Mr. Murray (Cariboo): The time is now ripe for this country within reason to do considerable publicity and advertising of the resources and possibilities of the country. At the present time we are hosts to the commonwealth press conference. In the city of Ottawa tonight we have some of the leading publishers of Britain and of the commonwealth countries. I would suggest to you that they are unpaid ambassadors of good will to Canada, going out to the seven seas to tell of the possibilities of this country. I particularly refer to Sir Harry Brittain, a distinguished man who was in Winnipeg in 1909, who was himself a settler in Manitoba and who brought many settlers into certain areas in Alberta at that time. I say that intelligent and constructive publicity at this time throughout the world is one of the best investments that the Canadian people could make.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): No, it is not carried. I am still waiting for an answer.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): We have conducted conferences, as was suggested by the hon. member for Kootenay West, with the various provincial organizations having to do with immigration. With them and through our own settlement service we are studying the question of how many people we might settle here and there throughout the country. Those studies have not been concluded; but that is the only actual study that has been made or is being made at the moment.

Mr. Picard: I have a keen interest in immigration. By consulting my files I find that, from 1940 up to the present time, I have spoken twice on the matter. My only purpose in rising now is to call to the attention of the committee the speech I made on Wednesday, April 3, 1946. As it represents entirely the opinions I still have on the matter, I will not repeat it. I am just rising for the purpose of calling that speech to the attention of the committee.

Mr. Graydon: Have you any copies of it?

Mr. McLure: I should like to ask one question. Why are the expenses in this item so high? I think the travelling expenses are $261,000 and the total travelling expenses for the whole department are $750,000.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): In answer to the first part of the question, my recollection is that there were 106,000 different calls made by our inspectors on persons in Canada who had applied for persons abroad. That is the reason for the travelling costs. For that reason we have particularly high expenses for travelling. Every application has to be considered in the office and perhaps an inspection made out in the country by someone with respect to the settlement facilities.

Item agreed to.

Immigration branch—

52. Field and inspectional service, Canada, $3,732,561.

Mr. Harkness: On this particular item there comes up the question which was asked particularly by the hon. member for Kamloops in connection with the fact that the major portion of the money spent with regard to immigration is spent under this particular vote, $3,733,000, whereas, as to foreign service—that is on people outside Canada whose primary duty is to get immigration into the country—we spent only $881,000. It seems to me that there is a disproportion there and that if we are going to get immigration we should have more people abroad, should be sending more people there for that purpose, and should be spending more money there instead of spending the greatest part of the money which we spend on immigration on people within Canada. That is just one general criticism of this thing which strikes one. I should like the minister to make some comment on that matter. While I am on my feet, and in order to save time, may I ask another question. There is an item here of $220,000 for travelling expenses this year; it was $198,000 last year. I wonder what the reason is for that. What is the necessity for such a large amount for travelling expenses in this department within Canada? We have these immigration officers stationed all across the dominion. I cannot quite see why there should be such a large amount necessary for travelling expenses?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I thought we had passed that item after I had given the hon. member for Queens the explanation with respect to travelling expenses. We are on item 53, are we not?

The Deputy Chairman: Item 52.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I gave an explanation of the number of calls made in Canada by the inspectional service. They were 106,000 last year. I think these are calls made by our inspectors at the homes of persons who have asked for a particular immigrant. For that reason we have the $240,000. On the other question of the disproportion of expenses between the staff in Canada and that abroad, I have already pointed out that we have to maintain ports of entry in Canada for the purpose of looking after not only the immigrants as such but also persons who commute, tourists and the like, and we have a much larger staff in Canada than we ever will have abroad for that reason.

Mr. Bryce: Can the minister give the information I asked for?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I did not quite understand what my hon. friend wanted. I understood that he said we had nine persons employed to deport people.

Mr. Bryce: Of all people I do not know why the minister should not understand me.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): It is not that, I did not hear.

Mr. Bryce: I want to know why it was necessary to have an increase of from eight to nine deportation officers. The minister told me that 420 people had been deported. I think it is most unreasonable. Can the minister explain to me why it was necessary to have the increase? That is all I want to know. There has been an average of one and a half deportations a day. Does it take nine men to deport one and a half persons?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): There is a good deal more to it than that. Four hundred and sixteen were deported. Well and good; but there are a good many more who are being held pending deportation or consideration of appeals which they make to the minister. We have found it necessary to add one more to the staff.

Mr. Adamson: How many permanent organizations are there? What is the set-up of these organizations abroad covered by this item?

The Deputy Chairman: We have not passed item 52 yet.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Can the minister give a break-down of the reasons for the deportation of these 416 people?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The reasons are published in the annual report for the fiscal year. I admit that it is not published yet. I would hope that my hon. friend would not expect me to go through the 416 cases now and give him the reason in each case.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I do not expect it now, but I hope to be supplied with the information.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I should imagine that there is no particular pattern. I could not say that 200 were deported for the same reason. I could detail it but I would hope that my hon. friend would not ask for it.

Mr. Adamson: Any particular reason?

Mr. Pouliot: Why does the minister not deport Paul Jokelson of Montreal and Camet of Winnipeg?

Item agreed to.

Immigration branch—

53. Field and inspectional service, abroad, $881,792.

Mr. Adamson: I want to ask the minister what permanent organizations he has and where they are situated outside Canada.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): There are not so many. I could run through them quickly. In the British isles they are at Belfast, Dublin, Glasgow, Liverpool and London.

Mr. Adamson: Can the minister say how many people are at each of these places, and whether they have a complete processing staff in each case?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): May I complete the list? On continental Europe, Salsburg, Brussels, Paris, Karlsruhe, Athens, Rome, The Hague, Stockholm, Berne; there is also Hong Kong. I will give my hon. friend a statement of the number of employees in each case.

Mr. Harkness: I have one question. I see an item here for repatriation of wives and dependents of members of the Canadian armed forces, $3,000. It was $5,000 last year. I would have thought that all wives and dependents of members of the Canadian armed forces would have been repatriated by this time. I was rather surprised to see that item. I wonder whether the minister can tell us what the reason is that we still have a vote of that kind. How many of these people were repatriated last year, and were covered by the $5,000?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): We still have a few that we pay to bring here, and I think that is all that needs to be said.

Mr. Harkness: I do not think that is an answer. I asked, what is the reason that we are still repatriating wives of members of the Canadian armed services. I would have thought they would have all been here before this time. How many were repatriated last year?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I am informed the reason is that in some cases they have not been able to make arrangements up until now for settlement in this country and they are still coming forward, and we have a vote to cover the cost. On another occasion I will give my hon. friend the figures of those brought in last year.

Mr. Adamson: The minister was going to give me a break-down of the stations abroad.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I will do that.

Item agreed to.

Indian Affairs branch—

54. Branch administration, $242,050.

Some hon. Members: Eleven o'clock.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow we will take up Bill No. 310, to authorize provision of moneys to meet the deficit of the Canadian National Railways. The resolution passed today. Then we will go into supply and consider for some time the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration with the hope of concluding them quickly.

Mr. Graydon: The minister has a melancholy tone in his voice.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am so anxious to proceed with the estimates of public works; after that labour, secretary of state, and the remaining items of veterans affairs.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

48. Departmental administration, $90,620.

Citizenship—

49. Citizenship registration branch, $193,035.

50. Citizenship branch, $233,585.

Immigration branch—

51. Administration of the Immigration Act, $750,425.

52. Field and inspectional service, Canada, $3,732,561.

53. Field and inspectional service, abroad, $881,792.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 16, 1950

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

Second report of standing committee on public accounts.—Mr. Picard.

STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT

PROVISION THAT CORPORATE CROWN AGENCIES MAY SUE AND BE SUED WITHOUT FIAT

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 313, to amend the statute law.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to provide that corporate crown agencies may sue and be sued in provincial courts of competent jurisdiction without a fiat.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Garson moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 1—Agent of His Majesty.

Mr. Ross (Souris): What about the bill, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I know that you do not know what is in section 1, Mr. Chairman, and neither do I. May we have the bill?

Mr. Garson: While I appreciate the magnificent co-operation of members in rushing my legislation through in this way, I do not think it would be fair to those members who are particularly interested in the terms of the bill to proceed without having copies before them. I therefore suggest that the committee rise and report progress.

Section stands.

Progress reported.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES, TRAVELLING ALLOWANCES, ETC.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a measure to amend the Judges Act, 1946, by making provision for the salary of one additional judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia; the salary of one additional county and district court judge for the province of Ontario; the salaries of district court judges of the province of Newfoundland, and for increased travelling allowances to judges of a superior or county court or district judges in admiralty of the exchequer court attending at any place other than that at which or in the immediate vicinity of which they are by law obliged to reside.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

HEALTH INSURANCE

PRESS REPORT OF INTERVIEW GIVEN BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to ask whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare is correctly reported in a Canadian Press dispatch from Vancouver which states that in an interview at the coast he said he was "against any national health insurance plan for Canada."

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As I subsequently stated to the same newspaper, that report is not accurate.

Mr. Knowles: Good.

ATOMIC ENERGY

INQUIRY AS TO RELEASE OF INFORMATION FOR CIVILIAN PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Press dispatches last evening indicated that Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States are about to make a wide release of atomic energy information for civilian purposes. Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce tell us whether or not that report is correct?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The classification board on atomic energy has been meeting recently. I have not seen the results of those meetings, but I think the most that would be done at this time would be some broadening of the classification regulations.

Mr. Green: Nothing as extensive as indicated in the reports?

Mr. Howe: No.

NORTH ATLANTIC COUNCIL

PERMANENT COMMITTEE—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): May I ask the Prime Minister if the Canadian appointment has yet been made to the permanent committee of the North Atlantic council?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No permanent appointment has yet been made.

FLAX

QUESTION AS TO FLOOR PRICE FOR 1950 CROP YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Ross (Souris): Has a decision been reached yet as to whether a floor price will be established for flax for the 1950 crop year? It is now past the seeding season.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No decision will be made until the end of the present crop year.

COAL

SUBSIDIES ON MOVEMENT INTO CENTRAL PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. Smith (Calgary West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will he make a statement with respect to subsidies on coal moving into the central provinces? Only ten minutes ago I heard that it is contemplated that very shortly the present subsidies may be dropped, and I believe a delegation is here from Alberta now interviewing the coal board. Could we know the facts?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The present subsidy policy for western coal was established in 1932, and there has been no change since. The purpose of the subsidy is to equalize the cost of Alberta coal with that of United States coal, up to a maximum subvention of $2.50 per ton. It is not contemplated that the subsidy provision will be changed. The delegation from Alberta are concerned with the advice they have received from the railroads that the special rail rate on coal is likely to be varied.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I realize that; and what is the situation there?

Mr. Howe: I do not know.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): On what date are the railways returning to the old rate?

Mr. Howe: I believe it is July 1. The matter of freight rates is one over which the government has no control.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ECONOMIC ASSISTANCE TO SOUTH AND SOUTHEAST ASIA—SYDNEY CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): May I ask the Minister of Fisheries when he expects to be able to report to the house on the Sydney conference?

Hon. R. W. Mayhew (Minister of Fisheries): I do not know when the house will have an hour and a half to spare to listen to my report. However, I shall try to condense it a little more, and give it when the external affairs estimates are under consideration.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION TO MEET CERTAIN EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEE OF SECURITIES AND INDEBTEDNESS

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 310, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures made and capital indebtedness incurred by the Canadian National Railways system during the calendar year 1950, and to authorize the guarantee by His Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

He said: This is the standard bill which is brought in every year—

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the bill has not been printed yet; I am not sure whether the minister is aware of that fact. We have not seen it, and I suggest that this motion should be deferred.

Mr. Abbott: If my hon. friend had not been in such a hurry with his question of privilege I was going to say that I understand the bill is on the way from the printing bureau; but I have no desire to ask the house to consider it until it has been distributed.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The minister had such a purposeful look on his face that I thought I should get my point in first.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that the motion stand until later this day?

Mr. Abbott: I will not be available later this day. I think it will have to go over until the next sitting.

Mr. Speaker: Next sitting of the house.

Motion stands.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Indian Affairs branch—

54. Branch administration, $242,050.

Mr. Harkness: In view of the fact that the new Indian Act has been introduced and we shall be discussing it shortly, I do not propose to make any general remarks at this point. However, I think it might expedite the consideration of these items having to do with Indian affairs if the minister would give us a review of what has been accomplished in the improvement of welfare conditions on the reserves during the last year, what is proposed for the coming year, what has been done to increase school accommodation, and what other improvements are being made.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): If the hon. member will permit I should like to make a short statement with respect to education and welfare, and perhaps we can leave any other subjects until the Indian Act amendment bill is up for second reading, or answer specific questions on the relevant items in the estimates.

Shortly before the Easter recess I tabled an annual report under section 113 of the Indian Act which showed that, during the fiscal year 1949-50, 310 Indians had been enfranchised. During the same period around 6,000 Indian babies were born. This indicates that the number of Indians accepting enfranchisement is much lower than the natural increase in Indian population, and this must be borne in mind in welfare planning and education.

In such planning the recommendations of the joint parliamentary committee on the Indian Act are of great value to the department. As many members know, this committee sat in 1946, 1947, and 1948, during which time it held 129 meetings. In addition, the committee visited most Indian reserves in eastern Canada. The bill which I had the honour to present on Wednesday, June 7, is in many details the result of the good work of that committee.

Two government activities that are of primary importance to the welfare of Indians are those relating to health and education. Health now comes under the Department of National Health and Welfare, and the substantial increase in the amount now voted for Indian health services compared to that voted ten years ago is an indication of the importance attached to the problem by the government and parliament.

So far as education is concerned, I am glad to report substantial improvement. During the past four years, roughly the post-war period, total enrolment in Indian schools has risen from 19,622 to 23,409. Attendance has improved from a percentage of 79·91 to 88·23. In addition to those attending Indian schools, 1,180 Indian children were registered in provincial schools in elementary grades, and 465 in secondary grades, an over-all total of 25,054 Indian pupils in educational classes. Those attending school in grades above grade 8 number 834. To bring educational facilities to as many children as possible, the government approved a school-building program extending over a period of five years. This year, 1950, will be the third year of this construction plan. The number of schools erected can be illustrated by the fact that the government employed 285 day school teachers in 1946, and is now employing 450. The provision of over 100 new schoolrooms is planned for this year. When it is realized that each new schoolroom has to be equipped, staffed, and maintained, it will be appreciated that the cost of operation must increase, and that this year's estimates have been kept down.

In spite of an increasing teacher shortage, the standard of the teaching staff has been improved. The number of non-qualified teachers has been reduced in two years to one-fifth of the staff instead of one-third, and this change is continuing. During the same period the percentage of teachers with first-class certificates has risen from 27 to 40. Day school attendance has improved steadily as a result of family allowances, the higher calibre of the teachers employed, improvement of classroom techniques and equipment, and the awakening interest of Indian parents. In accordance with recommendations of the joint parliamentary committee, the department has been directing its efforts to having more Indian children admitted to provincial schools.

It is the policy of the department to alleviate hardship of those unable to provide for themselves, and to encourage Indians to be self-sufficient through the provision of occupational assistance. Approximately 2,000 Indian houses were repaired, and approximately 1,300 new houses erected during 1949-50, the extent of assistance in each case depending on the ability of the Indian to share in construction. Provision is made in the estimates for similar work in 1950-51, the number of new houses and other works and structures totalling 894.

Assistance is provided for Indian fishermen and farmers by the acquisition of stock, equipment and seed; for the blind; for the rehabilitation of tubercular Indians and their dependents following discharge from hospital, and for the indigent.

During the past fiscal year, provision was made for the employment of nine social workers. This is something of a new venture. It is the function of these workers to conduct surveys on reserves with reference to social conditions, particularly in matters of delinquency, destitution and the care of the aged. They will encourage the formation of homemakers clubs, and will assist in the establishment of young people leaving schools. An important phase of their duties will be liaison with municipal and provincial welfare agencies and local offices of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind.

In keeping with government policy of careful attention to the developing needs of the Indian population, I am pleased to inform the house that, effective July 1 of this year, the special allowance payable to aged Indians seventy years of age and over will be increased from $8 to $25 per month.

The present $8 monthly cash payment is supplemental to regular relief, and is intended to enable the aged to purchase extras. The additional cash allowance will, of course, supersede present relief issues. The increased payment represents a new departure in that many aged Indians will be entrusted with the management of these funds, and be responsible for their own needs. This development is therefore a significant step toward granting the Indian a greater measure of responsibility for the direction of his own affairs. To judge the amount of this payment in true perspective it is necessary to bear in mind that aged Indians enjoy certain special privileges, amongst which I would list complete medical care and residence on tax-free land.

[Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce).]

Mr. Harkness: I am very glad, as I am sure other hon. members are, to hear this statement. I am particularly pleased to hear that the old age allowance for Indians is to be increased to $25 per month. The fact that those aged Indians have not enjoyed the right to the old age pension in common with other aged Canadians, has in the past been an anomaly. It certainly is good news that the situation has been corrected. The increase in the number of Indian children attending school is also satisfactory. I am glad to hear that the building program is going along so well.

I should like to ask the minister how many children are attending each of the grades from seven to twelve inclusive. One of the great deficiencies of Indian education in the past has been the fact that few Indians have gone into the higher grades. The result has been few of them have received the training which would enable them to secure jobs in competition with white people. I trust that situation is gradually being overcome. It is bound to be a slow process, but I believe that with the improvement in educational facilities that has taken place, and the further improvements which I understand are in prospect, there should be an increase in the number of Indian children attending the higher grades. This would equip them to compete with the white population for employment, and thus enable them to improve their standard of living.

The minister said that 310 Indians were enfranchised. Will he tell us whether those Indians were enfranchised voluntarily? In other words, did they ask for enfranchisement or were they enfranchised against their will? Were they just thrown out of the reserve and told they were citizens and had to look after themselves? Perhaps there are some in each class; can the minister tell us how many were voluntarily enfranchised and how many were involuntarily enfranchised?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): All 310 were voluntarily enfranchised. The figures concerning school attendance in the various grades are set out in the annual report of the Indian affairs branch for the year ending March 31, 1949. I could give some tentative figures with respect to the present time, but I have not the figures for grades 4, 5, 6, and 7, which I shall secure and give to my friend.

Mr. Harkness: It is just the ones from seven to twelve.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I have only grade 8, which is 692. In the statement I made a moment ago I said those attending schools in grades above grade 8 number 834.

Mr. Harkness: But you have no break-down to show how many are in each grade?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): No. I will let my hon. friend have that.

Mr. Gibson: Is this money to be provided in the supplementary estimates? I notice that the welfare branch is $600,000 higher this year.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Yes, partly in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Bryce: I am delighted to hear from the minister that the Indians are going to get this $25 a month of their old age pension. It is the best news I have heard for a long time with regard to Indians. I have not had an opportunity to study it. I did not know that it was coming. I do not know whether there will be a means test attached to it or not, but I hope for the best. I am sure that the rest of the members who were on the Indian affairs committee and sat for three years will be pleased to see the results of their labours. Every member of the committee did his utmost to bring to the attention of the government—and that included those on the government side as well—the hardships suffered by and the treatment accorded to the Indians in the past. I am going to reserve what I have to say until the Indian Act is being considered, in order that I shall not be covering the same subjects twice, but there are one or two questions I want to ask in passing; they pertain to the administration of the department.

Has the minister given any further consideration to the setting up of a claims commission? Every Indian who comes to your office or to mine digs back into the past and produces some agreement that he obtained from the King of France, or perhaps the King of England or Queen Victoria; and he tells you that it has never been fulfilled. It is necessary that we clear up the thinking of the Indian. If he still teaches his grandson that we owe him something, then we should straighten that matter up. The only way that can be done is by a claims commission which will look into these matters. I am not going to refer to any province other than Manitoba, although I have travelled over the reserves in nine different provinces. The Indians immediately lay on my desk the agreement they got in 1871, or something else, and claim that it has not been fulfilled. I do not know how the minister can fulfil it unless he sets up a claims commission. We have a new minister and perhaps he has not had the opportunity of looking into it. I hope that he will see whether it is possible or feasible to do that sort of thing, so that we may let the Indians know where they really stand.

I had some Indians here this week to see me; they produced some documents that were supposed to be written in 1792. We have to get this thing straightened up. When it is, I know that the Canadian government will get credit for the way in which they have handled the Indians instead of the criticism there has been for a great many years.

I wonder if the minister can tell me whether any more houses have been built at Norway House—that is, houses for the old people. Some were built when I represented that part of the country, and they were a success so far as I could see when I visited them. Has the administration carried out its intention to build more houses at Cross lake and in other places in the north? Will the minister indicate also what the situation is with regard to the Indians in Newfoundland, because evidently they are not on reserves there as they are in other parts of Canada. Has the department taken further steps to see to it that the Indian agent is living nearer the reserve than he has been living in the past? I drew the attention of the minister's predecessor to the fact that sometimes the Indian agent was living 200 miles from the reserve. Has that situation been corrected? I think my other questions can wait until later.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): With respect to the claims commission, perhaps we could discuss that matter on the bill. At Norway House I understand that we have a provision for twenty houses. With respect to Newfoundland Indians, the situation is this, as I think my hon. friend knows. They are not on reserves, and except perhaps for one minor matter they have the same rights as the whites. No decision has been reached yet as to whether we should take them under the jurisdiction of this department or rather leave them to be administered, if necessary, by the provincial government.

Mr. Bryce: You do not recognize them as treaty Indians?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): No.

Mr. Higgins: Is not some definite provision made now by the government for health care for the Indians?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): In Newfoundland?

Mr. Higgins: Yes.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Perhaps my hon. friend could ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare that question.

Mr. Higgins: Will the minister ask him?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Yes, I will.

Mr. Cruickshank: I am pleased that a member from this side of the house might be privileged to ask a question.

An hon. Member: Oh, go on and talk.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. When the hon. member rises, he should say "Mr. Chairman" to indicate that he wants to speak, and not simply stand up.

Mr. Cruickshank: I stand corrected, Mr. Chairman; and I ask, Mr. Chairman, that I may be permitted to ask a question of the minister. But first of all, Mr. Chairman, I should like to congratulate the minister on the statement that has been made today. But above all, Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the minister, I think a great deal of the credit should go to the hon. member for Essex West, the most efficient chairman of the committee, who toured every part of Canada. I think that he should be accorded that credit. I am not small-minded, as are some other people. The hon. member for Selkirk himself contributed a great deal on behalf of the Indians. The question I want to ask, Mr. Chairman, and which I request the right to rise and ask as a Liberal member on this side of the house, is this. Will the Indians be allowed any preference as to the stores from which they wish to buy? My experience has been, in my own riding at least—I can speak only for my own riding—that with respect to the meagre supplies they were getting they were told that they had to buy from a certain store. I want to know whether they will be allowed to buy in the cheapest store in the freest manner.

Mr. Fraser: That sounds like patronage.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I am not familiar with the condition that the hon. member for Fraser Valley has mentioned. So far as the allowance to aged Indians is concerned, I am quite sure that when they receive money they will be free to purchase goods in the same way as anyone else may purchase them.

Mr. Fulton: No.

Mr. Cruickshank: No.

Mr. Gibson: Certainly.

Mr. Fulton: From my experience in my own constituency I can confirm what the hon. member for Fraser Valley has said.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I said I was not familiar with conditions there. What I stated was with respect to the future of these allowance payments.

May I complete the answer to the hon. member for Calgary East? The break-down by grades is as follows: Grade 8, 692; grade 9, 447; grade 10, 139; grade 11, 99; grade 12, 46; grade 13, 5. There are 98 in special advanced courses.

[Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce).]

Mr. Cruickshank: May I follow up the point I have made? I congratulate the minister, and particularly the hon. member for Essex West, on the new legislation that has been brought down.

So far as my riding is concerned, Indians have been compelled to buy from certain stores, irrespective of cost. When they came to the Indian agent for the meagre allowance they were given they were compelled to buy from certain stores within my riding. The hon. member for Kamloops has borne me out in that. That is most unfair. They should be allowed to buy anywhere they please, as you and I do. I know it does not concern you, Mr. Chairman, as much as it does me, because of your responsible position, but I like to buy from the cheapest store I can find. The Indians should be given that same privilege. They should not be dictated to or directed by me as a member of parliament or anyone else as to where they should go to buy their goods. They should be able to buy at the cheapest store.

Mr. Gibson: I think I have cashed far more of these relief cheques than any other member who has ever been in the House of Commons. The Indian has always been given a slip which listed the quantities of goods that he would be supplied with. The price was not designated. The store was usually the one which was closest to the Indian village. Therefore we received the business from the Indians on their own volition.

I have always found the Indian agents very efficient. If they found that an Indian was being charged too much for a 49-pound sack of flour, the Indian agent himself was the first one to step in, in the interest of the government, and say to the Indian: "Probably it would be advisable for you to take that slip to a store that does not overcharge"—not the Indian, but the Indian department; because after all it was always the quantity of goods that was given to him, not a specific amount for the goods.

I am quite sure now that when the $25 a month cheque is issued the Indians will purchase their supplies wherever they see fit. Certainly that has applied to these family allowance cheques. They have been able to take them wherever they please.

Mr. Cruickshank: That may be the experience in the hon. member's riding, but I am speaking of my riding. It has not been the practice in my riding. The Indians have to buy from a certain store. I do not care about Comox-Alberni, but I am right about the Fraser Valley. The Indians had to go to a certain store, whether he liked it or not, or whether it was cheaper or not. He had to buy at that certain store.

Mr. Gibson: He received a quantity of goods. If it was a pound of tea, he received a pound of tea.

Mr. Cruickshank: I do not wish to argue with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, but a pound of tea may cost 73 cents in one store and 74 cents in another. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni has forgotten that. So far as I am concerned, I am speaking only of my own riding. I demand that the Indian be given the right to buy at the store he himself chooses, not one that some other individual chooses.

Mr. Blue: Mr. Chairman, I was pleased when this government saw fit to set up the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, and even more pleased when they appointed the hon. member for Grey-Bruce as its minister. I wish to express not only my own congratulations but the good wishes of the electors of my constituency as well. The hon. minister is my neighbour and colleague, and I know that all problems confronting this department will be dealt with seriously and fairly.

The constituency which I represent is largely rural, with many progressive towns and villages, and they are truly happy people. Our farmers are second to none in Canada, or for that matter in the world; they are breeders of choice livestock as well as producers of excellent agricultural products.

Our towns and villages keep abreast of the times in modern manufacturing, and are producing commercial goods which find ready markets throughout the world. Labour relations are of the standard where employees and employers settle their differences, if any, in an amicable way.

In the constituency of Bruce we have two Indian reserves. These Indians are progressive. A large number are expanding in modern farming; many are employed in the industrial factories of our towns, and of course many more are engaged in fishing and trapping. I am pleased that this department is taking steps to improve the position of the Indian in the welfare of the country. We must not forget these people blazed many of the early trails in this country. The same sun shines on them, the same rain rains on them, as on the rest of us. Why should not the same rights be given them? When the call came for them to don the uniform in defence of our country, they did so in no small numbers, and I shall be glad to support any move that would raise their status.

May I add that I was pleased with the announcement the minister made this morning. I am sure it will improve the living conditions and educational opportunities of Indians throughout the country.

The constituency of Bruce extends for 140 miles as a peninsula with a coast line of over 200 miles. Lake Huron borders its shores on the west and the Georgian bay on the eastern side of the peninsula.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member knows that he must relate his remarks to the item under discussion, namely Indian affairs.

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Chairman, he is an auctioneer, and he is trying to do a good selling job for his county.

Mr. Fraser: The minister mentioned the fact that an aged Indian had full health service. Is that whether he has an income or not? I believe the health service now hinges on whether an Indian is able to pay part of it. That applies to dental service.

Mr. Martin: No.

Mr. Fraser: Oh, yes. If the Indian is able to pay part of his dental services he is compelled to pay part of them.

Mr. Martin: Perhaps we can deal with that when we come to my estimates.

Mr. Fraser: When does full coverage start for the Indian? Does it start at seventy, or—

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): There are a few Indians seventy and over whose circumstances are such that they can afford to pay for this, and it is commonly known because of the nature of their income and their property. But generally the statement that I made is correct, with perhaps few exceptions.

Mr. Fraser: This would start at seventy years of age?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Yes.

Mr. Fraser: Is the $25 payment to be made monthly, or will it be split up?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Monthly.

Mr. McIvor: As Chief Sky of the Chippewa band I express the appreciation of that band for the consideration that Indian affairs are being given this year. But there is one thing that troubles us in the Chippewa band, namely, the white man with his beer parties. The white man is the curse that we have.

Mr. Noseworthy: What provision is being made in the schools, in grades 9 to 12, for vocational and commercial education? About two years ago I visited an Indian school in which the pupils were anxious to take commercial work. The teacher was willing to teach it, but the department was not willing to provide even a typewriter.

Are there any Indians taking grade 13 work; if so, how many?

Perhaps the minister would prefer to answer my next question when we are discussing the bill. Is any provision being made for restoring parts of Indian reserves taken from them by the white people by devious means through the years, and now settled by those people?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I have some figures respecting the numbers in grade 13, which I shall give the hon. member in a moment.

We are making provision for commercial classes wherever we think there will be sufficient demand for them. Indeed, we would hope that pupils in schools would take that kind of training.

Perhaps I might answer the third question when we are discussing the bill.

Mr. Bryce: Will the minister elaborate on the pension the Indians are to get at age seventy? Do I understand the condition is that they will not get it before that time? There are bound to be conditions; I have never seen anything yet from a government that did not have attached to it certain conditions. What are they?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The same conditions generally attach to the $25 payment as now attach to the $8 payment, namely that a single Indian has a permissible income of $120 and will receive $300, making a total of $420. The married Indian will have a permissible income of $600 and will receive a pension of $300, so that the total income will be $900. In respect of a married couple, the permissible income is $300, and the maximum pension will be $600.

Mr. McLure: If the minister has a report in respect of Lennox Island, I should like to ask a few questions. Has he that information?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Generally, yes.

Mr. McLure: How many Indians are now taken care of at Lennox Island? Has the new school there been fully completed, and if so, at what cost? Has the superintendent's house been fully completed, and at what cost? It was to be completed over a year ago, but I do not think it was. Is the pension the Indians get under the patronage system, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Fraser Valley?

Mr. Cruickshank: No.

Mr. McLure: At Lennox Island all the money handed out was under a patronage system.

Mr. Cruickshank: On a point of order. I have handed no money out; it was the Tories who did that.

[Mr. Noseworthy.]

Mr. McLure: I am not saying what the hon. member did. The system they have is a patronage system, in that when the Indian comes in to get his supplies he must have a permit, and the permit states where he is to go to make his purchases.

Mr. Cruickshank: No.

Mr. McLure: That same provision should not apply in connection with this pension.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): There are 210 Indians on Lennox island. The school has been completed. I have not the grand total of the cost, but I shall give the information to the hon. member. The rest of his statement was, shall I say, an opinion about something rather than a question of fact.

Mr. Cruickshank: I should like to ask a question, but before doing so may I correct an impression left by one of my junior colleagues over here—that the Indians buy where they like. That is absolute nonsense so far as the lower part of British Columbia is concerned, and I think also so far as the interior is concerned. They have never yet been represented by people who will fight for their interests.

My question is this—and let me say that I can take it and I can give it back—that in my riding we have a reservation of about 5,000 acres at Seabird island. I believe about 2,000 acres are being used by the Indians. [Inaudible interruption.] Well, I may have another Indian in my riding, but thank God I haven't got the same class of Irishman there.

Mr. Knowles: The kind who talks one way and votes the other.

Mr. Cruickshank: Yes, talks one way and votes both ways. I did that by mistake once, but he did it deliberately. And now if you will leave me alone I will get on with my question.

I am referring to a section of Kent municipality, consisting of about 5,000 acres, of which only two or three thousand are being utilized by the Indians. We would like to transfer about 2,000 acres to another branch of government so that it may be utilized for a penitentiary site. Is there any reason why this could not be done? Does it require the unanimous vote of the band, or can it be done by the department?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): It can be done by a majority vote of the Indians of the band, followed by the approval of the department. If the hon. member will submit the case we will consider it, and perhaps, after negotiation with him, have it submitted to the Indians.

Mr. Gibson: The increase to $25 a month for Indians over seventy years is a tremendous step forward. Has any consideration been given to increasing the value of relief slips, which were formerly about $8 a month, to Indians from sixty-five to seventy years? They are still aged and destitute Indians.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The relief slip is designed to provide a certain standard of food, clothing and the like for those in need. I believe no consideration need be given to an increase, because we think the standard is now adequate for that purpose. Other needs of Indians may be met in another way.

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister indicate the means test provision respecting the $8 for those seventy years and over? I have in mind the figures he has just given, $120 a year for single Indians and $300 for a married couple for the $25 pension. What were the comparable figures for the $8 allowance?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Just the same.

Mr. Knowles: How many Indians over seventy were able to qualify for the $8 allowance, and what relation does that number bear to the total number of Indians seventy years of age and over?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Something over 400 Indians are receiving the $8 at the moment.

Mr. Fraser: In the whole of Canada?

Mr. Knowles: How many Indians are there seventy years of age and over?

Mr. Fraser: It is not as good as it sounds.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): We shall have to look that up.

Mr. Knowles: The point I am making is that we have to think twice before we applaud this increase if there is the same means test that was applied before and will result in only some 400 getting the increase.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): It is my error; it is 4,300.

Mr. Knowles: That is a little better, but we would still like to see that figure set against the total number of Indians seventy years of age and over.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I will give the hon. member that information.

Mr. Fraser: When the minister is getting those figures will he let me have them for the two Indian reserves in the Peterborough riding?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I will.

Item agreed to.

Indian Affairs branch—

55. Indian agencies, $2,657,990.

Mr. Bater: First of all I should like to concur in the remarks of other speakers this morning that after the statement made by the minister it now appears that our Indians are at last going to get a new deal. There are two questions I should like to have the privilege of asking the minister now, because I intend to leave in about ten minutes for a meeting. First, is there an appropriation in these estimates to replace the boarding school that was destroyed by fire at Delmas in the Indian agency of Battleford? Second, what is required of an agricultural society to qualify for a grant? I notice that the grants to agricultural societies range from $50 to $500. What have they to do to qualify, and how are grants awarded?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): There is no appropriation for the school referred to, because, among other reasons, we are building all the schools that we possibly can handle at the moment. As to the inquiry about grants to agricultural societies, the requirements are roughly that there shall be a prize list and space allotment to Indians, and that the fair shall be of general interest to Indians in the matter of handicrafts and garden products. The amount is based on what the fair authorities are prepared to spend on Indian exhibits. It is usually greater than the amount of the grant.

Mr. Fulton: The minister has indicated that additional work on education is being done. Under the heading of Indian agencies can he tell us what actual work is being carried out or is contemplated that accounts for an increase of $71,000 in travelling expenses, from $141,180 to $212,325?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Is the hon. member referring to item 55?

Mr. Fulton: Indian affairs branch, Indian agencies.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): With an increase of $15,000?

Mr. Fulton: No; on page 105 it appears that travelling expenses are up by $71,000. What additional work are the agencies undertaking that makes that necessary?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): One of the complaints that has been made in the past about Indian agents is that they tended to stay in their offices and not visit the Indians. There has been a decided increase in the activity of the agents in the past year or so on account of the increased building program and various other matters. We hope the agents will get out and we are providing the means whereby they can.

Mr. Fulton: Have you given encouragement to them to get out and do so?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Indian Affairs branch—

62. Fur conservation, $339,680.

Mr. McLure: I should like to ask the minister a question or two about the item for fur conservation. I suppose it refers to conservation in areas that have been taken over from the different provinces. I should like to know what is the amount of revenue from fur conservation, and what is meant by "assistance to provinces". I should like to know what provinces are enjoying the assistance amounting to $165,000. Then there is another item of $40,500 for trap lines and fur blocks. I should like the minister to favour the committee with a short statement on fur conservation.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The item of $40,500 is for the provision of trap lines and the like for the individual Indian who is going to benefit therefrom. The other items relate to the fur conservation programs which are conducted in co-operation with the provincial governments. In fact they are conducted by them, but with our assistance. We have not taken them over from any province. They perform the administration, and there is the closest co-operation with the federal government through this department contributing sums of money for these purposes. The provinces with which we have agreements are Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Ontario. The contribution referred to represents our share of the respective agreements. As to revenue from these schemes, if the hon. member means revenue to this department or to the government of Canada, there is none. Revenue is received from the sale of the pelts, and after deducting certain costs with respect to the provincial governments concerned the net goes to the individual trapper or association of trappers who are a part of the scheme.

Mr. McLure: Have you any idea how many skins were taken last year? The report was current that there were over a million and a half. If there were, there should be substantial revenue for somebody.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I have not available the figure as to the total number of skins. I can give the details to my hon. friend.

Mr. Knowles: Since this is the last item in the minister's department, may we have some understanding as to when we shall receive answers to the questions left unanswered? My question does not relate to fur, but to old age pensions.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The hon. member will get the answers as soon as I can give them to him, but in any event before the supplementary estimates are called.

Mr. Knowles: When the minister is getting the additional information with regard to old age pension allowances to Indians, will he also indicate how many of the 4,300 receive the full $8, and how many have that amount cut down by the application of the means test?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): They are all getting $8. That was the figure I gave my hon. friend.

Mr. Gibson: When does this $25 start?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): July 1.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

288. Departmental administration, $350,605.

Mr. Knowles: I want to ask the minister a question about the elevators in this building. As he must know, they have been in operation for quite a long time, and I am wondering whether any reports have been made recently as to whether or not they should be replaced. Frequently we come to an elevator and find that it is not running. This morning I came upon two that were not running, and when I went to a third, the operator invited me to try to open and close that inner door which he pushes back and forth with his right hand. He also invited me to operate the lever which he controls with his left hand and which opens and closes the outer doors. He did not have me run the elevator; I have no licence to do that. Frankly the strength required to operate those doors made me realize that it would be a pretty tough job to have to do all day. Has there been any recent investigation into the question whether or not the elevators in this building should be replaced?

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): I must admit that there has been no investigation into the question of replacing the elevators. We all know they have been in operation a long time.

Mr. Knowles: And they get a great deal of use.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): They have had a great deal of use, but we are told they are good for some years yet. The elevators are maintained and repaired by a company; in this case I believe it is the Otis Elevator Company, one of the largest in the country. They have their men here all the time going over all the elevators. I could instruct my officials to have an investigation made to see whether we should go to the expense of replacing them at this time.

Mr. Knowles: Some time when the minister has a few minutes to spare I invite him to go on one of these elevators and try operating the doors I have mentioned. It does seem to me that in fairness to the operators something should be done to make it possible for them to carry out their duties with a little less physical effort than is presently required. I will make an appointment for the minister.

Mr. Fraser: Since we are discussing matters having to do with this building I should like to mention a few points, though I had not intended to discuss them at all. Sitting in the public accounts committee and looking out over the library we can see trees about four feet high growing on the roof of that building. I believe there must be crevices containing dirt in which those trees have their roots. It would seem that the whole building needs to have the masonry pointed.

Some time ago the minister said he was going to get into his white overalls and fix all the clocks in the building. He may have done so, but they are all out of order again. Further, I believe the minister looks after the driveways outside the building. It is not fair to ask any truck driver to try to get to the back door of this building by the narrow driveway that leads to it. That situation should be remedied, because if the truck is of any size the driver has to run on the sidewalk for quite a distance, and then has a hard time turning.

I should like to know if the minister has anything to do with snow removal from these grounds.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No.

Mr. Cruickshank: I want to ask the minister a question concerning a matter which has been brought up for some years by the hon. member for Macleod and myself. I understand we have a committee sitting now studying the national research council. I believe we have some great scientists in Canada, and certainly we have exported quite a few to our great neighbour to the south. A small province like British Columbia, a little country like Yugoslavia, can have proper acoustics in their parliaments, but we cannot. Each year we have asked Mr. Speaker to do something about it. Not long ago we sent the then Speaker, and his assistant, I believe, to Europe to study developments there. It cost this country a good deal of money to give those gentlemen a very pleasant trip, but nothing was accomplished by it. If British Columbia can have a loud speaker system; if the state of Washington can have it, and the state of California, why cannot something be done about it here? I think it is tommyrot for the government to say they cannot do anything about it. If that is so they should fire some of their officials and get some competent men such as we have in British Columbia, so that we may have proper acoustics in this chamber. It may be all right now for an hon. member who sits right in the centre of the chamber, but it is not all right for those who sit at the far end. Someone comes three thousand miles to sit in the gallery and listen to what is going on in parliament, but not a word can be heard with the exception of speeches by the leader of the opposition and the member for Fraser Valley. I am sorry to say they are the only two who can be heard.

Mr. Gibson: And that gives a wrong impression.

Mr. Cruickshank: Quite so. But I am serious about this. I believe it is utter nonsense to say we can do nothing about it. To my knowledge we have asked for more than ten years that something be done; the hon. member for Macleod has made the most effective speeches on this subject. If we can do it in the provinces, why can we not do it here, with all the money we have? We can build fool death traps like Confederation square, but we cannot afford a few thousand dollars to instal a proper amplification system in this chamber. In my opinion that is rot, and I should like to know why we are not doing anything about it.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Cruickshank: No, it is not carried. This business of calling "carried"—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Will the hon. member permit me to answer? Everything in this House of Commons comes under the jurisdiction of Mr. Speaker, and I am in the hands of the committee and Mr. Speaker as to what we should do in connection with any loud speaker system to be installed in the house. I am informed that about the most perfect system in the world is being installed in the new British house at Westminster, and before we do anything we would like to see how they get along over there. I do not think it is any secret that Mr. Speaker will be attending the opening of the new building in October, and in discussing the matter with him he expressed the thought that he would like to see how that system operates before we do anything here. It is true that for ten years some hon. members have been requesting the installation of such a system, but I have found opposition to the idea on the part of other hon. members. I think before we do instal a system we should have it as nearly perfect as possible, and consult as many people as possible. Last year we did consult with the firms interested in this type of work, but we still found opposition from some quarters to the system we proposed installing. I do not believe we are wasting time by delaying this matter in order to make sure that at least ninety per cent of the members of the house are in favour of the system adopted. In this particular case I think haste would mean waste. I believe I would rather have a report from Mr. Speaker after his trip overseas to see what he thinks of that system, because it will probably be one of the most up-to-date systems in the world.

Mr. Cruickshank: Am I to understand that some electrical companies, such as the Canadian General Electric, have been asked if they could provide this service?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): About ten companies have been asked, including Northern Electric and Westinghouse. I have not the full list, but there were many companies.

Mr. Cruickshank: And they say they cannot provide it?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No, they did not say that. They all have special systems. If the hon. member were confronted with a report in which Westinghouse gave its ideas, and Northern Electric and these other firms gave their ideas, I believe he would be at a loss to know just what to do. There are not many experts in the house who could decide on this matter. Why not wait a little longer to see if we cannot find a better system.

Mr. Cruickshank: Another ten years, I suppose! I shall be in the Senate by that time.

Mr. Green: I should like to have the minister explain the method that is used by his department in renting premises. The law of the country seems to be clear with regard to most transactions by departments of government, but I am afraid it is not quite as good as it should be as to the renting of premises. We find certain general provisions laid down for all departments, including the Department of Public Works, I assume, in the Public Works Act, section 36. This section reads as follows:

> Whenever any works are to be executed under the direction of any department of the government, the minister having charge of such department shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of such works, except in cases
>
> (a) of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest; or
>
> (b) in which from the nature of the work it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department; or
>
> (c) where the estimated cost of the work is less than $5,000 and it appears to the minister, in view of the nature of the work, that it is not advisable to invite tenders.

Then there is this further provision in subsection 2 of the same section:

> Whenever in case of any work tenders are required to be or are invited, the minister having charge of the department concerned shall submit all tenders received therefor to the governor in council—

That is, of course, to the cabinet.

> —and the contract for the work shall be awarded under the direction of the governor in council.

I had something to say to the minister in the session last fall, and early in the present session, with regard to the government constructing buildings. I was referring to the Alvin building in Vancouver. I am not going into that matter any further today, but Mr. Chairman will recall there was a good deal of dispute about the way that work was handled. Today I want to go on to the question of the government renting buildings.

I find this provision in section 39 which reads:

> Notwithstanding anything in this act, or in any other act contained, any public work not required for public purposes may be sold or leased, under the authority of the governor in council;—

The cabinet must approve the leasing by the government to someone else of one of these properties. The section continues:

> . . . and the proceeds of such sale or lease shall be accounted for as public moneys: Provided that such public works shall be so sold or leased by tender or at auction after public advertisement, unless it is otherwise authorized by the governor in council.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): What are those last words?

Mr. Green: ". . . unless it is otherwise authorized by the governor in council." In other words where the government has a building with which it is finished, and the decision is made to sell or lease that building, either tenders must be called or the building must be sold at auction after public advertisement.

We find this position in Vancouver. The Department of Public Works, acting for the government, has rented certain buildings as postal stations. Earlier in the session I received a return showing these different stations. There are about eight which could be called postal stations, and they are small stations scattered about the city, and separate of course from the main Vancouver post office. Five of those postal stations have been rented from firms which, it cannot be disputed, are firms owned or controlled by friends of the government, by active leading Liberals. In some way these people are able to find out when there is to be a postal station rented. It is obvious that they have what might be described as the inside track. When there is to be renting to the government, it is comparatively easy to finance the construction of a building. The rentals are always ample. In these cases I believe it would be found that the rentals, to say the least, are not too small. In these deals there is not the proper protection for the public.

I cannot find anything in the statutes which provides that when the government is going to rent premises it shall call for tenders or go through some other procedure which would ensure that everyone had a fair chance. Perhaps more important, it would mean that the price of the rental to the government would be lower. There can be no question about what has happened in these cases. I have the street addresses here, and the amounts paid to the firms from which the buildings are leased. These men may have the land, or they go out and buy the land, and then put up a building. They secure a good lease from the government. That sort of thing should be stopped. It is not in accordance with the provisions I have read from the Public Works Act. It brings the whole business of the Canadian government into disrepute with the people who know of such deals, and it does not take long for news to get around the city that that sort of thing is going on. The real estate people all know it; the contractors soon get to know it, and the effect is bad. I am quite sure that the minister himself would admit that it is bad business from the point of view of the country. If under the present legislation he is unable to stop that sort of thing, he should ask for an amendment to the act. The Canadian people are entitled to some better method of doing business.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra is right with regard to section 36, as to asking for tenders for works not undertaken by my department, and the three exceptions he mentioned: an emergency or an urgent case; if the work can be done more properly by the officials of the crown, and particularly when the cost is under $5,000. In this last year and after all the questions that were put in this chamber, I have been looking into this act thoroughly to see if we have often derogated from that section. I can tell my hon. friend that there are very few cases that my officials could not justify under this section when they made the recommendation that I sign to council. I will not say that everything in that department is perfect, but I must rely to a great extent on the advice of my officials. If they make mistakes and I sign, then I have to give the explanation and I am responsible to parliament. I know that.

I do not know whether we could make a change in section 36. It is quite general. The principle is that, having prepared the plans and specifications, we call for tenders. I sign these calls for tenders every week, and all through the country. I think it is in the exceptional case—and I could give a few cases around here—that tenders were not called because my officials and my advisers told me that nobody would try to give a firm price on the work to be undertaken. As an example, I mention the east block. When we started off with the east block, we saw the old building but we did not know what was in the building.

Mr. Green: That is a repair job.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes. But when we get through with it, it will be a new building. That is one of the jobs where we keep only the shell, I should say. No contractor would undertake a job like that on a firm price; and we did not call for tenders but came to an agreement on a fixed fee, a method which has the least objectionable features of any when getting other than a firm price. When it went over a certain amount the percentage was so small that I do not think anybody would criticize.

As to the second point, with regard to renting space, we do not rent space for ourselves except in a few cases—and I am speaking of the Department of Public Works —but every day there come into the office from all over the country requests from the other nineteen or twenty departments of government asking for space in this place and that. The first question we put to them is this: In what location do you need space? They will give us the kind of block in which they should have this post office, let us say. That is the first step that we take. When we have that information, our field men or resident architect in the town or district will send out people to make a survey of the properties. I have been thinking of the method of asking for tenders for renting space, but I cannot see how it would operate. When they say they need in that ward or in that part of Vancouver a postal station, even if we indicate the exact location of the post office or the postal station, there would be only one or two parties who could say: We will rent it to you at such a price. If I say: I want No. 50 Main street in my town for a postal station, I go to the owner of No. 50 Main street. I need not call for tenders, but I will try to negotiate with him to see at what price he will rent space.

I cannot see the tender feature in renting space. What we do is this. We have here in Ottawa a branch of my department headed by Mr. Boucher, who has been in the service for years. He is the head of the leases branch of the department, and with his other officials has quite a wide experience. When we meet difficult cases and the cases cannot be settled in the district, Mr. Boucher or one of his associates goes out to investigate. But we arrive at renting space by negotiation with the party. We have the current price and the unit price of space in that district and we base our offer on those prices. A mistake may be made in the price that we pay. It can happen every day. In transactions with regard to property or renting space, there is no definite figure that two people will agree on. In the first years I was in the department my experience was astounding. We would ask for tenders for a building which we estimated would cost $200,000. We would receive estimates that would go up to half a million dollars, and others which were $50,000 less. There is no absolute or definite figure.

The responsibility I have in this regard is quite onerous. Nearly every day I have got to use my own judgment, to see whether, on all the information I receive from my officials, we are right or wrong. I cannot say definitely whether the cost will be $1.98 per square foot or $2.05; but I take all the material they bring before me and I say: What is this company paying? What are the provincial governments paying? We get an average as to the price. When I am requested to get space at such and such a number on such and such a street in such and such a city, if the hon. member could devise a system by which I should ask for tenders, I would not object to trying even to change the act; but I would not know how to make it operate. That is the advice my officials give me.

The other point the hon. gentleman raised was that we had acquired properties and then later on disposed of them. When they become surplus and we do not need to use them for years to come, we generally declare them surplus and they are handed over to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation for disposal. Then we get rid of them and they are disposed of by this crown corporation. But still we hold on, in nearly every part of the country, to the properties that we own, because in the future we think we will need the sites or the buildings. When there are buildings on them we do rent them. But section 39 of the Public Works Act, which the hon. gentleman read, has this redeeming feature: "unless it is otherwise ordered by the governor in council." That is where I receive my power to rent.

Mr. Green: That is, to rent your own buildings.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): To rent our old buildings. We have some of these properties in this city and in the country. We do receive requests from different people to rent. We do not ask tenders. We fix the rental price on the buildings we have to rent. During the war we were frozen, like everybody else, and we are still frozen, with people living in our buildings. When the controls disappear probably we shall follow the trend, make an assessment and value of these rentals and charge that price. The people renting these properties are not the roving kind. They stay put. We have far more difficulty in getting them out when we need the building than they have to pay the rent. I have an instance right here in Ottawa where I have been held up for four or five years because, on account of the shortage of housing in Ottawa we dare not tell these people to get out.

Even if we were to ask for tenders we would not ask these people to overbid the rentals for houses. Perhaps we would receive high rentals that would not be in line with the rentals the private owners had asked. With the controls I do not know whether I would be empowered to have people bidding on these properties.

Mr. Green: I was not complaining about government buildings which the minister no longer needs and is therefore renting. I merely cited section 39 to show that even in such cases there is provision made either for tender or rental by auction or sale by auction, and with public advertising. It was the tender, the auction and the advertising features of such transactions on which I wanted to place the emphasis. I am concerned with buildings the department rents from somebody else.

The minister said that a department such as the post office would come to him and say: "We want to rent No. 50 Main street."

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It would not go out as definite as that.

Mr. Green: No, I should hope not. Surely the minister is given quite a large area within which he can find the building. He should not be restricted to one certain building or one certain block; he should be given an area. The bad feature of what is happening is that there is a leakage somewhere in the government service. It may be from the Post Office Department; it may be from the minister's department. Somehow, the supporters of the government are finding out that there is a postal station required in a certain area and they have been able to get the lease.

Mr. Hosking: No.

Mr. Green: It may happen in places other than in Vancouver too, but it did happen in Vancouver, and I have the proof here. I do not think the minister is questioning that fact. That sort of thing has to be stopped. I am not in a position to know what the proper steps are to be taken to stop it. I believe the minister wants to stop it just as I do. I suggest to him that he look into the possibility, in the first place, of his department insisting it be given a large area in which to find a building and be given the power to call for tenders for such a building in that area. Let the public know what is going on.

In fact in cases of this kind the department would have been wiser to build its own buildings rather than let somebody chisel in by finding out that there was going to be a building and then picking up property and getting a loan from the bank to put up the building and ending up with a nice government lease without any competition. That is the thing to which we are objecting. I do hope that the minister will try to devise some way to stop that sort of business.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Starting with the last words the hon. member used, I am in complete agreement as to these leases. I would rather put up buildings for the government in every town where we go. Generally we put up better buildings than we can rent or lease from other people, and they meet the specifications of the departments that need them. I believe in that principle, and my officials have been instructed to that effect. But the hon. gentleman is going back to some years in which we could not get space or put up space. Unless there are some renewals that the hon. member has in mind I can tell him that right now in Vancouver they are insisting that we rent space from other people for the Post Office; and only yesterday I said: "I am going to put up a building there." Even in my sleep I dare not think of the site. Hon. members know what happens when a site is known. The information spreads out. There are very clever people in this world. When we get down to make a deal with businessmen we do not know who has been around the place. The property has changed hands—

Mr. Green: The minister has the power of expropriation.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes, but before I expropriate I ask parliament for some estimate, although I could expropriate in advance with the authority of the governor in council. But if the hon. gentleman thinks we rent properties only from friends of the government, I say to him that I do not even know these people in Vancouver. I have rented on the advice of my officials. If he believes we rent properties only from our friends—

Mr. Green: You did in this instance.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): —he is gravely mistaken. He should listen to what I hear from other members who blame me always for doing business with the opposition.

Mr. Casselman: Don't look at me.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): They just tell me that and they give me facts. They say "You know this gentleman owns this property." I do not know his politics, but they give me information after the fact.

Mr. Green: Maybe the Liberals back here are not as smart as they are out in Vancouver.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not know about that. I do not inquire into the race, religion, creed or politics of those who have the goods we need. In the future it will take more than pressure to try to get me into a deal to rent a building unless it is urgently needed and we have to have it. I do not believe in that policy. The excuse I had in the past —and it was a good one—was that I could not get space.

Mr. Green: That did not apply in this instance.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The hon. member is a friend of mine. I will ask him this question. He recalls that around 1945 and 1946 members were saying to me: "Please vacate the space you have in that building. Young veterans are coming back from the war looking for space to open their offices as professional men or as businessmen." The hon. member knows that is true. I am not inventing it. We did vacate the space, and then I fell into these things. Space was needed urgently for unemployment insurance, income tax, customs and every other department. I do not know whether we made mistakes; I do not think so, because if I had seen it in advance the hon. member can be sure that I would not let it go through. I am not going to preach here that we are perfect in everything that has been done.

As to the change in the department, I ask the hon. member to take his own district. We have a good staff here, perhaps not as many as we should have, but his province has grown by leaps and bounds, and the needs of the government departments in Vancouver are three or four times what they were before the war. That should be taken into account as indicating that we had to go quickly about it and find space in the building.

I am glad of the co-operation of the hon. gentleman. He knows that I listen to wise advice. I do not believe he is right when he speaks of my friends or the party's friends. Of course I could give him some instances in which his own friends are doing business with the department.

Mr. Green: None of my friends, I know.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You have friends and I have friends, and we are nearly all friends.

As to tenders, I have not seen contracts for buildings or wharves for quite a long time where they suggested that we should not ask tenders. That is the rule and it is the policy. Every submission that comes before me I read carefully, and we call for tenders. Those who know the system in public works could go every Wednesday of every week in the year to Mr. Harrell's office—he is the assistant deputy minister. With the secretary of the department, and a few other officials, they open those tenders. The tenders are opened publicly. The Canadian Construction Association of Canada have an office in Ottawa, and they always have a representative to assist in opening these tenders. They take down the tenders. A study is made of them, and a study is made in the department. Unless a guarantee has not been deposited, or unless they do not follow the specifications required, the lowest tenderer gets the contract. I never have attended myself, and I very seldom see contractors. They do come to deal with officials. During a session, of course, I would not have time to see them anyway.

Mr. Green: But the minister has not said whether he would do what I suggest, namely give consideration to having some provision written into the Public Works Act providing that where a government is renting property from someone else there shall be some type of protection against the sort of thing I have mentioned.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We will give consideration to it. But, if I may complete that story, let us say the Post Office Department wants an office in a certain area. What happens is that an official of my department and an official of the Post Office Department make a survey. We are pretty much guided by the advice we receive from the official in the Post Office Department—or perhaps an official from the unemployment insurance branch, which has offices in every part of Canada—as to the location. There may be three or four places that would be suitable. But when it comes down to the renting of space, there is a difficulty. Let us suppose we do call for tenders, stating that we need 5,000 square feet of space for a post office in a certain area. We would have to look into the condition of the building offered, and see whether it could be put into suitable shape. We might have to take the responsibility of renovating it, and making certain expenditures. Does the hon. member think that would be a better procedure than one whereby, after these men have come to an understanding on the building, they proceed to negotiate? They do turn down offers. Many a time they are turned down, and we say it would not be reasonable. The man in the Post Office Department, or any other department, will try to get as good a deal as possible.

Mr. Green: To what extent does the minister use the method of having some recognized valuator, one who would be an authority in respect of values, obtain an option? Is that procedure used to any extent? There have been reports in connection with some of these matters—not these postal station sites, but in connection with, I believe it was, the site for a customs house. The suggestion did appear in the press that someone from the minister's department or from one of the other departments had obtained an option at a reasonable figure, and that then that option had been allowed to lapse, with the result that eventually someone else had come along—in that case too a friend of the government was involved—and the price had then become a great deal higher. Is there any attempt made to do business by getting options through independent valuators whose good faith could not be questioned? The minister's department will have to work out the best solution, because no private member of the house is in a position to do so. However there is this abuse, and I believe the minister himself wants to remove it, just as I do. I would urge upon him that he try to work out some method of stopping this racketeering.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would not use a word like that, really; that is what harms my hon. friend's argument—when he uses words like that. I do not think humanity is that bad—even in Vancouver. There must be some good people there too. When I deal with them, or consult them, I find they are not bad. Generally, however, we work through our officials.

Mr. Green: If I might modify that I would say, "pettiness".

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If I should right now explain what I think the situation is in Vancouver in respect to space, and the location of public buildings, not having the estimates before me, and the power of expropriation, I could see the price go up. I am thinking of that situation in Vancouver. I do not know that they are not clever enough there, and they imagine we want to put up more buildings. I am not authorized to say, but I have been studying that situation. I would not tell it to my hon. friend right now, because in Vancouver, which is one of the—

Mr. Green: The best in Canada.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Well, every time I have been there I have thought so, until I have come to the central provinces. But in Vancouver, where the city is growing every day, departments need buildings.

Mr. Green: What about my question with regard to obtaining options?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am not trying to evade the hon. member's question. But does the hon. member think that my officials, who do this work year in and year out, and have experience in the renting of buildings and knowledge of values per unit and the kind of construction required, could not do that work? When difficulties arise I am told that they will get in touch with real estate firms in all parts of the country to act as advisers. They will consult them. Then they can go to the court house, the registrar or the city hall and get all the information they require. When they have that information they begin to negotiate.

We do ask the advice of outsiders. I could name a firm in Toronto, but I should not do so because it would be advertising that firm unduly. I have complete confidence in that firm, because in the last five or six years they have given me advice which I am sure saved the government a large amount of money. It has been good advice, sound advice. We have used outsiders for that kind of thing. But I would not want to say that I have not in my own department—

Mr. Green: But I asked whether the minister has used this optioning system.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No, I cannot recall that we have. If I sent out one of my men to get in touch with a real estate agent and ask him to try to get an option on a property—and I am not evading the point—if the option lapsed, how could I stop the leak? The minute we say something, then other people who know something about this business begin to think about what they will do. There may be leaks, but I do not think they are in my department.

Mr. Adamson: I think I know the firm in Toronto about which the minister has been speaking.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): When we have in mind some property we call up this firm and we say, "Would you give us an idea about this property?" Hon. members would be surprised how they know the country, from Newfoundland to Victoria. They are friends of mine, but not political friends. I get their advice because I rely upon their judgment and their knowledge.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. St. Laurent: I should like to move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again so that, with the Speaker in the chair, I may ask leave of the house to revert to motions in order to table certain documents relating to the disasters at Rimouski and Cabano.

Progress reported.

FIRE DAMAGE

RIMOUSKI AND CABANO—TABLING OF PRELIMINARY REPORT—TELEGRAM FROM PREMIER OF QUEBEC

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask leave of the house to revert to motions for the purpose of tabling the preliminary report we have received, and which has also been supplied to the government of Quebec, with respect to the damage caused by the disastrous fires at Rimouski and Cabano. May I take it I have leave of the house?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Beaudoin): Has the hon. member leave?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. St. Laurent: Hon. members will recall that a special commission was appointed, consisting of Brigadier A. Theriault and Mr. Edouard Laurent, to investigate the situation. They have prepared a report of their investigation, addressed to both governments, and I should like to table copies thereof. Following the production of the report I had discussions with the premier of Quebec. I should like to table a copy of a telegram I received from him late yesterday afternoon expressing the understanding reached with respect to relief to be extended in those two localities.

The report shows that at Rimouski the damage, exclusive of that incurred by Price Brothers and Company who operated a large mill at that place, amounted to $10,773,400, not including any damage to personal property other than equipment of commercial firms used in the exploitation of their respective businesses. Against that there was fire insurance amounting to $2,120,400, leaving a loss of $8,653,000, of which the loss of individuals amounted to $3,715,000, partly covered by $1,250,000 of insurance, leaving a net for real property loss to individuals of $2,465,000.

The loss to institutions consisting of schools, hospitals, old people's home and the like amounted to $5,124,400 against which there was insurance of $775,400, leaving a net balance of $4,349,000. The loss incurred by utilities amounted to $204,000. In addition there was the value of a bridge completely destroyed, which is listed in the report as provincial property but which in fact was the property of the town of Rimouski. The commissioners were under the impression that the bridge had been taken over as part of a provincial highway, but such is not the case yet in the province of Quebec. Links between stretches of provincial highway which go through cities and towns are still the responsibility of the local authorities. Therefore the municipality and the utilities show a loss of $679,000.

These three net amounts total $7,493,000, practically seven and a half million dollars. In addition there was damage to federal property amounting to $260,000, according to the estimate, and to provincial property amounting to $930,000, according to the same estimate.

The situation in Cabano is that no special account was taken of the damage to the municipality, which was not very considerable. There was some damage to highways and sidewalks, but that was not brought into the calculation. There the damage suffered by individuals, excluding the Fraser Company Limited, amounted to $1,250,000, against which there was insurance amounting to $425,000, leaving a net of $825,000. The provincial government has appointed two local rehabilitation committees, both of them consisting of the commissioners who made the investigation, and in addition Mr. Paul Emile Gagnon in the case of Rimouski, and Mr. Emilien Morin, the mayor of Cabano, in the case of that town, to handle rehabilitation.

The telegram which I have filed covering the tentative understanding arrived at indicates that it is the intention of the provincial government to turn over to the Rimouski rehabilitation committee the sum of $2,500,000, and to turn over to the Cabano relief committee the sum of $300,000, to be applied to the rehabilitation of these localities. The tentative understanding is that the federal government will contribute equal amounts to both local committees. It is my understanding that the Minister of Finance will include an item in the supplementary estimates to provide the funds required.

In reading the telegram hon. members will see that there is a reservation made with respect to a marine technical school that had been erected in Rimouski at the joint expense of the provincial and federal governments for the training of seamen. They will see it is not to be taken into account in the allocation of the relief amounts provided by the sums I have mentioned, but that its reconstruction is to be the subject of further negotiations between the federal and provincial governments.

Mr. Jean François Pouliot (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my constituents, who suffered such a calamity at Cabano, I wish to thank the Prime Minister, the members of the government and all my colleagues of the House of Commons for their generous sympathy in the terrible disaster. The Prime Minister took the trouble to go to Cabano. He saw the people there, and I am sure that he admired the dignity they displayed in their misfortune. We needed co-operation and action, and we have had both. I am most happy that there has been so much co-operation between the federal and provincial governments to help the people concerned in order that they may rebuild their houses before next fall.

I thank the gentlemen who were appointed by both governments to make a survey. I thank all those who have been generous enough to give a helping hand to so many people who suffered at Cabano and Rimouski. I thank the provincial government for having organized a trust fund, and the Star and La Presse for having given such wide publicity to it. I must not forget the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Houde), his worship the mayor of Montreal, and the members of the municipal council of that city, who have made a generous donation and have organized a concert at the Forum in aid of those in such distress.

I could not possibly enumerate all those who have done something to show a real understanding of human suffering and a true spirit of fraternity. I thank the Prime Minister in the first place and all those who have shown themselves so generous and so truly Canadian in helping their fellow citizens who were the victims of such a calamity.

(Translation):

Mr. J. G. L. Langlois (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the statement just made by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent).

On behalf of the member for Rimouski (Mr. Belzile) and the people of the city of Rimouski, I must say how glad we have been to learn that, through the co-operation of the federal and provincial governments, the people so sorely tried by the recent disaster will receive badly needed help and assistance.

I wish to thank the Prime Minister and the government for their promptness in the matter. This help will, I am sure, hasten the reconstruction of that city.

(Text):

FREIGHT RATES

INCREASE AWARDED TO RAILWAYS—TABLING OF FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while we are still on motions may I have leave to table copy of a letter I have received from the premier of Alberta in reply to my letter of June 13 with respect to the recent freight rate increase authorized by the board of transport commissioners, and the answer I have sent today.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

288. Departmental administration, $350,605.

Mr. Fraser: Can the minister say why there should be a difference of about $2.05 per ton in the cost of supplying coal to dredges at three points in the maritimes? That would be all Nova Scotia coal, would it not?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): As was mentioned in the house some days ago, tenders are asked for the supply of coal at different places. I suppose the difference in the cost of transportation might have something to do with the difference in the price. In any case we have accepted the lowest price for each point where we require coal.

Mr. Fraser: It would all go in by water from Sydney, would it not?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It might, but we ask for public tenders. I do not say we are bound to accept the lowest tender, but that is the general practice.

Mr. Thatcher: I want to ask the minister a supplementary question following one asked this morning by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. Before lunch the minister said that when a building was to be constructed by his department he usually called for tenders and then usually accepted the lowest tender. I should like to ask if there is any variation in that practice. I ask that question because of certain evidence given before the public accounts committee this year. A short time ago when Mr. Bryce, assistant deputy minister of finance, was giving evidence I asked whether, when a major building was being constructed, the lowest tender was accepted; and at page 280 of the evidence he made this reply:

> . . . there undoubtedly have been buildings built or special construction projects undertaken in recent years where it has not been done on the basis of awarding the contract to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Did he give an example?

Mr. Thatcher: No, he did not give a specific instance, but he is one of the principal officials of the treasury and I suppose must be considered reasonably responsible. I wonder if the minister could give some explanation of the difference between the statement he made this morning and the evidence of Mr. Bryce. If the lowest tender is not being accepted I think it is a dangerous practice which may cost the taxpayers of Canada a very large amount of money over the years. Therefore I should like the minister this afternoon, or as soon as possible, to state whether in the past year buildings have been constructed in connection with which the lowest tender was not accepted and, if that has been the case, to name those buildings.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I cannot recall an instance when we have not accepted the lowest tender if that tender covered the whole of the specifications attached to the plans. I cannot recall that we have refused the lowest tender which, having covered all the specifications, was accompanied by the ten per cent of the tender legally required. I cannot recall that we have not accepted the lowest tender when the company, having complied with all the other rules, had the required amount of equipment registered in Canada. If an hon. member would give me one case I would call for the file immediately to see whether we had not given the contract to the lowest tenderer when everything else was in order. If there is some exception I should like to know about it, because I would personally inquire into it.

Mr. Thatcher: I have no assurance beyond what Mr. Bryce said, and certainly he is a senior official.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Do you know why he said that? Perhaps we did not give the contract to the lowest tenderer if his tender did not cover all the specifications.

Mr. Herridge: I want to make a few remarks on the policy of the department, and concerning the officials; I shall be quite brief. In the first place I want to congratulate the minister again on the work being done by his officials and their assistants in British Columbia. They have carried on under particularly difficult conditions during recent years. It is very hard to get materials and labour together at a certain spot and at a certain time in order to construct a wharf, for instance, and I think they have done a fine job. Others in the district feel the same way. I suggest that from my personal observation there is a shortage of engineering staff in British Columbia. I notice that the engineers of the department are continuously on the go, and have very little time to stop anywhere. So I would like the minister to inquire into that point. I might add that the officials have excellent public relations with representative public bodies and with the public generally. I believe they have shown very good judgment in dealing with the situations that have arisen in connection with the work of the department in that province.

Before passing on to the main subject with which I want to deal let me say a word about dredging on the Arrow lakes. I want to express the appreciation of the people of the district for the excellent work done by the dredge on those lakes within the past year. There has been excellent cooperation between the captain of the dredge and the captain of those vessels operating on the lakes. While this year, as the minister will be able to judge from an examination of the report, the yardage does not appear to be as high as in former years, excellent work has been done in deepening the channel to make the navigation of the river easier for those who use it.

Mr. Chairman, I rose particularly to deal with the policy concerning riverbank erosion and river wall protection. Representing as I do, in common with the member for Kamloops, a constituency touching on the Columbia river, I am concerned about the possibility of flood damage at Trail which is imminent at the present time, and the damage from erosion that has occurred at certain spots throughout the year. This was brought forcibly to my attention, in the first place, through the 1948 flood when the city of Trail suffered heavy damage as a result of the overflowing of the Columbia river at various points. An appeal was made to the minister by the city council. I have a copy of their petition presented here and it deals with the difficulties to be faced and what is required to remedy them. I discussed the matter with the minister, his deputy minister and some of his engineers. I quite agree with the reply the minister made to that request. As I understand it, there is a constitutional angle to the question. The waters, so far as navigation is concerned, are the property of the federal government; so far as power production is concerned, they are the property of the province. It is the kinetic energy in the water that produces the power; it is the kinetic energy that erodes the banks of the river. Therefore it was the property of the province destroying the property of the province. The minister suggested the city should apply to the province, and the province should make application to the federal authorities for some assistance to build a river wall. I support that proposal. I think that is quite sound. We cannot have every village, city and municipality dealing with the dominion government. The proper chain of responsibility is from the municipality to the province, from the province to the federal government.

Unfortunately, the provincial government took no action in this matter. A resolution was brought before the provincial legislature, but it was withdrawn on the promise of the minister to deal with the situation. He said he would bring it unofficially to the attention of the federal minister. No purpose is served by bringing a matter unofficially to the attention of a representative of another government, so nothing has happened.

Erosion has been a problem on the Columbia river ever since British Columbia entered confederation. Upon examining the correspondence and documents of that time, I find that it first arose in 1890, and later in 1892 when a petition was presented to the federal government to have something done to prevent the erosion of the river bank near Revelstoke. Then the provincial legislature of British Columbia passed a resolution in 1894 urging the federal government to assist the province with the problem of the erosion of the Columbia river bank. In 1900 some $33,000 was spent as a result of this resolution and the federal government bore half of the cost.

It has been a problem throughout the years, although the dangerous possibilities were not brought to the attention of the people in recent years until the flood of 1948. In going through the correspondence it appears to me that the federal government has made certain grants to the provincial government for Columbia riverbank protection. I understand that today the federal government takes the stand it will do riverbank protection work in order to protect its own structures or in order to repair some damage occasioned by a structure of the dominion government or some work of the dominion government or for navigation. I think I am correct in that. If the city of Trail, which is a vital city so far as Canada is concerned, is to be adequately protected it will require at least $1 million to extend the city river wall to the city limits. That is necessary work if Trail is to be properly protected.

In addition to that there are other minor works that should be undertaken along the river. I believe some extensive riverbank protection work is required at Revelstoke, but I believe the member for Kamloops will deal with that later. It is about time, Mr. Chairman, that we had a policy with respect to riverbank protection and erosion. It seems to me there is no defined policy, and the government continues to dawdle over the whole question. There is no policy or no plan laid down to meet this urgent situation facing the cities and communities lying along the banks of our great rivers. There is a job to be done in the protection of those communities. At the same time there will be men who will be unemployed next winter, and who will require employment. I am not going to take the time of the house, Mr. Chairman, to go into the full details. I could say much more.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: Someone says, "hear, hear". I believe it is unbecoming for a member of the Progressive Conservative party to say "hear, hear".

Mr. Fulton: It was a member of your own party.

Mr. Herridge: If it was a member of my own party it could only have been the member for Moose Jaw who thinks the biggest national problem we have is to remedy the sewage system of Moose Jaw.

I should like the minister, when he replies to requests, to make reply concerning the suggestions I have made. I think it is an urgent matter. He has been very co-operative, but I get the impression the provincial minister of public works and the federal Minister of Public Works react to this problem like the ancient maiden lady receiving a proposal from a young man; they are quite correct but neither of them shows much enthusiasm over the matter. I do urge again that the federal government is the one to take first action to seek co-operation with the provincial government in developing a policy covering riverbank protection and the protection of the communities lying along our rivers. Then both governments could plan to do a job that requires to be done at once in many places in Canada. At the same time the plan would provide employment for men who will be unemployed next winter, even under the best of conditions. Owing to a cessation of the work in the woods, many men capable of doing heavy work are unemployed. I think it would be a far better plan to do these necessary jobs, even if we spend a certain extra amount of money to provide very useful employment. I consider it a pressing problem, Mr. Chairman, and an opportunity for this government and the minister to implement some of the green book proposals of 1945.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say first that, because of our thirty or more elevators in Fort William, because of our four paper mills, because of our manufacturing, we turn in a large amount of taxes to the dominion government. I would also say that we receive consideration from the minister in the matter of public works, and the things that we need. We shall be back again to see that department soon because of our need. I am asking now, not for a need for Fort William but for all of Canada, and one that is long overdue. It is a need of this House of Commons, and that is for an up-to-date gymnasium. We have athletes from all over Canada in this house; men who played the roaring game of rugger, soccer, basketball, tennis and so on. These men have made the grade in public life, and been elected to the House of Commons. They come down here, and they sit, rest and grow fat, because we have not a gymnasium. Anyone knows, and the doctor over there will tell you, that carrying fat as a dead weight is a burden upon the heart. I will ask the minister and his staff, when they are beautifying Ottawa, not to forget the beautifying of the human bodies of the men and women of the House of Commons.

Mr. Sinnott: With regard to the question raised by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, as to the way contracts are handled, I must say at this time that I think possibly all members of the committee are fortunate to have the fine co-operation of the Minister of Public Works. But I have been reminded by several competent men that contracts are drifting into the hands of too few men because of the fact that they have to put up a 10 per cent deposit on the amount of construction. Is it possible that a bond put up by these men would be just as acceptable to the government as a 10 per cent cheque? In most cases a small contractor having to put up a 10 per cent cheque finds that it ties up a great deal of his money. If a bond company is willing to back him up, and if they will deliver to the government the 10 per cent on request, I think it would help many of these smaller men who tender on these jobs.

I should like to remind the hon. member for Kootenay West that the Columbia river is not the only one that is eroding in Canada. The Red river is causing considerable damage to market gardeners. As to many of the market gardens along that river, as much as 50 to 100 feet of land have drifted into the river during the last 15 to 20 years. The Winnipeg river is causing considerable damage at the present time. I believe it is higher now than it has been at any time since 1916, and it extends possibly one and a half feet over the road which runs from Lac du Bonnet to Pine Falls, which is the main road. I have been asked by several of these people along the Red river, as well as by people along the Winnipeg river, if something can be done to curb this erosion which is taking place year after year. I will ask the minister and his department to see whether they can work out something definite to help those people.

Mr. Fulton: I just want to support what the hon. member for Kootenay West has said with regard to erosion. I always let him take the lead in this matter because more of the Columbia river lies in his constituency than in mine, although in mine lies the most valuable and attractive part of the river. As a matter of fact, I had a telegram just today from Revelstoke on this very problem of erosion. I did not like to bother the minister personally because he is here with his estimates, but his departmental officials are looking into it.

I should like to support to the full what the hon. member for Kootenay West has said to the effect that there is no clear-cut policy. The localities, the municipalities and the individual areas affected do not know whether to look to their federal member or to the provincial member; and between the three divided authorities, we do not seem to get very far. In justice I should pause here to echo what the hon. member preceding me has said. I think that the federal government has gone quite far in discharging the responsibilities which are unquestionably its own. There is no complaint on that score. When it can be clearly shown that it is a federal responsibility, they have come in and have done considerable bank protection work at Revelstoke, which has been of great value in that area. But then again that was where it was the result of previous federal construction or was an interference with navigation. But in the great majority of cases where there is no clear-cut division of responsibility, where it cannot be clearly shown that it is the result of some federal construction or threat to navigation but is on a navigable stream, no one quite knows to whom to look.

It is something which is obviously beyond the resources of the municipality to handle. The provincial authorities say that it is a navigable stream and that the federal government should co-operate, and the federal government take the position that it is not an interference with navigation and therefore it is not their responsibility. I feel that if, as a result of discussions, we could have a clear-cut policy on this whole question of erosion, which is of importance not only on the Columbia but on the Thompson and the north Thompson in the rest of my riding and further down the Fraser as well, then those areas affected might expect to have some progress. I believe that the proper basis would be a joint contribution by the municipalities, the province and the federal authorities to deal with this question of bank erosion.

In conclusion, I just want to impress upon the minister the fact that it is a matter of some urgency because every year acres of valuable land are falling prey to the encroachment of this constant erosion by the rivers in the flood seasons of the year.

Mr. Thatcher: I have just one brief question to ask the minister. In the past year we had quite heavy unemployment in the winter months, and I suppose we shall have it again next winter. The Prime Minister and others have suggested that it is seasonal unemployment. I wonder if it would be feasible for the Department of Public Works to do more of their building in the winter months when the construction industry is slack. I know that, in my own city, hospitals have been built in that way. Once they got the outer shell up, the men worked inside. It seems to me that might be a tangible step which this department might take to alleviate seasonal unemployment in the winter. I should like to know whether the minister thinks it is feasible or not.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): With regard to that last question, the Public Works Act does not contemplate that we put up engineering or architectural works in order to relieve unemployment. You must admit that if you read the act. That is not the object of the Public Works Act. It is to put up these works to meet the needs of the different services in the country. We do our utmost to proceed the year round with buildings. In British Columbia we have work going on the year round. But you cannot do that in other provinces of the country. I do not think that I could give any other answer than that, unless more authority were given to me, to try to relieve unemployment, and it were made one of the duties of my department that, regardless of the cost, I could undertake work just to relieve unemployment.

Mr. Thatcher: Of course, if you do not do something like that in the winter, you are paying out unemployment insurance anyway. It does seem to me that even if it cost a little bit more to build in the winter, with regard to inside work at least it would be a way of alleviating seasonal unemployment in many parts of Canada.

Mr. Drew: I wish to deal with the broad question of how the Department of Public Works fits into the over-all picture of construction of government buildings and the way in which it would seem to me that this subject might well be examined before we are called upon once again to consider estimates. As to this year, I recognize that we are necessarily committed to the pattern of estimates that we have before us and to the general procedure that has been followed. This, however, seems to be the appropriate point at which to make certain observations which I should think might well be given careful consideration by the members of this committee in examining what is happening in connection with the construction of public buildings.

When the hon. member for Fort William expressed his concern about the increasing fat which he had noticed in some places—and he, with his usual politeness, did not indicate any particular place—I was conscious of the fact that there are also other places where there is a certain amount of fat appearing, and places other than on the human frame. One of the things about which all of us must think perhaps more than we have been called upon to think in the past is the extent to which the budgets for every requirement of government are becoming fatter and fatter and, in that very process, are imposing increasing tax burdens upon every taxpayer in Canada.

One of the difficulties of offering any suggestions as to places where savings can be made or otherwise is that in the very nature of things it is only those who are dealing with each of the problems who can possibly know whether or not there might have been certain economies which would have maintained efficiency and conceivably even increased efficiency. But one of the things that do strike one rather forcibly is this. In the year before the war the total figure called for in the estimates of the Department of Public Works was $14,560,749. The amount called for this year for the acquisition or construction of buildings, works and structures is $61,431,500. I am not prepared to say, nor am I in a position to say, that included in these figures are not figures that indicate inefficiency or otherwise. We are simply presented with the information as to the buildings that are to be erected, and what they will cost.

What I would point out, however, is that not all the buildings that are being constructed by the government are being built by the Department of Public Works; and that in addition to the buildings that are being acquired or constructed by the Department of Public Works are buildings that are being acquired or constructed by other departments as well.

In a recent summary of a total figure in the estimates for the acquisition or construction of buildings, works and structures, prepared by Mr. Bryce, we find that the total over-all figure for this year will be $168,575,705 as compared with $35,830,565 in the last year before the war. That is a very large increase; and again we see that buildings are being constructed by departments which were not assuming the responsibility for constructing buildings in the fiscal year 1938-39. For instance, in the present estimates we find that the Department of National Health and Welfare has items for buildings to the amount of $2,311,250; Resources and Development, $13,482,390; Veterans Affairs, $4,535,000; National Revenue, $427,000.

In these instances I have mentioned only departments which built nothing separately as departments in 1938-39, the last fiscal year before the war. There are other departments like National Defence which were carrying on construction in the year before the war. Let us take a comparison there. In the last year before the war the amount was $4,261,050. This year the amount estimated is $36,265,257. In the case of Transport it was $7,324,389 in the year before the war. This year the estimates call for $20,410,816. I have given these last figures only to show that in department after department, where construction is taking place, there is this very large proportionate increase. It seems to me that when we are confronted with the comparative figures for all acquisition or construction of buildings, works and structures, by different departments of government—and this of course is entirely exclusive of the crown corporations and different ventures of various kinds—we find that the comparative figures are $35,830,565 the year before the war, and $168,575,705 today. It does seem that we at least should consider whether it would not be wise that there should be some more effective over-all supervision of construction, and perhaps some uniform plan of construction which might effect economies which otherwise would be overlooked because of the fact that these things would be done separately.

I recall as an example only one item that came before us for construction and it was a school that was being built in northern Canada, where in one of the departments the plans were obtained for a school of certain value. The architect was paid the fee for that plan. Then it was decided that they did not want quite so large a school. New plans were drawn and the architect was paid fees for the second plan as well. I merely mention this as one item that came up for consideration in the accounts this year, to show that there are places where a careful examination and one uniform system of supervision might well disclose places where savings could be made in this very large figure.

Under the Department of Public Works there is a strict requirement in regard to the calling for tenders. The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has referred to the situation that arose in Vancouver, and I do not intend to enlarge upon it beyond this. The device that was employed there could be one that would circumvent the intended restrictions in the act under which this department operates. The facts speak for themselves. The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has put these facts forward. The minister has given his explanation, and I do not intend to extend the discussion which has been so fully covered. I would point out, however, that if it were intended to circumvent these restrictions, what was done in that particular case—and I refer to what has been known as the Alvin building—could be a method to avoid the ordinary requirements; because, where the government intended to buy, it could arrange to buy but nevertheless in advance to arrange a lease with a purchase option and in the process avoid the necessity of calling for tenders, and then subsequently take up the option, and by that means avoid the intended protection of the calling for tenders.

I am putting this forward only to indicate that a method of this kind could be abused if it became an extended practice.

Perhaps, however, what has happened in this case does suggest the very great desirability of an over-all review by competent, outside experts as to the way in which the whole program of construction is carried on, not only by this but by all government departments, so that every advancement in construction methods and every practical economy that has been discovered as a result of the great building developments of the past few years may be applied to the construction of government buildings of all kinds.

[Mr. Drew.]

Without impropriety of any kind, and without hint or suggestion of impropriety it nevertheless must suggest itself to every hon. member that practices which go on year after year, without any independent examination, in the experience of every one of us do almost invariably lead to the acceptance of methods which might be improved if they were checked and examined from time to time.

What is happening here is only one of the reasons that I did urge an over-all examination of the whole business of government by an independent royal commission. That has been dealt with, and I shall not extend the discussion of that suggestion at this session. But I do most earnestly put before the minister for consideration the advisability of a thorough consideration of the whole procedure in connection with the construction of public buildings, not only in his own department, but in all departments of government which are now building to the extent of $168 million a year. Those figures are so large that they are almost beyond the understanding of many people. Sometimes figures become so large that we are inclined to become less careful in their examination than when they are in terms we understand in our daily contacts.

With the figures before us it is not possible for members of the House of Commons to say, "You could save $1,000 here", or "You could save $10,000 in this item" or "You might save $50,000 in that item". That is not possible. We do not examine these as architects or as building engineers. They are put before us as jobs that should be done—and let me say at once that in most, if not in all cases, they are jobs that do need to be done. Members want to have them done in a way that will impose the least possible burden of taxation upon the taxpayer.

My remarks have been general for the very reason I have indicated, namely that we cannot examine in detail. But I do suggest that the enormous increase in the cost of building which in the year before the war was $35 million to the present figure of $168 million, should be a warning, a signal, that the time has come to review the method by which these arrangements are made, and to see if there are not economies which could be practised, either in the matter of buying, different plans of construction, or otherwise.

May I point out in relation to the activities of this department that there is a clear indication of the way in which costs are rising when we look at the item for maintenance and repairs. In the year before the war the Department of Public Works was shown as spending $3,664,294 on maintenance and repairs in the estimates for that year. This year under the same heading there is an amount of $33,551,248. In other words the figure for this year is almost ten times what it was the year before the war. May I add that the figures I have used in each case are those supplied by Mr. Bryce in what was described as a functional breakdown of the over-all estimates of the different departments, under the heading "acquisition or construction of buildings, works and structures."

I shall conclude with the repeated request that the minister take this into consideration and do what any ordinary business concern would do, namely bring in the best available advice to make sure that if there are any ways in which savings can be made they will be undertaken.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Chairman, it is not every day that I would be ready to compliment the leader of the opposition upon a speech; but today he has certainly impressed me with the study he has made of these figures concerning the Department of Public Works, and other departments.

May I in a few words place before him the little experience I have gained since I have been Minister of Public Works. In 1942-43 when I was first appointed, according to the figures given me by my officials we had an appropriation of $18,221,351. At that time we were at war, and it was found that the statute under which we operated was so restrictive that it took us a good deal of time to get results. In street parlance, one would say, "There is too much red tape in public works."

I have to admit that this is one of the oldest departments of government. It is built on experience, people having joined it when they were very young, and having grown up with it and received their training from older officials. I become impatient when I bring down my estimates and there are revotes. Well, it has been explained to me that they do not run; they just walk and go slowly to avoid mistakes.

So, during the war, instead of giving all the construction work to the Department of Public Works, other departments were set up. Some of the departments handed their work to this other department which, at the time, was the department of munitions and supply. For instance, the Department of Veterans Affairs, which had always had an engineering and architects branch, would have construction done by the Department of National Defence. It developed that people avoided the Department of Public Works, because we did not get results. We could not go fast enough—and I think their action was proper at the time. But to get those quick results one could not follow the statute exactly, and we operated under the statute.

This condition grew up during the war. There is no doubt about it that some departments were not always satisfied with the way we gave them space or the works they wanted. Departments were growing rapidly and we were confronted by a number of regulations under which priorities for materials and labour were given to other departments.

So you see our estimates during the war years were kept very low—$18,021,351, and then in the next year $21,464,304, and then going back to $20,346,734 in 1944-45, and then up to $23,178,041. But we have to admit that since the war I have been pressing the government to go ahead with works. In 1946 nearly everything that belonged to the government by way of public works was deteriorating to the extent that we were losing some of those works. So I insisted that I receive amounts sufficient at least to try to repair, maintain or rebuild. As to maintenance and repairs, I have received some votes, but in the last two years, when the situation eased as to materials and there was more labour on the market, I convinced them that we should undertake new projects and buildings. In that process I had to rebuild the staff of the Department of Public Works. When I became minister in 1942 it was around 4,000 and it now approximates 7,400.

There is a lot in the thought of the leader of the opposition that there might be a saving if we could concentrate all building for every department in the Department of Public Works. I do not say there would be, but we would have to increase the staff of the department to quite an extent to handle the surplus of $60 million worth of works that are done outside the Department of Public Works. I think the proper procedure is that when the need for works is demonstrated to the satisfaction of the officials of the department, the community, members of parliament and the government, then we should undertake those works, following the statute as closely as humanly possible. We have been trying to do that.

One case was cited where perhaps we may have deviated and tried to avoid the provisions of the law. I will tell you candidly that was never the intention. I am not going to give all the reasons that I have given in the house before. It was never the intention to avoid the law. The purpose was to try to get quickly something that was required by departments. That was the only reason that motivated me in that instance. I do not think we made a bad job of it, but I do not believe in the principle. If we are going to start abandoning the system of asking for tenders we do not know where a government would stop. We have examples all over the country. Although I do not pose as a model, I believe in the tender system because we are spending everybody's money, and everybody has a chance to tender to make money out of these contracts. While I am head of the department I would not want any change in the system, and I will try to see that does not take place.

As to the increase in the estimates, it is not only because of the number of works but also the cost of materials and labour. We just grew up with the other departments of government. In 1939 we only had 12,000 or 13,000 civil servants in the city of Ottawa, and today I believe we have over 40,000. It takes a lot of space to provide for that number of employees if you want them to have an average of 85 square feet per employee, although I think the normal should be 100. It takes a lot of space to provide conditions of work comparable to those in industry. Requests come in to provide better conditions of work in every city so that they will be on an equal footing with industry and business generally. If you do that the expenditure will be very large.

During the war, employees worked in 55 to 60 square feet of space per person. I think the average has gone up to around 80 or 85, but it really should be about 100 square feet. I know it is difficult to discuss the details of the public works estimates. If I meet someone I can give him the proceedings and details in conversation. In the house that would be quite a job although I would undertake to do so if the session lasted all year. In a session lasting only for some months of the year it would be quite difficult.

Although I do not know if I can carry it out, I will certainly consider seriously the proposal to have construction concentrated in my department. Circumstances may arise where my department might not be able to fill the bill at all unless we change the statute to give me more leeway, and really I would not want to be minister of the department unless we had the controls in the Public Works Act. I do not know what would happen to a man who would undertake to handle this business without having the straight principles laid down in the act, and I do not think I would be the proper man to administer the department under those circumstances.

Coming back to the officials of the department, I think I have about the best staff trained in different branches of the work that could be had. I will not say they are perfect, but you would be surprised to know all the details that enter into their reports before they make a recommendation to the minister. I could mention the heads of the architectural and engineering divisions in the fifteen different districts, and every name I would give you would be that of an outstanding man in his field in that particular district. They have experience and they know the local situation. They are well trained. They were educated in universities all over Canada and outside this country.

When a community sends a delegation or makes a request for a building or works of some kind I try to meet their wishes as much as possible. My immediate contact is with members of parliament on every side of the house. I do not know of one member who has come to my office to see me to explain a situation that I have not given serious consideration to the matter. In any event, you can look at the estimates and you will see that I have tried not to play favourites as to public works. I do not believe in that. I do not believe it is a good thing for the country. I do not believe it is a good way to spend the people's money. If a member of parliament comes to me with a serious project I have a report made on it by my engineers or architects. I have the advice of the gentlemen seated in front of me today. Then I am ready to go before the government or treasury board and try to get an estimate through. The moment the money is voted it falls back on the department and its officials to prepare plans, specification, estimates and ask for tenders.

We do not generally ask for public tenders for small works under $5,000. We ask for tenders from known firms in the community. In all other cases we ask for public tenders. It has been said that contracts are not always awarded to the lowest tenderer. The explanation I gave a moment ago is the only reason for that that I can see. I have in mind the case where an accepted cheque does not accompany the tender, and the tender is thrown out and not considered. If a tender does not meet the specifications it is thrown out. In certain instances when we have had dealings with contractors who have fallen down on contracts which we have had to complete we look into the capabilities and organization of such firms whenever they tender again. We do not turn down the lowest tenders. They are accepted except under the circumstances I have outlined. If anybody thinks I have made a mistake in that statement and can produce a case I should like to see the file myself. I would be sorry to see that it had escaped my attention because I look at all these tenders that come to my desk and try to give them all the attention I can.

Coming back to the subject that started this discussion, remedial works, there is no set policy, but I think the hon. member for Kamloops has grasped the situation as to what we do in cases of damage by erosion. When there has been a clear-cut responsibility on the part of the federal government I think we have met the emergency and have proceeded with the works. In other cases of flood conditions throughout the country we would not touch the damages caused by flood. The best example is the Fraser river catastrophe. When it happened the government undertook to pay not 100 per cent but 75 per cent of the cost of the dikes or protection works. Probably we will soon make an agreement with the province of Manitoba if they wish to construct dikes, but there are circumstances where we do not think that is our responsibility. Right across the river, in my own riding, there happens to be a river that nearly every year floods part of a village known as Gatineau Point. Each year a number of homes in that village will be flooded to the extent that the people will have to go out of the second storey windows and into their little rowboats in order to get to work; still they want to continue to live there. For ten years as a member of this house I tried to get the Minister of Public Works to put up some protection works in that area, but I did not succeed; nor have I been able to succeed in having that done since I have been the minister myself. There are still no protection works at that point.

I do not know what should be done. The idea has been expressed, and it has a good deal to it, that the province and the federal government might come to an understanding as to the proportion of the cost to be paid on such works. I believe that would be all to the good, but just think of the amount of money that would have to be spent for this purpose every year. As hon. members know, floods occur all over the country, and if we were to carry on this work certainly it would have to be done gradually, because I do not believe the budget of my department would be sufficient to meet the cost.

Mr. Fulton: At the moment we were dealing mainly with erosion, which is not due to an unusual or catastrophic flood but which merely occurs at the high water season each year.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Quite so. We do take steps when this damage is caused by some of our works, or to our works, or by navigation. In those cases we generally take action after the report is received, and we will continue to do that until agreements are made with the provinces concerning those works, if that should come about.

Mr. Herridge: Has the government of British Columbia or any member of it approached the minister or his department concerning assistance in connection with the construction of protection walls on the Columbia river?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My official tells me that the hon. member who just spoke did approach us in connection with those works, but he has no knowledge of any other representation.

Mr. Drew: I do not want to discuss this point further, beyond emphasizing something that has been brought out by the minister himself. He points out that he would not want to carry on a program of public works without the protection afforded by the act. It is protection for the public, for the minister and for his officials.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Don't try to make me blame someone else.

Mr. Drew: I am not suggesting that at all. I am pointing out that in this particular case we have reached the point where the work done by the Department of Public Works, which in the mind of the public and really in the minds of members of this house is the great construction department, amounts to $31,431,500, while the building done by other departments, which in the ordinary course of events are not supposed to be great construction departments, amounts to $107,124,205. In those cases they are not subject to the same requirements and we know of many cases—though how many we are unable to say—in which these works have been done without calling for tenders.

Knowing that we cannot change the presentation of these estimates at this time I can only leave the matter by repeating the request that the minister give earnest consideration to the desirability of placing before the government the suggestion that, except in unusual cases, the general construction program be brought together and placed under the same requirements which protect both the government and the public.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would not like to follow the leader of the opposition the whole way. Only yesterday we passed the Defence Supplies Act, which gives powers that are not contained in the Public Works Act; and they were put in that act for special reasons. In circumstances where the defence of my country would justify action without following this procedure, I would not want to be committed to that procedure; but I am talking of ordinary works, buildings and other facilities, that are to be constructed. I could not undertake even to do the work that is being done by the national harbours board. They have special authority to do that work. When I say I would not like to act as minister under an act that would not give the public and myself and my officials that protection, I am concerned with the buildings that come under our jurisdiction. I would like to have this protection in connection with anything we undertake.

Mr. Drew: Just to keep the arithmetic straight I would point out that the entire national defence estimate for construction for the current year is $36,265,257, which still leaves $70,858,948 of construction under other departments. This is substantially more than the total called for under the minister. I am going to leave the figures at that point, simply as part of my argument that this whole subject should be reviewed.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is true, as the hon. member says, that the figure is quite large. The explanation I have here, which was given by Mr. Bryce though I had not seen it before, is that this amount includes provision for all expenditures on new construction of buildings, roads—we do not build roads—irrigation works, canals, airports, wharves—which we do build—bridges or other types of fixed assets. It includes major improvements and renovations involving changes of a structural nature, and also the installed cost of fixed equipment which is an essential part of the structure, such as elevators, heating and ventilating equipment. I do not think we would have the organization to undertake many of these things. Certainly I would not have the staff to look after these irrigation projects, which account for quite a large expenditure each year. As to anything that we ordinarily do in the department, however, I should like to see everyone follow the procedure that we have adopted.

Mr. Higgins: A few moments ago the minister said he did not believe in playing favourites in connection with public works. With that I entirely agree, and I do not think he does play favourites. When we were discussing his estimates last year, however, I drew his attention to the rather peculiar circumstance that the ridings of Liberal members in Newfoundland apparently were getting a much greater expenditure on public works than were the other ridings, and at that time I believe the minister agreed that it was a rather peculiar coincidence. I do not know the position under the present estimates; I have asked for the information, but have not been given any details as yet. Would the minister tell me briefly, riding by riding, what expenditures are to be made in Newfoundland this year? Then I may be in a better position to discuss the matter.

Before resuming my seat I have one or two other matters to mention. One rather important matter is the question of a public federal building. I understand one or two such buildings are scheduled for St. John's, and one of the sites suggested is the grounds of government house. I want to protest against that, in case any such decision should be made. I think that would be a very improper place for such a building, and certainly it would not be welcomed at all by the citizens of St. John's.

Mr. Stick: I will take it over in my riding.

Mr. Higgins: I think you are getting enough now. The other important matter is the question of the wharf at Portugal Cove. At first glance that may appear to be a minor point, but it is the terminal for Bell island, where we have the ore mine which has been in operation for the past fifty years. The people of Bell island, numbering some ten thousand, depend upon that wharf for everything they need, including all their food and clothing. Everything must pass over it. Perhaps I may be pardoned for saying that it is possibly the busiest wharf on the island of Newfoundland, in the sense of daily use. The wharf is in very bad condition at the present time. There appears to be some difference between the provincial authorities and your own department about who is going to undertake the repairs. I believe you have been informed of that matter. I am told that the provincial minister has written to you concerning it, and your deputy minister is fully aware of the condition. It is a serious matter. If the wharf is allowed to continue to deteriorate it will not be usable, and those people in that thriving and important community which supplies a great deal of iron ore will be in a serious situation. I plead with the minister that, whoever is going to be responsible for the repairs, something be done immediately.

There is some difference over the fact that a ferry is using the wharf part of the time, and therefore it should be entirely a provincial matter. I know from my own knowledge, because the wharf is in my riding, that a number of fishermen and schooners use it as well, so it is hardly just a ferry wharf. Whoever is responsible for the repair should do the work as quickly as possible or there will be a lot of unfortunate people in that community.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I understand that Portugal Cove is a repair job, and that will be taken care of. The hon. member has written to the department about the other information, and I understand we received the letter yesterday. The department is preparing an answer, and we will send it as soon as possible.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Last year in the supplementary estimates there were votes 704 to 709, and I wonder if the minister is in a position to say how much of those votes was spent in Newfoundland?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have not the books here, but would those votes be the ones concerning harbours or buildings?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I shall read them out. Architectural branch—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): On harbour works the amount spent in Newfoundland was $374,104.36.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): There was a million dollars voted for that.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Correct.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Has the minister got the others?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We spent $211,655.31.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): There are six votes, and the first one concerns the maintenance and operation of dominion public buildings and grounds, other than at Ottawa.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is where we spent the $370,000 in round figures.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The next vote concerns the construction, repair and improvement of public buildings.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We spent the $211,000 there.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Then there is an item for the dominion immigration buildings, repairs, $40,000.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not think that amount was spent. There will be a revote this year.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Then there was a vote for the engineering branch, including the salaries of engineers, clerks, etc., $255,000.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Is that for the small works?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): It is for the salaries of clerks and engineers, and contained an item for new plant of $100,000; sundries, operation and maintenance of inspection boats.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): When this vote came up last year it was for the extension of the service throughout the country, including Newfoundland. I have given the amount we spent, except the salaries, because I have not that list here.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The dredging of harbours and rivers: you have not given me that.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is $122,618.24.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): How much was spent on harbours and rivers generally?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That was the $370,000, in round figures.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Mr. Chairman, I do not think the minister really understands the question.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Last year when we had the million dollar vote for harbours and rivers, that estimate was prepared just as Newfoundland came into the union. We had no idea what staff would be needed there, so we had to have a round figure without knowing exactly what we would spend. Out of that estimate we did spend $370,000.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I still do not think the minister understands the question I am asking. In the supplementary estimates up to March 31, 1950, there are six votes totalling $3,620,000. The minister has given me three figures, and that is all. Two of those votes are for a million dollars. On one of them I have received no information. If it is not convenient to get the information now, perhaps we can get it when we come to the particular item.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Or else I shall ask my officials to look at Hansard, and send you the details about these votes.

Mr. McLure: Is the minister responsible for the air conditioning of this building? If so, he is responsible for a rotten condition. I might just as well say so here as to say it outside. Anyone who sits in here very long, with the direct draught blowing on him, will get the same kind of a cold as some of the rest of us have. I think it would be as well to die of bad air as to die of this new virus cold.

At this point I should like to refer to the number of people employed by the department. I always thought that many of these temporaries were put on during an election year. The Department of Public Works seems to employ about 7,000 people.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is 6,600.

Mr. McLure: There are 1,568 permanents, 5,277 temporaries, and then this new group is included of about 400 casuals or "casualties", I do not know which. In any event there are over 7,000.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is correct.

Mr. McLure: I want to compliment the minister, because this is the first year we have been able to find out how many temporaries there were. We ought to find out now what salaries are received by these temporaries. Are they all on the same rate, which would appear to run around $2,100, or what is the rate? The amount paid totals over $7 million, which would give these temporaries an average wage of $1,650. We would like to know how many of them have been temporary for a long time. Why are they still temporary? If they are all new people put on each year, surely there is some way of giving them some form of security? If you are employing these people year after year, why not give them the same sense of security that permanent civil servants have? I have said enough about those things before, but I wanted to bring them to your attention again.

There is another matter to which I wish to refer, and we may have something to say on it somewhere else, but it must be in the administration. In the last five, six or possibly seven years we have been promised a public building, known as the Dominion building, for Charlottetown. In the 1945 election I know it was a wonderful promise to dangle before the city, especially the labour people, and it was well dangled at that time.

An hon. Member: It worked.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You were elected just the same.

An hon. Member: Certainly; they said they did not want it.

Mr. McLure: I barely got in. Five years afterwards it comes up again. There is no building built. However, I made a little bit better impression that time because I promised the electors faithfully I would get after it and get it.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You are going to get it too.

Mr. McLure: There is no use in one side having it all. My colleague knew that he was going to be elected anyhow; and when I was promising to get this, it certainly helped me along. But we are no further ahead now. Here we are today in the position that in a certain part of the town the site has been selected, consisting of 24 or 25 properties, but I do not think any of them have been purchased yet unless a couple have been purchased lately. Now they are all in that court—what do you call it?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The exchequer court.

Mr. McLure: They are in the exchequer court, and they are having a real checker play there. Properties in there belonging to some of the stalwarts of the party are valued as high as $100,000, which possibly cost in the beginning somewhere around $7,000 or $8,000 to build, and the land is extra. It will be amusing to see where these valuations are going to lead to. There is other property there, valued at $40,000, that I do not believe the minister would pay $8,000, $9,000 or $10,000 for it, any more than I would.

Mr. Gibson: You could get the whole island for that.

Mr. McLure: However, there are other properties that are being valued too low, but I suppose the court will decide on that. What I want to know is this. How long is it going to take before we get a valuation on them so that the properties can be purchased and the building started? I am afraid that it will not start this year. In fact, I did not go home at Easter and that was one of the reasons. Now I am afraid to go home at the end of June. I should like to be able to say to the people in my constituency that the minister stood up in the house and said: You are going to get that building and you are going to have it started inside of the next three or four weeks. There is one thing they could do. They could get all the properties, pull them down and give employment to the hundreds of men who are idle there at the present time. I should like to hear the minister make a really good statement on that matter so that I can take it back with me.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will not be in a position to make as good a statement as the hon. member himself made.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): You do not have to go home.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): At any rate, I have not made the same promises that he made. It is true that we have had this estimate up for some years; it is going to be a fine building, and it will be a credit to the two hon. members for Charlottetown. Our difficulty is that, after the site was chosen—and it comprised about 22 properties—we saw that the people out in the island valued their property highly. Perhaps they were sentimental values, but at all events they had put a high price on their properties. As I explained earlier, I would hesitate to go into dealings with people who have such a high idea of the values of their properties.

Mr. Gibson: Too much sentiment.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The only recourse we have is to go to the court we mentioned, namely the exchequer court, where experts will represent the government and will give the values we think attach to these properties; and the owners will have their own experts there to give evidence. I am sure that the judge will give the proper decision, and that amount will be paid. That is the real cause of this delay with regard to the building. But I would not despair if I were the hon. member. I would go home next week just the same and repeat the promise, because the building is coming; when, I do not know.

Mr. Gibson: I wonder if the minister could give me an estimate of how much money is involved, in round figures, in this building he is discussing now? What I should like to do is to see how much it costs to buy a vote in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I gather that the properties are being expropriated and that is the reason you are in the exchequer court.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Having expropriated, there is nothing to stop you from going ahead and doing your building, surely.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Quite so. But on the other hand, when I am forcefully taking property from people, I do not like to just throw them out. We have tried to deal with some of these people. When I was not satisfied with the other valuations, I have even sent people from Montreal in order to get a third valuation. I do not think we can come to an agreement. We shall have to get a judgment and pay the amount awarded by the court. There are businesses located in these buildings. I think one or two of the banks are located there. Just to go there without having a judgment and to say, "Get out" is something that I do not like to do. That is what makes me delay and try to get a judgment as soon as possible.

Mr. Kickham: I want first to commend the Minister of Public Works and his department for the vote of money which he has given us for the renovation of the warehouse on the railway wharf at Souris and also for the appropriation for the dredging of the Montague river which is most necessary. It is necessary work and it had to be done to permit vessels to go up the Montague river and to load produce for Newfoundland, St. Pierre and other points.

In my riding of Kings county we have been asking the minister and his department for a considerably large vote of money for the renovation and extension of our wharf at Souris. I want to point out to the minister and his department that this is necessary work. I would hope that the minister would accept the plan proposed by Mr. H. E. Miller, our district engineer at Charlottetown. This plan provides for the extension of the present railway wharf—that is, the government wharf—and would provide room for a railway spur line that will enable smaller vessels to load at the wharf. At the present time we are unable to accommodate the smaller vessels because of the fact that in the heavy shipping season, which is in the fall and early spring, the large warehouse accommodates the larger vessels to be loaded for Bermuda and southern United States points, and we are unable to accommodate the smaller boats loading for Newfoundland, St. Pierre, Miquelon and Magdalen islands. If the department approves of that project and the railway wharf at Souris which we all believe is necessary, it would be a fine thing for the county of Kings, and unless we have that wharf extended and the wharf that was approved by the plan of the district engineer, it will be difficult for us to accommodate the shipping that would otherwise use that port of Souris. The port of Georgetown is also very important to the county of Kings. My people tell me that it is necessary to have the Queens wharf repaired and also the government railway wharf to accommodate the boats.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We have two items in the estimates for these works.

Mr. Kickham: The Queens wharf and the Georgetown wharf?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): For Souris.

Mr. Kickham: Yes, but I was wondering whether or not the minister approved in full the plan of the district engineer, Mr. Miller.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is quite a big plan.

Mr. Kickham: Have you approved the plan or not?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We are considering it right now.

Mr. Kickham: I do hope that you will approve Mr. Miller's plan.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Hope springs eternal.

Mr. Kickham: Before taking my seat I wish to point out to the department—

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Kickham: I have not taken up much of the time of the house during this session. I hear some members say "carried". I think I am entitled to a few words. In Kings county we have a large fishing industry. Many of our harbours are too shallow to give free access to the motorboats that fish for lobster, hake and cod. I should like to take this opportunity to impress upon the department the necessity of dredging harbour services for the north and south of my county.

Mr. Knowles: Earlier this afternoon the Minister of Public Works, in answering a question of the hon. member for Moose Jaw, said, if I understood him correctly, that his department did not take into consideration the employment or unemployment situation when it came to public works.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No.

Mr. Knowles: You tell me what you did say.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I did not say that we did not take it into consideration. I said it was not the duty of public works to have estimates before the house to provide relief for unemployment. The estimates we have before parliament are for public works needed by the public services of the country.

Mr. Knowles: Yes. The hon. member for Moose Jaw did not, today at any rate, suggest that money should be appropriated by public works just to provide work, but he was suggesting that the timing of public works might be made with a view to the unemployment situation.

May I remind the Minister of Public Works that in a sessional paper tabled on Wednesday, May 10, 1950, by his colleague the Minister of Resources and Development, this question was dealt with. To identify it, it is sessional paper No. 67J. It dealt with this question of mine:

> What federal public works projects have been undertaken in order to relieve unemployment since September 1, 1949?

This was the answer of the minister's colleague, the Minister of Resources and Development:

> The federal government's program of public investment, including public works, consists of worthwhile projects which will contribute toward the development of the country, and which can be implemented at such times as they will contribute to the maintenance of a high level of employment. In line with this policy, projects undertaken by all government departments since September 1, 1949, had full regard to the employment situation.

In that same connection, may I remind the Minister of Public Works that his department has contributed to another sessional paper No. 88D, tabled on Friday, June 2, 1950, in which information is given as to the money voted for public works over a period of a number of years, and not expended in each case during the year in which it was voted. I find that according to page 13 of this sessional paper the amount of money voted for public works projects for the Department of Public Works which was not expended during the year seems to have been growing. In the year 1945-46 the amount voted but not expended during that year was $2,379,759.07; in the year 1946-47 it was $14 million odd; in the year 1947-48 it was $17 million odd; in the year 1948-49 it was $24 million odd; and for the fiscal year 1949-50 up until February 28, 1950, there was still $37,939,441.55 which had not been expended.

I realize that these amounts are not sufficient to take care of the unemployment situation when it gets serious, but it does seem to me that there is a possibility of dealing in part with unemployment problems if there was a little more co-ordination between what the Minister of Resources and Development says and what the Minister of Public Works does by way of making full use of the money that is voted for public works, and timing it to meet the needs of the unemployment situation.

I am not complaining about the large amounts of money being voted for public works projects; I am complaining of the fact that year by year the amount that is voted but not expended seems to be increasing.

Item agreed to.

Architectural branch—

289. Branch administration, $437,290.

Mr. Green: I have one question on this item. Can the minister give us the total figure paid for the Alvin building in Vancouver? I believe that under the final terms of the option the price was to be $1,063,105; but in addition to that there were certain amounts paid as rental before this option was exercised, which by the way is a very unusual way to do business in Vancouver. Ordinarily the amount paid as rental would be applied on the purchase price when the option was exercised. I should like to get these two figures: First of all, the purchase price, and second the amount that was paid by way of rental, and which of course was lost to the government.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The cheque that was issued for that building amounted to $1,066,-614.90. That is the amount paid to the Alvin estate.

Mr. Green: In addition to that there were sums paid by way of rental before the option was exercised. I would like to get the aggregate of such payments.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I see that the rent was $183,995.

Mr. Green: Per year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes. The order in council authorizing this was dated February 8, 1949, and the order in council with respect to the purchase of the building was dated March 15, 1950. That was just before the expiry date of the option. So that we must have paid rental for about a year or a little over a year on the property.

Mr. Green: Perhaps the minister's officials could get that information and let me have it later.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes; I shall send it to the hon. member.

Mr. Green: Because parts of the building were occupied before the whole building was completed, and the rent was payable on a pro rata basis.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes, I understand.

Mr. Green: So one could not reach the proper figure by simply taking the amount of the rental set out in the order in council.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I shall have the figure prepared for the hon. member.

Item agreed to.

Architectural branch—

291. Maintenance and operation of dominion public buildings and grounds, other than at Ottawa, including rents, repairs, furniture, heating, etc., and to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $500,000, $12,686,315.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): What progress is being made in connection with the renovation and repair of the public building at Springhill in my constituency? This is a growing town, and one of the best maintained mining communities in all Canada. What progress is being made?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is not new construction?

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Renovation and repairing of a public building which has been there a good many years.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It would come out of our general vote.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): It would come under item 291, would it not?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): But I have not the details of it here.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): This vote involves an expenditure of more than $12 million.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My officials tell me they have not before them the details of the contract for decorating. However, we can send for a report on it and let the hon. member have it.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements of public buildings—

292. Newfoundland, $455,000.

Mr. Higgins: Is this for new buildings?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Gander is the only point where there is an addition to an existing building. I am told the others are new.

Mr. Higgins: What is the public building at Bishop's Falls to be?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is to provide for the construction of a public building for postal purposes. The post office at the present time is located in a privately-owned building which is old, small and poorly located. The Post Office Department requests the construction of a new building in category A. The Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company pulp mill has offered to donate a suitable site. Plans and specifications have not yet been completed.

Mr. Higgins: Is it to be of wooden construction?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No, it will be a fireproof building.

Mr. Higgins: It will not be a very large one for that amount.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): So that the hon. member will understand, this amount which goes in the estimates for the first year is only for site, preparation of plans, asking for tenders and beginning works. I am sure we will never get through this building by March 31.

Mr. Higgins: This is not intended to be the full amount?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No.

Mr. Higgins: What is the value of it?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I cannot say before the plans and specifications are prepared.

Mr. Higgins: Plans and specifications are not ready?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No.

Mr. Higgins: What about the building at Corner Brook?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is to provide for the construction of a public building for post office, customs, transport, trade and commerce, labour, agriculture, R.C.M.P. and unemployment insurance.

Mr. Higgins: And can the minister tell me where the postal terminal in St. John's is to be erected?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Along the railway siding, I am told.

Mr. Higgins: And the other building there?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We have not yet chosen the site. One of our difficulties is to have agreement as to the site.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements of public buildings—

293. Nova Scotia, $1,350,000.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): A building for post office accommodation, at Pugwash, was suggested to the minister before, and he gave some encouragement. According to revenue received, it is one of the buildings in Nova Scotia most greatly needed. I notice that under this heading the appropriation for Nova Scotia is only $1,350,000. That is less per capita than in any other of the provinces of eastern Canada, with the exception of Newfoundland. I am not objecting to the larger appropriation for Prince Edward Island; but New Brunswick with only four-fifths of the population of Nova Scotia has an appropriation about a million dollars greater. What progress is the minister's department making in connection with the public building at Pugwash?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We are studying the situation there to see if we can do something about it.

Mr. Gillis: A few moments ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and others, referred to the relationship of the minister's department toward relieving unemployment conditions in Canada. I am particularly interested in the subject because it affects my constituency. The minister stated his department did not anticipate that there would be any projects designed for that particular purpose.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out that the Minister of Resources and Development took a different view. I was here when he made his statement, and I took some encouragement from it, because the department he represents is one which fluctuates. This department is a permanent department that works on public works projects year in and year out.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Under a statute.

Mr. Gillis: Under a statute, but definitely they can create and promote necessary public works projects in sections that need them. So far as it is practical, I think they should design their activities to take care of sections where there is a bad permanent unemployment problem. The point I am getting at is that, in the return which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre just quoted to the minister concerning the appropriations made year by year to his department for certain works projects, it shows that a lot of money has been voted to the minister's department for public works projects in Nova Scotia and has not been spent. The return sets it out year by year. It goes back to 1945-46, and runs all the way from $243,000 for Nova Scotia in 1945-46 to over $3 million in 1948-49.

In the final break-down of the return it shows that at February 28, 1950, the total amount was $4,200,469.99. That is quite a lot of money in a province that size. The money was appropriated and involved considerable work in the minister's department. Surveys had to be made for the purposes for which the money was voted. Taking a quick look at the estimates for 1949 it appears that some $7 million or $8 million was voted to the minister's department for works projects in the province of Nova Scotia, but at February 5, 1950, half of that money was still unspent.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): When was it voted, what date?

Mr. Gillis: It was voted all the way from 1945 to 1949 and not spent. It accumulated to the figure I have given. The return shows that you owe the province of Nova Scotia over $4 million.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Oh no. Do not confuse that. On the 10th of December, 1949, we voted the whole amount of the estimates. From the 10th of December, 1949, to the 31st March, 1950, we did not spend the amount voted. There was $3 million that we could not spend during the wintertime on these works. You know that we cannot work on wharves and breakwaters in Nova Scotia during the wintertime.

Mr. Gillis: I still contend that you owe us $4 million.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If we owe you something we will pay it.

Mr. Gillis: Your department made surveys as to projects which are badly needed in that province. After all the work of putting the appropriations through and arguing about them, then you do not spend the money because winter comes along and you let the work lapse. What is your intention with regard to—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): They are good.

Mr. Knowles: It was ever thus.

Mr. Gillis: What is the intention with regard to carrying on the works projects involved in the amount of $4 million that has not been spent? Is it your intention to go ahead with these projects and spend the money?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If you do not stop me we will go ahead.

Mr. Gillis: The estimates this year are pretty skimpy so far as public works projects in the province of Nova Scotia are concerned. I took a look at the Sydney end. There is $100,000 for a new public building in Sydney, and provision for a breakwater at Glace Bay. There does not seem to be anything else in the whole area, and you have a bad unemployment problem there. I still want to find out if you can explain what you are going to do with the $4 million that you owe us.

Mr. McLure: They are going to build the Canso bridge.

Mr. Gillis: There is a special appropriation for that.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My hon. friend understands that on the 31st of March every year unexpended money reverts to the consolidated revenue fund. We have to vote new estimates every year because they lapse on the 31st of March. When such amounts lapse they are taken care of by revotes, and you can see them all through the estimates. We do not drop a project. We keep on working, and when the plans are ready and the season is proper we proceed with those works. The money will be spent.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The minister spoke of his good intentions. I have heard that the road to Hull is paved with good intentions.

Mr. Knowles: As to the vote for public buildings in Nova Scotia, I note from the details on page 222 that there is $86,000 included for a public building at Barrington Passage of which $25,000 is a revote. If my memory serves me correctly, we voted the $25,000 on the 10th of December last year. I should like to ask the minister two questions. Was anything done after December 10, 1949, with respect to proceeding with the public building at Barrington Passage? I should also like to know what else is covered by the $86,000 in addition to whatever was covered by the $25,000 voted last December.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Remember that last year's main estimates were prepared in November, 1948. Then we had a session in the spring of 1949.

Mr. Knowles: And an election.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We got three-quarters of the estimates through. Then we had an election and lost a good many friends. When we came back in the fall we had another session, and all we did was to vote the amounts that had been prepared in the fall of 1948.

Mr. Knowles: The $25,000 was a supplementary estimate.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Then my argument is still stronger. From that time up to the 31st of March we thought we would acquire a site and retain architects to prepare plans. We started off in headquarters and estimates were prepared as to what it was thought could be spent on that building during the fiscal year 1950-51. I am told now that the estimated cost of the building, to be spent in 1950-51, is $86,000. That is why we ask for this vote.

Mr. Knowles: What does it include?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is the estimate of the total cost of the building.

Mr. Knowles: What was the $25,000 for? Was that just to acquire a site? Surely not.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That was the amount we thought we would spend during the last fiscal year, and it was not spent.

Mr. Knowles: Is it not possible to break down the $86,000 into what the original $25,000 was for and what the additional $61,000 is for?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I cannot do that now because I do not know the price we will pay for the site. I do not know the exact amount we will have to pay to the architects. We have not asked for tenders yet, and I do not know the amount of the contract. In preparing the estimates I take the advice of the architects in my department. They say they need a building containing so much space. It will be fireproof, it will be on a site of these dimensions, and it will be this and that. They say that should reasonably cost around $86,000. When my estimates come up next year I will give you all the details because the project will be advanced.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements of public buildings—

294. Prince Edward Island, $900,000.

Mr. McLure: Is item 294 for the new building that is going to be built some time—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): At Charlottetown.

Mr. McLure: —or for some other public work?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The amount of $500,000?

Mr. McLure: Yes.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is $500,000 for your constituency. Then there is $375,000 for Summerside and $25,000 for Kensington. That covers your province, and you are getting the lion's share.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements of public buildings—

295. New Brunswick, $2,200,000.

Mr. Knowles: I should like to call the minister's attention to some answers he gave a short time ago in response to questions. I placed upon the order paper having to do with the erection of a public building at Woodstock, New Brunswick.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Did you ask those questions for the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton?

Mr. Knowles: Well, he is not here at the moment, so I cannot get the information from him. At any rate, as appears at page 3466 and 3467 of Hansard for June 12, 1950, I asked the minister:

1. Did Mr. T. S. Hunter, district architect of the Department of Public Works, recently (between May 1 and May 18, 1950) visit Woodstock, New Brunswick, for the purpose of investigating possible sites for a new post office building in the town of Woodstock?

2. Did Mr. Hunter confer with Mr. D. R. Bishop?

3. If so, did such conference relate to the possible site for a new post office building in Woodstock?

The answers to those first three questions were yes. So far so good. Question No. 4 was:

4. Who is Mr. D. R. Bishop and what official position, if any, does he hold in relation to federal government matters?

There are several more questions—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): What was the answer?

Mr. Knowles: The answer to questions 4, 5, 6 and 7 was "Not known".

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is true. I do not know this Bishop; I do not know who he is.

Mr. Knowles: Let me carry on and I may tell you.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Oh, you know? Then you do not need information from me; you are giving me information.

Mr. Knowles: Well, if I give the minister some information he may be able to go on from there and answer some further questions. In reply to the question as to who this Mr. Bishop is, the minister says that is not known. He knows Mr. T. S. Hunter conferred with him, but he does not know who Mr. Bishop is.

My next question was:

5. Has Mr. D. R. Bishop been a candidate in any federal election campaign for the electoral district of Victoria-Carleton? If so, for what party?

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

Again the answer is "Not known." I should have thought the Minister of Public Works would be a better party man than that.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not know all our supporters.

Mr. Knowles: He will find from the records that Mr. D. R. Bishop was the Liberal candidate in Victoria-Carleton last June and polled a certain number of votes, but lost the election. Now we have the answer to that question; Mr. D. R. Bishop is the defeated Liberal candidate in Victoria-Carleton. That is the man with whom Mr. T. S. Hunter conferred with regard to a site for this post office, a man whom the Minister of Public Works does not know.

Next question:

6. Does he have anything to do with federal government patronage in or for the electoral district of Victoria-Carleton?

Again the answer is "Not known." The minister did not say "No"; he just said "Not known."

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have never seen the man; he has never spoken to me, and I do not recall ever having received a letter from him. What would you want me to answer?

Mr. Knowles: The next question was:

7. If so, is the patronage he handles restricted to matters relating to the Post Office Department and the selecting of sites for post office and customs buildings, etc., or does he handle patronage for other federal government departments, and if so what departments?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am a bad witness; I don't know.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, that is the answer; the minister does not know. Well, the inference from the answer to that question is that it could be that Mr. D. R. Bishop is handling the patronage for the federal government down in Victoria-Carleton.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Where is the patronage you are talking about? You are suggesting there is some.

Mr. Knowles: Certainly it is not denied by the minister in replying to that question.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Ask him the question.

Mr. Knowles: If the hon. member for Ottawa East wants the information, I have it here. If the minister and the hon. member would like to know I can tell them that this Mr. D. R. Bishop not long ago published a paid advertisement in the Hartland Observer, a paper published down in the constituency of Victoria-Carleton, pointing out that he had documents to prove that he, not the sitting member, was the person responsible for contracts, the choosing of sites and various other things that are being done by the federal government in Victoria-Carleton.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Could I stop him from doing that?

Mr. Knowles: My point is that I am amazed to discover that a defeated Liberal candidate seems to have the say which this Mr. D. R. Bishop claims to have with respect to various matters in that constituency. I hear members on this side of the house say they know who handles the patronage in their own constituencies, particularly some of the members coming from eastern Canada. I do not know who handles it in Winnipeg North Centre, nor do I want to know, though it may be some hon. members on the Liberal side will know. I am complaining as strongly as I can against this whole business of patronage. We had it here the other day, when the hon. member for Temiscouata wanted all the Tories, C.C.F.'ers and Social Crediters fired from the Canadian Commercial Corporation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: There it is, Mr. Chairman; those Liberals seem to want to run everything on a party basis.

Mr. Ferrie: What happened in Saskatchewan when the C.C.F. government got in?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Please; we are on the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Ferrie: What did Douglas say?

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It seems to me we are discussing item No. 295, which refers to expenditures for the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Knowles: That's right. Item 295 provides $2,200,000 for public buildings in the province of New Brunswick. If we turn to page 223 we find included in that amount $100,000 for a public building at Woodstock, New Brunswick, and I am talking about that public building.

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member was not talking about that public building when I called him to order.

Mr. Knowles: Well, I was not too far away from it.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I do not think the hon. member should continue to use expressions such as "I was amazed that defeated Liberal candidates should have the patronage in these ridings". We all know they have; it is not amazing to anyone. Let the hon. member be accurate.

Mr. Knowles: It is not often that I am in this position, but I am very happy to accept the correction made by the hon. member for Calgary West.

I may say that I put that series of questions on the order paper in the first instance because I had seen this paid advertisement by Mr. D. R. Bishop in which he claimed that he had documents to prove—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Who gave you that clipping?

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I thought so.

Mr. Knowles: After all, I have asked a number of questions in this house concerning patronage. Hon. members know that. Those questions may have been a bit embarrassing at times. It is not surprising to me that some hon. members in various parts of the house, whenever they have these items that confirm that there is patronage, have drawn them to my attention. The member for Victoria-Carleton also gave me a copy of the Sentinel Press from Woodstock, New Brunswick, dated Thursday, May 18, 1950. It was in this copy of the Sentinel Press that there appeared the story of the visit to Woodstock by Mr. T. S. Hunter. The article contained this sentence:

> While in Woodstock Mr. Hunter conferred with Mr. D. R. Bishop . . .

Mr. Fournier (Hull): And others.

Mr. Knowles: Oh, no. The article does not say "and others". I presume he did, but so far as the Sentinel Press is concerned Mr. Hunter conferred only with Mr. D. R. Bishop. I suggest that this business of patronage is difficult to uproot by a single speech, or even by a dozen questions during the course of the session. But I did hope to draw it to public notice in this way, and that by having it drawn to public attention so well as it was done yesterday by the member for Temiscouata we may see the last of it. I like the Minister of Public Works, and I hate to find signs of it in his department. He is the last minister in the government I would expect to condone it in any way at all.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am still a live politician, just the same.

Mr. Knowles: I still like the minister. I hope the minister will be careful when he gets his advice, not only in the constituency of Victoria-Carleton but in all other constituencies, to get it from other than defeated Liberal candidates or even sitting Liberal members. He should get advice from experts in the field.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Chairman, I cannot let this pass without a few sentences in reply. When this item was put in my estimates, it was upon the representations of people in whom I have confidence. We looked into the request, and got reports that the need was there. I believe the actual building in Woodstock was erected in 1883. I did not look at the riding in which it was located.

As I explained earlier this afternoon, the first thing we do is to look for a site. We send the resident architect, who happens to be Mr. Hunter, to look over the situation. I am told he saw six or seven people. The report is that amongst the people he saw was one Mr. Bishop. I did not even know that he was the defeated candidate, but that is not against him. Perhaps he knows the place well. You say that he handles the patronage, and he brags about it. That is not within my knowledge. I speak to every member of parliament, defeated candidates, and everyone, and you cannot imagine what advice they give me. I do not always rely on that. I get the officials to go to the place and make a report on the site. If that official goes into Mr. So-and-So's home, I hope you do not blame me for that.

Mr. Knowles: I did not think the minister knew anything about it, and that is the reason I brought it up.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not know that gentleman living at Woodstock. The only member of the party I know in that riding is my friend the sitting member. I am not going to stop putting up a building in Woodstock because Mr. Bishop received a visit from an official of my department. I do not think it would be reasonable to refrain from erecting the building because Mr. Bishop brags about patronage.

Mr. Knowles: Just one sentence and I am through on this item. I was not objecting to the erection of the building.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If you speak that way, you discredit the building.

Mr. Knowles: I was objecting to the government taking advice from the defeated Liberal candidate as to the choice of the site for the building.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements of public buildings—

297. Ontario, $10,000,000.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I trust the applause is an indication of approval. With reference to this item, and the details which appear on page 225 which indicate an office building for Hamilton, and the appropriation listed in the amount of $300,000, does it refer to the proposed building at the corner of Caroline and Main streets in Hamilton?

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This amount is required towards the erection of an office building in Hamilton, Ontario, to provide accommodation for the following departments: veterans affairs, unemployment insurance commission, trade and commerce, national defence, labour, transport, agriculture, national revenue, health and welfare, customs and immigration. Strong representations have been made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the Minister of Labour regarding the necessity for immediate action.

Plans and specifications have not yet been prepared. However, preparation of them is being undertaken by Mr. Hugh D. Robertson, architect, of Hamilton, Ontario. The tentative estimated cost is $1,250,000. The expenditure for 1949-50 was $116,051.63. A new vote will be requested for 1950-51 of $165,000. The total vote requested for 1950-51 is $300,000. The hon. member will understand that this is the amount we expect to spend during that year.

The site to be acquired for the proposed building is the Caroline street school property being the block-end bounded by George, Caroline and Main streets. The property has a frontage of 194 feet 5 inches on Caroline street, and depths of 241 feet 3 inches and 235 feet 11 inches on George and Main streets respectively. The property is owned by the Hamilton board of education. Notice of expropriation was filed on this property March 4, 1948. The Hamilton board of education originally forwarded an asking price in the amount of $234,415. However, as a result of negotiations, this offer has been reduced to $215,000, and the department proposes to acquire the property at that reduced figure.

An order in council dated February 24, 1949, authorized an advance payment of $99,000 to the Hamilton board of education from 1948-49 funds. An order in council dated May 17, 1949, authorized the payment of the sum of $215,000 to the Hamilton board of education in full and final settlement of the above-mentioned property at Hamilton, Ontario, such amount to include the advance payment of $99,000.

Mrs. Fairclough: I noticed the $99,000 payment in last year's estimates. This $300,000 then will not do more than pay the purchase price of the property.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): And pay for the plans and specifications.

Mrs. Fairclough: Can the minister tell me at what stage the negotiations are at the present time, and how soon work might commence on this project? I know that is a difficult question to answer, because one never knows how long it is going to take to draw plans. As a matter of fact, this property has been standing idle for some time. I believe negotiations were started about two years ago. Just prior to the election of 1949 the old building was demolished and the land was levelled. In the meantime a few sign-boards have been erected on the property, and the rumour is abroad that the property is to be resold. I take it the minister's remarks would effectively deny that rumour. I am glad, because the building is vitally needed in Hamilton where the government departments, some of which the minister has mentioned, are housed in various buildings in different sections of the city. When given up by the government departments, the space in these buildings could easily be rented.

At one stage in the proceedings a member made the remark to the Hamilton city council that it was hoped the erection of this building would be commenced this year, so that when the autumn of the year came along and construction trades were in need of work this particular project might ease the local situation. From the minister's remarks I would think that is a rather remote hope. Does the minister expect the work to commence this year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have given the list of departments requesting space in that building. We are getting the architect to allot space for veterans affairs and these departments, and he will then draw the plans and specifications according to those requests. I am told that the plans themselves, when these requests are looked after, will take at least six months to prepare. For a building of $1,500,000, my experience has generally been that the plans and specifications take a year to prepare. Then time has to be allowed for the calling of tenders, because the moment we receive those plans we advertise for tenders. The amount we have today in this estimate is the amount we think we will spend during the current fiscal year.

Mrs. Fairclough: In that event, there could be no hope at all of proceeding this year at least.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would not want to say that. I have been greatly disappointed myself many times by delays in the preparations of plans and specifications. Remember my good friend the hon. member for Queens. He has been waiting a long time but he is not despairing yet.

Mrs. Fairclough: I may say I am pleased that the architect is in Hamilton. Maybe I can do something from that end.

Mr. Pouliot: I should like to quote the example of the hon. member for Hamilton West to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The hon. member for Hamilton West has been practical in supporting a justified expenditure for her constituency. If the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton had been here, I wonder if he would have spoken as did the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He probably did so because he did not represent the constituency. As an old politician, I will tell him never to oppose the construction of any public building in any province in Canada.

Mr. Knowles: Is that how you got your railroad?

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I should like to inquire from the minister if the continuity of plans is going to be followed with respect to the public buildings in Ottawa and in central Canada, having regard to their design and the building materials to be used. I notice a large number of appropriations, including one in Hamilton for a substantial public building. The most important public buildings in Ottawa, including the parliament buildings, are trimmed with stone from Wallace, Nova Scotia. This building, including the peace tower, has Wallace sandstone which is recognized as the equal of the best in the world, if not the best. The fact that it is being used in buildings such as this, in the national museum building, in the Confederation building, in the customs building, in the national research and a number of other buildings in the city shows that it has been recognized as being of the highest quality. Few materials the product of the maritime provinces come to central Canada. I should like to ask the minister what public buildings are under construction at this time, or are being designed, that call for the use of Wallace sandstone.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I understand that in the specifications we cannot say that it has to be Wallace sandstone. We probably have the word "sandstone" if it is to be that kind of stone.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I think it is usually specified as Wallace sandstone.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told that we do not do that. That would cut out competition if we just put in this particular stone.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I think that the contractor is required to know what kind of stone is going to be used.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes. He bids on sandstone, and he generally specifies the quarry from which that stone will come.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I understand that the architects specify the quarry from which the sandstone is to be procured. There is some extremely inferior sandstone, and some inferior sandstone has been used in this building. It came from the United States, and is Ohio sandstone. It was used at the rear of the building and is now sanding off quite badly, but it was recovered from the old parliament buildings which were destroyed by fire. I presume the Department of Public Works of that day thought that they were saving some money by using stone that had already been utilized in the original parliament buildings.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We do specify sandstone of such and such a quality. But we cannot say that it has to come from one quarry or the other quarry. I think that would not be according to the act and that it would not be fair. We have got to give to the owner of every quarry a chance to try to sell his wares. If the quality is there and the price is the lowest, he generally gets the contract.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): May I ask the minister if the stone that is specified will be specified as Canadian sandstone, or as sandstone from Nova Scotia or from the maritime provinces rather than imported sandstone?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is mentioned in the contract, I think. It is Canadian stone. That is what I am told.

Mr. Cardiff: I notice that in this item there is an appropriation of $10 million for Ontario. In going down through the various items I find that for the city of Ottawa the items listed here come to $5 million, which is half the appropriation. That may be perfectly in order, but Ontario is quite a sizeable place; and if that amount of money is going to be spent in Ottawa, then of course there is not going to be much left for any other one particular place. I should like to ask about the item of $200,000 for the east block; it was $400,000 last year and it is $200,000 this year. Does the minister know whether that is going to be all that is required to complete that work?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No. I am sure that it will not be all but at the moment I cannot give you any further information. I mentioned this morning that this is done on a fixed fee contract because we could not get specifications prepared or get anybody to give a firm price on the alterations to be made. We had to go step by step before we found out exactly what should have been done. When we started off on it we were told, after some inspection, that the roof would last a few more years. While we were doing the other work, we found out that we had to replace that roof immediately. That is what we found in a building that we put up some eighty years ago. I cannot see any other way of proceeding if we want to keep that building. You could argue perhaps that it should have disappeared; but if we had had it torn down, you would have found much objection on the score of interfering with the symmetry of the grounds. These are things that even my department do not like. They are just tricky jobs where you hardly know what they are going to cost. Even contractors do not like them. They will not bid.

Mr. Cardiff: I am not complaining about it because I realize that it is long past the time when it should have been taken care of.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): During the war they would not give me any estimate for repairs to buildings.

Mr. Cardiff: That is quite true. However, I have another question I should like to ask the minister and that is in regard to the sound reinforcement system for the House of Commons.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I spoke of that this morning.

Mr. Cardiff: If it was dealt with then, I shall not pursue the matter.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): There is one question the minister did not answer. What departmental buildings are now being projected or are under construction in Ottawa following out the general architectural design of the major buildings now here?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We are putting up the veterans affairs building. The contract for the east part of the veterans building was awarded some five or six weeks ago. Then there is the statistics building on Tunney's pasture. The contract was awarded some time ago. We propose to put up a fireproof building for the 1951 census, which afterwards will become a storage building. It will be on Tunney's pasture. It is a building which we urgently need to take the records from office space buildings which are occupied now, and they have no more space for them. We are also putting up vaults for the film board, because they have become so dangerous that we dare not keep them unless they are put in a fireproof building.

Mr. Adamson: They are so subversive, are they?

Mr. Black (Cumberland): In these major departmental buildings is the general architectural design being followed? What are the contract prices for these buildings that have already been let to which the minister has referred?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Speaking from memory, the veterans building was $5,170,000, or around there. That was the lowest bid. The highest bid was $5,850,000. The contract was given to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Who was the lowest tenderer?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): A. W. Robertson Limited. I think there were eight or nine tenderers who tendered on that building. The Foundation Company of Canada have a contract for the statistics building.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): What is the contract price, there?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The contract price is $185,000 for the excavation and foundations.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements of public buildings—

298. Manitoba, $1,400,000.

Mr. Knowles: What is the situation now with respect to the new post office building in Winnipeg? I realize that when the minister makes these forecasts he is no doubt out on a limb a bit. I could remind him, however, that on December 10 last year he indicated that the department would be able to call for tenders for this building in June or July of this year.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I was wrong. I admit that, because the other day I had on my desk some papers concerning the site.

Mr. Knowles: Can he give us a new forecast?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am no prophet in these matters. I am told that the architects preparing these plans have been working on them for nine months now; but this is one of the buildings where the estimate was more than the building in Hamilton, and I would not be surprised if it should take some more months before they are ready with the plans and specifications. But I really hope that some day this year I will be able to ask for tenders on that building. Is that definite enough for my hon. friend?

Mr. Knowles: It is clear then that if there is any hold-up it is due to the delay in getting the plans completed?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We are just waiting for the plans. We are ready the moment we get the plans.

Mr. Knowles: The property has been expropriated?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Oh, yes, it has been expropriated; if we had the plans tomorrow we would have them approved by the officials and ask for tenders.

Mr. Knowles: Therefore I may not have to ask these questions in the next session of parliament?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I hope there will be no more questions on this building.

Mr. Knowles: That is up to you.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Who are the architects for these buildings? Are they departmental architects, or are they selected in the different localities where the construction work is being undertaken? For instance, who are the architects for the buildings proposed in the city of Ottawa?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The architect for the big building, the veterans building, is Allward and Gouinlock from Toronto; for the statistics building it is Ross and Patterson of Montreal; for the Winnipeg building it is Green, Blankstein, Russell Associates of Winnipeg.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements of public buildings—

300. Alberta, $2,600,000.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The details of this item appear on page 228. Since everybody is complimenting everybody else I want to compliment the Liberal members from Edmonton on getting from the pot $1,100,000, while the city from which I come gets $20,000. I do not say this by way of complaint at all. I am sure the building will grace the city of Edmonton and will reap its reward in the high esteem in which these members are already held there, together with a certain Liberal, a late member of this house, who is now a Senator in the other place. I wish them all well.

There is, however, one item I wish to ask about, namely, the public building at Brooks in the province of Alberta, for which $100,000 is being appropriated. My first question is, is that a post office?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This amount is required for the purchase of a site and erection thereon of a public building to provide accommodation for the Post Office Department. The deputy postmaster general states that the present rented quarters do not provide adequate accommodation. Plans and specifications have not yet been prepared. However, a suitable building and site are tentatively estimated to cost $100,000. The deputy postmaster general writes to us and insists that we give priority A to this project. That is all I have on my file.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I want to agree with the Postmaster General. There never was a place which needed better facilities more than does the town of Brooks, which is perhaps the fastest growing town in western Canada, and is becoming one of the wealthiest towns in western Canada. I had hoped that the matter had advanced a little further—I think perhaps it has, as a matter of fact. I am merely commending those who made this possible. I hope it is the hon. member for Medicine Hat, although I have some doubt about it. He is not the defeated candidate, of course. But we are very happy to know that this much-needed work is being proceeded with. Since it is a small building, I gather there is no doubt that work will commence during the present year.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will do my best.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): It is only $100,000; it is a small project. I think the minister has his eye on a corner there. I think it is a very good corner, too.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We shall do our best to proceed.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): If you do your best it will be finished by winter.

Mr. Decore: Are any of these public buildings listed under Alberta to be used for police barracks or not?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No; I am told not; they are office buildings.

Mr. Decore: Would police barracks come under the Department of Public Works or not?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No; there is no amount here for barracks. What we do is this: When they do have an amount, they transfer the funds over to us, and we proceed with the work.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): They do not own any of their detachment offices out through the country. I happen to know they are all rented from some local people. I know of no contemplated major expense by way of large barracks.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): They own their own barracks, but they have not the staff to proceed with plans and contracts.

Mr. Macdonald (Edmonton East): I should like to thank the hon. member for Calgary West for drawing to the attention of the minister the need for a public building in Edmonton. Edmonton is a rapidly expanding city. For many years they have had a beautiful public building in Calgary, and a federal office building is sorely needed in the city I have the honour to represent. I hope that in view of the expanding economy of Edmonton the department will continue to review the situation with regard to giving adequate office space.

[Mr. Smith (Calgary West).]

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): They write seven or eight letters out there now.

Mr. Harkness: As the hon. member for Calgary West pointed out, the only vote here for Calgary is for an addition and alteration to the weights and measures building amounting to $20,000. What happened to the vote for about $200,000 which used to be revoted at every session for a building to be erected not far from the courthouse in Calgary? Why has it been dropped?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): When did we have that item?

Mr. Harkness: It was always there, up to the time of the election; but since the election it seems to have been dropped.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We will call another election soon.

Mr. Harkness: I remember having a discussion with the minister about two years ago with respect to this building?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Perhaps we discussed too much.

Mr. Harkness: I remember the minister assuring me that work would begin in a few months. Nothing has been done, and now even the vote has disappeared.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Is the hon. member sure we did not put that building up?

Mr. Harkness: I am sure you did not. I am certain the building was to be put up, and that that has not been done. Would the minister find out what has happened to it?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I shall look into it and let the hon. member know later.

Mr. Beyerstein: I should like to ask a question regarding the proposed post office at Stettler, Alberta. I wrote to the minister some time ago and his answer at that time was satisfactory. Have there been any further developments?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Has the Post Office Department requested the building?

Mr. Beyerstein: Yes.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Then, it is on its way, and I shall be looking into it.

Mr. Harkness: The minister will probably recall that for the last three years I have been asking about a customs and immigration building at Coutts. There has been a vote in for it every year since I have been here. Has any actual work been done? The building which has been there is a disgrace to the country, in that it creates a bad impression among the large numbers of American tourists who visit Banff national park and the Calgary stampede. The vote has been there for a long time, but so far as I know the work has not been done.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have good news this time. Order in council P.C. 480 of February 3, 1950, granted authority to accept the lower of two tenders submitted, that of the Bird Construction Company Limited of Lethbridge, Alberta, for $440,752 for the construction of a customs and immigration building at Coutts, Alberta. The second tenderer was the General Construction Company of Alberta Limited, at $567,962. They must be working at it now.

Mr. Harkness: I hope they are.

Mr. Beyerstein: I did write regarding the post office at Stettler, and he said he would probably submit a supplementary estimate at this session.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I cannot announce that in advance. I could not give a list of the supplementary estimates, before they have been approved by treasury board.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements of public buildings—

301. British Columbia, $3,150,000.

Mr. Herridge: Has the site for the proposed new public building at Trail been chosen, and who are the architects in connection with the alteration and extension of the public building at Nelson?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We are not as advanced as that in Trail. I see we have not yet bought the site. I would hesitate to appoint architects without having the site.

Mr. Herridge: I am speaking more particularly about Nelson. There are improvements there to cost $75,000.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is the first time that has appeared in the estimates. I have to get the money before I give instructions. This is the first time this vote has been up.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Mr. R. E. Anderson (for Mr. Winkler) moved that the following bills be read the second time:

Bill No. 304, for the relief of David Allan Ferguson.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 305, for the relief of Ann Louise Fuller Brais.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 306, for the relief of Helen Leola Davidson Hunter.—Mr. Winkler.

Motion agreed to and bills read the second time.

Mr. Speaker: These bills are referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

PIPE LINES ACT

PROVISION FOR LOCATION OF MAIN LINE ENTIRELY WITHIN CANADA

Mr. J. S. Sinnott (Springfield) moved the second reading of Bill No. 132, to amend the Pipe Lines Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my introducing Bill No. 132, an act to amend the Pipe Lines Act passed in 1949, was to insert in section 12 of chapter 20 of the statutes of 1949 in the fourth line of the section the following words:

Whereof the main line shall be located entirely within Canada.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that in 1949 a charter was granted to the Westcoast Transmission Company, and at that time information was given to the house that the intention of the company was to build a line from the Alberta oil fields to the western coast of British Columbia, and from there down the west coast to Bellingham, Everett, Seattle and Portland. Shortly after the charter was granted to the Westcoast Transmission Company Limited they made application for another route, namely, down through the Crowsnest pass into the United States, and proposed to build a feeder line back to Vancouver and into the smelter plant at Trail.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, a speech made by myself in the house on April 3, 1950. As recorded at page 1481 of Hansard I said at that time:

All that parliament is being asked to do is to give these companies now applying for a charter the same opportunity and the same privilege as was given to the Westcoast Transmission Company.

That was the purpose of my introducing this bill.

We on this side of the house do not believe in monopolies and, therefore, would like to see some competition. In view of the facts that I have stated, will anyone suggest that the Sunray Oil Corporation of Tulsa and Los Angeles or the Pacific Western Oil Corporation of Los Angeles or the Tidewater Associated Oil Company of San Francisco are interested in developing Canada first? The answer is, "Certainly not." If the Westcoast Transmission Company are sincere they will make application immediately to withdraw their application to build outside Canada and state clearly that they will follow an all-Canadian route.

I understand that shortly after I made that speech in the House of Commons on April 3 the Westcoast Transmission Company showed their sincerity, for which I thank them very much, and made an application to withdraw the proposed construction of a pipe line along the route I formerly mentioned. As you will recall, on April 3 I introduced a bill to amend the act granting a charter to the Westcoast Transmission Company in order that they should be compelled to follow an all-Canadian route. Since that time I have withdrawn that bill because of the fact that the company has now demonstrated its willingness to follow an all-Canadian route.

Since the applications for charters of Prairie Transmission Lines Limited and the Alberta Natural Gas Company were granted by parliament after a long debate in the house and in the committee stage, much information has been obtained which we did not possess before. I am not alarmed at the present time that there will be built outside Canada any pipe line that can reasonably be constructed within Canada itself following an all-Canadian route to the west coast. I have great faith in our Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), the leader of the Liberal party. I should like to refer to a statement which he made on May 5, as recorded at page 2229 of Hansard:

> I am not going to suggest that the protracted debates in this parliament about the desirability of an all-Canadian pipe line for the gas and oil of Alberta has been a waste of time. It has aroused public opinion as to the desirability of doing that if it is possible. I would expect that that would not be lost from the point of view of the members of the board of transport commissioners and that they would not lightly disregard the unanimous desires of Canadians that their own territory be used to the greatest possible advantage. I would expect that when they got an application and before they approved anything, they would want to be shown that there is or there is not a practicable way of doing it without going out of Canada. I would expect that they will require the applicants to satisfy them that surveys of the various routes mentioned in this discussion have been made.
>
> I do not claim to know enough about the topographical conditions, about the mountain passes, to be able to formulate an opinion as to whether or not they present insuperable difficulties. But if I were a member of the board charged by parliament with the responsibility of making that kind of a decision and were called upon to exercise my judgment, I would want pretty full evidence that it could not be done in Canada before I would put my signature to a plan or project that was not going to be carried out in Canada.

As has been pointed out by many members of the house, owing to the fact that these other applications are before the board of transport commissioners, I cannot see any reason why the board would grant a charter outside Canada if it were possible to build the line within Canada. I am not one of those who believe in boards or commissions. I think the more power that is left within parliament itself the better the interests of the people of Canada, or of any other country, will be safeguarded.

In view of the fact that there are enough companies now granted charters to compete in building these pipe lines, and having the assurance of the Prime Minister that the line itself will be constructed in Canada if at all possible, I am led to believe that at the present time I should drop this amendment and leave it to the board of transport commissioners to carry out the views expressed in the remarks of the Prime Minister which I have just quoted. I therefore ask, Mr. Speaker, to have permission to drop the bill at this time, and if necessary introduce it again at a later date.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member receives permission to drop the bill I should like to say a few words because of the debates we had on this important question. I was one of the group who were most insistent on the necessity for an all-Canadian route. First of all I must congratulate the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott) on his versatility, shall I say, in the drafting of the bill. I do not know of a farmer in Canada who could do a better job. Nevertheless I am rather surprised, after his strong statement on the introduction of the bill, that he has now decided to drop it. I was rather surprised when I heard him ask permission of the house to drop it. The purpose of this bill is to amend the Pipe Lines Act, and the principal amendment is the insertion of the words underlined, "whereof the main line shall be located entirely within Canada." With other hon. members who have taken part in previous debates, I strongly support this amendment to the general act. Since we had those lengthy debates, Mr. Speaker, there have been certain developments in connection with the competition to build a pipe line from Alberta to the Pacific coast region and I want to read just a couple of short paragraphs from the June 20 issue of Saturday Night in that connection. Then I should like to put the viewpoint of the group to which I belong with respect to this whole pipe line situation. On page 8 of Saturday Night I find an article headed "Pipe Vancouver the gas—but how?" The subheading is, "Powerful financial interests are locked in a hard fight over the route of a gas pipe line to the west coast." The article is by Michael Barkway, a very bright and intelligent young man whom we sometimes see flitting around the press gallery.

Mr. Gibson: Does he agree with you?

Mr. Herridge: I said he was a bright and intelligent young man—

Mr. Gibson: I thought you said he agreed with you.

Mr. Herridge: Hon. members will be able to judge for themselves as I proceed with my remarks. The article goes on to say:

There's gold in them thar pipe lines. There must be. The biggest investment houses in the United States as well as in Canada are falling over each other to get money into them. Alberta's gas boom is making the oil boom seem a staid and peaceable affair.

Cost of any of the projected lines to pipe Alberta's gas to market runs near $100 million outside the province, with at least another $25 million inside the province. Nobody expects a high rate of return on the money; government regulations will see to that. But the financiers figure on a safe and constant dividend. That's why the promoters are so busy—in Edmonton, Calgary, Ottawa—propagandizing, dickering, arguing, lobbying.

Powerful financial interests are joined in a hard fight.

Then it goes on:

The cost of construction and maintenance and the size of the total market will all be reflected in the price of gas to the consumer. This is one of Dixon's main arguments. Both companies have given estimates of the cost of their proposed routes, but this reporter has not been able to satisfy himself that they are computed on a basis which permits fair comparison. They are just as likely to be misleading, and are therefore omitted.

Then in conclusion:

The gas line would supplement and strengthen other projects for road and rail extensions. It would encourage industry by providing cheap power.

The lines are now drawn. Dixon won't admit that he prefers the route through the U.S.; he won't put himself in the position of opposing an "All-Canadian route." But the choice is between the cheapest and quickest road to the biggest markets, and the pioneering route which gives Canada's present and future needs absolute priority and puts the U.S. at the overflow end.

Mr. Mitchell: If the hon. member will permit a question, that article contains some mention of lobbying. Has he been lobbied?

Mr. Herridge: I am not aware of that.

Mr. Mitchell: I have not been lobbied; I thought I would clear that up.

Mr. Herridge: I am simply reading an article; I have no personal knowledge of any lobbying. I support this bill because I want to make certain that Canadian interests are given priority over United States interests.

What conclusions can we come to from this article and from the evidence that has been and will be presented to the Alberta conservation board? In the first place it is obvious, as members of this group indicated in previous debates, that there is a mad scramble for profits to be made out of Canadian natural resources. There is plenty of United States capital seeking investment in this country in gas and oil lines for that purpose. Again, I think it is indicated from the article and from the evidence that there is no check on the claims of cost made by any of these companies. We have had to accept the word of various companies and their engineers, and there has been no check by the officials of this government, who are quite capable of giving this house reliable figures. While Mr. Dixon was very careful not to appear to favour the United States route, I think anyone who read the evidence given before the Alberta board would see that he obviously presented that evidence to influence the board in favour of the United States route. Another point mentioned in this article I think it well worth considering; that is, that the development of the gas pipe line by an all-Canadian route will supplement and strengthen road and rail development in Canada. I believe that is a sound point of view.

I have made these few points, Mr. Speaker, to indicate our attitude toward the United States and Canadian routes, but fundamentally this group believe that public ownership is the only solution to this question. I should think other hon. members would join us in that view, after noting what is happening at the present time, with the mad scramble for profits on the part of United States interests and no regard whatever for Canadian interests. From our point of view this whole gas and oil pipe line business presents an opportunity for the Canadian National Railways to get into a form of transportation that will make sure profits on the capital invested and do something toward rescuing the railway from its present unsatisfactory financial position. Without a doubt this will be the cream of transportation in Canada, and why should we leave it to United States interests? Because we believe that cream should be retained for the Canadian people through public ownership, we support that principle. What would public ownership mean as far as the ownership of gas and oil pipe lines is concerned? First of all it would assure an all-Canadian route in the construction of such a pipe line. It would assure the dividends and profits for the Canadian people. It would assure the development of Canadian natural resources and Canadian industries first before this great power was exported from the country. It would assure employment for thousands now here and thousands yet to come.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I say emphatically that this group believes that the only proper solution to this question in the interests of the Canadian people is the public ownership of this form of transportation. In the meantime we support the amendments contained in this bill because to some extent at least they will protect the interests of this country.

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary East): I am surprised and disappointed that the hon. member who introduced this bill should now ask permission to withdraw it, and I should hope that this permission would not be given. The last thing I would want to do is delay the passage of this bill by making a long speech, so I shall make one of the shortest orations ever delivered in the house and merely say I am strongly in favour of these amendments.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I waited for a long time, with a great deal of interest, for the introduction of this bill. As the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) said, it was very well drafted, and at the time it was put on the order paper I thought it was tricky and well timed.

Mr. Sinnott: You do not mean that, do you?

Mr. Gillis: Yes, I thought it was directly in line with the discussion going on in the house at that time. Now the hon. member wants to withdraw it. He cannot do that; the bill is now the property of the house, and I am going to take a few minutes on it.

I believe the subject matter of this bill should be supported by every hon. member. The very long discussion that took place on this particular subject has proven conclusively to the members of this house that an all-Canadian route for this pipe line should be adopted. I think the most important reason for adopting that route is the fact that we are building a pipe line largely through the United States to siphon off the resources of this country. The main control as to how those resources will be used rests in the United States. Such a practice is all too common today throughout the whole economy of this country. Practically all of our raw materials are siphoned off to the United States, processed and returned to Canada with a high tariff on the finished product. I think it is time we stopped that sort of thing.

I did not take part in the discussion on the pipe line bills with the exception of the first five that came in through the back door a couple of hours before prorogation. I did my best to hold up those bills at that time because the important bill that was going through was the master bill supported by the Imperial Oil, a subsidiary of the Standard Oil of the United States. The other six pipe line companies to which we have granted a charter are, in my opinion, merely stock promotion schemes. I never became anxious about the last two pipe line bills, because apart from the granting to certain people in this country of a certain amount of stock, they do not amount to very much. There will never be any pipe lines built by them.

I was interested when the member for Springfield put this bill on the order paper, because during the prolonged discussions on the private bills with government support it was brought out time and again that most hon. members had no objection to amending these pipe line bills. If hon. members felt that should be done, then most of the speakers said they could see no reason why it should not be done. I believe the member for Springfield found the solution when he brought in this bill, an act to amend the Pipe Lines Act. I have been looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to this particular discussion. I thought my hon. friend was going to get up tonight, and with all his vigour support this legislation. If we passed this bill, it would have a retroactive effect, and would give us the right to amend the pipe line bills that have been passed.

Mr. Graydon: He fizzled out.

Mr. Gillis: I thought the hon. member was going to follow through with a strong argument for half an hour, but he only lit the fuse and then let it go out. As I say, that oil in Alberta is one of our richest resources, apart altogether from the building of a pipe line. I believe every Canadian member of this House of Commons should support the building of the pipe line in Canada. It is the only logical place. It would put the steel mills to work in rolling the pipe. It would create employment right along the line. The most important feature of it in my opinion is that the control of our natural resources will be in Canada, and we shall have the right to say where the oil is to go. I do not believe we should give an unrestricted right to another country to have control of the valve that supplies a very important material, without having regard to our own requirements first.

From the time the first bills came in through the back door, as I say, I have been of the opinion that these pipe lines should be in the hands of the Canadian government. My opinion was that the logical firm to develop these pipe lines as public carriers was the Canadian National Railways. In the future this will be a very lucrative field. The Canadian National Railways is a government enterprise; is well set up with a capable management; and has experience in crossing this country from coast to coast with steel. It has the method of financing through the government by passing a special act, which would enable the Canadian National Railways to obtain the necessary funds from the Canadian government to develop the resources of this country. In the future this will mean millions and millions of dollars of income, because if it were not a lucrative field we would not find the Standard Oil and Imperial Oil putting money into it. The others are merely going into it as a stock promotion venture. With the overshadowing clouds of war hanging over us, the importance of oil to any country can hardly be calculated. I think that we at this time, more than at any time in the past, should have been clinging to that very vital resource. It should have been managed by the body I have just mentioned. I think the time is opportune, now that the bill presented by the member for Springfield is before this house, for us to say to the government, by a vote of this house, that this bill should pass, and the Pipe Lines Act should be amended, at least to ensure that when we are building these lines they shall be built by the all-Canadian route.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to withdraw the bill?

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, standing order 53 is quite clear. It reads as follows:

> A member who has made a motion may withdraw the same by leave of the house, such leave being granted without any negative voice.

That standing order is immediately followed in Beauchesne's second edition by citation 454, which reads:

> The member who has proposed a motion can only withdraw it by leave of the house, granted without any negative voice. This leave is signified, not upon question, as is sometimes erroneously supposed, but by the Speaker taking the pleasure of the house. He asks "Is it your pleasure that the motion be withdrawn?" If no one dissents, he says: "The motion is withdrawn;" but if any dissentient voice be heard, he proceeds to put the question.

There are several of us, Mr. Speaker, who feel that this bill should not be withdrawn, but rather that Your Honour should put the question.

Mr. Speaker: I did not hear any dissentient voice when I asked if the member had leave to withdraw the bill.

Mr. Knowles: No.

Mr. Speaker: I asked that previously, and heard no dissenting voice.

Mr. Graydon: For what reason does he want to withdraw it?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I move that this bill be not now read a second time, but be read a second time six months hence.

Mr. Speaker: Before the motion is put, may I point out that it is usual for the house to accede to the request of an hon. member, who has introduced a bill, to have it withdrawn. I think it is only in very unusual circumstances that that courtesy is not extended to the hon. member who has introduced a bill. I do not recall any incident in the last fifteen years when the request of any hon. member to withdraw a bill has been refused. Before the house refuses the request of the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott) to withdraw the bill, I think it might consider whether or not the courtesy should be extended to him.

Mr. Harkness: No.

Mr. Graydon: I think, Mr. Speaker, that the house is entitled to a clear answer on this point. Why is the hon. member withdrawing the bill?

Mr. Tremblay: He has explained that already.

Mr. Sinnott: In view of the Prime Minister's statement that it would be an all-Canadian route if at all possible.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If I may avail myself of the right to speak to the amendment moved by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), I may say that I fully appreciate the force of what Your Honour has said as to the practice of the house for the past number of years. I noted in particular, however, that Your Honour suggested that the request to withdraw the bill should not be refused unless the circumstances were unusual. There are quite a number of us who feel that the circumstances in relation to this bill are unusual. We accepted—

Mr. Dewar: Politics.

Mr. Knowles: Do I hear the hon. member for Qu'Appelle saying "politics"?

Mr. Dewar: That is right. That is what I said.

Mr. Knowles: Is the hon. member for Qu'Appelle referring to what I am saying or to the action of the hon. member for Springfield in bringing in this bill in the first place?

Mr. Dewar: To you.

Mr. Knowles: We took it as part of a sincere gesture on the part of the hon. member for Springfield to deal with a problem that was agitating and concerning this parliament.

As has been said by others who have spoken, we welcomed this bill when it was brought in. The other night the hon. member for Springfield, without moving second reading of another one of his bills, asked that it be dropped and no one objected. But tonight he moved the second reading of this bill, obtained a seconder, made a speech and put the whole proposition into the possession of the house. There were three speeches ahead of mine in support of the bill. I, too, am in support of it and I believe that there are others.

I think that under the circumstances permission to withdraw should not be granted. It is not just a case of one dissenting voice, as the standing order and citation 454 indicates; it is a case of a number of dissenting voices. However, in the meantime the Minister of Trade and Commerce has moved as an amendment that the bill be not now read a second time but that it be given the six months' hoist. That is clear enough. That would kill the bill so far as this session is concerned, if that amendment carries. But I for one am opposed to that amendment and I think we should have a vote on it.

Mr. G. A. Cruickshank (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have never taken up much time of the house on pipe lines. I know little about pipe lines, although I am the only member that holds and controls one; I have a map of it in my office. I am sorry I was not in the chamber at eight o'clock. I will be quite honest about it, Mr. Speaker; the reason that I was not here was that I was going to go to Montreal tonight, and had made a reservation.

An hon. Member: Good-bye.

Mr. Cruickshank: I have a new car, and my wife and I are going down to Montreal.

An hon. Member: How are chances?

An hon. Member: Do you want company?

Mr. Cruickshank: I do not know just exactly who is making this speech, but I am in this extremely fortunate position with regard to my seat in this House of Commons. From it I am looking across at the most charming part of the House of Commons. As I said, I have never taken much of the time of this house on pipe lines. Probably the reason I have not taken up as much time as I should have taken up on pipe lines is that the matter concerns my riding and my province so greatly. I cannot quite understand the attitude of some of my colleagues from my own province in the matter, and I do not think that their constituents can quite understand it either. I was just down to see a couple of the ministers about a wire I just received. That was the reason that I had to cancel my trip to Montreal. I had five long distance calls today and two wires.

An hon. Member: That is too many.

Mr. Cruickshank: And I put two through myself.

An hon. Member: Collect?

Mr. Cruickshank: The unfortunate part about those wires is that we are afraid of another flood in the Fraser valley. The last one I received just five minutes ago from my personal representative out there. We had a flood in 1948, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Why talk about that?

Mr. Cruickshank: You asked me what these are about.

Mr. Cardiff: Would you like this pipe line to take the water out?

Mr. Mutch: To take some of the gas out.

Mr. Cruickshank: I do not know that we need the pipe line to take the water out. I understand that the people in some parts of the prairies, Mr. Speaker, would like some of that water that we unfortunately are afraid we are going to get in the Fraser valley within the next 48 hours. They would like some of that water.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Cruickshank: I am getting a good deal of advice from some of these people around here, Mr. Speaker, and I should like them to get to their feet and make their own speeches, not mine. The hon. member for Springfield, in all sincerity, introduced a bill which I believe would be in the best interests of the country. In the past I have had something to say about piping gas from Alberta to my own province and to my own riding in particular. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, I know that some of these other members have in mind the broad view of the development of Canada, in the interests of Canada. So have I. But like the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew), I have the interests of my own riding at heart first, and I make no bones about it. He may take exception to that remark, but he has not the riding that I have.

I believe that the gas from Alberta should be piped entirely within Canada. One hon. member mentioned the fact that some $50,000 —I think that was the figure; or maybe it was $150,000—would be spent in his riding in building pipe, through the Dominion Bridge Company. I am one of those unfortunate persons who do not know the Dominion Bridge Company. I do not know whether or not they are going to assist me at the time of the next general election; I hope they are, but I do not know that. If we built the whole line within Canada, I would just point out, through you, to the members of the house, the amount of pipe that would be purchased and built within Canada as compared with the amount that would be required if we built only three or four hundred miles of the line in Canada. As I understand this bill, it is to provide that all pipe lines are to be within Canada.

An hon. Member: Main lines.

Mr. Cruickshank: Yes, main lines.

An hon. Member: The three mile limit.

Mr. Cruickshank: There is no filibuster about this because I entered it late in the discussion. This afternoon I listened to the estimates of the Department of Public Works being discussed in committee. This is Bill No. 132, an act to amend the Pipe Lines Act. I do not know whether it has been read into the record or not.

Mr. Gibson: It should be on the record.

Mr. Cruickshank:

His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Cruickshank: I am getting a lot of advice here and I enjoy it, Mr. Speaker. You know, Mr. Speaker, when you are talking about a bill that affects your province you must stop and consider every section. That is the reason why I am trying to put it on the record. I continue:

1. Subsection one of section twelve of the Pipe Lines Act, chapter twenty of the statutes of 1949, is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

12. (1) —

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think the hon. member should read the bill. The bill is before hon. members at the present time. I would ask him not to read the bill at this time.

Mr. Cruickshank: No? Mr. Speaker, I think the people of Canada, and particularly of my province, would be interested. The unfortunate part is that so few people of Canada get copies of these bills. Admitted, a certain number get copies of Hansard—possibly too many. The reason I want to put the bill on the record is that the people of Canada, and particularly of my province and riding, would appreciate what the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott) is endeavouring to do. As I understand it—he can correct me if I am wrong—he is endeavouring to keep our resources within Canada. Even the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pointed out—I do not agree with him very often because he is seldom right in his judgment.

Mr. Knowles: You have to be right once in a while.

Mr. Cruickshank: If I remember the words correctly he stated a few minutes ago that the resources of Canada should be developed in Canada and for Canadians, or words to that effect. If it was not the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who said that, it was one of his group. I hate to admit that two of his group can be right on the same day.

In British Columbia, and in particular in the Fraser valley, we have every natural resource.

An hon. Member: Except oil.

Mr. Cruickshank: One of my colleagues says "a good member". I am too modest to say that myself, but I entirely agree with what he says. In order to develop our great province and my great riding we want to bring in gas.

To our east is the sister province of Alberta. When you are going west either by plane or by train the first thing that inspires you as a Canadian and to be a great Canadian is that when you are in the province of Alberta you approach the great mountains of British Columbia. That is one thing that does inspire you. This has all to do with the gas pipe line. When you get out there you see the sign "the great divide" and it is a great divide. You who come from eastern Canada, the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, when you are on your way to the great land of the west, you see that sign leading into the finest—

An hon. Member: Margarine.

Mr. Cruickshank: There is no margarine out there.

Mr. Gibson: Will the hon. member permit a question? This bill deals directly with the problem of keeping the main line of this gas pipe line within Canada. He and I both realize the very difficult terrain that Canada sometimes presents. In this instance will he describe in some detail the route that this line might follow through British Columbia, because I am sure he is able to do that.

Mr. Mutch: How would you get over the divide?

Mr. Cruickshank: I am glad to have had a fellow member from the province of British Columbia ask me that question, but he does not come from the Fraser valley; yet he has the great privilege of living within our province.

One of the reasons we want this gas line to go through an all-Canadian route, Mr. Speaker, is this. I have in my pocket a picture; I am sorry I cannot show it to every hon. member. It is a picture of one tree, a Douglas fir of British Columbia, which contains 41,950 feet of lumber, which will build approximately five houses. That is the reason we want this pipe line to go by an all-Canadian route. I was a little discouraged in my argument in this connection. But then later on—I do not know whether it was through my eloquence or through my good judgment—I was able to win over the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Gibson).

Incidentally, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni represents a very fine riding. The best thing about the riding is that my wife comes from there. In answer to his question —I have forgotten what the question was—

Mr. Gibson: The details of the terrain.

Mr. Mutch: How do you get over the divide?

Mr. Cruickshank: How do you get over it?

Mr. Gibson: Yes.

Mr. Cruickshank: You know, Mr. Speaker, I was driving home one year, across the American continent—including the United States, because up to that time we had not, in our poor judgment, seen fit to build a trans-Canada highway. In my travels I went through the city of Denver, where they have a wonderful museum. I know the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon) has been there. I do not mean of course that he was part of the exhibit in the museum, but rather that he has been in Denver. Among other things they have several parts of the first covered wagon that went across the continent in the days of '49.

Mr. Graydon: Did it follow an all-Canadian route?

Mr. Cruickshank: No, unfortunately it went through the United States. But when the hon. member for Comox-Alberni asked me how we were going to cross the mountains, when he knows about the great pioneers with their covered wagons and their oxen, with the hostile Indians of those days, and when he asks me how we are going to cross the great divide to build a pipe line, it is just the sort of question I would expect from him.

We have built two great trans-Canada railways, and we are now building a highway across the country. I believe it is entirely possible, feasible and economically sound that an all-Canadian pipe line should be built so as to retain our resources within our own dominion, and particularly in my own province and riding.

Mr. L. A. Mutch (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I believe this is the first time during this session at any rate that I have intervened in these and kindred debates. Perhaps I should begin by saying that while I listened to most of the other debates, in many respects this I believe is the most unique to which I have listened for a long time. Part of that uniqueness arises from a situation which, I suggest, does no credit to the House of Commons, and particularly to some members of it. I refer to the denial of the privilege being extended to an hon. member to withdraw a motion he had proposed.

Whether this has been done facetiously, or with a deliberate intent to embarrass the hon. member, or for whatever reason it may have been, it is, sir, a discourtesy which has been unusual in my experience here; and I should not like to let it pass without drawing attention to it.

Further than that, as a member of the House of Commons I resent the suggestion that if a member desires to withdraw a motion, or anything he has said or done in the house, having changed his mind, he has done something discreditable—because that was the implication which was made deliberately, apparently. There are not many who have sat in the House of Commons longer than I have, and I say that if we were to banish from the membership of the house not only those who have changed their minds, but some who have boxed the compass on almost every question that has come up, we would be a badly discredited lot. There were at least two members in the last parliament who, if they never spoiled their ballot, certainly did everything with it that a man could do—and I suppose we have some runners-up for that record.

As a member from Manitoba I resent the suggestion that there is anything discreditable in a member wishing to withdraw his motion. As I heard him giving his reasons for changing his mind, it seemed to me that they were more reasonable and cogent than any of the reasons I have heard thus far for refusing the withdrawal of his motion.

The whole question of pipe lines legislation has been debated in the House of Commons during two sessions of parliament. The house has given its decision on four separate occasions this year, and it seems to me that any attempt to revive a discussion of matters which were settled by the house on those four occasions smacks either of facetiousness or of insincerity.

The hon. member who introduced the bill, realizing that the house had made its decision this session, was prepared to let the matter drop and, in those circumstances, it seems to me a bit unusual—and perhaps not; hon. members may use this occasion to get in a parting shot on the subject—to attempt to make it appear as though there was something unreasonable, improper or insincere in his attitude. There is a great deal more that one could say, but I shall not speak at greater length, when this is my first intervention in the debate.

Mr. Gillis: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Mutch: Yes.

Mr. Gillis: Can the hon. member tell me why it was the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott) introduced his bill, made his speech on it and then asked to withdraw it? If he did not want it to go before the house, he should have let it drop earlier.

Mr. Sinnott: If the hon. member had been here he would have heard.

Mr. Gillis: I did not hear it. The hon. member moved it and made a speech on it, and then he asked to withdraw it.

Mr. Mutch: I am not going to interpret other men's minds. I do not know why he followed the procedure he did follow. I do not know why he introduced the bill in the first place, if it comes down to that. I have not inquired from him, any more than I have inquired from other hon. members who introduce bills for a variety of reasons. I had better not say much about that because I may be tempted some day to bring one in—although in seventeen years I have not yet done so.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: nine o'clock.

Mr. Mutch: I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Before the debate is adjourned, does the house wish to grant the hon. member leave to withdraw his bill?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Mutch: Then I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: It being nine o'clock, the house will resume the business which was interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Construction, repairs and improvements of public buildings—

301. British Columbia, $3,150,000.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, I notice there is a sum of $200,000 for customs and immigration buildings at Osoyoos. Last year there was the sum of $100,000. I made inquiries last year and was informed that the work would be proceeded with immediately. Nothing has happened since, but the port is increasing in importance, and the need for the building is greater than ever. I have no doubt that the increased amount of the estimate indicates that the minister is aware of that fact. Can he tell me when work will be started on the building?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Where is that?

Mr. Jones: Osoyoos.

Mr. Knowles: It starts with an "O".

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This amount is required for the purchase of an addition to the site and for the erection thereon of highway buildings, a warehouse and bus terminal to provide more adequate facilities for customs service at Osoyoos. We voted that estimate on the 10th of December last. We have looked into the matter, and we believe the total cost for the building and the purchase of the site will amount to $200,000. We have not completed the acquisition of the property. The moment we have the site we will proceed with the plans, and we hope to call for tenders before the end of this fiscal year.

Mr. Green: Can the minister give the committee the present situation with regard to a new customs building for Vancouver and also a new post office building?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is an amount of $400,000. The site of the proposed customs building is located at the eastern end of the block bordered by Burrard, Pender and Hastings streets. We have appointed an architect, Mr. C. B. K. Van Norman, to prepare plans. He was appointed nearly a year ago. I understand the plans are well under way, if not near completion. The moment we receive the plans and specifications we will ask for tenders.

Mr. Green: When will construction begin?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My deputy is more optimistic than I am. He says we will probably start the building before the end of this year.

Mr. Green: What about the post office building?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): In this case we have a site appropriated, and architects were appointed in February of this year. The architects are McCarter and Nairn. They say that plans are not yet far enough advanced to have an accurate description of the building. However, it will measure approximately 500 feet by 280 feet and will be five storeys high.

Mr. Green: The building will not be commenced for some time yet?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told they do not expect construction to get under way before next spring.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): What remuneration is paid to these architects who design the buildings?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): They are paid according to the tariff in each province. They have their associations and tariffs that the government follows as does any individual employing architects.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements of public buildings—

304. Newfoundland (commitment authority $100,000), $300,000.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Will the minister explain what this item is for? I notice that $750,000 was voted last year. I do not know if all of that was spent. There is $300,000 for this year with no particulars.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This vote of $300,000 is required for improvements, repairs and renewals in connection with dominion public buildings in the province of Newfoundland. It is not known in advance what repairs will be required to the various buildings, but it is essential to maintain them in good condition. The number of buildings and premises in the province of Newfoundland that have to be maintained from this appropriation is thirty-six made up of eighteen government-owned structures and eighteen rented premises. Last year we had an estimate of $750,000 and we spent $211,655.31. This year we expect to spend approximately the amount asked for, $300,000.

Mr. Green: Will the minister explain how these items are made up? The description reads:

Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs and to authorize commitments against future years in the total amount of $800,000 . . .

I should like to know what the expression "commitments against future years" means.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Here is the explanation given to me by my officials. The purpose of the commitment authority is merely to avoid increasing the general vote beyond the actual cash required for this fiscal year. Should the vote be fully encumbered before the end of the fiscal year, emergency repairs may be authorized under the commitment authority permitting a contract to be awarded. If when we get to the last months of the year we have spent the whole amount, then this is authority to award contracts that would run over into the next year. We would not pay that money but we would be authorized to commit the government for this amount. We thought this was the better method in order to keep our estimates down to a point where we would not have revotes next year. We wanted to keep our estimates lower, but we will probably make mistakes, and if some emergency occurs we are authorized to commit the government and ask for a vote next year out of this commitment. It is to complete jobs that may be under way after we have expended the amount of $300,000.

Mr. Green: Is this the first year that a provision of this kind has been placed in the estimates?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We have had it for three or four years. It was during my time this was brought into being on the advice of the treasury board. If we did not have this commitment authority probably the officials would have recommended a vote of $400,000 for this year. In their minds they think they need $300,000, but they would not want to be caught in an emergency without the authority to complete contracts that have been commenced, or even undertake pressing works.

Mr. Green: The idea is that we vote $300,000 under this item, and also vote authority to spend an additional $100,000 if necessary.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It would not be spent. We would be committed to it by contract but the payment would be made in the next year. It is only authority to commit for the next year.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements of public buildings—

311. British Columbia (commitment authority $50,000), $525,000.

Mr. Green: Can the minister tell us to what particular buildings this item is allocated?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The number of buildings and premises in the province of British Columbia which have to be maintained from this appropriation is 153. It is made up of seventy-four government-owned structures and seventy-nine rented premises. There is commitment authority in the amount of $50,000. I cannot tell you exactly what buildings we will redecorate or fix up during the year, but this is the amount that is spent to keep them in a good state of repair.

Mr. Green: To cover all of them.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): All buildings we occupy.

Mr. Fulton: Will the minister explain why the commitment authority varies from province to province?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It varies according to the number of buildings that we have. I have just explained what the commitment authority is. It is not the expenditure of money. We might have works under way, and if the amount of $525,000 was all encumbered then we could commit the government to further expenditures but we would have to come back to parliament to get them voted.

Item agreed to.

Engineering branch—

313. Branch administration, $352,885.

Mr. Adamson: On this engineering item I want to ask for the details, but first I am going to offer a suggestion. This spring we have had brought very vividly to our attention the hazard of fire; not fire in an individual plant or an individual house, but fire that can devastate a whole community. Obviously many other communities in Canada are just as great fire hazards as were Rimouski and Cabano, and I suggest that some consideration should be given to the drafting of a municipal fire code so that in communities so vulnerable as were these two in Quebec, proper precautions may be taken to prevent similar occurrences. I realize that this may be a little beyond anything now being done by the department. I also appreciate the splendid work being done by the underwriters' association in this connection. But, Mr. Chairman, I am afraid there will be other great fires in Canada unless steps are taken to prevent them.

Here we have the engineering branch of a federal department, and insurance is a federal matter. When we have a holocaust such as we had at Rimouski it becomes a federal responsibility to furnish relief. I am merely suggesting that an ounce of prevention be applied by the department in drawing up a code. Many communities built in the last half century are fire hazards of the worst type, and it was only due to merciful Providence that the loss of life in those two great fires was not very large. I believe the federal authority should at least consider the possibility of drawing up some statutory regulations which over a period of years would eradicate these fire hazards. I know it cannot be done all at once. I know this may be something new, and perhaps outside the jurisdiction of this department; but we know that when we have a great fire the federal authorities have to provide relief, and rightly so. I suggest that this is the time to exercise some measure of prevention, so I leave that suggestion with the minister.

Then I should like to know exactly what this item includes, if the minister will give that to me in as great detail as possible.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I thank the hon. gentleman for his suggestion. My only embarrassment is that even if we did work on a code as he suggests we would not have authority to implement it in the municipalities. Our authority with respect to the municipalities does not exist; they are provincial creatures. We could suggest it to them, but they would not have to follow our advice, and I am pretty sure they would not if it involved any great expense.

Mr. Adamson: Of course I realize the difficulty with respect to the municipalities, which are provincial creatures.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No doubt any suggestions would be taken into consideration, and might be adopted in certain parts of the country. I think the suggestion is good, but as the department is organized now I do not know how we could proceed with it. However, we shall give it some thought.

This item covers engineering branch administration, and the details appear at page 230. The branch consists of a chief engineer, an assistant chief engineer, three superintending engineers, and so on; the hon. member can see the list of employees, of whom 52 are permanent and 56 are temporary. Salaries account for $301,885, and the balance is for printing, stationery and office equipment, travelling expenses, testing laboratories for engineering investigations, and sundries. The increase is due mainly to statutory increases, revised rates of pay and reclassifications. There is a net increase of two in the number of employees and an increase under the printing and stationery item, less a decrease of about $2,500 in the amount provided for the testing laboratories.

Mr. Adamson: What work is done in the testing laboratories?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): All materials that go into the construction of the various works we undertake.

Mr. Adamson: Would that be just with regard to the strength of materials, or would it be as to their fire-resistant qualities?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Both physical and chemical.

Mr. Adamson: What I had in mind, though I did not elaborate upon it, was something perhaps in the nature of a federal grant for fire protection bureaux, supplemented by grants from the provinces.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is another field.

Mr. Adamson: That might result in a fire protection code. That might be of interest to the federal government in connection with civil defence, which of course will involve questions of fire protection.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Actually there is a dominion fire prevention officer, but he does not come under this department. If I am not mistaken he comes under the Department of Finance.

Mr. Adamson: After all, fire protection is primarily an engineering problem. You have your engineering staff, and in the light of what has happened recently we should not just coast along until another disaster strikes us. All I am asking at the moment is that the matter be given consideration.

Mr. McLure: Under this item I am going to seek some information from the minister. I have been endeavouring to get it from another department, without success. All these surveys, I understand, come under the Department of Public Works. In May and June of 1949 a survey was made in Rustico harbour in connection with improvements to the harbour and a bridge to connect with Robinson's island in the national park. I have not been able to get very much information with reference to whether this survey was reported to the Department of Public Works or to the national resources department.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Perhaps it was Resources and Development?

Mr. McLure: I asked the resources and development department about it the other day, and from what I was told I assumed it came under public works. I believe the Minister of Public Works knows about the survey that was made by those engineers during the months of May and June in 1949. Possibly a report was made about the building of this bridge, and also for the protection of the harbour. I am sure the Prime Minister knows about it, because during the election campaign the people of that community gave him a dinner of the finest lobsters that were ever drawn out of the sea. I hope he would know something about it. Has the minister anything to say with regard to that?

[Mr. Adamson.]

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The only engineer from headquarters that was sent down to the Island last year was Mr. Goodspeed, the assistant chief engineer. He did not go down there to survey the park situation, but to see what could be done with harbour development. If there were other surveys they were not made by engineers from the Department of Public Works.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—

316. Newfoundland, $764,200.

Mr. Higgins: Mr. Chairman, I believe the details of that item appear on page 231. Will the minister give me a breakdown of the amount for plant which is given as about $500,000?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The breakdown of this is: wages, $19,200; maintenance, operations and rental of plant, $200,000; new plant, $495,000; contract and day labour works, inspection and sundries and contingencies, $50,000. Now the hon. member wanted to know about the new plant. This amount covers the construction of a new dredge to replace the old dredge that the province handed over to the federal government on the date of union. It was found that this old dredge could not help us very much, so the government decided to build a new dredge. The order in council was dated April 4, 1950. I believe this dredge is being built by Vickers, under a contract given out by the Canadian Commercial Corporation.

Mr. Higgins: When is it expected the dredge will be built?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told it will be in operation this fall.

Mr. Higgins: Does that mean that until it is built there will be no dredging done?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We have rented a dredge or have contracted for one to do the work this summer.

Mr. Higgins: In that case, can the minister tell me what is proposed to be done this year in the way of dredging?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The moment we are sure of the date that we can get the dredge we will have a schedule for this work; so many days or so many hours at certain places. That has not been finalized yet.

Mr. Higgins: Has anything been planned at all?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We are receiving reports from our engineers.

Mr. Higgins: I asked whether there was any dredging planned in the district of St. John's East, and if so, where?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Up to date, the plan covering these projects has not been finalized, and I would not want to give a definite answer.

Mr. Higgins: Will the minister bear in mind this particular district?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I shall not forget it.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to know two things. First, how much was spent under this vote last year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The total was $122,618.24.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Second, I should like to point out that Renews harbour is badly in need of dredging. It is a wide harbour that fills up with silt rather quickly. It is several years now since a dredge has been there, and we were promised the dredge would go there the first thing this year. Now we learn that the dredge has been condemned, so I hope the minister will put that place near the top of the list because the fishermen are not able to bring their boats into the harbour at low tide. They can only bring them in and out at high tide. These fishermen are an industrious group, and it is quite a large harbour.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): What is the name of that place?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Renews. I trust the minister will consider the urgent need there, and the fact that the dredge has been promised. I hope it will be one of the first places to be considered.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—

317. Maritime provinces, $1,694,000.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I should like to ask the minister at what places in the maritime provinces it is expected dredging will be done this season.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Dredge No. 4 during this season will be dredging at Bathurst, in the constituency of Gloucester. Dredge No. 5—since this has been prepared I understand that dredge No. 4 is out of order. We are having it repaired right now. Dredge No. 5 will be at Yarmouth, Nova Scotia. Dredge No. 9 will be at Wood Island, P.E.I.; South River, P.E.I.; Montague, P.E.I. The dredge Pownal, No. 2 will be at Victoria, P.E.I. Dredge No. 12 will be at Egmont Bay, P.E.I.; Cape Traverse, P.E.I. Dredge No. 14 will be at Wood Islands, P.E.I., Little Sands, P.E.I.; Launching, P.E.I.; Sturgeon, P.E.I.; Graham's Pond, P.E.I. Dredge No. 15 will be at Blue Rock, N.S.; Stonehurst, N.S.; and North West Cove, Lunenburg, N.S.; Blandford, N.S.; Goat Lake, N.S., Chester, N.S., front harbour; Chester, N.S., back harbour; Young's Landing, N.S.; Saw Pit, N.S.; La Have, N.S.; Mahone Bay, N.S. Dredge No. 16 will be at Shelburne, N.S.; Wedge Point, N.S.; Cape St. Mary's, N.S.; Little Harbour, N.S. Dredge No. 17 will be at Anglo Rustico, P.E.I.; Rustico-Gauthier's Creek, P.E.I.; Bentinck Cove, P.E.I.; Naufrage, P.E.I.; Red Head, P.E.I.; Morell River, P.E.I.; Souris, P.E.I. Dredge No. 18 will be at Little Lorraine, N.S.. Dredge No. 19 will be at Cape Auget, N.S.; Babin's Cove, N.S.; Petite de Grat, N.S.; Rockdale, N.S.; Rabbit Island, N.S. Dredge No. 115 will be at Glace Bay, N.S.; Montague, P.E.I.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): That is quite a list of dredging to be done. I see that the minister has omitted Pugwash harbour, the best natural harbour in the maritime provinces. I have received information privately about that. I was disappointed that the dredging at Pugwash had been delayed so long, but I shall not press for it this year in view of the considerable work that is being done in renewing and extending the wharf. The figures I have indicate that it would take $800,000 to dredge the outer harbour to a depth of 27 feet. There is a passage there now of 22 feet.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Twenty-four feet.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): The estimate to dredge the channel is $400,000. I should like to ask the minister where he got those figures and who made up those estimates. They are greatly in excess of any estimates we have ever had before. Of course there is no limit in the estimates as to what extent the dredging will amount to. The cost will be up according to the volume of the dredging to be done. But the dredging of the channel, taking out two or three narrow projecting crooks in the harbour, would not amount to nearly this sum. I should like to ask the minister as to estimates that have been given for this work the department proposes for Pugwash harbour, where the calculations were made, and if actual surveys have been made of the harbour.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We have spent quite a bit of money at Pugwash. I think the last contract given there on the wharf was $400,000. You have actually a channel of 24 feet. That is the report of my engineers. If they are wrong, we shall have to find some other engineers and go into it. But that is the information that I get. During the war that port certainly did a huge business and it had only that 24-foot channel. To dredge it out to 27 feet would cost $800,000 and we have just spent $400,000. That would make $1,200,000. My report comes from my district engineer who is quite an experienced man. The hon. member for Cumberland knows him. I refer to Mr. Cox. He knows that district quite well and he is hardly convinced that the commercial value to Pugwash would justify this expenditure of another $800,000. My mind is open, but before I take another decision I would have to receive some very convincing arguments.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I think the steamers they take in there draw a maximum depth of about 22 feet. As I say, I am not at this time going to press for further expenditure on Pugwash channel or Pugwash harbour this season. I should like to hear from the minister as to what is proposed for the important harbour on the western part of the bay of Fundy at Parrsboro. The department made some surveys and calculations a few years ago and improvements were to be made at Parrsboro harbour so that these ordinary lumber shipping steamers could be taken into the harbour. Will the minister make a statement with respect to what is eventually proposed in Parrsboro? Is any work to be done at the present time?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am sorry, but I am told that there is no estimate this year for Parrsboro harbour. I am pleased that the hon. gentleman draws this matter to my attention. I will certainly get a report from my officials. Actually I would not be in a position to make a statement, but I will certainly look into the matter.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I wish to thank the minister. There is another small construction that is required on the Northumberland strait. That is a wharf and protection for the smaller boats, particularly the lobster boats, along the shore line of about 30 miles between Pugwash harbour and Wallace harbour. It is only about a third of that distance directly between those points but following the shore line I understand it is about thirty miles. It is the very centre of the lobster industry of the world, I suppose, and the boats that are used there have no protection. They require some protection on the shore between Pugwash and Wallace. I would ask the minister if he has any estimates for this work at the present time; and if not, if he would give special attention to the needs of the fishermen in this locality. I understand there is no other place in the northern part of Nova Scotia or Cape Breton Island where there is so much need and where there is so little protection as there is at this point. Down in the county of Pictou there is a wharf of this kind and there is protection every few miles. At the point to which I referred it is badly needed and I should like some statement from the minister.

[Mr. Fournier (Hull).]

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will call the attention of my engineers to the remarks made this evening by the hon. gentleman; and they will prepare for me or get a report from the local engineers. We will give serious consideration to these remarks.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): There is one other item in the details about which I should like to ask; that is a new plant for dredging, $545,000. Last year under this heading there was an appropriation of $560,000. Can the minister give the committee some particulars as to that?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): New plant, to replace dredge No. 5, total estimated cost, $400,000, required 1950-51 $300,000 to complete, replacing nine pontoons for dredge No. 5, such pontoons beyond repair. To replace dredge No. 13, contract was given for $365,000. There is a balance to be paid of $200,000 on that new dredge; one 125 cubic yard dump scow for dredge 15, to replace old one beyond repair; and quarter yard steel dredge for New Brunswick—no, that was taken out. I have a note of it.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Where is the construction being carried on?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Saint John dry dock and one at Pictou.

Mr. McLure: I just want to ask one question under item 317. I thought I heard the minister say that dredging would be done at Wood Island. I did not hear what amount of work was to be done. I just wish to impress upon him that during last season, during the busy part of it, the dredging was left until it was quite late and it interfered a good deal, in the busiest part of the season. If it were possible, as to whatever dredging is to be done there, it would be in the interests of good shipping and good transportation of the Northumberland ferries route to have this dredging done early in the season. Last year one of the boats, the Charles A. Dunning, was unable to make her regular trips because of the fact that the dredging was not done at an early date. I just mention this matter so that the minister will have it in mind to see to it that the dredging at Wood Island is done as early in the season as possible.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is the first one in the program.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—

320. British Columbia and Yukon, $722,800.

Mr. Fulton: I rise not to make any complaint in respect of the dredging in British Columbia because I find, as I think most hon.

members from British Columbia do, that we get the best of co-operation from the officials of the department out there who are, as a matter of fact, handicapped only by lack of equipment. But I am interested in two items here. The first is the salary paid to the permanent officer of the dredging branch in British Columbia. I find that he is described as a senior inspector of dredges whereas those in the other districts are described as district superintendents of dredges. I think he has more men under his control than any other district, except the maritime district, and yet his salary is about $900 less than any of the others? Why is that?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): These salaries are rated by the civil service commission. The only thing we do is to pay the salary that the commission has fixed, with the approval of the treasury board.

Mr. Fulton: It seems to me, from the description we have here of his office, that it is somehow of a lower grading than the others. Would that be a matter under the control of this department? At least I think this department might make recommendations, because from the appearance of the estimates this official is given as much responsibility as the others.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I understand that we do make recommendations as to classifications or increases, but they are not always approved by the civil service commission or the treasury board. I will look into this case to see exactly what it is.

Mr. Fulton: Can the minister tell us what new plant is being acquired or constructed this year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): There is a new scow and booster pump for dredge No. 305, $75,000.

Mr. Fulton: Can the minister tell me which one is dredge No. 305?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The suction dredge.

Mr. Fulton: Where is it stationed?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): New Westminster.

Mr. Adamson: No item on dredging would be complete without some mention of Ripple Rock. I suppose that has ceased to be an item.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This year I could not bring in an item.

Item agreed to.

Maintenance and operation of roads and bridges—
321. Burlington channel bridge, $93,950.

Mr. Catherwood: The detail of this item would indicate that the increase is made up mainly of supplies, $36,980. I am very glad to see this increase because this particular bridge gives access to an important highway. Can the minister indicate what work is being done and what is the nature of the work?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The increase of $36,980 is due principally to provision being made for the installation of an auxiliary power supply for emergency use in the event of hydroelectric power failure. Installation of this emergency generating equipment was recommended by the coroner's jury following an inquest into the circumstances of a drowning last year when an automobile went through the open bridge into the water during an interruption in the hydro-supplied power.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements—harbours and rivers—construction, acquisition, repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, harbour and river works listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects—
333. Newfoundland, $1,100,000.

Mr. Higgins: I should like to ask the minister a question on this item. I see all the districts represented in these two figures except the district of St. John's East. There may be some forgetfulness about it; I am sure it is not intentional.

Mr. Knowles: How did they vote there?

Mr. Higgins: We have one very important project; I believe the minister is familiar with it. It was requested some time ago. It is in connection with Flatrock, the building of a canal from the open sea into a pond to shelter the boats. I think a formal request was made to the resident engineer in St. John's. I believe it has been transferred here. I am not certain whether that is so or not.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): At what place?

Mr. Higgins: Flatrock. I do not blame the minister for not recognizing the name immediately. It is in St. John's East.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We will look into it. My officials cannot recall having received the report from the resident engineer in regard to the project. Perhaps it is in the office.

Mr. Higgins: Will the minister take it from me that the request is very urgent. I do not know that it is possible to include it in the main estimates, but a supplementary estimate could be brought down. I am not asking for very much. It is the only part of the district that I am asking—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): What would it cost?

Mr. Higgins: It will not cost very much; less than the item that is in the estimates for Bonavista.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The hon. member is being facetious.

Mr. Higgins: I think it is a fair request.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will certainly look into it and see if there is a report.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I wonder whether the minister is familiar with last year's expenditure on this item.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It was $374,154.03.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): There is one matter I wish to bring to the attention of the minister. I have already passed over to him several petitions which I have received not from my constituency but from the constituency of my hon. friend who represents Burin-Burgeo. They wish to have a wharf at Arnold's Cove. These people reside on islands in Placentia Bay, and Arnold's Cove has connection with the highroad into St. John's and also with the railway. It would be a great convenience for people going to the hospital, for passengers travelling on the railroad, going to St. John's and going elsewhere for that matter. They want a wharf constructed at Arnold's Cove, Placentia Bay. I have passed over several petitions from the people of Tack's Beach, Bar Haven and Merasheen and other parts of Placentia Bay. Evidently, from the zeal and the rapidity with which they signed the petition, they are very anxious to get the wharf. It would be a great public service if a wharf were built at Arnold's Cove.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will call the attention of the engineers to this, and we shall ask for a report from the resident engineer.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements—harbours and rivers—

334. Nova Scotia, $3,500,000.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Before this item carries I should like to point out to the committee that the appropriation for the current year under this heading, "construction, repairs and improvements, harbours and rivers, Nova Scotia", is $3,500,000. Last year it was $5,320,000, or a decrease of $1,820,000 this year as compared with last year. I should like to know from the minister why the current year differs from the previous year to this enormous extent of $1,820,000.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The reason is that even with that large estimate of the last fiscal year we expended only $2,836,277.91. With the plans that are ready to proceed we do not expect that we can spend more this year than the amount of the estimate. It would be useless to put in any larger amount if our plans are not ready for more work.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Unfortunately, in the circumstances the expectation of so many people in so many places which was raised by this large figure last year of $5 million will not be realized. I accept the explanation of the minister for the present.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Every other province has been decreased as well.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): The details of this appropriation show dredging at Dingwall to the extent of $130,000. I should like to know from the minister why it is put under this heading when the special heading we have just passed covered dredging. Why is Dingwall dredging to the extent of $130,000 classified under this heading?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is a contract, or rather it is an agreement we have with National Gypsum Company that we undertake to keep a channel open for their boats and for the public. They are paying 25 per cent of the amount because they use this channel, and the public use it. But we entered into an agreement whereby they would pay 25 per cent of this expenditure inasmuch as they are heavy users of it. That is why it forms a special item. A contract has been given to the Porter company. We pay 75 per cent of it.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): That is a reliable concern, and it deserves the support of the department. Is this appropriation of $130,000 to remove material that fills in each year, or is it to enlarge or to expand the channel to that extent?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is for maintenance of the channel.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Purely maintenance?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): To cover filling in from year to year?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is right.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): And it will go on continuously. There is another item in which I am interested, and that is the wharf extension at Malagash, amounting to $38,000. What has been done in connection with this appropriation?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This revote is required for the construction of an ell on the westerly side of the outer end of the wharf at Malagash. The construction of the proposed ell is required for the three-fold purpose of providing more adequate berthing for large steamers loading, for providing working space for the handling of fishing gear for lobsters, and providing shelter for small craft from southwesterly and southeasterly winds and seas. The newly constructed lobster factory located near the head of this wharf employs twenty-five large motor boats in the lobster fishing industry.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): How is the work being done? Is it under contract?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The contract has not yet been let.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Have tenders been called?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Not yet, I am told.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Before the item carries I should like to refer to the expenditure at Pugwash, where they are renewing the wharf and extending it. This is a heavy expenditure, and is under contract to a reputable firm. May I express my appreciation on behalf of the people of Pugwash, and the shippers who use the wharf for large shipments of lumber each year. I would express their appreciation, and my own, to the minister and the department for what has been undertaken at that point.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements—harbours and rivers—

335. Prince Edward Island, $1,300,000.

Mr. McLure: I notice under this item a number of things granted to my constituency, and I am thankful for them. However, there is one item in the county of Prince, known as the West Point ferry, to which I should like to draw attention. I received a letter yesterday in connection with it. As the minister knows, the West Point-Buctouche ferry system was quite an issue about a year and a half ago. I know if the hon. member for Prince were here this evening he would be interested in it.

During the election campaign of 1949 this ferry was an issue, and both parties were committed to it. If there are any people who have not had any proper service it is the people of West Point, which is in one of the finest farming sections of the whole province. If the ferry across to Buctouche were in operation it would be one of the finest things for the farming community of western Prince Edward Island that it would be possible for them to have.

So much interest has been taken in it that an offer was made to the government, or to the parties who were going to run the private ferry, whereby they could have the use of a wharf on the Buctouche side. Only a small rental was to be paid for it. However, I see nothing in the estimates for this expenditure, and there has been no mention of it in the house. In response to a question I have had I am bringing the matter to the minister's attention so that it shall not die a natural death— or until another campaign comes along. If there is one place in Prince Edward Island that requires better transportation facilities, it is the West Point ferry district.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements—harbours and rivers—

339. Manitoba, $398,000.

Mr. Bryce: Mr. Chairman, I notice an item here for $94,000 for diking and cut-off in the Assiniboine river. Hon. members in districts adjacent to mine have discussed this matter with me thoroughly. Two ministers of the government have agreed that the people I represent would be better served if this $94,000 were taken from the public works estimates and added to the expenditures under P.F.R.A. My only reason for asking for this is that the people would be better served if it were done in that way.

Land will have to be expropriated in connection with these cut-offs, and it would be necessary that the crown hold title to the land. It will be possible to rent it for certain purposes, and derive some benefits therefrom. All the money spent may not be got back, but there certainly would be some returns. I believe both ministers are willing to agree to the suggestion made, and I would ask the Minister of Public Works to express his views in the matter. The Minister of Agriculture does not happen to be in the house this evening, but after talking with him I have learned that he is quite agreeable to taking it over. He maintains he has the necessary facilities, and the men who are engaged in that kind of work.

This is something that must be done, or we will lose one of our highways in Manitoba. The water is getting so close that these cut-offs will have to be made. The question is whether the vote should be turned over to P.F.R.A.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The hon. member for Selkirk and the hon. member for Portage la Prairie discussed this matter with me some time ago. They were so convincing that I said if an official request were sent to the Department of Public Works I would submit that suggestion to my colleagues. I have not had time to do so, and I do not know if I can have a transfer of funds from my department to P.F.R.A. However, the matter will certainly be considered by the cabinet at the first opportunity.

Mr. Bryce: If it goes to P.F.R.A. I hope the minister will see that that extra $90,000 goes on every year for that purpose.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would not commit the government on that right now.

Mr. Cardiff: If I might revert to the last item—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Certainly.

Mr. Cardiff: I see there has been $230,000 spent on the harbour at Goderich. While we are very thankful for the money that has been spent, there is another project that the people of Goderich are interested in. They have a very short beach and they have no other way to get down to the other side of the harbour except across the C.N.R. tracks. Of course they have to have permission to do that. Will the government engineers look that over some time and give favourable consideration to putting a road across the C.N.R. tracks down to the beach on the other side of the harbour? As you know, Goderich is a very pretty town. I think perhaps it is by far the prettiest town in western Ontario. It attracts many tourists from the United States, and the money would be well spent on such a project because the government would get it back in tourist traffic. Every dollar you spent there would be repaid. We would like to have some consideration given to that.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The suggestion is to put a bridge over the tracks at the head of the harbour?

Mr. Cardiff: I do not know how they would go over the tracks.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): At all events, I will ask the resident engineer to look into the matter.

Mr. Cardiff: They cannot get there without going over the tracks, and there is no road down to the beach on that side of the harbour. The only way they can get down there is to cross the tracks or build a bridge.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I will ask the resident engineer to make a survey and report.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements—harbours and rivers—

341. British Columbia and Yukon, $4,200,000.

Mr. Green: Does this vote include any money for a fishermen's wharf in False creek at Vancouver? I believe representations have been made to the department by various bodies, and I should like to know whether this vote includes any money for that particular project.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): When the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra spoke to me about this False creek float—

Mr. Green: Fishermen's wharf.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): —we were expecting a copy of the report of Mr. Cousins of the national harbours board to the city of Vancouver. We received that report in an interim form within the last few days. My officials are of the opinion that we should build this wharf or float out of this general vote. I think the estimate for this year will be around $100,000.

Mr. Green: Then it is to be built out of this vote?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Right.

Mr. Green: About when will construction begin?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I understand our plans will have to be tied in with those of the city. They are working in co-operation, and we will probably be guided by their timetable. We will go ahead with the work.

Mr. Green: There is one other project, the completion of the seawall around Stanley park. That work was commenced a good many years ago and has never been completed. It is of great importance to Stanley park in which I think the dominion government has an interest, by the way. It is some sort of an admiralty reserve. The seawall is most essential for the proper protection of the park. I believe the minister has had favourable recommendations from his engineer at the coast. Can he tell us whether any money is included in this vote for that work?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Not in this vote, but after I received the petitions and representations of nearly every member from British Columbia concerning the condition of this wall I certainly had a thorough study made of the situation. Personally I would recommend an expenditure this year to cover a part of it, not the whole of it, but I do not know what treasury board will decide.

Mr. Green: The minister hopes it will be possible to go on with this work this fall?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Personally I would recommend an expenditure to continue this work but I would not commit myself. I am like others who are in the hands of treasury board. They will decide.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): The minister is a member of the treasury board.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes, but I am only one member.

Mr. Green: You had better get that vote through.

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements—harbours and rivers—

342. Newfoundland (commitment authority $100,000), $400,000.

Mr. Higgins: Will the minister make a statement as to what this item comprises? It is fairly large. Is it a lot of small amounts?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This general appropriation is required—and this applies to every province except for variations in the amounts—for the maintenance and repair of existing harbour and river facilities in the province of Newfoundland under the jurisdiction of this department to maintain essential traffic in navigable waters. Newfoundland entered confederation on the 1st April, 1949, and until a district office was set up a bulk appropriation of $1 million was granted to this province for the fiscal year 1949-50 reading as follows: "Harbours and rivers generally, construction, repairs and improvements". To conform with appropriations for the other provinces during the fiscal year 1950-51 it now reads the same as all other provinces, "harbours and rivers generally". As to the commitment authority, I have mentioned the purpose of that before. Out of this vote we spent $374,154.

Mr. Higgins: Last year.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Last year. This year we have an amount of $400,000 with commitment authority for another $100,000.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Chairman, I want to understand this business of commitments better. There are a whole lot more commitments, and I have a desire to know more about them. I have a feeling that they provide nice featherbeds for people to lie on, but I am willing to be convinced that I am wrong.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I explained this while the hon. member was out.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): No, I was here. I listened to you before but I could not understand it.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My goodness, I thought my explanation was crystal clear. At all events, when this was decided upon some years ago the reasoning was along this line. Instead of having $400,000, as in this instance, for maintenance and repairs of these public works, let us say we had $500,000. We found that we did not expend the $500,000. Treasury board said: "Why can you not give us a figure closer to the expenditure you expect to make?" They suggested that if in the last months of the fiscal year we had pressing and urgent repairs or works to be done we could sign a contract or give out the work, and it would become payable in the next year on commitment authority. This commitment authority is to be voted in the following year if we expend more than $400,000. I wonder if that is clear.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Let us go back for a moment. I noticed a little while ago that there was an expenditure of $122,000 on an item of $575,000. I wonder if this cushion does not mean that nobody has to work very hard to find out what is going to be needed, that you can take it by and large and always have something as a cushion to fall back on. That is what bothers me. How can there be an expenditure of only $122,000 on an estimate of $575,000 as in item 316? Can there be any real economy when you have such a tremendous amount of leeway?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You are speaking of Newfoundland, which came into confederation on April 1. We did not have any staff there; we just put in a figure and worked on that. After April 1 we sent our engineer down there. Your neighbour from Newfoundland understands the situation. We sent an engineer from headquarters to receive requests and make surveys of the repair and maintenance work that had to be done. When we put in this estimate we did not know what it would mean. This year we have that information, and the estimate has been reduced in accordance with the expenditure made last year and what was expected to be required this year. We are not playing with this. We have officials working on it the year round, to try to get our estimates as close as possible.

For many years my problem has been that hon. members come and ask "Why this revote? Why does this go on for three or four years?" That could be explained in two ways; either we were slow in getting the work done and could not spend the money voted, or we asked treasury board and this house for too much. We are trying to keep the proper balance, and we think it is best to keep an estimate down to what we think we will spend. If there should be an emergency, however, we ask for authority not to spend money but to commit the government and then come back to parliament and put through the vote. This is the result of years of study by people who have had a great deal of experience. Perhaps they may be wrong and just the two of us may be right; I do not know.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The minister is so persuasive it is very difficult to ask any further questions. However, I would like one or two instances, if he has them handy, to show exactly what has happened in past years when he has had these further commitments.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is how they explain it. Suppose I have $400,000. Hon. members know how we proceed; we must have authority from the comptroller of the treasury to encumber these estimates as we give out contracts. When the amount of $400,000 has been completely encumbered the comptroller of the treasury will not grant us another nickel even to undertake pressing or urgent works. Under the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act he is not empowered to do so. He will place a limit on the department, and we will not be able to have pressing work done which may be required by a storm or any other unforeseen event. This commitment power, however, gives us the authority to go ahead and give out a contract without paying for it during this fiscal year, voting the estimate next year. The officials of finance, treasury board and comptroller of the treasury developed this method so the government would not be left without authority if something unforeseen should happen.

Mr. Green: When a building is to be constructed that is to cost a million dollars, all of which is not to be spent in the current fiscal year, an item of say $500,000 is put in the estimates, but the contract is let for the full $1 million. What is the difference between a vote like that and these votes? Is it that these would cover entirely new contracts?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes. In the case the hon. member mentions we have a special vote for the job, the building or wharf or whatever it is. It is known; the house approves the principle, and we go ahead. Once we decide to build the float we were discussing a moment ago I bring in a vote to cover it and the house gives me authority to proceed. These maintenance and repair items, however, arise as time goes on. Our offices report that this building needs paint, or that building must be repartitioned, or something must be done somewhere else to keep the building in good condition. Under these votes we are not authorizing the department to go out and let contracts; we are giving the department authority to keep these buildings in a good state of repair. That is the difference. If we were to say this $400,000 should go for a building in St. John's we would go ahead and buy the site, prepare the plans, ask for tenders, and give the contract, because parliament would have authorized the construction of that building. The amount we would put in the estimates would be the amount we expected to spend during the current fiscal year. This is not the same thing at all; it is a general authority for the maintenance of these buildings.

Mr. Green: Is this system used in any other department?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I believe it is, and if it is not I would recommend it.

Mr. Green: What other departments vote commitments as distinguished from appropriations?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): National defence has followed our example. As I understand it, this was suggested to cover the cases I have mentioned. I see the Department of Justice has item 148, under which there is a commitment, and I think transport and other departments also follow that practice. I believe the system was first recommended to public works in order to meet this situation.

Mr. Green: We are getting a new system here, which is gradually expanding?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No; it has been in effect for three years now.

Mr. Green: But it is spreading to other departments. What is the statutory authority for these commitment votes, as distinct from the appropriation of money?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If I were the Minister of Finance I would have more data on the whole system. As hon. members know, finance has a good deal of authority over the preparation of estimates and the expenditure of money, and they are the advisers of the other departments. If they find that our estimates are not closely related to the actual expenditures they try to find a way to overcome that difficulty. I have given the example of urgent work. Our money is encumbered; the whole amount will be used for different projects. If something unforeseen happened, even the comptroller of the treasury could not give me authority to put in a pane of glass.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): You are arguing that you need a cushion for everything.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not know whether that would be the right expression. I am not a financial wizard, and we closely follow what finance and the comptroller of the treasury tell us to do. I cannot see the real argument with respect to this cushion.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Surely your whole argument is that you have an idea of what you will spend. Then you ask for $10 or $100,000, it does not matter, in addition for unforeseen expenses, emergencies if you want to use that word.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): If I did not have this probably my officials would tell me we needed $500,000.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): All right; let them say so. At the end of the year you would tell them they were crazy, if you did not need it. Is that not common sense?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would not, but perhaps treasury board or the comptroller of the treasury would; that is probably what would take place when they saw we did not spend the money. This is not a case of padding the estimates; it is a matter of making provision for emergencies.

Mr. Drew: In simple terms, does it not mean this? Under each one of these items starting with 342 and running down to 350, there is an estimate of an amount upon which parliament passes, in this particular case making a total of $2,795,000, and then under each one of those items there is in addition an amount which is termed a commitment authority. Taking item 342, merely as an example, it is represented that in each case, with each amount, you have a commitment authority of $100,000. The total of those commitment authorities is $610,000. As I understand it, what this does is to vote $2,795,000 as an amount which has been estimated and is passed by parliament. Parliament also authorizes a further $610,000 for these items 342 to 350, in the event that they go over to that extent.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Well, yes, you have it in a way. This commitment will never be spent during this fiscal year. It will have to be voted next year. We will not make any payments of these amounts during the year. What we will do is this. At the end of the year, if we have encumbered the whole of the $2,795,000 and we still have to maintain our works, we will make out the contracts probably because the execution of it we know will go over into the next fiscal year, and we will come back and ask a vote for it.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): How do you guess at your commitments? It is nothing but a guess.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Absolutely. I cannot give an exact figure for what will take place on all of those works during the year. I have not before me in advance the reports from those district architects or engineers; they are coming in every day. We have an idea, because we own so many buildings and so many works in each province. We know we will have to maintain them during the year, but nobody can give a definite figure.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Can the minister tell us what the total commitment amount was last year, and to what extent it was used? In other words, the amount of commitments that were made out of the total authorized during the year would give us an idea of the size and significance of this.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am told that to get that we would have to have the report prepared by the comptroller of the treasury, because his office encumbers the amounts on the votes which parliament passes. I have at my disposal $400,000 in this case. As time goes on I spend that money and have to go to the comptroller of the treasury with the details of the amounts, if it is contract or day labour or whatever it is. When he authorizes the expenditure of that money it is encumbered on the amount of $400,000. Every month we receive a report of the free balance. When we reach the end of the year if this free balance is fully encumbered, and we still receive from the different parts of the country, from our regional offices, requests for the expenditure of money, that is when we ask the comptroller of the treasury to let us do the work under this commitment. We cannot proceed otherwise.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am going to make a suggestion in order to save time this evening. You might have a caucus with the Minister of Finance, and then we can get this figure, for which I have asked and which I think might be interesting, on the finance estimates. Will the minister do that?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My official tells me that if we ask the comptroller of the treasury for a report of these encumbrances, he will prepare a report and send it to the department. I shall give it to the house.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Would the minister be agreeable to having it left over until then?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My estimates?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): To have this matter dealt with on the finance estimates.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Oh, certainly.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I do want to clear up one point because I think it is extremely important. The Minister of Public Works has said that this practice is similar to that which has been adopted by the Department of National Defence. Is that right?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No.

Mr. Drew: I understood him to say so.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No. If my recollection is correct, three years ago there was a discussion with the treasury board about the preparation of these estimates. Finding that the estimates and expenditures did not compare favourably, they said that we should bring down our estimates so that they would be about equal to the expenditures. The resistance came from my officials, engineers and architects, and treasury board suggested this way of dealing with these items so they were prepared according to that system.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): It is still a cushion and nothing else, is it not?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It may be a cushion.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I have the estimates for 1949-50, and there are no commitment authorities given under the Department of Public Works, so that method could not have been in vogue last year. It looks like something that has been introduced this year. Here are the estimates, and there is no indication of its being contained in them.

Perhaps I did not understand the minister correctly, but he said there was a million dollars estimated for this item last year under votes No. 333 and 342 combined. There was nothing spent from this particular vote, though; the whole $374,000 was spent out of the two votes. Is that correct?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We did not have it under your vote last year. It was a bulk vote. As I said to the committee a moment ago, we did not know exactly what to expect in Newfoundland.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): But the money was spent out of the two votes, No. 333 and 342.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, there is a point here that has not been made clear. I think we all should know exactly what it is we are doing. There is no necessity whatever for an additional amount being included in this way unless there is some possibility of an additional expenditure this year. If there is no intention of having additional expenditure this year, the practice has been long established to settle the amount that will be spent this year, and then next year include the further amount that will be required for the continuation of the same contract. This practice continues, whether it takes one, two or three years.

Now, let me give a simple example. I can think of one case where a hospital has been under construction for three years.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): May I interrupt? If the hon. member reads the heading on this vote he will see that it is for maintenance service, no new work to be undertaken. It is just to keep our existing works in a good state of repair. It is not for new work. What we have we try to keep in good condition.

Mr. Drew: Perhaps I was using an unsatisfactory illustration because of the nature of the item, but what I was trying to illustrate was this. No matter what the heading is, if there is an additional commitment amount placed at the side in this way, I feel sure that the passing of these estimates in this form has the effect of approving the expenditure of the amount contained in the main column, that is $2,795,000, and also a commitment for a further amount.

The reason I did conceive what I understood was a reference by the minister to the similarity between this procedure and one that had grown up in the Department of National Defence is that there is a similar procedure there, though it is worded in a different way. The indication is contained in item 202, which is the large all-embracing item of the Department of National Defence, and it says this:

> To provide for the defence forces of the navy, army and air services, and to authorize total commitments for this purpose of $579,301,670 including authority, notwithstanding section 29 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, to make commitments for the current year of $438,178,000 and commitments for future years of $141,123,670 . . .

Is this the same kind of commitment that is contemplated in item 202 in the Department of National Defence?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): My official tells me that this amount of $100,000 in vote 342, commitment authority, and the amount of $141,123,670 would compare. The balance would not be the same thing.

Mr. Drew: No. Quite apart from the purpose and quite apart from the size, what I am trying to understand is whether these are commitments of a similar nature in their effect as we deal with them in this vote.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I would not know that. I know what the commitment in my department is. It is used for emergency or when we lack the funds in the last part of the fiscal year. It is never committed unless the need arises, and the need is this. As to these buildings or wharves, you may have an instance where a storm will destroy one of our works which is needed for the local people. If I have encumbered the amount of $400,000, that work will stay there, in Newfoundland, until the next spring or summer. I do not think that these gentlemen would think that this was proper administration, not to take means to repair this damage to these wharves for the poor people they represent in certain parts of the country. We are trying to act like a paterfamilias, and to be as kind as possible to everybody representing these people. That is perhaps only talk; but the idea is not to be caught by something unforeseen that nobody can tell me in advance that I will be called on to spend money for. What I am told right here now is this. Suppose we did not have this commitment. The officials would have been before treasury board and they would have asked for $500,000. We know we would not have spent it because the $100,000 commitment will be paid only in the next fiscal year.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I just want to apologize to the minister. I do find that, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra points out, there is a commitment last year, but it is concealed. It is not easy to see. It says:

For maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, and to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $65,000.

That is in one item and the same thing applies in another. But it is not as clear as it is this year.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I understand that the minister will be good enough to indicate to his colleague that when we come to the finance estimates we want the full amount of the commitments authorized last year and the extent to which they were availed of. It is on that understanding that I am saying no more under this item.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The attention of Finance will be called to the remarks made by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Drew: That may or may not produce results; but I do not think that this item should be passed over without at least our understanding quite clearly what the effect of it is. The minister has just said that if this device were not employed, then instead of an item showing $400,000 in the main column, with a commitment authority in brackets at the side of $100,000 and with similar entries for other items under this general heading, the total figures would be the ones we would have in the main column. If that is so, then all this means is that this is a device to show a lower figure than would be in the estimates in the ordinary course of events.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No; we would not commit ourselves. If we did not have the $500,000, we would not commit ourselves; and the comptroller of the treasury would not give us authority to commit ourselves to this expenditure if we did not have the $500,000. But we know that the contract will be completed after the end of the fiscal year and the money will not be actually spent during this fiscal year. Therefore why should we have a vote of $500,000 when we know the expenditure this year will be $400,000? But we will be committed by contract for works not completed, to be paid for. But if I have not got the $500,000, I would not be able to give out this work. The comptroller of the treasury would say, "You have no more money at your disposal", and we would have to stop. But with this commitment, it will go on right until the end of the fiscal year, although it will not be paid; and I will be authorized to let this work. I do not know if I have made myself clear enough, but it took me a little while to know what I was talking about.

Mr. Drew: To find the explanation.

Mr. Knowles: It seems to me that this device—and it has been called that—is one that we on this side of the house should welcome.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It is closer to the facts.

Mr. Knowles: It looks to me as though it is something that has been forced upon the department by the treasury board.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): It was suggested, anyway, by the treasury board.

Mr. Knowles: All right; it was suggested to the department by the treasury board; and the treasury board's power of suggestion is usually fairly effective. If this device were not being used, I take it that the minister and his department would play safe and would ask for all the money they think they might need. Treasury board comes along and says—and you can get this by looking at the estimates of previous years; there have been so many revotes—"Do you really need all that $500,000 in cash this year?" They persuade the officials of his department that they might get along with $400,000. The officials of the department say: "Well, we will try, provided that you give us the right to make contracts that we cannot pay until the next year in case we get in a jam." It seems to me that instead of being a cushion, it is actually putting a brake on the department. We are actually voting them in cash this year an amount of only $400,000 instead of the $500,000 that the department would have asked for.

As the hon. member for St. John's West has done, I have checked into the estimates of last year and I note two differences with regard to the items in connection with "construction, repairs and improvements—harbours and rivers." On the one hand there were a great many more details; that is, for each individual province there is a breakdown by projects. The other difference is that all those items are full of revotes. There are no revotes in this section at all.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Why have estimates if they do not mean anything?

Mr. Green: The minister has said that anything that is used from these commitments must be voted next year. It seems to me that that practice offends against the cardinal principle of our whole parliamentary system, which is that parliament controls the money that is spent and that until parliament votes the money, it cannot be spent.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You are right. It will not be spent before you authorize it.

Mr. Green: No; but here parliament is voting the money afterwards instead of before. I think that is the principle that is being departed from, and it does not seem right to me. Surely some other method can be worked out which would meet the difficulty.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like to say a word on this matter. I do not entirely agree with my colleague. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, it seems to me that there may be an element of good in this. I am not suggesting, for example, that it would be better to put $500,000 into the estimates.

Mr. Knowles: That would be a cushion.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Yes, that would be a cushion. On the other hand, I think there is a danger there. My point is that the device seems to me to have an element of usefulness in it. But the question is whether it is being used in the right way by having a large sum against each of these estimates, with total commitments of $600,000. That is why I should like to see the total figure showing what the commitments have been, let us say, in two or three years, and what has been spent, to see whether perhaps there may not be a more effective way of using the device which has a certain element of good in it.

Mr. Higgins: I do not like delaying the matter. The item has caused enough comment. Can the minister possibly bring down a figure to show where the money has been spent?

Item agreed to.

Construction, repairs and improvements—harbours and rivers—

343. Nova Scotia (commitment authority $100,000), $600,000.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): How much of the $775,000 that was appropriated last year was actually expended? Did the work which was done, not the expenditures which were made, increase it above the $775,000?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The amount expended last year was $515,004.13.

[Mr. Smith (Calgary West).]

Mr. Black (Cumberland): There was no portion of this commitment authority of $100,000 this year utilized in Nova Scotia last year.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): No.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Is that correct?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is correct.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I have another request I wish to make of the minister. He has told us that there are no commitments made with respect to this vote this year. I presume they will be made on the recommendation of the engineer and the staff in the province. In Nova Scotia, for instance, we have very capable and experienced men and I have a great deal of confidence in them. I have a duty to my constituents, and I have some rights in the province. I am going to ask the minister whether I may be advised whenever a commitment is made under this expenditure in my constituency, which represents about one-tenth of the province. Whenever a commitment is made by his department I ask that I as the member be advised.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The hon. member does not expect me to give an assurance to 262 members that any act of administration under this vote be communicated to them. I could not do that unless you told me to increase my staff by a few hundred more people.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I am not asking it for all members; I am asking it for myself. I am going to exercise my full right—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That would be a bad example for the others.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I am not speaking for them; I am speaking for myself.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not know. I am ready to meet any fair and reasonable request, but I could not tie my hands in that way. These encumbrances may be made while I am away. I do not have before me every—

Mr. Black (Cumberland): The minister can leave instructions.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): —expenditure for $10 or $15 that is made. I would not sleep well at nights if I were committed to do a thing like that, knowing that I could not do it.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I do not think that I as a member of House of Commons could sleep well either if I felt that this money was being expended wrongly. I think I have a right to know when a commitment is made.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Anything you will ask the department we will give to you here or by letter. I cannot give the assurance that every time an expenditure is made in the Department of Public Works during the year I will look at the file and say: "I am not going to forget my good friend from Cumberland." Really I would not be able to bear that load all the time. My officials can do it. We have a staff that is efficient, but do not try to get this information from me personally. I could not give you that assurance.

Mr. Drew: There seems to be the question of which kind of demand is the more comfortable.

Item agreed to.

Generally—

351. Fraser river—Fifty per cent of cost of investigations to be carried out by the dominion-provincial board Fraser river basin (revote $45,000), $72,500.

Mr. Green: The hon. member for Kamloops is very much interested in this item. He has been called out of the chamber. Can the minister give us any statement with regard to the vote? It covers the work of the dominion-provincial board of the Fraser river basin.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This amount of $72,500 is required to pay the dominion government's share of the cost of investigation proposed to be carried out during 1950-51 by the dominion-provincial board, Fraser river basin. The board was established by authority of order in council P. C. 247/288 dated January 22, 1949, for the purpose of conducting an investigation to determine the improvements which might be undertaken to develop the water resources of the Fraser valley, British Columbia, in the interest of fish, wildlife, water power, flood control, irrigation, reclamation of wet lands and other beneficial purposes.

The board consists of officials of the provincial government of British Columbia and the dominion government. The dominion and the province will share the cost of the said survey and report equally. The amount asked for in 1950-51 is $72,500. This amount is to cover the dominion government's share, 50 per cent of the cost of the following work proposed to be carried out in 1950-51: basin surveys, $46,000; dominion water and power bureau gauging stations, $50,000; dominion public works, bathymetric survey, $36,500; office expenses, $10,000; miscellaneous surveys, $12,500; total $155,000. The share of the government is $72,500. They are working on a report and making these surveys covering the fields that I have just mentioned. Their work has not reached the stage where implementation would be in order. I do not remember whether a copy of the preliminary report was sent to the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra.

Mr. Green: Yes, I think it was.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This seems to be the starting of a development.

Mr. Green: It is a very worth-while work.

Item agreed to.

General—

353. National Gallery of Canada, $260,770.

Mr. Fair: I should like to say just a few words on this item. Last January one of my constituents, Allen Ronaghan, wrote me a letter which reads as follows:

I am enclosing a picture which I have cut from the Edmonton Journal. I feel that it speaks loudly enough itself without too many comments from me!

I wish that I could say I was as proud of the national gallery building as I am of the services that it renders to all Canada.

Whenever you get a chance in the house tell them that there are some "out west" who would like to see more money spent on the national gallery. Perhaps it'll humour them into taking some action!

I am,

Yours truly,

Allen Ronaghan

He sent along the picture which he had taken from the Edmonton Journal, and which I am going to send over to the minister in a moment. It is headed: "National gallery forced into corridor". Below the picture we have these words:

Officials of the national gallery of Canada say their work is hampered seriously by an acute shortage of space in the gallery building—one wing of the national museum at Ottawa, H. O. McCurry left, gallery director, and Dr. R. H. Hubbard, curator of Canadian art, kneel in a crowded corridor to examine a still-life by Canadian artist Goodridge Roberts.

He added a footnote as follows:

This picture published in other countries would be marvellous advertising for us, wouldn't it?

I do not feel that hon members, or the minister in particular, want to have pictures of this kind circulated. With Mr. Ronaghan I would like to add my word that something be done. I am of course aware that we have had a commission sitting dealing with art, literature and so forth, and they may possibly have a recommendation to make in connection with this national gallery building. I am sending this picture over to the minister for his examination.

Mr. Knowles: I should like to say a word in connection with this vote. I am glad to note that there is a slight increase in it. It still is a very small amount for us to be spending out of our national budget on this phase of culture. I note that we have gone up from $186,000 last year to $260,000 this year. I am glad to note that included in this vote for this year is an item of $15,000 for preliminary investigations regarding a proposed new national gallery building. I wonder if the minister has any statement as to any plans in connection with those investigations? What is in mind? How is it intended to spend this $15,000?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I understand this will be spent to send an expert to the United States to see how they are conducting their work in that field of endeavour.

Mr. Knowles: I would mention the fact that as it now stands we have both the national museum and the national gallery in the same building, and I believe some branches of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys are in there as well. It seems to me urgent that we get along with this, and I hope the investigations that will be made will include consideration as to ways and means of making the advantages of the national gallery available in some way in other parts of Canada as well as Ottawa.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like to add a word to endorse what has just been said by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I hope serious consideration will be given to making the advantages available far and wide throughout Canada.

Mr. Harkness: I should like to endorse that also. I see there was $60,000 last year for the purchase of works of art and $75,000 to be voted this year. I am thoroughly in agreement with the increase. Would the minister tell us how many pictures were purchased last year, and how many were by Canadian artists?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I have here the note respecting additions to the collection. Additions to the national gallery collection during the year include an important early Flemish painting, the "Pieta" by Quentin Massys; an outstanding example of the work of Auguste Renoir, "Claude et Renee"; "Family Group" by Johann Zoffany, and a bronze bust of Bernard Shaw by Jacob Epstein. Notable additions were also made to the collection of master drawings and prints. The following Canadian works have been purchased:

B. C. Binning, "Ships in Classical Calm."
Paul Emile Borduas, "Parachutes Vegetaux."
Charles F. Comfort, "Major W. A. Ogilvie, M.B.E."
Stanley Cosgrove, "Still Life with Milk Jug."
Stanley Cosgrove, "Landscape."
Maurice G. Cullen, R.C.A., "St. John's Harbour, Newfoundland."
Sylvia Daoust, A.R.C.A., "Jeune Huronne" (bronze).

Mr. Harkness: The minister need not read the whole list. I would be content if he would tell me the proportion of the vote spent on Canadian paintings.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I shall get that information for the hon. member.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Including commitments.

Item agreed to.

General—

354. Miscellaneous works not otherwise provided for, not more than $7,000 to be expended upon any one work, $300,000.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): This again introduces the interesting subject of commitments or cushions. I draw the minister's attention to the fact that here we have $300,000, and again in item 356 we have $300,000. Will the minister say a word as to how that fits in? This is a kind of over-all vote, in case the other is not sufficient.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): There is no commitment in that.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I described it as a cushion. I thought it was related to the commitments we have been talking about, which were also described as cushions. We have here, in the two items, $600,000.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): These are for small works. Every year there are a great many small works urgently pressed for such as engine hoists to assist fishermen and things of that kind which in former years were charged to a general vote; but now, owing to the restricted wording of the vote in new works to be undertaken, that is impossible. The amounts are too small to merit a special vote for each item.

Item agreed to.

General—

355. National capital planning service, $117,910.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like to have a word on this item—where we stand on it, and what obligations are being incurred, if any, and what the general status of the project is—because, after all, this a very big and far-reaching project.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The details of this expenditure are as follows:

Salaries	$67,910
Topographic model of national capital area (National Film Board)	2,500
Subscriptions to technical publications and purchase of technical books	150
Transportation of staff and technical officers within the region for reconnaissance and establishing necessary contacts	500

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): May I interrupt the minister? I did not wish to have all that detail. I was wondering however if this would not be the appropriate place to hear from the minister a brief résumé as to the status of the whole plan. What is this obligation, which is running into many millions of dollars? As I understand it, there is a whole over-all plan and, while I am not suggesting the minister should go back to describe what has happened from the beginning, I should like to know whether anything has taken place within the last year which directly or indirectly adds to our obligation. Have certain things been done, and are there certain things to be done?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This staff is preparing a master plan on the national capital area. They have filed a preliminary report, and are working on their final report. The report, when it comes in, will cover a very wide field of changes all through the area.

I have no authority in respect of the staff; they are paid out of the estimates of the Department of Public Works, but the federal district commission comes under the president of the council, who happens to be the Prime Minister.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Does that mean that the information as to the national planning commission will come from the Prime Minister's department?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That is right.

Item agreed to.

General—

356. To supplement, on approval of treasury board except where less than $500 is required, any of the appropriations of the Department of Public Works, $300,000.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Chairman, this would seem to be exactly the kind of thing I understood the minister was describing as a cushion for other commitments. Is this just put in for good measure?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Well, I did not invent this. Here is the explanation given: Unforeseen conditions are met with frequently, particularly in reconstruction and dredging works—

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): You told us that before.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): —which increase the cost of work beyond the estimated amount and consequently the appropriation voted therefor falls short. Before we had this vote, on such occasions, it was necessary to curtail the work in hand irrespective of the urgency, unless the work was under contract and the contractor agreed to complete the work and await payment until further funds were voted in the following fiscal year.

This appropriation, commenced 1938-39, is intended to supplement any appropriation of the department including special supplementary estimates, if any, and regular supplementary estimates as required, on approval of treasury board.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I think the minister read that before. We know that.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Well, I am trying to give the hon. member what I have, and what I know.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I report progress?

Mr. Green: Has the minister the figures yet for the amounts paid in respect of the Alvin building before the option was exercised? He promised this afternoon he would get them.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I gave the amount this afternoon of $1,066,000.

Mr. Green: In addition to that the minister was to get the amounts that were paid before the option was exercised.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): As to the rent. My officials have not been back to the office. I have not that information now but we will try to have it on Monday.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will take up the following bills: Bill No. 268, an act to amend the Foreign Insurance Companies Act, 1932; Bill No. 269, an act to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, 1932; Bill No. 310, an act to authorize the provision of moneys for the C.N.R.; Bill No. 303, an act to amend the Canada Shipping Act, to be referred to a committee; Bill No. 311, an act to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1938. Then we will go into supply and call one item of the Prime Minister's estimates to stand. Then we will take up the estimates of labour, and national health and welfare.

It being five minutes after eleven o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Indian Affairs branch—

54. Branch administration, $242,050.

55. Indian agencies, $2,657,990.

Reserves and trusts—

56. Administration, $98,565.

Welfare—

57. Welfare of Indians, $3,772,419.

58. Grants to agricultural exhibitions and Indian fairs, $7,325.

Education—

59. Indian education, $4,966,989.

60. Grants to residential schools, $2,488,130.

61. Grant to provide additional services to Indians of British Columbia, $100,000.

62. Fur conservation, $339,680.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

288. Departmental administration, $350,605.

Architectural branch—

289. Branch administration, $437,290.

290. Ottawa—Maintenance and operation of dominion public buildings and grounds, including rents, repairs, furniture, heating, etc., and to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $500,000, $8,617,000.

291. Maintenance and operation of dominion public buildings and grounds, other than at Ottawa, including rents, repairs, furniture, heating, etc., and to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $500,000, $12,686,315.

Construction, repairs and improvements of public buildings—

Construction, acquisition repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, public buildings listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects—

292. Newfoundland, $455,000.

293. Nova Scotia, $1,350,000.

294. Prince Edward Island, $900,000.

295. New Brunswick, $2,200,000.

296. Quebec, $8,500,000.

297. Ontario, $10,000,000.

298. Manitoba, $1,400,000.

299. Saskatchewan, $1,700,000.

300. Alberta, $2,600,000.

301. British Columbia, $3,150,000.

302. Yukon and Northwest Territories, $150,000.

303. Generally, $2,000,000.

Dominion public buildings—

Improvements and repairs and to authorize commitments against future years in the total amount of $800,000, as follows—

304. Newfoundland (commitment authority $100,000), $300,000.

305. Maritime provinces generally (commitment authority $100,000), $600,000.

306. Quebec (commitment authority $100,000), $1,000,000.

307. Ontario (commitment authority $100,000), $1,000,000.

308. Manitoba (commitment authority $50,000), $225,000.

309. Saskatchewan (commitment authority $50,000), $295,000.

310. Alberta (commitment authority $50,000), $250,000.

311. British Columbia (commitment authority $50,000), $525,000.

312. Public buildings generally (commitment authority $200,000), $300,000.

Engineering branch—

313. Branch administration, $352,885.

314. Engineering, including salaries of engineers, clerks, etc., $1,743,094.

Dredging—

315. General superintendence, $16,635.

316. Newfoundland, $764,200.

317. Maritime provinces, $1,694,000.

318. Ontario and Quebec, $1,679,264.

319. Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories, $389,000.

320. British Columbia and Yukon, $722,800.

Maintenance and operation of graving docks, locks and dams, etc.—

321. Champlain graving dock, $168,510.

322. Esquimalt graving dock, $131,170.

323. Esquimalt old dry dock, $9,000.

324. Lorne graving dock, $179,345.

325. Selkirk—repair slip, $6,000.

326. Locks and dams, $312,115.

327. Snagboats, $106,270.

Maintenance and operation of roads and bridges—

328. Burlington channel bridge, $93,950.

329. Kingston, La Salle causeway, $50,275.

330. New Westminster bridge, $65,620.

331. Towards international bridge over the St. Croix river between St. Stephen, N.B., and Calais, Me., the state of Maine to pay a like amount (revote), $10,000.

332. Generally, $97,498.

Construction, repairs and improvements—harbours and rivers—

Construction, acquisition, repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, harbour and river works listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects—

333. Newfoundland, $1,100,000.

334. Nova Scotia, $3,500,000.

335. Prince Edward Island, $1,300,000.

336. New Brunswick, $3,250,000.

337. Quebec, $7,000,000.

338. Ontario, $5,000,000.

339. Manitoba, $398,000.

340. Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories, $228,500.

341. British Columbia and Yukon, $4,200,000.

Harbours and rivers generally—for maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, and to authorize commitments against future years in the total amount of $610,000, as follows:

342. Newfoundland (commitment authority $100,000), $400,000.

343. Nova Scotia (commitment authority $100,000), $600,000.

344. Prince Edward Island (commitment authority $35,000), $135,000.

345. New Brunswick (commitment authority $65,000), $200,000.

346. Quebec (commitment authority $125,000), $600,000.

347. Ontario (commitment authority $75,000), $350,000.

348. Manitoba (commitment authority $25,000), $60,000.

349. Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories (commitment authority $10,000), $25,000.

350. British Columbia and Yukon (commitment authority $75,000), $425,000.

Generally—

351. Fraser river—50 per cent of cost of investigations to be carried out by the dominion-provincial board Fraser river basin (revote $45,000), $72,500.

352. Protection works generally—to provide for remedial works where damages are caused by, or endanger, navigation or federal government structures, $750,000.

General—

353. National Gallery of Canada, $260,770.

354. Miscellaneous works not otherwise provided for, not more than $7,000 to be expended upon any one work, $300,000.

355. National capital planning service, $117,910.

356. To supplement, on approval of treasury board except where less than $500 is required, any of the appropriations of the Department of Public Works, $300,000.

357. To provide for balances required to complete any projects undertaken in previous fiscal years and for which no specific provision is made in the fiscal year 1950-51, $150,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 19, 1950

The house met at eleven o'clock.

THE LATE JOHN R. MacNICOL

DEATH OF FORMER MEMBER FOR DAVENPORT—EXPRESSIONS OF REGRET AND SYMPATHY

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I realize that it is not customary to refer to the passing of persons who were formerly members of this house. However, in a few cases exceptions should be made, and I believe the sudden death of John R. MacNicol, the former member for Davenport, should be one of those cases.

I was shocked to learn of Mr. MacNicol's passing. For the last few months we have been corresponding with respect to a project which was very dear to him, and as a matter of fact I was in the process of acknowledging a letter he had written me only last Friday when I heard of his death. As I am sure all hon. members will agree, for many years Mr. MacNicol was a beloved and revered figure in this house. He was first elected as a Conservative in 1930, and was re-elected continuously until the general election of 1949. I suppose Mr. MacNicol was one of the most travelled members of parliament. When the house was not in session he was usually off to acquaint himself with various parts of our country and learn of the problems of those living in other provinces and territories. As a result of his travels he acquired a vast store of knowledge on matters relating to irrigation and the development of our resources generally, which he put to very good use on his return to the house.

It can be said of Mr. MacNicol, I think, that at least among members of parliament he counted none but friends. Those who knew him were struck by his kind and gentle manner, by his good nature, and by his sense of service not only to his own constituents of Davenport but to all Canadians everywhere.

On behalf of my colleagues on this side of the house I should like to express to the leader of the party to which Mr. MacNicol belonged our sincere sympathy.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a fitting tribute to our late friend John R. MacNicol that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) should have varied the ordinary custom to indicate the regret felt in every part of the house, as in every part of Canada, at the passing of a truly great Canadian.

In many ways John R. MacNicol was a unique figure. He was extremely loyal to the party in which he believed and of which he was a member; he had served that party in its highest offices, but in his untiring efforts to advance the best interests of this country he continued to make recommendations for the development of our resources, the conservation of our soil, and so on, only in the hope that the dominion government, the provincial governments or the municipal governments concerned, without regard to political point of view, might carry out the plans in which he believed.

As the Prime Minister has said, of those members who knew him over the years each one was a friend. Mr. MacNicol was untiring in his efforts to encourage recognition of the possibilities of increasing the productive capacity of our country, by reclamation, by conservation, by irrigation in western Canada, by power development in the maritime provinces, and generally by the development of our great resources.

Mr. MacNicol was always proud of Toronto. He never failed to express his pride in what Toronto was to him, and what he believed it would be in the years ahead. But he was equally anxious at all times to serve every part of this country. As has already been stated, between sessions he visited every part of Canada in an effort to encourage the furthering of those plans in which he believed. He will be greatly missed by all who knew him, and by Canadians everywhere who were encouraged by his bright vision of the future. While certainly not a young man at the time of his passing, that vision and the prospects ahead had never been dimmed; his eyes were always on that bright horizon.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I join with the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) in expressing regret at the passing of Mr. MacNicol. The seating arrangements in parliament threw us together, and for two parliaments we sat side by side. I got to know Mr. MacNicol well. Each session we looked forward to the report that he would make of his travels during the recess. Speaking as one who represents a prairie constituency, I know that I express the appreciation of the people in Alberta and Saskatchewan, perhaps Saskatchewan particularly, for the great interest he took in the welfare of the communities adjacent to the great rivers, and his untiring efforts on behalf of the irrigation plans that have been discussed over the years.

Mr. MacNicol lived a full life. I sometimes think there is much to be thankful for when a man lives a full life, as he did, and passes as he passed. Spared a long period of illness, in the full vigour of his intellect, and deeply interested, as the Prime Minister has indicated, in the schemes which he supported, he has passed to his reward. It recalls to all of us that ancient phrasing of the Book of Common Prayer, "In the midst of life we are in death".

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, we should like to associate ourselves with the tributes that have been paid to the late Mr. MacNicol, and to express our sincere regret at his sudden passing. We learned to love and admire the fine qualities of this great man. We in the west particularly were grateful to him for the way in which he interpreted the east to the west and the west to the east; and he contributed greatly to national and international understanding and good will.

We believe that Mr. MacNicol was instrumental in inducing much development in the west. He was one of the few men I knew who really understood how important it was that the west be developed. He recognized how important its development would be as a market for eastern manufacturers, and he spent a great deal of time trying to establish various types of works in the west that would help us to get the type of development we needed. We loved him for what he was—a sincere, honourable, fine gentleman.

Mr. Jean François Pouliot (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, the tributes paid to the memory of Mr. John Ritchie MacNicol were fitting and well deserved. I knew him well and liked him. He was an excellent member of parliament, spending his time during the session either in the house or in his office getting information for his summer travels. He was more than a traveller; he was an explorer and prospector. He never missed an opportunity to improve his knowledge about Canada, his beloved country; and he never missed an occasion to help anyone. As one of his colleagues, I remember many instances of his political courage; he was most useful in his own way. I cannot forget it. He was scholarly and well informed. He was endowed with a high degree of public spirit, and his career was useful not only to his constituents, not only to the city of Toronto which he loved, not only to the province of Ontario, but to the whole country. Whenever he had a practical suggestion to make, he looked so happy. He looked happier only when he had support for his suggestion.

Sir, I must say that although some of our political beliefs were different, we were very good friends, just as I was with the late Tommy Church, who was a close friend of Mr. MacNicol. Tommy used to call Mr. MacNicol "John R.," and so did I. John R. used to call Mr. Church "Tommy", as we all did. They were fine men; they represent the glorious past of the Conservative party.

Mr. MacNicol has occupied high positions in the party. If I recall aright, he was president of the dominion Conservative association, and presided over one of the conventions that selected a leader. He saw to it that there was a fine book published with the names and pictures of all the delegates. He gave me one.

May I be permitted to recall one incident in particular when Mr. MacNicol helped me a great deal. It was during the difficult sessions of the civil service committee. I had some difficulty with my Conservative colleagues who wanted some information to be considered confidential. I spoke of it to someone who spoke to somebody else, and the somebody else spoke to Mr. MacNicol, who saw the leader of his party. Things were arranged so that we could get the information required, but it took a lot of good will and good disposition. Mr. MacNicol was always there whenever he was needed to give a hand to his colleagues.

I must recall to hon. members that his family and Mr. Mackenzie King's family were very close friends, and tributes were paid to Mr. MacNicol in the house by the former prime minister. I cannot do otherwise than tell my leader that I am delighted that he has paid such a fine tribute to the memory of a great member of parliament and a great Canadian. I congratulate the leader of the opposition, the leader of the C.C.F. group (Mr. Coldwell) and the leader of the Social Credit group (Mr. Low) for having also spoken so well about a beloved colleague who has just passed to the great beyond.

Mr. David A. Croll (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris) and the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Hellyer) I wish to pay tribute to the former member for Davenport, whom I knew in this house and outside of it as a most kindly gentleman. He was a man of wide interests, extending far beyond his own constituency, and of great attainments, which he displayed in the house on many occasions. To me he exemplified true Canadianism. He was greatly respected throughout the country, and was particularly loved in the city of Toronto. I am sure the house will agree with me that he will be missed in the Canadian scene. His passing is a matter of personal loss to the people of the city of Toronto. He will be particularly missed there.

Mr. W. D. Wylie (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, as a backbencher may I concur in everything that has been said by those who have preceded me in paying tribute to a great Canadian. The late John R. MacNicol was always a booster for the development of our natural resources, both in the east and in the west; but he was particularly interested in irrigation projects in Alberta.

In the passing of Mr. MacNicol we in southeastern Alberta have lost a great eastern booster for the development of our irrigation projects. He will be sadly missed by every one of us in that area; but his memory will be cherished and will give us added strength to carry on where he has left off, until our dreams are realized and we shall have water flowing over more of the dry areas of the western plains.

May I extend to his relatives my deepest sympathy.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST READING—SENATE BILL

Bill No. 312, to incorporate the Association of Kinsmen Clubs.—Mr. Benidickson.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SEVEN ISLANDS INDIAN RESERVE—CONSTRUCTION OF SCHOOL

Mr. Courtemanche:

1. What are the names of the persons submitting tenders for the construction of a school on the Seven Islands Indian reserve, county of Saguenay?
2. What is the amount of each of the above-mentioned tenders?
3. To whom and at what price was the contract awarded?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce):

1 and 2.

Contractor—Address—Amount of Tender.

Lucien Tremblay, Riviere Portneuf, Que., $312,000.

North Shore Construction Company Limited, 307 Castle building, Montreal, Que., $359,450.

Frs. Jobin Inc. 88 Chemin St. Louis, Quebec, P.Q., $361,400.

A. Deslauriers et Fils Ltée., 68 rue Lalemant, Quebec, P.Q., $424,300.

Jos. Eugene Tremblay, 127 rue de la Ronde, Quebec, P.Q., $433,000.

A sixth tender was received after the closing date for receiving tenders, from the Sept Iles Development and Construction Limited, in the amount of $348,176.

3. Lucien Tremblay, Riviere Portneuf, Que., $312,000.

CO-ORDINATOR OF PUBLIC PROJECTS

Mr. Knowles:

1. On what date was Lieutenant Colonel the Hon. Jules Andre Brillant appointed co-ordinator of public projects, and on what date did he cease to hold this position?
2. On what date was H. W. Lea appointed co-ordinator of public projects, and on what date did he cease to hold this position?
3. What persons were appointed as acting co-ordinators of public projects, and what were the dates of the tenure of each such appointment?
4. How much was paid to (a) Lieutenant Colonel the Hon. Jules Andre Brillant; (b) H. W. Lea; (c) each of the acting co-ordinators (i) in salary; (ii) expenses?
5. Are there any reports on the work of (a) Lieutenant Colonel the Hon. Jules Andre Brillant; (b) H. W. Lea; (c) each of the acting co-ordinators on their work in connection with the co-ordinating of public projects?
6. If so, are such reports available, and how may they be obtained?
7. Are there any reports on the work of the regional councils appointed for the purpose of recommending public projects? If so, are such reports available, and how may they be obtained?
8. Are there any reports on the work of the permanent executive staff of the above councils? If so, are such reports available, and how may they be obtained?

Mr. Prudham:

1. Appointed February 1, 1945, terminated August 1, 1949; Hon. J. A. Brillant, acting as co-ordinator of public projects for Quebec province only, from the date that H. W. Lea was appointed co-ordinator of public projects.

2. Appointed July 2, 1945, terminated May 31, 1948.

3. (a) G. D. Mallory, appointed June 1, 1948, terminated June 15, 1949.

(b) H. G. Cochrane, appointed June 16, 1949, terminated January 18, 1950.

4. (a) (i) Nil; (ii) nil; (b) (i) $21,170.40; (ii) $2,611.96; (c) G. D. Mallory (i) nil; (ii) $39.80; (d) H. G. Cochrane (i) $4,425.41; (ii) $649.75.

5 and 6. No formal report on the work of the co-ordinators of public projects is available other than that contained in the annual report of the department of reconstruction and supply for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1949, under the heading "Public Projects Branch". Monthly departmental reports of the work of that branch back to the year 1945, are contained in the files of the former public projects branch of the department of reconstruction and supply, but they are not available for publication.

7. Yes, but they are not available for publication.

8. No.

BOUCHARD PLANT, STE. THERESE, QUE.

Mr. Bertrand:

1. What was the scale of hourly wages for each class of work at the Bouchard plant, Ste. Therese, prior to April 1, 1950?
2. Has there been any wage reduction since April 1, 1950?
3. If so, what is the new wage scale, and what classes of work are affected?
4. By whom were the wage changes authorized, and what reasons?

Mr. Blanchette:

1.

Classification	Prior to April 1, 1950 Ste. Therese Rates
Carpenter	$1.00 p.h.
Painters	.95 "
M.T. drivers	.75 "
Motor mechanic	.90 "
Electrician	1.05 "
Lineman	.90 "
Heavy equipment operator	1.05 "
Labourer	.75 "
R.R. conductor	1.22 "
R.R. engineer	1.22 "
R.R. trainman	1.20 "
Trackman	.87 "
R.R. fireman	1.02 "
Plumbers and steamfitters	1.05 "
Machinist	1.00 "

2, 3 and 4. The Ste. Therese rates, which are prevailing rates, are at present under review by the Department of Labour, but have not yet been changed.

GANDER, NFLD., AIRPORT RADIO STAFF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Higgins:

1. Are the radio staff employees at Gander airport to be given full credit for past services as recognized by the government of Newfoundland?
2. If so, what steps are being taken in this respect?

Mr. Chevrier:

1. Yes.

2. Action completed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS—NEWFOUNDLAND SERVICES

Mr. Higgins:

1. Have any arrangements been made by the Canadian National Railways to purchase new ships for its Newfoundland services?
2. If so, how many, and when?

[Mr. Prudham.]

Mr. Chevrier:

The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. The Canadian National Railways have under consideration the purchase of one additional ship for service on the east coast of Newfoundland. It is expected that the specifications will be completed and order placed in the near future. In addition, there is now under consideration a proposed combination cargo-passenger-automobile ferry for service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques, which when received should release one and possibly two vessels presently operating in the North Sydney-Port aux Basques service to augment the Newfoundland coastal service.

2. See answer to No. 1.

COMMUNIST ACTIVITIES

Mr. Diefenbaker:

Does the Minister of Justice send regular or any reports regarding communist activities that come to the knowledge of the security branch of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to the attorneys general of the respective provinces, to which such reports would be applicable?

Mr. Garson: The Minister of Justice does not send regular reports concerning communist activities that come to the knowledge of the security branch of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to the attorneys general of the provinces; for officers commanding the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the six provinces policed by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police under contract are responsible for keeping the respective attorneys general informed regarding communist activities, and in other provinces liaison is maintained by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police with the respective provincial police forces in matters relating to subversive activities.

PYREX OVENWARE

Mr. Matthews:

1. What is the rate of tariff protection, if any, enjoyed by pyrex ovenware imported into Canada?
2. Who are the manufacturers of pyrex ovenware and who are the distributors for Canada?

Mr. McCann: 1. "Pyrex" glass ovenware is subject to entry under tariff item 326g. Articles covered by this item are free of customs duty under the British preferential tariff, and are subject to duty as the most-favoured-nation tariff rate of 15 per cent ad valorem when they are produced in and imported from the United States or other most-favoured-nation countries.

2. (a) Corning Glass Works, Corning, N.Y.; Corning Glass Works of Canada Limited, Leaside, Ont. (b) No information available.

GRAIN PURCHASES BY BREWING AND DISTILLING COMPANIES

Mr. Catherwood:

1. Has the government a record of the amount of grain purchased by brewing and distilling companies in Canada in each of the years 1947, 1948, 1949?

2. If so, what types of grain were purchased and what amount of each, in bushels?

Mr. McCann: No record is kept of the amount of grain purchased by brewing and distilling companies, but the following shows the grain used. These figures are only available in pounds.

Distilleries

Fiscal years	Barley Malt
Mar. 31, 1947	38,118,151
Mar. 31, 1948	49,997,856
Mar. 31, 1949	31,699,705
	Corn
Mar. 31, 1947	91,807,930
Mar. 31, 1948	248,056,463
Mar. 31, 1949	176,368,186
	Rye
Mar. 31, 1947	24,545,992
Mar. 31, 1948	25,694,278
Mar. 31, 1949	30,189,564
	Wheat
Mar. 31, 1947	108,082,769
Mar. 31, 1948	16,094,056
Mar. 31, 1949	1,971,636
	Other Grains
Mar. 31, 1947	25,090,790
Mar. 31, 1948	18,522,147
Mar. 31, 1949	13,490,999

Breweries

	Malt
Mar. 31, 1947	318,185,638
Mar. 31, 1948	349,087,636
Mar. 31, 1949	360,167,623
	Other commodities (generally corn or rice)
Mar. 31, 1947	4,221,725
Mar. 31, 1948	5,300,170
Mar. 31, 1949	4,606,844

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

PENSIONS—OLD AND BLIND

Mr. Knowles:

1. What was the total amount paid to (a) old age pensioners, and (b) blind pensioners, during the three-year period from April 1, 1946, to March 31, 1949, in each province, and also in the Northwest Territories?

2. What was the total amount spent by each province in administering old age and blind pensions for the period April 1, 1946, to March 31, 1950?

3. What was the total amount spent by the federal government in administering old age and blind pensions for the period April 1, 1946, to March 31, 1950?

Inquiries of the Ministry

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEDNESDAY EVENING SITTINGS

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister) moved:

That on Wednesday, June 21, 1950, and every Wednesday thereafter until the end of the present session, the sittings shall in every respect be under the same rules as are now provided for other days.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

REPORTS TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—STEEP ROCK IRON MINES, FEDERAL ASSISTANCE—CARLETON COUNTY, N.B., RURAL MAIL SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the Secretary of State to look into the possibility of getting certain returns down for me which are one, two and three months old. The first motion is to be found in Hansard of March 29, at page 1349, relating to unemployment; the second one will be found in Hansard of April 19, at page 1689, relating to Steep Rock, and the third one will be found in Hansard of May 24, at page 2803, relating to certain post office contracts.

Hon. F. G. Bradley (Secretary of State): I shall be glad to facilitate the obtaining of that information.

FISHERIES

GRAND BANKS—OPERATION OF FOREIGN TRAWLERS —REPORT OF SALT COD FISHERY INVESTIGATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. F. Higgins (St. John's East): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Is the minister aware of conditions on the grand banks of Newfoundland, in that trawlers of foreign nations are causing damage to property and endangering the lives of Newfoundland and Nova Scotia fishermen fishing there? If so, will the minister outline what he proposes to do in the matter? What is the result of the recent visit to Newfoundland of the special investigators sent by the department?

Hon. R. W. Mayhew (Minister of Fisheries): The hon. member for St. John's East followed his usual practice and sent me notice of his question, which is appreciated. We are aware of the problems in this area. The area itself is international waters, and control would require an international agreement among the various countries.

We are asking the captains of the Canadian fishing vessels to keep records and give us evidence of any destruction of or interference with the Canadian fishing gear. Further, we intend to discuss the problem with European countries this fall when our representative goes to Europe on other business, so that we might ultimately have a conference on the rules of the road in the northwest Atlantic. We are also sending our largest vessel, the Cygnus, into that area to give what protection we can to the Canadian fishermen and also to their vessels, but I might point out that the vessel is not going as a policeman; it is going to render assistance.

The hon. member's second question was:

What is the result of the recent visit to Newfoundland of the special investigators sent by the department?

The representatives returned from Newfoundland a few days ago and have prepared their report. They first submitted it to the fisheries prices support board. I have received it verbally, but not officially. The committee met on Friday, and again on Saturday. I think they will be making a full report today. This report will then go to my colleagues for consideration, along with my recommendation, and when it has been dealt with by cabinet, will be presented in due course.

The trawler policy of the government was outlined in the statement that I made some time ago and has not been changed to date.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION TO MEET CERTAIN EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEE OF SECURITIES AND INDEBTEDNESS

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 310, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital indebtedness incurred by the Canadian National Railways system during the calendar year 1950, and to authorize the guarantee by His Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Power to issue security for capital expenditures.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I want to ask the minister one or two questions with regard to clause 2. Looking at the schedule of figures set out I notice that the first line reads: "Additions and betterments (less retirements)." Will the minister explain the phrase "less retirements"?

[Mr. Mayhew.]

Mr. Abbott: Yes. The additions and betterments all told are $30 million odd, as indicated in the statement. Acquisition of securities, $717,000, I think relates to the point which my hon. friend has raised.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): No; I did not make myself clear. The first line says: "Additions and betterments (less retirements)". I want the meaning of that phrase.

Mr. Abbott: I beg your pardon. There are equipment and equipment retirements, $3,771,980, which have been fully amortized out of depreciation.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): When the minister says "equipment retirements" I am not sure that I am quite clear as to what he means. These are additions and betterments. One explanation I got, and which I am not quite clear about, was that actually there are certain recoveries from additions or betterments which turned out not to be needed and are in fact cashed in on; is that correct?

Mr. Abbott: I am afraid I shall have to inform myself on that. I am not too familiar with the operations of the Canadian National Railways. The information which I have before me is that the additions and betterments, as estimated and in the capital program of the Canadian National Railways which was before the sessional committee on railways, are $35,872,059, less equipment retirements credited, $3,771,980. The exact way in which that credit for equipment retirements is arrived at I am afraid I shall have to inform myself on and give it to my hon. friend later.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): There is a figure lower down which I am also a little confused about. The total of authorized expenditures, the minister will see, is $42 million odd. Then at the bottom of the page we come to this item: "Amount estimated to be available from reserves for depreciation and debt discount amortization, $17,935,000," which is a deduction. My question is this. Depreciation I think we understand, but I would like to be quite clear as to the figure of debt discount amortization. I should like to know what it exactly means. Second, I should like to know whether in making this deduction the depreciation, for example, has any relation, let us say, to the particular additions and betterments that are being made, or whether it is an arbitrary figure just taken out of the general depreciation and used as a means of reducing the $42 million to $24 million. I think that is a matter of some substance, and I should like to understand it better.

Mr. Abbott: I can only assume that the usual practice would be followed, that the railway is taking depreciation on its depreciable assets at the appropriate rate, and that there is out of the depreciation reserves cash available to purchase all new equipment which, if it were not available, would have to be obtained by additional borrowings.

While I am on this point I should like to clarify the answer to a question, which was given by my parliamentary assistant to my hon. friend on the resolution stage, as to the method of financing additional capital for Trans-Canada Air Lines. I think he said at that time that such additions were included in the requirements of the Canadian National Railways. As to that he was misinformed. The position with respect to the Trans-Canada Air Lines is this. As the committee is aware, the capital of $25 million was provided by the Canadian National Railways. Up to the present time additional capital requirements have been financed out of available depreciation reserves in the Trans-Canada Air Lines. Should these amounts be insufficient at some future date, it would be necessary either to obtain additional capital for the Trans-Canada Air Lines presumably from the Canadian National Railways or to obtain authorization to borrow, as is the case under this statute.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): As to what the minister said about Trans-Canada Air Lines, I take it that that point may arise again when we get to section 10. Coming back to section 2, what the minister said about equipment does not seem to be relevant to this figure of $17 million about which I asked, because we have just above that a special item for equipment. I shall not delay the procedure at the present time, but would ask the minister to let me have further information with respect to depreciation and debt discount, because I think we should be satisfied that we are not giving ourselves in this instance any easement that is not fully justified.

Mr. Abbott: I shall be happy to do that. I notice from the information before me that for last year the comparable figure showed that there was estimated to be available $15,738,000 from the same reserve. I had assumed that all that detail had been discussed in the standing committee, and that in the committee of the whole I would be required to give only a general figure. However, I shall get the information for the hon. member and see that it is furnished to him.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Is any provision being made in this large appropriation of more than $42 million for the betterment of and additions to railways in Nova Scotia, having special reference to the condition of the road from New Glasgow to Cape Breton? This road is noted for having the poorest alignment of any road in all Canada, having regard to the amount of traffic it carries. It is necessary that there be first class railway facilities in this district in the years just ahead.

Mr. Abbott: Here again I am afraid I am not in a position to give that information. The committee will recall that the method followed with respect to C.N.R. financing is that its capital budget is placed before the sessional committee which deals with railways owned and operated by the government. When the budget is approved by that committee, the Minister of Finance then comes to the House of Commons asking for an appropriation act to authorize the necessary borrowing to cover those requirements. It is usually expected that the details as to the places where capital equipment will be used will be ascertained in the committee when the railway officials are in attendance. I have before me of course details as to the equipment to be purchased out of the borrowing to be authorized by this bill. I have not available at the moment details as to where that equipment is to be used. I could get it, if required.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Some of us did not find it convenient to attend the sittings of that committee. It appears to me that the minister should have the particulars of this large capital appropriation so that he might advise the committee as to where these major expenditures will be made.

Mr. Abbott: I can do it, of course. I have complete details of how the money is to be spent, but I have not details as to where locomotives, flat cars, refrigerator cars and the like are to be operated. This has nothing to do with the improvement of rail facilities or roadbeds in various parts of Canada. The section now before us relates entirely to the acquisition of additional rolling stock. I would suppose that that rolling stock would be available for use in any part of Canada.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Before this section is permitted to pass I should like to know if any provision is being made for the completion of the Guysborough railway. This matter has been before the house in one way or another ever since I have been here, and has always appeared in its most encouraging form just before elections. Has any provision been made for the completion of the Guysborough railway in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Abbott: Not in this bill.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Can the minister tell us whether any provision is being made?

Mr. Abbott: Not being the Minister of Transport, I have not that information. Perhaps the hon. member could get it from the Minister of Transport. My responsibility under this bill is to get authorization to borrow the money required to do the things set out in this section. Of course I shall bring the hon. member's question to the attention of the Minister of Transport, but I would not be in a position to answer it in a discussion on this bill. I could not under this bill give explanations of the ordinary operations of the Canadian National Railways in any part of Canada. I suggest that perhaps it is unreasonable to expect me to do so.

Mr. Adamson: The minister has said that he would give details as to the rolling stock. I suggest that that should be done. I was a member of that committee, and I recall the debate with Mr. Gordon on this matter of new rolling stock, particularly new tractive power. While Mr. Gordon would not commit himself definitely as to the over-all increase in efficiency of new rolling stock, he was most emphatic about the increased efficiency of diesel tractive power over steam power. I am sure the committee would be interested in having the full details.

Mr. Abbott: The following table will give that information:

Details of the item—new equipment, $8,751,400
Equipment for which financial provision is required during 1950:
3 1,000 h.p. diesel locomotives (M. & S.C. Railway)
4 3,000 h.p. diesel road locomotives
20 1,000 h.p. diesel switch locomotives
18 600 h.p. diesel road switchers
22 600 h.p. diesel road switchers
100 covered hopper cars
3 depressed flat cars
25 automobile cars (Newfoundland)
60 30-ton box cars (Newfoundland)
35 de luxe air-conditioned coaches
5 mail and express cars
3 mail cars (Newfoundland)
50 standard baggage cars
4 standard baggage cars (G.T.W.)
3 standard baggage cars (Newfoundland)
10 express refrigerator cars (Newfoundland)
6 sleepers (Newfoundland)
50 sleepers
7 cafe parlour cars
10 diners
3 electric locomotives (suburban service)
6 multiple unit cars (suburban service)
15 multiple unit car trailers

Mr. Black (Cumberland): It is important to Nova Scotia to know the policy of the government and the department as to the introduction of diesel power in those areas where coal mines depend so greatly upon use of coal by the railways. Is the minister able to give any specific information with respect to that policy as it is applied to Nova Scotia?

[Mr. Black (Cumberland).]

Mr. Abbott: I am afraid I am not. I should think it would be obvious that questions about railway policy might be answered more readily in the first instance by the management of the railways, and then possibly by the Minister of Transport—although he is not directly responsible for the policy of the Canadian National Railways. The persons responsible are the president and directors. Each year there is an opportunity to discuss those matters before the special committee. I realize such discussion is not always possible because all hon. members are not members of that committee. I should think if anything were needed to illustrate the fallacy of entrusting all functions of the house to committees, this might be one instance. I am afraid I have not the information asked. I am not qualified to answer detailed questions as to the policy of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I disagree with the minister to this extent, that when he comes to the House of Commons asking for an appropriation running into many millions of dollars, hon. members are entitled to know the purposes for which the borrowing will be made, and to what use it will be applied.

Mr. Abbott: That information is set out in section 2 of the bill.

Mr. Gillis: I was a member of the special committee, and the matter to which the hon. member for Cumberland has referred was thoroughly discussed before it. Indeed, it was the first time since I have been a member that I have noted a realistic approach to the problem made by any official in any department.

The present chairman of the Canadian National Railways, referring to this question of the use of maritime coal, did tell the committee that in a survey they have made they have set out what is now known as an economic area for the use of Canadian coal so far as the Canadian National Railways are concerned. He told us that as it relates to the maritime provinces that economic area is from Sydney, Nova Scotia to Coteau, Quebec. Their experience this year in seeking to secure coal from the operators in Nova Scotia was that they could not supply that coal within a million tons. This was an abnormal year because of the depletion of stockpiles.

This matter was discussed at some length in the committee, and I am satisfied that the present policy of the Canadian National is to use Canadian coal wherever practicable. It is practicable to use Canadian coal economically in the areas Mr. Gordon set out before the committee. I am convinced that in the marketing of Canadian coal as much fault lies with the operator as with the Canadian National Railways. It is largely a matter of price. I am satisfied also that if the mechanics outlined by the chairman of the Canadian National in relation to the purchase of Canadian coal are followed out in the future it will be found that there is an economic market for Nova Scotia coal.

I was a member of that committee, and since it met I have discussed this matter publicly and have broadcast on it. I am going to continue to urge the use of as much Nova Scotia coal as is possible and economical in that area set out by the Canadian National president. I rose to make these few remarks because I know the matter was thoroughly discussed in the committee. I am satisfied with the attitude taken by the Canadian National, but I am not satisfied with the attitude of the operators.

Mr. Adamson: Does the minister know what percentage of this equipment will be made in Canada, and what the Canadian content will be?

Mr. Abbott: I am informed that it is all to be made here. As with other machinery and equipment, there will be a substantial import content in connection with certain items.

Mr. Adamson: What is the situation with regard to the manufacture in Canada of this type of equipment? I am referring particularly to diesels, turbine engines and modern tractor cars.

Mr. Abbott: I would not want to be held to this, but I am told that the import content is 20 to 25 per cent. Diesel locomotives are now being made by Montreal Locomotive Works, and will shortly be made by General Motors Diesel Company in Ontario. I have not at hand any specific information as to the exact import content, but I think it must necessarily vary according to the type of equipment.

Section agreed to.

Sections 3 and 4 agreed to.

Section 5—Power to aid other companies.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like the minister to explain the wording in the first three lines of this section, which is as follows:

> The national company may aid and assist, in any manner not inconsistent with the terms of section 2, any other or others of the said companies and railways.

Is that a roundabout way of saying that all the railways in the national railway system, which is the phrase used in section 2, may be assisted? It seems to me a rather odd and not very clear way of expressing it.

Mr. Abbott: I never gave consideration to it until my hon. friend raised the point. I am told that this is the identical language which has been used in successive bills for a number of years. It would seem to indicate that the Canadian National Railways may assist its subsidiary companies by virtue of the provisions of this bill, provided that such assistance does not contravene the provisions of section 2, which is the section giving authorization to issue securities.

Mr. Fraser: Would that take in Trans-Canada Air Lines?

Mr. Abbott: No. I am informed that T.C.A. is financed out of the $25 million initial capital, and I am informed also—my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce will correct me if I am wrong—that capital requirements up to the present time have been financed out of depreciation reserves. I indicated a moment ago that if further capital were required it would require an amendment to the T.C.A. Act.

Mr. Fraser: But if they required running expenses, could they take that from the Canadian National?

Mr. Abbott: No.

Mr. Fraser: Are you sure of that?

Mr. Abbott: I am sorry; I did not quite catch my hon. friend's question.

Mr. Fraser: The minister mentioned that the T.C.A. could not get any capital from the C.N.R., but could the T.C.A. get operating expenses?

Mr. Abbott: It would be subject to a special vote to cover any deficit, in the same way as with the Canadian National.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): We are voting large sums of money, and the minister has told us on several occasions, very frankly I admit, that he just does not know the details of what we are asking for.

Mr. Abbott: I must take exception to that remark. I know the details of the items for which the money is being asked, but I do not know the details of the operations of the Canadian National Railways. I suggest that that is not relevant to the bill we are considering at this time.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I wish the minister would let me finish. On a number of occasions when we asked the Minister of Transport for information he told us that they were matters for the finance department. This morning we are asking questions and we are told that they are matters for the transport department. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has kindly helped us over one or two jumps. I want to point out, as the hon. member for Cumberland has said, that we are being hampered here because the other member of the team is not present. Previously he has referred us to the Minister of Finance in a general way. I am not suggesting that the Minister of Finance needs to know all the details, but I am suggesting that he should know the details of what we are asking for.

Mr. Abbott: I am prepared to answer any relevant question on every section of the bill now before the committee, but I am not prepared, nor am I qualified, to answer questions dealing with the general operations of the Canadian National Railways or Trans-Canada Air Lines. I suggest respectfully that this is not the time to ask those questions. If any information is wanted on the particular sections of this bill I am prepared to give it. If I have not the answer today, I will get it. But so far a number of questions have not been directed to these particular sections.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am sorry to go back—

Mr. Abbott: I do not even know the section we are on at the moment.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The questions I asked were with regard to depreciation and amortization, and I suggest that they are relevant.

Mr. Abbott: And I promised to get the information.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am content with that. I think we must be perfectly clear. We asked for information which we should be able to get now, and we let the section go through, whether wisely or unwisely I will not say. But that concession was made.

Section agreed to.

On section 6—Guarantee.

Mr. Adamson: There is $26 million to be financed by one or more equipment trust issues which I understand are guaranteed by the federal government without reservation. Will these be issued through a trust company and be payable in Canadian funds, or are we to borrow money from United States sources?

Mr. Abbott: The technique followed in connection with equipment trust certificates is well known to my hon. friend. This type of certificate originated some years ago in the United States and ordinarily would not be guaranteed by the dominion government. They are secured by a specific pledge, a charge on specific assets in favour of a trustee; and the lender on those securities relies upon the specific charge he has on the locomotives and rolling stock that may be specifically pledged to secure the loan. As my hon. friend knows, they are considered a fairly high grade type of security. As to whether they would be issued in Canadian or United States funds, that would depend upon the market in which it was proposed to buy the equipment. In this case my understanding is that these equipment trust certificates are to be issued in Canadian funds.

Mr. Adamson: Then I gather that the method of repayment is that for each ton mile or each traction mile travelled by the locomotive, a certain amount is amortized or written off for the payment of the equipment trust certificate; in other words, it is a self-liquidating form of security. What is the practice now with these securities; for how long do they run?

Mr. Abbott: I am afraid I did not inform myself as to that. I can get the information very quickly, perhaps before the committee rises.

Mr. Adamson: I think it would be interesting. I just want to know the term, and the method of repayment.

Mr. Abbott: I shall be glad to get that information.

Mr. Adamson: This was brought up in the committee, where quite a long discussion took place with Mr. Gordon and with the comptroller of the Canadian National.

Section agreed to.

Sections 7 and 8 agreed to.

On section 9—When revenue of national railway system insufficient to meet operating and income charges.

Mr. Knowles: This is the clause giving authority to vote money to meet so-called deficits in connection with current revenues. Before proceeding with what I rose to say may I make it clear that I support this bill, and I do so for two reasons. On the one hand I feel that the Canadian National is encumbered with a capital structure that makes these deficits inevitable, and therefore we have no option but to meet them. The other point is that the Canadian National, as the national railway, is called upon to give service in a good many parts of the country where it is not a profit-making operation.

Since we call upon the Canadian National to do that, we have no alternative but to pay any deficits that arise therefrom. However, when parliament is called upon to vote these sums of money, or to give authority to vote them, as is the case under section 9, it does seem to me that our questions as to the ways in which the money is spent should be answered in parliament.

I have in mind a great many questions I have asked about pensions, special allowances in lieu of pensions, and special lump sum allowances to employees of the Canadian National. In all cases but one my questions have been answered. I am grateful for the extensive information I have been given in relation to this matter. It makes it possible for me to point out the large number of Canadian National employees in receipt of pensions that are far too low, concerning which the Canadian National should do something soon. But it does seem farcical that the authorities should be prepared to answer one after another all the questions to which I shall make reference in a moment, and then give a blank with respect to one particular question.

Let me give a small amount of detail. On March 22 of this year, as reported at page 997 of Hansard, I was given specific details as to the number of employees contributing to various plans, and more particularly as to the number of retired employees drawing pensions in the brackets I indicated in my question, starting with less than $25 per month and going right up to $99.99 per month. The number in the lower brackets is really startling. In addition I asked for the number drawing pensions of $100 or more per month, and I was given the figure of 9,855. Later, on April 24, as recorded at page 1806 of Hansard, I was given a breakdown of those drawing pensions of more than $100 per month. I asked for them in various brackets going right up to $499.99 per month, and also the number drawing pensions of $500 or more per month. In all cases my questions were answered without hesitation. In the same set of questions on April 24 I went on to ask the number of retired employees in receipt of retirement allowances, including pensions from any pension plans plus supplementary allowances totalling various amounts, starting with $100 per month and going up to $500 per month or over, and again I was given the information. I find there are only eight people drawing regular pensions which include allowances supplementary to whatever pensions they may have earned. Those eight include four in the bracket between $100 and $200 per month, three in the bracket between $200 and $300 per month, and one in the bracket between $400 and $500 per month. In those cases, of course, what I was asking about had to do with regular pension payments which are received month by month or quarter by quarter, as the case may be.

I emphasize that up to this point there was no difficulty. Whatever questions I asked about pensions or special allowances were answered just as soon as the government could get the information from the Canadian National Railways. Then I moved along and on May 15, as recorded at page 2517 of Hansard, I asked further questions about special retirement allowances. In particular I asked this question:

> How many employees or officials of the Canadian National Railways, upon retirement, have been given lump sum retirement allowances (a) of $5,000 or less; (b) more than $5,000 but not more than $25,000, since January 1, 1930?

The answer to those questions was "none". I believe that is a correct answer; I am told there have been no lump sum retirement allowances in those amounts. The main point is that I got an answer. That information was given me in addition to all the detailed information I have referred to at these various pages of Hansard as to pensions and regular supplementary allowances paid to various retired employees. Well, it seemed to me only logical, since I was given all that information, that I should go a step higher.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. How does the hon. member relate all this to section 9?

Mr. Knowles: I thought I had related it in the beginning. My point is that in section 9 we are giving the authority to vote money to the Canadian National Railways to meet current deficits.

Mr. Abbott: To make advances; loans.

Mr. Knowles: To make advances; but read the last few lines of the section, which provide that these advances are to be paid back to the government out of revenues of the company, except for any insufficiency—

Mr. Abbott: Or out of a vote of this house.

Mr. Knowles: —which is to be made up by a vote of this house. My point is that this is the authority for us to vote money to meet deficits.

Mr. Abbott: My hon. friend should be corrected on that. This is not the authority to vote money for deficits. That is done in another place, by an item in the estimates. This is the authority to make temporary advances out of the consolidated revenue fund to cover operating deficits.

Mr. Knowles: But it also says:

> Provided that all such amounts shall be reimbursed to the Minister of Finance from the annual revenues of the national railway system in so far as such revenues are sufficient and any insufficiency shall be provided for by subsequent deficit appropriation by parliament.

Now, perhaps we are talking about the same thing but in different language.

Mr. Abbott: My only reason for interjecting is that I have noticed the press has taken this bill as covering the annual deficit of the Canadian National Railways. I am sure that is unintentional, but it is misleading. This is an annual bill to provide for advances to Canadian National Railways. The deficit, if any, has to be voted here each year, and the practice has been to bring it forward in the supplementary estimates each year.

Mr. Knowles: But whether it is out of advances or money subsequently voted by parliament, it is some of that money that has to be used to pay these special supplementary allowances, and special retirement allowances which are paid to certain employees over and above whatever pension rights they may have earned or paid for. My contention is that if we are called upon to provide money, either as advances under this section or later by a special vote, basing my request upon this section, we should be given that information.

The point I am trying to make, is that not only is there the argument I have just expressed, but in addition there is the fact that the government readily gives all this other information relating to pensions, supplementary allowances, and retiring allowances. But when they are asked how many lump sum retirement allowances of more than $25,000 but less than $50,000 were paid, and how many above $50,000, they refuse to give any information. The Minister of Transport made a statement which occupies almost half a column in Hansard, the gist of which is that he will not answer my question. I think it is wrong to ask us to vote public money for these various purposes, and then not give us information as to how it is expended. If they had refused us all information about pensions and supplementary allowances or retirement allowances, I would still kick; but at least there would be some consistency on the part of the government in making a refusal across the board. But they give us all the information I have indicated, and refuse to answer only that one question.

Mr. Fraser: They tell us about the small fish but not the big ones.

Mr. Knowles: No, they give a good bit of information about the big fish. They tell us about people who are drawing a pension of $400 or $500 per month or over, and they say that there have been no special lump sum payments below $25,000. But so far as payments above that amount are concerned, they refuse to give us the information. I do not thing it is fair to parliament to ask us to make these advances or to vote money later, and then refuse us this information.

I want to say again—since I see some support coming from my friends to the right, and I welcome that support even though they may not agree with me in favouring the bill itself—that I support this measure for the two reasons I indicated at the start, and the fact I do support it should give me that much more right to insist that the information I have requested be given.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I must confess I am a little interested to know how the member for Winnipeg North Centre could anticipate our views, and I am wholly unaware of the differences in his mind with regard to some of the aspects of this matter. Be that as it may, I do not think the minister has correctly interpreted this section. I do not believe he has intentionally misled the house, but there are features of it which he has overlooked.

This section provides that the government may make the advances required by Canadian National Railways, and then the last part of the section provides that all such amounts shall be reimbursed to the Minister of Finance from the annual revenues of the national railway system, in so far as such revenues are sufficient, and any insufficiency shall be provided for by a subsequent deficit appropriation by parliament. I am not arguing one way or the other as to the desirability of providing for the money in this way, but I do want to emphasize what the effect is. May I say, in regard to a remark which I heard at the time the member for Winnipeg North Centre was speaking, that we are taking up a lot of time on this bill, that we are dealing with something here that is likely to involve over $40 million. I think the members of this house should know exactly what they are doing.

As to whether that amount should or should not be provided, I do not think there is going to be any debate. Certainly the amount that will be contributed by this parliament subsequently will include all items of expenditure, whatever they may be. This bill is not merely permissive legislation which allows the advance to be made, which advances then are to be reimbursed to such extent as they can be reimbursed out of revenues of the railway. It goes further, it says that any insufficiency shall be provided for by a subsequent deficit appropriation by parliament. It does not say "may"; consequently any subsequent discretionary authority of parliament is removed by the passing of this section in its present form.

The minister says that this is subsequently dealt with by a vote. He has overlooked the fact that parliament now decides that any deficit, whatever it may be, shall be paid. This becomes statutory authority for the figure approved by the auditors which is included in the subsequent vote. It is not only dealt with by parliament, but it is authorized by parliament in what is now done.

Mr. Abbott: My friend is perfectly right. I should have thought that was self-evident. The only purpose in putting this provision in the latter part of the section is that, instead of saying that such deficit shall be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund without bringing the matter before parliament, it will have to be done by a special vote. This section indicates that any deficit will be paid for out of public money, but the payment must be authorized by a subsequent vote. My recollection of the purpose in framing it this way is that each year there should be brought before parliament the details of the deficit, if any, of Canadian National Railways, and that parliament should be asked to vote on it specifically.

Mr. Knowles: What does the minister think of the point I was drawing to his attention, namely, that we get a considerable amount of information up to a certain point and then draw a blank?

Mr. Abbott: I am not going to express any view on that, because it has been discussed in the house on a number of occasions. We did have a vote on whether or not my hon. friend should get the information he requested, and the matter was decided. I am not going to traverse that ground again. My hon. friend is entitled to his view, and I am entitled to mine.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Perhaps the Minister of Transport would feel differently if he were here this morning.

Mr. Abbott: He may, but I doubt it.

Mr. Knowles: Why not send for him?

Mr. Adamson: If the negotiations which are now under way with regard to wage rates of the employees of this railway do result, and one hopes they will not result, in the deficit Mr. Gordon suggested of approximately $90 million, there will probably be a greater deficit than is anticipated in this bill, so I suppose a new item would have to be voted by parliament.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Chairman, there is no deficit specifically contemplated in this particular section we are now considering. As the leader of the opposition has pointed out, it refers to a net deficit in operating revenue, and that deficit will have to be voted in accordance with the terms of this section as a special item. This bill does not contemplate a deficit of necessity, but it authorizes the advance of money to the Canadian National Railways to meet such deficit if it occurs. The extent of the deficit is of course not determined until the year has been closed and the auditors have completed their report. Then, and then only, is a final item brought in in the supplementary estimates establishing the amount of the deficit.

While I am on my feet, perhaps I might answer the question of another member about equipment trust issues. The most recent issue is dated March 15, 1950, for $22 million. It was for ten years and carried an interest rate of 2¼ per cent.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): What funds?

Mr. Abbott: Canadian funds, I believe, but I have not that detail.

Mr. Adamson: Through whom was it negotiated?

Mr. Abbott: I am afraid I have not that detail. That was a note that was sent to me. I have not that detailed information here, but of course it is readily available.

Mr. Adamson: I assume it was negotiated through Canadian trust companies.

Mr. Abbott: Presumably.

Mr. Adamson: Or security houses.

Mr. Abbott: The issue presumably would be sold through the usual channels, and the trustee would be a trust company.

Mr. Fraser: When we were talking before, the minister said that any advances to T.C.A. would have to be voted.

Mr. Abbott: That is under the next section. Can we deal with that matter under section 10?

Mr. Fraser: May I speak on it now?

Mr. Abbott: Perhaps we could finish section 9, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready to carry clause 9?

Mr. Gillis: No. I do not like the idea of referring to this bill as one that is designed to wipe off a deficit of the Canadian National Railways. That is absolutely wrong.

Mr. Abbott: The hon. member is right.

Mr. Gillis: Because last year the Canadian National Railways had an operating profit of over $2 million, did they not?

Mr. Abbott: Not after fixed charges.

Mr. Gillis: That is just the point.

Mr. Knowles: That is the whole point.

Mr. Abbott: I know.

Mr. Gillis: The Canadian National Railways start off each year with the deficit you are now talking about. It is a fixed interest charge on old defunct railroads that should have been put into liquidation. In the second place, $21 million a year is paid back by the Canadian National to the Canadian government, in interest on loans that they make for refinancing purpose. The assertion that the government for beneficent reasons each year pays the deficit that accumulates to the Canadian National is wrong and misleading. I like to be fair and honest about these things. The Canadian National had no deficit last year. You are not wiping out a deficit. You are paying interest charges of $24 million a year on bonds of old defunct railroads that produce no revenue. You can perhaps justify that because they are performing some service in communities where the C.P.R. would not operate. That $21 million interest earned by the money that we vote in this house goes back to the Canadian government in fixed interest charges. I think we should be clear about the fact that the railroad is not operating at a deficit.

I do not want to discuss this matter at length. It is before a commission now. The C. N. R. president is emphatic about a revision of the whole capital structure of the Canadian National Railways. I do not like to hear the Minister of Finance referring to this bill as one that is designed to wipe off a deficit of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Abbott: He did not.

Mr. Gillis: Because they did not have a deficit. They inherited the mess they have, and I hope that Mr. Gordon will get the co-operation of the members of this house in cleaning up that historic mess which they inherited and for which they are not responsible.

Mr. Abbott: I thank my hon. friend for trying to clear up a point that I had tried to clear up, namely, that this is not a bill to cover operating deficits of the Canadian National Railways. It is a bill to authorize advances to Canadian National Railways, first, for an approved capital program, second, if needed, to authorize temporary advances to cover an operating deficit. That is all the bill is for. I do not suppose the committee expects me at this time to enter into a discussion of recapitalization, if that is desirable, of the Canadian National Railways.

It is a question which is an extremely involved one, as the committee knows, entailing a great many considerations. I really would not want to embark on that discussion at this time.

Mr. Fraser: You could not explain it before lunch.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like to make one comment. I think we all agree that there is a question of first-class importance here, that is to say, what burden should be carried by the management of the Canadian National Railways. On the one hand it is obviously unfair that they should be saddled with a deficit or a burden from the past which really makes their operating position impossible for the future. On the other hand, certain relief has been given in the past.

I think the matter is before a commission now and it seems to me that it is a matter which is going to require great judgment and discernment. Actually the idea that the Canadian National Railways operating position is greatly worse than that of other railways does not stand the test if you compare it with that of some perfectly good railways in the United States. I say that for this reason: I am sympathetic to the management of the Canadian National Railways, but on the other hand I think discretion must be shown in dealing with this question.

I want to ask the minister a question with regard to the wording at the beginning of clause 9. I will ask him to follow it with me as I read slowly the first three lines, because they seem to me to present a rather curious result.

Has the minister the wording of clause 9 before him?

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The first three lines read as follows:

> If at any time before the first day of July, nineteen hundred and fifty-one, the available revenues of the national railway system are not sufficient to pay all the operating and income charges of the system . . .

And so on. The next section I think makes perfectly clear what I think is obvious, that it is the annual revenue that is referred to there; that is to say, it is the revenue for 1950. Does the minister agree with that?

Mr. Abbott: Quite right.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Then what is the reason for the time lag? Does the minister agree that, as it is worded now, if you take it alone, if anyone came along, not knowing anything about the background of this matter, I am not at all sure that he would read the words "the available revenues of the national railway system" as meaning only for the year 1950.

Mr. Abbott: I am glad my hon. friend raised that question. The purpose of that wording is this. In previous bills the date has been March 31 of the current year. The committee will realize that because the sessional committee rarely sits before March or April, it is not possible to bring this bill in until usually the end of May, or sometimes late in June. It thereby becomes effective for a period of only eight or nine months if March 31 is used. Therefore the date of July 1 was used, in order to give the legislation, so far as may be practicable, a full twelve months operation. That is the explanation. That applies only to the current advances; of course the July 1, 1951, does not relate to the capital advances referred to in subsection 2.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Does the minister agree that the words "the available revenues of the national railway system," in order to be perfectly clear should be followed by the words "during the year 1950"?

Mr. Abbott: This is enabling power. If the C.N.R., on the current basis, is short of cash to pay its operating charges at a given point, whether it is in the middle of the year or at any other time, then this section operates and the government makes temporary advances. And once a year, as I have indicated and as the leader of the opposition has underlined, we come to parliament and get a specific vote for the deficit in the particular year. But the moneys are advanced, if necessary, from month to month out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Let us assume that in the first months of the year, say in 1950, the Canadian National Railways had an operating deficit—if I may use that unpleasant expression—of $25 million. Let us assume for the sake of argument that in the first three months of the year 1951 they had a tremendous run of luck and had an operating surplus of $25 million. Would they use that to cancel out the deficit of the year before? In other words, are we merging the two years in the matter of accounting?

Mr. Abbott: No, we are not merging the two years in the matter of accounting. Perhaps I could illustrate the matter in this way. Suppose in the month of May, 1951, by reason of operating conditions, the Canadian National Railways were running a substantial revenue deficit and needed money. The only way they could get it would be to borrow from the government. The date that is put in this section is to enable such advances to be made. My hon. friend will recall that last year I suggested, because it seemed to me to be more sensible, an open-ended period, subject to the requirements of the deficit that had to be voted. That did not commend itself to the views of the committee. I do not quarrel with that; but what I have been trying to do is to provide a period of approximately twelve months during which this section will be operative. There is no intention to merge, nor do I consider that the language of the section permits any merging of, the accounts of the railways over two periods.

Mr. Adamson: Does this bill not merely set up a sort of letter of credit for the railways on which they can draw until the vote is made in the next session of parliament?

Mr. Abbott: Subject to the approval of the Minister of Transport and the governor in council, that is correct.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—When revenue of Trans-Canada Air Lines and subsidiaries insufficient to meet operating and income charges.

Mr. Drew: Clause 10 is the one which provides for the advances of money to Trans-Canada Air Lines and the subsequent appropriation by parliament of any deficit which may result during the following year.

As I pointed out in connection with the previous clause, which relates to the Canadian National Railways, this is not merely a provision which permits the government, with the authorization of parliament, to advance moneys to the Canadian National Railways as they are required for their operation; it also establishes, as a decision of this parliament at this time, that whatever the deficiency may be as a result of these operations parliament shall—not "may"—by subsequent deficit appropriation meet that amount. Since that is so, this is an appropriate point at which to examine the whole situation with which we are confronted, and to indicate that every step should be taken to make that deficit as small as possible by every practical device that can be adopted.

While this is a bill presented by the Minister of Finance, it is presented through him on behalf of the government to deal with these governmental operations. Since the government is responsible for the broad problem, that problem should be examined in relation to the authorization now given, so that any considerations affecting steps that may be taken by the government between now and the next session to reduce to the ultimate deficit may be placed before parliament and the government at this time.

I think it is time—in fact the time is overdue—for parliament to review carefully the events that have taken place in connection with the Trans-Canada Air Lines. I hope that in making the comments I do we shall not be confronted with the specious suggestion that an attempt to approach the problems of Trans-Canada Air Lines on a businesslike basis implies criticism of the line or of those who operate it. That device has been employed too often in an attempt to divert discussion which should be directed to the operation of many of these great enterprises, which can carry on only with the approval of parliament, and which parliament should certainly examine most carefully.

I think it would be well, when we remember that Trans-Canada Air Lines had by far the largest deficit in its history during this past year, to review the basis upon which parliament approved the setting up of this line. In introducing and discussing on March 22, 1937, the bill dealing with this organization, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce had this to say, as recorded at page 2043 of Hansard of that year:

> It is thought that from the start the mail contract and such passenger and express business as is immediately available should cover the cost of the services. We have made provision, however, for a subsidy to protect the service in that period. After 1940, as I have said, the subsidy provision expires and the mail contract will be on the basis of cost of the service. I think that outlines fairly well the intention of the bill. The whole matter can be more fully considered when the bill is brought down.

These words are simple, understandable, and not open to any misinterpretation. This operation was to maintain itself from its revenues, and after—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the leader of opposition. Does he think that on this clause he can go into the history of Trans-Canada Air Lines and explain why such deficits have to be met now? It seems to me that on clause 10, to be strictly relevant, what should be discussed is whether or not the deficit is to be met in the manner indicated in clause 10; there should not be any explanation of deficits. I should like to hear the leader of the opposition on that point.

Mr. Drew: Yes, I think it is strictly relevant to the provisions of this section. Parliament is being asked to provide the money required for the operation of this line. This house is asked to approve a section which says that any deficit resulting at the end of the year shall be met by parliamentary appropriation. What I am pointing out is that it is desirable to review the situation so that when the government is dealing with this subject, provided that the house authorizes this, as there is every indication it will, the authorization shall be accompanied with proposed suggestions which they should consider to the end that the deficit may be reduced as much as possible. I am simply reviewing the situation which has developed from that point to the present for the purpose of indicating things that could and should be done so that this deficit may be as small as possible. There is no other place that I am aware of where proper consideration could be given to these points.

In Hansard of June 24, 1940, we find on page 1050 of the budget the following item under Trans-Canada Air Lines:

> The operation of the Trans-Canada Air Lines expanded greatly during the calendar year 1939. Operating revenue increased from $591,000 to $2,350,000. The annual deficit, after payment of interest on capital and depreciation, decreased from $818,000 in 1938 to $412,000 in 1939.

That seemed to be in accord with the general pattern that had been projected by the minister who proposed this bill. In 1941, as reported at page 1743 of Hansard of March 20, the Minister of Trade and Commerce had this to say:

> Last year the earnings of the air lines, after all write-offs and interest on investment, were something over $500,000. This year it is anticipated that the earnings from air mail based on the increased mileage and the 40-cent rate will be $3,153,000. The passenger revenue will be $2,170,000. Miscellaneous revenue, comprised chiefly of express, will amount to $250,000, giving a total gross revenue of $5,573,500. Operating expenses are anticipated to be $5,315,477, giving an operating income of $258,032, less interest on capital, and other income charges, of $197,500. That leaves us with an estimated surplus of $60,523.

Actually in the years that followed a surplus was built up. Therefore up to that point the pattern that had been projected by the Minister of Trade and Commerce was being followed. Then the pattern changed. We have had a succession of deficits which first of all wiped out the accumulated surplus, and last year reached $4,317,593. I submit that when the House of Commons is asked to pass a section authorizing advances to any of the public bodies brought into existence by the parliament of Canada it is appropriate to examine the assurances given at the time and to see whether we have or have not departed from that basis. If we have, then we should find out what can be done to limit the deficit which, by this very section, parliament now says will be met by a subsequent parliamentary appropriation.

This subject was before the parliamentary committee on railways and shipping. That committee has tabled its report. The findings of the committee are before the house. I would point out to hon. members that the report of the committee does not represent the unanimous opinion of the members thereof, and that other proposals which were not incorporated in the report were made in the committee. Since those proposals are not before us today I submit it is appropriate that they should now be placed before this committee and the government, so that when we are considering a provision which says that the deficits shall be paid, we may at the same time suggest what should be done to limit such deficits to the lowest possible figure.

In addition to the recommendations contained in the report of the committee on railways and shipping on May 11, 1950, the following addition had been moved as an amendment to the report:

Your committee recommends that a uniform system should be adopted for the presentation of the accounts of the Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines, and that the consolidated balance sheet should show the accumulated surplus or deficit position in each case.

The vote taken on that occasion, may I add, was not one supported merely by members of the party to which I belong. However, the amendment was defeated by the close vote of eight to six.

Then another amendment was moved, suggesting that the following be added to the report:

Your committee recommends that an accounting system should be adopted which will make it possible to determine the profit or loss on each operating route.

On that motion the vote was even, seven to seven, with the chairman casting the deciding vote against the motion.

A further amendment was presented which proposed this as an addition to the report:

That the possibility of improvement in operating costs of Trans-Canada Air Lines be fully explored.

That was voted down. A further amendment was offered, that the following be added to the report:

That it is desirable to consider whether Trans-Canada Air Lines should be under the authority of the same minister as the Canadian National Railways, and also that the same minister who is responsible for the administration of the Aeronautics Act should have ministerial responsibility for Trans-Canada Air Lines.

That also was voted down, and, as in other cases I have mentioned, the amendment was supported not only by members of one party.

These motions, made for the purpose of adding these recommendations to the report of the committee which has been tabled, were directed to the one sound purpose in financial affairs, to giving parliament an opportunity to examine in a businesslike way this whole proposition so that, while Trans-Canada Air Lines might operate in the most efficient manner possible, steps should be taken, as they are taken in every large business, to examine its internal financial structure as well as its operating methods for the purpose of effecting any economies which might be made.

Strangely enough, when it is suggested that there be economies in the operation of government enterprises, all too often we are met with the suggestion that an attempt is being made to limit the services rendered. The fact is that in any big business the services rendered are almost invariably increased by an examination such as that proposed in this instance. In fact it is the history of business that almost invariably where sensible and cautious steps of this kind are not taken, instead of expanding, the business will decrease in the extent of its operation, and ultimately, if that condition continues long enough without any effective internal examination of the kind here suggested, it will disappear.

When parliament takes the responsibility for setting up great publicly-owned enterprises it should be its responsibility also to require businesslike methods in dealing with them, so that the operations of such enterprises will be not only as efficient as they can be in the interests of the public, but also so that every practical economy may be practised to the end that, if possible, such economies may increase the general efficiency of the system in providing the service it purports to provide.

These proposals clearly reflect what was under consideration. The first part of the recommendation was that the report should contain a request that a uniform system should be adopted for the presentation of the accounts of Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines, and that the consolidated balance sheet should show the accumulated surplus or deficit position in each case. That proposal was made because the Trans-Canada Air Lines is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Canadian National Railways, and yet there is no uniform system of presenting accounts. In the examination of the accounts of the parent organization and of the subsidiary organization certain differences appear which do not make it as easy as it should be to examine the comparative statements.

It is desirable that there should be shown the accumulated surplus or deficit position. The reason for that is obvious, as those who sat on the committee will recall. I do not suggest that the accumulated deficit should become an additional part of the capital obligation, but it should be shown in the statement below the balance sheet so that those who examine the annual statement will know what the present position is as it has accumulated over the years.

When there were surpluses, those surpluses did accumulate and were carried in the annual statement. As those surpluses were exhausted by deficits, there should have been carried forward a figure which would show the deficits so that those who examined the statement each year would be in a position to see exactly what the results of the operation had been.

When the time comes, as we hope it will, when there will be surpluses, it would not present an accurate picture of the long-term operation if the statement simply started in with a surplus and then the statements in future years showed the accumulation of surpluses. That would not represent the true operating position of the lines. One may ask: Why have these figures in there? They should be in there for the same reason that you have figures in the statement of any great operation of this kind which is owned by those who have invested their money in the ordinary way.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, it is extremely interesting to note the measure of impatience that is shown after a discussion of ten minutes of an item that last year involved the expenditure of public money to the amount of $4,317,000 and will likely involve the expenditure of a very substantial amount of public money during the coming year. I think it shows an extraordinary disregard of the responsibility of parliament for any hon. member to indicate impatience when we are examining a subject of this importance, one which has not been discussed previously at any time during the present session.

The next resolution that was presented was that an accounting system should be adopted which would make it possible to determine the profit or loss on each operating route. At the present time it is not possible for anyone examining the statement of the air lines to tell whether a particular route is making or losing money. Not only is it not possible to tell that from the statements; it was not possible to obtain that information by questions in the committee itself.

Surely if this parliament is to assume responsibility for giving a blank cheque to the government—the government can pay this money only with the authority of parliament—then, in this case as in other cases, parliament should be able to examine the results of the operation of each particular route, whether it be an air line, a railway, a shipping service, or any other similar activity of an organization created by parliament.

The inability to obtain this information is further evidence of the extent to which these operations are removed from the knowledge of the people's representatives once parliament takes the responsibility for creating them by an act of this representative body. These facts should be brought back to parliament so that parliament itself can say what should or should not be done in regard to these great enterprises, which in this case as in other cases are calling for money from the Canadian taxpayers with which to carry on their services.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Before we continue with the study of Bill No. 310 I should like to make a statement arising out of an incident which occurred on June 9 last, while the house was in committee of supply. At the time we were discussing item 202, of the Department of National Defence, and in the course of the discussion the hon. member for Calgary East was called to order. In the Montreal Standard of the next day, June 10, on page 12, appeared an article by British United Press, as follows:

> P.C. criticizes ruling barring Shakespeare
>
> Douglas Harkness, Calgary opposition M.P., complained today that parliamentary debate was becoming so genteel that it was no longer proper to quote some sections of Shakespeare's plays in Commons.
>
> Harkness was ruled out of order by house committee chairman L. R. Beaudoin last night when he attempted to quote from King Lear.

After I saw this article I spoke to the gentleman of the British United Press who was responsible for it, who told me he did not want to give the impression that the hon. member had been called to order because he was quoting Shakespeare. Therefore I let the matter drop. However, on the editorial page of the Ottawa Journal of Saturday, June 17, there was an article headed "To this we have come," which read:

> Last week in the House of Commons committee chairman L. R. Beaudoin ruled Shakespeare "out of order"; out of order at any rate if he was to be quoted against a Liberal backbencher.
>
> That is what parliament has come to. Once a former prime minister could speak memorably on "the greatest Englishman," and the speeches of a Wilfrid Laurier could be sprinkled with Shakespeare and the bible. Today a quotation from the bible is as rare in the house as a passage in Latin—and Shakespeare is out of order.

The article continues in the same vein. I imagine the record, as it appears in Hansard at pages 3458 and 3459, should speak for itself. As all hon. members know, literary authorities are quoted frequently, and hon. members are not declared out of order because they quote a literary authority or the bible. They are called to order when their remarks are not relevant to the item under discussion, if we are discussing an item in supply. That is exactly what happened in this instance, and the record speaks for itself.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I thought we were getting closer on various occasions recently to quotations from Chaucer than from Shakespeare; but I feel sure hon. members will agree that there was no such arbitrary ruling in the particular case referred to.

When we rose I was pointing out certain matters which had been under consideration in the committee and which it seemed to a number of us who supported motions to amend the report should have been given consideration in that report. I am suggesting they should be given every consideration between now and the time the government presents the item which will represent the deficit at the end of the year for Trans-Canada Air Lines. I had been speaking particularly about the desirability of following ordinary business practices in examining the affairs of Trans-Canada Air Lines, and of having all the details of its operation fully available to those responsible for the voting of money. That money is not voted by the government; it is voted by parliament, and parliament should know what are the facts and should be able to express itself in regard to them.

In this instance it was clearly pointed out in the committee that an examination of the operation of individual routes might indicate not only the necessity for certain improvements in the methods followed in connection with those routes, but also the necessity for their extension; and it was contended that Trans-Canada Air Lines might well extend its operations outside Canada to a very much wider area, with advantage to the system and to the people of Canada generally. There was also a motion suggesting that the report should advocate consideration of an improvement in the operating costs of Trans-Canada Air Lines. That again is a simple business proposition, a request that should appeal to anyone who wants straight business methods to apply to the operation of this great public service or any other public service parliament has authorized and for which the government is responsible in its administrative capacity.

Then it was proposed that consideration should be given to the advisability of bringing the administrative direction of Trans-Canada Air Lines under the same minister who is responsible for the Canadian National Railways. It was pointed out that Trans-Canada Air Lines is a wholly owned subsidiary of the Canadian National Railways, and it therefore seemed unreasonable and in many ways impractical to have the administrative supervision of the parent organization under one minister and administrative responsibility for the wholly owned subsidiary under another. Without elaborating on those points, which it seems to me speak for themselves, I should like to deal with the suggestion that consideration should be given the possibility of improving operating costs of Trans-Canada Air Lines. Surely it is possible to make a simple business proposal such as that without the suggestion that there is any reflection on Trans-Canada Air Lines, or an attempt to limit its effectiveness or restrict its service. On the contrary, if the suggestion were acted upon it should be possible to extend the services of Trans-Canada Air Lines by operating an even wider service at a lower cost to the people of Canada.

I think this is the appropriate time to point out that this house has not been fully informed as to many things connected with the ordinary business of Trans-Canada Air Lines, and that in some cases where an attempt has been made to inform the house the facts were obscured in a way that led to a complete misunderstanding of the situation by many hon. members and by the public generally, who formed their impression from what was said in the house.

I recall to hon. members that last year there was an opportunity for this house to study an operating problem of Trans-Canada Air Lines. In that respect the suggestion was made, as an example, that the members of the house should know something of the difficulties that were being encountered because of engine failure of the North Stars. Immediately an attempt was made to create the impression that there was nothing in this suggestion; that it was something that had no place in this house; that it was something that was damaging to Trans-Canada Air Lines even to discuss. I have suggested on other occasions, and I certainly suggest again, that it is just as much the duty of the members of this house to examine the details of operation of that kind as it is their duty to consider the comparative advantages of diesel engines and steam engines, or the comparative advantages of engines of different manufacture, even if they are of the same type. After all, this is a straight business operation. Some lines have power units of different types, and one of the basic considerations in efficiency and cost of operation is the advantage or disadvantage of a particular type of power unit. Aircraft have power units, and it certainly is not merely the right but the duty of members of parliament, who are called upon to authorize this operation by voting financial support, to examine all the essential information in regard to power units or any other aspect of the operation of this transportation service.

This is no sacred cow. This is no subject that is so sacrosanct the members of this house should not even discuss it. On the contrary, it should be a straight business proposition. If the members of this house believe there are certain details about which they should be informed, it is their duty to seek that information in this house from the responsible ministers and those who can give the information.

Last year when I said that certain difficulties were being encountered and that I for one was anxious to see what should be done, there was immediately the suggestion that this was an attempt to discredit Trans-Canada Air Lines. The suggestion that any difficulties were encountered because of engine failure was ridiculed; in fact it was implied that it was much less than an accurate statement—I am using an extremely mild expression when I put it in that way.

Let us see exactly what the facts were that came up for discussion, not in May or June for the first time, but in April while the house was in session. The remarks I made at that time had reference to my knowledge of the difficulties that were being encountered, and I felt it was my duty—I still think it was my duty as it is my duty now—to place all the information I could before the members of this house. It is their responsibility to say what they think should be done in relation to a service for which they must vote the money.

This was an order that was sent out as a flight operation bulletin on February 14 last year. I would remind the members of this house that the subject was under discussion in April of last year. These were the instructions that went to the flight captains of the North Stars on that date—I am reading now from the report of the flight director that was put in evidence in the committee by the officials of Trans-Canada Air Lines:

> Subject: North Star engines.
>
> We are concerned over an increase in the number of engine failures with North Star aircraft.
>
> The situation is being very vigorously campaigned by both the engine manufacturer and ourselves with a view to rectification. As a result, it is anticipated that major sources of trouble such as coolant loss, the SU pump, magnetos, and other items, will be greatly improved in the next two months.
>
> In the meantime, it is desired that you adopt a relatively conservative outlook with respect to flight on three engines, having in mind the weather, availability of usable airports on the route, etc.

That was signed by H. W. Seagrim, director of flight operations. The suggestion that that was something that it was improper to bring up indicates a complete misconception of the responsibility of members of parliament. May I say this also, that the suggestion—no, I shall go further; the vigorous statement that was made that this had seriously limited the number of passengers on the North Star, was simply not true. Evidence placed before the committee by officials of Trans-Canada Air Lines showed very clearly that from that particular date, far from the number of passengers decreasing, the number of passengers increased to the largest monthly total in the history of the air line.

I am going to place on the record at this point the comparative figures for the months from April to August of 1948 and 1949, to show exactly what happened in those two years. In April, 1948, there were 39,264 revenue passengers flown; in May, 45,636; June, 58,507; July, 55,794; August, 57,135. Now let us take the figure for the same months—

Mr. Howe: What about September and October? Have you got those?

Mr. Drew: Yes, and of course they go down, as was explained, because of the change in the service in those months. Every year they have gone down in those months in precisely the same way. Those months had nothing whatever to do with the discussion of this particular point. The statement that there had been a serious loss in passenger revenue was made in those months while the figures were going up.

I have given the figures for 1948, and I shall now give the figures for 1949.

Mr. Howe: Is that election campaign not finished yet?

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, this is a question of getting before the members of this house for the first time the truth in regard to what actually did take place. At the time the attempt was made to bring the matter before the house it was denied, and the facts were not available. They have become available only within the past few weeks.

Let me give you the figures for 1949, for those same months, remembering that the month of April, while the house was still sitting, was the month in which this came up for discussion, and naturally it was carried by the press throughout the country. In April, 1949, the number of revenue passengers carried was 53,322, as compared with 39,264 in 1948; in May, 58,461, as compared with 45,636 in 1948; in June, 64,458, as compared with 58,507 in 1948; in July, 66,051 as compared with 55,794 in July, 1948; in August, 66,659 as compared with 57,135 in 1948.

What actually happened was that during those months following April, when this matter came up for discussion, there was a steady increase to the largest figures for passengers carried in the whole history of Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Mr. Howe: Trans-Canada Air Lines changed the size of the planes in the meantime. You are talking about 40-passenger planes in 1949 as against 21-passenger planes in 1948.

Mr. Drew: I am afraid that the Minister of Trade and Commerce must have forgotten that they were talking about North Stars, and that they were never 21-passenger planes.

Mr. Howe: The North Stars did not come on the line until July 1, 1948.

Mr. Drew: The Minister of Trade and Commerce will continue to make his statements, but everyone here knows that the North Stars have been operating for some time. What I want to point out is this. We were told that there had been a serious drop, and I just ask you, Mr. Chairman, to see where the drop was: April last year 53,322; May, 58,461; June, 64,458; July, 66,051; August, 66,659.

An hon. Member: There is an increase.

Mr. Drew: Yes, there was a large increase every month, to the highest point in passengers carried in the history of the air lines. The statement that was made, seeking to hide the real facts, had no relation to reality, as the minister knows now, whether he was inaccurately informed at that time or not. Trans-Canada Air Lines did carry out investigations, as the director of flight operations said they were doing. As a result of those investigations there have been many improvements, and the situation has been greatly remedied. As a result of the investigations that have been made, they have improved a number of the features connected with the engines, but they have also discovered other things as well. This is the kind of thing that is an essential part of the understanding of the operation of this system.

On November 10, 1949, the same director of flight operations sent the following bulletin to every flight captain on the North Stars, and this represents the result of part of that inquiry:

Outlined below are certain amendments to the operating limitations and procedures for the Rolls Royce 622 and 624 engines to become effective immediately upon receipt of this bulletin.

1. "Full Hot" induction heat is to be used on take-off at ground outside air temperatures below 0 degrees C. This supersedes the present instructions on page 269 of the airplane operating manual specifying an outside air temperature of minus 10 degrees C.

2. The normal climb power settings will continue to be 2650 rpm and 48" hg. If, however, additional climb power is required the rpm's should immediately be increased to 2850. The manifold pressure with 2850 rpm may be set at 48" hg or any setting in between this figure and 58·4" hg, the latter to be considered maximum and to be used only when necessary to obtain aircraft performance under adverse conditions.

3. The maximum allowable cruise power is to be reduced from 1000 bhp to 900 bhp/engine.

4. Pending completion of bearing modifications to the rear engine case, it is desirable that operations be conducted within the M.S. range as much as practicable to avoid the higher bearing speeds in F.S. gear.

H. W. Seagrim,
Director of flight operations

That represented the very kind of examination of the situation which was called for and about which the members should know something in ordinary simple language. This last order was simply an order that the machines were to be operated at a medium speed instead of at a fast speed, in order to avoid burning out the roller bearings which were then being modified, and those modifications are proceeding. Those are the very things that are an essential part of any effective consideration of the power units of these machines.

These changes are being considered all the time. That was exactly what was in mind when it was suggested that the possibility of improvement in the operating costs of Trans-Canada Air Lines should be fully explored. At a time when this parliament is being asked to vote the money to make up whatever deficit will be called for this coming year, there certainly should be in the minds of the members the necessity for the full examination of every practical economy, every way of reducing operating costs, and every way of increasing efficiency.

A few minutes ago the minister, in regard to these items which are all business details, tried to create the impression that this is the rehashing of an old issue. It is a straight business operation, and these facts are available for the first time to the members of this committee, as a result of this inquiry. But it is of course true that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has a casual way of dealing with many of these things. It is for that very reason that hon. members should insist that there be a careful examination of all these items.

Let me give a typical example; and I quote from page 402 of the minutes and proceedings of the committee on railways and shipping. Certain aspects of this operation were under discussion, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce spoke about the way in which this service was building up. As reported at page 402, this is what took place:

Mr. Fulton: But that is not what you said last year.

Right Hon. Mr. Howe: Oh, I am not at all interested in what I said last year.

Mr. Fulton: But I am.

Right Hon. Mr. Howe: Then I will let you quote it and I will not worry about it.

Mr. Fulton: You are a responsible minister and I would be interested in your comments and remarks which you made last year, when you said: "I won't operate an air line very long which is in red ink."

Right Hon. Mr. Howe: But I did not specify what "very long" means. Perhaps it means two or three years. Perhaps it means another five years.

He might have gone on and said: Perhaps it means anything I like it to mean in the years ahead.

After all, this is a big business operation. The members of this committee have a right to rely on the statements that are made; and the statements that are made, as a matter of fact, are statements which should be subject to any reasonable explanation. In regard to other things we have had very touching statements about the complete confidence of certain members in any statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In discussing this matter it is therefore of interest that the minister sums up his own attitude in these words: "I am not at all interested in what I said last year".

In this particular case we should be interested in the basis on which this operation began. It was to be an operation that would maintain itself. It was to be an operation that would gradually work into a surplus position, and it did. That surplus has been used up. There are now substantial deficits, and that picture has changed. The members here have a right and a duty to know that every possible thing is being done to practise such economies as can be satisfactorily put into effect, and to meet every situation in exactly the same way as would be done by a sound business operation.

In the earlier part of the discussion of this bill the Minister of Finance said that he was not quite prepared to entrust all matters to parliament; and that may be—

Mr. Abbott: What?

Mr. Drew: Yes; he said that he was not quite prepared to entrust all matters to parliament.

Mr. Abbott: I do not recall using that phrase.

Mr. Drew: I think Hansard will show it quite clearly. I am not suggesting that there was anything improper in that. It was said at the time of the discussion of certain details about which the minister was not informed at the time. What we must recognize from all this is that there is certainly no intention of entrusting all matters to parliament in dealing with a subject of this kind, and that the committee by a majority, and a small majority in most of these cases, refused to make recommendations which would have brought before parliament an opportunity to say that this should be dealt with in a businesslike way. For that reason we have not these recommendations before us; and since there is no motion for the approval of the report, the matter stands there and apparently will stand there until the end of the session.

But this whole situation is one which surely suggests the desirability of bringing the operation of these two services under the same minister, whoever he may be, because there are officers of Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines holding similar positions in these two organizations. Therefore it seems to me that sound methods and practices would suggest that the administrative responsibility be in the same department.

This great organization, Mr. Chairman, is performing a fine service. Trans-Canada Air Lines have a magnificent record. They have a fine record of safety. We have the finest pilots, the finest aircrew and the finest ground crew to be found anywhere in the world. There is no reason why we should not see Canadian air lines extending to all the great airports of the world. But the way that that picture can become a reality, the way that our great pool of trained pilots and technicians can find the opportunity to expand these services is by applying the very highest business standards to the operation of this system and bringing before parliament the details which make it possible for parliament to understand the problem and to urge those things which will assist in the expansion and improvement of this great transportation service.

There is, however, this to remember. While we have not an opportunity of breaking down the point at which these deficits arise, presumably the carriage of freight and the carriage of mail are on a satisfactory basis. We were told that a higher figure was being asked for the carriage of mail, and it was believed that the amount now being received did actually take care of the costs. If that is so, then we should examine what this deficit means in terms of passengers.

The deficit last year was $4,317,593.16. The revenue passengers carried were 648,574. This means that the taxpayers of Canada paid $6.65 out of their pockets for every passenger carried on these air lines. That may be satisfactory; it may not. But these things should be considered in the knowledge of the facts; and as this house gives approval, it means not merely that there is permissive authority to place before the house an item for approval, but that this house shall by subsequent parliamentary vote take care of the deficit according to the terms of section 10. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the most we can do on this occasion is to believe that statements made a year ago as statements of fact are intended to be taken seriously; that statements we receive at any time are intended to be taken seriously, and, above all, that in the operation of this line between now and the end of the year the Minister of Finance will take such steps as he can—and after all, as the Minister of Finance he has a substantial measure of control over financial matters—to see that everything possible is done to give this system the advantage of an examination of its cost methods and other details which will put it in the very best possible position.

I would just like to tell hon. members that the committee did not have before it all the information which it should have had. Motions were made to bring before that committee the director of flight operations, the director of technical services, the deputy postmaster general, and others who could have talked on some of these details. By a majority supporting the government these requests were voted down, and therefore we did not have before us the men with the technical knowledge of the various problems. Nevertheless without that information we have the facts before us, and I hope that the Minister of Finance, even in the absence of any recommendations of this kind, will insist upon steps which would be insisted upon by any great business organization.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, on this bill which provides for the capital financing of the Canadian National Railways we have listened to a minority report of the committee on railways and shipping. My hon. friend is a member of that committee. If he wished to make that minority report he could very well have moved concurrence in the majority report. It seems to me that that would be the proper way—

Mr. Drew: You cannot do that.

Mr. Howe: I suggest that to accept as authoritative his remarks as to the findings of the committee which examined the operation of the T.C.A. would lead his listeners to a very wrong conclusion as to its deliberations.

First, the hon. member suggested that the accounts of the air lines should be set up to reflect past deficits. That matter was settled back in 1933 by action of parliament, which approved a recommendation of a royal commission set up to examine the operation of the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific railways. The report of that royal commission resulted in the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act, which provided that deficits of the railways should be paid by parliament and not carried forward in railway accounts. That has been done since 1933, and I think no one will find from the railway accounts that the deficits of the Canadian National Railways have been carried forward in the manner suggested by the leader of the opposition. Doing so might be a very good way to cast discredit on the air lines, but I see no reason why a practice that has been established since 1933 should be changed simply for that purpose. Certainly it would serve no other purpose.

The suggestion was made that separate accounting be provided for every route flown by the air lines. That was discussed in the committee. The comptroller of the Canadian National Railways, who is also comptroller of Trans-Canada Air Lines, explained that that procedure is not proper transportation accounting; that it was not the practice to make a separation of that kind in any transportation system with which he is acquainted. The president of Trans-Canada Air Lines pointed out that the cost of that type of accounting would be enormous, greatly exceeding the cost of accounting at present carried on; and that the results when obtained would be perfectly useless to the management. He pointed out that although a particular route may not be profitable in itself, it might very well be found profitable when its contribution to traffic on other routes is taken into consideration. And he pointed out that no system of accounting could give due weight to such intangible return from the route solely from accounting records.

Those matters were dealt with by the management in committee, and dealt with by the committee; and the committee decided —as I remember it, by an overwhelming vote—that the present accounting practice should not be changed.

The leader of the opposition speaks of operating costs being fully explored. I can assure him that the management of the air line gives its best attention to the exploring of operating costs. The whole operation of the air lines is concentrated on fighting operating costs, and I doubt very much if this parliament can give much leadership in that detailed operation.

Then he suggested that the operation of Trans-Canada Air Lines should be placed under a different ministry. The minister who holds that responsibility at the moment is the minister who recommended that there be a Trans-Canada Air Lines and recommended the steps that led to its formation. He has been in charge of the policy of Trans-Canada Air Lines since its inception.

My hon. friend complained about the rate of growth of the air lines. He said T.C.A. should be serving every capital of the world.

The figures he quoted indicated, in the report of the air lines for 1941, a gross of about $5 million. I might point out that T.C.A. in 1949, which is eight years later, grossed in the vicinity of $40 million, and in 1950 will gross a substantially higher figure. If that does not indicate that the air line is growing, then I can think of no argument to use in that connection.

Then the hon. gentleman returned to his old friend, the engine of the North Star aeroplane. We threshed that subject out during the election campaign of 1949. It was referred to by the leader of the opposition on every platform on which he spoke from Halifax to Vancouver. He has said there was no falling off in traffic on account of his public statements. But that is not the view of the management. It was not the view expressed by the president of the air lines in his evidence before the committee on railways and shipping.

Mr. Drew: They are figures which you cannot escape.

Mr. Howe: The figures which the leader of the opposition quoted for May and June, 1948, referred to traffic when the sole equipment of the air lines was the DC-3 plane holding twenty-one passengers. He then compares that with the traffic figures for the next year when the line was equipped with the North Star plane carrying forty passengers.

Mr. Drew: They were increasing each month, the last months of last year.

Mr. Howe: Perhaps so, but he is comparing totally different equipment when he speaks of the early months of 1948 and the corresponding months in 1949.

It has been suggested that every detail of engine trouble should be discussed in this House of Commons. The suggestion is that any member of the opposition who has ridden in the back seat of an aeroplane is competent to advise the operating officers of the air lines as to what to do about their engine troubles. Has anything more absurd ever been suggested in this House of Commons?

Mr. Fulton: That is your statement, not ours.

Mr. Howe: We have operating officials who have spent practically all their working experience in dealing with aeroplane engines, and who have knowledge of the matter obtained from the engine builders. They know the details of the engine with which they are dealing. They are thoroughly familiar with the problem. The suggestion is that by discussions in the House of Commons and through recommendations from members of the House of Commons opposition—who are the only members of the house who feature that type of discussion—the work of these engineers and mechanics could be greatly facilitated.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Nothing like that was said. To suggest it is utter nonsense.

Mr. Howe: I will let my hon. friend make his speech presently. The debate is wide open.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): That is my contribution.

Mr. Drew: You would not let the officers give evidence.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): What is one to say to a man who says he is not responsible for what he has said?

Mr. Howe: You can refer to that remark; but I am putting my statement together as I follow the points brought forward by your leader. The point is this. The public wish to be assured that they are riding in an aeroplane which is operating safely. That is their only concern. I think that nine passengers out of ten who ride the air lines would be surprised to learn that aircraft engines ever fail. They would be shocked if they knew otherwise. I have been travelling in aeroplanes as much as any member of the house perhaps and I have known an engine to fail only once, and that was a Pratt and Whitney engine installed in a DC-3. I did not like it. That was my experience, and I think it was exceptional. Only very few travellers on the air lines have ever seen any engine failure. Those who are responsible for the operation of the air line are aware that the operators of the aircraft have taken precautions against the failure of an engine. They know they are not asking the public to ride in aircraft in the operation of which there is any possible lack of safety.

Why the public should now be asked to go into all the details as to why engines have failed I cannot imagine at this time. I never have been able to understand the value of that type of publicity, or that kind of public discussion by public men of this country. Every new type of engine has its troubles when it is first put into service. The engine used in the North Star was a new type of engine in respect of a number of its accessories. Trouble was experienced, but that trouble was remedied as quickly as possible. Today the engine used in the North Star aircraft has a record of reliability that is not surpassed by any engine in any aircraft operating in any part of the world. Not only is that statistically true; it is known to the operators of aircraft in every part of the world, who would be glad to testify to the correctness of what I am saying.

Referring to the remark by the leader of the opposition that there was nothing personal in his reference to the change of minister, which I do not accept because I think it is wholly personal—

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege, I would point out, and the record will show it, that what I said was that it should be under one minister, whoever that minister is.

Mr. Howe: The leader of the opposition also pointed out that it should be the minister who is administering the air regulations and also the Canadian National Railways. That cannot be arranged except by direction of the Prime Minister. In case my hon. friend has overlooked it, I would point out that that is a matter to be determined by the Prime Minister. I doubt if my hon. friend has any duty to recommend the change until he becomes prime minister, and perhaps at that time I shall not be very much interested in whether or not there is an air line.

An hon. Member: You will be flying with wings.

Mr. Howe: I shall be flying with wings. However, there is an advantage in not having the minister who administers the air regulations responsible for Trans-Canada Air Lines. I so state out of my own experience, because I used to be the minister who administered both at the one time. When a minister is asked by his officials to change the air regulations he is bound to think of the effect on the T.C.A., and the fact that he is responsible for the T.C.A. is likely to warp his judgment as to what should be done in the overall interest. I am giving this testimony from my own experience, that I think it is preferable to have the air regulations administered by one minister and the affairs of T.C.A. administered by another minister. In that way the minister representing the T.C.A. can put his case to his colleague just as any private air line can put their case to that same minister. That is the other side of the question.

But again I say that the question who will be responsible for the T.C.A. is of concern to no one except the Prime Minister. I think he can be trusted to exercise his judgment in that regard without advice from those who have neither the experience nor the position to entitle them to give that advice. I did not intend to speak at length on this subject, as I think this whole discussion is inappropriate on the particular bill in connection with which it is being brought up. I shall not trespass further on my colleague the Minister of Finance.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

AMENDMENTS TO CHAPTER 46, STATUTES OF 1932

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. 269, to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, 1932.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 1—Policy in Canada.

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps I should remind hon. members that this bill was considered carefully in the banking and commerce committee.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I think the other day the minister gave a fairly lengthy account of the purposes of this bill and, as the chairman has said, it has been before the banking and commerce committee. It is in that light that we consider the section. I think the minister will agree that it was considered fully and in addition it might be mentioned that it comes before the committee with the imprimatur of the department.

Mr. Abbott: I thank my hon. friend for his statement. The bill has been carefully considered by the banking and commerce committee. The sections are rather technical and I think, unless some hon. member has a question to ask about a special section, it would not be inappropriate to pass the sections quickly. I do not think we need consider that we would be derelict in our duty if we did not in committee of the whole give a detailed consideration to the section because this is a case in which that function can in my judgment be properly delegated to a committee like the banking and commerce committee.

Mr. Adamson: The minister will admit that there is some merit in committees.

Mr. Abbott: I admit fully that for certain purposes that is so. I have always stated that for certain purposes committees are invaluable and that is why we have always had committees in parliament. But in my opinion general questions of policy should not be referred to committees.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

Insurance Companies

On section 9—Investment of company's funds.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): This is an important clause and I wonder if the minister could make a brief statement which I think would be of interest to hon. members.

Mr. Abbott: This section amends section 60 of the act which is the main investment section. The revision that has been made is fairly extensive. I outlined this in my preliminary statement the other day. The investment powers are being extended to what are known as lease real estate agreements and to equipment trust agreements outside Canada: there is a modifying of the requirements with respect to investment in debentures; there is an extension of the investment power to cover debentures issued by public bodies such as the harbours board and the like and also applying what is known as the amortization principle of valuation to the securities of the Dominion of Canada and any province of Canada, or of the United Kingdom or the United States.

Briefly those are the changes provided by this section. My understanding is that a detailed explanation of the changes was given by the superintendent to the banking and commerce committee and for that reason I assume the committee will not want me to make a more extensive explanation.

Section agreed to.

Sections 10 to 42 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

AMENDMENTS TO CHAPTER 47, STATUTES OF 1932

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. 268, to amend the Foreign Insurance Companies Act, 1932.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 1—Repeal.

The Deputy Chairman: It is my understanding that this bill also has been carefully considered in the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. Abbott: It is similar to the other bill. This is the bill relating to foreign insurance companies as opposed to British and Canadian companies under the other bill.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 to 22 inclusive agreed to.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Schedule agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDMENTS TO RATIFY INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION FOR SAFETY OF LIFE AT SEA

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 303, to amend the Canada Shipping Act, 1934.

Mr. Green: Could we have a statement by the minister?

Mr. Chevrier: The most important part of this bill deals with amendments to the Canada Shipping Act which are required in order to implement the international convention for the safety of life at sea, 1948, signed at London on June 10, 1948. The convention was signed by two of the Canadian delegates subject to acceptance, and the government proposes to accept the convention if and when parliament enacts the proposed amendments to the Canada Shipping Act contained in this bill.

It will be recalled that the safety convention of 1929 was made part of the law of Canada by the Safety of Life at Sea and Load Line Conventions Act of 1931. Subsequently, when the Canada Shipping Act, 1934, was passed, the safety convention was incorporated in that act as schedule 4, and the provisions of the act contain frequent references to the provisions of the 1929 convention. Consequently it is necessary to amend the Canada Shipping Act, 1934, in order to bring the provisions of that act in line with the new convention.

The safety convention of 1948 consists of fifteen articles. It is accompanied by six chapters of technical regulations which are difficult to paraphrase or summarize without affecting their significance. However, I shall endeavour to indicate in a general way the directions in which they differ from the 1929 convention. The convention itself has chiefly to do with the contractual relations between the governments which are parties to it. Throughout this convention the concept that there will come into being a permanent international wartime organization is followed. Article I contains the contract between governments to give effect to the convention by any necessary national action. Article II sets forth the ships to which the convention applies. Article III provides for an interchange of information between governments, and article IV deals with cases of force majeure. In general these articles differ little from the 1929 convention.

Articles V and VI contain provisions for deviation from the requirements of the convention in cases of emergency. Article VII abrogates the 1929 convention as between contracting governments.

Article IX provides for future amendments of the convention or of the regulations. All proposals for amendments submitted by member governments go to the maritime safety committee of the permanent international maritime organization known as the intergovernmental maritime consultative organization familiarly called IMCO, and are communicated by that organization to all contracting governments for their consideration at least six months before they are considered by the assembly. The assembly provided for in the IMCO convention is a meeting of representatives of the various member states, in effect an international diplomatic conference, meeting at fixed intervals of two years. These biennial meetings of the assembly afford a means of adopting needed amendments without long intervals, as in the case of ad hoc conferences. It should be noted that article IX differs from the 1929 provisions regarding amendments by requiring a screening by the maritime safety committee of IMCO; by requiring circulation at least six months in advance of consideration; by permitting consideration only at biennial meetings of the assembly, and by requiring a two-thirds majority vote of the assembly and of the maritime safety committee. There is a specific prohibition against making structural amendments retroactive. Generally speaking, article IX provides such machinery for the amendment of the convention as may be desirable, but surrounds such machinery with safeguards against hasty or ill-considered changes. A provision in article XV permits a conference to be called for amending the convention if IMCO is not in force.

Article XI provides that the convention is to come into force on January 1, 1951, if by January 1, 1950, fifteen governments, including at least seven governments having not less than one million gross tons of shipping have accepted it.

Mr. Green: Has that happened?

Mr. Chevrier: No, as I will indicate in just a moment. Otherwise it will come into force one year after such fifteen governments have deposited their acceptances. At the present time—and now I deal with the question of the hon. member—I am advised that the convention has been accepted by the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the French republic, the Netherlands, New Zealand and Sweden. But as not enough acceptances were deposited before January 1, 1950, the convention will not come into force on January 1, 1951. It will not come into force until accepted by fifteen governments.

I shall deal now with the chapters in the various regulations. Chapter I of the regulations contains general provisions as to their application. Unless expressly provided otherwise, the regulations apply only to ships engaged on international voyages. Regulation 3 excepts certain classes of ships such as troopships, warships, cargo ships of less than 500 tons gross, ships not propelled by mechanical means, yachts and fishing vessels. In addition, special exemption is given to vessels solely navigating the great lakes and the St. Lawrence river as far east as Montreal.

Regulations 6 to 19 inclusive of chapter I provide for the inspection and survey of ships subject to the convention, and for the issue and acceptance of certificates. These fourteen regulations follow generally the pattern laid down in the 1929 convention, but additional certificates have been provided to take care of new requirements. Regulation 20 has no counterpart in the 1929 convention. It specifically requires each government to conduct an investigation of any major marine casualty and to supply IMCO with pertinent information concerning such casualties, particularly where such information bears upon the operation of the regulations. This provision should result in the accumulation in a central body of valuable data for use in considering future amendments to the regulations.

Chapter II deals with the construction of ships from the safety standpoint, with special regard to the prevention or mitigation of casualties. New provisions are contained in this chapter requiring that a vessel shall have adequate stability when in a damaged condition. The convention considerably exceeds that of 1929 in its requirements for protection against fire. It authorizes three alternative approaches to the problem. The first is the essentially incombustible ship; the second depends upon an automatic sprinkler installation; and the third requires the extensive use of fire-retardant bulkheads together with the installation of an automatic fire-detection system. The adoption of regulations setting forth definite requirements for protection against fire is one of the outstanding features of the convention.

Basic regulations are included dealing with those electrical installations on passenger ships which are essential for safety. This subject was not dealt with in 1929, but the increased use of electricity since that time made its consideration imperative. In the 1929 convention it was provided that passenger ships should be inclined upon their completion, and the elements of their stability be made known to their operating personnel. The new convention extends this requirement to cargo ships of 500 gross tons and upwards. The convention also makes provision for fire-extinguishing appliances on cargo ships of 1,000 gross tons and upwards. The previous convention dealt in this respect with passenger ships only.

Chapter III deals with life-saving appliances and emergency musters and drills. A most important advance beyond the 1929 standards in this direction is the extension of many requirements to cargo ships of 500 tons and upwards. The definition of "short international voyage" is rewritten to include both length of voyage and distance off shore, and a measure of increased boatage is required for ships on such voyages.

Lifeboat equipment requirements have been increased in the light of lessons learned in the war. All lifeboats are required to be lifeboats of class I, and mechanical davits are required on ships over 150 feet in length.

All ships are required to carry means for making distress signals by day or night, and the line-throwing apparatus must now be capable of attaining a minimum range of 250 yards. The requirements as to musters and drills on board ship are increased, and in certain directions are made applicable to cargo ships.

Chapter IV covers radiotelegraphy and radiotelephony. This chapter requires cargo vessels of 500 gross tons and over, but under 1,600 gross tons, to be equipped with a radiotelephone installation if not fitted with a radiotelegraph installation. In the 1929 convention the minimum limit on cargo vessels was 1,600 gross tons, and there was then, and is now, no radiotelephone alternative for these larger ships. Chapter IV further provides for a greater degree of flexibility in permitting exemption from radio in that the exemption is not necessarily related to specific mileage, may be partial or conditional, and must take into account the various conditions surrounding the particular voyage.

The requirements of this chapter as to listening on distress frequencies, except for cargo ships of less than 1,600 gross tons, involve advances as to the hours of operator-listening, and as to the installation and operation of auto alarms. The new provisions substantially increase the possibility of distress messages being promptly picked up by ship stations. The technical requirements as to radiotelegraph installations both on board ship and for use in lifeboats represent a substantial advance over those contained in the 1929 convention.

The necessary changes in the requirements as to surveys and as to certificates have been made to suit the new provisions. A certificate called a safety radiotelephony certificate is established to cover the small cargo craft and conditionally exempted ships equipped with radiotelephone only. Provisions have been made so that the distress frequencies, to which reference is made in the new convention, shall follow any future requirements adopted by the international telecommunication union.

Chapter V deals with safety of navigation, under which broad term a number of requirements chiefly of an operational nature are included. The chapter generally applies to all ships on all voyages, including those specifically excepted by chapter I, saving only ships of war.

The provisions in regard to meteorological services have been rearranged and expanded to take into account the recommendations of the international meteorological organization.

The procedures covered by article 45 of the 1929 convention relating to distress messages have been modified to take into account the increased range of marine radio installations, and to extend rescue provisions to aircraft or survival craft. The proposed regulations adequately provide for the securing of assistance from other vessels, but are designed to avoid interfering unduly with ships not needed for the rendering of assistance. The requirement of direction finders on board ship has been extended to all ships of 1,600 gross tons and upwards, as compared to passenger ships only of 5,000 gross tons and upwards required by the 1929 convention. This requirement may be deferred for two years from the date the new convention comes into force. Exemption may be allowed in the case of vessels operating in regions where there are few or no radio beacons, but the value of the direction finders from the rescue standpoint must be taken into account. In this connection a new regulation requires governments to set up such aids to navigation, including electronic aids, as the volume of traffic along their coasts and the degree of risk demand. Similarly, a new regulation requires each government to maintain adequate rescue equipment along its coasts.

Another new regulation provides for a simplified and efficient system of signals between a stranded vessel and a rescue party on shore. This system is easily understood, and involves no elaborate equipment on the vessel. A regulation covering safe pilot ladders is included to make the boarding of ships in open waters less hazardous.

Chapter VI deals with the carriage of dangerous cargoes, that is to say cargoes which are dangerous either from their inherent nature or from their liability to shift at sea. Specifically, the subject of grain cargoes is dealt with in some detail, and requirements for adequate shifting boards are provided. There are now in force in Canada regulations, made under the Canada Shipping Act, covering the carriage of dangerous goods and regulations covering the stowage of grain cargoes. I think I may say that all the changes made in the new convention are in the direction of increased safety and take into account the advances made in ship construction and seamanship since 1929.

There are other provisions in the bill, apart from the safety convention, which the government considers it advisable to enact at this time. I should like to deal briefly with those now.

For some years there has been a feeling in this country that a ship registered in Canada should be described in the act as a Canadian ship. Our ships are known on the seas and lakes as Canadian ships, and fly the national colours of Canada. It is out of date to use the cumbersome expression—"British ship registered in Canada", or "ship registered in Canada," and to bring the act in line with modern usage the bill provides that the expression "Canadian ship" will be substituted for the expressions "ship registered in Canada" and "British ship registered in Canada", wherever these latter expressions occur. At the same time Canadian ships will retain their status as British ships and continue to enjoy the rights and privileges usually accorded to British ships on the high seas and in all ports of the world. The change is one of terminology and does not affect the legal status of ships of Canadian registry. It should commend itself to all members interested in Canadian shipping.

There are amendments designed to enable Canadian consular officers, wherever possible, to take over duties and responsibilities now performed by British consular officers in connection with Canadian ships and seamen. At ports where there are no Canadian consular officers the British consular officers will continue to act for Canada under arrangements made with the United Kingdom government.

There are also amendments concerning the licensing requirements of small craft under ten tons registered tonnage. At present these small vessels are not required to be registered but under section 107 of the act ships exempted from the provisions of part I relating to measurement and registration are required to take a licence from a chief officer of customs. The licensing requirements cover small motorboats and pleasure craft owned by Canadians but do not cover small craft owned by aliens. There are many such vessels maintained in Canada by United States citizens who have summer residences in this country, and it is desirable to have these motorboats and yachts licensed and marked for identification purposes so that in case of accident the owner can be easily located.

There is also a problem connected with small boats equipped with outboard motors which under a strict interpretation of the act are required to be licensed.

The bill provides that the governor in council may make regulations respecting the licensing for identification purposes of small vessels under ten tons registered tonnage maintained in Canada by aliens; the licensing of vessels equipped with outboard motors; the marking of licensed vessels; the exemption from the licensing requirements of certain vessels to take care of special cases; and the imposition of a penalty for failure to license and mark. In view of the increasing navigational hazards caused by small craft and the extensive use made of these vessels in different waters, it is considered advisable to deal with the problem by regulation rather than by statutory provision.

Representations have been made that parliament should enact a motorboat act along the lines of the motorboat act of the United States which applies to motorboats and certain other vessels not more than 65 feet in length. While this suggestion is receiving the attention of the officers of my department, the government does not propose, at this time, to introduce a bill covering the whole field of motorboat regulation. There is, however, provision in the bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act to permit the issuance of temporary certificates as master to persons qualified to take charge of motor vessels, not exceeding 65 feet in length, carrying passengers in an open cockpit, or in a cockpit which is covered by a light trunk cabin, and plying on the inland or minor waters of Canada within specified limits. This will permit the operation of large motorboats carrying passengers, such as the well-known tour boats in the waters of the Thousand islands, where the operators have local knowledge of the waters but do not hold a regular certificate as master or mate for inland or minor waters.

There are other miscellaneous amendments contained in the bill including amendments relating to the pilotage service and other matters which I do not propose to explain in detail. These amendments have been recommended by my officers, who are familiar with the workings of the act, and are considered to be in the interests of the shipping industry. After the discussion of this bill has been terminated, I propose to move that it be sent to a committee for study. While the bill appears to be fairly lengthy on the surface, as hon. members who have it with them will observe, there are but sixty-three sections. The rest of it deals with the articles, the chapters, and the regulations, pretty much in the same fashion as did the safety of life at sea convention, 1929. That convention was approved by the house and was later made a part of the Canada Shipping Act. The same procedure is being sought at this time and I propose at a later stage to move that the act be sent to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines for study.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this bill is to be sent to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines there is no need for me to say much about it today. I hope, however, that in that committee it will be possible for us to get a detailed explanation of the various sections of the bill and also of the provisions of the international convention. As we all know the session is drawing to an end, and at this particular stage in a session it is always difficult to give careful consideration to any measure. I hope the minister will arrange to have his officials present before the committee and that we shall be given every facility for getting a thorough understanding of the bill.

Mr. Chevrier: I give that assurance now.

Mr. Green: As I see it, there is little that is controversial about the bill but there are details which are of some importance, particularly to those Canadians who live on the St. Lawrence river, on the Atlantic coast or on the Pacific coast. I also hope that the opportunity will be given to such bodies as the labour unions, the shipping people, and the shipbuilding people to have representatives appear before this committee should they wish to do so. I should also like to ask that the radio operators be permitted to make representations before the committee. I know that on the Pacific coast they are much concerned about a trend toward cutting down the use of radiotelegraphy and replacing it by the radiotelephone. That is something that has given a good deal of concern to these radio operators and also to many of the general public who are interested in the safety of ships. The shipping companies of course look at the question more from the point of view of cutting down expenses, and I presume they would be in favour of having more radiotelephones and fewer radiotelegraphers. But the question of safety of life is directly involved in the question, and I trust that it will be possible to hear representations from both sides, if they wish to appear.

It may also be wise to have representations from the pilots of Canada. I do not know to what extent they are worried about the amendments to the Canada Shipping Act which affect them; but if they are concerned about any of these amendments, they should be given the opportunity to appear before the committee.

The minister has said that once this bill has been passed by the house, Canada will accept officially the international convention for the safety of life at sea. The terms of that convention are a schedule to this particular bill, and I take it that the committee will be considering that convention in the same way that the committee on external affairs, a few days ago, considered the convention setting up the international meteorological organization. The minister did not say whether he is entrusting the job of going into the details of this particular international convention to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines or whether he will ask that it be done by the external affairs committee. In my opinion it would be much more suitable in this case to use the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. Chevrier: At the conclusion of my remarks I said it was my intention to move that this be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. Green: The minister also said that after this bill is passed he will ask the house to authorize the government to accept the international convention, which I presume will be done by a subsequent motion. I take it there will be no need to refer this particular convention to the committee on external affairs.

Mr. Chevrier: No.

Mr. Green: It should be pointed out that the international convention for the safety of life at sea does not apply to shipping on the great lakes. The minister will correct me if I am wrong; as I understand it, that shipping is excepted from the provisions of the convention.

Mr. Chevrier: That is right.

Mr. Green: So that it will apply only to shipping on both coasts. Then again I believe it does not apply to coastal shipping but only to the shipping from one country to another; so that any changes to be made in our coastal shipping laws will have to be considered quite apart from the international convention.

In the bill I notice that there are some changes in the provisions which apply to coastal shipping, but many situations are not being dealt with. For example, take that very question of radio telegraph and radio telephones. I can find no provision in this amending bill which deals with that situation in so far as ships engaged in the coastal trade are concerned. Of course it is on those ships that the problem has arisen. I would hope that amendments could be made to the Canada Shipping Act to deal with that particular problem on the coastal ships.

There is just one other point. It has to do with the licensing of outboard motors. I am afraid that if the minister is going to insist on licensing all the outboard motors in Canada he will have to set up a sea police. Certainly he will be interfering with thousands and thousands of people operating these small boats, most of them pleasure craft. Not only will they be on the sea coast and on the great lakes, but they will be on hundreds of lakes in Canada. I would hope that he is not going to have a gestapo running around from lake to lake seeing that everybody with an outboard motor on a canoe has a licence. Perhaps he has no intention whatever of doing that; but I do point out to him that the bill appears to go very far. The regulations for the licensing of outboard motors should be restricted to those vessels which are being operated where there is shipping and where there could be some confusion.

He said that there had been thought of the government bringing in a motorboat act to deal with motorboats all over Canada. This is the first time I have heard of any measure of that kind being under contemplation. It may be necessary, but it would seem to me to be interfering with provincial jurisdictions, and again to be making a great deal of trouble for the minister which he could avoid without harming the interests of the Canadian people. However, we will not have to solve that problem during the present session.

I can assure the minister that members of the official opposition who are on the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines will attend the sittings with the sole intent of helping to give careful consideration to the international convention and also to the amendments to the shipping act. I do not think there is any reason for political controversy, but we shall require thorough explanations and a reasonable amount of time in order to go into all the details.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): I shall detain the house just about a minute. Had the minister not made the statement that this bill of 150 pages is going to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, I would have a lot to say. I listened to the minister carefully when he made this statement. With some of it I agree; with a lot of it I disagree.

I have read the bill, but I cannot say that I fully understand it. I do know that the principle of the bill, namely, amendment of the Canada Shipping Act, is something that is long overdue. I am glad that the minister has got around to it. I am going to reserve whatever comments I have until the committee sits and we have someone before it who is in a position to explain the technical changes that will be brought about in the industry because of the suggested amendments.

I just want to emphasize something that the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) had to say. In addition to the experts from the minister's department I suggest it would be well to have someone from the industry as well, because a lot of changes that are suggested in the amendments are going to affect the industry. I want to leave that thought with the minister. If he does not call them the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra will very likely do so with my co-operation.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I shall be only two or three minutes. The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Goode) has come over to warn me that I should say nothing at all, but I am going to say a few words regardless of what he says.

I am very pleased to see this bill introduced. It is a very technical bill from the standpoint of a layman. One who has not had great experience on the sea is not in a position to say much about a bill such as this until he has had the opportunity to hear the sections explained before the committee by the officials.

I am glad to hear the minister say that he proposes to have this bill go before the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. I support the proposal made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra that representatives of unions and representatives of the radio operators have an opportunity to present their point of view before that committee. Representations enough have been made in that direction, and there is enough evidence being gathered to warrant the committee hearing the point of view of these people on such a very important question.

I would say this to the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, who was a bit concerned as to whether it was going to license outboard motors and things of that sort. From my personal experience I have a great respect for the steamship inspectors of the minister's department. I have had occasion to know them throughout the years in connection with interior services, and I have found them very thorough-going and practical men indeed. Without reading the bill I would suggest that if it is drafted as a result of advice received from a number of the past captains of the navy and the merchant marine in the minister's department, based on their theoretical knowledge and experience, it will be a very practical bill. Not much will be found wrong with it; but if it is passed on the advice of people without sea experience we might find many loopholes in it. I would say, in connection with the matter mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green), that with respect to the motor boat question I have found from practical experience that if one does not wish to be bothered by steamboat inspection he builds his boat one hundred pounds under inspection tonnage, and then he is all right.

Mr. T. H. Goode (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) has said that I went over to his seat and asked him not to speak. That is not entirely correct. I noticed he was making some motions toward me and, not being sure what he meant, I went over to ask him in a courteous way. The hon. member asked me whether the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite) was going to speak, and I said I did not know. In a jocular manner I asked him if he was going to speak, and that I hoped he would not. I still wish he had not.

Mr. Adamson: Is the minister prepared to do anything about outboard motors? I hope he can put silencers on them.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENTS WITH RESPECT TO VOTING RIGHTS OF ESKIMOS AND INDIANS, ETC.

Hon. F. G. Bradley (Secretary of State) moved the second reading of Bill No. 311, to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1938.

Mr. Drew: Would the minister give a general explanation of the bill?

Mr. Bradley: Mr Speaker, this is a bill to make certain changes in the elections act in accordance with the recommendations of the special committee appointed recently for that purpose.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Section 1(1) is for the purpose of extending the franchise to Eskimos by removing them from the exemption in paragraph (e). Section 1(2) of the bill amends paragraph (f) so as to bring the text in line with a later section in the bill and to afford to Indians the opportunity to acquire the vote by waiving their right to exemption from taxation on personal property. This refers to those Indians who ordinarily reside on reserves. Section 1(4) provides for the right of an Indian's wife to vote where the Indian is a veteran of either world war I or world war II.

Section 2 makes provision for a change in the period between nomination day and election day in certain ridings throughout Canada. These are based upon climatic conditions which render it either difficult or in some cases impossible to get the ballot boxes around within fourteen days, the period ordinarily reserved in the act for that purpose.

Section 3 makes provision for the inclusion of Newfoundland in paragraph (c) in cases of appeals from the county court judge, and makes that section apply to Newfoundland as well as to the other provinces therein named.

Section 4 of the bill contains the schedule.

Mr. W. J. Browne (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few observations on second reading. As the Secretary of State (Mr. Bradley) has said, section 2 of the bill adds to the number of constituencies which shall have twenty-eight days between nomination day and polling day.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Beaudoin): Order. The hon. member ought not to quote sections of the bill at this stage. That could be done more properly in committee.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I am referring to the principle of extending the time from fourteen to twenty-eight days, and to the number of constituencies in the country affected by the adoption of that principle.

This matter was before the standing committee, and it was pointed out that not all the constituencies in Newfoundland included here need such a long time between nomination day and polling day. It has been represented that it is very difficult for a returning officer to visit his area and to have the ballot boxes distributed in time. However, as I pointed out in committee, under the constitution under which Newfoundland operated between 1832 and 1932, a period of one hundred years, nomination day was only ten days in advance of polling day. Improvements in transportation methods in the last twenty years should tend, not toward an increase but rather toward a shortening of that time—although ten days would not be sufficient in a federal election where the amount of paraphernalia to be distributed is much greater than it is in a provincial election. Nevertheless, operating on that schedule of ten days between nomination day and polling day I never knew of any serious difficulties in some of the constituencies set out in this bill. I suggest that when we are in committee this matter be considered further.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 1—Repeal.

Mr. Green: I would ask the Secretary of State to explain why this act is not amended to give the vote to the Indians of Canada. In the bill there is a section giving the vote to Eskimos, but there is still a restriction against the Indians. My understanding is that the Indian does not have a vote unless he signs a waiver of exemption from taxation. In British Columbia the Indians were given the vote last year or the year before, and voted at the last provincial election. As a matter of fact one of them was elected a member of the provincial legislature, and I believe that was the first instance of an Indian being elected to any legislative body in Canada.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Oh, no.

Mr. Green: He represented his riding during the recent session at Victoria, and did so with considerable distinction. I believe the time has come to give the vote to Indians in Canada. They have proved that they are well qualified to have that right in British Columbia; and if they are eligible to vote in a provincial election they should also be allowed to vote in a federal election. I do not understand why there should be any difference. Perhaps the minister could amend the act to provide that where an Indian may vote in a provincial election he shall also be eligible to vote in a dominion election. We had that in reverse before. A Japanese could vote in a dominion election in the rest of Canada, but could not vote in British Columbia because he had no vote provincially. That has now been changed but for many years the law read in the way I have indicated. I urge the minister to give further consideration to this section so that Indians in British Columbia may vote in federal elecions just as they can in the provincial elections. I regret that the Indians from one coast of Canada to the other have not been given the vote, but there is no reason why they should not be given it in British Columbia.

Mr. Bradley: One of the bases for granting the franchise is that the holder of it shall be subject to the ordinary taxation laws of the land. That is a principle that goes away back, that there shall be no taxation without representation. The reverse would seem to apply equally strongly, that there shall be no representation without taxation.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): What about the Eskimo?

Mr. Bradley: It would be a curious situation if these people had the full franchise in Canada and yet were exempt from personal property taxes.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): If the Eskimo has it, why not the Indian? Give us some reason for that. You cannot, of course.

Mr. Gibson: It seems to me that this bill has been brought in without having received due consideration by the cabinet. I do not think it has been thought out too clearly. This matter was brought up in the Indian affairs committee which has deliberated for two years and I am of the opinion that that committee would not have recommended this course of action if it had been taken into the government's confidence before this legislation was introduced.

I resent, and I am sure the Indians will also, the fact that these people are being placed in a different category from the Eskimo. I think it is an admitted fact that the Indian population is considerably advanced over the Eskimo population. I do not want to be too critical of the government because I am sure they are acting with the best intentions, but I am sure that a great many Indians on the reserves throughout Canada will consider that they are being asked to buy the right to vote. They are being asked to waive their ancient rights of exemption from taxation while living on the Indian reserves.

I realize that perhaps that will have to be eliminated at some time, but I do not think it is right to give the Indian a vote only if he waives that exemption which is his by long usage. We are setting up about five different classes of Indians in connection with voting. There are those who were previously enfranchised through giving up their rights as Indians. Then there are the war veterans and war veterans' wives who have been given the right to vote. Another class is made up of those who have signed waivers. There is still another class of taxpayers and voters, including the veterans, who have not signed waivers.

Mr. Carroll: Are the Eskimo and the Indian in the same category as far as being a ward of the government is concerned?

Mr. Gibson: They are accepted as wards of the government in the estimates of the health and welfare department where they are handled jointly. I am sure the minister who looks after that matter will confirm what I say.

Mr. Carroll: The Indians are wards of the government and are supported by the government, and I should like to know whether the Eskimos are in that same category.

Mr. Gibson: They are definitely wards of the government and have been accepted as such.

Mr. Ward: I think the hon. member is wrong, the Eskimo is not a ward of the government.

Mr. Gibson: Maybe we should have a ministerial statement on this.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Will the minister tell us how many Eskimos in Canada are paying taxes?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): That is not the problem. The problem is whether the Eskimos are exempt from taxation by statute and the answer is that they are not. But the Indian is exempt from taxation by statute. The Eskimo, not being exempt from taxation, may vote; the Indian, being exempt from taxation by statute, may not vote. This bill provides that he may vote if he waives his exemption.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): A nice tricky statute.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): It is not a tricky statute.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The Eskimos do not pay any taxes, do they?

Mr. Harkness: In the Indian Act as we have had it up to the present time the Eskimo is defined as an Indian because it is stated that wherever the word "Indian" appears it shall be taken to apply to the Eskimo. In the bill now before the committee that is not the case. I find it rather difficult to find the distinction that is being drawn.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): There seems to be a misunderstanding about this. The Eskimo, for the purposes of the jurisdiction of the federal and provincial governments, is considered to be an Indian under a decision of the courts, but that does not put him in the position of having the benefits of the Indian Act.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I think we should have a better explanation because the explanation just given by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration does not answer the question that has been raised in regard to the situation that will result. I do not think there is any occasion to make a comparison one way or another between the Indian and the Eskimo, but it does seem to me that in this particular case the Eskimo is being treated in a manner that places him in a more favourable position than the Indian.

In this particular case you are imposing certain conditions in regard to the Indian which it seems to me are not in keeping with our attempt to make him a responsible citizen. I think every step should be taken to give the Indians full rights of citizenship and make them feel that they are citizens of this country in every way. They have demonstrated their capacity to assume responsibility and I do not think they should be dealt with in a manner that seems to separate them from the other people of this country. It seems to me that the right to vote should not be based upon a condition of this kind.

Mr. Bradley: There is no difference in treatment between the Eskimo and the Indian. Some Indians already have the vote. This bill deals with Indians who are ordinarily resident on the reserves and who have certain statutory exemptions from taxation. So far as I know there are no Eskimo reserves. There is no exemption from taxation in favour of the Eskimos, and therefore we propose to give them the full franchise. If an Indian wants the full franchise and is prepared to accept the same conditions under which it is extended to the Eskimos, and to the white men, for that matter, he can have it. It is not relevant to say that the Eskimo does not in fact pay taxes. Even if the Indian will not have to pay taxes, still he must execute the waiver.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Surely this is a lot of legalistic quibbling, and that is all. Leaving out questions of treaty money, reserves and everything else, today we are giving the Eskimos the franchise and refusing it to the Indians.

Mr. Bradley: Some Indians.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The great majority of them, because they are on reserves. You are giving it to all the Eskimos; you will not give it to all the Indians. Why not? Are they inferior? Are they incapable? If the minister would give us some reason of that kind I might be prepared to accept it. If you are giving it to one class—I was going to say one ethnic group but I will leave that alone, because I do not quite know what it means—why not give it to the other? That is something for which I have not yet heard one sound reason. The only reason advanced is that the Indian on a reserve receives treaty money, and is given certain consideration when he is old. Why should that have anything to do with whether or not he is allowed to vote? We allow people who receive old age pensions to vote, though in that sense they are receiving money from this government. Let the minister tell me why we should make the franchise general with respect to Eskimos and why it cannot be made general with respect to Indians. Surely it has nothing to do with taxes or anything of the kind. Those are just legalistic reasons. If you are giving it to one of course the sound thing to do is give it to both.

Mr. Gibson: Following what has been said by the hon. member for Calgary West, there are in my riding very intelligent, hard-working Indians who may pay two or three thousand dollars a year in taxes, but they are not given the right to vote unless they are prepared to give up some of their ancient rights. Yet we turn around and let an Eskimo vote, though certainly we do not owe him anything more than we owe the Indian, and certainly he does not pay taxes. My tax-paying Indians cannot vote, and I resent it. I believe the government are wrong in bringing down this legislation, and I ask them to reconsider it.

Mr. Ferguson: This is 1950; we are holding up the torch of democracy, yet we say that men and women who were the original citizens of this country may not have a voice in its government by means of the ballot. If an Indian served his country, he is given the privilege of voting; otherwise he is not. It may be that we will be fortunate enough to have no war for the next ten years; in the meantime these young men, many of whom no doubt would volunteer more readily than some of those who have the privilege of voting, are given no say in the running of the country. If a war should break out and we should call for recruits, however, these young men twenty-three, twenty-five or twenty-seven years of age would step forward the day war was declared and volunteer to defend their country. To one group of Canadian citizens—and there is no doubt that they are Canadian citizens—this government says, "You may have no voice in the conduct of affairs because years ago it was thought advisable not to permit you to vote owing to the fact that you were given certain concessions by the federal government." As the hon. member for Calgary West has said, an old age pensioner receives money from this government, but he has the privilege of voting.

Let us take a step forward in this year 1950 and give every citizen of this country the right to voice his opinion of the government by marking his ballot. Do not ostracize and set apart one group of citizens of whom we should all be proud. They are Canadians, and good ones. I think it is a disgrace that the Indian is not permitted to vote.

Mr. Applewhaite: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this discussion has not been altogether fair to the committee or to the minister who introduced it. I suggest that as far as Indians are concerned there are two classes of thought in Canada. There are those who would like to see the Indian given the same status, God help him, as the white man at the earliest possible opportunity. On the other hand there are those who would like to see the Indian kept where he is today. In between those two schools of thought is a large section of the population which does not seem to consider the Indians one way or the other. To those who take an active interest in the affairs of the Indians and wish to see their status raised to that of full citizenship as quickly as possible, compatible with the interests of the Indians themselves, I suggest that owing to the circumstances of the past hundred years this cannot be done overnight. I think everyone will admit that we could not just wipe out the Indian Act and everything it implies; so it has to be done gradually. Just because nothing has been done in all the years past is no reason to oppose some action being taken now.

However, the point I wish to make is not concerned with taxation or representation. I suggest that if you are going to throw the vote to anybody just like that, they will treat it with the same degree of respect and consideration with which, unfortunately, it is treated by a great many of us. We are given the vote as a matter of course when we reach the age of twenty-one. The figures in any election will show that in some parts of the country we do not attach much importance to this vote that came to us in that way. I have not the figures, but I would not mind betting—if it were parliamentary to bet—that the percentage of nationalized Canadians who make use of their vote is much higher than that of Canadians by birth. So if we are to give the Indians the vote, and if it is to have any value to them, they must realize that responsibilities go with it; that if they are to acquire the privileges we enjoy as white Canadians they must accept the responsibilities that go with them. Unfortunately for all of us, those responsibilities include the right to pay taxes.

I would not like to see this differentiation with respect to the Indians continue longer than is absolutely necessary. I suggested to some Indian friends of mine some time ago that it might be a good plan to adopt the system followed in New Zealand with respect to the Maoris; that is, give them all the vote and let them elect their own members to four or six seats. They promptly replied, "That is not what we want. That will perpetuate the discrimination. We want to vote on a par with you". Well, Mr. Chairman, they are not going to vote on a par with us if from the financial aspect we continue to regard them as wards of the country, incapable of paying taxes, which implies the inability to earn a living in competition with the rest of us. I do not think it is fair to the Indians who really want to vote to assume that they would like to take it all on the one hand and assume no responsibility on the other. I would suggest to you that those who would accept the vote, and would take that right without paying their taxes, are perhaps those Indians who have not yet reached a stage of citizenship where they are entitled to vote. It is absolutely unfair to say, as I believe the member for Simcoe North said, that this government is giving the Indian no voice in the affairs of the country. By this act this government is giving to every Indian the opportunity to exercise his voice in the affairs of the country if he wants to do so as a tax-paying citizen. It is a step in the right direction, and I am a bit surprised it has not been accepted in that spirit. I feel confident that the Indians in my district, who are socially far advanced, will put themselves in a position where they can vote and pay taxes.

Mr. Charlton: The last speaker mentioned the Indians' right to do certain things. The Indians now have the treaty right exempting them from income tax on moneys earned on the reserve.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): No, that is not a fact.

Mr. Charlton: How does it happen that they are exempt?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): They are exempt by a statute of parliament, and that is what I was trying to explain to the member for Calgary West.

Mr. Charlton: In any event, they are exempt from the payment of income tax on money earned on the reserve. They have to pay the same taxes as other people on money earned outside the reserve. I do not feel this government is giving the Indian very much by giving him a vote, but at the same time taking away another right which the Indian feels he has earned. He has paid dearly for that right. As the representative of the Six Nations Indian reserve at Brantford, I can say that there are few of those Indians who want to vote. I do not think this government is giving them anything when it gives them the vote but takes away another right. Those Indians who feel that they should have the vote want that right without any strings attached to it.

The mere fact that the Indian is exempt from the payment of income tax on income earned on the reserve makes very few exempt from that tax. In most cases the money is earned off the reserve. As I said before the Indians pay every other tax we pay when they earn money off the reserve, yet they do not have a vote. Those Indians who served in the armed forces have the vote, and it was only in 1948 that their wives were given the privilege of voting. The government is putting these Indians in a class by themselves, because the Eskimo is being given the vote without any strings attached to it. The Indian is not being given the vote unless he gives up one of those things which he feels he has earned. I think that is unjust. Have the Indians been asked what they think about this? Has this change in the act ever been referred to them?

An hon. Member: Certainly they have.

Mr. Charlton: Will the minister answer that?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Yes, I shall when the hon. member has finished.

Mr. Fulford: There is one question that bothers me in connection with giving the Indian the right to vote. By treaty the Indians have the right to cross the international boundary without let or hindrance. The Indians at the Caughnawaga reserve near Montreal, and a fine lot of people they are, go all over the United States and Canada building the framework of bridges and skyscrapers. They seem to be singularly free of the fear of great heights. I watched them building the Thousand Islands bridge, running along the catwalk with hundred pound kegs of rivets on their shoulders. They earn fairly satisfactory incomes from this type of work. The question in my mind is, if they accept the vote I assume they get full citizenship, so would they lose the right to cross the international boundary without let or hindrance?

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, I opened this discussion and I am going to move an amendment to the act. I move:

That the following be substituted for clauses (2) and (3) of section 1 of bill 311:

(2) Paragraph (f) of subsection 2 of section 14 of the Dominion Elections Act, 1938, chapter 46 of the statutes of 1938 is repealed.

As I read the act, the result of that amendment would be to give Canadian Indians the vote in general in the same way as the Eskimos are now being given the vote. I think there has been a lot of dodging the issue here, in some of the remarks made against this measure. I would ask the member for Skeena to explain whether or not he thinks the British Columbia legislature made a mistake in giving the Indians of our province the vote recently? The argument he made would apply to the provincial vote as well as the federal.

Mr. Applewhaite: Are you asking me?

Mr. Green: Yes.

Mr. Applewhaite: The answer, of course, is that the Indians are not the wards of the government of British Columbia.

Mr. Green: That was not the argument that was used by the hon. member in making his speech; he did not even mention that. When we get down to this question of wards we are getting on rather thin ground, because there are a lot of people today who are getting assistance from the dominion government and yet they have the vote. I repeat there is no reason why the Indians of Canada should not be given the vote at this time.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I perhaps did not make the position clear in the short answer I made to the hon. member for Calgary West. The situation in the past has been this, that the Indians not resident on the reserve could vote at the federal elections. The Indians on the reserve could not vote, except veterans and their wives. We start with that, and go back three or four years to the time when the Indian Act committee was sitting. A great many Indians and Indian organizations appeared before the committee, and discussed the desirability of having all Indians vote in the federal election. My recollection is that there were 74 different representations made by Indian groups, bands or associations. Of the seventy-four, forty-nine said they did not want the vote, and twenty-five said they did. Of course, a number of qualifications were expressed. Some said quite distinctly that they were not citizens of Canada, did not desire to be citizens, and would take no part in the affairs of the country if they were given the opportunity. Others said they might consider becoming citizens and exercising the vote if their treaty rights were upheld. Some were afraid their treaty rights would perhaps not be observed if they were brought under the ordinary rules which apply to all of us.

It must be remembered that the Indian Act, in order to protect the Indian from, shall we say, economic distress in the early days, has always exempted the Indian on the reserve from paying personal property tax and real estate tax. That provision is in the present Indian Act, and is continued in the Indian bill which was introduced two weeks ago. Now, having those things in mind, and desiring to assist the Indian to become a full citizen of Canada, the government concluded that it would be desirable to give all Indians the vote, but it was not desirable that they should retain the exemption from personal property tax which they now enjoy under the Indian Act. Under these conditions one, two or three courses could be adopted. We could eliminate the personal property exemption in the Indian Act, if we desired, and give the vote at the same time; we could give the vote and retain the personal property exemption; or we could do as we have done. We have left it with the Indian to make his choice. The first lesson in Canadian citizenship surely is that we should all be equal with regard to paying taxes. With that thought in mind, this amendment was drafted and the result will simply be this. As formerly, all Indians off reserves may vote. Indians on reserves may retain their personal property tax exemption if they desire it, by not waiving their exemption, and consequently not having the vote. But we would hope, and I think probably the result will be, that a large number of Indians will sign this waiver of exemption, because they realize that if they desire to have a voice in sending a representative to the House of Commons, who will in turn impose taxes on them, no doubt, they therefore should subject themselves to the same kind of taxation as every member of the house is at the present time obliged to do. It has often been said—and I think some of the hon. members opposite and perhaps some on this side have said it—that the Indian was a second-grade citizen at the moment. Without admitting that, I hope the house will understand that we are trying to make him an equal citizen; but I do not think we should go one step further and make him a preferred citizen as against all others in the community.

With respect to the Eskimo, the difference is not that which has been made by the hon. member. The Eskimo is being given the vote because, under some conditions, he has shown his ability to exercise that proper judgment which we would expect of an elector. He is not exempt from taxation, as the Indian is. If he were, we would remove that exemption in the same way as we are removing it with respect to the Indian. If an Eskimo is in receipt of income sufficient to pay the present income tax, he will pay it. There is no question about that. There is no exemption at all. If I have not made this clear, I am sorry; but I would think that the committee would agree with me that this is the first step toward bringing the Indian within the influence of parliament and to bringing parliament within the influence of the Indian: by giving the vote to the Indian on the reserve on precisely the same terms as other Canadians receive it.

Mr. Drew: I think there is a point touched on by the hon. member for Brant-Wentworth (Mr. Charlton) which is not sufficiently clear in the remarks that have been made by the minister; and I am not suggesting for a moment that the minister is not seeking to make it clear. But this is not a case of giving certain Indians a special exemption as a favour. We must go back to why the Indians were exempted from income tax or from any other taxes with regard to anything that they earn on the reserve. The Indians gave up their ancient claims to rich and valuable lands and it was part of a treaty between the Indians as tribes and the government of Canada. Under those treaties the Indians gave up rights which they believed were real. In return the dominion government, as its part of the treaty obligation, undertook to provide certain reserved areas where the Indians could live; undertook to give the Indians certain annual payments, both in kind and in cash; and also exempted them from taxation on such earnings as they might make on those reserves.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): But not by treaty.

Mr. Drew: The exemption which relates to taxes was the carrying forward of a principle which was inherent in the relationship. The very fact that it is an exemption in relation to what they earn on the reserves indicates that it was in relation to their position on the reserves which is a position created under those earlier rights.

No Indian is exempt in respect of any money he earns outside the reserve itself. There is a real reason why similar treaties were not made with the Eskimos. At the moment it is difficult to imagine that the areas occupied by the Eskimos had a substantial land value. Conceivably, at some future time, minerals may be discovered in some of the Eskimo areas, although that has not yet happened so far as I know. But it was an entirely different type of country. The Indians were giving up rights in the parts of the country, to a very considerable extent, that were the most productive. The Eskimo's situation was different. It seems that in this particular case the Indian is called upon to pay on anything that he earns outside the reserve, without any waiver; and I can only feel that while no unfairness may have been intended, that is what is actually resulting from a proposal of this kind and that we are asking the Indians on the reserve to pay for the right to vote. I do not think that is consistent with our whole approach to this situation and I therefore think that the motion that has been made to amend the section is in keeping with the history of this situation and with the broad approach to the problem.

[Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce).]

Mr. Coldwell: I think there is one satisfactory feature about the discussion here this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. This is the first time that I can remember that this topic has been the source of so much discussion on both sides of the house, and I think that is a good thing. Perhaps it stems from the work of the Indian affairs committee of a couple of years ago and the fact that we are going to enact, I hope, a much more progressive Indian Act than we have had heretofore.

Whatever may be said about the matter, I think there is a principle involved. That principle is that the inhabitants of this country, no matter of what colour, race or creed, should have the right to vote. I think that the amendment that has been proposed should be supported by the house at this time. I am greatly in sympathy with one suggestion made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Applewhaite), that in the granting of the right to vote the house might consider Indian representation as such. I think that practice has worked out well in New Zealand, and I believe it would be a fine thing to have in this house Indian representation by people of their own who would put forward the claims of the Indians and assist this house in reaching a conclusion with regard to the Indian problem in this country. Of one thing I am convinced. Largely because the Indians had no vote, had no representation and therefore had no influence in this house, they have been neglected for a good many years. There is one other fear one might have, and that is that they might be subject to political manipulation and political influence. That is one danger in the present circumstances. But after all, those of us who have lived in this country for a long time know groups of people who came out, unfamiliar with Canadian citizenship, in the early years of this century, and who were subject to political influence and political manipulation for a time; but they grew out of that. While for a time perhaps it had a bad effect, yet in the long run the people who were given the franchise appreciated it and used it. They have become citizens interested in all aspects of our public life and today are not subject to the kind of influences that might be exercised on our Indian population at this time. Therefore I cannot believe that that danger, though it is there and might prove to be a very real danger for the time being, is one that we can escape no matter when the Indians are enfranchised. After all, those of us who know very much about what is going on in the country know that a good many people who perhaps are unemployed momentarily, and so on, are subjected to a good deal of pressure at various times, not the least of which perhaps is today taking place in some parts of this country. I think the principle of the amendment should be supported by the committee.

Mr. Fair: I should like to ask the minister whether an individual Indian would have the privilege of waiving his taxation right, or whether all the band should do so?

Mr. Bradley: It is a personal privilege; any Indian who wishes personally to waive his right to exemption may do so.

Amendment negatived: yeas, 21; nays, 57.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Nomination day.

Mr. Green: Can the minister explain whether representations were received from the returning officers in each of these ridings where the nomination day is now to be made twenty-eight days before the election instead of fourteen? I am interested of course particularly in the ridings of Cariboo and Skeena.

Mr. Bradley: I do not know whether any such representations were made to the electoral officer. They would go to the electoral officer and presumably to the committee. I do not know whether the chairman of the committee can tell us.

Mr. Green: I would like to know whether representations were received from the returning officers in these ridings, for example, Cariboo and Skeena in British Columbia.

Mr. Bradley: I have no knowledge of it, Mr. Chairman; that is all I can say at the moment.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The only difficulty that I recall in the committee was in connection with the two districts of Trinity-Conception and St. John's West. All the other districts are fairly large in area. For example, I believe the district of Port Arthur is 148,000 square miles in area, although it is not all populated. It was very sympathetically received. I believe the Saguenay is 640,000 square miles in area.

In the province of Newfoundland, as will be seen in the schedule, there are five ridings in which the nomination day is to be twenty-eight days before polling day. The chief discussion centred around whether St. John's West should be added to that list, because it is a district in which it is just as difficult to get around in wintertime as in Trinity-Conception. It is a larger constituency than Trinity-Conception, and although it seemed to be favoured by the Secretary of State, it was put to a vote and St. John's West was not included. I do not think there was any discussion on any of the other constituencies mentioned in the schedule.

Mr. Drew: I do think that the minister should give us some detailed explanation because as one looks at these constituencies that have been chosen it must be possible for him and hon. members generally to think of other constituencies which would present almost equal difficulties. If it is sound in one case, it may well be sound in another.

Certainly as I look at the constituencies in Ontario, and in fact at the constituencies in other provinces, I can think of several where the difficulties are quite as great. I would like to know the basis on which these have been chosen, what the yardstick was.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Chairman, of course I cannot speak with any personal experience—

Mr. Drew: Who is going to, if the minister cannot?

Mr. Bradley: Possibly the leader of the opposition has had more extensive travels in Canada than I have. So far as I am concerned, I have received the representations from the committee; that is the report of the committee.

So far as the province of Newfoundland is concerned, I have some extensive personal knowledge, at least of the northern portion of the island. I have little or no knowledge of the outlying portion of the district of St. John's West. I would be rather inclined to think that it ought to be included in the twenty-eight day period, but the hon. member for St. John's West did not seem to think so, and I bow to his superior knowledge on the subject. I know St. John's East does not require twenty-eight days. I know equally well that all the others do. I know this from personal experience.

So far as the rest of Canada is concerned, I am afraid I have no personal knowledge of it whatever. I have just simply taken the recommendations of the committee, where I assume these matters were fully discussed.

Mr. Drew: The minister has been very fair in explaining that in the very nature of things he has not yet had the opportunity to have a wide contact with some of the more distant constituencies of Canada. But he is acquiring knowledge and will acquire more as time goes on. In matters of this kind ministers must frequently present bills of which they are not expected to have a personal knowledge. It does seem to me that when the house is asked to pass on a thing so important as this the minister should have an explanation as to why these particular constituencies have been chosen, and other constituencies which would seem to present equal problems have been omitted. It may be that there are reasons for increasing the time in this case. But as I look at this I can find some difficulty in understanding why Port Arthur would be so much more difficult than Fort William. I know it does cover a larger area, but both are very large constituencies. Coming farther east we reach the constituency that includes Sault Ste. Marie, which is an enormous one with tremendous travel difficulties involved. I can think of constituency after constituency in northern Ontario that I should think would present as great problems from the time point of view as those mentioned in the bill before us.

Looking at the constituencies in the province of Quebec, I should think that there are constituencies in addition to Chapleau and Saguenay that are almost as difficult to cover within the time factor mentioned as these would be. From whatever source he can obtain information, I think the minister should explain the yardstick used.

Mr. MacDougall: Mr. Chairman, I was a member of the committee and I might say that this whole problem was seriously considered there. It is in line with the thinking of members of the committee, and also reports given by the various returning officers in northern ridings that the time is extended from fourteen to twenty-eight days. It might be of interest to hon. members to know that those ridings where it is now recommended the twenty-eight day provision prevail are northern ridings.

In my own province of British Columbia they are the ridings of Cariboo and Skeena. Then in the Yukon area there is the riding of Yukon-Mackenzie River. Going over to Saskatchewan we find the same thing, that this provision is applied to the northern large-area ridings which are not as densely populated as the ridings farther to the south. The same applies in the other provinces where the committee has considered extending the time between nomination and polling day from fourteen to twenty-eight days.

Getting down to our new province of Newfoundland, the question of having twenty-eight days for all the ridings in that province was considered. I know that, because I made the motion myself in committee. It was generally considered, even by the hon. member for St. John's West, that twenty-eight days in his riding was too long a time. He did feel however that possibly an extension from fourteen to twenty-one days would meet the problem more adequately.

I believe it is fair to say that in this whole matter of extending the time from fourteen to twenty-eight days there was unanimous opinion in the committee, including the hon. member for St. John's West. The extension of time has been allotted to those vast areas in the northern part of Canada, where the population is not great and the opportunities for travel and transportation are much less than in other ridings. Members of the committee were in agreement that the extension should be given in the various constituencies set out in the schedule. I believe it is fair to say that the committee was happy to go along with the recommendations. The report from the committee is self-explanatory and well-nigh unanimous.

Mr. McIvor: I can understand why a longer time would be required in the constituency of Port Arthur than in Fort William. The latter is more compact, but it would be impossible to cover Port Arthur riding in the same time. I believe it would take twice as long. In my opinion the schedule is a reasonable one.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Perhaps I might add a word of explanation. In the old act there was only one constituency which made provision for the twenty-eight day period. This schedule is the result of the experience of the last general election and, with the exception of the one riding of Cariboo—

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): And Jasper-Edson.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): —yes, and Jasper-Edson, is the result of the recommendation of the chief electoral officer.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, that is exactly the kind of information I was trying to get. If the chief electoral officer has made recommendations in regard to specific ridings, with the exception of the two that were added later, then the position is somewhat different, because I believe I am expressing what I know to be the view of members generally in the House of Commons when I say that we have a highly competent chief electoral officer. He would base his recommendation upon his experience in connection with these constituencies.

There is however this point I should like to place before hon. members. This twenty-eight day period brings the formal date of nomination very close to the issue of the writ. In making any amendment, no matter with what feeling of comfortable assurance any party may occupy its place in the house at the moment, it must be kept in mind that amendments are made for the long term, with the expectation that they will apply to any situation in the house.

Without any suggestion of any impropriety or otherwise, it is certainly obvious that a government must know, well in advance of the day that it is going to issue a writ, that such a writ is to be issued. Consequently it is in a position to take certain steps, without doing anything wrong at all, whereas those parties who are not aware of the date are confronted with the fact that very little time remains between the date of the issue of the writ and the formal date of nomination. With the time of the issue of the writ being the same a situation is created where, in the ordinary course of events, the government has a distinct advantage, whatever that government may be. I suggest that hon. members should consider this carefully, since we are examining this from the point of view of legislation which should be satisfactory no matter which party is in power.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I think the leader of the opposition must have been reading the remarks I made in committee, because I urged the point he has just made, in attempting to keep down the number of ridings in which there would be a twenty-eight day period.

Mr. Drew: Is twenty-one days not adequate for these new ridings?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Apparently not. That was canvassed with the chief electoral officer, and he stood by his recommendation of twenty-eight days.

Mr. Gibson: When this matter was being considered was the committee aware of the fact that the franchise was being extended to Eskimos? That will present great problems in the administration of the act. It will place serious strains upon the election machinery.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): We have mukluks in the machinery now.

Section agreed to.

Sections 3 and 4 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

275. Salaries of staff and allowances, $124,260.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

General administration—

150. Departmental administration, $540,260.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I intend to make somewhat extended remarks on this item which I think will help to have the items passed much more expeditiously. May I suggest that you call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Mr. Chairman, as I rose I thought I heard a voice call "Carried". Apparently the owner of that voice had not heard from Annapolis-Kings. If the minister detects an undertone of confidence in my voice I am sure he will the more appreciate, in a kindly way, what I have to say.

Just before the dinner adjournment I indicated that I intended to speak on industrial relations at perhaps greater length than is my custom. On this, the first occasion on which any of us has had anything to say with respect to labour relations, I intend to review as best I can the progress and development in this important field, including a bit of history and dealing with the present position, and to examine what I regard as certain trends which in my judgment augur well for the future.

I believe it will assist our understanding of the problem if we are conscious to some extent of the history of these developments. It is within the memory of many of us in this committee, for example, as to when the first large labour federation was formed. For a great many years we have had craft unions, which have confined themselves to the business of particular crafts. The I.T.U. or typographical union is an example of this; and it continues, as do many others, as a craft union. But it seems to me interesting to recall that the American federation of labor, the first organization to gather under its wing many craft organizations, was formed in our own time, in the city of Chicago, by Samuel Gompers, a little Welshman less than five feet tall, who came to the United States as an immigrant. I am sure many of us have forgotten that the brother organization, the committee for industrial organization, did not come into being until a comparatively few years ago, in 1931 if my memory serves me correctly.

Two men had much to do with that organization. John L. Lewis had his united mine workers of America, which in the beginning had a membership engaged only in the craft of coal mining. That was the first union to extend its operations to the unionization of projects or industries on an industrial basis. By that I mean that in a coal mine in Canada today, all persons engaged in that industry belong to the united mine workers of America including the carpenters—and there are many in a mine—the drivers, the machinists, the tipple men, and so on. In British Columbia the organization extends to include also railway employees, because the company that owns the mines operates its own railway in the Nanaimo area.

It is of some interest historically that Mr. Lewis sent Philip Murray into the steel plants to organize that industry on the same basis, and Philip Murray became the first president of that second large labour organization, the congress of industrial organizations or, as it is commonly known, the C.I.O. It is also of passing but not great interest that Lewis later threw Philip Murray out of the united mine workers, the charge against him being dual unionism. In other words Murray, originally a member of the coal miners' organization, being sent out by the president of the miners to do a job of steel organization, then was expelled from the U.M.W. of A. because of dual unionism, the duality being the steelworkers and the coalminers. That organization had a tremendous growth and marks, I think, the greatest change within organized labour. I refer, of course, to the business of organizing in one union the various craftsmen engaged in carrying on the work of a particular industry.

In Canada we have two companion organizations. The C.C.L. is the child, or perhaps I should more properly dignify it by saying that the C.C.L. is a partner of the new organization in the United States, the C.I.O. That, within unionism itself, it seems to me indicates the greatest change that has taken place within those organizations.

Everyone will say, and certainly the newspapers do, that certain individuals have been given too much power; that may or may not be true. I think the man picked on most by commentators, editorialists, and so on, without complete knowledge on their part, is John L. Lewis. They have gone altogether too far, and made many charges against that man which are without justification. While realizing that the leader of the united mine workers has committed excesses, I am unable to forget the great elevation that he has given to his men and their families in matters of daily living; and particularly in matters permitting the parents and children to receive a proper education which fitted them to go forth into the world, and take their part in the struggle for existence. Let no one think that I am condoning, for example, this simple fact: Within the last year or two that one man has held a nation, yes even a continent, in fear. It seems to me that is an example of absolute power perhaps growing and feeding on itself, and thus doing things which in a democracy we cannot condone. We are hoping the day has gone when any individual controlling an organization of any kind can hold a continent in fear, and hold perhaps its future for a time at least in the hollow of his hand.

When I say that neither am I going to forget that industry itself, in that same period, was guilty of excesses. I do not think anyone in this House of Commons who had read Mr. McGregor's report on the bread-baking industry, the flour industry, the rubber industry or the glass industry, could for one moment say that in those cases industry has been altogether altruistic in its outlook. I believe that is true of some industries not yet examined. That brings us in these matters to the point where it is necessary that legislatures and parliaments take a hand, because only in legislatures and parliaments do we find a system of some control of excesses of this and other kinds. So we come back historically to this. Why have we organized labour? I have said before, and I repeat tonight, the reason is that, up to some years ago, industry regarded labour merely as an intake product. My reading of the history of the labour movement is that labour organized in self-defence. I am not suggesting for a moment that that was necessary, but I do say it was something which expedited the growth of unionism. So I now repeat what I said the first day that I came to this House of Commons: I believe in organized labour. I add that I believe in strong unions.

We all say here that we believe in collective bargaining. That is something which has been adopted in our own legislation, and in the legislation of every province in Canada. But, Mr. Chairman, we are speaking with our tongue in our cheek if we do not add that we believe in the bargaining between industry and strong unions, because without that collective bargaining has no meaning. There can be no proper collective bargaining except between equals or people who are nearly equal. The day has long since gone by when labour received something as a matter of generosity. Let me say this: I am sorry to say what I have because I know there are some institutions, large employers of labour, that are not unionized or being unionized. They have never had any difficulty. I think perhaps one of the great examples on this continent is Lever Brothers, the largest manufacturers of soap on this continent. So that struggle, so to speak, was forced on a great many of our people simply by circumstance. But that which was at the bottom of labour organizations was the greatest circumstance in the world, enough to eat, a place to live in, and an opportunity to bring up a family, not in fear of starvation but with some opportunity.

We all say we should live in fear of God. How can that be done if you and your children are hungry? So, today we have reached a position where we have at least strong unions. I am going to say that I think that has gone as far as it should go. I know there are many people who, when they find difficulty in this or other civilized countries, say that there should be a law: "that should not be, we must have a law." Mr. Chairman, I want to make it plain that there are many things which law can do, but there are also many things which law simply cannot do. Take a simple illustration. You cannot make a woman sing, nor can you make a man work. All that law can do is to say if you do not do so and so, then you will be subject to certain penalties. That is the most that law can do anywhere. Leaving our legislation as general as possible along those lines seems to me the best method; and I intend to quote some cases which I think prove that we should have our industrial legislation in rather general terms.

At the present time we find labour well organized. What have been its gains? In numbers during the last war the gains have been tremendous. We find today labour organizations which until a few years ago were undreamed of. I give you as the best example the largest union on the North American continent, the automobile workers' union. I am glad to see the tremendous growth they have had, and before I have finished I intend to mention what I think is a great achievement of statesmanship between that union led by Walter Reuther and the General Motors Company, the largest employers of labour in the United States of America.

I want to make this fact plain. Labour properly began to raise wages. To do what? To get its share of the profit dollar of industry; because without the profit dollar there cannot be dividends and neither can there be wages. To me one of the most significant things happened just a few years ago where three men met. They were Eric Johnston, who was then president of the United States chamber of commerce; Philip Murray, the head of the C.I.O.; and Mr. Green, head of the A.F. of L. They gave us a seven-point program for progress in American industry. But all three agreed and affirmed the profit motive in industry. We do not hear much of it lately—and you do not hear of it at all in the United States—but some people here, the C.I.O. for example, use this catch phrase: Production for use and not for profit. Only in Canada on this continent do you hear anything of that. For a time in the United States, in election after election, Mr. Eugene Debs, the socialist candidate ran. He polled an insignificant number of votes. In late years it has been Mr. Thomas. But their polling of votes is so insignificant as not to be a factor in politics over there.

I mention that fact because they have affirmed the profit motive as the principle which makes industry tick and which therefore makes production grow, and without which we all know there can be neither money to pay wages nor money to pay dividends. In saying that I know that I am not asserting any new principle but am affirming an extremely old one. What does it mean? It means that both parties are entitled to a fair share of that profit dollar; but it also means that both parties must pull their oars in the production boat in order to entitle them to any share of that profit dollar.

We can all remember—and I am sure the minister remembers it well—that in the old days the great battle was based on an hourly wage or a daily wage. That is still true. I advised some people in labour with whom I was quite closely associated for some time that I thought they were wrong. I still think so. I am sorry to say that in these industrial matters we are still battling over so much an hour, so much a day or so much a week. It seems to me the principle which we must find, and we have not reached it yet, is one whereby the man who sells his labour can find some means of not eating roast beef when business is good and starving the rest of the time; surely we can find some system whereby that individual can eat with his family over twelve months of the year as long as there are twelve months in a year. I am not saying offhand that therefore any industry must provide a living—and by a living I do not mean an existence; I mean a decent living. All industries cannot provide those wages for a twelve-month period because having regard to climatic conditions, and having regard often to the product which is produced, we cannot bring everything to that basis. But it seems to me that the job of industry is this, and I include farming; I include every instrument from a spade to a tractor: the things which are produced. Without shifting labour all over the country when this industry closes or when that industry closes, the nearer we can get to finding a twelve-month basis on which to obtain our labour forces, then, in my judgment, while we may not have reached the millennium, we have made an approach to it. We then will have laid the foundation for a lasting peace in industrial relations.

Speaking again of this profit dollar—a profit dollar in industry for whom? I give this thought to the house, not in any sense urging it strongly, but it seems to me we have advances to make on that basis. Surely industry and labour within itself can find some means of giving labour a greater portion of that profit dollar as profits increase instead of all of us being bound by this so much an hour, so much a day, so much a week business.

As to those of us who say in our economics that we believe in the profit motive, let us think: Profit for whom? Let us have profit for whom? Surely not only for the person who owns the plant. Surely we must in some way or other include those hundreds of thousands of people who are engaged in the operation of that plant, and I use the word "plant" in its broadest sense. Surely we must realize that they are part of the profit system; and, when justified by larger profits, they are entitled to a larger share of that profit dollar.

Now I come to this point. Some hard-headed people will tell me that I am theoretical, idealistic, that I am talking about something that I know nothing about. In answer to that I say this. The scheme in which I am so interested, not advocating, is a matter for study by this house and by those in authority in the department. It seems to me to be so important that we should raise our sights a little and not confine ourselves to the minimum way. We are now raising hourly wages in cents, and so on. Taking the long view we should seek a system whereby we will not have these uprisings and stirrings every month or so. We should endeavour to have the long view and get on a long basis.

I notice some people smiling; therefore I am going to give an example of progress in the very thing that I am talking about. I think the agreement arrived at the other day between the automobile workers and General Motors marks an important milestone in the history of negotiations, of settlement between labour and industry. It is too recent for anyone to have forgotten. The point I emphasize is this. It is a settlement on a five-year basis. After all the struggle and trouble that we have been through, to my mind that is the finest trend—if it marks a trend, and I think it does—in the settlement of these relations.

I confess that General Motors must have a deep consciousness of conviction that things economically in the United States are not going to pot, that they are going to progress; because in the arrangements which they have made, aside from pension benefits or other benefits, they have arranged for an hourly increase in pay during the life of that agreement. But then, what do they get in return? They get peace; they get enthusiasm in their working force. In my judgment that is a tremendous advance in labour relations as we know them on this continent. I hope and I trust that that example may be followed in many other industries because we are arriving somewhere. But, Mr. Chairman, aside from all these material things, aside from picking this and that and the other thing out, I think what it has demonstrated above all is that it shows what can be accomplished. By whom? By men of good will. You will never get anywhere in these things as long as you have some individual who just says: "They are all wrong about that" and who sits there. I have seen some labour negotiations; and when I speak of this good will I bring it down in its application to something of which I have some knowledge.

I have seen this happen; in fact it nearly always happens. I know that, in contracts made by the industries in Alberta and in British Columbia with the united mine workers, it is going to take at least three days before they get anywhere. Everybody knows that. They meet the first day. One side states its ultimatum and the other side gives you its ultimatum, made a little tougher perhaps, because of what the first fellow has said. And then we all go home. Well, perhaps some of us do not go home. We may stay in the hotel or something of that kind. A buys B a cigar; C may buy D his dinner. Do not think that labour is broke any more. I am happy to know that they stay at the best hotels in the country, as they should. They stay in the same place as the people with whom they are negotiating. I would not suggest—

Mr. Major: Where the farmers should be able to stay.

Mr. Gibson: They go to California.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): If I had the opportunity I would ask you to drive me in your Packard to Florida, but at the moment I am not going to ask you to do that.

I would not go so far as to say that one might buy the other a Coca-Cola particularly if the hon. member for Fort William were around. The point I am trying to make is that they know the kind of men with whom they are dealing—and there are some men with whom we cannot deal; do not let us have any doubt about that, but there is usually a way of taking care of them, because in these affairs it is a majority-rule matter, the old democratic way which is in vogue in this chamber. I have seen it happen so often. One side says: "I have read all sorts of things about that big shot. He is not such a bad fellow as I thought he was." Therefore this three-day rule in the coal business—and it is by custom a rule—is an excellent one, because by the time they get down to business and try to settle their contracts those engaged in the negotiations usually have come to the conclusion that their opposite numbers are human and are not such bad fellows after all. That is what conciliation is. That is why it is so wise that in practically all civilized countries we have come to rely on the help of conciliation. But again I repeat, sir, that conciliation can only take place between men of good will. Therefore it behooves all of us not to make snap or quick judgments when we read something in the paper about something that is happening in Tennessee, in the coal mines of West Virginia, in the theatres of Hollywood, and in the musicians' union somewhere else. Do not let us rush to conclusions. Before we make up our minds let us get both sides of the picture and hope that from then on negotations will be conducted by men of good will.

I intend to say a word about the future; and I intend to mention some trends through events that have happened in my own time which I think augur well for the future. I have already said, sir, that these organizations came into being in the time of many of us who are sitting in this house. But I am going to enumerate two or three things that have happened, and that is by legislation, in favour of labour. The first I mention is workmen's compensation which, I believe, is in all the provinces of Canada. The next is unemployment insurance. Let no one try to deny that those are advances on the humanitarian side of the problem I have been discussing.

Today in industrial organizations we have personnel men. Some of them are good and some of them, I know, are bad; the human factor never attains perfection. But only fifteen years ago who in this chamber this evening would have heard of a man's being paid money to act as a personnel man in dealing with employees?

We have many things of that kind. For instance, we have pension plans. There are between 600,000 and 700,000 labourers under such plans, if I remember correctly—and I am proud of the word "labourer"; do not ever think that I am using that word in any sneering fashion. There are that many labourers who are taking advantage of industrial pension schemes which have developed as a result of agreement between themselves and their employers. In most cases both employer and employee make contributions to the funds thus set up which ultimately result in pensions for individuals.

Then there are thrift plans, savings plans, in many organizations today. None of us in this room ever heard of such schemes as far back as, let us say, fifteen years ago. So the point I am trying to make is that it seems to me industry has learned its lesson and now regards labour from the humanitarian standpoint, where formerly it did no such thing.

Let us take a look at labour-management committees. I know many of us think that those are grievance committees. They are not, at all. The minute a labour-management committee becomes a grievance committee it loses its usefulness. It is true that in all labour contracts today, or practically all of them, grievance procedure is set out. There are some difficulties in some industries as to when and where a man may consult his grievance officers—"grievance steward", I believe is the term used. I mention these things only to show the advances which have been made within the organizations themselves.

Now my time has expired.

Mr. Mitchell: Carry on.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): May I mention one thing which I believe is of importance to all of us—and in this I pay the greatest possible compliment to organized labour that I am capable of paying. I refer to organized labour ridding itself of communist leadership. Mr. Chairman, that was not easy. Walter Reuther has only one useful arm today because of the job he did in that cause. Remember, it required not only moral but also physical courage. I wonder how many hon. members know the type of letters that fellows I know so well—Pat Conroy, for instance—have received when doing what he and his fellow officers have done in getting rid of men like Jackson, the head of the electrical workers in this country. It is no sissy business those men are engaged in.

Mr. Mitchell: You're telling me!

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): So far as I am concerned, I hope none of us ever again, when the word "communism" is mentioned, will think of labour without remembering that organized labour has done more than any other agency, and done it more effectively, to stem the rust of communism in this country.

Let me refer to one other thing—and that only for a moment, because I know that today coal miners get good wages. I have been underground in many mines. So far as I am concerned, they cannot be paid too much; that is no place for me.

Today in the town of Cadomin there are five men, all of them with families, who are buried in the rocks and muck from a flash flood in the Cadomin mine. So, never again let us listen to anyone who says, "Oh, those so-and-so miners, they are getting $14 a day"—or they are getting this, that or the other thing. True, economically these things can and do get out of line. But let us never forget that today there are five widows and fifteen or twenty kids standing at the pithead at Cadomin waiting until the emaciated and smashed remains of their fathers and the providers for those families come to the surface.

Let us also not forget that in the town of Nordegg, where I personally have stood and counted the graves of thirty-nine men killed in the mine, the town is today burned out. I do not know how many were employed there —perhaps three or four hundred. But all there is in that town of Nordegg is the Brasseau mine, and the mine cannot possibly operate again for six months. So far as I am concerned, I hope those men have been paid enough money so that they can get by until the opportunity to work again comes to them. I hope they have been getting enough to make savings of that kind.

I close with this: Having regard to the ladder of progress I have mentioned, much of it as a result of legislative action by parliaments or legislatures, in the over-all picture I cannot help being optimistic. Anyone who has compared the present situation with what it was twenty-five years ago, and has not marked the improvement, must indeed be a pessimist. And so in this Dominion of Canada, sitting as we do on the finest resources left in this world, and with a good machine for employment, and with a strong and virile labouring force, and with humanitarianism at last in the minds of management, he must be a pessimist indeed who falters after looking at the bright sunshine which sheds its rays on our industrial Canada, and all men of good will engaged therein.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, I thought that we were intended to discuss the estimates of the Department of Labour tonight. I have never attempted to weary the house by holding a post mortem on the development of labour in Canada, but after listening to the hon. member for Calgary West for the last hour my thoughts were provoked back to matters that I like to forget. I am going to say a few words about the statement the hon. member has just made. If he reads it tomorrow I think he will find it rather difficult to know on which side he is. I was reminded of a lot of speeches made by the former prime minister. He would nearly say something in one paragraph, he would change it in the next and then he would finish up by not having said very much about anything.

One thing in the hon. member's remarks that stuck in my mind was the statement that all the advances in the field of labour in this country had been brought about by legislative means. With that I disagree completely. I can remember the efforts made to organize labour in this country for a long time back, and that was not as a payroller but as one of the rank and file who can take some credit for the basic organization of labour.

When the hon. member makes a statement that we have gone a long way and that labour is well organized in this country, that statement is not correct. Out of a total potential trade union membership of five million there are only about two million workers organized. There are still three million unorganized workers in this country.

Mr. Mitchell: How many were there in 1939?

Mr. Gillis: The basic organization of labour was not brought about by the legislatures or by this House of Commons. Unionism in its early days had no friends in the legislatures or in the House of Commons. The war periods gave labour the opportunity to organize. I can remember before the first war helping a lot of men, who never got their names in the newspapers, set up the basic organization of the mine workers union in Nova Scotia. They would allow you to fool around with the provincial machine that did not mean very much, but I can remember seeing Nova Scotia barb-wired in 1909 when the united mine workers attempted to come into that province for the purpose of setting up international unionism in Canada to replace the company organization that was functioning at that time.

I can remember sitting in a hall and seeing company stooges shoot potential union men for no other reason than that they were union men. I heard no protests at that time, either in the legislature or in the House of Commons. The people who did the shooting were never even tried. I can remember seeing women and children thrown out on the streets and having to live in tents or in the basements of churches for months and months. Even after that struggle the union was denied the right of recognition by the operators in that province.

Our first break came during the war of 1914 to 1918. I can remember before 1914 that I was fired a dozen times because I had put my name on a card showing that I had joined an organization. That state of affairs existed in Nova Scotia in 1914 and 1915. During the war period the mine workers came in and in 1919 they were able to set up their organization and succeed in getting a contract and absorbing the provincial organization. We had no legislation then and we had no friends to speak for us, either in the legislature or in the House of Commons.

I can remember when the trade union was recognized by the operators, but we still had no legislation. It was not until 1925 that we had our first trade union act in that time which was forced through by the opposition. The then leader of the C.C.F. party, Mr. J. S. Woodsworth, sent a draft bill to Nova Scotia setting out what he thought a trade union act should be. I was president of one of the organizations and I can remember forming committees and bombarding the legislature on the eve of an election. The leader of the opposition introduced the bill into the legislature and the government could not afford to ignore it. They took the draft bill and amended it to include the check-off privileges.

The hon. member went on to say that we had unemployment insurance. When did we get it? We got it after a struggle of 25 years by those who were organized in this country. On the eve of the last war we got the Unemployment Insurance Act. Then the hon. member said that we have compensation, that it was handed to us on a plate. We got a compensation act in Nova Scotia in 1917, in the midst of a war.

Mr. Homuth: We had ours in Ontario long before that.

Mr. Gillis: I am referring to Nova Scotia because that is what I know about. The hon. member spoke about personnel management. We got that only in the last war.

Mr. Mitchell: From the government.

Mr. Gillis: I am ready to give credit when credit is coming to you. You went along with it, you developed the mechanics, but we did not get it until the last war.

Mr. Ferrie: Was it not worth fighting for?

Mr. Gillis: The hon. member did not do much fighting for it. The same thing applies to labour-management committees. I am not criticizing the government; I am simply answering the statements made, intentionally or otherwise, by the hon. member for Calgary West, that all the progress in the field of labour relations in this country was handed to labour on a platter by the legislatures and the House of Commons.

Mr. Homuth: No.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): On a question of privilege, I know the hon. member would not misquote me intentionally. I never said anything of the kind. I said that various improvements had come about through legislation. I did not say that it was handed on a platter by anybody to anybody else. I gave the greatest credit in the world to union organization. I said also that they were forced into that position as a matter of defence and had made great strides. I know the hon. member would not deliberately misquote me but people are listening to him—he is worth listening to as a rule—and I know he would want to be correct.

Mr. Gillis: I have no intention of misquoting the hon. gentleman and I would not be saying what I am saying were it not for the fact that I think that anyone reading his speech in Hansard and knowing the history of labour and its struggles and sacrifices might be misled.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I will accept the judgment of the hon. member if he will read it.

Mr. Gillis: I am concerned about the fact that we are becoming complacent; we think the job is done. As far as I am concerned, I do not want to wait for another war in order to get into trade unionism those three million workers who are still unorganized. I don't want to kid the unorganized of this country that the labour department is going to send out people to organize them, or that anyone from this House of Commons will go out and organize them. The machinery is there now to make that work much easier than it was in the past, and the job must be done by the men in the field themselves. Their struggle is much easier than when we formed the basic organizations in this country a good many years ago. But it seems to take a war to break the jam and develop ideas that should be developed during peacetime so the machinery will be available if and when an emergency should hit the country.

I could go on and talk about this matter for hours but I do not want to; I want to try to forget that period in the development of the labour movement in this country. It does not bring back pleasant memories to me. What I really want to talk about tonight is the labour department, and first I want to tell the minister that he is not going to be bothered much from this corner. In the first place the government sent the hon. member for Vancouver East to Geneva as an adviser on labour matters to the delegation that went there, and I compliment the minister on his judgment. He chose a man with very wide experience; but if he were here tonight he would be discussing these estimates. Another person who will not be here tonight is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who is in the committee that is trying to write a social security program.

As to the labour department, in the first place I recognize that the minister has a very capable organization. At the present time, owing to the fact that since the end of the war the labour relations picture has changed considerably as far as the federal department is concerned in that jurisdiction has been handed back to the provinces, the department is relatively free with the exception of conciliation and those workers coming under the national labour code, so there is not the pressure that existed during the war period. Nevertheless I want to say a word or two on some things that have to do with the dominion and the provinces.

The first thing I want to talk about is the fact that unemployment is still a responsibility of the federal government. I am not going to talk about the whole of Canada. There are hon. members here from the rest of Canada who can bring to the minister's attention what they think is wrong in that field; or if everything is all right they should tell him so. In the maritime provinces we have a permanent unemployment situation that is bad. In putting out figures on unemployment the federal government say that if more than five per cent of the working population is unemployed it spells danger and something must be done about it. That is the target they have set; that is what they consider dangerous. In the maritime provinces today we have some 57,000 unemployed, which according to government figures recently released is approximately ten per cent of the available working population. So the situation is twice as bad as it should be, according to the government's own analysis of unemployment. The over-all average across the country is about seven per cent.

The problem in the maritime provinces, mind you, is not regional or seasonal. The situation is bad. To some extent it was relieved following the end of the war by an arrangement under which the department took workers from the maritimes to the central provinces. During the past two years, however, there have been layoffs in Ontario and Quebec, and most of the people who were moved to the central provinces have found their way back to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. That problem is aggravated by the fact that thousands of young men and women are leaving school every year, and there is no possible chance of employment for them in that area. For the last twenty-five or thirty years the maritime provinces have sent an average of some fifteen thousand young people to the United States each year. That migration has been continuous over that period of time; it is still going on, and nothing is being done to change the situation.

I have heard a great deal of talk in the house about mechanization of the coal mines and steel plants. Mechanization does not relieve unemployment; it creates it. Every time you bring in a more perfect machine you step up production, lower costs and put more men and women on the street. If anyone thinks that mechanization of the steel plants and coal mines is going to relieve the unemployment problem in that area, he is wrong; it will increase it. It is difficult to find risk capital to go into that part of the country, but in the immediate post-war period the government did have a program. It tabled a white paper in the house in which it said it had ready and surveyed a shelf of public works in the different provinces, which would relieve the unemployment problem. Well, that public works program has been shelved. In my part of the country at least great hopes were placed on having the Canso bridge commenced this spring, but now I understand the provincial government has gone and thrown a monkey wrench into the machinery. The bridge was all mapped out; the plans were drawn for a 22-foot bridge. Then the provincial government decided it wanted a 24-foot bridge. That may be just an excuse—

Mr. Carroll: The provincial government did no such thing. This dominion parliament decided that the national highway would have to be 24 feet wide.

Mr. Gillis: I am not talking about the national highway; I am talking about the bridge across the strait of Canso.

Mr. Carroll: That is part of the highway.

Mr. Gillis: The Minister of Transport, for whom I have a good deal of respect and who I think is reasonably truthful, told the house in reply to a question I asked that as far as they were concerned the plans were drafted and the bridge was to be 22 feet wide. Now the provincial government have taken the position that they want a 24-foot bridge, and if that is the case the provincial government are the people who made the decision. The Minister of Transport and the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond had better get together and decide who's who and what's what on that point.

Mr. Carroll: I suppose the hon. member knows that when the Canso bridge is built it will be part of the national highway.

Mr. Gillis: That makes no difference. The national highway is going to be four thousand miles long, and it is only one mile across the strait of Canso.

The Chairman: Order. I think this discussion is pretty far from the Department of Labour.

Mr. Gillis: Well, that is a matter of interpretation. I am talking about unemployment; I am talking about the government's public works program, and pointing out to the minister that this project would have employed a large number of people and taken the edge off that unemployment problem. I am not blaming the minister, but the matter has been messed up somewhere between Halifax and the Department of Transport. It is the same government, or governments of the same complexion; nevertheless that problem is still there.

I mention that project because it was something specific to which the people were looking forward, but the federal government had plans for other projects. Now it has decided not to go ahead with any of those works. That is the point I am coming to, that as far as this government is concerned it is now the responsibility of the provincial and municipal governments to devise ways and means of relieving unemployment. Any hon. member from the maritimes who will make an honest analysis of that problem in his own riding will tell you that neither the municipalities nor the provincial governments have either the capital or the technical people to carry on that work. It cannot be done. The planning must be done by the federal government, and a large part of the financing done here. In view of the fact that that particular angle of unemployment relief in that part of the country has been shelved, I am suggesting now to the Minister of Labour that some means should be found of assisting the municipality in doing something for the permanently unemployed people until there are other opportunities for them. I cannot see anything there for them at the present time.

The minister's department did make a gesture by providing supplementary allowances under the Unemployment Insurance Act. For a few months that helped, but it has run out and these people are back where they started. Some of these men have been idle for the last two years, and some even longer than that. Most of them are veterans of this war, and they have exhausted everything. The provincial government has a responsibility; there is no doubt about that. I wonder if the minister's department could not consult with the provincial government to see if something could not be done about the unemployment problem, either by going ahead with some of the public works projects or by extending the supplementary benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

The second matter I wish to bring to the minister's attention concerns the employment offices across this country. They handle the unemployment insurance, and register the unemployed. I do not think those offices are serving the purpose they could serve in the field of unemployment. For example, they register the unemployed. They have their qualifications, their trade, and know how long they have been unemployed. I believe that seniority should govern in this matter, and the person who has been unemployed the longest, with due regard to family status, should be placed first. If the offices had a directive to that effect, I believe it would be carried out. What happens is that there is work for twenty or thirty men in a certain place. There are perhaps three thousand unemployed, or perhaps if it is like the city of Sydney there are five thousand in that one city. Instead of the employer taking his employees from the office that knows the circumstances and qualifications of each man, political pressure from the outside sends in a list, and that is the way the thing is done. The employment office has not the right to say that this man has been unemployed the longest, has family obligations, and his unemployment insurance has run out, so he should be employed first. It is not done that way.

Mr. Mitchell: If my hon. friend would permit a question concerning this political pressure from the outside, I should like to know, if there is political pressure on the employment offices from the outside, whether it is by my friend's party or my party or anyone. I should like to know that.

Mr. Gillis: The minister was probably in the house when I brought up the question specifically—

Mr. Mitchell: I am not being critical, you understand.

Mr. Gillis: No, but I brought this matter up with the Minister of Transport. I pointed out to him that, instead of the contractor at the local Sydney airport getting his men through the employment office, the men who were hired on that particular job had to go to the defeated federal and provincial candidate and get a slip before they could secure employment. I suggested at that time that the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Transport should get together to see that government contracts have a clause written into them giving preference to veterans and preventing any kind of political skulduggery. I think the minister knows, and I think every member of this house who has an unemployment insurance office in his riding knows, that that kind of thing does happen. I know it is not the policy of the minister's department, but until such time as the offices are given some kind of instructions, and there is co-operation with the employer, that sort of thing will create friction and raise a question in the minds of the men who are standing in the queue looking for a job. The matter is not handled as it should be.

I should like to say to the minister that, so far as I am concerned, I do not want any favours in this matter. I do not make any recommendations, but any time a person comes to me and I can help him in any way his politics are immaterial. As long as he has the qualifications, I shall help him. The man who is unemployed the longest, who has the greatest family responsibility, as long as he has the qualifications to handle the position which may be vacant, is the one who should be employed first. I do not want to see it done in any other way. The employer is not co-operating as he should, particularly in the community from which I come. I say that because I know. They do not go to the office to seek their employees. They just pick and choose as they like in that coal and steel industry. During the war your offices served a useful purpose. An employer sent in his requirements, and the office filled them. When the war was over the employers got back to what they considered normal. The offices are able to do an excellent job if they receive the co-operation of the employer.

Another matter I should like to mention, because these are provincial-federal matters, is the matter of vocational training. There was a good job done in that field during the war, and I know the minister had an excellent staff. Since the end of the war a fairly good job has been done. I know of two spots in Nova Scotia where schools were operated jointly by the federal and provincial governments. Within the last few months I have seen press statements, and I have received wires, to the effect that the school at North Sydney was to be closed. It was doing an excellent job, not only in training veterans for employment after the war but in taking the young unemployed and training them in certain trades and skills, such as carpenters, bricklayers, masons and that kind of thing. The school was doing a good job in turning out fine tradesmen. My information is that within the last couple of months the federal government has withdrawn from that field. The provincial government takes the stand it is not going to maintain the school, so it is being closed. I suggest to the minister that those schools were doing excellent work. They are equipped, and good men were running them. For the small amount of money that it costs to keep those schools operating, I believe the closing of them should be reconsidered. From time to time I hear in the house, and I support it, about grants to universities; and how necessary it is to train everyone in the university. However, we shall want hewers of wood and drawers of water. If every one comes out of a university with a B.A. and wants a job with the government, or is a doctor or lawyer, there will be no one to exploit, so no one will have any money to pay these people.

If one goes to the unemployment offices in many sections, one finds a queue of young people outside. In the office there is a long list of requests for bricklayers, carpenters, and plasterers, but these people standing outside cannot fill those positions. There is a need for vocational training. The minister has faith in vocational training, I know. Instead of leaving the field, we should be expanding it.

Another matter I wish to take up with the minister is the fact that during the war—when there is a war on we can do a lot of things, and do them quickly—the minister's department established something I considered a long step forward. He established an apprenticeship in the coal mines of Nova Scotia. For the short time that that apprenticeship worked, it did an excellent job. It was praised in the highest way by the miners themselves. Many people think that, to be a coal miner, all you have to be able to do is to shovel coal. Coal mining is something which requires highly technical skill. In the coal mines of Nova Scotia, for example, you have to serve three years of apprenticeship underground and write two fairly stiff examinations before you qualify as a coal miner. You have got to know a good deal about ventilation, compressed air, roof pressures, electricity and things of that kind. You cannot learn that overnight; and you can go down there in a mine without any previous training and get your neck broken quickly.

The regulations in the coal mines of Nova Scotia are stiff. The minister's department established something that I thought was looking a long way to the future in those mines when he set up that apprenticeship in the mines of Nova Scotia; a young fellow went from the surface with experts who trained him for six months in all of the technique of coal mining, and they could qualify him in six months to write his first examination and get his first papers. It takes him eighteen months to do that under ordinary circumstances and under exceedingly dangerous circumstances. But in effect they set up a school underground, and they were doing an excellent job and turned out a good type of miner. The miners themselves were all for it. I think the company agreed that the production of coal on those school faces was paying off the costs of training the trainee. But again, as soon as the war was over, that whole scheme folded up and was withdrawn. I am suggesting to the minister that, under Bill No. 217, you are loaning to the Dominion Coal Company in Nova Scotia some $7,500,000 to mechanize and to electrify the underground workings in those old collieries. If you can spend $7 million or $7,500,000 on equipment alone, you should be able to provide this training. It is a new type of equipment also, and it is a type of equipment such as the men going into these mines from now on should be trained in before they go in. That is in the interest of production and it is in the interest of everybody. I am making this suggestion to the minister now. I know that all of his department, the deputy minister and others, who worked on the vocational training end of the thing were all for this kind of thing. I know that the deputy minister in 1946 and in part of 1947 worked on and with the miners' unions and the coal company in Nova Scotia trying to continue that type of trainee program, but in the aftermath of the war they struck some stumbling blocks. I think perhaps the greatest one came from the company themselves. I suggest that that matter be given further study because it is necessary and it is in the interests of the industry. I am just leaving that thought with the minister again. Having regard to the small amount of money that that sort of thing cost—because in the final analysis it was not costing the company anything; the production from those school faces more than offset the cost of the training that was allocated to them—I suggest to the minister that he might take another look at this point that I mention.

I think the employment offices could be more effective if they had the co-operation of the employer or were given directives to handle unemployment on the basis of the longest out of a job, with the greatest number in the family, and got away from this idea of favouritism that exists in many of the offices across the country.

I am sorry that I occupied this amount of time. I did not intend to; and I want to assure the hon. member for Calgary West that I was not being critical of him. He just opened up a lot of old sores in my mind when he began to talk, and I like to forget the past, particularly that past, and look to the future.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Do they fire their shots? I was wondering about their skill.

Mr. Gillis: No. They have their fire bosses. I think too that labour has grown up. I think that in the two congresses of labour in this country you have as fine a body as exists in any country. Their work is difficult. To advance is the big problem. I think we have made many strides forward in the last twenty-five years. They were not easy strides. They were exceedingly painful ones in the early days.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): They were.

Mr. Gillis: I think one of the best developments I have seen in the last few months has been the realization on the part of labour that they have nearly reached the saturation point in demands for wages and they are turning their attention to social security matters. But one of the longest steps forward was the signing of the long-term contract. I know that the miners in Nova Scotia always insisted on a one-year contract. I concluded a long time ago that it was not good for the simple reason that you spent about five months negotiating your agreement; by the time you got it signed up you had about six months to run and you were back into trouble again. It did not give the operator nor the union itself a chance to plan or to find out where they fitted in.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): How true.

Mr. Gillis: In this last contract they got around to signing for two years. Over in the United States I think some of the industries have signed up for five years. I think the long term is a desirable thing from now on. I am appreciative of all the things that have been done by the departments of labour since they have had in the legislatures and in the House of Commons a few people to prod them along. They are not doing a bad job. I know the minister's department well, section by section. I got in touch with them. I think he has an excellent department, but they are being held back. There are a lot of limitations that we ourselves place on them. We are not prepared to push them as far as most of them would like to go. I am sorry that I have occupied so much time. I shall reserve the rest for the minister's estimates.

Mr. Johnston: I should like to say a word—

Mr. Mitchell: I have got to keep all this in my mind, Mr. Chairman, and I will not keep you long. I deeply appreciate what the hon. member for Calgary West has said and also what the hon. member for Cape Breton South has said. It is almost like a competition to settle who of the three of us is going to be the next Minister of Labour. I think that is all to the good. I was quite interested in the statement of the hon. member for Calgary West. I knew many actors in the labour drama on the North American continent and in Europe and I think among us all a great deal has been done. Do not let us take all the credit. There are a great many people outside the labour movement and inside it who have made the contribution that has been made to raise the social standards of the working people of this nation in the last thirty years. It is like planting an acorn. You do not get an oak the next day.

As I have often said in this house, a trade union agreement is based on character; it is not a legal document. But there are in my judgment certain fundamentals that govern the life of a nation, of a trade union or of an employer group. I think it was my good friend the hon. member for Calgary West who spoke of production for use instead of profit. I do not know whether any members of this committee have read "Das Kapital" by Marx. I think I could count on both hands all those in the Dominion of Canada who have read that book. They start out with the first volume and get tired before they get to the end of it. Even then, I think old Karl was a crackpot. He could not make a success of his own business. He could not support his own family; he was kicked out of every country in Europe. He had to go to the one free country, Great Britain, where he made the necessary studies to make that thing which was the bible of the Russian revolution. As to the point of the hon. member for Calgary West on the profit urge, the wages of profit, the salaries of profit, even some of the members of the House of Commons have said to me, "I think we should get a bigger sessional indemnity." I mean, that is a natural thing.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Let us form a union.

Mr. Mitchell: It is why the birds go south in the winter and north in the summer. It is just as simple as that. I was in Russia when they were paying 10 per cent on deposits and 10 per cent on government bonds. You talk about risk capital. One of the fundamental principles of Lenin was: Destroy the currency of a nation and a revolution is just around the corner. He went out and did that deliberately, with the result that in order to build up their comparatively small industrial structure they had to start afresh. There is nothing new about that. They were paying that much interest to get people to save money.

Let me say this, Mr. Chairman. I am from the working class. When you destroy the middle classes of a nation you are down the drain. I am not underestimating the contribution of many of the people who have spoken this evening, particularly my good friend, the hon. member for Cape Breton South, who was never a salaried employee of a trade union. He made his sacrifice and contribution to the miners in the maritime provinces. I have watched you struggle with your first union, and then your communist union and all that sort of thing down there until you got the powerful organization that you have today. I can say this also. You are one of the few districts in the united mine workers of America—probably the only one—where they still have democracy.

The hon. member for Calgary West was talking about John L. Lewis, who has made his contribution. What I like about Mr. Lewis is this. If it is yes, it is yes; if it is no, it is no. When he makes a contract he keeps it, with all his faults. However, I question the industrial statesmanship of any individual—and I am not speaking of any individual in particular at the moment—who can point a gun at a nation and get away with it, whether he be an employer or an employee. Lewis once said: "I cannot do anything with these Nova Scotia miners; they are democrats and Scotsmen; at least they claim to be." That is the later generation.

I am not going into the historical background, as the hon. member for Calgary West and the hon. member for Cape Breton South did, but there are certain things that I think we should remember. They are, bad money drives out good; money is timid; the law of diminishing returns, and don't be afraid of the machine. They are simple things; too simple. They like to make them complicated. There are four or five books in that sentence.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South talked about the machine. Not so long ago I was in one of the colonies. I do not like the word "colony." The governor asked me if I would meet the leader of the trade union congress there, which I did. I said: "What is your problem here?" He said: "They are introducing the bulldozer and the steam-shovel to build roads." I said: "What is wrong with that?" He said: "It will create unemployment." I said: "What are you doing now. How do you build your roads now?" He said: "With wheelbarrows, pickaxes and shovels." I said: "Why not be logical and build with knives, forks and spoons, and you will all be rich." I said: "I come from a nation of 13 million people. It is not a country in the sense that most countries are countries; it is a continent, and we spanned that continent with steel and communications. We built schools, a judicial system and all these things that are so necessary to a civilized country and we let the machines do the work."

I can remember the day, I am sure most of us can, when I would not be wearing a union made suit like the one I have on at the present time which was made by Dave Dunkleman, an old friend of mine. I knew him as a worker in the trade. I paid $27.50 for this suit ten years ago, and it was made in a union shop with union help; but they could not have done it without the machine. Do not be afraid of the machine. Let the machine do the work. That is one of the reasons why we have such a high standard of living in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. Ferguson: You have two suits a year, now.

Mr. Mitchell: Oh, yes. The best things in life are free. You know that. My hon. friend talked about—

Mr. Adamson: The second suit is free.

Mr. Mitchell: Oh, no. My hon. friend talked about the government not sending out labour organizers. That is what they did in Russia.

Mr. Gillis: I said I do not expect them to.

Mr. Mitchell: Let me say this clearly and with all the emphasis at my command. I am not suggesting that my hon. friend is following that kind of line; I have known him too long for that. But that was the implication in my hon. friend's remarks. In Russia of course the government runs the trade unions. They are the servants of the state. They are not free men as they are in North America. And that applies to other countries, and democratic countries, where the government calls the tune, where the trade union organizations are servants of the state. That was where the late Sam Gompers, whom my hon. friend talked about, showed more sense than any of them. He said: "Any trade union that gets tied up with a political organization will always live to regret the day that it got tied up with that organization."

Mr. Gillis: You are asking for trouble right now.

Mr. Mitchell: I listened to my hon. friend. I say any political organization. I speak of this party, the Social Credit party, and also the C.C.F. party. I believe in freedom. It is like the air you breathe. You do not miss it until it gets scarce. Do not let it get scarce.

There is another point, namely, seniority in connection with employment offices. Well, I always thought that an individual had the right to quit a job; that an employer had the right to fire a man. To me that is fundamental. The right to strike is fundamental; and that is implied in the employment offices. I like to go to whatever store I want to go to, to buy a pair of shoes, a hat or anything else. I do not think that my organization should tell an employer whom he should employ, or by the same token that my organization should tell an individual to take a job when he does not want to take that job. To me that is elementary and fundamental.

I believe the employment service should be based on service, service to the people of this nation. I often say to my people in the employment service: "It is only by the grace of God that you are not on the other side of the table." I say, "You may be the person who is out of work."

I deeply appreciate what both the previous speakers said about the organization in this department. I think that among us—I am not speaking in a party sense now, you understand—we have probably done as much in the last ten or fifteen years in this country as has been done by any other nation in a like period of time in furthering the interests of the great mass of people, whether they be agricultural, commercial or industrial, in the Dominion of Canada.

That was one point that was raised. The other was apprenticeship. In connection with apprenticeship, Mr. Chairman, I cannot quarrel with anything that has been said. I believe in it. The woods are full of Ph.D.'s and B.A.'s; but someone has to do the work. If you could erect buildings by making speeches I am certain that we could have erected many buildings in this House of Commons in the last three or four months. But you must have bricklayers, carpenters, plasterers, and so on all down the line, just as you must have miners. I speak now of what the hon. member for Calgary West said about miners. It is a difficult job to undertake. The dangers are great; the risks are great. I am a great believer in paying for the risk you take in an industry.

I want to say this very frankly if I may. I do not know whether it is safe to say this, but if I had to choose between being a lawyer and a bricklayer today, I would be a bricklayer.

Mr. Adamson: Much better pay.

Mr. Mitchell: I would like to pay a tribute to a man—I do not often mention people's names in the House of Commons, or friends—in connection with the establishment of apprenticeship in Canada. One is Joseph Pigott of Hamilton, the contractor, another is the late Jim Marsh, and another the late Tom Moore, who laid the foundation of understanding with the provinces in connection with the establishment of the apprenticeship system in Canada. It is true that in this day and age people do not go in for the trades, as they did when I was a young man, or when my hon. friend was a young man in Nova Scotia. There does not seem to be the urge to do it today that there was when we were younger.

Mr. Gillis: The machine has taken over; tradesmen are going out.

Mr. Mitchell: I cannot see that point of view, I am frank to admit. We have more machines; let the machines do the work.

Mr. Ferguson: Two pairs of pants.

Mr. Mitchell: And we have more suits, as my hon. friend from Simcoe North points out.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The two-pairs-of-pants county.

Mr. Mitchell: Absolutely. I am all for the machines. I remember when I was very closely associated with Sir Adam Beck in connection with the establishment of hydro in Ontario. They said, "You will never sell the power." It is true that Sir Adam tried to sell the power on every occasion, when we built at Queenston—but within three years there was a shortage.

The reason we enjoy this high standard of living in North America—and I am not going into figures—is because of the substitution of the machine for human labour. We cannot have a forty-hour week without the machine; let us be sensible about that. To my mind electrification is an elementary step. I would like to think that some of the countries in Europe and Asia had some of the advantages enjoyed by even the most lowly person—and I am not using that expression disrespectfully—in this country today.

About vocational training—

Mr. Gillis: I spoke about the machine in its relationship to unemployment. It is all right to talk about a high standard of living but 57,000 people unemployed in the maritime provinces have a pretty low standard of living, while the machine produces the profits. What are you going to do with 57,000 unemployed in the maritimes?

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Mr. Mitchell: It is not true; it is 13,000.*

Mr. Gillis: The figure changes—

Mr. Mitchell: Of course they do. They are like the tides that rise and fall. Of course they change. Unemployment figures dropped over 100,000 in the last few weeks. You cannot pass laws in this House of Commons to stop the flooding of the Red river in Manitoba. Of course, they might promise to do that. You cannot pass laws to stop the flooding of the Fraser river. That is the only thing that has not been promised. Neither can we pass laws to change the weather. If you have a late season in British Columbia we all know it creates inescapable unemployment conditions. And so on, right across Canada. That was one of the reasons we established unemployment insurance—so that it would act as a cushion against that form of unemployment. I think probably we planned better than we knew. I am not taking credit for this party or government, although we did place that legislation on the statute books.

We live in a seasonal country where we are bound to have big shifts in employment in different seasons. I know that during the war, when I was in charge of manpower, I insisted that the farmers of this nation either put on uniforms or go into basic industries in the winter months. That worked out very well; most of them, I suppose, went into basic industries. However, that is beside the point.

When one talks about unemployment he must take that into account. He must remember that this is a cold and variable climate, and in the very nature of things we shall have ebbs and flows in unemployment conditions in Canada.

I agree with the hon. member for Cape Breton South in the matter of vocational training. It was established while I was minister. We trained 650,000 for war industry to supply the army and navy during the war, and we have trained many thousands since, on a co-operative basis with the provinces and municipalities. I hope we may continue to do that. I shall be glad to look into the situation in North Sydney about which the hon. member spoke. It is obvious that I do not know every community in Canada, but I do have a fair understanding of the general policy of my department and its relationship to provincial government and municipalities in that connection.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to keep the committee long, but I must say a few words on this subject. First of all let me say that in my opinion the Minister of Labour has done an excellent job in creating the machinery in Canada to a point where it has resulted in less labour and industrial strikes than anywhere else on the North American continent. For that he is to be commended.

See also page 3846.*

However, there is a problem in connection with unemployment which members of the House of Commons appear to have overlooked. It is not long ago that we had about 420,000 unemployed in this country. That becomes a serious problem. It may be said that part of that was seasonal—and that would be true. But it is not going to remain a seasonal problem so long as we have such numbers as that. A portion of them will be more or less permanently unemployed.

It is my view that the federal government will have to take some responsibility for the maintenance and care of the employable unemployed. I do not believe the provinces are ever going to be in a position financially or otherwise, where they will be able to take care of any large-scale unemployment problems.

Only a few weeks ago I received word that in my own constituency there were 1,400 unemployed in the Drumheller coal-mining area. Coal-mining possibilities in western Canada are not as good as they used to be. Particularly since the war it is becoming more difficult to ship coal to eastern Canada so as to compete with coal coming in from the United States. We still ship in millions of tons from the United States, at a time when we have thousands of miners unemployed in this country. I suggest that the minister could assist the provinces in taking care of employable unemployed by establishing a national coal policy for Canada.

It is not my intention at this time to discuss a national coal policy, but it does seem to me somewhat ridiculous when we are so dependent upon the production of coal that we should allow that industry to deteriorate. In wartime Canada is dependent upon her coal industry being able and ready at all times to take care of the tremendous problems we are called upon to face in a time of emergency. It seems to me we should be doing everything possible to maintain that industry.

I suggest it is ridiculous that we should be importing millions of tons of coal when we have thousands of unemployed coal miners across the length and breadth of this country. In my judgment the provinces are not going to be able to take care of this problem. Alberta has been doing everything it could to build up industry within that province. The other western provinces and the maritimes are doing the same. For some reason or other industry has been negligent—I use that word advisedly—in establishing itself in the two extreme parts of this dominion. It was my contention during the war, as it is yet, that we missed a great opportunity in not spreading our industry throughout the western provinces and the maritimes in order to take up this problem of unemployment in peacetime. Instead of that we concentrated all our industrial efforts in central Canada and that is where they have remained.

It is going to be exceedingly difficult to develop industry in the maritime provinces and the prairie provinces in view of the tremendous increase in freight rates just passed, some 45 per cent. Because of those increased freight rates an industrial barrier and tariff wall has been built around those provinces to make it impossible for us in the west to produce industrially and ship to the other provinces. This is going to present itself as a problem to the Minister of Labour when it is necessary to take care of the unemployed. I do not see how he can expect the provinces to carry this great burden on their shoulders.

It is true that at the present time the building industry in western Canada is absorbing a fairly large number of workers but we must remember that the building going on there is mainly the result of government financing under the national housing plan. There is comparatively little private building going on. And that is not a healthy sign, particularly in peacetime. Sooner or later the government is going to have to get out of the building business and when that happens there will be a tremendous drop in employment and our unemployment problem is going to be magnified to that extent.

In the past agriculture has been able to absorb a great many workers, particularly in harvest and seeding times, but agriculture has improved its methods and does not now require as many people to take off the crop. A moment ago the minister said that the modern machines are not displacing labour, but I think that is debatable. Certainly in the field of agriculture the modern machines which have been introduced have definitely decreased the number of employees. There used to be 15 or 20 men in a threshing crew but today the farmer and his son are able to do the whole operation.

The question today is: What are you going to do with the men who are being displaced by these machines? That is a problem we are going to have to face. They are going to have the same problem in the coal mines of western Canada as they have in Nova Scotia. What are you going to do with the men being displaced by modern machines?

I believe I could answer that question very effectively if the Chairman would allow me to explain the principles of Social Credit, but I know he would stop me and I shall leave that for another occasion.

An hon. Member: Spare us.

Mr. Johnston: I hear an hon. member say, "Spare us". If he can get up and tell us how he is going to take care of the unemployed I shall be glad to have him do so. I am afraid that in British Columbia they are going to be faced with the same difficulty of taking care of men who are being displaced by the modern machines of today. In industry all across the country you find that problem. As I say, the Department of Labour is going to have to face that problem sooner or later.

It might be said that it can be solved by increasing family allowances. The Liberal party does not laugh at family allowances today, but the fact is that it was only after having been pressed to adopt them by the Social Crediters that they introduced family allowances. I congratulate the government on having had that much wisdom. Another thing causing trouble today for the unemployed is the high taxation being imposed upon the people by the federal government. This is not the fault of the Department of Labour particularly, but they must bear some of that responsibility. Unemployed people find it exceedingly difficult to pay the high prices being asked for the things that are necessary to maintain some semblance of a standard of living. That problem is going to become more magnified as time goes on.

It is all right to say that unemployment insurance is going to bridge the gap or that the supplementary payments that were introduced will help, but they were never intended to take care of permanent unemployed or employable unemployed. As the minister explained a few minutes ago, they are intended only to bridge the gap in seasonal unemployment. When you have five per cent of your total labour force unemployed you have not a temporary or a seasonal problem, you have a permanent problem on your hands. When we have in the neighbourhood of 400,000 unemployed as we had a while ago—the figure is down now—that comes close to being what could be classed as a serious problem.

It is not my intention at this time to deal with some of the difficulties that face the unemployed people of Canada, because I could speak for an hour on that alone. In the discussion of the items we are given an opportunity to indicate how these problems may be solved and without keeping the committee any longer I shall conclude and save the rest of my remarks for the items.

[Mr. Johnston.]

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the hon. member for Calgary West is quite aware of the fact that the hon. member for Cape Breton South was handed a piece of paper on which were the results of the recent by-elections. When he saw the success of his party in those by-elections it probably accounted for his misinterpretation of the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary West.

As an employer of labour I want to say to the minister that he and his department should leave no stone unturned in drawing to the attention of employers the advantages of sharing the profits of industry with labour and of making working conditions as attractive as possible. In my factory I find that when a man has been imbibing a little too freely the night before and brings a big head to the breakfast the old woman has got for him in the morning he finds he does not feel like doing anything. But if that man is able to get a cup of coffee and a sandwich at a cafeteria around ten o'clock he does good work from that time until twelve o'clock. When plants are made attractive with beautiful lawns and flower beds and when they have facilities such as cafeterias there is greater inducement for labour to work. The labouring man finds that he wants to do a better job when he is employed in a plant of that type. I believe the department could point out to management the benefits which accrue when working conditions are improved, and I am sure any such suggestions would be gladly adopted, to the benefit of both the employer and the employee. Some years ago the factories of Canada were not fit for pigs to live in, let alone for men to work in; but for any labour man to suggest that the improvement in working conditions has been brought about entirely through the efforts of the unions is ridiculous. No one can really believe that all employers are heartless. We know they have been scratching their heads and racking their brains for years, figuring ways to co-operate with the employees and improve their conditions.

We hope they will continue to develop new machines with which to provide four or five suits of clothes per annum for the minister. I believe he was speaking of a suit made by a tailor sitting cross-legged on the bench when he spoke of making a suit last for approximately seventeen years. With the cost of a suit of clothes made without machines, one would have to make it last for seventeen years in order to get his money out of it. We should encourage the development of machinery, the improvement of what we have and the creation of new machines so people may better enjoy the fruits of their labour and the productivity of this country. We may have to reduce the hours of work of the individual. That will be a godsend if it can be done. Let us never try to stop the development of new machines, for each new machine creates work that will increase the privileges enjoyed by all classes in our country.

Mr. Thatcher: I want to take only about three minutes to mention one specific matter. I brought it up last year and the minister could not see it, so I suppose he will not see it again this year. Nevertheless, at the request of the city council of Moose Jaw I am going to bring it to his attention again.

During the present session I have heard hon. members of all parties point out that unemployment is perhaps our major domestic problem, and I am inclined to agree. I want to lay one aspect of that problem before the minister tonight; that is the effect unemployment is having on municipal councils throughout the country. As has been pointed out already, a short time ago the number of unemployed passed the four hundred thousand mark. That is getting pretty high. Municipalities are viewing the situation with grave concern, because today the federal government pays no share of relief costs. Because of that fact many municipalities closed their financial books in 1949 with deficits for the first time in many years.

As city aldermen, reeves, mayors and others look at this problem they cannot help recalling the difficult times they had in the last depression, and wondering whether or not they were going to be faced with the same difficulties in the near future. In my own city of Moose Jaw just before the war, for instance, six thousand people out of twenty thousand were on direct relief. That was a strain which in large part had to be borne by the city council. During the last few years, because of the war, the revenues of the municipalities have been fairly buoyant and they have managed to get in better condition; but they are still in no better shape to meet heavy relief costs today than they were during the depression years. I know the minister will reply at once that since that time we have brought in the Unemployment Insurance Act, which of course I admit. But that legislation has shortcomings. It does not cover everyone; the period of benefits is limited; and because of the high cost of living many people receiving those benefits cannot get along on them. As a result the welfare organizations and municipal councils are having to bear a heavy share of relief costs.

As I said a moment ago, I pointed out this situation last December. At that time there were about 220,000 unemployed in the country, and I remember the minister rather chided me for mentioning the word "depression". I quote from page 2670 of Hansard for December 3, 1949:

> The trouble with people who express such opinions is that they are afraid the sun will not shine tomorrow morning . . . I think the best thing to ensure bad conditions in the country is to keep on talking about them.

I would remind the minister and the committee that a few months after he made that statement the number of unemployed in this country had doubled. It seems to me that if the minister persists in such an attitude and continues to ignore this problem he could be accused of acting like the proverbial ostrich. It does not seem to me you can solve a problem by ignoring it, but I believe that is what the minister is trying to do in this instance. Relief costs sent many municipalities into bankruptcy once, and I am afraid it could easily happen again. I hope a depression will not come, but I think we should benefit by our past experience and make ready for it.

Then, too, I believe the attitude of the government today is quite different to its attitude when the white paper of 1945 was issued. I believe it was the minister who presented that matter to the conference, and at pages 102 and 103 of the green book he said, in reference to unemployment insurance:

> The coverage is incomplete and the duration of the payments is limited, so that provincial governments and municipalities may feel that they are still subject to the possibility of heavy relief problems if unemployment on a substantial scale should develop.

Then he went on:

> As part of the general arrangement with the provincial governments, the dominion government now proposes to establish a practicable and comprehensive system of assistance to able-bodied unemployed persons as soon as possible, rather than waiting until the need for it actually arises.

Apparently in 1945 the government was impressed with the need of deciding immediately on a plan to handle relief, instead of waiting until the emergency should arise; and I should like to know why it has apparently changed its mind now, at a time when the crisis could be nearer than we think. I say relief is a federal responsibility. If we have unemployment, to a considerable extent at least it is due to federal policies. The only government that could really do something about it is the federal government. Unless we give these municipalities more powers of taxation we are going to have to pay at least a portion of the relief costs; otherwise many municipalities will again face bankruptcy. A few days ago Mr. J. S. Marquis, city commissioner of Moose Jaw, wrote me a letter from which I should like to quote one paragraph:

> There is every indication that the relief problem will increase in Moose Jaw rather than diminish, and unless the federal government can be persuaded to assume this responsibility in regard to unemployed employables, Moose Jaw is headed for a similar financial disaster which overtook us in the depression days. This time, however, we cannot last very long.

I suggest that this letter speaks for many municipalities in Canada. Tonight the hon. member for Cape Breton South said there were five thousand unemployed in his city. That is a financial load the city government cannot carry. Tonight I challenge the minister and the government to carry out some of the suggestions they made in the 1945 white paper. I challenge them to pay at least a fair share of relief costs in future; and I challenge them to place this matter on the agenda of the dominion-provincial conference when it reassembles this fall.

Mr. Mitchell: I do not know whether my hon. friend is aware of it, but there is still a provincial government in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Thatcher: Yes, and it is paying fifty per cent of the cost of relief, while the federal government is paying nothing.

Mr. Mitchell: Let me say this to my hon. friend. Through unemployment insurance this government last year disbursed, in round figures, more than $85 million. I know I gave the figure for the recent drop in unemployment. From the peak there has been a drop of about 200,000 registered at the employment offices. We have the largest employment figures in the history of the dominion, even considering the peak during the war. For the life of me, I cannot understand these calamity howlers who seem to get delight out of predicting bad times. One of the previous speakers mentioned the coal mining industry in Alberta. There are more men employed in the coal mining industry in Alberta than ever before.

Mr. Johnston: That does not help unemployment now.

Mr. Mitchell: There also are more men employed in the mining industry in Nova Scotia than have ever been employed in that industry. Those are the facts. I remember the experts, my own experts—God knows, the woods are full of experts; always look out for a person who is running around with a big briefcase under his arm—predicted we would have 600,000 people out of employment the year after Japan was defeated. In Washington the figure for the United States was 8 million. I was convinced we would have a boom, and we have had a boom. This country was never richer than it is at the moment. I believe that there will be a scarcity of workers by the middle of July. I believe that, and I hope that what I believe turns out to be true.

[Mr. Thatcher.]

Some members have spoken of the construction industry. Have you ever tried to hire a carpenter, bricklayer, painter, or plumber or anyone else engaged in the construction industry to do some work in your own home? Try to do it, and see how long you have to wait. I am glad to see this condition, and I hope there will always be a scarcity of labour because it is an indication that people are working. My hon. friend is talking about relief. All he is trying to do is to bridge the gap between agriculture and labour in one political party. It cannot be done. It has been tried by better and bigger people. I would rather see butter at a good price and have a dollar in my pocket to buy a pound, than see it selling at fifteen or twenty cents, as I have seen it, with nothing in my pocket at all. Let us be sensible about these things.

I know it is pleasant to go out on the hustings and talk about these things. My hon. friend was talking about machines. I can remember the day when there was no automobile industry in Canada, the United States, or Great Britain. There was some talk about machines displacing labour. Thank goodness there is an automobile industry in North America today, as well as in Britain, since she is so short of American dollars. Last year when my hon. friend brought up this question about Moose Jaw, I asked him how many unemployed there were in that area. I mentioned a moment ago that bad money drives out good. I would not invest a dollar in the province of Saskatchewan at this very moment. When you talk about risk capital—

Mr. Johnston: Why not?

Mr. Mitchell: Because I would not, that is why.

Mr. Gillis: The Canadian National Railways is investing there, and that is a government institution.

Mr. Homuth: But they have to go through the place to get somewhere else.

Mr. Mitchell: I am speaking now as an individual, not as a member of the government. As a rule governments do most business things in reverse, and I am making no exception of my hon. friend when he was premier of Ontario. They do it in reverse because—well, you talk about government ownership of this and that. Take a look at it in the glass, or have a look at yourself in the glass when you are trying to convince yourself of the opposite argument. As I said once before, when you know someone is stupid, for goodness' sake take a look in the glass. I am convinced of this, Mr. Chairman, that by the middle of this summer we shall have the tightest labour situation in the history of this dominion. I know that, from some people's point of view, it is unfortunate that the unemployment figures have dropped 200,000 from the peak. From some people's point of view it is not the thing to talk about when you are out on the stump. It is an actual fact, however. I do not give credit to the government for that, because it is due to the resiliency, ingenuity and driving force of the Canadian people and their co-operation with the government.

My friends were talking about the machines. If machines produced bad living conditions, then India or China would be the best countries in which people could live. The thing those countries lack is the mechanical genius that we have on the North American continent; that is as simple as simple arithmetic. The member for Moose Jaw thought conditions were going to be bad last year.

Mr. Thatcher: They were very bad during the past winter, I may say.

Mr. Mitchell: When I asked my hon. friend if he knew how many people were being affected, he did not know. He was then in a mental haze.

Mr. Thatcher: I have told you now.

Mr. Mitchell: I should like to have the figure. I know that if I lived in Moose Jaw I would know the figure.

Mr. Thatcher: I shall be glad to give the minister the figure. A short time ago it was more than 1,200 in the city alone. I do not wish to be unfair, but I do not think the minister has yet given an answer. He has given the house a series of platitudes during the evening, such as, air is free, and we should have machines. He still has not given us the answer to which I think we are entitled.

I understand that in 1945 the governments believed that, so far as municipalities were concerned, it was feasible for the federal government to pay a portion of the relief costs, despite anything the minister says. If we do not have unemployment, that will be fine. Everybody will be happy. But in case we do have it, what is he going to do for the municipalities? Is he going to make up additional tax revenue so they can pay for relief costs, or is the federal government going to pay at least a third or a half, as they did before the war?

Mr. Mitchell: I shall give my hon. friend an answer. It is not the federal government, the municipality or the provincial government that pays, it is you and I.

Mr. Thatcher: Fine.

Mr. Mitchell: That is what I thought.

Mr. Thatcher: As the agent of you and me, will you pay your third of these costs?

Mr. Mitchell: My hon. friend should know, he is old enough to know, that municipalities are the children of the provincial government; that is where they get their charter.

An hon. Member: I have heard that before.

Mr. Mitchell: Someone says he has heard that before. I say, let it sink in. The federal government, in my memory, and I think I have had some experience in these matters, has never dealt directly with the municipalities.

Mr. Thatcher: That is a technicality, if I may say so. If you want to give the grants to the provinces, that is all right.

Mr. Mitchell: Just a moment now; I suffered you, now you suffer me. My hon. friends says that is a technicality. Of course the British North America Act is a technicality. The mere fact that the municipalities get their powers from the provincial governments is a technicality. I hope they will always get those powers, because I am a great believer in the decentralization of power. The best kind of government is the government that gets closest to the people. When my hon. friend goes across the country and says, "Let the federal government pay," that is the easiest thing in the world to say. The federal government pays nothing. You and I pay, and the people to whom you are talking. It is just a matter of which cash register it comes from, whether it is the federal, provincial, or municipal. That is sensible; it is not a technicality. Two and two are still four, although sometimes my hon. friend thinks they make five.

Mr. Thatcher: Is the minister then saying that the federal government at this time still will not pay any share of relief costs, whether it is to the provincial government or the municipality?

Mr. Mitchell: No. You are not getting my neck in that noose.

Mr. Thatcher: I am just trying—

Mr. Mitchell: Just wait a minute; just sit down. As my hon. friend well knows, there is to be a conference this fall. I assume that this is still a free country. I assume that the provinces will raise certain questions, questions of principle and such like. What will happen there, I do not know.

Mr. Noseworthy: Mr. Chairman, I enjoy these speeches by the minister so much—

Mr. Mitchell: If I may interject something here, may I say that I do not think I have spoken forty minutes altogether since this session opened.

Mr. Homuth: Why not? I like it.

Mr. Mitchell: You like it. So do I. That is all right. But do not try to imply that I take up a lot of time in this chamber. I have more sense than that.

Mr. Noseworthy: Mr. Chairman, I was not implying that the minister was taking up too much time in this debate or saying too much. I simply stated that I enjoy listening to the minister, and I hope that I can provoke him to give another speech before these estimates are concluded. I realize that I shall be called a calamity howler by the minister. As to these thousands of people who suffered from the Red river flood a few months ago, by the same analogy that the minister used I submit that he might just as easily have charged them with being calamity howlers, when they urged upon their government the necessity of taking steps to prevent a repetition of that disaster, as charge those 425,000 unemployed seasonally last winter with calamity howling for asking the government—

Mr. Mitchell: You cannot put those words into my mouth in this committee. I have never suggested for one moment that the people my hon. friend is referring to were calamity howlers. I never even suggested that he was one. While I am on my feet, I should like to give to the hon. member for Moose Jaw the figure for which he asked. There are 754.

Mr. Thatcher: Yes. There were over 1,200 at Moose Jaw.

Mr. Mitchell: I know. You do not like to hear that.

Mr. Thatcher: The city council had to pay relief.

Mr. Mitchell: You do not like to hear good news.

Mr. Thatcher: I like very much to hear good news; but the city council had to pay relief costs of 1,200 people, for those who were unemployed; and they will have to do the same thing next winter unless the minister does something.

Mr. Noseworthy: I heard the minister implying the term "calamity howlers" to those who were discussing the unemployment situation as it existed last winter, and I took it for granted that I would likely be classified in that group. I shall feel disappointed that the minister does not confer upon me the honour of including me with those so-called calamity howlers. After all, there were some 425,000 Canadians who suffered from unemployment last winter, whether it was seasonal or whatever it was. Those people are anxious to know if any steps are being taken to avoid a repetition of that situation again next winter. I suggest to the minister that it is not howling calamity to ask the government just what steps are being taken to avoid a repetition of that situation.

I should like to put to the minister a few questions. He may please himself whether he answers them or not. If I cannot get the answers from the minister, then I shall proceed to put them on the order paper for the officials of his department to find answers to them for me. In 1945 the government adopted a policy of full employment. It announced that full employment was a major objective of its policy. That same policy was announced in the election of 1945 and again in the election of 1949. During this debate I should like the minister to tell us whether or not that is still the policy of this government, and whether it accepts full employment as one of its major objectives, as it indicated it did in 1945 and in 1949. If so, I should like the minister to indicate just what his department or the government means by the term "full employment", and just what is implied. Is it a matter of 425,000 unemployed and still full employment? Or 500,000? Or just what is the government's definition of that term "full employment"?

Mr. Mitchell: Do you want that answered right away?

Mr. Noseworthy: I want the minister, if he wishes, to tell us whether or not the government has considered the setting up of any specific target in terms of the percentage of the labour force that would be unemployed before any special action should be taken by the government to increase employment. I want him to tell us whether that question has been considered. I say that because I recall listening to the Prime Minister during the 1949 election campaign in Toronto, when he was questioned on that point. Finally, when the reporter who questioned him got up to the 500,000 mark and said "Would you consider 500,000 enough unemployed to warrant the government's taking special action?" the Prime Minister said, "Oh, yes, if we ever reached the stage of having 500,000 unemployed, certainly the government would take some direct action". Apparently we did not reach the figure of 500,000 unemployed, at least according to the figures registered with the unemployment service. We did get fairly close to it, however. I wonder if the minister could tell us just where the government considers that unemployment has reached a point which warrants its taking some special action in order to increase employment. Can the minister tell us just what that point is?

Also during the 1945 and 1949 campaigns we heard about a shelf of public works projects that the government was to have in readiness when unemployment warranted it. I should like to know if the government still adheres to that policy of timed investment; that investing of public moneys in public buildings and projects when employment is slack; that entire theory of timed investment, including the concept of the shelf of public works projects to be in readiness when and if unemployment is serious enough to warrant increased public expenditure. If the government is still following or adhering to that policy—and I have heard rumours that the shelf has been abandoned—then possibly the minister could tell us how many projects are ready; for how many plans have already been prepared; how many men would be employed in those projects; and for what period of time they would be employed. If he could enlighten us as to when these specific projects can be undertaken, or under what conditions they would be undertaken, I think he would clear up a good deal of misunderstanding on the part of the public on the whole question of unemployment and the government's responsibility.

Then we heard from the minister and others that our unemployment last year was just seasonal. We blamed God for it or the weather for it; we blamed anybody but the government. It was a seasonal problem. Can the minister inform us during the course of this debate whether or not the government has a policy designed to counteract such seasonal unemployment next year? Has the government any plans to avert a repetition of another possible 425,000 becoming unemployed? If so, I am sure the minister will want to tell us what that policy is, and just what action is being taken to prevent a repetition.

Then of course, what was not seasonal unemployment last year was regional unemployment. That was a phrase we heard mentioned a number of times. It was not a general condition which warranted any action on the part of the government; but just in case that regional unemployment should recur next year, has the government any policy designed to counteract such a repetition of regional unemployment? What is that policy; and just what has the government in mind to avert such a repetition?

Mr. Mitchell: I will take only five minutes on this. I do not think we ever used the phrase "full employment." "High employment" was the phrase used.

Mr. Noseworthy: High employment was used in the white paper and the green book.

Mr. Mitchell: I am talking about the phrase I used. I do not care about the white paper. I thought I explained the shelf of public works earlier in the evening. As I say, there is a great scarcity of building trades mechanics in Canada. Every one of us knows that. I do not see any reason for setting in motion a policy of public works of that nature when we cannot get the mechanics to do the work.

My hon. friend uses the word scientific. That is a nice word. It gets you out of many difficulties. All one has to do is to say he is a scientist. He may be the only one who thinks he is. I do not look upon human beings as fence posts, like some of these who talk about the scientific adjustment of the manpower problem of the nation. I like to look upon them as human beings like ourselves, as they are. Take the province of Ontario, my hon. friend's province. There has been a drop of 51,000 in the unemployment figures since March. It was 102,000; it is now down to 51,000.

I do not know that I should use this word, but this is what they call frictional unemployment.

Mr. Noseworthy: That is a new one.

Mr. Mitchell: It is estimated that about 2 per cent of any industrial nation—I am speaking of free countries of course—are in that condition. It is brought about by men changing from one job to another, by men trying to get a better job than they are working at at the present time. That is the natural thing to do. Obviously, they register for employment with the employment offices. We estimate that in the dominion there are about 120,000 in that category.

My hon. friend talks about regional unemployment. You are bound to have that. Take the Chrysler strike in Detroit. It threw 9,000 out of employment in Ontario. You get floods in Winnipeg, which have created a temporary unemployment situation there. That is why I talked about the weather and all that sort of thing earlier in my estimates. We cannot control these things.

Mr. Noseworthy: That is not what I asked.

Mr. Mitchell: It may not have been what you thought, but that is what you asked.

Mr. Argue: Who is putting words in whose mouth?

Mr. Mitchell: My hon. friend—

Mr. Noseworthy: I asked a very definite question.

Mr. Mitchell: I could not put any words in my hon. friend's mouth, because he talks so much about so little.

Mr. Argue: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Mitchell: That goes for the war years, too.

I was talking to the hon. member for York South; I was trying to answer him. I do not know that you can cure that. It is like trying to push back the ocean. I remember that during the war when this department had control of manpower it was comparatively simple. I could, through my department, say to a person: This is where you will work, and this is what you will do. But as I have said before, I am opposed to that policy in peacetime. I believe in freedom. If a person wants to live in Nova Scotia, or New Brunswick or in any province of Canada, it is his business and not the business of any government. It is the easiest thing in the world for the state to give direction. Thank goodness, the British have just dropped direction by the state. If you have direction of human beings in peacetime it is the easiest thing in the world to slip into a dictatorship. It is the easiest thing in the world for the government to say that you shall go to such and such a place. If I had the power I might say to the hon. member for York South and to some of the other hon. members: I think you are wasting your time in this House of Commons; you ought to be down in a coal mine, or laying brick or whatever the case may be, where they is a shortage. But a Liberal government, sensible governments at least, do not take that view, and I hope we shall never take that view in this Dominion of Canada. We cannot control the weather, not yet.

Mr. Noseworthy: I did not ask you to.

Mr. Mitchell: No, but you are suggesting it.

Mr. Noseworthy: No, I did not.

Mr. Mitchell: I know it. My hon. friend was a schoolteacher. He talks about regional unemployment. I am not being critical over this dispute in Detroit. I am not passing any comment whatever on one side or the other in connection with it. There was a strike in the Chrysler industry in Detroit, with the result that 9,000 people were laid off in Ontario. We have no control over that.

I say to the hon. member for Cape Breton South that I was in Pennsylvania not long ago and I saw that many of the locomotives that were drawing coal out of the coal pits were diesel electric. That is what I call the law of diminishing returns.

Mr. Harkness: What was diminished?

Mr. Mitchell: You price yourself out of the market. It is just as simple as that. The best oil salesman in North America is John L. Lewis. I am not being critical of Lewis, you understand, but that is obvious to the average person. You do not need salesmen to sell oil burners these days. What I call industrial salesmanship is where both sides get together and see to it that they are not priced out of the market, because the consumer calls the tune whether you like it or not. I think I have explained that pretty clearly. I think that is the best argument in favour of unemployment insurance. Apart from the social benefits which have accrued in this nation, money has been set in circulation, and unemployment insurance has increased the velocity of money. It is far better to have it that way than to have it the way it was in the depression years when many of us were close to that situation.

If my hon. friend wants me to give him a cure for all that, and to tell him whether we are going to have an early spring or a late spring—well, he will have to get one of his socialist governments to tell him that, because this one cannot, and neither can any other government.

Mr. Noseworthy: I asked the minister some very definite and serious questions. Of those questions he answered one, and one only. I asked him if it was still the policy of this government to maintain full employment. I asked him what this government meant by full employment. I asked him if the government was still abiding by the practice of a shelf of projects. That is the only question he answered by indicating that the government had abandoned that idea at this time. I asked if there was any government policy to counteract a repetition of seasonal unemployment next year. I did not ask him to regulate the seasons or the weather. I asked him if his government had any power to counteract or to avoid seasonal unemployment next winter. He has not answered either of those questions yet.

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, I give up!

Mr. Noseworthy: Answer them.

Mr. Mitchell: I can answer them. Good gracious, I think I have a measure of common sense.

Mr. Noseworthy: Political sense.

Mr. Mitchell: My hon. friend does not need to worry about political sense. When it comes to politics, I have nothing on him, you understand—and I speak of politics in its broader sense.

Mr. Hansell: They do not go together.

Mr. Mitchell: I tell my hon. friend there is no government in any free country that can guarantee full employment. The trouble with my hon. friends is that they want the government to push people around.

Mr. Noseworthy: No; cannot the government have a policy?

Mr. Gibson: Better get a salt mine.

Mr. Mitchell: Look here, you are an older man than I am—or about the same age, I hope. The hon. member certainly remembers after the first war the difficulties, trials and tribulations we went through. I think it is a reasonable assumption that we came out of this war in better shape—perhaps I should not say that; certainly we came out of it in as good shape as any country in the world. The government does not take all the credit for it. True, we had the machinery, and we have the experience that made possible that tremendous shift in manpower. When I tell my hon. friend this, that we placed over a million people in six months in this country through the employment service, he will know what I mean. And that was done on the basis of freedom—freedom, you understand.

You have to remember this: As sure as the sun will rise in the morning, when you start talking about pushing people around it is not long before you have the kind of government I hope we shall never see in this country.

Mr. Noseworthy: Well—

Mr. Mitchell: Just a minute, now. I am not suggesting my hon. friend wants that kind of government at all.

Mr. Noseworthy: I did not say a word about it.

Mr. Mitchell: I am not suggesting my hon. friend does. But, lead kindly light, amid the encircling gloom—and a little child shall lead them.

An hon. Member: Tell us about Daniel in the lion's den.

Mr. Mitchell: This idea of going out and telling the people that you can hold back the ocean if only they will elect you is the easiest thing in the world. My hon. friend has asked me a question, and I have answered it satisfactorily—at least from my own point of view.

Mr. Noseworthy: The minister has not answered it at all. I asked him about the policy of the Canadian government to counteract or to meet any recurrence of unemployment, seasonal or regional, in the winter months.

Mr. Gibson: Get a salt mine.

Mr. Noseworthy: Has the minister any policy to meet that recurring situation next winter? He has not answered that question.

Mr. Mitchell: Look here, you are not going to stick my neck in that noose and get away with it. The world is full of that kind of thing. But not me—not yet, anyway. I have told the hon. member that there is no government—and my young friend snickers; he will be a great help to his mother some day when he grows up—no government that can control the elements. The question my hon. friend asks is a debatable, legal question. It cannot be answered. I do not know—there may be some kind of strike or some kind of flood, or too much snow, or not enough snow—all sorts of things. But you fight that through the instrumentality of unemployment insurance, of which we disbursed $85 million last year. Certainly that is an advance over what took place prior to the establishment of that legislation. My hon. friend can make all the rosy speeches he likes. But there is the old saying that you can fool the people some of the time, but not all of the time. I think I have been among the working people of this country long enough to know that you have got to speak plainly to them. They have a fair understanding of the basic principles that make the clock tick in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. Gillis: Just to break this thing up: someone over here has suggested that if we have any idea as to what could be done, we should state it. The minister tonight is doing exactly what representatives of Canada did before the United Nations committee that was set up specifically to deal with this question of unemployment. Canada is a member of the United Nations. That body selected a committee of experts just a few months ago to ascertain what might be done in any country by way of relieving unemployment. The committee laid down a series of specific recommendations. The Canadian representative made no commitments in the matter.

The minister may talk as much as he likes about pushing anyone around. But if he will look at the photographs which appeared in the Globe and Mail and in the Montreal papers last winter, showing hundreds of men with no place to sleep, huddled around in improvised shelters in Montreal and Toronto, he would know what the unemployment was. Is that not being economically pushed around? Many of those men were sailors and soldiers who fought in the last war. That is being pushed around economically, whether you like it or not.

The United Nations committee recommended that each government in each country should decide what it considered full employment in that country to be. That is the question which the minister has deliberately evaded this evening. He has not said what the government considered full employment in Canada to be. Secondly, the United Nations committee of experts said that in their opinion an unemployment problem in any country was dangerous when it reached over five per cent of the total employable population. It recommended that when that point was reached a government should implement public works programs for purposes of relieving the condition. Secondly, they should immediately supplement their social security benefits or inaugurate new ones, and then try to keep the purchasing power in the hands of the people. Those three simple recommendations were made by the UN committee just a few months ago, but the representative from Canada took exactly the same position the minister takes tonight, that we have no idea of what constitutes unemployment and we will not accept the recommendations of the committee.

There has been talk of this being a case of pushing people around. I do not consider that any government that takes an interest in the unemployed to the extent that they will direct them to where they may secure employment in some other part of the country is pushing people around. During the war and the aftermath of the war that was done by the government and it was appreciated by the people in the areas affected. What about the d.p.'s? We send teams all over Europe and spend money in psychoanalyzing a lot of people—

Mr. Mitchell: Not me.

Mr. Gillis: The government does and the minister definitely is part of the government set-up. We provide transportation from Europe to different parts of Canada and help these people to get employment. They do not consider that the government is pushing them around. They consider it a humanitarian gesture on the part of the government of Canada. That is appreciated by the people of Canada and by those affected.

Let us not forget that when you have a pocket of unemployment in any part of Canada you have people who are displaced in the community. It does not matter how small the group is, you have that effect. If there are only 750 people unemployed in Moose Jaw, which has a population of two or three thousand, there is a pretty high percentage of unemployed. Those 700 unemployed are suffering just as much as though there were 15,000 unemployed. Instead of making light of it or arguing along the lines the minister has been arguing, we should be studying this problem and deciding to do what we can about it.

Mr. Mitchell: I wonder if I might answer that now. There is nobody or no department that is carrying out a more continuous study of this problem than the department over which I preside. When I tell you that 1,700,000 people passed through the employment offices last year it will give you some indication of what is being done. We have moved people up and down the country in co-operation with the provinces in an effort to provide needed farm help. When we realize what the position was ten years ago I think it must be conceded that we have done reasonably well.

I do not want the impression to get out that the government is treating this matter lightly, or that I am. We are just as much interested in it as my hon. friend. If he has any suggestions he should let us have them because all the sense is not on this side of the chamber.

Mr. Gillis: I have already made several suggestions and they will appear on Hansard. I know that you people read Hansard. I realize that the department is broken up into different sections and I am in hopes that someone will read what I have suggested and something will come out of it. A country like Canada should not have any unemployment problem. The whole world is crying for the production of this continent. There are difficulties in connection with currencies and that kind of thing, but the fact remains that New Zealand, Australia and Great Britain—the minister's department has the figures—have no unemployment problem. There is no reason why Canada should have unemployment.

You may relieve the condition temporarily in Ontario and Quebec and perhaps on the prairies and in British Columbia, but that is not possible in the part of the country that I represent. They have had a continuous unemployment problem for a long time. In most cases unemployment insurance has run out and is of no help now. The supplementary benefits have been of some assistance. Something in the way of public works will have to be inaugurated, as I believe that is the immediate solution to this problem.

It is wrong to just try to brush this off by saying that people do not want to be pushed around. I would not consider I was being pushed around if someone told me where I might get a job and gave me some help to get to that job. I think the minister's department has done an excellent job, but for the last few years I have felt that restrictions have been placed on that department and that it is not doing all the things it is capable of doing with the personnel there is there.

Item agreed to.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Tomorrow we will continue with estimates, Department of Labour, national health and welfare, Secretary of State, transport, Postmaster General and justice.

Mr. Fleming: In that order?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): So far as the first two are concerned, labour and national health and welfare.

Business of the House

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following item was passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

A—Department—
General administration—

150. Departmental administration, $540,260.

55946—243

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 20, 1950

The house met at eleven o'clock.

TRANSFER OF DUTIES

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES POWER COMMISSION

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table a copy of an order in council dated June 16, 1950, pursuant to the powers conferred by the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act, transferring to the Minister of Resources and Development the powers, duties and functions vested in the Minister of Mines and Resources by the Northwest Territories Power Commission Act. It was thought that that was done automatically by the act establishing the Department of Mines and Resources, but the law officers felt there was some doubt about it, and it was preferable to remove that doubt by passing an order in council expressly vesting in the Minister of Resources and Development those powers which, under the terms of the statute, were given to the Minister of Mines and Resources.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

CHANGE IN PERSONNEL OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. W. G. Weir (Portage-Neepawa) moved:

That the name of Mr. Hatfield be substituted for that of Mr. Smith (Calgary West); and that the name of Mr. McLure be substituted for that of Mr. Harkness on the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR

MCINTYRE PORCUPINE MINES—QUESTION AS TO REJECTION OF CONCILIATION BOARD RECOMMENDATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister received notification that McIntyre Porcupine Mines Limited has rejected the recommendations of the board of conciliation appointed by the government, recommendations which had been accepted by local 100 of the Porcupine Mine Workers Union, and that a decision to strike has been taken? In view of the substantial assistance, amounting to $22 million, given to this company under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, will the government take all steps necessary in the public interest to persuade the company to accept the conciliation board's recommendations, and thus bring the dispute to an end?

Hon. Humphrey Mitchell (Minister of Labour): My hon. friend no doubt knows that this dispute comes under provincial jurisdiction. I believe the majority report recommended an increase in pay, certain paid holidays, and some form of check-off. I have no jurisdiction. Under legislation in force now, neither the federal government nor the provinces can enforce the findings of a conciliation board. I have always held the opinion that the sun does not shine on only one side of the fence. I know that employees sometimes turn down the majority report of the board. I take the long view that both industry and labour would be well advised to accept the majority report of a conciliation board.

At the moment there are some major disputes under my jurisdiction in which the majority report of the board has been turned down by the employees. I am fearful that the whole system of conciliation could easily break down if some judgment is not used by both sides in connection with the machinery that has been built up over the years, whether it be provincial or federal.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

QUESTION AS TO ESTIMATES TO BE CONSIDERED THIS DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there is a question I should like to bring to the attention of the government, and it can be answered by either the Prime Minister or the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In announcing the business for today it was indicated that the first estimates to be dealt with would be those of the Department of Labour, after which the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare would be taken up. I am certain there will be complete agreement on proceeding with the health estimates, but I should like the assurance that we shall not be proceeding with the welfare estimates. In view of the fact that a committee is sitting which has not yet reported, it would be impossible to discuss at the present time any of the welfare estimates.

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I think the suggestion of the hon. gentleman should commend itself to the house. When we reach the particular item he has in mind, which I take it would be the old age security item, we can let it stand. Would that be agreeable?

Mr. Drew: Quite so. My point is that under the rules of the house we are not permitted to discuss a subject which is under consideration by a committee. It will be generally agreed that this subject is of the utmost importance, and that it would be unfortunate if discussion on the estimates were prevented by that rule. As long as the minister will agree to defer the item on which that discussion can take place, we can proceed without any misunderstanding.

Mr. Martin: That is agreeable.

FLOOD CONDITIONS

FRASER RIVER VALLEY—INQUIRY AS TO PRESENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. H. Goode (Burnaby-Richmond): Stories coming out of the Fraser valley, reports coming to me from my constituency, and reports appearing in British Columbia newspapers on the Fraser valley flood situation, do not quite agree. Would the minister care to give a report at this time?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The only information I have was obtained by telephone from the representative of this government who had charge of the construction of the dikes. I am told that the dikes are standing firm in spite of the fact that the peak of the flood this year is about equal to the peak of the 1948 flood. There has been some seepage through the dikes at Agassiz; the troops have been called out to handle the situation, and sand bags are being applied wherever seepage appears. If, as is now reported, the peak of the flood has been reached or nearly reached, I feel sure there will be no damage resulting from failure of the dikes.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dion in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

General administration—

151. To provide for expenses of the economics and research branch (formerly under departmental administration), $379,455.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Mitchell: Perhaps my hon. friend will permit me to make an explanation in his favour, and also a correction, or perhaps I should say a clarification. Last evening, speaking of unemployment figures, the hon. member for Cape Breton South mentioned 57,000, which I mistakenly understood to refer to Nova Scotia. Later I said the figure for Nova Scotia was 13,000, which was correct as of June 8. In reviewing Hansard this morning at page 3826 I discovered that my hon. friend was referring to the maritime provinces, which until recently we have considered as including Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. The total number of unemployed for those three provinces as of June 8, 1950, was 30,100. In addition there were 19,600 in Newfoundland as of that date. The total for Canada as of June 8, 1950 was 239,800, which is a drop of 198,000 from the peak which occurred last March. That is satisfactory, I hope.

Mr. Gillis: That is the very point I rose to bring to the minister's attention. My quarrel with the Department of Labour in listing the unemployed is that the figures now mentioned by the minister should have been given to hon. members at intervals of at least two weeks. That was done in the past; every two weeks the department would issue a statement on the unemployment situation in Canada. Those releases went to the two congresses of labour and to the press, as well as certain members of the house who were on the mailing list. That practice has been discontinued.

Last evening, when hon. members rose to discuss the unemployment situation, the only figures they had to work on were those issued about a month ago. I believe those figures came out about June 3, and gave the position as of about May 18. At that time the national picture as set out by the department showed some 306,000 unemployed. The figure for the maritimes was 41,000. Since then there has been a considerable drop, and personally I think it is unfair for the department to issue figures and then, when there has been a substantial change in the right direction, to leave hon. members with figures a month old while the minister can rise in his place and fire back figures which are much later, and which we do not know about.

Recently there has been a great deal of controversy between the congress of labour and the department over the withholding of the actual unemployment situation as it is reported by the various offices across the country. I do not think the department is being smart in this. If there is a change in the right direction I believe the smart thing for the department to do is at least to keep the congresses of labour and the members of this house advised of the changes that take place from time to time.

The figures just given by the minister show a substantial decrease in unemployment. Before the estimates are through I hope the minister will be able to give us, province by province, the job opportunities that were created and that brought about this drop of some 198,000 since the last release. This morning I happened to pick up a press release from the office in Glace Bay, my home town, and there has not been very much of a change there. This press clipping is dated June 16, and it states:

> Unemployment figures released today by the local office of the national employment service show a slight drop over last week's total.
>
> This week there are 129 females and 432 males listed as unemployed as against the 130 females and 467 males registered last week, a decline of 35 . . .

The important part of this is that 279 men and 68 women are claiming benefits through the local employment office.

The point I want to make for the minister's benefit, as I argued last night, is that special unemployment relief, or an extension of the supplementary benefits, should be given to those areas. This press release from the local employment office in that particular town shows that over fifty per cent of the total unemployed registered in that town are not receiving unemployment insurance. That is another indication of what I stated last night, namely, that the unemployment problem in the maritimes is largely a permanent one. It is a problem that the municipal authorities, who now have the responsibility of looking after the totally unemployed, are not able to handle.

I am suggesting that instead of accepting unemployment as it is on a national scale and deciding that it is seasonal and regional, the fair thing to do across Canada would be to make a regional survey, particularly in the maritimes, to ascertain the amount of permanent unemployment there. In that way you will get a fair picture of what is necessary in that part of the country, because this press release definitely shows that there is a permanent unemployment problem in the maritimes. I know that most of the towns and cities in the maritimes have such a heavy municipal burden that they are not in a position to carry unemployment relief. There is an act on the statute book, known as the Unemployment Relief and Assistance Act, which provides that when a certain percentage of a municipality, town or city is totally unemployed the act can be applied through the provincial government. Something of that kind is necessary in some of the towns and cities in the maritime provinces.

What I really want to say is that if unemployment is declining in Canada we are glad to hear it. In future I would like the minister at least to keep hon. members informed as to that decline. We do not want to rise in our places in this house and misrepresent the picture. All we can do is to take the figures that are released publicly from time to time and make an analysis of them. From now on I should like to get the figures that the department has compiled.

Mr. Mitchell: Let me make this clear. As long as I am the Minister of Labour, I will run my department. So far as I am concerned, let the sun shine in. I am one of the few people who never closes his office door. My door is always open, except when someone is in there talking to me. No official in my department is going to tell me what to do. They have said to me at times: "If I were you I would do this." But I have said: "You are not me; to be me you have to be elected" and that is not the easiest thing in the world.

My hon. friend can rest assured that these figures are in the Labour Gazette. They have been criticized as being handouts by departments. Let me be frank. Any member of this house, irrespective of what side he sits on, if he wants the information and asks me for it, he will get it. I have always maintained, as my hon. friend knows, that you cannot face a problem by running away from it.

As I said last night, it is sometimes not the wisest thing to do to quote figures from memory, especially in relation to a large department like the Department of Labour. I should like to impress upon my hon. friend the fact that employment is a dynamic thing; it is not static. There are changes from day to day; different people come and go, and so forth.

As I pointed out last night, 1,700,000 people passed through the employment service alone last year. Along with my hon. friend and other hon. members, I take pride in the efficiency of the labour department. I have been very fortunate in building that organization, to have a group of loyal civil servants—exceptionally loyal, may I say.

I agree with my hon. friend that anything we can possibly do to meet the problems of my department will be done by my officials and myself. If he ever wants any information—it does not matter how uncomfortable it is—from me, I will give it to him.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The minister said that "1,700,000 people passed through". What does he mean by that?

Mr. Mitchell: There may be repeaters. That is why I say it is dynamic; it is not static. A person may pass through the office six or seven times a year. He may be through my office a dozen times, but in the collection of these figures they appear as different individuals. It is a gigantic problem. It is a big organization. So far as I am personally concerned, I am not greatly in love with figures. During the war I found that there was no such person as an unemployable person. Everybody who wanted a job and who could work with his hands and stand on his feet could get a job; we had a job for him. But there are repeaters.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): When the minister says that a certain number of people passed through, all he means is that they visited some branch of the department.

Mr. Mitchell: I am talking about the employment office now.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I mean the employment office.

Mr. Mitchell: Take a firm like General Motors of Oshawa. Both the trade unions and General Motors use the employment service exclusively. Certain other big concerns and other organizations on both sides do the same thing. It has developed to a degree that they have faith in the employment service and they use it exclusively to get employees.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I realize that. But as I understood the minister a moment ago, the figure he gave was the number of persons who have visited his offices throughout the country.

Mr. Mitchell: That is it.

Mr. McIvor: In order to speak on this subject we have to understand both sides. Any man taking part in debate who knows only one side is pretty sure of defeat. I think I know labour from all points of view: first from the point of view of the man who toils, and afterwards from the point of view of one who had the opportunity and responsibility of hiring labour. I know it from the contractor's point of view, too. I have found there are four types of people who have their rights. The man who puts up the money for an industry has his rights, whether that industry is a wholesale or a retail concern, a coal mine or a pipe line. The management of industry have their rights. They have the right to be protected. The workers, too, have their rights. I admit that I am a good deal biased toward the man who toils. Then the consumers have their rights.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

We have to see this question of labour from all angles. My first word is that the former prime minister certainly understood labour and industry, as he wrote and as he practised it afterwards; otherwise he would not have put the name of Tom Moore, the former president of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, on the honour list of the king. No doubt his advice was that Tom Moore should receive the Order of the British Empire. I dare not say, Mr. Chairman, that there are others who should be in that honour list. I say my word now for the present Minister of Labour. He is not a graduate of a university; he is a graduate of labour. Had he been a graduate of a university he would not have said, as he did a moment ago, that the sun does not always shine on the one side of the fence. Had he graduated from a university he would have said that the sun shines down in all its majesty over all classes and distinctions of men, irrespective of class or creed. Which is the plainer?

In 1941 I sat over there and watched the proceedings. If the Department of Labour was ever in a mess, it was then. We had a labour board. Applications were piled high. The board was made up of experts, but they did not have the ability to handle their work quickly enough to keep the department out of trouble. Then our former prime minister came along and appointed the present Minister of Labour to the post he now holds. I met him first in Fort William, when we had difficulty in connection with unemployed as related to the relief camps. I cannot forget his statement to me then, that when a man does a day's work he should have a day's pay. He also said that if a man gets a day's pay he should do a day's work. That is what the minister has been saying ever since.

What happened? That labour board was changed. The deputy minister was appointed, and since then I do not think one would find a labour department in any country in the world that has done better work than the department presided over by the present minister. He showed good judgment when he did not allow his deputy minister to go. He gave him another year; and I hope he will give him another, and another and another, so that there will not be any loss to the country.

We have in Fort William business concerns paying salaries to their employees. In addition they pay commissions. Perhaps the hon. member for Calgary East would refer to that as profit sharing, but when a man goes into one of those stores he gets service and gets it immediately. I have gone into large places of business here in Ottawa—that is, large for this city—and I have waited five or ten minutes before being served. The other day I could not wait any longer and had to go without being served. If those clerks were working on commission there would be a different story, because they would be anxious to earn their commissions.

I agree with those who have spoken that labour should have a share in profits. It would put pep into labourers, and it would be a good move for industry. The minister has said that a well-run labour union is a great asset to labour and to industry. We have that condition in Fort William, and, as has been happening in other places, we have been getting rid of the troublesome element. But a union run by someone who is narrow or selfish is a curse to labour, and such a leader does not earn his money. What we need is to have labour and management working together and, as the minister said, putting their feet under the table and talking across to each other on a fifty-fifty basis. When we have that we shall be making progress.

As another hon. member has pointed out, we have unemployment insurance and family allowances, both of which have helped us at the lakehead during our seasonal unemployment. That is one thing that stands out. I admired very much the way in which the national registration was carried out across this country. It was a difficult job, but they knew where the workers were, and whether or not they were working. I have taken this opportunity this morning to pay my tribute to the minister and to make the request that when the next king's honour list is brought out, consideration be given to him and his administration of the department.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I notice, Mr. Chairman, that the former item has been split and a new one created this year. The details are to be found at page 144. They disclose that the permanent positions have been increased from 18 to 41. We notice further that the cost of printing and stationery has gone up from $15,000 to $40,000.

The minister has referred to the Labour Gazette. I went to the library last night to look for unemployment figures, having been prompted to do so by the statement of the hon. member for Cape Breton South that there were 57,000 unemployed in the maritime provinces. The latest issue in the library was for the month of May, and the latest information about persons unplaced was that for March 30. As I recall it, there was published last year a weekly or bi-weekly bulletin, which appeared in mimeographed form and gave information with respect to labour. Today the minister has given us the information up to June 8. Is it not possible to have copies of that information? We are all keenly interested in the employment situation in our ridings and throughout the country. Since the vote for printing is increased, and there is a special division dealing with economic research, I submit we ought to be able to get labour information earlier than we get it from the Labour Gazette. It is two months old when it reaches us.

Mr. Mitchell: If the hon. member will look at the record he will see that while the permanent employees have been increased, there has been a decrease in the temporary staff. That is the reason for the change in those figures. I would assume, in connection with printing and stationery, that costs have gone up just as they have in other respects. I believe I have dealt with both matters mentioned by the hon. member.

The supplying of figures is receiving study at the present time by an interdepartmental committee. We have available figures issued by the Department of Labour, and also the spot check by the bureau of statistics. We are endeavouring to work out some formula which will give us as clear a picture of employment conditions in the dominion as is humanly possible. The hon. member may rest assured that when the time comes I shall be glad to supply that information.

As I have pointed out before, while I do not know what my hon. friend can do, I know if I read all the publications which come to my desk I would go blind. It is difficult to keep up with them. Perhaps hon. members may not realize that I did not leave this building until twelve o'clock last night, and I read until one o'clock this morning—and I am not saying that to draw attention to me personally.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The minister put himself to sleep that way.

Mr. Mitchell: It put me to sleep; that is correct.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): What became of the bi-weekly sheet that was mimeographed and published last year? Was it abandoned?

Mr. Mitchell: We publish every month in the Labour Gazette.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): But is there not another sheet?

Mr. Mitchell: I was away when that happened. I am responsible, and I am going to continue to be responsible for the information that goes out of my department. That sheet was sent out while I was away recently. I am going to see what is sent out. I want to give the best information I can to hon. members and the country. My hon. friend may rest assured that if the interdepartmental committee succeeds in working out a formula I shall see to it that every member of the House of Commons gets a copy of the figures monthly, or whenever they are issued.

Mr. Adamson: May I pay a compliment to the minister's department for the work it is doing in the town of New Toronto. The national employment service office at that point is doing an excellent job, and is to be commended for the efficiency and courtesy with which they are doing it. This area contains a great diversification of industry, and so far as I know there have been nothing but compliments for the officials of that office. Can the minister give the maximum number of unemployed in that area during the last year and the number at the present time?

Mr. Mitchell: We do not have the figures for the separate offices, but we have them for the greater Toronto area.

Mr. Adamson: What is the figure for Toronto?

Mr. Mitchell: 13,750.

Mr. Adamson: What was the maximum figure?

Mr. Mitchell: I have not that figure here, but if my hon. friend wants it, I will get it.

Mr. Graydon: In matters of this kind I think that credit should be given where credit is due. About two weeks ago on a Sunday evening the employment service of the Department of Labour was broadcasting. My family and myself were greatly impressed by the broadcast, which had to do with some of the more intangible but essential details of how a person should approach a prospective employer. It was most constructive, and the facts were well marshalled. The broadcast was such as would compel the attention of the public, particularly those in the earlier years of life. It offered practical assistance to persons in their efforts to obtain employment. I cannot recall the name of the person making the broadcast, but I do want to tell the minister that I think that kind of information is really worth while to the young people who, having to learn in the hard school of experience, are at least given the opportunity of making a short cut.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I should like to ask a question covering the next four items, all of which show small increases. Am I correct in assuming that those are the normal increases in cost such as would occur in any business of this kind?

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Mr. Mitchell: That is a correct assumption. Most of them are salary increases.

Item agreed to.

General administration—

152. Annuities Act, $802,660.

Mr. Green: Recently a case was brought to my attention which I think should receive the consideration of the minister and his staff. An application was made for an annuity by a husband and wife, the husband then being in poor health. Practically all their savings were put into a joint survivor annuity. The husband died shortly after, and within a year the wife died also leaving a son about twelve years of age. Legally the position is that nothing can be paid to that boy.

I believe the amount paid in was $22,108, and $3,500 was received by the wife before her death, leaving a difference of $18,608. The present position is that a married daughter must provide for this young boy. I realize that legally nothing can be done in a case of this kind, but I suggest that the department take some steps to help out in this case. I suggest also that the annuities officers across the country be warned to look into each application to determine whether children are involved. I cannot believe that this father and mother would have taken out this contract if they had realized that nothing would be left for the small boy.

As I say, the father was in poor health at the time the application was made. The married daughter says that her father and mother believed that provision was being made for the mother and for the boy. A warning should be placed on the application forms to indicate that children will not be protected by that type of contract. I understand that until 1945 it was possible to buy a contract with a guarantee that would provide for a certain number of annual payments even if the applicants died before they were completed, but for some reason that contract was discontinued.

I ask the minister to see if something cannot be done for this unfortunate lad, and I wish he would review the possibility of taking some steps to prevent a recurrence of a case of this kind. I think it could be done by giving adequate warning to applicants for annuities that their children will not be protected by a contract of this kind.

Mr. Mitchell: I shall be glad to look into that case. It is the Stevens case, is it not?

Mr. Green: It is the case of Francis E. Stevens and Eva Helen Stevens, of Courtenay, British Columbia, the contract number being 123,217.

Mr. Mitchell: This was a contract. My hon. friend is a lawyer, and I assume that he knows something about insurance. I shall be glad to tell the officials to warn married couples that protection is not guaranteed for the children.

Mr. Green: Apparently the government will not issue a guarantee contract of that type.

Mr. Mitchell: I shall be glad to tell them that they should be very careful. You get the odd case. It is like life insurance. You have to die some time, although nobody wants to die. It is like fire insurance. Normal human beings, although they put fire insurance on their houses, do not want to see them destroyed. It is basic with all these things. I shall be glad to take a look at that and warn my people about the consequences.

Mr. Johnston: I do not know whether we are on item 151 or 152. We can hardly hear.

The Chairman: Item 152.

Mr. Johnston: I should like to ask the minister a question about annuities. How many annuity contracts were entered into last year compared with the number of contracts entered into the year prior to the reduction in the interest rate?

Mr. Mitchell: There is a drop of about fifty per cent.

Mr. Johnston: Can the minister give us an explanation of that?

Mr. Mitchell: I do not know that I could give any reason. People just did not buy them; that is all. This is a free country, and they went somewhere else to buy their annuities.

Mr. Johnston: The minister said there was a drop of about fifty per cent. Can he give us the actual figures?

Mr. Mitchell: I have the information here, but it is rather long. I do not want to put it on the record, but if the hon. member wants to look at it he may do so.

Mr. Johnston: Will the minister have it put on the record?

Mr. Mitchell: I shall be glad to do so, with the permission of the committee.

The Chairman: Has the minister permission?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mitchell: The information is as follows:

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES

Until about ten years ago very little use was made of Canadian government annuities for the purpose of underwriting retirement annuity plans. Since that time the development has been as follows:

March 31	Group contracts in force	Employees included
1940	4	1,240
1941	30	7,776
1942	49	11,180
1943	70	15,351
1944	154	28,919
1945	270	38,872
1946	433	56,227
1947	612	86,638
1948	708	113,401
1949	809	143,270
1950	846	158,959

Of the 158,959 employees included up to March 31, 1950, 36,973 were no longer participating for reason of retirement, death or termination of service, leaving a net total of 121,986 active participants.

In addition to group annuity contracts, approximately 300 pension plans covering about 8,000 employees were underwritten by individual contracts.

Premiums paid under contracts entered into in connection with retirement annuity plans amounted to $32,537,083.54 in the fiscal year 1948-49, and $36,506,202.65 in the fiscal year 1949-50.

Retirement annuity plans are underwritten by entering into a group annuity contract where a large number of employees is involved, and individual contracts for the smaller organizations. The premium rates are the same in each method of underwriting and are similar to the rates applicable to persons purchasing annuities as individuals. The normal type of plan is contributory, the employee paying a fixed percentage of earnings and the employer paying a similar amount or such amount as may be necessary to complete the purchase of a fixed annuity. The employer generally makes additional payments in respect of prior services. When an employee's service is terminated prior to retirement, he cannot withdraw his money but is credited with a paid-up annuity purchased by his own contributions and such part of the employer contributions as the contract may prescribe. In the event of his death before retirement, the total of his own contributions with interest and such part of the company contributions as the contract may prescribe will be paid to his heirs. On retirement, the annuity purchased by all contributions made on his behalf will be paid to him for life and generally carrying a guarantee that payments will be made for a minimum of five years.

The following are statistics as of the end of the fiscal year 1949-50 with respect to annuity contracts:

Total number of contracts and certificates issued since 1908 to end of 1949-50	292,978
Cancelled by death, etc.	34,299
Contracts and certificates in force end of 1949-50	258,679
Annuity contracts under payment (vested)	51,759
Deferred individual contracts	84,934
Registrations under group contracts	121,986
	258,679
Group contracts in effect	846

Details re group contracts

Registrations in effect	121,986
In receipt of retirement annuities	6,975
Died before retirement	2,280
Withdrawn following change of employment	27,718
Total number of employees or members who have been registered under group plans	158,959
Average annuity under payment (vested) with respect to group retirement plans	408

Analysis of individual annuity contracts under payment

Amount of annuity	No. of contracts	Per cent	Cumulative Per cent
Less than $300	20,235	45·2	45·2
$300 and less than $600	11,206	25·0	70·2
$600 and less than $900	6,517	14·6	84·8
$900 and less than $1,200	1,798	4·0	88·8
Exactly $1,200	4,876	10·9	99·7
Over $1,200	150	·3	100·0
Totals	44,782	100·0

Average vested annuity, $439

During the past fiscal year some 37 group retirement plans were adopted and 15,689 group annuity certificates issued. Some 5,389 individual annuity contracts were also issued during the fiscal year 1949-50. These figures are included in the tables shown above.

The net premium receipt during the fiscal year 1949-50 amounted to $63,133,242, and the total to the credit of the annuities fund as at the close of the fiscal year 1949-50 amounted to $563,182,111.

Mr. Johnston: Has the minister any information as to the increase in annuity contracts issued by insurance companies?

Mr. Mitchell: I have no information. I have enough grief of my own without worrying about insurance companies.

Mr. Johnston: The minister says that he has no idea as to the cause of the decrease in the number of government annuities. The only thing he said was that this is a free country and people can do as they wish. Of course it was not the people who brought about the decrease in the interest rate. It may be a free country, but it was certainly the action of the government that was involved in that transaction. People are not buying government annuities—and the minister knows this as well as anyone else—because of the decrease in the interest rate from four to three per cent. There were a great many members of the house who complained at the time that action was taken, and who said that the natural outcome would be a diversion from government annuities to insurance company annuities. That is exactly what has taken place. Without question the insurance companies brought pressure to bear, either directly or indirectly, to have the interest rate on government annuities reduced.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

I had occasion to talk to officials of two large insurance companies as to their annuity contracts, and they told me frankly that they were not selling them because of the opposition provided by government annuities. Of course pressure was brought to bear, and as a result the insurance companies secured the business. The ordinary man with an average income is deprived of the right to invest in a government annuity contract. He has no place to invest his money now with reasonable safety and with a return anywhere near four per cent. I think the government should take into consideration the advisability of raising the interest rate to four per cent so that the ordinary small businessman and other private citizens will have some place to invest their money in order to provide for their old age. They cannot do so in any other field. A man who is earning only $150 or $200 a month cannot afford to use any portion of his salary as risk capital. If the government is going to bar such people from investing their savings in government annuities, it will only mean that later on they will have to take care of them by means of old age pensions, which will be more costly to the government than if they would allow such people to invest in government annuities. I think the government should consider the advisability of reinstating the interest rate at four per cent in order to provide a field of investment for the ordinary man.

Mr. Mitchell: I just want to say that to my knowledge I have never met an insurance company executive in my life.

Mr. Johnston: I did not say you personally.

Mr. Mitchell: That is all right. I am not arguing with my hon. friend. I am just saying that. If he is trying to convince me to reverse the position that has been taken on this matter he is up against a stiff proposition. As I pointed out when the interest rate was reduced, my officials came to me and said that on the present business there would be a loss of $150 million in ten years. They said that if we did not bring about a balance as to the return on money invested that would happen, and that is quite a responsibility. Insurance is not the only thing in which people invest to provide for their old age or a rainy day. They buy government bonds, and some make risk capital investments. I hope my hon. friend is not going to suggest to me that he and I and the Canadian people generally should subsidize something for nothing. I have never taken that view. It may be an unsound view in the opinion of some people. I agree with everything the hon. member said about saving for old age, but let me say that since the inception of this scheme it has cost the Canadian taxpayers around $34 million—$7 million for administration, and approximately $27 million to maintain the solvency of the fund. The Canadian taxpayer pays the whole cost of administration. I still think that the safest and cheapest investment, based on the character of the Canadian people, is government annuities.

Mr. McLure: That is debatable.

Mr. Mitchell: It is a matter of opinion, but for what it is worth that is my point of view. I have no axe to grind for any interest, and I still think that government annuities are the best and safest investment for people who wish to provide for their old age.

Mr. Johnston: Of course the minister claims that one of the reasons for the reduction in the interest rate is the tremendous amount that the government had to subsidize. That may be true. He spoke about administration charges of $7 million. I venture to say that that charge still remains the same because the fact that you reduced the interest rate from four per cent to three per cent would not lower the administration charge a great deal, if at all. The only place that there might be a saving to the government would be in the reduced number of contracts entered into. If that is the case, then the intention of the government in reducing the interest rate from four per cent to three per cent was definitely to reduce the number of contracts and not to reduce the administration charge. If the minister will give us the figures as to the administration charges, the committee will see that there has been no appreciable saving in that direction. Will the minister give us the administration cost for last year compared with the year prior to the reduction of the interest rate?

Mr. Mitchell: The figures here are broken down into stationery and the different items. Roughly, the cost was about one and one-quarter per cent of the receipts.

Mr. Johnston: But what was the reduction in administration costs?

Mr. Mitchell: No; that is the administration cost.

Mr. Johnston: But what does the minister mean by that?

Mr. Mitchell: In talking about a business you say that it costs so much. This is the overhead, the cost to run it, which is about one and one-quarter per cent of the net receipts.

Mr. Johnston: I can quite see that there could be a figure arrived at in that way. If you are going to have a material reduction in administration, obviously you have to discharge some of your employees or get rid of some of these overhead charges. I venture to say that as a result of this reduction in interest rate from four to three per cent you did not reduce your overhead charges to any appreciable degree. The net result would not be a saving in administration at all.

Mr. Mitchell: I can give you the amount in round figures. In 1948-49 the commissions amounted to $260,000, and in 1949-50 they amounted to $244,000.

Mr. Johnston: That is not the information I want. The commissions of course would be less because the contracts were reduced, but that has nothing to do with administration.

Mr. Mitchell: I shall give my hon. friend the total figures. The total for 1948-49 was $725,000, and for 1949-50 it was $758,000.

Mr. Johnston: Do I take it from that that the administration costs were increased? I understood the minister to say the first figure was $725,000.

Mr. Mitchell: My hon. friend is aware of the fact that there was a revision of salaries last year, and the permanent staff received salary increases. My hon. friend received an increase a few years ago for being a member of this House of Commons.

Mr. Johnston: That revision in salaries, then, would have brought the administration charges higher?

Mr. Mitchell: Yes; I have just said so.

Mr. Johnston: I imagine that revision in salaries takes place every so often, and I am not complaining about the increase in salaries. I am pointing out to the minister that there was no saving in administration costs. More is being paid for administration than there was before.

Mr. McLure: Are these annuities sold by salaried men or by commission agents?

Mr. Mitchell: They are sold on commission.

Mr. McLure: No salaries at all, but just a straight commission? What commission do the salesmen receive?

Mr. Mitchell: The maximum amount on a policy is $75, but it depends on the terms. If my hon. friend wants a break-down of the amounts, I shall be glad to get it for him.

Mr. Noseworthy: Mr. Chairman, I notice in the details for this item appearing on page 145 an amount of $290,000 estimated to be necessary for commissions to agents and postmasters. We were not able to hear the minister's answer to the question just asked. Could he tell us the rate of commission paid to postmasters and agents? How many agents other than postmasters are employed by the annuities branch? Are any of those agents employed full time?

Mr. Mitchell: I can answer the last question first, because you do not have to have any figures. I have always felt that most insurance agents worked rather long hours. I can get the other figures. There are about seventy-five agents.

Mr. Johnston: Can the minister tell us by what amount the staff has been reduced?

Mr. Mitchell: It has not been reduced.

Mr. Johnston: Has it been increased?

Mr. Mitchell: Not to any appreciable extent. There may have been a slight increase. My hon. friend is talking about these annuities, but it is amazing the pressure upon me to have people appointed as agents, even with the reduction in interest rates. Six new people have been appointed.

Mr. Johnston: There has not been a great saving effected in overhead; it has gone up rather than down. For 1950-51 there is a total of $802,660 in the estimates, as compared with $785,871 for 1949-50. The only place that I can see where any change has been brought about is that while overhead has gone up, the number of contracts sold is smaller. The net result has been that people have suffered a loss through not getting the benefit of the higher interest rate, and the expenses are going on just the same. My opinion is that we should go back to the old contract. Our costs would not be any more, and yet people would be getting the advantage of the increased rate.

Mr. Mitchell: As my hon. friend knows, there is over half a billion dollars' worth of this insurance in force today. Even if we were to repeal this act and did not sell annuities, those contracts would still have to be serviced. I am not an insurance executive, but probably my hon. friend is.

Mr. Johnston: No; I just know how it works.

Mr. Mitchell: I thought my hon. friend might have been an insurance executive.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Will the minister give us the revenue and expenditures of the annuity fund to March 31 of last year?

Mr. Mitchell: The receipts for last year were $63 million, and the expenses were $758,000.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The minister is speaking of the administration item, whereas I am speaking of the revenue and expenditures under the annuity contracts, including the premiums.

Mr. Mitchell: I shall get that information.

Mr. Graydon: How does the cost of doing business compare with the ordinary insurance companies?

Mr. Mitchell: Slightly less. The commissions are not so high.

Mr. Graydon: Of course you do not have to pay for office space.

Mr. Mitchell: The government pays administration costs.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, at the time the government proposed to decrease the interest rate on these annuities there was a lot of objection in this house. The story today is not surprising. On a good many occasions the minister has declared that he is opposed to the government being in business. This is not a bad way to discredit government business. The reduction in interest has definitely caused a drop of fifty per cent in the value of the annuities issued; and in addition the minister has said that the staff has been increased. If the staff remained the same and there was a drop of fifty per cent in business, it would increase the overhead of the department by one hundred per cent.

My reaction to this is that it has been the result of pressure from the old line insurance companies, which could not compete with the annuities branch. I was quite proud of that branch; I have circulated a good deal of literature on government annuities. The point I make is that this is a very effective way of sabotaging a branch of this department which has been doing an excellent job in this field. Certainly we cannot expect people to promote a government enterprise when they definitely take the position that they are opposed to that kind of thing. This branch was doing excellent work, and I believe it could have been expanded. My feeling always has been that this is the branch that should be handling industrial pensions in this country on a national scale. It has the trained staff; and it should be handling old age pensions tied in with industrial pensions. Certainly we should continue to push this annuity policy right across the country. Prior to the reduction in the interest rate we heard very little about that branch in this house, because I believe all hon. members realized that it was doing an excellent job. I still suggest that the minister should consider putting the interest rate back where it was before this experiment was started.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): If I may ask one simple question, is it not true that prior to the change in the interest rate, the more annuities you sold the more money you lost?

Mr. Mitchell: Absolutely. As a boy I was taught many things that stuck in my memory. One of them was that you cannot get something for nothing; another was to always put a little away for a rainy day, because the sun does not always shine. As the hon. member for Calgary West said, I do not think it is proper to ask the people of Canada to subsidize this kind of insurance. If a business were run in that way it would not last twenty-four hours. At the present time we have a committee studying the whole broad question of old age security, and no doubt it will take a look at the matter brought up this morning by the hon. member for Cape Breton South. I am inclined to agree with the observations he made about old age pensions, but I want to be perfectly frank about this. I have said that governments sometimes do things in reverse, and that is what hon. members are trying to do this morning. This money has to come from the taxpayers of the country, and frankly I do not take the view that this should be done. I still do not believe you can get something for nothing, and if any government undertaking is run at a loss, that loss has to be paid by the taxpayers. We must remember also that those taxpayers may have annuities of their own with private companies, co-operative organizations or trade unions.

Mr. Ferrie: Is it not a fact that the loss does not come about through administration but in selling the annuities?

Mr. Mitchell: Absolutely.

Mr. Ferrie: In other words if the government can buy money more cheaply elsewhere, why should they buy it from the labour department at a higher cost?

Mr. Mitchell: That is the point.

Mr. Bater: Are all postmasters automatically agents for the sale of these annuities, and do they receive the standard commission?

Mr. Mitchell: They receive the standard commission.

Mr. Bater: And all postmasters are automatically agents?

Mr. Mitchell: Yes.

Mr. Noseworthy: I am quite sure the country at large will be glad to hear the minister's declaration of faith in these annuities, because in practically every part of this country where the question of government annuities has come up I have sensed the feeling that the government is not interested in pushing government annuities; that the insurance companies are opposed to the sale of this insurance, and that the officials responsible for this undertaking get no support or encouragement from the government because the government does not want these annuities sold in competition with the insurance companies. Therefore it is good to hear what the minister said this morning; but I have noticed something else. We are carrying on an insurance business. I know a little about that; for some years I have worked with an insurance company. I find here that notwithstanding the drop in business there has been an increase in the staff. I am not speaking of any increase in salaries; there is an actual increase in the staff. That is the inside office staff; not one of those 208 employees working in the annuities branch is working outside in order to get business. Apparently the only people who are getting business are the postmasters. There is just no drive behind this business.

I notice that $50,000 is being asked for publicity and advertising. Will the minister tell us just what advertising media are used and just what drive is being put into the sale of annuities by his department?

Mr. Mitchell: In the last month I have sent out 150,000 letters to employers in this country advocating the adoption of a group plan under the Government Annuities Act. We are advertising all the time. I believe the drop in sales last year occurred at least partly because people thought the interest rate was going to be increased again from three per cent to four per cent. However, as I say, we have seventy-five salesmen and forty officers, and goodness knows there are enough postmasters in this country, who are paid the same commission as the salesmen.

My hon. friend has mentioned the increase of six in the staff at the head office. It is big business when you have over half a billion dollars' worth of insurance which requires servicing. It is like building a ship. People think there are a great many men working in a shipyard, but actually more people are employed in planning a ship than in building it. You cannot service an enormous undertaking like this without some kind of organization. I can quite imagine the howls that would go up in this chamber if we reported a loss of $50 or $60 million on that half billion dollars' worth of business. I am the minister charged with the responsibility of seeing that this fund is kept liquid, and I am not going to take advice from any fly-by-night who wants to give away the country's money in an unsound undertaking. That is the position I take. It may be the wrong position politically, but that is the position I have always taken.

Mr. Johnston: It seems to me that this thing is doomed to failure. The minister assumes that it is unsound business practice to have the government take any part in this annuity business.

Mr. Mitchell: I never said that.

Mr. Johnston: In effect that is what the minister said.

Mr. Mitchell: On a point of privilege, I never said that. I say to my hon. friend that this annuities branch will be running a long time after he is dead, and a long time after he ceases to be a member of this House of Commons, and a long time after I cease to be a member of it. I have absolute faith in this undertaking. Let us be frank and honest about it. I am not going to fool the Canadian people and run it at a loss, you understand, not while I am breathing.

Mr. Johnston: I think, Mr. Chairman, it may be assumed from what the minister has said that this annuities branch is still running at a loss. One of the reasons it is running at a loss is the unsound business practice carried on in its operation. The minister may be reducing that unsound position to some extent; but the fact is, he has no faith in it anyway, and will not—

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege, I never said that I have no faith in it. I have absolute faith in it. I wish that every industrial undertaking in Canada would take out a group annuity policy for its employees. I wish my hon. friend would take out a government annuity.

Mr. Johnston: I have not enough money.

Mr. Mitchell: There you are. The hon. member does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Johnston: The minister says he has great faith in this thing. Just a moment ago he rose in his place and deplored the idea of the government having to subsidize this or any other business, and said that subsidies were unsound. He forgets that there are a great many industries in this country that are being subsidized. He forgets the extent to which the railways of this country are being subsidized, the banks are being subsidized, and everything else is being subsidized. The railways have been subsidized to the greatest extent in the Dominion of Canada. I did not hear anybody condemning the railways for taking subsidies. But when there is a subsidy paid to the annuities branch so that the ordinary citizen of this country may have some benefit from it, there is a great hullabaloo about it. Look at the way the gold mines have been subsidized. You do not hear hon. members complaining about that, but you hear a lot of complaint about an industry from which the ordinary man, the small man, the man who is on a small salary, can get some benefit. If he is the recipient of any subsidy there is a great complaint. When I hear people complaining about the little bit of subsidy that goes to the annuities branch it gives me a pain in the ear, especially when we recognize that so many of the great companies in this country are being subsidized and no fuss is made about it. We cannot expect very much from the annuities department.

Item agreed to.

General administration—

156. Labour Gazette and other publications authorized by Labour Department Act, $116,763.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): What other publications are there besides the Labour Gazette?

Mr. Mitchell: "Labour Legislation in Canada," Labour Gazette, figures on the unemployment situation—various publications that we get out from time to time, and the broadcast my hon. friend was talking about that came over the air; that is issued, too.

Item agreed to.

General administration—

157. To provide for the effective organization and use of agricultural manpower, including recruiting, transporting and placing workers on farms and related industries and assistance to the provinces pursuant to agreements that may be entered into by the Minister of Labour with the provinces and approved by the governor in council, $320,000.

Mr. Gillis: Can the minister tell us to what extent this vote was used last year, and what plans he has with regard to moving people from province to province to assist farmers? Is it in use now where there is a shortage of farmers? To what extent did the minister use the vote last year?

Mr. Mitchell: At the moment we are moving people from western Canada to Ontario. We have agreements with all governments in Canada to move people backwards and forwards. I think it is a magnificent experiment. It worked well during the war. I hope we shall continue it. It is on a fifty-fifty basis with the provinces. At the moment we have a small movement from Newfoundland which is being used as a trial balloon. We have moved, as my hon. friend knows, people from his part of Canada to other parts of Canada.

Mr. Gillis: That also will continue?

Mr. Mitchell: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, 1942—

159. Training payments to the provinces, $3,333,000.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): On this vote I should like to compliment the minister on having introduced the vocational educational scheme in Newfoundland. We had a vocational school down there, and with the assistance of money from this vote we are carrying it on. Has he any idea of the amount that is allocated for Newfoundland?

Mr. Mitchell: I will get that figure.

Item agreed to.

Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, 1942—

160. Payments to the provinces for capital expenditures for vocational schools, buildings and equipment, $2,250,000.

Mr. Noseworthy: This is one field in which the Department of Labour has done an excellent job over the years. As one who has had some interest in the schools of Ontario, and to some extent of Canada, I want to compliment the minister and his department on the good work they have done in this field. However, the fact that they have been doing good work is no reason why they should begin to rest on their oars. What I had hoped to find was that once the government had been relieved of a large part of the expenditures which for some years they have been paying out to assist in the education of veterans who returned from the services, there would be a reasonable proportion of government money kept for use in education, and that it would be possible to retain some commensurate amount, once the education of veterans had been completed, for the general educational system, particularly vocational education in Canada.

I find that there has been no increase in the vocational grants of the Department of Labour. As a matter of fact there has been some reduction. Partly because the department is no longer training so many people for the armed forces, there is a reduction this year of close to half a million dollars in that one field where a year ago they were training men for the Department of National Defence, in which apparently there has been some change. Apart from that there has been practically no change whatever in the amount requested for vocational education under this item. Actually there is a reduction of $750,000.

The question I brought to the minister's attention last session I want to bring to his attention again, namely, the great need in the country today for further assistance in capital expenditures on vocational education. On a former occasion I called the minister's attention to an item in his annual report for 1948-49 on Canadian vocational training. I have called the minister's attention to an item at page 7 which I should like to read into the record. It states:

> At the meeting of the vocational training advisory council which was held on October 4, 1948, various members drew attention to the fact that increased costs for new buildings, and higher operational costs of vocational schools, have reduced the value of the grants which were provided under the vocational schools assistance agreement. The availability of dominion funds has given a notable impetus to vocational education in Canada and has been responsible for an active program of development in practically all provinces.

I am sure the minister realizes that and approves of it. He is wholeheartedly behind it. Educationists and school authorities across Canada appreciate the assistance that has been given under the act, and the help given by the federal government to vocational education. Then it continues:

> The council felt that it was in the interests of Canada that facilities for vocational education should be strengthened and developed as speedily as possible. It recommended that a further grant of $5 million be made by the dominion for capital expenditures, to be distributed on the same basis as the earlier capital grant, and that the annual grants be increased from $2 million to $4 million. At March 31 these recommendations were still under consideration.

That was the position as of March 31, 1949, well over a year ago. There is nothing in the estimates to indicate that those recommendations have been given favourable consideration, or that anything has been done to implement them.

I do not know whether the minister is aware of it or not, but before this report was made there were seventy-eight schools for vocational education being built across this country, for which no federal aid would be available. Those buildings had been planned after the date for application under this fund had passed. I live in an industrial community of from 80,000 to 100,000 people, where there is no vocational school as such. We have commercial branches in our collegiate; but in a working-class riding, with one of the largest percentages of industrial workers to be found anywhere in the province, there is not in that entire community of York township a single vocational school. The community is not in a position to build a vocational school that would be adequate, by its own resources, or with the percentage of assistance which could be received from the province.

They were planning to build a school, but unfortunately they did not get their plans down here in time to get under the wire so far as the grant is concerned. They have had to curtail extensively the facilities offered at the school because no longer is there any federal aid available. That picture applies to possibly more than a hundred communities. There were close to that many in 1949 when this report was made.

Today there are scores of communities all across Canada where vocational education will be handicapped if there is no extension of this federal grant. If the minister and his department could secure for educational purposes, or for vocational education in Canada, a fraction of the money the government spent over the years for the training and education of returned men, it would be a splendid thing for vocational education across this country. The government is now relieved of the burden in respect of the returned men.

I should like to have a definite answer from the minister in this instance. I did not receive direct answers to my questions last night. Has consideration been given to this recommendation, and what has been the result of that consideration by treasury board, or whoever it is that decides whether the minister is to receive the money for which he asks? Has consideration been given to the report to which I have just referred, and if so, what has been the result of that consideration? What chance is there for vocational educational authorities to have an addition to the original grant?

Mr. Mitchell: As the hon. member knows, this does not run out until 1952. The question he has raised is under consideration by treasury board. I cannot give the hon. member the direct answer he wants but it will be announced in due course as a matter of government policy. I join with him in commendation of the work of the municipalities, the provinces and the federal government in this regard. I think we quickened the pulse of technical and vocational education in this country, as well as that of apprenticeship education.

Replying to the hon. member for Cape Breton South, the school at North Sydney will not be closed down.

Replying also to the hon. member for St. John's West, the allotment last year for Newfoundland was $357,000.

Mr. Gillis: Would the minister give a provincial break-down for last year?

Mr. Mitchell: I shall be glad to do that. If we complete these estimates today I shall give the information to the hon. member tomorrow when the orders of the day are called.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Noseworthy.]

Terminable services—

163. Vocational training for discharged members of Canada's armed forces, including undischarged commitments of previous years, $50,000.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Does the amount of the reduction here indicate the end of this vote? Will this be the last year?

Mr. Mitchell: I think this year will be the last.

Mr. Ferrie: Mr. Chairman, I should like to congratulate the minister and his department upon what has been done by them for the boys who came back from overseas in the matter of education they received. We first gained experience when the troops returned from the first war. In 1944 provision was made for those returning from the second world war. It dealt particularly with those who had joined the forces before completing their education. They were permitted to continue, with the government taking care of them to see that they were given an opportunity to complete their education. The experience gained should not be lost, it should continue to be used. There are many young fellows who have obtained an education up to a certain point but who find they cannot carry on. I agree that we must have hewers of wood and drawers of water, but they can do their work more efficiently if they have education and training.

The job that was done by the Department of Labour for the troops and veterans should be carried on for the benefit of the civilian population. When a youth has reached grade level and wants to go ahead, why not give him the same examination you gave the troops? If some are eliminated, as some of the veterans were, let them be eliminated; but let us carry on and give every boy or girl who wants an education but cannot go on because of financial reasons the right to climb the ladder. This educational scheme has been a wonderful thing for Canada, and the experience should be used.

Many young fellows came back to the farm after the last war but did not want to stay on the farm. Some of them had gone as far as grade ten or grade eleven and they were sent to the agricultural schools for further education. When they came out they were willing to go back to the farm to take care of the soil. They learned at the university that the soil had to be taken care of, that erosion must be stopped, that the soil must be nurtured if they want to make a living. In closing I want to say to the minister that I think the organization he has should be used to help the civilian population and not be destroyed.

Mr. Mitchell: May I be permitted to put on the record the information asked for by the hon. member for Cape Breton South?

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mitchell: This is the information asked for:

TABLE 9—ASSISTANCE TO VOCATIONAL SCHOOLS—SPECIAL ALLOTMENT FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES

Province	Buildings			Equipment
	Total Allotment	Claims paid during 1949-50	Claims paid during previous years	Total Allotment	Claims paid during 1949-50	Claims paid during previous years
	$	$	$	$	$	$
Newfoundland	219,185	—	—	73,065	—	—
Prince Edward Island	61,500	—	61,500.00	20,500	3,248.96	957.93
Nova Scotia	378,225	209,409.59	58,388.64	126,075	—	—
New Brunswick	324,750	324,750.00	—	108,250	30,119.79	—
Quebec	2,354,550	29,795.30	2,152,749.41	784,850	149,951.34	518,501.95
Ontario	2,273,625	320,017.92	239,894.58	757,875	24,242.83	35,654.37
Manitoba	492,000	144,839.30	111,899.33	164,000	7,090.57	—
Saskatchewan	643,650	149,855.00	312,959.01	214,550	31,435.05	16,795.80
Alberta	525,150	206,485.24	223,401.12	175,050	31,063.27	94,951.38
British Columbia	446,550	312,132.26	134,117.74	148,850	80,057.46	61,153.70
Totals	7,719,185	1,697,284.61	3,294,909.83	2,573,065	357,209.27	728,015.13

TABLE 10—ASSISTANCE TO VOCATIONAL SCHOOLS—ANNUAL ALLOTMENT

Province	Annual allotment and grant*	Claims paid during previous years	Claims paid during 1949-50 to 30th April		Total of payments to 30th April, 1950
			For previous years	For 1949-50
	$	$	$	$	$
Newfoundland	65,800	—	—	—	—
Prince Edward Island	25,700	93,492.33	—	16,000.00	109,492.33
Nova Scotia	106,400	107,041.92	38,996.21	34,168.87	180,207.00
New Brunswick	92,700	349,699.34	10,000.00	92,700.00	452,399.34
Quebec	609,400	2,329,351.05	108,249.15	498,140.58	2,935,740.78
Ontario	589,000	2,356,000.00	—	589,000.00	2,945,000.00
Manitoba	135,300	64,845.28	8,050.49	29,791.69	102,687.46
Saskatchewan	173,900	365,527.91	7,500.00	131,273.08	504,300.99
Alberta	143,800	520,269.74	—	143,800.00	664,069.74
British Columbia	123,800	374,718.03	83,710.79	47,272.36	505,701.18
Totals	2,065,800	6,560,945.60	256,506.64	1,582,146.58	8,399,598.82

*$10,000.00 in each province is an unmatched grant.

Item agreed to.

Terminable services—

164. To provide the necessary financial requirements to complete activities for the relocation, maintenance and welfare of persons of the Japanese race in Canada, including provision for undischarged commitments under agreements with the provinces and to continue the appointment of necessary temporary assistance required for the administration thereof, $52,780.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Is this a disappearing item?

Mr. Mitchell: Yes.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Does the minister expect that this will be the last year?

Mr. Mitchell: We have one project at New Denver to take care of older people who have tuberculosis, and arrangements are being made to have that responsibility assumed elsewhere.

Item agreed to.

Terminable services—

166. To provide for expenses that may be incurred in the arranging for and the movement of workers from outside Canada to work on farms and other essential industry in Canada when Canadian labour is not available to meet the need; including costs connected with the supervision and welfare of persons already immigrated to Canada under former authorized labour movements and administrative expenses connected therewith, $783,340.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Perhaps the question I want to ask here would be more appropriate under the immigration items. I notice there is a decrease of $112,335. Can the minister tell us if it is intended to have assisted immigration?

Mr. Mitchell: Up to now we have brought in about 80,000 displaced persons from Europe. Their fares were paid from the ocean port to the places of employment, and we run the vocational schools. I have always expressed the opinion that you will have to fill up this country if you are going to hang on to it. I am a great believer in the efficacy of the melting pot. I think there has been a complete change in public opinion with regard to immigration. You cannot take the figure of 13 million people and think you can hold it indefinitely. While I am charged with this responsibility I am going to say who is going to come here and who is not. They are going to be screened. If they want to start a revolution, whether it be fascist or communist, they are not going to do it here if I can avoid it. We have a physical test for these people. When I first came to Canada over forty years ago—

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I gather that the answer to my question is yes?

Mr. Mitchell: I just wanted to point out these facts to let people know which way we are going. When I first came to this country if you could stand on your two feet you were in. I think we have the right to give a physical examination. When the Polish soldiers were brought in I think it is fair to say that the examination was not as strict as it is today, with the result that a number of them had to be sent to sanatoria. I do not think we should assume that responsibility if we are in position to avoid it.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): How many of these displaced persons have bought out their contracts? I understand that some of them have not completed their year in employment, as arranged, but have paid back their passage money in order to have freedom of action in seeking other employment. Can the minister tell me how many there are of this type?

Mr. Mitchell: About 365. There is one thing: we cannot prevent these girls from getting married. It is a natural thing to do and, God bless them, I like to see them get married so long as they marry decent fellows.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I attended a little wedding last winter and I was told that a king from one of the small European countries was there.

Mr. Adamson: How many displaced persons have come into Canada since the inception of this plan?

Mr. Mitchell: Eighty thousand.

Mr. Herridge: I agree with the minister when he says that we have to have population in this country, but there should be careful planning as to where that new population is directed. I should like to bring two cases to the attention of the minister. I was out in the country last fall and found some work going on for the provincial government under a subcontractor. There were several displaced persons employed by that subcontractor at wages lower than the standard rates, while boys who had fought for this country and who had been born in that district and lived there all their lives were in need of work. That is a poor distribution of labour.

I happened to get on the train one day and saw a family in the tourist coach and asked who they were The answer was: "They are some of Dr. MacNamara's tourists". What happened was that the family was sent from Ontario to a first-class farmer in my constituency who had an excellent home for these people to live in. The farmer made every provision for them in the way of a decent home, wages and good living conditions. These people found it lonely because the house was about a quarter of a mile away from their nearest neighbour. They did not like it. There were communications between my district and Ottawa officials, telephone calls, telegrams and so on, at the public expense. Finally these people were provided with transportation from Kaslo to Nelson, and then railway tourist transportation for the man, his wife and family of children, including dining car tickets on the train, back to Ontario.

I should like to know where the advisory boards come into the picture in the operations of the department. It seems to me that totally unnecessary expense was involved in the instance I have cited. We have already paid our share to bring these people to Canada, and then we transport them all the way back to Ontario. If it had been a good old Britisher he would have been told to rustle for his living. I should like the minister to explain what the procedure is in such cases, because in my opinion it is a waste of public funds.

Mr. Mitchell: I can do it in two minutes. I suppose the hon. member wants an answer, although to be honest I know nothing about the case to which he has referred. I would say that on the average these people are just as good as any others. We could not have undertaken the power development on the Ottawa river if it had not been for such people. I am not concerned about voices in the street; I want facts.

Mr. Herridge: I am giving facts.

Mr. Mitchell: Just because somebody writes a letter to you or me and puts it on paper does not mean that it is true.

Mr. Herridge: If the minister will check he will find what I have said is correct.

Mr. Mitchell: I will check it. What I want to impress on the committee is that, like my hon. friend, I get thousands of letters, but just because somebody picks up a pen and puts something on paper it does not necessarily follow that the facts are as they outline them.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, the farmer himself informed me.

Mr. Mitchell: That may be true. I do not know the farmer, but if my hon. friend would get in touch with me instead of spending $60 a minute discussing an individual case in this committee, I should be glad to have the matter investigated.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I think I can answer it quickly. It is merely an exemplification of the new slogan of the Liberal party: Join the Liberal party and see the world.

Mr. Herridge: I gave that case as an illustration. I am not saying it happens on a large scale. I suggested that I thought it was a waste of public money. There should be some provision for locating such people without having to bring them back across Canada.

Item agreed to.

Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940—

167. Administration, including expenditures incurred in connection with the activities of the national employment service as delegated by the Minister of Labour in accordance with section 88 of the act (including technical personnel division), $22,043,330.

Mrs. Fairclough: Will the minister tell us the amount of the fund as of March 31, 1949, additions that were made thereto, contributions, amounts of payments made therefrom and the balance in the fund at March 31, 1950?

Mr. Mitchell: I have a complete breakdown and with the permission of the committee I will have it put on the record.

The Chairman: Has the minister permission?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mitchell: The breakdown is as follows:

(Table appears on following page.)

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Statement of Receipts and Disbursements for the Period July 1, 1941 to April 30, 1950.

Fiscal Year Ended March 31	Receipts								Disbursements	Balance
	Contributions (Gross less refunds)					Fines	Interest on investments and profit on sale of securities	Total revenue	Benefit payments	Balance in fund
	Stamps	Meter	Bulk	Total employer and employee	Government
	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$	$
1942	22,436,001.56	7,209,058.48	6,790,549.01	36,435,609.05	7,287,121.81	.....	269,268.74	43,991,999.60	27,752.92	43,964,246.68
1943	30,408,651.15	13,645,258.63	13,380,741.65	57,434,651.43	11,487,057.90	638.11	1,840,448.56	70,762,796.00	716,012.75	114,011,029.93
1944	31,565,232.54	13,205,897.37	16,949,655.09	61,720,785.00	12,344,421.74	1,323.67	3,972,047.14	78,038,577.55	1,721,666.29	190,327,941.19
1945	32,784,177.12	11,926,369.85	19,018,308.47	63,728,855.44	12,746,179.30	2,041.02	6,195,926.42	82,673,002.18	4,966,483.51	268,034,459.86
1946	34,964,786.96	10,816,365.63	16,785,437.07	62,566,589.66	12,513,778.66	2,303.66	6,116,768.84	81,199,440.82	31,993,240.34	317,240,660.34
1947	41,042,425.28	11,500,028.37	23,472,577.26	76,015,030.91	15,203,457.58	3,820.43	7,529,985.56	98,752,294.48	43,114,329.18	372,878,625.64
1948	38,768,926.38	11,508,638.62	33,593,269.47	83,870,834.47	16,366,400.70	5,322.60	9,560,776.12	109,803,333.89	34,947,020.32	447,734,939.21
1949	46,686,689.27	14,363,308.41	37,531,562.30	98,581,559.98	20,924,013.71	8,359.08	12,113,317.56	131,627,250.33	49,826,752.16	529,535,437.38
1950	52,434,153.88	14,189,075.34	37,809,186.72	104,432,415.94	20,094,332.20	17,731.42	14,391,257.71	138,935,737.27	85,824,202.13	582,646,972.52
April	4,138,402.34	1,247,128.59	3,627,083.86	9,012,614.79	1,799,207.99	1,675.00	1,207,873.23	12,021,371.01	14,340,068.84	580,328,274.69
Total	335,229,446.48	109,611,129.29	208,958,370.90	653,798,946.67	130,765,971.59	43,214.99	63,197,669.88	847,805,803.13	267,477,528.44	580,328,274.69

Armed service (included in "bulk" column): To March 31, 1950.....$ 47,859,038.64
April 1950..... 773,696.09

48,632,734.73

Supplementary benefit (included in "Disbursements" column):
To March 31, 1950.....$ 818,065.89
April 1950..... 2,487,558.22

3,305,624.11

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): There are two or three matters to which I should like to direct the attention of the minister. As he is aware, owing to a combination of circumstances the unemployment situation is worse in Newfoundland at the present time. One reason is the failure of the steel plants in Great Britain to keep their contracts for the sale of iron ore. There are two other places where men are not able to avail themselves of the benefit of the unemployment insurance fund. Has the minister given consideration to working out a scheme whereby fishermen can receive some advantage from a system of unemployment insurance, possibly in the same way that farmers of the west, who do not catch any fish, receive aid? Those who work in the fish plants draw unemployment insurance when no fish come in, but the fishermen do not.

Mr. Mitchell: If I may interrupt my hon. friend, I think it would save him making a long speech.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I was not going to make a long speech.

Mr. Mitchell: As a matter of fact the matter is being studied at this very moment. I gave instructions to my people to make a study.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I am glad to know that the minister is studying that problem, because it is most important, and I think something should be done.

The next point concerns the workers at the United States bases. There are about three or four thousand men and women involved.

Mr. Mitchell: Negotiations are being carried on at the moment with the United States government.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Has any progress been made?

Mr. Mitchell: Yes, I would say that progress is being made.

Item agreed to.

Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940—

168. Government's contribution to the unemployment insurance fund, $23,000,000.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I notice there is an increase of $4 million. I do not say this by way of complaint, but would the minister say a word as to the reason for it? The increase of $4 million is responsible for almost the total increase in the estimates of the department. Is there anything that the minister can say to us about that?

Mr. Mitchell: I think I can. There is an increase in the proportion of contributions paid out of the treasury, and there has been a substantial increase in the coverage, particularly in the lumber industry, in the last fiscal year.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The $4 million is in proportion to what other people are doing?

Mr. Mitchell: Absolutely.

Mr. Herridge: I want to mention something else to the minister. I apologize for bothering him so much.

Mr. Mitchell: That is all right.

Mr. Herridge: I want to say that your staffs in Nelson and Trail are doing a very good job, but at times they work under great difficulties. When anybody does a good job, I say so. When seasonal unemployment occurs in our district, it happens all at once. The mills close down and logging ends because of weather conditions. Your staffs are swamped with applications for unemployment insurance. I quite understand that you cannot keep sufficient staff all year round to handle the work at that time. You cannot take on temporary employees to do the work, because they have not been trained. I suggest that a lot of misunderstanding is caused amongst the workers. They are irritated because their applications are not proceeded with quickly, and that is partly owing to the time involved in the mailing of applications. I suggest there should be some form of travelling service periodically to the smaller points to assist in filling out applications. I also suggest that it would be a good idea if the minister's officials were permitted to visit the national trade unions and other groups of workers to explain the workings of the act, because I find that in most cases the complaints I receive are the result of misunderstanding.

Item agreed to.

Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940—

169. To provide for the transfer of labour to and from places where employment is available in agriculture and industry and expenses incidental thereto, in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $200,000.

Mr. Bater: I should like to say a word in commendation of the minister and his department for the great work that has been done. I should also like to mention a problem facing many municipalities in the province of Saskatchewan, with which I am more familiar. I refer to the question of the metis or half-breeds. We have had assistance in moving these people from one province to another or from one district to another; nevertheless I think the problem is one that will require investigation on the part of the Department of Labour, because it goes beyond the assistance that can be afforded by many municipalities in Saskatchewan. Instead of taking the time to read it, I should like to put on the record a table from a publication of the Department of Labour. I think the people of our country should know what is being done in this branch of the Department of Labour.

Mr. Cote (Verdun-La Salle): Is that from the last report of the department?

Mr. Bater: Yes, I should like to have this table put on Hansard. It sets forth the movements that were carried out in 1948.

Mr. Cote (Verdun-La Salle): On what page of the report does it appear?

Mr. Bater: Page 63.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bater: The table is as follows:

Organized Movements of Farm Labour

Type of Movement	From	To	Number of Workers
Fruit picking	Saskatchewan and Alberta	British Columbia	500
Hay and grain harvest	Ontario and Quebec	Prairie Provinces	2,100
Hay and grain harvest	Prairie provinces	Ontario	920
Hay and grain harvest	Nova Scotia	Ontario	200
Potato harvest	Nova Scotia	Prince Edward Island	1,000
Apple harvest	Nova Scotia	Fruit growing areas in province	800
Potato harvest	New Brunswick	Potato growing areas in province	1,000
Potato harvest	New Brunswick and Quebec	Maine, U.S.A.	5,900
Potato harvest	Manitoba	North Dakota, U.S.A.	800
Harvest combines	Prairie provinces	Western United States	450
Tobacco curers	United States	Ontario	1,350
Sugar beet workers	Saskatchewan	Montana, U.S.A.	200
Pea viners	New Brunswick	Maine, U.S.A.	200

Item agreed to.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

215. Departmental administration, $859,720.

Mr. Blair: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Martin: No.

Mr. Blair: The administration item of the Department of National Health and Welfare provides the one opportunity during a session of parliament when the matter of the health of the people of Canada may be discussed. I have always felt that we devoted altogether too little time to the discussion of this important matter.

In previous debates in other sessions I have quoted statistics showing the health situation in this country, and those statistics have invariably indicated that while much has been accomplished in the way of prevention, cure and treatment in certain diseases, there is still a great work to be done. We still have diseases, such as cancer, which offer a challenge to all who are interested in the health of our people, especially to those engaged in research. It is apparent that if research is to provide the answer to these questions, this house must consider the advisability of voting sums of money for that work.

When the estimates of this department were before the committee last session I drew attention to the fact that conditions were changing with respect to the types of diseases now being treated by physicians and encountered in hospitals. We have made marked progress in the protection of our population against communicable diseases. The advent of penicillin and the sulpha drugs has changed the whole picture in the treatment of infection. Maternal and infant mortality have fallen, and the span of life has been greatly lengthened by these new discoveries. It is true that we have not discovered how to treat and cure such diseases as cancer, disseminated sclerosis, leukemia or poliomyelitis, commonly known as infantile paralysis; and these are only a few of the great problems facing us at the present time. Though tuberculosis is still a menace, modern treatment and care have markedly reduced the incidence of that disease, and I think we can look forward with confidence to the time when it will be entirely eliminated. This may sound optimistic, but we have only to look at the reduced incidence of infections to see that this will be possible in the future.

While new scientific discoveries have been made and will be made, our policy should be directed toward making available to all our people the opportunity for treatment, and bringing to them all the advantages of new scientific discoveries to combat disease and misery. We must constantly strive to bring the standard of health of the people of Canada to the highest possible level. But in making progress in lengthening the span of life we must be prepared to deal with diseases of advancing age. Some of the results of the increase in the number of older people are now becoming apparent. During the last year there has been an increase in the number of mental cases; in fact, as I have said during the last two or three sessions of the house, the percentage of people suffering mental disease is greater than the percentage increase in our general population. Increasing the span of life is going to increase the percentage of people suffering from the mental disturbances which occur in aged people; and unless we find an answer to the problem of cancer it is to be expected that this disease will increase among the older group.

Heart disease is becoming more common, not only from the strain and stress of our modern life but from the increase in the number of older people. Our population is increasing; our towns and cities are growing with the establishment of industries. We must be prepared to deal with an increasing number of health and accident problems connected with our industries. As an example of these changed conditions, though it does not enter into what we are discussing today, we have only to look at the toll of accidents and injuries on our highways. So we must readjust our present and future health facilities to take care of the older age groups. This is going to entail provision for people suffering from mental diseases of the aged, and the treatment of chronic diseases of old people.

I again call attention, Mr. Chairman, to the necessity for research into the cause, prevention and treatment of the so-called degenerative diseases. It is important that the rising mortality rate in heart disease should receive attention. Coronary disease of the heart was formerly regarded as a disease of the older age groups, but it is becoming increasingly common in younger groups. The study of cardiovascular disease, in view of the high casualty rate, should receive the attention of our research workers, in order that the rapidly rising mortality rate may be cut down.

The programs of prevention of acute and communicable diseases carried on by the health departments of all the provinces have shown splendid results. This has been proved by the decreasing mortality rates. One might take as an example the lowered rate of infantile mortality. Preventive treatment has cut down the incidence and costs to the nation of acute diseases. The same form of program can also be highly effective in the control and prevention of chronic diseases, and this is a program which will be increasingly necessary in the future. Not only must we continue our program of prevention; we must pay particular attention to the education of our people in preventive measures. Further, the increase in the span of life makes it absolutely necessary that, along with other measures, old age pensions and assistance to the aged should be commensurate with a decent standard of living for our aged citizens, and any plans for the future must recognize this fact. I am not bringing into this debate the matter that is now before a committee of this house, but I am throwing out the suggestion that it is part of any medical program dealing with the diseases of our elderly citizens.

It is worthy of note that the percentage of venereal disease in Canada shows a marked decline. I was interested in the remarks of Dr. Theodore Rosenthal, director of the New York city bureau of adult hygiene, at the meeting of the Canadian and Ontario public health associations. Among other things Dr. Rosenthal stated that the social aspect, through better family relations, was important. He further said that public education has gone a long way toward bringing about the incidence of reduction, and, as quoted in the Globe and Mail of June 14, Dr. Rosenthal added a warning:

> Venereal disease must be controlled in the future to the same extent as smallpox and diphtheria are today.

I again call your attention to the great need for research into the disease known as disseminated sclerosis. Some time ago I received three letters within the space of two weeks from comparatively young victims of this disease. It is a disease which not only incapacitates, but lasts for years, with attendant misery and suffering. I am glad to see that an organization has been set up to procure funds to stimulate research in the treatment of the disease, which is all too common. The Department of National Health and Welfare should give due consideration to the lending of all possible assistance to the prevention and treatment of disseminated sclerosis.

I now come to a subject which I have mentioned practically every year and at every session of parliament when the Department of National Health and Welfare estimates were being considered. I call your attention to the high cost of hospitalization, which is beyond the financial means of the average citizen. It is true that there has been increased tendency for people to seek hospital accommodation and treatment. It is very difficult at the present time to get help in the home; it is very difficult to get a trained nurse in order that the patient may receive the treatment that is necessary. There has been an increase in the building of hospitals and additions to hospitals, in order that more beds may be provided, but even with the grants given by the Department of National Health and Welfare, and also, in my own province of Ontario, the grants given by the provincial government for the building of hospitals and hospital beds, there is still a great shortage. Even with these grants it is difficult for cities, towns and municipalities to finance the building of hospitals and additions to existing hospitals.

Boards of hospitals have found it increasingly difficult to finance their institutions, even with these increased grants. It is necessary that we should have sufficient beds to meet the needs of our people. I am introducing a subject to which I hope the minister will give due consideration; the matter is very important. There should be sufficient hospital beds to meet the demand, in time of peace, and, which is more important, in time of war. Defence plans for the protection of our country must include adequate provision for our people in time of emergency. Modern warfare has shown the importance of making provision for civilians.

No review of the work of the Department of National Health and Welfare would be complete without mentioning the position of the so-called incurables. Many of these people are in the younger age groups. They are not able to earn their livelihood, owing to disease or accident suffered in earlier years. It is also possible that a percentage of this group could be helped in learning some form of gainful occupation. Many, because of their disability, find themselves unable to do any form of work. I am sure that the whole house will agree with me when I say that those people should receive assistance. It is only a short time since we had a group of them here. I am sure that every hon. member who saw them and interviewed them was impressed by the necessity of doing something for them, something that would give them a chance to lead a normal life. As I looked at the group I felt that possibly some measures could be taken to train them in some work that they could carry on, even with their disability.

I draw attention, sir, to the remarkable work done in my own province of Ontario for the care of children or adults suffering from that dread disease poliomyelitis. All cases in the province of Ontario are sent to selected centres for the period of isolation, which is only a matter of a week. Then they are sent to general hospitals for treatment after the infectious stage of the disease has passed, and it is possible to begin treatment of the affected muscles. Great work has been done in these centres toward the repair of and the bringing back to life of muscles which have been affected by the disease. This is all done at the expense of the provincial government. I wish to point out that it has paid rich dividends in preventing the crippling of many of these children. I have been impressed by the fact that children who have suffered from the disease, and who two or three years ago would have been left crippled for the rest of their lives, are now completely well, without any disability. Last summer one of my own patients, who was affected in both arms, back, and legs, received treatment at the Ottawa civic hospital, one of the selected hospitals for the treatment of this disease in Ontario. I am sure if it had not been for the modern methods of treatment which my patient received, she would have been a cripple for the rest of her life, on crutches or in a wheel chair. This patient is almost completely well, and in a few months time I am sure will recover from any form of disability.

So far as the disease itself is concerned, every effort should be made to foster research. The cause and the methods of prevention are not known, but much can be done by early measures of treatment to prevent crippling. I am well acquainted with the splendid results achieved in Ontario by a program of treatment of poliomyelitis victims, and I feel that the same type of program should be in effect in every province and every area in the Dominion of Canada. This program is so important that money from the dominion health grants should be allotted to the provinces for similar treatment. I hope that when I mention expenditures of that type no member on the government side will accuse me of advocating expenditures and at the same time advocating economy. There is no hon. member in this house who will quibble over the amount of money spent in the treatment or prevention or control of disease. The matter of economy rests in the administration of the department.

I now come to one of the most important matters under consideration this afternoon, namely, the expenditures of this department. It is the most expensive department of any in the government. The total amount required by the Department of National Health and Welfare is $455,253,570, with an increase of $44,557,114 as compared with the estimates of 1949-50. Some of these amounts are authorized by statute. Large amounts are required for the payment of old age pensions and family allowances. It is not my purpose to criticize the amounts appropriated in any of these items; neither shall I criticize the amount spent on health services. Any government is justified in spending money on national health and welfare, and there is no department of the government that is as important as that which has to do with the care of the sick and the afflicted, or provision for the aged. Family allowances have done much for the younger aged group. The grants for the care of Indians and Eskimos of $11,694,839 have been necessary to preserve the health of the people who were the first inhabitants of this country. I could not under any circumstances criticize grants for such purposes as venereal disease control, mental health, blindness control and others, with the purpose of aiding the sick and afflicted. These grants are entirely necessary for the cure and prevention of disease, not only in the individual, but in the whole community. The individual and the whole community should be considered when we are dealing with sickness, particularly the treatment of a disease like tuberculosis.

But, sir, I have been amazed at the total amount of money required for travelling expenses in this department. I have made a summary of the travelling expenses in the various branches, and I am surprised to find that it reaches the grand total of $773,900, which is approaching the million mark. This bill for travelling expenses for the year 1950-51 in the various divisions is as follows:

Departmental administration	$ 25,000
Departmental administration, allowance and other expenses of delegates to international conferences	5,000
Health branch administration	5,000
Food and drugs	50,600
Proprietary or patent medicines	1,000
Opium and narcotic drugs	12,000
Quarantine and leprosy	9,000
Laboratory of hygiene	12,000
Immigration and medical inspection	65,000
Child and maternal health	10,000
Public health engineering	29,000
Treatment of sick mariners	2,000
Industrial health	9,500
Civil service health	4,000
Nutrition	14,000
Venereal disease control	4,500
Health insurance studies	10,000
Dental health	6,000
Hospital designs	4,000
Mental health	4,500
Blindness control	4,000
Epidemiology	6,000
Medical services—Eskimos and Indians	350,000
Civil aviation medicine	22,800
Welfare branch	3,000
Family allowances	75,000
Old age pensions	16,000
National fitness administration	15,000
	$773,900

It will be noted that the grand total is $773,900. The amount provided in the estimates last year was $623,000. So that this first amount I have mentioned for the year 1950-51 shows an additional amount of $150,900 over the amount required for last year. This would seem to be a tremendous bill, an unusual bill, for travelling expenses.

When I added up the bill I was reminded of a slogan of the American marines, "Join the marines and see the world." It would seem that officials in the Department of National Health and Welfare have almost an equal opportunity. I can remember as a schoolboy having to learn by memory a sonnet by the poet Keats, written about an entirely different subject; but it seems appropriate in view of the travelling expenses of the Department of National Health and Welfare. One could picture one of the travelling officials in the department saying:

> Much have I travell'd in the realms of gold,
> And many goodly states and kingdoms seen;
> Round many western islands have I been . . .

I can understand why travelling expenses in the administration of the medical services to Indians and Eskimos would reach a large amount, but there are other items which require a detailed examination and explanation by the department. I am pointing out to the minister that in view of this amount being so large, these expenses will be subjected to close examination and the production by the minister of all the details. I am fully aware of the fact that this is an age of conventions, but the calling of a convention in distant parts does not warrant a call of "All aboard!" to the travelling officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare. It would be better if a great deal of this money were saved to the taxpayer and actually spent for the relief of the afflicted within our own nation. An amount of $500 or $1,000 saved here and there from this enormous bill for travelling expenses, and spent for the aid of a crippled child or in research on such a disease as poliomyelitis, would bring relief and happiness to our population.

Any government, whether provincial or dominion, is fully justified in spending money on public health. There is no other department within a government which so vitally affects the lives of the people as that of the department of health. While health expenditures are a necessity for the welfare of a nation, and there will be little disagreement with the amount of money spent if objectives are to be attained, items must be scrutinized on behalf of the Canadian taxpayer—especially such items as unusually large bill for travelling expenses.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Chairman, the estimates of this department always provide an opportunity for hon. members who are interested in social security measures to speak. In this particular instance, because of the separation of the health and welfare items to which the minister agreed this morning, what we say should be directed more particularly to health matters.

I believe that generally speaking the interest in public health in the House of Commons for a long time has transcended party differences. This is an excellent thing. I quite agree with the hon. member who has just taken his seat that we should scrutinize the estimates for unusual expenditures, or expenditures which would seem to be large in relation to the services rendered. He has made an excellent case for the scrutiny of travelling expenses of the department. I do not propose to say more than that, but I do think the committee should have from the minister an explanation of these heavy expenses and an indication as to why there is this increase this year.

May I compliment the department in some other respects? I believe the minister is well served by his deputies and generally the group of officials around him. I should like also to say that, as one who reads the bulletins from time to time, and the periodical which I believe is called Canada's Health and Welfare, I have been impressed. I have heard from those who have been on the committee dealing with old age pensions favourable comments on the work being done by the research division of the department. While at times we may criticize in the house, when commendation is deserved I believe we should speak in a complimentary way of the public servants who are performing a good service for the department, the House of Commons and indeed the whole country. I am happy to say that other members as well as myself appreciate the work of the research division of the department.

The hon. member for Lanark spoke about the elimination of difficulties, sometimes in health and sometimes in welfare, by paying attention to family relationships. I make a plea, in passing, for more generous support than has been given to Canadian schools of social work. There are not very many of them in Canada. Those that we have are centred at the larger universities, such as the university of Toronto; therefore students who embark upon this [illegible] of public service have to go some dist[illegible] home. Often those who might re[illegible] service to the community in f[illegible] are prevented from taking these co[illegible] use of a lack of funds. I should li[illegible] re generous support given by the federal government to the establishment of bursaries or scholarships for students who live some distance from these schools of social work to enable them to embark upon this new and important phase of public service.

You have only to look at some of the functions now undertaken by social service workers to realize the extent to which this has become an essential branch of welfare work—and indeed of health work, because they pay attention to health as well as to other phases of welfare as they affect the family and individual. As a matter of fact, social workers are becoming more necessary because of the work being done in relation to veterans affairs, in relation to family allowances, in relation to old age security and all the newer public obligations that have come into being in our country in the last twenty or twenty-five years.

When we make a large appropriation—and I am glad it is as large as it is—for family allowances, it is essential that we have trained social workers in the community who can give advice about, and indeed exercise some supervision over, the use to be made of family allowances. Let me say in passing that while there may be some minor cases of abuse in family allowances, I think on the whole they are doing an excellent job for the children who are growing up in our Canadian homes. Under present conditions we must appropriate large sums of money for national defence, and we must not under any circumstances neglect the health and welfare of our people, particularly of our children. When we are faced with difficulties, either military or economic, the health, productivity and general condition of our population constitutes our best defence.

In my own province of Saskatchewan, where a good deal of progress has been made in public health and in other matters over the last few years, these social service workers are essential as welfare officers and probation and parole officers in connection with delinquency, mental hygiene, and other social welfare services. All these branches that I have mentioned, and many others, require properly trained personnel in order that the job shall be done sympathetically, thoroughly, and efficiently. Consequently I want to include a plea for more encouragement and more financial aid for the institutions and persons who wish to embark upon this important branch of welfare work.

I believe that we have to spend more money on health and welfare work in this country. The question how that money is to be raised I expect will receive some attention when the report of the committee on old age security is before the house, and I do not propose to discuss that phase of it this afternoon. But I do want to place myself on record as saying that I believe we have to expend more energy and a larger proportion of our national income on health and services that are allied to health. I hope this autumn when the dominion-provincial conference meets that a great deal of consideration will be given to ways and means of establishing a national health plan as part of our social security system, to the end that there may be made available, to every man, woman and child in Canada, hospitalization, medical care or other services that may be necessary in order to relieve suffering and sickness.

I want to support most warmly the suggestion made a few moments ago that we should give more attention and more aid to research in all branches of medicine and physiology. Arthritis, that disease which cripples so many individuals, often in the very prime of life, and leads to years of incapacity and suffering, should receive more attention and study than has been given to it. Another disease which is becoming all too common is disseminated sclerosis, which often attacks men and women in the prime of life and results in many years of invalidism and pain and suffering.

This is called the mystery disease, because so little is known about it. Anyone who has had firsthand knowledge of the disease dreads the news that someone's illness has been diagnosed as disseminated sclerosis. In passing I want to say that great benefits have been conferred by the Montreal Neurological Institute on many sufferers from this dread disease. No one can minimize the wonderful work of relief that has been carried on by the very clever group of doctors and nurses in that institute. I should like to see even more aid given to an institute of that description than has been forthcoming from the various governments in the past.

Most of all I should like to see, to a greater extent than has been undertaken, a study made of this disease, and indeed of kindred diseases. I believe that any amount of money spent in research in connection with diseases that are all too common, and that cause such a tremendous amount of suffering and economic loss to the community, or money spent in the finding of means for prevention or cure, will repay the people of this country a thousandfold.

Some of us saw the incurables who visited the house about a month or six weeks ago, and I am sure that all were impressed both by their representations and by their condition. I often wonder how incurables whose families have little to live on are cared for, or how they manage to maintain any spirit of cheerfulness or courage. In passing I should like to say that one of the benefits of recent years available to shut-ins is the opportunity to listen to interesting programs provided by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and sometimes by other radio stations.

I should like to see incurables brought under the same statute as the blind and treated in the same way. We brought the blind under the Old Age Pensions Act a few years ago. I think members on all sides of the house would support the government if it would amend the act to provide that incurables be granted a pension according, if it was deemed advisable, to their incapacity, at least up to the limit of the amount given to old age pensioners.

The Department of National Health and Welfare is a spending department. It is not only a department of national health, but also a department of national defence, because defence depends largely upon the physical fitness of the nation. I have heard it suggested recently that perhaps we are spending as much money on social services as we are on the Department of National Defence, and that consequently we may not have funds available for national defence. If that argument is used to prevent any further advances in the realm of social services, I want to say to the government that I believe the Canadian people will support sums of money for national defence provided that we also improve the social and health conditions of our people. To my mind the two things are inseparable. If the government wish to retain support for expenditures on national defence, then they must parallel, and indeed exceed, those expenditures in the realm of national health and welfare.

At the present time we include under national health and welfare the dominion's contribution for old age pensions, family allowances, and so on, with the result that the total expenditures for the department are some $30 million in excess of the amount appropriated for the Department of National Defence. The figure for national defence is $425 million, and for national health and welfare $455 million. If we bring under the Department of National Defence the amounts we spent on veterans health and welfare and other obligations we have incurred arising out of the war—I am reminded of interest on the war debt, which I would not include under the heading I am thinking of at the moment—we find that we are spending on defence and the human element in relation to the last two wars a sum vastly in excess of what we spend on national health and welfare.

Above all, I hope the government will see to it that the grants for the treatment and prevention of some of the diseases that have been mentioned this afternoon will not only be maintained but increased, and that in the years to come we may look forward to great advances in the treatment of diseases that incapacitate and cause so much misery to so many people. It is satisfying to note that in some of our provinces many advances have been made in providing hospitalization. Having regard to their financial resources, I think some of the provinces have gone almost as far as they can go in providing, from their own resources, hospitalization and other health care.

As I said a few minutes ago, the time has come when the house should be considering a national health plan as a part of the social security program. I hope that the old age security committee will recommend a great advance in old age pensions, and I hope the government will accept their recommendation. When we have made this great advance then I think the problem to which we should give the highest priority in the next few years is a national health plan to make available to our people, as freely as our primary schools now are to our children, all the health services that the people of Canada require. I hope that such a plan can be developed in co-operation with the medical and nursing professions and all others interested in the problem, so that we shall not have a conflict of interests preventing or delaying the coming into effect of a great national health plan.

I am not going to say more this afternoon. I wish to support warmly the suggestions put forward by the hon. member for Lanark, and to say that we will support every measure proposed for the improvement of the general health and welfare of the people of Canada.

Mr. Low: Mr. Chairman, my first words must be words of commendation to the minister and the Department of National Health and Welfare for the fine things they are doing in the fields of health and welfare for the purpose of improving living conditions and the happiness of the Canadian people. I have watched the work with keen interest, and I must say that in the past few years I have noted a real change in the attitude of the government of Canada to health and welfare matters. I enjoy listening to the hon. member for Lanark when he makes his contribution each year on the estimates of this department. A great deal of practical and down-to-earth information is always to be found in the speeches he makes. Being a medical practitioner, his pronouncements naturally carry much more weight than they would coming from members who are laymen.

The members in this corner of the house have felt for many years that the governments of Canada were not doing enough in the fields of health and welfare. Every time the matter has come before the house we have demonstrated our concern in the only way that we could. We have made our proposals, and in the only government for which we have responsibility in this great dominion we have tried to demonstrate in a practical manner how we feel about health measures and public welfare. I think I am being modest when I say that in no province of the Dominion of Canada do the people enjoy more services in the field of health and welfare than they do in Alberta. We have been conscious of the need of the extension of those services. Even during the time, Mr. Chairman, when it was difficult to get money, when our total revenues in that province were less than $20 million, we did begin a gradual extension of health and welfare services; that has continued step by step right up to the present day. These health grants, hospitalization grants, construction grants, survey grants, have all been of inestimable value to the province. We want to acknowledge those things, and to thank the minister for the leadership he gave in providing grants to the provinces. Without them many of the provinces could not have made the progress they have made; without them a good many more people would be suffering from the lack of hospital and other facilities within the field of health.

I do not want to take too much time, but there are a few things I should like to mention in connection with the estimates that are before us today. For a good many years, having had something to do with it in the administration of the province of Alberta, I have been keenly interested in the question of nutritional service. I have wondered just how far the health department here integrates its investigation into nutritional problems with the research work going on in the Department of Agriculture, and the research council, as well as other agencies of government. I would appeal to the minister to do two things when he takes part in this debate: let us know just what is being done in that field to integrate the investigational services, and indicate to what extent the people of Canada are being made aware of the findings of agencies of government.

I have discovered out of my own experience as a member of the provincial government that many of our people are actually starving to death in the midst of abundance. I do not mean that they are not getting their stomachs full of food that might perhaps look good, might perhaps be clean, might perhaps be sufficient in quantity; I simply mean that they are having to use so many devitalized foods. The flour the people of this country are getting is devitalized material; the very virtue has been taken out of it in the process of milling. It may be argued that the millers are giving the people what they demand, and that the people are actually demanding white, light flour; that may be so. If they are, it is done in ignorance. I am satisfied that a great many of the diseases suffered by the people of Canada today are deficiency diseases, and result from slow starvation arising from the use of foods that are devitalized, from which the very elements the people need have been taken.

I should like to know how far the health department, along with other agencies of this government, has carried on research in nutrition, to discover exactly what has been happening and how to overcome the difficulty. In certain areas in this country the soil is worn out. Ordinarily, people in the cities are not aware that this is so. They are receiving in the markets of the cities vegetables and food materials that are grown on worn-out soil. These food materials are deficient in minerals. When human beings consume them it is only natural that they too should be deficient in the minerals which they require, because the food itself does not contain what the people need for health. As a result we have an increase in the incidence of cancer, and a great many other diseases which doubtless will in time prove to be deficiency diseases. In nutritional research it seems to me that one of the important things to do is to determine from what areas food materials are coming that are deficient in mineral content, and if those are discovered the people of Canada ought to be warned of the results of consuming that food.

I have seen the publicity work. We ought to lay emphasis on that sort of information. I know some of the things that are being done. I have watched the bulletins that have come out of this department, and a great many of them are splendid. The pictorial nutritional charts especially have an appeal to many people. I do not begrudge one dollar that is spent on this sort of thing. We could lay emphasis on nutrition and get the people of Canada conscious of the necessity of producing and consuming vital food. Then I am satisfied you would not have to talk about hospitalization and the care of people who are falling by the way as a result of deficiency diseases.

Mr. Warren: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Low: Yes.

Mr. Warren: As I listened to the hon. member I wondered whether in the area in which he lives the housewives bake their own bread. Would he emphasize the importance of housewives learning to bake bread? Homemade bread is far superior to anything the baker makes.

Mr. Low: There are a good many things I could say, but I would certainly say "amen" to that. My wife does make her own bread, and I do not care if the bakers know it.

I should like to add my voice to that of the leader of the C.C.F. party in his appeal to the minister and his colleagues to consider the plight of the incurables in this country. When the delegation representing the Canadian Association of Incurables visited Ottawa not long ago, they came to my office and spent some time in telling me their story. I must say, Mr. Chairman, that these people have a good case. I am satisfied that the minister knows that. They reported to me the sympathetic and fine reception the minister gave them. We all know that many of these incurables—no one knows how many hundreds of them there are—wish to be self-supporting. They constantly find themselves faced with this from employers: Now, we would like to give you work, but you would be an embarrassment or a danger around our institution. Their reflexes are not quick enough to handle mechanical operations, and sometimes it is difficult for them to move around. Amongst the delegation I found a number who expressed a desire to be independent. They told me their history—how they sought employment, and what their experience had been. My heart went out to them. I would say, sir, that their case is deserving of priority. I would think, in fact I will go so far as to say, that the needs of the incurables of this country are just as great as the needs of the old age pensioners or the blind; and while we are considering the extension of social services I say we should treat their requests on a par with those of the blind. It does seem, too, that it might be advisable not to put them under the Old Age Pensions Act, as we did the blind. I am of the opinion that we made a mistake in not drafting a special act for the blind, and I still believe that should be done at the earliest possible moment. I had something to do with the administration of old age and blind pensions in the province, and I concluded that we could have done a better job if there had been legislation specifically drafted covering the blind in this country. So I suggest that when we take up the question of the incurables—and we should do it immediately—we should draft an act particularly applying to them. One thing that surprised me about the whole situation was that thus far they have no way of determining exactly how many incurables there are in Canada, and for that reason it has been more difficult for them to lay emphasis upon their particular needs. I wonder if the minister, when he speaks, could tell us whether any move is being made by means of a survey across Canada to determine exactly how many incurables there are in need of financial assistance. If such information has not been gathered together thus far I think this should be done as soon as possible. Then we will be in a position to deal with the matter in terms of dollars and cents.

I should like to add my voice to the plea that has been made for further assistance, if it can possibly be made available, to the schools of social service. These schools are in need of assistance, and they are doing a good work. I believe they are deserving of much more help so that, as the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar said, they may be able to extend to prospective students bursaries or scholarships to encourage them to take up this work. It is of inestimable value to the Canadian people that trained social workers be available when they are needed; and today they are badly needed, if for nothing else than to help make our people conscious of the many things they could be doing for themselves. The true measure of the stability of a people and a nation lies in its ability to make use of the things that are at hand. Trained social workers are able to assist the people to learn exactly what is at hand and how to use it, and I think we should be laying some emphasis on that phase of our welfare work.

As the minister knows—and I do not intend to enter upon a long discussion of finance this afternoon—we in this group have tried to take a realistic position with respect to the expenditure of money. We have said that at the same time we are trying to extend health and social services we ought to be constantly mindful of the burden that has to be borne by the taxpayer, the ordinary consumer of this country. We have not retreated from that position by one inch. We say we will go along with the minister in everything he wants to do to improve the health conditions of our people and lessen the suffering of those who have been stricken. We urge him to go along just as quickly as he can, of course always being mindful of the taxpayers and the burden they have to bear. We have shown on numerous occasions, I think, that there is no lack of material wealth in this country. We have not begun to realize our productive capacity; and until we have realized our productive capacity we cannot say we have gone as far as possible in the extension of health and welfare services. It is out of our production that these things must come. If financial restrictions or a dearth of finances tend to interfere with the extension of these services, when at the same time we could produce more of the things that are needed, I say to the minister let us get out together and fight that sort of thing; let us remove the restrictions, get the materials into the hands of those who need them and the services to those for whom we are working now in connection with health and welfare.

We know what can be done because of the experience we have had in production. We know what this country is capable of doing. We urge the minister not to be too frightened by the size of the figures that may be presented to him by committees studying these matters. Let him rather take a look at the production end of it, the food, the clothing and shelter we could provide by all-out effort. Then let him govern himself accordingly, and we will back him to the limit.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I believe the speeches that have been delivered in the house this afternoon have been characterized by a very constructive note, as well as by a profound appreciation of the importance of the subject of national health and the kindred subject of national welfare. Since I agree with so much of what has been said, particularly by the hon. member for Lanark in his masterly speech, I believe I can shorten my remarks a good deal. The fact is that only last December, six months ago, the estimates of this department for last year were reviewed, and in addition during the present session the house has been afforded the opportunity of debating the subject of old age pensions on the motion to set up a special committee to go into that subject.

I should like to associate myself very heartily with what has been said on some aspects of the work of the department with which members of the committee on old age security have come directly in contact. I do not intend to discuss the subject referred to that committee, but I think tribute should be paid to the deputy minister, Dr. Davidson, to Miss Waters, Mr. Willard and other members of the staff who contributed so much to the material which was placed before that committee, comprehensive material which reflected great credit upon those concerned in its preparation. I believe this tribute is well deserved.

Here we are dealing with a department whose proposed expenditures are the largest among all departments of government, with the exception of those coming under the Department of Finance. The hon. member for Lanark has drawn attention to the tremendous amounts proposed to be appropriated for travelling expenses in this department. I do not propose to discuss again that subject, with which he dealt so ably, but I do wish to draw attention to some other expenditures in this department which I think are worthy of note. In doing so I wish to make it quite clear that I have always been one of those who strongly supported the use of public moneys to meet national problems in relation to health and welfare, considering that when expenditures are directed to those purposes they are a valuable investment which will pay dividends in the national interest. But as members of this house it is our duty to be very sure that the taxpayer receives a dollar's value for every dollar spent, and that the moneys appropriated are voted consciously by parliament to assist in promoting the health and welfare of the nation.

Now, sir, I turn to a subject which has been discussed at previous sessions, but not always carried to the point of detail that it might well deserve. It is the subject of publicity. Anyone who examines this book of estimates must be impressed by the repeated appearances in the details in this book of that familiar title "Publicity", or under the more euphonious and impressive title which has been tagged onto it in recent years "Educational and Informational Publicity". That euphonious title deserves closer examination; the house should not be too greatly impressed by a resounding title. Let us go a little deeper, Mr. Chairman, and see exactly what is involved in these expenditures for this purpose.

First of all, as to the amount, I am sure it will surprise some to realize that in this department the items proposed to be spent on publicity during this present fiscal year total $524,970. How are they made up? Director of information services, $6,000; information officer, $4,080; and again under that same general heading we have $131,450 to be found under departmental administration. Then under the health branch, $66,000. We have an item under food and drugs. Chief of the advertising division—it may be that his salary should not be altogether charged to this subject, but I mention it in passing—$5,640.

Then we come to proprietary or patent medicines, $7,000; opium and narcotic drugs, $2,000; child and maternal health, $44,500; public health engineering, $9,000; industrial health, $31,000; civil service health, $2,000; nutrition, $30,000; venereal disease control, $6,000; dental health, $13,500; mental health, $63,000; blindness control, $10,000; Indian medical service, $5,000; civil aviation medicine, $1,500. These are all under the health side of the department. Under the welfare side we have welfare branch, $2,500; family allowances, $56,500; and national physical fitness, $28,300. The total, as I have said, sir, is $524,970.

Let me make myself quite clear. I am not saying that there may not be good value in some of these expenditures. I am not making any general condemnation of expenditures on education, expenditures on certain forms of public information, which I think can properly be carried out through this department, but I think, sir, that in this very striking total there is money provided that ought to be very closely examined in this house. It is deplorable, sir, that this clumsy procedure we have available to us in this committee of supply does not enable hon. members to conduct that detailed examination which would be possible if we did take the intelligent course of setting up smaller committees to scrutinize estimates of this and other departments. But I do know, sir, that we have had occasion in the past to complain about some expenditures on these publicity items as being wasteful in their nature. We had an example the other day. It is true the minister's answer at page 3638 indicates that it is not a very large amount; but "Dietary Ditties" is not an isolated example, and as publicity it does not contribute very much to the public's awareness of health problems.

Mr. Graydon: Poetry by Paul.

Mr. Fleming: The author's name was requested in the question placed on the order paper by the hon. member for Calgary West. In the answers tabled by the minister in this house on June 15 the name of the poet has not been disclosed.

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Martin.

Mr. Fleming: I am inclined to the opinion, sir, that it was typical modesty on the part of the minister that he was not prepared to claim paternity in relation to this doggerel.

Mr. Martin: Don't you recognize Shelley?

Mr. Fleming:

When work piles so high you can't see
And you feel you've been shoved up a tree;
You won't lose your wit, or fly into a fit,
If you're eating your vitamin B.

Mr. Martin: May I interrupt and point out to my hon. friend that he and I were classmates. I am sure that he, as a good English student, will recognize there one of the great English poets of the nineteenth century.

Mr. Fleming: I have not recognized any poet in that contribution. It may be that there is someone given to making rhymes who is responsible for perpetrating these lines, but I would not wish to hold anyone else in the department responsible for them but the minister himself.

Mr. Martin: I take all the blame.

Mr. Fleming: It reminds one of some of the publicity we had to complain about in previous years. You will remember that we found that public moneys were being spent several years ago to tell people, as I recall the expression to, "Stand without sag, and sit without strain." You will remember the one which involved expenditure of public moneys on a filler in which the parents of the country, who were receiving family allowances for their children, were advised to spend part of their family allowance to "add zest to living". The expression has never been fully interpreted by the minister. I am sure it would be interesting to have the minister's conception of adding zest to living.

Mr. Martin: I will take you out sometime.

Mr. Fleming: Then you will recall the choice one, sir, about the packing of the lunch basket. Public moneys were being spent to instruct the housewives of this country what to put in a lunch basket. That was a sample of paternalism that I think public moneys ought not to be devoted to.

Mr. Coldwell: They have not enough to put in lunch baskets.

Mr. Fleming: I think housewives of this country do not need instruction from the department as to what ought to go into the lunch basket. They may not have what ought to go into it, but they are not going to get it by having moneys taken out of their pockets in the form of taxes to be made available to have someone in the Department of National Health and Welfare tell them what ought to go into the lunch basket.

Mr. Martin: That particular one was discontinued before my hon. friend was born.

Mr. Fleming: My birth must have been in very recent times. I do not know whether my hon. friend is talking about my political birth or not, but the money I refer to was spent during my time in the House of Commons. I do not know whether my appearance here now—

Mr. Martin: I said before my hon. friend was born.

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Fleming: Well, I think the minister must be putting his own choice interpretation on the word "born". The fact of the matter is that the expenditure I am complaining about was made during my time in this House of Commons.

Mr. Martin: In 1945.

Mr. Fleming: That is the sort of thing that has been unearthed in relation to these expenditures in times past, and it calls for something more in the way of investigation than is possible under this clumsy procedure in this committee of supply.

There is one other matter that, because of the profusion of items, cannot possibly be examined in the detail that the house should demand, having regard to the limited time here available. One will find scattered throughout the items of this department about twenty-five bearing the title, "sundries". These always sound like small items. One immediately thinks of overtime dinner allowances for employees in the department, carfare or other things of that kind. One thinks of petty cash; but when a look is taken at some of these sundries it is discovered that the total of sundries for this department aggregates the not unimpressive figure of $211,785. That is not bad for sundries! The hon. member for Lanark suggests to me that it may be of assistance to those in the department who are travelling. Well, one does not need to travel far to be persuaded that something more by way of information is required than is now available, if the department is to justify sundries totalling more than $200,000.

I should like to offer only a brief word on the subject of health insurance. I had more to say on the subject on December 9 last when the estimates of this department were being considered. At that time I drew the attention of hon. members to the lamentable failure of the present administration to carry out the platform adopted by the Liberal party at its 1948 Ottawa convention, in relation to the inclusion of health insurance in its program of social security. This is the program that was adopted:

> The program will include health insurance, covering medical, dental, surgical and hospital health services on a contributory basis.

There were no qualifications to that. There was no statement about waiting for another fifteen or twenty years; no suggestion about deferring it for another generation. No, the statement was straightforward, direct and to the point. I have no doubt that in the election that took place one year ago this month that plank in the platform of the Liberal party was heeded by the people, with the thought that those who subscribed to it must have meant what they said.

Mr. Coldwell: As they did in 1945.

Mr. Fleming: Yes.

Mr. Martin: And as they mean today.

Mr. Fleming: What has been done? We have asked the government repeatedly what it is going to do in relation to a national health program. We are still in the dark as to what plans, if any, the government has. The minister goes off on those long perorations about national health grants, and about waiting until the nation has digested them before he can even begin to tax his brains to carry out this promise in the Liberal platform, and meet a need which has been recognized by all parties in the house, namely the need for a national health program which will assure services of the kind here described to the people of this country.

We are waiting. We become impatient while we listen to nothing but excuses from the government for its inaction. The time has come for action. The minister is asked again to be concrete and definite, and to show some indication that action is intended. This year he has a golden opportunity in the dominion-provincial conference to meet this fall. This is an opportunity such as has not been made available to him for some time. Let him seize that opportunity. We have not had any intimation yet from the government that the subject of a health program is even to be included in the agenda of the conference. This is to be an exceedingly important gathering, and I do hope this opportunity will not be lost. There will be many things to be discussed before the conference; but here is something of major importance. I hope the minister will grasp this opportunity.

Let me point out to him that if he has cause for complaint about being misquoted concerning the intentions of the government in this field, much of the responsibility is attributable to the fact that the government has not been doing anything in the field. The minister complained in the house the other day about being misquoted. He pointed out that he had been quoted as having said in Vancouver on June 13 that he was against any national health insurance plan for Canada, and that health insurance is and must remain a provincial problem. In his statement to the house several days ago he remarked that he had not been correctly quoted in that press dispatch, and said he had subsequently given a statement to that same newspaper correcting their erroneous report.

Such misinterpretations and erroneous reports are bound to keep on turning up until the minister goes further than just to talk about the subject. The opportunity for misinterpretation will quickly disappear if he will substitute action for talk. The time has come for action, and I urge that the minister make this a year of action.

I should like to add my voice to those already heard today in the house about the problem of incurables, or those who are suffering from chronic diseases which incapacitate them from earning a living. All hon. members were impressed and touched by what we saw not only of the plight but of the courage of those who came to Ottawa a month ago representing the Canadian Association of Incurables. I take it that most hon. members have seen the brief which was submitted most competently on that occasion by Miss Eva Warden, and other spokesmen for the association of incurables. I know the minister has a heart—

Mr. Martin: Thank you.

Mr. Fleming: —and I do hope he will address himself to this problem with a sense of responsibility. All hon. members are sympathetic to the problem and plight of these unfortunate people. We do not know how many people in Canada are suffering from crippling diseases, or how many are incurable or are prevented by their physical handicaps from earning a living. The fact of the matter is that this problem has received so little study in Canada that there are not available today any adequate statistics on the subject. If one goes to the minister's department and asks for information as to the number of persons in this unfortunate category, or what it would cost to provide some form of assistance to those who are in need of it and cannot help themselves, he will come away empty-handed, because there are no such statistics available in the Department of National Health and Welfare.

That points directly to the fact that this is a forgotten and neglected problem. I do urge that not a moment be lost in addressing ourselves through the department to this problem. The need is there; in many cases that need is most acute. We have recognized the problem of the blind who are unable to support themselves and are in need of assistance. We make provision for them on a needs basis. Why should we distinguish in principle between those who are prevented by blindness from earning a living, and are consequently in need, and those who are prevented by some crippling disease from earning a living and who are consequently in need? Many of us regret greatly that this problem was not included in the terms of reference to the committee on old age security. I am convinced that something must be done soon in the way of a comprehensive study of this problem so that intelligent minds can be put to work in the light of reliable information in seeking to meet a need that I submit we dare not close our eyes to.

In conclusion, and in the hope of saving the time of the committee, I make what is perhaps my time-honoured plea to the minister—

Mr. Martin: I am going to recognize it this year.

Mr. Fleming: Really?

Mr. Martin: I respect the hon. member so much that I will do everything he wants.

Mr. Fleming: Pardon.

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend has overcome me with his eloquence.

Mr. Knowles: He has not made his plea yet.

Mr. Fleming: My plea is that at the outset we should have a statement of last year's expenditures item by item so that we will know in advance what was expended last year and be able to compare this year's appropriation with the actual expenditure last year. I am overcome completely by the minister's change of heart.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, as another member of the special committee on old age security I should like to join with those who have paid tribute to the work done for us by Dr. Davidson and members of the staff of the Department of National Health and Welfare, with particular reference to those in the research division. I think it is safe to say that whatever may be accomplished by that committee would not have been accomplished had we not had the valuable assistance of these people. I am rather sorry that we have had to work them unreasonably long hours, as has been the case, but at least they have had the opportunity to see the hours that members of parliament work. In this connection perhaps I may be permitted to express regret that I was not able to be here when the estimates of the Department of Labour, in which I am deeply interested, were discussed, for my absence was due to the fact that we spent many hours yesterday afternoon, last evening and last night until nearly one o'clock, as well as this morning, in a subcommittee of the committee on old age security.

Before I take up the one subject about which I wish to speak I should like to support the particular plea that has been made by every hon. member who has spoken this afternoon, that something be done at an early date for incurables. I do hope that the increasing interest being shown in this problem by private members and the extent to which it is being drawn to the attention of the government will bear fruit. Those of us who have been here for a number of years have had the experience of seeing certain matters brought up for the first time—often ruled out of order because they did not fit into a particular item —and then after constant pleading something gets done.

It is not long since the first pleas were made on the floor of this house that consideration be given to pensions for incurables. These pleas are now increasing. I am sure that all were impressed by the recent visit to this city of a delegation representing the Canadian Association of Incurables who asked that their plight be considered. I hope it will not be long before something will be done in that field.

As I indicated when I rose, I wish to confine my remarks to one subject which I consider to be of prime importance. The hon. member who preceded me, and other hon. members, have made reference to it, namely the question of health insurance. I feel that next to the problem of old age security, with which we are dealing in the special committee from which I hope there will be a report before long, this problem of health insurance is one to which we must give high priority and active attention, certainly in this house if the government is not yet prepared to give it the kind of consideration that results in legislation.

It is now five years since we had before us the green book proposals. I would remind the committee that there scarcely could be found anywhere a better statement as to the need for health insurance than is to be found on page 29 of the proposals of the government of Canada to the dominion-provincial conference of August, 1945. I should like to read a few of the arguments presented by the government at that time:

> Health insurance has been widely adopted because it is regarded as the best means of meeting and of distributing fairly the costs of illness and, in conjunction with preventive services, of improving the general health of the nation. Specifically:
>
> (1) Health insurance enables the cost of illness to be prepaid, so that by paying regular sums when they are well people are able to meet the costs of illness when they are ill without being financially crippled.
>
> (2) Health insurance not only enables individuals to prepay their medical costs, but does this in such a way as to secure a wide pooling of risks and distribution of costs in much the same manner as any other form of insurance.
>
> (3) The provision of funds by all persons within a large area makes it possible for hospital and medical services to people in that area to be planned and administered more efficiently and economically than could be done by any other method.
>
> (4) The provision of better facilities for treatment and advice also operates to reduce the total incidence of disease and preventable death. Health insurance must be accompanied by adequate public health measures of a preventive character, but health insurance itself also provides important preventive benefits.

(5) Health insurance permits the steady extension of health services into areas not previously covered, and the rapid application everywhere of new methods and services as they are discovered and developed.

One of the reasons why I read that statement with regard to health insurance is that, from time to time, one of the arguments put forward from the government side is that we should not press for health insurance until we have first increased our health facilities—our hospitals, the number of doctors, the number of nurses and the number of technicians and so on. The argument has been that there would be no point to providing money to make effective the demand for health services if those health services were not previously available.

As against that argument I present the argument contained on page 29 of the green book to which I have referred where the suggestion is made that health insurance makes possible the extension of those very services. I believe that this is one place where the law of supply and demand—although I do not refer to it very often—does seem to apply. For example, the development of the Blue Cross plans in the various provinces illustrates my point. As those plans have developed and as people have thus become able to pay for hospital services if they wanted them there has been a more effective demand for hospital beds and hospital services generally, and this more effective demand has played a part in increasing the number of hospital beds available. I feel that if we wait until there are facilities to meet the effective demand for health services we will wait a long time, if not forever. Therefore I argue, as I have argued on previous occasions, that in the health field as between health insurance on the one hand, and more health services and other factors on the other, priority should now be given to the establishment of health insurance itself. I submit that in the proposals to the provinces in August, 1945, that idea was in the mind of the government, as set out in the argument for health insurance which I have just referred to.

Speaking of 1945, I would point out that at that time the government referred with some pride to the fact that the whole question of health insurance had been under discussion then for a number of years, and that a draft bill had been prepared providing for health insurance on a nation-wide basis. Further down in the column from which I have been paraphrasing the green book says:

Since the meeting in 1944, health insurance has been further considered by the federal government in the light of the views expressed by the provinces. In the speeches from the throne which began the session in January, 1944, and which closed the session in January, 1945, the federal government declared again its desire to bring in a nation-wide system of health insurance as soon as suitable arrangements could be made with the provinces. It was stated that this would be one of the subjects to be brought up at the dominion-provincial conference to be held as soon as possible following the general election.

The general election referred to in that paragraph was the one of June, 1945. That has passed into history. We have had another general election, that of June, 1949, and we are now getting close to another dominion-provincial conference. The argument about agreement between the dominion and the provinces has been used so often that it is really getting worn threadbare, and the people of the country do not put much stock in it any more. They are getting to the point where they think it is just an excuse to cover up governmental inaction.

A dominion-provincial conference is to be held this fall, however, and I join with those who have suggested that this question certainly should be discussed at the conference. I think the federal government should go to the conference not just with a readiness to discuss the matter but with a determination if at all possible to reach the kind of agreement on the basis of which legislation might be introduced at the next session of parliament. If by any chance that does not follow—and I hate to put it that way but I have known the government to muff chances before; they certainly muffed a splendid opportunity with respect to the green book proposals in 1945—if they do not accept my view and get the question settled at the dominion-provincial conference this fall, then I want to suggest to the minister something that may be a surprise to him coming from me. I suggest that at the next session of parliament he move to establish a committee similar to the committee on old age security which has been meeting during the present session.

I will admit two things to the minister. The first is that we had such a committee several years ago.

Mr. Martin: Do not take too long to do it.

Mr. Knowles: We had such a committee several years ago, and while it produced a draft bill and certain recommendations nothing followed therefrom. I will also admit that when he proposed the establishment of a special committee on old age security I opposed it on the ground that it was unnecessary, and that the government had all the required information. I contended that what we wanted was not a committee, but legislation. The time may come when I will say that the setting up of the committee was a good move, although not yet. I am waiting to see what report is actually brought in, and I am waiting to see how long it takes the government to implement whatever report is brought in.

Mr. Martin: I am waiting for the report too.

Mr. Knowles: If there are enough hours in the night one of these days the committee will get it through. I suggest if the report of the committee shows that the results of its work are as good as the actual work has been, then a good move in another session would be to set up a comparable committee on the whole question of health insurance. I say again that I think the matter should be settled before we return to the next session of parliament. I think a deal should be made at the dominion-provincial conference this fall, and that in the speech from the throne at the next session legislation for health insurance should be forecast. It is only if that advice is not taken that I suggest we should have such a committee at the next session as a means of prodding the government. Let us go into the whole matter thoroughly. I am sure if we receive the same kind of assistance, research material and advice in connection with this question as we have had from the minister's officials in the special committee on old age security, we will be able to bring to the house and to the government the kind of document that will strengthen our case for early implementation of health insurance.

Something has been said by others who have spoken concerning the amounts of money in the estimates of the department. What I shall say is in a slightly different vein, and again the minister probably knows what is coming. I want to complain, as I have in former years, not about the amounts voted, but about the department failing to spend all the money that we have voted in the field of health insurance studies.

Mr. Martin: Will my hon. friend permit me to say something? I do not want to object, but I am sure that a lot of this discussion should really take place under the specific item. It is difficult for me to reply to all these questions now. Could the question of health insurance studies not easily be left until we come to the item relating to it? We are discussing all of the items now, and I think it would be much easier if we waited until the specific item comes before the committee. I know I would find it more convenient, and if my hon. friend would meet my request I would be grateful.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, this morning the debate on this department was divided into two fields. The debate on welfare is to be postponed, and the debate on health matters is to take place today. Most of the discussion so far has been on health, and indeed a good deal of it on health insurance specifically.

Mr. Martin: It is just a question of saving time.

Mr. Knowles: If the minister's suggestion is agreed to, I shall have to make the same speech all over again on health insurance studies. I think he had better let me continue now. I should like to point out that for 1946 the house voted roughly $10,000 for health insurance studies, and the amount spent and charged to that item was roughly $2,000. For 1947 the amount voted was $43,000 and the amount charged to the item when the year was over was a little over $4,000. For 1948 we voted $27,000 and the amount charged was $6,000 odd. For 1949 we voted $43,000 and the amount charged was $40,000. For 1950 we voted $56,000 and up until January 31, 1950, the amount spent was only $43,000. In all cases I have given round figures. The details can be found at page 827 of Hansard for March 16, 1950.

I note an improvement. The department is gradually moving up and getting to the point where it is spending a larger proportion of the amount of money appropriated for health insurance studies, but I am still not satisfied that the department is taking the whole question of really getting somewhere with health insurance as seriously as some of us would like them to. One of the reasons I am not satisfied is that another type of question that I have been asking through the medium of the order paper relates to the whole matter of what is being done by the people who spend this money on health insurance studies.

A lengthy answer was placed on Hansard on March 16 of this year, covering a great many pages. There have been other answers since, but the gist of those answers is that many people are preparing various memoranda on this question of health insurance. But there is always the caveat entered to the effect that the work done by departmental people on the administration of health grants should be considered as part of the work in building up health insurance in Canada. The work done in the administration of health grants is all to the good, but I should like to see the minister direct the people in his department to spend a little more time, even if it means asking this house for more money, on the development of specific plans for health insurance in Canada.

On the other side, because I want to give credit where it is due, I will admit that the minister tabled, in response to a motion of mine some days ago, a lengthy document which lists the titles and dates of all memoranda of studies prepared by the directorate of health insurance studies on matters relating to health insurance from April 1, 1945, to March 16, 1950. This document is sessional paper No. 76E, and it was tabled on Monday, May 29, 1950. Amongst these documents are some which I should like very much to see, but I imagine if I moved to have them tabled the minister would say they are confidential. On the other hand if no action is taken on health insurance this fall, and at the next session we get the committee I have suggested, it might be possible for us to see some of those documents then.

I am not going to read the whole list, but I should like to give the minister credit for what has been done by pointing out there are some of these studies which show the government—or at least some of the people in the department—are thinking about this problem. For example on April 12, 1948, there was a memorandum entitled "Development of Health Insurance in Canada—Historical outline". Then there was one on May 4, 1948, which is the sort of document I should like to see if I could, entitled "Memorandum for Cabinet Consideration on Health Insurance (Preliminary Steps)". That looks as though it would be worth seeing. On September 7, 1949, there was a memorandum entitled "Health Insurance—An Informal Discussion"; October 17, 1949, another memorandum entitled "A National Health Service".

On November 18, 1949, there was a memorandum entitled "Proposed Redraft of Clause 16 (1) of the Draft for the National Health Bill". I do not know what that phrase "The National Health Bill" refers to, whether it refers to the draft bill we had back in 1944 or whether the government has the draft of another national health bill up its sleeve. Am I missing something?

Mr. Martin: I was just speaking to my parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Knowles: Is the member for Ottawa West your parliamentary assistant?

Mr. Martin: He helps me on occasion.

Mr. Knowles: Since he is the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I suppose that gives him wide latitude. On December 7, 1949, there was a memorandum entitled "Health Insurance Memorandum". Then on December 31, 1949, there was a memorandum entitled "Health Insurance —Redrafted Memorandum of December 7, 1949". Those are straws in the wind that look fairly good.

On January 23, 1950, there was a memorandum entitled "Health Insurance and General Practitioner Plan"; on January 24, 1950, "Proposals to Increase the Number of Physicians and Dental and Nursing Personnel in Canada". Also on January 24 there was another memorandum entitled "Report on Health Insurance"; on February 14, yet another one entitled "Report on Health Insurance". On that same date there was a "Supplementary Report on Health Insurance". There are a few more in the list, and finally on March 11, 1950, there was a memorandum entitled "Proposals to Increase the Number of Physicians, Dental and Nursing Personnel in Canada—Redraft of memorandum of January 24".

As I have said, that is just a list of titles and dates, but it does suggest that somewhere in the department someone is giving some thought to this question, and those thoughts are being put down in black and white. I admit that if the minister gave me one choice amongst those documents, the one I should like most of all to see is that "Memorandum for Cabinet Consideration on Health Insurance (Preliminary Steps)".

Mr. Martin: The hon. member would have to change his party affiliation, and I suspect that is impossible.

Mr. Knowles: For once the minister is right. My whole point in referring to this, Mr. Chairman, is to suggest that in asking for some step-up in this field of health insurance I am not asking the government or the department to start from scratch. They have done some thinking and have some documents. Surely the time has come to go ahead on that basis.

In the green book of 1945, on page 30, it was suggested that the estimated cost of health insurance was $256 million on the basis of the population in 1941. Sometime during the session I asked the minister, through a question on the order paper, whether that estimate was still considered a good one, and the answer was no, but consideration was being given to a revised estimate. I have no doubt that a revised estimate today would be higher than that, by reason both of the increase in our population and of the increased cost of medical services. However, it should be pointed out that when we ask for health insurance, unlike asking for better old age pensions, we are not asking for a new burden on the economy of the country as a whole. Most of this money is already being spent. The difficulty is that the incidence of it is bearing too heavily on the few whom ill health hits, rather than being spread over the population as a whole. What health insurance does is to rechannel the amount of money that is being spent on health in a more equitable manner, and in a way to make it possible for all the people to get the health services that they require.

Mr. Chairman, I said at the beginning I was going to confine myself to one subject, despite my interest in many in this branch of the department, so I leave it at that. I plead with the government that they do not wait until we have all the services before we have health insurance, but that they bring in at the earliest possible date legislation to establish health insurance for the people of this country.

Mr. Fleming: Is the minister going to give that information he promised?

The Deputy Chairman: I understand that information will be given when item 216, which is the administration item for the national health branch, is called.

Mr. Fleming: We have been given no information as yet.

Mr. Martin: I am going to give it on that item.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I understood when the member for Winnipeg North Centre was speaking that the work had been divided into the national health branch and the welfare branch. The discussion was to take place, then item 216 concerning the administration of the national health branch would be called, and the minister would make his reply.

Mr. Fleming: I may have misunderstood what was said this morning, but I thought only item 242 was to stand, not all the welfare items of the department.

Mr. Martin: That is right. What I said this morning was that the item covering old age security would stand, and that was the only item, not the whole welfare branch. What I propose now is that this item be carried, and then I will deal with health administration and all the questions that have been asked.

Mr. Fleming: What about the expenditures under this item?

Mr. Martin: I will give the whole thing right away.

Mr. Major: The hon. member for Peace River mentioned a matter which to me seems important and vital. He mentioned that much of the food being consumed was deficient in minerals owing to soil deficiency, which perhaps was the reason for some of the diseases we are meeting today. I believe that is an important point. I know that plants grown in deficient soil are stunted and sparse, and an animal fed on such plants has a hard time making progressive growth. It stands to reason that such an animal would not obtain sufficient minerals, and that would also be the case with the food product reaching the consumer.

Some time ago I mentioned in the house that farmers were very concerned about rebuilding their soil so that it would produce food containing the proper proportion of minerals. Today the farmers are not in the position to do that. They have been striving to produce cheap food, and in doing so have depleted their soil and allowed their buildings to get run down. They have produced cheap food, but it has been cheap not only in cost but in quality. Knowing that, and knowing that with the prices now being paid for agricultural products the farmers are not able to build up their soil, I believe we should seriously consider ways and means of placing the farmer in a position to replenish his soil so he will be able to produce food that will contain the minerals that are necessary if our people are to remain healthy.

Mr. Fulton: There is just one subject on which I would like to say a few words on this general item of departmental administration, and that is the question of publicity and information. I should like to make it perfectly clear that I am not suggesting there are not certain departments in which information both as to the activities of the department and the progress being made in its work is perfectly legitimate and should be made available to the public. But while I believe that is true, and have no criticism of that type of information service, I have a deep-rooted objection to the use of information facilities within departments in order to put out not only government propaganda but partisan propaganda. The great difficulty is that departments and ministers find it so hard to resist the temptation to believe that what they are doing and the policies they are advocating and the government they are serving are the best. So it seems they cannot help publicizing not only their genuine departmental activities and services, but the points of view they espouse of a political as well as of an administrative nature.

That being so it appears that this tendency results, as we see from a comparison of today's spending with the past, in a constant increase in the amount being spent for publicity and information. This year the total being spent by all departments of government on publicity and information, as disclosed in the estimates, amounts to some $6 million. I gave the exact figures in the course of an earlier speech, and they can be found in the record. When we are considering ways and means of reducing taxes I suggest that if we could find a way to reduce this expenditure without actually impairing the efficiency of the work and without depriving the public of genuine information to which it is entitled, that would be a worthwhile effort. Certainly one way it could be done is by cutting out the propaganda aspect of government information and publicity services.

I am going to urge that serious consideration be given a suggestion which has been made previously by myself and others; that is, that in order to control this expenditure for publicity and information throughout government departments a central bureau of information be set up, in the same way the printing bureau and the bureau for translations were set up, in order to do away with the overlapping and competition as between departments in connection with those services. We are now spending some $6 million a year on publicity, as far as we can ascertain from the estimates; but there are a number of hidden items, so the actual expenditure would be found to exceed $6 million if we had an accurate break-down. At any rate, we are spending $6 million now, and I am certain we could set up a bureau of information, give it half that amount of money and still produce all the genuine governmental information required to keep the people informed on those subjects as to which information is vital and essential in the national interest. I cannot conceive that it would not be possible to give all the service necessary along these lines at an expenditure of only half the amount now being spent under that heading, and certainly nothing has been said to show the contrary.

In this department we find that this year, according to those items which actually appear in the estimates, $524,970 is being asked for publicity and information. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that you can tell an awful lot of people an awful lot of things with more than half a million dollars, and that a good many of the things they are told are not genuine departmental information but political propaganda. I believe the setting up of a bureau of information, whose job it would be to sort out the requests of the departments for information services and see that no propaganda was put out but only genuine information, would be a powerful tool to cut down both the amount of propaganda going out and the expenditure under this heading.

Not only do I suggest that there is a certain amount of unwarranted and unnecessary information in the nature of propaganda going out from this and other departments; I also suggest that some of the purely informational work is a waste of money, and the amount of it is increasing constantly. I hold in my hand the annual report of the Department of National Health and Welfare, for 1949. Starting at page 132 of the report, seven pages are devoted to the detail of "Information services." Here is an example of the way in which this thing is growing. On page 132 we find the following:

> An office manager was appointed to supervise the growing volume of documentation, accounting, recording, and other routine, permitting the director and editors to devote more time to creative work and to developing new projects.

Then we find at page 133—

Mr. Fleming: More poetry.

Mr. Martin: Would my hon. friend recommend that that project be not carried out?

Mr. Fulton: I know the minister always—

Mr. Martin: That is a simple question.

Mr. Fulton: My recommendation is surely equally simple. It is that there should be set up a bureau which, as between departments, and as to work within departments, will be an impartial referee, and will have the staff to say which project should be allowed and which projects are unnecessary and extravagant, and which are spending money on propaganda. Here are some which I think are unnecessary and extravagant. Under the heading "radio" at page 133, we find the following:

> An increased amount of radio time was secured and new ways were found of telling the department's story on the air. Hon. Paul Martin broadcast frequently, going on the air over national and international hook-ups as well as regularly on a local station.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, it would be extremely difficult for any minister to differentiate on a local station—

Mr. Martin: On a point of privilege, I have never made one broadcast over a national hook-up, over a provincial hook-up, over a local hook-up, for which I personally have not had to pay myself.

Mr. Fulton: I must say there is no point of privilege there.

Mr. Martin: Yes, there is. My point of privilege is the hon. member said that I made a speech using departmental radio time and departmental funds. I have said to you that I never made such a radio speech.

Mr. Fulton: The minister is anticipating; he must have a guilty conscience.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): He knew what was coming.

Mr. Fulton: The report of the department states:

An increased amount of radio time was secured and new ways were found of telling the department's story on the air. Hon. Paul Martin broadcast frequently, going on the air over national and international hook-ups as well as regularly on a local station. The minister was featured on a radio farm forum program with a wide listening audience. Local radio talks under the title "Report from Parliament Hill," in which the minister explained all the department's services, were mimeographed and bound, and these informal reports provide excellent reference material.

Mr. Knowles: Question.

Mr. Ferrie: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Fulton: It is contained in the department's own report. We all know what the local report from parliament hill is. I suggest that it will be most difficult for any minister and for any listening public to differentiate between the minister's political point of view as advanced in the broadcast over that station, and the departmental work which he is describing.

Mr. Martin: I have that difficulty myself.

Mr. Fulton: Exactly. We are told that departmental funds and departmental staff have been devoted not only to securing more time on the radio but also to binding the speeches, making them available and distributing them throughout the country. I do not think that is a necessary or justifiable expenditure of the departmental or public funds.

Mr. Martin: I have just said there were no departmental funds spent. I did not misunderstand my hon. friend. None of my speeches over the radio have cost the department anything. I want that clearly understood. I might agree with my hon. friend as to the value of those speeches, but that is another matter.

Mr. Fulton: The report makes it perfectly clear, unless the language used is incorrect, what the meaning is. It says:

Local radio talks under the title "Report from Parliament Hill"—

Which we know does not cost a member or the department anything.

Local radio talks under the title "Report from Parliament Hill," in which the minister explained all the department's services, were mimeographed and bound, and these informal reports provide excellent reference material.

That surely takes the time of the staff of the department and costs money for the stationery involved in the printing, binding and distribution. It is made available as a report on the departmental activities; therefore we can draw no other conclusion than that it was carried out on a departmental basis and with the expenditure of departmental funds, which are public funds.

On the same page of the report we find:

This year the division experimented with radio plays, first with amateurs, later employing professionals both for preparation and presentation.

That is an example of the growing amount of expenditure made in connection with these items of publicity and information. Some of us have seen the actual press releases and information releases put out by this department, and many of us wonder whether the expenditure involved in the preparation of these "dietary ditties" and so on are justified. Here is the attitude toward the periodical, as given on page 134: "It is reported that bright and informative supplements were published dealing with mental health, family allowances, old age pensions, nutrition, the new national health program and schools of social work". Once again I suggest that it is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to differentiate between genuine information as to what is being done in research which is being carried on and propaganda on behalf of the party which is putting out this work and spending the money on these things.

Then we have some interesting titles given as to the material put out. I suggest the very titles might raise the question, and do raise the question, as to whether the money is being well spent. Let me cite one sample from page 135:

Additional folders were produced in the child training series in collaboration with the mental health and child and maternal health divisions. These include sex, temper, fear, nervous habits, lying and stealing and thumb-sucking.

Mr. Martin: The hon. member thinks we should not have these?

Mr. Fulton: I wonder how valuable a contribution to the information on the work of this department publications entitled sex, temper, fear, nervous habits, lying and stealing and thumb-sucking may be, and how much money we are justified in spending on publications of that type. Certainly from some of the press fillers that we have seen, to which reference has been made in the house before, I should say that the expenditure is not well justified.

Then the final reference I want to make to the report is found at page 137:

Arrangements were made for general theatrical showing of a newsclip featuring Hon. Paul Martin—

Mr. Fleming: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: I continue:

—speaking on significance of the national health program.

My colleague from Eglinton remarks, "and of Paul Martin". That is of course an inescapable companion piece to the fact that the newsclip made was devoted to the significance of the national health program; but I suggest it is not an unwelcome feature of that program in the mind of the minister that it also publicized him in the eyes of the public as a result of the expenditure of public funds.

Mr. Fleming: It is a good thing he is not ambitious.

Mr. Martin: I let that go by.

Mr. Fulton: It is sometimes difficult to speak of these things, without giving undue weight to the political or propaganda aspect of them. I have tried not to stress that unduly, and I have attempted—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fulton: Well, of course those hon. members who are laughing think that that is a perfectly legitimate expense, and that no criticism should be made of it from that aspect, but they would not expect us or really expect the public to share their view. I have admitted freely that there are certain legitimate departmental expenditures on information, so that for instance in the field of industrial health and in the field of research, where the government is providing public funds for that work, the results of such work should be made known to the public whose money pays for it. That type of information is perfectly legitimate.

However I come back again to the point that without some greater measure of control than we now have it is impossible to separate the legitimate informational work from the propaganda work of a political nature. When we find these large expenditures for publicity, with one department spending half a million dollars, then another department will almost inevitably say, "Our work is important, too. Look at the Department of National Health and Welfare, which is spending half a million dollars. Why do we not have more in our department to spend? Let us tell the people what we are doing". So in that way we find in this field a possibility of competition between departments. Indeed, the fact we are spending $6 million a year on publicity suggests it to be a reality. The setting up of a bureau of information or something along that line which would operate as a controlling factor before any information is put out would do much to eliminate the competitive aspect between departments and the improper spending of public money on political propaganda.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Chairman, for about two hours and a half I have listened to the debate, and I suppose hon. members would expect me to say something about some of the matters that have been raised. Unfortunately, under our procedure, this is sometimes difficult in a department such as mine, because the tendency is in a general debate to discuss items that might be discussed more specifically when the individual items are reached in the estimates. On that account it would be difficult—in fact, impossible, unless one were to take more time than the circumstances would warrant—to cover all the points that have been mentioned.

However I do wish to deal with one or two points, and when we come to the individual items I shall take that opportunity to make replies to some of the statements that have been made. First of all, however, may I place on record, as I promised the hon. member for Eglinton, a statement of expenditures for the Department of National Health and Welfare for the year 1949-50. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Statement of Expenditures—Summary

No. of Vote 1950-51	Services	Expenditure 1949-50	Unliquidated commitments 1949-50	Total commitments 1949-50
		$	$	$
S	Minister's Salary and Motor Car Allowance	12,000.00	.....	12,000.00
215	Departmental Administration	787,075.69	19,222.66	806,298.35
	Health Services
216	National Health Branch Administration	101,549.35	15,879.05	117,428.40
217	Food and Drugs	654,078.46	4,560.06	658,638.52
218	Proprietary or Patent Medicines	25,015.70	1.00	25,016.70
219	Opium and Narcotic Drugs	139,698.77	69.36	139,768.13
220	Quarantine and Leprosy	262,485.29	912.98	263,398.27
221	Laboratory of Hygiene	343,672.05	21,343.90	365,015.95
222	Immigration Medical Inspection	807,642.52	11,875.37	819,517.89

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Statement of Expenditures—Summary

No. of Vote 1950-51	Services	Expenditure 1949-50	Unliquidated commitments 1949-50	Total commitments 1949-50
		$	$	$
	Health Services—Conc.
223	Child and Maternal Health	74,702.39	902.16	75,604.55
224	Public Health Engineering	128,105.88	1,239.28	129,345.16
225	Treatment of Sick Mariners	580,138.02	101.00	580,239.02
226	Industrial Health	116,936.27	7,351.57	124,287.84
227	Civil Service Health	198,695.59	222.88	198,918.47
228	Nutrition	128,268.80	1,215.73	129,484.53
229	Venereal Disease Control	35,387.18	34.70	35,421.88
230	Health Insurance Studies	56,097.33	465.66	56,562.99
231	Dental Health	45,733.11	8,771.85	54,504.96
232	Hospital Designs	18,890.77	12.27	18,903.04
233	Mental Health	86,080.34	1,526.81	87,607.15
234	Blindness Control	27,520.67	3,322.22	30,842.89
235	Epidemiology	22,010.63	146.07	22,156.70
236	Grants to Institutions Assisting Sailors	2,600.00	.....	2,600.00
237	Medical Services—Indians and Eskimos	9,924,124.00	48,942.45	9,973,066.45
238	Civil Aviation Medicines	35,490.29	138.25	35,628.54
	Total Health Services (Exclusive of Health Grants)	13,814,923.41	129,034.62	13,943,958.03
	Welfare Branch
240	Welfare Branch Administration	27,186.81	68.25	27,255.06
241	Family Allowances Administration	1,836,018.16	19,516.70	1,855,534.86
S	Family Allowances Payments	297,514,033.94	.....	297,514,033.94
242	Old Age Pensions—Administration	72,985.32	90.16	73,075.48
S	Old Age Pensions—Payments	93,188,967.29	.....	93,188,967.29
243	National Physical Fitness—Administration	60,887.00	.....	60,887.00
244	National Physical Fitness—Assistance to Provinces	85,689.00	.....	85,689.00
245	Assistance to Schools of Social Work	52,500.00	.....	52,500.00
	Appropriations not required for 1950-51	20,000.00	.....	20,000.00
	Total Welfare Branch	392,858,267.52	19,675.11	392,877,942.63
	Miscellaneous Grants
	Grant to:—
246	Canadian Welfare Council	12,600.00	.....	12,600.00
247	Canadian National Committee for Mental Hygiene	10,000.00	.....	10,000.00
248	Health League of Canada	10,000.00	.....	10,000.00
249	Canadian Public Health Association	5,000.00	.....	5,000.00
250	Canadian National Institute for the Blind	45,000.00	.....	45,000.00
251	L'Association Canadienne Francaise des Aveugles	6,000.00	.....	6,000.00
252	L'Institut Nazareth de Montreal	4,050.00	.....	4,050.00
253	Montreal Association for the Blind	4,050.00	.....	4,050.00
254	Canadian Tuberculosis Association	20,250.00	.....	20,250.00
255	Victorian Order of Nurses	13,100.00	.....	13,100.00
256	St. John Ambulance Association	4,050.00	.....	4,050.00
257	Canadian Red Cross	10,000.00	.....	10,000.00
258	Canadian Paraplegic Association	15,000.00	.....	15,000.00
	Total Miscellaneous Grants	159,100.00	.....	159,100.00
	SUMMARY
	Minister's Salary and Car Allowance	12,000.00	.....	12,000.00
	Departmental Administration	787,075.69	19,222.66	806,298.35
	Health Branch (exclusive of Health Grants)	13,814,923.41	129,034.62	13,943,958.03
	Welfare Branch	392,858,267.52	19,675.11	392,877,942.63
	Miscellaneous Grants	159,100.00	.....	159,100.00
	GRAND TOTAL (Exclusive of Health Grants)	407,631,366.62	167,932.39	407,819,299.01

May I, at the outset, thank those hon. members who spoke particularly of the personnel in this department. No minister is better served, and I do not think any country is better served in the matter of health and welfare, through its public service, than is this country or than I am as Minister of National Health and Welfare.

May I first pay tribute to the staff—to all of them, including those who occupy senior posts and those who occupy the lowliest posts in the department—for what they are doing for this country. One does not like to mention names particularly, but because of the unusual distinction that comes with the designation of winner of the professional institute medal, let me say on behalf of the department how proud we were that the professional institute medal was this year given to one of the greatest men in the public health work of our country, Dr. Fred Jackson, director of health insurance studies.

A number of items have been discussed. The hon. member for Kamloops has referred to one in particular. It is all very well to say that we are spending too much on health information. No one is more concerned than I am about unnecessary expenditures in this particular. No one has taken greater care to see that in the opinion of my officers, of myself and of the provincial governments whatever expenditures we make in the field of health information are those which, after careful consideration, are thought to be expenditures that we should undertake.

No one has pointed out that the expenditures for health information this year have been reduced by over $73,000. One could make a strong case in criticizing that reduction. The speech of the hon. member for Peace River—I believe perhaps the finest speech this afternoon—urged us not to hesitate to use public funds to disseminate knowledge about health and welfare among our people. I took that as a challenge, and I will say this, that if any hon. member can show me one pamphlet or one film or one project carried on the information branch that should not be carried on, then I should like to have that suggestion made.

It is all very well to say we are spending too much money. But are we spending too much money when we have films telling the people of this country the ways and means of attacking mental illness? With respect to some of the titles to which my hon. friend referred, I do not criticize him for taking part in the debate in the lyrical and satirical way he did; that is perfectly natural—but the titles I must say are suggested by those who know how to reach the people. There is not one pamphlet, not one film undertaken by the Department of National Health and Welfare that is not approved by all the provinces sitting in at the annual conference of the health educational divisions across this country.

Then, with regard to the other projects, apart from certain publications we have taken over from the national welfare council, it will be found that all the publications, all the films and other projects have been recommended by the dominion council of health. Twice each year all the provincial governments meet with us here in Ottawa, incidentally at our expense, to discuss ways and means of co-ordination in the field of health activities. They meet with us to discuss ways and means of avoiding duplication and overlapping.

Let me say that there is no sphere of government where co-operation between the provinces and the dominion is as effective and as continuous as in the fields represented by the dominion council of health. In addition to that, I have a committee in our department that goes over matters carefully, and reviews the technical aspects as well as the effectiveness of distribution.

I know what my hon. friend does not like. The fact is that in this Department of National Health and Welfare we are doing something for the people of Canada. The fact that we have taken ways and means to let the people know what we have done proves a little irritating to some hon. members—just as it would to me, if I were sitting over there.

The hon. member has referred to travelling expenses. The travelling expenses in this department are large, but they are not by any means the largest of any government department. I believe we would stand about sixth in the extent of our expenditures in this connection. But is there a department in which the obligation to travel is greater? I certainly do not feel, for one, that I am a good Minister of National Health and Welfare unless I get around this country and see for myself what should be done. That I propose to continue to do. I do not think, further, that my officials are doing their jobs unless they, too, carry on a program of visiting the centres, dealing with the provinces, dealing with the hospitals, dealing with our food and drug administration, dealing with our narcotics administration and the like.

Let us examine this travelling expenses vote to which reference has been made. Of the increase over last year, some $60,000 is due to the increased expenditures incurred in taking Indians from more remote areas of our country to hospitals for hospitalization and medical attention. Of the total, $208,000 —I am using round figures—is spent in the transportation of sick Indians to hospitals. Other expenditures are necessary for the travelling of the dominion council of health and the Canadian council of nutrition, bodies which are representative of the provinces; and also for the transportation of sick mariners to hospitals, a statutory obligation. Then there is the cost of delegates to the second assembly world health organization, which it was suggested was a wrong thing to approve.

Then there are the courses taken in connection with civil aviation, medicine and the travelling expenses of our food and drug inspectors. Last year only $34,000 was spent and there was criticism by the drug council that we were not keeping up with the situation. One reason was that we had not enough inspectors. However, the number is now up to around forty. There are also the travelling expenses of the narcotic inspectors and the quarantine medical officers who are engaged in the inspection of aircraft and vessels.

Then there are medical officers who are engaged in the inspection of prospective immigrants. There are also the field officers of the public health engineering branch. We are trying to do something to improve the quality of the drinking water consumed in this country and the water available in our trains, aeroplanes, stations and public buildings is inspected by these officers in co-operation with the provincial officers. I suggest that we should carry on that kind of work.

Then there are the officers of the family allowances division who make inspections to see that the money is not being misspent. We are spending $309 million this year and travelling expenses of around $39,000 is not an overestimate or overexpenditure. There are the travelling expenses of the old age pension auditors and the child and maternal health division officers, which is I submit a legitimate expense. We would not be doing our job in this department, as I have been told on previous occasions by hon. members opposite that we were not, if our officers were not travelling around in the performance of their duties.

Then there is the Indian health service which requires the transportation of the field staff of doctors and patients. Within five years our expenditures on Indian health have gone up six times. We have 21 hospitals all over the country, with nursing stations. Then there are the doctors on part time who are assisting us in this work. All this requires travelling, and I submit necessary travelling.

[Mr. Martin.]

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar in his excellent statement, which was supported by the hon. member for Glengarry, referred to the importance of nutrition. Incidentally the head of our nutrition branch is an Albertan which should give confidence to the hon. member for Peace River who has made some observations. We are making nutrition surveys continuously and at times the amount of travelling involved is very heavy. But it is necessary to carry on this important work.

Industrial health surveys are now being made in the province of Quebec and in the maritime provinces in connection with silicosis and the like. This entails travelling by the officers if the job is to be done. We are now making a dental health survey which involves travelling expenditures. Also a morbidity survey is being undertaken.

One can talk about the work of the regional directors of family allowances and the work of our senior departmental officers in connection with the health branch. There are officers who are continually in touch with the provinces, not only by letter but more particularly by telephone and personal contact. Dr. Jackson and his staff are repeatedly in contact with the provincial governments in connection with the national health program. It takes time and patience on the part of all concerned to set up such a program and there is need to have men all over the country, in some instances trying to persuade provincial officers to co-operate or trying to persuade provincial authorities as to the desirability of sending in projects. There is a need of personnel in many branches of health work and our officers try to supply that at all times.

I think the explanation that the increase in travelling expenditures is due mainly to the transportation of Indians from remote areas to the hospital centres is one that will commend itself to every hon. member of the committee. No reference was made to the decrease that has occurred in travelling expenditures by many divisions. There is a decrease in travelling estimates in national health branch administration, in the immigration medical service, in the child and maternal health division, in the public health engineering division, in the civil service health division, in the nutrition division, in the mental health division, in welfare branch administration and in departmental administration.

Mr. Fleming: Is that as compared with last year's expenditures or estimates?

Mr. Martin: The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar raised a matter of great interest —I cannot discuss all the matters that were raised—which I think deserves further attention. He referred to disseminated sclerosis and the need to do something about that disease. I told him last year that we were giving consideration in our research grants to a project to deal with that very thing. There are now two research projects under way in the field, one at Queen's university and one by the Saskatchewan health department. The cost of both projects is being borne entirely by the federal government.

Mr. Coldwell: What amount is being appropriated?

Mr. Martin: I have not the total amount, but the projects were sent in by the provinces.

Mr. Coldwell: What is the federal contribution?

Mr. Martin: The total cost is being borne by us. I have not the figure right here but I shall get it. Then the hon. member referred to the Montreal Neurological Institute. I was able to tell this house two years ago of an annual grant that we were going to make toward the work of Dr. Penfield, a work which is of national and international significance. I am happy to say that this year we have supplemented that by an equipment grant of $173,000. I am happy to say that we are giving consideration to making a hospital construction grant to that particular institution. Anything that we can do to help that institution will not go undone.

Reference was made to sundries and the hon. member for Eglinton suggested that we were spending some $200,000 for sundries. Let us see what that represents. Of that expenditure, $130,000 or approximately 60 per cent is to cover laundry services for the Indian medical services where departmental laundries do not exist or would be impracticable. For instance, at Edmonton and Nanaimo laundry costs run about $30,000 a year. You cannot build hospital facilities and nursing centres unless these expenditures are made.

Mr. Fleming: In a case like that why should it not be shown that the expenditure is for laundry services?

Mr. Martin: There is no primary item for that. Perhaps consideration will be given to giving that information in that way. I merely mention that to indicate the real story of the sundries item. Reference was made to the grant to schools of social work. This year we are making a grant of $52,500. Hon. members have written to me suggesting that this is not a large enough amount to cover the important work that the schools of social work are doing. I recognize the importance of the work because the personnel of my department to be efficient inevitably must be made up of people who have not only the training gained through experience but also the knowledge that comes from formal education. It was for that reason that this grant, which was started during the war, has been continued. Whether or not it will be increased will be a matter that will have to rest with the government as a whole, and our policy in that regard will have to be announced in due course.

As to the question of incurables, I saw the delegation to which the hon. member referred when it was here. I agree with the hon. member for Peace River that one could not help noticing their disabilities and recognizing the great and almost prior social claim that they have upon those of us in the government and outside because of the particular handicaps under which they are suffering. For personal reasons I feel very keenly about this matter, as hon. members well know. I take second place to no man in my desire to set in motion—and I cannot speak any more succinctly or finally on this subject—something that I trust and hope will, in the course of not too long a time, afford some relief to these people.

We have made a start. In the first place I do not recognize that the problem is solely our responsibility. I will not argue now as to whose responsibility it is. I think it is clear that in this country we do not want to overcentralize in the government at Ottawa, either in terms of policy or in terms of administration, matters having to do with either health or social welfare. Certainly that is my view. The provinces, the municipalities and voluntary bodies have a responsibility as to the handicapped, or incurables, as they are sometimes called.

Mr. Coldwell: Within their financial ability.

Mr. Martin: Yes, and within ours too. I do not feel I am doing my duty if I do not constantly emphasize that all these meritorious things in the field of health and social welfare have to be paid for, and there is only one way by which most of us recognize they can be paid for, out of the hard work of the people. Recognizing the importance of this matter, we have instituted a sickness survey that will begin shortly. It will be carried out by the provinces with the total expense to be borne by us. Its purpose is to ascertain (a) the number of incurables and (b) the number who are non-income earning, so that we can make an assessment of the problem and be able to know exactly what the problem is. Having made that assessment, we will be in a more intelligent position to formulate a policy alone or in collaboration with the other governments of the country.

In addition, as the house knows, at the instance of the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the Minister of National Health and Welfare a conference on rehabilitation was called to meet on May 25 last. All provincial governments, certain voluntary bodies and certain organizations representing the incurables and the handicapped had agreed to come. Unfortunately the Manitoba flood caused the governments of Saskatchewan and Manitoba to request a postponement of the conference. Under the circumstances they could not allow their officials to attend such a conference at that time, important as it was. It was not because those provinces were not interested but because a prior obligation had suddenly seized them. I am hoping that the conference can take place at the earliest possible moment for the purpose of exploring the position that must be taken as to this most important problem, one which has, as I say, not only a great appeal but a great claim on our sympathy.

Reference was made to the question of health insurance, and my views on this subject are well known. There is the question of the burdensome cost of hospital care, drugs, and what I might call ancillaries of that character, together with medical expenses, and I have put them deservedly last, I think. Not recognizing the situation in specific instances, but recognizing the burden of these things, I have put medical expenses last, not in terms of importance but in terms of what it means by way of economic burden on the majority of the people of Canada. I believe, as I have always believed —and I am now speaking personally—that the problem of sharing the cost of health care can be met effectively by a system of health insurance. One has to recognize that in the pursuit of that objective there are certain important circumstances to consider. I believe one of these is that nothing should ever be done to interfere with the doctor-patient relationship that has become a tradition in this country. I think anything that would interfere with the autonomy—and I mean that in the professional sense—of the doctor would be serious not only for the doctor but more particularly for the cause of good health in this country.

I feel I should say that because it is so often suggested that the intention is to make doctors simply servants or salaried officers of the state. I believe it is important to maintain the doctor-patient relationship. It is also important to recognize, if we are going to develop a satisfactory plan, that under the constitution the primary responsibility for health rests with the provincial governments. Some may argue that the situation should be otherwise, but that is the constitutional fact. I respect it, and I think in terms of administration it is a good thing, as well as from the point of view of developing a sound policy. I believe all these things must be carefully considered. As we go forward step by step with our social security program, we will want to make sure that each step is taken responsibly and carefully in the light of all the circumstances in order to avoid retrenchment or abandonment of programs later on which might prove disastrous, as so many hon. members know.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to the proposals made by the government in 1945 which involved the recognition of the collaborative possibilities of action between the provinces and the federal government. I made a statement in this house not so long ago which I repeat, that a national health plan, in the language of the former prime minister and repeated by his successor, is looked upon as a fundamental prerequisite to the establishment of a national system of health insurance. It is all very well to say that we can wait too long for our services to be built up. One hon. gentleman said that our services were being built up now, and in the next breath he complained that we were not building them up fast enough. The fact is that we have in the past two years, in collaboration with the provinces, built over 20,000 hospital beds. Our objective was 40,000 hospital beds in five years. In less than two and a half years we have exceeded half of our total objective. We are training personnel in all branches of health activity; in the field of mental health; in the field of tuberculosis control; in the field of crippling conditions in children. We have increased the number of health units. When I say "we have increased," the provinces have recommended to us projects which call for the increase of public health units, and we have paid the cost of those additional health units that are being built all over the country at the suggestion of the provinces and administered by them.

All of these public health units are a very important phase in the development of a program by which we will attempt, I hope in a responsible way, to meet what undoubtedly is a great economic burden on the masses of the people of this country. When you think that at the moment we are training under that plan over 1,500 individuals, giving them post-graduate training; training in particular phases of research, and in particular phases of public health administration, you will realize the tremendous transition that is taking place. I hope, and I believe, it is taking place along responsible lines towards the improvement of the health services, as a condition precedent to the next step. When one thinks that we have made it possible for the provincial governments alone to increase their personnel by over 2,000 individuals, one will appreciate the great preparatory steps that are being taken in connection with this matter. One could go on reciting the achievements that are the result of the joint effort of provincial and federal governments in the execution of a national health program. I have only touched a few of the highlights but they are significant in more ways than one, not only on the research side but what is being done, for instance, in the province of Saskatchewan. In that province there is a project, signed only the other day, concerning the second phase of a dental health program in the schools. One could mention the assistance that we are giving to arthritic sufferers through the arthritic and rheumatism society in British Columbia. One could single out of all these things many examples of what is being done. In other words what I am seeking to establish, and to impress upon the house, is that we are building a whole series of medical services in this country that will place us in a very strong position once we have to deal with the broader problem in collaboration with the provinces, upon whom, under our constitution, rests the primary responsibility.

I repeat now what I said to the house. "This program would have the added advantage of being the fundamental prerequisite of a nation-wide system of health insurance. Indeed, this program represents the first stages. The new services being developed and the new hospitals being built with these federal grants are hastening the moment when in every province it will be possible to consider further action towards hospital and medical care insurance—for which, of course, the federal government stands ready to provide assistance, under satisfactory agreements for dominion-provincial co-operation." Then, I associated that with a statement made by the Prime Minister in a radio address in which he said:

> It is up to the people and the government in each province to take the initiative in working out health insurance plans in line with their local conditions and their traditions.

Anyone who has had anything to do with provincial administration or with federal administration would recognize that that statement was nothing but an important one, particularly in the light of the present character of dominion-provincial relations in this country.

Mr. Chairman, there were many other matters to which reference was made by the various members. I may be overlooking quite a number of them. All I hoped to do in this initial statement was to generally deal with some of the problems that have been mentioned. The Department of National Health and Welfare has assumed increasing importance. Our total expenditure proposed for this year amounts to $455 million. The main part of that total is made up of uncontrollable items. Over ninety per cent of the expenditures of this department are for family allowances, old age pensions and certain statutory obligations such as food and drugs and narcotics control. This covers the work being done by the department in the various fields that are created either by statute or by provincial agreements, and leaves less than ten per cent of the departmental activities that one may consider in the controllable class.

When one examines that controllable class, one finds that in fact most of the expenditures are uncontrollable. There is first of all the money that is being spent on Indian health; there is the money that is being spent on a national health program. That leaves only four and one-half million dollars in the health branch that can again be regarded under the heading of "controllable." Out of that four and one-half million dollars the Department of National Health and Welfare is left with only $1,200,000 to engage in matters of health on a co-ordinating basis with the provinces. Instead of saying that we are spending too much in the field of health, I am forced—

Mr. Coldwell: No one has said that.

Mr. Martin: No, I said that instead of saying that, I am forced to affirm that I do not believe this represents by any means an undue expenditure in trying to bring about co-ordination in all the fields of health activities with the provinces. It is true that the national health program this year, which makes $34 million available to the provinces, does open up a channel of opportunity which I know commends itself to the house, just as I believe it commends itself to most people in this country.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

Private Bills

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

ASSOCIATION OF KINSMEN CLUBS

Mr. H. W. Winkler (for Mr. Benidickson) moved the second reading of Bill No. 312, to incorporate the Association of Kinsmen Clubs.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Graydon: In view of the fact that the Kinsmen clubs have done such magnificent work in connection with public welfare I wonder if the sponsor of the bill would care to comment upon that work. I think it is something the house would like to hear about.

Mr. Winkler: I am hardly in a position to say very much about the Kinsmen clubs. No doubt many hon. members here have been or are members, and they could speak of the work of that organization very much more effectively. The purpose of this bill is merely to incorporate the clubs, and after it has been given second reading the bill will go to the committee on miscellaneous private bills, where all the details will be given.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): This matter of the incorporation of an organization is not so simple. It throws a lot of legal responsibilities in their laps. I should like to ask if this bill has been approved by the Kinsmen clubs right across the country. Do they want this type of organization? I have read the bill, and it gives a great deal of power to a few people in the province of Ontario with respect to the regulation of that organization, the holding and disposing of property, and so on. I would like to be sure that the Kinsmen clubs across the country desire this incorporation.

Mr. Winkler: I cannot speak for the Kinsmen clubs, but all these details will be gone into before the committee, which will have to be satisfied before the bill can be sent back to the house for third reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Speaker: This bill is referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Thatcher for the second reading of Bill No. 2, to amend the Criminal Code (capital punishment).

[Mr. Martin.]

Mr. Thatcher: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. W. R. Thatcher (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I placed this bill on the order paper last February, and shortly thereafter it was given first reading. However, as hon. members know, under the rules of the house, private bills are given precedence, and this year parliament had before it the contentious pipe line bills which involved prolonged debate. As a result the bill now before us has been discussed for only two hours. I suppose I am biased, but I still do not feel the house has given it sufficient consideration to reach a vote. In view of what was said the other evening by the Solicitor General (Mr. Lapointe) it is perfectly obvious that if a vote should come now the bill has little chance of passing. Therefore I would ask permission to withdraw the bill. I will state now that whether or not I am given permission I should like to introduce the bill again next year.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to withdraw the bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Withdrawn.

DIVORCE JURISDICTION

EXCHEQUER COURT TO HAVE JURISDICTION IN ACTIONS ORIGINATING IN QUEBEC AND NEWFOUNDLAND

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Knowles for the second reading of Bill No. 13, to provide for the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court of Canada in matters of divorce.

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, practically every member of this house you speak to privately is of the opinion that this matter of divorce should be taken out of the House of Commons and Senate. That is their private opinion. Some hon. members and a section of the press look upon this matter from a straight sectarian standpoint, and are of the opinion that this bill contains the principle of divorce as such. As far as I am concerned my religious persuasion places me in the position that I am unalterably opposed to divorce as such, but I do not see this bill in that category.

From time to time those in the other place have registered their disapproval of the method employed in the granting of divorce in the province of Quebec. From what you hear emanating in the other place they would like to be relieved of this responsibility. As I said before, this is not a question of deciding on the principle of divorce. That has been decided already. Whether we like it or not we have divorce, and as far as I am concerned all this bill seeks to do is devise some other means more in keeping with our times than the way it has been done in the past. We have divorce now; so the argument that by passing this bill and shifting responsibility from the Senate and House of Commons to the exchequer court, in effect we would be deciding the principle of divorce and registering approval of it, in my opinion is quite wrong.

For several sessions I served on the committee on miscellaneous private bills, to which these bills are referred. During my years of service on that committee I opposed all these bills in cases where children were involved. Under the method now followed in the province of Quebec, if you have a legal separation there are institutions that will maintain the children if the parents are not prepared to do so. As soon as you go to the Senate, however, and obtain a divorce you are legally divorcing the children in that province from the maintenance now provided under the separation arrangements.

I do not think it is true to say that passing this responsibility over to the exchequer court would increase the number of divorces in Quebec. We handle some 300 divorces a year coming from that province, and if you will take the province of Ontario, which is most nearly comparable to Quebec, you will find that year by year the divorce ratio in Quebec is equal to that of Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Gillis: Oh, yes; so if they went to a court it would not affect the matter one way or the other. I want to have it understood—I have already voted for the bill—that I am still in favour of it. If the matter is handled by the exchequer court—the court is there now, and I do not think it is too busy—at least those seeking divorce would not receive the publicity that they do at the present time. While we stand up in the house and speak and vote against crime comics and obscene literature, the three hundred divorce bills that go through year after year and the published evidence that is circulated in the House of Commons and to some extent through the country are, in my opinion, much worse than any of the literature that you could pick up on the newsstands. By shifting from one government institution, or two government institutions, the problem of handling divorce to another government institution we are certainly not deciding on the principle of divorce, because we have divorce now. I think this bill proposes a better device and a better method of handling divorce, until such time as it is decided in some other way than it is handled at the present time.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I do not intend to take very long, and I am not rising to talk this bill out, but to bring before the house certain facts that have not been alluded to in this debate though they were brought before the house on a former occasion when a similar bill was introduced.

There is no doubt that under the British North America Act parliament has jurisdiction with respect to divorce. That is one of the express provisions of the act. There is also no doubt that before confederation there were in force in the province of Quebec laws which by virtue of the British North America Act continue in force until they are amended or repealed by the jurisdiction having authority to deal with them. That is to be found in the explicit terms of section 129 of the British North America Act.

Among the laws which were in force in the province of Quebec, and which have not been dealt with by the legislature of Quebec or by this parliament up to the present time, and which continue to be in force, is section 185 of the Quebec civil code. That is in force in the province of Quebec, and it is not in force anywhere else, and any legislation to deal with it is legislation for the province of Quebec and for the province of Quebec alone.

That section of the code is very clear, and I think the shortest way to bring its content before hon. members is to read it. It is as follows:

> Marriage can only be dissolved by the natural death of one of the parties; while both live, it is indissoluble.

Such is the Quebec law at the present time, and until that law is amended or repealed, the matter is not one of who will have jurisdiction to hear a divorce case; the matter to be dealt with consists of a fundamental declaration of the law and that is why the hon. member who introduced this bill took the precaution to declare that the exchequer court would have jurisdiction and would have the right to dissolve a marriage. That however would be legislating for the province of Quebec. It would be within the power of this parliament, but still it would be legislating on a matter which is extremely distasteful to the large majority of the people of that province. I can understand that it may not be agreeable for the houses of parliament to have to deal with these individual cases which are brought up from year to year. But parliament does deal with them, and the manner in which it deals with them does give satisfaction to those who believe that there should be a legal procedure for obtaining dissolution of a marriage. That is something which has been going on ever since confederation, and which has created no controversial issue between the majority in my province and the majority in other provinces who may or may not believe that divorce is a good thing, or that divorce is an inevitable evil.

But this proposal to legislate contrarily to the terms of section 185 of the Quebec civil code will be strongly resented on religious grounds by the very large majority of the people of the province of Quebec.

We have made considerable progress in recent years toward national unity, and the matter now being debated is something which would be felt by a large number as being an imposition by a majority of a law that the people of the province of Quebec do not want. Why do it? Simply because it would relieve us here of the painful duty of having to consider these individual divorce bills, why create that controversy and disturb a situation with which I think most Canadians are satisfied, why disturb the good relations and tolerant attitude of each sector of the population toward the other sectors of the population?

I submit that we should continue, as our predecessors have done, to deal with the individual cases rather than have parliament exercise its jurisdiction and pass an act which would bring an exception to the application of this general law and in one fell swoop take this general law out of the civil code of Quebec.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough West): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister has said something on this bill I should like to say a word regarding the other place handling divorce bills. In the Senate the members who are on the divorce committee have to sit whether the Senate is sitting or not. Since I came here in 1940 I have noticed that while the other place may be adjourned for a week or two weeks, still the senators who are members of the divorce committee have to sit and study these bills. In justice to these men who faithfully stay on the job I personally feel that some consideration should be given to them for the work they have done and are doing.

Just a short time ago I heard that one man has failed in health owing to the fact that he had been on the divorce committee so long. I think something should be done for them.

Mr. Ralph Maybank (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have always been opposed to the present method of handling divorce cases; I am still opposed to it. I think we ought to get away from the granting of divorces by a special law in each case. I cannot see that there is any good reason why a woman who has had a certain amount of trouble with her husband should come to parliament and ask to have a law passed for her special benefit; or that a man who has had trouble with his wife—the trouble in each case getting to the point of one of them committing adultery—should expect parliament to pass a law for his benefit. I do not think it should be expected by either of them. Parliament should not pass for them individually a law saying they are no longer married, and that they may marry again. More especially is this so perhaps when our law cannot say anything about children or about property.

While I am opposed to the method we are following, I certainly cannot follow the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in the proposal he has put before the house. I agree with what the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) has said, that we should not do anything that would tend in a way to destroy or to injure the unity of this country.

What the bill proposes is to force divorce as a general law upon the province of Quebec, something which is anathema to the people of that province. I cannot see any wisdom, I cannot see any fairness or any fair play in saying to the people of Quebec, "You do not like divorce? Well, you will have it. We are giving it to you. We are now passing a law against what we know to be your wishes, whereby you will have divorce. You will all have it, and you will get it in a court". But the bill does not say merely that the exchequer court may grant some divorces; that it may pick and choose, as we do in the House of Commons and in the Senate. Here we let an individual come forward and we pass a law for her or, if it is a man, we pass a special law for him. What this bill says is that all who would may come to the exchequer court, and that it will grant divorce. "We will force it—that is what we will do; we will force it upon the people of Quebec". That is where I part company with the sponsor of this legislation. I do not believe in the method we are following. I think that ought to stop. I do not see any reason whatever for passing a special law for John Doe in the province of Quebec or in the province of Newfoundland. It he did not check about divorce laws before he went to live in Quebec, that is his lookout. If he wishes to live in a place where there is divorce, then let him move to that place and establish domicile. But I do not see that he ought to have any right to come here and have a special law passed for him.

But if anybody else agrees with that, then the only thing to do is to stop passing these laws, and not to say that in order to get away from passing these laws we are going to arrange it so that anyone who wishes and if the grounds exist may go to the courts and get a divorce—to the exchequer court if he lives in the province of Quebec. Surely that is not the way to cure my objection to the legislation.

The way to cure the objection I have is simply to stop. And I would point out to the hon. member for Cape Breton South that if he and two or three of his friends wished to do so, they could stop every one of these divorce bills going through the House of Commons. There is no doubt about that. After the experience the house had with the pipe line bills, everyone must agree that the C.C.F. party, for example, if it wished to stop every one of these divorce bills—unless, of course, the house were to change its rules—could do so. I am in that position myself, although I am opposed to it and do not see fit to follow that course because so many others are in disagreement with me. But if there are others who feel as strongly about it as the hon. member for Cape Breton South appears to feel, he and they have it pretty well in their own hands to stop these divorces.

While I do not expect there will ever be a majority who will hold my point of view, that we should simply stop, I do hope there will always be a very large majority who will say that they will not force upon Quebec this legislation which is, as I have said, anathema to the people of that province.

Mr. A. L. Smith (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) were to speak now he would close the debate, I should like to say a word at this time.

I am opposed to the bill for the reasons given by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), but certainly not for the illogical reasons just given by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank). Every argument he advanced against the exchequer court's having jurisdiction could be applied with equal force in other ways. He said, in effect, in the words of the old hymn, "Whosoever will may come." That is the situation now, and giving jurisdiction to the exchequer court does not change that one iota. Anyone can come here just as easily as and perhaps more easily than he can go to the exchequer court.

I am opposed to the change for this reason: I believe the people of the province of Quebec are overwhelmingly against divorce as such, but they have expressed themselves by the majority of their members here as being content, to some extent in any event, with the procedure we now have. I am still one of those peacemakers who are really hopeful of unity in this country of which all of us are very proud. I say to the people who are advocating this change: let us get over this idea that there must be a law to cover everything on which we disagree. Laws are general things; they are big things. There are special acts; but why anyone now, to use the language of the street, would want to throw a monkey wrench into the machinery is beyond my understanding.

I have my own ideas with respect to these matters. I am one of those people who believe in divorce. I am not going to give my reasons, because we have all heard them so often. But, for the sake of Canadian unity, let us not deliberately stir up a nest of hornets, which we could easily do by passing this legislation and, in effect, say to the people of those two provinces, "We are doing this, knowing that the majority of your people are opposed to it." I would go that far if it were a matter of great principle of general application. That would not disturb me at all, if the people of one province took a course which, we will say, might be detrimental to the interests of the other provinces. But for the sake of that Canadian unity to which we all aspire let us not bring in something which may do it harm and which will not do one bit of good for those individuals who are seeking divorce. Therefore I am opposed to the bill as presented.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to make one comment only. I could not do other than follow the advice given tonight by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) but at the same time I have great sympathy with the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) who has described the unpleasant incidents that occur owing to the publicity arising from these matters. I hope it will be possible for those who have jurisdiction and who understand the legal requirements to remove what I think is an undoubted evil in connection with these proceedings.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The News of the World built its circulation on reports of the proceedings in the divorce courts.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I well recall a few years ago after there had been quite a few speeches by members of the house objecting to parliament having to deal with divorce, the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), who was then minister of justice, made the suggestion that those who were complaining about the present practice should suggest an alternative. As a matter of fact, he did outline a possible modification himself although he made it quite clear that he was not necessarily advocating it. It was because of the challenge given by the Prime Minister when he was minister of justice that I had this bill drafted. It was not drafted this year or last year, it was drafted several years ago. I kept it in my files for some years before placing it on the order paper. I placed it on the order paper with the sincere desire, for which some hon. members have given me credit, of dealing with this matter which is obnoxious to all of us in this parliament, no matter where we sit.

As the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) has said, hon. members on all sides of the house, privately as well as publicly, have complained because we have this practice here. I think it is true to say that hon. members generally wish that there was some other way to deal with this matter. I think I am justified in paraphrasing what the Prime Minister said when he was minister of justice by saying to those who are opposed to this bill, "All right, suggest some other alternative to the present practice. You do not like my bill, you do not like what we are doing; surely then there must be some other solution to the problem you can suggest."

When I introduced the bill I indicated that it was not the kind of bill that we in this corner usually introduce, that it was not a bill containing some basic and fundamental principle of social philosophy to which we were firmly attached and from which we would not budge. I indicated that it was merely an attempt to solve a problem of parliament and I said also that I would be quite happy if someone were to move an amendment that the bill be not now read a second time, but that the subject matter thereof be referred to a special committee of the house. I knew that if that course were followed it would mean the killing of my bill so far as this session was concerned but it would make possible a discussion in a committee of the subject matter, indeed of the whole problem of what should be done to relieve parliament of this obnoxious practice.

It may be that I did not get my suggestion about an amendment across to hon. members; at any rate it was not taken up. It is in my own mind at the moment that at the next session it might be worh while to introduce the bill again and make sure that such an amendment is moved. That again would have the effect of killing the bill for that session but it would make possible a discussion of the whole problem in a special committee of the house.

I am sure that my speaking in this fashion makes it crystal clear, although it did not need to be made clear, that my purpose is not to stir up any disunity, that my purpose is not to jam something down the throat of anyone in this country who does not want what he thinks is involved in this bill; my purpose is simply to solve a problem that faces parliament, the solution of which we have the right to seek.

Since some arguments have been put forward I feel I should answer them. I was interested in hearing the Prime Minister give us the terms of section 185 of the Quebec civil code. He suggested that if this bill were to pass it would be an attempt by parliament to override the provisions of that section. Every time we pass a divorce bill we do just that, and no effective opposition is put forth. I know hon. members make a fine distinction between each and every divorce bill as it comes along as being a special case as contrasted to a general act, but I submit that what happens in this parliament is that two hundred or three hundred times a year we override section 185 of the Quebec civil code when we dissolve a marriage, despite the fact that that section says that a marriage shall not be dissolved so far as Quebec persons are concerned except by the death of one of the parties.

The same argument has been put forward by the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Poulin), by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Gauthier) and by other hon. members who have spoken in this debate. They admit that this bill does not provide any facility for divorce not now available to the people of Quebec or Newfoundland, but they have pointed out publicly and they have pointed out privately to me—and I appreciate the manner in which these members have discussed this matter with me—that in their view there is a difference between providing for divorces in the exchequer court and having divorces granted by parliament. They point out that every divorce act is a special case, a sort of emergency. When we grant three hundred divorces a year, surely it is not a special case every time. Indeed, we are becoming a mill. We are more of a divorce court than the divorce court itself.

I suggest that to transfer the handling of these matters from the Senate and the House of Commons, where they are out of place and where neither the Senators nor we like them, to a court where they can be dealt with more properly is a sensible and intelligent course to follow. It would not make divorce easier; it would not change the basis for divorce. As a matter of fact, it might make the obtaining of a divorce a little more difficult. Some of the applicants to the exchequer court might not find it as easy to get a divorce there as they would by going through the routine before the Senate committee. Any who have taken the trouble to read some of the salacious documents you get from there know how routine the proposition is.

I felt that I should say something to make it clear that this bill in no way imposes upon the sensibilities or the feelings of the people of Quebec. The fact is that three hundred times a year we override the Quebec civil code, and I think the procedure outlined in the bill would be much more sensible.

In listening to the various arguments that have been put forward, I felt there was one advanced by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's (Mr. Kent) on May 26 which should be considered. He pointed out something of which I was aware and which I realize my bill does not fully take care of. He pointed out that the exchequer court can sit anywhere in Canada and as a matter of fact does sit in various parts of the country. He pointed out that it was a circuit court, and that there was nothing in the bill to prevent the exchequer court from actually sitting within the boundaries of the province of Quebec for the purpose of dealing with divorce cases. I recognize that could be offensive. I would say that if my proposal were carried out there should either be an understanding or, better still, it should be written into the bill that the exchequer court would sit only in Ottawa to deal with divorce cases from the two provinces concerned.

I feel that the other arguments advanced are matters of opinion. I think that some consideration should be given to the sensibilities of members of parliament. I do not think we should be asked to go on and on through the years pursuing a practice which is obnoxious to us. After all, if I may use the language that appears in the title of every divorce bill, the bill now before the house really is an act for the relief of parliament.

I do not intend to proceed further. I want to say quite clearly, in case there should be any thought that the bill has the effect of creating disunity, that it is not my purpose to force a recorded vote on the measure when I conclude what I have to say. If you hear more yeas than nays, Mr. Speaker, I shall be quite happy. If you hear too many nays and declare the motion lost that will be the end of the bill so far as this session is concerned, but I hope we will not go on forever following a practice which all of us find offensive, and which all of us feel is out of keeping with the purposes of parliament.

I say again that the purpose of the bill was certainly quite clear, that it was not to impose upon any group of people in Canada anything that is not now available to them. It is already there—shall I say, it is already here. In this building there is what amounts to a permanent divorce court for the people of the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland. As the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) said to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank), everyone in those two provinces who wants to can come to this supreme court of divorce, this parliament building, and get a divorce. I think some day the practice should be changed. If perchance my accepting the challenge of the Prime Minister some years ago to those of us who did not like the practice to devise some means of getting around it leads to a challenge to others to find some better means than I have proposed, I shall be quite happy, but I hope we will not just go on year in and year out putting up with something that none of us like. Failing something better, I think that the house should support this measure for the relief of parliament from this business which should not be our business at all.

Motion (Mr. Knowles) negatived on division.

Mr. Speaker: There being no further business for the hour reserved for private and public bills, the house will resume the business which was interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dion in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

215. Departmental administration, $859,720.

Mr. Fair: Before the discussion gets too far away from what we were talking about this afternoon, I should like to add my plea to those made by the hon. member for Lanark, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, the hon. member for Peace River and several others that something should be done for incurables. Many of us, myself included, have enjoyed excellent health all our lives. I think the plight of the incurables was never brought home to us as forcibly as when their delegation came here a few weeks ago. Many of us did not realize the helplessness of these people and the financial straits through which many of them are passing. The Minister of Trade and Commerce told us that we can expect a national production in 1950 of something like $16,300 million. Therefore I feel that it is quite possible to pay a pension comparable to that received by the old age pensioners to our incurables. I hope that no time will be lost in seeing that something along that line is done.

I was glad to hear the minister state that a survey of incurables in Canada has already been undertaken. Only a week or ten days ago I asked for information in that respect, and I am happy to see that the minister is making a start in that direction. Therefore I hope, together with the minister, that in the not too distant future the incurables of Canada will receive some assistance worthy of Canada's productive capacity.

Mr. Blair: When the house rose at six o'clock we were considering the first item and the minister had made some reply. There were some things in the minister's reply to the speeches made this afternoon to which I take marked exception. During the last session of the house I pointed out that, so far as hospitals in the Dominion of Canada and especially in the province of Ontario were concerned, grants had been given by the province of Ontario—I am not acquainted with the situation in the other provinces—two years before health grants were instituted in this house. When the minister said that we expected so many thousand beds at a certain time owing to these health grants, and that we had achieved so many, I want to call his attention to the fact that a grant of $1,000 per bed is not a solution to the problem of building hospitals even in the province of Ontario where another $1,000 is added to the federal contribution for beds for new cases.

I have in mind a town with which I am well acquainted. It is struggling with the problem of trying to build a hospital at the present time. Let us suppose that the cost of a hospital is approximately $9,000 per bed. Even with the combined grant made by the province of Ontario and the Dominion of Canada that would still leave an amount of $7,000 per bed to be provided by the municipality concerned. It is not so many years ago that the cost of hospital construction was approximately $5,000 per bed. We did not get hospital beds in those days, and I do not think the minister or his department can take all the credit for the fact that we are getting hospital beds now when the cost is really $7,000 or $7,500. In the municipality to which I refer they are raising money by public subscription, and they have had a great deal of difficulty in collecting sufficient money to build a hospital. Across the whole country the need for hospitalization has become a matter of some urgency. I said this afternoon that it was difficult to obtain help in the home. Trained nurses are not available, so in view of those circumstances we do need hospital beds. While this grant is praiseworthy, and any grant for a purpose like that is praiseworthy, I again call the minister's attention to the fact that the responsibility for the whole scheme of hospitalization in Canada does not rest on his shoulders. The building of hospital beds is not due to the fact that, almost two years ago, this government brought in a program in connection with it.

So far as the health grants are concerned I well recall when they were introduced in May of 1948 by the prime minister. I think every member of this house was glad to see those grants introduced. I never voted for anything with quite as good spirit as I voted for those grants. Ever since that time, when a grant has been made it has been the cause of a rush of publicity. I was amazed last winter when I read in the newspapers that a grant of $1,000 had been made to Kingston penitentiary for the purchase of a machine for the purpose of taking encephalograms. I thought that was taking the thing pretty far. While these matters of health grants and health insurance may be tied together somewhat, we must go back into history so far as health insurance is concerned. I want to point out to the minister that when the former prime minister took charge of the Liberal party in 1919 he promised health insurance at that time. It took thirty years to implement any promise that was made at that time. Nothing was done until these health grants were introduced.

I hope that in the future these health grants will not be used as a means of publicity. I point out that last year the province of Ontario gave $10 million for hospitalization and came forward with another grant a short time ago. The provinces are doing their share. They have always done their job. This work was carried out long before the present Minister of National Health and Welfare took office. So far as travelling expenses are concerned, that is probably another argument for items of this type being brought before the public accounts committee. Certainly when we are faced with this amazing bill for travelling expenses, I think it is the duty of the opposition to examine those travelling accounts. It may be that the $30,000 additional that was required by way of travelling expenses in order to take care of sick Indians and Eskimos—

Mr. Martin: It was $80,000.

Mr. Blair: There is not one member in the house who will raise an objection to that $80,000. But even making an allowance for that, there is an additional $70,000 to be accounted for. I think we should pay particular attention to this, in view of the fact that these accounts have not been examined before. As I said this afternoon there is not one member in this house who will object to money that is actually spent for treatment. I say to the minister that if he gives an account of every special item of travelling expense, breaking it down and giving us the details of those accounts, and we find that they are accounts which should have been incurred, well and good. It is the duty of the opposition, however, to make sure that the department is administered in an economical way.

Mr. Thatcher: I should like to say a word on one matter mentioned by the member for Lanark, and that is the federal grant for hospital construction.

Mr. Martin: Would my hon. friend mind raising that under the hospital construction grant?

Mr. Thatcher: I was going to wait, but since it has been raised—

Mr. Martin: That was just in general discussion.

Mr. Fleming: There is some information that is required on this item. I should like to ask the minister if the cost of printing the annual report of his department is charged to the department?

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Mr. Fleming: Under this item?

Mr. Martin: Under printing and stationery.

Mr. Fleming: Is it not under this item, departmental administration?

Mr. Martin: Yes, under this item, but under printing and stationery.

Mr. Fleming: It seemed to me that when the hon. member for Kamloops this afternoon was citing some passages from this report, the minister took exception to the accuracy of some of the statements contained in the annual report. The member for Kamloops was reading from the annual report for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1949. In view of the way the minister took issue with the member for Kamloops, I should like to ascertain whether or not the statements are correct. If they are not correct, I should like to know how it happened that the money of the taxpayers is being expended to print a report that is not accurate.

The passage about which the minister became rather upset is found on page 133 and reads as follows:

> An increased amount of radio time was secured and new ways were found of telling the department's story on the air. Hon. Paul Martin broadcast frequently, going on the air over national and international hook-ups as well as regularly on a local station. The minister was featured on a Radio Farm Forum program with a wide listening audience.
>
> Local radio talks under the title "Report from Parliament Hill," in which the minister explained all the department's services, were mimeographed and bound, and these informal reports provide excellent reference material.

Is that paragraph from the report correct?

Mr. Martin: The objection I raised was to the suggestion by implication, and I see the statement does not say what I thought it did, that the radio time had been purchased by the department. It is that to which I was objecting, because of course it was not. I used the parliament hill report quite frequently to make speeches of a non-political character. I referred to what we were doing in this department, but the department certainly does not pay for that radio time.

Mr. Fleming: I gather that the statement is correct. Of course all members of parliament are assigned certain free time on private radio stations for the purpose of the report from parliament hill, but did the minister, as is stated here, broadcast frequently, going on the air over national and international hook-ups as well as regularly on a local station; is that correct?

Mr. Martin: I do not recall ever having made a national broadcast, except on the free political time, in which I may have discussed departmental matters or government policy. But I certainly do not recall ever making a broadcast over an international hook-up. It is true I did take part, with my hon. friend and the member for Winnipeg North Centre, in the farm forum. My hon. friend was one of the participants in that debate, as I recall, as was the member for Winnipeg North Centre, and he knows the department did not pay for his time nor for the time of the member for Winnipeg North Centre, nor for my time. All three of them were not bad speeches.

Mr. Fleming: It sounds to me as though this report is not correct. It is grossly exaggerated, to say the least, and I think ought to be examined more carefully the next time an annual report is written.

The other question I have on this aspect, Mr. Chairman, is that reference is made in this paragraph to the fact that the minister's speeches were mimeographed and bound. Now, there must have been some expense in connection with that. Those things are not done for nothing.

Mr. Martin: They were just stitched, they were not bound.

Mr. Graydon: A stitch in time saves nine.

Mr. Fleming: The minister is not going to say that does not cost anything.

Mr. Martin: Obviously the reports of a minister of a department should be kept in an orderly way. There were clips put in it by Bostitch machine. Does my hon. friend object to that? I would be very glad to do the same thing for him.

Mr. Fleming: The minister is very kind. What I object to is his statement to the effect that what is referred to here did not cost anything. Obviously there must have been some expenditure in connection with mimeographing and binding the copies, and there is no sense in trying to disguise that fact.

I think the minister ought to say something on this next subject, because the point was raised in the house on May 16. I do not know whether the minister was present at the time, but I was surprised that no reply came from him. I should like to know the explanation as to the reprinting, referred to on that occasion, at page 2535 of Hansard, of the minister's speech in this house on March 10 on the appointment of a joint committee of both houses on old age security. As was pointed out on that occasion, a great many copies of that speech were printed, but not as the speeches of members of parliament are printed by the king's printer. It is true that they were printed by the king's printer, but not as ours are printed; and they were backed in a way that the speeches of members of this house are not backed when they purchase reprints. I believe the minister should take the committee into his confidence in reference to that matter, to which he made no reply when it was raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr Martin: We were receiving demands from all over the country for copies of that speech. Chambers of commerce asked for a thousand copies, I think. Since then they have asked for more, but we have none to give them. Manufacturers' associations, one of the congresses, the province of Manitoba, the province of New Brunswick, all asked for copies of that speech. My hon. friend will remember that it was an objective statement in respect to a very important matter. Does my hon. friend suggest that I should have borne that expense myself? By the way, no distribution was made in my own constituency.

Mr. Fleming: I should like to know the cost of distributing the minister's speech, and how many copies were printed at the public expense.

Mr. Martin: I do not know, but I will find out.

[Mr. Graydon.]

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Was it not good enough to send to your own riding?

Mr. Martin: I did not send it. It was good enough, though.

Mr. Fleming: I trust the minister will get that information before he asks the committee to pass this item.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): It is very important.

Mr. Fleming: It is important. Other members of the house do not have their speeches circulated at the public expense; and this speech was delivered in the house. The minister calls it an objective speech, but it did not sound very objective in some of its passages to some of us on this side of the house.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Who is the best judge of that?

Mr. Fleming: Well, apparently it comes to this; that when you are head of a department and have money available for publicity, you are the judge and you can use public money to disseminate your own speeches. But if you do not happen to be the head of a department you have not that privilege.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): You do not speak with any authority either.

Mr. Fleming: I am speaking of the disclosures that have been made, in which my hon. friend apparently is not interested.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): I know more about it than you do.

Mr. Fleming: I gather that it is perfectly satisfactory to my hon. friend to have ministers of the crown making speeches in the house and not having to pay for reprints of those speeches, as other members of the house must, but having them printed by their own decision at the public expense. If that is his idea of a proper use of the funds of the taxpayers, all right; we will let him be judged by his own standards. For my part, I think that in all matters concerning the reprinting of speeches made in the house, all hon. members should be on an equal footing. The moneys of the people of this country ought not to be used to reprint and circulate, apparently in considerable numbers, speeches made from one side of the house.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): Public health.

Mr. Fleming: Public health nothing. It was a speech on the subject of whether the house should join with the Senate in the appointment of a committee on old age security. What has that to do with public health? Other speeches were made in different parts of the house on that occasion. How do you draw the line? The minister draws the line because he has money available for publicity. So you arrive at the point about which the hon. member for Kamloops was speaking this afternoon. What is the publicity for? Is it to publicize the minister and advance his political career?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming: Anyone who has any comment to make will have the opportunity to do so. To anyone gifted with a sense of fair play I think it is quite apparent that it should not rest in the hands of one man, simply because he happens to be the head of a department, to decide that his speech is so much more important than any of the other speeches made in the house on a particular occasion, and that therefore it should be reprinted and circulated at the expense of the taxpayers. If any other hon. member who took part in the same debate wished to have his speech reprinted, he jolly well paid the full cost. If that sort of thing commends itself to the sense of fair play of hon. members, I am sorry.

Mr. Hetland: If the people want his speech, who should pay for it?

Mr. Fleming: The people who want it; not the taxpayers.

Mr. Hetland: They all wanted it.

Mr. Fleming: Isn't that wonderful! We have from the hon. member opposite the statement, no doubt made with profound authority, that all the people of Canada wanted copies of the minister's speech. Surely that must have been an extraordinary speech.

Has the minister the information I asked for on this point, before I go on to something else?

Mr. Martin: Not yet.

Mr. Fleming: Then I shall go on to the next point. I am referring now to the details which are to be found at page 175, and I should like a little information, if the minister will be good enough to supply it, in respect to three items toward the bottom of the page. Those items are travelling expenses, educational and informational publicity, and sundries. As to travelling expenses, will the minister first give the actual expenditures last year, and what travelling it is estimated will be required in comparison during the present fiscal year.

Mr. Martin: Including the overseas travel of our immigration doctors and so on, it amounts to roughly $679,000.

Mr. Fleming: The minister has not been following me; he must have been reading another of his speeches. I was referring to page 175—

Mr. Martin: You mean under departmental administration?

Mr. Fleming: I am referring to the details of this item toward the bottom of page 175. I drew the minister's attention to three items: travelling expenses, educational and informational publicity, and sundries. For travelling expenses the sum of $25,000 is provided this year, and I asked the minister for the actual expenditures during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1950. In the second place I asked what travelling is contemplated this year in comparison with that of the previous fiscal year.

Mr. Martin: Under the administration, sundries amounted to $5,300—

Mr. Fleming: I am asking about travelling expenses.

Mr. Martin: You have asked about three items, sundries, education and travelling. The figures are: travelling, $18,900; education, $116,400; sundries, $5,300.

Mr. Fleming: Will the minister kindly try to follow me on this. I am asking with regard to the amount of $25,000 which is about the seventh item from the bottom of page 175. On that item and in relation to the item alongside it, $30,750, the estimate for last year, I asked first what was—

Mr. Martin: What page?

Mr. Fleming: Page 175.

Mr. Martin: Don't get cross.

Mr. Fleming: I am just trying to make the minister hear me. This is the fourth time I have given him the reference.

Mr. Martin: That is departmental administration.

Mr. Fleming: Page 175 of the details, about the seventh item from the bottom of the page. I am asking with reference to the item—

Mr. Martin: Our estimate this year is $25,000. Our expenditure last year was $18,900.

Mr. Fleming: Your expenditure last year was $18,900. What is it that requires an increase of $7,000 this year for travel as compared with $18,000 last year? What is going to occasion that increase?

Mr. Martin: Last year when that estimate was made it was partly with regard to travel by senior officers in connection with the health branch, and was for nine provinces.

We expect that Newfoundland will raise the expenditure. It is an estimate. I believe it will be an accurate one, but it can be no more than an estimate.

Mr. Fleming: The minister talks about the estimate of last year. The estimate was $30,000 and more, but the actual expenditure was $18,000. The only thing we have heard from the minister to justify an increase of $7,000 in the expenditure last year of $18,000 for travelling expenses is that we have another province to deal with. Well, Mr. Chairman, we had ten provinces all of last fiscal year and there was considerable travelling done down there prior to the opening of the fiscal year 1949-50 and in the early months of it in making preparation for the extension of the services of this department to the new province. For the life of me I cannot follow the minister's argument. Has he a better argument than that to justify the increase of $7,000 over the expenditure of $18,000 on this one item of travelling expenses?

Mr. Martin: I have given my hon. friend the only answer I can give him. I cannot estimate accurately.

Mr. Fleming: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Fraser: I wish to ask the minister a question. I had a return tabled in my name on June 7, which had to do with travelling expenses. The question was:

> What was the total travelling expense for all employees of the Department of National Health and Welfare in the year 1949?

The answer was: "$385,958.84". There must be something wrong.

Mr. Martin: That was only for employees of the department. That did not include the expenses of carrying sick Indians, sick mariners, et cetera. We have part-time doctors all over the country who are not employees of the government. The figure I gave my hon. friend was the figure for the actual employees of the department.

Mr. Fraser: These are actual employees.

Mr. Martin: That is correct. I just answered the question that I was asked.

Mr. McLure: I just want to say that it was a great pleasure to be here this afternoon to listen to the wonderful speeches that were made on health. I know that after listening to them my health improved a little. I had not been feeling so well on account of the Minister of Public Works. Now that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has come along I am feeling somewhat better.

However, in all the discussion I was disappointed. There was one matter that I had waited patiently to hear the minister say something about, and he knows what I have in mind. Away back in 1945 I brought the matter to his attention and to the attention of the house. I refer to incapacitated people. These are different from the incurables he has spoken about and all the other diseases that have been mentioned.

No action was taken on it that session. In the following session I brought the matter up again, and several hon. members spoke very strongly on it. If the minister turns up his correspondence he will find that several letters were exchanged between us and he gave me to understand that these incapacitated people would be taken care of. Since that time we have had considerable correspondence. On several occasions he has intimated by letter that the matter was being taken up with the health minister in each of the provinces, and that a policy with reference to these incapacitated people would be in progress quite soon. I should like to know from the minister tonight just what they are doing for this most unfortunate class of people that we have in our midst.

Mr. Martin: As my hon. friend will recall, when I wrote to him, or if I did not write to him I told him that I had written, as he says, to all the provinces. All of the provinces to which I wrote but one took the position that under the circumstances it was not desirable to meet for that particular purpose. Perhaps my hon. friend was not in the house this afternoon when I explained the circumstances in connection with the rehabilitation conference which, at the request of three provinces, was postponed in view of the Manitoba flood situation.

Mr. Blair: Will the minister give us a breakdown of the $25,000 travelling expenses item?

Mr. Martin: I shall be glad to. This amount will be required to meet the expenses of the minister and senior officers of the department, and of a parliamentary assistant, if there is one, and of a senior personnel division staff in connection with necessary travelling to field establishments and in respect of examination boards held outside Ottawa; of senior research division staff in connection with field survey studies, and investigations into medical care and other projects being carried on in various places; of senior legal division staff in connection with narcotic and food and drug prosecutions; of a senior member of the purchasing and supply division in necessary visits to Indian health service establishments; and of senior staff of the information services division in manning exhibits at conventions, in connection with liaison trips across the country to confer with provincial health educators, radio station executives, newspaper and magazine publishers and the like; all in connection with matters having to do with education in the field of health and welfare, of course.

Mr. Fleming: Has the minister the information now on the cost of reprinting his speech of March 10?

Mr. Martin: Yes; the approximate cost was around $500. I may say that the account is not complete. I think one of the provincial governments paid or has offered to pay something on it. We could not yet give full particulars, but it already has cost around $500.

Mr. Fleming: That will be the net cost?

Mr. Martin: That is the amount that has been paid.

Mr. Fleming: That will be charged to this item?

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Mr. Fleming: Does the minister know how many copies were printed?

Mr. Martin: Around 12,000 or 14,000—I am not sure of the exact figure.

Mr. Knowles: They soaked you. I had 12,000 copies of mine printed for $96.

Mr. Martin: Yes, but yours was not as good a speech.

Mr. Knowles: It was a lot better.

Mr. Fleming: If you will both be frank, you might say that it was the taxpayer who was being soaked.

I have asked the minister certain questions about one item of details on page 175. I now come to the next one, educational and informational publicity. I ask the minister a similar question: what was the actual expenditure on this item for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1950, and how do the services to be covered by the present estimate for the year 1950-51 compare with the services actually rendered and paid for in the last fiscal year?

Mr. Martin: The expenditure for last year was $116,000. There were publications at $80,000, including $50,000 for Canada's Health and Welfare which was so generously praised today by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. There is the revision of the Canadian welfare council publications, $10,000; reprints of existing publications, including ones on arthritis, tuberculosis, nursing, old age pensions, social work and the like. There is a series of fifty-two recorded programs by persons outside the department, non-political individuals, not including the minister or the parliamentary assistant. Then there are displays and press services which consist of photographs and map services dealing with health suggestions which appear particularly in our weekly newspapers and which, as my hon. friend knows from what was said last session, were well received. In fact, we cannot meet the demand.

Then there are columns in certain weekly newspapers, both French and English, dealing with certain phases of health. There is a film on nurse recruitment, $20,000; newsclips at $3,000; a film library, $3,000; the revision of certain Canadian welfare council publications, and the re-issue of certain existing publications such as the one on cancer, and another one, "Prophylaxie des maladies contagieuses". Then there are displays, $7,000, on such subjects as pure food and safe drugs. There is a reprint of the publication Canadian Mother and Child, at $34,500. There is the reprint of a publication dealing with rural waters.

Mr. Fleming: But what are the ones which represent what is new as compared with last year? The item is $15,000 in excess of last year's expenditure. What is that for?

Mr. Martin: There is $6,000 more that has to do with the re-issue of existing publications. These are the standard publications of the department and are in great demand from provincial officials and others who, in the main, are the distributing agencies.

Mr. Fleming: Then we come to the item of sundries. What were the expenditures on sundries last year?

Mr. Martin: The amount is $5,300.

Mr. Fleming: The minister is this year asking for $6,000. Of what is it made up, and what is the reason for the increase?

Mr. Martin: Of course, as my hon. friend knows, when we make up our estimates we do not know what our year-end expenditures will be. This is an estimate of what it is thought we will spend in the ensuing year, in the light of increasing obligations. The sundries required in this instance are required to purchase subscriptions to serial and technical publications, and the like. Then there is the matter of garage space for some departmental vehicles.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—

217. Food and drugs, $704,450.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Sellar mentions this in his report, and points out that it is for administration. Should not the item be changed in the estimate?

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend is right. It is for the administration of the Food and Drugs Act.

Mr. Fraser: It is misleading in the estimates.

Mr. Martin: I quite agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. Fleming: I would draw the minister's attention to the details at page 177, and particularly the item educational and informational publicity. How much was spent on this last year?

Mr. Martin: The sum of $33,385.

Mr. Fleming: Then I notice an item of $12,720 for sundries. How was the item spent last year? What was the amount?

Mr. Martin: It was $12,504.95.

Mr. Fleming: What was spent on travelling expenses?

Mr. Martin: The sum of $33,837.65.

Mr. Fleming: This year the minister is asking for $50,600. On what grounds does he justify the increase of about $16,000?

Mr. Martin: Several of the vacant positions were not filled until late in the fiscal year, and the provision made for those positions was not required.

Mr. Fleming: This is for travelling expenses, not salaries.

Mr. Martin: New inspectorates which were created in the field were filled only after October 1, 1949.

Mr. Fleming: I do not understand. What has the filling of vacancies to do with travelling expenses?

Mr. Martin: We did not spend the amount originally estimated to cover the travel cost of those additional inspectors for that reason.

Mr. Fleming: Because there are four more inspectors this year the minister justifies an increase of about $17,000. Does that mean that these men are going to spend over $4,000 each this year for travelling expenses?

Mr. Martin: We have thirteen new inspectors now. We intend to do all we can to accelerate the work of inspection in the food and drug administration—and I believe my hon. friend would be the first to applaud that.

Mr. Fleming: Is there any possibility of decentralization, with a view to saving money?

[Mr. Martin.]

Mr. Martin: We have five regional offices, and we do maintain a policy of decentralization.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—

219. Opium and narcotic drugs, $138,295.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): Would the minister outline some of the anti-narcotic work carried on by his department, which is so very valuable to the country and particularly to the Pacific coast?

Mr. Martin: This division is one of the oldest in the department, in fact it was one of those that were set up under the original department of pensions and soldiers civil re-establishment. It is not only a problem that concentrates in British Columbia, although the natural propinquity of that province to one of the sources of supply does lend itself, in imagination and in reality in part, to the view that the traffic as well as the policing is particularly active in that part of the country. I may say that it is active all over the country.

We have as head of the division a former mounted police officer who is assisted by some others who have had similar experience. In conjunction with the personnel of the department, the doctors and technical men, they carry out the policy, but the actual enforcement and detection is assisted by the very able work of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. My hon. friend knows that prosecutions take place fairly frequently and indicate the firm desirability of making enforcement effective. From the observations and commendations that have been made by the opium committee of the United Nations I think I can say that the enforcement of this particular division is one that comes up to the expectations of those who were signatories to the opium agreement of the United Nations.

I want to take this opportunity to thank the attorneys general of the various provinces for the co-operation of their legal departments in the enforcement of this matter.

Item agreed to.

Health services—

220. Quarantine and leprosy, $290,618.

Mr. Pearkes: How many lepers are there at Bentinck island and Tracadie?

Mr. Martin: Seven.

Mr. Pearkes: Between the two?

Mr. Martin: There are two at Bentinck island.

Mr. Pearkes: And seven at Tracadie?

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Mr. Pearkes: That is a decrease of two, is it not?

Mr. Martin: I hope there will be more of a decrease.

Mr. Pearkes: It is expected that a little increase will bring about a decrease in the number.

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend raised the question last year about having a quarantine station at both ends of the country, but we believe that public health demands that that be done.

Item agreed to.

Health services—

222. Immigration medical inspection, $899,228.

Mr. Bater: Does this medical inspection take place after the immigrant arrives in this country or in the country of origin?

Mr. Martin: The medical examination takes place in the country of origin and at the port of entry. I may say that the policy which was announced last year of having X-rays produced by the proposed immigrant in the country of origin is a policy which we feel has been justified.

Mr. Fleming: According to the figures tabled by the minister this afternoon a total of $819,517 was spent under this item last year, so this vote would represent an increase of $80,000 over last year's requirements. Will the minister indicate just why that is required, particularly in the light of the fact that immigration into the country is being reduced rather than augmented and also that the work of the international refugee organization is about to end?

Mr. Martin: I would have hoped that my learned friend would have been as vigorous in his praise of this reduction as he has been sometimes—

Mr. Fleming: It is an increase of $80,000.

Mr. Martin: I wish my hon. friend would have been as generous—he is pretty generous, allowing for any limitations that attend his fine personality—but the fact is that it is difficult to estimate the number of immigrants that are going to be examined in any one area by these officers. The explanation of the balances are, first of all, that an appropriate adjustment has been made in the living allowances to medical officers serving overseas following the devaluation of the pound and other foreign currencies on October 1, 1949. This had the effect of reducing the amount of funds needed by approximately one-third. The travelling expenses of moving medical officers on the continent of Europe was considerably less than anticipated as the medical stations became more stabilized. There was also less travelling in connection with the seasonal inspection of immigrants at Canadian ports, and the same applies to the item covering printing and materials and supplies and the acquisition of equipment.

Mr. Fleming: In effect the minister is asking the committee to provide him under this item with ten per cent more than was found to be necessary last year. Let us be fair to the minister. These estimates were prepared toward the end of the calendar year 1949 and it may be that the abatement in the flow of immigration to this country that is to be seen today was not as apparent at that time. But does the minister not think that, in the light of the statement made within the past week by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and in the light of this reduction in the flow of immigrants to this country, he will not need $80,000 more than he actually spent last year?

Mr. Martin: I have not any comment to make.

Mr. Fleming: I think the minister ought to have a comment to make.

Mr. Martin: I just do not believe that my hon. friend is asking me to comment on policy. The minister of immigration has stated the situation and we will be governed accordingly. If he asks us to examine immigrants, we will certainly do it.

Mr. Fleming: The minister has not seized the point I am raising and I will do my best to deserve his attention. I was asking the minister whether in the light of the statement made by his colleague and in the light of the figures now available, which may not have been available when the estimates were prepared, showing a reduction in immigration, he thinks that he will require $80,000 more this year under this item than was actually expended last year?

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend knows that we have the Rockhead hospital on the Atlantic coast, which involves a considerable expenditure. Two years ago we found ourselves in a difficult position because of an underestimate. If this money ought not to be spent, my hon. friend may rest assured that it will not be spent.

Mr. Fleming: It is quite obvious that the minister is making sure that he is not going to be caught short in connection with any of these items. Unless there is a big upsurge in the immigration into this country this year I cannot for the life of me see how the minister is going to need $80,000 more than he needed last year.

According to the details on page 180 the amount voted last year for sundries was $18,560. May I ask how much was spent?

Mr. Martin: $17,860.

Mr. Fleming: Why does the minister require $8,000 more this year than was spent last year?

Mr. Martin: Those are sundry expenses in connection with the Rockhead hospital.

Mr. Fleming: Is the difference all in connection with Rockhead?

Mr. Martin: Yes, all the extras.

Item agreed to.

Health services—

224. Public health engineering, $147,410.

Mr. Blair: What were the travelling expenses under this item?

Mr. Martin: $4,800.

Mr. Blair: That is not the figure I have. I have public health engineering, $29,000.

Mr. Martin: I am sorry.

Mr. Blair: I want to know the amount of the expenditure and the details.

Mr. Martin: I am sorry, $19,848.

Mr. Blair: You are asking for $29,000.

Mr. Martin: Yes. We expected to spend $39,000 last year and the reason we did not was that most of the officials of the public health engineering division were engaged with the international joint commission. They were engaged with it for practically the whole time, and of course their expenses were paid by the commission.

Mr. Fleming: I take it to be under this item that expenditures were incurred for travelling such as are referred to on pages 135 and 136 of the annual report of the department. Reference is made there to exhibits conducted by the department at home and abroad publicizing Canada's progress in the health and welfare fields. We see that there was an exhibit held at Atlantic City, for instance, in September, 1948. I am drawing attention to those held outside Canada.

Mr. Martin: That was at the American public health association meeting.

Mr. Fleming: Another at Boston in November, another at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in January, 1949.

Mr. Martin: That was at the U.A.W.-C.I.O. convention.

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Fleming: The statement follows that officers of this division were on duty whenever and wherever the department set up such exhibits in Canada or in the United States. I should like to ask the minister if it is necessary to send officers of the department abroad to Atlantic City, for instance. No doubt it is very pleasant there in September. Is it necessary to send them to Boston or Milwaukee, Wisconsin, with these exhibits? It is one thing to send an exhibit. How many officers accompany these exhibits and what is their status?

Mr. Martin: It is not necessary but I think it is desirable. The American public health association and we ourselves have a co-operative arrangement whereby we exchange information in the fields of health and welfare. Perhaps my hon. friend has seen the joint effort made by the United States public health service and ourselves in connection with the cancer film and several publications. It is a reciprocal arrangement which the technical officers of the department believe to be of mutual advantage. At the last dominion-provincial meeting on health education a resolution was passed urging that we expand this service to cover certain regions in the western part of the United States to meet an arrangement that was made by the United States public health service in the western section of Canada.

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the minister's answer to a question asked about public health engineering. He said that some of the public health engineers had been seconded, shall I say, to the international joint commission.

Mr. Martin: In connection with the pollution of waters.

Mr. Graydon: Having in mind that a part of the discussion this evening has centred around radio broadcasting by the minister in certain areas, I should like to point out that in the estimates for the international joint commission under the Department of External Affairs there is a vote for the commission, to which these engineers were attached, reading:

To provide for Canada's share of an investigation on the matter of air pollution in the vicinity of Detroit and Windsor.

I do not know whether that has any relation, but I thought it should go on the record.

Mr. Martin: I think my hon. friend will realize that the region of Detroit and Windsor is one of the most important locations on the great lakes. I am sure that my hon. friend who resides in Brampton, and who lives near a small pool, will not be jealous of my interest in the five lakes.

Mr. Graydon: I do not want any air pollution in Windsor.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—
225. Treatment of sick mariners, $676,771.

Mr. Fleming: Will the minister give us the revenue offsetting this item and the comparison with the previous year?

Mr. Martin: The revenue is $238,797.46 and the expenditure is $581,156.39.

Mr. Fleming: Have you the comparison with the previous year?

Mr. Martin: In the previous year the revenue was $226,638 and the expenditure was $474,291.60.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—
226. Industrial health, $139,915.

Mr. Gillis: Will the minister tell us what this branch of his department does? Does it carry on research in industrial diseases to supplement the work of the provincial governments in that field?

Mr. Martin: One would expect my hon. friend to ask that very important question. The functions of this division are to try to bring about a co-ordination of efforts in the industrial health field both federal and provincial, particularly in connection with coal mines, factories, and the like. We seek to carry out educational and investigational work in conjunction with the provinces in matters relative to the maintenance and improvement of the health of Canada's working population. We provide technical services by the industrial health laboratory in relation to the above. We also have a consulting service that makes contributions not only directly to provincial governments in this field but also to private industries. In other words, we seek on our level to bring about co-ordination of those activities which the industrial divisions of the departments of health in the provinces seek to carry out to improve the working conditions of men and women in our large urban centres, coal mines and the like.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—
228. Nutrition, $132,275.

Mr. Knowles: As the hon. member for Peace River, the hon. member for Glengarry and one or two others pointed out this afternoon, this is a rather important subject. I hope that the fact that there is a slight reduction in the amount does not mean that the work of the department in the field of nutrition is being handicapped in any way. Perhaps the minister would explain the reduction.

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend is quite right. The decrease in the vote does not mean a decreasing interest. The decrease is due to the fact that we intend to spend less money this year on educational information in that particular division.

Mr. Knowles: Why?

Mr. Martin: Because the director has not thought it capable of carrying out as many educational projects this year. We are engaged now in a whole series of surveys requiring the use of our full personnel. Dr. Pett, the nutritionist, and an eminent man in that field, feels that this amount represents the best plans he can muster for this year. I may say we collaborate closely with the Department of Agriculture and the Canadian council on nutrition in connection with the plans we have in mind this year.

Mr. Fleming: I do not think anybody needs to be alarmed about the reduction. If you compare this year's estimate with last year's expenditure you will see the reduction is less than $2,800. It is not nearly as large as it appears in the blue book of estimates.

Item agreed to.

Health services—
230. Health insurance studies, $68,241.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated earlier it is not my intention to repeat the speech I made on the first item, but I should like to say enough to get the minister to say something about this whole question of health insurance studies. As the minister knows, I have been asking questions about this item for a good many years. I hope that the questions I have been asking have been helpful, and that they have prodded the department into trying to do a little more in this field. I have yet to be convinced, if I may put it that way, that the department is doing all it should do in what this heading implies, namely, actually studying health insurance for Canada. I wonder whether the name of this vote should not be changed to make it clear that it is being used mainly for the administration of the health grants, which is a later item in the estimates.

As I indicated this afternoon I put some questions on the order paper this year concerning this matter of health insurance studies. One set of questions was answered on March 16, 1950. I gave the information this afternoon as to the failure of the department to spend all of the money voted for that purpose, but in addition to that I asked the following questions appearing on page 827 of Hansard of March 16, 1950:

How much of the time of the persons indicated in the answer to question 3 has been spent on health insurance studies, and what other tasks have these persons performed?

To paraphrase the answer briefly, I was told that no apportionment of the work of the people paid under this vote could be made accurately; that these people were engaged both in health insurance studies and in the administration of the health grants. That information was given on page 832 of Hansard for March 16, 1950, as well as a statement by the former prime minister, Mr. Mackenzie King, to the effect that work on health grants should be considered as work preparatory to health insurance.

Another question which I asked on that occasion was this:

Is there available any report summarizing the results of health insurance studies made under the items noted above?

"The items noted above" were the votes for health insurance studies spread over a period of four or five years. The answer referred me to the annual reports of the department for various years, and at various pages. I noted particularly a reference to the last annual report for the year ending March 31, 1949, pages 77 to 88. I had looked at this report before and missed that reference, but I was encouraged to look again because pages 77 to 88 inclusive meant a total of 12 pages in which I could read about the work done under health insurance studies. I went back to the annual report for the year ending March 31, 1949, and turned to pages 77 to 88. The main heading on that page in large twenty-four or thirty point type is "Health insurance studies". But when I read the twelve pages I found that the only reference to health insurance studies is set out at the bottom of page 78. I almost missed it but by reading closely I found it. It reads as follows:

Considerable expansion of the health insurance studies directorate occurred following announcement of the national health program. Its activities have been connected mainly with administration of the grant program, although fundamental studies on health insurance and related matters have not been neglected.

That is all there is in those twelve pages to which I was referred that deals directly with health insurance studies. The remainder of that chapter deals with federal health grants.

Mr. Martin: Will my hon. friend permit just one interruption? When I suggested this afternoon that he might want to make his speech on this subject on this item, he thought he had better give it on the general item. I do not want to quarrel with him for doing it. Let me assure him of this. We are making most careful studies of this whole problem. We are waiting now for the results of the important surveys that are being conducted by every one of the provincial governments. The cost figures that will come out of those surveys are an integral part of anything that might be done. I want to assure my friend that we are making most serious studies. As he knows, we have brought into the department a number of individuals, one of whom has had previous experience in the matter of health insurance with one of the provinces. We are constantly encouraging, through that division and through our research division, a most careful study of this matter.

While my hon. friend may refer to that question and the answer given in the way he has, I am not criticizing that, but in order to expedite this matter I want him to know, and I believe he will accept this, that we are giving this matter the fullest, most scientific consideration any group of people engaged in the public service of this country can give. We are doing that not only on our own but in collaboration with certain provincial bodies, provincial governments, and with some of the personnel of those provincial governments who have had experience. Two officials of the department have gone to the United Kingdom to make careful spot studies for us in connection with certain phases of the problem. I want my hon. friend to know that we are not neglecting this matter. I hope that this intervention will save him much of the energy which he otherwise might have expended.

Mr. Knowles: It is exceedingly difficult to do otherwise than accept the assurance the minister gives, especially when he gives it in that inimitable tone of voice which he has just used. I do say that the kind of assurance he has sought to give me now sounds to me to have a little more substance in it than the assurance given me in previous years. The trouble is I have felt that way every year. There is something in the minister's tone of voice that makes me change my mind. Every year I rise determined to blast the daylights out of the minister for doing nothing about this matter, but then he gets up and tells me in this tone of voice about what is being done and I decide to give him another year. Then, the next year the tone of voice is stepped up a bit, but he tells me—

Mr. Fleming: The same old thing.

Mr. Knowles: He tells me the same thing that is in the report. It is buried somewhere in the twelve pages that are supposed to be devoted to this question of health insurance studies. He said the matter is not being neglected, and that is all his department said in its annual report, that fundamental studies on health insurance and related matters have not been neglected. I have to associate with this the fact that the minister said this afternoon, if I understood him correctly, that he is more concerned about getting health services started than he is about health insurance. I want the health services developed too, but I feel that greater priority than has yet been given should be shown this business of health insurance. No purpose is served by having the finest hospitals and doctors available to our people if our people cannot afford to make use of those services. That is the purpose of health insurance, to distribute the incidence of the cost so that the people who are ill or who need a preventive health service can get it regardless of their financial position.

I do not quite know whether to take the minister's assurance as having more substance than it has had in former years. I suppose I shall have to give him another chance. But I remind him that it took a good many pages in Hansard for the minister to answer the questions that I put on the order paper; six pages, in fact. It took all that space to answer a small question that occupied about two inches in one column. Later on another question produced another long answer, all of which suggests to me that the people who drafted these replies for the minister felt their job was to make it look good, to make it look as though they were doing something in the field of health insurance studies, whether they were or not. As a matter of fact most of the time of the people paid under this grant is being given to an important job, but that job is the administration of the health grants and not to studying health insurance.

I want to see this country reach the point where we have the finest medical and hospital services available, but I want them to be available to our people. I want our people to be able to afford them, and the only way that can be done is by a health insurance program which would cover all the people of the country. One of the advantages of old age pensions being before a committee and therefore not debatable here at the moment, if I may say so, is that the committee is forced to discuss this other question. I think that is good. It means we are giving some priority tonight to the question of health, and I urge the minister to realize that in this field of health it is not just the provision of services that matters but that health insurance is equally important. I am glad we are voting more money for this purpose. I hope when I put questions on the order paper next year or ask questions on the estimates the minister will not have to fall back on the assurance that the matter is not being neglected, but will be able to tell me in concrete terms what has been done.

Mr. Blair: Could I have the information I asked for?

Mr. Martin: The figure is $10,200.

Mr. Fleming: This afternoon when this subject of health insurance was being discussed the minister very properly made reference to two sound principles. The first was that, the matter of public health services being within the provincial field, anything done in this connection will have to be done in full co-operation with the provinces. The second was that nothing should be done to interfere with the relationship between doctor and patient, which has something very intimate and confidential about it. In view of the fact that the dominion-provincial conference is to be held in September, may I ask the minister if he has taken any steps as yet to see that the matter of a public health program is placed upon the agenda of that conference?

Mr. Martin: As my hon. friend knows from the statement made by the Prime Minister, the provinces were invited to suggest the items to be discussed. So far at least one province has included this item among its suggestions, and I expect that other provinces will do the same. So far as I know there has been no suggestion along that line as yet from the province of Ontario, but the suggestion has been made by at least one province, if not two, so the item certainly will be on the agenda.

Item agreed to.

Health services—

234. Blindness control, $35,320.

Mr. Fraser: Would the minister say exactly what his department is doing in regard to blindness control? I notice that only $6,000 is being provided for professional and special services, and I believe much more work should be done in this connection in Canada.

Mr. Martin: My hon. friend is touching a point that interests me very greatly. He will remember when I had the privilege of announcing that we would commence paying pensions to the blind at age 21, and we believe every endeavour should be made to see that those in receipt of pensions as well as those who are potential beneficiaries of pensions to the blind are so treated as to remove the necessity for pensions. We have a program with three provinces, and are prepared to enter into arrangements with all provinces, for dealing with people who are blind or going blind, in order to give them the necessary surgical and medical attention to prevent blindness. We have had some results. I know of one case which was brought to me by an hon. gentleman, the late Maurice Hartt. We were able to provide the necessary surgical treatment for this person, who was in receipt of a blind pension, as a result of which his eyesight was restored and he is no longer on the pension rolls.

Mr. Fraser: Do I understand that the only people who can be helped under this item are those in receipt of blind pensions?

Mr. Martin: That is right.

Mr. Fraser: What is done for the other people, who are not in receipt of pensions?

Mr. Martin: That is a provincial responsibility, and some of the provinces are doing great work in that regard. This item has to do with people who are in receipt of blind pensions. It does not mean they must be totally blind, but they must have the degree of blindness which entitles them to a pension.

Mr. Fraser: I do not want to hold up the item, but I am interested in this matter. I wonder if some campaign could not be put on to help these people. For instance, a person with too much sugar in his system will go blind. They are the people who get cataracts on their eyes, but that is not widely known. I believe matters like that could be put into the department's monthly bulletins.

Mr. Martin: Under the health grants we have two projects dealing with this very matter. We have under consideration now a pamphlet that we hope will receive wide circulation and which I know the Canadian National Institute for the Blind will be very interested in seeing.

Mr. Fraser: Then I am just going to pass on a little advice. In the Senate we have Dr. Veniot, who I think knows more about blindness and its cure than almost anyone else in the country.

Mr. Martin: He is a very good man.

Mr. Fraser: If the minister would have a conference with him and get his suggestions—

Mr. Martin: We have talked about it many times.

Mr. Fraser: Then I hope you accept his suggestions.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Martin.]

Health services—

235. Epidemiology, $35,780.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like to feel that I understood something about this item. Will the minister tell us in a word or two what is being done about this? I know what it means now.

Mr. Martin: If my hon. friend had consulted me instead of the dictionary I might have been able to give him the right answer and save his eyesight. This division was recommended first of all by the dominion council of health, which proposed the setting up of an organization in our department with regard to epidemics and the whole question of epidemiology. We acted upon that suggestion and made arrangements with the Rockefeller foundation, who made a survey of the health department organizations in the country in respect of this matter and then recommended the present set-up, which is essentially one of co-ordination in connection with similar efforts being made in some of the provinces. The functions of the division are to plan, co-ordinate and execute a national epidemiological program in conjunction with divisions or departments of governments, universities and certain organized groups in the dominion. It seeks to study the incidence and spread of disease in order to achieve adequate control methods throughout Canada. It conducts investigations into the control of those diseases which involve more than one province, or which by mutual agreement with the provinces are considered federal rather than provincial, such as plague, shellfish poisoning, and the like.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Does that mean there is a separate scientific department set up and working here in Ottawa doing that sort of thing? While I am on my feet, is any use made of the scientific set-up at the various universities?

Mr. Martin: Oh, a great deal. As a matter of fact Dr. Peart, the head of the division, is doing some work at Harvard now in connection with a study that was initiated at one of our Canadian universities. He is following up some work there because they have some special equipment.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Does the minister happen to know of any tangible result that can be expected, although not overnight? Is there any special tangible result to date?

Mr. Martin: I cannot say there have been any tangible results. This is a new division. At first we had difficulty getting personnel, but in conjunction with our laboratory of hygiene they are engaged with the universities and our own laboratory in a series of studies, all of which adds to the totality of knowledge, and results in achievement. But to say that we have there concrete things, no; to say they are exercising supervisory interest and continuing interest in all these matters, certainly yes, and very definitely.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): How many of the provinces are at work on this?

Mr. Martin: We have relations with eight of the provinces. We have theoretical relations with all ten in this field. There are two provinces that are not themselves sufficiently organized to make collaboration completely effective with them at the moment, but that collaboration will be made effective before too many months.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): How old is this division?

Mr. Martin: This particular division goes back about three and a half years in its present form.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): How many provinces had special divisions of this kind before?

Mr. Martin: I cannot say the exact number. I think there were about three. Dr. Jackson says four. I knew it was about that number.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The minister considered it necessary to have this additional organization in addition to what the provinces were doing?

Mr. Martin: The provinces themselves were the ones who asked for it. As I explained this afternoon, we have a dominion council of health that meets twice a year. The dominion council of health is a body made up of all provincial departments of health and the federal government. They meet in Ottawa. We bring them here and we discuss common matters, namely, those matters on which they can do a better job; those matters where we need not have duplication of effort; those matters where there should be co-ordination and the like.

Item agreed to.

National health branch—

Health services—

237. Medical services—Indians and Eskimos, $11,694,839.

Mr. Bater: I notice that this item is for Indians and Eskimos. Are they on a par to qualify for this assistance? Or am I correct in understanding that a full-blooded Indian to qualify must be a treaty Indian and reside within the boundaries of a reserve?

Mr. Martin: The answer is the latter. But I may say that while we have to realize the obligation under our financial commitments there are many areas where it is impossible to distinguish between the two groups.

Mr. Harkness: It would be helpful to the committee if the minister at the start of our consideration of the medical services for Indians and Eskimos would give us an outline as to what has been accomplished during the past year, particularly in the matter of extension of hospital services, and the reaching out, if I might call it that, of medical services to the Indians in the outlying areas; also what number of Indians have now been X-rayed for tuberculosis, and what was the result of that survey, and what steps have been taken to deal with the Indians who were found to be suffering from that disease.

Mr. Martin: As my hon. friend knows, the expenditures in this particular division have increased sixfold in the last six years. The total budget now for Indian medical services is about $11,700,000. Five years ago it was about $2 million. Eight years ago it was under $800,000. With these expenditures we are building up a whole network of hospital institutions across this country for the main purpose of doing our best to stamp out tuberculosis among the Indian and Eskimo population of this country. These hospitals are strategically located all over the country. To them must be added the number of nursing stations which are being built, the number of nurses who are being added to attend these institutions and the number of permanent and part-time doctors all over the country. I may say that the results are certainly most encouraging. To discharge on behalf of the people of this country the accepted responsibility for the health of 130,000 Indians and 8,000 Eskimos, we have a trained staff now of 1,150 in Indian health services. We have several hundred dentists who give part-time service, as well as some who give full-time service, although I must admit that our dental service program in this particular is not as complete as I should like to see it. The reason for that is largely the difficulty of getting dental personnel.

The results of this program of hospitalization enable me to say tonight that our statistics since 1944 show a 40 per cent decline in the tuberculosis mortality rate among Indians. I think that is an achievement of which this whole country should be proud, not an achievement that I am not responsible for; I am not putting it forward on that basis, but one that the director and those under him have to their credit in trying to stamp out this dread disease.

There are many areas yet where the job is colossal, but one of the things that I said in this house when I took over this portfolio on the first presentation of my estimates was that one of our objectives was to stamp out this dread disease. I said that we were doing our best to create the services by which this disease could be stamped out. With that in mind we have undertaken an X-ray program, which enables me to say tonight that in 1949, 75 per cent of Canada's entire native population was given a chest X-ray. That is no mean achievment. As a result of these X-rays, not only have we learned the incidence of t.b. but incidentally we have learned the prevalence of other diseases, and of other illnesses in Indians which, but for these X-rays, would not have been detected.

Mr. Harkness: I am glad to hear of the improvement which has taken place as far as t.b. is concerned. I wonder whether the minister can tell us what the t.b. rate is at the present time amongst the Indians and what it is amongst the white population?

Mr. Martin: Yes, I have that. Tubercular deaths per 100,000 population of Indians—I am giving the figures now for 1948—were 480·1 and 32·4 for the whites. My hon. friend has the figures that I gave last year which show the tremendous improvement. For instance, in 1947 it was 549 for the Indians and 38·2 for the whites.

Mr. Harkness: The last figures the minister has are the rates for 1948? He has not the rates for 1949?

Mr. Martin: I have some figures, but they are not official yet.

Mr. Harkness: I trust that this improvement between 1947-48 has continued. This rate is still extraordinarily high. I think the minister realizes that, but there is still considerable improvement to take place. There is still a great deal of work to be done along that line.

Mr. Martin: There is no doubt about that.

Mr. Harkness: I know the director and the people in the Indian health services branch know that, and are working on these problems. To come back to the matter of hospital construction, nursing stations and the like, can the minister tell us what hospitals were constructed or finished last year, and what nursing stations were put up?

Mr. Martin: The only hospital actually opened last year was at Sioux Lookout, besides about eleven nursing stations.

Mr. Harkness: Do I understand from that that this entire amount of $2,800,000 was spent on the Sioux Lookout hospital and the eleven nursing stations, or was a considerable amount of that on buildings to be completed in the coming year—or what is the situation?

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Mr. Harkness: What does "yes" mean?

Mr. Martin: Completed this year.

Mr. Harkness: What Indian hospitals did this vote cover? What ones are now under construction; and how many, if any, will be completed this year?

Mr. Martin: Norway House, Moose Factory and Hobbema.

Mr. Harkness: Are those hospitals or nursing stations?

Mr. Martin: Of course additional to this are some hospital residences in remote areas where we have to have hospital residences in order to attract medical personnel. In one place we have a nurses' residence, and two laundry buildings.

Mr. Harkness: As I understand it, there are two hospitals covered in this vote. They may be completed this year. Then there are residences for medical personnel. Is that the general situation?

Mr. Martin: Three hospitals.

Mr. Harkness: Are there any more nursing stations to be built this year, or is the program for nursing stations now complete?

Mr. Martin: No, there are eighteen new ones.

Mr. Harkness: Eighteen more included in this vote?

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Mr. Harkness: Are they pretty well scattered over the entire dominion?

Mr. Martin: Yes, all across the dominion.

Mr. Harkness: Then my next question concerns personnel. Looking at page 186 of the estimates there would seem to be 88 permanent employees and 1,094 temporary employees. In addition to this there are casual and other assistants amounting to $40,000 last year and $75,000 this year. What is the explanation for this proportion of about twelve to one of temporary as compared with permanent employees? Are a large number of these 1,094 temporaries part-time doctors? If so, how many are part-time doctors, and what are the others who come under that classification?

Mr. Martin: In the first place, our quota in the Indian health division is 30 per cent. The hon. member will understand that we have to maintain a balance between permanent and temporary employees.

Mr. Harkness: Quota of what?

Mr. Martin: Our quota of permanent employees is 30 per cent. The large number of temporaries is, first of all, due to that circumstance, and to the fact that we have engaged throughout the country a shifting personnel including orderlies, ward aides, men to look after furnaces, men to drive trucks and, as the Minister of Public Works says, charwomen. Then there are a large percentage of Indian personnel whom we seek to encourage.

Mr. Harkness: The minister says the quota of permanent employees is 30 per cent. However, the present quota is down to 8 per cent. That seems to be an extremely small number of people in permanent positions—and I suggest that in most instances having permanent employees tends to give a more efficient service.

Mr. Martin: We are working up to it. However, this branch, in the form in which it is, was established only in 1945. There has been a very great acceleration of the Indian health service work. As quickly as we can get it up to permanent status my hon. friend may be sure we will do so.

Mr. Harkness: To what extent are the Indians in the outlying areas now receiving medical assistance? I am thinking particularly of a group of Indians at Nordegg who have recently signed a treaty in Alberta. Of course there are numbers of bands of Indians all across the country who live in fairly remote areas and who, until fairly recently, received no medical attention whatsoever. What has been done to extend medical facilities to those people?

Mr. Martin: I believe I have covered that already by pointing out that 75 per cent of the native population have received chest X-rays. Then there has been the building of these nursing stations in the most remote areas. However, just as quickly as we can get personnel and get authorization we will reach the others with medical and hospital assistance. My hon. friend will see at once from the program of expansion that we are seeking to reach these numbers at an accelerated rate.

Mr. Harkness: Does the minister mean—

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Shaw: Mr. Chairman, last December and again in March of this year I found it necessary to direct some rather severe criticism against the Indian health services branch for its failure to take appropriate action in the matter of a very serious health problem among two bands of Indians in my constituency.

Tonight I rise to discuss the same subject, but not this time by way of criticism. In March, and during the weeks immediately following, certain very definite action was taken by the Indian health services branch to deal with the problem I had indicated, and which I had brought before the house. The reports I have received from that territory and the information I have procured as a result of personal investigation lead me to be extremely optimistic at the moment.

When speaking before I did not overestimate, nor did I underestimate the nature of the problem in that district. I also pointed out that I realized it would be an extremely difficult task for the department to deal effectively with that situation. I was not looking for results overnight. So long as I can feel convinced, as I am at the moment, that the branch is prepared to adopt the right attitude, and that it is prepared to deal with the problem in the most effective manner, it will have my support.

I wish to commend the minister and the director of health services as well as others in the department who have taken action in the matter, and who are now I believe facing up squarely to what was a rather sordid picture among the Indians.

The hon. member for Calgary East referred to one band that had recently accepted treaty. I was delighted when that occurred. No doubt it will be much easier for the department to render service to those Chippewa Indians now than it would have been if they had failed to accept the treaty. I have no hesitation in commending the activities which are now going on in that part of my constituency.

Mr. Harkness: There is one item of educational and informational publicity, for which $8,000 was voted last year and $5,000 this year. How is that put out to the Indians and what does it consist of?

Mr. Martin: We have some diet sheets and we have some still pictures and lantern slides. Then we have calendars and posters in the Indian language which have been prepared by people who have great experience. These are put out in an effort to bring home to the Indian the importance of diet, good medical care and hygiene, and they set out particulars of family allowances and so on.

Mr. Harkness: That sounds like a sensible program. I was afraid it might consist of reading material and I know that many of these people cannot read and it would not be of much use to them. There is a considerable increase in travelling expenses from $270,000 to $350,000. I have urged consistently that the medical personnel should get around to more bands and people and if that is to be accomplished by this increase in travelling expenses it is all to the good. Is a great deal of this made up by people travelling to different parts of Canada on administrative duties?

Mr. Martin: There would be about $8,000 in the latter category. The director does a great deal of travelling, as he must and should do. As my hon. friend knows, the organization of the Indian health branch is pretty well on a regional and provincial basis. The increase in expenditures is largely due to the fact that new and larger hospitals have been built and Indians are being transported by different means from the remote regions to these hospital centres. They are transported by air when necessary. Survey teams are being sent into different areas where there are no hospitals. I was sorry my hon. friend was not here this afternoon when this matter was dealt with.

Item agreed to.

Health services—

238. Civil aviation medicine, $54,880.

Mr. Blair: Of this amount of $54,880 a total of $22,800 is for travelling expenses, and there are six temporary assistants totalling $18,930. What work is done by this branch?

Mr. Martin: We bring private practitioners from all over Canada to give them special courses in civil aviation medicine, which work is carried on in conjunction with the Department of Transport.

Item agreed to.

General health grants—

239. To authorize and provide for health grants to the provinces upon the terms and in the amounts detailed in the estimates in accordance with regulations prescribed by the governor in council including authority, notwithstanding section 29 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, to make commitments for the current year not to exceed a total amount of $34,482,926, $25,000,000.

Mr. Thatcher: This is the item under which federal grants for hospital construction are made. I should like to detain the house for a few minutes to discuss this matter, as it is most important to my constituents who are trying to build a new hospital wing. These federal grants have gone a long way toward alleviating the shortage of hospital beds in the nation but we have still a considerable distance to go. In my own home city for instance, some nights there are as many as 150 people who cannot get hospital beds. At times the doctors have to send patients to hotel rooms.

As I say, these federal grants are all to the good and I congratulate the minister on having introduced them. However, there are certain weaknesses in the legislation which makes it impossible for some municipalities and cities to properly utilize it. We in Moose Jaw want to take advantage of these grants but so far we have not been able to, and there are many other municipalities in the same position. The Auditor General's report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1949, shows that of the $13 million voted by this parliament for hospital construction a total of more than $10 million was allowed to lapse. This must be evidence of some weaknesses in the legislation.

I have had considerable correspondence with hospital authorities, with doctors, and with city councillors in Moose Jaw, and I have been asked to propose to the minister a few changes in the legislation so that more municipalities may take advantage of it.

The first weakness, as I see it, is that these grants are made only for the purpose of providing new beds. They are apparently based on the premise that other facilities are not needed. The shortcomings of this formula are obvious. With modern advances in hospital care, the need for extended facilities and up-to-date equipment has increased enormously.

Today in Canada there are dozens of hospitals which have enough beds but which lack X-ray rooms, operating rooms, diet kitchens and things like that. Unless the federal government is concerned more with quantity than with quality, surely the formula should be revised to take care of the need for these central services. To say that our hospitals can be improved only by the addition of beds, is like saying that improvements in our railroad system should be measured only by the number of box cars we add to it.

Many hospital authorities have asked for such a change. For instance, the Canadian Hospital Council, which met recently in convention, passed the following resolution:

Be it resolved that the Canadian Hospital Council request the Minister of National Health and Welfare to extend the scope of hospital construction grants, to cover part of the costs of construction of . . . essential and supporting services, and further be it resolved that construction grants apply to all new constructions . . . where it can be shown that an existent structure is obsolete for efficient patient care.

I ask the minister to consider changing these grants so that these central facilities may be provided as well as new beds.

A second weakness in the legislation, as I understand it, is that it does not include assistance for the construction of nurses' residences. Obviously there is not much use in providing a lot of beds, if you do not have nurses to look after the patients. They might as well stay at home. There have been many requests from responsible authorities to have assistance for this kind of construction provided. For instance, the Canadian Hospital Council at its last annual meeting asked that the grants cover part of the cost of constructing nurses' residences. The Ontario Hospital Association made the same request, as did the Alberta Hospital Association.

The third weakness of the legislation I believe is the rigidity of the financial clause in order in council P.C. 2060. This reads:

> That the estimates provide that the distribution of the amount each province may become entitled to receive shall be on the basis of $1,000 for each active treatment bed or bed equivalent and $1,500 per chronic or convalescent bed as hereinafter defined.

The order in council provides that payment shall be made of the balance required to provide:

> an amount up to one-third of the total cost of construction or to provide an amount calculated on the basis set forth in paragraph (a) of this section ($1,000 per active treatment bed or $1,500 per chronic or invalid bed), whichever is the lesser.

Theoretically the present legislation provides that the federal government will grant up to one-third the cost of building a hospital but the experience in most provinces over the past several years is that the federal grant never exceeds 20 per cent; and, as far as university hospitals are concerned, it is sometimes only 10 per cent. Premier Duplessis of Quebec made the following statement on October 15, 1949, as reported in the Quebec Chronicle-Telegram:

> The federal contribution represents about one-tenth of the cost of each new hospital bed in this province with the other nine-tenths being paid by cheque and by the institutions interested.

As I see it, this is the result of a formula which is based on a net gain in beds, which certainly is no gauge of the hospital's usefulness or of its cost. It seems to me that the formula would be much more useful if it were to provide that the federal government would match the provincial contribution, whatever the amount might be, for each hospital project.

I think it is obvious, and I think the minister will admit, that while a lot of good has been accomplished, there are nevertheless certain weaknesses to the order in council. I suggest to the minister that while the legislation is before us he should consider amending it. I do not feel it would cost the taxpayers any more money, and it would make the act much more effective.

I have then four recommendations to make to the minister. First of all, I suggest that he permit the grants to be used at least in part for extending laboratories, X-ray, operating room, dietary and other administration facilities. Second, I suggest that he permit the grants to be used when necessary for the establishment of nurses' residences. Third, I suggest that he permit the federal government to pay one-third of the costs of construction, whatever the amount might be, for each hospital project as long as the provincial government recommends it. Fourth, I suggest that the federal government should make loans available to the municipalities at low interest rates to help them finance their share of the cost, and allow them to repay the loans over a period of years.

These are suggestions which would help us in Moose Jaw. I think they would help in many parts of Canada. I wish the minister would tell parliament and the people what he can do in this connection.

Mr. Martin: I cannot do anything at the moment on that.

Mr. Knowles: In the course of his remarks the hon. member for Moose Jaw referred to the possibility of the legislative provisions being amended. I suggest that one of the difficulties is that as yet we have no legislation respecting these grants. They have been in effect now since 1948 but each year they have simply appeared as items in the estimates.

Mr. Martin: I hope we can correct that.

Mr. Knowles: Here again is the persuasive voice of the minister expressing the hope that it can be corrected. That is a hope we have had for a number of years. As a matter of fact I recall sitting in the gallery of the Manitoba provincial legislature at Easter this year and hearing the provincial minister of health, the Hon. Ivan Schultz, answer a question on this very point. Lloyd Stinson, one of the members for Winnipeg South, asked when this matter was going to be put on a statutory basis so that the provinces and others interested would know what the provisions actually were. Mr. Schultz assured Mr. Stinson that he had been assured by Mr. Martin that it would not be long before this would be done. When is it going to take place? When are we going to have it put on a statutory basis? If I may remind the minister, this is another of the items referred to in the memorandum of the Auditor General as an item in the estimates that legislates which the Auditor General is prepared to condone on a temporary basis but not as a permanent practice. The minister is moving his head a lot. Has he no comment to make?

Mr. Martin: Not at the moment, no.

Mr. Thatcher: I would still like the minister to tell me why it would not be feasible to allow these grants to be used for the other facilities which accompany the extra beds?

Mr. Martin: It is a question of funds. If I had unlimited money I could do more than I am doing. I will give consideration to the representations made by my hon. friend.

Mr. Thatcher: I suppose the minister will tell me this is government policy, but would it not be possible to make low interest loans to the municipalities so that they could take advantage of the legislation?

Mr. Martin: Anything is possible but whether it is desirable is another matter.

Mr. Knowles: The minister talks about what he would do if he had unlimited funds. May I remind him when the policy was first instituted in 1948 the figure then was about $30 million a year, and we pointed out that was only one-fifth of the $150 million set out in the green book of 1945. We were assured then that the amount would increase over the years. Nevertheless the actual cash to be voted this year is down to only $25 million.

Mr. Martin: That is simply the estimate for this year, but in our discussions with the provinces it was estimated that it would reach $34 million, and if we reach that figure we are prepared to meet it.

Mr. Knowles: But the additional amount will be paid next year; this is only a commitment authority.

Mr. Thatcher: I do not wish to be persistent but the minister said that these extra facilities could not be provided because of the cost.

Mr. Martin: If the hon. member will allow me, I have to leave in the morning and I am trying to get as much through as I can. I cannot say any more than I have said. There is only so much money available. Our purpose is to provide hospital beds, and in co-operation with the provinces we have been successful to the extent of over 21,000 beds. If we built nurses' homes and provided all these other things there would not be enough money at our disposal. There are some matters that we regard as within the financial responsibility of the provinces. There are some things we must leave to them. I am sorry that at the moment I cannot meet my hon. friend's request.

Mr. Thatcher: Last year parliament voted $13 million and more than $10 million lapsed. Therefore I do not see how the minister can say that it is a question of finance. If you add 100 beds to a hospital and still have no extra operating space what good will it do? You cannot handle any more patients. It does not seem to me to be the proper way to do it.

[Mr. Thatcher.]

Mr. Gillis: The minister said that he would give consideration to the recommendations made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, and at least he might think that the hon. member is expressing the opinion of the people in his own riding. Before coming here for this session I travelled over a considerable part of Nova Scotia and discussed these matters with some of the people who are handling the grants. The reaction I got in that province was almost the same word for word as what the hon. member for Moose Jaw has said. I will not repeat it, but I trust the minister will give serious consideration to the matter.

Item agreed to.

Welfare branch—

241. Family allowances—administration, $1,960,952.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I have taken the suggestion the minister made this afternoon that we should speak to specific items rather than discuss everything on the administration item.

Mr. Martin: You will be giving the house a great example.

Mrs. Fairclough: Thank you. As a member of the opposition I must confess to some resentment at the statement made by the minister this afternoon to the effect that members of the opposition are irritated by the accomplishments of his department. I trust that the minister was not entirely serious in making that statement. In so far as I am concerned, I may say that, because of the benefit to the people of Canada as a whole, I would be delighted to acknowledge a brilliant success in the minister's department, but I would want that success to be one of efficiency as well as brilliancy. I would want the department to use every dollar expended to its fullest extent. I think that is the purpose for which we are examining these estimates in detail. We are all gravely concerned about this department. So far as my own riding is concerned, I like to know where this money is being spent, and what results are being obtained. Everything that is spent in the department of welfare reflects itself in municipal costs. Municipal costs in turn reflect themselves in the tax rates which are struck in the municipalities, which in turn become a burden upon the small home owner. After several years' experience in municipal work I have become keenly conscious of the increasing burden which is borne by the small home owners of this country by reason of welfare costs which are paid by municipalities, and which I have always maintained and still maintain should be assumed by some higher levels of government.

Mr. Chairman, I take up the challenge which the minister threw out this afternoon. I should like to make a definite suggestion in connection with this item. I notice that in the details on page 189, at the foot of the page, there is the note "educational and informational publicity", and the amount of the estimate is reduced from $95,000 for last year to $56,500 for this year. From that I would presume that the activities of this department are to be curtailed. I should like to suggest that some of this money be spent in giving advice to at least some of the recipients of family allowances. The suggestion which I have to make is that the department should consider enclosing with the family allowance cheques dietary advice.

I realize there are many people in this country who probably do not need such advice, and who are well informed. But there are a great many others who do need it. Today there are families living in two and three rooms in many municipalities in this country. Under the conditions which prevail in housing, they are living in quarters in which there is no adequate provision for food storage so it is necessary for them to live from hand to mouth. The children come home from school at noon, and the mother sends them out to the corner grocery store. They return with small quantities of food, such as a few slices of cooked meat and even a quarter pound of butter because they cannot store larger quantities. Owing to this situation the money which is going into those homes, ostensibly for the care of those children, for nutrition and so on, is being spent on the most expensive type of food that the homemaker can buy. It is being spent on that food because, in many instances, the mother of the family does not realize there is a better way in which to spend that money.

I believe that the department could serve a useful purpose in ensuring the more efficient use of the moneys which are expended on family allowances if a careful study of this question were made, and if this information were given to the mothers in simple form. There should not be too many suggestions on one sheet, but a simple enclosure with each family allowance cheque suggesting inexpensive meals, and various domestic economies in the purchase of foods and the storage of food which would be practicable in those restricted quarters. As I said before, Mr. Chairman, I am throwing out this suggestion to the minister. I do not want to take up too much time on this particular point, but I think it is worth while for the department to consider some manner, after the exchanges which have taken place here today, of getting the publicity of the department to serve a more useful purpose.

Mr. Fleming: I wonder if the minister would put on the record the tables which he usually puts on the record at this point, giving in tabular form the information in relation to payments.

Mr. Martin: Yes, I shall table family allowance statistics based on May, 1950, family allowance payments, and the family allowance payments for November, 1949, to May 1950. I should also like to congratulate the hon. member who has just spoken.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the minister permission to put these tables on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Martin: The tables follow:

FAMILY ALLOWANCES DIVISION

STATISTICS BASED ON MAY, 1950, FAMILY ALLOWANCES PAYMENTS

Province	Number of families in pay	Number of children in pay	Average allowance per child	Average allowance per family	Total amount
Newfoundland	50,808	140,345	$5.99	$16.55	$ 840,769
Prince Edward Island	13,234	33,854	6.04	15.44	204,372
Nova Scotia	91,168	214,806	6.03	14.22	1,296,429
New Brunswick	72,668	189,617	6.00	15.65	1,137,061
Quebec	510,457	1,362,700	6.01	16.03	8,184,606
Ontario	607,515	1,214,358	6.01	12.01	7,297,592
Manitoba	106,284	222,597	6.01	12.59	1,338,132
Saskatchewan	117,438	262,869	6.06	13.56	1,592,075
Alberta	131,769	282,065	6.02	12.89	1,698,823
British Columbia	156,887	301,571	5.96	11.46	1,798,704
Northwest Territories and Yukon	3,890	8,337	6.18	13.26	51,567
National	1,862,118	4,233,119	$6.01	$13.66	$25,440,130

NOTE.—Corresponding table for last year appears at page 3017 of Hansard, dated December 9, 1949.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

FAMILY ALLOWANCES PAYMENTS NOVEMBER 1949 TO MAY 1950

Province	November	December	January	February	March	April	May
Newfoundland	$ 820,778	$ 827,236	$ 828,949	$ 833,535	$ 835,534	$ 833,866	$ 840,769
Prince Edward Island	201,818	202,499	201,899	202,546	202,853	203,630	204,372
Nova Scotia	1,282,626	1,282,783	1,286,776	1,287,263	1,291,026	1,293,028	1,296,429
New Brunswick	1,118,844	1,123,581	1,127,572	1,219,309	1,130,338	1,134,336	1,137,061
Quebec	8,060,789	8,052,284	8,118,084	8,127,586	8,124,539	8,166,550	8,184,606
Ontario	7,133,872	7,168,296	7,194,800	7,218,728	7,252,071	7,275,486	7,297,592
Manitoba	1,311,964	1,317,268	1,319,564	1,325,092	1,328,884	1,334,381	1,338,132
Saskatchewan	1,584,948	1,581,192	1,580,987	1,582,619	1,585,299	1,587,076	1,592,075
Alberta	1,664,852	1,671,338	1,677,599	1,679,183	1,685,215	1,691,449	1,698,823
British Columbia	1,756,939	1,762,705	1,772,897	1,782,979	1,788,233	1,793,373	1,798,704
Northwest Territories and Yukon	52,133	51,554	50,669	54,510	51,804	50,719	51,567
National	$24,989,563	$25,040,736	$25,159,796	$25,223,350	$25,275,796	$25,363,894	$ 25,440,130

NOTE.—Corresponding table for last year appears at page 3,018 of Hansard, dated December 9, 1949

Mr. Drew: I assume the minister will adhere to his undertaking to let the item in regard to old age pensions stand?

Mr. Martin: Definitely.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Drew: No, item 241 is family allowances, but it is shown as a combined item with 242.

Mr. Martin: Item 242 is the administration item. Item 241 deals with family allowance administration, and item 242 deals with the administration of old age pensions.

Mr. Drew: As long as there is no confusion about it. The page in my book shows old age pensions as coming under item 241. So long as we are quite clear that the old age pension item stands, that is all I am asking.

Mr. Martin: Yes.

Mr. Fleming: Has the minister the information as to the administrative costs with respect to family allowances for the other two departments concerned besides his own?

Mr. Martin: Yes, the cost of administration of family allowances for the fiscal year ending March 31 amounts to $4 million. The cost to the treasury department was $2,207,-851.56. The cost to the Department of National Health and Welfare was $1,833,-387.29. The cost to the Public Works Department was approximately $200,000. It is therefore indicated that the total costs amount to 1·43 per cent of the family allowances paid during the fiscal year, which is considerably less than is found under similar programs administered elsewhere.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Martin.]

Welfare branch—

242. Old age pensions (including pensions to the blind)—administration, $86,320.

Item stands.

Welfare branch—

243. National physical fitness—administration, $74,868.

Mr. Fleming: In connection with item 243, a Canadian Press dispatch of May 5 reports the resignation from the National Council on Physical Fitness of Dr. J. B. Kirkpatrick of McGill university. The article reads as follows:

> In a letter of resignation, the director of physical education at McGill protested against the lack of parliamentary interest in the council's work.
>
> Dr. Kirkpatrick said a bill for revision of the National Physical Fitness Act has not been introduced in the House of Commons.
>
> "In terms of federal financial support for the fitness program, we are no further ahead than we were seven years ago," he said in the letter.

Dr. Kirkpatrick represented Saskatchewan on the council. Has the minister any statement to make on this subject, in so far as the bill which was apparently to have been introduced is concerned?

Mr. Martin: I cannot say anything about that. It is true that Dr. Kirkpatrick resigned, feeling that more money should be appropriated for physical fitness, and I cannot say that in theory there was not a good deal to his point of view. There again, however, there are priorities of obligation. This matter is continually under review and discussion with the National Council on Physical Fitness, and is continuously being studied.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Martin: The Minister of Public Works calls my attention to the fact that items 246 to 258 inclusive cover miscellaneous grants, and I wonder if we could pass those.

Mr. Knowles: As long as you leave items 242 and 245.

Welfare branch—

National physical fitness—

244. Assistance to provinces, $150,288.

Mr. McLure: What provinces are getting this assistance, and how much to each province?

Mr. Martin: All provinces but Quebec. Perhaps I could table the list of expenditures.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Martin: The amount of assistance by provinces was as follows:

National Physical Fitness—Assistance to Provinces

Newfoundland	....
Prince Edward Island	$ 1,858.50
Nova Scotia	11,426.92
New Brunswick	8,943.75
Quebec	....
Ontario	....
Manitoba	7,237.93
Saskatchewan	17,520.75
Alberta	16,463.71
British Columbia	15,993.00
Northwest Territories	234.00
	$79,678.56

Item agreed to.

Mr. Martin: Could we not call item 245?

Mr. Fleming: If you will let us discuss it for a moment.

Mr. Martin: Could we not sit for a few minutes to discuss this question?

Mr. Knowles: An hon. member who is not here at the moment wanted to say something about this item. It is after eleven o'clock.

Mr. Martin: I should be very glad to give consideration to what he would say.

Mr. Knowles: No; items 242 and 245 should stand.

Progress reported.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Mr. Hughes Cleaver (Halton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask for permission to revert to the presenting of reports of committees, and to present the sixth report of the standing committee on banking and commerce, in English and French, with copies of evidence attached.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow we will take up the following bills: Bill No. 307, to amend the Trust Companies Act; Bill No. 308, to amend the Loan Companies Act. These bills have come back from the banking and commerce committee. Bill No. 313, to amend the statute law; the resolution preceding the measure to amend the Judges Act, 1946; Bill No. 267, respecting Indians. Then we will go into supply and call finance, secretary of state and post office.

It being five minutes after eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

151. To provide for expenses of the economics and research branch—(formerly under departmental administration), $379,455.

152. Annuities Act, $802,660.

153. Fair wages, conciliation, industrial relations, industrial disputes investigations, including the administration of legislation relating thereto, and for activities re promotion of co-operation in industry between labour and management, $330,255.

154. Canada labour relations board, $11,500.

155. International labour conferences, $63,745.

156. Labour Gazette and other publications authorized by Labour Department Act, $116,763.

157. To provide for the effective organization and use of agricultural manpower, including recruiting, transporting and placing workers on farms and related industries and assistance to the provinces pursuant to agreements that may be entered into by the Minister of Labour with the provinces and approved by the governor in council, $320,000.

Vocational Training Co-operative Act, 1942—

158. Administration, $37,930.

Expenditures for vocational training under the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, 1942, and agreements between the dominion and provinces approved by the governor in council, including vocational school assistance, projects for training of persons to fit them for gainful employment, youth training, apprenticeship training, vocational training at secondary school level, foremanship and supervisory training and for training of members of His Majesty's forces and other persons to fit them for skilled armed service occupations and to authorize the Minister of Labour to enter into an agreement with any province on terms approved by the governor in council for such expenditures, as well as to provide for undischarged commitments of previous years—

159. Training payments to the provinces, $3,333,000.

160. Payments to the provinces for capital expenditures for vocational schools, buildings and equipment, $2,250,000.

Government employees compensation—

161. Administration of the Government Employees Compensation Act, $61,510.

Terminable services—

162. To provide for expenses, including authority to continue the regional boards known as "advisory boards labour department" to act in an advisory capacity to the Minister of Labour for the coordination of the work of the various divisions of the Department of Labour and the immigration branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, $45,915.

163. Vocational training for discharged members of Canada's armed forces, including undischarged commitments of previous years, $50,000.

Supply—Health and Welfare

164. To provide the necessary financial requirements to complete activities for the reclocation, maintenance and welfare of persons of the Japanese race in Canada, including provision for undischarged commitments under agreements with the provinces and to continue the appointment of necessary temporary assistance required for the administration thereof, $52,780.

165. To provide for payment to the national film board for educational films for exhibition, $24,000.

166. To provide for expenses that may be incurred in the arranging for and the movement of workers from outside Canada to work on farms and other essential industry in Canada when Canadian labour is not available to meet the need; including costs connected with the supervision and welfare of persons already immigrated to Canada under former authorized labour movements and administrative expenses connected therewith, $783,340.

B—Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940—

167. Administration, including expenditures incurred in connection with the activities of the national employment service as delegated by the Minister of Labour in accordance with section 88 of the act (including technical personnel division), $22,043,330.

168. Government's contribution to the unemployment insurance fund, $23,000,000.

169. To provide for the transfer of labour to and from places where employment is available in agriculture and industry and expenses incidental thereto, in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $200,000.

170. To provide for the payment of unemployment assistance to certain residents of Newfoundland to give effect to the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada, in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, and such assistance shall be deemed to be a benefit or payment within the meaning of sections 33 and 67 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940, $1,500,000.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

215. Departmental administration, $859,720.

Health services—

216. National health branch—administration, $128,725.

217. Food and drugs, $704,450.

218. Proprietary or patent medicines, $27,335.

219. Opium and narcotic drugs, $138,295.

220. Quarantine and leprosy, $290,618.

221. Laboratory of hygiene, $559,205.

222. Immigration medical inspection, $899,228.

223. Child and maternal health, $80,030.

224. Public health engineering, $147,410.

225. Treatment of sick mariners, $676,771.

226. Industrial health, $139,915.

227. Civil service health, $221,745.

228. Nutrition, $132,275.

229. Venereal disease control, $39,620.

230. Health insurance studies, $68,241.

231. Dental health, $42,515.

232. Hospital designs, $26,840.

233. Mental health, $86,420.

234. Blindness control, $35,320.

235. Epidemiology, $35,780.

236. Grants to institutions—assisting sailors, in the amounts detailed in the estimates, $2,600.

237. Medical services—Indians and Eskimos, $11,694,839.

238. Civil aviation medicine, $54,880.

General health grants—

239. To authorize and provide for health grants to the provinces upon the terms and in the amounts detailed in the estimates in accordance with regulations prescribed by the governor in council including authority, notwithstanding section 29 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, to make commitments for the current year not to exceed a total amount of $34,482,926, $25,000,000.

Welfare branch—

240. Welfare branch administration, $32,815.

Family allowances—

241. Administration, $1,960,952.

National physical fitness—

243. Administration, $74,868.

244. Assistance to provinces, $150,288.

Miscellaneous grants—

246. Canadian welfare council, $12,600.

247. Canadian national committee for mental hygiene, $10,000.

248. Health League of Canada, $10,000.

249. Canadian Public Health Association, $5,000.

250. Canadian National Institute for the Blind, $45,000.

251. L'Association Canadienne Francaise des Aveugles, $6,000.

252. L'Institut Nazareth de Montreal, $4,050.

253. Montreal Association for the Blind, $4,050.

254. Canadian Tuberculosis Association, $20,250.

255. Victorian Order of Nurses, $13,100.

256. St. John Ambulance Association, $10,000.

257. Canadian Red Cross, $10,000.

258. Canadian Paraplegic Association, $15,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 21, 1950

The house met at eleven o'clock.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Third report of standing committee on external affairs.—Mr. Bradette.

REFERENCE OF CERTAIN ESTIMATES TO COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (Minister of Public Works): By leave of the house, Mr. Speaker, I move:

That items 64 to 84 inclusive of the main estimates 1950-51, approved and reported upon this day by the standing committee on external affairs, be referred back to the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH PREMIER OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to table copies, in English and in French, of a letter addressed to me under date of June 6 by the premier of British Columbia respecting the proposed general conference to be held in the autumn of this year, and copies of my reply under date of June 12.

INCOME TAX

CHANGES IN REGULATIONS WITH RESPECT TO RATES OF DEPRECIATION

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on March 28, 1950, I advised hon. members that there had been representations regarding the regulations covering depreciation, particularly as to some of the rates, and the limitation of the allowance for corporations to the amounts charged in their financial statements.

I promised that careful consideration would be given to these matters, and that the government's decision would be announced in due course. I am now glad to be able to advise hon. members that certain revisions have been made in the regulations, particularly in regulation 1100(4), and that these changes, which were effected by order in council, P.C. 2576 of May 23, 1950, have been published in the Canada Gazette of June 14, 1950, part II, Statutory Orders and Regulations.

I now wish to table a copy of the statutory orders and regulations that contain the changes.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

MOUNTED POLICE—SECURITY BRANCH—SALARIES

Mr. Fulton:

What is the average yearly salary paid to members of the security branch of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Mr. Garson: The salary paid to members of the special (security) branch of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police drawn from the regular strength of the force and the civil service is in accordance with normal civil service and Royal Canadian Mounted Police pay scale.

PASPEBIAC, QUE., WHARF

Mr. Courtemanche:

1. Was any repair or construction work done to the wharf at Paspebiac, Bonaventure county, Quebec, during the fall of 1949?
2. If so, were tenders called and where were they posted?
3. What are the names of those who tendered and the amount of their respective tenders?
4. Who was awarded the contract, and at what price?
5. Has the work been accepted? If so, by what engineer?
6. Has the work been paid for in full? If so, on what date?
7. Were any extras granted over and above the contract price?
8. If so, in what amount and to whom?
9. Who supervised the work?
10. What was the unit price for each item of the contract?

Mr. Fournier (Hull):

1. Yes.

2. (a) Yes, but not posted; (b) tenders invited from local contractors.

3. Arthur Bujold, $27,058.30; J. Romeo Allard, $28,375.50. (Tender was also asked from Mr. Julien Cavanagh, but he did not submit a price).

4. Arthur Bujold, $27,058.30.

5. (a) Yes; (b) Robert Blais, chief engineer.

6. (a) Yes; (b) final payment made on January 21, 1950.

7. Yes, for additional work.

8. (a) $8,421.74; (b) Arthur Bujold.

9. Alphonse Bellavance (staff engineer).

10. Demolition, $18 per M.B.M.; Flooring, $125 per M.B.M.; Sheathing, $130 per M.B.M.; Floor joists, caps, waling and wheel guards, $200 per M.B.M.; Braces, $240 per M.B.M.; Piling, $1.65 per lin. ft.

HEALTH GRANTS—HOSPITAL CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Thatcher:

1. Has the Department of Health and Welfare received requests from hospital associations asking for changes in the hospital construction grant formula?

2. If so, how many, and what are the names of each association and the change or changes suggested by each of them?

Mr. Martin:

1. Yes.

2. 6.

Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities:

Claimed that the present grant formula restricting federal contribution to $1,000 and $1,500 per bed, with the proviso that the grant shall not exceed one-third of the total cost, is unsuited to the needs of the province in that it requires, for full utilization of the grant, additional bed construction at an annual rate in excess of financial capacity of the province.

Recommended a more flexible formula by removing these specific references to net increase in beds and permitting the matching of provincial grants without restriction in the maximum federal contribution.

Recommended that the range of qualifying expenditures be broadened to include nurses' quarters, nurses' training facilities, laboratories, X-ray departments, and other facilities essential to modern and efficient services.

Saskatchewan Urban Muncipalities Association:

Resolution passed at annual convention of Urban Municipalities Association, and forwarded to Paul Martin on October 19, 1949:

"Whereas under an order in council P.C. 3403, pertaining to the federal policy of grants to hospitals, as recommended by the Minister of National Health and Welfare under section 4B whereby grants are made for increasing the bed capacity, with no provision for auxiliary hospital buildings or replacing of buildings condemned by the provincial department of public health;

"Therefore be it resolved that the Minister of National Health and Welfare give consideration to including in order in council P.C. 3403, section 4B, grants for replacement of auxiliary hospital buildings and buildings condemned by the department of public health as outlined above, and further that the federal government be requested to increase the grants per bed in order to meet cost of construction."

Manitoba Hospital Association:

Recommended that in cases where hospital buildings are demolished and replaced by new hospital construction, grants made under such circumstances include all beds constructed and not net bed gain only.

Requested that the possibility of setting aside some of the grant for training of hospital personnel be explored.

Recommended that grants be made for construction of additional nurses' beds on the same basis as set forth in the regulations for patients' beds, and that in the case of other facilities, grants be made on a square foot basis similar to the provision for health units.

Associated Hospitals of Alberta:

Resolution passed at the 1949 convention of the Associated Hospitals of Alberta, and forwarded to Hon. Paul Martin on November 22, 1949:

"Whereas some hospitals are discouraged from modernizing their hospitals by building auxiliary services or are loath to build to increase the number of beds when the hospital construction grants are to apply only to the net increase in the number of hospital beds;

"And whereas an increase in the number of hospital beds also means an increase in all service departments, including nurses' homes, boiler plants, etc;

"And whereas lack of adequate accommodation for nurses tends to decrease the number of nurses in training and to prevent some hospitals from getting an adequate staff of nurses;

"Therefore be it resolved that we petition the dominion government to extend hospital construction grants to all phases of general hospital construction, and particularly for nurses' home construction."

Maritime Hospital Association:

Resolution passed at the annual meeting of the Maritime Hospital Association, and forwarded to Hon. Paul Martin on September 19, 1949:

"Whereas the federal health plan aims to provide adequate hospitalization for patients requiring it, and

"Whereas it is absolutely necessary to have nurses to care for the patients hospitalized under this plan, and

"Whereas it is impossible for municipalities to pay the complete cost of erecting nurses' residences:

"Be it resolved that the Maritime Hospital Association make representation to the provincial and federal departments concerned with a view to having the present construction grants extended to include construction of any and all buildings necessary for the proper maintenance of a hospital unit and with particular reference to nurses' residences."

Canadian Hospital Council:

Recommended use of the grant for construction of accommodation for nurses in training.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—NEWFOUNDLAND—ROLLING STOCK

Mr. Higgins:

1. Have plans been made by the Canadian National Railways to purchase any rolling stock for that part of its system situated in Newfoundland?
2. If so, for what rolling stock?

Mr. Chevrier:

The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Mail cars, 3; Baggage cars, 3; Express refrigerators, 10; Sleeping cars, 6; Automobile cars, 25; Boxcars, 60; Air dump cars, 20; Jordan spreader, 1; 50-ton locomotive crane, 1.

WAGE EARNERS AND UNEMPLOYED, 1931-49

Mr. Jones:

1. What was the estimated total number of wage earners in Canada, in each year from 1931 to 1949?
2. What was the number of unemployed in Canada for each of the above years?

Mr. Mitchell:

1. Number of wage and salary workers in Canada for each year from 1931 to 1949:

1931	2,573,000
1932	2,498,000
1933	2,398,000
1934	2,570,000
1935	2,518,000
1936	2,559,000
1937	2,680,000
1938	2,704,000
1939	2,724,000
1940	2,768,000
1941	2,817,000
1942	3,102,000
1943	3,237,000
1944	3,251,000
1945	3,206,000
1946	3,104,000
1947	3,233,000
1948	3,364,000
1949	3,496,000

The data for the years 1940 and 1942-1945 inclusive are approximations only based on the best available information. All figures refer to June of each year.

2. Number of unemployed in Canada for each year from 1931 to 1949:

1931	440,000
1932	627,000
1933	681,000
1934	524,000
1935	509,000
1936	458,000
1937	327,000
1938	400,000
1939	395,000
1940	450,000
1941	200,000
1942	130,000
1943	75,000
1944	60,000
1945	70,000
1946	126,000
1947	91,000
1948	82,000
1949	103,000

Prior to 1940, the above data only refer to unemployed persons who usually worked for wages and salary. Thus, certain groups of unemployed persons, such as young people seeking jobs for the first time, are excluded. Figures for the years 1940 to 1945 inclusive are approximations based on the best available information. Data for the remaining years are based on a sample labour force survey conducted by the dominion bureau of statistics. All figures refer to June of each year.

MACAULAY, NICOLLS, MAITLAND BUILDING, VANCOUVER, B.C.

Mr. Green:

1. From what persons, firms and corporations were tenders received for alterations for various government departments in the Macaulay, Nicolls, Maitland building, Howe and Hastings streets, Vancouver, British Columbia, as called for by advertisement dated on or about May 12, 1950?
2. To what persons, firms and corporations were blue prints and specifications of the work supplied?
3. What were the amounts set out in the different tenders as the price for doing such work?

Mr. Fournier (Hull):

1. G. D. McLean and Associates Ltd., M. Kampferer; Dawson & Hall Ltd.

2. Dawson & Hall Ltd., Vancouver; Jarvis Electric Co., Vancouver; M. Kampferer, Vancouver; G. D. McLean and Associates Ltd., Vancouver; Nova Electric Ltd., Vancouver; C. J. Oliver & Son, Vancouver.

3. G. D. McLean and Associates Ltd., $21,669; M. Kampferer, $27,741; Dawson & Hall Ltd., $29,800.

ABBOTSFORD, B.C., POST OFFICE

Mr. Green:

1. Has a contract been let for the construction of a post office building at Abbotsford, British Columbia?

Questions

2. If so, to what firm?
3. At what price?

Mr. Fournier (Hull):

1. Yes.

2. Allan & Viner Construction Company Limited.

3. $102,000.

LADNER, B.C., POST OFFICE

Mr. Green:

1. Has the government purchased a site for a post office at Ladner, British Columbia?
2. If so, as of what date, and from whom was it purchased?
3. What was the price of such site?
4. Were any valuations of the site obtained prior to such purchase?
5. If so, from whom, and what were the respective amounts thereof?

Mr. Fournier (Hull):

1. Yes.

2. Purchase of site from Edgar C. Dunning was authorized by order in council P.C. 2583, dated June 10, 1948.

3. $9,500.

4. Yes.

5. (a) Samuel C. Cory; (b) $10,000.

WHITE ROCK, B.C., POST OFFICE

Mr. Green:

1. Has the government purchased a site for a post office at White Rock, British Columbia?
2. If so, as of what date, and from whom was it purchased?
3. What was the price of such site?
4. Were any valuations of the site obtained prior to such purchase?
5. If so, from whom, and what were the respective amounts thereof?

Mr. Fournier (Hull):

1. Yes.

2. Purchase of site from James Leo Monaghan and Albert V. Gay was authorized by order in council P.C. 3133, dated June 20, 1949.

3. $27,000.

4. Yes.

5. (a) James L. Dorgan; (b) $24,000.

SHAUGHNESSY HOSPITAL—TENDERS FOR SUPPLY OF SOAP

Mr. Herridge:

1. Did the purchasing agent for the Department of Veterans Affairs call for tenders for supplies for the Shaughnessy hospital, as follows (a) white soap chips; (b) yellow soap chips; (c) yellow laundry bar; (d) vegetable oil soft soap?
2. If so, who were the successful tenderers, and at what price for each item?

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. Mutch:

1. Yes.

2. (a) Soap chips white: No order placed; (b) Soap flakes yellow: Western Soap Co., Vancouver, $4.35 per 50 lb. bag; (c) Soap, laundry yellow bar: Kavanagh Soap Co., Vancouver, $4.40 per 50 lb. case of 16 oz. bars; (d) Soft soap, vegetable oil: Kavanagh Soap Co., Vancouver, $4.85 per 50 lb. drum.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE—FEED GRAIN

Mr. Catherwood:

1. What is the total amount paid by the government for freight assistance under the feed grain policy since the act went into effect, up to and including the year 1949?
2. What is the total amount paid by the government under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act since the act was proclaimed, up to and including the calendar year 1949?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. $134,789,677.37.

2. Gross payments	$116,953,380.21
Less collection of 1 per cent levy	44,999,688.40
Net	$ 71,953,691.81

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

NOTICE OF REDEMPTION OF DOMINION BONDS AND OTHER SECURITIES

Mr. Pouliot:

1. In what newspapers of the province of Quebec has the government given notice, since January 1, 1949, of the redemption of bonds, debentures and other securities before maturity?
2. What other means did the government use for giving such notice?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ALVIN BUILDING, VANCOUVER, B.C.

Mr. Green:

For a copy of any and all valuations obtained by the government on the Alvin building in Vancouver, British Columbia.

BONAVENTURE, QUE., FISHERMEN'S WHARF

Mr. Courtemanche:

For a copy of the specifications in connection with the contract, in the amount of $15,306.50, awarded to Messrs. Fortunat Bernard & Arthur Bujold, in 1949, for the extension of the fishermen's wharf at Bonaventure, county of Bonaventure, Quebec.

Mr. Courtemanche:

For a return showing a copy of payrolls and lists of materials used in connection with the repair work done to the fishermen's wharf at Bonaventure, county of Bonaventure, Quebec, during the month of April or May, 1950.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—MRS. OLIVE I. HENDERSON

Mr. Lennard:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged, during the past four years, between Mrs. Olive I. Henderson, 172 Julian avenue, Hamilton, Ontario, and the unemployment insurance commission and the civil service commission, as well as all correspondence exchanged between the civil service commission and the unemployment insurance commission, during the same period, relative to Mrs. Olive I. Henderson.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT OF GOVERNMENT FILM COMMISSIONER, ETC.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure respecting the national film board, to define more clearly the purposes and powers of the board; and to provide, inter alia, that the board may acquire personal property, patents and copyrights, and enter into contracts for personal services for any purpose necessary for the production, distribution, projection or exhibition of films pursuant to this act; to authorize the governor in council to appoint and determine the salary of a government film commissioner to be the chief executive officer of the board; to provide for the appointment, promotion and salaries of persons to fill positions under the board, and to provide further for the establishment of an account to be known as the national film board operating account and that expenditures made by the board from moneys in the consolidated revenue fund shall not at any time exceed the amount of receipts shown in the account by more than seven hundred thousand dollars or such lesser amount as may be fixed by the treasury board.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

QUESTION AS TO DISCUSSION OF CIVILIAN DEFENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the rising consciousness in the United States, and in Canada as well, of the importance of civilian defence, is it the intention of the Prime Minister and the premiers of the provinces to discuss this matter at the forthcoming dominion-provincial conference?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): The dominion-provincial conference is a conference upon general topics, and I would imagine that we would be discussing all the responsibilities of the several levels of government, and the way in which these responsibilities can be met within the tax dollar.

TRUST COMPANIES ACT

AMENDMENTS WITH RESPECT TO ORGANIZATION, OFFICERS, ETC.

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. 307, to amend the Trust Companies Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Dion in the chair.

On section 1—Organization.

Mr. Abbott: This bill, as in the case of the insurance bills, was referred to the banking and commerce committee for detailed examination. The provisions of the bill were approved by the superintendent of insurance. Although I am not a member of the banking and commerce committee, I understand that these provisions received careful consideration there. The amendments are analogous to those made to the insurance act, to provide for some amendments in the investment powers of the bill, and I think they should prove satisfactory to the committee.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 to 12 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

LOAN COMPANIES ACT

AMENDMENTS WITH RESPECT TO ORGANIZATION, OFFICERS, ETC.

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. 308, to amend the Loan Companies Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Dion in the chair.

On section 1—Organization.

Mr. Abbott: A similar procedure was followed with respect to this bill. It was referred to the banking and commerce committee.

Mr. Adamson: The minister is not a member of the banking and commerce committee. That is unusual, because his predecessor was always a member of that committee, was he not?

Mr. Abbott: Speaking from memory I cannot say, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps he was. Of course if it became necessary for me to be on the banking and commerce committee, it could always be arranged. One of my parliamentary assistants is on the committee. Because there are so many other calls on my time, up to the present it has not been necessary for me to serve on the committee.

Mr. Adamson: Just a matter of convenience for the minister?

Mr. Abbott: That is right.

Mr. Adamson: The former minister of finance was a member of that committee.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—President, vice-president, chairman of board.

Mr. Knight: I should like to make a general remark or two with respect to some of the methods employed by those who lend money in small amounts.

Mr. Abbott: Before my friend goes on, may I raise a point of order? This bill does not relate to what are commonly known as small loan companies. It affects only five companies, incorporated under this dominion act, which are under the supervision of the superintendent of insurance. The companies to which this bill relates are not engaged in the small loan business. Their distinguishing characteristic is that they are empowered to lend on mortgages.

Mr. Knight: It happens that the remarks I wish to make apply to companies which are lending money on mortgages. With the permission of the committee I shall proceed for five minutes to develop this subject.

The first point I would make has to do with the misleading advertising put out by those who are lending money. The average man in the street, particularly one who is in urgent need of $100 and cannot get it anywhere except from these people who make small loans, is not usually conversant with rates of interest in tables which would be perfectly clear to a chartered accountant. When these companies say in their advertising that they are prepared to lend, let us say, $100 to a person under certain conditions, they draw up a schedule in which they say that they will lend the sum of $100 and that for this service the borrower will have to pay only the small amount of, let us say, $9 each month for 12 months. That is, if the loan was made on January 1 there would be a payment of $9 at the end of that month; then at the end of February another $9 would be payable. The innocent victim of this type of propaganda, who, I should imagine, thought he was paying eight per cent per annum, actually paid—although I have not figured it out—between twelve and fifteen per cent per annum.

My plea is that legislation should be passed to prevent people from misleading the public in that way. In other words, to put it briefly, when these people advertise that they have money to lend on that basis, they should be made to state clearly in their advertising the amount of interest per cent per annum—note, not just the rate of payment per month, but the interest in terms of percentage per annum.

The second matter to which I should like to refer has reference to money lent on a mortgage, and what I shall say arises from a grievance stated by one of my own constituents. I have looked into the matter and I have found that this grievance represents a fairly general practice. I shall not mention any names, although I am tempted to do so—and I shall do so if the practice continues in my own home town of Saskatoon, from which this complaint came.

This has reference to the borrowing of money for the purchase of a house. In this instance the house was purchased from a perfectly respectable firm, the Toronto General Trust Corporation—and I have nothing to say against them. This lady's lease was expiring, and in a month or so she would have been put out in the street. She went to one of these combined real estate and lending agencies. She had in her possession $2,000 to put down as a cash payment on the purchase of a house, and applied to these agencies for $3,500, the balance of the purchase price, making the total purchase price $5,500. Her job was to get the $3,500 somehow. She could of course obtain it by offering to give a first mortgage to a company that would advance the money.

With that in mind she made a tour of the various agencies in the city. The agency with which she finally did business consented to put up the money and—note this—demanded a bonus of $500 for so doing. So the situation came about that this lady signed a mortgage in favour of that agency for $4,000, on which she pays what I am told is the customary rate of six per cent interest for such a transaction.

She has in her possession a statement signed by a responsible officer of the agency dated March 25, 1948, in the following words:

> Purchase price at $5,500, plus bonus of $500; total $6,000.

She informed me that another agency asked her for a bonus of $700 for similar accommodation. In my view that is a public scandal. Here was a woman who borrowed $3,500 for a perfectly legitimate purpose. I shall be told of course that whether she should sign the mortgage or not was a matter within her own discretion. But her circumstances, the fact that her lease was expiring, and the further fact that she made her living by keeping boarders, simply meant that she had to sign that mortgage for $4,000 in order to obtain the $3,500. It might be added that her husband is an invalid. The result is that today that woman is paying interest on $4,000 at six per cent. She obtained from the company $3,500, but in addition to paying six per cent on that amount, she is paying six per cent on an additional $500 she never received.

She holds a letter dated April 7 from this same agency in Saskatoon. This appears to be the final word in the matter of closing the transaction—as I shall now close my remarks. This letter states:

> The property is now standing in your name, subject to a mortgage of $4,000 repayable monthly including principal, interest and taxes.

Mr. Fair: What company pulled a steal like that?

Mr. Knight: I say people like this should be exposed, and legislation should be passed by the House of Commons to protect innocent victims from such robbery.

An hon. Member: What is the name of the company?

Mr. Knight: I shall give it. This whole transaction has to do with Saskatoon Agencies Limited. It is registered under that name as a company engaged in handling real estate and lending money to victims such as the one I have mentioned. I have mentioned the name of this company because it was concerned with this particular transaction, but there are others.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Mr. Chairman, both the points raised by the hon. member for Saskatoon have nothing to do with the companies concerned in this present piece of legislation. No one will decry more than I an instance such as the one last described; but let us always remember that when a person seeks a loan on real estate the amount borrowed must be kept in mind. Many years ago I had a good deal to do with the lending of money on mortgages. I spent my first year as a law student writing out mortgages by hand—they did not allow us to type them in those days. It was felt then that fifty per cent was a safe lendable value. The view was that to that extent, a loan could be made with reasonable safety but that anything over that amount—and in the instance referred to by the hon. member it was a great deal more—involved taking a much greater risk and must bring a greater return. I will go so far as to say that charge might have been considered outrageous.

It is very easy to rail against lending companies and insurance companies. But having had a long experience with many of them I know there are other sides to the picture. In that area of western Canada from which my hon. friend comes, insurance companies in the lending business—and I am referring to the larger and legitimate ones—did suffer tremendous losses in connection with real estate loans. Fortunately conditions improved, and if they maintained the properties they probably got their money back.

My real point is to say a word—and it is not popular from a vote-catching standpoint to say a good word for a lending company—on behalf of these companies. What I say is said in the light of my own experience. I want to commend the treatment that has been accorded to individuals by some of these loan companies. I agree that in the case of some of these little touches the interest rates charged are almost phenomenal, but that does not apply to the larger respectable loan companies in the dominion.

Section agreed to.

Sections 3 to 11 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT

PROVISION THAT CORPORATE CROWN AGENCIES MAY SUE AND BE SUED WITHOUT FIAT

The house resumed from Friday, June 16, consideration in committee of Bill No. 313, to amend the statute law—Mr. Garson—Mr. Dion in the chair.

On section 1—Agent of His Majesty.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Mr. Chairman, I have not read this bill, which is perhaps my fault, but I take it that it is the bill that was introduced some time ago by the Minister of Justice to provide that government corporations may sue or be sued in the ordinary courts of the country. I want again to make the plea that I have made for the last six years, that we should be able to sue the government in the same way as we are being allowed under this bill to sue a corporation which it controls. I have never heard from the Minister of Justice, or the last two ministers of justice, any real reason why the subject should not be able to sue this government—or any government; because I am not speaking from the political point of view—without the necessity of obtaining a fiat so to do.

I cannot think it means liberty, I cannot see that it is democratic, that anything of that kind should be necessary. On the last occasion the Minister of Justice told us that there was no necessity for this because the government had not refused a fiat. He was giving information which he had obtained from his deputy, something that he had heard, but I know that fiats have been refused or have been stalled—I use the word in the most respectful sense—so that in the course of getting a fiat a person may become tired and simply let the matter drop.

I can see no legitimate reason why a subject who has been wronged by any government, provincial or otherwise, should have to get a fiat in order to seek redress. This does not apply in connection with our municipal governments. If a city truck runs over me and injures me I can issue a writ, but in most municipalities I would be required to give notice of intention to sue. I am all in favour of that, because the government has agencies in almost every municipality across Canada and I think notice should be given, as is necessary in the case of most municipalities, so that the government could get in touch with its people and have an opportunity of discussing the matter and probably reaching a settlement.

For the subject to have to ask permission to sue is out of date. Of course the thing is based on the old adage that the king can do no wrong. That is the only reason for this silly business of obtaining a fiat. If the king can do no wrong, it is obvious that there is no action.

I am not going to move any amendment. As I say, I have raised this question on previous occasions and I am delighted that the minister has gone as far as he has in the direction of granting complete justice to the subject—or the individual; the latter word is perhaps better, because he does not need to be a subject in order to sue in this country.

Why we are making two bites of the cherry is just beyond me. We should go the whole way, as I think all hon. members believe we should do, and permit the citizen to sue the crown, with the safeguard I have mentioned of giving thirty days' or even sixty days' notice, so that the government, either federal or provincial, may have plenty of time to investigate the matter and probably reach a settlement and thus avoid long and expensive litigation.

I have nothing more to say. I am simply following the course I have taken since I first came here. I can think of no reason why we should continue this antediluvian and outdated idea of insisting on a fiat before the crown can be sued.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, in spite of the fact that I thought the remarks of my hon. friend were out of order on this bill, because of the generous treatment which was accorded the bill the other day I did not feel that I should be so discourteous or ungenerous as to raise a point of order against him. The bill is concerned with the very thing which the hon. member advocates, the abolition of the necessity of a fiat in so far as crown companies are concerned.

With regard to the use of fiats in actions by individuals against His Majesty, when the estimates of the Department of Justice are before the committee I shall be glad to go into that matter at whatever length my hon. friend wishes. But with your permission, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say just a word or two by way of reply to my hon. friend in connection with this matter of securing fiats.

To listen to my hon. friend, or to read certain criticisms of the fiat system, one would think that the necessity of getting a fiat placed some great and expensive impediment in the way of people seeking justice against the crown. I am sure that the hon. member for Calgary West knows that the Petition of Right Act is a short and simple statute consisting of fourteen sections. I do not know of a judicature act in any other country that is as short and simple. It provides that where John Doe, we will say, thinks he has some kind of claim against His Majesty, he goes to his solicitor, and the solicitor draws up form A, which is set out in the Petition of Right Act. I should like to refer to form A to show how complicated and difficult—of course I am speaking ironically—it is to file; because I defy my hon. friend or any other member of the house to find a simpler form in any statute of any other country in the world.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I agree with all that.

Mr. Garson: The form is as follows:

Petition of Right.

In the Exchequer Court of Canada.

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty:

County (or district) of (place proposed for trial) to wit:

The humble petition of—

We will say John Doe.

—showeth that (state with convenient certainty the facts on which petitioner relies as entitling him to relief).

Could anything in the English language be simpler than that? After the conclusion of the statement of facts the form continues:

Conclusion

Your suppliant therefore humbly prays that (state the relief claimed).

That is the great impediment.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): It is a statement of claim, and has to be drawn just as carefully.

Mr. Garson: Oh, yes, but not more so. When the petition is signed it is taken to the office of the Secretary of State and filed without fee. When the fiat is issued, the Secretary of State upon payment of the court fee of $2, will file the petition in the exchequer court, and then the case is before the court. I make these remarks to place the plain facts of this system before members of the house in order that they may judge whether this method is open to all the harsh criticisms that have been made about it from time to time.

On another occasion when my estimates are before the house I shall be glad to go into this other question which is not relevant under this measure, and draw a distinction on the one hand between this bill, which applies to crown corporations, and the retention, on the other hand of the fiat system so far as individual suits against His Majesty, the government, are concerned.

While I am on my feet, having regard to the fact that it was not necessary for me to make a statement about the principles of this bill on second reading, I think it might be desirable before we begin consideration of the individual sections for me to make a brief statement concerning the principle applicable to all such sections.

In recent years, in the preparation of government legislation to incorporate commercial crown companies, it has been the policy and the practice of the government to include in the respective statutes a provision that the corporation so created could sue and be sued in respect of obligations arising out of the business which it conducted. Examples can be given, such as the Industrial Development Bank Act, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, the Government Companies Operation Act—which is a statute applying to a number of government companies, such as the Polymer Corporation; the Canadian Commercial Corporation Act, the Northwest Territories Power Commission Act, and so on. Unfortunately the practice has been followed only in recent years, and there are a number of statutes of older vintage in which no such provision was included. Unfortunately also the wording of this provision in some of these more recent statutory provisions is not as uniform as it might be, and in some cases the judicial interpretation of some of these provisions has not, in our judgment, always appeared to carry out what seemed to have been the intention of parliament.

We are not adopting any new policy or principle, but in order to carry out a principle which has already been adopted by the government we submit the present bill to make the provision uniform for all corporations carrying on commercial business that crown corporations should be suable in the courts without a fiat. The purpose also is to remove any doubts that have arisen in connection with judicial decisions.

The bill passed through the house the other day with such rapidity—and I must thank hon. members for their generous co-operation—that it has resulted in an unintended embarrassment to me. We wanted to have the bill passed at the present session if at all possible, and have been under some pressure in its preparation in order that that object might be accomplished. We were awaiting consideration of one of the sections by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. After second reading of the bill that corporation submitted a change in wording which, after consideration, we commend to the house. I should like to refer hon. members to section 12. I choose this section merely because it deals with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, although hon. members will see that the amendments provided in all other sections are uniform with that provided in section 12.

So far as the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is concerned, hon. members will see that the relevant words in section 12 of the bill read as follows:

> Actions, suits or other legal proceedings in respect of any right or obligation acquired or incurred by the corporation may be
>
> (a) brought or taken against the corporation, without the governor general's fiat, etc.

In the case of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—and the same may be true of some of the other corporations—contracts have been taken in the name of His Majesty as represented by the corporation. Mr. Mansur, head of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and his legal adviser, Mr. Linkletter, were inclined to think there might be some slight doubt, if the bill were left in its present form, whether the language would apply to instruments which have been taken in that manner in the name of His Majesty. Inasmuch as the whole purpose of this statute is to make this provision uniform in all these crown corporations, and to remove all doubt in connection with every one of them, we have agreed to accept the suggestion that after the word "corporation" in the third line the words "on behalf of His Majesty, whether in its name or in the name of His Majesty" should be added. Therefore I have had an amendment prepared making this language applicable to every section of the act and to every one of the corporations affected by the bill, in order to make it perfectly clear that instruments taken out in the name of His Majesty through the instrumentality of any one of these corporations shall be covered, and that actions upon them can be launched in the provincial courts without securing a fiat.

There is one slight variation to this wording on page 3, in connection with the Veterans Land Act. There the word "his" instead of "its" is required to be inserted, since the corporation sole in connection with that statute is the director under the act. Therefore I would ask my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works to move this amendment.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): What is the section?

Mr. Garson: It is section 6.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I move:

That Bill 313, an act to amend the statute law, be amended by inserting the words "on behalf of His Majesty, whether in its name or in the name of His Majesty," after

(1) the word "Commission" in line 13 on page 1,
(2) the word "Board" in line 25 on page 1,
(3) the word "Council" in line 10 on page 2,
(4) the word "Board" in line 22 on page 2,
(5) the word "Corporation" in line 36-37 on page 2.
(6) the word "Corporation" in line 22 on page 3,
(7) the word "Board" in line 34 on page 3,
(8) the word "Corporation" in line 46 on page 3,
(9) the word "Board" in line 12 on page 4,
(10) the word "Bank" in line 26 on page 4,
(11) the word "Corporation" in line 38 on page 4,
(12) the word "Company" in line 5 on page 5,
(13) the word "Board" in line 17 on page 5,
(14) the word "Corporation" in line 29 on page 5,
(15) the word "Commission" in line 42 on page 5,
(16) the word "Corporation" in line 7 on page 6,
(17) and by inserting the words "on behalf of His Majesty, whether in his name or in the name of His Majesty" after the word "director" in line 7 on page 3.

Mr. Garson: Anticipating that hon. members might be agreeable to this amendment, and for greater clarity in their perusing the bill, I asked the clerk to have some copies run off with these changes indicated in every section, and if hon. members agree we might have these new copies distributed now.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Knowles: Had we not better wait until we reach section 6 before moving the amendment?

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I am not going to delay this legislation very long. Again I want to compliment the minister on what he is trying to do by this bill, because I am very much in favour of it. But to tell me that, when we have a bill loosening certain procedure, I am out of order when I say the bill does not go far enough, surely cannot be correct. Here we are providing that in connection with certain crown corporations a certain procedure shall apply and the necessity for a fiat is removed. We are dealing with the matter of a fiat; that is the substance of the bill, and all I was advocating was that we should go further with the abolition of the fiat and do away with it in connection with actions against His Majesty. I am not asking for a ruling; I am not going to move an amendment, but I did ask why the minister thought the fiat should be retained, and, with great respect, he has not answered. He says he will do so on the estimates, and with that I content myself. If you move that $1,000 should be devoted to a certain purpose, surely an amendment can be moved to increase or decrease that amount. That was what I was suggesting here, though this does not deal with dollars. I was only saying that the abolition of the fiat, which is dealt with specifically in this bill, should be extended, and I submit that what I said was entirely in order under our rules.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 2 to 5 inclusive as amended agreed to.

On section 6 as amended—Proceedings by and against the director.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Is this amendment simply for greater caution, greater safety?

Mr. Garson: That is correct. Perhaps if I read it slowly as it will read after the amendment has been inserted, hon. members will be able to follow it.

Actions, suits or other legal proceedings in respect of any right or obligation acquired or incurred by the director on behalf of His Majesty, whether in his name —

That is the director's name.

—or in the name of His Majesty, may be

(a) brought or taken against the director, without the governor general's fiat, or

(b) brought or taken by the director, in the name of the director in any court that would have jurisdiction if the director were not an agent of His Majesty.

Mr. Knowles: In this case, then, you are asking to amend further the amended section as it is now printed? The reprint as we have it before us contains the word "its".

Mr. Garson: That is a typographical error. The document the hon. member has in his hands has no significance; it was merely printed for the convenience of hon. members. That word will appear as "his" in the corrected draft of the bill.

Mr. Knowles: The bill in the hands of the clerk contains the word "his"?

Mr. Garson: Yes, because the motion my colleague moved contains the word "his". There is separate provision for that. The difficulty is that in all the other sections corporations are involved. In section 6 it is also a corporation, but what they call in law a corporation sole, because it is the director of the Veterans Land Act and in reference to him one has to use the word "his" instead of "its".

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 7 to 17 inclusive as amended agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES, TRAVELLING ALLOWANCES, ETC.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to present a measure to amend the Judges Act, 1946, by making provision for the salary of one additional judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia; the salary of one additional county and district court judge for the province of Ontario; the salaries of district court judges of the province of Newfoundland, and for increased travelling allowances to judges of a superior or county court or district judges in admiralty of the exchequer court attending at any place other than that at which or in the immediate vicinity of which they are by law obliged to reside.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I am trying hard to keep up with what is going on. What is the substance of this resolution? Probably it has been explained and I have forgotten.

Mr. Garson: This is the annual group of amendments to the Judges Act, to take care, for the most part, of new vacancies which have been created by provincial legislative action. It affects British Columbia, Ontario and Newfoundland. It also provides for a small increase in the judges' per diem expenses.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): These are routine and are asked for? They have provincial legislation?

Mr. Garson: Yes. As my hon. friend knows, the provincial courts are created by provincial legislation. They have to create these vacancies. We are now taking authority to fill the vacancies which they have created.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): That has been done?

Mr. Garson: No. We cannot make the appointments until this bill goes through.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I mean, they have created the vacancies?

Mr. Garson: Yes.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): And you are now merely routining them through.

Mr. Garson: We have not only satisfied ourselves that they have created the vacancies, but we have satisfied ourselves, by securing statistics, that there was need for their being created.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if this is the only explanation we are to have from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): We are only on the resolution. What more do you want?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The motion is that I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole upon this resolution. When the house goes into committee, questions may be asked of the minister. It is not in order to ask questions at this time.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): May I ask you a question, Mr. Speaker? Is it in order to debate this matter now?

Mr. Knowles: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. W. J. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to make some observations on this resolution, since the minister has not given much enlightenment to hon. members on the part of it that deals with the appointment of judges to the district courts and the salaries for these judges in Newfoundland.

I am glad that the minister has introduced the resolution, but I cannot help wondering why he waited fifteen months to bring it in. The act of union was passed and union was consummated on April 1, 1949. We are in June, 1950, and it is only now that he is bringing in this resolution. I cannot help contrasting his tardiness with the energy and zeal displayed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin), who, according to his own report, took every precaution, beginning in the autumn of 1948, to see that family allowance cheques would go to Newfoundland as soon as they could be issued after April 1, 1949.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): It was before the election.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Before the election, of course; and that every old age pensioner would receive an old age pension cheque as soon as the department could manage to get the cheque to him. Their offices were set up and everything went in wonderful style. Nobody can criticize the Minister of National Health and Welfare for the interest he took in the people of Newfoundland in seeing that these benefits were brought to them as soon as possible. Some people might think that the Minister of Justice was not zealous because he has failed to bring in this resolution until now. But, Mr. Speaker, there is a story behind the news, as they say; and that is the story that I should like to tell.

When Newfoundland was given its first representative government in 1832 we had a system of administration of justice which was much the same as it is now. We had a supreme court appointed and paid for by the British government, consisting of three judges; and we had a system of magistrates and justices of the peace. Today in Newfoundland we have a system of justice under which judges are appointed and paid for by the federal government, and there are magistrates and justices of the peace. There are no other judges in Newfoundland at the present time.

It may be interesting to hon. members to trace briefly the changes that have taken place since 1832. In 1835 they had a vote of the legislature of £500 for a police magistrate in the city of St. John's, which has always been the largest occupied place in the country. In 1838 there was a vote of £600 for two magistrates, and in 1844 one of £900 for three magistrates for the city of St. John's. By that time there were magistrates in other parts of the island. In 1850 we hear first mention of the central district. Although there were three judicial districts—the northern district, the central district and the southern district—the northern district and the southern district were abandoned after a time and the central district was the only one surviving in 1949. In 1859 the chief magistrate was appointed at a salary of £350, with a junior magistrate and a clerk of the court. In 1867, the year of the Canadian confederation, the money was changed from pounds to dollars, and the chief magistrate received $1,616. In 1869 the first act was introduced to establish a district court. I have the act here. I might point out that it was the year in which confederation was first balloted upon in Newfoundland and the party favouring confederation at that time was defeated. The act of 1869 is entitled "An Act to Establish a District Court in the Central District, and for Other Purposes." That act was amended from time to time, and later a second district court judge was appointed. There were two judges at the beginning in the central district court, and two remained down to about 1910. The Harbour Grace district court was dropped in 1933, and so once again there was only one district court, namely, the central district court.

In Newfoundland we have a high regard for those who occupied the position of judge. Judge Conroy was a good lawyer, highly respected, and the father of a distinguished son. Judge Prowse was internationally known as the author of a monumental history of Newfoundland, and his name is a household word in Newfoundland. He was succeeded by Judge Morris, and I had the honour of succeeding him on July 1, 1935. Prior to 1934 it was rare for lawyers to accept appointment as magistrates. As will be remembered, that was the year in which the commission of government took office, and they immediately proceeded to revise and to improve the magistracy in Newfoundland, so that we had some able lawyers accept positions as magistrates, amongst whom were the Secretary of State (Mr. Bradley), the present chief justice of Newfoundland, and the hon. member for Humber-St. George's (Mr. Kent).

Here I should like to pay a tribute to the ability and integrity of the magistrates associated with me since I was appointed in 1935: Magistrates O'Neill, Mulcahy, and White. Magistrates O'Neill and Mulcahy were lawyers. Magistrate White was not a lawyer, but is at the present time serving with distinction as magistrate on Bell island.

During the war, and because of the wide jurisdiction that magistrates were given in Newfoundland, the tendency being for all legislation to confer summary jurisdiction, our jurisdiction was increasing and the number of cases was increasing, so that in one year we had nearly 10,000 civil and criminal cases in a place where there was provision for only one court. We used our offices as courts, and sometimes we had four courts going on at the same time. Anyone who is familiar with our courts will know that we were as busy as any court could possibly be in Canada. There was a great strain upon our magistrates and on the space as well. We had civil and criminal jurisdiction. Civil jurisdiction was only to $200. Criminal jurisdiction was extremely wide, and we heard cases of every kind.

When confederation was first discussed, a delegation came to Canada for that purpose. A set of books was published and released containing an account of the proceedings that took place between representatives of the national convention of Newfoundland and the government of Canada. This was published in Newfoundland, and I obtained a copy. I discovered that on page 56 of part 2 a table was presented, for the benefit of the members of the convention and of the general public, to indicate how the moneys would be spent in the future. It shows that the salaries of the governor, the chief justice, two judges of the supreme court and the judge of the central district court would disappear from Newfoundland expenditures and would therefore be paid by the federal government.

These terms were accepted, and in the estimates that were introduced by the commission of government for 1949-50 these three items were dropped. When the negotiations advanced another stage in Ottawa the terms of union were signed. Article 30 of the terms of the union reads as follows:

> The salary of the lieutenant governor and the salaries, allowances, and pensions of the judges of such superior, district, and county courts as are now or may hereafter be constituted in the province of Newfoundland shall be fixed and provided for by the parliament of Canada.

In the act of 1949, first session, dealing with statute law and amending the Judges Act, 1946, what do we find? There was provision for the chief justice at an increase in salary of $4,333.33, an improvement in the salary of the other two judges up to $12,000 from $8,000, but no provision was made for the salary of the judge of the central district court. It was unfortunate for me, because I was away on March 31 and did not return until toward the end of April. When the end of April came round, like every other person in Newfoundland who is paid by the government I waited for my cheque, and there was no cheque. I made some inquiries and I discovered that instructions had been sent to Ottawa that I should not be paid any salary. I wrote to the deputy minister of justice, Mr. Varcoe, and I received a letter from him saying that he had drafted a resolution including my salary, but had received instructions from the federal government not to proceed with it. He said he understood that that was at the request of the government of Newfoundland.

Later, when the election was over, I had an interview with the attorney general. He expressed great regret—he was very sorry and almost shed tears at times as he walked up and down his office; he said: "You know, the premier was angry with you because you had taken an action against the commission of government, a terrible thing for a judge to do." Seeing that the attitude of the premier was so hostile, I decided to resign. That was a Friday; on Tuesday I resigned, and on Wednesday I decided to contest the constituency of St. John's West, and made my first public statement. I was hardly off the air before the premier of the country was slandering me, and the next day—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): This is just too much.

Mr. Fulton: It is perfectly parliamentary.

Mr. Speaker: I did not interrupt the hon. member, but I doubt whether his remarks are in order at this time.

Mr. Lennard: Well, they are correct.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is personally interested in the matter, and for that reason I did not interrupt him. If he will be brief, I shall allow him to continue with the consent of the house.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I shall deal briefly with the proceedings following that. The next day the premier went into the riding, and in five places he slandered me and intimidated the people by saying that if they voted for me, no public money would be spent in the district.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I took proceedings against him, abortive proceedings, which have not yet been concluded and which perhaps may now never be concluded.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If proceedings are now pending I do not think the hon. member should continue.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to refer to the facts, however. By an accident there was a minister of finance in Newfoundland who was not contesting the election, and when he heard of the matter he was very indignant and paid me the salary which in the ordinary course I would have received; it was at the rate of $5,000 a year. The salary to be voted was the same as the district court judges will receive under federal law, namely, $6,666.66. I have not made any claim for that, but I feel I should draw attention to the injustice that was done. I am not making any complaint, even against the Minister of Justice, at the present time, but I do feel that an injustice was done, whether consciously or not. Hon. members will realize that it is embarrassing and painful for me to bring this matter up. I have not brought it up until now. The reason I am doing it now is that I fear another injustice is going to be done to men most qualified, in my opinion, by training and experience, to be appointed judges in St. John's.

I hold in my hand the new act dealing with the district courts in Newfoundland. The men to whom I refer are the men who served with me. There are two of them. It would be an injustice if these men were penalized, and some defeated candidate, merely because he was a supporter of the Liberal party, should be appointed to these vacancies. As

I say, I hold in my hand the act respecting district courts. It seems that it is now going to cost the dominion government a lot of money because there are to be seven district courts instead of one.

Mr. Garson: Five.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Seven, according to this act.

Mr. Garson: If my hon. friend will look at the bill before him, he will see that it provides for five.

Mr. Fulton: We have not the bill here.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Let the resolution pass and you will get the bill.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I have the act respecting district courts. It says:

> Unless otherwise provided by the lieutenant governor in council, Newfoundland is for the purposes of this act divided into seven judicial districts the names and boundaries of which shall be those set out in the schedules to the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada.
>
> There shall be in and for every judicial district a court of record to be called a district court of the judicial district of (naming the district).

There are seven districts. The English seems to be plain that there are to be seven district courts. They may fill only five of the seven. They may not have enough lawyers to fill the seven, because the majority of the lawyers were not in favour of the present system in Newfoundland, nor were they in favour of confederation.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member to relate his remarks to the resolution. The resolution provides for the salary of the district court judges in the province of Newfoundland. I do not think at this time he should refer to appointments that are likely to be made.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I hold in my hand a copy of the British North America Act. The two things seem to go together. Section 96 says:

> The governor general shall appoint the judges of the superior, district, and county courts in each province . . .

Section 100 says:

> The salaries, allowances, and pensions of the judges of the superior, district, and county courts . . . shall be fixed and provided by the parliament of Canada.

Section 100 is carried into section 30 of the act of union, and the two go together. This government is going to make the appointments. and this is the only opportunity that is given to me to make recommendations to the government for consideration when they are making the appointments. I claim, Mr. Speaker, to know as much as, if not more than, any other member of this house about this particular subject. I am not very familiar with most of the legislation coming before the House of Commons, but I suggest I am familiar with this subject. May I say the custom was in Newfoundland that when any magistrate was appointed he was sent to me for training.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Congratulations.

Mr. Kent: I was not sent to you for training.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I exclude, of course, lawyers. They did not need that training. I am referring to laymen.

Mr. Speaker: Order. What the hon. member has said is no doubt true, but I do not see its relationship to the resolution. No doubt he will have other opportunities to make representations on behalf of certain individuals he may know and whom he would like to see appointed to the bench. However, I do not think it is in order to make those representations at this time. This resolution deals only with the salaries of district court judges in Newfoundland and other places.

Mr. Knowles: Just their salaries, not their training.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to correct the last statement I made. I was referring to magistrates, who were not lawyers, who were sent to me. Those who did not have training as lawyers were sent to my court in the beginning to see how things were done. Several of them served under me, and I am sure the hon. member for Humber-St. George's (Mr. Kent) is familiar with that fact.

I appreciate the distinction made by Mr. Speaker, and I presume another opportunity will be afforded to discuss this matter. However, I have been forced to resign my position, and I shall have to work in these courts. I look forward to as good a practice as I had before I took on the job of judge, and that is why I am so much concerned about it. I would ask the Minister of Justice to consider carefully getting the best possible appointees when he is making these appointments.

Mr. J. S. Sinnott (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I have a few observations to make about this resolution. I am not a lawyer; I am an ordinary layman, and I represent most of the common people in my riding. I believe there is nothing wrong in the appointment of a judge where population has increased. But in my view we have reached the time when we must start chopping from the top, not from the bottom.

I have no doubt that last year a number of applications were made to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) for an increase in salary. Knowing the Minister of Justice as I do, and in view of the fact that he came from Manitoba and began his work in a small district, I do not believe he favours any one class. At the same time, when representations have been made to him for increases at the top they have been readily obtained.

At this time most of the producers in this country are being asked to take lower prices for their products. It was stated by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Browne) that judges received huge increases in salaries last year. Therefore I cannot see why men who are drawing salaries as large as that of the Prime Minister would be entitled to anything of that kind.

When one stops to consider that there are 365 days in the year, and that from that one must take fifty-two Sundays, and the fact that the judges are allowed thirty days' holiday with pay, and figure out the over-all rate of salary, he finds that it works out at a guaranteed salary of about $65 a day until the age of seventy, at which time there is retirement at a rate of two-thirds of the salary.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I point out to the hon. member that the resolution makes no provision for increases in the salaries of judges. I would point out further that the resolution does not affect the courts in Manitoba. Perhaps in view of those observations the hon. member would be prepared to reserve his remarks until a later occasion.

Mr. Sinnott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I knew that; I was referring to supreme court judges. I must say that in my own heart I feel this is not the time to increase travelling expenses.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to discuss at length the merits of the resolution as it stands. I wish merely to point out to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) that there seems to be a serious omission in the resolution as it is worded.

I had hoped that when this measure was brought in it would include provision for the salary of an additional judge in the trial division of the Supreme Court of Alberta. As the minister knows, the population of that province has increased tremendously in the past two or three years, with the result that supreme court judges are very much overworked. As a matter of fact the situation is such that the judges in Alberta cannot take care of the cases on the list. Particularly is that true in the trial division, where many cases have to be postponed for months before they come to trial. Would the minister consider appointing another judge to the trial division of the Supreme Court of Alberta?

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Dion in the chair.

Mr. Knowles: Is it clear, as implied by Mr. Speaker, that this bill will not provide for any salary increases or any changes in the pension arrangements of judges?

Mr. Garson: That is right.

Mr. Low: Would the minister comment on what I said?

Mr. Garson: Yes. Our practice in connection with the filling of new vacancies created by a province is that we feel a responsibility to the House of Commons not to fill a vacancy of that kind until it can be demonstrated that it is necessary to do so.

With respect to the vacancy in Alberta, to which the hon. member has referred, I believe that in that province an act has been passed creating the vacancy, and that such act is to be brought into effect by proclamation. Representations have been made to us by various bar associations in Alberta and by certain members of the courts there, as well as by the attorney general of the province. In accordance with our usual custom, we have asked the attorney general to supply us with statistics showing the volume of litigation and indicating whether any congestion such as that described by the hon. member is due to the fact that there has been a large increase in volume of litigation or whether it is merely because of maldistribution of cases among the judges, so that some of them have far too much work while others do not have very much. I am speaking from memory now, but some time in March or April my deputy and I both wrote in that connection, but we have not yet been given the information. Not long ago, in the absence of that information, I telephoned to the attorney general of Alberta and asked him whether it would be possible to get this matter finalized so that provision could be made in this bill to take care of a vacancy in Alberta if one needed to be filled. He suggested that he was getting this information for me, but that it had not as yet been assembled. He said that the legislature of Alberta had provided for an increase in the jurisdiction of the district courts so that those courts would be able to handle some of the work now being done by the superior courts. When this arrangement has been completed we will look at the problem with a view to bringing down, if necessary, an amendment next session authorizing us to fill a vacancy in the trial division of the superior court.

Mr. Fulton: The resolution provides for increased travelling allowances to judges of a superior or county court or district judges in admiralty of the exchequer court. I was under the impression that travelling allowances were provided for each year in the estimates. Is there to be a change in the practice of providing for these travelling allowances? Will they now be incorporated in the statute?

Mr. Garson: What my hon. friend is referring to is the amount that is required to meet these expenses, but the rate per day is a statutory provision, and in order to increase it we have to have an amendment to the statute. The increase is not large, and should not attract any great amount of criticism. It is simply to take care of the additional expenses which a judge has to pay for hotel accommodation, and so on.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Is the Minister of Justice going to take advantage of this opportunity to explain why he has waited so long to introduce this resolution so far as Newfoundland is concerned?

Mr. Garson: There is not much of an analogy, if I may say so with deference, between the provision for family allowances and the provision for new judges in the bill we are now considering. Once Newfoundland became a member province of the federation the federal law having to do with family allowances became immediately applicable to that province and the payment of those allowances could be commenced right away. I think I have explained two or three times in the course of this debate that we can only fill judicial vacancies which are created by provincial legislative action.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): This has to do with salaries, not vacancies.

Mr. Garson: The British North America Act provides that the provincial legislature shall create the provincial courts, and this is a provincial court. We could not take any steps to fill a vacancy in Newfoundland until there had first been a legislative enactment of the new province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): There was no vacancy on April 1, 1949.

Mr. Garson: It was impossible at the last session of parliament to bring down a bill of this sort. Rather than inflict several amendments to the Judges Act upon the house during a session, as a rule we try to gather together all the provisions that are required and bring them down in one bill. In the case of Alberta these negotiations were going on for some time—

[Mr. Garson.]

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Stick to Newfoundland; never mind Alberta.

Mr. Garson: So far as Newfoundland is concerned there was no hardship created by the fact that these vacancies are not being filled, because the existing Newfoundland courts are functioning at the moment.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): They were functioning in April, 1949.

Mr. Garson: As soon as this bill passes we shall be in position to fill the new vacancies which have been created, as my hon. friend correctly says, by the Newfoundland act of last December. Then the newly appointed group of judges will take over and from that time on will exercise the jurisdiction conferred on them by the new provincial act.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): That plausible explanation is not good enough. It is a weak and miserable explanation. What I drew to the attention of the Minister of Justice, and what he ought to know, is that there was a district court act in effect on April 1, 1949 and that a resolution of this kind was drafted by Mr. Varcoe, the deputy minister of justice, and withdrawn, I presume on the minister's instructions. A resolution was prepared for judges of the central district court and the right to pay his salary, as was provided for in the terms of union and in the documents submitted to the Newfoundland convention. Why was the position of judge of the central district court dropped from that resolution? That is what I want an explanation of and it has not been given.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Justice is just as important as national health and welfare. Whether it is a judge who is suffering or some other individual, justice should be done. The minister is entrusted with a responsible position, and I am asking him why that resolution was altered.

Mr. Garson: I should be delighted to help my hon. friend if I possibly could, but I am sorry I have no personal knowledge whatever of the matter he is referring to. I shall be delighted to take it up with my deputy, and either give the hon. member privately the information he is seeking, or bring it before the house, if he so wishes. I think I should point out that he is not quite correct when he says that the district court act was in effect in April, 1949.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): On a point of order, I did not say that this district court act was in effect, because it was passed only in December, 1949; but there was an act passed in 1869 which was still in effect in April, 1949.

Mr. Garson: What we are discussing here is the filling of a vacancy created by the provincial legislature. What the hon. member is talking about, as of April, 1949, is not a court which was created by the province of Newfoundland. We have authority under the British North America Act only to fill vacancies in courts which have been created by the legislative action of some province. What the hon. member has been saying with regard to the situation in April, 1949, quite apart from any other qualities it may have, is completely irrelevant to the matter now under discussion.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I submit that it is not irrelevant; it is perfectly relevant. First, there was a district court act in effect on April 1, 1949. There was a district court and there was a district court judge. There was provision in the terms of union that his salary should be paid from federal funds, and it was not done. What has the Minister of Justice to say about that?

Mr. Abbott: Nothing.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I want to know what he has to say about it. He is evading the question. There is no use talking about an act passed in December, 1949.

Mr. Garson: I have told my hon. friend that I have no personal knowledge of the matters that he is discussing.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Why haven't you? It is your job.

Mr. Garson: I have said that I shall be very glad to look into them, and if he wishes the matter further ventilated on the floor of the house, I shall be delighted to ventilate it for him—

Mr. Martin: We have enough ventilation.

Mr. Garson: —on the estimates of the Department of Justice. I do not think it is proper that we should be talking about a totally different court that was functioning in April, 1949, on a resolution concerning a bill which has to do with filling vacancies in respect of a statute passed in December, 1949.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I gave the minister the opportunity to reply, and I think everyone will see that he has not faced the question.

Mr. Knowles: A few moments ago there was a brief interchange between the hon. member for Kamloops and the Minister of Justice as to the travelling allowances referred to in the resolution. I thought I heard the Minister of Justice say that the amount of money required for travelling allowances was included in the estimates and was voted annually. I should like to point out to him that there appears in the estimates for our information an item covering the Exchequer Court of Canada, judges' salaries, including district judges in admiralty and travelling allowances; but that item is statutory.

Mr. Garson: That is right.

Mr. Knowles: We do not vote it. The amount is fixed. Therefore it seems to me that the question of the hon. member for Kamloops should be answered. To what extent and by what amount are travelling expenses being increased in the statute?

Mr. Garson: I think my hon. friend is raising the same point of order that he did on a previous occasion, namely, whether any disclosure should be made at the resolution stage of the amount of money involved in a money bill. I am certainly not going to be inveigled into a long discussion of that point on this occasion. The proposal here is to increase judges' travelling allowances by $2 per day. That is the amount. It may be improper for me to disclose it at this stage, but that is the information my hon. friend is seeking.

Mr. Coldwell: What is the present allowance?

Mr. Garson: The present allowance varies, depending upon whether the place of attendance is or is not a city. It is $10 if it is a city, and $6 for other places. That is the main distinction. You will see the refinements when the bill comes before the house.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Garson thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 316, to amend the Judges Act, 1946.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a second time? Next sitting of the house?

Mr. Garson: It is very simple.

Mr. Knowles: If it is very simple there is no harm in letting it stand over.

Mr. Garson: It is a routine bill.

Mr. Knowles: Next sitting. Let us obey the rules once in a while.

Mr. Speaker: Next sitting of the house.

Indian Act

INDIAN ACT

CONSOLIDATION AND CLARIFICATION—BAND FUNDS AND EXPENDITURES, ETC.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) moved the second reading of Bill No. 267, respecting Indians.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at confederation, pursuant to section 91 of the British North America Act, Indians and lands reserved for Indians and the administration of Indian affairs, which had been under the management of the several provinces, came under control of the parliament and government of Canada. Prior to 1876 there were several acts with respect to Indians which were consolidated in that year, and since then there has been only one Indian Act and one Indian administration in Canada.

The last complete revision of the Indian Act was in 1880, a biblical life span ago, and while it has been amended from time to time, it became increasingly apparent in the light of present day conditions and the stage of development of the Indians that many provisions of the present act were outmoded and did not sufficiently provide the framework within which the needs and aspirations of our Indian population could best be met.

The scope of Indian legislation, past and present, covers many subjects, dealing as it does with practically the whole life of the people living on Indian reserves, including a number of nomadic groups scattered throughout the country, and numbering in all approximately 136,000 at the present time. Here I might mention that the popular conception that the Indians are disappearing is not correct. Actually they are increasing, and during the past decade the rate of increase has been about one and one-half per cent per year. Without taking up too much time it is only possible to touch lightly upon some of the more important subjects covered in the bill, such as band or tribal membership; the selection, purchase and management of Indian reserves; the lease and sale of resources for the benefit of the Indians; the management of Indian trust funds; the administration of estates; the education of Indian children and adults; the election of chiefs and councillors and their powers, and many other related matters.

In recent years considerable thought and study has been given to the problems of the Indians by parliament, the government and various groups, including of course the Indians themselves, throughout Canada. It will be recalled that in 1946 a special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons was appointed to examine and consider the Indian Act and to report on Indian administration in general. During the sessions of 1946, 1947 and 1948 briefs were received and evidence heard by the committee from representatives of Indian organizations and bands, departmental officials, and other groups and individuals interested in the welfare of the Indians.

I should like to compliment the committee on the fulness of the examination, the wide range and diversity of views and outlook which received attention, and the constructiveness of the recommendations made. The recommendations of the committee, together with the voluminous record of evidence and briefs, have been of great value in the preparation of this bill to give effect to the changes considered necessary to meet the needs of Indians today. If the house will permit me, I should like to mention particularly the joint chairmen, the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown) and the Hon. William H. Taylor, who, representing the Senate, succeeded the late Hon. J. Fred Johnston; and the late John R. MacNicol, all of whom made the Indians' case their own.

In considering the whole question of Indian legislation it must be remembered that there are a great many Indian tribes widely scattered throughout Canada, speaking different languages, all differing in racial and cultural backgrounds, and in various stages of economic and social development.

In view of these varied and diverse Indian interests, a comprehensive Indian Act has to be broad enough to accommodate the different Indian groups and communities. It was thought therefore that it would be only fair to give the Indians an opportunity to consider the bill, before its enactment into law, as intimated by the Prime Minister on May 5. This has been done, and the representations that have been received from Indian organizations and bands have been given very careful consideration by the government. May I also interject that we are continuing to receive representations, and no doubt will continue to receive them after the bill is passed. I want to assure the house that all these representations will be brought to its attention next session so that any appropriate amendments may be made.

One of the most difficult problems with which Indian administration has been faced is that of determining who is and who is not an Indian. This is a matter in which the Indians themselves are vitally concerned. The present definition of "Indian" has been statutory since 1876, and it was felt that it was not sufficiently clear. In order to clarify the ambiguity, the committee recommended a new definition, and also the revision of existing band membership lists. The committee also recommended that public moneys appropriated to promote the welfare of Indians should only be spent for the benefit of persons who are legal members of an Indian band. These recommendations have been kept in mind in preparing the bill.

The definition of "Indian" is clarified and made more restrictive. Provision is made for the setting up of an Indian register, in which eventually all Indians will be recorded. Provisional membership lists for approximately eighty-five per cent of the Indian population have been received and are being scrutinized. In keeping with the committee's recommendation that only persons who are in fact Indians should live on reserves and receive moneys appropriated by parliament for the welfare of Indians, provision is made to exclude quarter-bloods born of marriages entered into after the coming into force of this act. No one of quarter-blood status at present living on a reserve would be affected; this would apply only to those children born of marriages contracted after the passing of the act upon reaching the age of twenty-one years.

It is hoped that by clarifying the definition of "Indian", setting up an Indian register and excluding those who are predominantly of non-Indian blood, many of the causes of the complaints that have been voiced by Indians over the right of certain persons to be members of a band and reside on a reserve will be removed. This act, however, will not adversely affect anyone entitled to protection under the present act, and sympathetic consideration will be given to any person whose residence on a reserve has been accepted generally by the band.

The problem of the Indian and of his land, covering as it does every province of Canada, is one of the major responsibilities of the department, and one in which the Indians themselves are vitally concerned. Provision is made in the bill for simplifying and clarifying the procedures to be adopted with respect to the management, surrender, leasing and disposal of Indian reserves and surrendered lands, and to give the Indians, through their elected band councils, greater control over the reserves upon which they reside. These provisions are based upon past experience and present conditions, and are designed to give adequate protection and also provide for the granting of certificates of possession and occupation to individual Indians. Likewise the provisions of the present act dealing with the management of Indian moneys have been simplified, and greater control given to the band council in the expenditure of band funds. The existing provisions with respect to the administration of estates have been completely revised.

Under the present act there are two systems of electing band councils, the one-year and three-year systems for bands in different stages of advancement. It was thought desirable to provide a uniform system of electing chiefs and councillors which would meet the general requirements of Indian bands in all areas in Canada, and by regulation to accommodate varying degrees of social, economic and political development. The bill provides for this. In keeping with the view that Indians should be given every opportunity to participate fully in local affairs and assume greater responsibilities, provision is made for extending the powers of the band council to bring them more into conformity with those ordinarily exercised by municipal authorities.

The exemption from taxation of real and personal property held by Indians on reserves has been modified so that it will not apply to the personal property of Indians ordinarily resident on reserves, other than veterans of the first and second great wars and their wives, who execute a waiver under an amendment to the Dominion Elections Act, 1938; otherwise the exemption from taxation stands as it has stood since this provision was enacted in 1876.

This provision is complementary to the amendment to the Dominion Elections Act passed by the house the day before yesterday. It leaves the matter of voting in federal elections entirely to the voluntary choice of the Indians.

It is proposed to apply this only to personal property; the real property on the reserve is held in trust by the crown and does not belong to the individual Indian, but is held for the use and benefit of the band or community as a whole, and it is felt that such property should not be taxed, as the individual Indian has only an occupational interest in the land.

It may be of interest to note that the Indian Act of 1869 was entitled "An Act for the Gradual Enfranchisement of Indians." At this time it was apparently thought that Indians would become readily absorbed into the general community, and provision was made for any qualified Indian to attain full citizenship by applying for enfranchisement. Since then the way has been open for Indians who have sufficiently demonstrated their ability to maintain themselves off reserves to attain all the rights and privileges enjoyed by other citizens of the country. The procedure is by order in council. Since yearly records were established in 1918, more than 5,000 Indians have sought and received enfranchisement.

Indians can be enfranchised either as individuals or by entire bands on their own application or in certain circumstances, and subject to adequate safeguards, on the initiative of the government.

Provision is made for the individual Indian to be enfranchised with or without his lands. The usual practice is for the Indian to dispose of his lands to a member of the band. Where a whole band is enfranchised of course the land goes with it.

There is only one case of an entire Indian band being enfranchised, and this was in the case of the Wyandots of Anderdon in southwestern Ontario, who were enfranchised on their own application in the 1880's. The records indicate that this experiment was a success and that the enfranchised Indians took their place in the general community without ill effects and in most cases with beneficial results. The provisions in regard to enfranchisement, while retained as to principle, have been improved for the purpose of facilitating enfranchisement for Indians.

The underlying principles of Indian legislation through the years have been protection and advancement of the Indian population. In the earlier period the main emphasis was on protection. But as the Indians become more self-reliant and capable of successfully adapting themselves to modern conditions, more emphasis is being laid on greater participation and responsibility by Indians in the conduct of their own affairs. Indeed, it may be said that ever since confederation the underlying purpose of Indian administration has been to prepare the Indians for full citizenship with the same rights and responsibilities as those enjoyed and accepted by other members of the community. This aim has not been lost sight of in the preparation of the bill.

The ultimate goal of our Indian policy is the integration of the Indians into the general life and economy of the country. It is recognized, however, that during a temporary transition period of varying length, depending upon the circumstances and stage of development of different bands, special treatment and legislation are necessary.

At the same time it is not claimed that the bill will provide an immediate solution to all the problems of the Indians. The bill is what it purports to be, a revision of the Indian Act based on an appraisal of conditions as they really are and a re-examination of the provisions of the present act in the light of these conditions, a bill which modernizes and improves existing legislation.

If one had been expecting an immediate assimilation of the Indians into all phases of Canadian life, all that would have been needed would be to repeal the Indian Act, but so long as we have Indians requiring the assistance of the government of Canada in the conduct of their affairs, an Indian Act is necessary to give the government the required statutory authority to expend public money and to do other incidental matters.

However, we have provided for the present and future requirements of the Indian people by such measures as old age allowances, greater facilities for education such as I detailed to the house last week, and now that the vote in federal elections has been extended to Indians, we hope that increasing numbers of them will take advantage of it and that the business of the Indians will receive additional consideration through elected members in the house representing them. Aside altogether from the desirability of having everyone in Canada vote, this will have the great advantage of leading to more widespread attention to Indian affairs and better administration.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. D. S. Harkness (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that a bill to revise the Indian Act has finally come before parliament, but I am sorry it has come in at this time in the session, when, in my opinion, there is no time to give it the consideration which it should have. Moreover, since its introduction some two weeks ago, and its first reading—the motion today is for second reading—there has not been sufficient time for the Indians across the country to consider the provisions of the bill, to study them and to make recommendations as a result of that study.

The Indians throughout Canada, a number of us here in the house, and other persons and associations throughout Canada who have been interested in the Indians and their welfare and the improvement of their situation generally, have been pressing for several years for a revision of the Indian Act.

The minister gave something of an historical review of what has occurred in that respect during the past five or six years. In 1945 we had a full day's debate on Indian affairs as a result of a resolution I moved that the old age pension should be extended to the Indians. At the end of that day's debate the then minister, Mr. Glen, announced that a full-scale revision of the Indian Act would be undertaken, and that a committee of the house would be set up in the following session to get that work under way. As a result of that undertaking a joint committee of the other place and of this house was set up in 1946. It held sessions throughout that year, and also in 1947 and in 1948. As a result of that study the committee made a draft revision of the Indian Act, and submitted that draft in 1948. That was two years ago. Apparently it has taken the government two years to revise the draft act which was submitted by the committee, and to bring in the present bill.

In view of this long delay it would seem that the government did not consider it a very urgent matter that the Indian Act should be revised. I fail to see why now, at the very end of the session, they should suddenly consider it very urgent to get this bill through without full consideration being possible, either by the Indians or by the members of this house.

At the beginning of this session it was indicated in the speech from the throne that this revision of the Indian Act was to be introduced this year. Subsequently several members of the house, including myself, urged that the bill should be introduced early in the session so that the Indians would have an opportunity to know what the provisions were, and to make recommendations in connection with them. That action was not taken. Instead of the bill being introduced at the beginning of this session, as I believe it should have been, so that there would have been ample time for all of these things to be done and for this bill, if necessary—and I this it is necesary—to be considered by a special committee of the house where detailed study could be given to its various provisions, the bill is introduced at the end of the session, when we are all rushing to get the estimates through and to finish the session before the end of this month.

An hon. Member: By the end of this week.

Mr. Harkness: Somebody says "this week". Apart from that altogether, certainly nearly everybody here is hoping that the session will close at the end of the month. That does not give the time required for proper study of this bill by this house and by the other place, and particularly it does not give the opportunity, which should be given, for Indians across the country to study the bill and make their recommendations.

In his statement this morning the minister said that the Indians had been given an opportunity to consider the bill. In my opinion a statement of that kind from the realistic point of view is a joke. It is of course no joke so far as the Indians are concerned that that position should be taken. But the bill which was given first reading two weeks ago was not printed until a day or two after that. I think it finally came out on the ninth or tenth of the month. Copies were then mailed out. I am sure there are many bands of Indians in this country that have not yet received copies. With regard to the particular bands to which copies were sent, I think they were mailed to the superintendents as well as to the agents. There certainly has not been a wide enough distribution of the bill or anything like sufficient time for the Indians, most of whom, as hon. members know are illiterate or semi-literate, to comprehend all of its provisions, or to send in any reasonable recommendations in connection with them.

We are now on second reading of the bill, and to the extent that second reading means approval of the general principle that the Indian Act should be revised, I think we are all in agreement. We have been pressing for that; we want the act revised. However, this particular bill—in other words, the revision which has been put before us—contains a large number of things which Indians across the country, many of us here, and other people who have been interested in the subject, do not approve. In short, this is not the bill which it was hoped would be introduced. It does not provide for many of the reforms and improvements which it was hoped would be covered by the new bill when it was introduced.

Seeing that that is the situation I hope that the government will not press second reading through to a conclusion. I hope that when we have had the debate today it will be adjourned and the matter left there and brought up immediately at the beginning of the next session; because I am convinced that it is not reasonable to push this bill through at the present session.

It seems to me that giving second reading to this bill at the present time would not only indicate that we want a revision of the Indian Act; it would indicate that this house has given approval in general to the terms of the present bill, and there are many of us here who cannot do that. Many of us who have been most anxious for a revision of the act cannot subscribe to many of the provisions of this bill. I repeat that I hope the government will not press the measure through, but will allow the matter to stand over until next year, and in the meantime hear the representations of the Indians across the country, and bring in a bill embodying a good many of the recommendations which are made. In other words, give us a more satisfactory bill. Someone says that the act can be amended afterwards; but I have found that the procedure of having acts amended is always difficult.

This is the first time the act has been revised in toto since it was passed about seventy years ago. Under the circumstances I suggest that after this long period of three-quarters of a century without any major revision, we should do a thorough and complete job now, and not talk about bringing in further amendments next year or the year after to cover up deficiencies in the bill.

This is all the more necessary in view of what was said by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) on May 5 in answer to a question put by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) as to what means were to be given to the Indians to make representations in regard to the bill. At that time the Prime Minister made this statement, as reported at page 2205 of Hansard:

> The department felt it had all the information required for the drafting of the legislation, and that it would be desirable that the bill be given first reading and be distributed, and then that a sufficient lapse of time be allowed so that interested chiefs and other members of their bands may see what it contains and make representations.

I draw attention particularly to the suggestion that a sufficient lapse of time after first reading be allowed so that the interested chiefs and other members of their bands might see what the bill contained, and make their representations. The plain truth is that sufficient time to do that has not been allowed. Many Indians have not seen the bill and have not been able to study it and make intelligent representations in respect to it. The Prime Minister added this:

> Of course it is legislation in the interests of the Canadian nation, but more particularly for the Indians themselves. If it appeared from their reaction to the bill that they would prefer not to have it adopted at this session but rather to have further discussions with them and further consideration of the legislation, their views would be given sympathetic consideration.

I do not think there is any question that the Indians would prefer to have this bill deferred until the next session of parliament so that they can study it and make representations.

I have received a considerable number of letters and telegrams indicating that that is so. I should like to read a few excerpts from some of them to show the reaction to this bill and the evident effort to push it through hastily at this session. The first of these is a copy of a letter addressed to the minister by Mr. John Laurie, secretary of the Indian Association of Alberta, in which he says this:

> We are aware that it is pressing legislation. We are also aware that it seems to have taken almost two years to the day to frame this bill, and that two weeks, which includes mail transit, is rather short for almost illiterate Indians to discuss, let alone comprehend, its terms.
>
> May we, therefore, urge that we be given assurance that we shall have an extension, even if the bill must be set over for second reading until next session.

At the same time I received a letter, dated June 13, from Mr. Laurie in connection with the bill, in which he said this:

> Just got a copy of bill today. Cannot possibly make decent study in two weeks.

Of course he was not allowed two weeks; he was allowed only about nine days. It continues:

> Sections of this bill are straight communist dictatorship, without elements of decent respect for a human being. Sections 5 to 16 inclusive damnable, especially 12 (a) (iv).

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think the hon. member should read letters of the kind. He is here to express his own opinion and not those of others. It is not customary to read such letters.

Mr. Harkness: This is a letter from the Indian Association of Alberta, representing practically all the Indians in that province. If there is anything which could be germane to the discussion, then I think it would be the opinion of these Indians.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The house has a bill before it for consideration. It is for hon. members to express their opinions on the bill. The members must decide whether the bill is to be enacted or not.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, as I was attempting to establish, the Indians of this country are not satisfied that they have been able to make the representations they were led to believe by the Prime Minister they would be permitted to make. In his statement he said that if they were not satisfied the bill would not be pressed. The letters I have attempted to read indicate the reaction of the Indians to the Prime Minister's statement:

> If it appeared from their reaction to the bill that they would prefer not to have it adopted at this session but rather to have further discussions with them and further consideration of the legislation, their views would be given sympathetic consideration.

I am indicating by these letters the reaction of the Indians.

Mr. Speaker: I did not stop the hon. member immediately, but allowed him to proceed at some considerable length. May I refer to Beauchesne's third edition, citation 265, which I have quoted on other occasions in the house, and which states:

> It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications emanating from persons outside the house and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the house.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I must say that ever since I have been here hon. members have been reading letters in every debate.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is correct in that, and it was because I had that in mind that I gave him considerable leeway. But, having done so, may I now ask him to express his own views on the bill?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, all I wish to say is that I have these letters and telegrams, and so far as I can determine from them the general reaction to the bill by the Indians in Alberta is extremely hostile. According to a letter I received this morning, the only Indians who have had time to study the bill at all have been Blood Indians. The information I get is that they are highly incensed over the bill, and the general opinion among them is that more resentment has been stirred up by the apparent intention to push the bill through without hearing their representations than has arisen on any other occasion in the last fifty years.

In addition to the reaction of the Indians in Alberta, articles appearing in the press indicate that there is a considerable degree of resentment among Indians in all parts of Canada. I do not think there is any doubt that they do not want the bill to go through in its present form. They want to have an opportunity to study it and to make representations. I say we should have regard to their wishes in the matter.

I do not think there is any provision against reading a press dispatch in connection with a matter of this kind.

Mr. Speaker: That would come within the same category as the reading of letters. The citation which I read referred definitely to articles in newspapers.

Mr. Harkness: This does not express an opinion; it is just a straight news item.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I will allow one.

Mr. Harkness: I clipped this from the Montreal Gazette of this morning:

Sixty Indian delegates ask act's deferment.

Ottawa, June 20—Sixty delegates of the North American Indian Brotherhood—some in tribal costume—met Citizenship Minister Harris in the parliament buildings tonight to seek deferment of the new Indian act.

They placed before the minister a petition asking parliament not to enact the Indian bill "in view of the fact that many of the clauses are too detrimental to the best interests of the Indians."

The petition was adopted today in resolution form by the sixty delegates in a hastily called convention held here when the brotherhood received word that the government had introduced the bill, product of three years of committee study of Indian affairs, in parliament.

The delegates, who will hold another session here tomorrow, came from all provinces except Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. They said delegates could not come from those provinces because of western flood conditions.

What I have said and what I have been allowed to read I think indicates the attitude of the Indians. In view of the statement of the Prime Minister, and the fact that the Indians are apparently opposed to having this bill go through at the present time in its present form, I think the government, as I suggested before, should allow the debate to be adjourned and let the bill stand until next session. If the government presses through the second reading of the bill, then I think the clause by clause study should be deferred. I do not think the majority of us here have been able to give sufficient study to the bill to be in position to consider it properly in committee of the whole.

I am not going to risk being called to order again by referring to specific clauses of the bill, but I should like to say something about what is contained in the bill and to indicate some of the things which I think are wrong with it.

Sections 5 to 16 deal with the definition of Indian, and provide for the registration of Indians. I think these sections will prove particularly troublesome. They appear to indicate an arbitrary determination by legislation of the question who are Indians or who will be Indians in the future. It would exclude a considerable number of persons who have always considered themselves as Indians and who were considered by the bands to be Indians.

This brings up the whole matter of the Macdonald report which was issued in Alberta some years ago. The department undertook to remove from the reserves a considerable number of people who had been living there all their lives and who regarded themselves as Indians. Several hundred people were excluded from the reserve, and in many cases from the only life they had ever known, and from any chance of earning a livelihood. There was much complaint, and the government appointed Mr. Justice Macdonald as a royal commissioner to inquire into the whole matter and make recommendations. Mr. Justice Macdonald went up into the north country where most of these people lived and heard representations from the Indians, from departmental officials and so forth, and then submitted his recommendations. One recommendation was that the majority of the people affected be reinstated to Indian status, but the report was not acted upon. A small number of these people were readmitted to Indian status, but the great majority were not.

These people consider that an injustice has been done to them and they keep bringing up the question. It was brought up before the joint committee on Indian affairs. It now appears that under these sections of the bill the whole question is to be settled arbitrarily, and these people are excluded and will continue to be excluded. It does not seem to me to be a just and reasonable way of dealing with this problem. It seems to be only one of many problems which are being settled arbitrarily and unjustly by the provisions of this bill.

Then there is a provision that persons who have received half-breed land or money-scrip, and their descendants, are to be denied Indian status. At the time of the Riel rebellion many people who were more or less pure blood Indian, or at least mixed blood; many people who were living with the Indians and for all practical purposes were Indians, took half-breed lands or money-scrip. They then sold it to unscrupulous whites for practically nothing. In many cases they were encouraged to take this scrip so that some white man could get possession of land for very little. Many of the descendants of those people now live in the Indian bands.

There has always been great difficulty in determining whether a man's grandfather or great-grandfather took the scrip, and that difficulty still exists. It was on this basis that a lot of people in northern Alberta who were dealt with in the Macdonald report have been excluded from band membership. It is apparent that the provisions of these sections would exclude from band membership a considerable number of people who have been brought up as Indians, who have lived as Indians all their lives, and who know no other way of life. These people could not be reasonably happy in any other form of life. This is a matter which needs more study and consideration.

Another provision is that the illegitimate children of male Indians shall be excluded from band membership and denied Indian status. This brings up the question of what is illegitimacy. In the past a large number of Indians have not considered it necessary to get a marriage certificate and go through a marriage ceremony according to the white man's custom and law. There has always been a large number of Indians who have married according to the old native custom, and in my opinion those marriages should be looked upon as just as legitimate as any other. It is not realistic to expect an Indian to secure a marriage certificate as a white man would and go through a marriage ceremony, and his children should not be considered illegitimate. Whether or not that will be the effect of this bill, I do not know. Without a careful definition of illegitimacy, certainly this provision will cause a great deal of hardship among Indians and Indian children.

I should like to deal briefly with the provisions of the bill concerning liquor. As all hon. members probably know, up to the present time liquor has been completely prohibited so far as Indians are concerned. The bill prohibits the possession or consumption of liquor on reserves. Any Indian found in an intoxicated condition on a reserve is subject to fine or imprisonment. On the other hand, where bars and beverage rooms exist, Indians are allowed to enter such premises to drink liquor. What the bill actually provides is a compromise between complete prohibition and the laws governing the consumption of liquor as applied to the white population. In my opinion it is an unworkable compromise. From the practical point of view nothing but trouble will arise from it, and it will be impossible of just enforcement. So far as the Indian population is concerned, it seems to me that you must have either one thing or the other. There must be complete prohibition; otherwise Indians must be put on the same basis as white people and made subject to the same laws and penalties involved in the use of liquor.

If that is done then there should be provision in the bill to enable reserves to hold local option votes if they so desire. If the majority of Indians on a particular reserve want it to be a dry reserve, they should have the opportunity to say so. So far as I can ascertain, the majority of Indians in Alberta are against the removal of prohibition, but in other parts of the country that is not so. There are some Indians who think they should be put on the same basis as the white man, and I think there is a great deal to be said for that point of view in certain localities. As I say, the problem could be solved if Indians were put on the same basis as white men, with provision for local option votes so far as individual reserves are concerned. I am quite certain that the compromise arrangement provided in the bill will not work. In Alberta an Indian will go into a beverage room in a small town and get too much beer. As soon as he sets foot on his reserve he will be in trouble.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): How about the Ontario cocktail bars?

Mr. Graydon: The voice of experience.

Mr. Harkness: The same thing applies to cocktail bars, except that I do not think you will find a great number of Indians coming into cities of a size that have cocktail bars. They will go into the small towns that have beer parlours, and that will apply to a substantial proportion of the entire Indian population.

So far as I have been able to ascertain, there is no provision in the bill for the establishment of a commission to settle the treaty rights of the Indians. There is no provision of any sort to satisfy the Indians so far as their claims under their treaty rights are concerned. One of the sorest points among the Indians is that in their opinion their treaty rights have not been observed. They point to the provisions of the various treaties in which they were concerned, and particularly those which gave them the power to fish and hunt at will. Of course those rights are now severely restricted by provincial hunting and fishing laws. The Indians have never had any compensation for the curtailment of their rights.

There is much doubt as to what the position really is so far as Indian rights are concerned. The practical result is that Indians are constantly being arrested for infractions of provincial game laws, whereas they believe that they have the right to hunt and fish wherever and whenever they please. That is a whole problem in itself, and one which needs to be settled. Until it is settled the Indians will continue to be dissatisfied. From the practical point of view I believe there is no question that we cannot allow the Indians to hunt and fish at any time of the year anywhere they please. Nevertheless there should be some settlement made with them for the abrogation of the rights guaranteed in their treaties.

Another section of the bill makes it illegal for any person to solicit or receive contributions from an Indian for the alleged purpose of improving his lot without the written consent of the minister. If that provision is put into effect I believe it will make it impossible for Indians to form associations. As the present time there are quite a few Indian organizations. There are the Indian Association of Alberta, the Indian Union of Saskatchewan, the Native Brotherhood, the Native Brotherhood of British Columbia, and others. If the provision is passed in its present form it seems to me that Indians will not be permitted to form such organizations unless the minister is agreeable to their existence. That does not appear to be reasonable or democratic. I do not think that Indians should be limited in respect to organizations they may wish to form or to which they may wish to belong. Of course if you are going to form an organization you must have funds to support it.

In the bill power is taken to enfranchise a particular Indian or a band of Indians against their will if, in the opinion of a committee of three appointed by the minister, it is deemed a desirable thing to do. I do not think that is reasonable. I do not think we should force enfranchisement on an Indian when it means, so far as he is concerned, the loss of certain rights and exclusion from his reserve and from medical and other benefits to which he is entitled. There is no question that this is another provision which certainly should not be passed without a great deal more study being given to it.

Over the past five or six years I believe I have been in as close touch with Indian affairs as any other member of the house. I have not had time to digest the bill and study it properly, and I am certainly not yet in a position to suggest what amendments should be made to particular sections. In addition I have not yet been able to ascertain the reactions of Indians in my own province and their recommendations as to the various provisions of the bill. I believe every other member of the house is in the same or a worse position. Therefore I once more make a plea to the government not to push through second reading of the bill, but if they do, let them not carry it beyond that stage.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I believe that for years many hon. members of this house have looked forward to the introduction of a much more progressive, more modern and more satisfactory Indian Act than we have had on the statute book. Until the joint committee was set up in the last parliament and sat, partly as a committee and partly as a royal commission, for some three years, only twice since 1867, I believe in 1926 and 1930, had commissions or inquiries under the authority of this house gone into the conditions of Indians. I had looked forward to the introduction of the bill, but I must say that I am disappointed in it. It is not the bill we hoped for. It does not do what the joint committee, in its recommendations, hoped such a bill would do. Very reluctantly, and I mean that word, I am joining with those who are asking the minister to withhold the bill for this session.

I feel that the bill is unsatisfactory. I repeat that it does not do the things the members of the committee hoped would be done. It has some good features, but the bill does not put into effect some of the important suggestions contained in the report of that committee, which incidentally was made on June 22, 1948, exactly two years ago. I had hoped that something more would be done for education than has been done in this bill. It is true that there is some advance over the provisions of the present Indian Act, but I had hoped that the advance would be much greater. I had hoped that consideration would be given to the wishes of those members of the Indian population who desired not only sectarian schools but non-sectarian schools as well. I believe an Indian should have the right to decide exactly what kind of education his child will have in that regard. It is a privilege we demand for ourselves, and I think it is a privilege the Indians should have. While I readily recognize that the provision of the bill—and I do not want to discuss the clause just now—dealing with the educational system among the Indians where agreements are reached with governments, and so on, is a considerable advance over what we have in the present act, in my opinion it does not go far enough.

Then, as was suggested by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Harkness), I believe more attention should have been paid to the recommendation of the committee as to the setting up of a commission to deal with the ancient treaties made with the Indians. That has been a very sore point with the Indian population of this country for a number of years. So far as I have been able to judge, both from the reading of our history and from documentary evidence, and indeed from some of the old treaties, those treaties have not been observed by this country. In my opinion the Indians today are entitled to a thorough investigation into what has been done with respect to their lands and their rights, with a view to the restoration of those rights, or, where restoration is impossible, proper compensation for that which has been taken from them. That, I think, was in the mind of the committee when it made its recommendations in 1948.

We were hoping, to repeat a phrase that was used at the time, that this bill would be something of a Magna Carta for our Indian population, but it falls far short of that. It is merely an amendment of the act now on the statute book. We had hoped this bill would provide in a definite, certain way for the transition of our Indian population from the position of wardship or trusteeship it now occupies in relation to us, toward the goal of complete citizenship and equality with the rest of the population. So we are disappointed with this bill.

I am not going to deal with the various clauses concerning enfranchisement and so on, because an opportunity will be given to the house to discuss them when we study the bill in detail. However, I believe any hon. member reading the recommendations of the committee, which will be found in the Journals of this house, volume 84, 1948, at pages 647 to 652, and comparing them with the clauses of this bill, will find that the bill falls far short of what was contemplated by the committee at that time. I know that many of these matters of necessity require consultation with the provinces. I believe it was suggested in the report of the committee that matters dealing with education, health and social services, fur conservation, the development of Indian trap lines, provincial fish and game laws, provincial liquor legislation, the validity of marriages solemnized by Indians on Indian reserves according to tribal customs and ritual, all should be the subject of dominion-provincial conference. The recommendation was that these matters should be placed upon the agenda of the next dominion-provincial conference so that they could be discussed and understandings arrived at before we passed a new Indian Act. That has not been done. I know that in some instances there have been negotiations with the departments concerned, with the departments of education in some of the provinces, the departments of natural resources in others, and so on; but there is no uniform understanding between the provinces and the dominion as to what shall be done in these matters for our Indian population.

I do not propose to deal now with these matters at length. I can quite understand the government may feel that very little good would come out of any delay, so far as hearing further representations is concerned, and I have some sympathy with that point of view. I was not a member of the committee which sat for three years, but I did drop in occasionally to listen to the briefs, the representations and the evidence, and I felt there was no consensus among the Indians who appeared before that committee. It seemed to me that in all probability this house and the government would have to make up their minds from the very conflicting evidence that was submitted to the committee, and I doubt very much whether further representations would bring results which would be different from those we have already had from former representations.

But since this bill is in our opinion unsatisfactory, I think that further opportunity—since the time between the introduction of the bill and its second reading has been so short—might be given for further representations, in the hope that more success would be achieved than was the case in 1946, 1947 and 1948. But my main suggestion is not that. It is that the bill is disappointing. The bill is unsatisfactory in so many particulars and fails to bring into effect so many of the main recommendations of the committee that I think the house and the government would be well advised to let the matter stand for this session.

One other consideration is this. The house apparently is anxious to bring this session to a close. I must say that I have not a great deal of sympathy with that consideration, even if I myself thought the house might close at the end of this week and have made certain engagements because of that belief. But I have not much sympathy with trying to rush things through. This is a bill which is exceedingly important to a large section of our Indian population, and I think that the suggestions that have been made for delay and opportunities for further discussion should be considered by the minister and a decision made to postpone its enactment this session.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): I listened, Mr. Speaker, with considerable interest to the statement the minister made when the bill was first proposed for second reading. He gave a good, plausible-sounding speech that tickled the ears and really made one think that the government had accomplished something in this act. As his first highlight I notice that he said that the old act had not been suitable to the needs and the aspirations of the Indians. While I do not recall that he specifically stated that the new act met the needs and the aspirations of the Indians, he surely strongly implied that it did. The second highlight which impressed me was that he mentioned the fact that it had been the government's desire to make provision for permitting the Indians to give careful consideration to this act. And consequently the act, Mr. Speaker, was actually introduced to this house two whole solid weeks before it was brought in here for second reading! In order to give people over thousands and thousands of miles of Canada, in remote areas, a chance to read and consider it! I must admit that two weeks is almost exorbitant in the provision it makes. I wager that over five-sixths of the Indians never did see this act at all, nor their leaders, in the paltry few days that we have been allowed to have for the Indians to study the act.

The third highlight was this one: The Indians were to be given more control of their affairs. I had a deputation of Indians waiting on me yesterday, among whom were some of what I consider to be the most intelligent Indians in Canada. They spent a good deal of time telling me that, as far as they could gather from the act, the act had almost successfully removed all hope of effective control by the Indians of their affairs on their own reserves. Of course on reading the act and explaining it under the minister's direction, probably we shall be able to see wherein he can justify his case. But I should not be a bit surprised if the Indians were right; because, after all, they have been the victims of the kind of government that Canada has given them now for over seventy years, and they recognize from afar the coming evils.

After I heard the minister's speech, I thought probably I had been deceived in connection with the act; so I went and glanced over the act again in order to make sure that I had really been concentrating on it when I had gone through it the first time. On reading this act I find that I simply cannot justify the minister's optimism by any stretch of the imagination. It is an astonishing thing to me that he should have thought that these fine things he spoke of were embodied in the act. I wonder if somebody else wrote his speech for him without his having read the act. I would not think that would be the case, but the minister is an extremely busy man.

I would say that the act is an entirely negative one. It is apparently designed to govern an inferior and subordinate people and to keep them inferior and subordinate. The first great error which has been committed in dealing with our Indians in Canada has been that of taking it for granted that the Indians were an inferior race and a subordinate race, and that we were going to keep them inferior and to keep them subordinate for nobody knows how long. I think that was a wrong point of view.

In the early days while the land was sparsely settled and people were being protected by a thin red line of mounted police over thousands of miles of area, I can understand that considerable anxiety might have filled the minds of those charged with responsibility with respect to the Indians. They might have desired to keep a fairly firm hand over the Indians; and they might have been quite justified in such a desire. I am not sure. I did not live in those days, although I must say that I came into Canada with my parents in 1892. Things were rather primitive in the area in which we settled in those days. We settled right alongside an Indian reservation. I am not sure that what was done was exactly the right thing or the wrong thing. But certainly if there ever was any cause whatsoever for looking upon the Indians as subordinate and for desiring to keep them so, that cause has now disappeared.

It should be borne in mind that the Indians were not a conquered race. They never were a conquered race in this nation. This nation made a treaty with the Indians on equal terms; and in most cases the Indians who signed those treaties were perfectly worthy to look the white man straight in the eye and to meet him on equal terms. They were just as intelligent, just as skilful, just as noble, just as brave and strong, and just as effective in every single way. In most cases there never was any thought of conquering the Indians. The Indians made a treaty. The treaty money that we find the Indians obtaining throughout Canada is clear evidence that such was the concept. It is time that everybody in Canada, in his thinking and in his acting—and that the government in their thinking and acting—should go back to the time when the Indian was looked upon as an absolute equal.

When we look upon a good many of the Indians today, if we find it hard to consider them as equals, then I must say that the fault lies entirely with us; because the ancestors of the present Indians were certainly the equals of any white man that ever stepped on Canadian soil. I think there is no successful way of controverting that statement at all.

When the act is apparently a negative one and is designed to keep the Indians inferior and subordinate, that fact alone condemns it as a whole, regardless of what the individual clauses may contain of merit.

When I come to examine the act, as a member of the Indian affairs committee, I find myself deeply disappointed. I spent three years of hard work on that Indian affairs committee, as did the other earnest members who were there. To think that, after all our efforts, the sum total of our reward is this contemptible thing we have before us today makes me wonder if I do not have to struggle to keep my faith in humanity. We were told that we were going to help the Indians to help themselves. I looked into the bill, but up to the present time I am sorry to say that I have found no evidence of anything in the bill to help the Indians to help themselves beyond what we had in the old act.

We were told that we were to build a Magna Carta for the Indians. Well, I fail to find any evidence of any Magna Carta for the Indians. I may have overlooked something, and the minister will have an opportunity of pointing out what I have failed to see, but I think he will do pretty well if he can justify any such high sounding hope as that this bill would be a Magna Carta.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I did not say that.

Mr. Blackmore: Members of the house were saying that in the past when we were building up an act—I do not think the minister said that. I want to say this. I think personally, Mr. Speaker, that the present minister of course is completely innocent of any part in connection with this bill. He has just come into his department. I think he is taking hold of his department and doing a good job. All the things that I am saying about the bill are no reflection on the minister. I am quite sure that if the minister had been in charge of the affairs of this department from the beginning there would be an altogether different bill from the one that is now before us. I think that is only fair, but it is no reason why we should pass this bill. I think rather it is one of the best reasons why we should go slowly and withhold the bill for a year, and give the minister a chance to get his feet on the ground, to get accustomed to his department, and then tell us something about the kind of bill he would like to have in order to handle the department successfully.

Mr. Johnston: Fire the officials.

Mr. Blackmore: I do not know about the officials. They probably did what they were told to do, but who told them? Sometimes there are ways of having orders given out, I understand, behind the hand in this country; you can never tell who is speaking from behind the hand.

The first thing a person wonders about is where the non-sectarian education is that members of the committee almost to an individual decided the Indian should have. Where is it? I find no evidence of it in this bill. Out on the reservation alongside of which I have grown up, among the Blood Indians of whom I have the honour to be a chief, I find that if a man is going to send his child anywhere to get any education he has to send that child either to a Catholic residential school or to an Anglican residential school. I am finding no fault with either of these splendid organizations, but to say that an Indian, in order to get his child educated, has to take that child out from alongside his own fireside, out from under his own parental roof, and allow the child to remain for years and years under an influence which is contrary to what he may desire, to say that an Indian has to do that in order to get an education for his children is to say something that is so far beneath the sense of British justice that every member of this house has, that it alone constitutes a reason in itself for the rejection of this bill, until ample provision is made for the non-sectarian education of the Indian.

Where is the defining of the extent of the government's obligation to the Indians through treaties, promises, agreements, by sweeping specific agreements which have been made with the Indians for many years ever since our fathers first came here to deal with the Indians? We find no evidence in the bill, so far as I can see, of the setting up of a claims commission. We find no evidence of any statement made by the minister that there is contemplated such a commission independent of the bill. But the time is far overdue when a claims commission should be set up to consider the injustices which the Indians have suffered from by reason of our failure to keep the treaty obligations that we solemnly entered into back in the years of long ago.

Where is the formula for gradual but continuous transition from wardship to citizenship which we all expected we would find in the bill? We had a right to expect it. Where is the formula? It simply is not in the bill. There should be at least this important provision in this bill.

I do not propose to discuss any individual clauses at all but I will say that six essentials ought to be provided for in the bill:

First of all there has to be something done, and done soon, for the thorough rehabilitation of the Indians. By that I mean in a general way there must be provision made whereby an Indian has a chance to start out in life. Let each of us members of this house suppose now that he were an Indian father and that he had an Indian son twenty-one years old. The boy wants to get married. He comes to us and he says: "Dad, what may I do to get started to support my family?" I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if the average member of this house were surrounded with the circumstances which confront the average Indian father across this land he would be stricken with complete despair and dismay at the thought of advising his son.

There simply are no facilities in the ordinary life of the Indian for rehabilitating himself. I speak as one individual having much experience because I live alongside one of the finest reserves in the Dominion of Canada, inhabited by one of the finest bands of Indians in the Dominion of Canada, namely, the Blood Indians. I know the difficulties; I know many of the fathers, some of them about my own age. Many of them have talked to me about their problems. Something simply must be done in the way of a large revolving fund to enable these people to borrow money to buy stock and equip themselves on their land, or through other means something must be done to give the young rising generation a chance to establish itself. There is not a doubt in the world about that; and if this house permits this opportunity to go by without making provision for that important essential then it will have betrayed its trust in this most important time in the history of Canada.

Secondly, there must be a claims commission set up right now, within the next year. I do not see why we should ask a splendid young man like the present minister to undertake the administration of such a department as this under such a handicap as he will be under if he has no claims commission. With the ordinary officials of his department loaded down with the weight of routine detail, the considering of petitions from groups of Indians for redress of grievances from which they are suffering by reason of this, that and the other thing which has resulted through natural development is far too much to ask of any minister. What chance has the minister to carry on and give the very best he has to his department unless a claims commission is set up so that he knows something about where he is?

Then there should be provision for self-government among the Indians more and more. If the Indians are unable to govern themselves, then how can we expect them by voting to be able to govern us and help us to govern ourselves? And if they are able to help govern Canada by voting for members to come to this House of Commons I see no reason why they cannot govern themselves. To contemplate the situation from that angle makes the matter palpably absurd.

Education, as I have indicated, simply must be provided for. The average Indian boy or girl has not a fifty per cent chance of education comparable with that of his white brother or sister who lives just across the road from the reservation. Yet if he goes out in competition in the world around him he must be in competition with that young white brother or sister in every sphere of activity. Well, together with the natural handicaps which hold the Indians down by reason of many things which need not be mentioned, to give them the additional handicap of inferior preparation through education is to visit upon them the grossest kind of injustice.

A fifth important thing is the right to remain Indians. We have cavalierly assumed, as white people in this country, that it is a completely desirable thing that the Indians shall mingle with us, become whites, be submerged and lose their identity. Well, I think we are going a long way when we assume that we are so completely superior as all that. I do not see any reason under the sun why the Indians should not be able to continue a long history in which their race shall be preserved, just as the race of certain other peoples we can name has been preserved. I shall have more to say about that. The whole object of our policy in Canada seems to be to submerge the Indians and to assimilate them out of existence. That may be all right; it may be desirable; it may be that the Indians want it. But if they do want it, then they should do that sort of thing of their own volition, and not through anything imposed upon them by us. If they choose to intermarry with our people, and our people choose to intermarry with them, then let that be taken up in a purely natural way. Do not try to force it on the Indians in a way which would assume the nature of dictatorial demands on them.

Finally the Indian should be provided religious freedom. There is nothing that the ordinary individual in Canada values more highly than religious freedom. There is not a member in the House of Commons who would not step out and die any time for his religious freedom, the right to believe and to live in accordance with the dictates of his conscience. But we have consistently denied that right to the Indians. Granted we have not passed any law making it impossible for the Indians to worship according to the faith of their fathers, but we have placed them in a position where they cannot get instruction unless they send their children to schools where the faith of their fathers is destroyed. It may be, too, that they are too poor and not organized well enough to have religious worship as we would have it. In various other ways, too, we have placed the Indians in a position where they are virtually denied the right to religious freedom.

Of these six essentials, I do not find provision for a single one in the present bill—certainly there is not adequate provision. Who would not condemn a measure of that kind? Who would not recoil from it? No wonder the Indians are in despair—and they are. The very contemplation of this act fills them with dismay. I have talked with many of them, and I have learned that that is so.

May I now turn to the first item I mentioned, namely that of rehabilitation? On the reserve adjoining the area in which I live there is an abundance of land to provide good farm homes or good ranch homes for virtually every Indian couple on the reservation. Yet to the average Indian it is a complete impossibility to get an advance of money sufficient to enable him to buy five or six young cattle with which to start out, and the equipment necessary to operate such a farm.

That ought not to be. Something has to be done by way of supplying a large revolving fund of millions and millions of dollars—tens of millions of dollars. Of course that scares us. Suppose it does; the contemplation of a war financial obligation scares us, too, but we assume it when it becomes necessary. Surely we should not recoil from a peace obligation just because there are financial commitments involved. Provision should be made to give the Indians vocational guidance. When one thinks of the various means whereby we give our own young people suggestions as to what they should do and what vocations they should enter, and then realizes that there is so little of that sort available to average Indian boys and girls, once more we have that sinking feeling about the life they have to face and the difficulties they must have to keep themselves looking up instead of down.

On many of our reserves there is no longer ample land and no longer are there ample resources to support the Indian populations. I doubt very much whether the minister will find available to his hand, when he begins to probe into the difficulties which are bound to come, data which will enable him to tell the resources of a given reserve—call it reserve P, if you like, or call it reserve K. He will not be able to tell whether that reserve is equipped with sufficient resources to support the Indians thereon.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Blackmore: Certainly.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): Do not the Indians in British Columbia, particularly those along the coast, have in their reserves the most arable and fertile land to be found in the province?

Mr. Blackmore: But that is not the whole of Canada, and I was talking about the whole of Canada. And, as I recall it, if my recollection of history serves me correctly, British Columbia pretty well settled the Indians of that province before the dominion government took over. The result is that the British Columbia Indians are perhaps more fortunately situated than those of any other province. My recollection is that when British Columbia entered confederation she stipulated that the dominion government should take just as good care of the Indians of that province as had been given them by the province.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): The same applies to the province of Quebec, and certainly it applies to Ontario.

An hon. Member: Make your own speech.

Mr. Blackmore: I do not want to get into an argument with the hon. member. I hope he will allow me to deliver my speech.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): Deal with facts, then.

Mr. Blackmore: The things I am dealing with are facts. If the hon. member wants me to take him in hand about the facts, I will soon do it.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): I am asking the hon. member to state the facts fairly.

Mr. Blackmore: The hon. member will have a clear floor when I have finished, and he may say all he wishes to say. If he can find any fault in what I am saying, I shall be ready to take it back. But I suggest that he had better assume that I know what I am talking about, because I live alongside a reservation, just as he does.

I doubt exceedingly that there is a reservation in Canada today equipped with adequate resources to support the Indians living thereon. To the extent to which any reservation is unable to support those Indians, this parliament ought to make moneys available; and we should have the principle laid down whereby the resources of a given reservation can be supplemented by one means or another.

Leadership should be provided in developing self-sufficiency among the Indians. That may not mean much until we probe into it a bit; but there are a great many things the Indians could do on an ordinary reservation —if they had the leadership—to supply the needs of the Indians living on the reserves— as was done ninety years ago on the reserve I live near.

With wise guidance and a little supplementary assistance the Indians could be enabled in large measure to become self-sufficient on their reservations. There are living out in Alberta a group of people—

Mr. Warren: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Blackmore: So long as these questions do not become so numerous that they use up my time.

Mr. Warren: Why is it that the hon. member for Lethbridge, who lives alongside a reserve, does not supply that leadership?

Mr. Blackmore: If anyone can imagine a more absolutely stupid question coming from any man than that, just call me up and tell me.

Mr. Warren: It is not a stupid question. Come up to Golden Lake reserve in my riding, where I initiated something in the way of leadership which has proved most successful. They are as happy a community as is to be found anywhere in Canada.

Mr. Blackmore: That sounds very fine. This bill will be in committee after a while, and the hon. member will have a standing invitation to boast all he wants to.

Mr. Warren: I am not boasting.

Mr. Blackmore: It looks as though certain people are attempting to interrupt this speech. If that is so, then there will be no more questions allowed. I have a message to convey; I represent a very fine tribe of Indians, and I am going to convey that message.

Mr. Warren: So do I.

Mr. Blackmore: I have a responsibility to discharge, and so has the hon. member. I suggest he get up and deliver a speech of his own, and that he ought not to interrupt mine —and the same applies to the hon. member for Cariboo.

As I have said, much could be done to enable the Indians on reservations to be self-sufficient. I would point out that in the same area where this reservation is located there is a group of Hutterites, some 150 strong. They are able to live together, almost completely self-sufficiently, on land no better than that on which Indians are living. But those people know how to work the land, they have the equipment with which to work it, and they have the knowledge. I do not know why something like that could not be done on our Indian reservations. We should make an attempt to rehabilitate our Indians.

With regard to old age pensions, I have said several times that in my opinion it is nothing less than a scandal that we pay old age pensions to white people and refuse them to the Indians who are much more needy. Old age pensions should be paid to the Indian at a much lower age. Why? Because the Indians have greater difficulty under ordinary circumstances to get work than the white people. They go out of the economic market at least five years earlier than the white man. If the white man needs an old age pension at 70 years, surely it is the barest of justice to give the Indian his pension at 65 years. It must be borne in mind also that from the cradle to the grave the Indian is faced with poor nourishment; malnutrition besets him all that time. The result is that deterioration from old age comes far earlier in his case than it does with the white man. There should be a larger old age pension for the Indian and he should be eligible at least five years earlier.

There should be larger family allowances for the Indian. Surely if the white man requires family allowances of the size given, the Indian needs at least half as much again in order to have anything like a chance.

Special assistance in buying should be provided for our Indians by this legislation. My experience has been that in buying housing, food and clothing and all the other necessities of life the ordinary Indian is in direct competition with the white man who is far more skilled and shrewd than he is. The result is he is beaten every time. From the time I was a little boy I can remember seeing white men buy good Indian ponies for $5 when they were worth at least $30. We should provide co-operative selling and buying facilities for the Indians, using the government's credit.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Blackmore: The Liberals are certainly interested in the Indians, are they not? They are so much interested that they cannot even bear to hear a little discussion about them! The government's credit should be provided so that the Indian can obtain his food, clothing and shelter far more cheaply than he can get these things in the open market. Today the Indian must go into the open market and frequently has to pay higher prices than the white man would ordinarily pay. Co-operative selling facilities for his goods should be provided under government supervision, but I shall not go into that. I have often been heartsick to see how difficult it is for the average Indian to sell his products at reasonable prices.

There is no reason why the government should not help the Indian establish himself in industry. All these things can be provided for in the act as a means of rehabilitating the Indian.

In dealing with the need for an Indian claims commission I will keep my eye only on the reservation with which I am thoroughly familiar. The wood on that reservation is not as plentiful by any means as it was when I first knew the reservation. The water supply is not nearly as great. The fish have completely disappeared. There are no game animals from one end of the reservation to the other where once there used to be an abundance of game. There is hardly any fruit on the hills or in the valleys and grazing has been almost ruined by over-grazing by the white man. The Indian reservation is nothing like what it was in 1877 when the Indians signed a treaty and were given the reservation. The deterioration of the reserve is due in large measure to the activities of the white man. An Indian claims commission would be able to establish the amount of deterioration that has taken place in this heritage of the Indians and set the proper reimbursement for the Indians for their losses. That is the only fair way I can see of approaching this matter.

Provision should be made for self-government by the Indians. The hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness) indicated that he was not quite sure whether one of the sections of this bill would prevent the organization of the Indians so that they could train themselves in self-government and express more effectively their desires to the white man's government. I am afraid that there actually is provision in this bill against the further development of even the loose and meagre organization the Indian now has. In my judgment the government should be doing everything in its power to enable the Indian to become thoroughly organized and should be ready to work with the Indian organizations.

Then a few more words about education. The education which the Indian child receives should be specially adapted to his need when he returns to live in the teepee on the reservation. As far as I have been able to see we have been trying to give the Indian child an education to fit him for life in the city. Such an education ordinarily is almost useless to him after he is through. If we want to educate an Indian child for life in the city we should educate him for that kind of thing, but if he is going to live on the reservation then his education should be adapted to that sort of life.

As I said a minute ago, Indian education should be completely non-sectarian. Up to the present time one of the difficulties encountered in educating young Indians is truancy. Sometimes the parents will not come in so the children can go to school. I think the only thing we can do about that problem is to establish non-sectarian residential schools, state-owned and state-controlled, similar to our universities, at which the Indian boys and girls could be taken into residence and be subject only to non-sectarian influence. It should be good, wholesome influence but not that of any particular religious denomination. That is the only way I can see of guaranteeing the Indian religious freedom and good education in any real sense of the term.

Everything should be done to preserve the racial identity of the Indian so that the Indian child one hundred years from now will still be an Indian if its parents feel that that should be the case. We must bear in mind that the Indians are a great race. Those who have gone back into the history of the race have been astonished at what they have found there as the probable racial origin of these dark people who have roamed our plains. They are a great race; they have a great history and they can have a great future. If they do not have that great future, in large measure it will be our fault. Provision should be made in the act to enable the Indian to maintain his racial identity. The act appears to me to be designed to destroy the racial identity of the Indian and submerge it out of sight.

After having said all this I do not think I need tell the minister that I am going to be among those who will support him by demanding that he withdraw this act and give us a year in which to study it and give him a year in which to find out what kind of act he needs in order to help him in his onerous duties of managing the Indians of this great dominion.

Mr. Abbott: I would ask the leave of the house to allow me to move the adjournment of this debate until later this day. It would be a great convenience to me if I could proceed with my estimates this afternoon, but they would not be continued this evening. This debate could be resumed at eight o'clock.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

SUPPLY

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

COMPLETION OF BIG BEAVER-MINTON RAILWAY GAP

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put I should like to take a few moments of the time of the house in discussing an important matter which has recently been brought to my attention. I wish to raise a matter which was brought to my attention through representations from a number of people in southern Saskatchewan. I will not have any other opportunity to bring it to the attention of the government at this session, and therefore I should like to do so now. I refer to the completion of the railway gap between Big Beaver and Minton. The people concerned are holding meetings throughout the area to press for completion of the railway line from Minton to Big Beaver. They point out that the need to fill the gap is very great. The people in that part of the province are isolated for a great part of the year. Completion of the line would improve railway service tremendously and would prevent a long and costly back haul. Since the gap is only some twenty-five miles it is the hope of the people in that area that construction may be undertaken at an early date.

I urge the Minister of Transport to use his influence to see that this is done. I have a resolution which expresses the need a lot better than I can, and I should like to read it to the house. It is as follows:

Whereas the original intention of Canadian Pacific Railway was no doubt to connect up the railway lines between Minton and Big Beaver;

And whereas over twenty years have passed by since these two lines were constructed;

And whereas by connecting up these two lines better service could be given to the residents in the area;

And whereas each year of delay in connecting up these two lines is costing the farmers a considerable amount of back haul;

Therefore be it resolved that we urge the linking up of the branch lines between Minton and Big Beaver.

That resolution was passed by the municipal council of the rural municipality of Souris valley. Substantially the same resolution was endorsed by many municipalities throughout that area. As the government has not seen fit to postpone the coming into effect of the recent increase in freight rates, which I had hoped it would, it is essential when the railway companies are given increasingly higher freight rates that they give better railway service. In that part of Saskatchewan there are innumerable lines that have not been completed, and for that reason the railway service generally is poor. Railway lines should be completed between Mankota and Valmarie, Neidpath and Swift Current, Willow Bunch and Assiniboia, and Neptune to Webster to connect with the C.N.R. line running to Radville, a distance of only a few miles. I hope the Minister of Transport will take my words into consideration and use his great influence and good offices to see that these gaps are filled and that the people of the area are given more adequate railway service.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Dion in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

General administration—

85. Departmental administration, $1,392,488.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to make any extended remarks on the item for departmental administration. I had the opportunity particularly on the budget address to give a fairly complete review of the financial position of the country and the administration of my department. Therefore I shall not attempt to do so on this item. I want to say in a word or two how gratified I have been at the work that has been done this year by the standing committee on public accounts. It has had a great many sittings, and I understand has gone into the method of presenting the estimates in a great deal of detail. I have not had an opportunity to consider carefully the reports which have been presented so far, but I want to congratulate all members of that committee of all parties on the careful and painstaking work which they have been doing.

I am sure the recommendations they have made will prove of the greatest assistance in considering what improvements can be made in the method of presenting the estimates to the house. In addition I welcome, as I have said before, the care and attention which has been given by the committee to the examination of specific items of expenditure. I shall not delay the house longer at this time, but I am quite sincere when I say that I am delighted at the way in which the public accounts committee has functioned this year. Instead of being a committee which meets infrequently, I hope it will be a committee which will meet during each session of parliament.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Chairman, on this item I should like to make a few general observations. First of all I should like to say something about what the minister has just said with reference to the public accounts committee. I was a member of it, although not as regular an attendant as I would have liked to be. I think what the minster has said is justified, and I am pleased that he has said it. I think we can assure him there will be no difficulty about having it meet every year because that is certainly the desire of our party. We had the good fortune to have before that committee notably the Auditor General. I say notably because he has a particular relationship to this house. We also had other civil servants whose help we appreciated and whose capacities we admired.

Finance enters very deeply into our lives, and I should like to make a few remarks this afternoon concerning a matter which has been brought up in the house before, and which I am afraid will have to be raised again until we get away from some of the difficulties which perplex us. I want to say something about controls, what one might call the use of arbitrary power, what someone very well described as delegated power which almost in spite of ourselves seems in some ways to be becoming almost paramount. I am not going to dwell on the matter at any length, and I hope not to be controversial. Sometimes it seems as if the house is not much interested in arbitrary power. One must assume that the house takes a light attitude towards it, if I am right in saying that they do, because they feel that is also the attitude of the country generally towards it. Therefore one is glad to find occasionally people outside the house who seem to share the feelings of some of those inside the house.

I should like to read a short extract from a letter written the other day to the Senate committee on human rights and fundamental freedoms by a professor at Queen's university. I think he is quite innocent of any connection, however remote, with the party to which I belong. He refers to the developments which have come upon us, not because anybody planned them but which nevertheless I think we should try to look at in a realistic manner and not pretend that they do not exist. Let me also say that if they do exist, as some of us think they do, it is not a peculiarity of this house. It is something which is characteristic of the relations between governments and democratic assemblies practically everywhere they exist. The quotation I wish to read is as follows:

> The cabinet is the modern crown. And it is rapidly assuming a more powerful place than the Stuarts ever had, and also a more intrinsically irresponsible one.

I put that on Hansard because I think it is a matter of interest and one which should concern us, but I do not propose to dwell further on it. I want to say, as I have said before—and having said it before I shall try to be very brief—that these delegated powers and controls that we accepted first of all as war measures and that we confirmed four years ago as what we hoped would be a rather short-lived peace measure; these things that came to us and were accepted first as temporary and abnormal now I think are in great danger of becoming perhaps not permanent, because nothing is really permanent, but at any rate of indefinite duration as far as we can see, and considered perfectly normal. It is the fact that they are regarded as perfectly normal that often disturbs me more than anything else. That is true not only of those who operate them but, I regret to say, of a very large number of the public as well.

With regard to those who operate them—and I say here, as I shall probably say again, that as to their individual capacity there is no question and that I have the highest regard for them—the only objection I have to them is that I think they have been set to perform tasks which no one should be asked to do, because I think they are beyond individual competence. I was going on to say, however, that with regard to a good many of those who have been responsible for the administration of these controls I think they would feel that the end of the world was coming if we told them we could get along without controls. I think they have come to feel, perhaps inescapably and probably quite naturally, that what they are doing is necessary, that there is no sign of any end to it, and that they have been doing a very good job indeed. I do not propose to mention names, but the other day when we were voting on what some of us thought was the institution of arbitrary power, I was struck by the fact that some people who constantly speak about free institutions do not seem to bat an eyelash when what we thought was such arbitrary power is extended.

Now I want to say a few words in particular reference to foreign exchange control. During the war we permitted the institution of control over a very wide range of prices. We did that because we thought it was an emergency; and of course we included the fixing of the price of money. I must give credit to the government for the fact that since then a great many of those controls have been thrown overboard, but what I regard as the most important of all, the one that enters into all other things, has been retained. I refer to the power to fix the price of our money in terms of the money of other countries. I invite hon. members to think in very plain, rather simple and, if you like, naïve terms of what it really means when we have foreign exchange control. It means that thirteen million people have handed over to the minister and his advisers the power to fix the value of our money in terms of other moneys, and of course directly and indirectly that affects a very large number of other prices. Perhaps if you use the word "indirectly" only it affects all other prices. So we have this extraordinary measure of control.

Let me say again that in my remarks I am not questioning the capacity or the sense of public service of those administering this control. My objection is far different. In passing I would remind hon. members that for decades, I suppose I might say for generations, the value of our money in terms of other money was fixed as all other values were fixed; that is, by buying and selling. You then had a price which was realistic and which, contrary to what we are sometimes told, on the whole was pretty steady. Now that price, which as I say was arrived at by the acid test of the judgment of tens of thousands of buyers and sellers, is fixed by the judgment of a few men sitting here in Ottawa.

As I mentioned earlier, a few years ago, when this legislation was passed, it was hoped that it would be of rather short duration. We felt then that after the upheaval of the war we were in what I suppose might be termed the almost equal upheaval of peace, so we agreed to the legislation and it started on what I might term its peacetime career. At that time, of course, it was in the minds of most of those who were discussing it that the whole question of foreign control had a bad background; that it was invented by the notorious Schacht. There was a feeling that it was perhaps necessary but that it was an evil, a necessary evil if you will. What disturbs me most of all is that I find very little sign now of its being regarded as an evil at all. Not only does it seem to have become normal, but it is regarded, I think, as a good thing. It is considered to have produced far more benefits than evils; and on that I shall have a word to say later. To put it differently, the abnormal has become the normal, and this is now almost regarded as an ordinary instrument of policy.

If you reflect upon it, Mr. Chairman, it is strange that this should have happened in a democratic country, because after all it is a most undemocratic thing. I believe the Prime Minister said that socialists were Liberals in a hurry. Sometimes one wonders if the Liberals are not fast catching up with them, judging by some of the measures they are now putting forward. Indeed, I could go further and say that the other day the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, in referring to arguments advanced against a certain type of control we were criticizing, said that he agreed with the general line taken by the leader of the opposition. He will not agree with me today—

Mr. Coldwell: Just wait a minute; you can't tell.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I thought the hon. member was going to contradict me. I fear he will not agree with me today, because I am going to argue that whether we like it or not these measures are definitely hurrying us toward the collective state which a good many of us in this house do not want. I say that because surely anyone who reflects upon the origin and use of this control system as it appeared and was used will realize that it was one of the great instruments of Hitlerism. What is more, it was one of the chief instruments he used in bending the surrounding countries to his will. In other words it was the very nub of national socialism.

Some will say: even supposing that is true, even supposing there are what you consider to be objections in principle, is that not a little theoretical, and after all should we not be very thankful to the foreign exchange control board for what it has done during these years? I think I have said before, and if not I will say now, that I believe there was a case for it during the war, and there was even some case for it in the immediate post-war period. But I come now to consider the argument advanced, and the view which I think is very largely accepted, that there has been a kind of almost divine wisdom in what has been done by the foreign exchange control board; that their proceedings have been wise, and that even if it offends against some of the theoretical principles on which old-fashioned people were brought up, nevertheless the benefits are so great that we should overlook any objections.

I want to make this point. When people come along and advise the scrapping of old, tested methods, when they say that things which have worked for decades or centuries must be abandoned and we must accept their new system, then I think it is perfectly fair for us to say that if they are going to take that line they must be right. If they are going to pretend to have powers that none of the rest of us think we have; if they are going to assume responsibilities and powers never assumed before, they must be right. If the family doctor tells us that we are not to use a remedy that has always worked in the past, that he has something new which is going to be better in the future, I think he has to be right. If it turns out that we do not get the benefit we expect, then I think we are perfectly entitled to criticize. Someone may say: oh, this is all wisdom after the event. I admit quite frankly it is partly wisdom after the event. But I repeat that when these powers are assumed, when people purport to exercise these great powers which I say should not be in the hands of any individuals but should be left to the tens of thousands of people matching their transactions against each other, when we come to examine what they have done then they have to be right.

Let us see what has really happened. I pass over the war period and come to 1946, when our dollar was put back at par with the United States dollar. First of all on reading the statement made at the time by Mr. Ilsley and still more perhaps on reading the annual report of the Bank of Canada of the following year, it is perfectly clear that that was done on what proved to be an absolutely unsound hypothesis. It was done really as a price control measure. It was done because it was expected that United States prices, after a short rise, were going to start coming down; and it was thought that we, by increasing the value of our dollar, would keep our prices down and that we would avoid this hump; that by taking the low road and letting the Americans take the high road, we would so to speak meet with them later and we would have avoided this rise in prices. Of course that all proved to be wrong. I am not criticizing them for not being able to predict. I am criticizing them for attempting to predict at all.

What happened? We all remember what happened. American investment in Canada shrank rapidly. Canadian purchases in the United States of course were stimulated, and to make matters worse the government, during the early months of 1947, rather warned people that they might be doing something later on and as a result they practically created a run on American dollars. We all remember that. That went on and on until in the autumn of 1947 we had lost something like 1,150 million, if my memory serves me rightly, of American dollars. Then of course we remember what was done. The government then in rather a hurry announced certain measures by radio. I will not dispute with the minister—because we have done it often before and there is really no dividend in it—as to whether or not that was legislation. I will compromise by saying that I think everyone except the minister and his group thought it was legislation, and the minister said it was not. At any rate, it had a great effect on people's lives and it looked a great deal like legislation to them.

That was the end of 1947. As I say, the fixing of the dollar at par undoubtedly had these results which I have just indicated. Of course one artificial control will produce other controls. Controls are like rabbits; they breed. As a result, we had the various controls we remember so well. We remember the wretched importers who had no warning, of course, of this kind of thing happening. The importer found he was not up against a law, that he was not up against a tariff but that he was up against the edict of a man. He just could not import. I am sure the minister was sorry about that. Indeed I remember a moving communication sent on the minister's behalf to some poor fellow in this plight; and I do not doubt the minister's sincerity at all. What I am pointing out is that one arbitrary measure produces others, and that we have these controls which operated and continue to operate. I often picture the minister as really holding a tap and he turns on and off the lettuce and tomatoes and other things just as one would turn a tap on and off. Incidentally, some of us have had letters just in the last day or two from a gentleman who is complaining because he cannot import a school bus. Apparently he cannot get any foreign exchange in order to import a school bus. I do not know anything about the details of his complaint, but I sympathize with him in running into one of these man-made controls. As I say, if it was a tariff, he could make up his mind whether or not he could pay the tariff price. But here he has no option at all. He is just told: No foreign exchange for you.

I need not take much more of the time of the committee on this matter. I should just like to follow through the intervening months. We all remember how controls flourished during the year 1948; sometimes you have more and sometimes you have less. The minister sits there with his advisers and they survey the scene; and we have more controls or less controls, in their wisdom. Then you come to 1949 and you have the use of that fine, expansive word, "chaos" by the Prime Minister. If I remember rightly the Prime Minister said that any tampering with the rate of exchange—and this was during the election—would bring chaos; and he was extremely critical of anyone who suggested that there was any possibility of changing the rate of exchange.

Then we come to September. And of course I sympathize with the minister just as I sympathize with Sir Stafford Cripps, that great model of—what shall I say—verbal accuracy and intellectual accuracy—I am referring now to Sir Stafford Cripps—who over the course of many months was forced to say that the British pound would never be devalued; never, never, never. Then of course he finally had to say: Hardly ever. Some people are extremely critical of him for that. I do not see what else he could say. Even so fine a man as the minister, I am perfectly sure if I were unwise enough to ask him,—and I would not be unwise enough to ask him—on the day before he had determined to alter the rate of exchange—I am sure he would have to resort to some kind of evasion, if I may use that word in this committee. I hope the minister will not take the slightest offence from it.

Mr. Abbott: Not the slightest.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): It is a word that is sometimes not received in good part; but the minister does not seem to mind. What I am saying is that last September we came to another devaluation. The minister of course will say, and with some force, that he had to join in with the rest of the boys; that when Cripps was devaluing and the others, he had to devalue.

We now come down to the present stage. The other day there happened an incident which I think people would do well to bear in mind. I am sorry the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not here, and I am sorry we have to refer to him so often. But the Minister of Finance is here, and I know he will not disagree with me in this. After we weave our way through the tangled labyrinth of division of duties among the cabinet, when we come out we nearly always meet the Minister of Trade and Commerce. There therefore must be no complaint if I refer to him at this time. The other day the Minister of Trade and Commerce made a statement. The Minister of Trade and Commerce after all deals with wheat, national research and other things. This day, if I remember rightly, he was dealing with wheat. The Minister of Trade and Commerce never likes to confine himself within narrow limitations. This day he took a little fling in the realm of finance, and he made some cryptic reference to the course of exchange. He said it might be longer or shorter. It was really a good deal like the old nursery rhyme: This year, next year, sometimes, never. He was extremely vague. But the point is that by reason of those particular words I know that he caused a great deal of mental uneasiness in the business world. I know of cases where importers and exporters met to consider their exchange position and what they should do by reason of what the Minister of Trade and Commerce had said. I suggest that that just shows the absurdity, the abnormality and the utter artificiality of this situation which we allow to continue and which to my great regret I see no sign of any disposition even to begin to lessen.

At the moment there is, as I said, a considerable amount of jitters as to whether something is going to happen to the rate again. Yet the benefit which is supposed to come to us, and of which we have been told so often, is that we ought to be thankful because of the steadiness which the exchange control produces for us.

Now I want to spend just a moment in referring to what we on this side have advocated in the past. We have not advocated any sudden or violent step. We have not advocated a disregard of the fact that we have obligations under the Bretton Woods agreement. But what we have advocated is an approach to realism. Incidentally we believe —as I am sure the minister does also—that the course of events has put us in a strong position; our dollar is in a strong position, we believe, and could warrant the minister in stepping much further forward on the course of freedom than he ever has. Just in passing let me say that we all got a tremendous shot in the arm from the extravagant American boom. Certain of our industries here are booming because of the tremendous development in the states. The same is true in the United Kingdom; the same is true in western Europe; but nevertheless the great problem of many-sided trade and of convertibility of exchanges remains unsolved. If this extravagant boom should subside we would find ourselves facing difficulties again. Our farmers would know it without being told, and other poeple would know it too.

At the present time we seem to be facing both ways. We are trying to make the best of both worlds. We have a little control, but not too much, and we have a little freedom but not too much. That seems to be the sort of line we are following. I do not believe we can remain there. I think we have to go in one direction or the other. Therefore I leave this by expressing the hope that even today the minister may be able to say something to indicate at least a desire. While I say "a desire" I do not mean just a vague desire. I should say a desire plus some kind of indication that we will not rest where we are; that we feel that this is something that should be proceeded with; that we feel that we have a strong position and could do something to give a lead to others.

There is one other point I wish to make before I take my seat. The minister has already referred to it briefly in his opening remarks. He said that he was not going to review our position again, as he had done it during the budget speech. I would say this to the minister: Things have happened since the budget speech. I think it is perfectly clear that the small surplus which the minister disclosed at that time is all gobbled up by now, and that we will face something of a deficit when the supplementaries come down. I am not going to spend a moment at this stage of debate in offering any comments on that. I just want to ask the minister whether it is not possible that while we are on these estimates and before the house prorogues he might be able to say something to us as to our position; that he might do something in the way of stocktaking, having regard to what has happened in the last few months. Are we going to have a substantial deficit? If so, what are we going to do about it? Are we faced with higher taxation in the near future, or are we going to be content with the deficit financing which the minister assured us years ago we certainly should not have in good times.

Now, Mr. Chairman, other points will arise when we reach the other items but I need not cover them now.

Mr. Thatcher: I have only a few comments to make on these estimates. I think I can agree with the hon. member who has just taken his seat, when he says that our budget now is bordering upon a deficit. I suppose any change in our economic climate could put the country "in the red". For that reason I think it is of great importance that hon. members should be examining public expenditures with greater care.

I was particularly interested in the opening remarks of the minister when he said that he was delighted with the job which the public accounts committee had done this year. As a member of that committee I think they may have done some valuable work. but I do not think they have done the job that was expected of them. I do not think that they have done the job which the minister told us in the last budget speech that we could expect.

In his 1949 speech, I remember that the Minister of Finance said that the government was practising—and I am going to quote his own words—"the most careful economy and efficiency in all departments". Then he went on to say that the government had decided "on the general policy of limiting expenditures". Many Canadians wish that the minister would tell parliament exactly where these economies have been practised, because a lot of people think there has not been any real economy practised in Canada for about ten years. I do not ask the minister to take my own word for that. In an editorial on May 23, the Winnipeg Free Press said:

> There has been no real attempt at economy in Ottawa since the beginning of the war more than ten years ago.

That may be a broad statement but, as I say, many people are inclined to agree with it. What worries me is this: By some kind of twisted reasoning some Liberal members, and particularly the Minister of Finance, are trying to throw the blame for this fact upon opposition members. For instance at page 1992 of Hansard the minister said:

> I believe that the public of Canada have the right to expect parliament itself, the members of parliament itself, to exercise a constant and vigilant scrutiny over the conduct of administration, to search for waste and duplication. I think that the members of the opposition have fallen down on that job.

The Minister of Finance has repeatedly, in parliament and out of parliament, challenged opposition members to show where substantial savings could be made. Speaking again about the opposition he said this very disdainfully, as reported at page 1992 of Hansard:

> They have not got down to brass tacks in the public accounts committee, or in this house, to scrutinize the details of expenditures in any single government department.

On April 28 the leader of the opposition moved that a royal commission be appointed to make recommendations for the reducing of public expenditures. The Minister of Finance turned down the request, and his reason for doing so was this, as found at page 1991 of Hansard:

> The primary reason why the government feels that we would not be justified in accepting the suggestion . . . is that . . . we have a good many existing vehicles on hand.

He proceeded:

> We talk about failure to be able to examine officials of the department directly. Let me point out to the house that the public accounts committee is a standing committee of this house . . .
>
> There is opportunity in the public accounts committee for any member, and in particular for hon. members of the opposition, to ask that any deputy minister, or any official of any department, be brought before that committee, and to examine him to their heart's content as to the details of the particular services of the department.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this year hon. members did "ask" in the public accounts committee. They asked for specific departments. They asked for witnesses; they asked for information; but above all, they asked for the public accounts. They asked for a good many things, but they did not get very much satisfaction. As far as I am concerned as an opposition member I say this advisedly. I do not think that on the public accounts committee this year the opposition members received the co-operation to which they were entitled. That lack of co-operation makes some of the statements which the minister used a few months ago appear a little hollow. Repeatedly we were overruled in seeking information. Time and again we were refused witnesses, and consistently we were refused public accounts in the committee. Here we have a committee which has sat for almost three months, a public accounts committee, yet the public accounts have never been before it. It was just like a railroad committee examining the flag question, or a banking committee examining civil liberties. The public accounts committee examined a lot of things, but it did not examine public accounts.

Why was that committee called? It was called at the request of the hon. member for Winnipeg North, specifically to examine defence expenditures. But in the whole of the three months, the defence expenditures were not brought up despite repeated requests.

The committee first met on April 25. I ask hon. members to note the terms of reference. They were these:

> That the standing committee on public accounts be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the house;
>
> That the public accounts of Canada and the report of the Auditor General for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1949, which were tabled in the house on October 31, 1949, be referred to the said committee.

I ask you to note that, Mr. Chairman:

> That the public accounts of Canada . . . be referred to the said committee.

Obviously the main duty of the committee was to examine public expenditures and to see if there were ways in which savings could be made, and to show it from these public accounts. Therefore I say when the minister challenged the opposition members of the house to use this public accounts committee as a vehicle for showing where savings could be made, he must have forgotten to tell the chairman of the committee and the Liberal members on it, because certainly they did not carry out what he suggested. We spent weeks examining the form of estimates. Probably that was needed. Probably it was a valuable service, but it was not the job that we were given to do.

Next year, if the minister is sincere in wanting opposition members to show where savings can be made, let that committee be called early, let that committee examine public accounts and public expenditures.

I understand that over in England the chairman is a member of the opposition. I think that would be advantageous in this country, because if the chairman were a member of the opposition then perhaps the opposition parties would be permitted to inquire into these expenditures in more detail than they can at the present time.

Year after year when this committee is called, the report of the Auditor General has come up. That report is important, but I hope that next year, first of all, the public accounts will be brought in. Let every department—let each one of the twenty departments, or whatever number there are —know that they may be called in front of that committee to explain their expenditures.

It is conceivable that the committee could consider only one or two of the departments in one year. But we could devise some method—perhaps pick them out of a hat, as one member has suggested—whereby departments would be examined and required to explain every five cent piece they have spent. I think if that were done economies might be effected.

I have not much more to say, except that I as an opposition member not only charge the government with apathy and disinterest in seeing that public expenditures were examined, but say it has been guilty of using its overwhelming majority deliberately to obstruct opposition members from obtaining pertinent information in the public accounts committee.

Mr. Quelch: Mr. Chairman, I regret the Minister of Finance was not able to bring his estimates down earlier in the session. I recall that last year he did say he would attempt this year to bring them down at an early stage. On the other hand I am not going to be overcritical, because I do realize that the government has had a great deal of difficulty in getting into supply during the session.

I cannot agree with the hon. member for Greenwood in asking or suggesting that the foreign exchange control board be done away with. Because I feel that in a country such as Canada, situated between the sterling and the dollar blocs, it is essential that we have fairly rigid control of foreign exchange, especially when one realizes that we have always had difficulty in meeting our payments in the United States.

It would appear to me that if we had not had control of foreign exchange in this country we might have had chaotic conditions in the post-war years. Whenever the Minister of Trade and Commerce has spoken in the house he has invariably exuded optimism. I am not going to criticize him for that, because I like a man who is optimistic if he has good grounds for his optimism. I am not going to say that at this time he has not those grounds. I think at times however the basis of his optimism has been questionable.

I would say however that the Minister of Finance is in an entirely different category. The only time he really exudes optimism is in a year just prior to an election. At other times he invariably sounds a pessimistic note —or, if he does not like that term, let us say a note of extreme caution. Since he has been Minister of Finance he has continually warned the country and the House of Commons that we cannot expect the present high level of production, employment and income to continue indefinitely.

I believe this has had an adverse effect upon the people of this country. They have reached a frame of mind where they look upon a depression as inevitable, as just a question of time—next year, the year after or some time later. They have reached the point where they think that a depression or recession is bound to come, because they know the Minister of Finance has been warning them for the last four years. For that reason they have been busily engaged in tucking away their savings for a rainy day which, they feel, is bound to come.

Not only that, but in view of the fact that they feel a recession is certain, they are hesitant about investing money in the development of the country. They feel that if they do so they may very well lose their investments. I cannot feel that there are any grounds for that pessimism. Is it because our resources are becoming depleted? Surely no one would argue that for one moment. Is it because we are running short of skilled labour? There, again, there is no question of a shortage of skilled labour. Is it because our production has reached such a high level that it may be greater than is necessary to meet the needs of the people of Canada or the people in other parts of the world? Well, certainly that cannot be argued so far as Canada is concerned, because in Canada we have a large number of low income groups including old age pensioners, incurables, recipients of war veterans allowances and may other low-wage groups which, in themselves, constitute a large potential market for increased production in this country.

In addition there are today a large number of national projects which should be executed at the earliest possible date. They are national projects for the purpose of conserving the resources of this country—water conservation, flood control, irrigation, reforestation. Those are things which may be regarded as self-liquidating projects, and projects which will help to increase the production of the country and the general standard of living of the people.

Someone may ask: What about wheat? I was interested in a statement made by the chairman of the wheat board when he was before the committee on agriculture and stated that even in regard to wheat he did not feel that, so far as the world was concerned, there was any real surplus. That is to say, he agreed that if the people of the world were able to buy the wheat they required there would not be enough to go round. We have a surplus only in so far as the people's ability to buy that wheat is concerned, and after considering the means of payment which we in this country are willing to accept.

I do not think any of those are the reasons why the Minister of Finance feels there is a danger of recession in the not far distant future. I think the minister fears a recession because of a lack of effective demand. Effective demand means money in the hands of those people requiring goods. I should say that problem is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance and his department, because it is that department which advises the government in matters of financial policy, and which is largely responsible for adjusting the supply of money as well as its distribution among the people.

So when the Minister of Finance expresses fear regarding the future he actually expresses a lack of confidence in the policy of his own department.

Mr. Abbott: I do not recall that I have ever expressed any fear as to the future. I do not want the hon. member to overstate it. I am not a pessimist.

Mr. Quelch: The minister's memory must be short because in every budget speech he has made he has warned that we cannot expect the present high level to continue. Let me refresh his memory. He is reported, at page 2553 of Hansard for 1947, as follows:

We must expect, I believe, that at times when our employment, production and incomes are below satisfactory levels, our revenues will fall short of our expenditures.

And then as reported at page 4063 of Hansard for 1948:

We must bear in mind that times are exceptionally good at present, economically and financially, and it would not be prudent to rely on such conditions continuing indefinitely. We should now be preparing for times when markets and employment are not so favourable . . . We should, therefore, be putting away what we can for a rainy day.

That is what all the people of Canada are trying to do.

Mr. Abbott: But that is not expressing fear or pessimism.

Mr. Quelch: Then, in October, 1949, as reported at page 972 of Hansard:

Nevertheless some declines in our overseas export markets have already occurred and some further declines can hardly be avoided . . . It is with these possibilities in mind that the government is actively reviewing measures to counteract any serious downturn that might develop in our export markets and in the economic activity at home.

In every speech he warned as to the danger in connection with our present high level of income, and that it may not continue in the future. The people, listening to that, have felt that it is their duty to start tucking away a certain amount of their savings to meet that rainy day the minister has talked about in his budget speeches. Not only is there no justification to consider a future recession as inevitable; I believe the people of this country have a right to expect that there shall be registered an annual increase in the amount of the production of the nation, apart of course from any serious calamity that might befall the country such as severe drought or flood. Surely with an expanding population, with expanding efficiency of production and with great undeveloped resources such as we have in Canada, our people have a right to expect a steadily expanding economy, that is, an expansion of production with a corresponding increase in the standard of living. In his budget speech this year the minister said, as reported on page 1210 of Hansard, that during 1950 we might not reach a position where our resources would be fully developed and that employment might not catch up with the growth in total labour supply.

I think the minister will agree that the increased production that could be made available as a result of full employment is urgently needed both in Canada and in the world at large. I should like to say a few words about the domestic market because that is our most important market; as a matter of fact we might say that it is the only market we have because international trade is simply the exchanging of our surplus goods for the surplus goods of other nations which must be consumed in the domestic market.

The last time I spoke on the motion to go into supply, and the amendment moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew), I referred to a speech that had been made by the Minister of Resources and Development (Mr. Winters). I quoted at some length from that speech so I shall not take up time to deal with the matter today. However, the substance of that speech was that today people were putting a large amount of their income in savings and that consequently demand was falling off, or might fall off, with consequent falling off of production and increase in unemployment which might well lead us into a depression. The minister advised the people to spend more freely. I wonder whether the Minister of Finance agreed with that speech, because I think he will admit that it is a complete reversal of the propaganda that has been put out by governments and officials of the Department of Finance in the past. In the past people have always been urged to be more thrifty and put away their money in savings to take care of the future.

We in this group have always pointed out that while the practice of saving was necessary from the point of view of the individual, nevertheless the effect of large-scale saving by the people would be detrimental to the economy of the country. In view of the speech made by the Minister of Resources and Development I should like to know what the government is going to do if the situation he outlined should develop; that is, if as a result of large-scale saving on the part of the people a recession should develop will the government be prepared to step in and take up the slack created as a result of that over-saving, or is it the intention of the government to just sit by and let the depression develop?

The minister will recall that back in 1943 the governor of the Bank of Canada made a broadcast in which he pointed out that if such a situation developed after the war where the people were not spending freely and unemployment increased the government would be justified in going ahead with national projects and not meet the full cost from taxation or by borrowing the savings of the people but by credit expansion. I am wondering whether the government will be prepared to take that action if necessary.

The minister himself admits that employment may not catch up with the growth in the labour supply. I should like to ask the minister, if that situation develops, whether he will proceed with sound projects financed in part by credit expansion as suggested by Graham Towers in his speech in 1943, or is he prepared to allow a situation to develop such as was envisaged by the Minister of Resources and Development?

I can recall that when the committee on reconstruction met it drew up a long list of what it considered were worth-while national projects for forest conservation, soil conservation, water conservation and so on. It was understood that those would be held as a shelf of projects to be used by the government to take care of unemployment or a falling off in demand. If credit expansion is used to finance the national projects in part, would the minister be prepared to finance in part by using money from the Bank of Canada rather than from the chartered banks, or does he consider himself obliged to take such action as will still further swell the profits of the chartered banks and increase the interest-bearing debt of Canada?

I know it will be argued that action of that kind would penalize the chartered banks, but when you consider the recorded profits of the chartered banks since the war you realize that they have increased every year and are quite substantial today. If a certain amount of money were issued through the Bank of Canada which the chartered banks would have to service without any payment, I do not think that that would impose any undue burden upon them.

It is also often argued that to finance through the Bank of Canada rather than borrow from the chartered banks would be more inflationary. I know that in the past ministers of finance have argued that the reason it would be more inflationary would be the fact that the chartered banks would be in a position to expand their credit facilities by ten to one on the basis of their increased cash reserve. I am not sure whether the present Minister of Finance has ever taken that stand, but it has been taken by his predecessors.

I do not think the minister will find that the officials of the Bank of Canada take that attitude. The attitude of the Bank of Canada has been that there is the closest co-operation between the chartered banks and the Bank of Canada and that, if money were issued in that way, under the advice of the Bank of Canada the chartered banks would not expand their loans if the Bank of Canada considered it detrimental. As a matter of fact, anyone who has read the reports of the Bank of Canada of recent years will find that time and again advice has been given to the chartered banks regarding their loan policy and invariably the chartered banks have acted upon it without any further pressure. On the other hand, if the chartered banks were not prepared to co-operate with the Bank of Canada it would be a simple matter to amend the Bank Act to increase the reserve requirements of the chartered banks so as to offset any tendency toward inflation. Apparently there is a good deal of concern being felt today regarding the lack of Canadian venture capital. I read a press report of a speech delivered by the deputy governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Coyne, to the Quebec branch of the Canadian Life Insurance Officers' Association. He is reported as saying that thrifty Canadians have saved over $3 billion over the last four years, that they are increasing their savings at the rate of $400 million a year, and that while these savings would be sufficient to meet Canadian investment needs, Canada is still getting much of her investment requirements from foreign sources. He is also reported as saying that the trouble is that Canadians are not eager to get into the risky field of developing resources, and that one-half of all dividends of all Canadian corporations are paid to non-residents.

Another speech, in many ways similar, was made by the president of the Canadian Bankers Association recently in which he also emphasized the fact that people were placing a large amount of their income in savings. Both Mr. Coyne and the president of the Canadian Bankers Association emphasized the need for venture capital in Canada, and that Canadians are hesitant to take the risk. Consequently the United States is stepping into the picture and now 50 per cent of all dividends of all Canadian corporations are paid to non-residents. In other words, we may say that we are fast becoming a nation of hewers of wood and drawers of water for other nations.

We in this group have always deplored the large-scale utilization of foreign capital to develop our Canadian resources. We have emphasized the fact that during the war we tripled our production without the utilization of foreign capital, and that therefore it should be possible today to carry on the development of Canadian resources without using capital from other nations. As a result of the utilization of foreign capital our foreign obligations are greatly increased, and while I quite realize that the utilization of foreign capital may facilitate the balancing of our payments with the United States at the present time, nevertheless it is bound to aggravate the situation in later years.

We hear a lot of discussion as to what might be done to encourage the people of Canada to invest more freely in the development of their resources. I think it is well to remember that for many years, and especially during the war—and I am not criticizing the action—we encouraged people in every way possible to invest as much money as they possibly could in dominion bonds. There is no doubt that the people of the country have become very bond conscious. It is also well to remember that if people who are not accustomed to investing money, and are therefore hesitant about taking the chance of losing what little capital they have, go to the banks the only advice they can get from the manager of a chartered bank is to invest their money in dominion bonds. The chartered banks will not advise people to invest their money in industry. Mind you, I am not criticizing the chartered banks for the position they take because I realize that it probably would not be a safe position for any bank manager to act as an adviser to an individual who was asking how he should invest his capital. The situation is that they will only advise people to invest their money in dominion bonds.

It seems only natural that as long as people can buy gilt-edged securities in the form of dominion bonds at a rate of interest of 3 per cent as in the past, and with a slightly reduced rate today, they will probably continue to do so and will not enter the industrial development field. On the other hand, if people could not so readily buy dominion bonds they would be more apt to purchase industrial securities. Therefore I suggest to the government that they might give consideration to refunding maturing government bonds in part through the Bank of Canada instead of by public subscription. That would accomplish two things. It would provide additional investment funds, and at the same time it would reduce the national debt owed to the public. Consequently it would provide for reduction in taxation by reducing the debt charges and thereby encouraging investment.

Of course the question will be asked whether a policy of that kind would not be inflationary. I think the answer to that is definitely no. People who hold bonds today hold them voluntarily because they want them as an investment. If the people who hold these bonds wanted to spend the money they have tied up in them they could take the bonds to a bank tomorrow and sell them at a premium. The very fact that people are not selling bonds proves that they would sooner hold their money in them than spend it on goods. Therefore if the government would refund a certain portion of the bonds upon maturity through the Bank of Canada the people receiving payment would immediately seek other sources of investment.

I think there is another step that might be taken by the government to encourage people to invest their money in the development of the country. I think the government could very well give consideration to the setting up of a securities commission or advisory investment board operating on a voluntary basis. Companies seeking capital from the public could voluntarily make application to the commission for a licence, and reports on such companies could be made available to the people. It would at least help to give the small investor an idea of the soundness of the proposition and would guard against what might be called fly-by-night concerns. I believe there are many people in the country who would like to make investments in its development if they could be assured that they would have an even break. They do not mind taking a normal risk, but so many people have passed through the painful experience of losing their capital, especially in the early days of oil development in the west, that they are not prepared to take a second chance. If we set up an advisory board on investment with representation possibly from the Bank of Canada, industry and agriculture, for the purpose of making a thorough investigation of industrial enterprises upon applications by companies, then I think the statements they would issue would help to assure people as to the soundness of the propositions.

I want to say a few words in closing about our external trade situation. I think it is quite clear from recent speeches that have been made by a number of ministers of the government and other prominent officials that they feel a good deal of concern regarding the effects that government financial policies are having upon Canada's international trade. For example, in the speech to which we listened a few weeks ago the Minister of Fisheries certainly implied that things were not as they should be. I recall he said that international trade was not a financial problem. I believe he should have said that international trade should not be a financial problem; but no one who has listened to the Minister of Agriculture deploring the situation with respect to our food products can escape the conclusion that today our international trade problem is very definitely and primarily a financial problem. Time and again the Minister of Finance himself has said that our trade problem with respect to Britain is a monetary question. On June 13 the Minister of Agriculture stated, at page 3552 of Hansard:

> I do not think there is any dollar-sterling question in the world or any dollar-sterling problem as between Canada and Great Britain that is more important than the maintenance of good relationships between those two areas.

The statement was made as a result of the loss of our markets in Britain, and I recall that the minister was very critical of Britain for having reduced her purchases of food from Canada. I do not think we are being fair when we criticize Britain for having reduced her purchases in this country. Let us not forget that when Britain and the countries of Europe reduced their purchases from Canada and the United States they were doing the very thing they were advised to do by the international monetary fund. Last year I quoted from the report of that fund in which European nations had been advised that, in order to establish a better balance in their trade, they cut down their purchases from the dollar area and increase them from the sterling area. That is the very thing Britain and the European countries are doing today. Therefore it does not come with very good grace on our part when we criticize them for doing the very things they have been advised to do by the institutions we helped set up.

Even if we were able to increase our imports from Britain over a period of time to the point where they would be able to pay for our exports, and the same thing in regard to the United States, I do not think we could hope to solve the dollar-sterling difficulty, owing to the fact that today Britain has very large obligations in the form of sterling balances held by India, Pakistan, Egypt and other countries. I believe it is the obligation of Canada and the United States to help Britain meet those obligations, because those sterling balances originated as the result of meeting the costs of war. Britain's war effort, of course, was put forth on behalf of all the allies. Last year I complimented the Minister of Finance on the stand he had taken at the Washington conference, when he urged that action should be taken by Canada and the United States to relieve the strain on Britain caused by these large sterling balances. So during this discussion of his estimates I would like the minister to give us a report on what progress has been made in dealing with the matter of the large sterling balances held by India, Pakistan and Egypt.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[Mr. Quelch.]

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Eighth report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.—Mr. Breithaupt.

INDIAN ACT

CONSOLIDATION AND CLARIFICATION—BAND FUNDS AND EXPENDITURES, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce) for the second reading of Bill No. 267, respecting Indians.

Mr. D. F. Brown (Essex West): I trust, Mr. Speaker, that I may be permitted to make a few observations in connection with this bill, for two reasons. One is that I represent the constituency of Essex West which comprises the city of Windsor and one township, both south of the city of Detroit. I say "south" because that is geographically correct. The city of Windsor is one of the oldest settled portions of Ontario, if not the oldest. In 1701 the city of Detroit was settled at that time and there was erected a palisade fort. The church of Ste. Anne was one of the first buildings. A few years later the Indians and the white people crossed to the south side of the river and there they formed a settlement which is now called the city of Windsor. In that area there was formed the parish of the Assumption under Father Richardi. It is interesting to note that within the last few days an historical site in that area has been declared; I refer to the home of Francois Baby, brother of Hon. Jacques Baby whose portrait adorns one of the corridors of this building. It is over on the Senate side of this building. At that time he was one of the speakers of the legislative council.

As the minister stated in his opening remarks, in that area we had the Wyandot Indians on the reserve in Anderdon township, a few miles south of my constituency, now in the constituency of Essex South. I think the assimilation of that band of Indians is certainly a pattern which we can well copy throughout the whole Dominion of Canada. I think it is a pattern which could well be used and the goal at which we could aim. Those Indians became assimilated as a group. The residents of that reserve received their final commutation I believe in 1911. They were an intelligent and an industrious people. They have taken their place in the social life of the city of Detroit and of the city of Windsor

I think in a way far above the average of most people whose origin was other than the Anglo-Saxons.

To give an illustration, the descendants of many of those people who were on the reserve, and their descendants, have taken a prominent place in the city of Detroit. One person in the city of Windsor, who was a lawyer, followed his profession successfully for many years and became a member of the provincial legislature. He represented that constituency with distinction in the provincial house. His name was Sol White. His descendants have carried on in the city of Windsor, taking a prominent part in the social and the civic life of that community.

I think that is about the goal that we are aiming at. We want the Indians to be assimilated economically. I do not say that they should be assimilated as to blood, but they should be economically assimilated. We can only have them so assimilated if we are convinced in our own minds that we were born equal.

I should like to take up some of the time of the house on this bill, Mr. Speaker, for another reason. In 1946 the government set up a committee not to deal with lands, buildings, transport lines or trade, but to deal with human beings; with the lives and the hopes of those human beings numbering over 130,000. The Indian committee was set up, comprising twelve members of the other place and twenty-two members of the House of Commons. Unfortunately, or probably fortunately, a great many of the members of the House of Commons who were on that committee are not here today, mostly by reason of appointments to the other place, other appointments as in the case of our distinguished Clerk of the House, and others by the fortunes of election. I think there are today left in the house about ten members who were on that committee. The whole theme of the committee was to help the Indian to help himself. Time alone will tell whether that was successful. Time alone will tell whether we were able to sow any seed. I hope so. I have no hesitation in saying that this committee operated regardless of political affiliation, regardless of partisanship, in an honest desire to be of service.

At this time I should like to pay my respects to one who was of great service to this committee, the late Senator Fred Johnston of Saskatchewan, who was the first co-chairman of the committee. It is also appropriate at this time to mention with reverence the late John R. MacNicol who was always interested not only in Indian affairs, but particularly in Indian affairs. He travelled extensively to see the Indian population of this country. He was very regular in his attendance in the committee and he was very conscientious. I am sure he will be missed by many of the Indians in Canada today.

On that committee we were fortunate in having the services of a lawyer who was a full-blooded Indian. Norman Lickers was a member of the Six Nations tribe and was Indian by descent. He was trained in the profession of law in Ontario. Mr. Lickers was of great assistance not only to the committee during the hearings which it held in Ottawa, but also in drafting the report made to this house.

I might say that the committee was of one mind. It presented a unanimous report. It was willing to bury any partisanship; it was willing to keep the high goal of service before it. For that reason, I think, more than all others it was possible to bring in a unanimous report, which was concurred in by this house.

A part of the committee was formed into a commission which went down to the maritime provinces and viewed the conditions of the Indians there, their method of living, their homes, their industries, their schools, and their hospitals throughout Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Cape Breton and other parts of Nova Scotia, also going up into Quebec. It took us three weeks. The ten members of the commission derived a great deal of profit from that visit. On a subsequent occasion I myself went out to Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Regina, and as far west as Port Alberni to see the fishing Indians at the end of the Alberni canal in British Columbia.

In referring to the committee on another occasion I think the minister said that 129 meetings were held. I am not sure as to that. It is possible. Of course that does not include the meetings of four subcommittees which dealt with various subjects, under the chairmanship of various members of the committee. They met at regular intervals. Therefore I suppose one could say that the committee met far more often than is indicated by the number of formal meetings. However, I do not think that it is the number of meetings that really count. The committee was endeavouring to give everybody an opportunity of presenting their viewpoints on the subject. We heard Indians from the maritimes, from Quebec, from the west, including British Columbia, and from the far north. We heard persons not of Indian descent, who had some knowledge of Indian matters and Indian affairs, from all over

Canada, and the result has been this bill. Whether or not we can recognize the child we are not too certain.

However, I do believe that we should endeavour to take what we can of this bill that is of value and then strive, and strive hard, both within and without this chamber, to bring about the assimilation of the Indians as I have described in my own area.

I do not quite agree with the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness), who was a member of the committee, that we should delay passage of this bill. I have not as yet been convinced of that. If there is anything of value in this bill we should proceed with it at once. It may not be to our satisfaction, but it is at least something. It is something better than what we have today. Of course some may not agree with that. I am convinced that it is better than what we have today. Many of the recommendations of the committee have been implemented by the government; others have not. But I do not think that any good would come from having this matter put over indefinitely. I say, take what you can get today, and then fight for the rest.

One of the loudest complaints of the Indians throughout the three years in which we were hearing evidence, hearing the witnesses and discussing the matter with the Indians and with other people, was the interminable delays by the department in all of the administrative activities. For instance, an Indian might rent a piece of property on a reserve. The money for the rent could not be paid directly. The lessee therefore would have to pay it to the Indian agent, now known as the Indian superintendent. In due course he would forward it to Ottawa. Ottawa in turn would put it into the consolidated revenue fund or in some other branch. In due course the money would be applied for and would be paid out, but the delays were so intolerable to the Indian that he became rebellious, and I think righteously so.

In the liquidation of an estate upon the death of an Indian possessed of property the matter would be handled so slowly, in such a cumbersome way and with such long delays, that it is reasonable to assume the Indian was quite right in rebelling strenuously against such delays, which were intolerable. He had no way whatsoever of making any plans for the use of funds that were his in any way.

I will agree that since the committee has been set up, since the administration has been aroused to the need, and by force of public opinion, these delays have to a large extent been eliminated. I am sure that so long as we have ministers such as the Hon. James Glen, or our present minister, those conditions will not be tolerated in the department.

I think at this time it might be appropriate for me to pay my respects to the minister, because this is the first opportunity I have had to do so. I know he has taken a great interest in this work, because on occasion he has kept me after hours discussing the matter. I am sure that so long as he is in charge of the department we will have efficient and sincere administration. However, we are not certain that he will always remain in that position. Mind you, I think he will be there for many years; but, after all, time passes on and successions do take place, even in the ministry. However, I congratulate him upon having done an excellent job. While I may or may not like the bill, I am sure he has done the best he could with the material at hand.

I note that one of the recommendations of the committee was that a claims commission should be set up. Such a commission would consist of three or four members who would take care of the various claims that have been made for many years by the Indians, and settle them once and for all. The argument is now offered that such claims can now be made to the exchequer court. That may or may not be the solution. But I doubt very much that it would have the psychological effect that a claims commission would have. The United States has set the pattern because over there they have set up a commission which has worked most efficiently. It has been their experience that when a justifiable claim is made by an Indian it is disposed of, and that is the end of it.

Many claims were made to the committee by Indian organizations. I have a list of them here. They said they had been promised certain things at certain times by different officials or governments, both provincial and federal. Such claims as sores have a tendency to fester. They have a tendency to grow from a small beginning to great proportions. I should think that a claims commission would be a valuable addition, and not only would its value be apparent to the Indians, who would have their say and their day in court, but it would eliminate many of the grievances now being taken care of, so far as possible, by the administration.

Provincial rights may have been infringed. I remember one occasion in New Brunswick when Indians had gone on to public property —or it may have been private property—and had taken off black ash. It may be that some departmental head or government official at some time or other had said that black ash was public property and that they had the right to take it. In any event a claims commission could settle a claim of that kind once and for all. If the Indians had the right to that black ash they could be given it, or a supply could be made available. Otherwise the Indian would be subject to provincial law. Perhaps I might explain that black ash is used in the making of baskets, and is greatly in demand in some quarters.

While the matter of voting may not be pertinent to this bill, yet I think there are some provisions which have reference to that matter. It is my view that the vote should have been given to the Indians, without any strings attached. However, we have the bill before us, and I am content to have this seed sown now, although I think it was a mistake not to give the Indians the vote. I believe it would have been better to have taken the long-range view and to have given them the vote, and for these two reasons: The first is that it makes the Indian more conscious of government and, secondly, it makes the government and politicians more conscious of the Indian. That condition is desirable, because if we are going to assimilate the Indian into the economic life of Canada, and into our social life, he cannot be assimilated by a process of segregation.

In New Zealand they have a system whereby they elect a certain number of Maoris who sit in their parliament. I do not approve of that system, because I believe that is a process of segregation, pure and simple. There the Maoris vote for their own representatives. In my view that would not be acceptable in Canadian political life. We certainly do not want to have any one section of our country stand as a festering sore; rather we want the people to be assimilated so that they will join as one. It may be that they may hold different views and different opinions, but socially they are one.

In South Africa they have a system whereby the blacks elect a certain number of whites to represent them. I do not favour that system, either. In my view the Canadian system of representation is the proper way of selecting governments for this country. While I will not say I was disappointed, I do believe a mistake has been made in this connection. However, in due time that will be corrected. Time will show whether we are right.

I was most interested in the announcement made a few days ago by the minister that a form of pension would be paid to aged Indians. Not only are these Indians in need of this assistance, but the granting of such a pension will boost the morale of the Indians and also of the Canadian people when they realize that these people who are so greatly in need are being given the necessary assistance. I would think that this pension of $25 per month would be better under the administration of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin). It should be placed on the same basis as other pensions. I hope also that the recommendations made to the committee on old age security will also bear fruit and I am hopeful that all the people of Canada will be placed on the same basis so far as pensions are concerned.

It was recommended by the Indian affairs committee that the administration of Indian affairs be headed by a commissioner with two assistants, one of whom should be an Indian. Eventually that will have to be done and I am sorry that the government has not seen fit to implement that recommendation. Some may say that there are no Indians qualified for that position, but that is not correct. There are many Indians in Canada who are highly educated, who possess great cultural qualities. There are many Indians who are doctors, lawyers, magistrates, legislators and they are to be found in many other professions. As I say, eventually I think the government will realize that at least one Indian should be on such a commission. It would lift the morale of the Indian and make him feel that he was part of the Canadian life. It would give a spiritual boost that would last through the centuries if he knew that one of his brethren was at the head of the administration of Indian affairs.

I would not like to conclude my remarks without making some comment on the parliamentary inquiry that was made. As the minister said in his opening remarks, the Indian Act was last amended in 1880, about 70 years ago. If it is not provided in the bill, I think it should be announced that a parliamentary inquiry into Indian affairs will take place every five years to begin with, and then perhaps, later on, every ten years. A matter like this should not be left for 70 years before being reviewed. We are not dealing with material things, we are dealing with the lives and habits of 130,000 people, a people whose numbers are increasing at the rate of five per cent per annum.

While this might be more properly discussed on the minister's estimates, I think a larger allowance should be made for departmental travel. One of the curses of Indian administration is the fact that by force of circumstances the administrators are required to sit at their desks in Ottawa without the advantage of having firsthand contact with the matters they are administering. In my own case I know I have gained great benefit by going to see the things I was dealing with; it has given me an entirely different viewpoint. It has broadened my outlook considerably with respect to the Indian question.

Finally I would recommend that there be set up among the white people advisory committees to bring about greater intercourse, socially and educationally, between the Indians and the white people. We provide aid for crippled children, we provide aid for the blind, we provide aid for this and that, but here we have 130,000 needy people in our midst and we do nothing whatsoever to assist them to become good Canadian citizens. Much could be accomplished along these lines.

Before closing I should like to pay my respects to the department for setting up the homemakers' clubs which might be likened to the women's institutes throughout Canada. Through these clubs the women on the Indian reserves learn to do things in and about their homes, things that are artistic and things that are necessary. They are being encouraged by the department and are doing a magnificent job. I repeat that there should be set up advisory councils or committees or auxiliaries, call them what you like, to assist these people. Let us help ourselves in getting their viewpoint and let us help them in getting our viewpoint for the betterment of all Canada.

Mr. J. A. Charlton (Brant-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, in making the few remarks I have to make on the second reading of Bill No. 267, respecting Indians, I should first like to congratulate the minister on having finally brought forward this legislation. I had the privilege of sitting on the committee in 1946, 1947 and 1948. After three years of deliberation by that committee and after having waited some 70 years to revise this act, I am disappointed in the provisions of the bill that has been brought forward. I believe many more people across Canada are disappointed in what is contained in the bill to amend the Indian Act. For too many years our Indians have been governed by antiquated legislation. Having waited so long, I am very sorry that the new bill is apparently being pushed through in the dying days of the session, especially in view of the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) said on May 5, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), as recorded at page 2205 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the tone of the representations made by the hon. member for Lake Centre and the spirit in which he made them. Nevertheless it is our understanding that the Indians are anxious to have this legislation brought before parliament. This matter has been discussed. The department felt it had all the information required for the drafting of the legislation, and that it would be desirable that the bill be given first reading and be distributed, and then that a sufficient lapse of time be allowed so that interested chiefs and other members of their bands may see what it contains and make representations. Of course it is legislation in the interests of the Canadian nation, but more particularly for the Indians themselves. If it appeared from their reaction to the bill that they would prefer not to have it adopted at this session but rather to have further discussions with them and further consideration of the legislation, their views would be given sympathetic consideration.

If the Prime Minister meant what he said at that time, surely sympathetic consideration means more than forcing the bill through at this late stage after giving the Indians at the most two weeks to study the bill from the time it received first reading. I know in many cases they have not even seen the bill yet.

The statement has been made on several occasions that it is the desire of the government to gradually assimilate all Indians. The minister used a different term this afternoon and said that the desire was for an integration of all Indians into the general life and economy of the country. This statement is borne out by the interpretation in a number of newspaper articles. In the Ottawa Journal of June 1, 1950, there is an article with the heading:

> Canadian Indians to get full citizenship in few years

The article reads in part:

> Canadian Indians in a few years will enjoy full citizenship rights, including the franchise, it was predicted in informed quarters today.

In the Globe and Mail of June 8, 1950, there is an article with the heading:

> Offer vote, liquor in new Indian bill

The article reads in part:

> Provision for enfranchisement of Indian bands at the discretion of the government where more than 50 per cent of the band has voted for the franchise is laid down in the long awaited Indian Act amendments introduced in the commons today. Such action, however, automatically wipes out the reservation and establishes it either as a municipality or part of a municipality.

Why the bill is being rushed through at this time the government alone knows. Certainly such a procedure is not in accordance with the statement made by the Prime Minister on May 5. Surely sympathetic consideration should mean more than that. I have certain editorials indicating public opinion as to Bill No. 267. In the London Free Press of June 9, 1950, there is an editorial headed:

> Is Government "Indian Giver" in New Bill?

The editorial reads:

> Government action to help Indians in Canada attain full citizenship rights is long overdue. The new bill which is being introduced by Hon. Walter E. Harris is based on long and careful study. There are indications that it may not be as far-reaching as many people hoped. Apparently it aims at a gradual evolution from the present position of wardship.

In the Vancouver News-Herald of June 17, 1950, there is an editorial headed:

Betrayal of the Indians

The editorial reads in part:

Who is responsible for the shamefully inadequate piece of legislation that has been offered to the commons as a new Indian act?

The North Shore Review of Friday, June 16, 1950, in an editorial headed "Governmental hypocrisy", has this to say in the first paragraph:

If federal government plans to rush through its inept revision of the Indian Act are not checked, Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent will go down in history as an inglorious traitor to our native citizens.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Do you believe that?

Mr. Charlton: In the Vancouver Sun of June 19, 1950, there is an editorial headed: "Not Good Enough", and the first paragraph reads:

The bill introduced into parliament by the government to revise the Indian Act is a vast disappointment to friends of the Indians. It should be withdrawn and given further consideration before it is submitted to the next session of parliament.

These editorials represent the views of some of those who have taken a kindly interest in the troubles of the Indians. Surely, Mr. Speaker, our first citizens deserve better treatment. They pay most of the taxes we pay. They willingly fought beside their white brothers in two world wars. I was rather amazed at a statement made by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Harris) a few days ago which appears at page 3815 of Hansard. It reads:

It has often been said—and I think some of the hon. members opposite and perhaps some on this side have said it—that the Indian was a second-grade citizen at the moment. Without admitting that, I hope the house will understand that we are trying to make him an equal citizen; but I do not think we should go one step further and make him a preferred citizen as against all others in the community.

I think most Indians will resent the statement that anyone has rated them as second-grade citizens. Certainly they have taken their part in most of our activities. As I said previously, in two world wars they fought beside their white brothers and gave their lives. Surely after the treatment they have had in the last seventy-four years they deserve a little extra consideration at the present time. In endeavouring to express the feelings of the members of the Six Nations reservation at Brantford, I think I can do no better than to quote from the brief which they presented at the time of the sittings of the special committee. The final portion thereof reads as follows:

Finally, apart from the preceding brief which deals almost entirely with matters affecting the revision of the Indian Act, we would draw your attention to certain remarks of various witnesses who have appeared before you, whose statements we have read with considerable interest and with astonished amazement. To refer to one in particular your witness was speaking of the reserve at Brantford, our own Six Nations—"I think we must look forward to their gradual assimilation." We very much resent those remarks as we are proud of being Six Nations Indians. We are thankful we have sons and daughters, and we hope that they, like ourselves, will grow up with pride in the fact that they are first Six Nations Indians, and secondly good Canadians.

We as a people bitterly resent these suggestions of assimilation or absorption, and cannot accept such as inevitable.

We remember well the words which appear on Chief Red-Jacket's monument in Buffalo: "When I am gone, and my voice is no longer heard, the avarice and guile of the white man will prevail. My heart fails me when I think of my people, so soon to be scattered and forgotten."

What possible justification can there be for it to be so frequently urged that Indian reserves must be broken up before the Indian can attain his rightful place in equal partnership with his fellow Canadians?

That is signed by the secretary and chief councillor of the Six Nations reserve. I have taken the stand previously in the house as well as in the committee that it is not the desire of most Indians, certainly not those of the Six Nations at Brantford, to be assimilated fully and completely into Canadian citizenship if that will mean they must give up all the rights they have so well earned and so well deserve. That they must give up the right of exemption from personal income tax in order to get the vote is just one thing. No wonder for the past few years the Indians have been pessimistic, sceptical, distrustful and suspicious of their white brothers and what they have done. They have been pushed aside on small sections of land, in some cases not very good land, and left to get along as best they could, with very little say in their own affairs.

In conclusion I would ask the minister to reconsider the advisability of rushing this bill through at this time.

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate on the Indian Act because of the fact that near my home there are two reserves, the Munceys and the Oneidas, and in addition I have had the privilege of visiting the Cree Indians at Moose Factory and also the Indians on the Pacific coast at Alert Bay and Kingcome Inlet.

I do not suppose it would be possible within the immediate future to right all the wrongs that have been done the Indians in this country in the last couple of hundred years, and particularly since 1867. I do not intend this evening to go into all the things that could and should be done to improve the Indian Act, but I want to point out a few things that I believe are apparent to every Canadian who has given any thought to the problem now before us. Through the years mistake has followed error, so that today the Indian, still a ward of the government, has not taken his rightful place in the councils or the economic life of the country. Any plans we make here should take that fact into consideration.

One of the first steps along that line should be to provide education that, as far as may be possible, is equal to that which is available to our own children. Certainly it will not help solve the problem to continue into the future a system that has proved a failure ever since 1867. The original citizens of this country deserve a better deal than they have had so far. Let us not propose to prolong these injustices. In many attempts to deal with the Indian affairs branch I must confess that while I was courteously received, actually the problems were not attacked as I felt they should be. I had the impression that I was being given a bit of a run-around, and that they were dealing with me as they have dealt with the Indians for the past seventy or eighty years. When any information was desired, instead of taking the word of the Indians or their neighbours they referred to the officials administering the act, and of course they got the answer you would expect; that everything was all right and no change should be made. That, I think, is the wrong approach. They more or less exhibited toward me the feeling that I also was a ward of the government.

I mentioned that education was the first great step toward bringing these citizens fully into the economic and political life of the nation. I had an opportunity to visit one of the Indian schools at Moose Factory. Something was said about many of these Indian schools being operated by one or other of the religious organizations of this country. I must say the one I had the pleasure of visiting was in my opinion very efficiently operated. They were trying to do the best possible job with very limited finances. I believe that has been one of the handicaps that have beset those concerned with the education of Indians throughout the country. While at Moose Factory—and I am sure the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) will appreciate this—I also had the opportunity of visiting the new hospital being built there. It is a fine building, though at the moment I am saying nothing as to its cost.

Many of the problems that seem almost insurmountable today will fade into insignificance when equal educational opportunities are provided for all citizens. The hon. member for Brant-Wentworth (Mr. Charlton) just mentioned the part played by the Indians in two world wars, when they proved they were at least our equals. I believe they can do the same thing in every other field of endeavour if given the proper opportunity. I would not want to guess how many million dollars we have spent to rehabilitate Europe, though all that Europe ever gave us was a headache. Let us spend a small fraction of that amount on the first Canadians in this country.

Mr. C. W. Hodgson (Victoria, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I am taking part in this debate this evening because I have been following the work of the Indian affairs committee for the past three years. That is because there is an Indian band and reserve in my riding. Previous speakers have said their bands were the best. They are all wrong; I represent the best band of Indians in Canada. In taking part in this debate I do not want to take advantage of a privilege I enjoyed last evening, when I was one of the Indians representing that band at an interview with the minister. I want to congratulate him and to thank him for the courteous treatment he accorded us in listening to our requests and arguments for over two hours of his time. We know that he is busy, particularly at this time at the end of the session, with his estimates and this bill coming down.

I have had a great deal to do with Indians. I have not any letters, excerpts or extracts from papers to read to you because I have had a personal interview with my Indians from time to time, and I think I understand what they require. I think they should be treated in the same way as any other Canadian citizens. I have seen these Indians in uniform; I have seen them on their farms on the reserve; and I have seen them in many other places. With regard to my band, I want to say this. The chief was not here last night, and that is the reason I was in at that interview; but he arrived this morning. He is eighty-one years of age, and is smarter than most of us at fifty. He enlisted in 1914 and he took into the service with him at that time every young Indian who was eligible in that band. I think that is a record. He himself came out at the end of the war with a D.C.M. and an M.M. He also has a personal coin which was presented to him by the late General Sir Sam Hughes, on his return home.

This band of Indians that I represent, in Rama, Ontario, are just about as intelligent as any other group of citizens that I know about. They have their own Indian village. They have good farms. They have their own village hall. They have their own schools. I want to say that out of that school have come teachers with second class permanent certificates and I think one or two—one in particular—ministers of the gospel have left the reserve and gone to work in other parts.

I do not speak now because I think this bill is all bad or that the Indian legislation is all bad. There is some good in it. I think the time is over-ripe for giving the Indian the vote. That is one thing that has come about recently. He should have had it before. It is, however, a start in the right direction. He may have to be subjected to the income tax in order to receive that privilege, but I do not think that will affect him greatly because there are few who ever come within the category of paying income tax. In this band in particular, apart from the farmers, quite a number of the younger men work at the chemical plant within a mile and a half of the reserve; another group work in Orillia in the factories. Of course they are subjected to income tax at their place of work each and every pay day, so they will not be affected by that provision in that respect. Nor will it affect the Indian who was a veteran of either of the great wars. All in all, I think the minister can take it up with his officials, take it a little bit further and give them a free vote the same as everybody else.

Out of this band, as well as teachers and ministers, have come great athletes. We have good ball players, good hockey players, and good lacrosse players. One thing we must not forget is that if the Indians have deteriorated in any respect, it is not their fault. It is our fault for the treatment we have given them. Looking back a few years, I can quite well remember that the greatest long distance runner of all time was Tom Longboat, a full-blooded Indian.

There is in this bill one piece of legislation that I do not just like. Probably it is a move in the direction of freedom, but it has gone either too far or not far enough. I refer to the rights or privileges of an Indian to have alcohol or alcoholic drinks. At page 34 the bill goes on to say what happens to the Indian or to set out the penalty he will get if he is caught in possession of intoxicants off the reserve. Then down a little farther it deals with the penalty he will get if he is caught in possession of intoxicants on the reserve; so whether he is on the reserve or off the reserve he is subject to fine and imprisonment in any case. Then the bill goes on to provide for certificates of analysis as evidence and the section reads:

> In every prosecution under this act a certificate of analysis furnished by an analyst employed by the government of Canada or by a province shall be accepted . . .

I do not think that is really the law with regard to a white person.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. We are not in committee, and the hon. member may not refer to any particular clause of the bill. He must confine his remarks to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Hodgson: Very well, Mr. Speaker. That part of the act fines him if he is caught with liquor on the reserve or off the reserve. But a few lines farther on the act goes on to say that he can consume liquor in a beer parlour or cocktail lounge or other public place. That provision allows the Indian to go in and have a few bottles of beer. He knows that he cannot take any home. He knows that he cannot have any at home when he gets home, so therefore he is going to gulp down five or six bottles of beer, get half or three parts drunk and then go out. Then he is the victim of every bootlegger he knows, the same as any white man would be who was dealt with under the same circumstances. We should either allow these people to go into the liquor store, buy their liquor and take it home or they should not be allowed to have it at all. We should do either one thing or the other. There is no half-way method of handling liquor, whether you are dealing with Indians or Canadians of any other description.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The voice of experience.

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, the voice of experience. I was in the army with some of these Indians, and they did not get drunk any oftener than any of the rest of us nor were they any wilder than any of the rest of us when they did get drunk. Because their great-great-grandfather killed somebody with a tomahawk when he was full of firewater, there is no reason why that fact should be held over their heads for a hundred years afterwards. Probably if we looked back at what some of our ancestors have done, we might find that it was something just a little bit worse than that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hodgson: That is one point at least on which I think this bill should be held over until the provincial conference has been held, because we all know that the administration of the liquor control act must be by the provinces. There must therefore be some acceptance of this act by the provinces before anything can be done about it.

Mr. A. L. Smith (Calgary West): I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I shall not occupy your time for more than a few minutes. I want to make it plain that I do not speak as an expert. But I was born in a place called Assiniboia, which is now called Regina, Saskatchewan. In fact, the town did not even have that name. It was called "Pile of Bones". They had a legislature called the northwest legislature before the provinces were born. But the first job that paid any money—that is, aside from 25 cents a week for washing dishes and doing the dusting in my mother's house—was selling cloth at the treaty meeting time of the Indians on the Piapot reserve when they got their $5 a year. We had an industrial school there. We played a game called football. It was not described as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) describes football. He is a younger man, and he and other people invented a stupid name, which they brought from England, called soccer. Therefore I do have some considerable knowledge of these people.

A few moments ago I heard an hon. member mention the name of Tom Longboat. I went to Osgoode hall in Toronto in the winter of 1906-07 or 1907-08. I got to know Tom Longboat very well. That was when Lou Marsh took him over to London, and he was so far ahead in the Olympic race at that time that he lost all his opponents. The Italian won out that year. I remember Lou telling me how he tried to revive Tom. Tom was so far ahead that the judges did not know where he was. He went down. This was the first time I had ever heard the expression: "I even bit his ear in order to bring him back into running form." However, that failed. After that he went down to Montreal and took part in the road race of that year, which was only a matter of six miles and something. I do not think his opponents have finished yet.

But in any event I speak not with authority. I do not claim that at all. But I do claim to have some knowledge of these people which I have gained in a humble way. I think I have some knowledge not of their capabilities which we get in statistics, but of other things, remembering as I do Tom Longboat, and the fine characters whom I have known from my school football days, or soccer, as this great coach called it who spoke in California the other day. However, it is a game that you play with a leather thing that contains a rubber bladder filled with wind. Frankly I am not expressing my view of the speech he made down there. I was merely describing the football regardless of what shape it may take.

I want to confine my remarks to one thing and one thing only. I present these remarks to the minister who has charge of this bill. In my constituency, entirely within my constituency, there is a reserve called the Stony Indians. May I say this for them. Search the annals of the criminal courts of Alberta as you will and you will not find one Stony who has ever been convicted of any crime, no matter how minor.

I know some of these fellows. They have never made me a chief. The answer to that is simply this: I have never been a chief publicity seeker. That is the only reason I have not been made a chief of that tribe. Let any of the great people, such as the governor general, come in there from the outside and we will get them made a chief in one of the two tribes we have, the Sarcees or the Stonies, without any trouble. We will give them a ten-gallon hat and hope they will have fun wearing it. I happen to know these people pretty well. I remember when Mr. Glen was in charge of this department. He sent for the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness) and myself with respect to spending some money to buy some ranching country. He said: "Of course I cannot do it if there is going to be trouble." I have never had that kind of a call from the present minister. In any event, I assured him, as did the hon. member for Calgary East, that there would be no trouble.

The Stonies are a hunting tribe. They never were farmers, as were the Blackfeet and some of the other people we have in that province. They bought the ranches. They paid plenty of money because the Stonies, being hunters, were interested in animals. They had bad luck in those very bad winters we have had. The hon. member for Calgary East and I agreed most heartily with Mr. Glen, and it went through this house without any difficulty. I mention that, Mr. Speaker, only for this reason. The request came from them. It got consideration, and all anyone had to do was what Mr. Glen did, speak to us, who were the only people interested because it was right near our home city. The thing went through quickly. I am quite sure it was a charge on the funds of the band, because they did have considerable funds at that time.

Here is the question I want to put to the minister: Why in the world does he want to put this thing through the house in the closing days of the session? I assume that he will answer. I listened to his opening statement, but I failed to find anything in it which justifies the urgency of doing it at this time. You can correct me, sir, or anyone else can, but I listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) in this house some time ago. I cannot quote him accurately, but I gathered from what he said that the bill would come down. I remember his words. He said that plenty of time would be left for representations with respect to the bill. Perhaps I am not word perfect in what I have said, but, sir, I give you my word of honour that I took what he said to mean this: we would get the bill this year, we would find out what was in it and that plenty of time would be given to interested persons to make representations.

Now, speaking only for the little territory that I represent, I know the bill has not been distributed in time to permit these people to make representations. It is no answer to them to say that they will not agree; that they did not agree before the committee which sat on Indian affairs, and was followed by the commission on Indian affairs. That is no answer. My whole point is this: They are entitled to be heard. I put this, sir, as one of the bases of law in this country. First, that no man shall be condemned without being heard, without being given the opportunity of putting his position forward. I use the word "condemned" first because of its narrow interpretation in the basic law of this country. I add to that this thought, that no person shall have his rights taken from him, added to or subtracted from, unless he has the opportunity of being heard. I believe the minister will agree as to our personal friendship. He knows of my admiration for him as an individual. However, as a minister of Indian affairs I hope I may be forgiven if I withhold my praise.

I have not been active in the practice of law for some time, but I do remember an instance where the charter of a corporation was cancelled. It was within my knowledge that they were a gambling outfit—and that is all they were. I have acted for lots of gamblers, and I know how they operate. They got themselves incorporated, and gave themselves a name—I have forgotten just what it was. The authorities in my province cancelled their charter, and the case went to the courts.

Someone may say that the final decision was morally wrong, but the fact is that the cancellation was set aside on the broad basis that they had not been notified, that they had not been heard, or given an opportunity to advance their position, whatever it might have been.

So I say to the minister now that he will avoid infinite trouble if he will just allow these people to be heard. In doing so he will be following the finest precedents in British and Canadian jurisprudence. I make no effort to discuss this or that section, but I do say this, that it is no answer to say that the Indian population will not agree. I do not think they will, and I do not know why they should. They have recently shown an independence of mind which I suggest permits me to make that statement, and with justification. But never let it be said that the parliament of Canada passed an act dealing with the whole Indian population of our country without first having heard them.

That is my real point. Let us suppose we do not do that. Let us suppose we put this thing through now, as the minister has suggested—at least I think he suggested it. What would it mean? It would mean that we have dealt with a portion of our population who are bound together by their ethnic origin, a people who were here long before we were, and that we are saying to these people, "This is the law."

I know the answer can be made that all the Indians in Canada were invited to attend before the committee. Like the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), I spent a good deal of time there, although I was not a member of the committee. So we come to two courses of action. The first is that we will put this thing through and, as the minister has said, let it be amended next year or the year after. I compliment the minister and all the members of that committee upon having done a fine job in endeavouring to produce, perhaps not a Magna Carta but at least a charter for the Indians of Canada. The second course would be that, having placed the bill before the house, he would not insist upon proceeding with it.

Second thought is sometimes better. In dealing with this numerically small section of our population let us never forget that we are dealing with a whole race of people who have been here infinitely longer than we have. It would seem that in this instance we are telling people who happen to have different coloured skins, "Thus and so is the law. That you will do, and without a hearing."

I come back, not to British law but to British jurisprudence under which no one shall be condemned and no rights shall be taken way except he be heard. I could cover the French law, if hon. members wished. I admit it comes from an entirely different origin, namely from the early Roman law. However the development in French civil law was after the absolute monarchs of France gave way, and after the intendants in this country ceased to have absolute authority. From both of these has developed the principle that there must be no interference with the rights of anyone without first having given him the opportunity to be heard.

Someone will readily say, "If you bring the Indians here, they will not agree." No one can help that; that is democracy itself. If all the people in west Calgary had agreed I would not be here—I would be a long way off, and someone would have taken my place. So I put it on this solid basis, that there is no rush about this matter. I gathered from the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) that all summer would be given to those of us who assume we are entitled to be called legislators, and to this government who assume that they are God Almighty above, and a dozen or two of the apostles—they do not stop at the twelve. I had understood that there would be that opportunity given.

It is no answer to say that the Indians would not agree. We may not agree, but the majority opinion rules in a democracy. I know the minister's intentions are good. But, if he will hear these people, either agreeing or disagreeing with them, and despite differences of opinion on this or that section of the bill, he will have no trouble with an Indian charter. Let it never be said that, in dealing with an entire group whose skin happens to be a bit different in colour, we have said, "This way thou shalt go, and no other; there shalt thou lie"—and I am spelling that word in its proper way.

I do not think I can be accused of being political when I ask the minister to delay this legislation. There are no benefits that anyone could imagine, let alone think of, to be derived from hurrying this through at this time. The minister has nothing to lose by delay; he has everything to gain by waiting until next year before presenting this new charter under which we shall welcome our Indians to brotherhood. This charter should not be put through until we have had a chance to hear what they think of it.

I repeat that there is nothing to be gained by hurrying and there is everything to be gained by waiting. This is not an emergency. If I were sitting where the minister sits I probably would take the same view. He has taken on a new job and it is characteristic of him that he wants to get it started. But impatience has never been a virtue. No matter how idealistic the minister may be, he should not rush through this legislation until the people who are opposed to it or who are in favour of it have been heard.

Mr. G. M. Murray (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I would not have taken part in this debate were it not for the fact there are some 3,000 Indians within the riding of Cariboo, and among those Indians are some educated, wide-awake and progressive young men and women. They are not like the hon. gentleman who has just spoken and who has been so long in southern Alberta among the Stonies and the Blackfeet that he has got into the habit of putting off things until tomorrow—

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): At their request.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): —or next week.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): At their request. Do not let us be silly.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): I recall one experience I had which illustrates the position here. On a hot day I was travelling along the Cariboo road. The United States tourists were rushing up into that very favoured part of western Canada. The dust was thick and, as I say, it was very hot. I came along to where there was a beautiful waterfall and under a tree there lay a young Indian. He had tethered his horse, unsaddled it and had the saddle under his head. There he was lying pleasantly and happily about four o'clock in the afternoon. I stopped to fill my radiator and I said to this young Indian, "What are you doing here?" He said, "George, I am waiting for the sun to go down." That was a very wise thing to do on a hot day on the Cariboo road. That is what our Conservative friends are waiting for tonight. They are waiting for the discussion to die down and for someone to come along with a new charter, a new amendment or something at some time in the future. I submit that we should go ahead with this legislation introduced by the splendid young minister who is so representative of young Canada and who wishes to make a contribution toward his country.

There are just as many different kinds of Indians in Canada as there are different kinds of members in this House of Commons. I know the Indians from one end of the country to the other. When I go to Montreal and see some of these steel workers I realize that they are just as smart and clever, that they have just as much money in their pockets as any of the white wage earners around Montreal. Then I go up into Brant county and I can see no difference between the farms of the old Canadian stock and those of the Indians. The Indians are just as progressive, they have just as fine houses and barns, their fences are in as good repair and they look after the cultivation of their land as well as the other inhabitants.

Then you pass on into the west and you get into the Cariboo country which stretches 700 miles from north to south. There are many types of Indians in that region. Some years ago at Williams Lake there used to be an Indian known as Eagle Lake Henry. He would come into Williams Lake in the fall of the year with 500 head of cattle and sell them in competition with the other ranchers. He was not particularly educated but he knew his arithmetic. I often think how splendid it is that some men are well educated in arithmetic. After selling his cattle he would buy tractors, machinery, combines and so forth. Yet he was an outcast; he was not one of us although he was one of the big operators in the country.

Then as you go north up around Prince George you find the Beaver and the Cree, a different type of Indian. In my youth I knew Pauline Johnson, the great poetess, whose verses are as beautiful as any ever written by any Canadian poet. I did not know Oronhyatekha, who was known as Old Iron Teakettle, who in his early days was one of the leading financiers of the country. A bronze statue of him stands in Toronto. He was a full-blooded Indian with great culture and ability.

I think also of the sisters of a certain religious order who are operating a hospital and school at Williams Lake with a standard equal to anything in our country. Then there are teachers and others.

The legislation before us is a start. It is not perfect because man, whether white or otherwise, with all his ingenuity and gifts is not perfect and his legislation is never perfect. But this is a start toward establishing the Indians of Canada in their proper position as Canadian people.

Without quibbling and without splitting hairs this legislation should be passed. Later on amendments can be made. The laws that we make today are not final. I call upon all members in the house to give the minister support at this time in making a start in establishing a true democracy in Canada where there will be no division of colour or of race or of religion, where all Canadians will be equal under the law.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, with the concluding words of the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Murray) I am in entire agreement, and it is just for that reason that I am going to speak in opposition to the bill. I was one of those who believed that out of the Indian committee would indeed come a charter that would be beneficial to the Indians of Canada. On May 5 I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) —and I am not going to read it now because it has been read before—whether an opportunity would be given to the Indian population to consider the bill to be introduced. I did that in no partisan way. This is one subject that we can and will deal with in a non-partisan manner for the reason that the bill in its present form affects the political future of none of us.

The Prime Minister said that he appreciated the tone of the representations I had made and that the matter would receive the consideration of the Indians across this country. I listened this afternoon to the remarks of the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Brown), who was chairman of the committee on Indian affairs. He earned for himself as chairman of the committee a reputation for a willingness and desire to contribute something to the welfare of the Indians. His statement, his observations and his conclusion regarding the bill were a miracle in terminology. I cannot repeat word for word what he said but it was to the effect that as far as it went, whether or not he agreed with it, he believed that the minister had done as much as he could. Whatever he meant, one thing stands out, that he as chairman of that committee was disappointed with the bill.

It is a mirage, Mr. Speaker. It is no charter. It is merely an alteration of some of the provisions of the Indian Act intensified in so far as administrative officials are concerned to make them more powerful than they have ever been before under the Indian Act as it has existed since 1880. The hon. member for Cariboo says: Let us have equality under the law; let us maintain freedom; and the minister brings to the house a bill that is a negation of freedom, a denial of equality under the law. Indeed it provides that Indians can have no recourse to the courts unless they have the permission of the minister to proceed. When I compare the report that the special committee on Indian affairs made on June 22, 1948, with the bill now before the house, it is obvious that the master hands of the administrative officials of the Indian affairs branch have wrought changes that parliament never thought of. After speaking of the purposes of the amendments to the act the report of the special committee reads as follows:

> In order to achieve these objectives, your committee recommends, in addition to other recommendations hereinafter set out (a) that the revised act contain provisions to protect from injustice and exploitation such Indians as are not sufficiently advanced to manage their own affairs.

When the minister replies let him say what new section of the bill implements protection of the Indians from exploitation. Other recommendations were:

> That greater responsibility and more progressive measures of self-government of reserve and band affairs be granted to band councils to assume and carry out such responsibilities;

That the offence and penalty sections of the Indian Act be made equitable and brought into conformity with similar sections in the Criminal Code . . .

That the Indians be accorded the same rights and be liable to the same penalties as others with regard to the consumption of intoxicating beverages on licensed premises, but there shall be no manufacture, sale or consumption, in or on a reserve, of "intoxicants" within the meaning of the Indian Act;

That it be the duty and responsibility of all officials dealing with Indians to assist them to attain the full rights and to assume the responsibilities of Canadian citizenship.

Then these recommendations are made:

Your committee recommends that rules of the House of Commons be amended to provide for the appointment of a select standing committee on Indian affairs.

Your committee recommends that a commission in the nature of a claims commission be set up, with the least possible delay, to inquire into the terms of all Indian treaties in order to discover and determine, definitely and finally, such rights and obligations as are therein involved and, further, to assess and settle finally and in a just and equitable manner all claims for grievances which have arisen thereunder.

The bill in its present form simply places the Indian in a position where he will have no equality under the law, where he will be at the beck and control of officials on the various reserves. Rights? He cannot take a case to court when there is wrongdoing unless he has the permission of the minister. Appeals provided for? There is an appeal from the official in charge of the reserve to the minister, from the hired man to the hired man's boss.

Mr. Mitchell: May I ask my hon. friend a simple question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Surely.

Mr. Mitchell: You say he has no right to appeal without the permission of the minister?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what it says.

Mr. Mitchell: Read it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad the minister asked that because there is no greater exponent of the abiding principles of British freedom than the minister.

Mr. Mitchell: Absolutely.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I knew the fact that those provisions were in there would shock his British sensibilities. I feel sure that the minister will now join the rest of us.

Mr. Mitchell: Sing your Christmas carol and get it over with.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You know, I love to hear the minister expatiate on British traditions and principles and read parliament these wonderful lectures on parliamentary government. Nevertheless he is a member of a government that brings before the house a bill that denies to the individual Indian that freedom and equality referred to by the hon. member for Cariboo. When an Indian commits an offence under the proposed act or is alleged to have committed an offence, who tries him? Is it the ordinary courts of law? No; those who try him will be the Indian agent, or an official of the Indian department, or appointees of the minister who will act as justices of the peace. I cannot understand the reason for these provisions. Why should an Indian be tried for a criminal offence before an appointee of the department of Indian affairs? Why should he not be tried by the ordinary courts of law? Why the denial of those principles for which the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mitchell) speaks so volubly on so many occasions?

In its present form this bill is a travesty on the representations made by members of both houses of parliament. Members of this house and of the other place met together for three years, and then brought in recommendations. Those recommendations, except with respect to administrative difficulties which have existed over the years, did not result in material changes which would benefit the Indians of this country. I point to something else that is not being done. Why has no action been taken on the recommendation that a commission be set up, so that the Indians may not continue to feel that have been unjustly treated, as they have? In 1931 or 1932 the department permitted one action to be brought; it allowed one petition of right to an Indian band in Saskatchewan, and what happened? The action was tried; the Indian department and its officials were shown to have wrongfully applied some $20,000 belonging to that band and held in trust. Have they been granted the right to sue since? I know several solicitors who have endeavoured to obtain petitions of right and failed. That was prior to the appointment of the present minister, but I know of no change that has taken place in that regard since. These Indians, deprived of their rights under treaty, have to ask leave in order to sue, and that leave is not granted. Fiat after fiat has been refused by the Department of Justice to Indians who desire to assert their rights in the courts of law.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): What bands are you referring to?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I refer to the bands in northern Saskatchewan. The action I mentioned had to do with the band at Mistawasis. The minister will remember it; the department lost the action, and wrongdoing was established before the court. Since that day no Indian band in Saskatchewan has received permission to sue the department for wrongdoing. Matters like this are embalmed in this bill, and these are the things that will be perpetuated if this bill becomes law.

I could go on and refer to various other matters, but suffice it to say that there has been a serious endeavour to solve the difficulty in relation to citizenship. I know that difficulty. The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) mentioned that the Indians might not agree on many matters if they were given the opportunity to appear here. Some want citizenship; others do not. As a result a novel plan has been adopted. How it will work out I do not know, but as far as the plan for citizenship is concerned it does represent a serious attempt to do something to solve the almost impossible situation that prevails today. As far as giving the Indian an opportunity to benefit himself is concerned, or to raise his standard, in its present form this bill is nothing but a perpetuation of bureaucracy and bureaucratic control over the Indians on the reserves. If it is passed the rights of the Indians will not be increased in any way, while the power of the officials on the reserves will be just as great as in the past, if not greater.

This act was passed originally in 1880, before the rebellion of 1885. Conditions were different then. A few amendments have been brought in since. Two committees of parliament have met and discussed the matter, prior to the appointment of the last committee two or three years ago. The law respecting Indians is a denial of the principles we accept under the United Nations. As it is now drawn this bill places these people in a position of wardship, making it impossible for the individual Indian to preserve and protect his rights against the tyranny of officials. Why those terms? Why not place the Indian in a position equal to that of other people in this land as far as the law is concerned? Why place him in the position that when he is charged with an offence he must be tried by the person who prosecutes him? On the one hand the Indian agent on the reserve says this man committed an offence. The trial will take place before another official appointed by the department, often a junior official on the reserve. Will you get justice that way? Will you preserve the rights of the individual? By legislation such as this, dealing with people who are operating under the difficulties that have been theirs for generations, will you lessen the intensity of their feeling? All this will do is emphasize their feeling that parliament is not regarding them seriously, that parliament has failed to carry out what was recommended by a parliamentary committee.

Why the rush? The hon. member for Calgary West made a powerful, meaningful plea in that regard. What changes are in this bill that cannot be brought in after the Indians have had an opportunity of considering it? While the hon. member for Calgary West was speaking I received my mail. Here is a letter from an outstanding clergyman in the city of Calgary, who says:

I must confess that I know very little about it—

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): On a matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I believe this is out of order. It was so ruled this afternoon by Mr. Speaker, and I believe the same rule should apply now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not a question of order at all.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): He rose on a question of privilege.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I presume I may continue?

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): After that legal advice I will raise a point of order and ask that this be ruled out. The reading of a document, a letter or telegram, was ruled out of order this afternoon by Mr. Speaker, and this therefore should be ruled out of order as well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In some circumstances it is permitted. The hon. member may continue.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will give the name of this clergyman if the minister wants it, or if the hon. gentleman wants to interview him. He is Rev. William Bonney, of Calgary, who says:

They feel that the bill is not fair to the Indian and therefore they are protesting to the minister and others not to rush the bill through until the Indians themselves have had a chance to study and make recommendations.

That is the attitude of Indians throughout the province of Saskatchewan. I have representations from Indians in six reserves in northern Saskatchewan. They are asking why it is that the representatives of the great white father, the Prime Minister of Canada, indicated we were going to have this opportunity. The minister will say that the bill has been sent to the Indian agents. All I can say is this, Mr. Speaker. The Indian agents have been studying the bill but those affected by it, the Indians themselves, have had no opportunity of studying it and considering it.

Mr. Casselman: The same as the members of the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the Indians are asking parliament not to lay on their shoulders burdens beyond what they already have. They are asking why it is that the recommendations which were made by the committee are not being carried out. They are asking why it is that, while we give high-sounding support to their claims under treaties, we deny them the opportunity, except with the permission of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) or of the minister, of proceeding in order to establish their claims. Indeed one section, which was referred to this afternoon by the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness), denies the Indian the right, without the consent of the minister, to raise any funds with a view to asserting his rights, protecting his privileges or taking proceedings on behalf of his band. The minister indicates that such is not the case. I refer him, if I may do so, Mr. Speaker, to section 100. Without the consent of the minister the Indian cannot assert his rights if he is alleged to have committed a wrong—

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): That is a wholly incorrect interpretation of section 100; but let us leave it to the period when we can discuss it in committee.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All right, I will. I am referring the minister to section 100, and I leave it for discussion when we get to the committee. Section 100, which I will read without observation, provides as follows:

> A person who without the consent in writing of the minister receives, obtains, solicits or requests from an Indian or a band any payment or contribution or promise of payment or contribution for the purpose of raising a fund or providing money to advance any claim that the Indian or the band has or is represented to have, or to recover money for the benefit of the Indian or the band, is guilty of an offence and is liable upon summary conviction to a fine of not less than fifty dollars and not more than two hundred dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two months, or to both fine and imprisonment.

Mr. Fraser: That is as plain as the nose on your face.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In other words, at a time when throughout the world freedom is being challenged, when the very nature of democracy is being challenged, we have before us a bill that places shackles on a large part of the population of our country, numbering about 125,000. For three years that committee sat. Now the mountain brings forth a mouse. Here we have not what was recommended by the committee but what apparently meets the desires and the wishes of the administrative officials. In its present form this bill is a perpetuation of bureaucracy over the Indian. It is a denial of his rights. It places him in the position of being a second-class citizen under law. It denies him freedom except with the consent of the minister or with the consent of some officials of the Indian department.

Magna Carta for the Indians! As I read this bill and re-read it—and I have read every line of it—I ask myself this question: What advantages that he has not today will this bill give to the Indian, except to provide for the opportunity of enfranchisement? There are changes in routine and in procedure but the Indian remains a second-class individual, not equal before the law—and parliament is asked to place its approval on that fact—controlled by the desires of a bureaucracy administering the act, when and if members of that bureaucracy decide that any Indian within the reserve shall be denied his rights or his privileges.

I care not what others may do about this bill. Some say there are worth-while provisions in it, and there are. In certain sections there are changes that are beneficial. But in order to secure those two or three advantages I personally will not vote for the second reading of that bill. I will take no part in the passing of a bill that goes contrary to the desires, the wishes, and the recommendations of a committee of this parliament. A Magna Carta for Indians! There is a redrafting of some sections, and a change in their numbers; but behind it all and through it all runs the thread of a subservience which I for one, knowing Indians and having acted for them on several occasions, will not join in supporting in this house, no matter what other members may do.

On three or four occasions I have had the privilege of acting for Indians and of carrying their cases to the court of appeal. I have done that because I believe that a counsel's duty is to represent these people who are denied many of our privileges. I have done it, as would any other counsel, without any consideration of payment. I would be false and recreant to the trust they have placed in me over the years if, in the dying days of a session, I were to join in the passing of a bill that will impose on these people the subservience of a second-class citizenship and a lower grade of right than the rest of us have. That type of legislation has no part in a world in which freedom is challenged and in which nations today, in order to maintain freedom, realize that you cannot build and preserve democracy on the basis of the inequality of any person before the law.

Mr. O. L. Jones (Yale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make one or two observations and possibly a suggestion. One hon. gentleman mentioned the fact that we are dealing not with a subservient people or with slaves but with a nation. I fully realize that we are dealing with a nation. But fortunately it is a kindly nation, and one that is tolerant and patient. The Indians have been tolerant and patient with white people for many generations; and they have been particularly tolerant of our reluctance to give them full freedom and to make them full Canadians. If the Indians were given an equal opportunity with all other Canadians, I am satisfied that they would hold their own with the best. In my riding, in the Inkaneep district, there is a small group of Indians. They were taken in hand some years ago by a teacher, and he was quite keen as he wanted to prove, as he did, that Indians could respond to a little bit of tolerance and patience in their education, with the result that he has in that district now a cultural group which sets a standard that could be attained by all Indians throughout Canada, given the same patient, tolerant education.

The British people have prided themselves for generations on their attitude toward minorities, and I take it we Canadians follow their steps. We have always fought for minorities, for fairness and justice to minorities. England has gone to war on the principle that minority rights were being violated in certain countries, but at home we are reluctant to do that. We are prepared to go to war with other nations for doing what we are doing.

Other nations have challenged our sincerity in regard to our own racial problems at some of the international conventions that have taken place in recent years. Our failure to accept our own Indians as full citizens has been thrown in our faces and will be thrown in our faces until we accept them as full citizens.

On the other hand, I would compliment the minister for bringing this bill down. It is a step in the right direction, but I do think it is a hasty step. It is a step which has been foisted upon the Indians without consultation with them, and on the house without proper opportunity to discuss the bill. I would appeal to his fairness, to his sense of justice, to hold this bill back until next session in order to give both the Indians and the members of the house an opportunity to consider it, particularly the members who go back to their ridings in which Indians reside. They can visit the tribes or settlements and discuss their problems and the bill with them. It would take a little time, but I am satisfied that every hon. member is interested enough in the problem to devote that time freely.

I would suggest to the minister that the bill be now turned over to a representative body of Indians, selected by the Indians themselves from each tribe or from each province to form a body composed of all of their different branches, whether farmers or artisans, it does not matter. They would be the representatives of the Indians in Canada.

I know we have paid tributes to their advances in education, and to their ability to govern. Let us act on that. Let them feel that we mean what we say. Turn this bill over to them and say to them: This is our attempt to place you in a higher status of society so far as Canada is concerned. What do you think of it? Mull it over. Come back with suggestions and let us know what your proposals are. Otherwise it is an imposition on people, whether Indians or whoever they may be, to say: Here is our bill; take it or leave it. This is what you have to live under for the next generation, or maybe longer, because it has been a long time since the existing act has been changed.

By that method we deny them the right of self-government, or a part in the government of the dominion of which they are the original members. Indians governed this country long before we came here, and they governed it pretty well. They conserved more of our natural resources, particularly wildlife, than we are capable of doing. They also governed their own people through their own courts, their own tribal courts. Probably they were rough, but they were fair. Here we are assuming the right to set up separate white judges to try the Indians, without giving them the opportunity—which they always had before we came here—to try their own people in their own way. I believe they could still set up their own courts of justice and give justice to their own people.

The modern Indian is quite capable of determining his own economic future if given an opportunity. I suggest that when this bill is turned over, if it is turned over to them, they be asked to send back recommendations. If they would prefer to prepare a totally new bill, giving their own point of view and their desires for their future, let us accept that bill and discuss it around the table and come to some definite conclusion that we are going to be honest and decent with the Indian, and that we are going to make him a full-fledged Canadian as quickly as we can in all sincerity.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain the house long—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: I notice that the rookery on the opposite side has begun to caw, as I have begun to speak. I am in a unique position in this matter, Mr. Speaker, because I represent one reservation and one Indian.

Mr. Cote (Matapedia-Matane): You mean to say you are half and half.

Mr. Herridge: There is another tribe in my riding, known as the bareskin tribe, which is composed of about 1,500 people who are commonly known as the sons of freedom. I shall not discuss them.

Mr. Fraser: We will have a full dress debate on them.

Mr. Herridge: I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that where that one Indian resides today a few years ago hundreds of Indians resided and led a happy life. They have departed because of the coming of the white man.

When we are considering this bill tonight, Mr. Speaker, we should recognize that this legislation—springing, shall I say, or supposed to spring, out of recommendations of the parliamentary committee of 1946, 1947 and 1948—is our opportunity to do in this parliament the justice that has been so long delayed.

In opposing the passage of this bill at this time and in supporting the remarks made by the previous speakers, particularly the eloquent remarks of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) and the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), I do so because I believe that if we pass this bill we are failing to carry out our moral duty toward the Indians of this country.

I have had a limited experience with Indians. I have only had what you might call a book knowledge of the Indians of Canada except for those who lived in my own district. I remember when I first came from England, some 45 years ago, there was a small tribe of Indians living on the Upper Arrow lakes known as the Arrow Lake Indian band. There were twenty-four members in the band at that time. It had declined greatly in numbers since the first coming of the whites after the discovery of the Columbia river by David Thompson. But research by the Smithsonian Institution in the district indicated that prior to the coming of the white man hundreds and possibly thousands of Indians lived contented lives in that area. They were a peaceful people; they hunted, they fished, they grew a little corn. After we came what did we do for them?

History records that these people offered a friendly welcome to the white man. They assisted David Thompson in the discovery of the Columbia; they trapped for the Hudson's Bay Company many years and produced hundreds and thousands of dollars for that company. They acted as pilots on the first river steamers on the Columbia in Canadian territory. In fact they were the ones who guided those first steamers through the narrows and through the swift waters.

I remember, Mr. Speaker, in my boyhood days these twenty-four Indians. They lived in wigwams. As a boy I played with them. I went to the first primitive school established in that district. The students of that school were eight or nine Indian children and eighteen or nineteen white children. I saw those boys and girls grow up and take their places in the community. I saw the boys begin to work on the steamers as young men. I saw the women begin to work in various houses as young women, and on the farms in the district, and so on. Then the first war came on. What was my experience in that connection? During the first great war I was a member of the 54th Kootenay battalion. I would be failing in my duty tonight if I did not oppose the bill. I remember one occasion at St. Eloi in 1916, when a platoon was taking part in a raid and was likely to be completely wiped out. The reason the majority of the members of the platoon were able to retire, and their lives saved, was that one Indian member in that platoon volunteered to stay in a German trench and hold the German attackers back, single-handed. That has been my experience with Indians.

Since that time one by one those Indians have died of tuberculosis. Some years after they became of age, on the advice of the Indian affairs branch they entered small frame shacks. These shacks were very poorly constructed, and the result was that after entering them tuberculosis became prevalent, and they died one by one. Today there is only one survivor of the Arrow Lake Indian band, one old Indian squaw. We, the white men, have destroyed that peaceful band of Indians. That is an illustration of the effect of white civilization on a small group of Indians in a limited sphere or district.

To a certain extent that has happened in other parts of Canada. Surely our knowledge of the past, and our treatment of the people who owned this country originally, should cause us to take this opportunity, not to pass the bill but to draft one that would remedy to some extent the injustices of the past and be a credit to the members in this parliament who profess to believe in democracy.

The Indians are opposed to the passage of this bill. I believe that is evident from communications which have reached hon. members, and from the general information available at this time. Not only are the Indians opposed to the measure, but large and representative bodies in Canada are opposed to it. I am convinced that the great majority of right-thinking Canadians, on being truly informed of the facts, would be opposed to the house passing this measure at this time.

I received a communication today from the Vancouver civil liberties union. I shall not take the time to quote it, but I believe a copy was sent to the minister, and I see he nods his head in agreement. I hope he will study it closely, because it indicates a close study of the bill and an understanding of its deficiencies. It is sufficient to say that in the brief time I have had to read the memorandum I have found that the bill fails completely to give consideration to at least fourteen of the recommendations made by the parliamentary committee that studied the Indian question in 1946, 1947 and 1948.

Therefore, like previous speakers, I am opposed to the consideration of the bill at this time, and shall vote against its passage. Surely in view of the attitude of the Indians, in view of the history of the past, and in view of our moral obligation to these people who have suffered injustices since the white man came to Canada, this parliament can defer passage of the bill until the next session, and then pass one which would be a credit to all.

Mr. G. F. Higgins (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I shall not delay the house long, nor shall I delay the minister in making his reply. I understand however that no member from Newfoundland has spoken in the matter thus far.

I would draw the minister's attention to the fact that, as he is no doubt already aware, we have Indians in Newfoundland and Labrador. There are two tribes, the Montagnais of Labrador and the Micmacs of Newfoundland. However they are not the original Indians who were in that country. The original Indians, who might be described as the first owners of the country, were the Beothucks. They were a very fine tribe of Indians, indeed. The history of the Beothucks reflects no credit upon the white man, because there is not a single Beothuck alive today—indeed, there is very little trace of them.

It is on that theme that I address my few remarks to the house this evening. So far as I know this bill has not been given study. Unfortunately there are no Indians in my own riding, and it might be said that I have no business joining in the debate. The only Indians, I believe, in Newfoundland proper are in the riding of the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter). The other Indians, namely, the Montagnais, are in the riding of the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay (Mr. Ashbourne), in Labrador.

After all, we have an obligation to these people. They were there long before we were in the province of Newfoundland, and we do not want to have happen to the Indians who are now there that which happened to their predecessors. This bill may be the best that could be devised; I am not prepared to say it is not. But, speaking for myself, until I have had an opportunity of reading it and digesting it properly I am not prepared to vote for it as it stands. I would prefer, of course, to have the views of hon. members from both the districts I have mentioned. They are now in the house, and they represent the Indian populations in their district.

However I would make the plea at the present time that there is no great urgency in this matter. From what I have heard, listening to the speeches of hon. members in whose constituencies there are Indians, it would appear that all kinds of representations have been made to them not to have the bill passed at this time. I cannot see anything to be lost by deferring the matter so as to give hon. members an opportunity really to understand what the bill means.

It is because of what has happened to the Indians in Newfoundland that I now ask that the passage of this bill be deferred until all hon. members understand the measure presented to them.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, the bill now before the house is entitled an act respecting Indians. I feel that in that title we find the only respect that the government seems to be paying the Indians, because the bill itself does far less than justice to those people who were the first inhabitants of Canada. It does far less than justice to the recommendations of the committee which worked so hard for three years and whose recommendations have been laid before the House of Commons.

In my constituency are a large number of Indians. I do not know exactly what their collective attitude is toward the bill. I know they have not had an opportunity to let me know how they feel about it. The wide dispersal of the Indian bands and the difficulties presented by the terrain have made it quite impossible for them to have had any joint deliberations in connection with studying this bill. I have too much respect for the Indian people who live in that part of the country, and the other Indians throughout Canada, to be willing to pass a measure which is as ill considered as this one.

The Indians of this country are worthy of more respect and of more consideration than the government is permitting the house to give, when we are asked to pass this legislation at this stage of the session.

I do not claim to have an intimate or thorough knowledge of Indian lore and tradition, but I do know of many of the fine characteristics of these people. I recall a former chief of the Douglas Lake tribe, now dead, who had an outstanding reputation as a great Canadian. Chillihitchie was presented to His Majesty the King, George V, at Buckingham Palace, to whom he presented a thoroughbred horse. That was only one incident in his lifetime. Anyone who achieved that recognition does not deserve the short shrift that is being given to these people in this legislation.

Many detailed criticisms of the bill have been made already and I shall not delay the house by repeating them. I might mention that in my constituency is the largest residential school in Canada and I should like to pay a tribute to the work being done by the churches on behalf of the Indians. There are those who think that religious residential schools are not the answer to the Indian problem. I believe that whatever educational system is devised the Indian must be given full opportunity to obtain religious as well as other education. The Indian must be given the opportunity to prepare himself for citizenship; he must be granted equality with the other citizens of Canada and not condemned to a permanent second-class position.

An educational system must be devised which will enable the Indian to compete on a basis of equality with the white citizens of this country. I believe they can do that. If we have a proper educational system to include the Indians I have no doubt that they will be able to compete and equal, if not in many cases to outstrip, the white citizen. Like the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), recall the contribution made by Indians in the armed services during the war just concluded. They were our equals then in every respect. We did not ask them to assume a secondary role or undertake obligations of a lesser nature than we assumed ourselves. We did not have to ask them to do what they did. They assumed obligations and duties equal to if not greater than those assumed by the white soldier. I fail to see why they should be asked by this legislation to assume a permanent role of inferiority as second-class citizens with lesser privileges than those granted to white Canadians.

[Mr. Fulton.]

I am not saying that they should be placed on an equal footing or asked to compete on an equal basis immediately or overnight. I do not think that would be possible or proper, but our legislation should lay the groundwork for a program which will enable them in a measurable space of time to assume the place which I know all hon. members and all Canadians would want them to assume. It is because I find in this legislation no provision for such a program that I am opposed to it.

Most of those who have spoken this afternoon have said that we should be given an opportunity to study this legislation and that the Indians should have time in which to make their representations. It is urged by the government that this legislation is an advance over what we have had in the past and therefore government supporters perhaps will find themselves unable to vote against the bill on a straight vote yes or no. This bill has been four years in the making. The committee sat first in 1946 but the bill was not brought in until a week or ten days ago. It would be improper for us to pass this bill at this time with the limited consideration that can be given to it.

In order to meet the views of those who feel that they cannot vote against the bill on a straight yes or no basis and in order that more time may be given to the Indians, to other interested parties and to the members of this house to consider the legislation adequately, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Harkness):

That the bill be not now read a second time, but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Fulton) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Aylesworth	Hodgson
Balcer	Johnston
Beyerstein	Jones
Black (Cumberland)	Knight
Blackmore	Knowles
Blair	Lennard
Cardiff	Low
Casselman	Macdonnell (Greenwood)
Catherwood	MacKenzie
Charlton	McGregor
Coldwell	Mott
Coyle	Murphy
Fair	Noseworthy
Fleming	Pearkes
Fraser	Quelch
Fulton	Shaw
Gillis	Smith (Calgary West)
Harkness	Stewart (Winnipeg North)
Herridge	Thomas—39.
Higgins

NAYS

Messrs:

Abbott	Hosking
Anderson	Huffman
Applewhaite	Hunter
Ashbourne	Jeffery
Bater	Kent
Benidickson	Kirk (Antigonish-Guysborough)
Black (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)	Kirk (Digby-Yarmouth)
Blanchette	Lafontaine
Blue	Laing
Boisvert	Langlois (Gaspe)
Bourget	Lapointe
Bradette	Larson
Bradley	Lesage
Brisson	Little
Brown (Essex West)	Macdonald (Edmonton East)
Bruneau	MacDougall
Byrne	Macnaughton
Cameron	McLean (Huron-Perth)
Campney	Maltais
Cannon	Maybank
Carter	Mayhew
Cauchon	Murray (Cariboo)
Clark	Nixon
Corry	Pearson
Darroch	Picard
Decore	Pinard
Dewar	Poulin
Dickey	Prudham
Dion	Richard (St. Maurice-Lafleche)
Douglas	Rinfret
Eudes	Roberge
Ferrie	Robertson
Fournier (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)	Robinson
Garland	Rooney
Garson	St. Laurent
Gauthier (Portneuf)	Sinclair
Gibson	Smith (Queens-Shelburne)
Gingues	Stick
Gosselin	Thomson
Gour (Russell)	Tremblay
Gourd (Chapleau)	Ward
Harris (Grey-Bruce)	Weir
Harrison	Whiteside
Hellyer	Winters—90.
Helme
Henry

Mr. Gardiner: I was paired with the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): I was paired with the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. McCubbin). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was paired with the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Stewart). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I was paired with the hon. member for Yukon-Mackenzie River (Mr. Simmons.) Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Fraser: May I call it eleven o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Fraser: May I move the adjournment of the debate and call it eleven o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough West): Mr. Speaker, there are two Indian reserves in my riding, and I consider them very fine reserves. Someone has said it is a very fine riding, and I heartily agree. I will not say it is the best riding in the country. I do not need to say it; you all know it. We have the Hiawatha reservation on Rice lake and the Mud lake reservation.

It is one minute to eleven, Mr. Speaker, and because of the noise coming from the other side of the chamber I know you cannot hear a word I say. Therefore I move the adjournment of the debate and ask you to call it eleven o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Eleven o'clock.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CHILDREN BORN IN CANADA TO DIPLOMATS, CERTIFICATES TO PERSONS LOSING CITIZENSHIP THROUGH MARRIAGE, ETC.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) moved the first reading of Bill No. 315 (from the Senate) to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.

He said: This bill has just been sent over from the Senate, and I was hoping it might be given first reading tonight, by unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: If it is the pleasure of the house we can proceed with first reading. I understand it is with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Certainly not; when they would not call it eleven o'clock they cannot expect us to co-operate.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I must say I spoke to the respective leaders at eight o'clock, or shortly after.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Then I apologize.

Mr. Casselman: To whom did you speak on this side?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Tomorrow we shall proceed with the bill amending the Indian Act, which was under consideration at eleven o'clock. Then we shall take up the legislation standing in the name of the Minister of Justice, concerning amendments to the Judges Act and the Official Secrets Act. Then there is the shipping act, which has been reported from the committee tonight and will be considered in committee of the whole. Then we shall take up the bill to which the house was kind enough to give first reading a moment ago, and any other legislation there may be.

Mr. Fraser: What does that mean?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I am not sure whether there is another bill coming from the Senate, and I must apologize for not being specific about this. Then we will go into supply taking the estimates of Secretary of State, post office, resources and development, and justice.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 22, 1950

The house met at eleven o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Third report of standing committee on public accounts.—Mr. Picard.

Sixth report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Winkler.

Third and final report of special committee on the Dominion Elections Act, 1938.—Mr. Fournier (Maisonneuve-Rosemont).

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND SALT CODFISH—STATEMENT AS TO DISPOSITION OF 1949 STOCKS

Hon. R. W. Mayhew (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as members of the house are aware, the department and the fisheries prices support board have been studying the current market situation for salted cod, particularly that produced in Newfoundland. The fisheries prices support board dealt with the problem at its meetings on June 16 and 17 and have made their report to me. As soon as certain additional information is available, I shall be able to make a complete report to the house. However, since there has been considerable interest aroused, and since some of the stories which I have seen in the press have been written without access to all the facts, perhaps I should make a preliminary statement at this time. In the first place, I want to make it clear that the total quantities of salted fish in store in Newfoundland, including stocks in fishermen's hands, are substantially less than some have been led to believe. Many statements have been based on the stock figures as at April 20. Considerable quantities of those stocks have since been sold and are moving regularly to the markets. Sales are continuing to be made and the fish is going forward from Newfoundland ports in volume. Contracts are currently being negotiated by the exporters which may well result in further substantial commercial sales.

In some areas of Newfoundland the fishermen were unable to cure the fish caught late in 1949 until this spring, and this fish remains in the fishermen's hands. The quantities are not great, and we have them in mind in our considerations.

Other important negotiations now being carried out by the Department of Trade and Commerce could ease some of the restrictions now affecting our markets. While these negotiations are pending, any statement of policy would be premature. Meanwhile I see good reasons for being more optimistic about the outlook for disposal of the remaining stocks and for the marketing of the new production in 1950. I will make a more complete statement to the house shortly.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. F. Higgins (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Fisheries arising out of his recent statement. I would thank him for the statement he has made, which we appreciate, and I would impress upon him the urgency of making a further statement. I understand there is a possibility that the session may close next week. Will the statement be made before that time?

Hon. R. W. Mayhew (Minister of Fisheries): I am hoping it will be made before that time. I shall do my best.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROCLAMATION—TABLING OF GENERAL RULES

On the order for motions:

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that proclamation has now been issued to bring the Bankruptcy Act, 1949, into force on July 1, 1950. At the same time I should like to table a copy of the general rules made by the governor in council under the Bankruptcy Act, 1949, which will come into force on July 1, when the act comes into force.

REPORTS AND PAPERS

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): I beg leave to table the annual report of the Department of Trade and Commerce for the calendar year 1949. The French version of the report is not yet available. As soon as it is available it will be tabled. I would also like to table the fourth annual report of the Canadian Commercial Corporation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1950; also the annual report of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1950; also the fourth annual report of the atomic energy control board for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1950.

INDIAN ACT

CONSOLIDATION AND CLARIFICATION—BILL NO. 267 TO STAND FOR FURTHER CONSIDERATION

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when I took over the administration of Indian affairs early in this year I found there were three important matters to be dealt with. The first was whether the Indians might be entitled to vote in federal elections; the second was whether there might be further assistance, particularly to aged Indians; and the third was the implementation of promises which had been made that the Indian Act would be revised.

I am happy to state that the government has announced the solution of the first two problems, namely that in certain circumstances the Indian is now entitled to vote at federal elections, and that aged Indians will receive allowances of $25 instead of $8.

I had hoped that we might carry out the promise made with respect to the revision of the Indian Act. When the bill was introduced two weeks ago I had already set up elaborate machinery whereby the bill would be placed in the hands of the Indians at the earliest possible moment, and I think that in a great many of the reserves in Canada it was in their hands ten days ago.

In the meantime I have received representation by telegram and letter from quite a few bands and individual Indian organizations showing that they have made a serious study of the bill. They have criticized it in some respects and praised it in others. However, it has been represented that in other areas the bill had not reached the Indians in time for consideration. In view of all that it has been suggested that we might not proceed with the bill at this session.

A great many Indians have come to Ottawa in person to discuss the bill with me, and some favour action at this session. I would hope that those among them who would like to have the bill passed at this session might agree with me that perhaps it would be better to delay it in order to give the greatest opportunity to all concerned to make representations to me. I would not like any Indian, or, for that matter, any other Canadian citizen, to think that I am not as conscious of the needs of the Indian and his wishes as any others who in the past have held the high office of superintendent-general of Indian affairs. For that reason, as I said, I would hope that those who would have liked the bill to go through at this session, because it contains provisions which give many advantages to Indian bands and individual Indians, would join with me in allowing it to stand for further consideration.

Mr. Green: Will the minister give the house the assurance that a bill will be brought in early in the next session?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I think it must be obvious that I have allowed this bill to stand only with reluctance, and that I will certainly bring one in as early as I can at the next session.

TAX AGREEMENTS

CANADA-UNITED STATES—RATIFICATION OF TAX CONVENTION ACTS, 1943 AND 1944

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved the first reading of Bill 314 (from the Senate) to amend the Canada-United States of America Tax Convention Act, 1943, and the Canada-United States of America Tax Convention Act, 1944.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

TRENTON, ONT., AIRPORT—CONTRACT FOR SUPPLIES

Mr. White (Hastings-Peterborough):

1. What firms or individuals received contracts for supplying gas, oil, grease, coal, fuel oil, bread, meat and milk for the R.C.A.F. airport at Trenton, Ontario, in each of the years 1948, 1949 and 1950?
2. Were tenders called for these contracts?
3. What are the names and addresses of the firms or individuals who submitted tenders?
4. What was the contract price for each of the commodities mentioned in paragraph 1 above?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, when this question was called on May 31, I pointed out that the answering of it would require a good deal of time and work and would be very costly. Since that time I have been able to get part of the information for the hon. member who asked the question, and I have given to him all the information readily available pertaining to the subject matter of his question.

In those circumstances he has agreed that the question be dropped, and with the permission of the house I would ask that that procedure be followed.

Mr. Speaker: Question dropped.

HOUSING—FORT ST. JOHN, B.C.

Mr. Green:

1. Did the government have approximately twenty-five houses built at Fort St. John, British Columbia?

2. If so, by what firm were such houses built?

3. What was the average cost thereof?

4. Were tenders called for the construction of these houses?

5. If so, from what firms were tenders received, and what were the amounts thereof?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. Yes.

2. Poole Construction Company Limited, 10503-109th street, Edmonton, Alberta.

3. $15,500 (approximately).

4. No. This was a negotiated contract. Due to the urgency with which this military housing accommodation was required, and in view of the inaccessibility of the site, negotiations were carried on with Poole Construction Company Limited, considered to be the only firm in the vicinity with the necessary organization, personnel and experience to carry out this work expeditiously and economically.

5. Not applicable.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT OF GOVERNMENT FILM COMMISSIONER, ETC.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure respecting the national film board, to define more clearly the purposes and powers of the board; and to provide, inter alia, that the board may acquire personal property, patents and copyrights, and enter into contracts for personal services for any purpose necessary for the production, distribution, projection or exhibition of films pursuant to this act; to authorize the governor in council to appoint and determine the salary of a government film commissioner, to be the chief executive officer of the board; to provide for the appointment, promotion and salaries of persons to fill positions under the board; and to provide further for the establishment of an account to be known as the national film board operating account and that expenditures made by the board from moneys in the consolidated revenue fund shall not at any time exceed the amount of receipts shown in the account by more than seven hundred thousand dollars or such lesser amount as may be fixed by the treasury board.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Winters: Yes, I am prepared to do so.

This resolution deals with the proposals designed to clarify the functions of the national film board and simplify its administrative machinery with a view to increasing the efficiency of its operations.

Perhaps I should refer briefly to the history of the board's growth. Prior to 1939 the need of the government for motion and still pictures was met in two ways. The government film bureau, which was then in the Department of Trade and Commerce, produced both motion pictures and still photographs for other departments out of moneys appropriated for its operations. Other departments also contracted with outside producers for production of films and photographs which were paid for out of their own appropriations.

In 1939 the present act establishing the national film board as a co-ordinating board was enacted. Under the board the office of the government film commissioner was set up. The commissioner was authorized to act as a co-ordinator, adviser and general supervisor of government film activities. Government production of films, however, remained with the motion picture bureau, the director of which had production and distribution powers.

In 1941 it was decided to increase the production and distribution of government films. The motion picture bureau was transferred from the Minister of Trade and Commerce to operate under the national film board. Subsequently the office of director of the bureau became vacant and the government film commissioner, under the board, took over the production of films and photographs.

This method of operation was not contemplated when the National Film Act was enacted in 1939, and various expedients have been adopted to meet the new situation. The powers of the director of the motion picture bureau to employ temporary staff were used to employ the staff needed for the board. Working capital was provided for by annual appropriation and by advances from the Department of Finance recoverable at the end of each fiscal year. Operations have been carried on in this manner up to the present time.

This situation has given rise to difficulties in the operation of the board and to certain weaknesses in its structure. The purpose of the legislation proposed by the resolution now before the house is the removal of the causes of these difficulties and the establishment of a structural framework which will enable the board to operate on a businesslike basis.

To this end, it is proposed:

1. That the functions of the board conforming with its actual operations be defined.

2. That the board be reconstituted on a basis which will make it possible to carry out these functions efficiently.

3. That powers appropriate to these functions be conferred on the board and that the board's responsibility to parliament through a designated minister of the crown be clearly established.

4. That executive machinery which will make efficient administration possible be established.

5. That appropriate power to staff the board be conferred and that provision be made for continuing members of the staff to come under the provisions of the Civil Service Superannuation Act.

6. That financial arrangements suited to the board's present operations be established; and that, subject to control under the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, provision be made for the settting up of a film board operating account and of working capital which will enable the board adequately to finance its operations.

I shall have more to say on this subject when the bill reaches second reading. Essentially the resolution seeks leave to bring in a measure to clarify the functions of the board and authorize administrative machinery which will make possible its efficient operation.

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough West): Mr. Speaker, I did not expect that this resolution would be up this morning, as it was announced that we would continue with the Indian Act; therefore I shall not take up much time. I feel that in the last five years I have done nearly enough talking about the film board. I have criticized it severely, but I think in most cases it was with just cause. During those years I asked on many occasions about communists who were employed in the film board, and this situation has been cleared up. I asked that real businesslike methods be used, and I understand that since the report of the business consultants was issued and a new commissioner engaged, different methods have been used. I feel that members of parliament and the public should give the new commissioner a chance to show what he can do.

I asked that the report of the business consultants who had checked the operations of the film board be tabled, and that was done. That was an unusual procedure, but I think it was necessary in order to give hon. members and the public a chance to know the ins and outs and the whys and wherefores of the national film board. Because of the suggestions and criticisms I have offered, some of the matters that I complained of have been rectified.

It is stated on page 2 of the summary of the report of the business consultants that the board should be provided with a permanent working capital fund of not less than $700,000. This matter is also referred to on page 7 of the report as follows:

> The board has been hampered in its business operations by the lack of adequate working capital to finance inventories, accounts receivable, work in progress, etc. In addition to a working capital fund of slightly less than $300,000 a revolving fund of $200,000 has been provided in recent years ($300,000 is to be provided in 1950) but advances from this fund have had to be returned in full at the end of each fiscal year. This practice has caused an unnecessary disruption of the board's activities towards the end of March each year as efforts are directed to converting assets into cash in order to repay the advance.
>
> It is obvious that some of the difficulties referred to above are inherent in government film production in Canada and will continue to be problems. They are mentioned here simply because they should be kept in mind in judging the board's performance. Other difficulties can be overcome and these are dealt with in the balance of this report.

The resolution provides that the film commissioner is to be the chief executive of the board, which would mean that a minister of the crown would not be responsible, as at present, but that the board itself would be responsible to government. This is mentioned on page 8 of the report, where it states:

> The operations of the national film board are quite different in many fundamental respects from those performed by regular government departments.

In regard to that I might say that a few years ago they were very different.

> And if the board is to operate efficiently it will be necessary to continue to exempt it from certain parts of the over-all machinery of government control.
>
> One obvious way of doing this would be to set up the national film board as a crown corporation organized, for example, along the lines of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation . . .

I do hope that if such a corporation is set up it will not exercise the same powers as have been exercised by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, in order to curtail the production of commercial films throughout Canada. We now have some very efficient motion picture companies in Canada. They are trying to make a go of their businesses, and they are doing a good job. I have seen their films, and they are good. All they need is a chance.

The report continues:

> —the national research council or the national harbours board. Looking at the problem from the viewpoint of the national film board alone this would seem to be a logical solution. But it is also necessary to consider the relationship of the board to other governmental agencies and to ensure to the government a measure of control commensurate with its responsibility for the policies and activities of the board. On balance, we think it should be possible to establish the national film board within the regular government organization plan and yet give it the flexibility which it must have to operate efficiently. To do this, it will be necessary to amend the National Film Act, 1939, in a number of respects:

In 1939 the National Film Act was passed in this house, and it was said at that time that there would only be one paid member of the board. The way in which the board has functioned in the last ten years is entirely different from the way in which the national film board was originally set up. It was like Topsy; it just grew up, "put on new clothes, and where it went nobody knows." The report continues:

1. To authorize an adequate working capital fund.

2. To permit the board to keep its accounts on a revenue and expenditure basis (i.e. on an accrual rather than on a cash basis) and to retain proceeds of sales.

3. To permit the board to engage necessary help during pleasure for positions within a plan approved by the governor in council and to permit such employees to be brought under the Civil Service Superannuation Act.

The situation at the present time is that practically all employees of the national film board are on a temporary three-months basis.

4. To permit the board to enter into contracts on behalf of His Majesty and in the name of the board for any purpose necessary to the production or distribution of films, filmstrips or still photographs.

I should like to pause there to say that I hope the new management will see to it that there is a definite curtailment in the taking and production of still pictures by the board. There is no doubt that the stills department has encroached on the business of commercial photographers throughout Canada. I know that is so, because I have had hundreds of letters from commercial photographers, and they have quoted instances in which the national film board has stepped on their toes. Press photographers have also been hindered in many ways by the national film board's activities in taking and selling still pictures. The report continues:

5. To grant authority for the transfer of funds from other departments and agencies to the board to cover the costs of activities undertaken on their behalf.

That would cover work undertaken for other departments of the government, such as the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, the travel bureau, and so on. Films would be ordered by these departments from the national film board and paid for out of departmental funds. At the present time I think some departments still owe the film board for pictures made for them. Perhaps the pictures were so poor that they do not want to pay for them. I understand the Department of Agriculture had some films made by the national film board, and when they were completed they were so poor and had such a communistic leaning that they were put in the vault and held there. They have not been released.

The report continues:

At present two ministers of the crown are members of the board, one of whom is chairman. While the ultimate responsibility for the board's activities must necessarily be assumed by the government, and the government must therefore have knowledge of its policies and activities, it should be possible to maintain the necessary control without requiring ministers of the crown to devote so much of their time to the board's affairs.

I should like to pause there. I do not believe that ministers of the crown, before the present minister assumed responsibility for the film board, devoted very much of their time to its activities. If they had devoted to it as much of their time as they should have, the national film board would be a better organization today, and they would not have made the mistakes that they did.

The report continues:

Furthermore we question the propriety of a minister acting as an equal member of the board and thus being placed in a position where he can be overruled by the other members. In future we suggest that the board should report to a designated minister through its chairman and that the practice of having ministers serve as members of the board should be discontinued. The designated minister would be responsible to parliament for the board's activities.

If a special committee of the House of Commons was established each year to go into the accounts and activities of the national film board I feel it would be worth while, and also it would help the board. I have always found that a little criticism helps. We like to be praised as much as possible, but it is the person who is enough of a friend to criticize you who generally is your best friend. That is the way I look at it.

The report goes on:

Matters requiring the approval of the treasury board or of the governor in council should be submitted to the minister for his prior approval—

As I understand it, that would have to do with obtaining more funds.

—and the amending legislation should provide that the board should comply with any directions given by the minister from time to time with respect to the exercise of its powers. In this connection the minister should approve the appointment of all the senior officials of the board subject to confirmation by the governor in council. The chairman should keep the minister advised at all times of the work which the board is doing and supply him with any reports he may require in this connection, including:

(a) Copies of minutes of the meetings of members of the board.

If this proposal is carried out I hope the minister will read the minutes.

(b) An annual budget of revenues and expenditures subdivided by months.

That is something we have not had.

(c) A monthly statement comparing actual revenues and expenditures with the budget forecast.

With these safeguards the minister should be in a position to control the general policy of the board without having to concern himself with the details of its administration.

I have said before during this session, and as I said a few moments ago, there has been a definite change in the films produced by the national film board. I was talking to a well known motion picture man the other day and he told me that he felt that not only the pictures but the sound effects had improved. He said that during the first five or six years of the existence of the national film board the sound effects always reminded him of the man who was in charge of the board at that time, Grierson. They sounded like communistic music to him. Now we have a little softer music and the effect is much better. It used to grate on one's ears. I have been in theatres when one of the "Canada Carries On" series was shown, and people in the audience, not only in the front or back rows but all over the theatre, would say, "Oh, that darned thing again." They were absolutely sick of them.

We do need good films for our rural and urban schools. As I have said before, we also need good films to advertise Canada in foreign countries. I notice that one suggestion contained in this report by the business consultants has not been carried out by the new manager. In the report it was suggested that film distribution in foreign countries, with the exception of the United States, should be carried on by the Department of External Affairs, but within the last few weeks I believe an agent of the film board has been appointed for the United Kingdom. I have not the newspaper clipping here, but I saw it either in the New York Times or in one of the Canadian newspapers.

I said in the beginning, Mr. Speaker, that I would be brief. I believe we should wait until we have the bill before us, when we can go through it clause by clause. I also said I thought we should give the new manager a chance, and I honestly feel that this should be done.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter and, like many other important matters, should have been brought before the house earlier in the session. Like the hon. member for Peterborough West (Mr. Fraser), I propose to leave any detailed discussion until the bill is before the house, but there are several points I should like to make at this time.

Over the last few years I have felt that both this house and the film board itself would have been well served by bringing the officials of that board before a parliamentary committee similar to the committee before which the officials of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation appear. I believe that would have obviated much uninformed discussion that has taken place across the country, and would have eliminated some of the criticism to which the board was subjected some time ago.

I feel that on the whole the national film board has done a very good job since its inception. Its documentary films depicting the life of the people of this country have been exceptionally well done, I think, and their distribution has been quite wide in North America, in the sister countries of the British commonwealth, and indeed in some of the countries of South America. From time to time I have heard very complimentary references by people from those countries to the films produced by this board. I would agree that there is a place in Canada for the commercial film, the commercial documentary, but I am not forgetting that the success of the commercial film organizations doing this type of work, of which we have one or two in this city, is due very largely to the encouragement, assistance and advice that has been given by the national film board. Therefore to a large extent many of these smaller commercial organizations have been beneficiaries of the work done by this public organization.

It is true that the activities of the film board, the staff and so on, have grown far beyond anything we anticipated when it was set up before the war. To some extent, of course, that was due to its activities during the war, when it filled a real place both in educating the public to our war needs and in letting the people know what the country was doing in many aspects of our war activities. Some of the films dealt with agricultural production in this country. Others I have seen had to do with industrial development. Others, of course, brought to our people some of the tragic scenes that occurred during the war, giving them perhaps more of an understanding of the dangers and devastation of war than they could have obtained otherwise. The same is true of our troops. Some of the films showed the activities of our soldiers overseas; some showed our naval vessels on convoy duty, while others showed the air force in action. Many of those films were not only interesting to our people during the war period but will be of great historic interest in future. I have no doubt that a century from now the people of this country will be viewing these films depicting what was done by the men and women of Canada in the armed forces, in industry and in agriculture during the period of the second world war. In other words we have here to a considerable extent a visual history of our country in recent times compiled by this government organization.

I am very glad to see some of the recommendations contained in the report that has been made by those investigating the activities of the film board. I want to say, too, how much the circuits of the film board are appreciated in the rural communities. I know that in my own province of Saskatchewan, and in the neighbouring provinces which I have had the opportunity of visiting from time to time, the periodic visits of projectionists with their films are appreciated by those in the country districts. Before, during and since the war people have gathered together in country school houses to enjoy what many may consider to be an evening's entertainment, though in reality it is an evening's education. The educational films that have been made by the board and distributed to the schools and community associations that have projection machines have been of great value, and I have felt that much more could be done along that line.

I should like to see films portraying the coming to this country of the French explorers, who first opened it up; the expeditions of the Hudson's Bay Company; the growth of our country historically, and the achievement step by step of our national status. I believe such films could be made with very great advantage to the country, both now and in the future. That would require a great deal of money, however, and even under this legislation we are not providing the necessary working capital to undertake projects of that kind. I should think that at a time like this, when we are trying to build and strengthen our democratic institutions and our democracy, the national film board could, given the facilities, perform a very useful service by making historical films which could be distributed, over the circuits I mentioned, to the schools, and indeed to the classes that are being held throughout the country for the newcomers who in the countries from which they came were not given information about our democratic institutions.

I believe it is essential, however, that the national film board retain a considerable amount of independence from day to day supervision by the minister. We are setting up a number of organizations to undertake certain public activities, both economic and social. We sometimes refer to them as crown corporations. These crown corporations must be answerable in some way to parliament and to the representatives of the people, and a means has been developed by which they may be answerable, through appearance before committees of this house of representatives of such organizations as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Canadian National Railways, Trans-Canada Air Lines, and so on. Yet we have to find a balance between the control of public institutions and the desirability of having them free from political interference. I believe that is something we have not yet worked out satisfactorily. But I feel that as we develop more and more public institutions, it is essential that we evolve ways and means of maintaining the independence of such corporations from political interference. I am not sure whether I like—in fact, I dislike it in some ways—the idea of bringing the employees of the national film board under the Civil Service Superannuation Act. I think they should be under a superannuation plan, but I believe we are endangering the freedom of the individual in this country by bringing more and more people under direct or indirect ministerial control through the civil service.

During the recent by-elections I saw letters that had been sent out to employees of organizations that were not, in my opinion, civil service organizations, telling them that they must have nothing to do with any form of political activity. At the same time I believe there were persons in the public service who did not fear the government and who supported government candidates. That sort of thing is entirely wrong. Where a man is in the public service, provided he does not occupy a confidential position in which he could use confidential information gleaned in his capacity as a public servant, he should be free to exercise all the usual functions of a citizen in a democratic state. Consequently I am hesitant about bringing the employees of some of these crown corporations into too close association with what I might call the political arm of our democratic society. I am not reflecting on the present minister or the present government when I say that, because governments of all stripes are faced with this particular problem.

As I said at the outset, I do not propose to discuss this report at any great length. I am glad that, so far as I have been able to read the report—and the extracts read by the member for Peterborough West (Mr. Fraser) confirm this point of view—the film board was given a clean bill of health as a result of the investigation. I believe that is satisfactory, having regard to the criticism that was made through the press across the country, and sometimes in this house. I have known the new commissioner for a good many years in various capacities. I followed his work as editor of Maclean's magazine, and I feel that the government made a good choice. I believe that Canada will be well served by the commissioner who was appointed some few months ago. I believe that the staff is a good staff. In spite of the criticism, and in spite of the fact that three or four members of the staff retired, I believe that on the whole the staff was trying to serve the best interests of the country in a democratic way. Over the years, with the resources at their disposal, they did a job of which they and this country can be proud.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Dion in the chair.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Winters thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 317, respecting the national film board.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES, TRAVELLING ALLOWANCES, ETC.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 316, to amend the Judges Act, 1946.

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the proposed increase in the number of judges in British Columbia would appear to be justified by the amount of litigation in that province. The provision with respect to district court judges is merely a change in the numbers in order to meet the situation, and as such is accepted. As to travelling expenses, the amounts designated are fair and reasonable and to that provision there can be no objection.

In the matter of appointments to judicial positions, I believe I speak for the bar of Canada when I say that political fitness ought not to be a prime consideration. I shall not refer to any appointments made since the minister has been in his present position, but I do impress upon him the necessity, if the bench is to retain the high reputation it has enjoyed over the years, of considering carefully all selections for appointments to superior, district and county court benches.

If political fitness be the only qualification, the judiciary of Canada will suffer, as will the administration of justice and democracy itself. More consideration should be given to the appointment of able members of the bar and outstanding leaders who do not happen to be government supporters. Since 1921, with the exception of five years, one party has been in power in this country, and in the last seven or eight years there have been but two appointments to the bench of supporters of a political party other than that of the government. This situation demands the serious attention not only of the Minister of Justice, but of Canadians generally.

In the United States, in judicial appointments made by the federal authority and ratified by the Senate, as they must be, the usual method is to select a percentage of members of the bar, outstanding in their learning and ability, who do not happen to be supporters of the government of the day. Thirty per cent of the appointments to superior courts is the allocation given to outstanding members of the bar of political parties other than that of the President of the United States.

Unless greater consideration is given to the selection of outstanding leaders of the bar, learned in the law, I fear for the continuance of the inviolability and sanctity of the bench. I make this statement knowing that I represent the views of the majority of the bar of Canada, irrespective of political considerations. Appointments to the bench should not be dependent merely upon the consideration that a member of the bar has been a defeated candidate in an election. Some years ago a distinguished member of the United States bar who was addressing a meeting in Canada, was introduced in eulogistic terms by a distinguished member of the Canadian bar. But the Canadian took it upon himself to say that there was only one criticism he had to offer of the United States system of jurisprudence. He felt that an elected judiciary was a dangerous expedient, particularly when a federal or state election was about to be held. He said it was difficult to understand why the majority of the members of the bench of the United States were elected. The United States leader of the bar said that having been in Canada only a matter of two days he was beginning to wonder whether one of the prime qualifications in Canada is not to be elected, but rather to have been defeated once or twice.

Above all else we must maintain the supremacy of the bench, its detachment, its freedom from the suggestion that any qualifications other than ability, capacity and integrity—and I place integrity above all—shall be matters of consideration in appointment.

Not only must justice be done; it must be done expeditiously. There should be no unnecessary delay between the hearing of a case and the rendering of the judgment. I am sure the Minister of Justice has known of occasions on which members of the bench have waited so long to render a decision that if they remembered the name of the case they certainly did not remember the facts of the case. It is not a matter of recent occurrence. Over the years there has often been too much delay between the hearing of the case and the delivery of judgment. Reserving judgment is a good idea, as long as it does not carry over for such a length of time as to be detrimental to the administration of justice.

Because of the fact that there has been a great increase in litigation in British Columbia, I feel that that portion of the bill deserves the support of all. Above everything else, justice must be administered, and litigants must believe that they have received justice. Delays of one, two or three and a half years in rendering judgment are inexcusable. Where they do occur, the minister should be able to say something to these judges that they would understand.

Recently I asked how many judges were employed on provincial royal commissions without having received the permission of the Minister of Justice. I asked how many provincial royal commissions there had been in the last three or four years upon which superior court judges have sat. The answer given by the Department of Justice is that the department has no information. "No information"?—with a judge away three or four or even five or six months from his duties? "No information" was what the department wished to furnish, rather than the facts.

Surely when a superior court judge is serving on a royal commission for a period of three months, and particularly when he is chief justice, his absence would be noticed. I suggest that the salutary provision in the law that no judge may serve on a provincial royal commission without first obtaining leave from the Minister of Justice should, in the interests of justice, be observed to the letter.

Anything that we on this side of the house, and indeed hon. members in all parts of the house, can do to preserve and maintain the highest type of administration of justice of which this country is capable will be done. This is one question as to which there should be no party considerations. I repeat that the Minister of Justice, as the custodian of the king's conscience, owes to the people of Canada the duty that, in making recommendations for appointments to superior courts, integrity and ability, and not political fitness, shall be the prime consideration.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Higgins: Is it proper to ask the minister some questions at this time?

Mr. Speaker: Not at this time. That would be more appropriate when we are in committee.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be permitted to reply briefly to the observations just made by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker). With his generalizations no member in the House of Commons I think will be disposed to disagree. With, in particular, his emphasis upon the fact that the chief consideration in the appointment of members to the judiciary should be ability, capacity and integrity no one will disagree; and I can say with a perfectly clear conscience that in so far as any appointments I as minister have made, the proper emphasis has been placed upon those three qualities.

But if those qualities were possessed in an eminent degree by a man who at the same time happened to be a member of the Liberal party, I think the hon. member would be the last to argue that membership in that party should disentitle him to consideration for appointment to the bench.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Neither should disentitlement be the other way.

Mr. Garson: Yes, and neither should disentitlement be the other way. So far as any appointments I have made are concerned, I think it would be much more fitting on my part to let them speak for themselves rather than for me to boast about them, or defend them, because I do not think they require defence.

The hon. member has said that there are only two cases which come to his mind in which members of his party have been appointed to the bench. I suggest that he think a little more deeply on the subject, and if he has done so he does not come to a different conclusion, I should be glad to go over the list with him and point out some others.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): The minister will not find one in Alberta.

Mr. Garson: My usual experience outside the house is rather the converse of what has been taking place in the last fifteen minutes; there has been criticism for my having been a little too broadminded on the subject the hon. member has been discussing.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Where has the criticism come from?

Mr. Garson: I will leave that to my hon. friend to guess.

The hon. member for Lake Centre has referred to the fact that there have been delays in the rendering of judgments, but he has refrained from identifying the provinces in which the delays have occurred. I can understand the reason for his reticence in that regard in any public statement. However, I hope those reasons will not deter him from disclosing that information to me in my office.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has not the minister had complaints sent to him by law societies?

Mr. Garson: No. I think the hon. member is wrong. I do not know what case he has in mind, but I should be very glad to discuss the matter.

At the present time we have only one example of a delayed judgment of the kind indicated. It was brought to my attention by a member of the bar of the province in question, and is now under consideration.

As the hon. member knows, the establishment of the courts to which he has had reference is the responsibility of the provincial legislatures, and the administration of justice in those courts is the responsibility of provincial attorneys general. It is true that the judges are appointed by the federal government. The impression seems to prevail —and while I listened to the hon. member I was wondering whether he shared it—that because the appointment is made by the federal government, the federal government has some executive power of discipline over the judiciary.

The hon. member knows quite well that one of the cardinal features of our system of government is that the judiciary should be independent of the executive. I believe that upon reflection he will be inclined to agree with me that in those cases in which there have been delays in the rendering of judgments the proper course in the first instance would be for the officer in charge of the administration of justice in a province, namely, the provincial attorney general, as tactfully and firmly as possible, to bring the matter to the attention of the offending judge. Then, if that did not produce results he might send a memorandum in the matter to the Minister of Justice, to the end that if the delays were sufficiently serious, a court of inquiry could be set up to ascertain the reasons for delay. I think the hon. member will agree with that course of procedure. Therefore in those cases, such as the most recent one to which I have referred, where complaints are made direct to the Minister of Justice—and not made by the attorney general of a province—one must prosecute the inquiry, and take the matter up with the provincial attorney general concerned, with a certain amount of diplomacy, lest it appear that we are trenching upon what in the first instance at any rate is his proper field of responsibility.

There was one aspect of the hon. member's argument that made quite an impression upon me, and that was when he said that we must follow a certain course of conduct in the appointment of judges, in order to maintain the present high standard of ability of the bench. I am in complete agreement with him that in Canada by and large there is a very high standard of ability and integrity on the part of our judges, both provincial and federal. If the argument advanced by my hon. friend is to be taken seriously, then that great ability and integrity of the bench upon which he bases his argument is the product of the system which he is criticizing, the system, so far as I am concerned, of selecting appointees to the bench on the basis of ability, integrity and capacity, and then, and only then, having regard, if any regard at all is had, to their political affiliation. I do not think a better justification or vindication of the manner in which judicial appointments are made could be provided by anyone than is contained in the statement just made by my hon. friend.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Dion in the chair.

On section 1—British Columbia supreme court judges.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I had not intended to speak on this matter, but I left the chamber for a few minutes this morning and as I came back I heard praise of our judiciary from both sides of the house. It is difficult for a practising lawyer not to do this. In other words, he has not a chance. Of course they will be praised. I want to compliment the minister upon the last appointment he made in Alberta. The fact that the appointee happened to be the past president of the Liberal association for a long time is neither here nor there. The most important thing is that he is an excellent lawyer and is doing very well. I think that is largely due to the fact that I brought him up as a law student and he was my next senior partner when the appointment was made.

But let us not forget a few obvious facts. One is that all the judges in Alberta, both in the superior court and district court, are Liberals. It is not an accident. Do not let us blind ourselves by blandishments as to their great achievements. I am prepared to say all that about the Alberta judges because I am going to appear before them. There may be some men on the bench who are not worth a nickel, but I am ready to stand up and praise them because I am not going to cut my throat when I may be practising before them. I have forgotten the total number of judges, but, as I say, they are all Liberals. Having regard to what the Minister of Justice has said, they must have taken the cream of the crop, and it is just an accident that they all happened to be of a certain political persuasion. I do not know that I object very strenuously to that, if in the three qualities the minister mentions they stand superior or at least equal to their fellows.

There is another thing upon which I should like to compliment the minister, and in saying what I intend to say I hope I am within the boundaries of this bill. The two recent appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada are beyond any criticism. Those two judges represent the cream of our profession; the appointments are most excellent. I know nothing whatever of their politics.

There is another amendment which has been long overdue, and which is provided in section 3. On the old basis of allowances of $6 and $10 per day our judges lost money. I know in my province they went around doing the country's business and maintaining as best they could the high standards of justice. I have no doubt that they do their best, but there are capabilities and capabilities. That is all I have to say.

Mr. Higgins: I understand that yesterday the hon. member for St. John's West made some remarks about this bill, and from my knowledge of the facts I feel they were fully justified. Having read the Hansard report of of what was said yesterday, there is one question that I should like to ask. Would it be possible to see the letter written to Mr. Varcoe by the minister of justice of Newfoundland?

The bill provides for five district court judges, and perhaps the minister can explain why the number has been reduced from seven, which was originally provided for in the negotiations. I should like to know also where these courts are to be set up. Will there be two district courts in St. John's? Has the minister any idea when the appointments are likely to be made?

I presume that the usual practice will be followed and that no question of party politics will enter into the appointments; that only qualified members of the bar will be selected for these positions. I agree thoroughly with the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's West with respect to the magistrate now in St. John's. As a lawyer I have a number of friends among those who are likely to be appointed, and I have no hesitation in saying that they are very competent to fill the positions.

Mr. Garson: The reason for the difference between the number "seven", which was mentioned in the provincial legislation setting up the district courts in Newfoundland, and the number "five" which we have in the bill, is explained as follows. After the provincial bill had been passed a conference took place between the attorney general of Newfoundland and our department. We had officers of the department go to Newfoundland to examine the set-up, and the territory to be covered. We finally came to the conclusion that at the present time, all things considered, including the extent to which the appointment of seven judges might tend to denude the bar, five was the proper figure that should be carried into the bill.

As to the other matter to which my hon. friend refers, my deputy is in London appearing in a case before the privy council. While I have access to his files I would prefer not to use them until he returns and I can discuss the matter with him. I have not handled the matter myself, because it was a continuance of something that had been under way before I came to the department.

Mr. Higgins: Can the minister tell me where these courts will be set up? Has he any knowledge of that now?

Mr. Garson: No. I think my hon. friend will find that that is covered in the provincial legislation. I could not indicate the extent to which that might have to be modified in practice by one judge covering perhaps more than one district by travelling to various points.

Mr. Higgins: Who makes the decision as to where the courts will be set up?

Mr. Garson: As my hon. friend knows—and I am not necessarily speaking about the Newfoundland legislation, but about provincial legislation generally setting up courts of this kind—the total area of a province is divided geographically into certain judicial divisions and a court is created for each one. If the hon. member will examine the Newfoundland legislation I am sure he will see what these divisions are, or it may be that there is a clause in the Newfoundland bill empowering the lieutenant governor in council to determine the divisions after examining the matter. The question with which we are concerned is the appointment of judges to serve these divisions. That service may be provided by having a resident judge in each division, or by having certain outlying divisions covered by a judge who goes on circuit.

Mr. Higgins: The provincial government would make the divisions?

Mr. Garson: Yes, they always make the divisions, either in the statute or by order in council afterwards.

Mr. Higgins: When do you expect the appointments to be made?

Mr. Garson: Contrary to the impression that some seem to have, I must say that no detailed consideration has been given to that at all. We will not embark upon that matter until we have the authority which we seek to obtain by the passage of the bill.

Mr. Higgins: I assume you will take recommendations from the bar society of Newfoundland.

Mr. Garson: We welcome good advice from any source, on the understanding that we are not necessarily bound to accept it.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to refer to the location of the judges. There are to be two in St. John's, one in St. John's East and one in St. John's West. I presume they will be residents of the city and will be confined primarily to those districts, but the lieutenant governor in council has power to allow them to sit in other districts. As there are to be five judges, and there are seven districts corresponding to the federal electoral districts, I presume that the two additional districts may be divided amongst the five judges. The most important places must be known to the minister—St. John's, Corner Brook, Grand Falls, Bell Island and Bonavista.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I cannot agree with what the hon. member for St. John's West has just said. I do not regard these places as more important, by any means. As a matter of fact the question of judiciary in Newfoundland has been under consideration by some members of the legal profession, including myself, for a good many years. The criticism of our present inadequate system of administration of justice goes back to the old days of the late Judge Prowse. I have no doubt my hon. friend is sufficiently well acquainted with the contents of the book on the subject which was written half a century or more ago by that learned judge to realize that the great difficulty we have in Newfoundland is not altogether the administration of justice near the city of St. John's. County court judges will be required rather far away from the city of St. John's in areas where in many matters affecting questions of land and the administration of estates there is no administration of justice. There is nobody there to administer justice, and nobody within reach except the supreme court at St. John's. It is true that that court goes on circuit every year now, but it was suspended for a number of years. I have had some experience in what took place, possibly more than my learned friend across the way. I know there is a serious lack of any agency in the nature of a court to bring justice to the people in the far distant sections of Newfoundland. I have seen cases where next of kin have been deprived of the property of their parents, and there was no remedy, for the simple reason that they did not have the necessary money to go to St. John's, engage the services of a lawyer and appear before the supreme court with the consequent reasonably high expenses, if I may put it in that way. What is required in Newfoundland is capable county court or district court judges, whichever you like to call them, who will be located at these far distant points where they can bring justice cheaply to people who cannot afford the excessive expense of trials in the supreme court.

Mr. Higgins: With all due respect to the Secretary of State, I think it is somewhat out of order to refer to the excessive charges for trials in the supreme court. I think the lawyers practising in that court are as fair as lawyers anywhere else. It is seldom that a poor man in Newfoundland does not have his work attended to for a reasonable fee.

Mr. Bradley: I had no intention whatever of casting any aspersions upon the professional integrity of the hon. member. I have no doubt his charges are reasonable, having regard to the amount of work he has to do and the time he has to spend on that work.

Mr. Higgins: And the money.

Mr. Bradley: My point is that if my learned friend had to depend for his income upon the fishermen and labourers in the far distant parts of Newfoundland, he would have a very meagre income.

Mr. White (Hastings-Peterborough): I should like to ask the minister to explain on what basis the salaries of judges are fixed. Judges of the supreme court receive $12,000, and the salary of a district or county court judge is $6,666.

Mr. Garson: I must confess that perhaps the best explanation that can be given for these two figures is the fact in each case that amount has been paid for a good number of years. I know we have had representations from the association of county and district judges in Ontario, in which at very considerable length a quite impressive case is made out to show that relatively they are underpaid in comparison with the supreme court and other judges generally. Speaking from memory, but I think my recollection is accurate, the practice heretofore has been that when an increase was put through, the relative position of the two groups of judges was adhered to pretty closely. The contention of the association of county and district judges of Ontario is that the time has now arrived when in any adjustment of judicial salaries they should get a relatively greater increase because of the fact that they are now paid relatively less than other judges in relation to their work and responsibilities.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Travelling allowances.

Mr. Sinnott: Under this section, Mr. Chairman, I hope you will give me a little leeway, since I was in committee when the motion for second reading was being discussed. In order that we may keep the record straight I want to read paragraph (b), which refers to the travelling allowances of judges:

(b) for each necessary day of travel going and returning and each day during which he so attends—

(i) the sum of twelve dollars if that place is a city;

(ii) the sum of eight dollars if that place is not a city;

(iii) the sum of twelve dollars if during the time he so attends he is accommodated at a city and the Minister of Justice is satisfied that suitable accommodation is not available at the place at which he attends.

I have a few notes in respect to this bill, concerning travelling expenses, and I shall try to keep as closely as possible to the section.

When the resolution was brought into the house I strenuously objected to it. We have come to the time when people should use a little common sense. I heard the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary West, who said this was a fine thing and that these men were not able to get along on what they were receiving previously. He may hope some day to be appointed to one of these positions.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Hear, hear.

Mr. Sinnott: At this very moment we are trying to convince the world that the democratic form of government is far superior to communism. I believe I am as near to the hearts of the people of Canada, and can see as well into their minds as anyone, and I know what will be their attitude toward a bill of this kind to favour a favoured few who already have been favoured far beyond the imagination of any Canadian—these men who have the authority to finalize and put into effect the laws of our country. I have seen men serve as much as two years for stealing from a store a small item worth less than $2; yet here we, as members of parliament, are being asked to increase the travelling allowances of judges from $10 to $12 a day, in addition to the salaries they already receive. It hurts me deeply to see the very people who are supposed to be setting an example to all Canadians adopt this method of extracting from the pockets of the Canadian people all that the traffic will bear. Thousands of people in this country who are having a hard time to make ends meet will have to add to the already heavy taxes they have to bear. Many families are existing today on far less than these men are asking for travelling expenses alone, and I do not like to see the Minister of Justice made a victim of these circumstances.

I should like to know just how many of these men have asked for this consideration. It boils down to this. As members of parliament we are being asked to increase these travelling allowances by $2 per day; and putting it mildly, this is the cleverest piece of legalized robbery ever perpetrated. We are not permitted to discuss salaries, but every member of this house knows that we never hear of a judge passing on to the land of glory penniless. In most cases they leave estates worth hundreds of thousands of dollars. We should respect those who have the responsibility of carrying out the laws of the country. No member of parliament wants to be niggardly. It may be said that in view of the position these men hold the remuneration they receive from the public treasury may be somewhat less than they could earn in private life. It is not dollars and cents that count, however; it is a matter of honour and responsibility. In any case, I am sure no one could say the remuneration of these men is niggardly, especially when we remember that it is guaranteed until they reach the age of seventy.

As I said before, Mr. Chairman, we are fighting communism, and we have to show that life in this country is much better than in the lands where communism is in power. If you want to encourage communism in the rank and file of those who have to work hard for a living, a few more bills like this will do that very thing. I was elected to represent all the people of my riding of Springfield, and I am sure everything I have said here today will be backed up by them. I believe Canada is the greatest land in the world. Let us keep it that way and not cater to any class distinctions.

Mr. Gillis: I want to compliment the hon. member who has just spoken. Sitting as he does on that side of the house, he showed courage and a considerable knowledge of the subject with which he dealt. It was a practical demonstration of democracy, and it is too bad that more hon. members on that side do not exercise the same privilege.

I am going to make what I have to say short, sharp and to the point. The purpose of this bill is to appoint another judge and to step up the travelling allowances of some sixty-three judges already appointed. I am not objecting to that; the Minister of Justice will have to answer for it. What I do object to, however, is that ever since I have been in this house, every time there has been any reorganization of the legal structure throughout the country or of the judiciary it has been done by a bill like this, with reforms from the top—more money spent on administration, more judges, and so on. There has been a complete failure to recognize the fact that the great majority of those who have to seek redress in the courts are without the means to purchase the legal advice necessary to get into those courts and take advantage of the system of justice we dispense.

A few moments ago the Secretary of State practically admitted that, in so far as his own province is concerned, the problem so far had been a lack of finances to enable litigants to get to the centres where justice could be dispensed. I believe that he is wrong when he assumes that the appointment of more county court judges is going to remedy that situation. It will to some extent, in that it will cut down travelling expenses; but when one has to seek litigation in the supreme or county courts it is necessary to hire solicitors. Then if the person is employed, there is the loss of time to be considered. Considerable expense is attached to litigation. There are many persons in this country who, because of a lack of the necessary funds, refrain from going to court and suffer considerably because of it.

I believe I am safe in saying that there are thousands of lawyers in this country who carry accounts on their books for years concerning cases they have fought without any chance of being paid. They do that work on a humanitarian basis. I know some of them myself. I hope some time in the future I shall see the Minister of Justice introduce a bill for the purpose of establishing legal aid for the people of this country below a certain income level. That has been done in other countries, and I think it is necessary here. I believe it is necessary as an aid to the legal profession, particularly those who practise in the magistrates' court and county court. In the final analysis there are not many people who go to the supreme court.

I believe if we are going to continue to do this sort of thing, to build a top-heavy, highly paid judiciary across the country, the least we can do is to consider some means of enabling the people who are unfortunate enough to have to go to court to have proper counsel to present their case. I hope that some time in the future the minister will look into that situation to see if a bill cannot be introduced to provide for those people, because I think it is badly needed.

Section agreed to.

Section 4 agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall this bill be read a third time?

Mr. Garson: Now.

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Garson moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the third time and passed.

OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT

EXTENSION TO EMPLOYEES OF COMMISSIONS, ETC.—APPLICATION TO OFFENCES COMMITTED OUTSIDE CANADA

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 309, to amend the Official Secrets Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of second reading is to discuss the principle of the bill. This bill consists of four amendments to the Official Secrets Act. I suppose the principle which ties them all together is the fact that they represent an attempt by the government, a successful attempt we think, to comply with a recommendation which was made by the royal commission on espionage in 1946. That recommendation was to the effect that the Official Secrets Act, 1939, be studied in the light of the information contained in the report and in the evidence and exhibits, and if it was thought advisable it could be amended to provide additional safeguards.

The first noteworthy feature about this recommendation is that it does not contain, within itself, any suggestion for the amendment of the act. It merely recommends that it be amended if after study it is thought advisable to do so. We have studied the Official Secrets Act, and the bill which is now before the house represents those respects in which we think it should be amended.

Section 1 deals with an amendment to extend the meaning of the phrase "office under His Majesty", to embrace employment in, on, or under a board, commission or other body that is an agent of His Majesty in the right of Canada or of any province. This amendment has been proposed by security officials, and the reason for its extension is obvious. There is a provision in the act, section 4, subsection I, which makes it an offence for any person to have in his possession or control any secret official code word or password, any sketch, plan, model, article, thing or document which has been entrusted in confidence to him by any person holding office under His Majesty.

Under the act as it reads at the present time the phrase "office under His Majesty" is really limited to a servant of the government itself. The desire is to extend that to servants of the crown, boards, commissions, and corporations.

Then, in section 5 of the act, subsection 1, paragraph (d), it is made an offence for anyone, for the purpose of gaining admission to prohibited areas, to impersonate a person holding office under His Majesty. In that text also, the meaning of the phrase "office under His Majesty" would be extended.

Mr. Speaker, may I ask at this point that you call it one o'clock.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, when the house took recess I was just about to begin consideration of clause 2 of the bill. The Official Secrets Act applies at the present time, in accordance with the usual rule of statute interpretation, only to things done and to offences committed inside of Canada. In our deliberations it was proposed by the mounted police, and also by the security panel, that the Official Secrets Act should be given some extraterritorial effect. The security panel suggested that it should be amended to apply to offences committed against the act outside of Canada by a Canadian citizen. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police suggested that the act should be amended to make it an offence for any person obtaining secret information within Canada to publish such information in any country outside of Canada.

This new section 12A, which is covered by section 2 of the bill, therefore makes it an offence to disclose secret information, and so forth, outside of Canada, if the person concerned on the one hand is a Canadian citizen, or in cases in which, not being a Canadian citizen, he obtained information while he owed allegiance to Canada.

Of course, an obvious difficulty in the enforcement of this provision, which has already been the subject of editorial comment in this country, is the necessity of getting the offender back to Canada for trial; but even giving weight to this great difficulty of catching one's rabbit before one can have rabbit pie, the amendment we have will still serve a very useful purpose, because those who commit an offence of this kind in, for example, the United States, are very likely to fall within the class of citizens who under the United States law are deportable from that country to the country of their citizenship. Therefore if the Canadian was apprehended in the United States and was found to have committed an offence of this kind and was deportable, he would come here under such circumstances that in all likelihood we would be able to bring him to trial.

I think I should say a word or two with regard to the phrase which is used at the bottom of the new section 12A, paragraph (b): "while owing allegiance to His Majesty in right of Canada." This phrase is a little more far-reaching in its effect than would be the expression "while present in Canada". It will be remembered that in the case of Joyce v. Director of Public Prosecutions, 1946 Appeal Cases, 347, Joyce was held to owe allegiance to His Majesty in the United Kingdom while travelling on a British passport, notwithstanding the fact that passport had been issued under the misapprehension that Joyce was a British subject when in fact he was not. The amendment that we are now discussing carries the obligation of allegiance even further than it was carried in that case—that is to say, further than the common law as was enunicated in the Joyce case, because it makes punishable in Canada the disclosure, after ceasing to owe allegiance, of information obtained while owing allegiance. The law is that even an alien owes allegiance while he is within the realm of Canada, unless of course he has diplomatic immunity.

Mr. Fulton: Or is an enemy.

Mr. Garson: No, only a citizen of an enemy state which had declared an open war, a hot war, not an enemy in a cold war.

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Garson: Yes.

Mr. Fleming: Or a potential enemy, according to the interpretation in Britain.

Mr. Garson: Now, the question where such an offender would be tried in the event of its being possible to apprehend him, in respect of offences committed outside of Canada, is already, we think, taken care of by section 13, subsection 1, of the act, which provides:

For the purposes of the trial of a person for an offence under this act, the offence shall be deemed to have been committed either at the place in which the same actually was committed, or at any place in Canada in which the offender may be found.

Clause 3 of this bill—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Before the minister speaks on clause 3 would he answer a question?

Mr. Garson: Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Have there been any cases in the last five years in which anyone has escaped prosecution and conviction because of the fact that this section was not in the Official Secrets Act?

Mr. Garson: The answer to my hon. friend's question is no. Now that he has raised that point, perhaps it would be as well for me to establish the fact that in respect of all four of these amendments we are not closing the stable door after the horse has gone; we are attempting to close possible loopholes before any person has been able to use them.

With respect to section 3 of the act, the thought has been entertained that the penalties in this act are inadequate. In our discussion this view was confirmed by the security panel of the government. Section 14(1) as embodied in clause 3 of this bill now provides that where no specific penalty is mentioned, an offender is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine not exceeding $2,000, or to imprisonment not exceeding seven years, or both; and the offender, at the election of the Attorney General of Canada, may be prosecuted by summary proceedings under part XV of the Criminal Code, in which case, in the event of that election being made, the punishment would be a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding twelve months, or both.

In this connection I should point out the penalty that applies where no specific penalty is provided. The only case in which a specific penalty is provided in the act is in section 7, subsection 2, for the refusal by a person in control of telegraphic or wireless apparatus used in transmitting messages between Canada and a foreign country to produce such messages when required to do so by the minister. In that case it is a summary conviction offence and punishable by a term not exceeding three months or a fine not exceeding $200, or both. So that when we provide, as we do in the new section 14, for practically doubling that penalty to apply to all the cases not specifically provided for, we are providing an increased penalty for the great bulk of the cases which might arise under the act.

[Mr. Garson.]

Then under section 14(2), as it would be enacted by clause 3 in the bill, the provisions of the Identification of Criminals Act will apply to persons who have been or may be prosecuted under the Official Secrets Act by way of summary conviction. I should like to emphasize in this connection particularly the point raised a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker).

I would not want hon. members to get the impression that, with regard to all the prosecutions which took place as a result of the espionage inquiry of 1946, we did not fingerprint the culprits. But those were cases in which the procedure against the accused was by way of indictment and therefore fell within the express terms of the Identification of Criminals Act, which applies to all those who are guilty of an indictable offence.

When the attorney general under the present Official Secrets Act elects to proceed against an accused by way of summary conviction, although it is in respect of an offence which by statute is declared to be indictable, the possibility of a doubt arises as to whether the offence itself when so proceeded against is an indictable offence so as to make the Identification of Criminals Act regulations with regard to fingerprinting applicable to the offender. The purpose of this second portion of the new section 14, which would be enacted by clause 3 of the bill, is to remove that doubt.

I believe I have covered the main points of the bill. As I indicated in my opening remarks, the bill has been drawn after consultation for the purposes of complying with recommendation No. 5 of the royal commission on espionage of 1946.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us is one to the contents of which, so far as they go, I do not think there can be any objection. Indeed, I believe the only objection that could be taken is that largely the bill is just a piece of window-dressing. It does not actually accomplish very much, and certainly in my view it fails to accomplish what the minister has just said it was designed to do, namely, to follow out the recommendation contained in paragraph 5 of the recommendations of the royal commission on espionage. That recommendation reads as follows:

That the Official Secrets Act, 1939, be studied in the light of the information contained in this report and in the evidence and exhibits and, if it is thought advisable, that it be amended to provide additional safeguards.

In the very narrow sense I suppose this bill might be said to provide additional safeguards, if those words are confined exclusively to the matter of obtaining convictions, should prosecutions be brought—and it hardly provides full safeguards even there. I am quite certain that was not the intention of the royal commission in its use of the word "safeguards". If the word "safeguards" is read in conjunction with the other recommendations, and with the context of the report as a whole, it becomes obvious that it meant safeguards against espionage and against the revealing of official secrets or the passage or communication to foreign powers of information prejudicial to the interests and safety of the state. That would mean something prejudicial to the safety of Canada.

This bill provides no safeguards whatsoever in that respect. Indeed the bill accomplishes very little. It makes very little change in the present legislation with respect to the prosecution of those charged with offences under the act. About the only thing it does is to provide an increase from seven to fourteen years in the maximum term which can be imposed. I would accept that as a sound enough approach. I believe that people who deliberately betray the safety of the state and deliberately serve an alien and hostile power deserve heavy sentences. I believe therefore that it is proper that we should provide heavy sentences, although in the case of lesser offences it would not be necessary to impose a maximum sentence.

It is interesting to note here that the question of the sentence was considered when the act was passed in 1939. At that time the then minister of justice was asked why the penalty was limited to seven years, and, as reported at page 4723 of Hansard of May 30, 1939, he pointed out that in the English act, on which the bill then before the house was based, the maximum penalty was fourteen years' imprisonment. Then he went on to say that the maximum in the bill then before the house had been set at seven years' hard labour. He then indicated that some thought had been given to the question, and that it had been decided in our act to limit the maximum imprisonment to seven years.

I point that out only as a matter of historical interest, when it is now decided that we should lock the door after the horse has been stolen. It was felt previously that seven years was sufficient to act as a deterrent, whereas it is now felt that seven years is not sufficient either as a penalty or as a deterrent to people who may be tempted to commit these offences.

As to another thing that the bill is supposed to do, namely, to provide that the act shall now have extraterritorial application, I suggest that here again we find a piece of window-dressing. My contention is that the present act has extraterritorial application. Section 13(1) of the act states:

> For the purposes of the trial of a person for an offence under this act, the offence shall be deemed to have been committed either at the place in which the same actually was committed, or any place in Canada in which the offender may be found.

The minister has put his finger on the real difficulty in these cases, namely, that the criminal must be caught before he can be prosecuted.

Mr. Garson: Does not the hon. member think that that section is subject to the usual rules of interpretation, namely, that it applies only to offences within Canada?

Mr. Fulton: I do not interpret the section in that way at all. It appears to be deliberately and definitely directed towards the question where the offence may be committed. There are no limiting words. At this point I do not want to enter into a legal argument; the matter may not be of great import, because it has been clearly proved that the act has extraterritorial application. However, I do suggest that this is a piece of window-dressing, because it appears, to me at any rate, that the present act has extraterritorial application, by reason of the words:

> —the offence shall be deemed to have been committed either at the place in which the same actually was committed, or at any place in Canada in which the offender may be found.

If the offender is brought back to Canada, which must happen before he can be tried, he is then charged with an offence against the act, and that offence may be deemed to have been committed at any place in Canada in which the offender may be found. But he must be found in Canada in order to be tried. The provisions of the English act on which this bill is based are in somewhat the same terms, although not exactly parallel. However, they are intended obviously to give their act extraterritorial application. Section 10(1) of the English official secrets act reads:

> This act shall apply to all acts which are offences under this act when committed in any part of His Majesty's dominions, or when committed by British officers or subjects elsewhere.

My criticism of the bill so far is that it accomplishes nothing, or at the best very little. A good deal of publicity and anticipation has been created with regard to its introduction, as though the bill in fact was implementing the recommendations of the royal commission that additional safeguards be provided. The royal commission recommended that there be additional safeguards against espionage and against the communication of information prejudicial to the state. This bill does not provide those additional safeguards, in the sense that it makes very little change in the law with respect to the prosecution of persons accused of offences.

I find the bill quite unsatisfactory. What we need is a bill which will provide additional protection against espionage and against the communication of information to foreign powers. The recommendations of the royal commission show the vital need of some such provision. The report of the royal commission makes it terrifyingly clear that we had an elaborate espionage system in this country. It minces no words in telling us that the Russian embassy was the base of that espionage system. It states that that was carried on under three separate agencies, the most important being under the direction of the Russian military attaché. We had a spy system in this country and nothing that has happened since indicates that there is any ground for assuming that that spy system has ceased to exist.

I should like to refer to a Canadian Press dispatch which I happened to notice in the Montreal Gazette of yesterday, and which reads:

Soviet Boosts Ottawa Staff

Military attachés are trained observers of three services.

Ottawa, June 20—(CP)—The Russians have boosted the military representation at their Ottawa embassy to five officers in recent weeks, it was disclosed today by the external affairs department. A few months ago the department reported two as the total.

I do not want to say that that article indicates that the espionage system is being built up again, or strengthened, but in view of the clear and specific report of the royal commission, where no words were minced as to the activities being carried on at the Russian embassy, we should certainly be on our guard. These things should warn us that something is still necessary to protect us against this espionage system.

I find nothing in the bill. Other recommendations in the report of the royal commission are to the effect that we need additional safeguards. I should like to refer particularly to recommendations 2, 3 and 6, to be found on page 689 of the report, as follows:

2. That the proper authorities in each service, department and organization take such steps as may be considered desirable and effective, in the light of this report and of the evidence and exhibits, to prevent further unauthorized transmission of information and to set up further safeguards.

3. That all security measures should be co-ordinated and rendered as uniform as possible.

6. That consideration be given to any additional security measures which would be practical to prevent the infiltration into positions of trust under the government of persons likely to commit acts such as those described in this report.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Those recommendations make it clear that at that time the attention of the royal commission was directed to the provision of additional safeguards against a repetition of what they found had been going on. The necessity of taking those precautions is more important now than it was then, and this bill does not fulfil that requirement.

This matter of security precautions or legislation against espionage and the communication of official secrets is difficult to discuss reasonably, because we are working with a complete lack of factual information as to what is being done. I and others have attempted—I shall confine my remarks to my own attempts—to obtain factual information as to what has been found out as to the extent of this espionage system, as to the extent of infiltration into the government service, and as to the extent of our counter measures and the removal from the government employ of any who were found to be untrustworthy.

So far I have drawn virtually a blank. No answers of a factual nature have been given to the specific questions which were asked, and we are left to go largely on guesswork and speculation. We must work in an atmosphere of secrecy. There is a veil of secrecy over the whole subject, not even a corner of which has been lifted. I appreciate the importance of maintaining security and the difficulty of disclosing security methods, but I cannot agree that it is impossible to give factual information as to the success, or failure if you like, of security measures.

I should like to refer to a couple of questions which were asked in this regard, and the answers which were given. On May 24 the following questions were put by me and answered, or so-called answers were given, as reported on page 2810 of Hansard:

1. Have the Royal Canadian Mounted Police been able to identify all of the 150 persons then resident in Canada, listed in the notebook found as a result of the espionage investigations of 1945 and 1946, containing the name of Klaus Fuchs?

2. If not, how many have they been able to identify?

The minister's answer, while courteous and lengthy, gives no information whatsoever. It tells us what we already knew, that the notebook contained the names of 150 persons said to be resident at that time in Canada. That was a part of the question. We were told that it formed only one item of many thousands of documents seized, and that in this mass of material so seized there were many such notebooks, also desk calendars, memo pads and a lot of other matters not relevant to the question because the question was about a particular notebook. It will be remembered that the suggestion was that certainly the conclusion reached by many others besides myself was that amongst the 150 names there were, although they may not all have been, some who were involved at one time or another in the business of espionage. The minister went on to say:

> The list of the 150 names referred to was carefully checked to ascertain which of these 150 names, if any, were those of persons who could be suspected of espionage or subversive activity. It was found that a limited number of the persons named belonged to either or both of these groups.
>
> In all such cases where positive identification proved possible, the entries were then related to and dealt with on the appropriate investigation files. As some of these investigations are still current, it will be appreciated that it would not be desirable to specify the number of persons identified. The majority of the entries in this notebook, however, refer to professional people and others of good repute whose loyalty is beyond question.

The question asked, with reference to these names, in how many cases it had been possible to establish positive identification. It did not ask how many of them were found to be spies or how many were suspected of being spies. It asked for factual information. It asked in how many cases the R.C.M.P. had been able to say: This is the actual person; we know who he is and where he is. That was the only information asked for, and in an answer of three paragraphs the question is evaded and no factual answer is given.

The second question on that subject was:

> How many of the 150 Canadians listed in the notebook found as a result of the espionage investigations . . . and containing the name of Klaus Fuchs (a) have been in the employ of the dominion government at any time since June, 1945; (b) are now in the employ of the dominion government?

Again that is a factual question. I did not ask how many spies; I asked how many of the persons listed and identified in the notebook were in the employ of the government since 1945 and are still in the employ of the government. Again the question was not answered. The reply of the minister was:

> This question cannot be answered with precision in view of the time covered by (a) and the vagueness of the identifying data available in the notebook.

The time covered by part (a) was simply the period from 1945 up to the present. The answer continued:

> It can be said, however, that the number involved was small.

There again we are left with vague and indefinite replies conveying no information on which we can form an opinion whether the security measures now being taken are adequate, and whether an adequate check has been made on the security of the people whose trustworthiness is so vital to the interests of the state. There is no information on which we can form an opinion whether a check has been made and whether the steps taken as a result thereof have been adequate to protect the safety of the state.

Another question I asked is to be found at page 3467 of Hansard of June 12, together with the reply made by the Minister of Justice. The question was:

> 1. In each department or branch of government or board or corporation set up by the government, how many employees, if any, have been discharged or been in any way released for reasons having to do with security?

There are two other parts to the question. Again the minister's answer was courteous and lengthy, but, however courteous and lengthy it may have been, it was a complete denial of information. The minister's answer consisted of a general statement of the government's approach to this question of security within the ranks of government employees. He said that it would be unfair to give the name of a man removed from employment with the government on suspicion of being a communist, because it might prejudice his chances of future employment, and that no information could be given. One part of the question had to do with how many in each department, and that is all. The reason for the question was to find out how thorough the check has been, what departments have been investigated and what are the results in terms of figures as to the number of cases in which action has been taken. That would not identify any of the employees in question, if there are any. We are not even told whether the number, if any, is large or small. We are not told anything on which we can form a conclusion whether or not the measures in the bill are adequate.

As to the question of unfairness to a man who is genuinely suspected of being disloyal, I cannot think of anything more prejudicial to him than mere release from his employment. If he seeks other employment, he is bound to be asked what his last job was. He will be asked: Where were you last working? If he says that he had been in the government service he will be asked: What about a recommendation? Why did you leave your job? Can the minister honestly support the thesis that a person who is entirely unable to produce any recommendation or reasons for release from the government service would readily find further employment? I cannot see that the minister's reason for refusing to disclose factual information is a valid one. I did not even ask for names, but merely for factual information as to the number involved. I cannot see that the reason the minister gave for refusing to give the information is anything more than pure fiction.

As I say, the lack of information makes it extremely difficult to discuss the question of security on a reasonable basis, because we are working in the realm of uncertainty. No one wants a witch hunt, but everyone wants to be and is entitled to be satisfied that adequate measures have been and are being taken. When that kind of factual information is refused, one is left to draw one of two obvious conclusions. Either the investigation is not adequate or the results have been so disturbing that it is not considered in the public interest to disclose them. I suggest that the second conclusion is unfair to the civil service and to government employees generally.

My main anxiety in the discussion of the bill, in previous discussions and questions having to do with security, has been to find out whether adequate precautions are being taken and whether adequate measures have been taken to deal with such breaches of security or such genuine suspicions as have been aroused. We have had no information. We are invited to take it on trust, and when the safety of the state is involved I regret to say that I cannot do so. I want facts and figures to establish the accuracy of what the minister says when he maintains that all adequate and necessary measures are being taken.

What has come out, however, what has been disclosed in the replies that have been made, gives us ground for concern of a different sort. The information that the security officer in the department is the deputy minister, and that he can remove a government employee from his service on grounds of suspicion alone, gives rise to the gravest concern about the methods being followed. This means that the whole security of civil service employment is under attack. One of the greatest advantages of civil service employment has been security of tenure in office. Before I go further I want to say that another reason why I object so strenuously to the secrecy which surrounds this whole thing is that I believe, as I hope the minister will agree on reflection, it is unfair to the civil service and to government employees generally, because it cannot help but create the impression that the results of this security screening have been so disturbing that nothing should be said about it. I certainly do not want to believe that is the fact. I am confident that the loyalty of government employees and those in the civil service of Canada is as high as it possibly could be. But I suggest that the loyalty of the civil service does not need to be protected by this screen of secrecy.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Garson: I wonder if I may raise a point or order. I do so with great reluctance, because my hon. friend is always so generous and courteous in his attitude toward his fellow members that I do not like to raise a question against him. I suggest, however, that the motion before the house is for the second reading of a bill to amend the Official Secrets Act in four particulars. It seems to me the observations my hon. friend has been making about the matter of security generally and what should be done in regard to maintaining security in the civil service are irrelevant to the motion before the house, under which, as I understand it, the discussion should be confined to the question whether or not this act should be amended in the manner indicated. We are not now passing the Official Secrets Act; we are seeking to amend it in certain specific particulars. I want to make it clear that I have no objection in the world to discussing the subject matter of my hon. friend's remarks at the proper time, which I take it would be on the estimates of my department. Then we could discuss them with much greater freedom than here, because we are circumscribed by the motion before the house. I seriously raise the point of order that what my hon. friend has been saying for some little time now is irrelevant to the motion before the house.

Mr. Fulton: On the point of order, I suggest that the bill deals with the subject of security. It deals with the Official Secrets Act and the amendment of that act, as the minister said, to provide additional safeguards as recommended by the royal commission on espionage. The whole question of official secrets relates to the public service, to those in office or employment "under His Majesty", which are the words that appear in the bill before us and in the Official Secrets Act. The whole intention of that act is directed toward those who, by the nature of their employment, may be in possession of official secrets. That is one of the large aspects; the other is those who come into possession of such secrets improperly. One way in which they come into possession of those secrets is if they have been improperly communicated by those who have properly come into possession of them. So this act necessarily involves the security of those in possession of official secrets, and I submit that the discussion that has been going on is perfectly in order. Indeed, it would be impossible to discuss this bill adequately without referring to the very subject I have been dealing with.

Mr. Green: I should like to direct your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the first sentence in the explanatory note, which I think makes it perfectly clear that the remarks of the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) are in order. That sentence reads:

> The principal purpose of this amendment is to extend the meaning of the expression "office under His Majesty" to embrace employment in, on or under a board, commission, corporation or other body that is an agent of His Majesty in right of Canada or any province.

I believe that enables the hon. member to discuss the service, and I submit that he was clearly in order in the remarks he was making.

Mr. Garson: If I may speak to the point of order again, this bill purports to make certain specific amendments to certain specific sections. If my hon. friend thinks the amendments sought are not adequate and wishes to discuss others which in his opinion would be adequate, it is open to him to introduce an amendment or some other motion under which he could refer to these other matters. As long as this bill remains before the house, however, I think the bare question in section 1, for example, is whether paragraph (h) of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act should be repealed and another wording substituted for it.

Mr. Fleming: We are not in committee of the whole yet.

Mr. Garson: No; but, as I indicated in my remarks, the principle of the bill is whether these four amendments should be introduced. It is not a wide principle; it is quite narrow. I suggest to my hon. friend, through you, Mr. Speaker, that the discussion in which he has been engaging, which is exceedingly interesting and useful, could be carried on to much greater advantage to all concerned on another occasion.

Mr. Fulton: If I may make just one further observation on the point of order, I feel it is quite clear that this bill deals with the amendment of the Official Secrets Act. That necessarily raises the whole question of security, including security with respect to those holding office under His Majesty. I suggest that it would be impossible to discuss that question without discussing the whole matter of security. The minister has suggested that the purpose of the bill—and the purpose must be related to the principle—is to carry out a recommendation that additional safeguards be provided. To say that in discussing the principle of this bill one is precluded from suggesting that the safeguards are not adequate, or from urging what would be adequate safeguards or measures, I suggest is impossibly narrowing the scope of the principle of the bill, and in fact rendering discussion of that principle impossible.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) who is out of order. As he has pointed out, he is discussing matters which were introduced by the minister himself—the question of security, how it should be administered, and what should be done about it. It is the minister who was out of order when he dealt with the clauses of the bill rather than the principle on the motion for second reading. We in the opposition said nothing but allowed the minister to go ahead, with a certain amount of leniency which he has not seen fit to reciprocate.

Mr. Fulton: I am nearly through, incidentally.

Mr. Speaker: While the hon. member for Kamloops was speaking I was considering whether or not his remarks were in order, in view of the fact that the Official Secrets Act in toto is not before the house, but only certain amendments to it. In view of what has been said by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Stewart) I might add that when the minister was speaking I did think he was referring to the sections of the bill in perhaps a little more detail than is usual on a motion for second reading. However, the nature of this bill makes it difficult to present an adequate argument to the house without referring to the sections. I might also add that when the minister was speaking, no exception was taken to his remarks, and I assumed he had the unanimous consent of the house to deal with the bill on second reading in the manner in which he dealt with it.

Referring once again to the remarks of the member for Kamloops he read a number of questions and answers referring to the number of employees who had been dismissed because of security reasons. I concluded that he wanted that information so that he could decide whether or not paragraph 1 should be put into effect. I believe the information might have been better obtained on another occasion, but in view of what had taken place up to that time I did not stop him. I believe the hon. member is going rather far afield when he discusses the whole question of security. The minister has not seen fit to bring in measures other than those that are set forth in this bill to provide adequate safeguards. If the hon. member feels there are other safeguards that should be introduced, he should bring up that question on some other occasion which is afforded to him under the rules of the house. I would ask him now, since objection has been taken to this general discussion, to confine his remarks to the general principle of the four amendments which have been introduced to this bill.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the consideration which has been given to the remarks I have made so far. I confess that I find it difficult to continue, indeed to say anything, as I pointed out earlier, without referring to the matter I was discussing. In view of Your Honour's remarks I shall endeavour to do so without transgressing your ruling. If I do transgress, I hope you will draw my attention, sir, to the fact, and I shall govern myself accordingly.

What I wish to do in trying to relate my remarks to the bill actually before us, without dealing in detail with the sections, is to refer to that part of the bill which relates to those who hold office under His Majesty, the definition of which is enlarged by the bill. It seems to me that is obviously the type of person with whom this bill specifically deals. In his earlier statements on this subject the minister outlined to us the approach of the government towards the matter of ensuring that those who hold office under His Majesty shall be the type of person who can be relied upon absolutely not to convey these official secrets, persons who are not likely to do anything prejudicial to the safety of the state. The minister has told us of the method followed to make that assurance a reality, and it was with that method that I was dealing.

I believe I have said sufficient on that score to indicate that while we have had no information which would justify our concluding that adequate measures have in fact been taken, yet we have had information which causes us concern as to what the implications of that method may be. The point I have in mind here is that persons who are removed from their employment on the ground that they are persons likely to communicate official secrets and are therefore untrustworthy have no opportunity of having their cases heard. My main concern, as I have already indicated, is that there shall not be in the government employ anyone likely to do that, but I should hate to see any measures taken which would go so far as to jeopardize the security of employment generally of government employees. Surely one of the greatest freedoms is the freedom to work. If a man can be removed from office now on the ground of suspicion, as the minister said, while we hope and trust that that right will not be exercised unfairly, it does open the door to the unfair exercise of it. It makes it possible for a man whom it is desired to remove, but who cannot be removed on any other grounds, to be removed simply because it is said he is suspected of being a person likely to reveal official secrets. Although I insist that I want to see adequate measures taken, I do not think that is the proper way to go about it.

I am going to make a concrete suggestion, Mr. Speaker, and then I shall be through. My suggestion is that there should be an appeal board set up to whom those removed on the ground that they are untrustworthy or likely to communicate official secrets could appeal if they wished. I believe this suggestion has merit. The board should consist of, first, the deputy minister of the department concerned, who is the security officer, as the minister has told us; second, the Solicitor General or his nominee, representing the Department of Justice and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police; third, a representative of the civil service commission; fourth, two representatives to be chosen from a panel of approximately a dozen suitable names submitted by the civil service association. There would be a panel of a dozen to protect the interests of the civil servant or government employee, from which panel two may be drawn in any specific case. The board would then consist of three government appointees and two civil service association nominees. A person released for security reasons may, if he wishes, appeal to that board. The board will not cost anything because the members are civil servants, and this service could be given without prejudice to their normal employment. It would therefore be a board which could be carried on at no cost to the government or the country. If that were done, or something of the kind, we could insist upon the most stringent security screening being pursued, confident that no injustice could be done, no witch hunt started. If a person felt he was unjustly accused or suspected, he would have the right of appeal. I suggest that anyone who knows in his heart he is justly accused or suspected will not appeal. Only those who are unjustly accused would appeal. With that safeguard, we could proceed without doubt or hesitancy with a stringent security screening of all employees, particularly in departments which are designated as vulnerable.

Mr. Speaker, may I then just refer to one other concrete matter arising out of—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Fulton: Does that include the time taken for the point of order?

Mr. Speaker: I have allowed some additional time for that.

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, this to me is rather a memorable occasion, for I find myself in substantial agreement with what the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) has said We have differed in the past, always in a friendly way, of course; but today I feel that he is substantially right in what he has said.

I also accept the legislation which is before us, although I do not altogether share some of the reservations and the doubts which have been expressed. The hon. member for Kamloops said that the bill has failed to safeguard us against espionage, treason and kindred obnoxious things. I do not very well see how legislation could have done that without becoming excessively bulky. Indeed there are as many aspects to treachery as there are quirks to the human mind. The responsibility is completely that of the government in seeing that certain individuals are not given the opportunity to act as traitors. What additional safeguards are required must, I think, rather lie with the security department rather than with legislation.

The minister pointed out in his opening remarks that this bill was based in part upon the recommendations of the royal commission of a few years ago, and that it is designed to provide the state with additional safeguards. The hon. member for Kamloops wants to see the state safeguarded—a proper and laudable object, with which I fully agree. He mentioned of course the fact that there are spies in Canada. I must admit that I am not frightfully alarmed about that, because I think there have been spies here for a number of years, as there are spies in every country. We may not like spies, but sometimes, like the poor, they are with us and it is the responsibility of the government to try to eradicate them. The fact there are spies here today—and I believe there are—should not be a matter for undue alarm.

The hon. member went on to say that we must safeguard the individual as well as the state. Perhaps it is possible that when he was introducing this legislation the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) was thinking primarily of safeguarding the state; but it may be proper for us to consider also the safeguards which should be extended to individuals under legislation such as this.

The other day, I think it was in answer to the hon. member for Kamloops, the minister made a statement about security which at once reassured me and at the same time left me with doubts in my mind I was reassured so far as the measures which are being taken for security are concerned, but I was not at all reassured as to the method by which the accused could defend himself. In other words, we are facing the constant problem in a democracy in times such as these of trying to reconcile national security with individual freedom, and it is a tremendously important problem. There can be no question that those who are disloyal must not be employed by the government; and if they are proven to be disloyal, and indeed traitors, they should be punished, and punished most severely.

I have no objection to the clause which provides that fourteen years will be the maximum sentence, for I think that examples should be made of those who are in positions of responsibility if they behave in a treacherous way toward the state. But while we admit that treachery must be punished, while we admit there must be complete security, especially in vulnerable departments, I would dislike to see it interpreted as meaning that every department of state had to be screened from the point of view of security. That I think would be entirely unnecessary, and indeed could be dispensed with.

In the last few minutes in which he spoke, the hon. member for Kamloops mentioned this matter of the security of the individual, and it is one which merits most careful attention in every part of the house. We have a situation just now where one man in each department, the deputy minister, is given the responsibility of acting as judge, and it is a heavy responsibility to lay upon any one man. It is one which I myself would not like to have to bear. It is giving too much power to the deputy minister. In that I do not say I have not a high regard for the calibre of these civil servants, but I think that they themselves might prefer to see this responsibility shared with others. What is even more important, those who are suspected must of course be protected.

The other year I was trying to get some information about security, with the same lack of success as the hon. member for Kamloops. I was trying to find out what the situation was, for instance, with regard to a subversive gathering. I got an interesting answer from the Department of Justice. It was as follows: "A gathering of a subversive character is a gathering of persons conducting subversive activities." As an answer it has its humorous aspects, but one could not say that it is accompanied by very much intelligence. You see, our problem is that there are different definitions of what may be a subversive activity. I am firmly convinced that the political actions of communists and fascists in this country are subversive; but on the other hand there may be the possibility of guilt by association. It may be possible that an individual went to hear the Red Dean, and some might consider that this meeting was obviously a subversive meeting, and those who went to it were subversive characters. I think that would be most unfortunate, because there would be some who went to the meeting from, let us say, a purely sociological point of view, to find out what made it tick. Therefore there is a danger about guilt by association; but others may not fear that as I do. That is where I think it is so necessary that we should have a board of review. I am not sure whether it should be an appeal board, as the hon. member for Kamloops said; but I think there should be provision for appeal.

As the situation exists, where there is a character who is suspected he is at the mercy of the deputy minister. I think that where there is a civil servant who is under suspicion he should be informed of the charges which are laid against him, and should be allowed to appear before the review board. What its constitution is at the moment I do not care very much. Then the review board should report to the deputy minister on the facts of the situation, and on the facts alone; the deputy minister should then recommend to his minister what action should be taken, and the final appeal should be with the minister himself. So often we find that dossiers on individuals may be compiled from hearsay, or perhaps from his being interested in some organization in earlier and more indiscreet days. There are dangers, we must admit, about dossiers as there are dangers in holding against people their membership in organizations which they may have taken out quite a number of years ago and long since left. Since that time the individuals concerned have probably changed their minds substantially. I know that I myself, and perhaps other members in earlier years, belonged to what now appear to be rather odd organizations. But I think if it is important to safeguard the state—and no one will deny it—it is equally important to safeguard the individual.

That is why I mention this today. It is unfortunate that a man who is only suspected should be dismissed, because, as has been pointed out, his opportunity of getting further employment is more than limited. I should think it would be the objective of the government not only to safeguard the state but also to safeguard the freedoms which we cherish in a democratic country.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, it is fair to characterize the present bill as too little and too late.

[Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North).]

The minister began his speech by associating the bill with a recommendation contained in the report of the royal commission on espionage, a report which, if my memory is correct, was submitted to the House of Commons four years ago this month. That report contained in the plainest possible terms, among other important recommendations, the following as No. 5:

> That the Official Secrets Act, 1939, be studied in the light of the information contained in this report and in the evidence and exhibits and, if it is thought advisable, that it be amended to provide additional safeguards.

The house was in session at the time. That was the session of 1946. We had before us then the whole startling exposure of a master spy ring in Canada having for its purpose the transfer of Canadian secrets to a foreign power, the most startling spy exposure in all the history of Canada.

As I have said, the house was in session at the time. The government asked the house to take no action at that session in the light of the report. Came the session of 1947, and still the house was asked to take no action. Came the session of 1948, summoned early, as we will remember, in the fall of 1947, to deal with something that the government said was so urgent that it could not wait, namely the ratification of the Geneva agreements. And so the house met late in the fall of 1947. This subject was taboo. Throughout that part of the session in 1947, and throughout the balance of the session in 1948, the government asked for no action from parliament to implement this particular recommendation of the royal commission. Came 1949, with two sessions of the house, and still no request for action to implement that report. Now we are asked, in what are expected to be the last few days of the 1950 session, to take the meagre action embodied in this bill.

And so I say that if the subject matter of this bill is important it was just as important in 1946 and in the intervening years as it is today. Why, then, has the country been kept waiting for four years for this meagre action on the part of the government? There has been no unwillingness on the part of hon. members to discuss the subject or to deal with any measure which would have grappled with the problem or would have fulfilled the recommendations contained in that very important report of the royal commission.

Indeed, the question has been raised frequently in the house, and the interest has not diminished in this present session when it has been mentioned a number of times. The whole attitude of the government in relation to the problem of security with which in a measure this bill proposes to cope has been that the law as we have it is adequate to deal with the situation. After we heard the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) claim on May 3 that the present law is adequate to deal with subversive communist activities in Canada, upon which occasion he referred to the Official Secrets Act, those of us who do not share the view of the minister, that the legislation of this parliament is now adequate, may feel some measure of vindication in the fact that at long last the minister has seen fit to introduce even this bill to amend the Official Secrets Act, with a view to tightening up some of its provisions.

In recent days the house has been told that there is something in the nature of an emergency facing the country which calls for special measures in aid of national defence, and which calls for the house to overlook some of the normal peacetime safeguards parliament seeks to apply to defence purchases and other undertakings on the part of the government. If there is an emergency in connection with the defence of the country, then certainly one would have thought the Minister of Justice would have been bringing forward more ample legislation to deal with some of the internal aspects of that threat to national defence which, on suitable occasions, we are asked to consider.

It seems that one week when the government finds an emergency suitable for its purposes there is an emergency. The following week, when it suits the convenience of the government to disclaim or to deny the existence of an emergency, then so far as it is concerned there is no emergency.

I think we have had enough of this blowing hot and cold. If there is an emergency in connection with the defence of Canada and it calls for special measures, as the government has been telling us, then certainly it ought to be laying before the house some legislative proposals to deal with some of these problems in relation to the internal security of Canada—and it will need to be something more far-reaching than we find in the present bill.

Let us see the contents of the bill as related to the history of the legislation germane to it. We begin with legislation of the Westminster parliament. In modern times the first official secrets act there goes back to 1889, the present act dating from 1911. That act was revised somewhat in 1920 and then, in 1939, prior to the outbreak of war, it was further slightly amended. In Canada the Official Secrets Act of the United Kingdom of 1911 had extraterritorial application, and we had in addition sections 85 and 86 of the Criminal Code, provisions which did not go nearly as far as our present Official Secrets Act. They were not so extensive in the scope of their provisions.

In 1939 the parliament of Canada, prior to the outbreak of war, enacted our Official Secrets Act which, by section 15, repealed sections 85 and 86 of the Criminal Code and also repealed the Official Secrets Act of 1911 of the United Kingdom, in so far as it related to Canada. So we have our own act beginning in 1939 and continuing without amendment to this date. It may be said that when our act was passed in 1939 it greatly extended the scope of such legislation in this country, and did increase the penalties. The penalties attached to offences under section 86, subsection 1, of the code were not as heavy as those imposed by the Official Secrets Act.

It is interesting to note that when the 1911 act was enacted at Westminster many of the offences were considered to be misdemeanours and were not created felonies. The punishment attached to the misdemeanours was not at all heavy in the light of present-day standards and world conditions. For instance, the penalties for misdemeanours were laid down in section 8, subsection 2, of the 1920 act as follows:

> (2) Any person who is guilty of a misdemeanour under the principal act or this act shall be liable on conviction on indictment to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding two years, or, on conviction under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding three months or to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds, or both such imprisonment and fine.

Subsection 1 of the same section deals with felonies. It reads:

> (1) Any person who is guilty of a felony under the principal act or this act shall be liable to penal servitude for a term of not less than three years and not exceeding fourteen years.

That was the model used for the Canadian act of 1939. When at that time parliament came to write the penalty section a maximum imprisonment of 14 years was not adopted, the maximum penalty being limited to seven years. It seems to me that in the amending bill before us, increasing the term of imprisonment which may be imposed for offences under the act, there might be some question raised as to why 14 years was not adopted as the maximum term of imprisonment when our act was enacted in 1939.

As far as they go I am sure the four purposes of the bill outlined by the minister commend themselves to all hon. members. The first one, which deals with the problem of extending the application of the act to employees of government boards or commissions or corporations, is necessary having regard to the large number of persons employed today by such bodies and also the fact that such bodies are engaged in enterprises on behalf of the government which bring them more closely in contact with secrets which would be of great value to a potential enemy and whose loss or disclosure would be seriously prejudicial to the national interest than the great majority of those who are classified as civil servants and directly engaged in the work of the government departments and who are now embraced within the scope of the Official Secrets Act, 1939. When we go into committee there may be some observations I shall wish to make on those provisions, but I think there can be no doubt as to the necessity of extending the scope of the act to include employees of government boards, commissions and corporations.

I do not propose at this stage to dwell at any length on the second point, namely the extension of the scope of the act to certain aspects of those offences which may be committed outside the territorial limits of Canada. There may be some observations that will be called for in committee.

I have dealt with the third point, namely the matter of penalties attached to breaches of the act.

In conclusion I should like to refer to one or two matters which I think are deserving of mention. I for one have deplored the disposition which has been manifested by certain members of the government every time this particular subject is raised to scream, "witch hunt." Nobody in this house had advocated any witch hunt within the civil service or within any of these boards, commissions or corporations that are associated with the government. But many of us have been legitimately concerned about security measures and have been alarmed at what we consider, I think on ample grounds, to be apathy and want of sufficient and resolute action on the part of the government.

When anything has been said about these matters some members of the administration have immediately screamed, as I have said, "witch hunt." Surely it is apparent, when we hear such statements in relation to civil servants or government boards or government departments, as were made at the last session by ministers in regard to the national film board, that there is full justification for our calling for effective measures to rid the civil service and these boards, corporations and commissions associated with government of all who are disaffected or whose loyalty cannot be fully trusted.

Surely it is obvious, in the light of these statements made by ministers opposite during the last session of this house, that it was the minimum duty of the government to carry on that kind of survey with a view to clearing all those members of the civil service and employees of government corporations and boards whose loyalty had been called into question by the statements made by ministers on those occasions and whose patriotism and devotion to the public good were beyond reproach. I welcome the suggestion made by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) that within the scope of government there should be some means by which those who have been thought on inquiry unworthy to be trusted in respect to their loyalty to Canada should have an opportunity on appeal to establish their innocence, if indeed they are innocent. Surely that is the minimum duty of this parliament to the civil service.

But along with that must go effective measures for meeting within Canada from whatever quarter it may come any attack on our security. We know from the disclosures of the royal commission of 1946 how anxious those who were directing the spy system were to plant their spies within the government service and within government corporations and boards which were dealing with matters vitally essential to the public welfare and the safety of this country. I submit that there must be on the part of the government the most effective vigilance in regard to these operations.

Then with regard to the efforts to follow up the disclosures made in the report of the royal commission based on the evidence that was adduced before it, I say that we must press the government not to relax one iota of that vigilance which is so essential at the present time. This measure, too little and too late, is deserving of support as far as it goes. We say we would like to see some evidence on the part of the government of more effective measures to meet a situation which the government at times is prepared to describe as one of emergent proportions.

We will continue to ask why the government has not taken steps to implement and fulfil the other recommendations in the report of the royal commission. For four years we have waited for this meagre attempt at fulfilment of just one of the recommendations. As my colleague, the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) pointed out, the bill does not by any means exhaust the scope of recommendation No. 5 of the royal commission with respect to the Official Secrets Act. This is simply going a part of the way that the royal commission emphatically recommended in its fifth recommendation in the report.

They did not say that recommendation was any more important than the others. There were seven recommendations altogether, only one of which has been followed by action on the part of the government hitherto. We would still like to know a good deal about what is being done and what is going to be done as to the recommendation with respect to passports. We do not see any evidence of action being taken as to that or the other important recommendations in the report of the royal commission.

We always come back to this point. When we see the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) taking the attitude revealed in the house on May 3 and other occasions that the present law is all right, that we do not need any more law to deal with the subversive activities of those who are at work in our midst seeking to overthrow our institutions, seeking to expand their spying activities in a way that will necessarily always be prejudicial to the interests of the country, then we will continue to say to the Minister of Justice that we insist on the most vigorous kind of enforcement of the law as it now stands. We want more law, but if the law is not to be extended, then at least we will demand the most vigorous enforcement of the law as it exists. Wherever dangers and threats to our national institutions and safety exist we will continue to ask through parliament in a democratic manner for effective measures to deal with them. We will continue to demand on the part of the government vigorous and effective enforcement of those measures that the government has given parliament the opportunity to enact.

(Translation):

Mr. Pierre Gauthier (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief as I do not wish to delay the passage of this bill. If I were to repeat the words used by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) and say that this bill is too mild, that it comes too late, it would not be for the same reasons. Although I will gladly vote for this bill I do think it is rather mild in the sense that I am more drastic than the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) and the government when it comes to dealing with communism. If indeed it comes too late, it may be due to the fact that in the past we have been too lenient with those whose philosophy calls for the complete destruction of our democratic institutions.

In a letter he wrote to his young friend Ivanoff in 1936, Stalin pointed out that the proletariat should aim at the conquest of the world both politically and economically. He concluded his letter by saying:

> The victory of the proletariat shall be final in Russia only when the international proletariat, having joined forces with us, will have overthrown the present bourgeois system.

Therefore we can never be too strict in dealing with these people or in the enactment of legislation designed to prevent them from obtaining official secrets which they would use to undermine our institutions. It would not do to use an "iron hand in a velvet glove". Let us therefore remove the glove and use the bare hand so they will know we mean business.

I have listened attentively to the various speeches. In my opinion we must not be too indulgent. Whether dealing with so-called fellow travellers, pinks, supporters or ill-advised people that are not too conversant with the communist ideal, let us treat them with the utmost severity, because they are a threat to our institutions.

I therefore accept the statement of the Minister of Justice who claims that this bill gives us adequate protection. I am not prepared to accept it literally but rather in the spirit in which it was offered. He meant that the law as it now stands in Canada is adequate in so far as it is applied on every occasion. However, even though I shall vote in favour of the bill, I maintain that governments the world over, and not only our own, as daily events have shown, have not been alarmed soon enough by the threat of communism.

At present, ramifications of the communist fifth column spread throughout the world. It cannot be compared with that which the nazis operated before the war because it works on a much wider scale and, compared to the other, is as a giant to a dwarf. We must therefore not stay off our guard any longer. We should support every measure, every gesture which might, in the opinion of our leaders, curb communist activity and the chances that those people, working in the dark, have of destroying our institutions.

Unfortunately, the public inevitably look to the government to safeguard economic conditions. People are content to speak of "social security" and apparently feel that this alone will settle the matter. They should also, after thorough self-examination, be mindful of spiritual security for it is only through self-examination that individuals and governments will secure passage of such bills as are required for our protection.

As a matter of fact, if the individual invariably banks on the government, without going to the trouble of studying in order to understand the true nature of communism, he does not broaden his personal outlook and, like those who caution us against the communist peril without knowing anything about it, is liable to do things that will outdo the communists themselves in fostering the expansion of their evil doctrine.

We should not always put it up to the government, but we should try to help it. It is through personal knowledge, through specific suggestions and personal example that the private individual may convince his countrymen, not only that he believes in the communist menace, but that he also proposes to prevent its spread by doing his bit, as should any public-minded citizens.

An hon. member said earlier that a crusade must be launched to prevent the spread of this ever-growing danger. I hope that after this bill has been passed, the Canadian government will deal with an iron hand with the activities of subversive agencies in this country. There should be no suggestion at all of tying the hands of the authorities when it is a question of preventing important military secrets from falling into the hands of certain people. There should be no political ties so strong as to prevent our governments from taking necessary measures.

Likewise, anyone who happens to have information which is likely to help our leaders in their efforts to prevent our institutions from being destroyed by those who have long been planning such a coup d'état is in duty bound to supply any such information to the government of his country.

(Text):

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): I want to say just a few words with regard to these amendments. I believe the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) brought forward some excellent suggestions, well worthy of consideration by the government. However, I am going to restrict myself to one or two references to the proposed amendments to the Official Secrets Act. I believe everyone will agree that the climate for those who would commit treason or who would become spies should be made as inclement as possible, but I am afraid that climate has not been made much more inclement by the amendments now proposed by the minister. I had not intended to refer to the sections, but the minister having done so perhaps I might be given the same consideration.

As far as the first section is concerned, I doubt whether any wrongdoer has escaped punishment because of the fact that the amendments there proposed were not included in the original Official Secrets Act. With respect to section 2, I asked the minister whether during the past five years any wrongdoers had escaped punishment or conviction by reason of the fact that this section was not in the act, and he frankly answered that there had been none. Finally there is the section adding to the penalty. With that section there can be no argument; but, sir, doubling the penalty without at the same time doubling the activities of the department will get little results. Penalties, however great they may be, if unimposed are of very little efficacy in dealing with treason, sedition or espionage. In 1939 the then minister of justice, Mr. Lapointe, placed upon the statute books of this country the Official Secrets Act, an almost exact copy of the British act with the changes necessary to make it applicable to Canada. At that time he was asked why the penalty was not the same as under the British act, and he had this to say, at page 4723 of Hansard for May 30, 1939:

> The committee who have been in charge of the preparation of this legislation have discussed the question whether the penalty should be made still more severe, a longer term than seven years, but that was decided against because those who drafted the bill were of the opinion that a more severe prison term would not deter foreigners or spies engaged by foreign governments from carrying on their business but would serve to restrain only such persons as are spoken of as small fry, and that for them seven years would be adequate.

Well, Mr. Speaker, no particular reason has been advanced by the present minister for these amendments, but I suggest the real reason is a properly aroused public opinion. Instead of doing anything adequate to meet the situation, as I see it these amendments merely indicate a willingness and desire to improve the law, but place no teeth in the Official Secrets Act and do not carry out the recommendations of the royal commission.

I should like to have seen this bill submitted to a committee which would include outstanding counsel from all quarters of the house. I see them here. There is one to my right who has just returned from Saskatchewan; I refer to the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. Stewart). I also see the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll), and if I went through the list of hon. members I could mention many others. Put them on a committee; do what we did in the dark days of June, 1940, when Right Hon. Mr. Lapointe brought in amendments to constitute the offence of treachery. He submitted those amendments to a committee which included outstanding legal men in the house, leaders of the bar. Two or three of them are judges today; others have left public life. Out of the discussions of that committee came an act that was enforceable, that had teeth. It never had to be used because it was feared; there was the will to enforce it, and it was enforced.

The member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) says that this indicates the minister has changed his mind in the last six weeks; that bringing in this legislation indicates a change of mind. I do not want to disagree with my friend, but I think it shows no change of mind. It merely shows a desire to lead the people to believe that there has been a change of mind, for there is nothing in that bill that would have interfered with or prevented any of the things that happened in the last five years in this country. The minister has frankly admitted that in so far as the material section is concerned. If he desired to focus the public opinion of this country in legislation, he could give the members of this house an opportunity in a committee similar to the defence of Canada committee in 1940 of bringing in suggested amendments to the Official Secrets Act concerning treason and sedition, while at the same time maintaining the freedom of the individual and assuring that freedom shall not be used to destroy freedom.

Now, sir, is there any prosecution? There have only been two cases since 1935 under the law respecting sedition. The only prosecutions under the Official Secrets Act were those arising in 1945 and 1946 out of the royal commission. The royal commission recommended that several things be done. It pointed out that there was another spy ring in Canada, and indicated that it was even more serious than the one Ivor Gouzenko was able to reveal after he had made strenuous efforts to interest the government at that time in the revelations he made. He called here at the House of Commons; he called upon the Minister of Justice and pressed for action. It was only after he had pressed and pressed again for action that his views were finally accepted, and action was taken. Surely parliament has the right to know whether investigations have taken place since then; whether this other espionage ring, terrible in its ramifications and implications according to the report of the royal commission, has been investigated; whether action has been taken to punish the wrongdoers within that ring. To all of these questions we receive the usual answer, it is not in the public interest. It was in the public interest for the royal commission to say that there was a dangerous espionage ring in this country. Is it not in the public interest for the minister to say, if there was that dangerous ring and it was in existence in 1946, why it is there has been no prosecution, no action taken publicly as against the wrongdoers?

Official Secrets Act

The other day I asked the minister a simple question, as to whether or not the dominion was operating in conjunction with the provincial attorneys general. The member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) spoke of evasive answers, full of words and politeness. This answer I received will take its place in the same category. It reads as follows:

> The Minister of Justice does not send regular reports concerning communist activities that come to the knowledge of the security branch of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to the attorneys general of the provinces;

My answer to the minister is, why not? The minister's reply continues:

> . . . for officers commanding the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the six provinces policed by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police under contract are responsible for keeping the respective attorneys general informed regarding communist activities, . . .

The investigations made by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are not the only security investigation. Why are the other security branch investigations not communicated to the provinces? One wonders sometimes why this—

Mr. Garson: Will my hon. friend read the remainder of the answer?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, all right. I mentioned the six provinces.

> . . . and in other provinces, liaison is maintained by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police with the respective provincial police forces in matters relating to subversive activities.

Those subversive activities are only the subversive activities which the mounted police investigate in those provinces. Why is there not some central organization within the mounted police, some security panel, for spreading the information to the various attorneys general of the provinces and securing thereby their co-operation in preventing the expansion of illegal communist activities within this country?

So far as this bill is concerned, the indication has been given by the member for Kamloops and the member for Eglinton that all of us support it. But let no one in this country believe that under these amendments any serious advance is being made in meeting the situation. All that is being done is to provide for a contingency that has not existed in making it an offence under the secrets act for a Canadian who owes allegiance to His Majesty to commit an offence beyond the territorial limits of Canada, and in addition to that adding to the penalty. Penalties increased and not enforced are meaningless, and are merely words. I know we are met invariably by the same answer that it is not in the public interest. That is not the answer of the British parliament. There the government of the day went into detail regarding Dr. Fuchs. They went into detail regarding what was done. In this country the Minister of Justice does as he is doing now; he laughs when one mentions the illegal activities of these people.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, I desire to inform the hon. member that I was laughing at the inaccuracy of his statement regarding the procedure in the British House of Commons.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the minister read the debates that occurred in the British house? He must answer no or he could not make the statement he has just made. The people of this country are asking for answers. They are asking for the assurance that something is to be done. I say that legislation such as this, which increases the penalty but in no way puts into the Official Secrets Act the type of enforcement that people are demanding to meet the situation with which the nations of the world are faced by communist infiltration and propaganda, serves no useful purpose. So far as this bill is concerned, it is fine. It is even being misunderstood in some sections of the press. I have seen in certain editorials the statement that it is a tremendous step forward. Read it! The only step forward is to make provision for those who commit extraterritorial offences while owing Canadian allegiance either directly or indirectly. Apart from that the bill does nothing to carry into effect the seven recommendations made by the royal commission of 1946. After all, we in this country have to rely on the Minister of Justice. Either the law is carried out or it is not. All we can say is this. We are asking him to assure that the law is being carried out; for two prosecutions in fifteen years, other than those taken in 1945, do not constrain one to believe that that forcefulness and zeal are being exercised that should be exercised. We do not forget that in 1932 Mr. Carr had his naturalization certificate cancelled for sedition. We do not forget that just before the election in 1945 Mr. Carr had his naturalization certificate restored to him. These are things difficult to understand. Carr was no different in 1945 from what he was in 1932.

Later on the royal commission found evidence against him and he was prosecuted; but the fact remains that he was able to establish to the satisfaction of the then minister in charge of naturalization that he, the enemy of 1932, was in 1945 worthy of the citizenship of which he had been previously unworthy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Minister of Justice speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like for a very few moments—and they will be very few because I can deal with the points that are relevant very briefly—to comment upon some of the speeches which have been offered by opposition speakers. They all agree that they are to support this bill. They think it is worthy of their support as far as it goes; and, as I understand their language, their contention is merely that it does not go far enough. In their speeches, notably those of the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) and the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), is contained the reason why it is not possible at this time to go any further than we have gone. Both of these hon. gentlemen make it very clear. The hon. member for Eglinton traced the history of this legislation back through the British parliament, and indicated that our act of 1939 was almost an exact copy of the substance of the British act.

Mr. Fulton: That is what the Minister of Justice said.

Mr. Garson: The British act is of long standing. I would suggest to my hon. friends, and to you, sir, that the British parliament is not lacking in experience; that the law officers of the crown in England are men of considerable competence in their field, and that we have some competent men in Canada; and that when we in 1939 adopted the substance of an act which had been in effect in Great Britain for some years, and in connection with which those in charge of its enforcement have had all of the information which arises from experience, it would be rather surprising if that act was not in pretty good shape at the time we adopted it in 1939.

On the present occasion we say to this house—I think I made it very clear in my remarks in moving the second reading of the bill—that the four amendments which are now before hon. members represent those respects in which we think that an act which right now, before the amendments go into effect, is in quite good shape, can be fairly substantially improved.

In our deliberations with respect to these amendments we consulted of course with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and with our own security panel. We consulted as far as we could with some of the able lawyers who were connected with the prosecutions arising out of the royal commission on espionage in 1946, and we would have consulted to a greater extent than we did but for the fact that the counsel for that commission, and some of the special prosecutors we had in the individual prosecutions afterwards, being leading members of the Canadian bar, consented to ornament the Canadian bench.

It is only today that the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) referred to them in laudatory terms, in complimenting the department of which I am the head, in respect of their appointment to the bench of the Supreme Court of Canada. He referred to them as the cream of the Canadian bar.

When they go to the bench it makes it very embarrassing indeed to have any consultations, for reasons that would be obvious to every hon. member, but we have been able to secure a written opinion expressed in a letter by one of these eminent gentlemen before he went on the bench, when he was still a member of the bar, with reference to this very matter which we now have under discussion. If I may, sir, I should like to contrast this statement with the rather extravagant statements we have just listened to from the hon. member from Lake Centre, and to compare it with the more reserved, more careful and I think more accurate statements of the law made by the hon. member for Eglinton in his admirably prepared speech today.

This is a letter written by John R. Cartwright when he was a member of the bar, and which he has given me his permission to produce today. It is written to Arthur G. Slaght, who was the counsel for our commission engaged in the consolidation of our Criminal Code. I should like to put on the record all of those portions of the letter which deal with the Official Secrets Act amendments which we are now considering. Mr. Cartwright said in his letter:

Thank you for your letter of the 18th of May—

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the date?

Mr. Garson: May 20, 1949. I continue:

Thank you for your letter of the 18th of May dealing with the commission on the Criminal Code revision.

I have considered the question raised in your letter as to the provisions of the Official Secrets Act.

In none of the cases of prosecutions under this act in which I acted as counsel did I find any particular difficulty by reason of the form of the act. I do not think that any of those who were acquitted were acquitted by reason of any defect in the act, nor do I think that any of those who were convicted were convicted because of any special statutory presumptions which the act contains.

If I were to suggest that consideration be given to any amendment of the act it would be in regard to the penalty.

May I submit this particular observation to those like the hon. member for Eglinton or the hon. member for Lake Centre, who were suggesting that perhaps the Canadian parliament of 1939 was wise when it confined the penalties upon the little fellows to seven years.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No; all I did was to quote Mr. Lapointe.

Mr. Garson: I continue:

As you know the maximum penalty under the act is seven years' imprisonment.

I am not suggesting that in any of the cases in which I was concerned this was not an adequate penalty.

This is a complete answer to the point made by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) about closing the stable door after the horse had gone. At that point he was referring to the increase in the penalty. Mr. Cartwright points out:

Indeed, in no case was the maximum penalty imposed.

They did not impose the maximum.

It is however easy to imagine circumstances in which a breach of the act might result in very serious injury being done to our country.

Mr. Fulton: Does not the minister consider it would be possible that if there had been a maximum penalty of fourteen years the penalty actually imposed might well have been greater—because as I recall it the maximum penalty imposed was six years, which was close to the maximum then allowed. Had the maximum been fourteen years at that time, the penalty imposed might have been ten or twelve years.

Mr. Garson: I do not concede that, although I do not hold myself out as an expert. I understand my hon. friend may have a different opinion, and I would respect his opinion as being about equally expert with mine. Neither of us perhaps is particularly expert in the matter. But I should think that if, based upon the facts of the case, the judge who tried it had thought that the accused was subject to a penalty of seven years he would have imposed that penalty, when the maximum penalty allowed by statute was that particular period of time.

Then, returning to Mr. Cartwright's letter:

It is however easy to imagine circumstances in which a breach of the act might result in very serious injury being done to our country. Suppose for example very valuable information were given to a foreign power with which we were at peace but which it was probable we would very shortly be at war; this might result in the loss of thousands of lives and for the matter of that in the loss of the war itself and the present maximum penalty would be altogether inadequate.

There was another point raised by the hon. member for Kamloops in which he contended, as I understood him, that it was unnecessary for us to introduce in section 2 of the bill any provision for the extra-territorial operation of the act, because he contended the act is already extraterritorial in its effect. In that connection he quoted a section from the act.

I suggest that upon reflection he will agree that the Official Secrets Act as it now stands, before amendment, like any other Canadian statute must apply in accordance with the ordinary rules of statutory interpretation only to things done in Canada, unless the act specifically states that it is to apply to things done outside Canada. That is the purpose of section 2 of the bill.

If there is the slightest degree of merit in the contention of the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) that we did not make the climate very much more inclement for offenders by the present amendment, it is because the Official Secrets Act which is modelled after or, as he put it, is in almost the exact language of the British act, provides a climate which is already exceedingly inclement at the present time.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 1—"Office under His Majesty."

Mr. Diefenbaker: Have any cases been brought to the minister's attention since he has been Minister of Justice wherein an offence was committed by an individual on or under any board, commission, corporation or other body that is an agent of His Majesty in right of Canada, and where such individual escaped because of the lack of inclusion of these words?

Mr. Garson: No, I think not. As a matter of fact when my hon. friend interjected a similar question during my remarks on second reading, I pointed out that we know of no case in which any of these amendments has had any application to an actual case which has arisen. But in that connection I suggest it is extremely important to close the door before the horse has been stolen.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not disagree with that; I was just asking the question. The minister has referred frequently to a security panel. What does he mean by that? Who are the personnel?

Mr. Garson: I would have no objection to giving my answer in general terms, but I think the question is not closely related to the bill. It is an interdepartmental committee the full details of which I shall be glad to discuss when my estimates are under consideration.

[Mr. Garson.]

Mr. Fleming: The new definition in section 2 (h) provides that "office under His Majesty"— —includes any office or employment in or under any department or branch of the government of Canada or of any province, and any office or employment in, on or under any board, commission, corporation or other body that is an agent of His Majesty in right of Canada or any province.

We find in this definition expressions which have not hitherto appeared in the act. I am somewhat concerned about the proper interpretation of the concluding words, "an agent of His Majesty." There is no definition in the act as to who is an agent of His Majesty. We want to see this provision made broad enough to include all government boards, agencies, commissions and corporations, and I am raising the point now that the words "an agent of His Majesty" may be somewhat restrictive. There are other expressions used now in all the courts to describe boards or commissions associated with the government as emanations of the crown. I concede that perhaps it is difficult in a definition of this kind to make sure that no fish shall escape from the net. However, I must confess that upon reading this section I am somewhat concerned lest these concluding words be restrictive when they ought to be designed to be as inclusive as possible.

Mr. Garson: I think the answer to my hon. friend's question is to be found in a bill we passed yesterday to amend the statute law. If the hon. member would examine the language of the amending section which by that bill we were introducing into each of the acts of the various crown corporations concerned he would see that in each case those corporations were stated to be, in the terms of the statute, agents of His Majesty.

In view of the fact that that process has been followed with regard to all of these corporations, and those which are covered by the Government Companies Operation Act, a general act covering other government corporations such as Polymer, and makes them agents, this seems to cover his point quite well.

Mr. Fleming: I would point out to the minister that Bill No. 313, to amend the statute law, to which he referred, does not go as far as he has indicated. I have the bill before me and I find that in every case where that bill provides for an amendment to the terms of some particular named statute these words are used:

The corporation—

Or council or whatever it may be.

—is for all purposes of this act an agent of His Majesty.

The fact is that in the statutes creating the various crown corporations in each case it is provided that for all purposes of its own particular act the particular corporation, board or commission is an agent of His Majesty. But it is not general in scope; it would not apply outside that particular act. I urge the minister to consider the desirability of some extension of this definition because I am satisfied that Bill No. 313 does not contribute to the definition of the words "agent of His Majesty" for the purposes of the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Garson: The corporation to which my hon. friend has just referred is the agent of His Majesty for the purposes of that act. For example, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act outlines the scope of the activities of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. That corporation has no powers outside the act which creates it. Therefore, I am inclined to differ from my hon. friend. But I want to give his suggestion the consideration it deserves and if we could pass on to other sections of the bill I would be glad to let this section stand and discuss it with the legislative counsel who drafted this bill to see whether he agrees with my hon. friend's view or with my view.

Mr. Fleming: May I make another observation which I hope may be worthy of consideration before this section is taken up again. I urge that no risk be taken even though the section may conceivably be open to the interpretation the minister suggests, with which respectfully I do not agree. I repeat that no risk should be taken because we may be sure that in a court of criminal jurisdiction the language will be very strictly construed.

Mr. Garson: I agree with my hon. friend that no risk should be taken and that is why I suggest that the section should stand.

Section stands.

On section 2—Offences committed outside Canada triable in Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is one question I should like to ask. I have in mind the suggestion that there have been some Canadians who have left Canada in the last year or two to go abroad, presumably to Moscow to attend the international Lenin school, and also that passports have been issued to certain persons who are presumed to have attended that school which is set up for the purpose of teaching destruction. What co-operation is there between the Department of Justice, the security panel, and the Department of External Affairs which would issue the passports, to prevent these people from going abroad under the protection of a passport for purposes which indicate their readiness to commit revolution on their return?

Within the last two or three years certain people left Canada for Europe in order to go behind the iron curtain. They had been naturalized but they left Canada because they did not like this country. They disavowed their Canadian citizenship and their naturalization and spurned the freedom that this country gave them. Some are now returning to the localities where they formerly lived. These things look rather strange to their compatriots in Canada. Can the minister give the committee and the country some idea of what is being done to prevent these people returning once they have spurned our freedom, condemned it, ridiculed it and then come back expecting to be accepted as good citizens, a qualification that they never possessed by reason of their activities?

Mr. Garson: I am sorry I cannot help my hon. friend. Not only is his question not relevant to section 2 of this bill; I do not think it would be relevant to the estimates of the Department of Justice. The question he is asking would come partly under the Secretary of State for External Affairs and partly under the department of immigration. I certainly would not want to become involved in answering a question which had to do with departments of my colleagues.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This section covers wrongdoing outside Canada, as I understand it. If a person having a Canadian passport leaves Canada to go to Moscow to attend a school which teaches the practices and arts of disruption, he commits an offence, does he not, under this section? Surely there must be some co-operation between the Department of Justice and the other department that issues passports to such people?

Mr. Garson: Of course there is co-operation. My hon. friend seeks an answer which can be responsive only if it indicates with some measure of accuracy what the position of these people is, with regard to their passports on going away or with regard to the immigration regulations on coming back again. I am afraid I cannot oblige my hon. friend by giving that answer. If he is asking whether these people who left Canada in that way took from Canada and disclosed to Moscow or to any person outside Canada any code word, pass word, sketch, plan, model, article, and so on, as provided for in section 12A(a), then of course upon their return to Canada, provided we had evidence to substantiate a charge of that kind, we could and we would prosecute. That could be done whether they were Canadian citizens before they left or not. Section 12A is intended to cover a case of that sort and that is why it is being inserted in the act.

Mr. Fulton: I was concerned about that in connection with this question of extraterritoriality and whether this amendment in section 2 is not necessary to make it clear that section 3 has an extraterritorial effect. I think the minister will agree with me that we do not need any amendment as to extraterritoriality in that particular part of section 3.

Mr. Garson: Which part of section 3?

Mr. Fulton: I am referring to subsections 3 and 4 particularly. Subsection 3 of the present section 3 reads:

> In any proceedings against a person for an offence under this section, the fact that he has been in communciation with, or attempted to communicate with, an agent of a foreign power, whether within or without Canada, shall be evidence that he has, for a purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the state, obtained or attempted to obtain information which is calculated to be or might be or is intended to be directly or indirectly useful to a foreign power.

It seems to me that section 2 of the bill giving extraterritorial effect to the whole act is not necessary, but that is not the point I was about to make, unless the minister wishes to comment on that.

Mr. Garson: Is the point not this, that section 3 and the other section that my hon. friend read earlier—

Mr. Fleming: Section 13.

Mr. Garson: —section 13(1) and section 3(3) are references in the act to the effect that certain circumstances will have certain effects, and in relation to what? In relation to an act. What act? An act committed in Canada, as the statute stands at the present time. It is only when we give extraterritorial effect to the act by the bill now before hon. members that we can utilize those sections to which my hon. friend has referred in a prosecution in Canada in respect of an offence which has been committed outside Canada. In other words, you cannot have any extraterritorial quality in an act unless you specifically provide it, and that is what we are doing in the present case. You must specify in the statute that the act of the accused will be an offence in spite of the fact that it took place outside Canadian territory.

Mr. Fulton: The point I am making is with respect to section 3 of the present act, but I am prepared to concede the validity of the minister's argument that as to the other sections there is no such provision and therefore the amendment incorporated in the bill to give extraterritorial effect is necessary and desirable. It seems to me we now have it doubly sure in so far as section 3 is concerned. I wanted to ask the minister if he will concede—

Mr. Garson: If my hon. friend will read subsection 3 of section 3 of the present act he will see that it says:

> In any proceedings against a person for an offence under this section, the fact that he has been in communication with, or attempted to communicate with, an agent of a foreign power, whether within or without Canada . . .

As the act now stands, that refers to the agent of the foreign power. If the person within Canada has communicated or attempted to communicate with an agent of a foreign power outside Canada he will be guilty of the offence.

Mr. Fulton: That is a pretty narrow restriction on the wording which I do not think is quite justified when you read the words in their plain connotation. What I want to ask the minister is whether subsection 3 of section 3, with its present extraterritorial effect, would not be available to justify prosecution and obtain a conviction against known communists of the type to which the hon. member for Lake Centre referred, who go to these countries and obviously communicate with agents of foreign powers, and whose character, known conduct, and so on establish in accordance with the terms of the act that they are doing it for a purpose prejudicial—and in fact they are assumed to be by the wording of the section—to the safety of the state. I want to ask the minister whether, now that we have the extraterritorial effect given by the amendment, we will not be in a position to prosecute people who go behind the iron curtain and communicate with agents of foreign powers.

Mr. Garson: I am afraid I did not quite understand the hon. member.

Mr. Fulton: I am asking the minister whether we will now be in a position to prosecute known communists who go behind the iron curtain and communicate with agents of foreign powers. I am asking whether, with the extraterritorial effect being given to the whole act, we will not be able to prosecute such people under section 3.

Mr. Garson: Yes, I think we shall certainly be able to do so, but subject of course to the fact that you have to apprehend them in Canada if they return here and you have to get evidence of what they did in the foreign country. Then you could prosecute them.

Mr. Fulton: I may be interpreting the words too widely, but what I am interested in now is subsection 2 of section 3. I am happy if it has the result I hope it has. That subsection reads:

On a prosecution under this section, it shall not be necessary to show that the accused person was guilty of any particular act tending to show a purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the state, and, notwithstanding that no such act is proved against him—

That is, no particular act.

—he may be convicted if, from the circumstances of the case, or his conduct, or his known character as proved, it appears that his purpose was a purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the state...

With the extraterritorial effect which the act will now have, and which I say it had before but which we agree it has now, I wonder whether those words are wide enough to justify prosecution against known communists—I will name one if you like, Tim Buck—who go behind the iron curtain and communicate intimately and at length with agents—I do not mean just citizens—of foreign powers.

Mr. Garson: Let us look at the beginning of section 3. It reads:

3. (1) If any person for any purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the state—

I shall omit (a) and read (b):

Mr. Diefenbaker: What section is the minister reading?

Mr. Garson: Section 3 of the Official Secrets Act.

3. (1) If any person for any purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the state,

(b) makes any sketch, plan, model or note which is calculated to be or might be or is intended to be directly or indirectly useful to a foreign power; or

(c) obtains, collects, records, or publishes, . . . any sketch, plan, model, article, or note, or other document or information—

Mr. Fulton: "Or other document or information"—those are surely the important words.

Mr. Garson: Yes.

—which is calculated to be or might be or is intended to be directly or indirectly useful to a foreign power; he shall be guilty of an offence under this act.

Then follows subsection 2 which the hon. member quoted. It reads:

(2) On a prosecution under this section, it shall not be necessary to show that the accused person was guilty of any particular act tending to show a purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the state, and, notwithstanding that no such act is proved against him, he may be convicted if, from the circumstances of the case, or his conduct, or his known character as proved, it appears that his purpose was a purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the state . . .

Keeping that in mind, I should like my hon. friend to look at the new section 12A to be enacted by the bill. It reads this way:

12A. The acts, omissions and things made offences by this act shall be triable and punishable in Canada notwithstanding they were committed outside Canada, in the following cases:

(b) where any code word, pass word, sketch, plan, model, article, note, document, information or other thing whatsoever in respect of which an offender is charged was obtained by him, or depends upon information which he obtained, while owing allegiance to His Majesty in right of Canada.

I suggest that the new section 12A applies quite clearly to the offence of obtaining and passing on this information to which my hon. friend referred. If a Canadian or someone owing allegiance to Canada, not necessarily a Canadian citizen at all but a citizen of another country who does not possess diplomatic immunity or of a country which is not at war according to international law, goes away and discloses information he obtained in Canada, then the extraterritorial effect of 12A will apply and he can be convicted, though the offence did not take place within Canadian territory at all. Have I made my point clear?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, indeed, as far as the minister has gone, but he has not quite cleared up what I asked further, as to how wide is the effect of those words in subsection 2 which raise a presumption against him. That presumption, as I see it, in the case of persons of known character is that by communicating with the agent of a foreign power he can be presumed to have been giving information prejudicial to the safety and interests of the state. How wide is the effect of those words? Can these known communists now be prosecuted merely for going behind the iron curtain and having been shown there to have communicated with agents of a foreign power, even though you cannot prove what they said or did?

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend is as much a lawyer as I am, and he has paid me a very delicate compliment in asking for my opinion in the matter. I should think it would turn, would it not, on whether or not it appears that his purpose was prejudicial to the safety of the state? In other words, in the case of a man who had gone to Yugoslavia or Russia and given this information, that person would be charged. The prosecution would open its case and would proceed to prove it under the authority of this amendment just as though the offence had been committed in Canada. When it came to the application of subsection 2 of section 3, I should think that section would apply in relation to that offence which had taken place in Russia just as it would apply in the case of an offence committed in Canada. The purpose of making it extraterritorial is to have the offence triable in Canada although it took place in another country. As far as section 3, subsection 2 is concerned, I take it that is a provision of general application to all prosecutions under the act. I would be interested to know whether my hon. friend agrees with that view.

Mr. Fulton: I suppose the only way to find out is for the minister now to institute a few prosecutions against some of these people, as I hope he will.

Mr. Fleming: I am concerned with the opening words of section 12A, as to whether they go as far as the minister believes and as far as I am sure we would all like to see them go. Those words are:

> The acts, omissions and things made offences by this act shall be triable and punishable in Canada notwithstanding they were committed outside Canada, in the following cases—

The argument put forward by the minister has been that at the very least many offences under the act are not offences if they are committed outside Canada. Indeed his argument may go so far as to suggest that none of them are offences unless they are committed within Canada. It seems to me, however, this section does not expressly say that offences, in the cases referred to in paragraphs (a) and (b), if committed outside Canada are offences. It does not say that. We are up against the problem created by the rule of interpretation to which the minister made reference earlier, that legislation has no extraterritorial effect unless it so provides in express terms. No offence will be created under our law if the act is committed outside Canada, unless our legislation expressly provides that such an act becomes an offence. It seems to me these words fall short of saying that acts committed outside Canada become offences.

I draw attention to the fact that it is only the acts, omissions and things that are made offences by the act that become triable and punishable in Canada, but those acts, omissions and things are not offences under the act today. So it seems to me the words "shall be triable and punishable" are not enough. You must create the offence in the acts, omissions and things committed outside Canada. They have to be made an offence before the provision that they may be triable and punishable in Canada has any effect. Therefore as a matter of drafting and interpretation it seems to me we should have here a provision that such acts, omissions and things as are made offences by this act are offences notwithstanding that they may be committed outside Canada in certain cases. Then the provision that they shall be triable and punishable in Canada may follow.

I believe the point I am raising now would be bound to be raised by any counsel acting for an individual accused under this section, and I hope we are not going to leave open any door that might make it possible for that point to be argued successfully.

Mr. Garson: Earlier in the afternoon the hon. member for Lake Centre suggested that we should submit the substance of this bill to a committee of lawyers. I am inclined to think we are getting the same result at the moment. It is a very good result, and we are glad to have these suggestions and to treat them seriously. I must say I do not share the views of my hon. friend. It seems to me the Official Secrets Act states very clearly what shall constitute an offence under it. If that offence takes place in Canada it is triable and punishable in Canada. If it happens to take place outside Canada, heretofore it has not been punishable in Canada.

Mr. Fleming: Because it is not an offence under the act.

Mr. Garson: It is still an offence, but it did not take place here. That is where I differ with my hon. friend. However, it would not be hard to meet the view of my hon. friend, as long as in doing so we do not create more difficulty than we solve. I take it that what he wants is a statement something along these lines: "The acts, omissions and things made offences by this act, notwithstanding that they were committed outside Canada shall be offences under this act, and shall be triable and punishable in Canada in the following cases," and then go on with the balance of the section. I am quite agreeable to having this section stand so I may check on this point, because one of the purposes we expect to serve in a committee like this is to obtain the benefit of the views of hon. members. I can do that during the dinner recess.

Mr. Fleming: Then may I touch upon a couple of other points which the minister might be good enough to consider as well. In the first place may I ask what is the relationship of this new offence to extradition? Is this going to be an extraditable offence?

Mr. Garson: No, it is not an extraditable offence. If the hon. member was in the chamber when second reading was moved he may remember I said that the difficulty of actually apprehending an accused might not be so great as it would appear. Citizens in a friendly country such as the United States, who are guilty of this sort of conduct, would probably be deported and we would get them in that way. As I understand it, none of these offences under this act are at the present time extraditable.

Mr. Fleming: I think, so far as possible, an effort should be made to make offences of this kind extraditable. When we see now that there are gaps, which we are trying to close by extending the territorial effect of the legislation, I believe it would add greatly to the effect of the legislation if such offences could be made extraditable by treaty.

The other point I should like to mention relates to the final words in paragraph (b) of section 2 of the bill. They refer to "owing allegiance to His Majesty in right of Canada". I draw to the attention of the minister the fact that the words "in right of Canada" are not necessary because in the interpretation section of the act the point is already taken care of. Section 2, paragraph (a) of the act, provides that "any reference to His Majesty means His Majesty in the right of Canada or of any province". I think, therefore, those last four words are unnecessary.

I just mention also, Mr. Chairman, that it seems to me unnecessarily restrictive to the scope of allegiance to His Majesty to add "in right of Canada". I am not going to take up the time of the house to discuss the difference between allegiance to His Majesty in the right of Canada and allegiance to His Majesty in the right of some of his other dominions or possessions. I think when we are trying to make this statute as effective as possible, serious consideration ought to be given to removing confining or restrictive words such as those in the interpretation section, "in right of Canada or of any province". In other words to deal with those who are subjects of His Majesty as effectively as we can today the act should simply refer to "subjects of His Majesty", whether they are Canadian subjects of His Majesty or subjects of His Majesty in other parts of the commonwealth, because the offences against which we are legislating are just as deserving of condemnation in the case of any other of His Majesty's subjects as in the case of Canadian citizens. I offer that as a suggestion.

Mr. Garson: I thought when I was listening to my hon. friend that he perhaps was confusing allegiance with citizenship. Is this not the situation? An alien owes allegiance to this country while he is within the country, unless he has diplomatic immunity. What we are considering here is the trial in Canada of, we will say, an alien, who has obtained information while owing allegiance to Canada —that means while he was within Canada— and then has disclosed that information in another country. I do not think it would make much sense if you indicated he was owing allegiance to another country of the commonwealth because the prosecution is in Canada. He owes allegiance to Canada while he is here. I believe the phrase used in the bill is the proper and apt phrase. I believe it would serve no useful purpose if you said that, while he owes allegiance to, we will say the British commonwealth—

Mr. Fleming: It is still allegiance to His Majesty.

Mr. Garson: —while he owes allegiance to His Majesty in the right of Canada—in other words, if he obtains this information while he is in Canada. That is the whole point. He obtained the information while he was in Canada, and then he has gone to another country and disclosed it to that other country. The purpose of this amendment is to enable us to prosecute him in Canada for disclosing information, say in Russia, which he has obtained in Canada while he owed allegiance to Canada. It seems to me therefore that the reference to his owing allegiance to Canada is quite apt.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the section carry?

Mr. Fleming: No, the minister said it would stand.

Mr. Garson: This section will stand.

Section stands.

On section 3—Penalties.

Mr. Fulton: Will the minister say a word about the removal of the fine, which I am rather sorry to see. While I think the fine should not be made an alternative to a prison sentence, it would mean that a man could get off without a fine. I believe it should be left as a possible addition to a prison sentence. While I do not press it as an amendment to this act, I would like to see the fine left in the case of a corporation, because it was contemplated in the act that there would be a provision for a substantial fine in addition to the prison term which may be imposed upon the directors.

Mr. Garson: Under the new section the prison term has been increased to fourteen years, and the section goes on to provide:

> . . . but such person may, at the election of the attorney general, be prosecuted summarily in the manner provided by part XV of the Criminal Code, and, if so prosecuted, shall be punishable by fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding twelve months, or by both fine and imprisonment.

Now I believe that is why the election is provided for the attorney general, where he considers the offence to be of a less serious character, to proceed summarily. If proceeding by an indictment, you do so only in those cases of a serious character, in reference to which I would think no amount of fine would be regarded as a suitable punishment. I can see some point to what my hon. friend says, that it may be imposed in addition, but I should think if a man got a ten-year term there would be little likelihood of his paying a fine under those circumstances. As a rule a man pays a fine in order to escape going to jail. There would not be much likelihood of the fine being paid.

Mr. Fulton: There would be likelihood of a fine being paid if it were a corporation. A prison term may be imposed on the directors, but the corporation would not be hurt unless you had the right to impose a substantial fine on it. However I am not going to press it, but I am sorry to see that provision abandoned.

Section agreed to.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: We will revert to clause 1.

On section 1—"Office under His Majesty".

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, the point which my hon. friend raised in connection with this section was that we required, so that no doubt would arise, some definition of the phrase "agent of His Majesty" in respect of these corporations created by the crown. I suggest in that connection, after consulting with the counsel who drew this bill, that the remarks which I made previously are correct, namely, that the bill which we passed yesterday to amend our statute law makes it very clear that these various crown corporations are and can be in no respect anything except an agent of His Majesty.

We have amended the various crown corporation acts to this effect, that:

> The commission is for all purposes of this act an agent of His Majesty and its powers under this act may be exercised only as an agent of His Majesty.

Having regard to the fact that the only powers which these corporations possess are powers which are given to them by the statutes which incorporate them, and all these powers can only be exercised as an agent of His Majesty, it is inconceivable that they could act in any other capacity. Therefore we think that the present wording of clause 1 should stand the way it is. It is quite adequate for its purposes as it stands.

Section agreed to.

[Mr. Garson.]

On section 2—Offences committed outside Canada triable in Canada.

Mr. Garson: In connection with clause 2, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend made a point to which we gave consideration. Together we have worked out a wording which I think meets the point which was raised by my hon. friend and is quite satisfactory to the legislative counsel and to myself. If my hon. friend would move it—

Mr. Fleming: I move:

> That the first four lines of section 12A as enacted by clause 2 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:
>
> An act, omission or thing that would, by reason of this act, be punishable as an offence if committed in Canada is, if committed outside Canada, an offence against this act, triable and punishable in Canada, in the following cases:

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend raised one other point, namely, that the final four words of the section, "in right of Canada", should be deleted since the term "His Majesty" has already been defined in the Official Secrets Act as "His Majesty in right of Canada or any province."

Mr. Fleming: I move:

> That the words "in right of Canada" in clause 12A (b) as enacted in section 2 of the bill be stricken out.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time—now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Garson moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CHILDREN BORN IN CANADA TO DIPLOMATS, CERTIFICATES TO PERSONS LOSING CITIZENSHIP THROUGH MARRIAGE, ETC.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration) moved the second reading of Bill No. 315, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.

Mr. Green: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, when the Canadian Citizenship Act was passed by parliament in the session of 1946, the principal objective was the creation of a distinctive Canadian citizenship and the establishment of a procedure designed to instil in our new citizens from other lands an appreciation of the responsibilities and the privileges of Canadian citizenship. This change in our concept of citizenship in Canada was received with enthusiasm from many quarters and has continued to receive the active support of individuals and groups of persons across Canada.

However, as in all experiments with something new, our experience of the past three and a half years since the act came into effect on January 1, 1947, has revealed a necessity for clarification of some of the sections, the addition of certain amendments regarding which there has been a considerable public demand, and, in particular, to bring the act in alignment with recent changes that have taken place in the legislation of other countries of the British commonwealth.

Some of the minor changes which are proposed in this bill are definitions of the words "alien" and "foreign"; a definition of "Canadian ship" expanded to include aircraft; and the deletion of the definition of the word "consulate", to provide for registration under the regulations.

A new provision is that which excludes from the status of natural-born Canadian citizens the children born in Canada of parents who are the diplomatic or consular representatives of foreign governments in Canada, or who are employees in the service of these representatives. It is proposed that it would not be appropriate to permit children who come within this category to be designated as Canadians by birth.

A further important change, and one which has received considerable public support, is that which permits women who were British subjects by birth or by naturalization in Canada, and who lost that status by marriage to aliens prior to January 1, 1947, to be admitted to Canadian citizenship by a simple procedure and without regard to the question of residence. We have had many representations on behalf of these women, who, through no fault of their own, became aliens, and are still aliens, although many of them have never resided outside Canada. Under this amendment, their status will be restored with a minimum of delay.

There is also the case of a person born in Canada who, for one reason or another, became naturalized in a foreign country and thus became an alien. Many of these persons have since returned to Canada with the intention of spending the rest of their lives in their native country. It has been represented to us that these native-born persons should not be required to reside five years in Canada and to follow the procedure required of an alien who was not born in Canada, in order to be admitted to Canadian citizenship. It is proposed, by this amendment, to permit persons in this category to apply for citizenship, by a simple procedure, after a residence of one year in Canada.

A new departure in Canadian legislation is the proposed amendment under the terms of which certificates of Canadian citizenship may be granted to adopted or legitimated children if the adopter, or the legally recognized father, is a Canadian citizen.

Some of the countries of the commonwealth, more particularly India and Pakistan, have discarded the term "British subject". Therefore it has been found necessary to amend that part of the existing act which defines the status in Canada of a British subject who has acquired the status of British subject by birth or naturalization under the laws of any country of the commonwealth. The amendment provides for recognition of the term "commonwealth citizen", and, for the purpose of Canadian citizenship laws, gives it the same meaning as "British subject". This change, and the union of Newfoundland with Canada, necessitates several changes in the first schedule of the existing act. Under the amendment, Ireland and Newfoundland have been deleted from the schedule, and Ceylon, India, Pakistan, and Southern Rhodesia have been added.

There has been considerable discussion concerning the status of citizens of Ireland following the establishment of the Irish Republic and its severance from the commonwealth. This matter has been given very serious consideration in view of representations that the citizens of the Irish Republic who are in Canada should not be placed in the category of aliens. Admittedly, it has been difficult to arrive at a formula which would adequately define their status, particularly in view of the fact that Ireland is not a member of the British commonwealth and therefore cannot be included in the first schedule. I think, however, that the solution proposed in this amendment will meet the situation as it will, in effect, give citizens of the Republic of Ireland the same status as that enjoyed by British subjects in Canada.

Part III of the existing act provides for loss of Canadian citizenship. The bill repeals all of part III and substitutes new sections in which most of the former provisions have been retained, with a few exceptions. One of these permits, in the case of a Canadian who deliberately acquires nationality in an enemy country, a discretion that either he be held to his responsibilities as a Canadian citizen, or that he be deprived of such citizenship.

The other changes in the amendment to part III are of a minor nature, such as discretionary powers for the governor in council and the co-ordination of certain provisions.

There are certain clauses in this bill in which it is intended to make it quite clear that the minister has discretionary power to grant certificates of citizenship. In the existing act, there is a degree of uncertainty as to the extent of these powers, and for that reason these amendments have been included in the bill.

Another change in the existing act is one which provides for the validity and the recognition of certificates of naturalization granted under the Naturalization Act, chapter 77, R.S.C., 1906, or under similar earlier statutes, despite any statutory limitations. Because of these limitations, a person naturalized in Canada under the earlier statutes could not be recognized as a British subject, and did not have the status of a Canadian citizen if he was in the country of his origin and, under the laws of that country, was recognized as a citizen. The amendment will remove this limitation.

There is one other matter which I wish, briefly, to bring to your attention. It concerns clause 19 of the bill, under the terms of which it will be possible to continue, under the provisions of the Citizenship Act, proceedings which were commenced under the Naturalization Act. The reason for this amendment arises from the fact that, some months after the Citizenship Act had been in force, the Department of Justice ruled that proceedings which had been commenced under the Naturalization Act, and which had not been completed before the expiration of that act, could not be continued under the Citizenship Act as the objects were not the same. The application of this ruling has created considerable hardship, particularly among persons who had commenced proceedings in 1946. For these reasons, it is desirable that the act be amended to permit these persons to continue proceedings under the Citizenship Act, as though there had been no interruption.

The remainder of the bill is procedural, covering matters of renumeration and co-ordination. I am satisfied, however, that if this bill is adopted it will result in a definite improvement in, and a distinct clarification of, the Canadian Citizenship Act.

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Citizenship Act is one of the most important acts on our statute books. I believe the twentieth parliament of Canada had no greater accomplishment to its credit than the enactment of that act in the session of 1946. One recalls that the principle of the measure received the warmest support from all parts of the house, and that it was a major piece of legislation.

There have been in these four intervening years no amendments of any substance, and it is inevitable that after a period of four years some amendments should have become necessary in the operation of the act. Some of the amendments which have been indicated tonight by the minister are obvious in their nature and, I think, do not require elaboration.

One may, however, express a measure of regret that a bill of this kind, which is not a short one, and certainly not unimportant, should have been placed before the house on such short notice. Hon. members are now faced with a bill containing twenty-two sections which amend the act in some important respects. They had this bill placed in their hands just at noon today. All members are very busy at the present time between sittings of the house and sittings of many of the committees of the house which are working very hard writing their reports and bringing their deliberations to a close. I must express regret that an important measure of this kind is brought to us so late in the session, and that the house is asked to take it up on such short notice, which effectively precludes that careful study which a measure of its importance ought to receive. I think it is a measure which might very properly have been referred to the standing committee on external affairs, where its provisions could have been closely examined.

The comments one might feel disposed to make concerning the provisions of the bill may be more properly made in committee of the whole, because they relate to particular sections. It is very difficult to find a principle in a bill like this which one can discuss on second reading, because there are so many amendments which, for the most part, are not related to one another. I think, however, that some very good evidence will be necessary to establish the necessity for the additional ministerial discretion provided in these amendments and the added scope for the regulations, rather than having these matters dealt with by direct enactments of parliament.

There is one thing that perhaps calls for special observation, particularly by those members of this house who have Irish blood in their veins, of whom I am one. I am sure that it would have been a matter of profound regret on the part of hon. members of this house had a decision been made to consider citizens of Ireland as foreigners.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Republic of Ireland has severed ties with the commonwealth I am sure we all welcome the maintenance of brotherly relations with Irishmen, no matter from what part of the lovely green isle they may come.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all hon. members of the house welcome the amendments contained in this bill. I join with the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming) in regretting that the bill was not introduced earlier and perhaps referred to the external affairs committee where it could have been discussed fully although there may have been little in the bill requiring prolonged consideration. That may be the excuse that would be offered for the minister and the government bringing the bill down at this time.

This bill indicates the development of our common citizenship in the strange agglomeration of peoples called the commonwealth of nations. There are actually three methods of acquiring Canadian citizenship provided for in this bill. First, there is the recognition of the usual type of citizenship which we call British citizenship; then there is the new commonwealth citizenship which would include Pakistan, India and so on, and then we have the typically Irish sort of citizenship which is quite difficult to understand and define.

However, I think we all welcome the solution that has been found. The minister did not indicate that this is on a reciprocal basis. I do hope that citizens of Canada who reside in the southern part of the emerald isle will be regarded as citizens of that country in the same way as citizens of Eire are regarded as citizens of Canada.

I am glad to see that there has been a removal of some of the disabilities that existed. I note with considerable interest the change that is to be made in the status of the old citizenship certificates, to be found particularly on the prairies. In the homesteading days people in order to prove up their homesteads acquired what they thought was Canadian citizenship in the fullest sense of the word. Then it was found that, because of certain imperial statutes, they really would have to acquire new naturalization papers in order to receive all the benefits of our common British citizenship. I am quite sure that throughout the years there are thousands of people on the prairies who through ignorance have been exercising all the functions of citizenship, such as voting at federal elections and the rest, without having the legal right so to do. I am glad that those disabilities are being removed by this bill.

I am glad also that the status of citizenship for women is to be changed and I think that is a commendable feature of the minister's proposals. I suppose that these amendments are made in the light of the experience of the last few years and they certainly are in the right direction. I imagine the entire house, regardless of where hon. members sit, will welcome this measure and I do not think it will require lengthy discussion to get general approval.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 1—Alien.

Mr. Fleming: Paragraph (k) of subsection 2 refers to the Republic of Ireland. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar may wish to raise his point on this section. I had previously marked it to ask at this point as to the position of Canadian citizens in Ireland.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I feel, as do many other people in this country, that we could hardly do otherwise than we have done and I think the Republic of Ireland will feel that they can not do otherwise than grant to Canadians the same privileges that we are granting here. It has not been done as yet, but I think it will be.

Mr. Coldwell: Have you had discussions on the matter with the officials of the Republic of Ireland?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Yes.

Mr. Green: In the first schedule we find listed Australia, Canada, Ceylon, India, New Zealand, Pakistan, Southern Rhodesia, Union of South Africa and the United Kingdom. In which of those countries would the term commonwealth citizen be used as distinguished from British citizen?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): At the present time the United Kingdom, New Zealand, and Southern Rhodesia have legislation similar to this. In the case of South Africa their legislation is slightly different but is in practically the same terms. In the Asian countries the legislation in some cases has not yet been passed because they were only recently set up, but they have dropped the use of the words "British subject" and are not yet using "commonwealth citizen." It is expected that commonwealth citizenship will be recognized as such in their legislation.

Mr. Green: Would that include India, Pakistan and Ceylon?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Those are the three Asian countries.

Mr. Coldwell: Does the South African legislation still retain the term "British subject"?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): We understand that that is the case up to this moment.

Mr. Green: What about Australia?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): They have not passed legislation like this.

Mr. Higgins: Will this mean that St. Patrick's day will be officially recognized in Canada next year?

Mr. Knowles: Ask the Prime Minister.

Mr. Green: Why has it become necessary to define alien, which apparently is a new definition in the act?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The word "alien" is used in parts of the existing act and is being continued. The inclusion of citizens of the Republic of Ireland in the category of British subjects in Canada makes it desirable that we should define alien by excluding all others not within the group.

Mr. Coldwell: I suppose people from the colonial areas are defined as British subjects? I refer to the West Indies, crown colonies and so on.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Born after commencement of the act.

Mr. Fleming: In clause 2, subsection 1 of section 5, line 25 of page 2 of the bill, provision is made for registration of births "in accordance with the regulations". Those are the new words. Further reference is made to the regulations in line 27. Will the minister indicate what changes are now proposed in the regulations themselves, and in the scope given to the regulations under the scheme of the act?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): We found some difficulty with the old regulations in this way. In some places we have not been able to have the consul general do this work. In some places we have no consuls. In other places we have immigration offices, and we would like to extend the provision so that in the appropriate place the most convenient office would be the one in which these births might be registered. The regulations are designed to indicate in what particular office and under what circumstances births of Canadians born abroad will be registered.

Mr. Fleming: Are these regulations promulgated yet?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): No, Mr. Chairman.

[Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce).]

Mr. Fleming: Is it proposed to bring them into effect immediately after the adoption of the bill?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Right. We will give publicity to them as soon as they are made known.

Mr. Fleming: Is that the only effect of the regulations?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): That is all.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Conditions for retention of Canadian citizenship by persons born outside of Canada.

Mr. Fulton: With due respect to the hon. gentlemen in the other place, who I understand considered the bill and approved it before it came here, I wish to enter a protest, if that word is not too strong, against the substitution of section 6 of the bill for the old section 6 of the act. On reading the new section 6 one finds that it reads very clumsily because if you will look at 6(1) the operative words read as follows:

> A person who is a Canadian citizen under paragraph (b) of section 4 or under paragraph (b) of subsection 1 of section 5 ceases to be a Canadian citizen upon the expiration of one year after he attains the age of twenty-one years unless, after attaining that age and before the expiration of the said year,
>
> (b) if he, being a national or citizen of a country other than Canada, files in accordance with the regulations . . .

You have the phraseology that a person ceases to be a Canadian citizen "unless if he files in accordance with the regulations".

An hon. Member: Bad grammar.

Mr. Fulton: It is bad grammar, as my hon. friend across the way remarks. Furthermore, if you look at the first three lines of 6(1) you will find you are referred back to two previous clauses to find out exactly what the clause means whereas under the present section 6 the exact meaning and circumstances to which the section has reference are contained in the introductory words of the section. We have objection on two counts, that the exact circumstances to which the section has reference are not clearly set forth in the introductory words of the section, as they were in the old section, and that there is bad and clumsy draftmanship contained in the words, "unless if he files", which is quite meaningless. The explanatory note reveals that no change is made in the substantive law and that the purpose is to shorten the existing section. I submit they shorten it at the expense of clarity. Subsection 2 of the new section 6 merely takes the place of a proviso and makes no change in the substance of the legislation. Therefore, with due respect to the draftsmen who worked on the bill and to the hon. gentlemen of the other place who considered the bill before it came here, I earnestly submit that the new section is clumsy and lacks clarity. It purports to make no change in the substance of the legislation, and therefore it should be deleted and the original section 6 left in its present form.

Mr. Green: Is the minister not answering the hon. member for Kamloops?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Only to say that I do not agree with him.

Mr. Fulton: Do you think that the words "unless if he files in accordance with the regulations" are easy to understand or make sense in accordance with the rules of grammar?

Mr. St. Laurent: It is the same in the preceding one.

Mr. Knowles: You have to take it with the "and".

Mr. Green: There seems to be quite a change in this section from the old one.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The hon. member for Kamloops said there was not.

Mr. Green: I do not quite agree with the hon. member for Kamloops. As it was before, a person who was the child of a Canadian, having been born abroad, would lose his Canadian citizenship if he did not, within a year after attaining the age of twenty-one, apply for Canadian citizenship. Then there was a provision that if the country in which he lived permitted him to divest himself of the nationality of that country then he would have to so divest himself. Apparently the provision has been changed now so that this young Canadian must divest himself of the other nationality whether or not the other country provides for such divesting. That is the way I read the section in the bill. I think it is a good thing because the divesting, or declaration of renunciation as it is called, of his United States nationality, let us say, apparently must now be filed with the Canadian authorities whereas before it would have been filed with the United States authorities. Is that the difference in the new section?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): That is quite right.

Mr. Green: What about subsection 2 of the new section 6? That would seem to go pretty far because such a person can decide to be a United States citizen after attaining the age of twenty-one years, and he can then change his mind again and become a Canadian after fifteen or twenty years more. Why is that provision made? Once he makes his decision why is he given a second chance to change?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I do not think the hon. member has quite followed the purpose of subsection 2. Subsection 2 is intended to assist a person who, by the automatic result of subsection 1, loses his Canadian citizenship by not filing a declaration within the year after he reaches twenty-one. That is not to say he may have elected his other citizenship. He simply takes no action whatever. Under subsection 2 the minister may then permit him to make a declaration of resumption of citizenship at a later date than within one year after he reaches twenty-one. If in the meantime, however, he has taken any steps to become a citizen of the other country then of course he would not get the benefit of subsection 2.

Mr. Green: The section does not say so. As I read subsection 2 it really gives such a person more than one year in which to decide that he will be a Canadian citizen.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): After one year at the discretion of the minister.

Mr. Green: Should there not be some provision in the section so that he will not have this right if he deliberately takes United States citizenship, for example, upon becoming twenty-one years of age?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I do not think so. To repeat what I said before, this is designed to cover the person who took no steps to acquire another citizenship. It is only the man who loses his Canadian citizenship by operation of the previous subsection who gets the benefit of subsection 2.

Mr. Coldwell: There is one anomalous situation in regard to citizenship that has been often brought to my attention. A Canadian goes to the United States, signs an application for citizenship and gets what are called the first papers. When he gets those papers he takes an oath in which he declares—I am not going to try to give the exact words, but they are somewhat along these lines—that he renounces allegiance to all foreign princes and potentates, and particularly, in the case of a Canadian, to His Majesty King George VI. In other words he renounces his Canadian citizenship when he makes that declaration; but if he returns to Canada, having renounced our citizenship, he does not lose the right to exercise all the privileges and functions of a Canadian citizen. He is not even required to take out any declaration or oath of allegiance here, or to renew in any form his citizenship in this country.

That always struck me as a very anomalous situation. I remember that on one occasion several years ago the point was raised during a general election. A gentleman who was very active in one of the political parties, it does not matter which, who held office in the organization, was challenged with having taken out his first citizenship papers and having taken this oath; and I believe the matter was referred to Ottawa. The reply was that while he had taken that declaration, under our law he was still regarded as a Canadian citizen. Should not a person who has renounced allegiance to this country, which is really what is meant by renouncing allegiance to His Majesty the King, be required to take a declaration when he resumes his allegiance, or in other words his citizenship in this country? Has that point been considered?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I shall give it consideration. Of course at the moment we are governed by section 16 of the act with respect to loss of citizenship, and there it is required that he must acquire the nationality or citizenship of the other country.

Mr. Coldwell: He does not acquire it until he has taken out the final papers.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): That is right.

Mr. Coldwell: But he has renounced his allegiance to His Majesty King George VI. In other words by his own oath he has ceased to be a subject of the king or a citizen of Canada.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I shall give the matter consideration.

Mr. Cannon: I agree with the principle of section 6, but in connection with the remark I made a few moments ago I would ask the minister if he does not think that replacing the word "if" by the word "unless" at the beginning of paragraph (d) would improve the draftsmanship of the section.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I do not think we should introduce the word "unless" any oftener in this section. If we allowed it to stand for a moment we might consider whether we could eliminate the words "if he" at the beginning of paragraph (b) and insert the word "he" after the word "Canada" so the paragraph would read:

(b) being a national or citizen of a country other than Canada, he files in accordance with . . ."

Some hon. Members: That is better.

Mr. Chevrier: I move accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 4 agreed to.

On section 5—Grant of a certificate of citizenship.

Mr. Fleming: This is the first of a number of sections introducing the phrase "in his discretion" as applied to the powers of the minister. I do not wish to risk your displeasure, Mr. Chairman, by wandering too far from this section, but it may be that the minister will have an explanation relating to all the places where this new provision appears in the bill. May I draw attention to the fact that it appears in section 5, page 4, line 25; on page 5, in line 12 with respect to the power to grant certificates to British subjects and again in lines 25 and 45; on page 6, line 23 and line 48; on page 8, line 1; on page 9, lines 15 and 37; on page 10, line 42; on page 11, line 34, and there may be other places. Is there some statement the minister can make which would relate to all these, seeing that the phrase appears so frequently?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): As I indicated in my statement on the motion for second reading, there has been some doubt as to the authority of the minister to exercise his discretion under the existing act, as to whether he may or may not grant a certificate under certain conditions. In order to remove all possible doubt as to the discretion of the minister we are inserting those words in the sections which have been cited by the hon. member for Eglinton.

The position is simply this. At the moment applicants for citizenship go before county judges for examination. In certain cases it is not possible to produce in the ordinary way evidence which may be available to indicate that a person is not fit for Canadian citizenship. Under those circumstances it is felt that the minister is the person who should accept responsibility for refusing citizenship, and that is the reason for the insertion of these words. I must say that in the four or five months I have had to do with this act there have been occasions on which I have felt that persons should not receive Canadian citizenship. Having in mind the responsibility we owe to parliament and to the Canadian people, it was felt proper that someone in the government should accept responsibility for refusing certificates to certain persons who may apply.

Mr. Coldwell: Is the discretion ever used the other way, to grant citizenship when the county court judge finds that all the qualifications have not been fulfilled, as for example in the use of one of the two languages? Is discretion ever used to grant a certificate to a Chinese, for example, who has been resident in Canada for many years, who has been unable to acquire the language yet possesses all the other qualifications for citizenship?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I believe the practice has been for the minister to return the application to the judge for reconsideration, as the act now requires. Because of the uncertainty that has existed up to the moment I personally have not granted certificates under those conditions, preferring to send them back for rehearing.*

Mr. Coldwell: But you could do so?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Yes.

Mr. Fleming: In the case to which the minister referred, where he felt citizenship should not be granted, I take it the applicant had appeared before a county or district court judge and satisfied him as to his fitness to receive citizenship? The minister nods his head. I had an experience in the house not long ago, when I asked a question which was answered by a nod of the head, but the nod did not appear in Hansard. Would the minister mind replying to the question?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): What was the question?

Mr. Fleming: It was the question to which the minister nodded his head.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): All right; the answer is yes.

Mr. Fleming: Then I ask the minister what was the nature of those cases, because while many of the county court judges in the larger cities have to deal with large numbers of applicants, one would not like to think that great care is not being taken by the judges who have jurisdiction in this matter. We must ever attach greater rather than less significance to citizenship, and so much depends, in the administration of this act, upon how the county court judges exercise their functions under the act when applicants for citizenship appear before them. Would the minister indicate the nature of those cases in which he felt it necessary, even in the face of the favourable recommendation from the county court judge, to refuse citizenship?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, the situation is not quite that. Some judges felt that the present act, the one under which we have been acting, does impose upon the minister the final responsibility for granting certificate. They have discharged their duties by merely reporting to the minister the examination held on the various qualifications under the act, that is that the applicant has resided in Canada so long; intended to reside permanently in Canada; had some qualifications in language, and had some general understanding of our institutions, leaving to the minister what the judge considered was in fact the minister's decision to make. The recommendations in themselves are really not recommendations but are reports of, perhaps for lack of a better term, courts of inquiry. That is one group with which we have had to deal, in which the judge does not make what he considers a final recommendation.

The other group concerns those persons who, because of their past activities or perhaps their present activities, having in mind the discussion which took place in this house this afternoon, are not considered to be persons to whom we should extend the advantages and privileges of citizenship. In some courts in the country evidence of that nature is difficult to produce, because in doing so one might easily disclose the information not only on which it is proposed to deal with that particular application but other information which would affect others as well. Under those conditions, in some cases we have felt that we could not do other than deal with it through the minister rather than through the county judge.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the minister, in view of the latter part of his answer, if it is a correct inference that some attempt is made to review those applications even after they have come from the county court judge, before the certificate is granted, having regard to security reasons?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Right.

Mr. Fleming: In all cases?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): That is the intention here, yes.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): May I ask the minister, does that mean then that the real effect of section 5 of the bill is that there is no absolute right on the part of the applicant? The minister said that some judges regarded themselves as merely making a sort of preliminary finding of fact, the final decision being left to the minister. Does the minister intend to indicate that view is being approved, that is the judges now are merely to conduct a sort of preliminary survey? I wish the minister would make that clear to me. Actually, what is going to be the effect of this section on the minds of the judges? Is it going to clarify their position or are they still, in certain cases, going to take that attitude? Is it a matter that is left to the discretion of the judges?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, the attitude of the judges has varied a good deal on it, as I tried to point out.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): That is what surprised me.

See also page 4049.*

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): That is not to say that the judges have not been giving their best attention to those cases. It is for the very reason that some judges have felt that the present act still does rest with the minister the decision whether a certificate should be granted. They have discharged their duties in the light of that. They feel they are discharging them as the act intends them to do, by sending in a report on the nature of the hearing that has been held and the specific answers to the four or five qualifications I have mentioned. I would hope that in the next few months we can have more uniformity in those hearings by the judges. That is not a criticism whatever; it is merely because of a misunderstanding in the minds of many of them as to the intention of the act, a misunderstanding which is shared by others than judges.

We hope that parliament will, by passing this amendment, provide the discretion in the minister, but at the same time we will seek to have the judges apply the act in a uniform way so that recommendations will come forward as they formerly have under the act, together with any opinions they care to express.

Mr. Fleming: Where the minister proposes to exercise this discretion, what assurance will he give the house that some attempt will be made to exercise the discretion judicially and not arbitrarily. Where people believe they are legitimately entitled to citizenship, and believe they have fulfilled the requirements of the act will some opportunity be provided for a hearing of their cases?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): By another section there is a provision for a rehearing at the end of two years.

Mr. Fleming: At the end of two years, but that may be a long time to wait. If the minister, in a case of this kind, exercises his discretion to reject the application it seems to me two years is quite a long time to wait. Parliament is giving the minister a new discretion. No one is infallible. I think that where discretion is being conferred on the minister or an official, some attempt should be made to see that the discretion will be exercised in a judicial sense, and a hearing will not be denied where there are reasonable grounds for asking for it.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Yes, Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the hon. member that when this act was passed in 1946, along with him and I think almost everyone in this house, I heard the argument—in fact I think he made the argument—that this discretion should not be vested in the minister. I must say that argument appealed to me at the time and still does. Nevertheless I must confess that since I have been in this office I regret to say that I find persons applying for citizenship under our present system, and perhaps getting it, who, in view of the present circumstances, should not have those privileges. I feel that the minister should take the responsibility of refusing those applicants.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood).]

In so far as the practice in dealing with those applications is concerned, I can assure the hon. member that every facility will be given to those refused, and there will be no unreasonable disposal of any case.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the minister a question with respect to that part of this section which is over on page 5. It has the marginal note:

Grant to women who lost status of British subject through marriage.

I believe this is the part of the section to which the minister referred in his remarks on second reading. My question is, do the provisions of this section take care of all cases of Canadian women who married aliens prior to the passing of the citizenship act?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): In so far as we have been able to draft the section, the answer is yes. We would hope if we find a case which is not covered that we will be able to amend it quickly.

Mr. Knowles: In other words, that is its clear intention?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Yes.

Mr. Knowles: What is the case with respect to Canadian women who since the passing of the Canadian Citizenship Act married aliens, and who later wished to become Canadians again?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, the existing act permits them to retain their citizenship, and that has been covered since January 1, 1947.

Mr. Knowles: Is there any difference now, depending upon the nationality of the husband that the woman married?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): No, nothing depends upon that now for a person who has been married after the commencement of this act.

Mr. Knowles: That was the case prior to that, and that is one of the points being corrected.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): That is the point.

Mr. Rooney: Can the minister give me an answer to the question I asked a week or so ago in reference to those girls who were married and who were affected previously to the passing of the act of 1946?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The hon. member for St. Paul's was particularly concerned with respect to Canadian girls who married during the late war, and more especially as there were a great many Norwegian airmen and other soldiers in Toronto, perhaps the Toronto girls married Norwegian soldiers. The answer is that this section will give these girls an opportunity, on application to the minister, to become Canadian citizens.

Mr. Higgins: I have a couple of matters that I should like to discuss with the minister for a short time. There are problems that arise out of the union of Newfoundland with Canada, and particularly in regard to the former act known as the naturalization of aliens act of that province. Under that act a number of Chinese citizens of Newfoundland made application for naturalization as far back as 1947. As a matter of fact, I believe there is a member of the minister's staff in this section who at that time was a member of the department we knew as the department of home affairs, and who is able to verify that a number of applications were made at that time.

These applications were completed in the ordinary form, and I submit to the minister they should be recognized as regular applications. What has happened at the present time is this. All these bona fide applications have been disregarded, and these Chinese people have been told that they have to make new applications, a most unfortunate situation. I submit to the minister that he should take these applications into consideration, and not demand that new applications be made.

That is one point. The other one is this. By order in council passed I believe some time last fall it was agreed that all Chinese who had gone to Hong Kong by December 19, and who had relatives in Canada who had made application for citizenship prior to that time, would be permitted to bring the children or wives who were in Hong Kong at that time. Through circumstances over which these people had no control they were one, two or maybe three weeks late, some of them, in fact, only a couple of days. I would ask the minister in these cases, and under the particular section where he has discretion, and where he knows of the bona fides of these applications, to deal with them in the manner that they should be dealt with, bearing in mind that the communists are now controlling China, and that the people over there are undergoing great hardship.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I am not familiar with the details of the particular applications under the old Newfoundland act, but I would be glad to look into that and I can assure the hon. member that in my dual capacity of Minister of Citizenship and Immigration we may be able to give sympathetic consideration to it.

Mr. Higgins: Which will be appreciated.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Herridge: We object to these parrot calls of "carried" when discussing an important bill like this, and when a great deal of time is not being consumed.

I want to ask the minister a question. I think the answer affects him as Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and also as minister of Indian affairs. How is this provision of the act going to affect the wife of an Indian who is subject to limitation? If these amendments carry, can the wife of an Indian make application to become a Canadian citizen, and then as the wife of an Indian enjoy full Canadian citizenship rights?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I am not sure that I follow the hon. member. If he means that Indians are not Canadian citizens, then I must say that I do not agree with him, and I cannot follow the rest of his question.

Mr. Coldwell: Let me put it this way. The wife of an Indian, though, we will say, she is a Canadian citizen in every other respect, has certain limitations placed upon her.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Such as?

Mr. Coldwell: I am not suggesting that it is a good thing for a woman to be given the opportunity to go into a beer parlour, for example, but if a white Canadian girl is the wife of an Indian and wishes to go into a beer parlour she is an Indian under the law. There may be other limitations of which I do not know, but that one certainly does arise in one's mind. I am not anxious to see the wife of an Indian go into a beer parlour, I may say, but I am just raising the point because it is a very interesting one.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I agree it is interesting and that we probably could have discussed it on the bill that we allowed to stand today.

Mr. Coldwell: The minister does not answer the question, though. As minister of Indian affairs and of citizenship and immigration can he answer the question in one of these capacities? That is the point.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Had I been asked to answer the question on the bill that we stood over today my answer would have been different from what it is going to be now. The wife of an Indian becomes an Indian according to the Indian Act, and she thereby becomes subject to certain limitations that act places upon Indians. Those limitations do not in any way deprive her of citizenship as such; they are merely restrictions because of the fact that she lives on a reserve and is the wife of an Indian who comes within that section. That is the status, and I do not think there is any way of altering it except to alter the Indian Act.

Mr. Green: Subsection 4 of the new section 10 is apparently a new provision. It is described as:

> Grant to persons who lost status of Canadian citizen or British subject for reasons other than marriage.

Can the minister explain the reason for bringing in a provision of that kind? What were the reasons other than marriage which caused these people to lose citizenship?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): This may apply probably largely to Canadians who became United States citizens. Quite a few Canadians have gone to the United States, taken out citizenship and lived there for a number of years; but toward the end of their lives they tend to come back to Canada and seek to settle down where they were born or where they were brought up. These people have consistently felt that they should not be required to go through the five-year period of residence in order to regain their citizenship. Of course there are others as well as citizens who were naturalized in the United States, but it is intended to make the period one year's residence in Canada again, and after that we may give them a certificate of Canadian citizenship.

Mr. Green: One other question under section 10, which I believe is the key section of the citizenship act. We have had suggestions from the Canadian Clubs that there should be some more uniform method of welcoming new Canadians upon the completion of the procedure for obtaining citizenship. Can the minister tell us whether his department is taking any steps in that direction? I think the suggestions are very much worth while, and I would hope that the department might give some lead toward working out a good way of welcoming these new citizens.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The Canadian clubs have recommended a greater uniformity in the proceedings and in the ceremonies with respect to acquiring Canadian citizenship. As the hon. member knows, the educational classes leading up to citizenship are under the control and authority of the provincial governments. Through the citizenship branch we do contribute, as I have already explained on the estimates, to that work. In the proceedings before the county judges for the granting of citizenship of course each judge is in charge of his own court and may make of these proceedings what he wishes. However I think the Canadian Club has in mind some uniformity, with appropriate ceremonies at the end particularly. They have appealed to the department and, subject of course to the respective spheres of influence, we would hope we could work out a program which would be generally acceptable throughout Canada; and we are in fact corresponding for that purpose.

Mr. Green: The idea would be for the department to work out a program and then recommend it to the various naturalization courts.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): In the hope that they would accept it.

Mr. Green: In Vancouver the Canadian Clubs have done a great deal to make these proceedings very impressive.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): That is right.

Mr. Green: And I would hope that the minister might work out some uniform system.

Mr. Gibson: As a matter of policy, I am sure the minister is in accord with that suggestion of the Canadian Club, is he not?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Yes, subject only to this, that I do not want to have anything too uniform. I like a certain amount of variety in these things. Persons who took a real interest would probably want to do more than the minimum. However, I am in agreement that there should be some general program which would be acceptable to all.

Section agreed to.

Sections 6 and 7 agreed to.

On section 8—Part III, Loss of Canadian citizenship.

Mr. Green: The new section 8 provides for several new sections in the act, dealing with the loss of Canadian citizenship. I am interested particularly in the new section 15(2), the side-note of which states, "Where country at war with Canada". Then in the explanatory note we find these words:

> Subclause (2) is new and permits, in the case of a Canadian who deliberately acquires nationality in an enemy country, a discretion that either he be held to his responsibilities as a Canadian citizen or that he be deprived of such citizenship.

Would this provision cover the case of a Japanese born in Canada but who served in the Japanese forces? There has been quite a concerted drive to get these young men back to Canada, now that the war is over, and I would hope that this provision is wide enough to prevent that. I do not see why a man who served in enemy forces and who may have been responsible for killing our own men should be permitted now to come back to Canada as though nothing had happened.

I am afraid this section does not go far enough to meet that situation. If I am correct in my interpretation, then I suggest that it should be worded to include the recent war. If this means only that in future wars such provision will apply, it is not enough. We all hope it will never be so used, because we hope there never will be another war. But if it does not apply to the recent war, then I suggest to the minister that some amendment should be worked out which would make it applicable to the last war.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, it is not retroactive and does not apply to those who served against us in the last war. So that while it would apply in the future, it does not apply to those persons of Japanese origin who were born in this country, who were absent prior to the war in 1941, and who served against us.

Mr. Green: Then I suggest that the minister give some thought to including some words in subsection (2) such as "including the recent war". I believe the problem could be met by inserting some words to that effect. After all, our citizenship is of great value. Each one of us should place the highest value on Canadian citizenship. Yet if the law is to be that people, simply because they were born in Canada, can go away, fight against us in a war, and then after the war is over come back here, pick up their citizenship and carry on as if nothing had happened, then I think we are not placing a very high value on Canadian citizenship.

This is a problem which should be faced. As I said before I believe there is a determined attempt to get these young men back to Canada, on the ground that they were born in Canada. I would ask that the minister have this new section 15 stand until he can give some consideration to the problem I have raised.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Very well.

The Deputy Chairman: New clause 15 will stand.

Mr. Coldwell: It seems to me that this is a place where the minister might consider the suggestion I made earlier, respecting one who makes a declaration renouncing allegiance to our common crown—"by any voluntary and formal act other than marriage, acquires the nationality or citizenship of a country other than Canada, thereupon ceased to be a Canadian citizen." I will not suggest that that should be the wording, but I think the minister should consider it.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I will consider it.

The Deputy Chairman: Section 8 stands.

On section 9—

Mr. Fraser: I would refer to section 18(c). I have in mind a veteran of the first great war who is at present in the southern United States, and has had to be there for some few years. Is there any way he can retain his citizenship? I do not think he could stand the journey back, but he would like to retain it. This man is on pension from the Canadian government.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Is the gentleman a natural-born Canadian?

Mr. Fraser: Yes.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): This section does not apply, then.

Mr. Fraser: But his wife is not. How would it apply to her?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Is she a naturalized Canadian?

Mr. Fraser: Yes.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): She is covered by subparagraph (e).

Section 9 agreed to.

On section 10—Citizen of country in schedule has British subject status in Canada.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I think the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar asked a question earlier this evening about the status of those people living in the West Indies or Hong Kong at the present time. By this section we see that section 28 is repealed, and section 23 applies only to those countries mentioned in the first schedule, and not to the other colonies.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The British West Indies are crown colonies and are covered by the definition of "United Kingdom".

Section agreed to.

Sections 11 to 21 inclusive agreed to.

On section 22—Coming into force.

Mr. Fleming: Would the minister care to indicate when it is proposed to bring the act into effect by proclamation?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, if the regulations are available shortly we will bring it into effect as soon as we can. We think the regulations should be available in those places where they are likely to be used, particularly abroad. However, so far as we are concerned, I should imagine it would not be more than a few days.

Section agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Then we will revert to section 8.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day, and that section 8 stand in the meantime.

Progress reported.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDMENTS TO RATIFY INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION FOR SAFETY OF LIFE AT SEA

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. 303, to amend the Canada Shipping Act, 1934.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 1—British ship.

The Deputy Chairman: I might point out that this bill has been studied carefully by the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines and has been reported with amendments.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): Mr. Chairman, I should like first to deal with certain aspects of section 1 which defines British ship in the following terms:

"British ship" includes a Canadian ship.

I do not quite understand that definition and I am not quite certain why it is included in the section. A British ship is not otherwise defined in the act. We certainly are not extending the definition of British ship as contained in the British merchant shipping act because that could not be done by Canadian legislation. However, I am prepared to admit that such a definition may be needed here and I am anxious to hear why. If it is considered necessary, I suggest that we have in this section a wording similar to that in section 26 of the Canadian Citizenship Act which reads:

A Canadian citizen is a British subject.

The definition here should then read:

A Canadian ship is a British ship.

I make that suggestion at this stage and I hope it will receive the consideration of the committee. This section also defines Canadian ship and I am pleased to see this amendment being made in the Canada Shipping Act. This definition reads in part:

"Canadian ship" means a ship registered in Canada—

In all modesty I say that I am particularly pleased with this amendment because I believe I was the first member of this house to request some three or four years ago that this change be made. I also suggested this change on other occasions both inside and outside this house. In order to implement this new definition of a Canadian ship the bill amends the act further by repealing subsection 1 of section 3 of the act and substituting a completely new clause therefor. I shall not discuss that amendment at this stage but will reserve my comments until the appropriate moment.

I make that comment to stress my contention that the clause presently under consideration should contain an additional subsection which probably would appear immediately following subsection 16 and which would amend the definition of registrar as presently defined in the act. The definition of registrar is to be found in section 2, subsection 81 which reads: "Registrar means registrar of British ships." There should be a further amendment to this section to bring it in line with the amendments we are making and to make it read: Registrar means a registrar of Canadian ships. I ask that consideration be given to that suggestion.

This section also amends the definition of foreign ships, the amendment reading:

"Foreign ship" means a ship other than a British ship.

Here again I must confess that I fail to see any reason for this new definition. If the definition is meant to serve a particular purpose, that purpose should be stated clearly. If possible, it should be restricted to the object we have in mind. I expect some clarification of this point from the minister and ask that due consideration be given to the comments I have made in this respect. Those are all the remarks of a special nature that I wish to make in connection with this section.

I should like to deal now generally with the implications of the amendments contained in this section and the sections immediately following. As I said a while ago, the definition of Canadian ship is provided for in this bill and I consider that a step in the right direction. But I regret that our Canadian ships are not being protected against foreign competition in our coastal trade. This is of great concern to our shipping and shipbuilding industry. The fact is that our ships are discriminated against in certain ways to the advantage of ships of other nations which are engaged in the Canadian coastal trade. Let us review for a moment the present position of Canadian ships so far as Canada's coasting trade is concerned. At the present time our coasting trade is governed by part XIII of the Canada Shipping Act comprising sections 661 to 665 inclusive. Section 663 reads:

663. (1) No goods shall be transported by water or by land and water, from one place in Canada to another place in Canada, either directly or by way of a foreign port, or for any part of the transportation in any ship other than a British ship.

A similar provision has been made with respect to the transportation of passengers, and penalties are provided for the contravention of these provisions. It is further provided that no foreign-built British ship, regardless of where she is registered, is entitled to engage in the coasting trade of Canada without a licence obtained from the Minister of National Revenue. Exception is made, however, with respect to certain foreign-built vessels which were condemned as prizes of war, or ceded by enemy states to Great Britain or British nationals by the reparations commission during or after the 1914-1918 war. Similar provisions were made with respect to reparation vessels ceded to Canada after the last war.

In order for foreign-built British vessels to obtain a licence from the Minister of National Revenue it is necessary that a duty be paid of 25 per cent ad valorem on the fair market value of hull, machinery, furniture and appurtenances of such vessels. Section 665 provides that exceptions may be made to the foregoing by the governor in council. It is the custom of the Department of National Revenue to issue coasting licences to British ships, other than those which are foreign built, upon submission to that department of proof that the ships are entitled to operate in the coasting trade of Canada, and upon execution by the master and two others, usually officers of the company operating the vessel, of a coasting bond in the amount of $500 in accordance with form D-11.

The requirements to be fulfilled to obtain a coasting licence, in addition to the filing of the said bond, are as follows:

(1) Establishing that the ship was British built, that is, built in some part of the British commonwealth of nations, or that it comes within the description of the special exceptions referred to above.

(2) Production of a certificate of British registry to establish that she is a British ship, that is, registered in some part of the British commonwealth and wholly owned by British subjects.

(3) That her officers are properly certificated with British certificates of competency.

A coasting licence is not always required in order to operate in the coasting trade of Canada, but it is a convenience in order that the various requirements will not have to be established to the satisfaction of the collector of customs in each port from which the vessel may clear. The coasting bond requires compliance with the "coasting regulations of this dominion" but no such regulations have ever been issued to my knowledge.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member. The bill is a very voluminous one. I do not know whether or not it deals with the coasting trade but it seems to me that if the hon. member wished to discuss that subject he should have done so when the principle of the bill was under consideration on second reading. We are on section 1 of the bill, and certain latitude is usually given, but the principle of the bill has been decided upon and accepted by the house. The hon. member should make his remarks as relevant as possible to the section under consideration and not deal with the coastal trade if that matter is not contained in the bill.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): Mr. Chairman, speaking to the point of order, all the remarks I am making now are opening remarks which are necessary in order to discuss and, to my mind, intelligently understand what section 1 does when it defines a Canadian ship. We are creating by this definition a "Canadian ship" and before we accept it we should be clear in our own minds what we are doing, what such a ship is intended for and if it has a chance of survival. That is exactly what I am discussing. I shall try to be as brief as possible, but I respectfully submit that these comments are preliminary remarks that are essential to a discussion of this clause.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interrupt the hon. member as long as he deals with the distinction to be made between a Canadian ship and a British ship because it is in order for him to do that. He has been discussing coastal trade, however, and that is dealt with in section 661 of part XIII of the Canada Shipping Act. There is no amendment in the bill having to do with coastal trade. I think the chairman is quite right in saying that any discussion of that nature should have taken place when we were discussing the principle of the bill on second reading. There is no question of coastal trade involved in these amendments at all. I hope my hon. friend can deal with section 1 of the bill.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to making three speeches if necessary. I could separate my speech into three parts so that they would apply directly to clauses under study, but I think I am saving the time of the committee by dealing with them together at this stage. Then I will not have to come back to the same subject later on. I think the definition of "Canadian ship" has a definite bearing on the coastal trade and also the definition of "British ship". It is of great moment when we are considering the coastal trade of Canada. As I said a while ago, these are merely preliminary remarks, I shall be through with them in a few moments and then I will deal with the clause under consideration.

If I may be permitted to carry on, Mr. Chairman, in addition it is provided in section 65 of the Customs Act that equipment purchased or supplied or repairs made in a foreign country upon a vessel intended to be employed, or which is later employed, in the coasting trade of Canada, are dutiable if the vessel arrives in Canada within one year of the time such equipment is purchased or such repairs are carried out. The duty with respect to such repairs is 25 per cent ad valorem of the expenses of the repairs, and with respect to equipment it is the same duty as would be charged if such equipment had been imported into Canada in the ordinary course. The words "foreign country" mean any country other than Canada, whether or not such other country is within the British commonwealth of nations. This is my own interpretation, but I have been informed that this interpretation is not accepted by the Department of National Revenue. In the opinion of the department the expression "foreign country" does not include the countries of the British commonwealth of nations. It appears there is no legal basis for such an interpretation, but merely the practice of the department. It is my submission that the expression "foreign country" should include the other countries of the commonwealth, and steps should be taken to bring this about, either by changing the departmental practice in this regard or by defining the expression so there would be no possibility of misinterpretation.

With respect to the meaning of the words "foreign country" as used in the Customs Act, I refer the committee to the case of Cashin v. The King, 35, 4 D.L.R., 547, and particularly the following comment of Judge Angers at page 555:

> I think that, for customs purposes, a vessel which is not registered in a Canadian port, even though a British vessel, must be considered a foreign vessel.

I cannot emphasize too strongly the importance of the interpretation of this expression, not only to Canadian ship owners who are menaced by competition from British vessels, but also to Canadian shipyards and suppliers who would normally carry out the repairs and supply the equipment to vessels operating in the coastal trade of Canada. Indeed, to my mind it would be ridiculous that a Canadian or British ship owner could have his ship repaired in Great Britain or elsewhere within the British commonwealth and come to Canada to engage in the coastal trade without paying any duty on such repairs, though the ship might have all kinds of equipment obtained at lower cost in Great Britain or elsewhere in the commonwealth, whereas if that ship were repaired and equipped in Canadian yards with Canadian labour, using parts, equipment or machinery which had to be imported into Canada from those countries of the commonwealth, such machinery and equipment would be subject to the duty as set out in the tariff; if on the other hand the expression "foreign country" were construed as excluding the other nations of the commonwealth, this would be the logical result.

Similarly, Mr. Chairman, section 66 of the Customs Act provides that surplus stores of vessels arriving in Canada shall be subject to the same duties and regulations as if imported as merchandise. However, if the owner or master desires to put these stores in warehouse for future use on his vessel, the collector may permit him to do so. At the present time not only British vessels registered in Canada but all British vessels, no matter where they are registered or how they are manned, are given the same opportunity to participate in the coasting trade of Canada, with the proviso that if such vessels, whether registered in Canada or in any other part of the British commonwealth, are not British built, they must first obtain a licence from the Minister of National Revenue, upon payment of duty of 25 per cent.

If vessels registered in Canada could compete economically with vessels registered in Great Britain or other parts of the commonwealth, it might be argued that no restriction should be placed on British ships, which are not registered in Canada, operating in the coasting trade of this country, though even under those conditions many countries afford protection to their own vessels in their coastal trade in much the same way that air line companies of one country are seldom if ever permitted to carry passengers or air cargo from one place to another in a foreign country. However, the situation with respect to coastal shipping is even more serious than this. The costs of operating vessels registered in Canada, with Canadian wages and under Canadian working conditions, and with repairs and overhauls carried out in Canadian shipyards and with Canadian labour, are substantially higher than the costs of operating vessels registered in other parts of the commonwealth, and in particular in Britain. The Canadian maritime commission has given a great deal of study to these comparative costs, and I do not feel it necessary to go into further details concerning this condition.

The competitive advantage of vessels registered in the United Kingdom and other parts of the commonwealth has been further accentuated by the devaluation of sterling and allied currencies within the last year. From the point of view of Canada this problem has been aggravated through the union of Newfoundland and Canada. The trade between Newfoundland and the remainder of Canada, which heretofore has been serviced by vessels registered in Canada, is now menaced by the incursion of British vessels registered in the United Kingdom. It is obvious that if British vessels are permitted to operate in the Canadian coasting trade they will be able to drive out any competition from vessels registered in Canada, since they can be profitably operated on revenues which would not cover the operating expenses of a vessel registered in Canada.

An example of such competition was brought to my attention quite recently, when a Canadian company chartering British-registered ships decided to operate in the Newfoundland trade and sent out a circular letter to prospective clients which in part read:

> We are not quite ready to quote any rates, but rest assured that they will be lower than any competing services.

I had a further example of this quite recently also when I was informed that tenders had been called to carry iron ore from Havre St. Pierre to Sorel, and that the rates quoted by the owners of British-registered ships were as much as fifty per cent lower than those quoted by Canadian-operated and Canadian-owned ships.

Canada has faced a great problem in connection with her deep sea shipping, and government policy in this regard was announced by the Prime Minister in a statement in the House of Commons on December 9, 1949. Only a small portion of the present Canadian deep sea fleet will be maintained in operation during the coming year, and a subsidy of $3 million is being provided for this purpose, as it is recognized that without this assistance Canadian vessels could not compete successfully and continue to engage in international trade. Arrangements have been made for the remainder of the deep sea vessels to be transferred to registry in the United Kingdom, and operated under conditions prevailing there. It is obvious that unless Canadian shipping, that is ships registered in Canada and operated under Canadian conditions, are given protection against competition from vessels of other nations, including vessels registered in the United Kingdom and other ports of the commonwealth, such Canadian vessels will be in the same position in the coasting trade of Canada as other Canadian vessels now find themselves in the international or deep sea trade. Ships registered in Canada may find themselves competing—I ask the committee to pay attention to this sentence—with ships now being transferred from Canadian to British registry. It is also feared that competition may be expected from ocean-going British vessels picking up cargoes in the maritimes when proceeding inbound in ballast or with a partial cargo bound for Quebec and Montreal, and often at what might be termed "sacrifice rates". With the development which is expected to take place within the next three years on the north shore of the gulf of St. Lawrence, as well as the development of the St. Lawrence seaway, further opportunities for competition from vessels registered in the United Kingdom and other parts of the commonwealth may be anticipated.

If Canada is to retain any merchant fleet and any body of men capable of maintaining these vessels in time of emergency, it is necessary that protection be given to the operation of vessels registered in Canada in its coasting trade, particularly in view of the decline of Canada's deep sea fleet. It is not only the vessels which are maintained in operation in the coastal trade or even the trained men who man them and who would form a nucleus for expansion in time of emergency who have to be considered, but also the shipyard workers whose services are required in repairing and maintaining these vessels in good condition. It is my submission that it is necessary to take action immediately to protect Canadian vessels and Canadian operators from competition which they will otherwise be unable to meet.

The British commonwealth merchant shipping agreement, which was entered into between the governments of the various parts of the British commonwealth, does not permit immediate restriction of the coastal trade of Canada to vessels registered in Canada or to our newly-born "Canadian ship." One year's notice is necessary in order to change any of the provisions of this agreement. This agreement, and particularly the provisions relating to the right of vessels registered in any part of the commonwealth to operate in the coasting trade of any other part on the same terms as ships registered in such part, are entirely favourable to the United Kingdom and possibly to some of the parts of the commonwealth, and are and have been of no benefit to Canada. On the contrary, for the reasons submitted before, they are a serious detriment to Canada. It is recognized that vessels registered in Canada could never compete with vessels registered in the United Kingdom in the coasting trade of Great Britain. It is noteworthy also that the United Kingdom permits not only British vessels registered in other parts of the commonwealth but also foreign vessels to operate in its coasting trade. I understand, however, that the British government has been seriously concerned of late by competition British vessels receive in the coasting trade from Norwegian and other foreign vessels, and is considering restricting its coasting trade, although probably such restriction will be merely to British ships. This is true notwithstanding the fact that British operating costs can be favourably compared to Norwegian costs.

It is realized that there will be certain vessels registered in Great Britain which are now and have been for some years operating in Canada's coastal trade, and that it might be inadvisable to prevent such vessels from continuing to engage in our coasting trade without adequate warning. Exceptions to the policy I am recommending might be made for limited periods with respect to these vessels, particularly if it is found that there are no other vessels registered in Canada which are in a position to carry out the service being performed by such British vessels.

In order to solve this urgent problem, there are two steps which this parliament might take. The first is that notice be given to the signatories of the British commonwealth merchant shipping agreement that it is the intention of Canada to change its coasting laws so that the coasting trade of Canada will be further restricted to vessels registered in Canada, owned, manned and operated by Canadians, and that this change will be made on the expiry of one year from the date of the notice. This is the ideal way of solving the problem, but I know that there have been serious objections made to this plan for dealing with the situation, and I understand those objections.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is another way open to us. The following action should be taken immediately, and this is in conformity with the British commonwealth merchant shipping agreement: First, we should promulgate coasting regulations applicable to all vessels operating in the coasting trade of Canada, providing that such regulations applied equally to vessels registered in Canada as to vessels registered in other parts of the British commonwealth. This would not abrogate the provisions of article 11 of the British commonwealth merchant shipping agreement. Article 11 especially provides that each part of the British commonwealth may regulate its own coasting trade, but that any such law or regulations shall treat all vessels registered in the British commonwealth in the same manner. It is suggested that these regulations should include the following:

1. Vessels operating in the coastal trade of Canada should be required to maintain certain standards of wages and working conditions. It might be undesirable to set forth the actual wages and working conditions which should apply, so in this event I would suggest that perhaps the following or some similar phraseology be adopted. All officers and men or other persons employed on vessels engaging in the coasting trade of Canada shall be paid, in legal currency of Canada, such wages as are generally accepted as current from time to time for competent employees in the district in which said trade is being carried out for the character or class of work in which they are respectively engaged.

2. All officers manning a vessel engaged or about to engage in the Canadian coasting trade should be properly qualified to carry out the coasting service. The coasting regulations could provide that any holder of a Canadian coasting, home trade or inland water certificate, would be assumed to be properly qualified for voyages to which their certificates apply.

Since under the Canada Shipping Act the holder of each grade of certificate is entitled to all the rights and privileges of holders of certificates of lower grades, the holders of foreign-going certificates would also be accepted as properly qualified for the coasting trade of Canada, whether on home trade or inland water voyages. However, holders of certificates issued in other parts of the British commonwealth should be required to establish to the administrative authority that they are properly qualified to engage in the coasting trade of Canada, and, for this purpose, to submit to either an oral or written examination. It might be assumed that engineer officers holding proper certificates of competency issued in other parts of the British commonwealth are properly qualified to act in such capacity in the coasting trade of Canada but it is quite reasonable that deck officers, who have a general qualification certificate to proceed on international voyages, may not have the required local knowledge to ensure the safety of a vessel, including her passengers, crew and cargo, operating, for example, in the coastal waters of Newfoundland or of the St. Lawrence river. Such regulations and requirements were anticipated and are permitted under article 17 of the British commonwealth merchant shipping agreement, which reads as follows:

Article 17—Subject to any special provisions that may be made by any part of the commonwealth as to the qualifications to be required of officers on ships engaged in its coasting trade, a valid "certificate of competency or service granted by one part of the commonwealth will be recognized throughout the British commonwealth as indicating that the holder is duly qualified accordingly when serving on board any ship registered in that part."

3. Before any ship is allowed to engage in the coasting trade of Canada, the owners of the vessel should be required to satisfy the administrative authority that they have sufficient assets in Canada to reimburse His Majesty the King in right of Canada for any expenses incurred by His Majesty the King in right of Canada in connection with such ship, her master or a member of her crew. With respect to ships registered in Canada, such assets must be disclosed to the registrar of shipping at the time of registration or else security in the form of cash or government bonds or the bond of a recognized surety company must be deposited with the registrar, prior to the registration of such ship. This is in accordance with section 21 of the Canada Shipping Act. The declaration to the registrar or the security deposited with the registrar by the owners of vessels registered in Canada under section 21 of the Canada Shipping Act could be accepted as compliance with this requirement of the coasting regulations. The amount of security required according to the present departmental practice is one dollar for each ton of the vessel's gross tonnage and $50 for each member of her crew, including the master of the ship. It is reasonable that vessels not registered in Canada should be required to provide this security since His Majesty the King in right of Canada may be exposed to expenses with regard to such vessels when operating in the coasting trade of Canada regardless of where the vessels happened to be registered. Amongst those expenses which are contemplated are the expenses which may be incurred in respect of raising or destroying a ship which has foundered and forms an obstruction to a navigable channel.

The fourth action which could be taken in regard to these coasting regulations is that the owners of any vessel applying for a coasting licence should be required to establish compliance with section 65 of the Customs Act and should be required to produce an affidavit to the effect that no such repairs or equipment have been received by the vessel within the year prior to arriving in Canada or else give the details of such expenses of repairs and equipment together with proof that the duty provided for in section 65 has been paid. They should also establish compliance with section 66 of the Customs Act.

5. The obtaining of a coasting licence should be made mandatory instead of being merely a matter of convenience and no clearance should be given to a vessel on a coasting voyage unless such coasting licence is produced.

It is further suggested that the administration of the coasting regulations and the authority to grant coasting licences should be taken from the Department of National Revenue and placed under the Canadian maritime commission, so that there will be uniformity in the administration of the coasting regulations and the issuance of the coasting licences. No coasting licence, of course, would be issued unless the issuing authority was satisfied that all requirements, including compliance with the coasting regulations, had been fulfilled.

Provision might be made in the regulations to authorize exceptions to the above regulations with respect to vessels which are now and have been for some years operating in the coasting trade of Canada, when it is found that there are no other vessels which can comply with the regulations, which are in a position to carry out the service being performed by such vessels. No exemptions should be granted for more than twelve months, but applications might be made for renewal.

Before closing my remarks I wish to add that these recommendations have been carried out by other countries of the British commonwealth which were signatories to this merchant shipping agreement, and to my knowledge these countries have remained as good and as faithful members of the British commonwealth of nations as we can ever expect to be able to claim ourselves to be. The countries which have passed similar coasting regulations are Australia and New Zealand. In a news-letter which was sent recently to all members of the house by the Canadian Shipbuilders Association entitled "The Antipodes Show us a Way" we were given the history of these regulations. For example, Australia's navigation act, which is the counterpart of the Canada Shipping Act, for years has given its ministry discretion to restrict the trade to vessels paying crew wages at current Australian rates and providing standard accommodation. In New Zealand, the Shipping and Seamen Act has a similar proviso on wage rates and manning scales. That means the home ships get the business.

And just last year, Australia has gone one step further to protect its shipbuilding industry. By the Shipping Act, 1949, coastal licences are reserved to ships less than twenty-four years old at the date of application and built in Australian shipyards or were, at any time prior to the passage of that legislation, engaged in trade exclusively between places in the Commonwealth of Australia.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member has exhausted his time.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): I conclude by saying that my recommendations can be implemented and should be implemented, and that the operators of vessels registered in Canada will be better satisfied if they are protected at least in part from the unfair competition of vessels employing persons at lower wages and obtaining equipment and having repairs carried out in a foreign country without using Canadian shipyards, and at a cost lower than such repairs can be made elsewhere.

Let me say this to the committee through you, Mr. Chairman: Let us not try to be more British than the British themselves, even if only for this good reason, that they have a right to claim ultimate perfection in this regard. This may be one of the greatest of their many fine qualities. The commonwealth merchant shipping agreement gave us the privilege of implementing all of these suggestions. Other countries of the commonwealth have done it and, as I said a while ago, they have remained as faithful and as good members of the commonwealth as we may ever be able to claim to be.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, when this bill was before the house for second reading I made a few remarks. Since then we have had the opportunity of considering it in the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. Therefore I have no intention of going into detail on the first section of the bill. I do hope to say a few words about the plan to license outboard motors, and also with regard to the need for having radiotelegraph on our coastal ships. However that can be done when we reach those sections.

On this first section I should like to say that I believe the international convention for the safety of life at sea should be accepted by Canada. It stands as a schedule to the bill, and I do not believe there can be any doubt that Canada would derive great benefits by accepting that convention. I believe it is the intention of the government to do so, and to have the convention formally approved before the end of the present session.

The Canada Shipping Act is a very important statute, and a very long one. There are not many members in the House of Commons who have reason to take much interest in the working out of this act. In fact, even for those of us who live in the coastal ridings the act is somewhat of a mystery. We did not have a very good opportunity in committee to consider the amending bill. At this stage of the session it is difficult for a committee to go into detail in dealing with any question. I wish the bill had been dealt with at a much earlier stage in the session, so that it could have been given more careful consideration. However, that is now water over the dam. I do suggest to the minister, however, that some arrangement be made in his department to go over the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act carefully, and that he allow it to be amended more readily in the future than has been done in the past.

There was an amendment in 1948, and I believe the only amendment before that was in 1938; the original act was passed in 1934. So far as I know there have been no other amendments, so that the act has not been given a great deal of consideration by parliament. It is of much too great importance to be treated in that way. Careful consideration should be given to it, and I hope that the minister and his department will review all the suggestions which came out during the discussion in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and that it may be possible to bring in any amendments during the next session at a much earlier stage so that they may be dealt with more adequately.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, I too was a member of the committee that considered this bill. As a rule I like to be able to come to the house and say that I was satisfied with what was done in committee, and that all that could be done was done. However I was not entirely satisfied with one phase of this bill.

This evening the hon. member for Gaspe took more than forty minutes to make what I considered was a good basic case for the shipping industry in this country. I understand he is engaged in that business. I listened to him carefully because, coming from the east coast, I have discussed this question on several occasions with people who are engaged in that industry, and it seemed to me that tonight the hon. member voiced about the same opinions as I have heard expressed from time to time. My reaction is that unless we do something with regard to the industry itself, we will not need a shipping act in another couple of years, so far as Canada is concerned.

I shall not take more than a few minutes to discuss the first section of the bill. I am not satisfied with the bill in that it includes a British ship as a Canadian ship, and a Canadian ship as a British ship, and grants the rights and privileges to a British registered ship to ply the coastal trade in Canada.

The hon. member for Gaspe suggested that the Canadian government was trying to be more British than the British, and that it was because of sentimental attachment to the British commonwealth that we were extending this privilege to British ships. That is not my conception of it, and I believe my view is supported by documentary evidence when I say that money is the nigger in the woodpile. I believe those who ship coastwise in Canada, and overseas, have come to the conclusion that it is much cheaper to use British ships in their transportation by water than to use Canadian ships. As a result Canada is gradually folding up her merchant service and British shipping interests are taking over, not only in overseas shipping but also along the coast.

The United States does not permit this. In their coastal trade they have regulations which state that no other ships shall ply the coastal trade of the United States. There is no fear in Canada of competition from American ships, because American wages and costs are much higher than Canadian, and it would not be profitable from a monetary point of view for Canadian shippers to use United States ships.

Great Britain does not prohibit Canadian ships from plying in her coastal trade but because of their operating costs Canadian ships are not able to take any business from the British interests. As the hon. member for Gaspe pointed out a few moments ago, Australia and New Zealand have taken steps to prohibit the participation in their coastal trade of any ships which do not have wage rates and standards comparable to those of New Zealand and Australian ships. I objected to this clause in the committee and I was led to believe that no change could be made because of the commonwealth agreement, but in checking over since and listening to the hon. member for Gaspe tonight I find that that is not true. Regardless of the commonwealth agreement, Canada is still master in her own house and can make any changes necessary to benefit our merchant fleet.

There are a lot of people in this country who are concerned about this matter. The merchant marine in Canada could be a great industry and it is necessary to a country that exports such a large portion of its production. I have received resolutions, and no doubt the minister has also, demanding that the Canadian government take steps to protect the merchant service of this country through means along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Gaspe.

I am afraid that the perpetuation of the rights of British ships to ply our coastal waters is a studied policy. I say that advisedly because I have in my hand the 1949 report of the Canadian maritime commission. The Canadian maritime commission was set up on the demands of the shipping industry and those in the industry that something be done to stop the trend in the loss of shipping business and the scrapping of our merchant fleet. A reading of that 1949 report would indicate that the commission, rather than attempt to devise ways and means of protecting the merchant fleet of this country, did just the reverse. I should like to quote one section which I think is pertinent to this discussion from page 44 of the report as follows:

> The case for the abandonment of Canadian flag shipping rests on the thesis that the nation or nations which can give the best service at the lowest cost should conduct the carrying trades. Canada is primarily interested in selling her products abroad and it is immaterial under what flag those products are carried. The cost of operating a Canadian flag ship is the second highest in the world. The average daily operating cost, excluding fuel and depreciation, of a standard 10,000-ton Canadian deep-sea ship is $810.50 as compared to $525.46 in respect of a similar vessel of United Kingdom registry. The industry is disorganized by constant labour troubles both of a major and minor nature. If Canadian ships cannot compete in the international market, the business of shipowning should not be encouraged in this country. Moreover the present inconvertibility of foreign currencies poses major problems in securing cargoes and in the payment of freights. The volume of our export trade depends upon the ability of our customers to pay for what they buy.

That report definitely recommends the abandonment of the Canadian merchant fleet on the grounds of cost. If that suggestion is followed through, why not go to Japan or some other country where costs are still cheaper? Why is not the same recommendation made in connection with every commodity imported to or exported from this country? There is no use trying to fool ourselves. As long as we leave the Canada Shipping Act as it is now we are not going to have a merchant fleet.

I am interested in this because a large portion of the section of the country from which I come is directly affected. That is one reason. Secondly, I am a Canadian.

Despite the fact that we are in the commonwealth of nations I am not going to consent to the standards of any section of the Canadian people being pulled down because we can get something a little cheaper from some place else. The trend in this country and on this continent is to build up standards. Time was when those who operated ships in this country used to use Japanese and Chinese crews because they could get them more cheaply, but since the industry has been organized they cannot do that any longer.

But another trend is developing and British registry ships are being permitted to operate even though the wages they pay are fifty per cent of what we pay and their operating costs are much lower. The result is that our own ships are being beached because these other ships can be obtained much more cheaply. I realize that there are difficulties in the handling of exports to and imports from other countries, but I say it is definitely the responsibility of the Canadian government to protect coastal shipping in Canada.

The hon. member for Gaspe has suggested two ways in which that can be done. Under the commonwealth agreement the Canadian government has the right to make regulations along the lines of those passed by New Zealand and Australia so that ships plying our coastal waters would have to conform to the standards and wage rates enjoyed on Canadian ships. If that were done there would be no more difficulty because British ships would not be able to come in and underbid on cargoes as they are doing today.

This country needs a virile merchant marine. We trained a lot of sailors during the war. Until such time as the thinking of those who make policy for the government in the matter of building up and maintaining our merchant service is changed, we are just going to continue to go on and on and our merchant fleet will peter out. There has been a terrific loss in the last couple of years. If we go on for the next couple of years as we have been there will be no need for an act at all.

I do not want to take up any more of the time of the committee but I submit that the minister should seriously consider bringing in regulations to protect our coastal trade, and as soon as possible. On the other hand there is the second alternative suggested by the hon. member for Gaspe, namely, that the commonwealth nations should be notified that a year from now we intend to ask for revisions and changes in the commonwealth agreement. The thing seems so ridiculous. First of all you hold a meeting of sixteen nations where wages, working conditions and safety regulations are discussed. Then the convention is taken to the respective governments and an act is passed in the different countries embodying its contents. We write an act that practically hands over our shipping to British interests because they are not conforming to the standards maintained on the ships of the United States, Canada, Australia and New Zealand.

I think it is a wrong principle in the year 1950 for the government of any country, so far as any of its industries are concerned, to start to lower standards in order to enable another country to take your business from you, thus causing the scrapping of what should be a large industry in Canada. I hope the minister will consider these two recommendations and see what can be done for the protection of our coastal trade. I have not much quarrel with the remainder of the bill. It is merely a matter of incorporating safety provisions adopted at the 1948 convention, and then there are some minor matters which needed adjustment. As to the protection of our coastal trade, however, referred to by the hon. member for Gaspe, I think the government should do some serious thinking and take immediate action.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On section 9—Regulations by governor in council.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I was a member of the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines which considered this measure in detail in the last few days. Therefore I am not going to take the time of the committee to repeat to any extent the arguments I advanced on this section at that time. I want to say that I know the members of the standing committee expressed admiration for the manner in which the minister's officials answered questions asked by members of the committee. It was obvious to members of the committee that the minister has most efficient staffs in the various branches of the service which were represented at the meetings of the committee.

I am in agreement with the general principle of this section because I see the necessity for it. I believe that small powered craft should be licensed for the protection of life and of the public generally. The minister's officials mentioned the necessity for life-saving and fire prevention equipment, and things of that sort. I heartily agree with that. I have seen quite a number of cases where people's lives were endangered because small craft were not seaworthy, were not equipped with fire protection apparatus and so on. I have also known of cases where people using small craft with high-powered inboard or outboard motors were a menace to navigation and to other people because of their failure to recognize the rights of others. Therefore I am heartily in agreement with the principle of the section.

Paragraph (a) provides that the governor in council may make regulations providing for the licensing of vessels equipped with detachable motors. I think that goes a bit too far. If the governor in council has that power, then in theory they could require the registration of every outboard motor in Canada. There are a lot of working people and operators of small resorts who use outboard motors of 1½, 2½, 3½, 4 or 6 horsepower. From my experience craft so equipped are not a menace to other people or to navigation.

I have given this question some consideration since the committee met. I moved an amendment to the section in the committee providing that licensing would not be required for boats with detachable motors of 5 horsepower or under. After thinking the matter over, and talking about it with members of the house of all parties who have the same problem in their own districts, I have decided to change the amendment to 8 horsepower. I wonder why the minister laughs. Therefore I wish to move:

That clause 9 be amended by adding thereto immediately after the word "motors" in line 32 thereof the following words: "of more than eight horsepower."

I think members of the house will see the point I am trying to make. In the first place I think the inclusion of the hundreds of thousands of low-powered boats would create a lot of extra work and unnecessary expense for the department from an administrative point of view. I am chiefly concerned, however, with the man who has a small fishing boat or the resort owner with small boats that he rents to others. Such craft do not create a hazard and are not a menace to the safety of others. Therefore I hope that members of the house representing people who use outboard motors extensively will see fit to support the amendment.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister will see fit to accept the amendment. As the section in the bill now reads, there is no restriction whatever. It gives the governor in council the power to make regulations providing for the licensing of all vessels equipped with outboard motors. In the committee it was explained that the department in drawing up the regulations might not go that far and might not include all outboard motors, but surely it is a wrong principle for the department to take power which is wider than needed. It is admitted that they do not need such wide power. There is no reason why outboard motors of small horsepower should be licensed. They are not the ones that are causing the trouble.

It was made clear in the committee that the difficulty arose because some of these faster outboard motors were constituting a hazard for traffic on the crowded waters of Canada such as the Detroit river and the harbours of some of the large cities; but there must be hundreds of thousands of outboard motors in use in Canada on thousands of lakes. Canada is a country of lakes, and I submit it is not sensible at all to have a law compelling the licensing of all outboard motors. Surely all we need to do is meet the problem, and that problem is raised by the fast boats.

In committee one of the hon. members pointed out the effect that licensing would have on the tourist trade in Canada. As everyone knows, that is one of our main industries. Thousands of Americans come here in the summer, and many of them bring outboard motors. If this general power is taken to license all vessels with outboard motors, those Americans with small motors also will be subject to registration.

Much more could be said, but I urge the minister to agree to make some change in the bill. If eight horsepower is too high, perhaps a different figure could be fixed, but to simply take general power to license all outboard motors is going too far. I hope the minister will see his way clear to accept the suggestion and agree on some definite figure.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): May I add just a word before the minister gives a negative answer to this. I really believe he may be going to co-operate, but I just want to add this. I suppose every man passes through a time of life when he is a reactionary, and personally I think it is very much open to question whether the inventor of the outboard motor was a benefactor to humanity. However, that is just something on the side and quite irrelevant to this discussion, merely a matter of personal prejudice. I suggest to the minister, who is a real lawyer, not just a half and half lawyer like myself, that there is a Latin maxim which covers this point. It is de minimis non curat lex, which I believe means that the law does not take care of tiny things. So I hope he will see his way clear to fall in with this suggestion.

Mr. Thomas: I support this amendment wholeheartedly. I believe the section as it now stands is entirely too far-reaching. The average one and a half or two horsepower outboard motor is useful only to those who desire to go fishing, who travel at slow speeds. The boats that should be licensed and have some identifying number or mark are those that travel at high speeds. Personally I do not know whether or not eight horsepower is where the line should be drawn, but I do think the line should be drawn somewhere so that boats which are actually menaces on the waterways of the country can be identified in case they have broken any rule or law or have endangered other boats or swimmers, but I do not think it should apply to the small outboard motors.

Mr. Higgins: With all due respect to my learned colleague the hon. member for Greenwood I do feel that small things, in the sense of outboards, are very important, at least in the part of the country now recognized as the tenth province. Definitely in my province small motors, up to eight horsepower, are a very important part of the routine proceedings of the ordinary day in the summer, and in fact most of the year. To suggest that they must be licensed, that people must go through the routine of applying to a collector of customs and painting a number on their boats, and all the rest of it, seems a bit ridiculous. I am sure the minister is not going to impose that upon us. I understood the intention was to give the minister power to make these regulations if he deemed fit; but, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has said, these powers are rather sweeping. I should hope the minister would agree that a boat no longer than sixteen feet, with an outboard motor of not more than eight horsepower, cannot do very much damage to anybody and is not likely to be careening around the water at such high speed that traffic cops would be needed. This is only going to inconvenience a great many people. I do not think only of Ontario and Quebec when I speak of a tourist program. The newest province has a big tourist program in view, and if we have to go through this licensing and numbering and all the rest of it, the next thing may be a regulation requiring all boats equipped with outboards to carry tail lights and running lights.

I hope the minister will not regard these remarks as at all facetious, because I am quite serious. I believe outboard motors up to eight horsepower should be exempt from this provision, as the hon. member for Kootenay West has suggested. I quite agree that high-powered boats such as those in which the moguls of Toronto run around the lake should be licensed in some way. In the poorer provinces, however, that should not apply to small boats up to eight horsepower. I am sure the minister has the same thought in mind, living as he does on the greatest river in the world. I am sure he would not want his people to be put to this inconvenience under the act.

Mr. Noseworthy: In committee we were given to understand that while the minister was asking for the power outlined in this section it was not intended to use that power to require the licensing of all classes of boats with outboard motors. In committee we tried to get from the minister and his officials some information on the nature of the regulations that would be made. We were unable to get that information; apparently neither the minister nor his officials were very clear on just what they should be.

My objection to this clause is an objection to giving the governor in council power to require that every boat equipped with an outboard motor shall be registered, if the minister should so decide. I object to that sweeping power, and favour the amendment. If the amendment does not meet the requirements the officials have in mind, it is still open to them to impose other limitations. At least the amendment would assure that no boat with an outboard motor of less than eight horsepower would require to be licensed. I do not want to have to get a licence for the little outboard I carry around in the back of my car, and which I stick on probably fifty different boats during the course of the season. I would have a happy time doing that, I am sure. That may not be the intention, but I object to the principle of giving such sweeping power to the department.

Mr. Chevrier: If I may be permitted to say a word in reply, I think I said once before that I was anxious to be co-operative in all these matters, but unfortunately tonight I cannot meet the suggestion of my hon. friend. One of the reasons is perhaps that given by the hon. member for Kootenay West, when he said he had perfect confidence in the officers of the Department of Transport, and particularly those who gave evidence before the committee where this matter was specifically discussed. My hon. friend said he had full confidence in those people, and I am sure he will have confidence in them still, when I tell him they have advised against accepting this amendment for reasons which I shall give in a moment. Another reason that prompts me to oppose this is that given by the member for Greenwood, who says there is a Latin maxim de minimis non curat

lex. There is another Latin maxim having to do with the law, which is far more pertinent than the one just quoted and I am sure my hon. friend knows it, and that is res ipsa loquitur, and that has great application in this case. Our officials feel that, for the reasons given to the committee, the time has come when there should be licensing of these motorboats.

I gave the reasons in the committee why I thought it was difficult to distinguish between a regulation which would cover horsepower and one which would cover length. Then again there comes into the picture the question of speed. You may have an 8-horsepower engine in a small boat travelling at high speed, whereas an 8-horsepower engine in a boat of more than sixteen feet would travel at slow speed and would not be a danger to other craft using the same waters.

There is nothing extraordinary in the powers taken here. The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra asks why we should take powers wider than we need. That has been done repeatedly, not only in the Department of Transport but in other departments. I call attention to the fact that the Canada Shipping Act of 1948, under section 488A, gave the minister power to exempt ships from having certain qualified officers and mates, and also from the steamship regulations, which is far more important than this.

Mr. Green: You will be regulating bathing suits next.

Mr. Chevrier: Need I say there is no intention to regulate bathing suits. Neither is it the intention to create a nuisance. As I indicated in the committee, from the studies that have been made thus far it is not possible to say upon what basis the dividing line should be drawn. I gave the assurance to the committee that we would not attempt to enforce regulations which would act as a nuisance to the public, particularly tourists and other people who use our lakes and who have these small outboard motors.

From the studies that have been made thus far, I would not think it would be proper to regulate motorboats of five horsepower and under. Neither would I think it would be a proper thing to regulate a boat of sixteen feet long or under. But from the information at hand I would not like to go any further than that, because the officers who are giving the matter their consideration are not able to say where the dividing line should be. They would like to get this power in order to study the matter. It will not come into force this year. There is no charge involved by the regulation. It is for the purpose of licensing and marking boats, and it is also for the purpose of protecting the public. It was mostly on that basis the officers proposed it, so with respect, Mr. Chairman, I have to say I am not able to accept the amendment.

Mr. Herridge: The minister just said that I had stated I had every confidence in the officers of his department, and so I have. I have every confidence in the officers' technical ability, but I have not confidence in their ability to express the opinion of the people of Kootenay West.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Did I understand the minister to say that the regulations would not be administered this year in such a way as to be a nuisance to anyone?

Mr. Chevrier: I am saying that the regulations cannot be put into effect in 1950. They will not come into effect until 1951.

Mr. Hodgson: Under this regulation you are leaving it up to the officer of the law to determine the law. Who is going to enforce this law? Is it going to be the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Mr. Chevrier: May I interject that it is not an officer of the law who will interpret the law. The governor in council will make the regulations.

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, that is quite true; the governor in council or some individual in the department will draw up the regulation and make the law. When you come to enforce the law, it has to be done by the provincial officers or the game warden. It cannot be done by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, because those officers are stationed so far apart. You are putting an officer of the law in the position of having to determine the law, determine whom he should arrest and whom he should not arrest. When he arrests one person, for instance, he has to arrest all. He cannot let one man go and arrest another. Who is going to determine when he is speeding and when he is not?

Amendment negatived; yeas 27; nays 44.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—Repeal.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, it is eleven o'clock.

Section stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I believe there are only four bills left on the order paper. With regard to Bill No. 315, that is the Citizenship Act, there is only one section left and I believe we shall take that up. I cannot give the exact order for these four bills, but we shall give time to the four of them tomorrow. There is Bill No. 314, an act to amend the Canada-United States of America Tax Convention Act; Bill No. 303, an act to amend the Canada Shipping Act, 1934; and Bill No. 317, an act respecting the national film board.

Before we take up the bill concerning the national film board, we shall go into the estimates of the film board.

Mr. Green: Before?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Before we consider the bill. At three o'clock in the afternoon we shall take up the estimates of the Department of Finance. If we do pass these bills, then the departments that are ready with their estimates are Resources and Development, Secretary of State, Post Office and Justice.

Mr. Fleming: We will take up finance estimates at three o'clock regardless of how you stand on the legislation?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Right.

Mr. Fleming: Will you continue with finance then until it is completed?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): We hope it will be through at six o'clock because the Minister of Finance is leaving and he will not be here next week. That is why we are bringing them on tomorrow afternoon. I understand they had a discussion yesterday.

Mr. Fleming: If we do finish at six are we going back to legislation in the evening?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes, we will take legislation.

Mr. Knowles: The minister said there were only these four bills left on the order paper. Are there any other bills to come in at this session?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not know of any other bills.

Mr. Sinclair: The appropriation bill.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I do not know of any other bills except the appropriation bill.

Mr. Green: Can the minister say when the supplementary estimates will be down?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Three o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

It being five minutes after eleven o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 23, 1950

The house met at eleven o'clock.

FLOOD CONDITIONS

SOUTHERN MANITOBA—CONTRIBUTIONS FROM PARLIAMENT HILL TO RELIEF FUND

Mr. W. G. Weir (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, I request the privilege of announcing that the money received on behalf of the Manitoba flood relief fund from parliament hill, which includes contributions from members of the Senate, members of the House of Commons, members of the press gallery, and staffs of both houses, as well as some outside contributions and the collection taken at the ball game, now totals $6,706.35.

Members of the committee named to accept these contributions are most grateful for this splendid response, and desire to take this opportunity to thank those who have so generously contributed to this very needy cause—particularly so when it is known that many had already made contributions through other sources.

PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE

FURTHER REPORT ON CONSTRUCTION AND ESTIMATED COST

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement with reference to the Prime Minister's residence.

In the supplementary estimates to be tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) the government is asking parliament to vote $300,000 for the completion of the Prime Minister's residence. This amount is in addition to $80,000 already included in the main estimates, and $30,000 expended in the fiscal year which ended on March 31 of this year, or a total of $410,000.

I admit at once that this figure, which includes $305,000 for the cost of the building and $105,000 for the furnishing of the house, is higher than the rough estimates of cost which were given to the government at the time the decision to provide an official residence for the Prime Minister was made in September of last year.

We were warned by the architects at that time that no satisfactory estimate could be made of the cost of reconstructing an old house until the work was far enough advanced to enable the architects to make a firm estimate of the soundness of the structure, and the extent to which it would have to be torn down and replaced by new construction.

As a result of their preliminary examination, the architects estimated that the cost of removing the old building and replacing it with a new modern building of similar proportions and dignity would be about $360,000. The architects considered that the existing structure could be rebuilt for a smaller amount, which is proving to be the fact, assuming that the preliminary estimate of cost of a new house is correct.

Rightly or wrongly, the government decided to rebuild the existing structure and, as I said on June 8, the government secured the services of an architectural firm which seemed to have the widest experience in this type of work, and of a local contractor with a first-class reputation.

Since the decision to rebuild was made, two factors have combined to increase considerably the estimated cost. In the first place, as the demolition of the interior of the house proceeded, it was found that the structure had deteriorated to an extent that the house practically had to be rebuilt, except for the outside walls and one or two main partitions. In the second place, building costs have risen substantially since last September.

It can be argued that the government should have decided to build a new residence, perhaps on a smaller scale than the existing house. However, the decision was made to rebuild the old residence. I gave the reasons for that decision in an earlier discussion on this subject.

As the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) pointed out at that time, once we had made substantial progress on the reconstruction of the present building, it was too late to change the decision, assuming that a change should have been made, which I do not admit. The problem then was to make the old building into a suitable modern residence. That is what is being done, and we are not spending a dollar which is not required to create an official residence for our Prime Minister which will be worthy of Canada.

When the house is completed it will not be a palace—I might just remind the hon. members by way of comparison that it is estimated the reconstruction of the White House will cost $5,400,000—but it will be a dignified and well-equipped official residence where the Prime Minister can receive appropriately the representatives of any country, and in its beautiful setting, the residence will be an addition to the national capital of which the people of Canada can be proud.

Mr. Coldwell: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I appreciate the quotation the minister has given from what I said the other day, but I think the minister has quoted me at the wrong time and the wrong place. I would prefer to have been quoted to the effect that I thought that this building should have been torn down and a new and smaller and more modest residence erected.

Mr. Howe: I shall quote you accordingly next time.

Mr. Fraser: May I ask the minister if the figure quoted includes the original $140,000 that was paid for the property?

Mr. Howe: No, sir.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the minister if this additional appropriation will be the end of this extravagant splurge?

Mr. Knowles: Is the answer yes or no?

AIR TRANSPORT BOARD

DIRECTIVES AND CIRCULARS ISSUED SINCE LAST ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): On May 25, 1950, during the debate on the bill to amend the Aeronautics Act, I stated I would table directives and circulars issued by the air transport board. I now beg leave to table copies, in English and in French, of the directives and circulars issued by the board since publication of the board's last annual report.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF AGREEMENT WITH NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development): Mr. Speaker, hon. members may be interested to know that the federal government has today completed an agreement with the government of the province of Newfoundland for the construction, under the terms of the Trans-Canada Highway Act, passed by parliament at the last session, of the route of the trans-Canada highway through Newfoundland. The agreement was signed on behalf of the province of Newfoundland by the Hon. E. S. Spencer, minister of public works.

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. Higgins: Have there been any changes in the specifications for the road?

Mr. Winters: The same agreement and the same specifications as apply to all other provinces will apply in the case of Newfoundland.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Will the minister table a copy of the agreement?

Mr. Winters: I shall be glad to do that.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Has the minister's department or the government completed an agreement with the province of Nova Scotia for the construction of the trans-Canada highway through that province?

Mr. Winters: No such agreement has yet been completed.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Will the minister table the correspondence with the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. Winters: Subject to permission being obtained from the province.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REFERENCE TO PRESS REPORT OF REMARKS OF GENERAL MCNAUGHTON IN VANCOUVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, of which I have not had a chance to give him notice. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the Ottawa Journal of yesterday, which contains a report of a speech by General McNaughton in Vancouver to the Junior Chamber of Commerce, in which, speaking of the Russians, he is reported to have said;

> They will turn to war as a means of achieving their ends.

At a time when everyone is advocating more moderate statements, does the minister think that someone who bears such a close relationship to public affairs and the government of this country should make a statement of that kind?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I prefer not to comment on this alleged statement until I have seen a text of what General McNaughton said.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): When the minister considers it further, will he use his influence to see that future statements of the same kind are not made?

OATS

IMPORTATIONS FROM THE UNITED STATES AND ARGENTINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in connection with a Broomhall's summary to the effect that several million bushels of oats are to be imported into Canada and the United States from Argentina. Is the minister in position to say whether that report is correct, and whether the price is to be 75¾ cents per bushel?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I do not know the details of the transaction, but I do know that one cargo of oats has been brought into Canada. I read in the morning paper that certain oats are being brought into the United States. I see nothing strange about the situation, as Canada markets oats in the United States. The transaction is protected by the Canadian tariff law. There is no prohibition against imports into this country.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say what he means by his last statement?—because that is what I had in mind. What are the ordinary tariff laws that would apply to the bringing in of oats from countries that bonus exportations, as Argentina does under her exchange provisions?

Mr. Howe: The possibilities of dumping have been explored, and it has been found that there is no dumping in connection with this cargo. At least that is the decision of the Department of National Revenue. The ordinary safeguards of the tariff law are applied to this and other imports into Canada.

CHIGNECTO CANAL

QUESTIONS AS TO BRIEF SUBMITTED BY DELEGATION FROM MARITIMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. Chester S. McLure (Queens): I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the brief presented in connection with the Chignecto canal will be tabled, as well as the reply of the Prime Minister?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Acting Prime Minister): Neither is an official document of the type it is customary to table. I think the Chignecto canal committee could be persuaded to supply my hon. friend with a copy of their brief.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CHILDREN BORN IN CANADA TO DIPLOMATS, CERTIFICATES TO PERSONS LOSING CITIZENSHIP THROUGH MARRIAGE, ETC.

The house resumed, from Thursday, June 22, consideration in committee of Bill No. 315, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act—Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce)—Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 8—Part III.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): It was requested that this section stand last night, because of two questions that were raised. One was by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, who suggested that there should be inserted some reference to the person who takes preliminary steps toward obtaining citizenship in another country. During the limited time available we have given consideration to this, and have decided that we would prefer to continue to consider it rather than to make an amendment now. It would run counter to the principle we have introduced of giving quick citizenship to those who are completely naturalized and who return to this country and desire to regain their Canadian citizenship.

Mr. Coldwell: I had in mind the person who has renounced allegiance to this country.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I realize that and we will give consideration to it. The other question had to do with natural-born Canadians who served in the armed forces of a country that fought against us in the last war. At that time there was no citizenship act in force which would apply to them, and there was no loss of citizenship because of the action they took. We have given consideration to this, and feel that the decision made at the time the citizenship act was introduced four years ago not to make the section retroactive is probably the best decision to make in the circumstances. I can assure my hon. friend, however, that we have no record of these people coming to this country, nor have we any record of applications being made for their re-entry into Canada.

Mr. Green: If I remember correctly, when the citizenship bill was under discussion in 1947 the minister in charge said that its provisions would be wide enough to prevent the return to Canada of Japanese who had fought in the Japanese forces. I may be wrong, but that is my recollection. If the new section is not wide enough to prevent them from coming back, then I suggest that the minister take steps in his capacity as minister of immigration to see that they are not allowed to return to Canada.

Earlier in the present session this question was raised in the other place by Senator Reid. I have a press dispatch of April 8, 1950, the heading of which is as follows:

No persons of Japanese origin who served with enemy armed forces admitted to Canada.

The article reads in part:

The department of immigration issued a statement this week that no persons of Japanese origin who served with the Japanese military forces in the second world war have been permitted to enter Canada.

I do not know the basis on which that prohibition has been enforced, but I would urge the minister to have his officials look into the situation further, and if by any chance legislation or regulations are necessary to prevent the return of such people, steps should be taken to that end.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I shall do so.

Mr. Bater: Under the new legislation will a married woman born in Canada, who married a man who is not a Canadian citizen, lose her Canadian citizenship?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): No. It depends on the citizenship of her husband whether she ever lost it in the first place, but if she did lose it she may regain it under this act.

Mr. Adamson: How may she regain it? There have come to my attention several cases in which Canadian women who married during the war lost their Canadian citizenship, and are now deprived of it and wish very much to regain it. As a matter of fact one of the employees of the house during the last session married a citizen of Holland during the war and lost her citizenship. She wishes to regain it. What steps can she take to regain her Canadian citizenship?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): We went through that last night, but if my hon. friend will permit me to say so, all the provisions are designed for the particular case the hon. member has in mind. As I said last night, it covers many girls from his constituency who married Norwegian soldiers during the war. If he will get in touch with me I shall go into the details with him.

Mr. Hodgson: When do immigrants become full-fledged citizens, so that when Canada faces emergencies such as existed in the periods from 1914 to 1918 and from 1939 to 1945 persons who have lived in this country for fifteen or twenty years will be subject to military call-up? In the last two wars young men who came to this country when they were five or six years of age were not subject to call-up in the same way as Canadian citizens were. Is there anything in the legislation affecting that situation?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): No. Persons who become subject to service in time of emergency are made subject to service under the Militia Act or special orders in council which may be passed for the purpose of the emergency. They are not affected by this act.

Mr. Hodgson: In the last two wars there were quite a few young immigrants of the required age who could not be called up because they were not naturalized citizens. I believe a change should be made in the act, and that people should be compelled to become naturalized citizens after they have been here for a certain length of time. I should like the minister to look into that situation.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I shall.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not think the question I have in mind arises under this section, but I did not have an opportunity to bring it to the attention of the minister last night because of a committee meeting I had to attend. It concerns persons of Chinese origin in this country, and the sons and daughters of Canadian citizens of Chinese origin. I have several cases in mind of Chinese who are Canadian citizens and who were unable to secure Canadian citizenship, as the minister knows, until just recently. Some members of their families are still in China. They are endeavouring to bring their sons and daughters to Canada and are unable to do so if those sons and daughters are over eighteen years of age.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I think that is a matter of immigration, not citizenship. We shall have supplementary estimates on immigration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will not disagree with that view, but these sons and daughters should now be able to come to Canada, in view of the fact that their fathers have become naturalized Canadian citizens. They should not be denied admission to this country on an arbitrary basis of fixation of the age of qualification for entry into Canada at eighteen. After all, if we are to meet the challenge of communism in the world today, nothing must be done that will make it appear that Canada denies admission to this country of the sons and daughters of Canadian citizens. To the fathers, Canadian citizenship means something. When the minister discusses the supplementary estimates I suggest that he let these people know whether or not some consideration will be given. Altogether there are only 2,000 affected, but the opinions of Canadian citizens of Chinese origin are anything but favourable to the present regulations.

Mr. Coldwell: I know that discussion of this matter is out of order, but representations in this regard were made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration were under consideration. I merely want to say I hope the minister is studying this matter and will give some consideration to the plight of foster children of Canadian citizens of Chinese origin.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I would have made that answer to the hon. member for Lake Centre. The question was raised on my estimates last week by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. We had a discussion on it in which I gave some information, but we may pursue the matter further on the supplementary estimates.

I should like to take a minute to discuss the bill under consideration. I misunderstood a question that the leader of the C.C.F. party asked me last night with respect to the right of the minister to grant certificates should an applicant not qualify as to language, or something of that nature. The correct answer is completely different from the one I gave. I did not understand the hon. member. The minister has no power to override the recommendation of the judge, and I indicated he had, which was my error.

Mr. McLure: What is the difference between an English immigrant and an English settler? I ask this question because some time ago I made application to the department for assistance on behalf of an English settler who had come to Canada, and the government replied that they could not do anything for a settler, that it was only the immigrants they were out to assist. So I would like to know what is the difference between an English settler and an English immigrant coming to Canada.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I shall be glad to answer that question on the supplementary estimates of my department.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

TAX AGREEMENTS

CANADA-UNITED STATES—RATIFICATION OF TAX CONVENTION ACTS, 1943 AND 1944

Hon. Alphonse Fournier (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 314, to amend the Canada-United States of America Tax Convention Act, 1943, and the Canada-United States of America Tax Convention Act, 1944.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

On section 1—Convention approved.

Mr. James Sinclair (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): Perhaps I should make a short statement. I think the purpose of this act is best described in the words of the original protocol between Canada and the United States—for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion in the case of income tax. In a country such as Canada, which has close business interests with both the United Kingdom and the United States, it is very important that we avoid double taxation on the same income in order not to impede business between ourselves and the United States or between ourselves and Great Britain. It is also very important that our taxing authorities co-operate to see that there is no opportunity for evasion by taxpayers because of different taxation laws in the two countries.

It is not easy to negotiate such a tax convention, for several reasons. The most obvious one, of course, is the fact that the taxing laws of Canada and the United States are by no means identical. A second factor is the difference in legal terminology. A third factor, and a very important one, is that in such conventions the revenue loss through a concession must be roughly equal to the revenue we are going to gain through a similar concession from the other party. Because of the similarity between our tax laws and those of Britain, we have been able in the past to have our tax conventions with the United Kingdom more advanced than the ones we have with the United States. During recent years, however, continuous negotiation at Washington has resulted in this present Canada-United States taxing agreement coming much closer to the Canada-United Kingdom agreement. That, of course, is a good thing in the interests of business between all three countries.

The present amendments can be discussed in detail as we go through them, but the principal one in the first part, the income tax part, is to widen the present exemptions for workers of one country on temporary duty in the other country.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Would the parliamentary assistant please give us the reference as he goes along?

Mr. Sinclair: Perhaps it would be better if I just dealt with the sections as we come to them, instead of indicating the principal amendments now. The second thing is to get way from double withholding tax on these temporary workers, where both their parent country and the country in which they are on temporary duty have withholding taxes. Third is the mutual exemption of royalties for literary and artistic works in either country.

The second provision refers to succession duties. Under the old act the situs of stock left in estates was spelled out; the rest was left to the courts under the common law. Now we have a mutual arrangement spelling out in the act the situs of pretty well every class of property which might be left in an estate.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): In the preparation of these tax conventions has there been consultation with people in the business world who have particularly to do with taxation measures, or has it been left entirely to government officials? I ask this because I know in times past there has been consultation.

Mr. Sinclair: Most of these changes have come about because business both in Canada and the United States has come forward with these problems of double taxation and asked both governments whether they could not get together to see that double taxation was avoided. On the other phase, of course, to see that there is no opportunity for evasion, naturally that is not left to business advice; the taxing authorities themselves decide on that. For the most part these changes are consequent upon representations made by either United States or Canadian business, showing that because of our present convention there is an element of double taxation.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Can it be broadly said, then, that, in so far as it is possible to consult them, the Canadian Tax Foundation, for instance, and other similar bodies have been consulted?

Mr. Sinclair: Quite right.

Mr. Fraser: There has been no change in the withholding tax of fifteen per cent on American funds of a Canadian going into the United States?

Mr. Sinclair: There is the one exception I mentioned, with respect to royalties. Last year we amended our law to exempt them, and now the Americans have agreed to do the same, so that is in this schedule.

Mr. Fraser: It will come in with this bill?

Mr. Sinclair: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

Schedules A and B agreed to.

[Mr. Sinclair.]

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDMENTS TO RATIFY INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION FOR SAFETY OF LIFE AT SEA

The house resumed, from Thursday, June 22, consideration in committee of Bill No. 303, to amend the Canada Shipping Act, 1934—Mr. Chevrier—Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Sections 10 to 35 inclusive agreed to.

On section 36—Radio installation.

Mr. Green: Section 36 of this bill substitutes a new section 406, subsection 1, in the Canada Shipping Act, including a new paragraph (a) to which I wish to refer. The side-note reads "radio installation". This particular paragraph applies, of course, only to Canadian ships on international voyages. It does not apply to ships engaged in the coastal trade or on the great lakes. In accordance with the international convention for safety of life at sea, it makes certain provisions concerning radio installations which I believe are excellent. Members of the committee will observe that it provides that all Canadian ships carrying more than twelve passengers, and other Canadian ships of 1,600 gross tonnage—which of course refers only to cargo vessels—plying on an international voyage, must, unless they are exempted by the minister, be fitted with a radio installation which complies with the safety conventions. They must carry radio operators with such qualifications as are specified, who must keep such watches as the minister may prescribe, and in addition we find this provision: that while keeping watches the operator shall not engage in other duties which in any way interfere with the keeping of watches. That, of course, is taken from the international safety convention which applies to all ships of all maritime nations except Russia, which is not a party to the convention. It sets up a standard which I think is one which should be followed, not only for international voyages but also for certain of the ships on our coasts.

Under the Canada Shipping Act, subsection 2 of this section 406 deals with the domestic trade; in other words it contains the law applicable to the coastal trade. I should like the minister to correct me if I am wrong in any of these statements. Under subsection 2, paragraph (a), all passenger ships—this paragraph does not include cargo vessels—must have radiotelegraph installations provided that they are on voyages of a certain length. For example, if a ship is licensed to carry from 50 to 250 passengers she must have radiotelegraph installation if she is going for more than 200 miles from one place to another place. Those are the words used in the act. If she is licensed to carry from 250 to 500 passengers, then she must have radiotelegraph installation if she is going for more than 90 miles from one place to another place. If she is a larger vessel licensed to carry over 500 passengers, then she must have this radiotelegraph installation with a radio operator if she is going for more than 20 miles from one place to another.

There is not the same provision in this subsection 2, which applies to the domestic trade, covering the watches that are to be kept. I should like to see it amended to contain the same provisions as are now to be applicable to all passenger ships on international voyages. In addition there is one great weakness in subsection 2 of section 406 of the act as it reads today, and that is the reference to the mileage which is described as being measured from one place to another place. The ordinary layman reading that section would think it meant that if a ship was going from Vancouver to Prince Rupert, which is a great deal more than 200 miles, it would have to have radiotelegraph installation and an operator. That is not the interpretation that has been placed on the section by some of the shipping companies. They say that "from one place to another place" means that if the ship stops every 200 miles in the case of a small ship, or every 90 miles in the case of a middle-sized ship, or every 20 miles in the case of a larger ship, then the provision does not apply and it is unnecessary to have radiotelegraph installation. That interpretation simply means that if these vessels call at a logging camp, a fish cannery, or any sort of whistle stop on the voyage up the west coast of Canada, they are not subject to this provision, and need not have radiotelegraph installation or an operator.

My submission is that in effect they are evading the intent of the act. Because of the discovery of radiotelephony there is a distinct trend towards doing away with these radiotelegraph installations, or at least easing up on the provisions. Our dislike of this trend was clearly expressed in an editorial in one of the Vancouver papers two or three months ago, and I shall quote from the Vancouver Sun of March 13, 1950. The heading on the editorial is "Safety at Sea." Throughout my remarks I would stress that the whole issue here is safety at sea. We do not want to have a catastrophe on our coast by reason of one of the vessels plying up and down the coast not having the proper radiotelegraph installation and an operator whose sole job is to look after it. I do not know whether I should quote this editorial, because it is praising a speech made by the hon. member for Skeena. However, it says:

> Mr. Applewhaite urged that every ship of 50 or more tons and every ship chartered to carry passengers be required to carry at least one full-time radio operator who shall have no other duties but the maintenance of radio equipment and keeping of radio watches. This demand may be extreme. The stress should be on the number of passengers carried and the distance of the voyage from point of origin to the most distant point.

You will notice that there they indicate that the words "from one place to another place" should not be used but "from the point of origin to the most distant point". The editorial continues:

> The government should consider that ships carrying at least 50 persons including crew should be so protected. And it should also be remembered that the carrying of a full-time radio operator is not merely for the safety of the ship in question but to enable her to co-operate in rescuing other ships.
>
> Maintenance of a full-time watch is also important. The operator should have no other duties that will interfere with his watch.

This question of interfering with the watch of the radio operator has arisen because some of the companies are trying to make the radio operators act also in other capacities—for example, as freight clerks or pursers or to have one of the officers do the job. They are trying to put other work on these men. That practice of course means that they are not available at all times to look after radiotelegraph on the ship. The editorial concludes:

> There should be no distinction between international coastal voyages and domestic coastal voyages. A voyage from Vancouver to the Queen Charlottes can be just as dangerous as to Ketchikan.

A voyage from Vancouver to Seattle, or from Vancouver to Ketchikan, Alaska, or to Skagway, Alaska, is of course considered to be an international voyage. It therefore comes under subsection 1, which is being amended by the bill now before the committee. By the terms of this new subsection 1 there must be a radiotelegraph installation unless the minister exempts the ship, and there must be an operator keeping watches as set by the minister, and devoting his full time to the one business of looking after the radiotelegraph. A passenger on a trip from Vancouver to Seattle or from Vancouver to Alaska is thus protected. But a passenger on a voyage from Vancouver to Victoria or from Vancouver to Prince Rupert does not have that protection, although the voyage is just as dangerous. The ships have to go through the same difficult channels. They are exposed to the same open sea in certain places.

An hon. Member: Ripple Rock.

Mr. Green: Yes, they are exposed to Ripple Rock, which the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and some of the rest of us have not yet been able to get removed. They are also exposed to the dangers of fog. I hesitate to say that we ever have any fog on the Pacific coast—

An hon. Member: Or rain.

Mr. Green: —or rain, but it must be admitted that once in a while we have an extremely heavy fog, and that these coastal voyages are dangerous ones. There have been some serious accidents. For example back in 1918 or 1919 the Princess Sophia was lost north of Prince Rupert and several hundred people were drowned. This whole question is one of safety of life at sea, as the Sun editorial points out.

We are deeply concerned about this matter. We believe that passengers on a coastal trip within Canada should have the same kind of protection that they get on a trip from a Canadian port to an American port. Certainly that one defect in the Canada Shipping Act should be removed—that is, the use of the phrase "from one place to another place." I ask that it be removed, because it is being misinterpreted by the shipping companies. Instead, I think those words should be "from the point of commencement to the farthest outward point", so that a ship carrying 50 to 250 passengers could go only 200 miles from the point of commencement to the farthest outward point without having a radiotelegrapher; a ship carrying from 250 to 500 passengers could go only 90 miles from the point of commencement to the farthest outward point, and a larger ship carrying 500 or more passengers could go only 20 miles from the point of commencement to the farthest outward point without carrying a radiotelegrapher.

It is quite possible that there might be some cases in which, by reason of the nature of the voyage, it is unnecessary to have a radiotelegrapher. In such a case the minister has power to grant an exemption. But the words I have suggested are the very words that the Department of Transport itself used in the fire regulations which were enacted on April 12 of this year. These fire regulations were put into effect as a result of the Noronic disaster and of the inquiry held by Mr. Justice Kellock. In paragraph 3 of the regulations hon. members will find this definition, under the head "Application":

These regulations apply to all passenger steamships—

I repeat that I am dealing only with passenger ships in requesting that a change be made in the act.

[Mr. Green.]

—registered in Canada employed in home-trade, inland or minor water voyages—

(a) which are certified to carry more than 25 berthed passengers or more than 50 berthed and unberthed passengers; or—

And this is the definition to which I refer particularly.

—(b) which do not carry berthed passengers but are certified to carry more than 100 unberthed passengers and the length of the voyage from the point of commencement to the farthest outward point exceeds fifteen miles or the distance from shore at any time exceeds five miles.

I am asking that subsection 2 of section 406 of the Canada Shipping Act be amended by substituting those words "from the point of commencement to the farthest outward point" for the words now found in that subsection, namely "from one place to another place". I should like to move:

That paragraph (a) of subsection 2 of section four hundred and six of the said act be amended by substituting for the words:

"from one place to another place" where they appear in clauses (i) (ii) and (iii) of the said paragraph, the following:

"from the point of commencement to the farthest outward point."

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I probably should go further and ask for additional amendments to provide that the radiotelegraph operator must not be given other duties; but for the present I am moving this amendment in order to prevent the evasion of subsection 2 as it reads at the present time. I hope that the Minister of Transport will see fit to accept the amendment.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): Mr. Chairman, may I take a few moments to deal with the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra? I am sure he does not for one moment take the position that the officers of the department are not seriously concerned about this section of the act dealing with the safety of life at sea along the coasts of Canada. I believe that was clearly established when section 406 and other sections were discussed in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Dealing with the amendment, however, I think there are general considerations to be examined. The first is the present position so far as section 406 is concerned. That position, as dealt with by section 406, covers the domestic trade—and by that I mean inland shipping, great lakes shipping and coastal shipping. Then there is the other aspect dealing with international shipping and international voyages as covered by the convention.

It has been the feeling of departmental officers all along that there should be a distinction between the requirements necessary for international voyages and those in respect of inland or coastal voyages. That position has always been taken, and is recognized generally in the Canada Shipping Act. It was taken with reference to the steamship inspection regulations to which my hon. friend referred a moment ago.

While I am on that point may I say that while the hon. member in his amendment uses the language of the steamship inspection regulations, there are many members on his side of the house who thought those regulations were much too stringent. Indeed, what we attempted to do when we enacted the steamship regulations was to take a middle course between international and inland requirements in order to protect ships of that kind.

Leaving that position for the moment, let me say that the coasts of Canada—and I am referring particularly to the west coast—are pretty well protected by radio aids. It was clearly explained in committee that there is a difference between the range and effect of radiotelegraphy and radiotelephony. An expert from the department in radio matters indicated that radiotelegraphy should be considered on long voyages, international voyages, and that in so far as they were concerned it was more effective than radiotelephony. He did think however that a distinction should be made in respect to great lakes shipping, inland shipping and coastal shipping. He was of the opinion that the radiotelephone was effective, provided that there was a sufficient range, for coastal operations; and he thought that that condition obtained in connection with the west coast.

Then there is the general view among technical men—and of course I am not familiar with it, but only state what they say—that great developments are expected in the field of radiotelephony.

Mr. Green: That would be a good time to make the change—after the developments have been completed.

Mr. Chevrier: But today developments in science move so quickly that before any change could be effected under the act we would be face to face with changes in the scientific field. That is why it was felt, after giving the matter careful attention, that there should be no change.

Let me assure the hon. member and the committee that the matter to which the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra addresses himself in submitting this amendment was given the most careful consideration by the officers of the department. They heard both sides of the case, having received representatives of the industry and of the union.

Mr. Green: They did not hear the union people.

Mr. Chevrier: I have said that. After having given the matter consideration they came to the conclusion that there should be no change other than that contained in section 406(1) to meet the international convention.

While I do not want to repeat what was said in committee about coverage in the matter of protection of the west coast, I do wish to add this, if it will be of assistance to hon. members who have any fears so far as the amendment is concerned. I believe I indicated in committee that there was in the Department of Transport a continuing committee that dealt with amendments likely to be made from time to time to the Canada Shipping Act. In view of what happened in the standing committee, as well as what is happening in this committee of the whole, I have asked the officers to give this matter further careful thought. They are prepared to do this and to hear additional representations. If they come to the conclusion that a permanent radiotelegraph operator should be employed on the ships in the coastal service, they will so indicate to me during the course of the next year. If that is their view—because it is a technical matter—then I think I can be relied upon to bring in amendments to the Canada Shipping Act accordingly. As the matter now stands however, I regret I cannot accept the amendment.

Mr. Green: Can the minister tell me the difference, from the point of view of safety, between a so-called international voyage between Vancouver and Ketchikan and a coastal voyage from Vancouver to Prince Rupert?

Mr. Chevrier: The definition is set out in—

Mr. Green: But can the minister tell me whether there is any difference so far as the safety of the people on the ship is concerned?

Mr. Chevrier: If it is put on that general basis, then I suppose there is no difference between a voyage of that kind and one on the St. Lawrence, so far as safety is concerned. One never knows what is going to happen. Viewed in that broad sense, perhaps there is no difference.

Mr. Green: Is there any less need for protection in a voyage from Vancouver to Prince Rupert than in one from Vancouver to Ketchikan? According to the act, the ship going to Ketchikan must have an operator doing nothing but watching the radiotelegraph. Is there any difference between two voyages of that kind, so far as the fellow who is apt to be drowned is concerned?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): It is the same kind of water.

Mr. Applewhaite: I have no intention of repeating speeches I have made before, or of endeavouring to rehash the story told at considerable length by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra this morning. However, because I believe his amendment is justified, I am going to support it.

Mr. Beyerstein: Mr. Chairman, I find myself in agreement with the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. It is my view that the welfare of those who travel on a passenger vessel should be looked after to the greatest possible degree. The minister has said the department has to make some difference between international and coastal shipping. I would remind him that just as many people could be drowned on a voyage between Vancouver and Prince Rupert as on one between Vancouver and Ketchikan. The minister also made reference to the shore installations and the fact that the coasts were adequately covered with such installations. I would remind the minister that the shore installations would be no good whatsoever if a radiotelephone set on a ship broke down, unless a qualified operator was aboard who could repair it. At the whistle stops serviced by these coastal vessels there are no means of repairing these sets; as a general rule the only place where they can be repaired is at either end of the trip.

I see little difference between an international voyage and a coastal voyage in that respect. If there were facilities for repairing either a radiotelephone or a radiotelegraph at these stops there might be less necessity to carry a qualified operator, but a broken set is of utterly no value if anything should happen to a ship. In view of that I shall have to support the amendment.

Mr. Herridge: I was a member of the committee and we discussed this matter quite fully. Like the hon. member for Skeena, I am not going to take up the time of this committee by rehashing the arguments that were presented, because they have been covered fully by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. Without question the hon. member is expressing the views of the people who live on the coast of British Columbia and who use these ships, and that is doubly evidenced by the fact that the hon. member for Skeena is supporting his contention. Possibly better than anyone in this house the hon. member for Skeena knows what the people who live on this coast and who use these ships want, and by supporting the amendment he is indicating that those people want a change because they are not satisfied with present conditions.

[Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood).]

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am ignorant of the conditions that exist, but I do want to make one comment. I cannot see why a voyage from Vancouver to Prince Rupert would be less dangerous than the other voyage, and it seems to me that that question put to the minister by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has not been answered.

Mr. Higgins: At the other end of the dominion the same problem exists as has been outlined by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. It is highly necessary that an operator be on duty on these ships at all times and not be burdened with the necessity of carrying on the duties of a purser or some other work. Safety at sea is an important matter, and the question of additional costs should not be considered.

Amendment (Mr. Green) negatived: Yeas, 24; nays, 39.

Section agreed to.

Sections 37 to 63 agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

On the title.

Mr. Green: Is the government bringing in a resolution to provide for the acceptance of this convention?

Mr. Chevrier: I am advised that that is not necessary. The same procedure is being followed here as was followed when the Canada Shipping Act was amended in 1948, and when four international conventions were implemented by that amendment. The Department of Justice advises that this is sufficient.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Chevrier moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Green: An amendment was suggested by an official of the Dominion Marine Association to which the minister and the committee agreed, but the minister has not moved that amendment.

Mr. Chevrier: I moved it in the committee to which the bill was referred and it was included in the bill.

Mr. Green: Should it not have been moved in the committee of the whole?

Mr. Chevrier: Not if the bill comes back amended. It was reprinted, and the section was called and passed as amended in the committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF RESOURCES AND DEVELOPMENT

National film board—

401. Administration, production and distribution of films, and other visual materials, including authority to finance temporary work performed for other public authorities or other agencies as the public interest requires, $2,092,413.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development): Mr. Chairman, in view of the events which have taken place over the last six months affecting the administration of the national film board, it might be helpful to hon. members if I made a brief statement in introducing the estimates for the current year.

It will be remembered that on December 7 last I informed the house that the business administration of the film board was being examined by Messrs. J. D. Woods and Gordon Limited, a firm of business consultants. The committee will also remember that following a meeting of the board on December 15 a new film commissioner, Mr. W. A. Irwin, was appointed, effective February 1, 1950. These two moves, the survey undertaken by J. D. Woods and Gordon Limited, and the appointment of the new commissioner, have afforded an opportunity of assessing the value of the board's work, of taking steps to correct weaknesses which have appeared, and to some extent of charting the path of the board's future development.

It is fortunate also that the government, in considering the future of the board, should have the advantage of the advice of the royal commission on national development in the arts, letters and sciences, under the distinguished chairmanship of Right Hon. Vincent Massey, which has in recent months heard briefs presented by groups and organizations of all kinds in public hearings conducted in the principal cities across Canada.

On March 29 I tabled a copy of the report submitted by J. D. Woods and Gordon Limited. Hon. members have since had an opportunity to study the report and the recommendations it contains. It is not my intention to discuss in detail all the recommendations contained in the report, but I should like to make these observations.

The recommendations put forward in the J. D. Woods and Gordon Limited report fall into two main classifications:

1. Recommendations requiring legislative authority before they can be implemented.

2. Recommendations which could be implemented without legislative action.

None of the recommendations in the first category has been implemented to date, although a bill is now ready for consideration by the house. I am able to report, however, that progress has been made in implementing some of the recommendations in the second category. An announcement has already been made by the film commissioner concerning the appointment of three senior personnel of the board—director of production, director of technical operations, and director of distribution.

The board has taken over its own internal accounting. The number of individual accounts has been reduced from more than 5,000 to about 1,000, and a system of accounting on an accrual rather than a cash basis has been established. I would point out, however, that the treasury branch of the Department of Finance will continue to operate a cash account for the board to pay out and receive moneys on a cash basis.

One of the recommendations of the report was that the film commissioner should review every activity in which the board is engaged to see whether any of them should be curtailed or transferred to other government departments or agencies. In the course of the past four months the commissioner has had an opportunity of surveying the various divisions of the board. It is too early yet, in view of other reorganization suggestions put forward by the report, to say which, if any, activities can be transferred or curtailed. However, this question is being pursued, and in due course I believe some action can be taken with respect to this recommendation.

After reviewing the report submitted by J. D. Woods and Gordon Limited, I am sure that hon. members will agree that many of its recommendations are sound and reasonable. The report does not recommend status as a crown corporation for the board, but it does indicate that it should be possible to establish the board within the regular governmental organization plan, at the same time providing the flexibility which is felt essential for its efficient operation.

In general I can therefore inform the committee that many of the recommendations contained in the Woods-Gordon report which do not require legislative action are already being implemented with a view to improving the efficiency of the board's operations. At the same time careful consideration has been given to those recommendations requiring legislative action, and hon. members will shortly have an opportunity of considering a bill which is a complete revision of the National Film Act of 1939.

Shortly after taking up his new duties, the film commissioner asked for and received from the board permission to have a survey of the board's technical services and equipment undertaken by a qualified expert. As a result the services of a highly qualified technician, formerly connected with the J. Arthur Rank Organization, were engaged for this purpose. His observations have been most helpful and will guide the board in its future technical development.

I should like to say a word about security. On March 29 last I reported to the house that the screening of all employees of the board had been completed. At that time I said that three employees out of some 580 had been relieved of their duties for reasons connected with the screening. I have nothing further to report in this connection. The board is now a secure agency and is in a position to undertake work of a secret nature on behalf of all government departments.

During 1949-50 the efficiency of the board improved, with the result that greater production was achieved in all departments without increasing staff. Films were produced on a wide variety of subjects, including Newfoundland's entry into confederation, national parks, tourists, health, welfare and nutrition, resources and national development. One of the more outstanding productions of the year was an extraordinary film, "Challenge: Science against Cancer", which was made with the co-operation of the Department of National Health and Welfare and the National Cancer Institute of the United States Public Health Service.

Hon. members will be pleased to recall that the national film board again won an impressive number of awards for its films in competitions conducted in Canada and in other countries. The board received six awards in the Canadian film awards which are given with the participation of the Canadian Association for Adult Education. Awards were received from three film festivals in Italy, and others held in Brussels, Belgium, and Cleveland, Ohio. Two of the board's productions were included in a selection of the ten best 16 millimetre films of 1949 conducted by the American Scholastic Teachers' Magazine, New York city. The national committee on films for safety in the United States selected as the outstanding non-theatrical film in the occupational safety field the film "Safe Clothing", produced by the board for the Department of Labour.

The Woods-Gordon report comments favourably on the value of having a central body like the national film board to handle government photographic assignments. The report points out that the board, by getting government departments to pool their still picture requirements, has produced for those departments many useful photographs at reasonable cost. Demand for the board's films for use on television is growing in the United States and the United Kingdom. Of particular interest to television stations in the United States are the board's films on travel which are produced for the Canadian government travel bureau.

In presenting the estimates of the national film board for 1950-51, it will be noted that this year the total figure submitted is $2,211,017, which represents an increase of $153,607 from 1949-50. It will also be noted that this year only two votes are submitted as against four votes last year. This is in conformity with the Woods-Gordon report, which recommended one vote for operations and another for purchase of equipment. Members will find on page 260 of the estimates the details of services under various headings of administration, production of films, distribution, and so on. The increase to which I have referred is occasioned largely by a rise in administration costs due to increased salaries. An additional $50,000 has been provided for production of films. An increase of $33,319 has been provided for distribution of films to permit the supply of more prints to rural and urban areas, and replacement of existing prints both in Canada and abroad.

In conclusion I should like to say that in my opinion the national film board has made a successful passage through a very difficult period. It is a tribute to the high morale of the staff that the board has maintained and even increased both production and distribution during the year. The work of the new commissioner has already been reflected in the work of the board. The deputy chairman, together with the six others who sit with him on the board, have given freely of their time and effort and have made a really worthwhile contribution. Last December I expressed the hope that the film board would come to be regarded everywhere without prejudice as an important instrument in the expanding life of Canada. I feel that since that time the board has taken firm steps in that direction.

Mr. Fraser: There are a few questions I should like to ask the minister. First of all, an agent or representative of the film board was sent to the United Kingdom a short time ago. The Woods-Gordon report suggests that the external affairs department should handle this distribution in all countries but the United States, and I should like the minister to explain why this man was sent to Britain.

I should like to know also how the film board arrives at an overhead of five per cent this year as compared with ten per cent previously, when on page 27 of the report it is definitely indicated that the quarters and equipment, services, light, heat and water are provided by the Department of Public Works; telephone services are provided by the Department of Finance, accounting service is provided by the comptroller of the treasury, and so on. No accurate figure could be fixed in regard to overhead, and I am wondering why it has been reduced to five per cent and if the minister has any idea as to what would be the real overhead of the film board in producing their pictures.

At page 26 of the Woods-Gordon report it is indicated that accounts receivable amount to some $43,000, and that some of them are a year or more old. I wonder if any of those have been collected; and if not, why not? Also I have learned from fairly reliable sources, as I mentioned the other day, that a series of films were made for the Department of Agriculture out on the prairies but that they have never seen the light of day. I understand they were simply put in a vault in the Department of Agriculture or the film board, and have never been shown. If that is so, I should like to know the reason for it. I should like to know also the cost of the "Canada Carries On" series per year, and what is paid for that series by Columbia Pictures, who I believe are your distributing agents. Also I should like to know if any revenue is received from that series in any country other than Canada.

I should like to know for what departments of the government films were made in 1949, and what films are contemplated for 1950, as well as how many stills were made in 1949 and up to June 1, 1950; how many were sold in 1949 and how many in 1950.

I would ask if any co-operation is given the Department of National Defence in regard to the production of their films. I understand they make their own because as was stated in the house some time ago that department could not trust its films to the film board. The minister has said that this condition has been cleared up so far as the board is concerned, and I wondered if any different arrangement had been made. Then some departments have their own film liaison officers, and I should like to know how the film board works in with those departments in that respect.

Mr. Winters: I do not know whether I have all those questions, or whether we have all the details before us. The first question had to do with the distribution of films abroad by the Department of External Affairs. That was recommended in the Woods-Gordon report, and in some countries such as Mexico the distribution of film board pictures is at present directly under the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Fraser: There has been a change, then?

Mr. Winters: That has been going on for a few years now, but at one time it was done by the film board. The arrangement in England was that the film board had an employee acting in its behalf there. He was taken ill, and is being replaced by another employee of the board, who has not yet taken up his duties in London. That arrangement has the approval of the Department of External Affairs. I feel that perhaps we can move further in the direction recommended in the Woods-Gordon report, and that is one of the matters under consideration.

The hon. member asked about overhead. It was reduced last year and is being increased again this year to make it more realistic in comparison with what is being charged by private companies operating in the field. We still have considerable work to do along that line before we can reflect an operation that is comparable to the private operators in the field, but that is one of the points under active consideration.

The hon. member asked about accounts receivable, whether any had been collected since the figure was reported in the Woods-Gordon report. The answer is that some collections have been made since that time. I believe the next matter the hon. member referred to was the allegation that certain films produced for the Department of Agriculture had never seen the light of day. I can find no support for that statement. There is a close liaison with the Department of Agriculture at the present time; four films are under production for that department, and to my knowledge none of those films, and none that has been produced in the past will fail or have failed to see the light of day.

The hon. member asked about the cost of the "Canada Carries On" series. It costs the film board approximately $120,000 a year. The films are distributed through Columbia Pictures, and the board realizes a revenue from the distribution. A further question was asked as to whether they are distributed outside Canada. The answer is that they are not so distributed as a series, but that occasionally they do find an outlet.

Mr. Fraser: What is the revenue in Canada from the series?

Mr. Winters: While that is being looked up I might refer to the number of still pictures produced. In 1949 the sales of photographic prints were: to government departments, provincial departments of education and non-profit or educational organizations, 61,701, of a total value of $31,157.35; to publications, newspapers, advertising agencies and so on, at prevailing commercial rates, 1,288, of a total value of $2,981.10. I think that answers all the questions, with the exception of the revenue from the "Canada Carries On" series.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): While the minister is getting that answer perhaps I might comment upon some of the things said in the report, and also upon what has been said at other times by the hon. member for Peterborough West. In the past the severest critic of the film board has been the hon. member for Peterborough West, but he seems to be mellowing with advancing years. I appreciate the change. The pity is that all the arguments which had to be advanced in favour of the film board had to come from this section of the opposition rather than from the ministers who through the years have been responsible for the board. Only last December I had occasion to criticize severely an article which appeared in the Financial Post and which I described in somewhat colloquial though accurate terms as being a certain type of gossip. The allegations contained in the article in the Financial Post have been thoroughly disproved, if we can place any reliance whatever in this report on the national film board which has been submitted by J. D. Woods and Gordon Limited.

Looking over the recommendations, it is interesting to note that many of the proposals contained in the report came from the employees. I cannot believe that the employees came to these conclusions suddenly when they advanced them to this organization. They must have had these opinions for some years, and undoubtedly they must have passed them on to their superior officers. It appears, therefore, as though the government is the laggard in not acknowledging them sooner. Criticism has been made frequently of the alleged inefficiency of the film board, and there has been an element of merit in that criticism. When we are told again, as we are in this report, that the board has had to work in at least ten different buildings it can easily be understood why inefficiencies did exist. If the film board was compelled to do that, I do not think the fault can be attributed to it, but rather the fault again comes back to the government which is responsible for the care of its creature. What is more, the buildings for production in which the staff of the film board worked were not adequate, and had to be adapted to the purposes which the film board had in mind; that in itself would add to some extent to the inefficiency.

As to the costs of production, which have been so frequently criticized, I think it is only right that this section on page 5 of the report should be read:

> The board has had to do its film shooting on locations everywhere across Canada. This has been costly, due to the travelling and living expenses involved. Furthermore, the Canadian climate has made it necessary to do the bulk of the shooting during four months in the summer. Film production, therefore, has been not only costly, but also difficult to plan and control because of its seasonal nature. Another problem peculiar to Canada has been the necessity of producing films in both English and French.

Those facts were known to many people, and one would have thought their criticism might have been tempered by that knowledge. Unfortunately, such has not been the case.

There has been criticism of the film board because of its accounting procedure. Again this criticism, when directed against the film board as such, is quite unfair, because we are reminded in this report that the accounting of the board is handled primarily by the comptroller of the treasury. That statement is found on page 25 of the report. Lower down on the same page we find this statement:

> Since the comptroller of the treasury took over the accounting of the national film board some four years ago, there has been a considerable improvement in the accounts.

Nevertheless it is the treasury which has been responsible for the accounting, and not the film board.

Another matter upon which all members have expressed dissatisfaction I am sure has been the terms under which the members of the staff of the film board have had to work. They have been existing on three months' contracts, a very unsatisfactory way of working. I am glad to see that is now being stopped, and they are to be put on the same employment basis as other employees of the government. When the report mentions that the morale of the film board is high, and one considers the conditions and sometimes the criticism under which its personnel had to work, one is surprised at that comment.

There has been a campaign, perhaps a deliberately instigated campaign, against the film board, but that instigation has no place whatever amongst our citizens. The people of Canada, as we can see from the submission made to the Massey commission, are thoroughly behind the film board and what it has done. It has been supported before the commission by dozens of briefs from home and school associations, the Canadian Association for Adult Education, the Federation of Agriculture, the Canadian Citizenship

Council and film associations across the country. The rank and file of the people of Canada support the film board. It is only a few, as I say, who have attacked it, and there has been reason for it.

Canada has shown that we take second place to no other nation in the world when it comes to the production of documentary films such as the film board has given us. These films are in competition with private industry, especially the Hollywood industry. One of the reasons for the concerted attack on the film board has been that commercial interests in Canada, and in Hollywood, instigated them. Today the best way to attack is to smear. If you want to attack an organization or an individual, you conduct a smear campaign. The one way you smear is, of course, by labelling the organization or individual as communist. It is very easy, and it has been done far too often. I repeat what I said earlier, that the film board has not received the defence it should have had from the ministers in the past.

This question of communist allegations brings up the whole matter of security. I made my position and the position of my party quite clear yesterday. We believe that security precautions are necessary, but we must never forget that while security of the state is important, freedom of the individual is no less important. The minister has told us that after the screening had been completed, about three individuals had been relieved of their duties. He spoke in the past tense, so I intend to ask him if any are under notice just now, because of the screening which has just been completed. I want to remind the committee again that while security is important, the liberty of the individual is important too. I hope that ways and means will be found whereby security of the individual will be protected.

The question which I have specifically in mind is this: Are there any employees of the film board who are now under notice to terminate their employment because of the screening which has already been completed?

Mr. Winters: The answer, Mr. Chairman, is no.

Mr. Fraser: May I just say a word about the remarks made by the member for Winnipeg North? He mentioned my name, or at least my riding, and said that commercial companies were behind the attacks on the film board. I want to assure the hon. member and the house that no commercial company ever approached me in regard to the film board. I also want to say that I have no connection with any commercial film company. My sole purpose in criticizing the film board was an attempt to see that the film board becomes a film board producing pictures that are worthy of the people of Canada, and carrying out the duties it was intended to carry out. I had no other purpose. I do not think it was proper for the member for Winnipeg North to impute motives to any member, and I object to it strongly.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Let me answer that, Mr. Chairman. May I say that if I imputed motives to the member for Peterborough West I certainly had no intention of doing so. I accept his statement categorically, and without reservation. I impute no motives to him or any other member in this house, but I do repeat that commercial interests in the United States and Canada have been responsible for much of the campaign against the film board.

Mr. Gauthier (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on this item, and not words of criticism. I want to commend the minister and the officials of his department responsible for a film made by the board last year concerning poliomyelitis in Sudbury. At the request of many medical men and service clubs in our district, as well as the Red Cross Society, I was asked to ascertain whether the national film board would consider spending a few dollars in making a film to show what can be done locally in connection with a matter of that kind. I am sure that this film is now being shown in all the communities across Canada. In cases of emergency, having to do with such dreadful diseases as poliomyelitis, and many others, I think the film board should be commended for the work they are doing to help the many communities.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): First, Mr. Chairman, I would agree with the hon. member for Sudbury that the film is a tremendous educational factor and its use should be extended. I should like to ask the minister if he could not get a crew of camera people to go up into the Peace river district and there make a film showing the resources of the country, the land that is available for settlement, and the development that is going on, particularly the oil development. Just the other day at Whitelaw a well was brought in which is running six hundred barrels of oil per day. I doubt if on that country the film board has a film of the character which I outlined.

The Alaska highway is also a subject which should be filmed. Those films should be sent broadcast throughout America because the highway opens up a great tourist area there as well as an industrial area. The scenic features of the Rocky mountains, which are cut in three places by the Alaska highway, are superior to those in Switzerland; yet little has been done to publicize that fact. The possibilities of the Yukon as a place for tourists and also for industrial development could be shown only by film. Some time ago I saw a film on the Peace river country made by the national film board. It was dated 1941. In the last ten years so many things have happened north of Edmonton that there has been a transformation of the entire country, and a film dated 1941 is not particularly useful in presenting the story as it is in 1950. I would ask the minister to direct his department to these parts of Canada which should be illustrated by the film board.

Mr. Fulford: I should like to quote a few figures in order to show what an important part the film board is playing in the life of the rural section of my riding. It was just a year ago that the film council of the county of Leeds was organized. Last winter no less than 87 public and continuation schools were given visual education through the use of national film board pictures. Those 87 schools represented ninety per cent of the rural schools in the county which are serviced with hydroelectric power. Besides, there are fifty adult audiences which are shown national film board pictures each five weeks. That means that there are over 1,000 students and adults who view the films each week. In my opinion that is a considerable audience. Not only do these films bring education to the school children of the county; they also bring education and enjoyment to a great many of the adult residents of the rural sections. Actually there are two sets of equipment in continuous use five days of the week, morning, afternoon and evening; and occasionally it is necessary to bring a third projector into service. Certainly the rural people of the county of Leeds are most enthusiastic about the services given by the national film board. Many of them have come to me requesting that every effort be made not to curtail but to increase greatly the activities of the film board in making more films available both for schools and for adult education.

Mr. Croll: May I say how highly pleased I am to hear the tenor of the remarks made today in the committee with respect to the film board. I want to follow in the mood of the hon. member for Sudbury and the hon. member for Cariboo. I want to make a plea to the film board to direct their attention to films that deal particularly with citizenship. The last one I saw that was made by the film board was slightly out of date; nevertheless it was an excellent picture. Large numbers of the people who are coming into this country may not be able to read for a while, and they may not be able to write; but they attend the films and they can see, and an impression is made upon them. There is a tremendous opportunity for us to spread the gospel to these people to push home a lesson to them, to let them know the meaning of freedom, what we mean by Canadianism, and what we expect of them in this country.

We are naturally gratified to hear the words of praise directed today to the film board. They deserve it, and I am sure that they will deserve it even more in the future. But through you, Mr. Chairman, I ask the minister to consider the suggestion I have made because I think the field I have referred to has been neglected.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Can the minister tell me if there are any employees of the film board who today are under notice of dismissal?

Mr. Croll: He said no.

Mr. Winters: I answered that question before, Mr. Chairman. The answer is no.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I know I asked if there were any under notice of dismissal for security reasons but are there any under notice of dismissal not for screening purposes, but for any purpose whatsoever?

Mr. Winters: I understand there are certain resignations pending, not for reasons related to screening. There is quite a turnover in the employees of the board, and the resignations that are pending have no relationship to screening at all.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I am quite prepared to accept the minister's statement that they have no relationship to screening; nevertheless I think it is most unfortunate that these resignations should take place at such a time when screening has been so recently conducted, because it must leave a certain stigma upon those who are resigning. I do not think this is the time for people to choose to resign, let us say.

Mr. Winters: We have had that consideration in mind, of course. That is the reason why I was anxious to announce at the earliest possible date that screening had been completed, so that anybody who wished to retire after that, for reasons of his own, would not retire under the cloud of security.

While I am on my feet perhaps I should answer the final question the hon. member for Peterborough West asked. It was about the board's relationship to the Department of National Defence at the present time. I can assure the house that after the screening was completed and the board was declared a secure agency, the normal relationships with the Department of National Defence were resumed. The most cordial relationships prevail, and we are as a matter of fact making one picture now for the Department of National Defence. With other departments of government the film board works very closely through the film liaison officers or any other officers who might be appointed to deal with the film board in respect to pictures made for the department.

In reply to the hon. member for Cariboo, may I say that a considerable amount of film has been produced on the north, which is a fertile field for filming, and I am hopeful that we shall be able to do something more in that district.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1950-51

A message from His Excellency the Governor General, transmitting supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1951, was presented by Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dion in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

General administration—

85. Departmental administration, $1,392,488.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, it seems appropriate that on the general administration item for the Department of Finance certain remarks should be made in connection with a subject which has been under discussion here on different occasions during the present session.

The public accounts committee has had a number of meetings, and is still sitting, but an interim report was tabled which dealt with certain recommendations made by that committee and certain evidence received by it. First of all I wish to make it clear that the interim report is not unanimous, and that while there are a number of recommendations in it which are useful and will be helpful to members of the House of Commons, and I would hope particularly useful to the Minister of Finance in the preparation of estimates for next year, the fact remains that there were certain important points put forward in the report which do not represent the views of some members of the committee.

The sittings of the committee have been useful in that, in addition to the discussion of the details of the public accounts, we had the advantage of recommendations by the Auditor General in regard to a great number of procedural matters which do suggest that important improvements can be made. One of the things emerging most clearly from the recommendations of the Auditor General was the emphasis on the fact that public accounts should be before members of the house, and estimates as well, in a form that would make it possible for hon. members to exercise supervision over public expenditures.

The recommendations were based quite clearly upon a recognition of the fact that the estimates and the public accounts as they come before the House of Commons and the examination and discussion of them in the house do not give to hon. members effective control over public expenditures unless they are so presented that hon. members are able to understand how the details are made up and to obtain the kind of information they should have.

One of the recommendations of the Auditor General was that the system of presenting the estimates and the public accounts should be simplified and information given in such a way that related subjects could be discussed with a knowledge of the facts behind the figures. One statement was prepared and placed in evidence before the committee which indicated the difficulty there is in dealing with the estimates in the way we now do.

An official of the Department of Finance prepared an analysis of the estimates now before us and of those for two other years, one of which was the last full year before the war. The information was broken down on what was described as a functional basis. It brought together related activities, and then accumulated the totals from each department.

What was apparent when those figures were brought together was the very large increase in a number of items out of all proportion to the increase in population of the country, or what would appear to be the normal business of government. Without attempting to review the whole of the statement, I should like to take a single item to show the extent to which expenditures have increased. Similar increases are found in many respects on almost the same proportionate basis as the one I shall now mention.

Under the heading of telephones, telegrams and postage, the total in 1938-39 was $960,248, whereas in the present estimates the total is $8,595,943. I shall not go into details of the other items, because similar increases, some on a larger and some on a smaller proportionate basis, occur right through this statement. I take that particular item to show how impossible it is from the practical point of view to examine the estimates here with any suggestion that we are actually performing an effective audit of the items and are in position to make specific recommendations in regard to reductions under one heading or another.

The total in regard to telephones, telegrams and postage is the combined total of the items in the estimates of different departments. We see a figure in front of us which requires explanation, but when dealing with each of these items separately it is impossible to say exactly what can be done in the way of reduction consistent with efficiency. It was for that very reason that we proposed an examination of the whole system of accounting and the organization of government by an independent body. That proposal has been disposed of by a majority vote of this house for the present session, but it will be renewed again in the hope that in the meantime the government will have seen the advantage of such a method.

But even if that course were not adopted, there is another course which I submit should be adopted. This is the time to put this forward because when the estimates are being prepared next year they will be prepared before we have an opportunity to express our views on the subject. If the estimates were submitted to a committee on estimates we would have the nearest approach that we could have within our parliamentary structure to that type of independent examination formally put forward by motion in this house. A committee on estimates could deal with the estimates of each department by bringing the officials of the department before it. They could bring the items together, examine them and see exactly how they are made up and find out if there were any substantial economies which could be effected to the advantage of the public service and to the very great advantage of the taxpayers of Canada. If we did that we would only be doing what every large business is doing year by year, seeking to find out ways in which business can be carried on more efficiently and at reduced costs through the elimination of duplication of services and through a careful examination of how expenditures are actually incurred and how they are made up.

Without any suggestion as to the improper use of these services under such headings as telephones, telegrams and postage, it is easy for everyone in this committee to understand how these things can get out of hand unless there is some effective measure of control. I do not believe that the Minister of Finance or his officials are better able to examine details of this kind in the very largest business in the country, the business of government, than are the experts in other types of business. They seek the examination by people who can examine from an objective point of view outside the actual organization itself.

We could examine details like this. We could examine details like travelling and transportation expenses which have grown from $4,742,206 in the last year before the war to $22,744,344 for the coming year. The Minister of Finance has said, "Point to single items where reductions could be made." That sounds like a practical suggestion, but except for the purposes of making a statement in this house every hon. member knows that it is not a practical suggestion. Every hon. member knows that the only way that members can obtain information which will make it possible to deal with this upon the basis of single items is to have a committee on estimates and also concurrently in the wider field an investigation such as we proposed in the resolution to which I have referred.

There has been a tendency during the present session when proposals were made for the appointment of committees of this kind to suggest that we are seeking to establish the system of government that is in operation in the United States and to depart from the practices described as British parliamentary institutions. Here is a case where that argument can have no validity because there is a committee on estimates at Westminster which has authority to call, and does call before it, senior officials and others who are in position to explain details and show exactly how the items are made up. On that basis that committee on estimates is able to make recommendations in detailed form.

What we are proposing is the adoption of a system which has worked satisfactorily for many years in a parliament which is described, outside the commonwealth as well as inside, as the mother of parliaments. Far from proposing any departure from traditional parliamentary practices, we are merely proposing that we adopt parliamentary practices which have been carried on successfully in that parliament from which we drew our general practices and traditions.

To sum up the items under the various headings, we arrive at a total showing that the estimates for the last year before the war required a total of $549,219,048, while this year the estimates call for $2,367,480,478. When we suggest that economies can be effected the answer is given, as it was given just a few days ago, that a substantial part of the estimates of most of the departments is made up of items for services of a statutory nature which cannot be reduced. When that explanation is given it invariably overlooks the fact that wrapped in those total costs is the cost of handling services and that an independent examination might well disclose large numbers of items where reductions could be made in the handling of the services, to the advantage of the government and to the advantage of the taxpayers of Canada.

The proposals made by the Auditor General were not accepted in the report presented by the public accounts committee. I am not suggesting for a moment that the recommendations of the Auditor General should be accepted without question. I can see real arguments against reducing the number of items, as was suggested. I can see no arguments against simplification of the presentation of the accounts and the giving of greater detail in that part of the statement of estimates explaining the items found in the front part of the book.

Moreover, I have heard no sound argument put forward suggesting any reason why a committee on estimates would not be the best procedure for the year by year examination of the estimates. I do not think any argument was put forward before the committee suggesting any reason for not making the recommendation that there should be a committee on estimates to deal with estimates presented to the house in future. I also think the recommendation which was made with respect to explanation of details and steps being taken to give parliament effective, practical and real control over expenditures is one which should be emphasized and carried into effect.

I am making these comments now because the Minister of Finance is the minister primarily charged with the responsibility for the preparation of the estimates and the form in which we shall receive them. There is a lack of uniformity in the way in which they are presented. While the reduction of the number of items in some departments may be questioned, there certainly can be no such question in the case of the Department of National Defence where the bulk of the expenditure on national defence is included in a single item. Furthermore, the supporting details given at the back of the book do not explain these enormous expenditures, today approaching the total of the budgets of the government before the war, in a way that makes it possible for members to make any real examination of these estimates. If there is a single department which demonstrates the necessity for following a number of the recommendations of the Auditor General it is the Department of National Defence.

As I pointed out in discussion of its estimates earlier, it does not follow the same procedure as other departments in regard to the construction of buildings and other things of that kind, which cannot by any possible stretch of the imagination be regarded as secret. I urge the Minister of Finance to give careful consideration to the recommendations of the Auditor General. I hope that after consideration thereof he will arrange for the presentation of the estimates next year in a form which will be more understandable to members and which will follow some uniform pattern in each department so far as that is practicable. I hope he will also inform the house that he is going to agree to the setting up of a committee on estimates shortly after the opening of the next session.

All hon. members know that during the time we have sat here this argument has been before the other place and has also been discussed in public. Hon. members are also aware that not only in Canada but also in other nations of the commonwealth and in the United States there is constant emphasis on the fact that the greatest need today in the field of government activity is to find a way of exercising effective control over expenditure so that, with the enormous expenditures made by many agencies not subject to the ordinary supervision of parliament or even of government, the highest measure of accounting efficiency may be established and the most economical practices adopted. Many of those who have put forward these contentions have emphasized the fact that our whole democratic structure may break down unless we are able to exercise control of the amount of expenditure by so many agencies of the government as well as by the government itself.

For the very reasons that have been given it is not possible to deal with single items here. The public accounts committee deals with past accounts; a committee on estimates could deal with the present estimates before us and other estimates in the years ahead. The most that we can do now is to say that the system that has been adopted is one which denies that measure of detail which would make it possible to recommend reductions, except in a few simple cases. We must therefore urge a procedure which has worked well elsewhere, and would work equally well here, so that in the future we may be able to consider the estimates with actual knowledge of the facts.

The question before the Minister of Finance and other members of the house is whether the machinery set up by parliament is to be machinery which will really carry on the business of parliament and the government in the most efficient way, or whether it is to be machinery which will be used for the purpose of hiding information. Those who have sat as members of some of the committees this year know very well that there are numerous instances of steps being taken to use the machinery now available for the purpose of hiding information instead of exposing it to the examination of members of the house. What we do should be for the purpose of reducing costs wherever costs can be reduced, for the purpose of increasing in every way the efficiency of the biggest business in Canada, for which members of the house are primarily responsible, and urging the taking of steps for next year which will make it possible for us to deal effectively with the estimates that come before us at that time.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I want to raise one question with the minister which is really a matter of finance. When we were discussing the public works estimates the other night the question of commitments arose. I hope the minister is aware that it was then suggested, and I hope agreed, that the whole question of commitments might be dealt with in more detail on the estimates of the Department of Finance. I should like to know whether it would be more convenient to discuss the matter now or later.

Mr. Abbott: It might be as convenient to take it up now as any other time. The position with respect to commitments is this. As my hon. friend and the committee are aware, under British constitutional practice there is no limit to the commitments a government may make under contracts which will carry on in future years. The making of those commitments or the giving of those undertakings does, of course, imply that parliament will have to vote the necessary funds in succeeding years, and that in making such commitments the government of the day must feel that it is going to be in a position to implement them.

The practice with respect to commitments in the past has been varied, but my understanding is that where a specific amount has been voted, say in the estimates of the Department of Public Works, encumbrances would not be issued beyond the total of the amount voted. There was nothing to prevent commitments being entered into which would fall due in future years. The practice we have followed the last year or two of inserting specific commitment authority in a particular vote is for the purpose of limiting the extent of the commitments that may be made by that particular department for the particular purposes indicated. In the absence of such specific statutory limitation on commitments, the department of course would be perfectly free to make any commitment it saw fit. As I have indicated, the purpose of inserting a specific amount as commitment authority was to limit the department in the commitments it might incur. Does that cover the point my hon. friend had in mind?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Yes and no. When we were considering the estimates of the Department of Public Works the other evening it became clear that there was a whole list of substantial commitments. We asked the minister to let us know to what extent those had been availed of, and my recollection is that the extent was comparatively trivial. So the question arose as to whether there was any need for these substantial amounts, running into many hundreds of thousands of dollars earmarked against various items, or whether it might not be more sensible to have a common fund.

I digress for a moment. I am a little surprised—perhaps I took it up wrongly—to hear the minister say there is nothing to prevent a department making commitments of any size; that is, I suppose nothing except common sense. Does the minister mean that literally?

Mr. Abbott: That is quite right. There is no constitutional limitation on the minister of a department, with the approval of the government, entering into contracts for any amount he sees fit.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I suppose I understand the sense in which the minister makes that statement. It would not mean a thing except the hope that later on parliament would grant those amounts. I find it a little difficult to understand the minister's explanation that this really is not an enabling provision but a limiting provision.

Mr. Abbott: That is exactly what it is, and what it is intended to be.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Then I would ask the minister what in point of fact was the practice before this commitment provision came in? Frankly I do not think the Minister of Public Works quite regarded it in that sense. It seemed to me he regarded it as merely some additional leeway given to his department if it should find itself pinched here and there. Let me put a specific question. What is the objection to having a common fund for these purposes? Let us turn, for example, to page 43 of the estimates, under public works, where we have a whole series of commitments totalling some $610,000. What is the objection; or in the minister's view would there be no advantage in having one common fund which would be available, bearing in mind the fact that, as I say, apparently these commitments under public works were very little availed of?

Mr. Abbott: I am not sure that I am quite clear just what my hon. friend has in mind by a common fund. As I indicated a moment ago, the practice with respect to the use of commitments varied a good deal in the past, and varied as between different departments. In considering how these matters should be dealt with, and taking into account the fact that extensive construction projects, for instance, in some cases may go on over a number of years, it is quite clear that a department such as public works should be in a position to in fact give undertakings or make commitments for future years. As my hon. friend has indicated, this implies that parliament will be willing to vote the funds in the years they are required for payment. It is true that the commitment authority in public works has not been too extensively availed of; I have a list here of the votes in the main estimates, indicating the extent to which that commitment authority has been utilized. If my hon. friend would like me to place it on Hansard for purposes of illustration I shall be glad to do so. It is for 1949-50, the year to which I think my hon. friend referred. The list is as follows:

Department of Public Works Commitment Authority 1949-50

Vote No.	Name of Vote	Amount
328	Maintenance of public buildings..	$500,000
	Encumbered .....(repairs)	107,000
329	Public bldgs., outside Ottawa	500,000
	Ottawa bldgs.	67,000
333	Maritime provinces	100,000
	Encumbered	nil
334	Quebec	100,000
	Encumbered	53,000
335	Ontario	100,000
	Encumbered	nil
336	Manitoba	50,000
	Encumbered	nil
337	Saskatchewan	50,000
	Encumbered	nil
338	Alberta	50,000
	Encumbered	7,000
339	British Columbia	50,000
	Encumbered	nil
347	Public bldgs. generally	200,000
	Repairs, alterations, etc.
	Encumbered	nil
	Harbours, Rivers, Maintenance Wharves
367	Prince Edward Island	35,000
	Encumbered	7,000
369	New Brunswick	65,000
	Encumbered	15,000
370	Quebec	125,000
	Encumbered	nil
371	Ontario	75,000
	Encumbered	nil
374	British Columbia	75,000
	Encumbered	nil

The practice now in connection with public works expenditures, as the committee is aware, is to indicate in the details the estimated cost of the various public projects by provinces. A lump sum is voted, which represents the best estimate the department can give as to the amount of money that actually will be expended on all those projects in the particular fiscal period. If that proved insufficient it would be necessary, of course, to get a supplementary vote. In their experience it has been found that if they were to list one hundred different projects such as wharves, breakwaters, public buildings and so on, some can proceed more rapidly than others, and if they are restricted to each individual vote there is a substantial overestimate of what will be the probable expenditure. In addition to that, in the public works estimates there is specific authority to incur commitments for future years; but, as I have said before, that is intended as a limitation so the department will not place contracts now extending into future years beyond the amount indicated in the particular item.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Then one further question in this connection. Will the minister look at item 357 of the public works estimates, which indicates a somewhat different practice, though possibly it does not cover the same situation. The minister will see that the amount is $150,000, and the item reads:

> To provide for balances required to complete any propects undertaken in previous fiscal years and for which no specific provision is made in the fiscal year 1950-51.

That looks like a kind of mopping-up operation.

Mr. Abbott: Of course the Minister of Public Works would have more information on this than I have, but I am told that is to cover a number of smaller projects where amounts were being carried forward which would need revotes if reference were made to the specific items in previous years. These would be amounts of $500, $1,000, $750, and so on; so it is a sort of mopping-up operation, as the hon. member said.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): In the course of his budget speech the minister made this reference at page 1214 of Hansard:

> But I think it is fair to remind the house that during the past year and over the next few years the accession of Newfoundland to Canada has imposed and will continue to impose a considerable net burden on the federal treasury.

Since this has given rise to some editorial comment in the Newfoundland papers I should like to make brief reference to it. This is not intended as criticism, because I do not think we have sufficient facts to be able to comment upon it in that way.

Mr. Abbott: My hon. friend knows what I said immediately after that statement.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Yes; I have read all the remarks the minister made, including the reference to the saving of several million dollars on the sterling debt you took over.

Mr. Abbott: No saving there.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): From $62 million to $52 million. It cost you $52 million and you took over $62 million. There was also a benefit in United States exchange of about $40 million, and there was the increased trade in the internal market through the diversion of about $25 million worth of imports from the United States to the other provinces of Canada. What I want to do principally is to ask the minister if he can prepare a statement showing the actual expenditures corresponding to the items in the supplementary estimates from No. 666 to No. 745. Those are the estimates for expenditures in Newfoundland. I do that particularly for this reason. As the minister must be well aware there is a provision in the terms of union for the setting up of a royal commission within eight years. It is going to be less than eight before it will be necessary to have that royal commission, and I would suggest to him that a careful record be kept of the actual expenditures and the moneys received as a result of the union.

Mr. Abbott: As I think my hon. friend will see on reflection, it is not possible to accurately pinpoint the items to which he refers in the supplementary estimates, because the cost of those services is absorbed in the regular departmental vote. It would be quite impractical to maintain separate accounts for Newfoundland or individual provinces. One can make estimates, of course, as to the revenues from a particular part of the country, but it is impossible to give definite figures.

The sales tax, for instance, with respect to sales in Newfoundland is collected at the manufacturers' level or the wholesalers' level, and in some cases would be collected in Quebec, Ontario or some other province. One cannot state with complete accuracy what revenues are derived from any particular part of Canada, other than the moneys that are paid into a particular customs house.

[Mr. Browne (St. John's West).]

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): What about the income tax?

Mr. Abbott: Income tax collections, of course; and those statistics are published each year with respect to the different provinces, except for corporations. Any information that can be obtained, of course, I shall be glad to get.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to give one illustration of what I mean. Under the votes 704 to 709 there was $3,620,000 voted last year of which only $900,000 was expended. Therefore, I think it is important for the minister to do the best he can to keep a record—I do not expect him to be accurate.

Mr. Abbott: Was that last year?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Yes. So far as sales tax is concerned, there was an estimate of $4 million. Comment in the Newfoundland press says that amount was underestimated, as were other amounts, and that the correct amount is probably in the neighbourhood of $8 million. I was going to ask the minister if someone in his department could prepare a statement showing how that $4 million was estimated.

Mr. Abbott: I shall be glad to see if I can get the information as to how the estimate was made. Nothing is better than proven results, however. We are now over the first fiscal period in which Newfoundland has been a province of Canada. From here on we shall not have to rely on estimates, so far as income tax receipts are concerned.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): But the sales tax?

Mr. Abbott: It will be more difficult with the sales tax, because we shall have returns of sales tax collected from wholesalers in Newfoundland, but it would be difficult to segregate the parts which would have been paid by residents of Newfoundland but which would have been collected in other parts of Canada.

Mr. Quelch: Will the minister make a statement on the apparent shortage of venture capital in Canada? The other day I referred to a statement made by the deputy governor of the Bank of Canada, in which he stated that thrifty Canadians had increased their savings by $3 billion in the past four years, and were increasing their savings at the rate of $400 million a year. These savings were adequate to meet the investment needs of Canada, but apparently Canadians were not prepared to take the risk. Consequently the United States investor is stepping in to put money into the resources of this country.

The situation has now developed where 50 per cent of the dividends of all corporations in Canada are being paid to non-residents. Is the minister considering taking any steps to encourage people to invest their money in the resources of Canada?

I suggested that it might help the situation if the government were to refund part of the maturing dominion bonds through the Bank of Canada. This would increase the amount of investment capital and would also help in reducing the national debt, and consequently the rates of tax; that in itself would help encourage investing. It seems as though the financial institutions of this country are far more interested in investing money in bonds than in investing money in the resources of the country. We hear members deplore the fact that we have adopted a form of paternalism towards the people of this country, but it does seem to me that we have done that to a far greater extent towards our financial institutions. They apparently require a government guarantee against loss before they are prepared to make an investment in such things as farm improvement loans, housing, or business loans for veterans. Surely our own financial institutions should be prepared to show a more venturesome spirit. If it were not quite so easy for them to invest their capital in bonds, then they might be prepared to enter the legitimate field of developing the resources of this country. If the United States investors are prepared to do it, there is no reason why the Canadians should not be prepared to do it.

I suggested also that it might be worth giving consideration to setting up the securities commission, or an investment advisory board, on a voluntary basis. Then companies desiring to obtain capital could apply to this board, pay a licence fee, and a statement of their circumstances would be published. It would help to give the people who are desirous of investing money a better understanding of the proposition being placed before them. Has the minister given any consideration to that?

Mr. Abbott: Yes, I listened with a great deal of interest the other day to the useful speech that was made by my hon. friend from Acadia. I am just as interested as he is in encouraging venture capital. I think that capital should be perhaps more venturesome than it is. So far as the government is concerned, we have taken some measures to encourage it to be so; the ten per cent tax credit on dividends, the reduction of the income tax on small business corporations and the liberalization of investment powers of insurance companies and trust and loan companies, which passed this house a few days ago, and so on.

As every member of this house knows, we have been in the midst of a capital investment boom in this country over the last three or four years. Actually the proportion of our national income that is going into capital expenditures today is higher than ever before in the history of Canada, and I am told higher in proportion than any other country in the world. I think that is a satisfactory situation, and I am glad to see it happen. I think most of it is going into enterprises which will make for greater prosperity. I do not think it is entirely fair to say that either Canadian individuals or Canadian financial institutions are lacking in a venturesome sprit or a desire to invest in Canadian enterprise.

Mr. McLure: I should like to draw to the attention of the minister a statement he made not very long ago, that if the committee wanted information it was their duty and the duty of the opposition to ask as many questions as possible to secure that information. That was a proper thing for the Minister of Finance to say, and I hope this committee will take advantage of it today.

There is one item in particular which I brought up at every session. I want to compliment the minister for giving us that information in a more comprehensive way. I refer to the amounts we are asked to vote, namely, $8,774,178, or almost one-third of the total amount of money voted, and for which we have no details, except that we can find out how many temporary employees there are. We were never given that information before, and I want to congratulate the minister on giving us those details. What I should like to know—that is, for another year; we cannot get it now—is this. According to the record that I have here in the detail, there are 4,318 temporary employees, and these receive the average salary of a little over $2,000 per year. I think it would be quite in order for the department to put in a list, the same as they do with the regular civil servants, showing how many of these were economists, how many were supervisors and so on all through the various categories, showing what they are working at and what are their salaries.

We have not any account of that whatsoever. When a little over 30 per cent of the total vote is there as a blank cheque, I think that we should get some information about this matter. I raise the matter again because, as I said, in the last four or five years we have gained this much. We now know how many temporary employees there are. We never knew that before. If we can now get information as to what salaries they are receiving, from that we can possibly find out whether more of them should be made permanent or not. I always wonder how it is that so many of them are carried on year by year—some of them for ten, fifteen and twenty-five years—as temporaries and have never been made permanent. That, however, may be a special arrangement of the Department of Finance.

As I said a moment ago, there are 5,733 employees, and of those 4,318 are listed as temporaries. While it may not be a great factor in the department to give these details, I think it should be of great interest to this committee to have the details concerning an item which accounts for one-third of the total vote.

Mr. Abbott: As to the information that my hon. friend is interested in, I am sure it is available. I shall be glad to give consideration to his suggestion. There is of course a mass of information available with respect to each individual vote. If all of it were to be printed, the book of estimates would run to a fairly extensive size. One has to select which information is of particular interest to hon. members and try to make that available. If any particular information is not printed and if it is asked for, it will be obtained as soon as possible. I think the change this year was as a result of the suggestion made by my hon. friend last year; I refer to classifying the number of permanents and temporaries.

Mr. McLure: The department could say that there are ten clerks at an average of $3,000, for instance.

Mr. Abbott: That is quite right.

Mr. McLure: They could also say that there are five economists—

Mr. Abbott: That is quite right.

Mr. McLure: —and ten superintendents. That is all we want. We do not want the details of names and so on.

Mr. Abbott: That is quite possible.

Item agreed to.

Administration of various acts and costs of special functions—

87. Superannuation and retirement acts, administration, $188,700.

Mr. Herridge: I just want to speak for a few minutes on this item, although I had intended to speak for forty minutes. The parliamentary assistant has been over here and he has sort of worn me down.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): He is not going away too, is he?

[Mr. McLure.]

Mr. Herridge: I want to refer to a small group of people in this country who suffer a certain hardship and injustice by the present superannuation act and the regulations. I have run into an occasional case here and there, and I am just bringing this matter to the attention of the minister to see whether something can be done to amend the regulations or order in council or anything of that sort, just in order to take in a small number of people, as far as I can see, who are affected in various departments of government.

I am just going to mention one case in order to illustrate the situation. In the city of Nelson we have a young man who has been twenty years in the employ of the post office. He was eight years in the employ of the postmaster before the post office was made a revenue post office. Then it was made a revenue post office and he became a civil servant; and he has been twelve years a civil servant. When he became a civil servant he was allowed to come under the superannuation act, I understand, as were the postmasters. But at that time neither postmasters nor clerks were permitted to pay up back superannuation for the years they had previously been employed. But since that time, owing to the order in council that was passed on December 24, 1948, I understand the postmaster has been permitted to pay up his superannuation for all the years he has served the government, even including the time prior to his actually being a civil servant. There are in that post office a few men who paid superannuation since but who are not permitted to pay their back superannuation as the postmaster did. One of these young men has contracted an incurable disease. He has been in hospital for six months and cannot possibly live but a short time longer. He is actually dying at the present time and because of the provisions of the superannuation act, his wife is left with that limited amount of security.

I want to ask the minister if he thinks it is possible for this matter to be given consideration, not only for the sake of this unfortunate civil servant but for that of a small number of others also who are willing to pay up their superannuation in order to provide their wives with a satisfactory security. The sad part of this case also is that this young man's sick leave allowance has now also been discontinued by the post office, so that he and his wife are absolutely flat after his having worked for this country as a civil servant for twenty years. I should like the minister to make a study of the situation.

Mr. Abbott: I shall be glad to do that. My hon. friend and I have had a little bit of correspondence, I think, about the case to which he has referred.

Mr. Herridge: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: With the pressure of other matters, I do not know that I have answered his last letter, but I have been looking at it. As he, of course, realizes, the difficulty is this. Employees of revenue postmasters were at no time government employees. I know the situation because my grandfather and my uncle after him were revenue postmasters for a great many years. The system there is that the postmaster gets commission on his stamp sales, his money orders, box rentals and so on, and he hires and pays his own staff. That is the traditional position of the revenue postmaster. His employees are not, during the term of employment, government employees and never were. He of course at all times has been a government employee. That is the distinction between the postmaster and the people whom he hires. But I shall be glad to study the situation to which my hon. friend refers and to see whether anything can be done.

Mr. Herridge: Thank you.

Mr. Knowles: I hope the minister, despite the heat and the time of the session, is ready to discuss in some detail the question as to providing a cost of living bonus or some other supplementation for superannuated civil servants, especially for those whose pensions are in the lower brackets. It certainly is not necessary for me to speak at length on this matter, because I have spoken on it a good many times. I am sure the minister must be prepared. He must have known that when this item was called I would have something to say about it. Fortunately I came into the chamber just in time for this item. We have just concluded another meeting of our committee on old age security, and I came directly here, although I did not know that we were going to reach this item quite so soon.

As the minister knows from figures that have been placed on Hansard, there are quite a number of retired employees of this government whose pensions are a disgrace. I am looking at the answers to questions of mine as recorded at page 834 of Hansard of March 16, 1950. I find that, as at February 28, 1950, there were 253 retired civil servants on pensions of less than $20 per month.

Mr. Abbott: Some probably with extremely short service.

Mr. Knowles: And they will live a very short time on that sort of pension, too. There were 498 whose pensions were $20 or over but less than $30 a month. There were 677 whose pensions were $30 or over but less than $40 a month, and so on. All told there are 4,584 retired civil servants whose pensions are less than $80 a month. The table at page 834 gives more details on that, but I have picked the $80 figure because it is the old age pension figure for a man and wife, both on pension, at the present time.

As I have said there are 4,584 retired civil servants of the federal government whose pensions are less than that amount. In addition there are 871 widows of retired civil servants whose pensions are less than $20 a month, and there is a total of 2,516 widows of retired civil servants whose pensions are less than $40 a month. I take that $40 figure for widows because that is the old age pension for a widow, by herself.

The minister knows this whole problem has been brought to his attention a good many times. Indeed, it was first brought to the attention of the Department of Finance when Mr. Ilsley held the finance portfolio, which means that it has been on the desk of the present Minister of Finance ever since he took over the department. He gave it a fair amount of consideration early in the game, but that seemed to end with the issuing of a statement which indicated that the government felt it should not do something which was not being done generally by others who paid pensions to retired employees. I have pointed out on other occasions that at least three governments I know of are paying supplementary amounts to their retired civil servants. The three I have mentioned are the governments in the United Kingdom, the province of Newfoundland and the province of Saskatchewan. There may be others of which I am not aware; but at least these three do something for their superannuated civil servants, especially those in the lower brackets.

The plan of supplementing civil servants' pensions so far as the United Kingdom is concerned began back during the war years when the coalition government was in power, and has been continued and in fact amended upwards since the Labour government took office. So there are at least three governments that recognize that, despite the contractual nature of civil service pensions, they have a responsibility toward their former employees.

I might point out that, small though it is, the Canadian Pacific Railway makes a small addition to the pensions of their employees who are in very low brackets. That supplementation applies only between the time an employee goes on pension and the time he qualifies for old age pension. It is not all it could be, but at least it is a gesture on the part of that railway company. My colleague from Kootenay West tells me that Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company does the same thing.

Even if there were not any examples of other employers doing this sort of thing, it seems to me there is a moral responsibility resting upon the government to give a lead to other employers. However, there are these examples and I think that, rather than lag behind provincial governments such as Newfoundland and Saskatchewan, where their resources are limited, this federal government should be taking the lead in an important matter of this kind.

As the minister knows, and as I am sure hon. members in all parts of the house know, this is something of such concern to the people affected that they have organized themselves into associations in various parts of the country. There is a very active branch of their association in Quebec city, as well as in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver, Victoria, and a group of them here in Ottawa. These associations and their various branches have made their representations from time to time to the government. They have also been in touch with their various members of parliament, particularly those members from the areas where these associations are organized.

In other words members of parliament generally, from the correspondence they have received and the representations made to them, must know just how serious is the plight of these people and how strongly they feel that they have a moral claim upon the government, their former employer, to do something about the situation. They have been assured many times by various members of the house that consideration would be given to their plight. I remember on one occasion making the statement that particularly during the last election compaign, many Liberal candidates in British Columbia assured their constituents that they would go to bat on this question. At that particular point the hon. member for Coast-Capilano interjected something to the effect that he had not made any such promises. As he knows, he has since received a letter from one of the associations at the coast reminding him of the promise he made to them in a letter concerning this matter. I know he has received such a letter because the same association wrote to me a letter with which they enclosed a copy of the letter sent to him. I have not that letter with me because, as I have said, I have just come from the committee on old age security and have not had time to go to my office to get my file. However, I just wish to make the point that hon. members generally, and particularly at election times, in those centres where these people are concentrated, have felt that their plight has been sufficient for those hon. members to give varying grades of assurance that they would go to bat for those people in parliament, or by making representations to the government. I feel that the case has been brought forcefully to the attention of the government, and that it has been done repeatedly. In the past delegations have appeared before the minister, and it does seem to me that on moral grounds in this year of 1950 there simply is no excuse for an employer as well off as the federal government to be paying to any of its former employees pensions as low as $20 or $30 a month, and these various other figures I have mentioned.

I am familiar with the argument about the contractual basis of these pensions, but I suggest that that argument disappears when one realizes what has happened. The value of the dollar and the whole question of our economic situation is at least to some extent under the control of the federal government. These people feel that they are getting back now—from the fund into which they put their contributions—dollars which are by no means worth what the dollars were worth that they put into that fund, and they contend that the argument by the government about the contractual aspect of the matter does not hold at all.

I need not extend the argument. The case has been well put forward by these people in their letters to the government and to members of parliament. The case has been well put forward by representatives of these branches who have come to Ottawa and have waited upon members of parliament. I am sure many hon. members who are listening to me now will recall that those representations have been made to them both by letter and in person. I trust that other hon. members in all sections of the house will support me in this plea to the minister to give favourable consideration to the request that something be done to supplement the pensions of these retired civil servants, particularly in the case of those persons whose pensions are in the lower brackets.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): If the minister is not going to reply I would draw his attention to one phase of the situation in Newfoundland. When people have been pensioned by the provincial government they receive a cost of living bonus because the cost of living is 80 per cent above what it was in 1939.

As one who had something to do with getting that, as president of the civil service association for 15 years, I know how people feel when they do not get it. I had a case drawn to my attention of a postmistress who was pensioned and who had to wait six months before she got her pension. When she got it she found that she was not getting the cost of living bonus. Is the minister in a position to tell us anything about that matter? It has been brought to his attention before.

Mr. Abbott: My hon. friend will recall that service in Newfoundland is added to service of the civil servant for Canada, and the appropriate pension is paid. The provincial government of Newfoundland in effect pays the portion of the pension attributable to the Newfoundland service and the federal government pays the difference. I do not think that special rates could be made with respect to pensions payable in Newfoundland. The terms on which the pensions are payable were fixed by the terms of union and confirmed by the statute. I would not think it would be feasible to have one level of pensions in one province of Canada and another level in the other provinces.

Mr. Knowles: But it would be feasible to make arrangements by an item in the estimates, or better still by legislation, to provide a scale of supplementation across the country which would make possible a greater percentage of increase for those in the lower brackets. I hope the minister will not try to get this item through without discussing it.

Mr. Abbott: I do not want to get it through without discussing it and I shall be glad to discuss it. I think I can discuss it very shortly by saying that the government's position has not changed from that indicated in the statement I made last year. I know my hon. friend is intensely interested in this question. Among his other attractive qualities he has the capacity of repeating at intervals practically the same speech—I do not blame him—perhaps in the hope that the government will change its mind. But there would be no purpose in repeating my speech of last year on this matter because in substance it would be exactly the same. As I say, there has been no change in government policy on this matter and so far as I am aware no change is contemplated. I cannot go any further than that.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The only recommendation I can make of my speech is that it will not be the same because I have never spoken on this subject before. I sympathize greatly with the minister's problem and I am sorry that I do not remember the details of his speech last year. Assuming that the minister is aware, as I think he probably is, that there is a great deal of distress among the people referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, should he not make some statement? I know the minister cannot be Santa Claus to the whole world and if he tried to be I would be the first to criticize him. But if he could say something on this matter it would perhaps relieve the feelings of the people concerned.

Mr. Abbott: I am sure that my hon. friend is as fully aware of the situation as I am. The civil service superannuation system of Canada is one of the most generous and favourable, if not the most favourable of any in the country. As has been indicated by my hon. friend, it is a contractual obligation. There are thousands and thousands of Canadians who have to provide their own social security and old age retirement fund by buying insurance, annuities and so on out of their own earnings and on a basis, if I may say so, somewhat less favourable than that enjoyed by civil servants. I have never felt that it was fair to the taxpayers of Canada as a whole that the civil servant who is entitled to benefits under this excellent and generous and fair superannuation plan should be on a preferred basis as compared with taxpayers generally.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I think the minister is perfectly right and I am going to congratulate myself upon having induced him to make such a speech.

Mr. Knowles: At the risk of getting another compliment from the minister of the kind that he paid me a few moments ago, and although he may think I have made the same speech over and over again a little too often, I would remind him that it is quite a while since he made a speech on this subject.

Mr. Abbott: I speak only when I have something new to say.

Mr. Knowles: This matter came up in December toward the end of the session last fall and the minister's comment at that time was nil. There were only three speeches—my opening remarks, then a speech by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra and one by the hon. member for Peace River, and then the item carried. When we got back here for this session I raised the matter on March 21. On looking over my speech in Hansard I find that the minister is correct, that what I said today is similar to what I said then, only that the figures have been brought up to date. At that time we were dealing with supplementary estimates or interim supply, and the minister complained about my raising the question at that time.

I quote from the minister's remarks as reported on page 975 of Hansard of March 21, 1950:

I would be very glad to discuss this or any other question at length when my own estimates are called, which I think would be the more usual time to do it. We have done it in the past and I shall be happy to do it again,—

Mr. Abbott: My hon. friend has discussed it at length; that is what I referred to.

Mr. Knowles: I continue with the minister's remarks:

—but I think that is really the time, not when we are asking for approval of an item of $63,000 to provide for a too-conservative estimate of the government's contribution to the superannuation fund.

As I say, that was either on supplementary estimates or interim supply back in March and on that occasion the minister persuaded the house to put off the debate.

Mr. Abbott: When my hon. friend made his speech a minute ago I listened with my usual attention. I did not try to curtail the debate but I do not know why I should stand up here and keep on repeating the same thing.

Mr. Knowles: I am trying to get the minister to make a speech so that we may have his comments on the question. If there are any arguments that he can advance, then we can endeavour to answer them. The minister has referred just now to the generosity of the civil service superannuation scheme. I admit that that would apply to the scheme now in effect; I admit readily that civil servants who are now contributing to the various funds have a prospect of looking forward to fairly good pensions; but surely the minister does not contend that it is generous in the case of people who are now retired and who are receiving a pension of less than $20 per month.

Mr. Abbott: Supposing they had other resources which they presumably might have built up before they came into the government service? Those should be taken into account. A number of the people my hon. friend has referred to have had very limited service, perhaps of only a few years. They may have been engaged in other occupations before they came into the service and may have made provision for their own future from their earnings.

Mr. Knowles: If these people were in that position they would not be worrying their hearts out and going to the meetings of the associations which they have organized in order to try to get somewhere with their plea for consideration of their plight. The minister knows that I am not putting up a plea for those who have other resources or for those who are well fixed, but I do think that there is a moral claim that these people have, particularly those who are in the lower brackets. If the only comment the minister has to make is to compliment me for the kind of speech I make, then I shall have to continue making that speech twice a year in the hope that in time it will wear him down.

Item agreed to.

Administration of various acts and costs of special functions—

88. The Bank Act—salaries and expenses of the inspector general of banks' office, $28,400.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I presume the bank inspection involved here has to do only with the chartered banks. Who inspects the Bank of Canada? Does the minister inspect it?

Mr. Abbott: The Bank of Canada is audited by its auditors. The auditors who inspect the Bank of Canada are appointed by the governor in council under the statute.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Who are they?

Mr. Abbott: They rotate from year to year. I will get the information in a moment.

Item agreed to.

Administration of various acts and costs of special functions—

89. Administration of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1943, and the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act, 1938, $34,202.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like an explanation from the minister about the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. What is the size of the operation at the moment? My impression is that it must have greatly dwindled, and I should like to know where it stands. I should also like to learn something about the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act.

Mr. Abbott: The extent of the operation under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act is pretty small. Of course it only operates in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The number of unfinished cases on the first of April, 1949, in Manitoba was nil; Saskatchewan, 42; Alberta, 38. The number of proposals filed by farmers during 1949-50 was one in Manitoba, twenty-two in Saskatchewan and three in Alberta. The Municipal Improvements Assistance Act was enacted in 1938 to assist municipalities in making self-liquidating improvements and to relieve unemployment. The act was suspended early during world war II and has not been reopened since. Therefore no new applications have been considered and no new loans have been approved during the current year.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the minister tell me what staff there is for the operation of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act? According to the figures he has given it is practically a dead letter, as one would expect, because farm prices have happily been very much better than they were, if not all that we would have liked. What staff is there?

Mr. Abbott: A total of eleven.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Without wanting to dwell too long on it, I suggest to the minister that if there are eleven people to do all that the act now does they must be busy keeping each other busy. Without labouring the matter further, I suggest that it might be looked into because to all intents and purposes it seems to me that the staff is too large.

Mr. Abbott: It is on a steadily reducing basis. I am satisfied that the staff is not too great. After all, the act is there and these cases have to be processed. We are reducing the staff, and as a matter of fact it is being reduced this year.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am not going to regard that as one of the shining examples of the effectiveness of the minister's staff. After all, I know a little about this kind of thing. Here you have eighty cases in all. Incidentally, I see there is a nil return for Manitoba. Nothing must have happened there at all. I would have thought that eleven people are about five times too many to deal with this matter.

Mr. Abbott: There were forty-nine cases disposed of during 1949-50. There is one permanent salary of $2,280, and there are ten persons under the head of temporary assistance. It is an extremely small staff and the total expenditure is estimated at $30,000 odd.

Mr. Bater: I should like to advise the hon. member for Greenwood that, while it is true that farm prices have been considerably higher in recent years, there is still an area in Saskatchewan, which has often been mentioned by the hon. member for Maple Creek, that will still derive benefit from the act.

Mr. Abbott: There is one other point I should have mentioned. Of course this staff also administers the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act on which payments are still being made. There are loans outstanding and they also have to be processed.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I want to make it quite clear that I am not criticizing the act. I am only suggesting that such a large staff is not needed.

Mr. Abbott: The auditors of the Bank of Canada for the year just ended are Mr. Gates of P. S. Ross and Sons and Mr. Samson of Chartre, Samson, Beauvais, Gauthier and Company.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who are the various representatives in the province of Saskatchewan for the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and how much did each receive last year?

Mr. Abbott: I am afraid I have not that here. I did not anticipate it would be asked, but it is readily available. I will get it and give it to my hon. friend.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad to hear that the act is being continued because it fills a need. It has done a great deal for the benefit of farmers in various areas of the western provinces who, by reason of conditions beyond their control, would otherwise not have been able to carry on. It is an act that the Bennett administration introduced in 1935, and it has been most beneficial. As everyone who comes from the province of Saskatchewan knows, there are areas where the act is still applicable, and may be more applicable having regard to conditions prevalent this year in parts of Saskatchewan, which are a continuation of last year's conditions. I am not going to go into detail at this time, but I feel some consideration should be given to the act at the next session to make provision for an extension of the time within which farmers may be permitted to make a second application.

When the act was first brought into being in 1935 the administration was rather too strict and confined as to the degree to which indebtedness was written down. It may have gone the other way later on, but certainly farmers who had their debts written down in 1935 and 1936 did not have them written down to the extent that later applicants did. If I were to speak personally about the act, I might say that in the case of two or three claims I felt the reduction was rather steep, but I know what the act did. It was beneficial. I hope that consideration will be given to extending an opportunity to those in parts of Saskatchewan within the Palliser triangle who had their indebtedness written down earlier in the administration of the act and later on found that the amount they received was so much less than what was extended under the later administration of the act as to be of very little, if any, benefit to them.

Mr. Jones: Is the minister giving consideration to capital loans under the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act being granted again to municipalities, or is the act frozen?

Mr. Abbott: That question has been raised by a number of members, and so far no consideration has been given to it. As I said a moment ago, it was introduced during a period of relatively low unemployment. I think I can certainly say with safety that it will not be reconsidered until after our discussions with the provinces this fall.

Item agreed to.

Administration of various acts and costs of special functions—

90. Administration of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, 1944, and the Veterans Business and Professional Loans Act, 1946, $55,520.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like to make one comment. I observe with interest that the Farm Improvement Loans Act has, I should think, proved to be of great assistance because I note that in 1949 loans for the purchase of agricultural implements amounted to some $41 million, considerably more than in 1948. It seems to me it is serving a useful purpose.

Mr. Herridge: I want to ask a question concerning the Veterans Business and Professional Loans Act. Are the loans expanding? Are the veterans taking greater advantage of this opportunity from year to year? Then, what percentage of loss has been incurred, if any?

Mr. Abbott: At December 31, 1949, there were 4,633 loans outstanding for a total of $8,390,236, and the losses totalled $72,855.78, plus costs of $802.93.

Item agreed to.

Administration of various acts and costs of special functions—

91. Foreign Exchange Control Act, 1946—administrative costs (other than those provided by the Bank of Canada), $205,500.

Mr. Adamson: I have something to say on this item which will take a few minutes. No doubt the minister will say he has heard some of it before. Sometimes in this house I find one has to adopt the principle of water dropping on a stone and wearing it away in order to get any hearing at all. The matter I want to discuss is the foreign exchange control board, of course, and the whole business of controlled currency and exchange. The situation today is rather like that of a doctor called in to see a patient who is flushed and has a very high colour. The doctor says to the patient and his family, "Why, look at that fine, glowing complexion. He is in fine shape. Keep him on his diet of beefsteak and champagne". That is the diagnosis, though the patient may be suffering from a thrombosis or high blood pressure.

Today the dominion bureau of statistics published figures on our trade which were treated by the press as being extraordinarily favourable. I want to examine those figures in perhaps a more critical light. First I want to look at the principal trend in our trade, which of course is brought about by the deliberate policy of the government to have a controlled dollar based upon United States currency. It is true that we have increased our exports to the United States for the month of May by $54 million over last year, and that is very good. But let us look at what has helped bring that about. In the first place there has been a tremendous increase in the population of the United States in the last year or so, which has had something to do with this increased trade. Another and very important point is that during the past year the United States has been in a deficit position with respect to certain base metals and wood products, which form our two major items of export to that country. Then the policy of the United States government of putting floor supports under many items of food and thus keeping up the price of food in the United States, particularly beef and other meats, which has brought about great increases in our exports of cattle and other animals to that country, not only by volume but also in price. That, I maintain, has been a direct result of the farm support policy followed across the line.

There are, however, certain warnings of which we should take note. One is the fact that very shortly this whole matter of tariffs is going to be raised again, particularly the tariff on copper; and in this item alone there might be a very serious decline in our trade with the United States. While I am on the subject I think I should say that with the growing depletion in the United States in the metals it must have for its economy, it is natural to expect that our trade north and south will increase. That is due to geological factors which are beyond the control of either government.

Looking at the picture today, I find these figures. According to the bureau of statistics our exports to the whole world in the month of May amounted to $289·6 million, as compared with imports for May of $290·1 million. In other words our deficit amounted to $500,000. Our exports to the whole world in May 1949 amounted to $275·7 million, while our imports from the world amounted to $250·5 million, showing a surplus on trading account of $25·2 million. In other words our basic position for those same months of the two years shows an impairment of $24·7 million. Our adverse balance with the United States in May of 1950 was $19·2 million, while the adverse net trading position with the United States in May of 1949 was $49 million, showing an improvement of $29·8 million in comparing the two months. As I have said, that is to be expected largely because of the shift in trade caused by the deficiency picture south of the line, which incidentally is likely to get worse.

Now let us come to our exports to the United Kingdom. In May, 1950, they amounted to $48·8 million and in May, 1949, to $72·9 million, or an impairment on balance of $24·1 million. That is a shift in the pattern of our trade, north and south versus east and west, and it is something which is done by government action largely through the operation of exchange controls. It is a deliberate policy, and it is having the effect of cutting down our world trade. As has been shown, we had a deficit in the month of May, 1950, versus a surplus in the month of May, 1949. Our trade with the rest of the world has greatly decreased, and we are putting ourselves into the position where we are becoming more and more dependent on the United States for our international trade.

I feel there is some danger in this deliberate policy, a part of which is the foreign exchange control board, because through that policy we are likely to price ourselves out of the world market. It is not entirely our fault because the rest of the world has resorted to these vicious devices of exchange controls, cartels, bilateralism, and has erected a barrier which we find it difficult to pierce. Nevertheless, the adoption of the same methods by ourselves will not solve the problem.

Let us turn to the question of the management of currency. Just so long as the government controls currency, credit expansion can go on slowly but continuously, without causing any alarm amongst the general population. The inflationary pressure to which the present government, or any government of Canada, is subjected is something which I feel must be taken into account. While we are still financing on a budget surplus, and have not adopted the pernicious system of deficit financing followed by Washington, yet I feel that steps should be taken now to prevent that. I feel that it is a distinct possibility. I give to the committee the sort of thing which I feel is likely to happen at any forthcoming general election under the sort of pressure which this government will be, and the sort of pressure under which any responsible political party will be. First, we shall have a tremendous pressure for an increase in old age security. Naturally, I approve of old age security based on the country's ability to pay, but I can see the slogan going out across the country something like this: Vote for us, fifty at fifty. That would mean, vote for us and get $50 at fifty years of age.

Mr. Abbott: I would be in on that policy.

Mr. Adamson: I would soon be coming in on it, too. It would be very attractive. Then, there will be the health program and the housing program. If there is any increase in the cost of running the national railway, there will be an increase in the railway deficit. In addition to those things there will be a great demand for expenditure for national defence. Now, Mr. Chairman, all of those things will be direct inflationary pressures on any government of Canada at any election. Unfortunately, that is the pattern of democracy both here, in the United Kingdom and in the United States. It is the promise of something for nothing. There is a bit of English doggerel about a father who, on his daughter's wedding day, says:

> Ah, 'tis my daughter's wedding day;
> Ten thousand pounds I'll give away.
> On second thought I think it best
> To put it in the old iron chest.

Mr. Chairman, everything from there on is unprintable, but that is the sort of reaction which will take place if the government makes these promises. What does that mean? It means that there will be an inflationary multiplier in our economy which it will be extremely difficult to resist under a system of managed currency. Last year the minister said the minimum revenue requirement would be about 2·4 billion dollars. I do not think any of us in this house will ever see it get down even to that. I feel that, if it keeps on going up, only one thing can happen, and that is a decrease in the purchasing power of the dollar. So long as the government can manage the currency it can embark on a slow but permanent program of inflation. This is not seen as dangerous by the people, and the government is urged or pushed into further excesses. The purchasing power of the currency is forced down slowly perhaps but nevertheless steadily. Let us not fool ourselves that this is not going on now, and not too slowly either.

For the members of this house, Mr. Chairman, I should like to quote the figures for the cost of living, wholesale prices, the annual labour figure and the raw money supply. I should like to have the permission of the house to put this small table in Hansard, because I think the members would be interested in those four figures, taking 1939 as 100 in the first three cases. The cost of living in 1949 showed an increase of 58·4 per cent; or if you want it expressed as a ratio as the dominion bureau of statistics expressed it the figure is 158·4, taking 1939 as 100. These figures are new, Mr. Chairman, and they have just been worked out by the dominion bureau of statistics. From the end of 1949 to April, 1950, the increase in the cost of living was from 158·4 to 161·6 per cent, going up at an accelerated speed.

Let us take wholesale prices, again taking 1939 as 100. Wholesale prices at the end of 1949 had increased by 108·2 per cent and to April, 1950, by 112·3 per cent. That again is a rapidly increasing inflationary spiral, making the ratio, at the end of 1949, 208·2 per cent and to April, 1950, 212·3 per cent. The annual figure of wages for labour, on the basis of 1939 as 100, was an increase of 105·1 per cent or a ratio of 205·1 per cent. That is a new figure that has just been released from the Department of Labour.

Now let us take the raw money supply. In 1939 the raw money supply was $1,370 million. At the end of 1949 it was $4,422 million; and in April, 1950, it was $4,483 million, or an increase on the percentage basis during the war decade of 223·5 per cent, and up to April of this year, of 227·2 per cent; or on a ratio basis, 323·5 and 327·2. An even greater acceleration.

It will thus be seen that the money supply has increased at a rate double that of the cost of living, 100 per cent more than wholesale prices and a little over 100 per cent more than the annual wage rate for labour.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): And everyone is satisfied.

Mr. Adamson: That is the horrible danger. With permission, Mr. Chairman, I should like to place on Hansard that short table, because I think it shows what is happening to our economy under the present system of managed currency.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the hon. member leave to put this table on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Adamson: The table is as follows:

Statement showing increases in cost of living, etc. —1939-1949; April, 1950

	1939	1949	April, 1950
Cost of living
		per cent	per cent
	100	58·4	61·6
Ratio		158·4	161·6
		per cent	per cent
Wholesale prices	100	108·2	112·3
Ratio		208·2	212·3
		per cent	per cent
Labour (annual)	100	105·1
Ratio		205·1
	Millions	Millions	Millions
Raw money supply	1,370	4,422	4,483
		per cent	per cent
		223·5	227·2
Ratio		323·5	327·2

These figures are for the 10-year period from the beginning of the war till 1949. (The war decade.)

[Mr. Adamson.]

I am mentioning this, Mr. Chairman, and the whole question of exchange and monetary control because I believe that it is going to cause to the very people who are now pushing for it more grief than anything else we can think of. I believe there is nothing more sinister to the hourly worker or the wage earner than a continuous inflation of the currency which is known as the debauching of the currency.

The safeguard against the destruction of the purchasing power of the dollar is of course a return to the gold standard. I am not going into the question of a free market first at the present time; but until control of purchasing power is placed back in the hands of the people, the urge for continuous inflation is going to be difficult or impossible to overcome. This is true of every freely-elected democracy. The gold standard makes the determination of money's purchasing power independent of the changing ambitions and doctrines of political parties and pressure groups. This is the security of the gold standard and its main excellence. The hatred of the gold standard is inspired by governments who imagine that they can create wealth out of little scraps of paper.

What the expansionists call the defects of the gold standard are in fact its pre-eminent usefulness. It checks large-scale inflationary ventures on the part of governments. The gold standard did not fail. Governments were eager to destroy it because they were committed to credit expansion as a means of lowering the rate of interest and of improving the balance of trade.

No government—even the American or the Russian government—is powerful enough to abolish the gold standard. Gold is still the vehicle of international trade. As long as the country is not economically self-sufficient, it must meet that deficiency in gold. We cannot isolate ourselves against it.

In this connection I should like to read a quotation. At this juncture may I say that with all the criticism I feel is due to the government for the financial situation, Canada has as yet not resorted to the expansionist and inflationary measures employed by the United States. That is just another reason, and possibly one of the main ones, why the abolition of exchange control would react in our favour. Public men from one end of the United States to the other have criticized the growing inflation in that country. I just want to quote one Mr. Lawrence, who says this of the United States government:

The failure to return to a gold standard, the persistence of budgetary deficits, the flagrant disposition of government to corrupt large voting groups with handouts, all indicate beyond any reasonable doubt that the dollar of tomorrow may well be a dime in purchasing power. The government has served multiple notice that it has no intention of protecting the integrity of the currency.

Against the possibility of cyclical business and price retreat the average citizen balances the probability of war and the certainty that the government, deliberately avoiding the salutary discipline of gold, will undermine the currency.

He would be a chump if he failed to adjust his personal plans. He therefore seizes the forelock of the future by purchasing today the heavy items now available which he otherwise would not have bought except at some future date. Again we borrow from that future and crowd the current days with business which gives those days the character of a boom in high tide.

Stock markets today are moving up. The country is experiencing a boom. The pressure partially exerted by inflation in the United States is driving up, up, up the price of our staples. We welcome it—we welcome it because it balances our trade with the United States. But, Mr. Chairman, it is a very dangerous thing, and if we are completely tied to that inflationary economy the results for us will be profoundly serious.

In that connection I should like to quote a Canadian authority in a Canadian Press dispatch of June 23, as quoted in today's Globe and Mail. It carries a dateline at Sarnia and states:

A continuing dominion government policy of full employment and managed currency, instituted with the founding of the Bank of Canada in 1933, could bring economic havoc, the accounting forum of Sarnia and Port Huron, Michigan, was told here.

Speaker was Earl A. Steiss, investment head of a London, Ontario, trust company (Canada Trust) and a lecturer in business administration at the university of Western Ontario.

He said that the "full employment system,"—

And I shall later explain the expression "full employment system".

—which succeeded the gold standard as a basis for national economy, could eventually bring food surpluses such as existed in the United States, disastrous loss of export markets, and a declining standard of living.

It had already meant a serious drop in the real value of salaries for Canadians dependent on fixed incomes, he claimed. Because salaries, unlike wages and farm incomes, have failed to keep pace with the rise in the cost of living.

In 1933, a man with a $3,000 a year salary had more than $2,900 left after tax deductions. In 1949 the same salary after tax deductions was worth less than $1,500 in terms of 1933 dollars. A $5,000 income in 1949 was worth less in buying power after tax deductions than a $3,000 salary in 1933.

Mr. Steiss said that the three direct effects of the system of managed currency under government control was to increase government spending, increase prices and decrease interest rates.

The most serious effect of increasing prices was the threatening loss of export markets on which Canada depends for 30 per cent of her income.

These are the inevitable results. We are trading today at an increasing rate with, I will not say "our partner", but our co-partner in an inflationary debauch.

Let me say a word about the expression "full employment". The policy of full employment means a constant expansion in the money supply so that when an industry prices itself out of the natural market new money will be created so that it can sell its products at an increased price. It does not mean that everyone will have a job. The unemployment, seasonal and otherwise, during the past year when the policy of "full employment" was in force is testimony of this.

What does this boil down to? It boils down to this: We have a growing inflationary pressure placed against the present administration, and against the whole Canadian economy. We make this possible to continue, and seem even pleasant, because we manage the currency and constantly increase the raw money supply. This procedure has been embarked upon by many other countries in the past, but no one ever embarked upon it without desperate consequences.

I suggest that now is the time for the government, before it is forced into deficit financing, before the purchasing power of the dollar has dropped further and before the next demand for increased wages and increased prices is made, to stabilize the situation at this level. Let us see if we can set a lead, even to the United States, and stop the inflationary pressure that is taking place. If we do not do that our economy is in the gravest danger it has ever experienced.

Up to now things have gone reasonably well. The purchasing power of the dollar as reflected in the cost of living basis is down to about 40 cents as compared with the pre-war dollar. But from now on that depreciation in purchasing power is likely to accelerate. Every hoist in the cost of living and those other items that enter into our economy makes the next hoist, the next inflationary move, that much more certain and that much more inevitable.

The experience with the assignats in France could be repeated here. It is only our buoyant productivity that has saved us thus far. Our new resources and new developments—oil, base metals, wood products, fissionable materials, farm produce—all these have been the source of our salvation. They will continue to be; but let us not ride our luck too far.

Therefore in order to give substance to my protest I move:

That item 91 shall be reduced to one dollar.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like to add a word to this. I am sure the mover of the amendment will agree that this is a protest on principle and is an indication that we feel there should be a move made toward freedom and in the direction indicated by the previous speaker. We are not overlooking our obligations under Bretton Woods or any other agreement, but we do protest against the inflexible principle of managed currency which unfortunately seems to be a permanent policy. It is on that basis that I am prepared to vote for the amendment.

I do not want to repeat what I said the other day, but I think we should remind ourselves that there is a growing movement toward what might be called the dictatorship of currency. By that I mean that a few men are allowed to fix the value of our currency, and that demands either infallibility or absolute freedom from political pressure. I say nothing about infallibility, but I should like to comment upon the freedom from political pressure. We need only to see what goes on in the United States and England to realize how impossible it is to have freedom from political pressure under the conditions that exist now.

Mr. Bater: What does the hon. member for York West mean by raw money?

Mr. Adamson: Raw money is a technical term used by the Bank of Canada to indicate the total currency and the active bank deposits. Active deposits are shown for April, 1950, as $4,483 million, inactive deposits as $3,875 million, and government of Canada securities as $9,707 million, making a total of $18,107 million at the end of April, 1950. The raw money supply really means the active money supply on hand.

Amendment negatived on division.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like to ask one or two questions on this item. This item deals with administrative costs other than those provided by the Bank of Canada. May we have the additional operating costs and will the minister tell us what he considers to be the total cost of carrying on this board?

Mr. Abbott: As my hon. friend will recall, having read the report of the foreign exchange control board, the expenditures made by the Bank of Canada for staff, premises, office space, equipment, travelling expenses, on behalf of the board amounted to $1,175,194. In addition to that there are items, corresponding to the one we are voting here and which are outlined in the report, of $212,885 and which I take it I do not need to read.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): It would seem to me, without wanting to press the point, that the natural way to deal with it would be to show the total cost here.

Mr. Abbott: If my hon. friend looks at the Foreign Exchange Control Act he will see there is a statutory provision for the Bank of Canada performing these foreign exchange control services. This item is put in here in order that there may be a debate each year on the operations of the board.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Perhaps the minister has it in mind to do it, but I am anxious to have him make some statement as to the attitude of his department toward the whole question of exchange control. I would draw to his attention that there are indications in France that they are seriously considering doing away with foreign exchange control. I ask the minister if he regards that as significant and whether he cannot make some general statement?

Mr. Abbott: My hon. friend has raised a very important question of government policy and I do not propose, nor do I feel it would be proper, to give any indication as to what future government policy may be, except to say what I have said on a number of occasions, including the time when the Foreign Exchange Control Act was before the house, that no one will be happier than I when it is possible to eliminate foreign exchange control. But as to when that may be or under what circumstances it will occur I am not prepared to indicate by engaging in any hypothetical discussion today. I do not feel that it would be proper for me to do so.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am sure the minister will not be surprised at my saying that that is thoroughly unsatisfactory. After all there are people who are in just as important positions as the Minister of Finance who are making statements and I think it is highly undesirable that we in this country should be left without any indication. I hope the minister will not regard it as being discourteous, because it is not intended that way, when I say that this appears to be another of those cases, perhaps with more excuse than in others, where we are being treated like a lot of children.

Mr. Abbott: I am sorry I cannot accommodate my hon. friend. I have never considered that I was gifted as a prophet.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am not asking the minister to be a prophet, I am simply asking him to indicate if there are any general principles on which they are moving. The minister says that he will be glad when this is over, but it is not going to come to an end unless people like the minister move toward bringing it to an end. I am not suggesting that it can be done the day after tomorrow, but apparently we are being met with an attitude of splendid negation which is not going to get us anywhere.

Mr. Abbott: I have no intention of influencing the sale of futures by the foreign exchange control board by making a prophecy in this house.

Mr. Harkness: When measures were brought in in 1947 to conserve the amount of gold and American exchange two lists were issued, one of prohibited articles which could not be imported from the United States and the other of articles which could be imported only under quota. Those lists have been successively cut down since that time. As I remember, most of the articles were taken off the prohibited list and many were taken off the quota list in April of this year.

Mr. Abbott: Some to be effective on July 1, but announced in April.

Mr. Harkness: The announcement was made in April that most of the remaining articles were to be taken off the prohibited and quota lists. Could the minister tell us what articles still remain on those lists?

Mr. Abbott: I am sorry I have not that information here. As my hon. friend will recall, those quotas and prohibitions are not under the Foreign Exchange Control Act, they are under the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act. I must confess that I did not come prepared with that data because the foreign exchange control board does not administer that act. I can get the information very quickly for my hon. friend and send it to him, possibly tomorrow morning. The information has been published in the Canada Gazette.

Mr. Harkness: The minister will correct me if I am wrong in saying that the number of articles left on the prohibited list is very small.

Mr. Abbott: Speaking from memory, I think there are no longer any articles on the purely prohibited list, unless it is crime comics and that sort of thing. I have no details here of the articles on what we call schedule II or the quota list, but I will get it for my hon. friend.

Mr. Harkness: I should like to draw to the attention of the minister a matter about which I have written several times. Parking meters were on the prohibited list and I was under the impression they were the only article still left on that list. It may be that they are on the quota list now. Electric phonographs, or juke boxes as they are commonly called, have been taken off the list as of July 1. It does not seem reasonable when you are dealing with coin-operated machines that you should keep on the prohibited or quota list parking meters which are required by a large number of municipalities and cities. A number of these municipalities want particular types of machines which are not manufactured in Canada. I understand there are two kinds of machines manufactured in Canada but they do not have the automatic coin counting devices possessed by certain machines manufactured in the United States which certain municipalities want to get. As I understand, these machines will still continue under quota whereas juke boxes are being removed from the quota list in spite of the fact that a juke box costs anywhere from $500 to $2,000 and a parking meter only costs from $25 to $60. Can the minister give any explanation why this situation exists, and say whether it is going to continue? Perhaps parking meters are going to be taken off the list.

Mr. Abbott: I am not prepared to give very much information about the specific details today. As I have said, we have been following a progressive policy of relaxing import restrictions and quotas as rapidly as we felt was justified by the improvement in our exchange reserve. We have usually made rearrangements once a year. As was pointed out, we announced quite substantial relaxations early this year, some of them to be effective as of the first of July. I will take note of the special case of parking meters. I have listened to my hon. friend, and I will inform myself about it. I cannot give him the answer this afternoon but I will write to him about it.

Mr. McLure: I received word today that a municipality wants to buy a certain type of road machinery not manufactured in Canada. I understand they have to secure a permit from the department to import such a machine from the United States.

Mr. Abbott: That comes under the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. McLure: I understand the only objection raised is because of the exchange situation. I thought that might come under the minister.

Mr. Abbott: No. These items of capital machinery and equipment come under schedule III of the Emergency Exchange Conservation Act which is administered by my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I am sure he will be able to answer my hon. friend's question, but I am afraid I cannot.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Under this item I want to bring to the attention of the minister again some of the forfeitures that have taken place. I know of several people in my own province who unwittingly committed breaches of the Foreign Exchange Control Act when crossing into the United States. I do not want to make personal references but I feel that any one of us might very well make a mistake, fail to carry out the provisions, and if we were searched might find ourselves in difficulties. I feel there will be general agreement with that suggestion. I do not want that to be considered as personal testimony, Mr. Chairman. I am speaking about others. I am sure you understand that.

Having said that, I feel that some consideration should be given to the return of small amounts of moneys that have been forfeited under the provisions of the act. I mentioned one or two examples last year and the minister, with that friendliness with which he pilots his estimates through the house, smiled benignly and said that the matter would receive consideration. He was sure it would be seriously considered. I return once more to the matter, and all I can say is that nothing has been done.

Mr. Abbott: Does that relate to particular cases?

Mr. Diefenbaker: To particular cases. I feel that people who have had small amounts of money taken away from them, where there was obviously no intentional wrongdoing, should certainly receive consideration. I mentioned one case last year and I shall mention another one now A constituent of mine received a call to hurry to the United States to attend the funeral of his mother. He gathered together a few dollars in the small town where he lived, crossed the line into the United States, and was picked up with some $20 or $25 on him, which was confiscated. The news was received on Saturday afternoon after banking hours and some of his friends helped him out. By reason of the money being taken away from him he was denied the opportunity of attending the funeral.

I feel that such regulations are not just and fair. Travelling in various parts of this country as I do, I believe it is a fact that in large measure moneys have been returned to border residents. I am going to ask the minister to give the committee particulars as to the number of cases in which forfeiture has taken place in each of the provinces during the last year, and the number of cases in which there has been a return of the moneys taken. I know that the law has to be enforced, but I also know that it is difficult for some people to understand why the little man crossing the boundary should find himself in this position when, having regard to the stringency of the regulations, some people possessed of great resources seem to be able to secure the necessary moneys to maintain themselves in parts of the United States for considerable periods of time.

I feel that the law should be enforced equally, and that in the case of an individual who did not deliberately attempt to break the law there should at least be some resiliency in administration. I am asking the minister to give the committee particulars. I can do no more than protest. There is nothing else I can do, but protest I will and protest I do against the action of the foreign exchange control board in cases that have been brought to my attention where confiscation and forfeiture have taken place and where the circumstances indicated no intentional breach of the law. I ask the minister to let the committee have the particulars, and at least an expression of hope that some regard will be had to returning small amounts of money where there was no obvious degree of guilt, and where what took place, while wrong and therefore an offence under the law, nevertheless was not worthy of the punishment imposed.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Chairman, I shall have to get the statistics as to forfeitures by provinces asked for by my hon. friend, but I shall be glad to do that. It will take a little time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will you place them on Hansard?

Mr. Abbott: If it is possible to do so. I will get the information as soon as it can be obtained. All I can say now is that I have had a good deal of experience in looking into cases of forfeitures because I get requests not only from my hon. friend but from a good many other members of the house whose constituents have had moneys taken from them at the border. My experience has been that the board is extremely lenient in these matters and has given the benefit of the doubt to the citizen. I look into all these cases that are brought to my attention, and in most of them I find that the forfeitures have been as the result of deliberate misstatements by the tourists to the customs officers at the border as to the amount of money in their possession. When that happens in those circumstances, as the committee knows the money is taken by the customs officer and reported to the foreign exchange control board; and the person from whom it has been taken has the right to appeal against the forfeiture. I suppose if I have looked into one of these cases I have looked into a couple of hundred, and in the great majority I have come to the conclusion that the moneys had been quite properly taken. I do not administer the act myself, as I have said; it is administered by several hundred or perhaps several thousand customs officers along the border, who act as agents for the board. Some of them may be arbitrary; that is perhaps inevitable in a situation of this kind.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was not speaking of the border officials, but of the senior officials of the board.

Mr. Abbott: I think this is a sound provision if you have a foreign exchange control law. I agree with my hon. friend that there should be equal administration of the law, but my experience has been that if a man makes out a case of innocence or inadvertence the money is returned. There may be exceptions to that, but as I say I have seen a great many of these cases over the last two or three years.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am not going to come to the defence of anyone who breaks the law, but I hope we will all remind ourselves of what a fantastic situation it is that our citizens have to be subjected to this sort of treatment at the hands of scores of people, probably not all of whom treat them with that delicate kindness which I am sure the minister would display. I can only hope that he is as distressed as he should be over the situation and that we can count on him to do his best to get rid of it.

Mr. McLure: I want to ask the minister a question; it has to do with the exchange of money, but I do not know whether it comes under his department. A friend phoned me today and said he was in the unfortunate position of having had a friend in New York pass to the great beyond and will him $25,000 plus a Rolls-Royce, together with other things. He wanted to know about the money coming into Canada, what taxes he would have to pay on it, and so on. Would that come under this department?

Mr. Abbott: I suppose it would, indirectly. We shall be delighted to see the $25,000 in United States money brought up here. That would be a legacy and would not be subject to any tax in Canada, as far as I am aware. The recipient would be a very lucky man.

Item agreed to.

Administration of various acts and costs of special functions—

92. Expenses of the tariff board, $109,080.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I take it that our very able tariff commissioner is likely to be going to Torquay, and I wonder if the minister would say a few words on the Geneva situation, followed by Annecy and now Torquay, unless he tells me that is a matter for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I should like to know what policy our representatives at Torquay are going to be asked to carry out, because after all that is a matter of very great importance and I think it desirable that we be informed to the greatest possible extent. The hon. member for York West has been pointing out the extent to which we seem to be deliberately making ourselves dependent upon the United States. However pleasant that may be while they have a tremendous boom going on over there, occasionally we must remind ourselves that to a certain extent we are competing with them, and that there are other parts of the world as well. Will the minister say something about that?

Mr. Abbott: I do not know that I can add very much to what I said in my budget speech. I do not want to offend anyone, but may I point out again that the discussion on the estimates usually does not relate to the estimates as such. We deal with matters which are discussed on the budget, and we deal with questions of general policy.

Broadly speaking, in reply to my hon. friend, we are going to Torquay in the same spirit that we went to Geneva and Annecy. We hope it may be possible by mutual concessions to arrive at a lowering of tariff barriers. That is our policy. If I were one of the delegation that is the policy I would try to follow. We are not giving anything away; everything has to be on a reciprocal basis. As has been stated consistently for as long as I have been in the government, our policy is to press for the lowering of trade barriers by reciprocal agreement.

That is pretty general, but I should hope I would not be expected to enter upon a discussion of tariff matters on my estimates. I am sorry to say that I have only another twenty minutes at my disposal. I realize that I shall not be able to finish my estimates, and in a moment I am going to ask that the main estimates stand in order to deal with the flood relief items in the supplementaries.

Item agreed to.

Administration of various acts and costs of special functions—

93. Expenses of the Royal Canadian Mint and the assay office, Vancouver, B.C., and to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $200,000, $864,835.

Mr. Adamson: What happens to the overages at the mint? What does the mint charge now for refining gold?

Mr. Abbott: The amount of overages last year was $57,607.58, and it goes into the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): There is a kind of super-commitment here, apparently, in the amount of $200,000. Is this in connection with your bullion transactions?

Mr. Abbott: It is the Vancouver branch of the mint.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I still do not understand: "to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $200,000." That seems a large amount, and it doees not explain itself.

Mr. Abbott: That is for the construction of an addition to the mint. I am sorry; I did not understand my hon. friend's question.

Item agreed to.

Administration of various acts and costs of special functions—

The wartime prices and trade board—

94. Administration, $1,907,142.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I would like from the minister a general statement as to just how the reduction is progressing. I am surprised to find that it still costs nearly $2 million, though I realize that is a great reduction from previous years. I should like the number of employees as compared with a year ago, the amount of office space, the number of offices, and one or two other relevant details.

Mr. Abbott: As my hon. friend is aware, the administration of the emergency import control comes under the wartime prices and trade board. He realizes that this is not simply price control administration, that it administers rental control, the cleaning up of payment of subsidies, and so on. As at April 30, 1949, there were 1,049 employees. As at April 1, 1950, there were 695 employees. I am afraid I have not the information at the moment as to the floor space, but I can get it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like some information with respect to travelling expenses under this head. What was the amount spent on travelling expenses last year?

Mr. Abbott: The estimate this year is $168,000, which represents a reduction of some $32,000 from last year. The actual expenditure last year was $169,678. This year we estimate $168,000 or approximately the same amount as spent last year. I would hope that would not be achieved, but until we know what happens to rental control it is rather difficult to say.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What was the total amount paid in legal fees last year?

Mr. Abbott: Legal and audit are together, so I am afraid I shall have to get my friend a break-down of that. It amounted to $125,000, but the major portion of that would be legal fees.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister give the three largest items for legal fees during the year, and to whom those payments were made?

Mr. Abbott: I would have to get that information, I have not got it here. It is rather difficult to know what particular detail is required. Of course, the information is available and I can get it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister place that on Hansard along with the other information I requested?

Mr. Abbott: It is sometimes helpful if I know these questions in advance, but I realize that is difficult. Some hon. members do let me know when they want particular information.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am learning all the time, Mr. Chairman. Now I learn that the minister is given the questions in advance.

Mr. Abbott: The hon. member for Greenwood was very considerate in that respect.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not know that practice was followed. It is interesting.

Mr. Abbott: I do not suggest it needs to be done on general items, but where particular questions are asked it is helpful.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I want to know still more about this service. The minister has told us about the emergency import control and subsidies. I want to get a little more idea, because I am still not satisfied. Perhaps if I had a little more information I would be better satisfied.

Mr. Abbott: What information is it my hon. friend wants?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Here we have a reduction, it is true, of a million dollars. The minister has also pointed out that the number of employees in the department has been reduced. I want to know if that is the wartime prices and trade board itself that has been reduced from 1,049 to 695. Are the 695 dealing with subsidy payments, and if so—

Mr. Abbott: No, I said the wartime prices and trade board, but it is really the next item, the commodity prices stabilization corporation. I was putting them together, but it is that corporation which is cleaning up the various subsidy claims.

Item agreed to.

Public debt charges—

97. Commission for payment of interest on public debt, payment of premiums on government of Canada sterling securities, services of fiscal agents, London, registrar's fees, etc., $406,100.

Mr. Abbott: I think I should ask the committee if they would be good enough to let this item stand, and turn to item 676 in the supplementary estimates which I tabled today. It is the item to provide for flood relief payments.

Item stands.

Special—

676. To authorize and provide for an initial grant to the province of Manitoba to assist it in meeting costs incurred as a result of the Red river floods in 1950, $12,500,000.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Chairman, a few weeks ago in discussing the flood situation in Manitoba, I suggested the government make an interim payment of $10 million to the province of Manitoba. I see the Minister of Finance is suggesting an amount of $12,500,000, which of course is just an interim payment. It will not nearly meet the cost of the damage which was caused. What I want to know specifically is: What does the $12,500,000 include? The item reads:

To authorize and provide for an initial grant to the province of Manitoba to assist it in meeting costs incurred as a result of the Red river floods in 1950.

Is it only for the cost of fighting the flood or is it only a payment towards repairing property damage or is it a combination of both? That is something which we have to get cleared up because the Prime Minister has already told us that Manitoba will be treated in exactly the same way as British Columbia. Obviously, therefore, we are not going to be satisfied with less.

In so far as British Columbia was concerned the federal government paid one hundred per cent of the total property loss; seventy-five per cent of the cost of the repair works; seventy-five per cent of the cost of permanent measures adopted to prevent a recurrence of the flood. The federal government paid in the neighbourhood of eighty-one per cent of the cost of the flood damage and the preventive measures in British Columbia. What the provincial government in Manitoba is doing is a bit of a riddle. A few weeks ago I was critical of what that government had done, and had the Minister of Justice been here I might have pursued further the line he adopted, namely that the province of Manitoba did not have an adequate public relations staff. As a matter of fact if the provincial government has secured the services of Baron Munchausen and Ananias they could have made nothing of the wretched handling of the situation by the government. The mistakes cannot be attributed to faulty public relations.

In Manitoba today there has been developed a principle of limited aid. For property damage the aid will not exceed $3,000. I know that for a great number of flood sufferers that is a completely inadequate sum. What I want to see is one hundred per cent flood damage paid; that is on the same basis as was paid in British Columbia, and rightly so.

An hon. Member: That is not right.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): A grant of $5 million was given to British Columbia and it covered property losses. As everyone knows the Carswell-Shaw commission was limited in its terms of reference. The report of that commission shows a total loss of $26,500,000, but it excludes of course personal property loss. Of that $26,500,000, $2,500,00 is for emergency precautions which are going to be carried out, I hope this year, along the lines of the Hurst report. What I want the minister to do now is to tell us the composition of this $12,500,000, how it is broken down, if indeed it is broken down, between fighting the flood and the cost of personal property.

Mr. Abbott: I would be glad to do that, Mr. Chairman. The position with respect to this grant is as it says in its terms. It is to assist the province of Manitoba in meeting costs incurred as a result of the Red river flood of 1950. The extent to which rehabilitation payments will be made, the extent to which other people will be indemnified, will be determined by the province of Manitoba. The government of Canada, as was the case in the Fraser valley, is making first of all an initial grant to assist the provincial government in discharging its obligations, but the provincial government must determine the extent to which it will assist in the rehabilitation of private property; that is its responsibility.

The position with respect to the Fraser valley, as everyone knows, was that the dominion government paid seventy-five per cent of the cost of fighting the flood; seventy-five per cent of the permanent works to prevent a recurrence of that flood; and it made a grant of $5 million to the province of British Columbia so that the province would meet the other costs incurred. At the time the grant was made it was estimated the total damage would be something in the order of $10 million or $11 million. Ultimately, it proved to be somewhat less than that. I cannot say, nor do I intend to break down the $12 million between the various items of damage in Manitoba and restoring property damage. However, as the Prime Minister has said, the same principle will be followed in assisting Manitoba as was followed in assisting British Columbia. That is the position as clearly and as succinctly as I am able to put it.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): In other words, this grant is for the province of Manitoba to do with as it sees fit?

Mr. Abbott: It must decide the nature and the extent of the assistance it will provide individuals.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask whether the Minister of Finance can indicate what was in his mind when he picked on this figure of $12,500,000. It strikes one that it could be one-eighth of $100 million or one-quarter of $50 million or one-half of $25 million.

Mr. Abbott: It could be a percentage of a lot of things, Mr. Chairman. I do not know that I could indicate just exactly what was in my mind. I studied the report of the Carswell-Shaw commission, and I had an opportunity of seeing Winnipeg, rather briefly I am afraid. I had an opportunity of meeting the premier of British Columbia and the members of his cabinet.

Mr. Knowles: I presume it was the premier of Manitoba.

Mr. Abbott: Yes, the premier of Manitoba. I came to the conclusion that I would recommend to my colleagues an initial grant of $12,500,000 to be included in the supplementary estimates; and they accepted that recommendation. But I did not attempt to relate that to any particular percentage or to any particular figure. It seemed to me it was the appropriate amount to pay at this time.

Mr. Knowles: Was there any discussion between federal officials and provincial officials as to the kind of losses they might cover? I appreciate what the minister has said and what the Prime Minister has said, namely that this is a provincial government responsibility, that they will make the decision and that Ottawa will offer what money it sees fit to offer. But I am wondering if there was with the Manitoba officials any discussion that might guide them in deciding how far they would go. For example, what about losses that farmers will suffer where they are not able to put crops in for the year? What about this question which the provincial government seems to have decided upon, namely that no compensation will be made out of government moneys for losses of personal effects, furniture and so on and that that matter has been left to the voluntary fund. I am wondering whether that matter was discussed with the Manitoba officials.

Mr. Abbott: No. So far as I am aware, there were no discussions, Mr. Chairman. The types of losses for which indemnity was given in the Fraser valley are, I understand, fairly well known and those were no doubt available to the officials of the Manitoba government. But there was no discussion either between myself and the members of the Manitoba government or, so far as I am aware, between my officials and the officials of the Manitoba government.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. Knowles: In other words, the complete responsibility as to what amount of money is to be asked for rests with the government of Manitoba?

Mr. Abbott: I would think that is correct, yes.

Mr. Knowles: Can the minister say whether it will be possible to pay an additional sum of money between now and the next session of parliament, if it should be called for? This is only an initial grant.

Mr. Abbott: I would think that, under this heading, this would have to stand until there is a further vote of parliament. Under the subsequent grant—that is, 75 per cent for safeguarding against dangers of floods in future—I would think that if diking work were proceeding that would be an appropriate case for the use of a governor general's warrant if the money voted here were not sufficient to cover the dominion's share during the period in question.

Mr. Knowles: I take it that one is justified in noting that this $12,500,000 is only an initial grant?

Mr. Abbott: That is correct.

Mr. Knowles: In other words, we are justified in assuming that there will be a further sum of money later on?

Mr. Abbott: If the facts justify it, yes. As the Shaw-Carswell report indicated and as they pointed out clearly, while I think they did an extremely fine job and made what I think is a fair estimate, it is quite obvious that at this time it is not possible to evaluate fully the losses which may have been sustained.

Mr. Knowles: I noted that the minister said that further money would be available if the facts justified the need for it. None of us here are experts in assessing these things, but from the reports that are still coming in of the extent of the damage that people find as they get back into their homes, I am sure that considerably more money than this will be needed; and I hope the Manitoba government will ask for it.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask the minister the percentage basis upon which items 678 and 679 were determined; that is the amount of grant to meet the cost incurred as the result of fire—

Mr. Abbott: Are we going to try to pass this item? We are on item 676 at the moment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I beg your pardon. I thought they were all together.

Mr. Abbott: We could take them all together. I should be happy to do that. I have no objection.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sorry; as I say, I thought they were all together.

Mr. Abbott: It is all right. Go ahead.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thought those items were all under one heading.

Mr. Abbott: They are four separate items.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would ask the minister the basis upon which the determination was made for the authorization of the advance to the city of Rimouski and to the town of Cabano. In asking that question I immediately say that there is no suggestion of any criticism; for I come from a province that on more than one occasion has received assistance from the dominion as a whole, when drought and difficulty struck our people. It is in items such as this that we indeed show that no matter from what part of the country we come there is a comradeship that demands assistance by all Canadians. I know that there will be no criticism anywhere in this dominion of the assistance being given to Rimouski or Cabano, for people everywhere regarded those two disasters as deserving the assistance of the dominion as a whole.

Having regard to the report received from the province of Manitoba, I think the minister should be in a position to answer that one request made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre with respect to farmers in the area of the Red river. I believe that some sixty per cent of the area affected will not be farmed this year, and the provisions of prairie farm assistance cannot and will not compensate in any way the farmers resident there for the loss that they will have suffered. I feel that the people as a whole—

Mr. Knowles: Unfortunately, there is no mention of that in the Shaw-Carswell report.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I appreciate that fact. But I feel that consideration should be given to assisting the farmers affected by that flood. The Prime Minister was in Winnipeg. He visited the scene of the disaster. I know that the farmers there are asking for consideration. When I speak of the Red river, I know whereof I speak; for my forebears were driven out of there in 1826, in the famous flood of that year. That is a long while ago, but none the less it indicates that this area is subject to floods which are disturbing in their intensity; and I feel that the farmers there deserve consideration by the government, even though it is not recommended in the report.

Mr. Abbott: I expect that the Manitoba government, which has the responsibility, will take those circumstances into consideration.

Mr. Knowles: There is no sign of it yet.

Mr. Abbott: I think I am right in saying that crop damage was not the subject of compensation in connection with the Fraser valley floods of 1948.

To reply to my hon. friend's first question, the amount of the grant to Rimouski and to Cabano was arrived at on the basis of the report of the joint dominion-provincial commission composed of Brigadier Theriault and Mr. Laurent and is a matching grant with that which is being made by the provincial government of Quebec. Broadly speaking, that is the basis upon which it was arrived at.

Item agreed to.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

VACANCY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Dominion of Canada House of Commons

To the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons:

I, Georges-Emile Lapalme, member of the House of Commons of Canada, for the electoral district of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, do hereby resign my seat in the said House of Commons, for the constituency aforesaid.

Given under my hand and seal at Ottawa, this 23rd day of June, 1950.

G. E. Lapalme

L. R. Beaudoin, M.P.
Witness

Jean Lesage, M.P.
Witness

Accordingly I have issued my warrant to the chief electoral officer to make out a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

The house in committee on Bills Nos. 223 to 234 inclusive, 238 to 248 inclusive, 253 to 262 inclusive, 270 to 300 inclusive, 304 to 306 inclusive, Mr. Dion in the chair.

Bill No. 223, for the relief of Marilyn Ruth Cohen Novak.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 224, for the relief of Mary Elizabeth Bernatchez Russell.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 225, for the relief of Winnifred Evelyn Thompson Clift.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 226, for the relief of Maida Maria Howard Martin.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 227, for the relief of June Hedy Leshynska Thompson.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 228, for the relief of Rosemary Smalley Carrier.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 229, for the relief of William Arthur Goodson.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 230, for the relief of Dorothy Melbourne Davis Wand.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 231, for the relief of Frank Lear Rogers.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 232, for the relief of Roma Leduc. —Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 233, for the relief of Edna Rosaline Casavant Dufresne.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 234, for the relief of Leo Berger.— Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 238, for the relief of Katherine Madge Samworth Monty.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 239, for the relief of Clara Rosen Freedman.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 240, for the relief of Frances Berman Mellor, otherwise known as Sharie Sinclaire.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 241, for the relief of Rodolphe Durand.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 242, for the relief of Helen Leck Karaszi.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 243, for the relief of Sadie Chernin Petruska, otherwise known as Sadie Chernin Prince.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 244, for the relief of Audrey Phyllis Angela Blom Rochfort.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 245, for the relief of Patricia Ruth Segall Wener.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 246, for the relief of Sophie Piatkowski Demyk.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 247, for the relief of Hilda Brooks Nangreaves.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 248, for the relief of Zemelia Katrina Ayoub MacDonald.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 253, for the relief of Margaret Mary Hamel Whittaker.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 254, for the relief of Lewis Benjamin Wyman.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 255, for the relief of Edna Dora Tucker Conley.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 256, for the relief of Dorothy Marguerite Lester McBride.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 257, for the relief of Josephine Rood Trottier.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 258, for the relief of Margaret Irene Sinden Brown.—Mr. Winkler.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Bill No. 259, for the relief of Camille Poulin.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 260, for the relief of Elisa Macdonald Mitchell Brock.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 261, for the relief of Theodore Levasseur.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 262, for the relief of Mary Marguerite Harvie Fine.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 270, for the relief of Joseph Lucien Andre Bergeron.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 271, for the relief of Thelma Leggo Chicoine.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 272, for the relief of Anna Kathleen Olga McCone Shaw.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 273, for the relief of Martin Luke Marlow.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 274, for the relief of Helena Wilhelmina Thornburg Lawton.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 275, for the relief of Bonnie Ruth McNab Sarrasin.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 276, for the relief of Lyndia Betsy Mayes Bernier.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 277, for the relief of Sarah Modlinsky Markis.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 278, for the relief of Anna Patiris Sarakinis.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 279, for the relief of Julia Ann Ramsell Blane.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 280, for the relief of Cyrile-Orance-Horence Presseau.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 281, for the relief of Paul Edmond Meerte.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 282, for the relief of Charles George Storey.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 283, for the relief of Mary Muriel Inez Larman Jarry.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 284, for the relief of Mary Zilda Alix Runcie.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 285, for the relief of Aili Esteri Kankaanpaa Toebben.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 286, for the relief of Pierre Bouchard.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 287, for the relief of William Aubrey Ricardo Aird.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 288, for the relief of Marguerite Carmen Samson Wrigglesworth.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 289, for the relief of Andrew Cerat.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 290, for the relief of Marie Lucille Giselle Roy Veilleux.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 291, for the relief of Mabel Pearl Speirs Lazor.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 292, for the relief of Lena Grace Connolly Hibberd.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 293, for the relief of Lilian Ferguson Gardner.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 294, for the relief of Marion Leonard Ryan.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 295, for the relief of Joseph Georges Neville Poirier.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 296, for the relief of Marie Gisele St. Laurent Therrien.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 297, for the relief of Norah Nichol Meighen Allan.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 298, for the relief of Dora Eleanor Chalmers Grisley.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 299, for the relief of Ruth Desiree Morrissette Chevalier.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 300, for the relief of Richard Martello Johnston.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 304, for the relief of David Allan Ferguson.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 305, for the relief of Ann Louise Fuller Brais.—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. 306, for the relief of Helen Leola Davidson Hunter.—Mr. Winkler.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bills?

Mr. Knowles: Will the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Winkler), the chairman of the committee that deals with these bills, tell us how many divorces this will make that we have put through at this session?

Mr. Winkler: I cannot tell how many we have put through, but there are sixty-seven tonight.

Mr. Knowles: About three hundred, is it not?

Bills reported, read the third time and passed.

ASSOCIATION OF KINSMEN CLUBS—CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. 312, to incorporate the Association of Kinsmen Clubs.—Mr. Benidickson.

PIPE LINES ACT

PROVISION FOR LOCATION OF MAIN LINE ENTIRELY WITHIN CANADA

On the order:

Resuming debate on the motion of Mr. Sinnott for the second reading of Bill No. 132, an act to amend the Pipe Lines Act, and on the proposed amendment thereto of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Bill stands. The sponsor is not here.

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the debate on second reading was commenced on June 16 and an amendment was moved by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) for a six months' hoist. Several hon. members spoke, and then the debate was adjourned by the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Mutch). Therefore he would have had the right to speak first this evening, were he here. He is not here, but I submit if some other hon. member wishes to speak on this bill he is at liberty to do so.

The bill is now before the House of Commons and because someone wishes to shout "stands" is no reason why a member should not be permitted to go on and discuss the bill. I submit there is no such provision in the rules.

Mr. Speaker: It has not been the custom in this house to proceed with a bill introduced by a private member unless that private member is here at the time. The procedure is similar to that followed in respect of bills introduced by the government. If the minister sponsoring the bill is not present, the bill stands, unless the government indicates otherwise. It has always seemed to me that a private member should have the same right in respect of a bill which he has sponsored. I have given the matter consideration and I would be prepared to give a ruling.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Before Your Honour gives a ruling may I say just a word. I realize that it has been the practice, for the most part, not to go ahead with a public bill when the sponsor was not here, but I submit that that is only a matter of courtesy, which in turn depends upon the circumstances involved. When a motion of this kind is in the possession of the house it should be the right of all hon. members who are here to debate it if they wish. I submit for Your Honour's consideration that if the other practice were made firm it would mean that a member could introduce a bill, start the debate with his own speech, and then prevent its being discussed further by the simple expedient of being absent.

I point out that when we have the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne we do not require that the mover and seconder be in the chamber when the debate is resumed; once the debate has been started and the matter is in the possession of the house, it goes on. So it is with bills. They are started with a minister in the house but many times we go on with a bill in the absence of that minister because the matter is in the possession of the house.

I suggest that it would be a dangerous practice to make firm that a bill should not be proceeded with because of that fact or it would make it possible for a member to introduce a bill, for whatever reason or motive he might have, and then prevent the house from going ahead with it. On the other hand, I suggest that after those who want to speak have spoken, if someone wants to move the adjournment of the debate, that would be in order. I do not think the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) should be prevented from speaking to this bill which is in the possession of the house, merely because the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott) is not here or, shall I say, because the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) is not here. It happens to be the minister's amendment for a six months' hoist that is now before the house.

Mr. Green: On the point of order, I submit that as the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) moved the six months' hoist this bill should be given consideration by Your Honour. That fact should be in favour of permitting me to go ahead with my speech. Otherwise the result will be that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has been able to kill this bill without having his motion debated. As a matter of fact, he came into the chamber and moved the amendment and then did not offer any argument in support of it.

If Your Honour gives a ruling that we cannot go on now unless the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Sinnott) is here, then all that needs to be done by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is to suggest to the hon. member for Springfield that he stay away and the Minister of Trade and Commerce will have achieved his desire for killing the bill without having given us an opportunity to discuss his amendment. I submit that that is beyond all reason.

Mr. Speaker: I have never known of a private bill or of a public bill which has been introduced by a private member being proceeded with in his absence without his consent.

Mr. Green: We did that on the pipe lines bills.

Mr. Speaker: Presumably with the consent of the hon. member who introduced the bill. At times bills have been proceeded with when the hon. members who introduced them were not in the chamber, but in such instances some member has stated that he has the approval of the member who introduced the bill to proceed with it. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has referred to the speech from the throne, but it is assumed in that debate that the mover and the seconder approve of the debate continuing. If for any reason that debate were not to be continued I would think that arrangements would be made and that the house would be informed accordingly.

I do not think I should depart at this time from practice and allow the debate on this bill to continue in the absence of the hon. member who introduced it, and of the minister who moved an amendment. I therefore rule that under our practice an order for resuming the adjourned debate on the second reading of a private member's bill is proceeded with only at the instance of the sponsor of the bill or of a member authorized to act on the sponsor's behalf. Otherwise the order is allowed to stand until the next sitting day. This would appear to be what is contemplated by standing order 18 which reads as follows:

> (1) Questions put by members and notices of motions, not taken up when called may (upon the request of the government) be allowed to stand and retain their precedence; otherwise they will disappear from the order paper. They may, however, be renewed.
>
> (2) Orders not proceeded with when called, upon the like request, may be allowed to stand retaining their precedence; otherwise they shall be dropped and be placed on the order paper for the next sitting after those of the same class at a similar stage.

Under this order a member of the government who has introduced a bill can, upon request, have it stand. A private member who has introduced a bill should be accorded, and is under our practice accorded, an equal right. It is also our practice to allow a bill to stand when the member who has sponsored it is not present and has not authorized another member to act on his behalf. In other words, the absent member is deemed to have requested that the bill stand until the next sitting day.

Mr. Green: Will the same ruling apply every time private bills come up?

Mr. Speaker: If the member sponsoring it is not here or if someone is not authorized to speak on his behalf. Another bill was called tonight and it stood because the hon. member who had introduced it was not here. This bill is in the same position as the one introduced, I think, by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue).

Mr. Knowles: If any hon. member wishes to debate that bill he can go ahead.

An hon. Member: Oh, no.

Mr. Knowles: I say that on behalf of the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. McIvor: I should like to say a word on behalf of the hon. member who is not present.

Mr. Speaker: I have given my ruling and it is not debatable. The business under the heading of private and public bills having been concluded, the house will resume the business under consideration at six o'clock.

Order stands.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dion in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF RESOURCES AND DEVELOPMENT

National film board—

401. Administration, production and distribution of films and other visual materials, including authority to finance temporarily work performed for other public authorities or other agencies as the public interest requires, $2,092,413.

Item agreed to.

National film board—

402. Acquisition of equipment, $118,604.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Progress reported.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT OF GOVERNMENT FILM COMMISSIONER, ETC.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Resources and Development) moved the second reading of Bill No. 317, respecting the national film board.

Mr. Green: On a question of privilege, the statement made last night by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier) was that the film board estimates would be taken up before we went ahead with the bill. I am afraid some of our people are not here.

Mr. Winters: They were just passed.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Speaker, there are two items in the estimates for the national film board, Nos. 401 and 402, and they were carried. Having nothing before the house we have reverted to the National Film Act.

Mr. Green: They went through in a rush. Will the minister make a statement?

Mr. Winters: Perhaps I should make a few remarks in moving second reading of the bill entitled "an act respecting the national film board". First, it might be helpful to hon. members if I again reviewed briefly the history of the development of the board which was established by the National Film Act in 1939. As early as 1914 there existed in the Department of Trade and Commerce an exhibits and publicity bureau whose functions included the production of motion pictures and still photographs designed to promote external trade. Later, in September, 1918, other government departments were required to consult with this bureau on their purchase of films. Then in 1921, this agency was reorganized as the Canadian government motion picture bureau.

For the next eighteen years, the motion picture bureau continued as the government film producing agency. At times, however, individual government departments entered into arrangements with outside private producers for films. During this period motion pictures were growing in importance as an instrument of public policy. In due course it was considered expedient to establish a board comprising members from various phases of our national scene to advise the government as to how this medium might be used to best advantage to interpret Canada to Canadians and other countries.

Accordingly, in 1939, the national film board was set up under the National Film Act to be the co-ordinator, adviser and general supervisor of government film activities. The board, with the film commissioner as its chief executive officer, was given power to administer funds voted to it by parliament for making films. Actual production, however, remained with the motion picture bureau. In 1941, in a move toward greater efficiency, the motion picture bureau was transferred from the Department of Trade and Commerce to the control of the national film board, and the government film commissioner assumed the duties of director of the bureau.

In time it became apparent that the National Film Act of 1939 had not contemplated an operation of the kind in which the board had become engaged, especially under the impetus and stress of wartime conditions. Difficulties were experienced in fulfilling the purposes laid down in the act. Although the board had a continuing program of production, the great majority of its personnel were employed for three-month renewable periods. Other difficulties were experienced in financing and accounting, and in making contracts for the distribution of films.

Recognizing the difficulties under which the board was operating, and at the same time wishing to obtain an independent expert opinion about the business management of the board, on November 15, 1949, I asked Messrs. J. D. Woods and Gordon, a firm of business management consultants, to examine the board's organization and business administration, and I informed the house accordingly on December 7, 1949. The report submitted by this firm was tabled on March 29, 1950. Members of the house have had an opportunity of studying it, and will see that it recognizes the difficulties and offers certain solutions.

The recommendations contained in the report fall into two main categories, those relating to internal organization and administration, and those requiring legislative action. A number in the first group have already been implemented. To give effect to the changes which require legislative authority the bill, with respect to which I have the honour to move second reading, includes provisions which, if implemented, will:

1. Define clearly the functions of the board in conformity with its actual operations.

2. Reconstitute the board on a basis intended to make it possible to carry out these functions efficiently.

3. Confer on the board powers appropriate to these functions and clearly establish the board's responsibility to parliament through a designated minister of the crown.

4. Establish executive machinery designed to make efficient administration possible.

5. Confer power to staff the board and to bring continuing members of the staff under the Civil Service Superannuation Act.

6. Establish financial arrangements suited to the board's present operations.

The basic principles of the bill are that the board shall be responsible through a minister to parliament; that the powers necessary to carry out the functions of the board shall be vested in this board; and that the commissioner shall be responsible to the board and shall be its chief executive officer charged with the administration of its operations.

The bill defines the board as an agency to produce and distribute and to promote the production and distribution of films designed to interpret Canada to Canadians and to other nations. It seeks authority for the board to represent the government of Canada or any department thereof in the securing of motion picture films from persons engaged in film activity; to engage in film research, and to act as adviser to the governor in council in connection with film activities.

In accordance with the recommendations of the business consultants, the bill contains provisions whereby ministers of the crown would no longer be members of the board, that the number of members would be increased from eight to nine, that the commissioner be chairman, and that the number of members from outside the government service be increased from three to five. Power is sought for the board to enter into contracts, acquire copyrights and patents and, with the approval of the minister, to make bylaws for the carrying out of the purposes of the bill.

The duties of the film commissioner as the chief executive officer of the board are defined. It is proposed that he be given the responsibility for the administration of the board's operations and authority, subject to the bylaws of the board, to exercise its powers.

Under the terms of the bill authority is sought to formulate a plan of organization for the establishment and classification of the continuing positions necessary for the proper functioning of the board and to enable the board to employ staff for these continuing positions during pleasure and for fixed terms. The benefits of the Civil Service Superannuation Act would be extended to staff employed on this organization plan. Over and beyond this organization plan, authority is sought to employ personnel for temporary work from time to time as conditions require. These employees would not be eligible for the benefits of the superannuation act.

A financial structure designed to enable the board to operate efficiently is proposed. As at present, finances would be obtained through direct appropriation by parliament, and by moneys transferred from other government departments in payment for film and other services. One of the most important financial provisions sought is the establishment of a national film board operating account in the consolidated revenue fund to which all operating expenditures of the board would be charged, and to which all moneys received from operations would be credited. There is a provision that expenditures shown in the operating account must not at any time exceed receipts by more than $700,000. The effect of this is to furnish the board with working capital to the extent of $700,000. Under this arrangement profits would be transferred to the receiver general and deficits would be met only by direct appropriation by parliament. All capital expenditures would require appropriation by parliament.

The receiving and paying of cash would still be handled by the comptroller of the treasury. The Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act would still apply to the board's operations. The board's account would be open to audit by the comptroller of the treasury, and the Auditor General's office would continue to review its operations.

Perhaps I should explain why the bill is being introduced at this late date in the session. At the last session I informed the house that where there were weaknesses and deficiencies in the board we would move as quickly as possible to rectify them. The new commissioner assumed his duties on February 1, and the report of the management consultants was dated March 22, 1950. It was natural to expect that the new commissioner would require some time to familiarize himself with the board and its operations, but nevertheless I asked him to take whatever steps were necessary to bring forward in legislative form the recommendations set forth in the Woods-Gordon report which it appeared desirable to have implemented but which required legislative action. The members of the board co-operated wholeheartedly, and the commissioner and his staff, in co-operation with the officers of the Department of Justice, worked with speed and determination with the result that the bill was prepared.

It was then necessary to make a decision as to whether it should be introduced at this late date or deferred until the next session. When all factors were considered, it was decided that hon. members should be given an opportunity of dealing with the bill even at this late date, and to enact legislation which would enable the board to operate in a sounder, more efficient manner to perform its basic function of interpreting Canada to Canadians and to other nations.

Mr. Cardiff: I do not know whether I am in order in asking this question now, but if not the minister will correct me.

Mr. Winters: If the questions are detailed I would suggest that we wait until the committee stage, if that is acceptable to the hon. member.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Dion in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. Cardiff: What was the total revenue received in 1949 from the sale or lease of the "Canada Carries On" series, in Canada? When the minister has answered that I will ask another question.

Mr. Winters: The net revenue last year from the series "Canada Carries On" in Canada was $6,430.40.

Mr. Cardiff: And what was received from outside Canada?

Mr. Winters: For the "Canada Carries On" series the revenue was very small. The total theatrical revenue received last year was $21,271. As I explained when the estimates were before the committee, "Canada Carries On" is not carried as a series outside Canada.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Definitions.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Would the minister tell us what is going to be the fate of the accounts receivable mentioned in the film board report? Apparently there is some $43,689 in unpaid accounts which have been outstanding for more than a year, including some $2,000 odd which is more than five years overdue. Will the board be given power to write off these accounts if they are uncollectable, or will it try to collect them?

Mr. Winters: We have been trying to collect these accounts and in fact have collected some. Under the act we are seeking authority for the board to write off these old, uncollectable accounts.

Section agreed to.

Sections 3 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On section 9—Purposes for which board established.

Mr. McLure: Under this section I see the object and purpose of the board is to promote the production and distribution of films designed to make Canada known to Canadians and to the people of other countries. In this connection I want to deal with a little matter that was overlooked some time ago when we were going through the minister's estimates. For the advertising of the national park in Prince Edward Island to the outside world the greatest credit must go to a famous authoress, Lucy Maude Montgomery, who made known to the world not only her home of Cavendish but the province at large. I should like to know from the minister whether there is any co-operation between the provincial government and his department in reference to historic sites or memorials to outstanding people in Prince Edward Island.

When the national park was purchased by the provincial government and handed over to the federal government, with it was purchased the birthplace of that well-known lady. Now I understand that as a result of unsatisfactory arrangements between the provincial government and this department, this property has been sold to a private individual, and the people of that section of the country are very much up in arms about it. They understood this property was still in the hands of the national park people, which would bring it under this item of resources. Now that they know it has been sold they are organizing a movement to see if they cannot get the federal government to buy back this property and make it into what it should be, an attraction for tourists coming to that part of the country.

I should like to know from the minister, if he has any information on the subject, whether the provincial government sold this property without notice to the federal government, because it was generally understood that this quaint old building was in a part of the national park that had been handed over to the federal government. The people generally throughout Prince Edward Island resent the fact that this property was sold with no one knowing anything about it with the exception of the provincial government. If the minister would take some interest in it and suggest some way by which we could get this back for the people of that part of the country, to be handed over again to the government as part of the national park, they would appreciate it very much indeed.

Mr. Winters: That is a matter coming more within the jurisdiction of the national parks branch of the department than under the film board. I have no information at hand at the moment, but I shall be glad to look into it and get in touch with the hon. member later.

Mr. McLure: I brought the matter up under the film board act because last year and the year before the film board people were down there taking pictures, and I understand they took a good many pictures of this old residence. For some reason, however, all those pictures were cut out of the advertising. Whether that was done under instructions from this government or the provincial government I have yet to find out, but I am endeavouring to do so and I hope to get some information on it.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I have a number of questions to ask the minister on this section. The main portion reads:

> The board is established to initiate and promote the production and distribution of films in the national interest—

Who is to decide whether or not a film is in the national interest? That is my first question; perhaps I had better continue, then at one fell swoop the minister can take care of all my difficulties. I like the expression "interpret Canada to Canadians." I assume someone will decide that that is in the national interest, and I should like to know who the person or persons are.

Then paragraph (b) of section 9 reads:

> to represent the government of Canada in its relations with persons engaged in commercial motion picture film activity in connection with motion picture films for the government or any department thereof;

Does that mean that a department of government, feeling that it needs a film for advertising some activity of its own, must move through this board in dealing with other persons who might like to produce that film? Is that the meaning of the section?

Mr. Winters: Perhaps I might answer this question now, and answer the first question at the same time. Under this bill we are seeking authority to have a board set up. There is a board set up under the present act consisting of the chairman, deputy chairman, and six members. We are seeking authority to expand that board so as to get a better coverage of the Canadian scene. We think that such a board is the best means for determining whether or not a certain topic is in the national interest and to have it recorded on film.

With regard to the second point my friend brought up, I would say that, in the first instance, if a department wanted a film made and wanted some private company to produce the film, it would approach the problem through the national film board. But that does not mean that, once the arrangements were made with the private company, the contracting department could not deal directly with the private film maker.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Is the minister going to exclude this commercial corporation which we set up the other day with such tremendously wide powers? It may be that a department wants to buy a film already made. Does this provision mean that the department cannot buy it without going through this board? In other words, is this not what we are doing? We are taking away the discretion and authority of persons in government departments, who are assumed to know their business rather well. Are we not just saying: Here is a new agency—when I use the word new I realize that perhaps we have had similar agencies—and through this agency thou shalt act. Has the minister contemplated some of the real difficulties that might get the board into with the various departments of government?

In other words, we shall say the defence department has to buy through the Canadian Commercial Corporation. Has that company got to go to this board before a training film can be bought which was produced in the United States or England? Can they not just go out and buy it? Surely they should be able to buy it without being limited, both in the negotiations and in the purchase, by this or any other board.

I move on to the next paragraph, and I am going to ask the minister just why it is so narrow. Paragraph (c) reads as follows:

> to engage in research in film activities and to make available the results thereof to persons engaged in the production of films.

Why in the world are we going to have a research agency set up, paid for by the government, and permit that agency to make the results of its inquiry known only to persons engaged in the production of films? Are we not limiting the thing too greatly? In other words, we are going to assist certain people to the exclusion of other people. Let us say that the minister and I think we would like to go into the business of making films. We form our company, but we cannot get the benefit of anything done by this research organization for which the people are paying. We have to be engaged in the production of films, and I assume that to mean the active production of films.

I am making the two suggestions that I have in no critical sense. But when we set this up we want something that is workable. I do not know why we do not leave it to someone, to the board if you like, to make this research information available to anyone. By the draftsmanship of this statute, what we may have done is to make it impossible for the research organization to make available to departments of government the discoveries which they have made. Putting in those words, persons engaged in the production of films, limits the provision. Before the section passes the minister might give some consideration to that, because I am quite sure he wants the board to be effective, and does not intend to make this narrow limitation which obviously arises from a reading of the section.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, this paragraph (b) of section 9 upon which my friend commented is intended to make the film board the agency of government for the field of films. It is, to all intents and purposes, a continuation of the function the film board is authorized to carry out under the existing act.

Paragraph (c) of section 9 was intended to be permissive rather than restrictive. It was to authorize the film board to make available the results of whatever research it carried out. The research it carries out is intended to be in the field of production, and it was contemplated therefore that the only people who would be concerned with it would be people engaged in the production of films. There is no intention to limit it at all. So far as I am concerned, I would be pleased to make any information available on a broader basis than would appear to be expressed in the interpretation my friend puts on this paragraph.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I am in agreement about what the intention is, and it is a very good intention. But when we are dealing with statutes, which are exact things, we should be particular. If a statute is passed giving A authority to do something in relation to B, then it becomes exclusive if it is a right set up in favour of A. It is for that reason I am somewhat concerned about it. I do not know why we want to tell the board that they may or may not make their findings available to anyone. Why could we not simply pass the paragraph in the following terms:

> To engage in research in film activity and to make available the results thereof.

We would not need to add those last words, "to persons engaged in the production of films". Perhaps it is not so important, but these things are much better taken care of early, instead of waiting until perhaps we run into difficulties later on. I am not going to move any amendments or anything like that, but I suggest to the minister that the thought I have put forward is probably worth consideration in order to carry out his expressed intention of what he seeks to accomplish.

Mr. McCann: I am not undertaking to answer any questions that are directed to the minister, but having been a member of the film board for a number of years, having been at one time the chairman of it, and having taken an interest in the formulation of this legislation, I consider that a proper answer to the hon. member for Calgary West probably is to explain what was intended in the legislation and to point out that the paragraph states:

> To engage in research in film activity and to make available the results thereof to persons engaged in the production of films.

That is a positive direction that this must be done. It is just the same as in any other department. In the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys of which I have charge we do a great deal of work, but it is not either necessary or economical that all that knowledge should be given to the whole country; it is, however, given to the people who are engaged in that particular business. It is the same with this particular point at issue. I think that this is a positive direction to the film board to distribute to the people who are in that industry the result of any experimental work that they have done, with a view to keeping them informed of their activities and with a view to promoting the efficiency of the organization. The film industry of this country is growing to be quite a size. There are a number of firms in it such as radio news, associated screen news, people here in Ottawa such as Crawley films, people in Toronto and others throughout the whole country, who are engaged in what is becoming an important new activity. I can readily understand, as I think all hon. members can, that they are not all in a position to do experimental work in film development. In keeping with what is done in other departments, I submit that that is the sort of educational and experimental work that can well be done at government expense; and by this clause they are directed to pass on to the people who are in the industry any advancements there are in that line.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I agree entirely with everything that the minister has just said. My worry is as to its exclusiveness. I am going to try to construct something for the minister who has just spoken. In surgery, about which the minister knows a great deal, we know that films are used much more now than they were many years ago. For example, I know of one institution in Rochester in which practically everything that is done is recorded on film.

Let us take, for example, a hospital in the city of Ottawa. Research in connection with operative matters is an important thing today. Let us take, for instance, the Ottawa Civic Hospital. Whether they make their own film or not, I do not know. It may be that the surgeons that are operating may do it. I am agreeing with what is intended, but what I am worried about is this. I do not want it limited so that we could not say to the civic hospital: Here, by way of research we have learned something. Assuming that the hospital itself is not engaged in the manufacture of film, nevertheless I think it would be something of importance to any hospital that they should have available to them the result of research in this organization. I am, however, not going to say anything more about it. But I submit that, instead of carrying out the intention expressed by both ministers, we are perhaps needlessly limiting the power of this board.

Mr. Cote (Matapedia-Matane): I should like to add one word in reply to the hon. member for Calgary West. Paragraph (c) reads as follows: "to engage in research in film activity", and not in any other. Suppose, for instance, that the film board succeeds in developing a device with which to record the third dimension, something which has been tried by so many countries of the world. Suppose we are successful in this country. I do not think anybody but the industry or the film board would be concerned, to begin with. As the minister has said, I think it would be extremely costly to do as the hon. member has suggested. I know that my hon. friend for one and his party for another are extremely touchy about the expenditures of this government. If we limit the application of this paragraph (c) to research in film activity, I think that is proper. I do not think this information with regard to the third dimension, for instance, should be given to all kinds of people at the expense of the government, but only to people who are really interested in that particular thing. I think the paragraph should stand as it is. That is a mere suggestion. But as my hon. friend has suggested, I think there is no reason why there should not be ways and means to make available through films to all kinds of trades and human activities the results of human endeavour. As far as the film board activities are concerned, however, I think the provision of information should be limited for the time being to the trade. The costs will be much less.

[Mr. Smith (Calgary West).]

Mr. Jeffery: If the hon. member for Calgary West, who was referring to the section dealing with the purpose of the board, will look at section 10, subsection 1, paragraph (h), I think he will see the answer to his question.

Mr. Green: Can the minister explain just what the relationship would be between the national film board and the national research council in connection with research work? Some of us are on the special committee looking into the activities of the national research council, and we find that that council—whose business is, after all, research for all departments of government—has been doing effective work for many of the departments. Why is it not possible for the research council to do the research work for the national film board? I have not had time to check the old National Film Act but in a quick glance at that act I do not see any power there given to carry on research work. It does seem to me that in this method there might be a duplication of services. Why not have the problems of the national film board, which are research problems, performed by the national research council in co-operation with the film board? The research council seems to be able to co-operate with the other departments of government, including the Department of National Defence; and I should think we could save quite a bit of money and perhaps get more efficient research if we allowed the research council people, whose business it is to do research, to look after that type of work for the national film board.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, there is the closest co-operation. In fact, some of the people in the national film board who are on research are actually working in the national research council. However the nature of the work is such that they must have a good knowledge of film activity. Therefore it is a more efficient approach to have them on the strength of the national film board, although actually working in the national research council. There is that degree of co-operation.

Mr. Green: It seems to me that to state that research is one of the purposes for which the board is established is to put the emphasis in the wrong place. It might be all right to include in the powers of the board under section 10 the power to do research. Here, however, we are saying that these shall be the important jobs of the national film board:

(a) to produce and distribute and to promote the production and distribution of films designed to interpret Canada to Canadians and to other nations;

(b) to represent the government of Canada in its relations with persons engaged in commercial motion picture film activity in connection with motion picture films for the government or any department thereof.

Then we come to paragraph (c) which refers to research, and go on to the next paragraph as follows:

(d) to advise the governor in council in connection with film activities;

(e) to discharge such other duties relating to film activity as the governor in council may direct it to undertake.

I suggest that to engage in research in film activities is out of place as one of the main purposes for which the board is established. If some power is needed, then let it be included in the powers of the board as they are set out in section 10, rather than make it one of the main purposes, particularly when we have such an efficient national research council.

Mr. Cote (Matapedia-Matane): Supposing the experts of the national film board engaged in research are in some way transferred to the national research council; in such event what would be the saving of money? They would have to be paid the same salaries. If the hon. member is suggesting that there are in the national research council film experts not to be found in the national film board, then it would be different. However, if it is just a mere matter of switching accounts, then I do not see why we should spend the taxpayers' money in discussing it. Both organizations are on Sussex street; they work together.

Mr. Green: If the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane is correct in his submission, then he could just as well argue that each department of government should have a research branch to do its own research. Here we have an efficient research council with which the present film board apparently works well. I do not see why there is any necessity to state that one of the main purposes of the national film board shall be to do research. I am afraid that sooner or later it will lead to the development of an expensive research branch in the film board.

Mr. Bater: In connection with the $32,933 set out as proceeds from sales, would the minister tell the committee if the film board sells pictures to the theatres. I am referring to the Canadian news items shown on theatre screens.

Mr. Winters: There are revenues derived from those films. Earlier we were speaking more particularly about the "Canada Carries On" series. Then there are other pictures which produce revenue for the board all across Canada and in other countries.

Mr. Brooks: What assistance is given in the matter of forest conservation work? I know the Canadian Forestry Association has been doing good work in that connection, and that in past years they have complained that they have not had the assistance from the film board they felt they should have had. In the issue of their monthly bulletin for February of 1948 they complain bitterly about this matter, stating:

Motion pictures, as an aid to forestry education, are an important medium employed by the Canadian Forestry Association. During 1948 the Canadian Forestry Association's own motion picture and lecture tours, its film libraries and co-operative tours recorded an attendance in all Canadian provinces of 400,000 men, women and youths, French and English.

It is regrettable to report that all the major motion pictures, in the 1948 program, dealing with forest management, forest protection, soil erosion, water and wildlife were purchased by Canadian Forestry Association in the United States and adapted (and translated for Quebec) in Canada. The principal producer of forest conservation films on this continent is the United States Department of Agriculture.

It seems to me that this is a rather sad commentary on the situation in Canada, because forest conservation is one of the most important matters with which the film board could assist. In 1948 they had to get their films from the United States, and they found the same condition in 1949. I should like to know from the minister what the situation is today, whether we are supplying the Canadian Forestry Association with film, how many we have supplied and just what the situation is at the present time. Unless our film board is doing work of that kind it seems to me they are failing miserably in the work for which the board was set up, and for which it was intended.

Mr. Winters: When the hon. member says the board is failing miserably in the purpose for which it was set up I can say only that we have a certain appropriation and try to spend it to the best possible advantage. When I say that I must add quickly that I think there is a great field in forestry for more motion pictures. We recently released one in British Columbia which I think is very effective, and through the Department of Resources and Development we also contributed to another picture made recently by the government of Alberta showing conservation on the eastern slopes of the Rocky mountains.

I feel there is a great field there for further exploitation, if one may use that word, through the motion picture medium to get across to the Canadian people the real importance of forest conservation.

Mr. Brooks: It is very necessary.

Mr. Murphy: I wish to make only one observation with respect to this section. I believe this point was raised last year, and possibly the year before and the year before that. I refer to the co-operation we should expect from the national film board in connection with the development of our tourist industry. I have always maintained that we have an opportunity to barter with the film industry on the other side. I have felt that while we may have derived some benefits, we have not really developed it to the extent it should be.

I know the minister and his associates will appreciate that this is a non-political subject because there is not an hon. member in the house whose riding is not affected by the tourist industry. I hope to deal with the tourist industry a little later on the minister's estimates but it seemed to me that somehow or other we are not getting as much as we could. There may be some reason for it. I am not blaming the minister because after all is said and done we are dealing with a country whose population is more than ten times our own and which has much to offer, not only in the way of films but in opportunities for recreation and that sort of thing. All this could be developed through films.

We have great hopes for the present minister who is in charge of this portfolio. This bureau has been kicked around to an extent not liked by any one of us. It was fathered by a former prime minister who was a member of a different party and it has always seemed to me that we in this house and the people in the country have been sort of sidetracked. The development of the tourist industry has been more or less a Topsy proposition, left to grow up by itself. We in this house, irrespective of party, do not like that. We think this industry can be developed much more than it has been today, and this is one avenue that could be explored to a great extent to our benefit. We have so much to offer to so many people.

I wonder if the minister, either now or when the tourist bureau estimates are before us, could tell us what has been done within the last year? We had a report a year ago. I hope he will be able to tell us that we are getting more distribution on the other side for our pictures. Heaven knows we certainly do not get it in the newspapers unless it is complaints about the importation of oil and that sort of thing. You would almost think that we were flooding Texas and Oklahoma. You have to expect that sort of thing, I suppose.

We must make direct contacts and one way of doing that is to bring Canada visually to these people who have money to spend in this country. If we cannot get it any other way, let us be frank and put it on a barter basis. If they want to show pictures in this country, let them show them, but make sure that we are able to show ours to the people over there who have money to spend in this country.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—Powers of board.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Does this clause mean that the film board has more autonomy than the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

Mr. Murphy: Is the minister prepared to answer the questions I have indicated.

Mr. Winters: I shall be glad to do it, but I think it could be done better when the estimates of the Canadian government travel bureau are before the committee. As my hon. friend knows, the first paragraph of section 9, which we have passed by the way, states that the board is established to promote the production and distribution of films designed to interpret Canada to Canadians and to other nations. We have been making a strenuous effort in that field. Speaking from memory and subject to correction, we have some 63 film libraries and film distribution centres in the United States for travel films. They receive quite a wide distribution and are seen by large audiences. We also get a great number of travel films on television programs in the United States, and some in the United Kingdom. The ones that are shown in the United States are those in which my hon. friend is particularly interested. We produced a number of travel films last year, I believe four in all. This year we have funds earmarked for the Canadian government travel bureau to provide more films designed to encourage tourists from the United States to come to Canada. We realize that this is a fertile field in which the film board can operate and we propose to do what we can to develop it.

Mr. Murphy: I should like to make one further observation. I have a firm conviction that our efforts are not being developed as they should be. I want to be frank about this and I know the minister will take it as I mean it. I feel that this part of the development of the tourist industry is away behind schedule. I have said before that we should have more than libraries in the different cities. We should attack this problem as a selling proposition, as though we were selling Ford or Chevrolet cars or the products of Imperial Oil. When we arrive at a conclusion that we are going to approach the tourist industry on that basis, we are going to get somewhere.

The Chairman: I do not like to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but section 9 is carried.

Mr. Murphy: I did not understand that section 9 was carried because the minister was just replying to my question.

Mr. Winters: In doing so I reminded the hon. member that the section was carried.

Mr. Green: I submit that the hon. member could raise this matter under subsection 1, paragraph (a).

The Chairman: Proceed.

Mr. Murphy: I think the minister is as fully aware of the situation as I am. I have felt that this matter should be brought to the attention of the committee in order that it may be surveyed with more intensity, of course to our own benefit. May I make a suggestion in a truly business sense? In pursuing a policy of developing the tourist industry through the national film board you should go further than providing film libraries. They are all right, but they do not go far enough. As I have said before, if you are going to show Canada to the United States or any other country you must do it through closer contacts and on a more friendly basis, shall I say, than has been the case to date. It is true that we advertise Canada through the different magazines and that sort of thing, but my firm conviction is that the best approach for the development of the tourist industry is through the film board. I think we are not getting from the provinces the co-operation to which we were entitled. Looking at the advertising in different magazines and newspapers, it seems to me it is about time that the dominion, the provinces and the municipalities got together. A two or three day conference is not enough because we could develop a billion dollar industry and we are not doing it. A 5, 7, or 10 per cent increase per year is not enough for this country when we have so much to offer to so many people. I can visualize the minister going before the treasury board and saying that he wants another $50,000. Apparently it all goes into advertising in newspapers, magazines and periodicals of different kinds.

I may be out of order in what I am about to say, but if I am I hope you will pardon me, Mr. Chairman. One of the best advertisements that the maritimes have had this year was an article written in a United States national magazine, with a circulation of some two million in that country, describing a trip through the maritimes. Let us be serious about the business because we certainly have not been in the past, and let there be no mistake about that. I think the value of the article which appeared in that magazine a few days ago is comparable to what we could accomplish with the film board. That article is worth a quarter of a million dollars to the maritimes this year.

That is the kind of thing we want. Let us try to develop it through films. We can tell the Hollywood moguls that if they want to show pictures in Canada they will have to show pictures of Canada in the United States. Within recent years everybody in the United States has at least two weeks or three weeks for vacation. They are a vacation-minded people. Yet our tourist industry is not even as large as that of Florida, and is about half that of California. We are not going after it. I hope the minister will not take these remarks personally. I am speaking on behalf of every member in the house when I say we want to develop the tourist industry. I think that department has not had a show since it was inaugurated by a former leader of another party. It has been treated as a Topsy. I think it is about time that the people of this country realized that we can develop a billion dollar a year industry instead of having a little increase of $10 million or $15 million. I do not blame the minister one bit, and I hope he will not take my remarks as criticism of him. I think parliament should accept greater responsibility for what we have to offer, and I think the film board provides a good opportunity to do so.

Mr. Winters: Before section 10 carries, I should like to suggest a change in subsection 2 in order to make the wording conform with that of the act to amend the statute law recently passed by the house. I suggest that subsection 2 read as follows:

> Actions, suits or other legal proceedings in respect of any right or obligation acquired or incurred by the board on behalf of His Majesty, whether in its name or in the name of His Majesty, may be
>
> (a) brought or taken against the board, without the governor general's fiat, or
>
> (b) brought or taken by the board, in the name of the board in any court that would have jurisdiction if the board were a corporation that is not an agent of His Majesty.

That will make the wording conform with what the house recently approved. I would ask my colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, so to move.

Mr. Gregg: I so move.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I did not have the latest reprint of the bill before me and I understand that it already contains that wording.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is this section 10?

Mr. Winters: Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a matter of fact, does the section cover the situation at all? I have just come into the house, and I do not know whether there has been any discussion of the subject. In any event, I think there was a great deal of dispatch the other day in the passing of a bill in this house which was accepted generally as a tremendous step forward in connection with the right of action against crown corporations. When one looks at the matter more closely, I begin to wonder whether or not there has been very much of an advance at all. Right of action as against the crown is still dependent upon the issue of a fiat excepting within the circumscribed limits of amendments similar to the one in question in this act. Section 10, subsection 2, now reads:

> Actions, suits or other legal proceedings in respect of any right or obligation acquired or incurred by the board on behalf of His Majesty, whether in its name or in the name of His Majesty, may be
>
> (a) brought or taken against the board, without the governor general's fiat, or
>
> (b) brought or taken by the board, in the name of the board in any court that would have jurisdiction if the board were a corporation that is not an agent of His Majesty.

I submit that the section as now framed will not cover any action in tort. I read it again:

> Actions, suits or other legal proceedings in respect of any right or obligation acquired or incurred by the board . . .

The words "obligation acquired or incurred by the board" merely cover the right to civil action and do not in fact cover the question of proceedings in tort.

Mr. St. Laurent: Not criminal proceedings, but civil proceedings.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am speaking of civil proceedings. If the Prime Minister will read the Exchequer Court Act, as I remember it, provision is made in section 19 and following that the exchequer court shall have certain exclusive powers to try actions as against the crown. As I read the section in the bill, and I do so with the greatest of deference to those who drafted it, I do not think it would cover a civil libel action or an action of that type in tort against the national film board. If a person were libelled in consequence of a film issued by the board I submit it would not be covered by the wording of this section. I think the law officers of the crown should be asked whether or not this section in fact covers such a case. I think the present wording will only cover contractual rights or obligations acquired or incurred in the name of His Majesty, and in fact is not an advance along the road of granting to the private citizen the right of proceeding against the crown without a fiat.

The bill already passed by the house is now before a committee of the other place.

I do not know what conclusion they are going to come to or whether or not the matter has arisen at all. Nevertheless I believe consideration should be given to the question whether or not this section in fact only goes a part of the way that the draftsmen believed, and I presume intended, that it should go. Whether or not it was intentional, while hon. members believe the bill already passed actually extends beyond the contractual liability of a crown corporation to the right of action by a private citizen, nevertheless as it is at present constituted any person who wanted to take proceedings by way of libel or slander, alternative actions for defamation, or on other torts, would find that he still required a fiat from the attorney general.

Having made that statement I suggest to the minister that the law officers should be consulted, for either they intended that it should cover torts such as I have mentioned, or by its draftsmanship they intended that it should not. If it does not cover torts the right of action is of no great consequence and would in fact amount to a very small step forward toward the point where ultimately the individual in this country, in his actions against the crown, will be on the same footing he enjoys in his actions against private citizens.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Twenty minutes ago I asked the minister a simple, easy, elementary question, which has not been answered. Perhaps he was talking to someone else and did not hear me, or perhaps he has forgotten. This was the question. Does this board have the same autonomy as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

Mr. Winters: This board is not being set up as a crown company in the same way as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. My hon. friend will see in the act that the board is set up in a capacity which enables it to exercise general control over its operations, but that the minister in turn has control over the board. Section 3 of the act provides:

> For the purposes of this act and subject to its provisions, the minister shall control and direct the operations of the national film board.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Since sitting down I have been informed that the legal adviser to the other place has given a tentative opinion similar to my view on that section. I was not aware of that at the time I was speaking. Either the minister intends that an individual shall have full rights as against a crown emanation or crown corporation or whatever one may call the film board, or he does not. If it is intended to grant the individual that full right, and the law officer of the crown in the other place doubts that the section contained in the act amending the statute law, which passed this house, is sufficient, then I submit this section certainly should stand until an opinion is secured, in order to make certain that the right of the individual as against this crown corporation shall extend to the right to take action in respect of torts without a fiat.

Mr. Winters: As the hon. member knows, this section was drafted and then redrafted to make more certain that it would give private individuals rights against the board in case of legal action. I suggest that if there is any question about it, and the statute law is being considered in the other place, perhaps this legislation should go forward on the same basis. If an amendment is required in the other place the same consideration can be given this bill, and it can be brought into line there.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The only difficulty is that it would have to come back here again.

Section agreed to.

On section 11—Production of films for departments.

Mr. Green: Will the minister give us some further explanation with respect to subsection 1. It appears to give the film board very wide power over all other departments of government, in that it provides that the production and processing of all motion picture films by or for departments shall be undertaken by the board, unless the board is of the opinion that it is in the public interest that it be otherwise undertaken and authorizes it to be so undertaken. Under this it would appear to me that the Department of National Defence could not produce or process any motion picture film without the approval of the film board. I would like the minister to say whether my interpretation of this subsection is correct and, if it is, why the film board is given such drastic power over the other departments.

Mr. Winters: As I explained before, the national film board is the government's agency in the field of films. The Department of National Defence, which has been referred to previously this evening, does take a considerable amount of film footage, and there is nothing in this act which could bar it from continuing to do so. When it comes to producing a film, however, they are required, as they have been heretofore, to work through the national film board.

Mr. Green: This section would not apply to their defence films, that is to films taken purely for the purposes of the defence department?

Mr. Winters: It would not bar them from having their motion picture cameramen go into camps or stations or any other places they wanted and take films. If the question is one of producing a motion picture for the Department of National Defence, however, then under this section it must be done through the national film board.

Mr. Green: Does this mean that if the defence department want to make a picture of some phase of their training they cannot produce and show that film to their own troops without the consent of the national film board?

Mr. Winters: That is true, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Does this mean that the film board has an absolute monopoly on the production of films for government use?

Mr. Winters: Not at all, Mr. Chairman; it does not mean that in any sense. It just means that if another department of government wishes to produce a motion picture, or to have one produced, it must work through the national film board which, let us say for purposes of discussion, could put it in contact with a private producer, and it would then work with that private producer to obtain the film.

Mr. Drew: But this seems to be more far-reaching than that. Any film taken with a moving picture camera is a motion picture film, and "film" is defined in section 2 of the act, where these various films are described in such a way as to cover anything that would be taken by a moving picture camera. The Department of National Defence has in its different branches a number of cameramen. Does this not mean that those cameramen would not be in a position to go out and take pictures without the authority of the film board? I cannot read it in any other way.

Mr. Cote (Matapedia-Matane): If I may interject a word, after what the leader of the opposition has just said, if I am not mistaken, there is an historic fact that perhaps justifies this section. During the first world war we had no film board and no motion picture bureau, but we had private operators who took both moving films and still pictures. In 1950, however, there are not available to this government for record purposes either still pictures or moving picture films taken at that time. They were taken by operators over whom there was no control. When the war was over and the government tried to secure those films and still pictures, they were not made available. It became impossible for the government to secure them because of the freedom that was given to those who took the pictures. The result is that the government has not those pictures.

Mr. Green: May I ask the minister why it is that the national film board must approve of all films made by the Department of National Defence before any such film can be shown to the troops? That is what the minister said a few moments ago.

Mr. Winters: No, I did not say we had to approve of all films. I simply said we had to approve of the channels through which films are produced.

Mr. Drew: This is more than just taking exception to the narrow meaning of the words, Mr. Chairman. This subsection says that no department shall initiate the production or processing of a motion picture. Now, the initiation of the production is the taking of the moving picture. This wording means that the Department of National Defence would have to obtain the consent of the film board before it had its photographers initiate the production of films. In other words, the national film board determines what is proper or not proper to be taken by the Department of National Defence. I do not believe it can be read in any other way.

Mr. Winters: I think it can. Section 11, subsection 1, says:

> . . . no department shall initiate the production or processing of a motion picture film without the authority of the board, . . .

If the Department of National Defence wants to shoot footage, there is no reason why they should not do it. But if they set out, having in mind the production of a film, this section says the approach is through the national film board.

Mr. Fulton: I do not want to interrupt the discussion on subsection 1, but I want to ask a question on subsection 2. It provides that where the film board undertakes a film for another department, then there may be transferred out of the moneys appropriated by parliament for expenditures by that department to the national film board, such sums to defray the cost incurred by the board as such minister or other persons and the board may agree upon. What I should like to know is why it is not provided that the sums to be transferred shall be the actual cost incurred by the board. I should like to see it provided that in every case the actual cost of producing the film shall be charged and paid by the department for whom it was produced. In that way we will be able to keep track easily of the film producing activity costs, instead of having to look in two departments to find the amount. Why is that not stated specifically, instead of being left to agreement between the ministers?

[Mr. Cote (Matapedia-Matane).]

Mr. Winters: It is put in for a specific reason. Heretofore the board gave an estimate to another department, and if the work overran the estimate the board, in almost all cases, absorbed the amount of the overrun. If the film cost less than was anticipated, the board collected only the lesser amount. It is felt that, in accordance with the Woods-Gordon recommendation, it should be done in a commercial way. The board should agree upon a realistic amount related to the work contemplated and that amount should then be turned over to the board for the production of the film.

Mr. Fulton: That would be regardless of the fact that the film may cost more than the estimate?

Mr. Winters: It would only be the amount that was agreed upon that would be turned over. That is what is contemplated now, but I suppose these agreements will be capable of being renegotiated.

Mr. Fulton: It seems to me that will produce a complicated system of accounting so far as accounting to parliament is concerned through the public accounts. We will have to look through several departments to find out what the actual cost was. Say the Department of National Defence has made a film, we shall not be able to find the cost in the part of the public accounts devoted to that department, but we shall have to turn to the national film board to find the extra cost, if any. I do not see why it is not possible to provide that the amount to be paid by the department for whom the film is produced shall in all cases shall be the actual cost to the board.

Mr. Winters: The actual cost of course can always be obtained from the national film board account. It seems to me it is a realistic arrangement. It is the arrangement that would prevail between a contractor and someone for whom he undertook to do a job. A price is agreed upon and that is the price that prevails; that seems to me to be the businesslike, normal arrangement.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, I believe that subsection 1 should be very carefully considered. I do urge the minister to think carefully about what these words mean. "No department shall initiate the production" of a motion picture film. The initiation of the production is the instruction to some cameraman to go out and take a picture.

That means that the Department of National Defence cannot even give instructions to a cameraman, let alone have him take a picture, without the authority of the board. I am not going to press this, because if the minister does not see the words in this way and will not accept this recommendation, then he will proceed with what I regard as a serious defect.

There is another consideration here which I think should also be brought to the attention of the house. This provision places the right of the department to do something under the control of an agency of government outside the ordinary government structure. This film board is the creature of the government, and that creature of government is given the authority to say to the departments of government whether they can or cannot do something that they would ordinarily do. I think the principle, notwithstanding the object, is one that is a definite departure from our ordinary procedure.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like to refer to section 11, subsection 1. When I asked the minister if the effect of this subsection was to rule out private production agencies, he said no. I believe the effect of it really will be that, because his answer went on to say, if I correctly understood him, that it would still be possible for the film board to act as intermediary for another department to employ a private agency. Now, to me that is so unlikely that I think it can be disregarded. No one is going to believe that the film board will want to have that done. Unless they are superhuman people, it is going to be almost impossible for them to fall over backwards to the extent that they could act as a genuine agent for the employment of someone else.

Is this not a definite change in the practice? In the past, if I recall the information we had in this house last December, other departments had been able to deal directly. It is not merely a case of the initiation, but under this section as it stands there will be no dealing directly between any department and any private agency. In other words, unless I have misrepresented the situation, what we are really doing, and we may as well face it, is stating that this agency will exclude private producers.

Mr. Winters: No, as the Prime Minister has just suggested it is just like the king's printer. There is no departure here, and I can assure my hon. friend that there is no intention of insulating government departments from private operators in the motion picture field. The section of the present act reads:

> All processing and production of films by and for government departments shall be undertaken by the bureau, except where the commissioner agrees that the work can be done through officers of other departments and that the results obtained will be technically adequate and economical, or where the board considers the use of commercial firms advisable in the public interest.

The same practice is being followed.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The minister referred to the king's printer. May I ask whether there are any private producers entering that field?

Mr. Winters: Yes, a great deal of the government printing is done by private producers through the printing bureau, the king's printer.

Section agreed to.

Section 12 agreed to.

On section 13—Plan of organization.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): This section seems to be setting up a separate kingdom with a vengeance. I notice particularly subsection 3 which enables the board to disregard the provisions of the Civil Service Act. Will the minister deal first of all with subsection 1 which in itself seems to give unusually broad powers? May I ask if I am correct in taking it that these are powers beyond what the ordinary department of government has? Would that be correct with regard to subsection 1?

Mr. Winters: It is powers beyond or different from those where the Civil Service Act applies, but it is not extraordinary powers in the light of the way the film board operates and has been operating. This subsection says that for the permanent employees of the board a plan can be set up, provided it is recommended by the minister and approved by treasury board. Once that plan is approved, the board then has, under this section, the power to appoint employees to fill the establishments. That is what the section purports to do.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): What is it necessary to deal with it so differently from the ordinary civil service department? Is it because it is thought that the employees that are required to be obtained by the board are of a different type and will not come in under ordinary civil service conditions?

Mr. Winters: It has always been considered that the making of films is a different sort of operation. It is a creative field in which you normally expect and get a different type of personnel. In this field there are people who are experts whom you could never get through competitive arrangements under the Civil Service Act. They are nevertheless people who have been doing and who will continue to do an excellent job for the board. Having regard to the nature of the operation, I think that the power to appoint people is a necessary one if the board is going to remain a live and creative organization.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I can understand that there would be certain people, of a highly skilled and highly artistic nature, and perhaps particularly expert in other ways, who would be included in the description which the minister has just given. But will that apply to all the people in the film board? Does not this organization plan apply to all the people?

Mr. Winters: There is another section, section 14, which provides for people other than those in the plan approved by the treasury board on the recommendation of the minister.

Mr. Fulton: Again notwithstanding the Civil Service Act.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Can the minister say roughly how many people would be affected by this provision and what would be the likely and probable division between those under section 14 and those under section 13? What I mean is this. Are there going to be a few exceptions under section 14 or under section 13?

Mr. Winters: The majority of the people employed would be under section 14. The people employed under section 13 are those people who would have employment of a continuing nature. The work of the film board fluctuates from production to production. There is a high turnover of employees for that reason. Section 14 gives the board the power to employ temporary personnel to take care of this situation.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The minister speaks of a large turnover. Nevertheless there is reference here to pension and retirement privileges. I suppose the minister's answer to that is that it would depend on how long, in fact, they stay.

Mr. Winters: I presume we are discussing section 13, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Yes, section 13.

Mr. Winters: The effect of section 13 is to enable the people on the approved plan, under section 13, to become eligible for the civil service superannuation benefits; but the people employed under section 14 do not.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): In other words the answer is that, under certain conditions, for certain duties they are taken out of the Civil Service Act and for certain other duties the Civil Service Act applies. Is that the answer?

Mr. Winters: It is not the Civil Service Act; it is the Civil Service Superannuation Act; it is to entitle the people on the permanent staff in continuing positions to become eligible for civil service superannuation benefits, whereas the temporary employees are employed under section 14 and do not qualify for civil service superannuation benefits.

Mr. Green: May I ask the minister a question concerning subsection 4 of section 13. That section apparently provides that the board has absolute discretion with regard to positions up to $5,000 a year. For any positions over that figure they must get the approval of the governor in council. Does the minister have any jurisdiction whatever over the employment of persons who do not get $5,000 or more or is that entirely in the hands of the board?

Mr. Winters: There are bylaws to which this act refers and which may well have a bearing on that point. Section 3 reads:

> For the purpose of this act and subject to its provisions, the minister shall control and direct the operations of the national film board.

That enables the minister to exercise control over any of these matters he so desires.

Mr. Green: Is it the intention that the minister shall have power over these salaries below $5,000?

Mr. Winters: Oh, yes.

Mr. Knowles: Subsection 1 deals with that matter.

Mr. Charlton: The minister has just said with regard to subsection 4 that, no matter what the salary is, the Civil Service Act does not apply other than for superannuation purposes.

Mr. Winters: Unless the employee comes under subsection 6 of section 13, or subsection 7, which states in effect that if he were an employee under the Civil Service Act before this act came into effect, he continues under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. Charlton: This board then is being set aside from the Civil Service Act with regard to appointments, whether the salary is under $5,000 or over $5,000.

Mr. Winters: That is substantially correct, except for the subsections I have quoted.

Mr. Charlton: That is only if they have been in the employ of the civil service and are continuing under the civil service.

Mr. Winters: That is right.

Mr. Fulton: I do not think the minister has given us any full explanation as to why it is necessary to do that at this time when there was no similar provision, or at least no such widespread provision in the old National Film Act. There practically the only person who was exempt, and completely exempt, from the provisions of the Civil Service Act was the commissioner himself. Now every employee of the board virtually is or may be exempt from the provisions of the Civil Service Act. Why is it necessary to make this sweeping change?

Mr. Winters: I think this is of great importance. It is a step in the direction recommended by the Woods-Gordon report and a step in the direction which I think is correct. Under the old act the only people who were eligible for civil service superannuation were the people who were civil servants before the old act came into effect. All the others were employees on a temporary basis, the term being three months, except of course for the commissioner, who was on a three-year term.

Mr. Charlton: Why should the permanent employees of this board be outside the civil service when every other department of the government is inside the civil service, and is governed entirely by the Civil Service Act?

Mr. Winters: There are, of course, other agencies, but that does not necessarily explain why this should be so in this case. I could refer to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and others where the nature of the operation and the nature of the talent required make it expedient and necessary to be able to appoint people rather than to have them qualify under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. Charlton: In other words a supercivil service committee is set up outside the actual civil service?

Mr. Winters: No.

Mr. Charlton: When there are thousands of people who have to abide by the Civil Service Act.

Mr. Green: What about the ordinary clerical staff? Will they not be under the Civil Service Act? Is the national film board being taken completely away from the Civil Service Act, from the top down?

Mr. Winters: It is not being taken away, because it never was there. We are bringing it closer to the civil service regulations now than it has ever been before. We are trying to regularize it and get permanency and stability

Mr. Fulton: So far as superannuation is concerned.

Mr. Winters: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Sections 14 to 17 inclusive agreed to.

On section 18—National film board operating account.

Mr. Charlton: I would refer particularly to section 18 (4) which refers to expenditures made by the board and shown in the account not at any time exceeding the receipts shown in the account by more than $700,000, or such lesser amount as may be fixed by treasury board. Does that mean that the expenditures of the board shall not exceed $700,000?

Mr. Winters: No, that is a working fund set up to enable the board to continue its operations from year to year. Section 18 (4) states that expenditures must at no time exceed by more than $700,000 the receipts of the board.

Mr. Charlton: The amount of the appropriation for the operation of the board?

Mr. Winters: This is not related to the appropriation for the board. It gives the board a working fund, and is not voted by parliament as such. It means that the board can take accounts receivable, for example, and carry them on what I understand accountants refer to as an accrual basis. They can accumulate receivables and things of that nature until they arrive at the figure of $700,000, beyond which they cannot go. It is a working fund for the board.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I would ask the minister to look at this section again. I take it that this is really the same problem we have in the Department of Transport, where there was the grant of a working fund. I would ask the minister to look carefully to see if it gives the effect he intends. It says—

> The expenditures made by the board and shown in the account shall not at any time exceed the receipts shown in the account.

That is to say, the receipts of the board, if my understanding is correct—

> —by more than $700,000 or such lesser amount—

And so on. Is that what is really intended? It does not say, "Shall not exceed the amount voted by more than $700,000," but rather it says, "shall not at any time exceed the receipts." I have not studied it carefully, but I suggest it should be looked at again to see that it states what is intended.

Mr. Winters: I am told that it is all right in this form. It has been checked carefully by treasury, by the Auditor General and by others who are familiar with these matters, and they say it does conform with what is required and what was recommended in the Woods-Gordon report.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): All I have to add is that it does refer merely to receipts.

It has not anything to do with grants by parliament at all. However, if the minister is satisfied, I have nothing more to say.

Section agreed to.

On section 19—Application of 1931, chapter 27.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): What is the significance of this section?

Mr. Winters: This measure refers to the setting up of a special account known as the national film board operating account, and authorizes the board to set up its own internal accounting system. Beyond that the payment of cash disbursements and so on will be handled by the comptroller of the treasury, and in other ways the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act will apply.

Section agreed to.

Section 20 agreed to.

On section 21—Reports to minister.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I cannot help feeling that there is a good deal of weight in the point drawn to the attention of the minister by the leader of the opposition in regard to the position in which, for instance, the Department of National Defence would be placed. It seems to me a strange procedure to give the national film board such powers. I suggest that section 11(1) be considered carefully.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): That was passed.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Yes, but this section 21 states that the board shall furnish statements or reports to the minister at such times and in such manner as the minister may require. It seems to me the minister would have power to make inquiries and to see if other departments had violated the provisions of the act. I am wondering, for example, if in the Sweetbriar operation, having taken pictures, the Department of National Defence each time it started a new roll of film would have to get permission?

Mr. Winters: No, I have already assured the committee that that would not be so.

Section agreed to.

Sections 22 and 23 agreed to.

On the schedule.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): How would one know the meaning of the expression "due authority"? Would there be a regulation, or would it just be a case of being told by one's boss? Sometimes that becomes rather important.

Mr. Winters: This is the standard oath of security, the same as is found in other legislation. The one I have in mind is the act setting up the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): It is in general use.

Mr. Winters: Yes, it is in general use.

Schedule agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dion in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF RESOURCES AND DEVELOPMENT

Forestry branch—

384. Forest research division, $819,675.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, I notice that under this vote for forestry research there are 29 engineers, and increases in almost every figure in the item. Travelling expenses are shown as $87,000, and casuals and others as $190,466. In that case the increase is $30,000. I do not understand that item. Is it an item into which you stick anything when you cannot find any other place to put it?

Mr. Winters: That is casual labour.

Mr. Hodgson: Is that part-time labour?

Mr. Winters: Yes, as required.

Mr. Hodgson: You have an item for temporary assistance.

Mr. Winters: Those are civil servants generally who are classified as temporaries rather than permanents.

Mr. Herridge: I understand that this forest research division is carrying on some research in the use of sawmill machinery and equipment. I may say that I advocated this for five years in the provincial legislature and every year since I came here. Many other hon. members are interested in this matter, particularly in the saving of waste occasioned by sawmill equipment, especially the equipment in small sawmills. I am particularly interested in knowing that the department is going ahead with this research and I wonder if the minister could give us some information as to the results.

Mr. Winters: A building has been acquired in Ottawa and the machinery is being obtained. As soon as it is set up a program, which has been laid out, will be undertaken.

Mr. Hodgson: Can the minister describe one thing this forest research division has developed for the benefit of the lumbering industry?

Mr. Winters: I am told by the officials that there is general research in the field of forestry. As an example of what they have brought forth I would mention aerial photography.

Mr. Hodgson: Aerial photography was developed five or ten years ago, and I can show you aerial photographs in my office which were taken that long ago. I want to know what has been done in the past five years that has been of benefit to the industry in which I am interested.

Mr. Winters: That specific question could be answered more appropriately under item 385. The department has done a great deal of work in the field of kiln-drying, utilization of waste products from lumbering operations and developments of that nature.

Mr. Hodgson: Would you prefer to leave it until the next item?

Mr. Winters: If you like.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Has the work carried on under this item and the following item been extended as yet to Newfoundland? We have a lot of birch down there that we do not know what to do with.

Mr. Winters: The operations have been extended to Newfoundland. Last year one of the officials went to Newfoundland to conduct a study into the density of Newfoundland woods, such as balsam.

Mr. Hodgson: This item totals $820,000, an increase of approximately $80,000 over last year. The minister and his officials ought to be able to tell us what is being accomplished for that amount of money. There are 29 engineers and $87,000 for travelling. Are they just travelling around looking at the country and taking pictures, or what are they doing?

Mr. Winters: This vote is for the advancement of forestry research and conservation in Canada; the investigation of forest conditions and rates of growth; the development of scientific management methods on the basis of sustained yield; forest fire protection studies; technical investigations into the operation of the industry; investigation, development and application of aerial photography methods; development of techniques concerning the interpretation of forestry data; silviculture research and so on.

Mr. Hodgson: What has been done in connection with fire fighting, for example? So far as I know that has always been handled by the provinces.

Mr. Winters: As my hon. friend says, that work comes within the provincial field, but the department has done a great deal in the way of assessing forest fire hazards. The results of the work done by the department are used fairly generally throughout Canada, and they are used in the national parks.

Mr. Hodgson: Tell us one place where they have done anything along that line.

Mr. Winters: Forest fire hazard evaluation and forest fire forecasting is used in Quebec and in the maritime provinces. That use has developed out of the work of this branch.

Mr. Hodgson: Specify something that they have done. Have they developed anything besides the use of water to put out a fire, or the use of a shovel? Just what have they done? We are being asked to vote $820,000 and we should know something about it.

Mr. Winters: My hon. friend will see from the break-down on page 256 that a considerable amount goes into total salaries and wages which of course are paid for research as well as other work. As a specific instance of what they do, they have broken ground in the assessment of fire hazards and it has found wide application.

Mr. Knowles: Can the minister tell us whether this research division has carried on any work in connection with various kinds of cigarettes insofar as they may cause forest fires? We have asked about this under various items; I do not think I have had occasion to ask the present minister about it, but I have asked others.

There seems to be some question whether there are certain chemicals in the paper used in the manufacture of tailor-made cigarettes which makes it possible for them to burn more steadily than is the case with the other kind. I do not happen to use the things myself but my friend from Saskatoon and I conducted a little experiment not many weeks ago. There was no doubt about the result. The roll-your-own cigarette refused to burn by itself but the tailor-made burned by itself until it was completely consumed.

It has been represented to me that in forests the use of tailor-made cigarettes, the stubs of which are tossed about, may be the cause of many forest fires. It has been said to me, as a matter of fact, by people who are connected with woods operations that they require their workers in the bush to use roll-your-own cigarettes rather than tailor-made, particularly when there is any fire hazard. It would seem to me there are at least two phases of this matter which the research division might investigate. On the one hand, it might gather statistics as to the number of forest fires caused by discarded cigarettes, and on the other hand it might conduct some scientific research into what is contained in these cigarette papers that makes for the difference in burning that my friend from Saskatoon and I found in the experiment we conducted some time ago.

After one of the occasions when I raised this matter in the house I had a communication from one of the big tobacco companies assuring me that there was nothing in the paper used in tailor-made cigarettes that would create any greater fire hazard than the other kind. It was after that that my friend and I conducted the experiment. Other people have spoken to me about the matter and have assured me that there is that difference. I have taken the matter up with the office of the dominion fire commissioner. I have had correspondence with other people in the country who are interested in the question, including officials of the dominion fire chiefs association. I believe there is something here that needs to be investigated.

I know that the dominion fire chiefs association feels that action should be taken. In fact not long ago they passed a resolution which was sent to the government, copies of which were sent to all members of parliament. So far as the office of the dominion fire commissioner is concerned, if I recall correctly, the answer I received from them was that it was difficult to deal with a matter of this kind by legislation. Once upon a time that view was taken with respect to matches, but now we have legislation to reduce the fire hazard in matches. Although there might be a pretty high-powered lobby against such legislation, I submit it is in the national interest that this matter should be investigated. I must say I was not greatly impressed by the letters we had a short while ago from one of the tobacco companies urging us to get behind fire prevention week because I have noted a lack of co-operation on the part of the tobacco companies with the fire prevention people in connection with this whole matter. There is nothing more I need to say on the subject at the moment, but I should like to have an answer from the minister as to whether any research has been conducted by this division into the two aspects I have mentioned. If not, I hope that he will indicate that these people will make some study of the matter.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, we all know that cigarettes are one of the causes of fire.

[Mr. Knowles.]

The department is doing everything it can, in co-operation with the provincial governments, to create an awareness in the minds of the people of Canada of the serious loss that results every year from forest fires. The manufacturers of cigarettes are co-operating in that work, and I think perhaps they are helping to create an awareness of the problem. The actual work on development of a cigarette that will not be so dangerous in the woods is something that I think is beyond the jurisdiction of this department, and in fact we have not undertaken any work on the problem.

Mr. Knowles: I remind the minister that that used to be the argument against safety matches, but the day came when there was legislation in that field, and I think the day should come when we will have legislation in this field as well.

Mr. Brooks: I should like to ask the minister whether anything is being done about the spruce budworm infestation in the different provinces and also as to dieback disease which infests birch trees particularly in the maritime provinces.

Mr. Winters: There is a forest insects control board which is active in the field of trying to combat this pest. The work is done by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Brooks: It is not under this item?

Mr. Winters: No.

Mr. Herridge: I do not take quite the same attitude as the hon. member who was talking about what our research people are doing. Personally I think they are doing an excellent job. I keep pretty well informed of the major projects that are being undertaken. I want to repeat one criticism, and the only criticism I have ever made of this department. They are not getting the information over to the Canadian public. I know that information is published in the trade journals about the projects that are being carried on. I take the lumbermen's magazine, and I presume the hon. member who has spoken also does. There is a limited circulation of some of the information, but I think it is so vital to create an interest in forest conservation and the use of forest products that some scheme should be found to make the public aware of what is being done. The information should also go to the high schools of this country. A great deal of valuable work is being done but it is not appreciated by the majority of Canadians.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): This is a good opportunity for the national film board.

Mr. McLure: The amount of item 384 is $819,675. For salaries for permanent positions the amount is $190,050. There is a list given of those and the amounts that they receive. The amount for temporary assistance is $207,210, over 25 per cent of the total, and we do not know anything about it. We know this much now that we never knew before, that one hundred people are receiving that money, but we do not know whether they are engineers, brakemen, or what they are. Then we have a new bunch growing up called "casuals". I looked that up in the dictionary and it means happy-go-luckies. The amount for these happy-go-luckies or casuals involves another 25 per cent of the total amount of the item, and we are asked to vote it without any details whatsoever. There is $190,466 for casuals. Next year I think you should certainly direct the officers who prepare these estimates to give the committee some information, even if they only tell us that there are 500 casuals or happy-go-luckies. We know that at election time these are the most useful things you can have; and, as I have explained on many occasions, this item is largely used for that purpose. I believe we should have a breakdown of it. If we cannot get it for this year, let us have it for another year.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): It seems to me, as the hon. member for Queens has said, that we are being given very little information about this. We know the fire hazard in our forests is terribly serious. I am not doubting for a moment what the hon. member for Kootenay West said about the excellent work being done by these forest engineers, but it seems to me that for the good of his own department the minister should be able to make some general observations about this problem. I think we should know to what extent it is being dealt with; to what extent, for instance, there is co-operation between the dominion and the Ontario department, and what the great obstacles are. If they are cigarettes, then that is worth knowing. Here is something which is taking a terrible toll of our natural resources, and we get just a few bits and pieces of information without any general, organized attempt to let us understand the problem. It might be that we would insist on the minister having several million dollars more to publicize this situation if we knew what the problem really was.

Mr. Winters: Well, Mr. Chairman, I can say we could use several million dollars more to good advantage. The operations of the federal government in the field so far have been in attempting to forecast forest fires by evaluating fire hazards. Last year, as hon. members know, we enacted the Canada Forestry Act, by which parliament authorized the government to exercise wide powers in the field of forestry. Most of those powers, however, are in fields of prior responsibilities of the provinces.

I felt that something should be done, and one of my first acts when I assumed this responsibility was to write to all provincial governments asking them how in their opinion we could most appropriately co-operate under the terms of this act to develop and conserve our forest resources. I have heard from several of the provinces; I have spoken to the representatives of a number of others. So far the talks have been exploratory. There is one thing on which I think we all agree; that is that the long-term forest policy of this country can be nothing short of the type of forest management that will result in sustained yield, and any steps we take now must be considered as stepping stones toward that end result. But we have a great many steps and processes to go through before we arrive at sustained yield. In the first place we must know what the forest inventories are, and we have not a clear picture of our forest inventories on a national basis. We not only have to know those inventories as of a certain date; we have to be able to evaluate those inventories at some time hence, in order to tell whether we are achieving sustained yield.

There is no doubt that forest fire protection is one of the greatest factors in the over-all consideration and one of the most important steps toward the goal of sustained yield. We know that; all the provinces have raised that point with us. But before we commit ourselves to an over-all forest program, before we make our final commitment in the field of forest fire protection or suppression, or the control of insect pests, or whatever commitment it might be, I think we have to formulate with the provinces an over-all concept of what the policy should be and how we can best use the financial and other resources available to us to arrive at that goal of forest management on a sustained basis.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Well, Mr. Chairman, I think the minister has made an admirable statement of the problem, but I got the impression that really we are just sort of scratching the surface now and that we may be doing so for a long time to come. If that is a fair impression it seems to me rather disturbing and definitely raises in my mind the question of whether we are doing enough and whether the minister should not steal some money from some of the other departments that in our opinion perhaps do not need as much as they are getting. It seems to me the minister has stated the problem but has left me, at any rate, with a very disturbed feeling. He said that before we commit ourselves to a program we must make further investigations. No one can argue against that as a general proposition, but one can at least express concern that it would seem we are going to be a long time at it.

Mr. Winters: Of course I do not deny that. We must first of all recognize the problem before we can attack it, and as a step in the attack on the problem we have written to the provincial governments, who have a prior responsibility in the field. We have said to them, "Tell us how you think we can best co-operate under the terms of the Canada Forestry Act to achieve the greatest possible conservation and development of your forest resources." As I say, we have heard from some of the provinces and I have had personal conversations with representatives of a number of others, which have been very helpful to me and I hope in some measure they will be helpful to them. We hope that out of these exploratory talks and preliminary stages we will in due course arrive at a forest policy which will result in the further development and conservation of our forest resources.

Mr. Hodgson: I am not going to ask any more questions on this item. The minister is new to this department, but the department itself has been operating for a number of years, and the only thing the minister can tell me it has developed is aerial photography. That is almost as old as I am, and was developed a long time before this department was thought of. Next year we will expect these specific questions to be answered. We will also expect to be told what all these casuals are, costing in the neighbourhood of a couple of hundred thousand dollars. I have one more question, but it will be on the next item.

Mr. Winters: In reply to the hon. gentleman I think I should say that aerial photography as a means of assessing the value of a forest was started by this department, which pioneered in that field, in 1929.

Item agreed to.

Forestry branch—

385. Forestry operations division, $61,290.

Mr. Knight: I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the government and to urge more of the same type of action that has earned my praise. Close to my home city of Saskatoon we have what is commonly known as the forestry farm, an institution first started as a place where young seedlings could be grown to be distributed throughout the province to form timber belts around the various farms for purposes of shelter. I want to pay tribute here to the manner in which that farm is kept. It has become a place of beauty. It is close to the city and to the railway town of Sutherland, and now almost serves the purpose of a national park. They have also made a small attempt at an animal park, putting in a few animals and birds. It is a place where thousands of people congregate on warm Sunday afternoons, and is used for picnics and that sort of thing.

I want to add a special word of praise for something that has been done which I have been advocating in this house ever since I have been here. I refer to the hard surfacing of the road from highway 27 to the gates of that park, and the actual road through the park itself. I have stated in this house on many occasions that the rest and pleasure which one may obtain when one gets there has been continuously spoiled by the dust. Anyone who has lived in the province of Saskatchewan as long as I have knows that if you put a thousand cars over that road on a warm Sunday afternoon, the result will be a heavy cloud of dust. I want to congratulate the minister on putting a hard surface on the road in that particular place.

I want to say this, too. If that place is a place which brings ease and rest to the people of that city, I think perhaps the lawn area should be extended. The lawn areas are so small that when you get one or two thousand people milling around it is a miracle how that grass survives. Again I pay tribute to the people who are in charge of those lawns. They are beautiful, and that is the way we would like to keep them. If they are to be kept that way, with the increased use of the park through the hard-surfaced roads, this lawn area will have to be extended. I admit that the dominion government has no responsibility to create a pleasure ground for the people of Saskatoon, but looking at the thing from the larger point of view, it could perhaps be good work in the right direction. This place is situated so close to the city, with a bus service running to the town of Sutherland and the park itself on occasion, it simply means that the thousands of people who have no cars, as well as the thousands who have, flock to that place as a place of rest and pleasure. I take pleasure in congratulating this department on the good work, and I hope it will be continued.

Mr. Cardiff: I should like to tell the minister that perhaps there is no one in the house who enjoys roaming through the timber and bushland more than I do, but I usually have to do it at my own expense. In looking through this particular vote, No. 385, I find the increase in travelling expenses is $90,000 for the department, and in this particular item it is almost $21,000. Will the minister give us some idea of why there is an increase?

Mr. Winters: This is the item my hon. friend refers to, $4,600 for travelling expenses as against $2,500 last year.

Mr. Cardiff: Yes.

Mr. Winters: As I mentioned earlier, we passed the Canada Forestry Act last year which enables the government to enter into agreements with the provinces, with corporations, with individuals, or almost anyone who is interested in the conservation and development of forests. It was felt that the wider powers conferred upon the government by that act would mean more travelling, so we are asking for an increased amount of money to cover that.

Item agreed to.

Special projects grant—

393. Trans-Canada highway division, $300,000.

Mr. Gillis: I should like to ask the minister a question on this item for the purpose of clarification. I brought up the matter of the change in the specifications for the bridge across the strait of Canso on the estimates of the Minister of Labour. A member on the other side of the house, who comes from Cape Breton, made the assertion that the reason for the change in the width of the bridge from 22 to 24 feet was due to the fact that the trans-Canada highway would cross the bridge. My impression was that that change was suggested by the province of Nova Scotia, and the trans-Canada highway had nothing to do with it. It sounds rather illogical to me that the bridge would have to be the width of the highway, because that condition certainly does not prevail all across this country. Will the minister state whether the trans-Canada highway had anything to do with the change in the specifications?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, the agreement for the trans-Canada highway specifies a 24-foot paved surface. It was agreed that the width of the bridges would be related to the width of the highway. There is a sound argument for that, and certain changes in the specifications of this bridge were made. The statement was made officially by the Minister of Transport, and I believe at the same time by the government of the province of Nova Scotia, that the change in the design of the bridge was necessitated by the specifications agreed upon by the provinces for the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Cote (Matapedia-Matane): Is the minister in a position to state why the premier of Quebec has so far refused to concur in the building of this trans-Canada highway?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, the statement made by the Quebec minister of highways at the signing conference on April 24 was the last word I have had on the subject from the province of Quebec. The statement made at that time is a matter of public knowledge, and I understand that hon. members are familiar with it.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I should like to know whether the province of Nova Scotia and the province of Quebec are the only two provinces that have failed to sign the agreement so far. The minister told us earlier, when announcing that an agreement had been entered into with Newfoundland, that he could not give the house the reasons for the delay in signing by the province of Nova Scotia. As I understand, the province of Nova Scotia has announced the location of the trans-Canada highway and, to that extent, has approved the agreement. I have already gone on record as not approving, to some extent, the location of the trans-Canada highway in Nova Scotia.

It would appear to me that the interests of the province would be better served if this road ran to the capital city of Halifax. We should also have as great a mileage as possible. Having that in mind, the road should run to Halifax, and should also take the shortest route to serve the province of Newfoundland. This would be along the Northumberland strait, across the Canso bridge when it is built, and down to North Sydney. This was approximately the location of the road as established during the depression in the early thirties. I cannot altogether agree with the member for Cape Breton South that a 22-foot bridge would be sufficient. The province of Nova Scotia adopted, twenty years ago or more, the twenty-four foot width for bridges. I think we are entitled to some explanation as to why the engineers adopted the twenty-two foot width for this bridge, when it was so well known and so well established that all these bridges should be the full standard width of twenty-four feet. The engineers must have had some instructions either from the minister's department or from the province of Nova Scotia to justify them in starting their plans on the basis of a twenty-two foot width rather than a twenty-four foot width. Then as to why these plans should progress as long as they did or to the extent that they did, so that it postponed the calling for tenders, so that little or no work can be done this year is something as to which I think we are entitled to some explanation.

I should further like to know from the minister what proportion of this $20 million that is in the estimates now, as a statutory vote, is going to be expended in each province this season, and in what way it is going to be distributed to the different provinces. Is it going to be according to their order of application: first come, first served? Or is it to be a certain percentage having regard to the population of the different provinces and having regard to the mileage in the different provinces? I should like to know what the policy is in that regard.

As to the province of Quebec and the province of Nova Scotia—they are the only provinces that failed to sign the agreement—I should like to know whether the proportion that was properly due to those provinces would be set aside. I should further like to know from the minister if the report is correct that 50 per cent of the appropriation being made by the federal government is to be applied to the payments for work already done on the trans-Canada highway in the different provinces; and if a province makes application for 50 per cent of the amount voted by the federal government and now under consideration, I should like to know whether this amount will be made available to them for the payment of their other 50 per cent on the new work to be done.

If this has been the case, I am disappointed. I think the minister, in his agreement with the provinces, should have required the full 100 per cent of the federal appropriation to be spent in new construction of the trans-Canada highway in all the provinces. The full amount of $300 million should be available for new construction rather than applying up to half of the federal grant for reimbursing the provinces for their old expenditures. There are sections of the trans-Canada route that require complete new construction and most of the old sections require rebuilding. Many of the culverts should be renewed and many of the bridges should be rebuilt, widened and strengthened, and given a better alignment. That is the case in the province of Nova Scotia.

Another question I should like to ask the minister is whether he is able to make available to the committee a copy of the correspondence between the federal government or his department and the province of Nova Scotia. I have asked for that correspondence on different occasions but up to the last report made by the minister he did not feel free to lay this correspondence on the table. I think we are entitled to it. I should be glad to hear from the minister.

[Mr. Black (Cumberland).]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry? Carried.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): No, Mr. Chairman. Give us a chance. Let us get an answer to some of these questions. I do not like the idea of trying to railroad this through.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I must explain—

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I asked these questions and you, Mr. Chairman, said "Carried".

The Deputy Chairman: I must explain to the hon. member that I did not hear the latter part of his remarks because I was discussing with the assistant clerk a matter which will have to come up later. As I always do, I asked "Shall the item carry?" I am sorry if I did that too soon.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I am sorry for what I said. I apologize.

The Deputy Chairman: No. I should like to make it clear that it is not necessary for the hon. member to apologize. This time it is the chairman who should do so; and I do so accordingly.

Mr. Winters: I should be happy to answer the questions of my hon. friend whom I always like to hear speak in this chamber. I know his particular concern with the highway in the province of Nova Scotia. For that reason among others I am more than glad to answer his questions to the best of my ability.

The minister of highways acting on behalf of the province of Nova Scotia, when in Ottawa on April 24, made a statement to the effect that he thought the agreement was a good one and that he would seek authority from his legislature to enable him to sign the agreement. Since that time I have had no correspondence from the minister, and I have had no indication as to why he is withholding the completion of the agreement.

The question of the bridge at the strait of Canso and of the design of it is a matter for the Department of Transport, as my hon. friend knows; and I am not in a position to comment on that matter.

As to the question about payment by the government for roads already built, I may say that is in accordance with the act passed by parliament last year, under which the federal government contributes half the cost already incurred by the provinces in highway construction.

The hon. member asked about the $20 million in the vote this year. That was put in because it was felt that that would be about the maximum amount of money the provinces could spend on this project and it is roughly related to the period of time over which the project will be developed, namely seven years. It is approximately one-seventh of the total amount voted by the federal government for that purpose.

What were the other questions?

Mr. Black (Cumberland): How will it be distributed?

Mr. Winters: The distribution will be in this way. As the provinces get on with their work they will be paid for work completed; and the payment for work already done will be related to the payment for work completed. Does that answer all the questions?

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I asked the minister about the money. If it can be shown that the costs of these highways being taken over as part of the trans-Canada highway are paid for by the 50 per cent of the costs paid to the respective provinces, then the provinces would not have to contribute anything. If they can take that money contribution of the federal government for the purpose of paying half the cost, they will not have to put up any new money for the trans-Canada highway. Personally, I want to register my complaint as to that. I think the entire $300 million should be used for the rebuilding and improving of the highways, bridges and culverts, widening out rights of way and so on and making it a worthy trans-Canada highway not only for today but for all time. I am opposed to this agreement, and I am sorry that the minister entered into it.

Some hon. Members: Eleven o'clock.

Mr. Bater: I should like to ask the minister if the route across the province of Saskatchewan has been decided upon between the province and the federal government. If not, I would ask the minister to be sure to have his engineers check over what we consider to be the one and only route, namely the Yellowhead route across the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Winters: In reply to the hon. member, may I just say that the route across the province of Saskatchewan has been chosen. It was chosen by the government of the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Cote (Matapedia-Matane): I should like to ask a question respecting a highway in my riding, which is of course the entrance to Quebec from New Brunswick. The road is paved, with the exception of about fifty miles, to Montreal. This is a good highway. Will the provincial government be in a position to bill the federal government to the extent of 50 per cent for the road now in existence?

Mr. Winters: If the government of the province of Quebec enters into an agreement with the federal government under the Trans-Canada Highway Act; if there is a road already in existence which conforms to the standard laid down in the specifications drawn up under the terms of the act, and if the accounts are submitted as set out in the act and meet the scrutiny of the federal government as provided in the act; then they will receive half the cost of construction.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Five jumps to get over.

Mr. Higgins: The minister announced today that the new province had signed the trans-Canada highway agreement. Is there any significance between the signing today and the event that takes place tomorrow in Newfoundland, the 453rd anniversary of the discovery?

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): There being no more legislation, except the appropriation bill, on Monday we will consider estimates. The following departments are ready: national defence, trade and commerce, post office, resources and development, secretary of state, transport and justice.

An hon. Member: In that order?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): For the first two, at least.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

General administration—

85. Departmental administration, $1,392,488.

86. Comptroller of the treasury—central office and branch offices administration, and to authorize payment to Norman Bell of compensation at a rate equivalent to £4-10-0 per week in respect of injuries received while employed in the overseas office of the comptroller of the treasury, $11,302,552.

Administration of various acts and costs of special functions—

87. Superannuation and retirement acts, administration, $188,700.

88. The Bank Act—salaries and expenses of the inspector general of banks' office, $28,400.

89. Administration of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1943, and the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act, 1938, $34,202.

90. Administration of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, 1944, and the Veterans' Business and Professional Loans Act, 1946, $55,520.

Supply

91. Foreign Exchange Control Act, 1946—administrative costs (other than those provided by the Bank of Canada), $205,500.

92. Expenses of the tariff board, $109,080.

93. Expenses of the Royal Canadian Mint and the assay office, Vancouver, B.C., and to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $200,000, $864,835.

The wartime prices and trade board—

94. Administration, $1,907,142.

95. Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation—adjustment payments in respect of subsidies previously paid, and costs of administration, $500,000.

96. Administration of employees' instalment purchase plan including sale and delivery of Canada Savings Bonds to government employees, $79,125.

Special—

676. To authorize and provide for an initial grant to the province of Manitoba to assist it in meeeting costs incurred as a result of the Red river floods in 1950. $12,500,000.

677. To provide for costs to be incurred in the planning and construction of emergency works to safeguard against the dangers of floods in the Red river valley and the Winnipeg area generally, under an agreement or agreements with the province of Manitoba which shall provide that Canada shall meet 75 per cent of the costs of such works, excluding the costs of land, and that Manitoba, or its municipalities or residents, shall meet the remaining cost, including the cost of land, $1,000,000.

678. To authorize and provide for a grant to assist the province of Quebec to meet costs incurred as a result of the large fire in Rimouski in May, 1950, $2,500,000.

679. To authorize and provide for a grant to assist the province of Quebec to meet costs incurred as a result of the large fire in Cabano in May, 1950, $300,000.

DEPARTMENT OF RESOURCES AND DEVELOPMENT

Forestry branch—

383. Administrative division, $70,000.

384. Forest research division, $819,675.

385. Forestry operations division, $61,290.

386. Forest products division, $644,450.

387. Grant to Canadian Forestry Association, $4,000.

Eastern Rockies forest conservation board—

388. To provide for the salaries and expenses of federal members of the board and their alternates, and sundry expenses in connection with the maintenance and operation of the Ottawa office of the board, $22,300.

389. Federal contribution towards annual maintenance, including staff and expenses, $175,000.

390. Forest insects control board, $13,780.

Special projects branch—

391. Administrative division, $58,080.

392. Projects division, $32,550.

B—National film board—

401. Administration, production and distribution of films and other visual materials, including authority to finance temporarily work performed for other public authorities or other agencies as the public interest requires, $2,092,413.

402. Acquisition of equipment, $118,604.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 26, 1950

The house met at eleven o'clock.

RADIO BROADCASTING

Third and final report of special committee on radio broadcasting.—Mr. Maybank.

OLD AGE PENSIONS

TABLING OF REGULATIONS

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table regulations made under the Old Age Pensions Act.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the minister say whether the regulations he has tabled deal with matters of substance, and whether they were approved by the interprovincial committee on old age pension regulations?

Mr. Martin: That depends upon what is regarded as a matter of substance. I think my hon. friend and I had better look at the regulations and refresh our memories in the matter.

Mr. Knowles: The minister had better speak for himself.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PROSECUTIONS FOR OPERATING MOTOR VEHICLES WHILE INTOXICATED

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many prosecutions, by provinces, of persons charged with operating motor vehicles while intoxicated, took place, and on what date, in each month since the 1st of June, 1949, and of these, how many convictions were registered?
2. Of those who were convicted, how many received imprisonment of (a) seven days; (b) seven to fourteen days; (c) thirty days?
3. In how many of such convictions were their drivers' licences suspended (a) temporarily; (b) for a period of three months or more?

Mr. McIlraith: The information asked for in this question is not available in the form in which it is asked for, but there is a considerable amount of related information available in a publication which I am sending to the hon. member. That will be supplemented by further information that may be available, but it is not possible to answer the question as it stands, and I suggest that it be dropped.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is there any reason why parts 1 and 2 could not be answered? Those statistics should be available.

Mr. McIlraith: The statistics of convictions are kept on a yearly basis for the year ending September 30; the information is compiled for the year ended September 30, 1948. The publication I am sending the hon. member—

Mr. Knowles: What is the title of the publication?

Mr. McIlraith: "Statistics of Criminal and Other Offences for the Year Ended September 30, 1948." The information for the year following has not yet been compiled, and in any event the information is not compiled in the way asked for in the question; it is compiled on the basis of the time of trial. As to the third question, the information as to suspension of licences is not available.

I might add that since nine o'clock this morning I tried to reach the hon. member a great many times and was not able to do so. The whole question of the form of preparing statistics on criminal offences is now being studied with a view to changing the method.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would ask that the question be allowed to stand until I have an opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. Green: Why does the year end on September 30?

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I notice this question was answered by the Department of Trade and Commerce. Would not that information be in the Department of Justice?

Mr. Garson: I would think not. The compilation of this information, which is taken from the records of the provincial attorneys general departments, is carried on by the bureau of statistics, as I understand it, which, as my hon. friend is aware, comes under the Department of Trade and Commerce.

"FULL EMPLOYMENT"

Mr. Noseworthy:

1. What is the government's definition of full employment?
2. Has the government considered the setting of a specific target in terms of the number or percentage of the labour force unemployed, above which special action might be taken to increase employment?
3. If so, what is the result of such consideration?

Questions

Mr. McIlraith:

1. The government has no rigid statistical definition of full employment. The term is to some extent elastic. In general, it reflects a condition in which all persons wishing to work are able to find jobs, but with reasonable allowance made for those who, for seasonal or other reasons, are in between or changing jobs.

2. Yes.

3. A rigid target in terms of a single objective is generally considered oversimplified and unrealistic, particularly for an economy like that of Canada. Any single national target might overlook the important problem of regional and local unemployment which may be considered serious even when the national average is low.

The government directs its over-all economic policy so as to create, as far as possible, an economic atmosphere favourable to the maintenance of high employment. In addition, in the event of dislocations of national consequence resulting from changing patterns of demand, the government would take special measures to ease the necessary adjustment.

The level of unemployment at which special measures should be adopted, and the extent and character of such measures, would depend on the nature of the unemployment problem and the general economic conditions prevailing at the time. The government feels that the complexity of the factors involved in maintaining a high level of employment in Canada calls for a flexible rather than a rigid or mechanical approach.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—OIL AND MINERAL RIGHTS, SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. When the Canadian National Railways or the government of Canada took over the assets and liabilities of the Canadian Northern Railway, did such assets include the oil and mineral rights of the said Canadian Northern Railway in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta?

2. If not, in whom were the said rights vested at that time?

Mr. Chevrier:

The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Yes.

2. See answer to No. 1.

WINNIPEG GRAIN RESEARCH LABORATORY

Mr. Winkler:

1. How many persons are employed by the grain research laboratory, under the board of grain commissioners at Winnipeg, Manitoba?

2. What are their names and respective salaries or wages?

3. How much space is required for this service, and what is the rent paid for such space?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. 35.

2. See statement below.

3. 7,177 square feet; $13,239.60 per annum.

Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada
Grain research laboratory staff

Name	Annual salary rate
Anderson, Dr. John Ansel	$6,900
Hlynka, Dr. Isydore	5,040
Meredith, Dr. William Ogilvie Swinton	4,740
Aitken, Thomas Robert	4,440
Irvine, Dr. George Norman	3,480
Cunningham, Dr. David Kenneth	3,480
Levi, Iser	3,480
Bass, Edwin Jerome	2,580
Dempster, Cecil John	2,580
Templin, Paul Rieff	2,580
Paull, Allan	3,840
Hlynka, Kassian	3,480
Fisher, Major Harry	3,180
Martens, Victor	2,880
Bettner, Robert Edward	2,580
Capewell, Albert Thomas	2,460
Ponting, Henry John	2,340
Black, Hugh Campbell	2,160
Reichert, Theodore Joseph	2,160
Waugh, John	2,340
Bradley, John William	2,040
Cheale, Robert James	2,160
Wilson, Lawrence Emerson	2,160
Le Seelleur, Gordon Cabot	2,160
Rerie, Kenneth Jack	1,860
Glenday, Donald Alexander	1,680
Hill, Chester Ermon	1,680
Keating, Ralph Patrick	1,680
Dalik, Mrs. Dorothy Evelyn	1,800
Kuzina, Fred Donald	1,590
Kilborn, Reuben Henry	1,800
Wagner, Herbert	1,980
McLeod, Miss Edith Lavina	2,220
Balban, Miss Mary	1,680
Chrzanowski, Miss Lucy	1,500

Total salaries: $94,710.

UNEMPLOYMENT—SEASONAL OR REGIONAL

Mr. Noseworthy:

1. Has the government taken any action designed to counteract the recurrence of seasonal and/or regional unemployment next winter?

2. If so, what is the nature of such action?

Mr. McIlraith: The government does not subscribe to the view that a precise program which would adequately deal with an unemployment situation can be formulated until the nature and extent of the whole unemployment problem becomes apparent. The government is prepared at all times, so far as is consistent with other necessary objectives of efficiency and economy, to adjust its expenditure operations so as to counteract any significant increase in seasonal and regional unemployment.

Seasonal unemployment has always been a factor in the Canadian employment picture. Given the extremes of our climate and the buying habits of the Canadian public, some variation in activity from one season to another can scarcely be avoided in many industries. The extent of such seasonality in recent years has not been considered a serious threat to national well-being so long as the demand structure underlying our economy remains firm.

With respect to regional unemployment, conditions in all sections of Canada are kept under review so that the government may adapt its regular program, or take special measures when considered necessary in the national interest, to counteract unemployment. For example, projects have been authorized for the maritime region with a lower priority rating than elsewhere in Canada. Also, in making up their expenditure program, departments have been directed to bear in mind the recurrent unemployment problem in the maritimes.

PURCHASES BY GOVERNMENT OR CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS FROM VARIOUS COMPANIES

Mr. Knowles:

1. Has any department of the government or the Canadian National Railways made any purchases during the past three years from (a) the Northwest Brass Company; (b) the Dominion Wheel and Foundry Company; (c) T. McAvity and Sons; (d) the Montreal Locomotive Works; (e) the Canadian Locomotive Works; (f) the Canada Car and Foundry Company; (g) the Bird-Archer Company?

2. If so, who are the principal stockholders and bondholders in each case?

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the first part of this question stand. I point out to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the information asked for in the second part of the question is not within the records of government departments. Therefore I suggest that it be dropped.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

Mr. Bradley: The first part of the question stands, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: Let the whole question stand. You can make your reply to both parts of the question when you answer it.

Mr. Bradley: It does not make any difference.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

AERIAL PHOTOGRAPHY

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to a question asked by the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright) which was answered on May 25. The answer given at that time is to be found at page 2827 of Hansard. It was incomplete, and I should like to table the answer now.

Mr. Wright:

1. What firms received contracts for aerial photography work in the three western provinces in 1949?

2. What price was paid for the work done?

3. Were these contracts let by tender?

4. Have any contracts for aerial photography work been let in the province of Saskatchewan for 1950?

5. If so, who are the contractors and what is the price to be paid for this work?

6. Were tenders called for these contracts?

Mr. Bradley:

So far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned:

1. In 1949 two air survey companies were given contracts for contour mapping. They were:

(1) Aero Surveys Limited, Vancouver, B.C.; (2) Photographic Surveys Corporation, Toronto, Ontario.

2. Aero Surveys Limited

To supply maps on a scale of 200 feet to the inch with a contour interval of 3 feet: Photography, $0.08 per acre; Mapping, $0.85 per acre; Spot heights, $6.50 per 160 acres.

Photographic Survey Corporation

(a) To supply maps on a scale of 200 feet to the inch and 3 foot contour interval: Photography, $0.05 per acre; Mapping, $1.09 per acre.

(b) To supply maps on a scale of 200 feet to the inch and 5 foot contour interval: Photography, $0.05 per acre; Mapping, $0.86 per acre.

3. Yes. The rates charged by each company are comparable because it was necessary for P.F.R.A. to supply considerably more ground control data to Aero Surveys Limited than to Photographic Surveys Corporation.

4. No.

5. See answer to No. 4.

6. See answer to No. 4.

So far as the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys is concerned:

1. Survey Aircraft Limited, Vancouver; contract for approximately 12,212 square miles in Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Arctic Air Lines Limited, Edmonton; contract for approximately 12,947 square miles in Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Air Surveys Limited, Edmonton; contract for approximately 10,740 square miles in Saskatchewan.

2. Survey Aircraft Limited, $48,979.55; Arctic Air Lines Limited, $55,741.96; Air Surveys Limited, $48,067.87.

3. Yes.

4. Yes.

5. Survey Aircraft Limited, Vancouver; approximately $15,093.60.

Air Surveys Limited, Edmonton; approximately $61,221.60.

6. Yes.

So far as the Department of National Defence is concerned:

The Department of National Defence did not make any contracts for aerial photography work in the three western provinces in 1949.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION IN KOREA—ACTION OF UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the extremely serious situation which has developed over the week end in Korea, and the action of the security council of the United Nations, in which all of us are so deeply interested, will the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the house as to any details which will be of assistance to us in appreciating the situation so far as Canada is concerned?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not able to give a very full report on this matter at the present time. Information is continuing to come in. As hon. members know, we do not have our own representative in Korea; therefore for our information we rely on our representative at the United Nations, who is in close touch with the United Nations agencies concerned with this matter, and on friendly governments who are represented in Korea itself.

It appears, however, from the information which is now available that an unprovoked aggression has been committed by the forces of the government of North Korea, which we have not recognized, against the government of the republic of Korea. Information which would substantiate that statement has been received by the United Nations secretary general from the United Nations commission stationed in Korea which has reported on this incident to Lake Success. As a result of that report, as hon. members know a meeting of the security council was called yesterday. At that meeting a resolution was passed by unanimous vote, nine to nothing, with Yugoslavia abstaining and the U.S.S.R. of course absent. Possibly I might put the resolution on record. It reads as follows:

The security council,

Recalling the finding of the general assembly in its resolution of 21st October, 1949, that the government of the Republic of Korea is a lawfully established government "having effective control and jurisdiction over that part of Korea where the United Nations temporary commission on Korea was able to observe and consult and in which the great majority of the people of Korea reside; and that this government is based on elections which were a valid expression of the free will of the electorate of that part of Korea and which were observed by the temporary commission; and that this is the only such government in Korea";

Mindful of the concern expressed by the general assembly in its resolutions of 12th December, 1948, and 21st October, 1949, of the consequences which might follow unless member states refrained from acts derogatory to the results sought to be achieved by the United Nations in bringing about the complete independence and unity of Korea; and the concern expressed that the situation described by the United Nations commission on Korea in its report menaces the safety and well-being of the Republic of Korea and of the people of Korea and might lead to open military conflict there;

Noting with grave concern the armed attack upon the Republic of Korea by forces from North Korea;

Determines that this action constitutes a breach of the peace,

I. Calls for the immediate cessation of hostilities; calls upon the authorities of North Korea to withdraw forthwith their armed forces to the thirty-eighth parallel;

II. Requests the United Nations commission on Korea

(a) to communicate its fully considered recommendation on the situation with the least possible delay;

(b) to observe the withdrawal of the North Korean forces to the thirty-eighth parallel;

(c) to keep the security council informed on the execution of this resolution;

III. Calls upon all members to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution and to refrain from giving assistance to the North Korean authorities.

That is the resolution passed by the security council yesterday. I feel certain that it will commend itself to all members of the house, and I hope that as a result of the intervention of the United Nations some effective action may be possible in this very difficult situation to restore peace to that area, having in view, as the security council itself has stated, that the action taken by the North Korean forces constitutes a breach of the peace, and in spite of any reports we may receive to the contrary seems to have been an action of unprovoked aggression.

Mr. Graydon: Are there Canadian missionaries and others in Korea? If so, is there anything the Canadian government can do to protect their interests or safety at this time?

Mr. Pearson: We have been looking into that matter already to see what we can do to protect, if protection is needed, Canadian nationals in Korea. We have not exact information as to the number, or indeed whether there are any Canadians in the area affected, but as soon as we receive that information we will take whatever steps are open to us to safeguard them to the best of our ability.

Mr. Graydon: Are there Canadians on the United Nations commission in Korea?

Mr. Pearson: There are Canadian members of the secretariat of the United Nations commission on Korea. Those three Canadians are there now, and there is one Canadian married to a member of the secretariat. We have been in touch with the secretariat as to their welfare, and we have been told they are in no immediate danger.

Mr. Green: If I may ask the minister another question, do these events alter the attitude of the government toward the setting up of a Pacific defence council?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. Nothing I have learned about this situation in the last forty-eight hours would alter any opinion I may have had previously about the desirability at this time of setting up a Pacific defence council along the same lines as the North Atlantic council.

CHEESE

QUESTION AS TO DECLINE IN PRODUCTION AND INCREASE IN PRICE FOR EXPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): I should like to direct a question to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Agriculture, arising out of the serious decline in the production of Cheddar cheese for export. The daily production of one factory alone decreased from 26 to 17—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): You will get it. Will the government reconsider its requisition order and increase the price for export cheese to conform to the price for concentrated milk, in order to retain for Canada the export market in the United Kingdom?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Robert McCubbin (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am quite well aware of the situation to which the hon. member for Middlesex East has drawn my attention. I admit that in some districts of western Ontario the concentrated milk people are taking some of the milk that formerly went to cheese factories; but any change that might be made is a matter of policy which will be announced in due course.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

REPORTED APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION TO CONSIDER AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, following press notices to the effect that a commission is to be set up with a view to making recommendations concernings the Combines Investigation Act. I would ask the minister whether it is a fact that such a commission is to be set up.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): It has been and still is my intention to make an announcement in this connection as soon as the personnel of the commission is completed. Three of the four we propose to appoint to the commission have already agreed to accept that appointment, and at the present time we are in communication with the fourth. As soon as the personnel is completed, an announcement will be made.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then may I ask the minister what the commission is to do?

Mr. Garson: It might be preferable for me to cover that question more fully in the announcement to be made in due course; but for the present I may say that after he had been in his position for some time the new commissioner under the act, Mr. MacDonald, represented that in view of the consideration that has been given this subject, particularly since the war, in other jurisdictions such as the United States, it would be desirable to appoint a commission to examine the act and see if it could be made more satisfactory and more workable than it is at present. I think my hon. friend is referring to the statement which appeared in the Montreal Gazette, and I should emphasize the fact that no specific proposals or ideas will be submitted to the commissioners. They will be perfectly free to consider in an objective manner whether they think anything can be done, and if so, to state what in their judgment should be done.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I think it is an excellent idea to appoint a commission to do exactly nothing; so far we have had every other kind.

CIVIL SERVICE

INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO SUMMER WORKING HOURS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. T. Richard (Ottawa East): I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether any further representations have been received from organized groups in the civil service with respect to hours of work during the summer, and whether further consideration will be given the change which the civil servants have proposed.

Hon. F. G. Bradley (Secretary of State): So far as I am aware, no representations have been made since the order was issued. If any are made, presumably they will be considered when they are received.

POSTAL SERVICE

DENIAL OF THE USE OF MAILS—CALGARY STAMPEDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. Smith (Calgary West): I had intended to direct this question to the Postmaster General, but perhaps in his absence it can be answered by the Minister of Justice. The question arises out of a dispatch appearing in the Toronto Daily Star of Saturday last, to the effect that all postal privileges of the Calgary Stampeders football club and T. L. Brook, as president, have been suspended until at least July 14. It also advises that the use of the mail for lottery purposes is contrary to postal regulations. Since it is a well-known fact that the Criminal Code of Canada provides ample machinery for the punishment of persons conducting lotteries, why has this bureaucratic, arbitrary, arrogant and stupid procedure been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Some hon. Members: Answer.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is a question that requires any answer in this house.

Mr. Graydon: The Stampeders should have an answer.

Mr. St. Laurent: If the Stampeders require an answer they should have their question put in more proper form.

[Mr. Garson.]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—USE OF DIESEL LOCOMOTIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. Chester S. McLure (Queens): With the change-over to diesel engines on the island division of the Canadian National Railways, which includes Prince Edward Island, I would ask the Minister of Transport to keep in mind the understanding that there will be no layoff of men as a result.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): I shall be glad to bring the matter to the attention of the Canadian National Railways.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dion in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Defence forces—

202. To provide for the defence forces of the navy, army and air services, and to authorize total commitments for this purpose of $579,301,670 including authority, notwithstanding section 29 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, to make commitments for the current year of $438,178,000 and commitments for future years of $141,123,670 against which commitments it is estimated that actual expenditures in 1950-51 will not exceed, $384,932,304.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, this covers the bulk of the items of the department. When it was last before the committee a number of questions were asked in regard to certain details. Some time has since elapsed, and in the intervening period events of considerable importance have emphasized the necessity of considering these estimates with due regard to their significance as related to our present situation in a very troubled world.

If there was any atmosphere of unreality surrounding the discussion of defence estimates up to this point, it must have been removed by the events of the past forty-eight hours.

Mr. Chairman, I shall wait until the various conferences that are taking place in the chamber have resolved themselves to some conclusion.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Drew: We now have seen events take place which we hope will have a satisfactory solution. It must be the immediate hope of every member that the action of the United Nations, which has been taken so promptly, will result in the explosive conditions which developed in Korea being remedied, because on the one hand it would protect people who have been attacked without justification, and on the other hand it would retain and strengthen public opinion behind the United Nations.

