutes. I'd ha' laughed more if it hadn't ben for them two chaps in her bows."

"Mortal hard luck," murmured Bob. "Wonder if we'll live to see the end o' them mines." "I'll take a lot o' good ships, I doubt." "Must just keep on sweepin', I suppose. What does Henry say 'bout the business? Did he think the dan was fixed there intentional, or dropped there by accident, or driftin' till it fouled the mine?" "Ho, Henry thinks a lot o' things, but he can't prove aught. Nothin' left to prove aught. But he won't try to save no more fisherman's dans, I reckons. . . Ye keep good coffee, Bob." "Take some more."

"Not this time. Must be movin' along and turn in for a spell. Stopped latish wi' Henry, and when I got aboard the mate was up wi' raggin' Coathache and wantin' the whole medicine chest, and when I had give him something I told him 'bout the dan just for to cheer him up, which it did, and then we got talkin' o' other things; and I was thinkin' o' turnin' in when I remembered a letter I was goin' for to write. So I wrote it and posted it on my way to see you." Here Lucky Jack paused, as though to give the other time to ask a question.

"The older man, glanced at the clock, merely said: "Well, ye was welcome, Jack. I'll go on deck wi' ye and see what they're all after. Remember me to Henry, wishin' him fortune wi' his new ship." "They passed from the cozy cabin, up the steep ladder, and out into the bitter morning. As they went forward Lucky Jack remarked— "I'll go straight now and post yer letter, Bob. S'pose I shan't see ye for a while." "Ye'll be out when I'm in, and I'll be out when you're in. Ay, that's the way it goes, lad." "Well, so long, Bob. Merry Christmas!" "Same to you, and best o' luck." Jack scrambled on to the quay. "Bob." "Ay?" "Oh, nothin'. So long."

"Lucky Jack went slowly to the post-office. After all, he was afraid, too. At any rate, he had leaved courage to tell Bob Twenty that he had volunteered for the mine-sweepin'.

Try this Thirsty Flour

A very thirsty flour. Absorbs a lot of water. Because it contains so much gluten. Manitoba wheat is wonderfully rich in sturdy gluten. And, think of it, FIVE ROSES is milled exclusively from the very cream of the Manitoba wheat berries. So FIVE ROSES must be awfully thirsty, don't you see. In your mixing bowl it greedily absorbs more water. So you get more loaves than usual without using more flour. You use less. Your flour lasts longer, doesn't it? Less trips to your dealer. That's how FIVE ROSES saves money. Actually saves YOU money. Use this economical flour.

been sunk in battle. The writer told of having seen the battle, and of having found pieces of wreckage from the warship several days later.

Now a sea captain whose years of service have been for the most part in odd corners of the Antilles, has brought the word to Brooklyn that the Karlsruhe's life is definitely over. For business reasons, he has asked that his name should not be used; but he asserts positively that the hulk of the Karlsruhe lies off the Grenadines—the little string of islands that stretch north of Grenada, in the Windward Islands group. There was no battle, says this captain, but the German cruiser was self-destructed—either flung ashore by storm or blown to pieces by an explosion. The captain declares that there is wreckage from the Karlsruhe in possession of the authorities at Grenada. They have, he asserts, a life-buoy inscribed "S. M. S. Karlsruhe," and part of a tiller from a jolly-boat similarly marked.

The string of islands and islets of the Grenadines stretches due north in a string of about 90 miles from Grenada to St. Vincent. Grenada, some 3 or 4 miles square, is in turn about 90 miles north of the "Dragon's Mouth," the passage between the tip of Venezuela and Trinidad. The Brooklyn Eagle says:—"Many of the Grenadines are so small as to be uninhabited and are seldom visited. The Karlsruhe could have run in among them and gone along unseen. Is she there or elsewhere among the less known islands of the West Indies? Or has destruction come to her as the sea captain informant would have it? Her bottom fouled by months of service in the warm waters of the South Atlantic, the engines of the Karlsruhe would have had to be hard pressed indeed to give her speed to escape a pursuer and it is not impossible that the pressure might have brought a boiler explosion. The wreckage is there in the Grenadines, says the sea captain positively, to prove that something of this sort must have happened."

Despatches Wednesday, from Copenhagen, said that the Karlsruhe had been destroyed some time ago by an explosion and about 200 men had been saved and quietly taken to Germany. A despatch from Copenhagen last evening gives another version, which is said to have emanated from

"Is the Karlsruhe afloat?" is the question which interests many people and has been revived by the recent report from Copenhagen that she has been sunk and her crew landed in Germany some time ago. Some people in Halifax believe she is gone basing their opinion on statements made in conversation some time ago with some people who ought to know who when asked about the sea-raider said, "she has gone to the bottom," and when pressed for further information became possessed of keeping a still tongue, as prevails in naval and military circles.

Definite word of her came on October 26, 1914, when she captured the Lampart & Holt liner Vandek. She had then either captured or sunk seventeen vessels, and since that time there had been no word of more Karlsruhe captures. The officers of the steamship Isabella, arriving in New York several weeks ago, said they had spoken the Karlsruhe off Porto Rico, but their identification was that she was fabled, and this may have been a British cruiser.

On January 12 there came the statement to Montreal in a letter from the Island of Grenada in the West Indies, that the Karlsruhe had

Journal of Commerce: Last year the British Empire produced nearly $27,000,000 worth of gold out of a total world output of $91,254,000, or a little over 62 per cent of the world's total. This ability to secure gold within the confines of the Empire should not be lost sight of by those who question our ability to finance the war. Germany cannot produce a farthing's worth of gold in her own country.
