One of the things which has been emphasized with the greatest force in the sudden developments of Saturday last is that those nations which hope to preserve their freedom must have defence forces in being, as was indicated only a few weeks ago by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There is general agreement that the only hope of preserving peace is that the nations which are joined for the defence of freedom shall be able to act whenever freedom is threatened. Korea is not covered by the Atlantic pact; nevertheless Korea is a direct responsibility of the United Nations, within the framework of which the community of Atlantic nations has been carrying forward its efforts to preserve peace. Today there are no little nations far away. Today Korea is closer to us in terms of transportation time, in terms of information which can be flashed by wireless and by cable, and in terms of direct impact upon our own future, than was Poland in September, 1939. At that time there was no direct access to Poland by the western allies. There was little direct communication; there was in fact no way in which the western nations could exercise any direct and immediate influence upon the course of events in Poland in September, 1939.

Today it is impressed upon all of us that what we are considering when we examine the estimates of the Department of National Defence is survival in a world in which war is becoming a matter of obliteration. Therefore the first consideration that should be in our minds in examining these estimates is the results that are to be produced by these estimates in terms of armed forces in being, ready to go into action should such a dreadful necessity arise. There is no reason why any hon. member of this house should back away from the recognition of the fact that the only way we can preserve peace, the only way we can prevent such occurrences as are taking place today in Korea and are taking place in so many other countries in the past few years, is for Canada and other nations in the Atlantic community to demonstrate clearly to the aggressors in the Kremlin that we are ready. We should demonstrate that any move on their part against us, or against any one of the member nations, can be dealt with by an armed force that is ready to be used. That is the test, and it is upon that basis that we have expressed our hope that peace can be preserved. The first question that we should ask ourselves in examining these estimates, which are lumped substantially in a single item, No. 202, is what armed forces in being are to result from the money that is to be spent.

We know that Russia is working by every device in her power for revolution in countries that are believed to be ripe for revolution, and seeking to pave the way for revolution in countries where that might not seem an immediate prospect, as in Canada, but where it is believed that at some distant date it may become an immediate possibility. The Russians are also working for the destruction of our economic system by such trade arrangements as will undermine our trading arrangements; by the depression of prices which will interfere with the strength of our economy generally, and by the disruption of our economic structure internally through infiltration into particular fields of our economic and social life. We have been seeing a new kind of war. We talk of cold wars and hot wars, but they are all wars of aggression. The Russians have demonstrated that the first stage can be just as effective in reaching their objectives as the second stage. Undoubtedly they will delay the employment of any overt acts within that second stage as long as they are meeting with success in the first stage.

It would appear that the attack in Korea on Saturday does suggest the possibility that they are ready to contemplate entering the second stage. No thoughtful person can be in any doubt that the government of northern Korea did not launch that attack without the full authority of the Kremlin, without the advice of the Kremlin, and without military assistance from their general staff. Therefore we must examine these events, and the implication of the seriousness that they convey to us of possible changes in policy at the Kremlin. The year 1950 may well be the most significant and critical one in the history of modern man; it may well decide whether all the hopes of those who met at San Francisco five years ago this spring are to turn to ashes, or whether they are to reach vigorous and effective fulfilment as a result of action taken by the United Nations at this time.

The estimates before us cover 1950 and the first months of 1951. We therefore examine them in relation to these events and with the perspective which they give to everything that may result from the expenditure of the money we are now being asked to supply to the Department of National Defence. No one should hesitate to examine the present situation in terms of the most exact reality. No one should hesitate to examine our situation in this country, which is one of the signatories to the Atlantic pact, in the perspective we now have as a result of these recent events. What is our position today? It is easy to be beguiled into a feeling of comfortable assurance by impressive demonstrations—and they are impressive—unless one examines them against the broad background of the reality with which we are confronted.

When we see the members of our armed forces, we have reason for pride in the evidence of training, of discipline and of spirit that is shown by every one of these young men and women in the navy, the army and the air force. When we see any of the naval, army or air demonstrations we can only be impressed by the skill, the evidence of training and the high measure of discipline with which the duties assigned to these services are carried out. Nevertheless we must examine each of these demonstrations in proportion to the task that lies before us. When we consider how many active service squadrons we have in being, ready to take their part, we can only form an impression of their ability to share in the joint responsibility which we all now share when we consider how many squadrons of different types there are in the Russian air force and in the air forces of the nations which serve the orders of the Kremlin. When we see displays of the forces of the army, the same question must present itself; and so it is when we see displays of our naval forces, no matter how impressive they must be.

In the very nature of the rigid secrecy which Russia seeks to place around her own country and around all the satellite nations, exact figures are difficult to obtain, even for those with access to all the most secret intelligence information. Nevertheless, in responsible publications there have appeared figures based upon information which can be obtained from time to time and which probably does bear some reasonable relationship to the reality of the moment. From time to time Russians who have been in all the widely-separated parts of Russia have found their way out of that country through Berlin, and on other frontiers, and their information does become available. Whether these figures are exact or not, there have been published recently in the United States statements to the effect that at the present time the Russian air force has in being squadrons with some 9,000 jet fighters alone; also squadrons with thousands of bombers, and squadrons with at least 10,000 transports, and probably a great many more. There are also reliable estimates that their production, at a minimum, is 10,000 planes a year and probably far beyond that, with all the satellite areas under their control.

From reliable information made public through the periodical magazines and the press, we have the fact that the Russian army is made up of forces in being with at least 2,600,000 men organized into 130 airborne and infantry divisions at least, and 30 armoured divisions at least. These 160 divisions are the Russian divisions alone. In addition to that are all the divisions organized in Poland, Roumania, Hungary, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, China, and the other satellite nations. As a result of the technical assistance, to say nothing of the capital plant which the Russians were able to obtain by their occupation of eastern Germany, we also know that their submarine production is at a high level; that they probably have at the moment at least 300 of the most modern submarines, and that their production is constantly being accelerated.

It is against the reality of figures such as these that we must consider what is happening here and what is happening in the other free nations. We have seen magnificent demonstrations of aerobatics, of formation flying, and of other air skill carried out with Vampires of the late war type. We have seen demonstrations carried out with other aircraft. But the question that presents itself to each one of us now is this: How many squadrons have we in being equipped with fighters of the most modern kind ready to go into action against any enemy which might present itself? We know the answer. We know that we are still preparing, and that the equipment of our squadrons with the most modern type of fighter aircraft is still some distance away.

Again, in the case of our naval forces, the Minister of National Defence has stated, and stated correctly, that at the present time they are nearer to being on an active service basis than any of our other forces. But again their strength and their capacity to assume our share of the responsibility under the Atlantic pact must be measured in proportion to figures of this kind.

The same is true of our army formations. We have one brigade group and other units of various kinds. Even there we must ask how fully that brigade group is armed to carry out its responsibility as an active force in being.

There can be no question about the training of the men, no question about their skill, no question about the spirit in which they carry out their tasks. The question is, have they the equipment that makes them, by the most modern standards, an active service force in being?

In all this I am not suggesting for one moment that Canada can or should at any time contemplate the possibility that it alone can meet the onslaught of the one aggressor that threatens our freedom and the freedom of other nations. Nevertheless, under the broad terms of the joint responsibility which is implicit in the Atlantic pact, we must ask ourselves how close we are to having those forces in being which will take their share as part of one combined team whose strength will be such as to deter the Russian aggressors simply by evidence of immediate and effective strength.

We still can be greatly impressed by the efficiency with which these tasks are carried out. Last Thursday many hon. members had the opportunity to see the demonstration of fire power at Petawawa. Petawawa is one of the finest artillery camps in the whole world, if not the finest. In general layout, in area available, in facilities for fire training, it is probably not exceeded by any other artillery camp anywhere. Those who saw that demonstration of fire power saw highly efficient gunners under highly efficient officers showing what can be done with artillery weapons, both in accuracy and in massing of fire power. From speaking to those who saw that demonstration I know that it did convey an impression both of efficiency and of strength. It is certainly no reflection of any kind on the men who carried out those tasks so efficiently to recall that this was a relatively small demonstration with 1945 equipment, and this is 1950. We all know that the equipment of 1945 and the gunpower of 1945 were extremely effective at that time. But today we must examine any demonstration of this kind in terms of the most modern equipment, and we must seek to ascertain whether the very large appropriations we are making are providing our armed forces with the most advanced equipment, with the most advanced instruments, with the most advanced system of communication and air co-operation, so that the force in being is one which is established and equipped in terms of the world conditions and the world realities that we are called upon to face.

I repeat that from the estimates before us we do not know, and there is no way in which we can know, what part of this tremendous expenditure is being devoted to the acquisition of the most modern equipment, how much of it is going to produce armed forces in being on an active service basis with regard to the fact that we must not only be armed and equipped as well as the Russians, but, because of our smaller numbers, that our arms and equipment in every branch of the services must be far beyond theirs and in keeping with the superiority of our industrial technique and our industrial production.

Let us see what we obtain from the estimates. We are dealing with a single item covering $384,932,304 out of a total of $425 million to be voted. A substantial part of that is for pay and allowances, civil salaries and wages, other fixed charges, and a number of details of a strictly administrative character; but the bulk of that figure is not made up of items of that kind. In what are described as details on page 168 of the estimates we find these bulked under such uninformative wording as, under the heading "Navy":

General—

Acquisition, construction, purchase, maintenance, repairs, rentals and operating expenses of properties.

We know of course that many of these properties are service properties which form an essential part of our actual service requirements. Then we have:

Personnel supplies and services; stores and equipment.

There are other general terms after "Stores and equipment." There are similar items under the heading "Army" and similar items under the heading "Air." Instead of giving the details, these items are worded in the most general terms to embrace practically the whole field of our defence requirements, outside of wages, salaries and other fixed charges. These amount to extremely large totals. In the case of the navy, the items under "General," which are described in such all-embracing terms as those which I have mentioned, amount to $58,265,022. The so-called details under the heading of "General" in the case of the army amount to a total of $59,183,144. The general items under air, again in the same broad and general terms, amount to $126,164,221. The total of these general items under the heading of navy, army and air is $243,612,387. That is a huge sum.

That amount will not be challenged by the people of Canada, nor do I think it will be challenged by any member of this house. But what should be sought by the members of this house and by the people of Canada is a great deal more information than they now have as to what lies behind these broad and general terms and what we may expect in the way of military forces being ready to play their part under the terms implicit in the Atlantic pact. We have been told by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who was only repeating in this house what had been said by the representatives of other governments ocupying similar positions, that no longer can any nation which hopes to preserve its peace expect to be able to prepare behind the ramparts of sacrifices of some other nation.

He was stating a clear and simple proposition that in the reality of warfare that we face today the only way we can hope to preserve the peace is to regard this situation with all the cold reality which it demands and to say to ourselves that we cannot hope to let nuclear forces be developed into larger forces behind the ramparts of the sacrifices of other nations which would bear the first impact of war of the modern type. When one examines the figures we have before us, which I am inclined to think the intelligence branch of the government will say are below rather than above the reality of the Russian strength, he must recognize our position when aircraft can fly thousands of miles and return to their bases after dropping their bomb loads, or, perhaps even more dangerous, dropping their loads of armed men.

I can only repeat the request I have made of the Minister of National Defence on the two earlier occasions when these estimates were before us, that he give us information and, through us, give the people of Canada information so that we may know what our position actually is. The people of this country will support this government in every effective step that is necessary to preserve the peace for which the people have paid so great a price. Having paid that price the people have the right to know, in much more detail than they know today, what armed forces in being will result from the expenditures that are to be made this year, and what we can actually expect our armed forces to be ready to do as one of the members of that great community organized together in the cause of peace, whose preparations are only for the purpose of preserving peace.

It is with that thought in mind, and only with that thought in mind, it is with the knowledge of the dreadful reality with which we are confronted today, that I repeat my request that the Minister of National Defence give us the kind of information that is available to the people of the United States, where secrecy is surely just as important as it is here; to give to us the kind of information which is available in other countries which have joined with us in the great work of preserving freedom for mankind.

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Chairman, I am sure that hon. members will agree with a great part of what the leader of the opposition has said. If I may say so, he is going over familiar ground, because much of this has been said before in this house by himself and others, and by other leaders of the democratic countries. He has put fairly and squarely before the committee the great desirability of the North Atlantic treaty nations having the greatest possible forces in being with which to deter aggression, or, should an emergency arise and aggression take place, to defend themselves and defeat the aggressor. With that objective everyone in this house, and I am sure everyone in the country and all the people of the north Atlantic countries, are in agreement.

The defence ministries of the twelve countries are doing what they can with the resources put at their disposal to secure that result and to make as great progress as they can. But this is by no means an easy task. It is one which cannot be accomplished by means other than the resources which are made available out of the national production of each country and voted by parliament. In our case, as I have said, we are seeking $425 million for defence in the year 1950-51. I do not suggest that this sum will provide us with as much in the way of forces in being as we should like to have.

The question, as I have suggested on every occasion when these estimates have come up, is whether or not the money appropriated is being spent in the right way as between the navy, army, air force, and defence research, and whether or not it is being spent in the right proportions as between personnel, equipment and property. That is the problem of defence planning, and it is by no means an easy problem, here or anywhere else.

I appreciate the generous references made by the leader of the opposition to the officers and men of the armed forces. As he said, we have reason to be proud of them and to be impressed by their skill and the evidence of training and high level of discipline. I have probably seen more of our armed forces than anyone else in this country since the war, and I must say it has been impressive to see the progress that has been made in all directions since 1946.

The leader of the opposition asks whether that progress is being made along sound lines. I can only express my opinion based on information and advice I have, not only from the chiefs of staff and other advisers of the government, but also from my discussions with my opposite numbers in other countries, and with many of their chiefs of staff. It is my opinion that, given our geographical position, our role in defence and the resources put at our disposal, we are spending the money on sound lines.

If I may go over old ground again for a minute or two, I should like to refer to what the positions and roles of the services are. Taking the navy first, its role is obviously antisubmarine work—the protection of our coasts and shipping against submarines and mines. We have as large a number of vessels in commission as we can operate with the $82 million made available for the navy, and at the same time do the essential work of constructing the nine new vessels which are now under way. There are 41·5 per cent of our naval personnel at sea. That is a very high proportion, higher than we had during wartime. I believe it is higher than any other country, and possibly it is too high because in a sense we may be too operational for the strength and resources of the navy. Nevertheless, because of the way in which the post-war organization of the navy has been proceeded with, we have managed to attain that result.

As evidence of what I have said, there is the fact that it is planned that six vessels are to take part in the largest peacetime cruise ever to be undertaken by the navy. The Canso, Sioux and Athabaskan will leave from Esquimalt on the 11th of July, 1950, and the Magnificent, Huron and Micmac from Halifax on the 23rd of August, 1950. They will first visit Londonderry, where they will engage in extensive antisubmarine and other operations in co-operation with ships and aircraft of the Royal Navy. In this voyage will be involved 195 officers and 1,875 men, and on the Magnificent there will be three squadrons of her aircraft. In the course of the voyage the ships will visit several of the North Atlantic treaty nations. The object of the voyage is first to obtain extensive training in an extended sea voyage; second, to familiarize officers and men with the waters and ports of the friendly nations with which we are co-operating; and third, to co-operate with the fleets and ships of several of these nations, including the United Kingdom particularly.

Therefore the exercise will be a marked demonstration of the capacity of the ships and men of the Royal Canadian Navy to operate under realistic conditions involving extensive operations of the type which they would have to undertake if there should be another emergency.

Again I join the leader of the opposition and the Secretary of State for External Affairs in emphasizing that our ships and other forces will never be used for any purpose other than to deter aggression and to defend ourselves and our allies.

If we are to have more ships operational, it can only be done by making more money available, and that can only be done by taking it from the air force, the army, what is allotted for defence research, or from other sources of revenue of the government as a whole. We do not know any other way of doing it. The same thing applies to the other services.

Turning to the air force, our object is to build towards an operational force of over twenty active and auxiliary squadrons. As hon. members know, at the present time we have two squadrons equipped with Vampire Mark III's in the active force, and several in the auxiliary force. As the leader of the opposition quite properly points out, the Vampire Mark III is a very good operational aircraft of a type which came into active operation after the end of the second world war. They are still one of the best aircraft for army co-operation that there are anywhere, but they have not the speed and the armament of some later types. They are still front line service aircraft, however, in the countries which use them.

To supplement and replace them as they are used, we have been working on the production of the CF-100 and the F-86. Each of these is of its type the leading aircraft of any we know of having corresponding characteristics. We were not able to produce them before because they did not exist. We are pressing on with the production of the F-86, and with the development and production of the CF-100, as rapidly as that can be done. The primary role of our air force is to assist in the defence of North America. We believe our air force is adequate for that purpose at the present time, in co-operation with forces of the United States that would be properly employed in that task, particularly in Alaska in the northwest and in Newfoundland in the northeast. We do not suggest it will be adequate for that purpose if it remains at its present size. Therefore we are developing it as fast as we can to make it constantly more operational.

In this connection, as I have announced before, though I do not think I have mentioned it in the house, toward that end we expect to have a squadron of our air force undergoing operational training in the United Kingdom early in 1951, and further squadrons successively engaged in training there and possibly in other North Atlantic treaty nations in rotation for periods of several months at a time. That will be the supplement or complement of the training we provide on this side for North Atlantic treaty nations in aircrew and army. In our case, however, we shall be sending squadrons of officers and men, and probably ground crew as well as aircrew, who are fully trained operationally, and who will be sent over there for further training in larger formations, in working in co-operation with United Kingdom forces and in familiarization with the terrain on the other side of the Atlantic. We expect that as time goes on this will become a very important branch of our air force activity.

Mr. Green: Are these to be fighter squadrons exclusively?

Mr. Claxton: Fighter squadrons at present. We are already having training flights of transport aircraft to the other side whenever the opportunity presents itself, so that quite a good proportion of our transport command not only have wartime experience of flying in all parts of the world, but also a great deal of peacetime experience, and they have shown a really first-class record of transport and performance. As I pointed out before, about the only test in connection with the operational work of an air force is the number of man-hours per month flown in comparison with other forces, and I am glad to say that our record compares very favourably, in proportion to total strength, with those of the United Kingdom and the United States.

With regard to the army the position is perfectly plain. At the present time we have not, and are not aiming immediately to get, any greater forces actually ready to fight at the drop of the hat than the brigade group. That is perfectly evident from everything that has been said and from the state of training of the reserve forces. Should the need for anything additional develop, then again it must be done either at the expense of some other service or by the provision of more money from the treasury of Canada, which in view of the demands of other government departments I suggest can only come out of the pockets of the Canadian people. That brigade group, we estimate—and it is only an estimate on the basis of all the information available—is adequate to deal with the type of attack that might be made on Canada in the foreseeable future, again having regard to what we know of the possible forces of both enemies and friends and how those forces would have to be employed.

Mr. Green: Is the brigade group up to war strength?

Mr. Claxton: As I explained when the house was in committee before—and, perhaps I should not have given the information, but I did—it is at about eighty per cent of strength. We do not expect that it will ever be right up to war strength, because there is a constant flow of men from it, either through discharge or through appointment to other units such as courses, schools and so on; and there is a constant flow in from the courses and schools. In addition to the brigade group there are in training in the courses and schools enough men, if put immediately and directly into the brigade group, to bring it up to strength; but there will never be a time when it is completely up to strength. I do not suppose any unit is ever up to strength in that sense, just as no unit is ever fully trained in the strict sense of the word. Training is continuously going on; there is no moment at which training does not go on.

In addition to the brigade group, as hon. members know we have a very considerable administrative and training staff. The last time these estimates were under consideration I was asked as to the personnel employed at national defence headquarters, and today was about to rise and give the information when the leader of the opposition rose. There the total as at May 31, 1950, was 4,029, broken down into a total of 972 officers, 991 men and 2,066 civilians, including 184 who are members of the defence research board. In addition there are considerable staffs at command and area headquarters. I am trying all the time to reduce the proportion of our forces employed in that way, just as similar efforts are being made in other countries. Their experience is exactly the same as ours. We have tried to compare our figures and our results with those of the United States and the United Kingdom, and we find that we have about the same proportion of civilians to service personnel, a rather smaller proportion of officers, and about the same proportion of what might be called overhead to operational troops. We are never satisfied with the proportion of overhead, and are constantly endeavouring to reduce it. In that connection I might add that the establishments of all types of units in the three services were reviewed over the past two years by teams representing the department, the service concerned, the civil service commission, and the treasury board. That did not result in any considerable reduction, despite the efforts of the agencies of governments concerned. Frequently when we have had reviews of establishments by experts, either from outside the government or from within, it has not resulted in a reduction.

As to the employment of other personnel, I should like to give all the information possible to hon. members; but of course here I am faced with the fact that, as the leader of the opposition has said, the Soviet union surrounds itself and its armed forces with rigid secrecy. In these debates and in statements outside the house I have tried to give information which would not affect the national security but would correspond closely to that given in other countries. I have followed this matter with the closest possible attention, and I wish hon. members could see the kind of debates that take place on defence in the United Kingdom. There they had four days on defence estimates out of twenty-three. This is our fourth day

Over there in their debates detailed information is seldom sought or given. The debate is of a general character, and as a rule the minister concerned speaks only once or twice giving general replies to the questions that are put.

Reference has been made to the committee on estimates in the United Kingdom. A subcommittee is set up to deal with defence estimates, but it has not made a report this year. The House of Commons passed the appropriation with respect to defence without having before it any report from the committee on estimates. As hon. members who are familiar with it know, the committee on estimates deals largely with the form of the estimates and matters of that kind, never with policy; in fact consideration of questions of policy is expressly excluded in the terms of reference of the committee. Now let me tell hon. members in a general way that we have in the administrative and training staff across Canada the personnel necessary to administer and train, first of all the active forces, then the reserve forces, and particularly the officers for the active and reserve forces.

At the moment we have in training for the army alone a total of 3,090, of whom 374 are undergoing general military training; 1,143 are for active force units; 18 are for reserve corps—these figures were given before summer training for the reserve forces had begun—124 are for command contingent officers training corps, and 1,431 for university officers training corps.

We have in the various schools and static units across Canada a total of approximately 16,000 officers and men. This group is necessary because it has the most important job of training the reserve army as well as the active army. Altogether there are 255 active units and 524 reserve units. If the details of the estimates are examined, it will be found there are relatively small amounts of money set down for the reserve army. This is because these items cover only pay and allowances of personnel, transportation of personnel and repairs and maintenance of armouries carried out locally. Those figures do not include any amount for the active forces or for equipment; yet a large part of the role of the active forces is the training and equipping of the reserve units.

I was asked by the leader of the opposition on this and other occasions if we could not give greater details of the defence estimates than we are giving. We shall be very glad indeed to give any details that can possibly be given. As has been intimated on other occasions, the Department of Finance, the treasury officials and the Auditor General have had the form of the estimates under consideration, as has this department. I should like to point out that the details given for the defence estimates on page 168 are much more complete than those given in the year 1947-48, when all the details appeared on something less than a page. At that time we were developing the post-war organization, and it was exceedingly difficult to estimate accurately for the following year. The details for this year will be found at pages 168 to 174 of the estimates. Those details are, I believe, more complete than those given for the last year before the war, 1938-39, subject to one exception, that for 1938-39 details are given concerning the civilian employees involved. There are several pages covering civilian employees in the different categories. It did not seem to the officers of the Department of Finance, treasury, and ourselves that that had any significance or usefulness; therefore the details were not given this year. They are, however, available if any hon. member wants them at any time. Subject only to this qualification, the form of the estimates and details given is much more complete than for the estimates of 1938-39. If we can properly give more information that will be useful, then we shall try to work in that direction.

In this connection I should like to say that I do not know of any information given about defence in the United Kingdom or Australia or any countries of the commonwealth which is more complete than that given in this house. From my examination of the statements, and from my following of the debates in other parliaments, I believe we give much more information than any of those countries. With regard to the United States I believe that if hon. members will follow the matter closely they will see that in the actual debates in congress, as in the proceedings before congressional committees, no more detailed information is given than is given here. What creates the impression of more information being given there is information which comes from sources outside of congress, which frequently has no official authority accredited to it, though it may come from some authoritative sources. I suggest in all sincerity that when we are charged with not giving information comparable to that given in other countries, an examination of the facts will show we give just as much as any other country, except possibly the United States and I believe that even in that case we are in a position to compare favourably.

We have had three days of general discussion, including a fourth day when defence matters came up on a motion to set up a committee; therefore this is really the fifth day upon which we have been dealing with defence. Throughout that period I have been ready to answer questions, and I shall be only too happy to do so if hon. members will put them.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, as a member of the active reserve of the armed forces, and having attended Petawawa military camp for the last three years, I agree with everything the minister and the leader of the opposition have said about the excellence of the training which is given the militia branch of our armed forces. It could not be improved upon. But something the minister said I believe is of vital importance to this house, and that is that the funds which this house is willing to vote for defence for the coming year will not make us as well prepared for any eventuality as we should like to be. The minister said that if we desire more preparation for the army, shall we say, we have to rob the air force and the navy; and if we want more preparedness or more equipment for the air force, we have to rob the other branches of the service. What this committee and this country want to hear from the Minister of National Defence is an indication as to how much money is needed to bring the forces of this country into such a position that we shall be able to deal with aggression from outside and take our place as a member of the North Atlantic alliance.

After hostilities have started—if they do—in which we find ourselves involved, if we are not sufficiently prepared either to defend ourselves adequately or to take an honourable position as a member of the north Atlantic alliance, as we have pledged ourselves to do, the minister cannot come to us and say: If you had voted me the funds, I would have been able to see to it that you were properly prepared. He and his department and this government are the people who have the knowledge on which to say what we require, on June 26, 1950, to prepare ourselves for attack from outside or to take our proper place in the north Atlantic alliance. I say to the minister that what this committee wants to hear before this session is over, in order to make these estimates mean anything, is not what it will cost to give us semi-preparedness, but what, in his greater knowledge than is available to the members of this committee and to the people of this country, he thinks are the appropriations that are needed to give us the preparedness that we require today to fulfil our duties, as a party to the North Atlantic pact, in defending this country or in quelling aggression wherever it may take place.

The minister should bring these figures before the committee and let this parliament decide, on behalf of the people of Canada, whether or not the people are willing to foot the bill to give this country the kind of preparedness which the Minister of National Defence has implied should be considerably greater than the estimates now before us provides for the armed forces of Canada. I am asking the minister to let this committee know, today, or certainly before parliament closes, what funds are necessary to give us the preparedness which, as of June 26, 1950, in the light of the latest developments in international affairs, this country is entitled to with respect to its armed forces.

Mr. Claxton: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that I voice the views of all members on this side of the chamber in welcoming the hon. member who has just taken his seat and in congratulating him most heartily on having made his first speech. As we all know, he had a good record of active service with the forces during the war, and also with the reserve forces. I am sure that his contribution to the work of the house in this and other fields will be extremely valuable.

With regard to his question, I may say that it is a fair and proper one, but, in view of the present state of the world, it is one which cannot be answered with a single figure. I can say that if another $200 million were voted by parliament for defence, only a small part of it would go into personnel, and a large part of it would go into equipment. In the first instance that equipment would be an acceleration of our aircraft production program; in the second place, an acceleration of our shipbuilding program, and in the third place, the commencement of a program of replacement of some of the armour and armaments of the army. But possibly more useful than spending the whole of any such sum of money on our own equipment would be to spend it on equipment of other North Atlantic treaty countries. If he asked me how much it would cost us to ensure our safety at this time, then I can tell him that the figure would be large; because, as everyone knows, the deficiencies in equipment of the North Atlantic treaty countries are great indeed. If we had a large sum of money added to our estimates at this time we would undoubtedly give most serious consideration to making the best possible defence use of that money by building equipment and giving it or transferring it, on terms of one kind or another, to our allies in the North Atlantic treaty. That having been done, we would be better prepared than we are today in the place where we should be better prepared than we are today.

With regard to our own defence, we believe that, given conditions as they are at the present time, we have enough forces to deal with any situation that might arise here. The only other point, then, is this: Is the amount of $425 million that we are spending on defence enough to enable us to see that we carry our fair share of the load under the North Atlantic treaty? It is the belief of this government that it is enough, and that it is a proper proportion. In proportion to population, on a per capita basis, it is more than any other country of the British commonwealth is spending, except the United Kingdom; and on a per capita basis I believe it is more than any other country under the North Atlantic treaty is spending, except the United States and the United Kingdom.

On other bases of comparison, it is more than a good many of the countries concerned are spending, either as a proportion of national product or as a percentage of national budget, although some of the countries of Europe are spending more. But when we include with the $425 million some of the other items that might properly be allocated to defence under the accounting systems in force in one or other countries—such as, for example, married quarters built for defence personnel by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation; some part of the cost of civil aviation and navigational aids; some part of the cost of the R.C.M.P., and one or two other similar matters—the figure can be built up to something over $500 million. The other expenditures to which I have referred are not made in the Department of National Defence; they are made by other departments. The only amount we can spend this year is $425 million. But having regard to our resources, our needs, our capacities and our responsibilities, we believe that on any basis the amount we are spending today represents a fair contribution towards collective security.

Mr. Green: There is one question I wish the Minister of National Defence would deal with today, namely, whether he believes the events which are happening now in Korea call for any change in the plans of the Department of National Defence of Canada. From his remarks thus far this morning I take it that he believes these events do not require any change in Canada's policy, and with all my heart I hope that he is correct. But it does seem to me that the potentialities of this unprovoked attack, obviously instigated by the U.S.S.R., are very serious, and that they may well be more serious for Canada than for any other country in the world.

I should like to know whether the minister believes that Canada should take any action, in view of this step taken today, which seems to make the cold war a very hot one. I heard the announcement on the radio this morning at nine o'clock that the United States commander in Alaska had alerted his fighting squadrons there. The report went on to say that this was a routine order, and it may have been; but surely Canada cannot afford to take chances.

I should like to know whether Canada is in a position to put fighter squadrons into action in the northwestern part of our territory on short notice; whether we are in a position to protect our airfields in northwestern Canada, should an attempt be made to seize them; and whether we are in a position to put a coastal patrol over the Pacific coast, to protect that coast against hostile submarines.

In his remarks in the last few minutes the minister emphasized time and again Canada's obligations under the North Atlantic treaty. He said that if we were spending more money for defence it would probably best be spent in providing equipment to other nations who have signed the North Atlantic treaty. Mr. Chairman, the North Atlantic treaty does not apply in any way whatever to this trouble in Korea. I read now from the preamble of the treaty. Referring to the nations who signed the treaty it says:

> They seek to promote stability and well-being in the north Atlantic area.
> They are resolved to unite their efforts for collective defence and for the preservation of peace and security.
> They therefore agree to this North Atlantic treaty.

In article 5 we find that there is no obligation whatever upon any nation party to this treaty to come to the aid of another nation if the attack comes in the Pacific. The article reads:

> The parties agree that an armed attack against one or more of them in Europe or North America shall be considered an attack against them all.

But if trouble comes, if this is the beginning of a hot war that we are having today, then an attack will certainly be made across from Siberia into Alaska and into northwestern Canada, and Edmonton, for example, which is the most exposed city, would almost certainly be bombed without warning if the hostile planes could not be stopped. I am afraid that the minister is placing too much emphasis on the North Atlantic treaty and on the north Atlantic where we have the Russians stopped, and is paying no attention, or very little, to this grave development across the Pacific. I would ask him to let us know exactly what he thinks should be done, or whether he thinks nothing should be done, about this attack on southern Korea.

One further thing I would ask him to explain is what co-operation there is today between Canada and Australia and New Zealand with regard to defence questions. We have co-operation, and I think it is to be praised, with the United Kingdom and the United States; but our sister nations of Australia and New Zealand are not parties to the North Atlantic treaty. They were not allowed to join because they are not in the north Atlantic area. If trouble comes in the Pacific we shall certainly need their help, and I believe there should be the closest military co-operation now with both of these nations. Both of their peoples are fighting peoples. They have stood beside us in two world wars, and there are no finer fighters on earth. Canada should be working in the closest co-operation with Australia and New Zealand. I should like to know whether any attempt is being made by Canada to bring about that co-operation. I am confident that Australia and New Zealand would be only too glad on their part to co-operate. They have been pressing for a Pacific defence pact similar to the North Atlantic treaty. So far their pleas have gone unheeded, and today the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that Canada did not feel that the development in Korea made it any more necessary than before for her to take the lead in advocating a Pacific defence pact. That was a great disappointment to me, because I think the situation is such that we need a Pacific defence pact, and we need it quickly, primarily because Canada is the nation that is going to suffer most if this becomes a world war. We are going to be attacked over our northwestern frontier, and probably the northeastern as well, and certainly our shores on the Pacific are apt to be under attack from submarines.

We are facing a very grave situation. I hope this afternoon the Minister of National Defence will give us the assurance that he realizes the danger to Canada.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. Claxton: When the committee rose the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra had raised two points with which I should deal. He expressed the hope that there would be close co-operation with the defence forces of Australia and New Zealand. Canada has a liaison officer in Australia. I visited both countries in 1948, met their defence ministers and several of their chiefs of staff and visited several of their main defence establishments. Only three weeks ago the minister for air of Australia was here. A considerable number of their officers have visited us, and so far as I know there is no way in which co-operation has been sought by Australia or New Zealand which we have not followed up completely. I do not know of any way in which there could be more useful co-operation at this time.

The hon. member spoke about the possible effect of the developments in Korea on our defence plans. As he said, this is a grave development, and we shall watch it with the closest attention. In consequence of this development some changes will have to be made. For example, if the situation continues to look serious, we certainly could not continue with plans for the voyage of the ships to European waters to take place at the time I mentioned. That kind of thing would have to be carefully watched. I do not think it would be helpful to the situation if I said anything more at this time. As I say, it is being carefully watched, and if any developments should give rise to the need for action or change, that action will certainly be taken.

The hon. member mentioned other matters which it seemed to me were questions of external policy rather than of defence. Since the Secretary of State for External Affairs is here, it occurred to me that he might deal with them.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the matters brought up by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra were really concerned with external policy and might have been dealt with more effectively on the estimates of the Department of External Affairs, more particularly his reference to a Pacific defence pact, about which I had expected to speak when my estimates were under consideration.

I should not like any hon. member to infer, from what I said this morning in answer to the hon. member's question about developments in Korea and the effect of that on a Pacific defence pact, that we in the government are not just as much concerned about the security of the Pacific as we are about the security of any other area in the world. As the hon. member said, if there is trouble in the Pacific, Canada will be affected just as quickly as if there were trouble in the Atlantic. But the form of collective security which might be appropriate for the north Atlantic region might not be appropriate in the present circumstances for another region, particularly the Pacific region. I do not want to go into this now in any great detail, because no doubt it will come up later. The hon. member will of course realize that the arrangements which were worked out in connection with the North Atlantic pact took a good deal of time and preparation and careful negotiation among all the governments. All the governments concerned with the arrangement were unanimous as to how the matter should be dealt with. We have not that situation in the Pacific. It is true that some countries in the Pacific would welcome the same kind of regional defensive system—

Mr. Green: Which ones, may I ask?

Mr. Pearson: The hon. member mentioned Australia and New Zealand this morning. I am aware that statements have been made by representatives of the government of Australia which would indicate support for some kind of Pacific defensive alliance or Pacific pact. The position in New Zealand is not yet quite as definite, and even in the case of Australia I would point out it has been indicated that a general Pacific defensive pact of the type we have in the north Atlantic might not be the most suitable at this time for that area, because there are certain countries which have already indicated that they would not be able to participate at this time in that kind of general, if I may call it that, regional collective system. The United States has taken that position; India has taken that position; the United Kingdom has taken that position.

The most recent statement I have seen which was made by the minister for external affairs in Australia seemed to visualize a narrower form of defensive system, where certain states in the Pacific agree among themselves that attack on one would be attack on the others. But then you get in the position of excluding from that arrangement certain other states which might wish to come into the system. So the situation is not nearly as clear-cut as it is in the case of the countries in the north Atlantic area.

I should like to repeat however that this does not mean that we are not aware of the importance of collective defensive measures in the Pacific just as we are in the north Atlantic. We are also quite aware that developments in the Pacific at this time centring around Korea might make this a most realistic matter for consideration.

Mr. Low: Mr. Chairman, I was not able to be here before one o'clock, because there was a committee meeting which I had to attend, but I am advised that in replying to questions asked by the hon. member for Broadview the minister stated, or rather left the impression with the committee, that he required something in the neighbourhood of $200 million more to make it possible for him to build adequate defences for Canada. I am not sure that that is the exact implication of his words, but at any rate it was something of the kind. The impression was left by the minister's words that parliament had refused to grant the minister sufficient funds so that he could be prepared.

If those things are true, I should like to ask the minister to tell this committee just who it is that has refused to give him enough funds so that he can adequately prepare the defences of this country. I should like him also to tell hon. members whether or not he has asked parliament for sufficient funds to prepare the defences of this country. I may be misinformed, but if I am not, there is just one thing I should like to have clear. If parliament has ever been asked for an additional $200 million, or any other sum, for the purpose of preparing adequate defences for our country at this time, then I can assure him it is not the Social Credit group that has refused it. I think it should be made known whether it is treasury board or any group in this house that has done so. What we of the Social Credit group are trying to keep in our minds so far as the defence of Canada is concerned is not so much what it will cost us to defend ourselves at the moment, but what it will cost us if we do not prepare our defences as they ought to be prepared.

I think we all recall what happened the last time that hostilities broke out, how ill-prepared we were, and how difficult it had been to jar loose the government of the day to spend more money on defence preparations, or anything else for that matter in order to move things along even in the economic field. Having in mind the present situation in Korea and southeastern Asia, where anything could develop quickly, I am wondering whether the minister and his department are going to be strangled by our being so niggardly as to refuse them what they require to make certain that we are not caught in the same position as that in which we found ourselves in 1939.

I think the minister and the government know the position that we take with regard to the provision of sufficient funds at any time to take care of our needs. We have always been mindful of the taxpayers, just as treasury board has been, but we have looked at the business of finance quite differently. I want the minister to know that even now, with all the money he is preparing to spend for defence, we have not yet begun to realize anything like our potential of production. If we have not, all that is required is the complete stimulation of development in the field of production to get what he needs. The Social Credit group urge the minister to ask parliament for whatever he needs, and we will support his requests in so far as he will make known to us what his needs are. Of course we want to be shown exactly what the needs are, and we want as much information as we can get; but we are not going to choke him off in any way.

Furthermore we want the minister to know that we think the country is capable of producing all that is required in order to protect us from being placed in jeopardy at any time. Let us not fail at all times to keep in mind the cost to us and to humanity if we are not adequately prepared when and if difficulties arise. I think we have to keep that in our minds at this time. I should like the minister to make it clear whether or not the information I got as to this morning's proceedings was correct.

Mr. Claxton: I appreciate the attitude of the hon. member for Peace River. As he has opened the way, I may tell him at once that I did not make any such suggestion. What I said was that if we had an extra $200 million for defence, in my view a large part of that amount would be spent on equipment rather than personnel. In other words the deficiencies that we and other countries under the North Atlantic treaty have are in the first place in the field of equipment, and second, in personnel. But all of us have deficiencies, and we are working to overcome them. If we were to have a war this year, $425 million would be a small amount compared with what we would be seeking from parliament. We would probably be seeking an unlimited blank cheque, if we were certain to be engaged in a war, in order to put the whole economy to work in the quickest possible time for the purpose of devoting as much as possible of our total effort to war. In the second world war that resulted, as we know, in our being able to devote more than fifty per cent of our total economy to wartime effort. That was a large proportion in any country. If we did that today we would cripple our country. We would be doing exactly what the communists want us to do. Consequently it is necessary for us to strike a balance between what might be needed, what might be desirable, and what we think it is proper and useful to do. Defence expenditure must be regarded as in the nature of an insurance premium. We may not be paying enough, or we may be paying too much, all depending on the calculation of the risk.

Mr. Low: Does the minister think we are spending enough?

Mr. Claxton: Having regard to the situation as I know it, and from what I have been told, I feel we are spending as much on defence at this time as we can properly spend out of our national income. In consequence of developments resulting from what took place on Saturday, I might have to come back and say that the situation has changed, but up to that date it is the view of the government that this is the right amount for us to spend at this time. It is being spent in the best way we know how. It is being spent to build up progressively forces which will be the best means of defending Canada immediately and of contributing to the defence of our allies should an emergency arise.

Mr. Adamson: I should like to refer to the F-86 fighter now being purchased. I do so in order that the minister may have an opportunity to say something on the whole question of jet aircraft, which is one of such vital importance to this country. There has been and is today considerable controversy about the F-86, not only here but also in the United States where it was designed. I understand that even as late as last week a further modification was made in the design of this interceptor. I bring that to the minister's attention so that he may have an opportunity to make a statement about this aircraft.

I also want to say a word about the Canadian jet aircraft industry. Not only has it done a magnificent job for Canada, but in many ways it leads the world. The British magazine Flight is my authority for saying that the CF-100 and the C-102 are the leading aircraft of their types in the world. The CF-100, a fighter bomber, will shortly fly the Atlantic. It has tremendous speed and hitting power. I understand that the C-102, a jet transport, will shortly fly the Pacific, and is the leader in its class in the world. I also understand that the design, and certainly the construction, of this aircraft are largely of Canadian origin.

I should like to quote what was said before the United States senate investigating committee concerning aircraft, and particularly air transports. I am quoting Mr. Robert Ramspek, executive vice-president of the air transport association, who had this to say concerning the performance of Canadian and British jet passenger aircraft:

. . . Mr. Ramspek declared that the U.S. could not even come close to matching their development. He said that as far as he knew, there were not even any plans for a transport which might compete with the Avro Canada jet lines. He further warned that American domestic air lines would have to buy foreign jet transports . . .

Not only this witness, but Admiral DeWitt Ramsey also said the same thing with regard to jet air transport in the United States. It seems to me we are basing our first line air support on a United States designed plane, the F-86, which as far as one can gather has had numerous growing pains and has been recently modified. On the other hand the British Meteor, the new Vampire, and the Hawker Interceptor have recently demonstrated tremendous superiority over all known or published jet interceptor planes and particularly, I understand, either the Meteor or Vampire recently broke all world speed records for aircraft of any type.

I bring this to the attention of the minister and the committee because if there is one thing in which Canada is leading the U.S.A. at the present time it is in the design and construction of jet aircraft. I was amazed when I saw the number of firms co-operating with Avro, De Havilland and Vickers in the production of the new types of aircraft, and the wonderful job being done by Canadian industry throughout, not only from the manufacturing point of view but with respect to design. So I wonder if the minister would care to make a statement on the decision of the department to concentrate on this interceptor.

Mr. Claxton: I appreciate and agree with what the hon. member for York West said about the aircraft industry and its contributions in this field. With respect to the relative merits of the F-86 and other aircraft, I endeavoured to deal with this question on June 8, at page 3377 of Hansard, where I referred to similar charges and the fact that I had just returned from watching a demonstration which included the F-86 at Eglin field before the president, the defence secretary and the chiefs of staff of the United States. At that time I read to the committee captions from a book of photographs we were given on that occasion which referred to the F-86 in these words:

> The North American F-86 "Sabre," first line operational fighter of USAF tactical fighter groups, is paced by the North American B-45 "Tornado," jet light bomber. The "Sabre," fully armed, holds the world's speed record of 670 plus.

These photographs were issued by the United States air force, and are in accordance with the facts as disclosed to us. We know of no aircraft in its field with characteristics comparable to the F-86, and which is at the same stage of development and production.

Mr. Harkness: This morning the minister had something to say about the form of the estimates, which I have been asking about for the last couple of years. He said that in the details at the back of the book there was considerably more information than had appeared in 1947 and 1948. That is quite correct, but the question I asked previously was whether the estimates for this department would be put back in the form in which they appeared before the war, the form in which the estimates of nearly all other departments appear, with separate votes for each major item. The fact that more detailed information is given today than two years ago does not meet my criticism as to the form in which these estimates are presented. We have one estimate here which takes in all the defence expenditures except those in connection with defence research, pensions and a few things along that line. In theory, at any rate, we should be in a position here to move that any item, whether for the army, the navy or the air force, which we thought was too little or too large, should be increased or reduced. As these estimates are now presented, however, that cannot be done. I believe it would make for a better discussion of these matters if the votes were split up as they were before the war, and as other departments present their estimates, in order that parliament would be able to exercise its right to cut down any particular item which might be considered too large. Last year the minister told me that consideration would be given to putting these items back more or less into their pre-war form, and I wonder if he has anything further to say on that point now.

Mr. Claxton: I have in my hand a copy of the estimates for the year ending March 31, 1939; and from a close examination I would say that in the primaries, where we have now two items covering the defence forces generally and defence research, there were twelve or thirteen items in 1938-1939. In the details which follow at page 168 this year, and at page 131 in 1938-39, the information given is quite comparable.

There are great advantages, from the point of view of defence planning during this period, in having the notes grouped. I have already explained the reasons for this to the committee, and I do not want to go over it again. However, certainly we shall look into the matter once more, as we are constantly looking into these things. Perhaps with more experience since the war and the possibility of more accurate forecasts, also given a more static condition, if that is brought about, we can divide the vote as the hon. member suggests. I am told the tendency in other places is to do as we have done, and I can put the reason for that in a word. At the present time we have a defence program which costs the people of Canada some $425 million. As I explained, this is the amount, recommended by the government and approved by paliament, of the insurance premium we will pay for defence. Defence is a matter in which it is difficult to allocate contracts and secure deliveries in peacetime exactly at the time you want them. There are constant modifications of equipment, and twenty-eight per cent of the total expenditure is on equipment. Then a very large proportion goes into construction, and it is difficult indeed to complete planned construction by March 31 of any particular year. On that account, if we were held down precisely to votes which could only be encumbered for contracts to be completed within the year without the possibility of transferring from item to item, then we would find ourselves with a considerable part of our defence program handicapped and curtailed, because we know we cannot complete it this year but we do not know exactly what part we will not be able to complete. We would find, instead of getting on with our defence as we are doing, we would have completed about 90 per cent of the job by the end of the year if we are held to the detailed items.

I am told that other countries have had the same experience, and we are watching them with great interest. I feel certain it could be possible to give greater details about certain things, but I would not be sure it would be in the interests of the country, or that it would be exactly what parliament wants, if the primaries were divided to any greater extent.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I realize it probably makes defence planning easier if all defence expenditure is in one vote, but for that reason it makes parliament's control of defence expenditures less complete than it would otherwise be. I doubt whether in peacetime this principle of having everything lumped in one vote is good. Just as an example, it might be the wish of parliament to spend 50 per cent of the money voted on the navy, and split the rest up between the army and the air force. With the whole sum being in one vote, the government can spend practically nothing on the navy, and spend the whole thing on the air force and army. I am not suggesting that would be done, but it is a possibility. It seems to me that if this vote were split into three for the various services it would give parliament a better control of expenditures.

Mr. Fulton: I should like to ask the minister a question or two with regard to the details shown on page 168. First, I should like to make some comments about the breakdown. In the detail which we are given under departmental administration for the navy, army and air force, there is a substantial item, in most cases running into several million dollars, for sundries. In the detail those sundries are said to include printing and stationery, postage, and miscellaneous items. According to the public accounts for 1948-49, the items making up these sundries were given in some detail, and none of them amount to as much as $2 million or $3 million. Will the minister say whether it would be possible, and whether he will agree in future years, to give some break-down of the sundry item instead of just indicating some of the things which go into it? He could say how much the department estimates the expenditure on printing and stationery will be, and how much for postage. Then we would know that. When they do get down to some of the small things—one time I believe in one department we had laundry mentioned—they could more properly be described as sundries, and not set out in detail. I do not think it is proper accounting to ask us to approve an item as we have under departmental administration of $783,000 for sundries. Can the minister say whether that will be done in another year?

Mr. Claxton: I would certainly be glad to discuss that with the officers; that is one of the heads we believe capable of further break-down. There are others which I may as well mention, such as maintenance and construction of properties; different types of equipment, and so on. We believe that we could give further details now with some accuracy and without too much curtailment. I can give a break-down of sundries if the hon. member wants it.

Mr. Fulton: Will the minister do it for this item of departmental administration?

Mr. Claxton: Yes. They are given in the public accounts, as the hon. member knows. There is printing, stationery and office equipment, $126,000; communication services, $50,000; book of remembrance, $17,000; transportation, $3,000; government officers guarantee fund, $8,600; legal fees and patent applications $4,000; miscellaneous expenses, $5,000; miscellaneous expenses, $2,000; training equipment and films, $20,000; then, unallotted, $338,277 that is the sundries; directorate of public relations miscellaneous expenses, $5,000; inspection services by contract to meet urgent requirements, $200,000; contingencies, $5,000. The total is $783,827.

Mr. Fulton: I appreciate that to do that under every heading would perhaps expand the volume of the estimates, but I think that should be done in future years. I was glad to hear the minister say—

Mr. Claxton: We shall certainly pick out the major items if we can.

Mr. Fulton: There is an amount asked for civil servants, salaries and wages. In other departments it is possible to get a break-down of the personnel administering the department. I am not asking for anything like a war establishment of the personnel in the army, navy, and so on, but for departmental administration. It seems to me there would not be any prejudice to security if the various personnel engaged at headquarters were broken down so we could see how many there are and what is paid. Could that be done in future years?

Mr. Claxton: That information was given on June 9 at page 3462 of Hansard, in reply to a question by the member for Nanaimo. As you can see it occupies the best part of one column in very fine print. There is no difficulty about giving that information, but we have approximately 23,000 civilians in the department.

Mr. Fulton: At headquarters?

Mr. Claxton: No, all the information for headquarters has been given. If it were given for all the permanent and temporary civil servants, properly so-called, it would run into a great number of pages. I do not know that it would mean anything to hon. members, but if it is felt it would be desirable to give it for Ottawa national defence headquarters, I am sure we could give consideration to that.

Mr. Fulton: The next thing I should like to know is whether it would be possible to set up the estimates in such a way that we could see how many military personnel are engaged at headquarters, and their pay and allowances, for the army, navy and air force personnel. Could it be included in departmental administration? As I understand, at present the pay and allowances for the army, including those persons at headquarters, are included under "pay and allowances, army". The same is true for the navy and the air force.

Mr. Claxton: I appreciate the point. As the hon. member says, all pay and allowances for the officers and men of the three services are found in pay and allowances for the three services, and not under administration. The number of those involved at headquarters I gave this morning. Because of the way in which the books are kept, it would not be possible to pick out the pay and allowances of these officers without looking at the accounts for each separate one at some given date. That could be done, but it would cost a great deal to get the information. I do not know what use it would be, but it would be possible. The books are not kept in such a way as to permit that to be done without a special operation.

Mr. Higgins: I have one specific point to raise with the minister concerning the runways at Gander airport. I spoke to the minister about the necessity of lengthening them before, and he informed me, as far as I remember, that they were quite adequate. I understand that the minister proposes to visit Newfoundland shortly and that he will likely land at Gander airport. If he does so, I should like him to make a little investigation himself and to do a little bit of questioning.

The information I have at the present time is that all last spring the Boeings either had to overfly or had to land at Goose. The airways have now been temporarily repaired. Sections have been taken up and they have been filled in and resurfaced; but the runways at Gander look like a mosaic patchwork. The Boeing aircraft are unable to use these runways at any time at any temperature over 40 degrees. That means that if they land and the temperature is not right they have to wait till night or wait until the temperature goes down. The necessity for lengthening the runways is a most important consideration. Even in the past two weeks Boeing aircraft, after many tries, and not being able to get off the ground, finally had to unload fifteen hundred pounds of cargo.

While the department administering Gander is of course the Department of Trade and Commerce, nevertheless I feel that the minister must be vitally interested in this matter, especially in view of the significance of recent events which may make the use of Gander airport by large bombers a matter of urgency. I think it is important that the minister should take that situation into consideration because if those facts are correct —and from the information I have received, I have no reason to believe otherwise—the airport at present cannot be used by large planes.

Mr. Claxton: I shall be glad indeed to do that. Following the hon. member's previous question, I myself made inquiries and found that Gander is at present adequate to handle all Canadian aircraft. But as he says, I hope to visit the airport after the adjournment. One of the purposes of the visit is to see the progress being made on the defence installation and the reserve army units. I am sure the Minister of Transport will not object to my viewing Gander, and I shall be glad to report to him on my return.

Mr. Fulton: Is the minister able, amongst other things in the detail here, to pick out for us the amount which he is asking for, under these sundries under navy, army and air force, specifically for recruiting and to give us the comparative figures of expenditure for 1949-50?

Mr. Claxton: Recruiting expense under sundries?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Claxton: The amount provided for in the present estimates is $500,000. The amount spent in 1949-50 is approximately $1 million.

Mr. Fulton: Is that $500,000 for all three services?

Mr. Claxton: For all three services.

Mr. Fulton: In each sundry item under the main services you have recruiting expenses?

Mr. Claxton: Yes. I can give them.

Mr. Fulton: Is there a break-down there?

Mr. Claxton: That is right. I can give them to you. There is $100,000 for the navy, $200,000 for the army.

Mr. Fulton: That would be $200,000 for the air force, then?

Mr. Claxton: Yes.

Mr. Harkness: Several times in the past, particularly last year, the minister has made the statement that the cost per man in the services is $2,600. I have never been quite clear as to what is meant by that statement. Does that cost cover his pay and allowances, food, uniform and housing only, or does it also cover the weapons with which he is equipped, and the overhead? Exactly what is the meaning of that statement?

Mr. Claxton: It includes pay, allowances, pension provision, food, medical services and hospitalization, personal transportation, and some other minor items. Generally it includes everything that would be equivalent to his pay or salary if he were a civilian. It includes nothing for accommodation and nothing for weapons.

Mr. Harkness: It does not include housing?

Mr. Claxton: No.

Mr. Harkness: When we were discussing this item about two weeks ago, the minister gave us a break-down of the civilian personnel at defence headquarters, as he indicated a few minutes ago, and stated that the increase in this item for general administration was due to an increase in inspection services to quite an extent. There are two items particularly as to which I could not understand why, because of increased inspection services, there would be an increase. One is stores and equipment, where the increase is from $13,500 to $136,900; and the other is the item of maintenance, repairs and operating expenses of property, which is increased from $10,000 to $97,500. There is an increase of about ten times in each case in those two items. I wonder if the minister would explain why that is?

Mr. Claxton: May I ask the hon. member again for the reference?

Mr. Harkness: It is on page 168, under details of services, departmental administration. The third item down is maintenance, repairs and operating expenses of property; and the fourth item down is stores and equipment.

Mr. Claxton: The increase from $10,000 to $97,500 for inspection services is largely accounted for because the inspection services have taken over from the defence research board the proving ground in the Valcartier area. This item therefore is sought to cover that additional expenditure for inspection services. There will be an over-all decrease in the cost of defence because, through this transfer of functions from the defence research board to the inspection service, there will be a reduction in personnel. With regard to stores and equipment, the increase from $13,500 to $136,900 is almost entirely due to equipment: laboratory, gauges, chemicals, proof material and replacement of vehicles for inspection services, owing to their increased activities, which are due to the fact that we are buying more equipment.

Mr. Harkness: You have another item there of travel, transportation, freight and express. I should like to know how much of that travel item is entirely for the civilian employees of defence headquarters. None of the expenses of officers of the three services who are employed at headquarters and who travel is included in this item. That will be included in a separate item?

Mr. Claxton: That is correct.

Mr. Harkness: What is the amount for travel of the civilian employees?

Mr. Claxton: That is all civilian. The amount of $242,250 for 1950-51 is travel, et cetera, for the inspection services.

Mr. Harkness: The item says: "Travel, transportation, freight and express." What is the amount that is actually travel?

Mr. Claxton: The amount for travel is $237,500 for that year, and for freight and express $4,750.

Mr. Harkness: It is practically all travel?

Mr. Claxton: That is right.

Mr. Fulton: Will the minister give us the main headings of the increase in sundries? He gave me a break-down of what the sundries are, but they are increased from $186,000 to $783,000. Is that also accounted for by this inspection service business? If so, what are the main headings under which the expenses are increased?

Mr. Claxton: The increase was almost entirely due to increased inspection. The unallotted amount of $338,227 is almost entirely provided for inspection services, and then there is an item of $205,000 expressly for inspection services, let by outside contracts.

Mr. Hees: I think everybody in this country has come to realize the possibility, although we would hate to think that it ever could be a probability, of an attack on this country by land forces of an aggressor. At the present time, so far as I can see, we have a brigade group which could repel such an attack or make an attempt to repel such an attack. But I do not feel that a force of that size would have any appreciable effect on the kind of force that would be thrown against this country if such an eventuality developed. It seems to me, with my limited knowledge, that it would take a force of at least the size of an armoured division to do any sort of a job in repelling such an attack.

I do not think anybody would argue that it would take less than six months from a standing start, with no interference, to prepare an armoured division both from the point of view of equipping it and getting the men into the ranks and training them before an armoured division could go into action. Will the minister tell the committee what the plans of the Department of National Defence are for getting a force into the field in less time than six months to repel the possible invasion of this country if at any time an enemy should suddenly strike?

Mr. Claxton: This has been gone into a good many times. We do not estimate that there is any possibility of any attack on Canada except by an airborne force; and we believe that under existing conditions such a force could be dealt with, if it got to Canada, by an airborne brigade.

I do not know whether hon. members know how many aircraft it takes to make an airlift of an airborne brigade. It runs into hundreds. That being so our calculation is—and it is a calculation based on an estimate of risks, as all war planning must be—that the risk we have to meet is not that of an all-out attack on us but something that will be launched with the view of panicking our people to deploy more of their forces here than they should. We believe if we start doing that we will be doing just what the only potential enemy wants before he ever lifts his finger to attack us.

Exercise Sweetbriar will, I believe, be found to show that the forces we have, if our estimate of the situation is right, are the right kind of forces to deal with such an attack.

Mr. Harkness: I notice the first item under the navy is "civilian salaries and wages." The amount is down about $700,000 from last year, which I was rather surprised to see, because most of the items for salaries and wages in the various departments are up this year, to a large extent owing to the increased rates of pay that most civil servants are getting. I was also surprised to find this amount is down because one of the recommendations of the Mainguy report was that more of the administrative work such as the civilian employees would be engaged at should be done by civilian employees. In other words, one of the recommendations of the report was to increase the number of civilian employees, and thus release more naval officers for duties at sea, and so forth. In view of these two circumstances, namely, that pay is up in most departments, and that there was this recommendation that there should be an increase in the number of civilian employees and a decrease in the number of naval officers and men at headquarters, can the minister explain the situation?

Mr. Claxton: The decrease is due to the employment of a total of 6,331 civilians in all classes as against a total of 6,636 in 1949. Therefore it is due to a definite drop in the number of personnel involved, namely, 305. We have not found it possible to do much in the way of putting civilians in service positions at headquarters yet. It is a difficult operation, and I think probably the navy will be the service in which it is least easy to do it because of the particularly technical nature of its work. The decrease is due in part to economy in administration. I should say also that a very big proportion of those employed in the navy are prevailing rate employees in the dockyards, and that number fluctuates from month to month with the amount of work. As of the 31st day of March, when these figures were taken, the number employed there was 2,306 in Halifax, 1,777 at Esquimalt and lesser numbers at other places.

Mr. Fulton: I should like to ask the minister a question with regard to the properties for the three services which I understand —and I am proceeding on this basis—do not include houses being provided as accommodation but would probably include merely barracks and such other defence buildings, storage depots, and so on. The items under the navy, army and air force read:

Acquisition, construction, purchase, maintenance, repairs, rentals and operating expenses of properties.

There are many millions in each case. Can the minister tell us, firstly, what is the inventory value of the defence properties exclusive of houses which we now have, and how much is spent under these three headings of acquisition, purchase, maintenance and so forth? In other words, how many new properties are we developing this year, how many are we purchasing this year, and how much are we spending for the maintenance of existing ones?

Mr. Claxton: We have no inventory of the value of properties in the Department of National Defence. A great many of them have been in the department from confederation when they formed part of the property of the crown. For example, in Quebec we have the old citadel and numerous other properties. With regard to the expenditures on properties outside of those made by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation we have under "acquisition, construction and purchase of properties" the following:

Royal Canadian Navy Reserve	$ 160,000
Navy General	5,183,000
Navy total	$ 5,343,000
Canadian Army Reserve Force and C.O.T.C.	1,913,000
Canadian Army General	10,402,000
Northwest Territory and Yukon Radio System	160,275
Northwest Highway System	650,000
Army Total	13,125,275
R.C.A.F. Reserve	$ 100,000
R.C.A.F. General	13,945,279
Northwest Staging Route	800,000
R.C.A.F. Total	14,845,279
Grand Total	$33,313,554

For maintenance and repair of properties the total is $16,601,905 and rental of buildings and properties, $960,432.

Mr. Fulton: Has a decision yet been reached for what I am sure will be a small item in this large total to provide for a drill hall for the Rocky Mountain Rangers with headquarters at Salmon Arm, which drill hall was burned down about six months?

Mr. Claxton: That is one of the places receiving consideration, but I regret that there is no express provision here for that building. As the hon. member will see, we have provided $1,913,000 for the construction of reserve accommodation. How much of that is proceeded with and where will depend on when the plans can be made and the contracts let. We do propose this year to begin a modest program of reserve armoury accommodation at the places which seem to need it most.

Mr. Harkness: Under navy there is an item of $2,304,900 for travel, transportation, freight and express. I presume that would be entirely travel by land and would not include travel in ships of the navy?

Mr. Claxton: That is right. It might include some marine transport for naval personnel proceeding to England to take courses. If there are no navy ships available we must pay their passage by sea.

Mr. Harkness: How much of that would be for travel, leaving out transportation, freight and express?

Mr. Claxton: The total for travel and transportation is $1,189,900; freight and express, $415,000.

Mr. Harkness: Would that include the cost involved in men going on leave?

Mr. Claxton: Yes. For example, the largest single item is for an estimated more than 2,000 personnel to be transferred from coast to coast at a cost of $101 each. There is over $200,000 right there.

Mr. Harkness: I was wondering whether it would include the cost of men going on leave because it seems to be quite a large item for travel by land by naval personnel.

Mr. Claxton: That is right, but it is due largely to the fact that our naval establishments are on the east and west coasts of the country. Whenever a man is transferred from one to the other he must go right across the country and there is no way to send him except by air or land.

Mr. Harkness: I notice that a large part of the increase in the vote for the Royal Canadian Naval Reserve is made up by the pay and allowances item, from which I would assume that it is expected there will be a considerable increase in the number of the naval reserve. If that is so I am glad it is taking place. Can the minister tell us the estimated increase?

Mr. Claxton: This vote is based on an estimated strength of 4,500 which would be averaged throughout the year. It represents an increase from the present figure of 3,619 at May 31 of this year, so there is an increase of something under 900.

Mr. Harkness: Is it anticipated that new stations will be set up in the coming year?

Mr. Claxton: No, we are intending to go through this year with the 21 that we have, that is the 20 we had before the entry of Newfoundland plus H.M.C.S. Cabot which was established upon the entry of Newfoundland into confederation.

Mr. Harkness: Could the minister tell us what buildings were acquired or constructed during the last year, and in particular if a building for recreational purposes and a laundry building were constructed at Esquimalt?

Mr. Claxton: Neither building has been constructed. It is planned to complete the construction this year of a new permanent barracks at Halifax and also to do a considerable amount of construction at Dartmouth. There is no express provision for Esquimalt as yet. I have seen the list of priorities and have discussed the situation with the chief of the naval service and I assure my hon. friend that the laundry building, the new barracks and other buildings at Esquimalt are high on the list.

Mr. Fulton: The minister told me a few moments ago that there was no inventory of the defence buildings. Do I understand from that that when a building is constructed or otherwise acquired it is not carried on the defence department's books? It seems to me that such a building should be reflected in the assets of the dominion.

Mr. Claxton: The hon. member's assumption is quite correct. There is no capital entry in respect of defence properties.

Mr. Fulton: Why not?

Mr. Claxton: It is not government policy with regard to any department that I know of. I am afraid that is really a matter for the Minister of Finance, but that is my information.

Mr. Harkness: What proportion of the $9,900,000 in the naval vote is for that purpose? You read the figures in a hurry, and it was rather difficult to catch them.

Mr. Claxton: $5,343,000.

Mr. Harkness: I take it that is all for construction on the west coast.

Mr. Claxton: No. The largest single item is at Dartmouth, Nova Scotia.

Mr. Harkness: I meant the east coast. The construction of these other buildings recommended at Esquimalt will have to wait until this other construction is finished? Is that the situation?

Mr. Claxton: Until it is started. We feel that the needs for this other construction are greater than on the west coast.

Mr. Harkness: Under the next item which deals with personnel supplies and services, food supplies, and so forth, can the minister tell us whether the deficiencies in personnel equipment, clothing and so forth, which were outlined in the Mainguy report, have now been made up, and what the situation is in regard to these items?

Mr. Claxton: The deficiencies are being made good. I have not had any shortage of issue clothing or equipment for new entries reported to me since six months ago.

Mr. Harkness: I take it that the deficiencies have been made good. You said they were being made good, and if you have not had any reports of deficiencies for six months then I presume they have been made good and there are none.

Mr. Claxton: We are proposing to spend a total of $1,816,400 on clothing and personnel equipment. Looking at the details of that amount, it is almost entirely for clothing, and the amounts would indicate to me that they are for normal supplies rather than large amounts to make good deficiencies.

Mr. Harkness: Can the minister tell us how much of the amount of $5,700,000 is for food, and what it costs per day at the present time to feed a man in the navy?

Mr. Claxton: The food for all three services is now an identical ration, and I believe it to be the best ever issued to forces anywhere. The cost varies with each contract according to the amount tendered. At the present time it is running about $1 per man per day.

Mr. Harkness: As to the next item, stores, equipment and so forth, it is up from $27 million to $38 million. Can the minister tell us what is the cause of the bulk of that increase? Is it because of new ships which are to be completed and paid for this year or is it mainly for other items of equipment?

Mr. Claxton: Yes, it is. The largest amount is for signal and wireless stores. The additional amount for that purpose is about $3,500,000.

Mr. Harkness: I could not hear the minister.

Mr. Claxton: The additional amount sought for signal and wireless stores is approximately $3,500,000. There is an amount of $5 million for armament stores, which is largely rearmament of existing vessels and similar changes. For acquisition and addition of ships we propose to spend $9,775,000 against $7,150,000 voted for 1949-50. There is also a slight increase for naval and aircraft stores.

Mr. Harkness: How many new ships coming under this amount do you expect to have come into service this year?

Mr. Claxton: We have contracts let or arranged for nine ships including an Arctic transport icebreaker, three antisubmarine vessels, four minesweepers and a gate vessel. None of the ships will be completed this year with the possible exception of the gate vessel, which is the smallest of the nine. Next year will see the completion of some of the minesweepers. The completion of the others will depend on the progress made by the yards, and also on the most difficult problem of what modifications will be made.

Mr. Harkness: Some of this money is for payments on these nine ships?

Mr. Claxton: Yes, the $9 million is all for payment in respect of the year 1950-51. The total program involves over $35 million.

Mr. Fulton: Under each service there is included in the sundries item an amount for communication services. Does that mean what other departments call telegraph, telegrams and telephones, or is that a special communications service of the defence department?

Mr. Claxton: It is telegraph and telegrams.

Mr. Fulton: Does the department maintain its own communication system operated by the Royal Canadian Signals?

Mr. Claxton: Yes, indeed. We have an interservice signal system with a network covering pretty well all of Canada. I think the service extends for a total of about 35,000 miles. It is also in communication with ships at sea and with other countries of the commonwealth. It is a completely integrated triservice system without overlapping, the navy army and air force each contributing some part to it. On occasions such as the Fraser valley floods, as the hon. member will recall, the Winnipeg floods and washouts in the maritimes, it has handled all commercial traffic when the commercial signal services could not carry on.

Mr. Fulton: Is the cost of that charged under this communication heading?

Mr. Claxton: No. It comes out of the general vote.

Mr. Fulton: Under each appropriate service?

Mr. Claxton: Yes.

[Mr. Claxton.]

Mr. Fulton: Is that used for the ordinary requirements of the defence department or is it kept especially for emergencies?

Mr. Claxton: It is used from day to day for the ordinary requirements of the defence department, and also for some messages for other government departments.

Mr. Fulton: What I really wanted to ask, and will ask now, is whether it is used to the maximum for the ordinary routine business of the department so as to keep the charges made by commercial companies down to a minimum.

Mr. Claxton: Yes, indeed.

Mr. Fraser: Where is the steel for these nine ships being purchased?

Mr. Claxton: In Canada.

Mr. Fraser: All in Canada?

Mr. Claxton: There will be some special sizes, shapes and pieces that it will be more economical to get from the United Kingdom, but the great majority comes from Canada.

Mr. Fraser: It was reported in the press some time ago that some of it was coming from Germany. Is that so?

Mr. Claxton: No.

Mr. Fraser: I am glad to hear that.

Mr. Harkness: Could the minister tell us the situation with respect to our naval aircraft at the present time? Have we secured any of the newer types, or are we still operating with the types that were current at the end of the war? Where are our replacements coming from? Are we making any in Canada, or are they coming from Great Britain or the United States?

Mr. Claxton: We are still using aircraft which were either in existence or coming into production at the end of the second world war. They are Sea Fires, Sea Furies and Avengers. We do not make any in Canada, but those we now use are modified and repaired in this country. We do not plan on making any in Canada at the present time; and whether or not we will replace those now in use will depend upon the policy adopted with respect to the naval air arm and also upon developments in other countries. Only now are the United Kingdom and the United States commencing the production of post-war types of naval aircraft. We believe the situation will see a good deal of development in the next two or three years, and we believe the best course to follow for the present at least is to carry on with the equipment we have.

Mr. Harkness: Under the item of fuel costs for ships, aircraft and mechanical equipment

I see the estimated expenditure is down some $700,000. This would seem to indicate that it is proposed to spend less time at sea this year than last year. This morning the minister indicated that a naval exercise is to be held which will take squadrons from both the east and west coasts over to Great Britain, and that those were to be the largest naval manoeuvres in which our vessels have taken part since the war. Having that in mind one would think the time spent at sea would be increased this year, but this reduction of $700,000 in fuel costs would appear to indicate the contrary. Would the minister explain that?

Mr. Claxton: This apparent reduction is entirely due to an overestimate last year. When those estimates were prepared fuel oil was approximately $4 per barrel. For the current year we are estimating on the basis of fuel oil at approximately $2.80 per barrel, which more than accounts for the decrease shown.

Mr. Harkness: Then when we come to the army we find that civil salaries and wages are down, as was the case in the navy. Is that for the same reason, that they have been reducing the staff and, wherever possible, replacing officers at desk jobs with civilian personnel? If so, to what extent has that been done?

Mr. Claxton: This reduction is due to an overestimate in 1949-50. We found that by economizing we were able to get along with five hundred fewer civilians than the number for which provision had been made. Here again we are trying to reduce the number of officers at headquarters, and there has been a very substantial reduction this year.

Mr. Fulton: I am pleased to see a reduction in the amount under travel, transportation, freight and express. Was that because of an overestimate last year, or is it anticipated that there will be a curtailment in these expenditures this year?

Mr. Claxton: The largest single factor contributing to the reduction is a decrease in the cost of posting personnel, amounting to $1,500,800. That is due to the fact that as we went through the post-war organization period we got more and more personnel to the right places at the right time. Also we are tending to increase the period of posting, to a minimum of two years.

Mr. Fulton: Would this item include the transportation costs in connection with such things as Exercise Sweetbriar and other schemes or exercises, or does this only cover such things as leave, postings, duty journeys and so on?

Mr. Claxton: This would include the portion of the transportation in connection with Exercise Sweetbriar not handled by the motor vehicles of the army itself or by the R.C.A.F. We had to transport a considerable number of personnel either by train or by commercial aircraft, and that cost would be included here.

Mr. Fulton: Then would the minister give us the actual expenditures under this heading in 1949-50?

Mr. Claxton: For travel and transportation for the active force the expenditure in 1949-50 was $2,687,820.87. The cost of freight and express was $1,993,099.57.

Mr. Harkness: Under the item dealing with the Canadian army reserve force, would the minister tell us the percentage of strength of the reserve force at the present time? That would give us a general idea of the strength of the reserve force in relation to what it would be if it were up to full strength. I know of one battery, for instance, which is at about 75 to 80 per cent of strength. I know of another one which is only about 10 to 15 per cent of strength, and I should like to know the general percentage for all units in the reserve.

Mr. Claxton: It is rather more than 50 per cent.

Mr. Harkness: Then could the minister tell us how many reserve army personnel went to camp last year? Often the paper strength of these reserve units is not a very good indication of the real strength or effectiveness. Quite often a considerable number of people appear on only two or three parades during the year, but they are carried on the paper strength and receive pay for the parades they attend. If you can get the number of people who have gone to camp it is a much better indication of the training a reserve unit has completed. When the minister gives that information perhaps he will also tell us what percentage of the reserve unit strength that amounts to. I think it might be helpful if we had that information as well.

Mr. Claxton: 10,002 went to camp in 1939.

Mr. Harkness: What is the official strength? I think the minister gave that earlier?

Mr. Claxton: At present it is about 44,000.

Mr. Harkness: That is a little less than 25 per cent?

Mr. Claxton: Yes.

Mr. Harkness: During consideration of these estimates a few weeks ago, in speaking of the reserve units the minister said they now had all the equipment that they required, and all that they could handle. In some cases that may be true, but in other cases I do not know that it is true. I should like to cite a specific example to the minister and invite his comments. I refer to a particular heavy ack-ack regiment of which I know. This regiment has one radar set, and its establishment calls for eight radar sets. The set which the regiment has is a Mark III, with a range of about 60,000 yards. This is the type of set that was used in the early part of the war, and which is now obsolete. This same regiment has four guns, and its establishment of course is 24.

The regiment consists of three batteries, and each battery is supposed to have eight guns. Apparently each battery has one gun, and there is one extra you might say. It seems to me that a distribution of armament of that nature is not sufficient to carry on proper training. These heavy ack-ack guns fire as a troop of four, particularly if they are being used for ground shooting which is one of their roles. It would seem to me that four guns for a regiment of that sort are not sufficient. It is not as good a distribution of guns as we had before the war in the reserve artillery batteries. At that time the one battery of which I have knowledge had four guns. This makes one wonder whether the provision of equipment to reserve force units, particularly those of a technical nature, is sufficient to carry out training.

In addition to commenting on that particular situation can the minister tell us—perhaps for security reasons he does not wish to do so—how many up-to-date radar sets for use with these heavy ack-ack guns we have in Canada; in other words, whether we have up-to-date radar sets which could be distributed to these heavy ack-ack regiments if required. If we have any of these up-to-date sets, why is it that at least one per regiment has not been distributed so that the personnel can get training on them?

Mr. Claxton: It happens, Mr. Chairman, that I know the number of heavy ack-ack guns that we have in Canada, and I shall be glad to give that information to the hon. member privately. We believe that we have possibly more than we require, and we are considering making some available to other countries. The reasons for not issuing more than one to some units—

Mr. Harkness: Is the minister speaking of guns or radar sets now?

Mr. Claxton: Guns. I assume the hon. gentleman is stating the facts correctly, and the reason is that there frequently is not the personnel or space to use more than one. There are large numbers in mobilization reserve, and if any unit can use any gun or any equipment that we have, then that equipment is under the control of the local G.O.C. or area commander who can issue the equipment without any difficulty at all. No case has been brought to my attention of any lack of such equipment.

With regard to our radar equipment on such guns being modern the hon. gentleman is substantially correct. There is more modern equipment, although what we have works well. It would cost $180,000 to apply modern equipment to each one of those guns, and we have thought that that amount of money could be better spent at present, in view of the possible developments in anti-aircraft work which might make that expenditure undesirable. It is a question of balancing whether we should do that now or do something else. We have decided to postpone that expenditure and do something else which we regard as more urgent. As hon. members know, the largest part of our expenditure on new equipment is for new ships for the navy, and aircraft for the air force.

Mr. Harkness: If I might just follow that up, the minister says there is plenty of this equipment. All the unit has to do is to apply for it. I happen to know that the unit did apply, but did not get it. I recall particularly a personal experience I had along that line about two years ago when I was still commanding a reserve regiment. I had an extremely difficult time getting S. P. guns. I knew the S. P. guns were here; nevertheless we were only issued them on the basis of one per battery which was almost useless for any sort of tactical training. It was only useful from the point of view of learning gun control and things along that line. You need at least two S. P. guns working together to give any training at all to the members of a troop or battery as to how those guns would be employed. I can assure the minister that I had extreme difficulty, in fact my second in command was turned down in regard to getting these guns. I had to take it up personally with N.D.H.Q. before we secured an increase in the allotment. I know from personal experience that frequently units cannot get an increase of equipment which they consider necessary. I would suggest that this situation should be looked into, and the reserve units should be canvassed by means of a questionnaire to commanding officers to ascertain what they think their needs are.

Of course the facilities to take care of the equipment must be considered. I know there is quite a bit in what the minister says. In some places there are no facilities for garaging or otherwise looking after and repairing certain equipment. In a considerable number of places those facilities do exist, and I think some units could do with more equipment than they have been issued, particularly weapons.

Mr. Claxton: I would be very glad to follow up the suggestion the hon. member has made. It happens that in the autumn of 1949, at the beginning of the training period, either the chief of the general staff, one of the senior officers at defence headquarters or myself attended meetings of all the reserve associations of the army reserve forces. One of the questions we put to them was, "Are you satisfied as regards equipment?" No one suggested that he was not. I think I have read all the resolutions of the twelve associations, and I do not believe that a single one of them deals with the problem of equipment. I have been assured there is no shortage for the reserve forces, but I shall be glad to follow up the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. Harkness: I am not suggesting there is any shortage. I believe this equipment is here, particularly the items I mentioned, the heavy ack-ack guns and the S. P. guns. We have them here, but they are not out in the hands of the different units that could use them.

Mr. Fulton: While we are on the subject of the reserve army, I should like to follow that up with the minister for a moment or two. I want to speak about the number of men who go to camp, because it is very difficult for a reserve unit to do any tactical training, which is perhaps the most important kind of training, when it only has a small number of men at camp.

I was speaking to a member of a reserve unit just now, and he tells me that in some cases they have to make up composite companies for schemes with a platoon from here and a platoon from there. That is not satisfactory training at all. He told me the difficulty is that in most cases the men are willing to go but it is not convenient for their employer to let them go at the time the camp is being held. I know this matter has been discussed previously and I do not want to go into it again in any detail. I should like the minister to say, if he can, what progress is being made in encouraging employers to make it possible for their employees to go to camp, and to compare the percentage which went to camp this year of the total strength of the reserve army, which worked out to 22 per cent, with the percentage which went to camp last year and to say whether there is any improvement in this matter or not.

Mr. Claxton: With regard to the efforts made, to persuade employers to allow reserve personnel to go to camp, I think we have had great success. Appeals to employers: not only have these been made through their associations like the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers Association and so on, with which I have corresponded directly, which have been most co-operative, some of which have passed resolutions urging their member organizations to do this. Also for the third consecutive year I have addressed a letter personally to all leading employers in Canada asking them to support the reserve army. This year we sent out some 3,300 such letters and there has been only one unfavourable reply. The support is very good indeed. However, many concerns such as, for example, the steel companies which have round-the-clock operations, find it difficult to make the adjustments necessary to permit men to go to camps who want to go. The figure of 10,000 represents a substantial increase over last year. It meets to a considerable degree our objective in that it consists largely of officers and N.C.O.'s. The figure for last year was 7,092.

Mr. Fulton: What was the percentage of the strength that figure represented?

Mr. Claxton: That was against 38,000. This year it is 10,000 out of 44,000. It seems to be about the same or a little better. The type of training at these camps, as I think everyone recognizes, is different in character to what it was before the war. The administration is done entirely by the camp administrative staff. The men arrive and spend their full time at camp in intensive training in much the same way as they would do if they were attending a corps school. I think those who saw the demonstration at Petawawa last week can appreciate that it would form part of a good training. Also, where it is possible, units are encouraged to drive up with their own equipment, and some of them have driven up with their own guns. We plan to fly a considerable part of reserve personnel to camp so as to save their time. I must say the response from the men themselves is most encouraging. I go to as many camps as I can, and I find that they are enthusiastic. They have to be, in order to give up their own time, as many of them do. But they are doing a great service and we are doing everything possible to encourage them.

Mr. George: I am sorry that I missed part of this discussion, owing to the fact that I had to attend a meeting of another committee. From what I have heard since I came in, however, I am led to believe that there is a great misunderstanding or lack of apprehension of what the reserve army is doing. First of all, we have had no trouble in getting personnel to camp. There may be two or three men who cannot get away because of their occupation—as the minister says, in such companies as steel companies, foundries, et cetera. I know of the odd man who cannot get away. But on the whole we have 100 per cent co-operation from employers.

With regard to training, as most of you know by now, I am second in command of the 8th Princess Louise New Brunswick Hussars. We have been spending a terrific amount of money for the last two years. Two years ago we started to add up for ourselves what we were getting for this money, and we found that we had a great number of men partially trained but that we had nobody fully qualified. That situation applies not only to our own unit but to many others. So in order to show some results, we thought we should qualify tradesmen. An armoured unit is composed probably of more tradesmen than is any other type of unit. I am subject to correction there, but in any event we have a high percentage of tradesmen. To go with week-end training and local training, we ran several courses of ten days' duration to finish up the qualification of tradesmen. We now have 117 tradesmen qualified. Those were qualified by an active force trade test board; they are now fully qualified and are drawing trades pay along with their pay and allowances, the same as the active forces.

With regard to summer camp, I think the object is to exercise these tradesmen who are now qualified and those who have partly qualified. In other words, our whole object is to produce a regiment fully qualified and able to take the field. The criticism was made a moment ago that composite companies had to be made up in order to exercise tactically at camp. That is not the purpose of camp, as I understand it. As the minister said, it is more a corps school. I would hate to see this change. We can exercise companies locally but at summer camps we have the best instructors and the best facilities and I think it would be a great mistake not to exercise our men in the trades in which they are qualified.

Mr. Harkness: In connection with this matter of getting men to go to camp, it so happens that I had a conversation with a reserve force officer in Ottawa here yesterday, and whom I met by chance. He made the complaint that it was difficult; in quite a number of cases, personnel in his unit who worked in the civil service either were not able to get away or were discouraged from going because it was going to make it awkward in their respective offices. According to his story it was intimated to some of these people: All right, they were entitled to go to camp under the rules, but if they went to camp, when it came time for certain promotions which might be in the offing, as far as they were concerned they might find themselves in difficulty. If that sort of thing prevails to any extent in the civil service—and I think it applies only to a limited number of cases—then it is a thing which the Department of National Defence and the government should make sure is eradicated so that there will be no question about people being able to go to camp because of, we will say—and perhaps this might be the right word—intimidation within their department of the civil service. I do not know whether anything definite can be done by the minister.

Mr. Claxton: What the hon. member has described is directly contrary to the policy of the federal government as expressed by the governor in council.

Mr. Harkness: Yes, I know it is.

Mr. Claxton: Instructions have been given to all government departments accordingly. If such a case of intimidation or implied intimidation ever occurs, then I think it would be the duty of every hon. member to—and I am fairly sure any hon. member who had the evidence would—mention it to me or ventilate it here. It has never been brought to my attention. If any such case does occur, I hope hon. members will bring it to my attention.

Mr. Harkness: As to the acquisition and construction of buildings and properties for the army, of the $22 million which is to be spent this year, how much is for housing?

Mr. Claxton: It would take a few minutes to pick the items out of the lists so as to total the amount for housing, but the total would not be very much. We are not doing defence housing at other than the most isolated localities. C.M.H.C. is doing all the ordinary housing for the defence department. But included in this year's estimates would be a number of relatively small items to finish up existing contracts and to provide for housing at isolated centres.

Mr. Harkness: One other question about the cadet service: I see the estimate for that is down. I hope it does not mean that the cadet services are being curtailed.

Mr. Claxton: No, there is no decrease in activities. The number of cadets provided for, the amount of training and the amount of payments of grants and for instructors are on the same basis. The decrease is explained largely by the decrease in the amount provided for travel and transportation where there was an overestimate of $128,884 last year.

Mr. Fulton: Can the minister say to what extent there is repair by civilian contracts of vehicles, weapons and technical stores under this heading of stores and equipment? I was wondering why R.C.E.M.E. cannot do it all.

Mr. Claxton: For the reason that they have more work than they can handle now. We have some 22,000 motor vehicles in the armed forces, and a good many of them are getting well on in years, so that they involve a good deal of repair work. At all the main centres R.C.E.M.E. has more than it can handle and work is allotted to civilian contractors.

Mr. Harkness: Under sundries I see "Education of dependent children." I presume that is for children in isolated areas, or something of that sort. Can the minister tell us to what extent the department has provided educational facilities for children?

Mr. Claxton: Where there are no educational facilities available such as at Shilo, Borden, Barriefield, Rivers, Chilliwack, Churchill and Whitehorse we have provided some sixteen primary schools to look after 2,200 children of service personnel, and that is the only way we can do it. We regard it as a good and proper way of looking after a natural need.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): When the minister says there are no educational facilities at Barriefield, does he realize that that is practically in the shadow of Queen's university in Kingston?

Mr. Claxton: Also I might say the Royal Military College, the National Defence College and the Staff College, but they are not very well equipped to deal with children from five to eleven or twelve years of age.

Mr. Harkness: If I remember aright I think the defence department put up a school in Calgary right opposite Currie barracks, as a matter of fact, after some considerable discussion with the city as to whether the city should build the school on adjacent property or whether the army should operate there. I thought that because of the fact that this was probably the general policy the army would operate their own schools wherever there were a considerable number of servicemen. I wonder whether from what the minister says I am to take it that it is not the policy, and that it is only in isolated areas that the schools are being built? Can the minister tell us why it was done in Calgary?

Mr. Claxton: My recollection is that when we started the school there it was outside the municipal limits. Speaking from recollection again we could not persuade the municipality to extend its service there, so we had to do it. Subsequently arrangements were made whereby the work was undertaken by the municipality on our making a payment to the city of Calgary of $400. I am speaking from memory now, and I am subject to correction.

Mr. Knight: Is the school in Churchill in the military camp or on the townsite?

Mr. Claxton: At the military camp.

Mr. Fulton: Can the minister give us an explanation of the item at the bottom of page 173:

> Less—estimated amount required for commitments nominally to fall due during the fiscal year.

I cannot quite understand it as it is set out in the estimates. I am not asking for a breakdown. Can the minister explain what it means?

Mr. Claxton: It is the amount we collected for aerial service from other government departments.

Mr. Fulton: I am sorry; I have the wrong page. I meant page 172.

Mr. Claxton: I beg your pardon. That is explained by reference to the main vote at page 31. The commitment authority is $438,178,000 as shown in item 202, and that corresponds with the total of $438,178,000 as shown in the details on page 172. Then there is deducted from that the amount of the current year's commitment authority of $53,245,696, corresponding to that amount shown on page 31, reducing the amount to the cash appropriation of $384,932,304, which is the figure shown for item 202.

Mr. Fulton: I agree with the minister that the figure $384 million odd is shown, but I do not understand what the reason is why this $53 million odd is deducted. In other words I do not understand the explanation given at the bottom of page 172, and there is no explanation of the figure given at page 31. Why is this $53 million deducted?

Mr. Claxton: The amount of the actual cash appropriation for national defence not covered by other items is $384,932,304. In order to enable the department to make commitments in respect of the current year notwithstanding section 29 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, provision for this additional amount of $53,245,696 is made.

Mr. Harkness: I remember a vote in some other department, I think resources and development, in connection with roads in the Yukon. Can the minister state whether this northwest highway, or the Alaska highway as it is usually known, is completely under control of the army and whether the army is wholly responsible for its maintenance?

Mr. Claxton: It is entirely under the army.

Mr. Harkness: The item for aerial photographic survey is reduced from $709,033 to $533,380, which would indicate that the number of squadrons used in this work is being reduced. I have always felt that these aerial photographic squadrons did an extremely useful work, not only during the war but since the war as well. They have mapped a large part of the country and I wonder why their strength is being reduced. I think this section of the air force has a greater practical use in time of peace than almost any other component and it would be a pity if it were cut down.

Mr. Claxton: I would quite agree with my hon. friend, if there were the same need as existed before. We have been able to accelerate the program over the last three years so that in each year we have been able to photograph almost a million square miles. The number of man-years which it is estimated will be needed in 1950-51 is 206 as against 305 provided for 1949-50.

Mr. Harkness: What does "man-year" mean?

Mr. Claxton: The average number of men that would be employed for a full year if they were employed, over that period. The work is gradually being completed and I hope we will see another sharp reduction next year because the need will no longer exist to the same extent. In other words, we have largely covered Canada by aerial photography and have turned over the photographs to the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys for mapping. As we reduce the amount of aerial photography required we plan to convert some of the squadrons engaged in that work to other operational work such as aerial reconnaissance and bombing.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, before this item passes I want to point out that the questions that have been asked have been in a general way based upon the necessity of seeking to obtain information which is not present in the details. I can only express my regret, with the changes that have taken place in our relationships with other Atlantic powers and with the events that have occurred so recently, that there should be no indication that it is the intention of the Department of National Defence to adjust its affairs in accordance with these extremely important changes.

[Mr. Harkness.]

At the moment there is nothing that anyone can do to obtain information which is essential except to ask the type of general questions which have been pressed for. In spite of the fact that we have gained nothing in that respect during the present session I can only express the hope that when the house meets next year we will then have the estimates presented in a way which can be understood and that those estimates, to whatever extent is practical, will follow the same pattern as the estimates of other departments so that they can be examined in the same measure of detail. When I say that it is hoped they can be examined next year, that is always subject to the hope that this condition which has become so serious may not demand a much earlier consideration by the house of the problem we are discussing.

Item agreed to.

203. Defence research and development, subject to allocation by the treasury board, and to authorize total commitments for this purpose of $27,983,161 including authority notwithstanding section 29 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, to make commitments for the current year of $24,925,361 and commitments for future years of $3,057,800 against which commitments it is estimated that actual expenditure in 1950-51 will not exceed $23,925,361.

Mr. Herridge: I do not know whether the minister has seen the article, but in the last issue of the Montreal Standard there is a news report under a byline of Ottawa. There is an article by Gerald Waring, entitled "White Elephant in the Arctic." In brief this article points out that in 1945 certain arrangements were made between Canada and the United States for the installation of long-range aerial navigation stations in the north and that something over $50 million has been spent on those stations. It is stated that these stations have been found to be entirely unsuccessful and that the whole thing has had to be abandoned. Canada is said to have paid a fairly large proportion of the $50 million which was expended.

Secondly, the article states that a great portion of the supplies were flown in by air at great expense during the first year, but then during the second year they were taken in by water transport at much less expense. The suggestion is that all the equipment should have been taken in by water. The article is said to be based on certain defence forces information.

I should like the minister to inform the committee if there is any basis for what is stated in this article and why, if great saving could have been made by the use of water transport, this equipment was flown in by air. Surely if this article is correct I think it can be argued that this house should be told this sort of thing directly and not have to get information from the press with regard to such large expenditure which apparently was a mistake on the part of those directly concerned with defence research.

Mr. Claxton: I have seen the article and also I am generally familiar with the situation. What happened was that in 1945 and 1946 the United States and Canadian authorities felt that it would be desirable to establish a chain of loran stations in the far north. This method of obtaining navigational fixes has proved successful in places farther south. The initiative in this regard was not taken by the Canadian government, but we co-operated. This method of obtaining a fix had never been tried in the far north.

It involved the measurement of signals sent out thousands of miles in millionths of seconds. By sending out a message to an aircraft from a tower and measuring the time of the "echo" from that tower with the time of an echo from two or three other stations it may be possible by measurements running into the millionths of seconds to determine the exact position of the aircraft. As I said, this has been successful in other parts and there was no way of telling whether it would be successful in the far north until it was tried there.

It was tried, and while there was a moderate degree of success it was not considered sufficiently reliable all the time to justify its continued operation at very considerable cost in peacetime. Conditions might change at some future date or there might be developments in the art itself, to justify its resumption. At the time it was considered very urgent that these stations should be established. A considerable amount of work was done by airlift. That airlift was largely supplied by the United States. We did not have the aircraft to do the whole job. A relatively small proportion of the expenditure was due to our using Canadian aircraft. My information is that it would have been possible to supply them by ship but this would have meant a year's delay which was not considered desirable.

The decision to discontinue the use of these stations was made only recently. As a matter of fact I sent to the United States authorities, in accordance with our arrangements, a draft of a statement to be made jointly by us announcing the discontinuance when, through some source or other, the statement appeared in the Standard to which the hon. member has referred.

The cost to Canada of the whole operation was nothing like the figure suggested in the article. It is not possible to segregate the cost because air force equipment and personnel were used from their general resources. A large percentage of the material, transportation and equipment was supplied by the United States.

In terms of defence the cost was not a very great sum, and there was no way of arriving at the decision not to do it unless we tried it. It proved unsuccessful because of ionospheric and other conditions which make radio communication exceedingly difficult. In the whole area running north from James bay through Hudson bay and spreading out to the northwest particularly, radio communication is probably more difficult than anywhere else in the world owing to electrical disturbances and other causes which we are investigating all the time. Without trying the experiment, it was not possible to ascertain that it would not work. The effort was made, was partially successful, but not sufficiently so to justify its continued use in peacetime.

Pensions and other benefits—

214. Government's contribution to the permanent forces pension fund, $10,799,600.

Mr. Noseworthy: Mr. Chairman, I should like the minister to give a short explanation of this item, particularly as to the differentiation made in the payment of pensions to retired officers with more than ten but less than twenty years' service. I have had considerable correspondence from officers in that category living in my constituency. I understand a considerable number of officers in that class were retired after 1945. The feeling among many of them is that those who were retired were men who secured their commissions during the war while most of those who were retained in the forces were in the professional class, that is, graduates of military college. Can the minister tell us how many with more than ten but less than twenty years service have been retired since 1945 and the numbers of professional and non-professional soldiers? I should like to know how many were men who received their commissions in the field and how many were professional soldiers, graduates of military college.

My information is that those with more than ten but less than twenty years' service are broken down into three categories. First, there are those who were discharged as medically unfit and who receive full pension. Second, there are those who have reached the prescribed age for their rank. There is some uncertainty as to whether the date of retirement is the date the bill was passed, the date they were discharged or the date the bill is to be proclaimed. The third group consists of those who have not reached the prescribed age and who are subject to a reduction of one-third in their pension.

A number of cases have come to my attention of men with seventeen, eighteen or nineteen years' service who have had to take a one-third reduction in their pension. There is also some question as to why the date of June, 1944, was accepted. These men are men who were in the permanent forces before June, 1944. There appears to be considerable discrimination between those who were in the permanent forces before that time and those who have been taken into the forces since then. The former will lose one-third of the pension, while those who have joined since June, 1944, will probably be entitled to full pension upon retirement. Will the minister give us a statement in explanation of that situation?

Mr. Claxton: I am familiar with the case the hon. member has raised, but the figures have not been kept in such a way as would enable me to answer his question. To do so it would be necessary to ascertain the number of officers who have gone on pension since 1945 and put them into the categories that he mentioned. That would be quite a job, but I am sure we can secure the information for the hon. member. We should be able to do so within the next couple of days.

Mr. Noseworthy: Is my analysis of the situation correct so far as the three groups are concerned?

Mr. Claxton: As to the groups it is correct, but with regard to the rates obtained by the various groups and the reasons there are three, some supplementary information will have to be given.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

423. Departmental administration, $482,875.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): We all know in a general way that the minister's department covers a lot of territory. He has a great many things under his charge. Without leaving it to a series of questions as we go along, is the minister prepared to give us a broad view of the responsibilities under his charge? For example, I have here an alphabetical list of the activities of the department. It begins with the agricultural commodities branch and runs on through the economic research and development branch, and so on. Without going into detail, is the minister prepared, as a preliminary to the estimates and by way of assistance to us in understanding the whole situation, to use this alphabetical list and outline the duties of his department? As a matter of fact the list is to be found in the departmental telephone directory in alphabetical form and in a more comprehensive way than I have ever seen it anywhere else. It will take some time, but if the minister will see fit to go through the list it will give members of the committee a better idea of the scope of the work of the department, the minister's responsibilities, and the relation of the various activities that are going on. If I may expand for a moment, there is a reference to the industrial development branch. Then a page or two later there is an industry and merchandising division; and of course I realize that merchandising is a thing by itself.

I have explained my point, and I wonder if the minister would do as I suggest, going right through and giving us a short account of the activities of each branch of his department. Let me illustrate what I mean. Under "Economic research and development" we have several headings. The first is information, which I presume is a general item under the direction of Mr. Skelton. Then we come to trade policy; then to organization and services; the economic research division, divided into three subdivisions which include area studies, industry studies and private and public investment. Then there is the economic forecasting division; the industrial development division, and so on. I hope I have made my point clear, so perhaps the minister will give us the story of the department, following down the line and explaining to us what each branch does.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall endeavour to explain the department as my hon. friend suggests. The annual report for 1949 has just been tabled, and I shall follow the headings as there set out. If my hon. friend has a copy of that report he may be able better to follow me.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should have, perhaps, but I have not.

Mr. Howe: First is the administration branch, which is similar to the administration branch of every department. It includes the deputy minister and two assistant deputies, and the accounting and administrative branches common to most departments; the personnel division; the central pay office; the staff training and welfare section; the records division, and various activities which come under the heading of general administration.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Would the minister prefer that I withhold any questions until he is through?

Mr. Howe: I would be glad to have my hon. friend ask any questions he wishes.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The minister just mentioned two or three headings, including a welfare division. Do I understand he is passing over that without comment? I should like to hear something about it.

Mr. Howe: It is the staff training and welfare division. Examinations are held for various services, for instance the trade commissioner service. Certain applicants are accepted; then they are given a course of training which takes them to various parts of Canada under the guidance of experienced trade commissioners. They are given a thorough training in the work they will undertake when they go to foreign fields.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): What is the significance of the word "welfare"?

Mr. Howe: The division also looks after the welfare, for example, of our trade commissioners in all parts of the world. When you have commissioners in the Belgian Congo, or South Africa, or in the Far East, the welfare of the staff becomes rather a problem. A branch of the training and welfare division keeps records of postings and how commissioners are getting on.

Then there is the trade commissioner service itself. We have trade commissioner offices in forty-six countries throughout the world, and that number is increased as world conditions permit. They are the eyes and ears of Canadian business. They report back trade possibilities in their territories for Canadian commodities, report on trade conditions, and so on. In that connection there is a weekly publication called Foreign Trade which has a wide circulation in Canadian industry and which summarizes the reports of trade commissioners from all localities. It mentions openings for Canadian exports that have been drawn to the attention of the department by the trade commissioners, and in general provides up-to-date information to those interested in the export of Canadian products.

Then we have the commodities branch which deals with metals, timber and raw materials generally, except grains, which are handled in a separate branch. This branch is divided into an export division and an import division. The work of the export division, of course, is obvious. It works with the trade commissioners in finding openings, and with Canadian industry in calling the attention of exporters to those openings abroad for Canadian products. The import division works with our trade commissioners to find markets in Canada for commodities offered abroad that are required by the Canadian economy. This branch was opened at the end of the war and has proved extraordinarily useful in helping to balance our trade, particularly with the sterling area and European countries. It has been useful to Canadian manufacturers and Canadian industry generally by finding sources of materials in short supply in this country.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): To what extent are these services availed of? Could the minister give us the percentage of importers, whether importers for sale or industrialists who need materials, who act through the Department of Trade and Commerce, and what percentage act individually?

Mr. Howe: It is impossible to say with any degree of accuracy, but I do know that Canadian industry is very much in the habit of dealing with both divisions. It is seldom that an officer of a representative industry comes to Ottawa without calling on both divisions. Both are very active, and are considered very useful.

Then the commodities section deals with such things as surplus foods such as potatoes, canned salmon, and so on; anything in the way of food that requires to be marketed abroad. It also deals with chemicals, machinery, metals, mineral products, wood and wood products, textiles and leather, and general products.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Would that apply to exporters to the United States? I am thinking now of wood products, for example.

Mr. Howe: Oh, certainly; it refers to exports to all countries.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The newsprint industry, for instance, would be acting under its own steam, would it not?

Mr. Howe: Very likely; nevertheless the newsprint industry keeps in very close touch with the department. Seldom a day goes by that some problem is not placed before the department by the newsprint industry. We were particularly active following the curtailment of shipments to the British dominions and the United Kingdom, and we were very active in connection with exports to South America, straightening out the problems of the industry. This branch is the channel of communication between industry and government as far as exports of raw materials are concerned.

Then there is the transportation and communications division, a service to traders keeping them advised of changes in shipping rates, changes in restrictions having to do with the shipment of goods, and so on; quite an active branch. Then there is the wheat and grain division, which acts as a liaison between the government and the wheat board and the board of grain commissioners. It keeps the government informed on their activities, and is the line of communication with the government for special problems requiring government decision or governmental action. The board of grain commissioners is an operating division in that it operates certain grain elevators in western Canada. That board also regulates the movement of grain, while the wheat board is charged with the selling of all wheat, oats, and barley that are marketed in the western division.

The economic research and development branch works with the bureau of statistics from which it obtains up-to-date information. It works independently in compiling that information, and forecasting the economic changes that would seem the probable result from recent trends, looking not more than one year in advance. This work was commenced in the department of reconstruction, and has been perpetuated in the Department of Trade and Commerce. It has been found a very useful service by all government departments, and the forecasts prepared by that branch are used by the Department of Finance as well in preparing the annual budget. I have been amazed by the accuracy of the forecasts prepared by that division. I may say that I have never had to apologize for any of the forecasts I have given. I believe hon. members may have noticed the great accuracy with which the budget figures have been forecast.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): We will all agree that you have never apologized, in any event.

Mr. Howe: I believe my hon. friend has not been so fortunate. The depression he has predicted for so many years has not yet arrived.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): No, I never prophesy.

Mr. Howe: That is the economic research and development branch.

Mr. Adamson: Who is the senior officer in charge of that branch?

Mr. Howe: Mr. Alexander Skelton. The same branch prepares an industrial analysis forecasting capital investment for one year ahead. In that connection it compiles a questionnaire which is sent out to some 2,800 industries in Canada. Area analyses are prepared, that is the forecast of employment within any area that is thought to be in a doubtful position. It also prepares a capital investment analysis, and gives assistance in the establishment of new industries.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Can the minister give us an illustration of any particular studies, let us say in the maritimes, and the forecast there?

Mr. Howe: Yes, an area study was prepared for the New Glasgow area during the past year. As a result of that study certain public works that had no particular priority, except from the point of view of employment, were undertaken in that area. An area study was made of the Sydney area and also the city of Quebec area; that is part of the work of that branch.

Mr. Gillis: Could the minister inform the house of the results of those studies?

Mr. Howe: The result has been that steps were taken that brought about a great improvement in employment down there. My hon. friend may have noticed it if he has been home recently.

Mr. Gillis: It is not noticeable in the figures.

Mr. Howe: The best test of which I know is that I have relatives down there, and they are not able to find anyone who will work in the gardens or do any work of the kind which seems to be readily available.

The commercial relations and foreign tariffs division is the division that keeps all the particulars on the tariff situation. It represents Canada at tariff meetings at home and abroad. Its officers represented Canada at Annecy, and before that at Geneva. They will represent Canada in the tariff discussions which are to take place this autumn at Torquay.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): What then is the relationship between the Department of Finance, say, and the minister's department? I suppose it is the tariff board, an official from that board who goes to these conferences?

Mr. Howe: The finance department is responsible for the domestic tariffs, Canadian tariffs, and the Department of Trade and Commerce is responsible for representations concerning foreign tariffs. The two work in close liaison.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): At these meetings we are not represented solely by the Department of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Howe: No, there are several departments represented, but trade and commerce usually carries the burden of the discussion, for the reason that this division has the up-to-date information about foreign tariffs.

I have mentioned the industrial development division, which provides assistance to firms seeking to establish new plants in Canada, and aids firms already established to expand into new lines. During the year, over 500 representatives of firms or individuals interested in establishing plants in Canada discussed their plans with the division, and a like number of Canadian representatives sought similar guidance. In 1949, approximately 180 firms established themselves in business in Canada; 128 from the United States, 42 from Great Britain, and the remainder from continental Europe.

Then there are trade controls which are administered by the export permit division. Certain commodities are still subject to export control, more particularly commodities that are classed as strategic materials. It is more of an area control today than it is a commodity control. However, the export permit division has charge of that responsibility.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Can the minister give us some instances of things which are still controlled?

Mr. Howe: Yes, a good many manufactured items are not allowed to go behind the iron curtain.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Is that our control or theirs?

Mr. Howe: Our control; our exporters are not allowed to ship uranium to Czechoslovakia, for instance; that is an extreme case.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I understand about strategic materials, but does this affect other ordinary materials as well?

Mr. Howe: There are very few items today upon which export control remains.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the minister tell us the things that cannot be shipped?

Mr. Howe: Live hogs, and I believe certain precision instruments.

Mr. Gillis: With the hon. member's permission, I should like to follow up one question with the minister. A few moments ago he said that economic surveys had been made in certain maritime areas, such as Sydney and New Glasgow. As a result of those studies employment had improved greatly—

Mr. Howe: Not as a result of our studies.

Mr. Gillis:—to such an extent that his relatives could not get gardeners. Perhaps they did not pay the last one. However, that is not what I wanted to say. In addition to the general economic survey, the minister did conduct a personal survey about a year ago, and it is about that I wish to question him. It concerns an airport, which is not only a matter that affects the civilian population, but one that is of importance from a defence point of view. When the estimates of the Minister of National Defence were before the house, I questioned him as to what that department was prepared to do to improve the Dartmouth airport to the point where it could accommodate larger ships. Nothing over 60,000 pounds is allowed on that airport at the present time. When his estimates came in first, the Minister of Transport said that, as far as that problem was concerned, it was one for the Minister of National Defence. Then the Minister of National Defence, in discussing the matter with me on his estimates, said that as far as he was concerned he would take another look at it but he thought the responsibility was in the hands either of the Department of Transport or of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

I wish the minister could give us some definite answer. It is a matter of great concern to the community. T.C.A. have no landing field there as such for planes like the North Star. It is a large centre without airport facilities in the regular way. It is in bad shape as far as defence is concerned because it can land only the smaller ships. The minister made a survey personally a year ago, according to statements I have seen in the press, accompanied by the then senior member for Halifax who has now gone to the other place. At that time the minister thought that the establishment of a new airport—and I am speaking from memory of what I read in the press statement—or the spending of an additional $8 million or $10 million to make a new airport was not the thing to do, but he thought that any money that might be spent could be used in extending the Dartmouth airport to serve the dual purpose of T.C.A. and defence. I wonder if the minister could give us some answer with regard to that matter because that would be something practical arising out of a personal survey on the part of the minister. As to the other regular economic survey as pertaining to the maritimes, I do not think anything has come out as yet. Can the minister bring us up to date on that Dartmouth airport proposition?

Mr. Howe: I was in process of answering a question asked by the hon. member for Greenwood. I will, however, interrupt that in order to answer this question. My hon. friend mentioned three ministries interested in the administration of Dartmouth airport, and was kind enough to mention Trade and Commerce.

I might say that our interest is a minor one. As I understand it, Dartmouth airport is adequate for the services it is called upon to perform at this time. My hon. friend has said that it is not adequate for North Star planes. That is quite true. But it is not intended that North Star planes should use that airport. Ottawa airport is not adequate for North Star planes and the North Star planes do not use Ottawa airport.

We cannot make every airport adequate for North Star planes at this time. We have Sydney and Moncton, two emergency airports in Nova Scotia that are adequate for North Star planes; and as my hon. friend knows, we have three airports in Newfoundland for that purpose: Goose, Gander and Stephenville. As far as I know, Dartmouth airport is adequate for T.C.A. traffic. We have recently installed instrument control for the approaches, and the operating conditions there are considered to be favourable at this time. I presume that extension of the runways will be made from time to time but I think there is no urgent need for an extension at the moment.

Mr. Gillis: At least that is a definite answer. Your reply is that, as far as you know, there is no immediate necessity to extend the airport, it is not the intention to provide a new one, and things stay as they are for the present.

Mr. Howe: As far as the Department of Trade and Commerce is concerned, the airport is entirely adequate for the operation of DC-3 transport planes. If a different type of equipment comes into use, the Department of Trade and Commerce will act for T.C.A. in pressing the government to make the required improvements. But at the moment, as far as the Department of Trade and Commerce is concerned, the accommodation is adequate.

Mr. Gillis: Thank you.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Might I remind the minister that he has not yet given me the list of articles the export of which is prohibited.

Mr. Howe: The export of which is prohibited from Canada?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Yes.

Mr. Howe: This list may not be up to date but there are certain precision instruments, being gauges, balancing machines, measuring machines or testing machines as used for laboratory or scientific purposes; atomic energy equipment and components, radiation detection equipment and components. There are radioactive substances, radioactive elements; radioactive isotopes; ores and concentrates of uranium and thorium including pitchblende, uraninite, carnotite, monazite. There are products such as manufactured articles containing uranium or thorium. Then there is beryllium, gallium, rare earth metals, zirconium; arms, ammunition, implements or munitions of war; military, naval or air stores. Then there are certain goods originating outside Canada which are prohibited in the country of their origin and which are not allowed to be exported from this country for that reason. There are certain other commodities but, without checking back on the last order in council which released a number of these commodities from export control, I would not like to put that list on Hansard.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I take it that most of those are strategic materials?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Did you say that live hogs cannot be exported?

Mr. Howe: That is right.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Why can they not be exported?

Mr. Howe: The fundamental reason of course is that we have a bacon contract with the United Kingdom which we are anxious to fill. It has been the practice since the first bacon contract was signed with the United Kingdom that live hogs cannot be exported from Canada except for purebred hogs which are shipped to authorized countries for breeding purposes.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Earlier in the day the Minister of National Defence said something which I took to mean that it might be quite on the cards for us to export munitions of war. I may have taken him up in the wrong way.

Mr. Howe: All these things can be exported by permit. That is why we have the export permit branch.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Yes.

Mr. Howe: Anything can be exported if the exporter can get a permit for its export.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I presume the minister will deal with imports later?

Mr. Howe: Yes. There is the emergency import control division. That was an emergency program, as my hon. friend knows, instituted in 1947 as a step towards righting the exchange balances.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Can the minister give us a list of the chief articles that are prohibited and that are on that list?

Mr. Howe: Automobiles, a great list of machinery items, practically all capital goods from hard currency countries.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Does that mean that all British automobiles that come in here come in under special permit?

Mr. Howe: No. They come in freely. It is only the scheduled countries that are affected; that is, the hard currency countries.

Mr. Green: What about the goods that are not kept out for dollar reasons, such as rice? The minister mentioned rice a few minutes ago. Is it still subject to import control?

Mr. Howe: It is a hold-over from an international agreement. It will come off very shortly, probably by September 1.

Mr. Green: It is coming off this year?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Green: It seems unfair to prevent importation.

Mr. Howe: This is the last of the foods that are under import control. There are certain times for taking these things off, and the proper time would be September 1.

Mr. Green: Are there any other commodities besides rice which are subject to import control?

Mr. Howe: No.

Mr. Green: For reasons other than emergency legislation?

Mr. Howe: No, rice is the last of the import controls. We hope to clean the list up very shortly.

Then there is the publicity division. It has charge of the various publications of the department. There are a great number of publications, particularly those connected with the—

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Has the minister skipped steel and timber controls?

Mr. Howe: They have been abolished.

Then there is the fairs and exhibitions department which has charge of the trade fair and various Canadian exhibits at fairs outside this country. Then there is the exhibitions commission. The standards branch has charge of weights and measures, the Precious Metals Marking Act, the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act, the National Trade Mark and True Labelling Act, the Electricity Inspection Act, Gas Inspection Act, and the Weights and Measures Act.

Mr. Green: Is the priorities division still functioning?

Mr. Howe: No. The department is responsible for certain crown companies: the board of grain commissioners; Canadian Arsenals; the Canadian Commercial Corporation; the Canadian wheat board; Crown Assets Disposal Corporation; the dominion bureau of statistics; dominion coal board; Eldorado Mining and Refining Company; Export Credits Insurance Corporation. The Fraser valley diking board has been disposed of, but we now have instead the Red river diking board. Then there is the industrial defence board; the Polymer Corporation and the Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Mr. Green: Is the atomic energy division under the research council?

Mr. Howe: Yes, it is under the research council. My list includes the national research council and the bureau of statistics.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): What about the research foundation?

Mr. Howe: Any research foundation would be inside the national research council.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Is that not under the minister?

Mr. Howe: Yes, the national research council and the atomic energy control board.

Mr. Fraser: The minister used to have a real estate branch in Trade and Commerce. Is that still functioning?

Mr. Howe: Yes, part of the general administration.

Mr. Fraser: What does it do?

Mr. Howe: It buys and sells real estate.

Mr. Fraser: What for, the Department of Trade and Commerce, or what?

Mr. Howe: It is charged with the settlement for real estate that we acquired during the war years. It also acts for the Crown Assets Corporation in disposing of real estate.

Mr. Fraser: It does that instead of War Assets?

Mr. Howe: It acts for War Assets. War Assets have the responsibility but they use this branch a bit. The branch is down to one man and a stenographer.

Mr. Hatfield: Will the minister tell me how long the wartime import control board is to function? How long is it going to continue? What commodities can we import from the United States? No customs officer seems to know.

Mr. Howe: It is a long story, and I do not know that I can tell it. A good many commodities are administered by the Department of Finance. Consumer goods are administered by the Department of Finance. Only capital goods are administered by the Department of Trade and Commerce. There is a very long list of commodities that my hon. friend cannot buy freely from the United States without a permit.

Mr. Hatfield: I know that. Should not a person be able to know what he can buy? I call up a man and he tells me that I can import a certain article. I buy the article, and it is held up here by customs. A man here tells me that I cannot import it. Mr. Rogers, who was in the finance import branch, told me. He has gone out of that branch. I did not have it in writing; I had it orally with him.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Rogers was an officer of the Department of Finance. I take it that my hon. friend is having his trouble with the Department of Finance, that is, the wartime prices and trade board.

Mr. Hatfield: That is the trouble, he has been moved out of that position now.

Mr. Howe: We have our troubles as well.

Mr. Hatfield: What I should like to know is what we can import and what we cannot. Should there not be a published list?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Could the minister not give a prediction at least?

Mr. Howe: All these lists have been tabled in the House of Commons; but I will endeavour to have them compiled into one list and table it before the end of the session if that will help my hon. friend.

Mr. Hatfield: They change all the time.

Mr. Howe: I know, but we all have to keep posted on these matters. That is why the citizens have representatives in parliament, so that their representatives can advise people just what the changes mean.

Mr. Fraser: But you never tell them.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): He has found a use for the opposition; that is something.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): There are one or two points which the minister did not cover in his statement this afternoon. Could he tell us something about exhibitions, particularly the Toronto trade fair?

Mr. Howe: There is a commissioner of exhibitions who is charged with the responsibility of the trade fair at Toronto and Canadian exhibits at trade fairs throughout the world, such as the British trade fairs at London and Birmingham, those on the continent, as well as certain exhibits in the United States. It is his responsibility to advertise Canadian goods wherever the department thinks it is appropriate to advertise by way of exhibits.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): As I recall, when the trade fair in Toronto was started the minister was quite conservative, if I may apply that word to him, in his estimate of what it might accomplish. In the light of the last one would the minister say a word as to just what progress has been made?

Mr. Howe: It would be more convenient to deal with this subject under the item that follows, but as the hon. member has asked the question I shall answer it now. The first trade fair was considered a success for a first fair. In my opinion the second fair was not as successful as the exhibitors did not seem to be as well satisfied as those who had exhibited at the first fair. The third fair was an outstanding success. There was a great range of exhibits and practically all the exhibitors with whom I talked—I think I talked to most of them—seemed quite happy about the results. It seems to me that it has been amply demonstrated that the fair is a first-rate piece of trade promotion. I think it can be considered an annual event, at least as long as the present trend continues.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Would the minister rate it just as high vis-à-vis the United States as vis-à-vis the European countries? Do we get proportionately as high a number of exhibitors from the United States? Does the minister attribute the improved condition as far as Europe is concerned largely to the exchange depreciation brought about last September?

Mr. Howe: The trade fair was never aimed particularly at the United States. As my hon. friend knows, the exchange situation has led us to encourage the diversion of purchases from the United States to the soft currency countries. However, there were a great many buyers from the United States at the last trade fair. Currency devaluation had the effect of bringing sterling area and European prices into competitive line with the prices of other countries and in that way devaluation has had an effect. It was useless for some lines to be shown here before devaluation.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Were the exhibits from the continent of Europe just as numerous as those from the United Kingdom?

The Deputy Chairman: I would point out that item 429 deals with exhibitions generally and item 430 with the Canadian international trade fair.

Mr. Charlton: Has the minister the most recent figures of trade with the United Kingdom and the United States, divided as between industrial and agricultural products?

Mr. Howe: The cumulative figures January to May are as follows:

United States

Exports	$736,900,000
Imports	817,100,000

Adverse trade balance, $80·2 million.

United Kingdom

Exports	$184,700,000
Imports	149,400,000
Favourable trade balance	35,300,000

Remainder sterling area

Exports	$81·8
Favourable trade balance	8·3

Mr. Charlton: Could the minister divide those figures as between agricultural and industrial production?

Mr. Howe: It can be done, but I have not the figures with me. They have just been published and the breakdown has not been prepared although I may have it before the evening is over.

Mr. Higgins: On the minister's return from England a little while ago he announced that he had had talks with respect to the sale of iron ore and expected that the results would be made known shortly. Can he enlighten the committee on that matter? In the past two or three days the Minister of Fisheries announced that the Department of Trade and Commerce was negotiating for new markets for salt codfish. Can the minister enlighten us on that matter as well?

Mr. Howe: It is perhaps a day or two early for me to be able to set my hon. friend's mind completely at ease, but as a result of the talks I had while in England, and subsequent talks that are now current in England, before the week ends I hope to be able to announce a sale of 300,000 tons of iron ore to the United Kingdom for delivery in 1950 coupled with 700,000 tons of iron ore for delivery in 1951.

Mr. Higgins: Great news.

Mr. Howe: Perhaps my hon. friend can claim credit for that.

Mr. Fraser: That is very kind of you.

Mr. Howe: So far as fish is concerned, I am not ready to make an announcement. Those talks are not finished, but there again I think there will be good news before the week is out.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to ask the minister whether he discussed the question of the sale of Canadian apples in the United Kingdom market while he was over there.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): They are not food.

Mr. Howe: That subject was very thoroughly discussed while I was in England, and it is being discussed at the moment. The indications are quite hopeful.

Mr. Fulford: I should like to ask the minister whether any progress has been made in improving our trading position with the British West Indies.

Mr. Howe: Canadian trade with the British West Indies was the subject of a great deal of discussion when I was in England, and is the main topic of discussion in the trade talks that are now current. There again these estimates are being discussed about two or three days too soon. I am sure that the recent discussions will open the British West Indies to Canadian produce to a considerable extent. Before the end of the week I hope to make an announcement that will be very helpful to Canadian industry and Canadian agriculture.

Mr. Fulford: That is most gratifying. Since I spoke on the subject on April 24 in the budget debate, I have received letters from firms in Canada and the British West Indies. I have received newspaper clippings from the British West Indies and even a letter from a British member of parliament. I had no idea it was such a live issue. I realize that the West Indies are not satisfied with the present condition. Last week I had occasion to speak to members of the commonwealth press conference, editors and owners of various newspapers, and they were all of the opinion that a solution must be found, that the West Indies wanted further trade. I know that what the minister has just said will be gratifying not only to Canadians but to all the colonies comprising the British West Indies.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The minister seems to have such a general knowledge of all subjects dealing with trade that I am sure he will be able to answer the question I am going to ask, although I am not certain that it comes directly within his department. My question has to do with the progress that has been made in the development of the great discoveries of iron ore in the territory adjacent to the border of Labrador and Quebec. I understand the difficulties there are in the development of that property, but I should like to know whether the minister is in a position to say what progress is being made.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, that development is a private enterprise, and just how much information I should give the committee is questionable. Therefore I do not think I will give very much. As my hon. friend knows, five important steel companies of the United States are interested in financing the development at the moment. I know that plans are being prepared for the railway that will serve the property, for the power plant that will deliver power to it, and for the harbour development to serve the property. Beyond that I do not think I can give any information.

Mr. Charlton: At page 268 in the details I see that there are fifteen fewer employees under this item than there were last year, and salaries are approximately $2,300 less. Is the smaller number of employees because of less work or is it simply a case of somebody else doing the work?

Mr. Howe: The department has dropped certain controls such as timber control, priorities control, and steel control, and as a result a number of high-priced employees have left the department. That explains the drop.

Mr. Charlton: Those employees will be listed in the various branches. This item simply deals with departmental administration.

Mr. Howe: As my hon. friend knows, the department is an amalgamation of trade and commerce and reconstruction and supply, and certain positions that were in the department organization last year have been dropped.

Mr. Charlton: Will the minister explain the item of $8,000 for sundries? I believe there are three items for sundries each of $8,000.

Mr. Howe: It is a general catch-all item for matters that are too small to set forth in detail. There is nothing very alarming about it. I thought we were discussing ministers' salaries. Is the minister's salary carried? I am anxious about that.

Mr. Graydon: That is statutory. The minister must be under a wrong impression. The statute many years ago gave him that so nothing we can do can take it away. He should not have such fear.

Mr. Fraser: That is one thing he does not control.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Browne (St. John's West).]

General administration—

424. Commodities branch, including assistance in the development of markets and the procurement of supplies, and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $574,460.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I want to draw the minister's attention to the wording of item 424 and ask him to give a little further explanation. It reads:

Commodities branch, including assistance in the development of markets—

I understand that.

—and the procurement of supplies—

I am not so clear about that.

—and contributions as detailed in the estimates.

Will the minister say a word about the procurement side of it?

Mr. Howe: The commodities branch includes the import branch. The import branch is a sub-branch of the commodities branch.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Is it procurement of supplies for public purposes?

Mr. Howe: It is to assist private enterprise to procure supplies abroad.

Item agreed to.

General administration—

425. Trade commissioner service including payment of compensation to trade commissioners for damage to and loss of furniture and effects, under regulations approved by the governor in council, $2,052,859.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Can the minister tell me about the representation that is given the province of Newfoundland? Before confederation we had trade commissioners in London, Portugal, New York, and I believe in the West Indies. Has that been taken over by the federal government?

Mr. Howe: Yes; the personnel of the Newfoundland service have been absorbed into the trade commissioner service of the Department of Trade and Commerce. Instead of having representation in four or five countries, Newfoundland now has representation in forty-six countries.

Mr. Charlton: What is the total number of foreign service officers?

Mr. Howe: There are ninety-five trade commission offices in forty-six countries.

Mr. Charlton: There are only 113 employees altogether. Are ninety-five of those trade commissioners? The details show that twenty-five are foreign service officers. Are there ninety-five trade commissioners?

Mr. Howe: Trade commissioners and assistant trade commissioners. Sometimes in a country we will have the trade commissioner's office in the capital, and an office headed by an assistant trade commissioner in another important city.

Mr. Charlton: Then on page 270 there is an item of $184,000 for travel and removal. Does that mean for travelling expenses to and fro on the part of these trade commissioners, and moving their families?

Mr. Howe: Yes, and their furniture.

Mr. Charlton: That requires $184,000?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Charlton: If each of them moved once a year that would mean more than $2,000 each.

Mr. Howe: It costs far more than $2,000 to move a trade commissioner, his family, his furniture and household goods from Canada to South Africa, we will say.

Mr. McLure: Are these trade commissioners allowed to do a barter business? I am thinking of France at the moment. We could ship quite a quantity of furs to that country if our trade commissioners would barter them for the wines and liquors France has to offer. Why not make such a trade, so we would have a market for our furs? They are quite willing to do that, but it is hard to get these trade commissioners away from their golf and the other things at which they are enjoying themselves; and they do not like this barter business, though it is the only business that is worth while at the present time when taxation steps in to prevent trading or where money values are different. Would it be all right to follow that up with some of them and see if we cannot arrange some barter business?

Mr. Howe: The trade commissioners do not overlook any possibility of arranging barter transactions. If the opportunity is there it is called to our attention and to the attention of those in this country who may be interested in such barter business. The trade commissioner does not do barter business himself; he does not buy for his own account, as you can imagine. When my hon. friend speaks of taking the trade commissioners away from their golf, I believe the work of a trade commissioner compares very favourably with that of a member of the opposition in this parliament, and I wish my hon. friend would keep that in mind.

Mr. McLure: Would the minister repeat that statement?

Mr. Howe: I said the work and attention to business of a trade commissioner would compare very favourably with that of an opposition member of parliament.

Mr. Drew: Getting a little impatient, aren't you?

Mr. Howe: Not impatient; I do not like to hear our trade commissioners slandered.

Mr. Drew: That was a very silly statement.

Mr. McIlraith: Did you hear the statement by your own follower?

Item agreed to.

General administration—

426. Publicity and advertising in Canada and abroad, $201,315.

Mr. Fraser: What film is this $10,000 for?

Mr. Howe: Is my hon. friend asking about the reduction in the film vote?

Mr. Fraser: I wanted to know what films were being made this year, and whether the work was being done by the national film board or a commercial company.

Mr. Howe: Any films we have made are produced by the national film board.

Mr. Charlton: In the details at page 270 I see an item of $50,000 for advertising in Canada and abroad, as compared with $95,000 for last year. Then there is $35,000 for booklets, an increase of $10,000 over last year. There is $10,000 for films, to which the hon. member for Peterborough West referred, as compared with $30,000 last year. But in the first item of general administration there is an amount of $40,000 for trade promotion at home and abroad. What was the reason for transferring that $40,000 from publicity and advertising to administration?

Mr. Howe: The first item represents the cost of looking after groups from abroad who come here to promote trade. It is not an advertising expense; it is what might be called a hospitality expense. The second item is an advertising expense, and there is a reduction this year. We thought that with the advertising that went on in connection with the trade fair we could afford to reduce the ordinary departmental advertising, and we have planned accordingly.

Mr. Charlton: Does that $40,000 under the administrative item have anything to do with trade fair advertising?

Mr. Howe: No. The advertising item we are now considering is for departmental advertising, in connection with any matters the department believes should be drawn to the attention of the public, such as changes in regulations and so on. The promotion of trade item is not an advertising item.

Mr. Charlton: I do not think the minister quite understood my question.

Mr. Howe: I cannot hear you, for one thing.

Mr. Charlton: On page 270 there is a reduction of $45,000 under advertising in Canada and abroad, as compared with last year. I asked the minister the reason for that reduction, and whether it was accounted for by the $40,000 under administration.

Mr. Howe: No, the two items are not related. The $40,000 item covers such things as the cost of the trip to the United Kingdom by the deputy minister, trade commissions abroad, tariff expeditions abroad and so on. The other is for advertising in publications and newspapers. There is a reduction in the latter item which, as I have said, is made possible by the advertising incidental to the trade fair, which was paid for by the trade fair and which we think warrants a cut in the usual advertising appropriation.

Mr. Charlton: Then there is a reduction of $20,000 in connection with films. Is that because the minister feels films are not doing the job, or perhaps because more films were made last year? What films were made last year for the $30,000, and what are proposed this year for the $10,000?

Mr. Howe: This is not to pay for the making of films. It is for making the sound tracks in foreign languages; and for distributing films made by the film board or other agencies of government. The distribution of films on trade matters is undertaken by the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Charlton: Then this is not to pay for the production of films, but for transporting them around the country?

Mr. Howe: This is the cost of translating them into foreign languages and preparing them for distribution in foreign countries.

Mr. Fraser: Where your trade commissioners distribute them?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Charlton: Who paid for the films?

Mr. Howe: They have been paid for. Some of those produced in the past may have been paid for by the Department of Trade and Commerce. Others have been paid for by the national film board. They are out of the library of government films, chosen because they have some significance in the country to which we send them.

Mr. Graydon: An item slipped by while I was out, and I wanted to ask the minister just one question without enlarging upon it. I am told by a prominent agriculturist in this country that there is a large market awaiting Canadian butter in Venezuela. I wonder if the minister has any information on that, or whether his department has made any recent investigation into the possibilities. If that were so it would be a great boon to butter producers here, who are faced with pretty heavy competition and the prospect of rather low prices in some instances.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, we have moved butter to Venezuela, and we hope to move more. Our prices are somewhat out of line with those competing in the market, but I assure my hon. friend we shall lose no opportunity to sell butter in Venezuela.

Item agreed to.

427. Economic research and development branch, including the conducting of investigations and reporting upon commercial relations and foreign tariffs, and the development of Canadian industry, and a contribution of $6,300 to the International Customs Tariffs Bureau, $442,480.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the minister add a word to what he said this afternoon on the question of the relationship between the tariff board and the Department of Trade and Commerce in connection with the whole question of commercial relations and foreign tariffs. The minister did mention it this afternoon, but I was not too clear on the division. On the face of it, it looks as if there might be a duplication. I should like to have it explained to me.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, the tariff board acts as adviser to the Minister of Finance regarding domestic tariffs, that is tariffs placed on goods entering Canada. The branch we are discussing, the economic research branch, commercial relations division, deals with tariffs applied by foreign countries against Canadian goods. I think that is the distinction. There is no overlapping.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): It is two sides of the same coin, so to speak. The minister did say this afternoon that the very able head of the tariff board does take full part in trade discussions. Perhaps there is nothing more that need be said about it, but surely the subject does not divide itself sharply into two unrelated parts, foreign tariffs and domestic tariffs. They seem to be part of one problem.

Mr. Howe: We endeavour to make it one problem. The officers of the Department of Trade and Commerce interpret foreign tariffs to Canadian business, and obtain the views of Canadian business on foreign tariffs. This department takes a leading part in any discussion of foreign tariffs, such as have been current in recent years at Geneva and Annecy.

Mr. Hatfield: Mr. Chairman, I understand the United States tariff commission is now taking evidence about the importation of Canadian potatoes into the United States, which evidence is to be presented at Torquay this autumn. Will the minister state whether we shall have a representative at Torquay who will be posted concerning the importation of fruits and vegetables from the United States, so that he can present an argument against shutting out potatoes going to the United States?

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, the tariff commission of the United States is taking evidence in the United States, and our trade officials are taking evidence in Canada. The hon. member will appreciate that a meeting such as Torquay is a meeting for trading. We expect that our delegation will be able to hold their own against the American delegation in discussing the tariff on potatoes entering the United States. In any case, we are endeavouring to see that they are as well prepared as possible.

While I am on my feet permit me to present my hon. friend with an up-to-date list of articles that can and cannot be imported into Canada. This is not a list prepared by the government, but a list prepared by the Canadian Manufacturers Association. I will send it across to my hon. friend.

Mr. Hatfield: I shall be glad to have that list, and at the same time I should like to draw to the minister's attention a case concerning a manufacturer in the United States who built a plant at Montreal. He arranged to bring supplies from his plant in the United States to Montreal, thinking he could bring them in without any restriction. He found he was unable to do so, so last Wednesday he called me to see if I could help him. He is a competitor of mine, but I told him I would give him what help I could. We went to see the officials, and the first man we approached told us he would give this man a permit for enough supplies to last him two months, after which time he could get supplies in Canada. That was on Wednesday, June 21. On June 22, this official wrote a letter to the manufacturer at Lachine informing him that he could not bring in the supplies. The plant was ready to commence operations, and there were about fifty employees hired. This official, after telling his stenographer to send the permit to Rock Island so that it would be there in time for the goods to leave, wrote a letter stating that the chief officials of the board had turned down his application.

This morning I took up the question again, and the official told me he was still ready to allow the goods to enter. I cannot understand why he wrote the letter of June 22.

Mr. Howe: May I ask the hon. member if the man to whom he refers is an officer of the Department of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Hatfield: The matter has to do with trade and commerce, but the official is the assistant to the deputy minister of finance.

Mr. Howe: The hon. member is asking me a question about matters of which I have no knowledge.

Mr. Hatfield: It concerns import control.

Mr. Hees: Could the minister tell us something of the results obtained so far by the committee under the chairmanship of Mr. James Duncan, of the Massey-Harris Company, Toronto, which was set up some time ago to promote better trade relations between Great Britain and this country?

Mr. Howe: I would point out that the committee of which Mr. Duncan is chairman is a businessmen's committee set up by private enterprise. From my knowledge of its work, I can say it is obtaining excellent results. I believe the comparative trade figures for 1950 and 1949 would indicate that. Someone at least has brought about a great improvement, and I give full credit to the Duncan committee.

Mr. McLure: While we are discussing this matter of tariffs, I should like to mention again a matter I mentioned earlier. I see by the press that we are about to negotiate with the United States concerning tariffs. There is one industry that has been nearly ruined by taxation and tariffs, and that is the fur industry. I might say that the United States is the only country that puts up an excessive barrier against silver fox furs. Today the tariff is 37½ per cent ad valorem. If the minister is to negotiate for lower tariffs or new concessions, I believe this is one matter that should be brought to his attention. While we allow furs from the United States to enter Canada duty free, the United States imposes a 37½ per cent ad valorem duty. At one time it was up to 50 per cent, but it was reduced a little. I should like the minister to make a note of that, and have his officials discuss it with the United States customs officers.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, industry across Canada has been invited to send in briefs covering any tariff reductions they hope to get. Those briefs are being studied. I have not the position of the fur industry in mind, but I shall take note of my friend's suggestion and look into it at the first opportunity.

Mr. Green: In that connection, Mr. Chairman, what is the effect on Canada of the cancellation of the reciprocal agreement between the United States and Mexico? Apparently we are likely to lose some trade because we can no longer get benefit by reason of the favoured nation clause.

Mr. Howe: It affects Canada indirectly. The United States have denounced their reciprocal trade arrangement—that is, their trade arrangement with Mexico—for the reason that they assert that Mexico has discriminated against Canadian trade.

Mr. Green: Against American trade, you mean; you said Canadian trade.

Mr. Howe: Against American trade, yes. It will have a repercussion on Canada with regard to two items of which Mexico is the principal supplier. One is lead and the other is cattle. The items are down for discussion at Torquay in September and it is hoped that the Canadian position can be corrected at that time. If he asks me what items will be affected as a result of the action taken by the United States, those are the two principal items that will affect Canada.

Mr. Green: Will the effect on lead be quite considerable?

Mr. Howe: It restores the duty. The present duty of one and a half cents a pound will go to three cents a pound.

Mr. Green: Is that considered serious?

Mr. Howe: It is quite a bit.

Mr. Green: What about oil? Is that not affected also?

Mr. Howe: It might affect our position if we were an exporter of oil, but we are not, so our position is not affected.

Mr. Green: One other question I should like to ask on this item has to do with the lumber trade between the Pacific coast and Great Britain. Apparently the British are buying less and less lumber all the time. Within the last two weeks they have called for tenders on another order which is for only 200 million board feet, to be shared between the west coast states and British Columbia. Apparently British Columbia this year has sold to the United Kingdom 167 million board feet, and they will be sharing with Washington and Oregon in this new order for 200 million board feet; whereas in 1949 British Columbia sold a total of 345 million board feet and in 1939 sold practically one billion board feet. What is the position with regard to that trade? Is Russia cutting in? Is it likely to continue small or what are the prospects?

Mr. Howe: As I have stated before, Mr. Chairman, the trade cannot sell Canadian exports twice. The Canadian exports have been going to the United States, attracted there by the abnormally high prices. Prices today are much higher than prices at any other time since the war. My. hon. friend mentioned 2 million board feet.

Mr. Green: Two hundred million board feet.

Mr. Howe: Yes, 200 million board feet. As I understand it, it is 2,000 standards, which is 400 million board feet. I think British Columbia can have all that order if they will quote a reasonable price. I do not think they can expect to get the American price; but they can certainly have it if they quote anything like the price which they applied to earlier exports to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Green: Is not the purchase price of that lumber to be paid out of ECA funds?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Green: Under those circumstances it would be unlikely that British Columbia would get the whole order, would it not?

Mr. Howe: British Columbia could have had all the previous orders. They actually took only 75 per cent but they could have had it all had they been able to handle it. They only quoted on part of it. If British Columbia quotes on all this order and quotes a reasonable price, there is no doubt in the world but that all of the order will be placed in British Columbia.

Mr. Green: Is Russian lumber cutting in on the British market?

Mr. Howe: Russia has always had a good share of the British market. I think its proportionate share at the moment is less than in the pre-war years; but it is shipping some lumber into the British market.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I understood the minister to say a moment or two ago that this denunciation of the trade treaty between the United States and Mexico might affect the tariff on Canadian cattle. Am I right in thinking that one of the few results that we got after the Geneva discussion of 1947 was a reduction in the tariff on cattle? I thought that was a definite bargain which would not be affected by anything else.

Mr. Howe: The Geneva agreements covered the light and the heavy-weight cattle. The treaty with Mexico covered the medium-weight cattle; and the immediate effect, if the treaty is denounced, is to take away the tariff concession that arises to Canada, out of the agreement between Mexico and the United States, on medium-weight cattle. Naturally the item is down for discussion at Torquay, and I have every reason to believe that medium-weight cattle will be brought under the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Can the minister say something on the news item—I think I saw it in the New York Times of Sunday—to the effect that the hoped-for removal of administrative restrictions in the American tariff is not likely or that the bill before congress is not likely to be passed this year? Can the minister comment on that matter? I understand that in some ways administrative restrictions are more important than the actual tariffs.

Mr. Howe: The bill in question is still before a committee of the United States congress. I would not want to take responsibility for saying it will not be passed, and I am sure my hon. friend would not. That is a matter for the United States congress, I think.

Item agreed to.

General administration—

428. To provide for expenses of the industrial defence branch, $60,197.

Mr. Charlton: Will the minister explain to the committee just what are the duties of this industrial defence branch.

Mr. Howe: This estimate covers the requirements of the industrial defence board and the share of defence planning which falls within the sphere of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

P.C. 1739 of April 20, 1948, sets out the duties and functions of the industrial defence board, originally set up in the Department of National Defence but transferred to the Department of Trade and Commerce by P.C. 1166 of March 15, 1949, as:

(a) to advise the government of Canada and the Minister of National Defence on all matters relating to the industrial war potential of Canada;

(b) to prepare and keep up to date a plan for industrial production in the event of war;

(c) to arrange for such liaison between the naval, military and air forces of Canada, the Canadian Ordnance Association, Canadian Arsenals Limited and other agencies and industries as will ensure an understanding of defence needs and the active co-operation required to meet such needs;

(d) to encourage the standardization of specifications and industrial practices;

(e) to advise on the location of industries and on the development, procurement, inspection, storage and distribution of material and equipment and the maintenance of reserve stocks.

Mr. Charlton: The number of employees is nine, and I take it that all those employees are not travellers. The total salaries of the branch are $26,000 and the travelling expenses are $15,000. Surely all the nine people who are employed in this branch are not travelling around the country all the time.

Mr. Howe: The director of the branch has been to Europe three times for extended periods. He left for Europe this afternoon, to represent the government on the Atlantic pact conference. My hon. friend thinks that he can travel to Europe, spend a month or two there and get back without considerable cost. I assure him that that is not the case.

Mr. Charlton: Would this travelling expense amount be all for one man?

Mr. Howe: No; all the officers of the department are required to travel. Frequent conferences are held in Washington, extending over considerable periods. Various committees of the defence planning board travel there. My hon. friend laughs, but I assure him it is not possible to walk to these conferences. If an officer is sent over to Washington he must travel there, must stay at a hotel and must travel back, and all that costs money.

Mr. Charlton: I wonder whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce is giving passes. Perhaps that is the reason for all the deficit on the Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Item agreed to.

Exhibitions—

429. Exhibitions generally, including a contribution of $1,000 to the international bureau of exhibitions, $234,184.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Can the minister tell us how many exhibitions Canada took part in, in 1949, and how many this year? I was in Milan last year. Was Canada represented in the Milan exhibition last year? I notice an improvement in sales to Italy last year.

Mr. Howe: The Canadian government exhibitions commission provide exhibits for all government purposes. Nineteen exhibits were constructed and four others were in the course of construction at the end of the year. Of the nineteen ten were displayed at nineteen events abroad and nine displayed at some thirty events in Canada.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Can the minister explain the Canadian ones? Did he say nine cities?

Mr. Howe: I am told that the domestic exhibits are normally prepared for other departments. The Department of Trade and Commerce has a service which other departments may make use of if they wish. If the Department of Agriculture has a display at certain centres they sometimes call on the Department of Trade and Commerce to arrange the exhibit.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Did you have an exhibit in Milan in 1950?

Mr. Howe: Yes, we had an exhibit at Milan in furs, and we later were in process of moving that exhibit of furs to Lille, France.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps I should point out that there is a further supplementary item, namely, item 781, which is related to the items which we have just carried. It reads:

Exhibitions—

781. Exhibitions generally—further amount required, $15,000.

The details are found at page 14 of the further supplementary estimates. Shall the item carry?

Mr. Charlton: Hold everything.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Can the minister explain why he needs this $15,000? Is it generally, or is it for some new exhibition?

Mr. Howe: The $15,000 was for the exhibition at Lille that I spoke of a short time ago. Canada's participation had not been arranged at the time the main estimates were brought down. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, it may be simpler to take the supplementaries after we finish the main items.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we carry item 781 now, or allow it to stand?

Item agreed to.

Exhibitions—

430. Canadian international trade fair, 1950, including authority to refund from revenue deposits received for contracts for space (revote $115,000), $602,000.

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister comment on the comment with respect to this item made by the Auditor General? I am sure the minister has heard of the memorandum which the Auditor General submitted to a committee of the other place and also to the public accounts committee of this house. In that memorandum he refers to a number of items in the estimates which have the effect of legislating, and in particular he points out that that legislative effect is brought about in some cases by varying the provisions of some other statute.

With respect to item 430 the Auditor General points out that this varies the provisions of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act respecting the treatment of revenue. As I understand it the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act requires that all moneys received by the government or any agency thereof are received by the receiver general, and if there is any money paid out, even if it is a deposit to be paid back, it is in turn paid out of the general exchequer. Apparently item 430 is worded in such a way as to give the department the authority to refund from the revenue it receives, in connection with trade fairs, money covering deposits. Has the matter been discussed between the minister and the Auditor General, or what defence has the minister to offer for departing from the usual practice in this case?

Mr. Howe: It would be impossible to foresee the extent of the refund of deposits. A deposit is made to cover Canadian duty on the exhibit ahead of the re-export of the exhibit. Certain reasons are advanced why an exhibitor will re-export rather than sell the exhibit in Canada, and it is the practice to refund his deposit if the product is re-exported.

It is ordinary business practice. An exhibitor deposits certain money with the trade fair board for certain purposes, and this item gives the board the permission to refund after the purpose of the deposit has been served.

Mr. Knowles: In that instance, the cheque is made out and signed by somebody representing the trade fair directly rather than by the comptroller general, as is the case with other refunds or payments that are made?

Mr. Howe: That is true.

Mr. Knowles: The minister says that is the situation. But I am calling his attention to the fact that the Auditor General does not approve of the practice.

Mr. Howe: I am aware of that, but the amounts are not large. It is a small amount in total, and to ask parliament to vote a sum to cover refund of deposits by exhibitors I think would be complicating a very simple situation.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): A waste of time even for the opposition.

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Hatfield: Is this trade fair carried on in the interest of Canada or in the interest of Europe?

Mr. Howe: My hon. friend can be assured that it is carried on in the interests of Canada. If it were not in the interest of Canada it would not be carried on.

Mr. Fraser: This year there is a charge of $82,000 for rental. There was no charge last year. Did the city carry it last year?

Mr. Howe: There was a charge last year, but perhaps it does not appear in the items that we have. The $82,000 is paid to the Toronto exhibition commission for rental of the buildings used by the fair.

Mr. Fraser: Then there is $38,000 protective and other services.

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Fraser: I wondered whether Toronto paid for the police last year, and you have to pay for them this year.

Mr. Howe: No; we pay for the protection service inside the grounds supplementary to the ordinary police service that we get from the city of Toronto.

Mr. Fraser: It is put in differently this year.

Mr. Howe: I presume so, yes.

Mr. McLure: The minister should give us a little statement regarding this international trade fair. I have now attended, I think, three of these fairs in Toronto and the third seemed to be a wonderful fair. It is great advertising for Canada and provides a place for the interchange of commodities of the different countries. It would appear from this item that it is going to be continued for another year. This would be an opportune time for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to make a statement as to what this fair is doing in the interests of Canadian and foreign trade.

Mr. Howe: The 1950 Canadian international trade fair ended on June 9. The merchandise of 2,247 manufacturers and producers from 33 countries, including Canada, was shown during the previous two weeks. It will be appreciated that as yet it is too early to get final costs and revenues, but from present figures available it would appear that the costs are $835,000 and the revenue $442,000, an estimated net cost of $393,000.

The number of business visitors who were registered as being in attendance is 35,364. While the majority of these were from Canada, there were business representatives registered at the fair from many countries. While no effort is made by the Canadian government exhibition commission to secure exact figures from the individual exhibitors as to the business conducted at the fair, judging from the comments volunteered by a number of the exhibitors there is no doubt this fair has been the most successful of the three held to date.

The fair has several purposes. It enables Canadian buyers to view the work of many countries and compare the products of one country with another. The limiting factor on the number of buyers who attended the fair was the hotel accommodation in Toronto and vicinity. The fair permits Canadian manufacturers to compare their products with those of other countries and also to compare Canadian prices with those of other lands. It brings many visitors to Canada who are potential customers for Canadian products. I found the Canadian exhibitors just as enthusiastic about the results obtained from the fair as were the other exhibitors, particularly those from the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLure: I am glad to hear the minister make that statement. I attended the fair and I think it is a wonderful institution. If the house is sitting when the next fair is on I think it should close for two or three days to give all hon. members an opportunity to attend. One could see only a portion of the exhibits in a day but it gave a good impression of what industry was doing in other countries. It was a marvellous sight to see all these countries showing their wares and offering them for sale, and incidentally making a number of sales.

Mr. Jones: There are two items at the bottom of page 272 I should like the minister to explain. One item is for $171,500 to cover the construction, erecting and dismantling of booths. The amount voted last year was only $43,770. Then there is an item of $131,000 for advertising, which is a reduction of almost $100,000 from the item of $230,000 of last year.

Mr. Howe: In regard to the first question I can only say that we spread the cost of constructing, erecting and dismantling the booths over two years. The actual annual amount was about the same for each year. With regard to advertising, we feel that the fair is now established and not quite as much expenditure in that field will be required. In earlier years efforts were directed toward attracting exhibitors to the fair but we feel now that exhibitors in all parts of the world know about the fair. The intention is to concentrate next year more on attracting buyers and we think that the amount required for such advertising can be reduced.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the minister enlighten me on one point? Under this item 430 the amount for this year is shown as $620,000, as compared with $422,000 last year, or an increase of $180,000. Then in the line below is an amount covering the Canadian international trade fair, 1949, $624,000, which is shown as a decrease in the right-hand column.

Mr. Howe: The two figures for last year should be added together. The amount appropriated last year was considerably more than the amount that will be appropriated for the next year. I think the gross amount appropriated last year was around $900,000.

Item agreed to.

Standards division—

431. Administration, including administration of the Precious Metals Marking Act, $106,050.

Mr. Knowles: Has the minister had brought to his attention a resolution passed by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce asking for the establishment of certain standards with respect to shoes and footwear? May I ask if anything has been done to meet that suggestion?

Mr. Howe: My hon. friend will recall that parliament passed a bill last year providing for Canadian standards. Standards are being established but I am told that the standards for boots and shoes have not been established up to the moment.

Mr. Knowles: May I express the hope that now that the matter has been drawn publicly to the minister's attention he will ask his departmental officials to dig up that resolution, have a look at it and see whether there is not something that could be done in connection with this matter. After all, it comes from the minister's own friends and I too think there is something in it.

Mr. Howe: Could I have the privilege of naming my friends and offer the same privilege to my hon. friend?

Mr. Knowles: I thank my hon. friend for naming me as his hon. friend in the course of that interchange. For future reference may I ask if the administration of the Trade Mark and Design Act comes under this branch?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Is there any revenue derived under this item or is it all outgo?

Mr. Howe: This branch takes in more revenue than it expends.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Could we know what the revenue is? I suggest that we deal with these four items together.

Mr. Howe: The electricity and gas inspection services took in $534,003.77.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Is that all you can make out of it?

Mr. Howe: Gas inspection, $122,403.60, and electricity export duty, $431,895.38. The weights and measures division took in $472,510.28. Against that there were expenditures for administration. If my hon. friend will take these down I think he will find they balance out fairly well. Expenditures for administration were $88,394,52; electricity and gas inspection, $463,227.61; laboratory expense, $33,019.94; and weights and measures inspection, $512,539.74.

Mr. Harkness: Can the minister tell us what the gas inspection service does? I come from a town which has used gas almost universally for a long time, and I have never heard about the inspection service. What does it do?

Mr. Howe: It is required that every gas meter be inspected and stamped by the federal government once every six years, I think it is.

Mr. Hatfield: Why is the importation of scales prohibited?

Mr. Howe: Imported from where?

Mr. Hatfield: The United States.

Mr. Howe: Scales are imported under licence from the United States and imported freely from soft currency countries. The process is a part of the emergency exchange conservation regulations.

Mr. Knowles: That is not your department.

Mr. Hatfield: I bought a set of scales in the United States for $70. I had to pay $130 for the same type of scales made by the same company in Montreal.

Item agreed to.

Dominion bureau of statistics—

437. Census of population, including contribution of $3,543 to the inter-American statistical institute committee on the 1950 census of the Americas, $1,278,838.

Mr. Knowles: How much of this item is for next year's census? Can the minister say how preparations are proceeding for that census and what will be its total cost?

Mr. Howe: The figure for expenses in connection with the 1951 decennial census of population and agriculture is $987,075. I think that is the principal item. There is another item of $7,500 for a census of distribution. The estimate of expenses for the 1951 census is about $1 million.

Item agreed to.

Wheat and grain division—

438. Salaries and other expenses, $26,450.

Mr. Fair: I should like to say a few words about this item. It involves a little matter of nearly $600 million belonging to the wheat growers of the prairie provinces. It has given me and the wheat growers of the west quite a lot of concern since the British wheat agreement was made some three or four years ago. Earlier this month we were able to get a statement from the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the effect that the British government does not intend to make good anything in connection with the "have regard to" clause in the British wheat agreement. Tonight I hope he will tell us what the government intends to do to make up the western farmers' losses, and I hope he will not tell us that the government feels that the farmers have not any money coming to them, because at least some members of the government are not of that opinion.

Under the contract we supplied Great Britain with wheat in 1946-47 at $1.55 a bushel, and the average price of class II wheat, which can be called by any name you wish but I call it class II wheat because we are dealing with wheat sold by the Canadian wheat board and for which they received payment, was $2.43 a bushel. That involved an average loss of 88 cents a bushel on the wheat sold to Great Britain. In the 1947-48 crop year we supplied wheat to Great Britain at $1.55 a bushel, and the Canadian wheat board was able to sell class II wheat to its different customers at $2.88 a bushel, or a loss to the Canadian wheat grower of $1.33 a bushel. In the third year of the contract, the 1948-49 crop year, Great Britain paid us $2 per bushel while the average price for class II wheat was $2.23 per bushel, meaning a loss of 23 cents a bushel, or more than $400 million for the three crop years.

During the same period we supplied millers with wheat so that the people of Canada could eat cheap bread, at a cost to the farmers of approximately $124 million. Those two sums total $524 million up to the present time, and we expect that there will be further losses on the present crop year. What they are I am not prepared to state. Since I do not want to be contradicted by the Minister of Trade and Commerce or anybody else I have used approximate figures, because actual figures are not very easy to obtain. We may be told that the Canadian wheat growers are not entitled to any compensation. To prove my case I want to quote from page 1971 of Hansard for March 24, 1949. The house was dealing at that time with the Agricultural Products Act. Near the bottom of the second column we find that the Minister of Agriculture had this to say:

> Along with that consideration I couple the fact that it is due to the farmers of this country that we have legislation such as this on our statute books throughout the transitional period in order that the house may see to it that the whole population of Canada pays back some of what my hon. friends over on the other side of the house have been talking about ever since this debate began.
> Ever since this house held its first sitting in this session, member after member has been getting up and saying: Why should the farmer carry the whole load? What I am saying to this house tonight is that the government does not believe that the farmer should carry the whole load.

I ask the committee to take particular note of that statement made by the Minister of Agriculture. He went on to say:

> We have arrived at the time when, unless we are going to make an effort to have Canada carry part of the load, we must throw our farmers on other markets and put them in the position of having to take a lower price than they can get under these contracts, and a lower price than they ought to be able to get in Canada, because of what they have done over the past seven or eight years. When we put that emergency alongside of the other emergency, then I say that there is every reason in the world for passing this piece of legislation which has in it only one section of importance, which says that this kind of legislation should be continued for another year. During that year we hope we may be able to do at least some of the things Canada ought to do in order to express appreciation of all that the farmers did throughout the war, and since.

The Minister of Agriculture has made several statements about these losses. I should like to refer to what he had to say on December 10, 1949, when discussing his estimates. He was referring at the time to a speech he made to the London chamber of commerce in December, 1948. At page 3079 of Hansard he had this to say:

> The trend of the article is to call attention to the fact, not in this country but over in Great Britain, that it is a pretty difficult task for twelve million people to undertake to feed, half feed or twenty-five per cent feed, fifty million people in Great Britain. If that is what is being suggested, then I am quite prepared to say that if it is going to be done it cannot be done by the farmers alone.

For that reason I say the Minister of Agriculture, even if he has no support in the cabinet, is willing to admit and has admitted that the farmers of Canada should not carry this whole load by themselves. I have said that it is not the business of the farmers to demand that Britain make good any further losses. That should be a matter between the British government and the Canadian government. The Minister of Trade and Commerce and his officials were over there earlier this month. They were told by Sir Stafford Cripps and his officials that Britain had fulfilled its share of the contract, and on behalf of Canada the minister stated that they agreed with that pronouncement. So I feel the remainder of the responsibility lies directly upon the dominion government.

Time after time we on this side of the house have asked the government to give us some statement in connection with those losses. Tonight I hope the minister will tell us what the government intend to do about that matter. The farmers of the west feel that they did a fairly good job during the war. They worked long hours; they worked hard, and then had their products taken over by the government and in some instances sold at give-away prices. Now they demand some compensation for what was done in the past. Many of us felt that we would have a guaranteed market at guaranteed prices for at least seven or eight years to offset the losses accepted under those wheat agreements and in connection with the sale of other products, but at present we find practically no protection, no guaranteed markets and no guaranteed prices. Our wheat is being sold under the international wheat agreement, and in that I find very little protection for our farmers. So I believe the time is now at hand, since the period ends on July 31, for the government to come through with what the farmers really believed they intended to do; that is, make up the losses suffered under the contracts with Great Britain and through the sale of our wheat at prices which were kept low in order that we might maintain price control and a low cost of living in Canada during the war and for some years after.

Mr. Argue: I agree with the sentiments that have been expressed by the hon. member for Battle River. Because of government policy over the past number of years the farmers have made a real sacrifice for the benefit of the Canadian consumer, and also for the benefit of our best export customer, Great Britain. I agree with the hon. member when he says the government has some obligation to take care of at least part of the loss that has been incurred, and a continuing obligation over the years ahead to give the farmers stability. I know the Saskatchewan farmers' union and the Alberta farmers' union had a conference with the minister last week, during which they presented a brief which dealt with two main points. The first was that the government had an obligation to make up some of the losses sustained by farmers who have sold their wheat since 1945, and also a continuing obligation to guarantee reasonable prices in the future. I should like to ask the minister if the government has reached a decision as to what additional payment might be expected over and above whatever amount is left in the wheat pool fund. Did the minister hear my question?

Mr. Howe: Yes, I heard it.

Mr. Argue: And if a decision has not been reached I should like to know if the matter is still under consideration and whether a decision will be reached soon.

[Mr. Fair.]

Mr. Howe: My hon. friend is talking about—

Mr. Dewar: I should like to make a short comment before the minister replies. I agree with some of the remarks of the hon. member for Battle River and the hon. member for Assiniboia; but they both paint a lurid picture in which they make out that the farmer of western Canada is destitute. I cannot agree with that.

Mr. Fair: Mr. Chairman, that is something the hon. member has drawn from his imagination.

Mr. Dewar: Kindly let me finish. I allowed you to go on; now let me talk. I have listened to you fellows for the last four months. You are like a bunch of jacks-in-the-box; whenever anyone tries to say anything you jump to your feet. Now let me say a word. I do not want anyone to get the idea that I have not the interests of the western farmer at heart just as much as any one of you.

Mr. Fair: Better express it, then.

Mr. Dewar: If you will be quiet long enough I shall do so. Do not forget the position of the western farmer in 1939. At that time the average farmer had a mortgage on his farm; he was heavily in debt; he had no car, and no machinery. Look at his position ten years later.

Mr. Knowles: Who was in power then?

Mr. Dewar: Never mind; certainly it was not the C.C.F. Ten years later we find the western farmer in a pretty solid position. He has paid off his mortgage; he has a reasonable quantity of good machinery and a car too in which to take the odd little holiday. The hon. member for Assiniboia spoke of the Saskatchewan farmers' union pleading with the government—

An hon. Member: Not pleading.

Mr. Dewar: I get a great kick out of these fellows over here, Mr. Chairman. I sit and suffer; and I say "suffer" advisedly—

Mr. Knowles: You mean you sit and slumber.

Mr. Dewar: —and listen to them for six months, but they have not the courtesy to let someone else speak without interruption. I cannot say what I have in mind at the moment or I will be called to order, but I really feel sorry for their intelligence.

Mr. Sinnott: That will hold them.

Mr. Dewar: Nothing will hold them; they do not know any better.

Mr. Knowles: If we did not interrupt, you would have nothing to say.

Mr. Dewar: There is the hon. gentleman who has spoken about eight hundred times, who bobs up like a jumping jack. Never in my life have I heard anyone who knew so much about so little and had so much to say about it. There is nothing mentioned in this house on which he is not an expert. The hon. member for Assiniboia spoke of the period from 1940 to 1945. I quite appreciate that farm prices were not too high, but we must not forget that all prices in Canada were fixed, and relatively speaking during the war years the farmers were reasonably well treated.

Mr. Argue: I said in 1945.

Mr. Dewar: You mentioned the money that was owed up to 1945.

Mr. Argue: I said from 1945 on.

Mr. Dewar: I quite agree that the price was not high, but neither were the wages of the average industrial worker. In 1945 and 1946 the question of a fair price for wheat was under discussion, and it will be recalled that the wheat pools and farm organizations throughout Canada were quite happy and quite ready to agree on a five-year price of $1.55 per bushel. I believe the minister will back me up in that. All right; we have gone on these last few years, and at the present time the price to the farmer is fixed at $1.75 a bushel for all the wheat he will have delivered during the five crop years ending July 31. I should like to suggest to the minister that, in view of the fact that our freight rates in western Canada are rising because labour wants more money, when the government starts discussing the winding up of this wheat board operation they will consider giving the farmer an additional fifteen cents per bushel. I am not going into the figures like the hon. member for Battle River, and suggest there is $600 million; that is a mythical sum.

Mr. Johnston: Just for my information, how much is it?

Mr. Dewar: Knowing as much as you let on you know, you ought to know that without my telling you.

Mr. Johnston: You just don't know.

Mr. Dewar: You know, when I look at the hon. gentlemen over there who let on they know so many things, I feel sorry for them.

An hon. Member: What are you talking about?

Mr. Dewar: You would not know; you have not reached that state of maturity.

Mr. Johnston: I just asked one simple question. Give me an answer to it.

Mr. Dewar: I am asking the minister through you, sir, to consider giving the farmer of western Canada an additional fifteen cents a bushel. I quite appreciate that if at the time of the wind-up we are not going to have fifteen cents in the general pot, or whatever you want to call it—

Mr. Hatfield: Why not twenty-five cents?

Mr. Dewar: The hon. member would be all ears if potatoes were being discussed. If it were going to mean a dollar for him but nobody else, he would be all ears. As I was saying we had an agreement with the United Kingdom, and on February 28 I suggested that, in view of the United Kingdom's position, they were shrewd traders. Nothing has happened up to the present to lead me to believe that the United Kingdom is all it is cracked up to be. I know some hon. members will sing the praises of Great Britain for what she has done for the colonies, and what she has done for the commonwealth. I repeat that anything Great Britain is today, or has been in the past, is what the colonies have made her. Do not ever forget that. In view of the type of government, and the class of individual that is running the country in Great Britain today—

Mr. Gillis: What is the matter with it?

Mr. Dewar: You just keep quiet.

Mr. Gillis: What do you know about it?

Mr. Dewar: Just as much as you do, which is nothing. In view of the class of individual, and in view of the fact that the government of the United Kingdom made an agreement and has not lived up to it, I suggest to the hon. minister that when the wheat is sold he give consideration to some adjustment by virtue of the "have regard to" clause. Great Britain paid higher prices to other commonwealth countries, in fact to all other countries. Canada lived up to the agreement, and by the same token I feel Great Britain should live up to the agreement. There is no denying it. I trust that this government, of which I am proud to be a member,—

An hon. Member: Since when were you a member of the government?

Mr. Dewar: I am no rubber stamp like some of the outfit over there. I have no doubt the minister will suggest that if we decide to add a few million dollars of subsidy to what is paid to the western farmer, the eastern taxpayer is not going to be happy about it. I quite appreciate the fact that the eastern taxpayers are not going to be happy about it. There is one thing I do not want anybody to forget, and I want to emphasize it, that is the prosperity of the east is predicated entirely on the prosperity of the west. Let no one forget that. Every day of the year the three western provinces produce $2 million out of the top six inches of soil. The members from Alberta can talk about oil, but it means nothing in comparison to our agricultural production. We do not want anyone to forget that the farmer of western Canada is one of the greatest buyers in the world, as well as one of the greatest producers in the world. About ninety per cent of the money the western farmer receives for his production is spent in eastern Canada. If the minister does suggest the taxpayer in eastern Canada might be put out, I want him to bear in mind what I have said. I also want him to bear in mind that, as a member of the Liberal party and a supporter of the government from western Canada, we have full confidence in the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Fair: I should like to tell the minister that the hon. member, whose main contribution throughout the session has been to shout the word "carried", has suggested that I have used figures that are not accurate. I shall inform him that I am using a report of the Canadian wheat board, for the crop year 1948-49, and I have complete confidence in that board. My figures will be found to be correct.

Mr. Dewar: If my only contribution has been to shout "carried" during the past session, it has been far more than the contribution of any hon. gentleman of his party. If he thinks he can cram anything down my throat—I assure him I will take any member of his party on, individually or collectively.

The Chairman: Order. I wish to remind hon. members that we are dealing with item 438. Shall the item carry?

Mr. Argue: No, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister will answer the question I asked him as to whether the government is considering raising the final price to $2 per bushel as requested by some farm organizations?

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, I have listened to some strange explanations of the position of the government in connection with the five-year pool. It seems to me that some hon. members have lost sight of the fact that Canada went to Britain attempting to obtain an insurance policy covering the sale of wheat for four years; that the agreement entered into was supposed to be a protection to the farmers. My hon. friend speaks of the government sacrificing the farmers. I find it difficult to understand that language, although I have heard it so often perhaps I am getting used to it. The receipt of grain under the five-year pool will end on July 31 next. As soon as that grain is sold a settlement of the pool will be made, I hope some time in October. I believe that is as soon as it can be made. A great effort will be made to make the settlement within this calendar year, as I have promised the house before. When the final returns for the pool can be ascertained a settlement will be made, and the members of the house as well as the general public will be advised what that settlement is. At the moment I am not in a position to discuss it. I am sure my hon. friend knows less about the situation than I do, and I can assure him he is in no position to discuss it.

Mr. Argue: I am not asking the minister to tell me what the final settlement will be. All I am asking is this. Is the government considering making a final settlement over and above the actual cash surplus on hand in the five-year pool at the end of July?

Mr. Howe: The government will consider a supplementary payment at the time that it is making a settlement of the five-year pool. All considerations will be taken into account at the one time.

Wheat and grain division—

439. To provide for the Canadian government's annual assessment for membership in the international wheat council, $25,577.

Mr. Wright: With respect to item 439, the matter to which I wish to refer has to do with the inspection department of the grain board under the Canada Grain Act. I have had a number of complaints recently of the quality of western feed grain being shipped to eastern Canada. I know the standards that are required for the various grades when we sell, for instance 3 C.W. oats and No. 1 feed oats and 3 C.W. barley or No. 3 barley. If the reports that are received from the purchasers in eastern Canada are correct, there must be mixing of those grades somewhere between the time they leave the country elevator in western Canada and the time they reach the farmer in eastern Canada. It is my understanding that under the Canada Grain Act there are certain standards for various grades of grain, as regards both in-turn standards and out-turn standards being shipped from Port Arthur and Fort William. I would ask the minister if the standards for the grades of, let us say, 3 C.W. oats as they are sold on the farm are the same standards as are used for that same grade as sold to eastern buyers.

I understand that the standards are practically the same and that, if mixing takes place, it is most likely that it takes place after the grain has been bought by the eastern dealers, and that it is mixed before it is sold to the farmer. I think we should have some assurance from the minister with respect to these grades.

Just recently, for instance, a man came to me and said that a shipment of Argentine oats that had been brought into Canada just recently was of a better quality than a similar grade of Canadian oats. If our standards are maintained, or if the grades are maintained on those oats that are sold in western Canada until they reach eastern Canada, I know that our grades will compare favourably with the standards of oats or any other feed grain grown in any other part of the world. If there is mixing taking place, I think we should be able to find out under this item where it is taking place, and I think it should be stopped.

Mr. Howe: I might say incidentally that the hon. member's friend who told him the quality of Argentine oats was better than that of Canadian oats perhaps did not have the facts to back up that statement, because no Argentine oats have been delivered in this country as yet. That shipment is not due until July 15. So my hon. friend can tell him that perhaps he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Wright: He had samples.

Mr. Howe: I can say, however, that Argentine oats do not rank with Canadian feed oats in quality. They are well below that grade. However, the standards of feed grain are exactly the same in western Canada as they are in eastern Canada. As it passes through the board facilities, the grain is inspected at the lakehead, using exactly the same standards that apply as when the grain is bought in the country. If the grain is shipped to a board elevator in the east—that is the board of grain commissioners' public elevator—the standard of shipment out of that elevator is exactly the same as the standards in western Canada. But my hon. friend will appreciate the fact that the board of grain commissioners has no control of grain once it passes into distribution in the province of Ontario. Its handling is then a matter for provincial legislation. We have not the complementary provincial legislation in Ontario that we have in the three western provinces. Therefore anything could happen to the grain from the time that it passes out of the board's facilities into the system of distribution.

Mr. Wright: That is exactly the answer I expected the minister to make, and I think that is correct. If there is mixing taking place with respect to this grain, I think that it takes place after it reaches the province of Ontario here and after it goes out of the hands of the board of grain commissioners and out of the hands of the wheat board. It is up to the eastern provinces themselves to set standards for their feed grain which will protect their own farmers.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the minister say something about the international wheat council which we pay $25,000 to belong to? Just what have been its duties in the past and what can we expect from it in the future?

Mr. Howe: The international wheat council is the regulatory body that administers the international wheat agreement. The wheat agreement came into effect only on July 31 last. The council administers all international transactions. All transactions under the agreement are registered by the council. The council notifies participating countries when they have taken up their full quota. If any exporting country wishes to put grain, as it has a right to do, under the agreement, the allocation of that grain is made by the central council. It is an important administrative body in the world grain trade and one in which Canada is glad to claim membership.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Does our British agreement go through it?

Mr. Howe: No. That agreement is registered under it, but the agreement with Britain was a bilateral one that carried over from the days before the international agreement. After July 31, all our transactions will be made through the council instead of by bilateral agreement.

Item agreed to.

Canada Grain Act—

440. Administration, $124,190.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): The minister will recall that one May 31 I was asking some questions with regard to an extension of the Canada Grain Act to apply in southwestern Ontario. The growers and I appreciate what the minister had to say at that time with a view to extending it at the next revision of the Canada Grain Act. Since that time I have found that certain things have already been done in southwestern Ontario under the Canada Grain Act, and it would appear that it would apply in that area without any amendments or changes to the act. I am just going to draw this to the minister's attention. I am referring to the statement of the minister in answer to a question of mine on May 31, as reported at page 3035 of Hansard:

Mr. Howe: It includes white beans, so-called. Soybeans are graded by the province of Ontario, assisted by the Department of Agriculture of the federal government. It is questionable whether the board of grain commissioners would have the constitutional authority to grade grains which are grown and consumed in the one province. The board of grain commissioners handles grain that moves in interprovincial traffic or for export.

He doubted whether it would apply in domestic trade. Then on page 6 of the annual report of the board for the year 1938, the following statement appears:

Inspection Services in Western Ontario

In response to requests from the corn growers of western Ontario on September 15, the board opened an office in Chatham and inaugurated voluntary inspection service in this region for the purpose of grading corn and other grain grown.

Then on page 8 of the annual report of the board of grain commissioners for the year 1942, we find this statement:

Grading of Soybeans and Flax

Under order in council P.C. 2799 dated April 10, 1942, the Canadian wheat board was authorized to purchase soybeans, and requested the board to make provision for the grading thereof.

After discussions with representatives of the producers and handlers, the board prepared specifications for the different grades of soybeans and these were authorized by order in council P.C. 6125, dated July 16, 1942.

To give you some idea of what is being handled through the Chatham office, the eastern grain division reported that at Montreal there were 1,590 cars inspected; at Toronto, 2,033 cars inspected; while at Chatham there were 8,337 cars inspected. That will give some idea of the volume of business there. I hope that he will look into the desires of the growers in southwestern Ontario, and make the Canada Grain Act applicable to that area. Will the minister give us an answer to that at least?

Mr. Howe: I am aware that the board of grain commissioners inspect eastern grain, but I understand such inspection is voluntary. That is, any shipper can have his grain graded by the board of grain commissioners if he wishes, or not, if he does not wish to. I understood the remarks of my hon. friend were applied to compulsory grading of eastern grain. As I understand the situation, it is not compulsory; it is voluntary. It is a service the board of grain commissioners offer if anyone wishes to take advantage of it. Is that correct?

Mr. White (Middlesex East): It would not be too difficult to make it operative in western Ontario. They would not have to amend the grain act to do that.

Mr. Howe: We would have to get the permission of the province of Ontario. I doubt whether we have the constitutional jurisdiction to impose compulsory inspection in Ontario.

[Mr. White (Middlesex East).]

Mr. White (Middlesex East): You work on that, and I will also.

Mr. Howe: Yes, quite.

Mr. Knight: Can the minister give a brief definition of the duties of the board of grain commissioners?

Mr. Howe: This is the definition in my book: For necessary services provided under the provisions of the Canada Grain Act in connection with the supervision and handling of grain from delivery at country elevators to delivery to vessels for export, including the licensing and bonding of elevators and grain dealers; sampling, inspection and grading of grain; setting of standards or grades of grain; weighing the grain at terminal elevators; registration of warehouse receipts; collecting and collating grain statistics; maintenance of grain research laboratory and collection of fees for services rendered.

Mr. Knight: I was wondering what effect the creation and operation of the wheat board would have upon the duties of that board. I mean whether it would lessen their work or make it greater.

Mr. Howe: I doubt whether it has any effect one way or the other. The wheat board is a marketing organization; whereas the board of grain commissioners is a licensing organization.

Mr. Knight: How many assistant commissioners are there, and where are they situated?

Mr. Howe: There are three commissioners, as my hon. friend knows, stationed in Winnipeg, and there are assistant commissioners at Vancouver, Calgary, Saskatoon and Fort William.

Mr. Knowles: When this item was up for discussion on December 10 of last year I had a few words with the minister concerning the question of the five-day week for employees working under the board of grain commissioners in the inspection offices associated with the railway yards in Winnipeg. The minister may recall that I pointed out to him at that time that these people are civil servants, and that they were concerned as to why, in view of the general five-day week in the civil service during the summer, they were not given a five-day week last summer. I took it up with the minister in the middle of December although that was not an opportune time to talk about conditions in the summertime. He did point out to me then, however, that the matter was under consideration. Obviously there were certain difficulties, but I gathered from what he said —and I read it again today to check on it—that it was a point that should be looked into and perhaps something could be done about it one way or the other. Can the minister say whether arrangements have been made for the five-day week for these inspection employees this summer?

Mr. Howe: No arrangements have been made. The trouble is that the board of grain commissioners is a servicing institution, and it must provide service whenever the services are required. It is something like the post office in that respect. My hon. friend knows that the post office does not have a five-day week either because it is required to give service on six days. No plan has been worked out—in fact I think it would be unreasonable for the employees to expect that they will have a five-day week in the busy season of their operation. Perhaps if they had asked for the five-day week in April or May, or particularly in March or April, it would be quite easy to work out. But the summer season is the busy season in the grain business. I am told that it has not been found possible to work out a five-day week for employees of the commission.

Mr. Knowles: That is substantially what the minister said when I raised this question on December 10 last, except that at that time having said that he thought it was difficult to work out a five-day week in the summertime he said that something might be done by way of time off at another time of the year in lieu of the five-day week in the summertime. I may say that that word from the minister was greeted by the employees with the hope that by this time some plan, even an alternative one, might have been devised.

Mr. Howe: If the employees would bring forward a plan that would apply to the off season of the board, not the busy season, I am sure it would receive consideration.

Mr. Quelch: Can the minister say whether or not the decision of the board of grain commissioners to reduce or to degrade Red Bobs wheat down to No. 3 was the result of criticism by the foreign customers?

Mr. Howe: Yes. Many complaints were received from abroad that the quality of wheat being shipped as No. 1 northern from the west coast was not up to the quality of the same grade being shipped from the east coast. That complaint was traced down and it was found that the Red Bobs were responsible. I believe Red Bobs are being degraded from No. 1 to No. 3.

Canada Grain Act—

441. Operation and maintenance, including inspection, weighing, registration, etc., $2,328,536.

Mr. Knight: To what extent are these government elevators being used for the purpose for which they were created? That is to say, what is their percentage of efficiency? I do not know whether that is the correct term. What percentage of their capacity is being used? I want to draw to the attention of the minister—I have done it before—the fact that the government elevator at Saskatoon is a very fine building and has a capacity of 5½ million bushels. In the last number of years since I have been a member of this house there has not been enough grain put through it to keep the machinery from rusting. I should like to know for example how much money the operation of that elevator has been costing the taxpayers of this country, and whether there is any means by which it can be used more. Now that there is a change in the market situation —it is an ill wind that blows no one good— I hope that in the future that elevator may be used more. Perhaps the minister would comment on these various questions.

Mr. Howe: I can assure my hon. friend that the elevator is being used exactly for the purpose for which it was built. I know the purpose for which it was built, because I was associated with the board of grain commissioners when it was built. It was built as emergency storage and it is being used for that purpose. When the grain backs up so that it cannot be handled through the normal export channels—I mean the normal channels that move grain from the farm to market—then interior storages are filled, and interior terminals are very handy for that purpose. That is the purpose for which they were built, and that is the purpose for which they are being used. But my hon. friend would not expect me to subordinate the marketing of grain to the use of any storage in elevators. The grain must move to market expeditiously; it must be put in position so that it can be sold without any side interests being concerned, and that is being done. I think perhaps the elevators will be used this year because there seems to be a promise of an exceptionally large crop. If that large crop does develop, as I believe it will, these interior storage terminal elevators will be used for the purposes for which they were built, emergency storage.

Item agreed to.

442. Canadian government elevators, including equipment (revote $144,628), $741,085.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Where are these elevators located and do they appear anywhere as a government asset? I have not been able to find them in the statement given us by the Minister of Finance, although I have not read it through as carefully as I might have. Will the minister give us some information as to their capital value and as to just what this item covers?

Mr. Howe: It covers the handling of grain at elevators at Calgary, Edmonton, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon and Lethbridge. The board also administers an elevator at Port Arthur which is under lease at this time to a grain company. Under the peculiar system used by the government in these matters, the receipts from these elevators go into a different account and do not appear in these estimates.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Why don't you change that?

Mr. Howe: It would reduce the size of the estimates considerably if we did, but that does not come within my jurisdiction.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Were they built by the government?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the minister tell us how much revenue there actually was under this quaint system of accounting?

Mr. Howe: Since these elevators have been built they have returned a profit which has completely amortized their cost. I happen to know that although that fact does not appear in this item. The total grain handled last year amounted to 3,031,809 bushels, of which 2,227,703 bushels were handled at the Calgary elevator. The net result of the operations for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1949, was a deficit of $222,565.11, as compared with a deficit of $131,282.90 in the previous fiscal year. When there is no emergency the handlings in these elevators are quite small, but once we have a surplus crop, the elevators earn money very rapidly. Over the years they have proved a profitable investment.

Mr. Bater: I want to commend the minister for the reply he made to the hon. member for Saskatoon. I live close to that elevator the hon. member spoke of and I know that the western farmer is pleased that that elevator is not full all the time. That indicates that our wheat is moving.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Howe.]

Terminable services—

444. To provide for the liquidation of contracts, including commitments of previous years related to the acquisition of assets operated by the Department of Reconstruction and Supply or an agency of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply; and for miscellaneous and unforeseen expenses, $250,000.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Is this a case where one government department is buying from another?

Mr. Howe: This covers the remainder of the job of liquidating war contracts. There are several cases before the exchequer court which have not been decided. We spent only a small proportion of the $400,000 appropriated last year and this is carried over in order to dispose of contracts that had to do with the department of munitions and supply and which were entered into during the war years.

Item agreed to.

Terminable services—

445. To provide for production and transportation subsidies on steel and iron under such terms and conditions as may be approved by the governor in council, $2,000,000.

Mr. Green: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. Howe: This is part of the transition of the wartime steel structure into peacetime and it is hoped that this will be the last time this item will appear as we expect to liquidate the subsidy situation by March 31 of next year. Through these subsidies we have been able to integrate the steel capacity of Canada and use it to the maximum. We did it first to overcome a difficult supply problem and we are doing it now in order to have the full use of these facilities, at least until the end of this year.

The assistance policy has had a pronounced effect on prices with the result that Canadian prices are lower than Pittsburgh prices, something unknown in pre-war years. Low prices for steel have played an important part in stimulating industry, both for internal distribution and export. At the present time we pay for the movement of semi-finished steel from Sydney to Hamilton and from Sault Ste. Marie to Hamilton, the purpose being to make sure that that semi-finished steel is produced to full Canadian capacity in the first place, and finished in Canada, in the second place, in order to make full use of all the finishing capacity in the country.

Mr. Green: Has the government any plans in mind for increasing steel production in Canada and building up a balanced and complete iron and steel industry? I ask that because of two developments that have occurred, the one at Steep Rock, Ontario, where it is expected within a few years they will be producing 7 million tons of iron ore a year, and the other the development in northern Quebec and Labrador. From what appears in the press it would appear that big changes are about to take place in the iron and steel industry of this continent. I have here a dispatch which appeared in the Financial Times of June 23 which reads:

American Steel Industry to be Revolutionized by New Iron Ore Sources

Huge deposits being opened up in Ungava-Labrador and in Venezuela will mean move of steel plants to Atlantic seaboard; speeding up in New Quebec-Labrador project important.

I am not in position to state whether or not that report is accurate, but it would appear that there are tremendous possibilities for Canada. I wish the minister would state whether there is as yet any government policy for the increase of our iron and steel production. For example, will it be possible to use this Canadian iron ore to increase the production of steel on Cape Breton island, and would it be possible to erect steel plants along the St. Lawrence river. What does the minister think are the possibilities brought about by this immense body of ore in northern Quebec and Labrador as well as the development at Steep Rock? To a layman it would appear that Canada is on the threshold of a tremendous development largely because of these resources and I would like the minister to give us some information as to just what the future may hold for Canada in this regard.

Mr. Howe: The Canadian steel industry has more than doubled in the last ten years and it continues to expand. New blast furnace capacity is at present being built in Hamilton and a new finishing mill is being installed at Sault Ste. Marie. The industry never stops expanding. It attempts to take care of Canadian requirements, and I am sure that it will succeed in doing so. As I say, great strides have been made in the last several years. The policy of the government has been to make that development possible. We helped the industry by subsidy over a difficult period, and the reason that we are stopping the subsidy at the end of this year is that the transition is being made, plants are getting into balance, and we think government-assisted interchange of primary steel between plants will no longer be needed for this year. We have been net importers of iron ore through the years. We are coming into the position of a net exporter, for which I am very happy, and the larger the exports are after the needs of Canadian industry have been supplied the happier I shall be.

Mr. Graydon: Would the minister care to comment upon the statement he made last fall in which he indicated that the discoveries of large iron ore deposits in Quebec and Labrador in all probability would mean that the St. Lawrence deep waterway project was going to be started very soon. I have not his exact words, but I know that was the effect of the statement he made. Will he indicate to the committee whether, in his opinion, it is likely to have that development?

Mr. Howe: My hon. friend knows the difficulty about starting the St. Lawrence development. He knows that we signed a treaty to do our part many years ago, and we are waiting for the United States to sign a treaty. As soon as it is signed the work will commence. I think what I suggested in my earlier discussion was that the iron ore in Labrador will create large tonnage traffic in the opposite direction from the present flow of traffic in the St. Lawrence canals, and that balanced traffic should be an inducement to assist in the financing of the waterway.

Mr. Adamson: The iron ore has to be smelted in the upper lakes region.

Mr. Graydon: Have you made any representations to the United States government?

Mr. Howe: I have indeed, and I have the assurance of several members of their cabinet that it is the wish of the administration that this legislation be enacted. I feel sure an effort will be made to obtain the legislation while the present administration is in power.

Mr. Green: Is there anything in the suggestion in the Financial Times that the United States steel industry is likely to move to the Atlantic coast?

Mr. Howe: I would not believe it on the strength of the say-so of the Financial Times.

Mr. Green: Is there a possibility of that happening? Is that the trend, not only because of Canadian iron ore but also because of the Venezuela ore?

Mr. Howe: I have in mind that it costs at least three times as much to build a steel plant today as it did in pre-war days. I doubt very much if even a country as wealthy as the United States could do away with the steel plant in Pittsburgh and build a new steel plant on the Atlantic coast, with no greater inducement than a lower freight rate on its iron ore.

Mr. Gillis: The decrease of $5,750,000 in that one item is quite a sizeable amount. What I should like to find out is whether all of the $7,750,000 was spent last year?

Mr. Howe: Yes, practically all.

Mr. Gillis: How was it allocated between the three operating companies, Algoma, Dosco and Stelco?

Mr. Howe: It was not allocated to companies. It was paid out largely as a freight subvention. If steel moving to Hamilton was bought f.o.b. Sydney the government paid the transportation, and it was sold at the Sydney price f.o.b. Hamilton. It is like the coal subvention which is paid to the railways. I am not sure that the steel subvention was paid directly to the railway, but that was the effect of it. It was the rail rate that was subsidized rather than any particular company. Last year there were certain scrap subsidies. Companies that had to go abroad for scrap, or had to go into uneconomical areas, were subsidized for their scrap movements. In other words, if prairie scrap had to be moved to Hamilton or Sault Ste. Marie, or foreign scrap had to be moved into Sydney, it was subsidized, but the scrap subsidies were suspended at the end of the last fiscal year.

Mr. Gillis: I had a return on the subsidy that Dosco received, and it was somewhere in the neighbourhood of $1,500,000. None of this money was used for plant expansion at all?

Mr. Howe: No.

Mr. Gillis: And you think $2 million will be adequate to subsidize the movement of steel?

Mr. Howe: Yes, we think so.

Mr. Gillis: I am interested in this item because I am interested in steel, which is one of the basic industries of Nova Scotia, With regard to what the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra had to say about the possibilities of steel in the future on the Atlantic seaboard. I am not very much impressed with the forecast that the iron ore deposits in Newfoundland are going to benefit Canada to any great extent. I made up my mind on that point in 1947 when the present Postmaster General was piloting a bill through the house to grant rights to certain exploration companies not only to explore deposits in Quebec and Labrador but also to develop railroads, bus lines, hotel facilities and so on over the period of the next ten years. I made up my mind then that, so far as Canada was concerned, she was selling her future rights to the ore in those areas.

There were a couple of members who tried to tell the house at that time as best we could that all we were doing was granting a franchise to Canadian companies fronting for United States capital. The tie-up with United States companies such as M. A. Hanna, National Steel and others was quite apparent. If you will go deep enough I think you will find that the stock in Canadian steel companies is largely held in the United States. If we are going to tie the two countries together in that way it is all right, but I opposed that kind of thing at that time as a Canadian who wanted to see Canadian resources developed for Canadians. I think you are three years too late in hoping that the great ore deposits of Labrador and Ungava will mean very much to us.

I believe that there will be a swing of some of the United States companies to the Atlantic seaboard. I know that at least one company is establishing a large fabricating plant in the eastern states. Unless there are drastic changes in our thinking on that matter, I think we are too late so far as iron ore and the future of steel production in Canada is concerned. We have already sold our rights for a period of ten years at least. I was wondering why there should be such a sharp drop in this item because if a subsidy of $1,500,000 to Dosco was necessary last year to transport its raw steel to central Canada the other steel companies are not going to get very much out of the $2 million. About all that Dosco is doing is producing raw material and shipping it to Quebec and Ontario for processing to be sent somewhere else. I know that a subsidy is necessary to move steel from eastern to central Canada, and I was wondering if the cut was not a little too drastic.

Mr. Howe: My hon. friend says if the material is exported no benefit to Canada ensues. Aluminum is a raw material produced in Canada, of which 95 per cent or possibly 97 per cent is exported.

Mr. Green: That is manufactured, is it not?

Mr. Howe: Well, it is smelted, just as copper is smelted.

Mr. Green: Bauxite is the raw material.

Mr. Howe: And that is imported into the country. The only thing the aluminum company uses in this country is water power; everything else is imported. It is said that we export our power in the form of aluminum; but that industry supports some twenty-five thousand employees, and we receive about $20 million a year in taxes. There we have an industry that has spent a few hundred million dollars in the Saguenay district and is prepared to do the same thing on the west coast. So I do not think there is any great loss to the country because of the fact that 97 per cent of the aluminum coming from that plant is exported.

In the same way you might say the Noranda copper mine is a perfect example of the loss of Canadian resources. I suppose 70 per cent of the copper coming out of that mine goes out of the country. Nevertheless it is the centre of a great industrial population, and I cannot see that because the primary copper is largely exported from the country my hon. friend should say that an industry of this kind is of no benefit to Canada. The development of the Labrador iron ore deposits will create a source of that product in Canada, which will be available to Canadians if it is required. After all, Canada owns that resource, whatever the source of the money going into its development. As long as it is situated in Canada that resource belongs to this country and is subject to our law, whether emergency or ordinary legislation. I would call the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that about $250 million of somebody's money has to be invested in that operation before a hundred tons of ore are delivered at seaboard. In other words $250 million has to be invested before there is any return whatever from the property. Does my hon. friend suggest that an investment of that amount in an undeveloped area of Canada is not good for the Canadian economy? If he does, I must say I cannot agree.

Mr. Gillis: I did not say this industry was of no benefit. At the same time, if we are just planning to continue to be hewers of wood and drawers of water for the United States, we are not thinking very far ahead. I am not satisfied with that. The aluminum industry, as a straight exporter of raw materials, may bring in $80 million or $180 million a year, but I think we should at least make a start in building an industry that will process our own raw materials in our own country. I believe we should regard it as a trust to develop this country to the best of our ability, thinking in terms of the coming generation.

I am not satisfied with the automobile industry. We have steel, copper and all the materials that go into the manufacture of an automobile. We are exporting these materials to the United States, and in Canada we have plants which are assembling automobiles. If I go to Windsor or Oshawa to buy a car, I pay from 35 to 50 per cent more than it costs in the United States. What is wrong with our making a start, somewhere in this country, on building up a Canadian automobile industry, and knocking off that tariff which is put on at the border to protect those who are exporting raw materials from this country? I think that is wrong. While we may be getting something out of the materials we are sending out of the country, we are not getting as much as we would if we had an industry that would process our own raw materials.

I am thinking in terms of that steel plant at Sydney, which produces a third or a fifth of Canada's raw steel. As a nation we are not losing anything on that operation because there are fabricating plants in central Canada; but that material is exported from the maritimes and processed in this part of the country, and then if we want to use some of the finished product down there we have that long freight haul to contend with, which adds to the cost. I want to see a tinplate industry built around that plant at Sydney. I believe the sheet mill that was operating during the war should have been continued, because we are importing ninety per cent of our steel plate from the United States, and there are all kinds of possibilities for small investments in the maritimes to build an industry around that mill.

Fertilizer is another matter. I know the minister remembers that during the war, through the department of reconstruction and supply, he spent quite a bit of money in research at that plant in connection with fertilizer. The research has been done, and I believe it should be possible to establish a fertilizer plant where we had one previously. That plant was moved out. Instead of a plant there, we are subsidizing the freight cost on fertilizer moving to the maritimes, and then when the farmer gets it he must pay an exorbitant price.

I am not being critical of the minister; perhaps during the period through which we have gone it was necessary to do things that way; but no one can convince me that we did right by handing over the leases for the Ungava and Labrador resources, after we had done the exploration work for ten years. It seems to me $250 million would have been a small investment to protect the future of this country in that area. I do not believe it could not have been obtained in this country. I believe that with the proper encouragement and sales talk by dominion and provincial authorities, that money could have been found as risk capital. In the final analysis, it seems to me that whole project could have been financed through the Bank of Canada. During the war when the minister of munitions and supply, who is now the Minister of Trade and Commerce, wanted a munitions plant put up, or a gun factory, he did not think about the cost. He just decided it had to be done; he asked if we had the material and the people to operate it, then supplied the credit to put up the plant and get it going. He did an excellent job, and I believe he could have done the same thing in connection with this Ungava development. I am sure $250 million could have been found in this country, but we have sold the birthright of future Canadians in that area and one of our basic industries will be undeveloped, because I am convinced that the future of steel is on the Atlantic seaboard; and we have lost control of it.

Mr. Howe: My hon. friend suggests that Canada does nothing to develop a steel industry here, that we are simply hewers of wood and drawers of water for the United States. I suggest that Canada built her steel industry and had other people as hewers of wood and drawers of water. There was no iron ore in Nova Scotia when the Dominion Steel plant was built. You had to go to Newfoundland, a foreign country, for your ore. There was no iron ore on the Canadian side of the great lakes when the great steel industry at Hamilton and Sault Ste. Marie was developed. All that ore was obtained from the other side of the great lakes. In other words the United States were the hewers of wood and drawers of water for Canada, as far as iron ore was concerned, until two or three years ago. On balance it is probably supplying us with more iron ore today than we are giving it. I have never heard public men in the United States complain of being hewers of wood and drawers of water for Canadians. They were very glad to sell us their surplus iron ore, just as I think we are very glad to sell them our surplus. Certainly we will have a steel industry that will be based on the requirements of this country, and our steel men will be delighted to put in the capacity to the full extent they are able to sell the product. They always have been, and they will continue to be. If we can develop a greater capacity for the iron ore, we will be delighted to sell it abroad just as we sell our wheat, and a good many other raw materials. We are not hewers of wood and drawers of water for Europe just because we sell our surplus wheat in Europe. I think that applies to any of our raw materials, whether it be iron ore, copper, lead, zinc, or anything we produce in quantities above what we are able to consume in this country.

My hon. friend speaks of the automobile manufacturers being assembly plants. I would suggest to him that approximately 80 per cent of the automobiles made by the three principal companies in Canada are Canadian products. In the vicinity of those automobile plants, he will find a great many subsidiary plants that are making parts for these automobiles. If they are assembly plants, then they are assembling materials that are 80 per cent Canadian finished.

Mr. Green: Would it not be possible for Canada, because of these huge deposits of iron ore, to develop a steel industry which could export steel? Could we not produce steel which would form a foundation upon which we could provide jobs for many millions more people than we have at the present time? Could we not only meet our own requirements, but also export steel and bring more people here because of this resource?

Mr. Howe: I do not know where we would find an export market for any great volume. Every country tries to be self-sufficient in steel. We could not export to Great Britain, or to the continent.

Mr. Green: What about Asia?

Mr. Howe: What part of Asia would my friend suggest, and what would they use for money?

Mr. Green: Over the long run?

Mr. Howe: Over the long run we may try to do it, but I think today if we look after our Canadian requirements for steel we are taking care of the market that is open to us.

Mr. Green: If the St. Lawrence waterway is built, will that mean there will be new steel plants on the Canadian side of the great lakes, lake Ontario or lake Erie, or would practically all that iron be used on the United States side at the present steel ports? Will it mean any development of a steel industry in Canada, or will it merely mean the sale of the raw iron to the United States, replacing the iron ore from the Mesabi range?

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, a prudent manufacturer makes what he thinks he can sell. He does not ordinarily worry about the raw materials, so long as he can get them at reasonable prices. That is the easy part, but the difficult part is to sell the product he undertakes to manufacture. I can tell my hon. friend that if there is any Canadian entrepreneur who thinks he can sell more steel than he is selling at present, the chances are that he will make it because that is where his profit comes from. My hon. friend is just as competent as I am to decide how much more steel a manufacturer is capable of making. I hope he is not suggesting that we should process in Canada every ounce of iron ore produced in Canada?

Mr. Green: No one is suggesting that.

Mr. Howe: That is the result of your "Canada first" argument.

Mr. Green: If we are going to get into this "Canada first" argument, it will be a real one. I am not arguing that all of Canada's iron ore should be turned into steel in Canada. I quite agree that the surplus must be sold. But here we have these tremendous discoveries, and I am hoping that they can be the cause of a tremendous development in Canada, and the magnet which will attract a great many people to our shores. What worries me is whether that is the objective of the government or whether the only objective is to sell iron ore to the United States?

Mr. Howe: The government shares your hope.

Mr. Green: I am glad that they do. They are waking up at last, perhaps.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I know the people of Nova Scotia appreciate the subsidies that have been paid out in recent years to assist in the movement of coal and iron from Nova Scotia. I am in agreement with my fellow member from Nova Scotia, the member for Cape Breton South, that we should encourage the processing of these raw materials in Canada. That is one of the main complaints of the people of Nova Scotia, and it applies to what has been done under this subsidy. Our steel and iron produced in Nova Scotia are largely shipped in crude form to places in central Canada. We should have the refining plants near the source of production in Nova Scotia, so that we would derive greater benefit from these resources. I do not know what price is paid, probably $40 or $50 per ton for this crude steel, whereas it would be worth several hundred dollars per ton in finished form. In Nova Scotia and Cape Breton there is a large surplus of labour. Many of the younger people have not been able to get employment. If these crude iron materials were processed in our locality, it would give a great volume of employment.

In any event, it is a fact that the large portion of this material has been shipped away during the war years and since, so I suppose we have to be thankful for what has been done. I should like to ask the minister if he has any misgivings as to the importation of steel into Canada, owing to cheaper labour and depreciated currency in European countries? That would make it difficult for our own steel and iron companies to compete with these importations from Europe. I feel the European industry has now reached the point where it is about to menace the manufacturers in Canada.

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, there is no indication at present that Canadian industry is not well able to compete with European competition. Dosco has no difficulty competing with British steels in the British Columbia market, and that has always been a competitive area for the Canadian steel industry. Dosco has taken several orders away from European competition entirely on a price basis. The prices quoted are the Canadian f.o.b. price plus the water freight from Dosco to the west coast. The reason we have been cutting down the subsidies, and plan to do away with them entirely at the end of this fiscal year, is that conditions are coming back to normal. For some years it was impossible to ship by water freight owing to the scarcity of tonnage and high freight rates. Today freight rates are back to normal, and there is ample tonnage. The markets that were normal markets for Dosco are opening up under conditions similar to those prevailing before the war. We feel that we have bridged over the transition period and allowed the steel plants to function as they did in pre-war days.

Mr. Adamson: Can the minister say where the steel for the pipe line came from in British Columbia? That was something that was brought out in the committee.

Mr. Howe: The pipe line from where?

Mr. Adamson: The oil pipe line.

Mr. Howe: From Alberta to the lakehead?

Mr. Adamson: Yes.

Mr. Howe: All the 16-inch pipe was made in Welland of Canadian steel. Unfortunately that is the upper limit of capacity for the plant and therefore the 20-inch pipe had to be bought in the United States or fabricated in the United States, although all the steel plate that Canadian manufacturers could supply was made in Canada and shipped over to the United States for that purpose.

Mr. Green: Is that for the portion of the pipe line which is laid in the states as well or only for the portion laid in Canada?

Mr. Howe: No, the portion that is laid in Canada.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I should like to ask the minister whether, if the subsidy that was paid for transporting steel from Nova Scotia could have been applied toward the processing of that steel in Nova Scotia instead of shipping it to steel plants and other plants in central Canada, it would not have resulted in building up those processing plants in Nova Scotia. I understand that a considerable portion of the subsidy was paid to transport this material from Nova Scotia to central Canada to be processed there rather than in Nova Scotia. The question I ask is this, and I repeat it. Could not that subsidy be applied towards assisting in the erection of plants in Nova Scotia to do the processing and thus avoid shipping this raw material to central Canada?

Mr. Howe: Up until a few months ago this subsidy was applied to the shipping of finished steel from Dosco into central Canada. In other words, when conditions were abnormal we changed the geography of Canada to the extent of placing the Dosco plant in Montreal as far as marketing in Canada was concerned. We absorbed the freight rate on the finished product between Sydney and Montreal. As I say, that procedure has been discontinued for the reason that distribution of finished material is taking its normal pattern now. The distribution of semi-finished steel from Dosco to plants owned by Dosco in other parts of Canada has been discontinued. The only subsidies that are now being paid are on semi-finished materials that Dosco are not able to finish, for the reason that they have not the capacity to do so; that material includes certain slabs, billets and certain pig iron that are surplus to their finishing capacity. We pay a subvention on that material to transport it to plants under different ownership who have surplus finishing capacity, and allow it to be converted there and to be put into channels of trade without raising the price of other materials being converted in the same plants.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): As I understand, large payments were made in the way of subsidy to bring a considerable tonnage from Nova Scotia as far as Hamilton so that it could be processed there.

Mr. Howe: A fair tonnage, yes.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I was asking why the subsidy could not apply to encouraging the establishing of processing plants in Nova Scotia—we have suffered from that situation for years and years—rather than be a subsidy to move the raw material as far as Hamilton, for refining and processing there.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): No. I should like to ask a question.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I should like to get an answer.

Mr. Howe: Of course a good deal of the company's money and a good deal of the government's money was spent in enlarging the facilities in Nova Scotia both for primary steel and for finished steel. A good many mills were enlarged. New blast furnaces were installed. Just how far that procedure can go is limited by the profitable markets that can be found for the finished steel in normal times. That is a matter for the management to decide. I do not think any government can decide that. But we were simply taking care of the transition from a state of war to a state of normal distribution in the steel industry.

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Following the question asked by the hon. member for Cumberland, may I ask if it is not true that during the last war the coal industry, the steel industry, in fact the whole Sydney situation, to some extent suffered because of the, let us say, strategic necessity? At any rate, they did not derive the same benefits as did central Canada from the development they had. I think the hon. member for Cape Breton South spoke about a fertilizer plant coming to an end during the war. Is that correct?

Mr. Howe: No fertilizer plant that I know of came to upper Canada from Nova Scotia during the war.

Mr. Gillis: No, not during the war. It was quite a long time before the war.

Mr. Howe: When I was still a boy, I think.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): No, not as long ago as that. I was there when it was working.

Mr. Gillis: In 1932.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The minister has been given some new powers. Not all of us helped him to get them, but he has them at any rate; and we are later running into the situation where in spite of ourselves the government is going to have influence on development. It seems to me that it would be a proper thing to bear in mind the needs of the east coast as suggested by the hon. member for Cumberland.

Mr. Howe: I can assure all hon. members that the government will go much further in developing industry in the less industrialized areas than it will in the industrialized areas. We have done things for industry in the maritime provinces and for industry in the prairie provinces that we would not think of doing for the same industry in Ontario or Quebec.

Mr. Adamson: The minister spoke of blast furnace capacity. Has he any information or any estimate of what the increase in blast furnace capacity in the basic steel industry is likely to be in the next year or two?

Mr. Howe: I think there is another 800 tons a day going up at the moment.

Mr. Adamson: Where? At Hamilton?

Mr. Howe: In Hamilton.

Mr. Adamson: And at the Soo?

Mr. Howe: No new blast furnace capacity at the Soo; new finishing capacity at the Soo.

Item agreed to.

Terminable services—

446. To provide for research and development of jet engines and aircraft, $1,600,000.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): If there is no security reason against giving the information can the minister tell us just where this research work is to be done?

Mr. Howe: Yes. That work is being carried on at A. V. Roe in Toronto.

Mr. Graydon: In Malton.

Mr. Green: Peel county.

Mr. Howe: In the suburbs.

Mr. Graydon: Toronto is a suburb of Malton.

Mr. Adamson: In the annexed suburbs.

Item agreed to.

Special—

447. To reimburse the Canadian Commercial Corporation for expenses incurred in purchasing materials, supplies and equipment, etc., on behalf of the Department of National Defence, under chapter 51, statutes of 1947, $900,000.

Mr. Green: This item is to reimburse the Canadian Commercial Corporation for certain expenses. Does that corporation let contracts for housing for the forces?

Mr. Howe: It lets contracts for houses if it is instructed to do so by the Department of National Defence. If the project is being handled by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation with their funds—then that corporation lets the contract.

Mr. Green: Why are arrangements not made by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to have these houses built? I asked a question, which will be found at page 3985 of Hansard, concerning 25 houses built at Fort St. John, British Columbia. The answer shows that they were built by Poole Construction Company, Limited, of Edmonton, at a cost of approximately $15,500 apiece, that there were no tenders called for, and that it was a negotiated contract. Then in the answer the reasons are given that there was urgency and that this firm was considered to be the only one that could carry on the work and so forth. That seems a tremendous price for houses, and I am wondering if these houses could not be built by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at a much lower cost than by the Canadian Commercial Corporation letting out contracts of that type.

Mr. Howe: I do not know whether my hon. friend is familiar with Fort St. John. Carpenters and contractors in that area are not too plentiful. These were prefabricated houses, as I recall them, purchased in the Calgary area, I believe, and shipped in over the highway and erected by Poole Construction Company at Fort St. John. Everything had to be moved in over the highway. The transportation costs were a very big factor. My hon. friend may be shocked at the disparity in price between the cost of erecting houses in Calgary and erecting the same houses in Fort St. John, but I am not because it is all a matter of transportation.

Mr. Green: They were built in midwinter, I think.

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Green: Would it not be more economical to have these houses built under the direction of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation whose business it is to build houses?

Mr. Howe: There has been a trend that way. Practically all houses built today for the army are being built by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Central Mortgage and Housing have their own problems. Sometimes they are not able to take on a rush job.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I want to ask the minister a question with regard to the operation of Canadian Commercial Corporation. I observe that they did about $221 million of business and had 84,600 contracts, which, if my arithmetic is sound, would mean that the average contract was somewhere between $2,000 and $3,000. That would mean presumably that a very large number of the contracts would be for very much larger amounts, so that it would seem that though they have a large number of contracts of quite trifling amounts, and that would entail a terrific amount of work. Is that necessary?

Mr. Howe: I agree with my hon. friend that it entails a lot of work. But when you have an army base that army base has to be supplied with milk, bread and all the amenities. Someone has to buy it. It happens to be the job of the Canadian Commercial Corporation to do that work, and therefore there are a great many small contracts mixed with a good many large ones.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am not going to pursue it. I have a feeling that if the minister examined it he would find that somehow it did not need the 84,000 contracts. I will not pursue it further. I want to ask one further question. Does the minister happen to have his report there? On the second page paragraph 3 reads:

Toward the end of the fiscal year the corporation assumed active administration of responsibilities devolving upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce in respect of the security of classified information emanating from the Department of National Defence.

And so on. Will the minister explain the nature of that duty? If I understand it, it does not seem to be a natural duty for a commercial corporation to assume.

Mr. Howe: It is the duty of the Canadian Commercial Corporation to choose its contractors; and the responsibility of making sure that these contractors and plants are approved for secret information was placed on the Canadian Commercial Corporation. Prior to the Canadian Commercial Corporation being asked to do that, the army decided that. The army simply said: "That is your responsibility; you are just as able to get the information as we are, and we will place that responsibility for secrecy on the corporation."

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Would I be correct in assuming that it is done in the same way that any government department, let us say the film board, used to satisfy itself as to the soundness of its employees; in other words, it did not set up a staff of its own.

Mr. Howe: The corporation has a small security staff. The security of a plant involves technical matters that some officers of the government must have knowledge of, and that knowledge is placed in the hands of the Canadian Commercial Corporation.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I do not know whether this is the proper place to ask the question, but the minister can tell me. I suppose the reason there is no item in the minister's estimate for the export credits insurance is that they are separate and carry on business on their own?

Mr. Howe: Just like any other crown company, they have capital of their own. Unless they get in trouble there is no reason for them to call on the government for any funds. As a matter of fact they do not usually.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am going to ask the minister why we need to put up, as we will this year, considering the interest on the money we have given to the export credits, $289,000 to insure people when I would have thought that they ought to pay the cost of what they are getting.

Mr. Howe: This is simply an interim situation. Accounts which have become overdue are written off, which I think my hon. friend, who is familiar with this matter will say is prudent bookkeeping. They are written off so far as the balance sheet of the company is concerned, just as bad debts are written off in the accounts of any well-managed corporation. But there is a recovery item to be considered. As a matter of fact many commercial debts in Argentina were written off when that statement was prepared. These debts have since been paid, and a statement of the company today, instead of showing a deficit, would show a substantial profit. But unfortunately the past overdue accounts have exceeded the profits that come from business that turns out well. But I will say this to my hon. friend. That corporation was established to assist the Canadian exporter in trading around the world. If the company breaks even and makes no profit I will say that it is a success. However, the corporation has already had a profit and built up a substantial reserve even out of profits. This is the first year that it has ever found it necessary to turn in an annual report showing its earning position in red figures.

Special—

448. To reimburse the Canadian wheat board for the estimated expenses to be incurred from August 1, 1949, to July 31, 1950, the administration of delivery quotas and permit regulations, etc., $125,000.

Mr. Charlton: Is this a further cost of the wheat board?

Mr. Howe: Yes, it is a cost of services that the government to date has assumed. The quotas for country elevators were installed as a means of making it possible to market all grains, including coarse grains as well as wheat. In the past it has been the custom for the government to pay the cost of that and certain other services that are not performed directly as part of the operation of marketing wheat but had wider implications which it was felt the government should assume. But I can say that the fact that the board is now marketing oats and barley and other coarse grains for government account has rather changed the position and provision was made in the last amendment to the wheat board act which will provide that these charges should be met from the revenue of the board.

Mr. Charlton: Can the minister answer the question now regarding the amount of oats coming in from the Argentine? I understood one boatload has come in and another one is on the way. What are these oats to be sold for in this country?

Mr. Howe: I have answered that several times. It is a private transaction. I understand a private grain merchant in Canada has bought one shipload of oats from the Argentine. The oats have not arrived in this country yet. I was told they were due here about the middle of July. I know of only one cargo. There may be other cargoes, but I do not attempt to keep track of every private transaction that occurs in industry in this country. I have told my hon. friend all I know about this transaction.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Seventh report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Winkler.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow the estimates of all departments are ready for consideration, but we hope to call the following departments: trade and commerce, post office, resources and development, secretary of state, fisheries, national revenue, mines and technical surveys and justice.

Mr. Fleming: In that order?

Mr. Fournier (Hull): The first four in order, trade and commerce, post office, resources and development and secretary of state.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

202. To provide for the defence forces of the navy, army and air services, and to authorize total commitments for this purpose of $579,301,670 including authority, notwithstanding section 29 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, to make commitments for the current year of $438,178,000 and commitments for future years of $141,123,670 against which commitments it is estimated that actual expenditures in 1950-51 will not exceed $384,932,304.

203. Defence research and development, subject to allocation by the treasury board and to authorize total commitments for this purpose of $27,983,161 including authority notwithstanding section 29 of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, to make commitments for the current year of $24,925,361 and commitments for future years of $3,057,800 against which commitments it is estimated that actual expenditure in 1950-51 will not exceed $23,925,361.

General services—

204. Grants to military associations, institutes and others, as detailed in the estimates, $202,850.

205. War museum and erection of headstones in Canada, $48,340.

206. Battlefields memorials, $64,930.

Pensions and other benefits—civil pensions—

207. Robert Allen, $193.

208. Walter Pettipas, $516.

209. Florence Walker, $360.

210. Michael Mountain, $420.

211. Mrs. Mary Whittington, $200.

212. Mrs. Eleanor F. Nixon, $1,288.

213. To authorize in respect of members of the Royal Canadian Air Force on leave without pay and serving as instructors with civilian training organizations operating under the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan who were killed, payment to their dependents of amounts equal to the amounts such dependents would have received under the pension act as amended had such service as instructors been military service in the armed forces of Canada, less the value of any benefits received by such dependents under insurance contracts which were effected on the lives of such members of the Royal Canadian Air Force by or at the expense of the civilian organizations, $9,138.

214. Governments' contribution to the permanent forces pension fund, $10,799,600.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

A—Department—

General administration—

423. Departmental administration, $482,875.

424. Commodities branch, including assistance in the development of markets and the procurement of supplies, and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $574,460.

425. Trade commissioner service including payment of compensation to trade commissioners for damage to and loss of furniture and effects, under regulations approved by the governor in council, $2,052,859.

426. Publicity and advertising in Canada and abroad, $201,315.

427. Economic research and development branch, including the conducting of investigations and reporting upon commercial relations and foreign tariffs, and the development of Canadian industry, and a contribution of $6,300 to the international customs tariffs bureau, $442,480.

428. To provide for expenses of the industrial defence branch, $60,197.

Exhibitions—

429. Exhibitions generally, including a contribution of $1,000 to the international bureau of exhibitions, $284,184.

430. Canadian International Trade Fair, 1950, including authority to refund from revenue deposits received for contracts for space (revote $115,000), $602,000.

Standards division—

431. Administration, including administration of the Precious Metals Marking Act, $106,050.

432. Electricity and gas inspection services, including administration of the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act, $502,520.

433. Laboratory, $48,740.

434. Weights and measures inspection services, $604,595.

Dominion bureau of statistics—

435. Administration, $173,315.

436. Statistics, including contribution of $7,087 to the Inter-American Statistical Institute, $3,483,102.

Supply—Trade and Commerce

437. Census of population, including contribution of $3,543 to the Inter-American Statistical Institute committee on the 1950 census of the Americas, $1,278,838.

Wheat and grain division—

438. Salaries and other expenses, $26,450.

439. To provide for the Canadian government's annual assessment for membership in the international wheat council, $25,577.

Canada Grain Act—

440. Administration, $124,190.

441. Operation and maintenance, including inspection, weighing, registration, etc., $2,328,536.

442. Canadian government elevators, including equipment (revote $144,628), $741,085.

Terminable services—

443. Emergency import control—salaries and other expenses, $224,115.

Salaries and other expenses—

444. To provide for the liquidation of contracts, including commitments of previous years related to the acquisition of assets operated by the Department of Reconstruction and Supply or an agency of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply; and for miscellaneous and unforeseen expenses, $250,000.

445. To provide for production and transportation subsidies on steel and iron under such terms and conditions as may be approved by the governor in council, $2,000,000.

446. To provide for research and development of jet engines and aircraft, $1,600,000.

Special—

447. To reimburse the Canadian Commercial Corporation for expenses incurred in purchasing materials, supplies and equipment, etc., on behalf of the Department of National Defence, under chapter 51, statutes of 1947, $900,000.

448. To reimburse the Canadian wheat board for the estimated expenses to be incurred from August 1, 1949, to July 31, 1950, the administration of delivery quotas and permit regulations, etc., $125,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 27, 1950

The house met at eleven o'clock.

THE PRIME MINISTER

ANNIVERSARY OF GENERAL ELECTION OF 1949

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I realize of course the reason for the beautiful flowers in front of the Prime Minister. This is a date which the Prime Minister has every reason to remember with satisfaction. I would point out that it is particularly appropriate that red flowers should have been chosen, because it is a colour I am sure he will remember for some time.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the leader of the opposition for associating himself with members on this side of the house in this anniversary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Fourth report of standing committee on external affairs.—Mr. Bradette.

Fourth, fifth and sixth reports of standing committee on public accounts.—Mr. Picard.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE TO STUDY ACT AND RELATED STATUTES AND RECOMMEND AMENDMENTS

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, some time after the appointment of Mr. T. D. MacDonald, K.C., as the present commissioner of the Combines Investigation Act, he requested that a committee be convened for the purpose of studying the act and recommending whether it could be made a more effective instrument. I have agreed with his request, and a committee has been set up accordingly comprising the following members: Hon. Mr. Justice J. H. MacQuarrie, Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, Halifax; Dr. W. A. Mackintosh, vice-principal of Queen's university, Kingston; Professor Maurice Lamontagne, assistant director of the department of economics, Laval university, Quebec; and Mr. George F. Curtis, dean of the university of British Columbia law school, Vancouver.

The terms of reference are to study, in the light of present day conditions, the purposes and methods of the Combines Investigation Act and related Canadian statutes, the legislation and procedures of other countries, in so far as the latter appear likely to afford assistance, and to recommend what amendments, if any, should be made to our Canadian legislation in order to make it a more effective instrument for the encouraging and safeguarding of our free economy.

To avoid any possible misunderstanding, I desire to emphasize that no suggestions of amendments are being made to the committee for its consideration. It is the practice, however, to take stock of such acts from time to time to see whether any modifications should be considered in the light of administrative experience, changed conditions or otherwise. It is for such a purpose that this study has been arranged.

Mr. Drew: May I ask whether what the Minister of Justice has just read incorporates the actual wording of the terms of reference; or have the terms of reference already been stated?

Mr. Garson: What I have read certainly incorporates the whole substance of the terms of reference. As formally submitted they may differ in a word or two, but there will be no significant difference in the substance.

Mr. Drew: Then I suggest that the terms of reference should include a request to the commission to ascertain what steps should be taken to deal with any member of a government who breaks a law of this parliament.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION

TABLING OF CONVENTIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS OF GENEVA CONFERENCE, 1949

Mr. Paul E. Cote (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Labour): In conformity with the provisions of article 19 of the constitution of the international labour organization, I desire to lay on the table the authentic text of the conventions and recommendations adopted at the thirty-second session of the international labour conference at Geneva last June and July.

FLOOD CONDITIONS

LILLOOET VALLEY—INQUIRY AS TO BREACHING OF DIKES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Has the Minister of Agriculture yet received a report on flood conditions in the valley of the Lillooet river at Pemberton, British Columbia, where it was reported that dikes constructed under P.F.R.A. had been breached in one or two places and many acres flooded? I was in touch with the minister's office last week, but have not since heard from him.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): The report concerning this matter came to me last week, when I was in the west. I discussed the present position with with Mr. L. B. Thomson, the commissioner under P.F.R.A., who informed me that he had been in touch with people at Lillooet and that all necessary work had been done in order to minimize the damage from flood conditions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SETTLEMENT OF DEBTS OWING BY EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): May I ask the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance when he intends to make a statement to the house with respect to the settlement of the debts owing this country which he made during his recent trip to Europe?

Mr. James Sinclair (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance): The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) spoke to me in this connection earlier this month and suggested that when he tabled the agreements or when his estimates were up for consideration I could make a short statement, if there is any desire to have it made.

CHEESE

QUESTION AS TO DECLINE IN PRODUCTION AND INCREASE IN PRICE FOR EXPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): Since both the Minister of Agriculture and his parliamentary assistant are in their seats this morning, will they elaborate on the answer given yesterday concerning the requisition order for cheese and the possibility of increasing the price?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Some hon. Members: Answer.

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): I have not read what was said yesterday, but will do so later.

CANADIAN MARITIME COMMISSION

INQUIRY AS TO ANNUAL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): May I ask the Minister of Transport whether it will be possible for us to get copies of the annual report of the Canadian maritime commission within the next day or two?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): The last word I had from the commission was that the report was not ready yet. I do not know whether it will be possible to have it ready before prorogation, but if so I shall see that hon. members receive copies.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dion in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

General—Dominion coal board —

449. Administration and investigations of the dominion coal board, $101,040.

Mr. Gillis: This board is relatively new, and I believe is a very important organization. We have done a great deal in the way of probing and searching the coal industry of Canada in the last few years. We had a royal commission that sat for about eighteen months and brought in a long report containing many recommendations with respect to the rehabilitation and modernization of the coal industry, particularly stressing the possibilities of marketing our coal. This board arose from that very expensive report; that was one of the recommendations of the royal commission. Of course it had been advocated in this house for many years previously, but the royal commission definitely pointed out the desirability of setting up a national coal board for the purpose of coordinating the industry across the country.

The legislation creating that board set out definite duties and responsibilities it was to undertake. It has a capable chairman, but I do not like the set-up with respect to representation from the industry and from those who produce the coal. I believe it is top-heavy with coal operators, and has very little representation from the men who dig the coal; in fact, it is four to one. Nevertheless the board has certain duties and responsibilities. It is doing some work, I admit, in the regulation of subventions, seeing that the money granted by parliament for purposes of expansion is spent properly, and so on. Meetings have been held in the coal-operating sections of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick at least, and I believe at the present time the board is engaged in a survey of the coal industry in the United States.

That is all to the good; but one definite responsibility placed upon that board has not been even touched. I refer to the responsibility of devising ways and means of marketing Canadian coal, to put the industry in a better position than it has been for years past. That is the matter I am going to bring to the attention of the minister.

We import a huge amount of coal from the United States, while if our industry were operating at capacity we could produce perhaps one-third of our own requirements. We have made some progress by way of granting money as loans to the eastern operators for the purpose of modernizing the old collieries still in operation; and the whole trend has been to reduce costs. I am not going to argue that point, but I am convinced that it is not possible to reduce costs in the old collieries of Nova Scotia to any appreciable extent because of the long haul and the high pumping and power costs, which in my opinion are the main disabilities.

As I see it the problem has always been one of marketing. Back in the thirties and up until the outbreak of the war the industry in Nova Scotia was working two or three days per week, practically on a relief basis. When war commenced the demand for coal permitted full-time operations, but soon after the war the industry slumped back to part-time operations. Regardless of whether we increase production, the main problem so far as Nova Scotia is concerned is the problem of marketing. There are no assured markets. There is a hit or miss arrangement which prevents the operators, the customers, or the employees in the industry from making any definite long-range plan.

Before his estimates are concluded I want the minister to tell us what the dominion coal board is doing in the matter of providing long-range markets on a permanent basis for Canadian coal. On many occasions I have said in this house that that can be done only by a zoning of markets in Canada in which Canadian coal could reasonably compete with United States coal. From time to time the opinion has been expressed that there is no economic market in Canada for Canadian coal; that it is a straight matter of assisting coal operations by way of subventions or subsidies. So far as I am concerned that illusion was shattered, and I think it should be so far as the minister is concerned, in the committee on railways and shipping before which Mr. Donald Gordon appeared. The Canadian National Railways are large consumers of coal, and Mr. Gordon was questioned about the difficulty experienced by the railway because of the stoppage of work in the United States. The railways' stockpile of coal in eastern Canada was lowered to the extent that a curtailment of traffic was necessary. Mr. Gordon assured us that so far as the Canadian National was concerned there was an economic area for maritime coal which extended from Sydney, Nova Scotia, to Coteau, about thirty miles west of Montreal. That area was never planned, for the simple reason that sixty or seventy per cent of the coal stockpiled by the railways in eastern Canada is coal from the United States. No arrangement was ever made to stockpile Canadian coal in that area, where it was available and where it was economical. There was a definite lack of planning for that Canadian market, and I want to find out if there is any planning being carried out at the present time.

Mr. Gordon pointed out to us that this year the Nova Scotia and New Brunswick coal operators could not supply the requirements of the Canadian National Railways in that area. Of course this year is an abnormal year owing to the depletion of the stockpiles and the necessity for rebuilding them. I might say that my discussions with Mr. Gordon represented the first time in my experience that officials in this country have made a practical and realistic approach to this problem. I am convinced there is an area there that can be allocated to eastern Canada on a permanent long-range basis. This area would absorb the main production of the maritimes and perhaps permit an expansion in that particular section.

The Alberta and British Columbia end does not look so good. The Canadian National is displacing the steam locomotive with the diesel and is thereby cutting into the coal market. Oil is backing the coal operators out of the picture in that area. In my own province the coal industry is the basic industry, and everything else is built around it. The steam locomotive has not been displaced by the diesel in that section, and that displacement will not take place for some considerable time. Despite the progress made in the building of that type of locomotive, the roadbed from Montreal to Halifax will not accommodate a diesel at the speed it travels. It means practically rebuilding the roadbed from Montreal east, so that the market for coal is likely to be there for some time, and advantage should be taken of it.

In order that stockpiling would be possible, the area from Montreal east should be allocated to the maritime coal industry. Although I am stressing this I do not want to make a long speech, because during the last ten years the minister and I have discussed this so often that we know each other's opinions. Mr. Gordon definitely gave me a new hope, because I feel that if such a zone is established and arrangements are made accordingly with the Canadian National Railways, it would be a long step forward for the maritime coal operators. I want to emphasize again that it is not a matter of increasing production or lowering costs; it is a matter of permanent markets which would enable the industry and the people dependent upon the industry to plan their future with assurance. I should like the minister's comments on that particular aspect of the problem.

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I agree with the hon. member for Cape Breton South that the duty of the coal board is to find markets for Canadian coal. I suggest to my hon. friend that the board has been doing just that. Since 1942 the coal industry in Nova Scotia has had much wider markets available than it has been able to supply. There have been small interruptions, perhaps, because of situations that can be smoothed out and will be smoothed out, such as a member of the industry not doing the marketing at the right time. I do not know of a day lost in the coal fields that has been due to any basic lack of markets for maritime coal. At the moment the difficulty is that during this year the mines will hardly be able to produce all the coal that can be used in the maritime provinces.

The policy that is being administered by the coal board is a policy of flexible subventions, watched very carefully from day to day, and directed toward all the markets that can be found for all the coal that is mined. I believe that it is a policy that is meeting the needs of the maritime coal industry, and will continue to do so. My hon. friend is aware that the government is endeavouring to step up the production of coal in the maritime provinces. To do so the government is lending the greater part of $10 million to the industry. I suggest the government would hardly be willing to take that step without being confident it can find markets for that coal.

The hon. member suggests that a zone be kept exclusively for maritime coal. The difficulty is that if a zone is marked out and reserved entirely for maritime coal, we must be certain that the maritimes can provide all the coal needed in that zone. To mark out a zone as far west as Coteau Junction at the moment would be foolish, because we know the maritimes cannot supply much more than fifty per cent of the coal required in that area this year. Then, there is the matter of keeping alive the markets that have been developed in the past. Maritime coal has been used at Arvida and as far west as Kapuskasing. I believe the industry wishes to keep maritime coal in those markets, so that if lack of other markets should develop, those markets could be quickly reclaimed. Those are factors, perhaps not important factors, but I mention them to suggest that a rigid zoning of an area for marketing Canadian coal is not in my opinion as advantageous to the industry as a flexible market administered by a coal board that is watching the situation from day to day and enlarging the markets as the day to day situation may require.

My hon. friend mentioned the western coal situation. That situation is much more difficult today than is the maritime situation, for the reason that oil is being produced in an area alongside that which is producing coal, and there is a tendency for oil to displace coal in the markets nearest to the mines. These are the markets that are easiest for the coal industry to compete in. That situation is being watched carefully. The coal board is making an effort to find new and more distant markets to replace nearer markets that are being lost to the competitive product. Every step has been taken that I can think of to protect markets for the western industry. Nevertheless it is obvious—and I am sure it is obvious to the operators of the mines in the western area—that the production of western coal is likely to be on a reduced scale, as oil continues to make inroads into markets that were formerly held by the western coal operators.

Mr. Gillis: May I give the minister a case in point? He says he is not aware of any curtailment of operations in any section of the maritimes because of lack of markets. On Friday of last week I received a letter from the board member of the united mine workers at Inverness. That is an operation that has been carried on by the provincial government for the last twenty years. Their main market in the past has been the C.N.R. This board member wrote to me—and I sent the letter on to the coal board—to the effect that they were practically closed down, that there was drastic curtailment of operations, and that the reason was lack of demand from the Canadian National Railways. He asked me to check here to see if there was not a possibility of arranging for the marketing of that particular coal with the C.N.R. I sent that letter along to the coal board. But that is one spot that I can mention.

I might say to the minister that it is the small operator who gets caught. The big fellow can look after himself, negotiate his contracts and fix the price with the railroads; and in many cases it is a price with which the small operator cannot compete. So far as the small operator is concerned there is reason there for the board to take hold and to see if it cannot work out some reasonable arrangements for the small operators. I am not excusing the provincial government; they are the operators. The operation is carried on to maintain a fairly large community, and for no other reason. On economic grounds I do not think it could justify itself, but on humanitarian grounds it has been operated for years. I think the provincial government should have sufficient influence with the C.N.R. to arrange a market for the amount of coal that is produced in that particular community.

Mr. Howe: The coal board is aware of the Inverness situation, as I am myself. The difficulty there is the quality of the coal produced. The railroad would be delighted to take the coal if it were up to railroad specifications, but I think my hon. friend will agree that the coal board cannot insist that a customer take a quality of coal that is not up to the standard required by the service he operates.

My hon. friend suggests that it is the small mine operator who is being squeezed. I suggest to him that the province of Nova Scotia is no small operator—

Mr. Gillis: They operate on a small scale.

Mr. Howe: —and that it is well able to market coal if the coal is of a quality that is salable. But we are aware of the Inverness situation. It is an unhappy one. The operation lost $200,000 last year, and I do not know what the outcome is to be. Fortunately the provincial government is dealing with the problem.

Mr. Hansell: I did not want to interrupt the hon. member for Cape Breton South and the minister as they were discussing this matter. I largely agree with what both have said. In his reply to the hon. member I am pleased that the minister included some remarks with respect to western coal. I am glad he recognizes the fact that the western coal mine operators are fearful that the use of oil may almost put them out of business. During the last few months there has been some considerable curtailment in the production of bituminous coal in western Canada, partly owing to the fact that the railroads are beginning to convert their locomotives to diesels. I know that we have to trust the minister in these matters. It is pleasant to hear him say that the coal board is watching the situation closely; but I do not know how much hope that sort of phraseology is going to give to the coal mining industry of western Canada. Concealed within that phraseology may be a good deal of mystery as to the future of the coal mining industry in that part of the country.

During this session the minister indicated that he was anxious to have the pipe lines bills passed. I am not going to say anything about that matter; but in his anxiety to have the pipe lines bills passed he must have also recognized the fact that even the pipe lines and the export of oil would have some repercussions in the coal mining industry. We know that we cannot stand in the way of progress. As time goes on and as civilization passes from one era to another there are discoveries and developments, and one thing supersedes another. At the same time I think it is the responsibility of government to guard industry as much as possible, even in the light of the development of new things which might displace the industries of the past. But I believe there could be another solution to this problem. Canada is not as broadly industrialized today as it might be. Nearly all the industries in Canada are fairly well concentrated in the central provinces of Ontario and Quebec. If the government, as the minister says, is watching the situation carefully, I think some consideration should be given to the greater industrialization of western Canada. The more industry we can have in western Canada, the greater will be the opportunity for the coal mining industry to survive; therein lies the opportunity, in my opinion, for additional markets for western coal. But to industrialize western Canada I know is a tremendous job. The provinces of the west are doing all they can to encourage industrialization. The government should give more tangible aid in the industrialization of western Canada.

I rose to ask a particular question, and I trust the minister may be able to answer it. When the government requires coal for its own purposes, such as the purpose of defence, at training stations and other government-operated enterprises, tenders are called for. As I understand it, the Canadian Commercial Corporation is the institution used for the purpose of preparing those tenders. I hold in my hand an "Invitation to Tender"—that is the title of the document. These go out to the various coal mining interests when it is coal that the government requires.

My attention has been called to the fact that the description given in the invitation to tender is such that certain coal mines that could supply an equivalent grade of coal, or a coal that would compare most favourably with that description, might be ruled out because the mines could not supply coal of the actual name and grade given in the description. The suggestion that has come to me, and perhaps it has come to the coal board also, is that in the description the phrase "or the equivalent grade" should be added, thus enabling other coal mines to put in their bids and have their coal of an equivalent grade stand a better chance of acceptance. I am bringing this to the attention of the minister in the hope that he will pass it on to the coal board in some favourable light.

The document that I hold in my hand calls for quite a number of orders. Here is one for 800 tons, and the description is:

Coal—bituminous slack; 40 per cent Comox and 60 per cent Drumheller or McLeod. Suitable for use in low pressure steam boilers (stoker fired).

If the phrase "or equivalent" were added, it would not rule out some of the companies from the bids. Here is another one: 75 tons—a small order; nevertheless we have small mines too that might benefit from being able to secure an order of that kind. Here is another for 300 tons, and another for 25 tons, and so forth. I do not suppose this is the only invitation to tender that there is. There may be a great deal more coal required than what is called for in this invitation. I wonder whether the minister would give favourable consideration to this suggestion, so that other coal mines would not necessarily be obviously ruled out from bidding.

Mr. Howe: It is my understanding that public tenders specify the B.T.U. value of coal, the moisture content and the ash content; that samples of coal are tested before the purchase is made, and the best value for the money is accepted. However, I shall be glad to call the attention of the Canadian Commercial Corporation to the remarks of my hon. friend and changes can be made that will not prejudice the right of the government to obtain the best value in the coal offered. If the tenders are restrictive in any way, I will see that the situation is remedied.

Mr. Hansell: I quite agree that the government should get the very best value for their money, because they are spending taxpayers' money. I want to thank the minister for passing the suggestion on to the Canadian Commercial Corporation.

Mr. Brooks: As the minister knows, we have a very small coal area in New Brunswick. It may not be important in the general picture, but it is very important to our province. We have had difficulties right through the piece so far as operating and selling coal are concerned, although as the minister knows we supply only about fifty per cent of the coal that is used in our own province.

Like the hon. member for Cape Breton South, I appreciate what the dominion coal board has done. We have a New Brunswick representative on that board, which I think is giving very good satisfaction so far as our producers are concerned.

I might say that the only benefit that the coal operators in our province received from the Carroll commission report was the adoption of the recommendation that a dominion coal board be set up. The Carroll report mentioned many of the difficulties which we have in New Brunswick in the matter of the operation of coal mines, but I do not think it suggested any solution.

There is the general impression that subventions help the coal industry in New Brunswick to quite an extent. That was true some years ago, during the war, when we sold quite a lot of coal outside the province. But today, as the minister probably knows, the subvention that we receive for the carrying of coal in New Brunswick is very small. In 1948 and 1949 only 864 tons of coal were sold outside the province for which we received subventions. The amount we received was $693. It is practically nothing. Therefore in the matter of subventions New Brunswick is not receiving any assistance to amount to anything. In the same year Nova Scotia sold 144,332 tons of coal and received $1,008,934. My point is this, Mr. Chairman. New Brunswick coal would receive subvention assistance if it were sold outside the province, yet we have to compete with coal coming from Nova Scotia which receives subvention in New Brunswick, and the result is that Nova Scotia coal in some instances is carried to certain points of our province cheaper than our own coal can be carried. I do not know whether representations have been made to the minister, but it has occurred to me that if he wishes to assist the operators in the coal industry of New Brunswick we might be granted subventions in that province so as to place us on an equal footing in that respect with the coal from Nova Scotia. We have no objection to Nova Scotia coal coming into New Brunswick, but we would like to be in the same position as they are so far as transportation costs are concerned.

I suggest the government should exercise great care in connection with the supply of coal for public buildings in the different provinces. A short time ago tenders were called to supply coal for public buildings in New Brunswick, and the specification was for Nova Scotia coal. New Brunswick coal was not asked for. I called the attention of the Minister of Public Works to this fact and in very short time he remedied it. But in matters of this kind I suggest it should not be necessary to call the attention of the department to this situation. When tenders are called for in New Brunswick, then New Brunswick coal should be specified.

Has consideration ever been given to assisting the transportation of New Brunswick coal in New Brunswick? What amount was paid Nova Scotia coal operators by way of subventions for coal carried into New Brunswick?

Mr. Howe: As the hon. member has said, there is no difficulty in finding a market for coal produced in New Brunswick. As a matter of fact New Brunswick is an exporter of coal, about 30,000 tons of the coal of that province having been marketed in the United States last year.

Mr. Brooks: That was to a pulp mill in Maine.

Mr. Howe: Yes. We provided capital assistance to one operator in a substantial sum so that he could enlarge his operations and thereby sell more to the United States. As the hon. member knows, very little coal comes out of New Brunswick into other Canadian provinces. When it does it receives subvention assistance, the same as the coal from other provinces. The subvention policy, however, does not extend to the movement of coal within a province, and that condition applies all across Canada. My hon. friend is mistaken when he says that subvention is paid on Nova Scotia coal delivered in New Brunswick; that just does not happen.

If there were a problem in connection with the marketing of New Brunswick coal we should be only too happy to attack that problem and find a solution for it. At the present time the New Brunswick operators seem capable of taking care of themselves and able to find their own market. The industry is in a healthy state.

Mr. Brooks: It is better now than it was.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): It is generally conceded that the coal mining business in Canada finds itself in a difficult position. When I heard the hon. member for Macleod refer to diesel engines my mind went back to 1932, at which time, accompanied by a number of operators and the presidents of various local unions, I had the privilege of interviewing the then minister of labour and minister of mines, Mr. Gordon. At that meeting were Sir Edward Beatty of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and Sir Henry Thornton, representing the Canadian National. I cannot help recalling a reply I received from Sir Edward. While at that time they had not begun to use diesels, they had begun to use oil in the locomotives moving west from Calgary; indeed, that whole area out to Vancouver became an oil burning division. I remember suggesting to Sir Edward Beatty that perhaps that should not be done, because it would be a blow to the coal mining industry of western Canada. I have thought many times since just how true his answer was when he said, "Smith, if there is no other answer, it is progress." I believe parliament would be most unwise, in connection with any industry, to do anything to stop progress. We know that things are progressing in other countries with which we may be in competition.

In connection with our excess supplies of coal I would ask the minister whether there has been any actual advance, or any prospect thereof, in utilizing coal supplies for purposes other than fuel. We have heard from Russian propaganda sources that they have been burning their coal underground to create power. I believe it can be presumed that that report was nonsense. I know we have some experimental stations, but would it not be wise to have some set up at the pit mouth? I am not advocating this; I am merely making an inquiry.

In these days when we speak about power we seem to think of nothing but hydro power. It seems strange that in the town of Drumheller a plant has been operating successfully for a good many years on slack, the cheapest form of all coal mined. Would the minister make a statement as to power production when cheap coal, and perhaps gas, are available, and compare the cost with hydro power? We know it is true that once the water is harnessed the operating expenses are limited.

Will the minister indicate also whether the blow is going to fall on Alberta coal production next Saturday, July 1? I asked a question of the minister on the orders of the day to which he replied with a sound answer, namely, that that was not a matter of government business but rather an arrangement of rates between suppliers and distributors of coal, and that it was something with which the board had nothing to do. He said, however, that the situation was being watched.

My understanding is that there is a subvention of $2.50 paid to the railway companies for the hauling of this coal to the east. On top of that is an agreed rate of, I believe, $8.40. My understanding is that it is the intention of the railways now to resort to the normal rate of around $13. That, of course, would completely end the use of Alberta coal in these eastern sections. I recall having appeared before the railway commission on one occasion—it is now the board of transport commissioners. Our efforts were directed to finding the cost of hauling a ton of coal from Drumheller to North Bay and Toronto. That was at a time when cost was not a factor in determining railway freight rates. I could not help but be amused. The Canadian National had brought from the United States an employee of the interstate commerce commission who belonged to a new professional classification; he was a railway cost accountant. The interstate commerce commission had begun the business of endeavouring to relate rates charged for the carriage of freight to cost, and I believe that was the first effort to do so on this continent. I will not mention the name of the gentleman, but he was one of the cleverest men I ever examined. I remember his saying that the haul from western to eastern Canada was a one-way haul and the cars had to go back empty to Alberta. In building up the structure upon which a rate was finally found he charged so much a ton for the extra vibration of the bridges on the line caused by hauling empty cars back to Alberta. I thought that was wonderful cost accounting, but it struck me that they carried the use of figures a long way indeed.

I should like the minister to say something about uses of coal other than for the generation of heat. If he can tell me anything new about the impending fall of the sword on Saturday with respect to Alberta coal, I would be very happy indeed.

Mr. Howe: As to the question whether any use has been found for coal other than for fuel, I think the answer is that on this continent no alternative use has been found which is economically sound. A good deal of money has been spent on experiments with the gasification of coal underground, and that has proven to be impracticable. Many millions have been spent on hydrogenation plants designed to make gasoline from coal. These have been found enormously expensive to operate, and have been pretty well rejected as impracticable. In my opinion the future of coal lies in keeping in step with progress in the development of the gas turbine. The gas turbine has economic advantages that are considerably better than those of diesel locomotives. Gas turbine engines are being operated in an experimental way today. The Brown Boveri Company of Switzerland is the leader in the development of gas turbine locomotives at the moment. Over the next few years there may be developments in gas turbines which will make them even more economical than diesels. One advantage lies in the fact that powdered coal is a first-class fuel. I think that is the hope for the future of the coal industry so far as railway operation is concerned.

My hon. friend asked whether coal can compete with hydro power as a source of power. For a steady load the answer is no. To provide for a 100 per cent load factor hydro power will always be cheaper than power produced from coal. Nevertheless, with fluctuating power load, and especially where hydro power can take the base load, steam is often economical and may offer better economy than the enlargement of a hydroelectric installation.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Stand-by plants.

Mr. Howe: Stand-by plants perhaps, or rather plants used from time to time where expense can be saved when the power is not required. In the southern states you will find that steam is combined with hydro power and used together with resulting high economy.

My hon. friend asked if the blow to the coal mines is going to occur on July 1. The answer is no.

The hon. member for Macleod is very sceptical about the suggestion that the government is watching the situation. However, the government did watch the situation referred to. It intervened in the later stages and was able to persuade the railroads that the western mines should have a chance to adapt themselves to the changed situation. The result is that the present rates are to be continued until March 31 next. That gives the mines some opportunity to meet the changing situation.

The hon. member for Macleod suggested that there has been a drop in production. I know of no drop in production caused by any situation other than fire and flood. The Brazeau colliery plant above ground was burned and the Cadomin mine was flooded a while ago. That has reduced the production of bituminous coal, but aside from that I know of no mine in the bituminous field that has curtailed production.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Mountain Park has given up its deep seam production.

Mr. Howe: As I understand the situation that seam is closed because of exhaustion of the seam:

Mr. Hansell: There have been almost 200 men laid off in one mine in the Crowsnest pass.

Mr. Howe: My hon. friend will understand that domestic coal follows a pattern that means curtailment of operations in the summer months. The reason is that the western domestic coal cannot be stored, and usually moves directly from the mine to the consumer during the burning season.

Mr. Hansell: It is a bituminous mine.

Mr. Howe: I am told that it is a captive mine. It is owned by Consolidated Smelters. The reason it has curtailed production is that the coke ovens at Consolidated are closed down. I do not think the coal board can regulate that situation. It is not a mine that offers coal on the general market. Its coal output is used by Consolidated.

Mr. Green: Is there any future for Canadian coal in the chemical and plastics field?

Mr. Howe: The Canadian chemical and plastics market is not one that can consume any large quantities of coal. Even in the United States that is a very limited market.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Do I understand from what the minister has said that there is no improvement in the Fischer-Tropsch process?

Mr. Howe: No recent improvement.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): It is not a practical thing to look forward to at the present time?

Mr. Howe: That is right.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): On account of the cost?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Shaw: I was particularly interested in the observations of the hon. member for Calgary West relating to research in this field. The minister's answer was indeed enlightening. It is my sincere hope that efforts will be continued in the field of research. I represent extensive coal mining areas, including the Brazeau colliery, where a disastrous million dollar fire has put more than 400 men out of work. It is expected they will be out of work for more than six months. When I go among the miners of Alberta I hear constantly expressions of concern as to the future of the coal industry, and as to their own employment. They refer to this matter of research, recognizing what the use of oil and gas may do to future markets for coal from the mines in that area. It is only natural that those miners, who have done nothing else throughout their working lives, should be greatly concerned. I repeat that I hope the research work will be carried on with all possible vigour.

When assistance was granted the coal mining industry of the maritime provinces for purposes of modernization, we gave our wholehearted support. We pointed out, however, that conceivably some assistance might be required by the coal mining industry of the west, and that when it became apparent that such assistance was necessary we trusted the government would be just as anxious to give that assistance as it was to assist the industry in the maritime provinces. Only recently I was checking figures with respect to Alberta's potential coal reserves, together with information as to the actual development up to the present time. It was astonishing to learn how insignificant, if that is the proper word, the development has been in relation to the potential reserves. The operators assure us there is only one reason why the coal industry of my province has not been more fully developed; it is the insecurity of markets. They feel that if we had a clear-cut national fuel policy there probably would be a great expansion. At the present time they are also faced with high costs in relation to the sale price of their product, and a narrow margin of profit per ton.

We have some very large mining concerns in my province, such as the Brazeau collieries. We also have the small family mines, if we may call them that, where half a dozen persons or less carry on the work. Then we have a middle class group of mines such as those found at Alexo and Saunders, for example, producing what we often refer to as domestic coal. I believe that in this middle group we have reached the point where a certain amount of modernization is necessary if production is to be maintained and increased. So far as I can ascertain, however, at the present time those operators are not prepared to invest the money necessary to improve and expand their mines because the future of the industry is so insecure. I am not certain whether assistance has been made available to the coal mining industry of the west for modernization or in connection with production, and I would ask the minister whether any such assistance is granted at the present time, of course apart from subventions and things of that kind. I hesitate to ask whether any such assistance is contemplated, because the minister might tell me that is a matter of government policy to be announced in due course. Has any assistance been granted at all in the western coal mining field for such purposes as modernization?

Mr. Howe: None of the mines mentioned by my hon. friend has asked for assistance.

Mr. Shaw: I did not say they had.

Mr. Howe: If he will look at the balance sheets of those particular operations he will find that all are in a very comfortable financial position. There has been no plan for capital assistance for the western mines. It is felt that the economic position of those mines would not warrant the government's inviting expansion of the operation. Obviously it is not wise to stimulate production for which there is no sure market. That would be bad economics, as I am sure my hon. friend will agree. With fuel oil, produced in the same area, undercutting the price of coal, I believe any western operator would be very unwise to invest more capital to expand his operation at the present time.

Mr. Shaw: I just want to make clear that there is no question of the mines having asked for assistance as yet. In view of what the minister has said, however, it seems to me that research becomes very much more important, and I believe there should be a more concerted effort on the part of the government and the board to secure markets for the product of our Canadian mines.

Mr. Johnston: When we speak of coal, as the minister indicated a moment ago, we must keep in mind the importance of maintaining a great industry. As I think the minister knows, the west is in a more precarious position than any other mining district in Canada, in that we have the close competition of oil, which certainly is going to make an inroad into the coal market. On the other hand the coal mining industry becomes of major importance in any national catastrophe that may come upon us, such as war. We saw what happened during the last war, when our coal mines had to make a supreme effort to help supply the demands of Canada during that emergency. So even if there were no other reason I think we should pay particular attention to that industry.

The minister indicated that the department was keeping its finger on the situation in the maritimes, and expressed the opinion that things were going along fairly well there. In western Canada, however, we have not that assurance, partly because of the production of oil. As the hon. member for Macleod indicated a moment ago, we cannot halt progress; but while no one would endeavour to halt the progress that is being made in the development of oil, it seems to me we must do something to maintain this other major industry. Large numbers of families are dependent upon coal mining for a livelihood. A moment ago the minister said he did not know of any mines that had been closed down.

Mr. Howe: I mentioned the domestic mines.

Mr. Johnston: When I was home at Easter the miners had a meeting at which it was stated there were 1,400 unemployed.

Mr. Howe: There is always a good deal of seasonal unemployment in the mines at this time of year.

Mr. Johnston: But this was a very sudden cut-off. Some of the operators were at that meeting, and they pointed out the difficulty they had in competing with United States coal. They said they just could not do it. Economically I suppose they were right. If I recall aright, one of the operators went on to indicate the handicap they were under through the lack of assistance to bring their mines up to modern standards of mechanization as has been done in the maritimes. I agree with the statement by the minister a moment ago that it would not be good business to encourage production for which there is no market. I believe the coal board has been doing good work as far as it has gone, but I wondered if through the activities of the coal board we could not give the western industry a little more encouragement in the finding of markets for western coal. A moment ago the minister said the board was keeping in close touch with the situation. I am sure it is, but if the minister could give us a little more definite information about what the coal board is doing to develop a market for western coal, it would be of great assistance and encouragement to those who are engaged in mining in the western part of Canada. What is the board doing, and where is it planning these markets for western coal? Can the minister tell us just a little bit about that, and at least give the western industry some encouragement? Exactly how does the board operate?

Mr. Howe: The coal board, in short, assists the industry to continue as a prosperous operation. The coal board does not perform miracles. I should be reluctant to say anything at this time that would encourage the western coal industry to believe it has a bright future, because I believe the future is far from bright. This situation arises because of developments in its own province. We shall continue to find markets for coal just as long as we can. After we have bonused, to the extent of $2.50 per ton coal which costs only $3.50 or $4 at the pithead, it becomes cheaper to take the miners on the payroll and pay them directly rather than bonus the coal.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): First, Mr. Chairman, I want to give personal recognition to what the minister has done, and recognition to him for his knowledge and grasp of the problems of the coal industry in Canada. I also want to express my confidence in the coal board, and the work it has undertaken although it is not complete. I have special confidence in one of the members of the board, who comes from Nova Scotia, Mr. D. W. Morrison. He has been associated with the coal industry for many years. The citizens of his own town of Glace Bay have shown confidence in him year after year by re-electing him as mayor. His health has been such, though, that he has not been able to continue. I have had many contacts with him, in delegations he has headed, and as I say, I have great confidence in him. Another man who has been associated with the coal board for many years in Ottawa is Mr. Frank Neate, who gave such great service to the province of Nova Scotia in an effort to put the coal industry on a better basis.

The coal industry is a necessary industry. It is only in time of national emergency that we really appreciate it. In order to keep it operating it has been necessary to grant large subsidies, subventions, and so on. I am glad the minister has recognized that policy which was put into effect in the early thirties when this industry was at the lowest point it has ever reached in the history of the country. It was meeting competition from imported coal that was being placed on cars in the United States for as little as fifty cents a ton. At that time the Canadian National was getting coal from its own areas, taken over from the Grand Trunk for as little as eighty and eighty-three cents per ton. Coal was coming into Canada from Great Britain and European points as ballast. At that time surplus electric power was being used under boilers to replace coal. This was electric power which would otherwise not be utilized. There were labour difficulties in those days, but the industry was able to carry on, and is now on a better basis.

I was interested in and concerned with the voluminous report on the coal industry submitted by Mr. Justice Carroll, now the member for Inverness-Richmond. There is a tremendous amount of information in that report, but I do not know that any of the recommendations have been actually carried out. I do not know what has been done. Perhaps the hon. member himself will be able to tell us about that. It has been recognized that the coal industry of this country is necessary, and various governments have so recognized it. The chief problem is finding markets in Canada for this industry which would give it an assured production. Last year the government assisted the industry to the extent of a loan of $10 million. This loan was given for the purpose of putting in improvements, machinery, and so on. I would be interested in having the minister say to what extent this loan has been applied. I understand that $7,500,000 was to be applied to provide machinery for the largest industry in Nova Scotia, Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation. That left $2,500,000 to provide improvements for the smaller mines in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I should like to know to what extent that money has been allocated, and what is being done. Recently the president of Dominion Coal and Steel Corporation announced that, in order to enable continuous production during the slack season, the coal mines at Springhill in my constituency were to have a port established on the Atlantic coast. This would enable them to ship thirty miles by rail, and then by water to the larger markets in central Canada. While these subsidies have been quite substantial, there has also been a great saving of United States currency through the production and marketing of coal in Canada which has replaced some of the imported coal. It has not been a disbursement without direct returns to this country.

I do not know that there is much more I can say now. I have a good deal of sympathy for the workmen operating those mines. They have had to struggle for years to build up the position that is now recognized, namely, that they are entitled to the largest wage that can be justified. In the county of Cumberland we have a splendid body of workmen who have proven time after time their capabilities and their desire to do their part in operating the coal mines. The smaller mines in the Joggins, River Hebert and Maccan area do not produce coal with as high B.T.U.'s as the Springhill coal, which has the highest heat units of any coal on the continent, but that area does produce splendid domestic fuel. It could be improved if washing plants were established, and I was hopeful that some of this money, the $2,500,000 applicable to the smaller mines, would be made available for this purpose.

There is much more I could say with respect to the coal industry and its significance in the economy of Nova Scotia, the difficult years through which it has passed, and its importance to Canada as a whole. We have the assurance of the minister that he will continue to do his part in carrying out this policy.

Mr. Howe: I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Cumberland. He has been supporting the coal industry of Nova Scotia for a great many years. He asked for some information as to the appropriations under the capital loans. There have been only two: to the Dominion Coal Company, a loan of $7,500,000, and to the Avon Coal Company, a loan of $375,000. We have a few additional applications that are being considered at the present time, but those mentioned are the only two loans that have been completed.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): May I ask the minister why the 1949-50 coal report has not been made available to us? The latest one I was able to get was that of the previous year, 1948-49.

Mr. Howe: The difficulty has been that we cannot get the printing finished. If we are not able to get the printed report tomorrow, we intend to table a typewritten copy.

Mr. Green: What is the position of the coal mining industry on Vancouver island, British Columbia? They have their problems too, but I think they are different from the maritime problems.

Mr. Howe: It is in bad shape. I do not know that I could give any details, but mines in British Columbia are fairly well worked out and the situation is not good.

Mr. Hansell: I notice that the amount of subvention, for both this year and last, is $4,500,000. Can the minister tell us what was actually spent last year of that amount?

Mr. Howe: The amount is about $3,900,000 —a little more perhaps, but in that vicinity.

Mr. Gillis: May I ask the minister this question? The statutory vote for subsidy payments is for the purpose, as I understand it, of providing a drawback on imported coal used for metallurgical purposes. Why is there a decrease of $50,000 in that amount? What is the amount of drawback paid now on coal used for metallurgical purposes? Does the drawback apply to Canadian-produced coal as well as to American?

Mr. Howe: This is a subsidy paid on Canadian coal used in making metallurgical coke. The purpose is to place an industry that uses Canadian coal on at least as favourable a footing as an industry using American coal. The only company to which that subsidy is paid, I believe, is Dosco.

Mr. Gillis: What amount is rebated?

Mr. Howe: It is 49½ cents a ton.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I should like to ask the minister if he would answer my inquiry as to what has been done or is being done to provide a shipping port so that Springhill mines can ship, through the slack season in the summer, to central Canada points by water.

Mr. Howe: Nothing has been done; but as far as I know, all the coal that is mined at Springhill is moved to market in central Canada. It has been for several years and I think it will continue to be. In other words, we do not intend to permit them to have any slack season.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): This was an announcement made by the president of the company, Mr. Forsyth, within the last few weeks.

Mr. Howe: I shall be glad to look into the matter.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Black (Cumberland).]

National research council—

451. Salaries and other expenses of the national research council, $9,874,903.

Mr. Green: This is the first item for the national research council. As the minister knows, these estimates have been reviewed by the special committee investigating the work of the research council, and I do not think there was any objection to them. What I should like to suggest to the minister is that he give some consideration to the salaries being paid to the research officers. If he will turn to page 281 of the estimates, at which are to be found the details of these votes, he will find that, apart from the directors and assistant directors, there are only 14 other research officers who are drawing a salary of $6,000 or more, and that there are 587 who are drawing less than that figure. If the salaries are sufficient to attract the best men in the country to this work, then of course there can be no objection to them. But I think it would be worth the minister's while to see whether the salaries, particularly in the middle group, are adequate to keep the best men in the country in this field. Personally I was greatly impressed by what we learned of the work of the staff of the research council, from Dr. Mackenzie down. They are doing a splendid job; they are doing work which is of the utmost importance to a young nation like Canada. Our university graduates seem to take naturally to work of this kind. With our natural resources and our comparatively small population, this research work seems to me to be as important as any other work being done in Canada. I would ask the minister to give some thought to the question whether these salaries are adequate.

Mr. Howe: A good deal of thought has been given to that subject. I think I can say that the research council does attract the best young men in Canada.

Mr. Green: I think that is true now. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. Howe: My hon. friend perhaps has in mind that the salaries paid do not hold these young men permanently. I think that is a highly desirable situation. The worst thing that could happen to the research council would be for young men to come in there at age twenty and stay there until age sixty. A young man gives splendid work to the research council and in return he obtains splendid training from the research council. I believe it is highly desirable, in the interests of the Canadian economy, that after the young man receives that training and has been there for a few years, he should find a place in industry and continue his work in that field.

Mr. Green: I have more in mind the men from thirty-five to fifty who are making a career of the research council work.

Mr. Howe: Such men are carefully selected, and their salaries are better, we will say, than comparable salaries in universities. We can never compete with industry. If industry needs a man with particular qualifications, it will pay any price that it takes to get the man. For instance—and I am perhaps not telling tales out of school—recently one of the men was offered $25,000 a year plus a favourable retirement plan, but he decided to stay at the research council at a salary less than $10,000. If I give too many particulars, you might place the man. The work does attract first-class men. We think that the range of salaries is adequate to attract the kind of men that it is in the public interest to attract to the work of the research council.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): The name of that man should be taken and he should be considered for a position in the cabinet.

Mr. Howe: I do not know that he would take that job.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I want to ask the minister whether he would say a word as to the co-ordination of effort that there is with other research organizations, for example, with the one in Ontario. I think there is co-ordination, but I should like to know more about it.

Mr. Howe: The purpose of the national research council was to bring about co-ordination of Canada's research efforts. I believe it is doing just that. Efforts are being made to see that there is a minimum of duplication with other research establishments and with those of the national research council, and also to see that there is no great overlapping of effort between the work of the national research council and the work of private industry. If the field is covered by another agency, that work is not undertaken at the national research council.

Atomic energy control board—

454. Administration expenses of the atomic energy control board, $57,000.

Mr. Green: This is the first item for the atomic energy control board. Last year the special committee on atomic energy recommended that steps should be taken to establish a second pile at Chalk River. I cannot tell from this year's estimates whether or not that recommendation is being followed. Can the minister explain, and also at the same time tell us whether there has yet been a decision reached by Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom concerning the release of more atomic energy data for peacetime purposes? In the report of the atomic energy control board I find a reference to that. Paragraph 10 reads:

> At meetings of representatives of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada recommendations were made looking to the wider declassification of fundamental scientific information while maintaining restrictions on publication of technological data that might be of assistance to a potential enemy.

It may be that the representatives of the three countries have decided that this is not the time to make any wider declassification; but will the minister tell us the situation on these two points?

Mr. Howe: As to the first point, those associated with atomic energy expect to be in a position to recommend to the government the building of a second pile. That recommendation has not been made as yet. I believe that the scientists would give as a reason the fact that they are not quite ready with the design. They are incorporating all the knowledge that has been developed since the first pile was built. While I cannot speak positively, it has been intimated to me that the design is not yet ready. There may be several other factors associated with the projects that are being worked out actively.

As to the declassification of information regarding peacetime application of atomic energy, there has been some, but the complete exchange of information that was hoped for has not been brought about, largely as a result of steps in that direction being interrupted by the Fuchs case.

Mr. Green: Is the production of uranium in Canada up to the requirements of the country?

Mr. Howe: Far beyond the requirements of Canada.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): What have been the outside expenditures under this heading up to date?

Mr. Howe: I have not the exact figure, but the expenditures for capital and for operating to date run about $35 million.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Incidentally I want to remind the minister that with respect to this $35 million, plus the appropriations totalling about $8 million which we are putting through, none of it has been spent in the maritime provinces. Therefore in this as in many other large expenditures the maritimes do not share, and that contributes to their difficulties and their lack of prosperity in relation to certain other parts of Canada.

Mr. Howe: In that regard I would remind my hon. friend that considerable expenditure is being made in the maritimes for a new laboratory which it is hoped will be opened in October of this year. I am confident that that regional laboratory will make a decided contribution to the economy of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I did not hear the question asked by the hon. member for Cumberland, but I heard the reply of the minister in reference to the maritimes. I should like to ask a question along that line. Is there a possibility of a regional laboratory being built in Newfoundland, or is there any work being carried on there?

Mr. Howe: The purpose of the maritime regional laboratory was to serve Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. There is a regional laboratory in the maritimes which will be opened this October; there is a regional laboratory for the prairies, and there is a regional laboratory on the Pacific coast.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): They deal with problems that will be helpful to Newfoundland?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Will this laboratory be carried on as part of the operations of Dalhousie university?

Mr. Howe: Yes.

Atomic energy control board—

456. Operation and maintenance, $6,113,530.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the minister whether there is any revenue in connection with this project which might be regarded as an offset of this expenditure?

Mr. Howe: There is a substantial revenue item, but I would rather not discuss it.

Item agreed to.

Canadian Arsenals Limited—

458. Administration and operation of Canadian Arsenals Limited, $2,900,000.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the minister explain the figure of $1,300,000 which is indicated as not required for 1950-51?

Mr. Howe: Last year the estimates contained an appropriation of $2,900,000 for the operation of the dominion arsenals. The arsenals did not require that appropriation. They actually operated at a profit of about $2,500,000; in other words, the sales of products from the arsenals exceeded the operating costs of the arsenals by about $2,500,000. That was not a normal situation, in that there were certain wartime stocks of raw materials that were being used up. The surplus stocks in the arsenals were not taken into War Assets Corporation and re-issued; they were left with the arsenals to liquidate, so that the profit of $2,500,000 from the operation of the arsenals is not a normal profit. However, an effort is made to operate the arsenals at least on a break-even basis, and the item that we are asking parliament to vote today is an insurance item rather than an item that will necessarily be expended.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): This is one of the cases where the minister's miraculous forecasting worked out. Seriously speaking, it does not look as if it had been a budget at all last year. As the situation worked out, there was a difference of several millions between what was estimated and what was needed.

Mr. Howe: I am neither a prophet nor a seer. I could not foretell that India, Pakistan, Israel and a few distant countries would come in with large orders for munitions. Had we relied upon our own requirements of munitions for the armed services we would have required the $2,900,000. That is the cost of maintaining the arsenals in a stand-by condition, if there is no work in progress.

Mr. Hodgson: I should like to thank the minister for a note he sent me some time ago concerning the arsenal at Lindsay. He said the government would keep it running. The payroll means a good deal to that town. When I saw that this amount of $1,300,000 was not required I wondered if it had anything to do with that plant, but the minister's answer to the hon. member for Greenwood would indicate that that is not so. Shall we continue in the future as we have in the past so far as this arsenal is concerned?

Mr. Howe: I was asked about the item of $1,300,000 not required this year. That was to replace the fire loss at Quebec arsenal. The hon. member will recall that one of the buildings was destroyed by fire last year. That was a capital vote put in to replace the building, and that is why this amount is not required this year.

Lindsay arsenal has been made an important unit of our arsenals system. It handles the manufacturing of the larger types of shell cases. Every effort is being made to keep it well supplied with work.

Special—

784. To reimburse the Canadian Commercial Corporation for expenses incurred in purchasing materials, supplies and equipment, etc., on behalf of the Department of National Defence, under chapter 51, statutes of 1947; further amount required, $31,736.

Mr. Green: Is the construction of 135 housing units at the camp of the Royal Canadian Engineers at Vedder Crossing, British Columbia, being done by Canadian Commercial Corporation or by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

Mr. Howe: When was the work undertaken?

Mr. Green: I think it is almost completed.

Mr. Howe: The chances are it was undertaken by Canadian Commercial Corporation. Within the last year it has been the practice to have practically all housing work for the services carried out by the housing corporation. Prior to that, small groups of houses were handled by Canadian Commercial Corporation.

Mr. Green: I have had complaints about the construction and the inspection. I suggest that the minister have one of his officers investigate the situation.

Item agreed to.

823. To provide, subject to the approval of treasury board, for advances to Canadian Arsenals Limited to increase the working capital fund for the operations of the company, $2,500,000.

Mr. Howe: This provides for an increase in the working capital of Canadian Arsenals Limited to the extent of $2,500,000.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

269. Departmental administration, $1,373,625.

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make one or two brief observations. What I shall say first will, I believe, reflect the views of all hon. members on both sides of the house. May I say to the minister, who has returned to the house after an illness, how pleased we are that he has made such a complete recovery and is with us again in his normal good humour and good health.

On previous occasions I have asked, and I repeat the request now, that a committee be set up to deal with the question of rural mail couriers in Canada. I realize of course that it is too late this session to take that action. I cannot understand why minister after minister has declined to do it.

There may be a disposition on the part of some hon. members to think that the problem of rural mail couriers is an isolated one and does not deserve the attention of a committee of the house. Nothing could be more remote from the fact, because, as the minister knows, the whole network of mail distribution across the country is of great importance not only to the couriers themselves but to those whom they serve.

The minister is no doubt aware that there have been many criticisms of the manner in which rural mail contracts are let, and I suggest that a committee of the house could study the question and make recommendations so that the mail couriers from coast to coast would get a fair break. Those of us who for many years have been served by the couriers know that their problems should receive more attention than they have received in the last few years. If there are problems, then they should be dealt with by a committee of the house.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. Graydon: Prior to the noon recess I was calling on the Postmaster General to set up a special committee at the next session of the house to deal with the question of mail delivery by rural mail couriers. I want to add to what I said then the observation that the long history of the rural mail couriers has not been a very happy one, nor is it one for which parliament or the government can take much credit. The rural mail courier renders splendid service. He is an intimate part of the rural life of Canada, but unfortunately the remuneration he has received has been so scandalously out of line with that paid to others performing similar public service that it has called for condemnation by many members on both sides of the house.

I am not going to say that there have not been patchwork reforms aimed at attempting to relieve the position of this public servant. Bonuses have been given and changes made, but the objection is that he is still working under an outmoded system which perpetuates the inequalities under which he labours year in and year out. The association which has the interests of rural mail couriers particularly at heart has called incessantly for a committee of the house to hear witnesses, gather information and allow the employees concerned and others interested in the service to come to Ottawa to present their point of view for the purpose of having the matter thoroughly studied, and if possible the policy revised so that the rural mail courier will get a square deal.

There is another important point that the committee would normally deal with. While the dwellers in rural areas for the most part are provided with service to their gates six days a week, and while city dwellers on paved streets in the larger towns and cities have mail delivery six days a week, there is a vast section of our population which does not come within either of those classifications. With the housing programs and the extension of residential areas outside of the larger cities and towns, many rural sections have now been transformed into suburban areas with scores of thousands of people living there who used to live in the cities and towns. The difficulty arises from this vast extension and the increase in population in the suburban parts of the country.

In many instances these areas are too thickly populated for the ordinary rural mail route, yet they do not qualify under the regulations for city postal delivery service. I have been wondering what can be done in cases of that kind. I know that the Post Office Department has been making attempts to alleviate the condition. At this point I should like to say that in the representations I make from time to time to the department—and I am sure this is true of other members of the house—I have been met with courtesy and co-operation on the part of the Post Office Department in reference to these urgent and vital problems.

As I see it, the difficulty is that what is needed is a brand new policy as to suburban mail delivery. With a view to being of some assistance to the committee and the department I wrote last November to the Postmaster General of the United States. As a matter of interest and information I want to put on record the letter I received from Mr. Donaldson, their Postmaster General, dated November 10, 1949. It reads:

Dear Mr. Graydon:

This will acknowledge your letter of November 2, 1949, inquiring about the type of service rendered by this department to suburban districts throughout the United States. This department maintains rural delivery service on 32,556 rural routes which serve not only the farm areas of the country but cover many of the highways and roads in the suburban areas of our cities and towns.

When the population in such areas, particularly those adjacent to large cities, becomes congested to the extent that rural delivery service is no longer feasible either from the standpoint of mail volume or frequency of stops, such territory is transferred to the city delivery service and maintained by carriers who are provided with vehicles. This service is provided in territory adjacent to the well developed city areas but in which sidewalks and other city improvements have not been provided. Where government-owned vehicles are available in postal units that equipment is used and in other cases where the government-owned trucks are not available, the carrier serving such a route is granted an allowance under contract for providing a privately-owned vehicle.

I am sure you understand that under our laws and regulations we maintain city delivery service in about 4,400 cities where the delivery work is accomplished by carriers on foot. This service is maintained in cities under authority of law which requires that such service be maintained at every incorporated city, village, or borough containing a population of 50,000 within its corporate limits, and may be established at every place containing a population of not less than 10,000 within its corporate limits, or at any post office which produces a gross revenue of not less than $10,000 per annum.

The department follows a policy of withholding the establishment of city delivery service, either by foot carrier or mounted carrier, in communities having less than 2,500 population, even though the receipts of the office meet the minimum requirements of $10,000. Carriers in the rural delivery service sell stamps, accept parcels for mailing, register mail for the senders, and also accept applications and money for the purchase of money orders. City delivery carriers, whether on foot delivery routes or mounted routes, do not render such service to the patrons.

With every good wish, I am,

Sincerely yours,

J. M. Donaldson
Postmaster General

As the minister will see from this letter, the problem of suburban mail delivery has been tackled with vigour and considerable effectiveness by the Post Office Department at Washington. If the Postmaster General would go into the southern end of my riding, or the suburban portions of other ridings, he would see a striking example of inconvenience and inefficiency with respect to mail delivery. That inconvenience and inefficiency are not occasioned by the quality of the service the rural mail courier tries to perform; they result from the fact that the system is not right. At one point in my own riding where there are perhaps fifty or sixty mail boxes, the last report I had indicated that the mail courier had no less than 465 stopping points. In addition we must remember that the danger on the highway is very great. In some suburban areas you can see almost a forest of mail boxes, extending perhaps a hundred yards along the highway. These involve considerable danger, not only because the mail vehicle has to stop so often on the highway, but also because many children have to cross the highway in order to collect the mail, having come a considerable distance from their homes in order to do so. Only this morning I had a letter from one of my constituents who said that having left Toronto and come to my riding to live, the nearest point at which he can get mail is a mile and a half away; and that situation could be duplicated thousands of times all across the dominion.

I suggest to the minister that this problem has assumed most serious proportions, and that it is daily becoming more aggravated because the building program is going ahead rapidly. Every time a new house is built the problem becomes worse. It seems to me that the whole matter of rural mail delivery, including the letting of contracts and the very low salaries which in the past have been paid rural mail couriers, ought to be dealt with by a parliamentary committee. The rural mail problem has never been given a real going over by a committee of this house, though we have dealt with many other things that no doubt were important. Let us not forget, however, that these are the things that touch the home life of every rural community in Canada. We cannot simply sit here and discuss in a general way, toward the end of the session, matters so important in the lives of the people in our rural communities, and let it go at that. From time to time we have had committees to deal with matters which in my opinion have not affected the rural life of this country to anything like the extent it is affected by our mail delivery, and I believe it is time we gave that consideration to this problem.

Today I rose only to make what I hope have been constructive suggestions, because I do not believe there is any point in trying to be unduly critical of anyone in connection with this matter. It is a situation that has developed over the years. If criticism should be offered, I think it would be that the department has not pursued the matter with the vigour which I believe our expanding suburban population have a right to expect.

I ask the minister, as I have asked him before and as I hope I do not have to ask him again, to set up a committee to deal with postal delivery service in Canada, a matter which affects the lives, the happiness, the convenience and the accommodation of people in the rural portions of this country.

Mr. Pouliot: Before the minister replies I should like to say that I agree with what the hon. member for Peel has said, with the exception of his conclusion.

At the outset the hon. member made a courteous reference to the return of the minister. Everyone is pleased that he has returned in good health and is able to carry on the heavy work of his department. During his absence the acting minister was the Solicitor General, who did a very good job.

I am very much interested in the matter of rural mail delivery, and most of the remarks of the hon. member for Peel were to the point. It is my experience that rural mail delivery renders a great service to rural communities, but sometimes a contractor makes a low bid in order to obtain a government contract, which he frames and puts in his drawing room as though it were a Ph.D. degree or something of the sort. They put in the lowest bids, in the hope that their members of parliament will see to it later that the amounts stipulated in the contracts are increased. They want the contracts under any conditions; and those who make bids that are too low can blame no one but themselves if they are not well paid.

On the other hand it very often happens that the officials of the department are stingy in dealing with the tenders. They do not know the geographical conditions; they do not know whether there are steep hills or whether the road is level, and they have established an average which is the same for a mountainous countryside as for a plain. The member of parliament is the one who knows best, and his suggestions as to a fair price for a service should be listened to. In the past it was the custom of the officials to ask tenderers to reduce their prices. In my humble view, when a tender is called for there should be no bargaining afterward. The contract should be given to the lowest tenderer, if he has the equipment with which to do the work. Sometimes there is some merchandising, some auctioneering by the officials of the communications branch. They think the tender is too high, and they ask him to bring it down and down until it reaches a point where it is no longer a paying proposition. In my humble opinion a man who bids for a mail contract should be allowed enough to pay him a legitimate salary, and to cover his expenses. No man is supposed to make a sacrifice to carry the mail anywhere in Canada. I would be interested in knowing the average price per mile paid to mail carriers in each province in Canada. I presume that in Quebec it is lower than anywhere else.

An hon. Member: Higher.

Mr. Pouliot: No; I may be wrong, but it is my contention that the price the Post Office Department accepts in the province of Quebec is lower than anywhere else. I well remember the fight I had to try to have a fair price paid for mail service in a mountainous countryside. I am glad to tell the minister that conditions are now much better than they were under his predecessor. My post office, and rural route No. 5, are not so thick and heavy as they were under his illustrious predecessor. I had to write letter after letter to try to get an answer, and it was always the same. If the present incumbent were not in charge of the post office, I would vote to reduce the estimate to $1 because I had no satisfaction before he took charge. Conditions have improved, and I thank the minister for that.

I should like to ask the minister when mail delivery service will be established in the city of Riviere du Loup. I hope it will be done soon. Yesterday I was told that an order in council was required for that purpose. Everyone is in favour of it, and I expect the minister to establish it at the earliest possible opportunity. I should also like him to establish a rural route in the parish of St. Patrick, Riviere du Loup, to the east of the present post office, to serve that rural community. It could be easily done. In the first place the petition was not understood but I hope it is now, and the farmers who live in that part of my constituency will enjoy rural mail delivery service in the near future. I thank the minister for having established many new rural routes in my constituency. I do not understand why at times it is so difficult to have these routes established. Naturally, there are geographical difficulties, and there may be some argument about the price asked, or there may be some divergence of opinion in the community, but as a rule all the people who do business want to have their mail as soon as possible. It is not the same today as it was fifty years ago. The amount of mail has increased, and it makes quite a difference to the rural mail carrier. He has to buy a bigger truck to handle all the material, and that means greater expense.

In conclusion, my hon. friend asked for the establishment of a committee to study the case of the rural mail carrier. I do not think that is necessary at all, and I shall tell him why. It is for this reason I wanted to speak before the minister. During the war we established a system of adjustments for mail carriers who had more mail, more parcels, newspapers and so on, to carry. By virtue of an act that was passed by parliament, a bonus was allowed. The minister dealt with the mail carriers fairly; even the predecessor to the present minister was quite fair, but more argument was needed to get results from him. The matter was handled fairly without any political partisanship, and an adjustment was made so that the mail carriers would have a fair deal. We have the example of the past, and judging by the revenues of the Post Office Department, which are as large as they were during the war, we have as much mail passing through the office as we had during the war. If that legislation was good during the war, because of the increase in correspondence at that time, I do not see why the same legislation is not used again. This would ensure that the mail carrier who has more mail to carry now than he had before would have an opportunity for righting the wrong he is suffering. I am in favour of a fair deal. After that legislation is re-enacted we might adopt the suggestion of the member for Peel. If that legislation did not work so well in the future as it has in the past, then we might have a committee of the house to study the matter.

I have been here longer than my hon. friend. I remember a time when Mr. Anderson was the superintendent of mail service, and there was a fellow who was asking the mail couriers to contribute some money for an organization to increase the price paid to mail couriers. It was pure humbug, and I do not know what happened to the fellow but nothing was done to help the mail couriers until remedial legislation was introduced. This legislation gave everyone a fair chance. In conclusion, sir, I should like to say to my hon. friend that I am not in favour of a committee. We have enough committees. We have committees for this and that. The members are never in the house because they are sitting on committees. They are listening to what this expert says. We do not need an expert. When the minister suggested that the officials of the department should explain the functions of the Post Office Department to hon. members, I told him we did not need those officials to give lectures to members of parliament. We know what is going on in the Post Office Department. The only thing the minister needs to do is to tell his officials that they are to be fair with the members of parliament, to respect them and not inaugurate any new, complicated system for efficiency. Some foolish people think only of efficiency. If I want this to be sent to the member across the way, I call a page and he takes it there. An efficient method would be scientific. It would be a new world. Do not pay any attention to the new world. I say that to the minister. Do not pay any attention to superefficiency: just pay attention to efficiency. That is enough for me and I think it is enough for everybody.

Hon. Edouard Rinfret (Postmaster General): At this stage, Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the hon. member for Peel and the hon. member for Temiscouata for their kind words. The committee may be sure that I am pleased to be back. As a matter of fact, if I had listened only to myself I would have been back much e rlier because I was eager to be here. But unfortunately there was a watchdog, in this case my doctor, who prevented me from being here sooner. I wish to thank the Solicitor General for the wonderful work he did while I was away. It has even been suggested to me that I should have stayed away a little longer because people were getting along with him so well. At this stage, Mr. Chairman, I should like to put on the record certain facts dealing with the post office and its activities during the year. This is the first time that the gross postal revenues of the postal service have exceeded $100 million. The figure for the fiscal year 1949-50 is $101,277,435, an all-time high. Part of the increase is accounted for by the fact that this is the first fiscal year in which the revenues have been included from Newfoundland. The actual amount of revenue from that province during the fiscal year was $1,023,693 and the expenditures on postal service for the same period was $1,532,363. The estimates for the fiscal year 1950-51 which are now presented provide for an increase of $2,087,780 over the fiscal year which ended on March 31.

The main item of increase is for salaries and allowances of employees which amount to $3,455,014. This increase is due in part to additional employees necessary to give service and also to increases in salary rates recommended by the civil service commission and approved by the governor in council. On other items there is a decrease in the amount asked for. During the past year 50 post offices have been raised from a revenue to a staff post office rank. This means that staffs of offices are put on a more stable basis. The employees are classified as civil servants and will enjoy civil service rates of pay and be eligible for the benefits of superannuation.

Letter carrier delivery service has been inaugurated at five points during the fiscal year 1949-50 and door-to-door delivery is in contemplation at approximately 13 different points during the present fiscal year. There has been a decided improvement in the transportation of international mails. This is due in great part to the return to the merchant service of ships which were formerly on war service which have now been reconditioned and placed back into service and also a number of entirely new vessels have been added.

Steady progress has been made in the field of international air mail. At the present time almost half the letter mail between Canada and Great Britain travels by air. This volume of mail which amounts to approximately 240,000 pounds annually is transported almost entirely by Trans-Canada Air Lines. There has been a sharp reduction in the number of parcels sent to Great Britain and other European countries. This reduction is almost entirely in the food parcel category. In 1947 the weight of parcel post carried was 27 million pounds. In the calendar year 1949 the weight carried was 22 million pounds, a reduction of 5 million pounds. This is due in great part to improvement in living conditions in European countries and also to the establishment of special agencies whose mission it is to dispatch food and other supplies to those countries where these necessities are in short supply.

Of the total estimates presented amounting to $85,674,757, 55·96 per cent, or in figures $47,946,100, is for the payment of salaries and allowances. The next large item is for transportation which accounts for 38·42 per cent or a figure of $32,910,747; 94·38 per cent of the post office expenditures being for salaries and transportation. Supplies, equipment and miscellaneous expenditures make up the balance.

In the realm of transportation there does not seem to be any immediate prospect of price reduction. As a matter of fact, the railway companies have made a request for a drastic increase in mail pay rates. The department feels that the increase requested is excessive and the matter is now under consideration. Pending final decision, payments are being made to the railways at the former rates. Any substantial increases granted will turn the small surplus for the fiscal year 1949-50 into a deficit. We have continued to give air mail service in Canada on an all-up basis. The volume of such traffic increased gradually within the year but is still within the estimates on which the experimental rates of payment were calculated. Payment to Trans-Canada Air Lines for this transportation continues to be made on the experimental basis pending agreement at a regular contract rate. We are hoping that the company will be able to agree to rates which will permit the continuance of the all-up scheme as a permanent feature.

The powers to grant supplemental payments to mail contractors ended on March 31, 1949. Supplements granted prior to that date have been continued for the term of the respective contracts. New contracts established as a result of tenders continue at fairly high rates, and there is no visible sign of any decrease in prices.

The money order and savings bank service continues to grow. During the fiscal year ended March 31, 1950, the number of money orders issued and paid shows an increase of 2·35 per cent over the previous fiscal year. There likewise has been an increase in the number of savings bank deposits.

In the realm of new service, consideration has been given to the establishment of an air mail service for parcel post and printed matter, but investigations so far indicate that there is not sufficient demand to justify such a service in the domestic field. The same situation applies in the international sphere. However, the situation is one which is being closely watched and when it is felt that worth-while advantages would be gained the service will be introduced.

In 1949 a departmental committee was established to examine all printed forms and other types of stationery used in the department. This committee has met and still meets regularly and, as a result of its operations, there has been a sharp decrease in the number of forms used, which has not only added to the efficient operation of the service but has resulted in worth-while economies.

The department has continued its program of training employees and arranging exchanges between the operating and headquarters services with beneficial results. We have also placed at the service of the mailing public a group of public relations officers who not only explain the facilities which the department offers but help the various mailers with their individual postal problems.

We are continually studying ways and means of improving service and effecting economies. There is under consideration at the present time the experimental installation of a mechanical sorting machine. This machine has been used effectively in other administrations, and we feel it can be adapted to the Canadian service with savings in manpower and improved working conditions.

The improvements so far made have increased the output of each employee by approximately 6·6 per cent over the last five years.

The growth of the service to its present structure with an increase in postal revenue, year by year, to an all-time high of $101,277,435.43, has always been marked by a judicious combination of the best in traditional postal experience and the adoption of new ideas and modern procedure in its administration and organization. The result is that today the Canadian postal service ranks with the best to be found in any country in the world.

During the fiscal year 1949-50 its activities were as follows: it carried 1,365,492,384 letters and postcards; 612,000,000 newspapers; 790,912,000 pieces of printed matter. Through its money order system it handled $479 million —I am leaving out the thousands—in money order transactions.

Mr. Graydon: How many people have you counting these letters?

Mr. Rinfret: It is automatic. It encouraged thrift in its savings bank system to the extent of $38,754,000. It carried goods to the extent of 69,201,000 parcels; it operated an insurance system insuring 225,000 parcels. In its c.o.d. system it handled over 8,364,000 c.o.d. articles. It provided a registration system handling 18,500,000 orders. It gave rural delivery to 368,758 rural boxholders. It operated 57 air mail services with a total route mileage of 29,095 miles.

The number of employees required to operate and maintain the Canadian postal service at its present high level of efficiency is approximately 46,000, which is approximately one-third of the civil servants serving the country. This covers staffs at headquarters in Ottawa, the operating service in the field, the revenue postmasters and their assistants, and mail contractors.

This is a brief statement of what has been accomplished during the past fiscal year. I cannot let this occasion go by without expressing my appreciation of the loyal and efficient service given by the employees of the department generally in their desire to continue to make the postal service of Canada the best of all.

On the question of mail couriers, the hon. member for Peel said that we pay salaries scandalously out of proportion to other salaries. The first remark I would make is that it is not a salary because all rural mails are carried on tender. If I may answer the hon. member for Temiscouata at the same time, I would say that the very considerations that he himself gave with reference to the various hills or conditions of the land make it practically impossible for us in the department to fix a uniform salary throughout Canada, or even to establish any sort of zone where salaries could be paid. We feel —and I think we are correct in this assertion —that the rural couriers themselves when they are making their tenders know the conditions of their land much better than anybody else, and that that should determine the prices that should be paid per mile in the various areas.

In this connection I might say that the average price per mile paid to the rural mail couriers since 1939 has increased by 65·5 per cent, which I think corresponds to the increase in the cost of living, and also corresponds to the increase that has been given other civil servants.

Mr. Graydon: The minister thinks they are getting enough?

Mr. Rinfret: I am not in a position to answer that. They themselves fix the amount that they are to receive, because they are the ones who make the tenders. If at the present time a courier feels that he is not receiving sufficient for the services he is performing he has the right under his contract to give three months' notice to the department, and the department will have to call for tenders. If the amount that is actually paid is not met by a smaller tender, or if the tenders for similar service are higher, the department will have to accept the higher tender unless they can get a reduction in it.

Mr. Graydon: May I ask the minister this one question? Why should they be singled out as the only branch of the public service that must have their jobs given by tender?

Mr. Rinfret: It is not a job that they are performing; it is a contract that they have with the government. I know of no contract that is given by the government except by tender. In 1939 the average cost per mile per annum—that is a daily frequency—was $32.35. In 1950 it had gone up to $53.55, which, as I have just said, equals an increase of 65.5 per cent. May I at this time answer the hon. member for Temiscouata. The price per mile throughout Canada is as follows. Unfortunately I cannot give him the information by provinces, but I will give it to him by district. In Vancouver the average cost per mile, based on a service of six times per week, was $71.53, which represented a cost per box per annum of $7.43. As I continue I shall give the two figures that represent these two things. At Edmonton, $60.41, and $14.18; Calgary, $56.48 and $14.96; Saskatoon, $60.02 and $16.38; Moose Jaw, $62.36 and $16.72; Winnipeg, $60.08, and $14.67; London, $52.27 and $13.21; Toronto, $54.49 and $12.84; North Bay, $57.92 and $19.27; Ottawa, $49.44 and $17.49; Montreal, $51.72 and $15.25; Quebec, $52.77 and $16.87; Saint John, $51.45 and $19.68; Halifax, $55.54 and $18.33 and Charlottetown, $53.18 and $17.07. As I have already pointed out, that represents service to 368,758 rural boxholders. It represents a daily mileage of 101,452.5 miles.

On the question of rural mail, I know that my hon. friend is very much interested. We have a long-range plan that we are working on, but we feel that by putting it in operation too soon we would disrupt the service as it is at the present time.

We have more than 5,000 rural routes at the present time. Those must be permitted to operate, and we find it necessary to make changes from time to time.

Mr. Graydon: Is the minister considering inaugurating a system similar to that which has been introduced in the United States?

Mr. Rinfret: I was about to deal with that question. In the matter of suburban delivery one must always keep in mind density of population. I am not ready to follow all the practices in use in the United States, one of the chief reasons being that at the close of last year they showed a deficit of $551 million. I think therefore that if we were to put into operation all their practices—I shall not call them schemes—we might find ourselves in a bad financial position.

We are considering however the possibility of giving added service to suburban areas. We have our regulations which must be followed. The difficulty is that there is always a limit as to the points on the outside of villages, towns or cities, which can be served. At what point are we to stop? If we stop at one place we will find some person perhaps only 75 or 100 yards farther on who would want the service. If we agree to give that service, then we will find another one perhaps another hundred yards farther on who will expect to have delivery.

For these reasons standards have been established. The distance, for two deliveries per day, is up to twenty yards; for one delivery it is between twenty and forty yards; and, generally speaking, over forty yards delivery is not warranted. That is the standard upon which we have based our operations.

Mr. Graydon: But that is a city rather than a suburban delivery service.

Mr. Rinfret: As a city grows the suburban areas are taken in. As I said earlier, we are considering another plan at the present time. However, it has not yet been advanced to the stage where I can give any particulars with respect to it. This very point has been considered, because we feel that this may be one place where our service is not quite equal to our usual standard.

The hon. member for Temiscouata asked when the service in Riviere du Loup is to be inaugurated. That is one point where it is possible a service may be established this year. In order to obtain letter carrier service we have established certain standards. The first of these is that there must be at least two thousand points of call, and the postal revenue collected must be more than $35,000. Walking conditions must be good, and there are certain other conditions which must be complied with. As soon as the various centres on the verge of becoming letter carrier centres meet these conditions we will give the service to them.

The hon. member for Temiscouata also referred to the bonus which, until March 31 of last year, was given under the legislation. To my mind this legislation was tantamount to giving to the Postmaster General complete discretion in respect of each of the rural contracts in this country. I do not believe that is what the House of Commons would want.

When about fifty years ago the system was established of giving full discretion to the Postmaster General in all mail contracts below $200, that represented about 87·6 per cent of the contracts. Today, however, that $200 represents only 17·6 per cent of the contracts. That legislation under which the Postmaster General was given full discretion gave him authority, not only over the 17·6 per cent, but over 100 per cent of the contracts. I am sure hon. members would not be prepared to accept that.

Mr. Graydon: When the bonus system was inaugurated one of the weaknesses was that, unless a rural mail courier knew about the legislation and made application for the benefits thereunder, he was forgotten. In my own constituency I wrote to all the rural mail couriers telling them about the legislation, and in this manner they were informed. I am not sure that was done throughout the country, however. There must have been hundreds of rural mail couriers who did not know they were entitled to a bonus until it was too late for them to get it. I am sure that if the minister looks at the records he will find that the great proportion of rural mail couriers across the country were denied the right to the bonus because it was not made general. Why it was not made general, or why they were not notified with respect to it, I cannot say.

Mr. Rinfret: It was fully publicized at the time.

Mr. Graydon: All people do not read the same newspapers.

Mr. Rinfret: It was in all the papers.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I should like to open my remarks this afternoon in the same way as did the hon. member for Peel prior to the noon adjournment, by expressing my personal pleasure at seeing the Postmaster General back in his place in the house, and looking the picture of health. It is a pleasure indeed to welcome him back to his post and to his duties.

The Postmaster General has just concluded his remarks on one subject concerning the administration of his department by what I thought were commendable references to the undesirability of extended discretionary authority in him as Postmaster General. I could not ask for a better theme for the few remarks I am about to make.

May I say at the outset that I am directing my remarks to the principle involved in a subject that has been dealt with on several occasions during the present session. One recalls the discussions on April 18, May 9, May 16 and May 24. I participated in the discussions on two of those occasions. Today I do not propose to traverse the ground covered on those occasions, but so far as possible shall focus attention on the principle involved in the exercise by the Postmaster General or officials of his department of powers conferred upon the Postmaster General by section 7 of the Post Office Act.

We are told that the powers conferred by this section upon the Postmaster General go back to 1889 in their origin, that they have not been changed since, and that the powers thus conferred are widely used. We are told, for instance, that there are about 1,100 orders outstanding at the present time denying the use of the mails to persons in Canada. Only yesterday an instance was brought to our attention where this power was exercised in the case of the Calgary Stampeders, where they and certain persons associated with them have been denied the use of the mails.

The powers conferred by section 7 (d) empower the Postmaster General, subject to the provisions of the act, to make regulations declaring what shall and what shall not be deemed to be mailable matter for the purposes of the act. Then there are certain direct instances cited and we have these important words:

> . . . and for marking on the covering of letters, circulars or other mailable matter suspected to concern illegal lotteries, so-called gift concerts, or other illegal enterprises of like character, offering prizes, or concerning schemes devised or intended to deceive or defraud the public, for the purpose of obtaining money under false pretences, whether such letters, circulars or other mailable matter are addressed to or received by mail from places within or without Canada, a warning that they are suspected to be of a fraudulent character and for returning such letters, circulars or other mailable matter to the senders.

I invite the attention of the committee to one fact that seems to me to be of fundamental importance in the interpretation of this section. It is the emphasis placed upon the words "fraud" and "fraudulent". The section does not simply stop with a reference to such things as illegal lotteries and so-called gift concerts. It goes on to refer to "other illegal enterprises of like character, offering prizes, or concerning schemes devised or intended to deceive or defraud the public, for the purpose of obtaining money under false pretences." In the concluding words it is made clear that this applies "whether the letters, circulars or other mailable matter are addressed to or received by mail from places within or without Canada," and that power is given to attach a warning that these are suspected to be of a fraudulent character. It is quite clear, sir, that the power is intended to be confined to use in cases where fraud exists or is, on reasonable grounds, suspected to exist, and in the latter case a warning that the contents are suspected to be of a fraudulent character may be given by the marking of certain words on the envelope.

It seems to me that in the interpretation of this power, and of regulations 204 and 206 passed under the authority of the act, sight has been lost of the fact that it is only in cases where fraud exists, or the scheme that is suspected is of a fraudulent character or designed to deceive or defraud the public for the purpose of obtaining money under false pretences, that the power was intended to permit refusal of the use of the mails to any person. Section 204 of the regulations passed under the act largely repeats the language I have just read from section 7(d). Again the emphasis is placed upon the word "fraudulent". The regulation adds:

. . . it is hereby declared that no letters, packet, parcel, newspaper, book or other thing, sent or sought to be sent through the post office by or on behalf of or to or on behalf of such person shall be deemed mailable matter.

Section 206 of the regulations is declaratory in its nature. It provides:

The Postmaster General has power, under the statute, to mark or cause to be marked upon the covers of letters, circulars or other mail matter suspected to concern schemes devised or intended to deceive or defraud the public for the purpose of obtaining money under false pretences, whether such letters, circulars or other mail matter are addressed to or received by mail from places within or without Canada, "suspected to be of a fraudulent character"—

That quotation is taken from the words of section 7(d). Then it proceeds:

—and to return such letters, circulars or other mail matter to the senders.

The Postmaster General's department has attempted to exercise this power in cases where no fraud existed or could by any stretch of the imagination be suspected. The case I referred to on an earlier occasion was one in which the Leaside Lions club, a highly reputable organization, was conducting a raffle as part of a money-raising effort to assist the Manitoba flood relief fund. On that occasion the Postmaster General's department, regardless of the worthiness of the cause, regardless of the fact that the police in the area had been made aware of the fact that lucky number prizes were being offered in this way and that tickets were being sold, stepped in and denied the use of the mails to the club and to the chairman of the committee in charge of the raffle for the club. The ban affected his personal mail as well as mail received by him on behalf of the club. The Post Office went so far as to return mail in which his own pay cheque was being received from his employer.

Mr. Graydon: Shame.

Mr. Fleming: When the power is exercised or attempted to be exercised in a case of that kind, where there can be not even the slightest suspicion attached to those concerned and no suggestion whatsoever of the scheme being fraudulent or intended to deceive the public, then I think two facts are laid bare before the house. The first is that the Postmaster General's department is undertaking to use this power in cases where the statute does not authorize it, and in the second place, this legislation must be brought under review by the House of Commons.

We have courts to deal with offences against the criminal law. We have a considerable volume of criminal law in this country. Surely it is not the intention of the House of Commons, in carrying forward on the statute books the Criminal Code and legislation of a similar nature, to leave it to a department to step in and create criminal law, or to set itself up as a body that assumes the function of filling in any gaps that may have been left in the criminal law enacted by the parliament of Canada. That never was and never could have been the intention of parliament in 1889 in enacting section 7(d) of the act. If there are gaps in the criminal law today it is the duty of the government, and particularly of the Minister of Justice, to bring legislation before the house to be enacted for the purpose of filling the gaps in the criminal law, but it should not be left to officials of a department to create law or to take upon themselves the function of the parliament of Canada.

On the question of enforcement, with all respect to the officials of the Department of the Postmaster General, it seems to me that in the case I mentioned—and there must be many others like it such as that of the Calgary Stampeders mentioned yesterday—the matter of law enforcement could very well be left to the law enforcement officers of the area concerned. There are efficient law enforcement authorities in these areas without requiring some special supplement by officials at Ottawa in a department whose principal concern is not the enforcement of the criminal law. The instances I have cited cannot be said to be in any way similar to the case conjured up by the Minister of Justice on a previous occasion during the present session where the offence involved the purchase and sale of securities and he contended it was not covered by the provincial law. Here is a situation which may have been a lottery but certainly could not be said to involve any wilfully illegal lottery, and by no further stretch of the imagination could be said to involve any attempt to deceive or defraud the public.

I think great care must be taken by the post office authorities in lottery cases. I do not propose here today to discuss whether lotteries are right or wrong. I suspect that the view I entertain on the subject of lotteries per se would not be any broader than the view of the Postmaster General, but not every lottery is illegal under the Criminal Code. Section 236 of the Criminal Code, while making certain games of chance and lotteries illegal and attaching penalties for breaches of the law, goes on in subsection 6 to provide that the section does not apply to a considerable list of things, five in all, which otherwise obviously would fall within the definition appearing earlier in the section; and included in that list is the following:

6. This section does not apply to

(b) raffles for prizes of small value at any bazaar held for any charitable or religious object, if permission to hold the same has been obtained from the city or other municipal council, or from the mayor, reeve or other chief officer of the city, town or other municipality, wherein such bazaar is held, and the articles raffled for thereat have first been offered for sale and none of them are of a value exceeding fifty dollars.

I do not say that in the case of the raffle conducted by the Leaside Lions club the prize was not worth more than $50, but I cite this section of the act to lay emphasis upon the fact that not every lottery is illegal under the Criminal Code, and that in any case not every illegal lottery gives the minister occasion to exercise power under section 7 (d) of the Post Office Act. It is only in cases where it is part of a scheme to defraud or deceive the public for the purpose of obtaining money under false pretences that power is given to ban the use of mails.

On an earlier occasion during this session we heard an interesting discussion by the Minister of Justice with respect to the discretion conferred by this section upon the Postmaster General. I regret that the Minister of Justice is not here now, because I should have liked to address these remarks rather directly to him. He sought to place before the house the argument that this was not a power that could be exercised capriciously by the Postmaster General; that if his use of power was arbitrary or capricious it was open to any person aggrieved to resort to the courts in an action against the Postmaster General. I have read the case to which the Minister of Justice referred on that occasion in support of his argument. I cannot find that it lends any colour or justification to his argument. It is well established law, of course, that any public officer who exceeds the authority conferred by any act is liable to an action in the courts by any person aggrieved by that act, so far as it is not justified or authorized by statute; but that is very different from saying that if the Potsmaster General confines himself to his statutory powers, yet exercises those powers in a capricious or unreasonable way, any person can bring action against him. The decision referred to falls far short of laying down any such proposition. The case is Literary Recreations Limited v. Sauve and Murray, reported in 58 Canadian Criminal Cases at page 385. This was a decision in 1932 of the Court of Appeal of British Columbia, and the headnote reads:

Under the Post Office Act . . . and the regulations made thereunder, the Postmaster General of Canada has the right to determine what is "mailable matter" and has a discretion to prohibit the use of the mails for the sending of non-mailable matter, and his discretion is not open to review by a court.

One would have thought that was very clear, but if the Minister of Justice still persists in an unsound argument I invite his attention to the language used by Mr. Justice McPhillips at page 391, where the learned justice refers to parliament and deals with this very section 7(d) of the act and regulations 204 and 206. He had this to say:

The legislature having clothed the Postmaster General with these extreme powers—

I pause there to draw attention to this very apt description applied to these powers by the learned justice of appeal.

—but I have no doubt proper powers concerning the question of peace, order and good government —it is not within the province of a court of justice to say what is the reasonable use of the conferred powers granted by statute. That is to say the discretion given by statute to the Postmaster General is an unfettered discretion to determine what shall and what shall not be deemed to be mailable matter.

In my humble submission the matter could not be put more clearly. The court there is saying that the discretion conferred upon the Postmaster General by section 7(d) is an unfettered discretion, and no court has the power to review the exercise of that discretion or to say whether it is reasonable or unreasonable. It is only when the Postmaster General goes completely outside those powers that any person aggrieved by his act has a right against him in the courts. So, Mr. Chairman, I submit to the committee that the argument addressed to the house on a recent occasion by the Minister of Justice was completely unsound.

I go on from that to this point. This discretion, being unfettered and not open to challenge or review in the courts, is so broad, especially having regard to the striking instances in which it has been exercised of late, that I earnestly submit that this house must assume responsibility for reviewing this legislation. If legislation of this kind is capable of such arbitrary use, if the use of the powers conferred under it is not subject to review by a court, then I submit it is high time this parliament qualified the powers conferred upon the Postmaster General by this act. No official of government, however reputable he may be, or however sound his judgment, has any right to possess powers as sweeping as these without any recourse on the part of those thereby affected to a court or other body by way of review of his decisions. The rights of people as citizens are being freely interfered with. In the case to which I referred a reputable citizen of the community, engaged in charitable work out of which he was not receiving a cent but to which he was contributing a great deal of time and effort, has his personal mail stopped as well as the mail of the Leaside Lions club, in whose behalf he was engaged in this charitable work. I think it is high time this house took steps to see that this power is not left in the unfettered and untrammelled form in which it seems to exist today.

Therefore I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that the time has come when parliament must take the responsibility of limiting this power, making sure that it is not capable of being used in any case where fraud is not involved, and also that where the power is exercised it is subject to review in the courts in a speedy manner. In concluding his remarks on May 16, at page 2534 of Hansard, the minister said something that was very sensible. I believe many of us in this house hoped that the hon. gentleman would follow up the sound views and good intentions he expressed on that occasion by introducing legislation to give effect to them. These were his words:

I do admit, Mr. Speaker, that the remedy presently available to challenge an action—

That is to say, an action by the Postmaster General in the purported exercise of his power under section 7(d).

—if it happens to be arbitrary is a little difficult from the legal standpoint.

Now, it is something to wring a statement like that from the Minister of Justice on an occasion of this kind. He proceeds:

We have been quite frank with this house in saying that the present remedy is not very satisfactory. It may cause a legal delay . . .

May I interject again, sir, to point out that what the Minister of Justice was referring to as the "present remedy" is a remedy that exists only in cases where the Minister of Justice has gone beyond the powers conferred on him by the act. Even in those cases the remedy, according to the Minister of Justice, is admitted to be not very satisfactory. He continues:

It may cause a legal delay, and it may in that way create secondary effects upon the offending person which are out of all proportion to his deserts. The move which we have under consideration, therefore, is that of providing an appeal from the order, and not an obscure appeal or an appeal which will take a long period of time, but a summary appeal. Once an order had been made, the citizen offended could make a quick application to the courts and get the whole matter before a judge, with the power to bring in any relevant evidence which he could adduce in addition to that which the Postmaster General considered. Then the whole matter could come before the courts in such a way as to completely minimize the harm that would be done to an innocent person.

Mr. Chairman, where is the legislation designed to provide that summary appeal to the courts, the necessity for which was acknowledged by the Minister of Justice when he spoke in this house on May 16? We have waited hopefully for it, and we are now told, in these closing days of the session, that no more legislation is to be introduced at this session of parliament. It must be a matter of very grave regret, Mr. Chairman, on the part of all members of this house who dislike arbitrary powers, and dislike even more the exercise of arbitrary powers where they can be found to exist in the statute books. While the Minister of Justice and the government delay introducing legislation to provide a remedy, which the Minister of Justice admits to be so necessary, the arbitrary use of the power continues. The member for Calgary West has drawn to the attention of the house an incident this week illustrating the further use of this power under arbitrary circumstances. This points even more directly than ever to the necessity for action on the part of parliament to put an end to this arbitrary power; to remove the breadth of this power; and the necessity of providing that powers of this kind, as well as the arbitrary exercise of which they are capable, as we have seen in those cases, in the hands of the Postmaster General's department, are made subject to review by the courts.

In most cases the decision of a judge in the courts is subject to appeal. There are few cases in which we leave a matter to the decision of one man. Even judicial determinations in a judicial tribunal are subject to a right of appeal in all except a relatively few cases. Yet today, from the exercise by an official or the minister of the power conferred upon him by this section, there is no right of appeal. How long can this parliament tolerate the continuance of a situation of that kind, sir? I submit to this parliament that a remedy must be provided of the kind acknowledged by the Minister of Justice to be needed, and shown now by this further exercise of this arbitrary power in an irresponsible way to be so necessary at the present time that it can brook no more delay.

Mr. Rinfret: Mr. Chairman, I should like to answer the last part of the argument put forward by the member for Eglinton. I still have ringing in my ears the arguments that were put forward last week when the Indian Act was brought before this house. Practically every member on the other side of the house said that this late hour in the session was no time to present new legislation; yet today we are told that, even at this late hour in the session, we should introduce new legislation. There seems to be a direct contradiction in those statements. I was under the impression that this matter had been threshed out. The Minister of Justice presented the judicial position, and the Solicitor General, as the Acting Postmaster General, gave the circumstantial evidence in this case. I am not going to take the time of the house to review the whole question. I must say I think the member for Eglinton was very clever in presenting the argument he did, because he continually mixed up the question of lotteries with that of the brokers.

Mr. Fleming: I did not say a word about brokers.

Mr. Rinfret: The whole argument was based on the action that was taken against the brokers.

Mr. Fleming: No.

Mr. Rinfret: That was the whole argument, as I understood it.

Mr. Fleming: I am sorry that my friend was not here, and the whole house regrets his absence due to illness. Altogether there were three occasions involving the use of this power which have been discussed in the house. The first related to the question of the brokers; the second was an incident I brought up in connection with the denial of the use of the mails to the Leaside Lions club. I did not say a word about brokers, Mr. Chairman, but I did speak about the denial of the use of the mails to the Leaside Lions club. The third matter to which reference was made was the denial of the use of the mails to the Calgary Stampeders. Those incidents have been touched upon in this house at this session. I did not mention the brokers today.

Mr. Rinfret: I am sorry to contradict the member for Eglinton but when he cites the statement of the Minister of Justice at page 2534 of Hansard, in which the minister mentioned an appeal, the minister was dealing with the situation in regard to the brokers. If he did not intend to speak about the brokers' situation, I do not know why he referred to that statement by the Minister of Justice on the question.

The powers under the act are very precise. Section 7 of the act says:

> The Postmaster General may, subject to the provisions of this act,
> (d) make regulations . . . for marking on the covering of letters, circulars or other mailable matter suspected to concern illegal lotteries . . .

The member for Eglinton has given us the definition of what constitutes an illegal lottery according to the Criminal Code. A legal lottery is one in which the prizes offered are no more than $50; where it is for a charitable purpose; and where a permit has been obtained. When any one of these three conditions does not exist, that is where the prize is more than $50 or when the purpose is for other than charity, or when no permit has been obtained, it is an illegal lottery and has to be treated accordingly under section 7 (d). We do not stop the mails for any lottery which is legal. We have never stopped the mails in any such case. In the case of the Leaside Lions and the Stampeders, the prizes were for much more than $50 and therefore did not come within the exceptions the hon. member has mentioned.

I continue to read from section 7 (d):

> . . . so-called gift concerts, or other illegal enterprises of like character, offering prizes, or concerning schemes devised or intended to deceive or defraud the public, for the purpose of obtaining money under false pretences, . . .

As hon. members can see, section 7 (d) gives the Postmaster General authority to make regulations, and in this connection—

Mr. Fleming: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Rinfret: Yes, but before that I should like to pay a compliment to the member from Eglinton. I should like to compliment him and the others who have brought this matter before the house for giving the public in general throughout Canada the possibility of knowing what the postal regulations are, how rigid they are and, with the idea of saving quite a lot of money in publicity, telling the various people who would like to put in schemes like that through the mails that they have no chance of passing through.

Mr. Fleming: I thank the minister for his remarks. From his closing remarks I was not clear whether he interprets section 7 (d) as giving him power to deny the use of the mails in the case of "illegal lotteries", period. I think it is quite clear that the words "illegal lotteries" are qualified by the following words:

> . . . concerning schemes devised or intended to deceive or defraud the public, for the purpose of obtaining money under false pretences . . .

I think that is quite clear.

Mr. Rinfret: The context reads:

> . . . to concern illegal lotteries, so-called gift concerts, or other illegal enterprises . . .

The word "or" I suppose should have been put in after every one of those things, but the context I think is clear. If I may continue—

Mr. Fleming: Does the minister not agree that the following words:

qualify the words "illegal lotteries"?

Mr. Rinfret: I am sorry, but I have to disagree with that interpretation. As a matter of fact, the interpretation that the department has had from prominent solicitors also disagrees with what my hon. and learned friend wishes to convey at this time.

I may say that on this question of the broker-dealers there was a long discussion while I was away and there has been some discussion since I came back. The discussion that took place since I have been back did not take place in this chamber. I had occasion, with the Minister of Justice, to meet the representative of the brokers' association and we discussed with Hon. Mr. McTague the various circumstances surrounding this matter. The Minister of Justice, in his letter of May 2 to Hon. Mr. McTague, indicated that if the broker-dealers organization wished to present a brief on any of the matters under the Post Office Act in which it has an interest, the government would be glad to give such representations most careful and thorough consideration.

The broker-dealers association accepted this offer and a brief was prepared which was presented on behalf of the association by Hon. C. P. McTague on June 12. The Minister of Justice and the Postmaster General represented the government.

As a result of the ensuing discussion, it was agreed that in future, where complaints or information indicated that the mails were being used for fraudulent purposes, before prohibitory action was taken by the Postmaster General the cases would be reviewed by a special board appointed for that purpose. The alleged offenders would have an opportunity of appearing before the board, and would be allowed the services of counsel, if so desired. The board would also be permitted to have the advice of such technical and professional assistance as it might deem advisable. Evidence would be taken under oath.

The board would comprise the following officials: director of administration, chief post office inspector and the departmental solicitor. The place and time of the hearing would be determined by the Postmaster General, and due notice would be given to those concerned. Any costs or expenses in connection therewith incurred by the alleged offenders or those acting in their behalf would be borne entirely by them, irrespective of the eventual finding of the board.

In cases where the board considers that there is evidence to the effect that the person or company has used the mails with intent to deceive or defraud, or to obtain money under false pretences, it shall so be reported to the Postmaster General who, if he finds that there is evidence satisfactory to him that the person or company has used the mails with intent to deceive or defraud, or to obtain money under false pretences, shall thereupon cause to be issued a fraud or prohibitory order denying the use of the mails to the offenders for any such improper purpose.

Initially, the board would be set up and the related procedure formulated and established under the powers vested in the Postmaster General by the Post Office Act, sections 7 (x) and 8.

At a future session the authority could be specifically included in the act itself which is due for revision. This would remove any doubt of the future continuance of the arrangement outlined, and preclude any modification thereof without consent of the house.

The board has been established, and any cases which are now being examined by the department, on the ground that the mails are being improperly used, will be submitted to that board for review in accordance with the procedure herein outlined.

I may say that this matter has been fully discussed with Hon. Mr. McTague and he agreed as to the procedure that is outlined here, that this protects the interests of the brokers or the interested parties, or at least affords them the opportunity of being heard before the prohibitory order is issued.

Another matter that has been discussed with Mr. McTague is the question of appeal. It was recognized by Mr. McTague that the question of appeal was quite a tricky one and that it would require more time than we had before the end of the session in order to establish the proper procedure to be followed. However, we recognized by these instructions, which have already been given for the constitution of this board, the possibility of an appeal because we want the evidence to be taken under oath and in writing which would form the basis of any possible appeal to a tribunal or other board that might be decided on in the future.

We also discussed with Mr. McTague the possibility of launching criminal prosecutions. While I was away there was discussion in the house to the effect that we had no right to stop the mails of any broker without afterwards launching a prosecution. I have in my hand—and I am authorized by Mr. McTague to cite it—a letter dated June 16 which reads in part as follows:

> I think we are prepared to admit the proposition that the Postmaster General should not be obliged to launch a criminal prosecution. That might be left to his discretion. Some definite provision, however, should be made that a person so convicted of misuse of the mails should have the right to apply to be allowed mail privileges again upon such terms, conditions and undertakings as may be imposed or required by the Postmaster General.

I was not here to hear the leader of the opposition make an objection as far as this was concerned. We were accused of putting a gun to the heads of these various persons in order to oblige them to sign certain guarantees. If it had been our intention to launch criminal proceedings, I would have said that that was the case. But I should like the leader of the opposition to tell me how it was possible to restore the mailing facilities to these persons unless we had certain guarantees. Surely he is not going to pretend that we were going to leave this stoppage of mail forever. Therefore some means had to be provided whereby we could restore the facilities, and this is exactly what Mr. McTague said: that some way should be discovered in order to return or to restore the mail facilities. We have asked those brokers to give us (a) an assurance to the satisfaction of the Postmaster General that in future the offensive literature in question will not be sent through the mails; (b) the company, the shares of which are being offered to the public, will undertake that no literature shall be sent through the mails in connection with the sale of the shares without its approval; (c) the broker dealer will give an unqualified assurance that he will not make any improper use of the mail in future in connection with the issues of shares.

One other matter we discussed with Mr. McTague was the definition of the word "fraud". He thought that on this proposed board there should be somebody properly qualified in the field of what constitutes fraud in the legal sense. When I spoke to Mr. McTague after this and told him that it was our intention to have the departmental solicitor acting as part of this board he was completely satisfied on this score. This is how the matter rests. The board has been constituted. Companies or individuals dealing with fraudulent ventures will receive a notice from the Postmaster General to appear on a certain day. They will have an opportunity to give the evidence that they wish to present. They will have their counsel and all the experts they need. The evidence will be taken in writing under oath, and the whole factum will be deposited before the Postmaster General for decision after they have been heard.

As has been said by the Minister of Justice, it is the intention of the government, as soon as the matter has been finally determined, at the next session to ask for permission to constitute a body—it might be a tribunal, we have not decided yet—where an appeal could be launched against the decision of the Postmaster General.

What makes this question of procedure a little tricky is the question of lotteries. The procedure I have outlined touches only the broker-dealers organization. We cannot possibly adopt the same kind of formula procedure in the question of lotteries, because by delaying this procedure before this investigation board the person conducting the lottery could very well keep the mailing facilities until such time as the lottery had been concluded. We do not wish to be in that position, because we want to be able to fulfil the obligation that is ours of protecting the Canadian public.

Reference has been made to the sweeping powers that have been given to the Postmaster General. Well, I think reference should also be made to the very great responsibility that the Postmaster General has of protecting the whole population of Canada, thirteen million people, against some scheming people. I am not saying that every person against whom we stop the mail is a scheming person, but I do say that unless in the process of things we do catch some innocent people we shall soon be faced with a multitude of schemes that will put the population of Canada in very great danger.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I have no intention of entering into any discussion with respect to brokers, honest or dishonest. I agree with what the Postmaster General has said, namely, that where there is fraud we should have wide measures not only to limit but to destroy the means and methods by which these frauds are being perpetrated. But that is not what I have in my mind. On the streets of Ottawa and on the streets of every city in Canada there are motorcars publicly advertising and inviting you to buy a ticket. The sum of money that you pay varies between fifty cents and a dollar, in order that you might have the opportunity of telephoning your wife on a given day and saying: "Wife, you have got a new motor car."

At noon today I bought a ticket for a dollar. It is called "CHML Dream Home." It is for the city of Hamilton flood relief fund. His Worship Mayor Garnet Coulter of Winnipeg will present the dream home in Hamilton on Wednesday, July 5, 1950. This is for the Manitoba flood relief fund. No one is going to tell me that this department is ignorant of what is going on there, and it has done nothing. Yet when a little football club in which I am interested, and from whom nobody makes any money, puts on a raffle they choose—I will repeat the words—this bureaucratic, arrogant, stupid method of enforcing the wishes of some servant somewhere down the line. What happened? Every football club in Canada is doing exactly the same thing. It is common knowledge. We all know it. The minister can stand up and say: "I have a regulation here; they are in breach of it." Suppose we are. I do not think we are, but suppose we are. What has happened? Why are we singled out for punishment in this arbitrary and extraordinary manner?

Let him remember, and the people of his department remember, that there are provisions in the Criminal Code whereby persons connected with or conducting lotteries can be punished. Why do they now—I am not worrying about the legal right—in fact step in and usurp the function of every provincial court in the Dominion of Canada? —because our courts are provincial courts. Why do they do it? It is nothing but stupid—slipshod is too mild a word—it is nothing but a stupid move made by some bureaucrats in charge of the business. They need not tell me that the attorney general in any province has not acted. He does not need to act. Anybody who is aggrieved in the Dominion of Canada may sign and swear to an information when he sees wrongdoing, if he has courage enough to sign that information. But that is not the way this is done.

I have no doubt that the Stampeder football club are raffling a car. They have done it every year since I can remember. They have used the mails very, very little. I venture to say that all they have got is some returned tickets, and they have not got one ever sent out by the Stampeder football club. But then they go further. This is what they have done. Mr. T. L. Brook is a friend of mine. He is president of the Stampeder football club. He is a prominent businessman. He, as an individual, has done as much to promote the oil industry in that province as any other individual. They have stopped his personal mail until the 14th day of July. Talk about czarism; use any word you like! To treat Tom Brook in that way because he happens to be president of the second-best football club in Canada is, it seems to me, carrying the law a tremendous distance. You are making a laughing stock of it when you are carrying it to such absurd lengths. There has been some discussion most certainly in the newspapers, and probably in the house, although I am not sure about it, concerning our franking privilege. I know I am going to say something that will be unpopular with most hon. members. It is this: I personally am opposed to ourselves and those in the other place being granted the franking privilege, except for our correspondence. I believe that is essential and necessary. I am one however who is strongly opposed to a system whereby I, or someone else, making a speech in the House of Commons, am able to frank that by the thousand and send it all over the country.

Why do I say that? For this reason, principally: We happen to be those persons who have been elected and who, if we are but honest with ourselves, must admit that we are sending these words of wisdom to the electors so that we may be elected again.

Mr. Gibson: They may be able to judge us from our words.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): If you wrote about me and I wrote about you they would not frank anything.

Our opponents have not that opportunity; and to my mind this process of mailing tons of mail from this building is propaganda for ourselves and taking an unfair advantage of those persons who do not agree with us and who might in fact oppose us when the next election comes along.

As I said at the outset, that may not be a popular statement. However, I submit it; there it is, and I believe it. I want the Postmaster General to tell me this: Who in Canada are entitled either to frank or to send free mail? I know that is true of members of the House of Commons and of the other place. I know it is true of government departments. What I am particularly interested in is this little word in black print, "free", on the upper righthand corner of an envelope. I want a definite answer to this: Aside from those of us who frank by putting our names or initials on our mail, and besides departments which have some way of marking their letters, what persons or groups of persons in Canada, if any, have the right to send mail free through our post office? I would ask the minister to take time to consider my question because I have reason for wanting to have the list he gives very accurate indeed.

Mr. Rinfret: Let me say to the hon. member for Calgary West that I completely agree with him on the question of the franking privilege. However, I must say it is impossible to control the mail because we have no way of opening envelopes to know what is in them. We must rely upon the honour of anyone who has a frank not using it for purposes other than those for which it was meant. But I agree with the hon. member that it should not be used for any purpose other than correspondence.

Replying to his second question I would refer him to section 42 and following of the Post Office Act, chapter 161, where it refers to the franking of free mail material.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): That is all-embracing?

Mr. Rinfret: Yes, it is.

Mr. Drew: Are there any cases not covered by that section whereby any organization of any kind has the privilege or is able to obtain the right to have the word "free" stamped on the upper righthand corner of an envelope?

Mr. Rinfret: The answer is no.

Mr. Hosking: I should like to bring a message from the members of my constituency to the Postmaster General. We are pleased to see him able to assume his duties again. I am sure we are all hoping that his health is as good as it would seem to be.

May I pay a compliment or two to those who organize and direct this great service in this dominion. When we think of posting a letter in Vancouver and having it delivered in Halifax without loss or restriction and for the very small sum of four cents, we must be at once aware of the great service thus rendered. If we are willing to pay an additional ten cents we can have it delivered in person, and if we wish to transmit money we can be sure that it will be received without loss. May I commend the staff that carry out the duties and make this great service possible for the people of Canada.

My constituency is located in Upper Canada. Many of its citizens were United Empire Loyalists. The descendants of those people still believe that their representative in parliament is the representative in the House of Commons, and that as such he has duties to perform. Therefore when I mention the great and good work of the department I allow myself to bask in some of the credit.

It is because of accepting some of that credit that I now call the attention of the committee to some of those things which I do not feel reflect credit on the department. Because I am a member representing a constituency I feel it my responsibility to place these facts before the minister.

In my riding I am served by a postman who has carried the mail since 1926. In 1924 he wrote two examinations, one for postal clerk and one for mail carrier. The record of his having tried these examinations appears to have been lost. For a number of years he has performed in an excellent manner, and without loss of time through sickness the duties entrusted to him. For the past four or five years, whenever there has been a man short in the postal department, this man has been called in to act as clerk, and has been entrusted with the sorting of the mail, the registering of parcels and the selling of stamps. Indeed, he has performed those various tasks which are the duty of any clerk in a post office. I commend the choice of the Postmaster General in permitting this to take place. It has been most fortunate that for perhaps half of the last year he has been permitted to do this work, because during that time he has developed an arthritic spur on his heel and could not possibly carry the mail on his route every day without some days of easier work. It is with great pain that he walks his ten or twelve mile route every day. I quite realize that the civil service regulations are such that unless a man is qualified to hold a certain position he is not entitled to fill it. The record will show that he is not qualified to hold the position although he has been doing the work for the past number of years, by replacing those on sick leave or holidays, in order to assist the operation of the Post Office Department in Guelph. A week or so ago an hon. gentleman in my riding asked me to go for a ride with him around the city. I did so, and eventually I found myself following this mailman who was stepping gingerly on one foot. You could see that without doubt he was in pain every time the foot touched the sidewalk. This hon. gentleman said to me: "If that were a horse and you drove it ten miles every day on a mail route you would likely find yourself in jail."

I should like to point out to the civil service and to the members of the Post Office Department that that is not a humane thing to do. I should like to give a little more of the history of this man, and I hope the committee will bear with me while I do so. He joined a machine gun battalion in 1914 and learned to take apart and reassemble his machine gun in the dark. No papers were required for that. He was in the front lines and was wounded. A piece of shrapnel blasted away a section of his forehead, and he now has a silver plate in place of the original bone that God gave him. He was not questioned whether he had papers to qualify him to perform that duty. As a member whose constituents believe that he should represent them, I put this case before you, and I ask that between the Post Office Department and the civil service commission a slight bit of humanity be displayed, and that a good servant be rewarded in the way he should be.

Mr. Fraser: During the past few weeks I have had a number of protests from people in certain sections of Peterborough city because of the fact that in seven different postal districts deliveries have been cut from two to one per day. The districts now having only one delivery have been enlarged to take in other territory. I do not know the reason for the change but if the minister knows I should like him to tell me what it is. The seven postal mail carriers for these districts have to work six full days a week instead of the usual five and a half days worked by the other twenty-one postal carriers in the Peterborough district.

In addition, the seven carriers covering the districts where there is only one delivery a day have a lot of difficulty in sorting their mail in the post office. I know the deputy minister is aware that the Peterborough post office is an antique. We have been promised a new one since 1913. The seven postal carriers have to use a rope hoist to lift their mail from the ground floor to the second floor. When they have sorted it they have to use the hoist again to lower it to the first floor. As I say, they are working six days a week and the other twenty-one carriers only work five and a half days. I understand the seven working the full six days receive the same pay as the other twenty-one.

The Peterborough post office was built when the population was not more than 10,000. Today the same post office is servicing over 50,000 people. I should like the minister to check not only the question of the districts that have only one delivery a day but also the matter of the hours that these seven men have to work. I had a call from Peterborough the other night about an order in council, I believe it was, having to do with the five day week for civil servants for the summer months. I should like to know whether that applies to mail carriers. I should also like the minister to tell me if he can when the new federal building in Peterborough embodying the post office is to be started. I understand that the requirements have been presented to the Minister of Public Works. We have a new postmaster now. I believe the death of the former postmaster was caused partly as a result of the conditions he had to contend with in the old office. I hope that something can be done to speed up the construction of the new building. If the Postmaster General can say anything about the special features to be incorporated in it I should like him to do so. I understand that Mr. Blackwell, a Peterborough architect, has some of the plans, and I wish the minister would give me any information on that matter that he can. I should also like to know whether the men who are working six days a week instead of five and a half are allowed overtime. I notice there is an amount of $600,000 in the estimates for overtime.

Mr. Rinfret: The answer to the last question is no. We are well aware that there is great need for a post office in Peterborough city, and we are going ahead full steam to replace the present building. So far as the actual construction is concerned, of course you will have to look to the Department of Public Works for information as to that.

Mr. Fraser: What about the one delivery a day?

Mr. Rinfret: I will look into it. When we extend service we have to take this precaution, but I will look into the matter.

Mr. Fraser: The point I am getting at is that we had two deliveries before. Now you have extended the districts, but at the same time you are depriving people of two deliveries who had that service before, which is not right.

Mr. Rinfret: I will see what I can do about it.

Mr. Fraser: I know the Postmaster General will agree with me.

Mr. Cardiff: Has any effort been made in the past year or two to bring rural postmasters in small post offices under the civil service? I should like to refer to what was said by the hon. member for Kamloops on June 3, 1948, as recorded at page 4775 of Hansard. He said:

> I have three or four matters I should like to take up with the Postmaster General. The first is the question raised by the announcement made in the press, and I believe also in the house, to the effect that rural postmasters, or postmasters of small offices, were to be made civil servants. So far as I know, the necessary legislation has not gone through the house. Is it intended to introduce a bill this year, or is that to be done by order in council?

The then postmaster general replied:

> According to the rules, that is done by the Postmaster General himself. An explanation as to why it is done in that way would take some time, but I would point out that it has always been within the jurisdiction of the Postmaster General.
> It is true, as the hon. member says, that a greater amount of post office revenue and a greater number of postmasters are being brought under the civil service, with fair salaries. In the meantime, in respect of post offices with revenue of over $3,000, we are now taking care of rentals ourselves to ensure that we have better places in which to install our post offices. Also, if help is required we see that the salaries of the helpers are fixed by and paid for by the department. The postmaster will have a fixed salary. Postmasters in post offices with revenue of more than $3,000 will, we hope, be eligible for superannuation, if they are not too old. In this way they become permanent employees.

We are working on this matter. A beginning has been made and we hope to be able to continue. It will be remembered, of course, that there are over 12,000 post offices in Canada, and it will take considerable time before we can establish this procedure at every point.

The question I want to ask the Postmaster General now—

Mr. Rinfret: All that has been carried out. We have transferred 1,300 in the last two years.

Mr. Maltais: I have a simple question to direct to the Postmaster General arising out of a letter which I found in my box today forwarded by the Canadian peace congress, on which appears the name of Dr. J. G. Endicott. This letter was sent without a stamp, bearing the words "On His Majesty's service," and from what I have heard from time to time the activities of this organization seem to be more or less communistic. I should like to know who are permitted to send letters to members of this house without stamps, on His Majesty's service?

Mr. Rinfret: Letters addressed to members of parliament are of course on His Majesty's service.

Mr. Maltais: Perhaps my next question should be directed to the Minister of Justice, but I should like to know whether within the Post Office Department there is any machinery to investigate anything suspicious that may be going through the mail. It is not that I want to cast suspicion on this particular organization, but I should like to know if there is any machinery to investigate people having suspicious propaganda circulated and give an opinion as to whether they should be permitted to send material through the mail labelled "On His Majesty's service." I am not saying this is communist propaganda, but it seems very queer that letters promoting the Russian way of life should come to us bearing those words.

Mr. Rinfret: No one in the Post Office Department, not even the Postmaster General, with the exception of those in the dead letter organization, has any right to open a letter, so there is no way of knowing what is inside it, and therefore no way of knowing whether it contains propaganda, whether good or bad.

Mr. Fulford: I should like to call the attention of the Postmaster General to a matter of great historical importance to his department. Next year Canada will be celebrating the centenary of the issuing of our first postage stamps. Other countries in the world have celebrated their centenaries by holding expositions and issuing special commemorative sets of postage stamps. In 1940, for instance, which was Great Britain's centenary, they issued a set of six stamps containing on one side a reproduction of the original Queen Victoria one penny stamp and on the other side a modern picture of King George VI. In the United States in 1947 a special three-cent stamp was issued as well as a souvenir sheet of two stamps containing reproductions of the two original stamps issued by the United States post office. Within the empire, in the island colony of Mauritius, a set of four commemorative stamps was issued in 1948.

International exhibitions have been held in United States, Switzerland, Belgium, and France, and just last month in London. There is an organization in Canada known as the Canadian association of philatelic exhibitions which is arranging an exposition in Toronto to commemorate this historic occasion, to be held from September 21 to 29, 1951, and I am sure it will be the desire and intention of the Postmaster General and his department to co-operate with this association to the greatest degree possible.

The situation in Canada with regard to the issuing of postage stamps is somewhat different to that in most countries, owing to the fact that before confederation various provinces issued their own stamps. For instance, British Columbia and Vancouver island started issuing postage stamps in 1861, New Brunswick in 1851, Newfoundland in 1857, Nova Scotia in 1851, Prince Edward Island in 1861 and Upper and Lower Canada in 1851. That issue, of course, really marked the beginning of the issuing of Canadian postage stamps. The three prairie provinces never issued stamps. It seems to me it would be very opportune if a special commemorative set were issued in conjunction with this exposition which is to be held in Toronto, which it is hoped will attract visitors from all over the civilized world. Incidentally, stamp collecting is said now to be the most practised hobby in the world.

In issuing these stamps I hope and believe designs can be found which will commemorate the very fine stamps issued by the post office in 1851. I need hardly warn the Postmaster General not to repeat the mistake made by one Charles Connell, who when postmaster general of New Brunswick had a five-cent stamp engraved with his own likeness. That stamp never went into circulation, because the ridicule was so great that he ordered the entire issue destroyed. I know these remarks would not be applicable to the present Postmaster General. I feel confident that he and his officials will take into serious consideration the issuing of appropriate stamps which will bring to the attention of the world the fact that Canada was one of the first countries to use the postage stamp as a means of prepaying mail.

Mr. Cardiff: If I may ask the Postmaster General a further question, what qualifications must be possessed before a postmaster is given consideration as a civil servant?

Mr. Rinfret: He must possess the usual qualifications. That is, he must be well educated and have some experience; and, in offices of more than $3,000, he must pass the examinations of the civil service commission.

Mr. Graydon: A moment ago an hon. member mentioned the question of communist literature being circulated through the mails of Canada. I am not sure that the organization to which he referred admits being a communist organization, so perhaps I need not take it as a case in point. The Postmaster General indicated that no one except officials of the dead letter office has the right to open a letter. I think no member of parliament would want his mail opened, regardless of who was writing to him. I well remember the great protest that arose during the war over the alleged opening of certain letters coming to members of parliament. I fancy that every member would be jealous of his right in that regard. Nevertheless, the hon. member does raise a point which perhaps I might pursue along a slightly different line. If no one except the dead letter office officials has the right to open letters, how is it that the Leaside Lions club, Calgary Stampeders, and such organizations seem to have the use of the mails denied to them. Even the personnel connected with those organizations have been denied the use of the mails. How is it the Post Office Department knows what is in those letters? More than that, if they know what is in those letters it would seem to me rank discrimination against a good Canadian citizen to have his mail disturbed and his mailing privileges stopped, when there must be in Canada from time to time communist propaganda of various kinds circulating, and so far as I am aware the Post Office Department has not stopped the mails going to any of those people. This may be carrying out a general policy that may be quite proper, but it does seem to me that if you are going to make scapegoats of Canadians, there are some of these other people whom I would rather see made scapegoats. I think we ought to have something from the minister about that.

Mr. Rinfret: The information we receive comes in the form of complaints from various organizations. In these lottery schemes there are always some of those letters that do find their way to the dead letter office. Just how it happens, I do not know. They are opened there because they do not show any return address on the envelope. Of course when someone puts a lottery ticket in a letter he usually puts his address on the lottery ticket, and that is how we know where the letter comes from.

Mr. Graydon: Unless a mistake is made in the address, you never catch them?

Mr. Rinfret: I would not go that far, because that would be encouraging them.

Mr. Pouliot: I shall not be long, but since I have not time to read novels, I enjoy myself by reading reference books and making comparisons. According to the Canadian almanac, I see that there are thirteen Ph.D.'s in the Department of Agriculture. The chief of the tobacco division is a Ph.D. I am wondering why, in the list of post office officials, there are no Ph.D.'s. I wonder if they are Ph.D.'s and are too modest to mention it, or if they do not care about it. I should like to know if there are any Ph.D.'s in the Post Office Department, and I intend to ask a question about that of all the departments. I want to know more about mortarboards.

Mr. Catherwood: I should like to take about five minutes of the time of the committee to say a word on these estimates, and in doing so to commend the minister on the excellent report he presented to this committee. The fact that we have an income of over $101 million is a credit to his department, and indicates the progress Canada is making generally. I wish to say a word about the Post Office Department, because I believe it is rather unique amongst the various departments of government in the fact that it serves all the people of Canada. The Department of Agriculture serves the agricultural interests of the country; the Department of Transport serves the great ramifications of the transportation system of our country, and the same is true of other departments, but the postal department is one that is interested in every man, woman, and child in the Dominion of Canada.

As the Postmaster General has indicated, there are 46,000 people employed in this department. I believe every member of this house will agree that those 46,000 employees have done a marvellous job in the capacity in which they are working. I believe every member of the house will also agree that, particularly at the Christmas season, they do a excellent job in dispatching the mails day by day. I should like to add a word to what the member for Peel stated in regard to rural mail administration. The rural mail delivery service is one that we in rural Canada do appreciate greatly. We accept it as part of the great network of services rendered to the people of rural Canada. It was in the year 1908 that the Postmaster General inaugurated the first rural postal delivery service in Canada, patterned on a plan in effect in the United States. This delivery service has grown rapidly, as the Postmaster General has said, until today it serves almost 350,000 boxholders across this dominion in those great areas that lie outside our towns and cities.

The reason, Mr. Chairman, for this brief outline is to bring to this committee a general picture of how the rural people of Canada depend upon this delivery service. I do feel that the rural mail couriers are perhaps the lowest paid class of people in Canada. I was glad to hear the Postmaster General mention the setting up of a plan for the improvement of the rural mail couriers' situation. I know the member for Temiscouata will not approve, but I do believe a committee should be set up to review this whole situation with a view to improving conditions for the rural mail couriers. The average mail route, particularly in the area from which I come, is twenty-five miles in length. The mail couriers average about four stops per mile, so that means about one hundred stops during the route. I believe that a rate of pay of about nine cents per mile would be a fair allocation of the cost of mail service. For the average twenty-five mile route, the courier would travel 7,500 miles a year. It would cost about $675 to operate a motorcar in the section where I live, and there would be approximately $575 left for his income after his operational costs were paid, basing it on a $50 per mile tender.

I do feel, Mr. Chairman, in view of the foregoing remarks, that the minister should take into consideration the facts I have mentioned. I realize that a great many people will say that tenders were called and were accepted. That is true, and in most cases I suppose the lowest tender was accepted. At the same time, many of those tenders were called for at a time when figures on cost were going down, and instead of that they have increased. The cost of operating motorcars has increased since those tenders were accepted. I believe some consideration should be given to that fact. All over rural Ontario we find that the mail couriers have to drive older model cars in order to show a profit on the operation. I do say that should not be. The custodian of the king's mail should be able to drive a motorcar that is in keeping with his duties. I know a particular mail courier who has had a route for thirty-three years. He was telling me he had to tender so low in order to get the position that he is no further ahead today than he was when he started. I believe that a committee, as suggested by the hon. member for Peel, could take all these matters into consideration. After so many years' satisfactory service with the department, I believe these men should come under the superannuation system. I hope the minister will take these matters into consideration.

Mr. Rinfret: I shall certainly take them into consideration, but I do not think any members of this service would like to be government employees. If we gave them salaries, they would be.

Mr. Fulton: I should like to take up with the Postmaster General three matters which are of concern to my constituency, but I think they cover problems which are common to other constituencies as well. The first of these is the question of the extension of the air mail service to two areas where scheduled flights have recently been inaugurated. The first of these is between Kamloops and Penticton. It serves the cities of Kamloops, Vernon, Kelowna and Penticton. The other is the service from Vancouver to Prince George, via Kamloops, Williams Lake and Quesnel. That service goes on to Fort St. John.

This matter has been discussed with the department ever since the services were inaugurated, and I regret to have to say that the decision so far has not been favourable, even though for a time the Acting Postmaster General—that is, the Solicitor General—was looking after the affairs of the department. Although the Postmaster General, whom we are all glad to see back here today, said that the Acting Postmaster General was generous during his absence, I regret to say that his generosity did not extend to approving air mail service on those two routes, as requested. Now that the Postmaster General is back and restored to health, perhaps he will be feeling generous, and I am encouraged to believe that we can hope for success in making this request.

I base the request for air mail service on these routes on two premises: first, the populations to be served, which speak for themselves; and second, the necessity of giving a better service to those areas, and particularly perhaps to the area of the Cariboo, than they have had in the past. I understand that the principle is that air mail service will not be approved where surface mail provides an alternative delivery as fast as it can be delivered by air mail. In this respect the argument that I am about to make applies particularly to the service from Vancouver to Kamloops, Williams Lake and on up to the north, because those areas up through the Cariboo are not served adequately by daily surface mail.

Here I want to advance again an argument that I have advanced before with respect to the development of our pioneer districts. No one will object, on the face of it, to the inauguration of the all-up air mail service; but that service applies at the moment only to the main line T.C.A. routes between our main centres, and those centres were already served by a good surface mail system. There were no great delays in the delivery of mail between our large cities. While, as I say, no one could object to the general principle of improving and speeding up that system, I feel that the pioneer areas which suffer from an inadequate mail service are entitled to at least as much consideration and are certainly entitled to have their inadequate mail service made adequate when other areas have their adequate service made superlative. The mail services in the districts to which I refer are certainly not first-class.

Another argument in that regard is that those areas pay their full and fair share of taxes; and the inauguration of all-up air mail service on the main lines does not benefit them. They do not begrudge, and speaking as their representative I do not begrudge, the superlative service which all-up air mail service gives; but the point I want to urge strongly is that the tax money of the people in the pioneer areas, in its proportion, goes to support those superlative or improved services whereas they themselves get no corresponding benefit or improvement in service. I think that they are entitled now to have a recognition of their position and, where the facilities make it possible, as is now the case with the institution of these scheduled air services to which I have referred, they are entitled to have their tax contribution recognized by improving their services, and by granting in this case an air mail service on the Vancouver, Kamloops, Williams Lake, Prince George run.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): May I ask a question, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps the hon. member might address his question to the Postmaster General when I have finished.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): I should like to ask a question of the hon. member who is speaking. He is making a statement which is not just factual.

Mr. Fulton: What I would suggest is this, Mr. Chairman. If the hon. gentleman thinks that my plea for the area that I represent is not justified—

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): I was asking you to stop at the boundary.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Kamloops has the floor.

An hon. Member: Let him ask a question.

Mr. Fulton: Incidentally, if what I gather from the interruption of the hon. member for Cariboo is that he does not wish the extension of the air mail service beyond Williams Lake to his constituency, I should be glad indeed to confine the request in the remarks I have made to my own constituency.

With this request for that air mail service, I should like to couple a request for a daily mail service by surface to the way post offices up the Cariboo highway. I have taken this matter up previously with the department, and an investigation was made into the cost. The figures produced were said to be such that the cost of the increased service made it impossible to approve the request. I do not know the basis upon which the department made this investigation and obtained the figures, but I was advised that they were obtained from one carrier only. What I want to suggest to the minister is that he should obtain figures from other carriers who serve the area.

My suggestion is this. The mail might be carried to Williams Lake by the present service from Ashcroft, and the possibility should be investigated of having some of the trucking lines make a distribution from Williams Lake on their journeys up and down the Cariboo highway; or alternately, the possibility should be investigated of having them make a distribution from Ashcroft.

I have a great deal of correspondence on this matter; and a number of my correspondents advise me that over the past twenty years there has been no improvement in the mail service in these areas on the Cariboo highway. Twenty years is a long time to wait for an improvement in the mail service. As a matter of fact, in the old days when they had the horse-drawn stage coaches, those points had a better mail service than they have now, because then they had a daily mail service. Now most of those points have service only three times a week in the summertime, by the P.G.E., and twice a week in the wintertime. To those people who depend on these post offices up and down the Cariboo highway, many of whom are in business, running tourist camps and guest camps, the present system results in a serious loss of business; because by the time a person will write in from, say, Seattle or some other point down in the states, and the letter comes through Vancouver and up the P.G.E., it is not delivered to these points until perhaps four days after it has been written; then by the time it goes out on the rural mail route and a reply is sent in and back down via the P.G.E. from the post office, it is up to ten days before the writer of the letter receives an answer. I have been told of cases where business has been lost as a consequence, because those writing in for reservations or to find out if they can be accommodated at certain times will not wait that long for a reply. Since there is a daily stage service and trucking service passing directly up and down the Cariboo highway it is time that these people received daily mail service to the way post offices on that route. I again advance the argument that these people contribute their full share of taxes to the general revenue of the country. If we can institute a superservice by way of an all-up air mail to areas which were already receiving a fast surface delivery, surely it is time that we provided an adequate service to those areas which have been struggling for so long with an inadequate mail delivery.

I appreciate the work that the Post Office Department does. I am sure that the Postmaster General would like to grant these requests, and if he feels that he has not yet been able to justify it, I urge him to bear in mind these considerations on which I have based the request. These people contribute their share of taxes. In proportion they pay just as much as the other areas, and it is not fair to penalize them any longer, and to deny them longer the adequate service to which they are entitled, and which they need.

Then I should like to ask the Postmaster General if he will consider another matter, and here I am speaking also on behalf of the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green). It is a question involving the shipment of parcels to the United Kingdom. It has been drawn to my attention that many people have found—and I have personal knowledge of this—that food parcels have been lost and no trace can be found of them; and no report can be made of what has happened. This has had a cumulative effect and has discouraged people from sending parcels. The suggestion has been made that some process be worked out whereby it would be possible to trace the parcel from the time of mailing to the time of delivery or loss. Could such a system be instituted with respect to parcels to the United Kingdom without great expense? I appreciate that if it were very expensive the department would be reluctant to do it. Would a system comparable to the registration system be feasible with respect to these parcels? Even if it were necessary to charge three cents or five cents for the registration, could it be done on that basis so as to provide a means of tracing the parcel? Will the Postmaster General give us an answer to that question?

Mr. Rinfret: The expense of registration would be about 25 cents per package. That would be half of the actual rate.

Mr. Fulton: I put this before the Postmaster General: the expense of registering a letter is only 10 cents. I wonder whether it would not be possible to—

Mr. Rinfret: Registration price and cost are not the same. The price is 10 cents; the cost is 20 cents.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): We will never get a perfect mail service. That would be a service where the deliveries would be made every hour or so even if you were out on the Cariboo road or back in the Peace river country. I must take the hon. member for Kamloops to task to a certain extent. Of course he is doing good work when he is urging the department to extend service.

Mr. Hodgson: Do you want to go back to the dog team days?

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): No, nor the horse and buggy days or the stage coach days. The situation on the Cariboo road today—and I speak with direct knowledge of course—is this. At the town of Quesnel we receive at least one air mail service daily, and at the town of Prince George somewhat further on we receive two air mail services daily, plus the rail service, plus the mail that is hauled in by the stage. Below Quesnel we have the rural route recently installed. Coming then further along the Cariboo road we certainly have a very good service, but not throughout its entire length, but certainly in that area. Out of Prince George we have two rural routes, and we are going along very nicely along the Cariboo road. Back in the country for some distance in some of these mining camps, and so on, the deliveries are not as regular as they might be, but you must expect that in a rough country.

While I am commenting here, I join with the hon. member for Kamloops, in asking for a little more money for some of our post offices. We have a very good country up there and the revenues are good, especially at Dawson Creek and at some other points, namely, Fort St. John and Quesnel. All that we need is about $50,000 post offices at each of these points and we would be delightedly happy.

I want to say a word with regard to these couriers. It is unfortunate that these people are encouraged to bid against each other until the mail which is hauled by land up there is often hauled at much less than the cost of transportation. The department might put a base price on for hauling the mail. Something should be done along that line, and in the meantime I want to thank the minister for the excellent service being given at Quesnel and all through other points in the Cariboo riding.

Mr. Fulton: Will the minister comment on my request for more service?

Mr. Rinfret: I have taken due note of the requests and I shall consider them.

Mr. Gibson: I should like to join the hon. member for Cariboo in expressing to the Postmaster General and to his efficient administrative staff my appreciation of the excellent job they have done throughout Canada, and particularly in my own riding, and I am quite sure in all ridings. As far as I am concerned I was particularly pleased to hear the hon. member for Cariboo express his thanks for the service which has been given to the city of Prince George, which is a very fine city. I do not think it is quite in the same class as the Comox-Courtenay area and the Campbell River area. I would like the minister further to consider the proposition I have offered him that we should also receive only one first-class air mail service a day. We have an air passenger service in there twice a day now. We would be quite content to accept just one service by plane a day. I would ask the Postmaster General to see if it is not possible for him to extend that service to that area in the very near future.

Mr. Fair: There are just one or two small matters that I should like to bring to the attention of the Postmaster General before this item carries. First, a word in connection with the rural directories. I should like to know whether it is possible to have greater co-operation from the postmasters at various country post offices because the directories are not at all up to date. In some instances we get from fifty to sixty or seventy-five letters back that are sent out according to the latest directories.

Another matter is the question of the lobby in the post offices being left open on Sunday. In my particular territory the mail trains come through during the night, and the mail is sorted and placed in letter boxes for those who have letter boxes. It was the custom until about a year ago to leave the post office lobby open on Sunday mornings for about an hour so that the people around could get their mail. However an inspector came along and said that the doors could not be left open on Sundays. A number of subscribers to boxes would like to have that service returned to them. I might say that the postmaster has no objection at all to leaving the lobby open for a while on Sunday mornings. In fact, he would be glad to do it because it would dispose of an accumulation of mail, and permit him to be ready for the next mail on Monday. What can be done about it?

Mr. Higgins: I have one request to make in connection with the establishment of rural mail delivery on Bell island. This is one of the important parts of Newfoundland. Apart from St. John's, it is perhaps the largest community, with a population of about 9,000. At present it has only three post offices, consisting of a main office and two branches. The mail is brought to the main office and distributed to the two branch offices.

I would point out that in the main office only three persons are employed, whereas at Corner Brook there is a staff of twenty. These people have to call at the post office for their mail. I believe this matter has been referred to the minister's assistant, and I would urge upon the minister the very great necessity for establishing an adequate delivery service either rural or suburban.

Mr. Rinfret: I shall consider that for sure.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): At various times since August I have received requests to have post offices re-established in places where they were discontinued between 1931 and 1934, the years of depression. I have written to the inspector of post offices and have received the assurance that matters would be investigated. I have also written to the Postmaster General and received a cordial reply in which he has said that an investigation would take place.

Up to the present time however I have received no report on any of these requests. My letter of June 24 refers to post offices to be established at Daniel's Point, Regina, Colinet Island, Point la Haye, Mobile and Brigus South. I know this community well, and I know also that people have to go five or six miles to get their mail—and this at a time when the couriers are passing through these areas. I suggest this is a matter worthy of consideration.

Since April 1 of last year only one post office has been restored to Newfoundland. I believe we have 526 post offices, and one more has been added. On the other hand, there are about 1,400 in Nova Scotia. I am suggesting that we should have many more, because we used to have about 800. We are not asking for very many; there have been only four or five applications. I wonder whether the Postmaster General would see that these matters are investigated?

Then, the people at Witless Bay would like to have established a postal money order post office. I have received no word as to what is to happen in connection with that. Has anything been done, or will anything be done?

Mr. Rinfret: I shall consider it.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to have an answer.

Mr. Rinfret: It is impossible for me to remember each of these cases. I shall look up the files and do what I can.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to have a reply, because I have had no information since last August.

Mr. Rinfret: The reports have not yet come to my hand. As soon as I have them I shall consider them and advise the hon. member.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): If there has been no report, what is the delay? This request was made last August.

Mr. Rinfret: That is exactly what I am going to inquire about.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. McLure: No, it is not carried. I have been taking my daily dozen, trying to get to my feet all afternoon. I shall commence my remarks by reiterating what was said by the hon. member for Peel in welcoming back the Postmaster General after his illness. I too am delighted to see him in his seat. At a time when we are rushing to pass the estimates it is unfortunate that those of his department should be left until this time, when we will not have an opportunity to go into them in the fullest detail. We will do our best in the next day or two, and I hope we will give them the once over they really deserve.

The hon. member for Peel concluded his remarks by making what amounted almost to a motion for the setting up of a committee to deal with the problem of rural mail delivery. This was supposed to be considered by a committee in 1945 or 1946. I support the hon. member in the suggestion he made today.

At this point I would ask to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that we sit a few moments later, because at eight o'clock we would wish to take up the rest of the estimates of the Department of Resources and Development. My colleague wishes to leave this evening, and we will not be able to continue with the post office estimates at eight o'clock. We have been discussing them since three o'clock, and have covered almost the whole field. Perhaps if we were to sit a few minutes longer we might finish it.

Mr. Knowles: Don't forget public and private bills.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I was thinking of public and private bills. However, I should think that after this long discussion we might complete this department—unless someone has a desire to speak at some length.

Mr. Johnston: I would ask the minister to reply to the hon. member for Battle River in the matter of the closing of post offices on Sundays. I have had the same complaint in my constituency, and I should like to be able to reply to those who have complained to me about it.

Mr. Rinfret: The question of Sunday services is of course a ticklish one. Postmasters, in common with all other employees, are entitled to have some rest. We do not discourage a postmaster who, of his own accord, wishes to give additional service. On the other hand we believe they are entitled to the day of rest. Then, so far as the directory matter is concerned, I shall see what I can do about it.

Mr. Fair: The postmasters are not complaining. It was the inspector who closed the lobbies; the postmasters were satisfied to leave them open.

Mr. Rinfret: I am told the postmasters have asked for overtime pay. We are not ready to give it; if they wish to give the service to the public, that is their business.

Mr. Fair: The mail is in locked boxes. If a postmaster would leave a lobby open, it would be sufficient. My understanding is that postmasters would be satisfied to do that, but that the inspector objects.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. McLure: No, it does not carry. Are you going to call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

The Chairman: Unless there is unanimous consent I shall call it six o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: I understand that we are to take up the estimates of the Department of Resources and Development.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Yes, the other minister is going away.

Mr. Knowles: We could sit two or three minutes for that.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I was not listening to what was said. Will the hon. member repeat his suggestion?

Mr. Knowles: I find there is not unanimous consent to the suggestion I made, so there is no use repeating it.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

QUEEN MARY'S CARPET

PURCHASE BY IMPERIAL ORDER DAUGHTERS OF THE EMPIRE

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with the unanimous consent of the house I should like to make an announcement that I am sure will be pleasing to all members of the house. This afternoon I received a telegram from the president of the Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire in the following terms:

Following is text of release made today: "Imperial Order Daughters of the Empire announce that word has been received from Queen Mary carpet committee in England of the acceptance of the I.O.D.E. offer to purchase the royal carpet for Canada. The order is sponsoring a Canadian fund to raise as large an amount as possible with a minimum of one hundred thousand dollars to which all loyal Canadians are asked to contribute. No contribution will be too large or too small." British committee indicated delight of United Kingdom that carpet to be in Canada.

Helen Chipman
Mrs. John H. Chipman

Mrs. Chipman is the president of the I.O.D.E. I am sure we shall all be delighted to learn that this work of love and devotion to the restoration of the United Kingdom will permanently remain as a treasure of the Canadian people.

FLOOD CONDITIONS

FRASER VALLEY—LETTER FROM PREMIER OF BRITISH COLUMBIA EXPRESSING SATISFACTION WITH DIKES

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table a letter I have received from the premier of British Columbia expressing his satisfaction at the manner in which the diking work erected in 1948 stood the test of the recent floods in that province.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. 301, for the relief of Ernest Beliveau.—Mr. Winkler.

Pipe Lines Act

PIPE LINES ACT

PROVISION FOR LOCATION OF MAIN LINE ENTIRELY WITHIN CANADA

On the order:

Resuming debate on the motion of Mr. Sinnott for the second reading of Bill No. 132, an act to amend the Pipe Lines Act, and on the proposed amendment thereto of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Green: What is the position, Mr. Speaker? Does the motion stand?

Mr. Speaker: The rule is that the bill should stand when the sponsor or someone authorized to act in his behalf is not in the chamber. However, this is probably the last evening on which these bills will be called. While I would not permit a vote to be taken, in view of the speeches that have been made I would not stop the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Green) if he wished to speak. I do not know whether or not the hon. gentleman desires to proceed.

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Mr. Green: I understand Your Honour is ruling that I can speak but no one else may do so, and there can be no vote. Is that it?

Mr. Speaker: I could not permit a vote in view of the ruling I have made, but in view of all the circumstances in connection with this bill I would not stop the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra if he wanted to speak on it.

Mr. Green: I would not want to ask any favours of that kind.

Mr. Speaker: I was not suggesting it as a favour but as the fair thing in the circumstances.

Order stands.

Mr. Speaker: The business for this hour having been concluded, the house will revert to the matter under consideration at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF RESOURCES AND DEVELOPMENT

Loans and Investments—

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—

562. To provide for advances to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the acquisition of land, the installation of services and improvements in respect thereof, the purchase of building materials and the construction or conversion of housing projects for veterans under the authority of section 34 of the National Housing Act, 1944, and, with the approval of treasury board, for the Department of National Defence, including construction of school buildings, $75,000,000.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Winters: Since it appears that at least one hon. member wishes to speak on this item, Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should make a brief statement. This vote covers moneys required (1) to complete the veterans' housing programs, with $18,500,000 required for that purpose; (2) to complete the 1949-50 program of houses for the use of married personnel in the three armed services, an amount of $26,500,000; (3) to construct the 1949-50 program of schools and services for housing projects built in army camps, air stations and naval establishments, in the amount of $10 million; and (4) to finance the 1950 program for houses for married personnel of the Department of National Defence as well as ground services for such houses, an amount of $20 million.

The 1949 veterans' rental program amounted in all to 4,798 units. As at March 31, 1950, there were 1,415 units still to be started, as well as 2,278 units which had been started before March 31, 1950, but which were still to be completed. This, together with some landscaping and miscellaneous work to complete the 1948 program, involves $18,500,000.

The sum of $26,500, is required to complete houses for married service personnel. The 1949 program amounted to 4,530 units in thirty-four projects. As at the end of the fiscal year 273 of these units were completed and 2,585 had been started but were not complete. Some 1,672 units were to be started after March 31, 1950.

Arrangements have been made under which approximately $10 million is required for twenty-two schools. In every province we received co-operation from the department of education, both in respect to the design and type of school as well as to its operation after completion.

Though the 1950 program for married personnel for the Department of National Defence is still under consideration, we have included in this estimate an amount of $20 million to provide for approximately 2,000 additional houses. Because basic arrangements have been determined with the Department of National Defence for the 1949 program, it is anticipated that an earlier start can be made this year than last. I hope that all contracts will be awarded for the 1950 program, with very few exceptions, before too long.

Hon. members will recall that though this construction is carried out by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation each project, both in respect to the number of units and their cost, is approved by treasury board before Central Mortgage undertakes the contract. The government has not finally determined the size of the 1950 housing program for the Department of National Defence, but should it exceed 2,000 units additional funds will be requested at a later date.

During the first four months of 1950 residential construction has continued at approximately the same level as during 1949. During the first quarter of 1950 new residential starts in all parts of the country were 5·5 per cent above those in the corresponding period of 1949. Completions during the first quarter of 1950 were almost the same as in the first quarter of 1949. In cities and towns with populations of 5,000 and over, starts during the first four months of 1950 were 12·2 per cent in excess of starts in the same period in 1949. This reflects greater residential activity in the maritimes, Quebec and Ontario. Starts in the prairies and British Columbia were three per cent and ten per cent respectively below starts in the first four months of last year.

I wish to emphasize, however, that because of climatic and other conditions, starts during the first three or four months of any year may or may not be indicative of a trend for the year as a whole. It will be recalled that although first quarter starts in 1949 exceeded those for 1948, 1949 starts for the year as a whole were slightly below those of 1948.

Furthermore, the recent change in the lumber situation may have an important bearing upon the number of starts in 1949. Prices of lumber have increased sharply in all parts of the country, and there is now evidence that even at increased prices lumber is not readily available to house builders. In the program of married quarters for the Department of National Defence, four projects have been postponed because the prices bid by contractors range from $800 to $1,300 per unit above prices for similar houses in 1949. We do not intend to proceed with projects at this price level.

The same trend is showing in private house building. The cost of individual houses will increase, and already in certain areas there is a shortage of lumber which is stopping the framing of houses. This condition is likely to reduce the number of new starts for the year, notwithstanding an increase in the number of new starts during the first four months of 1950.

The increase in price is occasioned by the buoyant demand for lumber in the United States. This has had the effect of a sharp increase in prices in the United States, with the result that our exports to that country have increased to such a point that domestic supply is not generally sufficient.

As far as the operations of central mortgage are concerned, we have no intention of supporting the "demand" side of the market by building married quarters at greatly increased prices, nor do we intend to adjust loans under the National Housing Act to take care of marked increases in cost both to the builder and the home owner resulting from the increase in the price of lumber. We deem it better to face a decline in the number of starts rather than add to the inflationary trend. For these reasons I cannot give the house an estimate of starts and completions for the year 1950.

Hon. members will recall that the National Housing Act was amended at the last session of parliament by the introduction—through section 35—of an arrangement for the federal government and the provinces to enter into agreements which would lead to public assistance in the field of housing. When the various provincial legislatures met this spring, seven of the ten provinces passed legislation complementary to section 35 of the National Housing Act. Since then we have been working with the provinces to determine mutually satisfactory activity in this field. Activity in some twenty to thirty municipalities has now been discussed with the provincial governments. Over-all agreements with Ontario and British Columbia have been entered into whereby preliminary expenses may be incurred.

In Ontario there is a lack of serviced land within the larger municipalities. At this stage we are working with the Ontario government towards a substantial number of land assembly projects, whereby land will be serviced and made available to private builders who are prepared to build houses of a type and at a price satisfactory to the two governments.

The province of New Brunswick is actively considering proposals for housing in the city of Saint John. Today we received a proposal from the government for a housing project in that city.

Because of flood conditions it is not likely that a start will be made in the use of this legislation in Manitoba in 1950. Preliminary conversations were under way with the Manitoba government, but have been suspended during the period of emergency in that province.

In British Columbia negotiations are under way, and I hope that before long it will be possible to announce the projects which will be undertaken in that province.

Preliminary conversations have taken place with Saskatchewan, although we have not yet reached a point where specific projects are under consideration.

An agreement has been signed with the government of Newfoundland for a subsidized low rental housing project in the city of St. John's involving 140 units. The contract has been awarded and construction has started. Negotiations are under way with the government of Newfoundland for the installation of services such as water, sewer, roads and sidewalks for a land assembly project of approximately 100 acres. The purpose is to make serviced lots available to individuals who wish to build homes.

Changes made in the National Housing Act at the last session have doubtless been an important factor in the increase in the number of joint loans. Some 8,800 units have been approved under part I of the act during the first four months of 1950, as compared with 4,650 units in the same period in 1949—an increase of almost 90 per cent.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, I think it is rather remarkable that this is the first occasion in this 1950 session when there has been a debate on the subject of housing. It is no doubt regrettable, but it seems that this is the first occasion, in the absence of any legislation dealing with housing, for any extended discussion on the situation. I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, even under those circumstances to speak at length. We are so close to the end of the session, it seems to me that the occasion calls only for touching on the highlights of the situation, rather than for an extended review of the problem. I do hope, however, that the fact that the debate on this occasion may be brief, and the fact that there was little said about housing at this session, will not be construed by anyone as indicating, on the part of the house, a feeling that the housing problem has greatly improved.

One wishes that at this late date, June, 1950, one could say that the housing problem has shown substantial improvement. But one cannot say that. The problem is still very serious, and has grave aspects to it. The minister has touched on certain figures in regard to completions and starts. The figures that were released on June 16 by the dominion bureau of statistics indicate that in the first quarter of 1950 completions totalled 17,873 as compared with 17,826 in the first quarter of 1949. The results of completions thus are almost the same. Starts in the first quarter of 1950 numbered 9,015, as compared with 8,396 in 1949. At the end of March there were 50,161 units under construction as compared with 46,886 a year earlier.

Supply—Resources and Development

The same bulletin issued by the dominion bureau of statistics, Mr. Chairman, has this interesting comment to add:

From the types of dwelling units constructed during the first quarter of 1950, it is estimated that 28 per cent were for rental purposes, showing no change from the same period of 1949.

So that relatively, of the housing that is now becoming available, the proportion available for rental purposes, of which the need is very acute, has not increased.

Members who sat in the last parliament have been accustomed to hearing the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, when he had Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in his department, touch upon the question of the relationship between the housing problem and the family formation rate. How he used to let that expression, "the family formation rate", with its alliteration, roll off the end of his tongue! On June 23 the dominion bureau of statistics issued some figures as a result of a study in that field. The bulletin reads as follows:

Between June, 1941, and June, 1949, the number of families in Canada increased by slightly more than 26 per cent and the number of households by slightly more than 24 per cent, according to estimates by the dominion bureau of statistics. Since 1947, however, the rise in number of households has exceeded the increase in number of families.

The estimated number of households in June, 1949, was 3,360,000, an increase of 125,000 or 3·9 per cent over the estimated 3,235,000 in June, 1948, and 232,000 or 7·4 per cent over the estimated 3,128,000 in June, 1947. In comparison, the estimated number of families was 3,187,000 in June last year, showing a rise of 99,000 or 3·2 per cent over the estimated 3,088,000 a year earlier and 150,000 or just under five per cent over the total of 3,037,000 in June, 1947.

Now, sir, it may be that those figures, in the light of the statements made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in earlier sessions, are capable of having more than one inference drawn from them. I think, however, that this is at least one inference that may be drawn from these figures: if we are not making the progress with the housing problem that we should like to see made, it can no longer be attributable to any acceleration of the family formation rate over the rate at which housing is being constructed.

Building costs today are a serious problem in relation to the construction of housing accommodation. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said on June 23 that "building costs have risen substantially since last September." That is an unfortunate fact, particularly with respect to certain classes of building materials. I place that statement alongside a statement appearing in the January quarterly issue of "Housing in Canada", the publication of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in which we find on page 23 this statement:

The trend in house-building costs showed a distinct tendency to level off in 1949.

That seemed to be the picture that confronted the house when the housing question was last discussed in this chamber at the end of November, seven months ago; and I think many members of the house indulged in some hopefulness on the subject, feeling that now, with a measure of stability in housing costs appearing, more people would find it within their means to build. But the fact that housing construction costs seem to be rising again does give cause for concern when we measure the still tremendous shortage of housing in Canada. The need of rental housing is still acute. Many of the purchases of new houses that are being made today are being made by people who are stretching every resource to buy or to build because rental accommodation is not available to them, or is not available to them at a rental that they can afford to pay. One views that fact with some degree of deep concern, because if we should encounter anything in the way of a recession in this country—and we hope that will not occur—and if land and building values should fall, it may leave many of these people, particularly the young people among them, with grave problems on their hands in financing these purchases on which they have embarked.

Marginal purchasers have been coming into the house purchasing market to a greater extent than previously. I do not mean to say that there are more purchasers in the market but I do say that, of those who are purchasing today, a much higher percentage falls within the class of marginal purchasers than ever before. We hope that the wage and salary levels in this country will be maintained so that those people will not be faced with a serious problem in meeting their obligations under their purchases.

The supply of building materials still presents some serious difficulties. Steel has been coming off control this year and we are told in the booklet "Supply of Building Materials in Canada: "Outlook, 1950", issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce, that most steel supplies, as they enter into house construction, are going to be available in greater quantities than previously. However, our familiar subject of nails is one that is still cause for some concern. On page 11 of this issue we read:

Imports of finished nails have been heavy, increasing from 6,300 tons in 1948 to 13,300 tons in 1949. Canadian mills have also proceeded to manufacture nails at a higher rate.

Then this disquieting sentence appears at the conclusion of the paragraph:

However, wire nails and certain gauges of steel sheet and small sizes of pipe were still difficult to obtain in necessary quantities.

There are also some other kinds of building materials that are admittedly not in too plentiful supply. But the most serious problem confronting those engaged in house construction today, from the point of view of the supply of building materials, relates to lumber. As often happens, the scarcity of a commodity may not be general in all parts of the country; but certainly in the part of the country from which I come the scarcity of lumber is presenting serious problems. At page 6 of this booklet we read the following paragraph:

The domestic supply of lumber is not expected to change materially in 1950—

And I interject here, Mr. Chairman, that this pamphlet was issued in February last.

—and special types and grades may still be difficult to procure despite the fact that production may at least equal 1949 levels. Sales in the United States are expected to continue at a relatively high level throughout the year and any possible decrease in United Kingdom contracts may be taken up by that market. Besides this, manufacturers' inventories are at a low level and United States prices are appreciably above those in Canada. Therefore, it appears that prime quality lumber suitable for sale abroad may not be readily available in Canada throughout 1950. Export controls on lumber and wood building materials with the exception of pulp and fibre wallboard were discontinued at the end of last year.

The problem of lumber supply is assuming quite serious proportions in view of the way in which the market in the United States has been draining off some of the most suitable lumber in Canada for building purposes.

Mr. Chairman, let me now turn briefly to the subject of legislation. The amendments to the National Housing Act which were enacted by parliament at the end of November, 1949, came too late in that year to make much impression as yet. It had been hoped that, with the opening of the building season in earnest this spring, agreements might have been entered into which would provide for extensive use of the provisions of the new section 35 of the act. There have been difficulties in the way—the minister has referred to some of them—such as the necessity of negotiation with the provinces and the difficulties confronting many of the municipalities with whom, after all, these projects must be initiated. As one may fairly repeat on looking back, I think it is regrettable that those amendments were not introduced at a much earlier date. As to the municipalities, this committee must recognize the fact that the municipalities—particularly those that are faced with the most acute housing problems—have a variety of complex problems on their hands. The minister has referred to the shortage of serviced land. That situation is particularly serious in some of the larger urban municipalities and their suburban areas. For instance, in the city of Toronto—that is, metropolitan Toronto, greater Toronto—this is an extremely serious problem. It also has a relation to the other financial problems that these municipalities are facing, because many of the municipalities, particularly the suburban municipalities surrounding the large cities, are themselves faced with so many problems that the provision of serviced land itself offers to them in many cases problems with which they are not financially able to cope.

One welcomes the evidence that a number of the provinces have entered into agreement, and are prepared in this way to pave the way for the use of the provisions of section 35 of the act for the benefit of projects in certain of their municipalities.

I cannot forbear, sir, from expressing the hope, as I did when these amendments were under discussion in the house last November, that steps will be taken to broaden the provisions of section 12 of the act, so that it may not be more difficult for municipalities to proceed with redevelopment projects in crowded areas and slum areas than to proceed with development projects that do not involve the clearing of areas that have been built up in the municipality. You will remember, sir, that under section 35 the dominion contributes 75 per cent of the cost and bears 75 per cent of loss; whereas the province is called upon to bear only 25 per cent. But in the case of slum clearance projects or redevelopment projects, which are seriously needed in many of the urban areas, the provisions of section 12 remain, and the municipality must find 50 per cent of the cost of acquiring and clearing the land. I submit to the minister that the government must recognize the social and economic aspects of this problem, and that there is no justification for this discrimination between new development and redevelopment projects.

Sir, there is one final matter upon which I think the committee will wish to ask the minister for more information. As I followed his remarks none was given by the minister on this subject in his introductory statement. I am asking about the extent to which the new amendments to section 4 of the act in relation to second mortgages have been put to use.

The minister did not give a very encouraging picture in regard to the mortgage lending operations under the National Housing Act. In fact he has said that, faced with rising building costs again this year, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is not prepared to raise its lending values. One can sympathize with the corporation in this problem; one can frankly say that one does not wish to see the corporation participating in a process which may be inflationary in its nature; nevertheless, sir, unless the department presided over by the minister is prepared to say that this present rise in building costs is only very temporary, then I am afraid the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is going to have to face the facts. They will have to make up their minds whether this rise in building costs is to be short-lived, or whether it threatens to be of long duration; because, if it is of long duration, then I submit, sir, that the provisions of this act will be at least in part nullified by freezing the lending values of houses to be constructed under the terms of this act.

We had this problem in previous sessions and some of us had to complain strenuously that many of the beneficial provisions of the National Housing Act were denied that beneficial operation which parliament intended when it enacted those provisions, by such an administration of those provisions as has largely nullified their operation by insisting on writing down lending value. I have admitted that the problem is not free from difficulty. I see the difficulties facing the administration in this respect, but, sir, unless they are prepared to say that this present rise in building costs is to be very short-lived, then I am afraid they will simply have to accept the situation and raise lending values in keeping with the rise in building costs.

In that regard one may well ask, Mr. Chairman, as to what use has been made in the meantime of the amendments to section 4 of the act. The committee will recall that new subsection 3 was added to that section of the act last November, in these words:

> In addition to the joint loan referred to in this section a loan may be made by the corporation to the home owner or home purchaser in an amount not exceeding one-sixth of the joint loan if the cost of the house to the home owner or the purchase price thereof to the home purchaser is, in the opinion of the corporation, fair and reasonable.

You remember, sir, this was pictured to us as the government, through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation going into the second mortgage field to supply a need that was represented in the widening split between the cost of house construction or house purchase on the one hand and the amount available by way of first mortgage under the National Housing Act up to the lending value on the other hand. When this measure was under consideration some of us pointed out that while it purported to fill the gap and while the province of Ontario, for instance, which had entered this field nearly two years before, was in the face of this legislation now withdrawing from that field as there would be no further need for them to be in it, the efficacy of this section would depend very largely upon the interpretation and administration of it. Therefore I ask the minister whether he will give the committee some report on the operations of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation under that section, and in doing so I express the hope that that new provision to which great hope was attached in all quarters of the house—certainly much was made of it by the government in introducing the amendment—has not been nullified by rigidity in the administration of the act and of the section by those charged with administration in the department and in Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation; because if lending value is to be frozen, and rigid interpretation is to be given to the provisions of this section and of the sections in relation to lending value applied to the old first mortgage then, Mr. Chairman, the house might as well have spared itself some of the efforts put into amending this act in 1949.

Mr. Pouliot: Mr. Chairman, whether one agrees with the hon. member for Eglinton or not, it is evident that tonight he has offered some constructive remarks. He said there was no debate on housing at this session, and that no new housing legislation has been passed. I wonder seriously if he needs new legislation to get elevated inspiration for a fine speech?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I agree with many of the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Eglinton, and I shall not take the time of the committee to repeat those things with which I agree. There are however some aspects of the problem of housing which I suggest might well be underlined both from my own point of view and from that of the people in constituencies such as the one I have the honour to represent.

We have heard tonight, as we always hear when this subject comes up, a number of statistics. We have heard references to the legislation on the statute books. But the fact remains that despite statistics, despite legislation, despite the large number of very fine homes in Canada—and I, for one, am very happy to see more and more fine homes across this land—despite all those things, the fact remains that for thousands of our people fine homes, even decent homes in which to live, are still dreams of the distant future.

Constituencies such as the one I represent have in them thousands of people who live in overcrowded conditions in the kind of housing that certainly does no credit to twentieth century civilization. I plead again for more of a social conscience in connection with this question, for greater realization on the part of the government that it is our collective responsibility as a people to do what we can to solve this social problem, and to see to it that all our people have a chance to live in decent homes.

To bring that down to some of the specific things that should be done, I should like to say a word about the matter of low-rental housing. I realize, as does the hon. member for Eglinton, that section 35 was written into the National Housing Act last fall to make provision for low-rental projects on a 75/25 basis. That basis involves the province putting up 25 per cent of the cost of such a project, the dominion putting up 75 per cent, and the two jurisdictions taking any loss that might follow in those proportions.

However, despite the fact that that legislation is there, provinces such as the one I come from have not seen fit to take advantage of it; and it has been represented to me that although some of the provinces feel that they might be able to stand 25 per cent of the loss involved in a low-rental housing project, they could not stand the financing of 25 per cent of the capital cost. I still hope that some projects under that plan will get going. Certainly there is pressure being exerted at all levels of government and by all groups of people in my province, and particularly in my city, to have the government of Manitoba enter this field. However, I think it becomes obvious already, even though the minister may say that we should give section 35 of the act more than six or seven months' trial, that it is not going to be the beginning of a great program of low-rental housing for the people of this country who need it.

I insist that when we talk about low-rental housing, particularly for the working people in industrial areas, it should be not just the kind of buildings that provide roofs over the heads of families, but rather it should be a modern layout that makes available to our workers and their families the best that modern architects, engineers and community planners can design for modern healthful and decent living.

I am one of those who last November welcomed the step taken in this legislation, but I submit that in the face of the problem, and in the face of the challenge that presents itself to us as a civilized nation to do something in the field of housing, we have not even started.

In addition to this problem of more effective legislation in the matter of low-rental housing, it must also be pointed out, as has been done by the hon. member for Eglinton, that there is room for real improvement by way of redevelopment or slum clearance under section 12 of the act. There again the minister can say that the legislation is on the statute books—indeed, it has been on the statute books considerably longer than has section 35; indeed it has been there for the last six years. However, the amount of slum clearance and redevelopment of housing areas that has taken place under that legislation certainly is nothing to write home about.

Then, may I refer to the rising cost of building that has taken place particularly since export controls were taken off and Canadian lumber allowed to go freely to the higher priced market in the United States. The result has been that prices for lumber are rising in this country, too. I heard a news report over the radio, or saw it in the press not long ago, to the effect that it was hoped that these increased lumber prices would not result in a rise of more than two or three per cent in building costs. But when one thinks of two or three per cent in terms of $10,000 or $12,000, or whatever it costs to build a house today, he realizes it is quite a sum.

Somehow or other these percentage increases seem to have a way of pyramiding and making it more difficult for people to get decent homes. So whether it is in the field of low-rental housing for people who cannot afford to have their own homes, or in the field of home ownership, which is certainly desirable, the barriers which crop up seem to wipe out, almost before they are enjoyed, any of the advantages found in the legislation the government brings down from time to time.

I should like to ask the minister a question regarding the quality of lumber and building materials and also the inspection service that is available. It has been represented to me that the urgency of the situation and the need people have to get lumber are such that there are cases of second-grade lumber being sold as first-grade, or at first-grade prices, thus adding to the cost of building and reducing the quality.

Surely our people deserve protection in this field. I would ask the minister whether Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation are interesting themselves in this phase of the matter. I do not need to take more time to emphasize the importance of the problem. It is unfortunate that the layout of the session is such that we have not reached this important problem until what may be the next to the last day. I do urge however that hon. members in all quarters of the house, and the government in particular, look upon this question of housing not just as a case of putting a roof over the head of every Canadian, but rather as a real challenge to use all the ingenuity we possess and all the advances that have been made in architecture, engineering and community planning really to house our Canadian people at the standard they deserve.

Mr. Blackmore: Mr. Chairman, with what has been said by the two previous speakers I agree, and I believe every other member of the house will also agree. Nevertheless that does not come anywhere near finding a solution to the problem, something which we all desire. The simple facts confronting us at the present time are that the cost of building a house, such as the great majority of the Canadian people deserve to have, is so high that they simply cannot afford it. The taxes on such a property will be so high that the income of the average Canadian will not be sufficient to enable him to pay such an amount. The cost will be so high that the Canadian of average income will be unable to pay for his home, so that whichever way he looks at it he stands to have a number of years of headaches and worry, and then lose his home.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Blackmore: There are three or four Liberals who I hope will speak later on and have something more than "carried" to say in their speeches. What are we going to do about the problem? Has the minister given any thought to the possibility of purchasing prefabricated houses from Great Britain? It seems to me that not so long ago I read that Australia had made an agreement with Great Britain for a certain number of prefabricated houses to be delivered at a price far lower than it was possible for Australia to build comparable houses. It seems to me I heard that New Zealand had made a similar bargain with Great Britain. Has the minister given any thought to making an arrangement with Great Britain for prefabricated houses?

I should also like the minister to give the house some account of what he has been able to discover in his studies as to the possibility of using aluminum for prefabrication in Canada. Certainly we do not have to go without houses in this country because the lumbermen choose to run the price of lumber up so high that they render building economically impracticable. Can the minister tell us what he has found with respect to aluminum?

Mr. Winters: I do not know whether hon. members will wish me to assume that everybody has spoken and that I should deal with the questions they have raised now. The hon. member for Eglinton requested some information as to the effectiveness of the one-sixth additional loan provided under the act last year. As he said, it replaces the second mortgage that Ontario was making available. I think it can be said that the position the federal government has taken, which has enabled Ontario to withdraw from their second mortgage arrangement, has been entirely satisfactory to the government of Ontario, and I put that forth as evidence of the fact that it has worked.

As I pointed out when introducing these estimates, some 8,800 units have been approved under part I of the act during the first four months of 1950 compared with 4,650 units in the same period of 1949, an increase of almost 90 per cent. I think it fair to say that can be attributed largely to the additional amount of loan made available by the revision of the act last year.

Mr. Fleming: May I ask the minister if the additional one-sixth was made available in the case of each of the 8,800?

Mr. Winters: The additional one-sixth is made available for about 75 per cent of all houses that are qualifying for loans under the N.H.A. joint loan arrangements.

Mr. Fleming: That is about 6,600 of the 8,800.

Mr. Winters: That is right.

Mr. Fleming: And what was the figure for the previous year?

Mr. Winters: There were 4,650 units in the same period of the previous year. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre deplored the fact there was not sufficient development of low-cost subsidized housing. I say again, as I said last year, that the revision of the act, as enacted by parliament last year, is broad enough to enter that field of housing, as in fact we have done in Newfoundland, and are prepared to do in any other province that wishes to participate. The hon. member spoke about slum clearance. We realize that there are shortcomings in the application of the slum clearance section. It has not been as broadly applied as one might expect that it would be. If the hon. member will refer to page 7 of the annual report of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for 1949 he will see set out there, in what I consider to be a logical way, the reasons why the slum clearance section has not found broader application to date.

Mr. Fleming: Will the minister say whether the government will reconsider the position it took last November with regard to amending section 12 to bring it into line with the percentages in section 35 in order to assist in redevelopment and slum clearance projects?

Mr. Winters: The section is under constant consideration. While I cannot of course give the committee any assurance that there will be amendments, I can say that it will be considered, as my hon. friend requests. The hon. member for Lethbridge asked about the use of aluminum. Aluminum has been used by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for siding, insulation, window frames and other incidental parts of houses. It has been used with satisfaction in most regions of Canada but there are some areas where, when aluminum is exposed to the air, it does not stand up too well. The seacoast is one of those areas, and aluminum has been used under those circumstances with only mediocre success.

Mr. Blackmore: Can the minister tell us whether he has been in contact with Great Britain to see whether or not the British can supply houses at a price lower than we are able to construct them in Canada?

Mr. Winters: We have not been in direct contact with England on that question. There is no evidence at hand to lead us to believe that they can supply houses cheaper than we can. In fact the fabrication of the house is not always the main problem in housing. As my hon. friend knows, the big problem in most instances is the provision of serviced land.

Mr. Higgins: Reverting to the remark made by the minister a short time ago concerning the work done by his department in Newfoundland, I should like to refer to one of those associated with him of whose ability we have a high opinion and for whose interest in Newfoundland we are very grateful. I refer to the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. He was in the newest province quite recently. I believe he has concluded certain contracts and made certain arrangements for housing. Will the minister tell us exactly what has happened, and what Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation proposes to do in the future so far as the provision of houses is concerned?

Mr. Winters: As I said in general terms, we have entered into an agreement with the province of Newfoundland under section 35 of the act to provide 140 housing units. The basis of participation is 75 per cent by the federal government and 25 per cent by the government of Newfoundland. The undertaking is that the capital cost will be shared on that basis, and any operating losses that may accrue will also be shared on the same basis. The accommodation is being provided for people in the low income groups, and might be referred to as low rental housing. We have also entered into negotiations with Newfoundland for the servicing of one hundred acres—that is, the provision of water, sewers and all the other elements that go into servicing land—in the city of St. John's. Those are the only two projects that have been worked so far, but we are open to consider any proposals they may lay before us.

Mr. Higgins: Exactly what does servicing mean? Does it mean only providing water and sewers, or also putting up the houses?

Mr. Winters: The project I refer to, in connection with the servicing of one hundred acres, does not include the building of the houses. It has to do with the provision of services normally supplied by a municipality. It is understood that there are builders in Newfoundland who would be prepared to go ahead on a private enterprise basis and construct houses on the land made available by these services.

Mr. Higgins: Is that part of the area known as the St. John's housing corporation area?

Mr. Winters: That is right.

Mr. Blackmore: I find one remark by the minister very difficult to comprehend. He says the main difficulty is in getting serviced land. That does not make sense to me. I can understand how he might have difficulty getting serviced land in a city like Ottawa, but there are thousands of small towns of 1,500, 2,000 or 2,500 throughout this country that could supply so much serviced land that I do not believe the minister could find enough material in Canada to build the houses; and these towns would be delighted to have more people come there. What is the minister doing about that? Taking my own district, we have towns like Raymond, Picture Butte and Stirling, all in my constituency. There would be no trouble getting serviced land there. In view of what I have just brought to his attention, then, how does the statement by the minister make any sense?

Mr. Winters: I am differentiating, of course, between land and serviced land. As everyone knows, plenty of land is available in Canada; but land with the services provided, water, sewers, sidewalks and the like, is not available in the amount required for building houses.

Mr. Blackmore: Still the minister's remarks seem palpably unrealistic to me. The people who lived in this country one hundred and fifty years ago did not have any of the things he is talking about, yet they carried on, raised their families and made the Canada we have today. Surely it is not necessary to have all these services before we can build houses to shelter the young Canadians who are growing up in our country today. What is the matter with houses in Raymond, Picture Butte and all these other little towns all over Canada; and why cannot houses be built there? Can the minister explain that? For the first forty years of my life I lived without a sidewalk, and I imagine my sons and daughters can do the same. Does the minister not build houses in any places where there are not sidewalks, sewers, water and all the rest of it?

Mr. Winters: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I realize that many houses are going up on land which is not serviced, and that many fine people will grow up in those houses, just as my hon. friend grew up in one. But in this matter of housing we are dealing with municipalities, and, by and large, have to meet their wishes. If they say they do not want houses to go up on land that is not fully serviced, under normal circumstances it is not within our power to proceed. We have to conform to the wishes of the municipalities.

Mr. Higgins: What is the arrangement with respect to the servicing of this one hundred acres, as far as cost is concerned?

Mr. Winters: I thought I had outlined that, but perhaps I did not make it clear. The cost of servicing the land—that is, acquiring, assembling and servicing—will be on the 75 per cent 25 per cent participation basis. If the land is then built upon by private contractors the cost of servicing the land will become a charge against the houses then built.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Since the development referred to by the minister is in the constituency I have the honour to represent, I should like to thank him for the interest he has shown in it. It is going to be a great blessing to the people who will be moved from the slum areas to this new development. It is a good beginning, and I am sure the houses will be more than welcome. Through the kindness of the minister I saw the plan, and I noticed that a playground is to be provided, which will be a great benefit. I am only sorry it was not possible to have more land attached to the houses, and I hope that when another development of this kind is being considered it will be in an area where more land will be available. This is a good beginning, and I know the people of St. John's are very grateful.

Mr. Graydon: Is this the item under which normally the minister would expect to answer inquiries concerning the sale of wartime houses generally?

Mr. Winters: Yes, under this item we would consider those questions.

Mr. Graydon: I want to ask just this general question, which may only call for a general answer. What is the policy of the department relative to the sale of wartime houses to the tenants now occupying them, particularly in various parts of Ontario?

Mr. Winters: Generally speaking the policy is that houses built during 1947 and prior to that are being made available to veterans on a sale basis.

Mr. Graydon: To veterans?

Mr. Winters: Generally they are the tenants.

Mr. Blackmore: How large must a community be before it is eligible to have houses built in it? Will the minister build houses in a hamlet or village, or must a community have a population of 1,500, for example? I am still troubled about all those services.

Mr. Winters: The only requirements we have specified is mutual acceptability as between the federal and provincial governments. If a provincial government were to say it was satisfied to have houses built in a municipality, no matter how small, and asked us to proceed, the chances are that if the project were mutually satisfactory we would do so.

Mr. Knowles: With respect to houses the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has for rent to veterans, has any consideration been given to enlarging the government's policy in order to make those houses available to veterans of world war I, at least in certain cases? I ask this question on the basis of the experience of a world war I veteran in Vancouver, who says that in the area where he wishes to rent a house—he is being put out of his place and therefore needs something else right away—Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation have houses vacant but refuse to rent or sell them to veterans of world war I. This case was placed in the hands of the hon. member for Vancouver East, who is now in Geneva. He took it up with Mr. Mansur, president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and of course the only answer Mr. Mansur was able to give was that the government had laid it down as a policy that these houses were to be restricted to veterans of world war II. I understand the reasons for that, but I am wondering if consideration has been given to modifying the policy so as to include veterans of world war I, particularly if, as this correspondent says, there are vacant houses in the district in question.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, the policy of the government, as approved by this parliament, is to make the houses available only to veterans of world war II.

Mr. Knowles: Is that in any statute?

Mr. Winters: No, it is through the vote that parliament makes of funds available for building the houses for veterans of world war II.

Mr. Knowles: I will have to be shown that there has been any decision made by parliament to limit wartime housing to veterans of world war II. Even Mr. Mansur does not blame it on parliament. He says it is a policy laid down by the government. I believe that if the minister will consult with the Minister of Trade and Commerce he will find that this was laid down by government regulation. I hope that matter might be reconsidered.

Mr. Winters: No, Mr. Chairman, I think it has been clearly understood by this house, ever since the housing was being considered following world war II, that these houses were being built for the veterans of world war II.

Mr. Blackmore: I have listened with a great deal of disappointment to the answers the minister has given. No doubt those are the best answers he can give, Mr. Chairman, but the people of Canada want houses. They do not want to wait 20 years to get them. I say that up to the present time the minister, in explaining the difficulties with which he is confronted, indicates that he will never catch up with the need for houses if he has a thousand years to do it. He had better sit down and plan a real housing program under which the Canadian people will have a real chance to have houses.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps I should point out at this time that there is a further supplementary item, number 820, to extend the application of the terms of vote 562 relating to the housing corporation.

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—

820. To hereby extend the application of the terms of vote 562 in the main estimates, 1950-51, to include the acquisition of land, the installation of services and improvements in respect thereof, the purchase of building materials and the construction or conversion of housing projects for residents of Deep River, Ontario, and to authorize commitments against future years for the purposes of the said vote to amount of $14,208,000, $1.

Mr. Fraser: What does the $1 stand for? The note says it is to extend the application of the terms of vote 562.

Mr. Fleming: The experience the house had last year with these votes of $1 has put the house on its guard against any repetition. Has the minister some explanation as to why this item is required? I refer to the fact that there was a vote of $1 under which the government proceeded to expend great sums of money in purchases through blocked currencies abroad available to the government. I think where we have an item of $1 the house ought to have a full explanation of it.

Mr. Winters: The reason for this particular item is that it seeks future commitment authority to spend money on behalf of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It is thought that perhaps, under the $75 million we have just passed, there might not be an opportunity for spending the full amount available against the projects which I cited in presenting that vote to the house. This seeks authority to spend some of that money against other projects than the ones to which I have referred.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): May I ask the minister why special consideration is given in this way to Deep River, Ontario. The explanation reads:

. . . housing projects for residents of Deep River, Ontario, and to authorize commitments against future years . . .

I ask the minister why Deep River is specially selected.

Mr. Winters: Because, Mr. Chairman, in the statement I just made I said we are seeking authority from the house now to spend certain moneys on projects to which I had referred under the main $75 million item. At Deep River certain houses will be built for the employees of the national research council, and this item seeks authority of the house to spend money on that project.

Mr. Fleming: Does it come down to this, that the terms of vote No. 562 are not as broad as the minister first thought would be required, and that in effect vote No. 820 is not designed to increase the amount so much as to widen the terms of vote No. 562?

Mr. Winters: That is, in general, quite correct. Deep River was a project that developed after item No. 562 was made up.

Mr. Fleming: There are no details of these items. Has the minister had estimates prepared indicating how much of the total of $75 million it is proposed should be spent on the various projects mentioned in the two items?

Mr. Winters: It is estimated that the Deep River project will cost $1,108,000, and that that can be obtained from the total $75 million vote.

Mr. Fleming: What about a break-down of the $75 million in relation to those projects?

Mr. Winters: I gave that earlier, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fleming: The minister did not give the amount; he gave the various uses to which the money would be put, but did not indicate the amount for each.

Mr. Winters: I did give the amounts, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fleming: I am sorry I missed them. I am not quite clear yet, Mr. Chairman, as to the significance of the concluding words of item 820, which are as follows:

. . . and to authorize commitments against future years for the purposes of the said vote to an amount of $14,208,000.

From the last answer the minister gave, I understood him to indicate that the amount being made available for this coming year, and chargeable against the $75 million voted in item 562, is something just over $1 million. What is the explanation for the reference to the $14,208,000?

Mr. Winters: The $14 million will be made up of D.N.D. schools, $1,600,000; non-urban units for Department of National Defence, $3,855,000; D.N.D. units in remote areas, $6,145,000; and permanent improvements to war workers' and servicemen's houses, $1,500,000.

Mr. Fleming: How does this relate to the program for this present fiscal year? As I understand, we are not being asked to provide money in these votes for any year beyond the present year; am I correct?

Mr. Winters: That is right, Mr. Chairman, we are simply asking for a commitment to undertake this additional work which, as my hon. friend says, was not contemplated when the item in the main estimates was made up.

Mr. Fleming: What I want to be quite clear about is what the house is being asked to do. It is being asked to vote something over $1 million this year so far as Deep River is concerned, but I trust there is no suggestion that the passing of item 820 carries with it approval to expend in the future $14,208,000; am I right in that?

Mr. Winters: That is correct, Mr. Chairman, yes.

[Mr. Fleming.]

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall we now consider item 400? Order. I should like all hon. members to give all their attention to the study of the estimates. With all the conversation that is going on, it is extremely difficult for speakers to be heard by the Chair or by the minister who has to give his answers. It is also difficult for hon. members to understand the chairman. We shall now revert to item 400 on page 48.

Housing—

400. Emergency shelter—administration, $300,000.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Fleming: I think the minister should have something to say to us on this item of emergency shelter.

Mr. Winters: The amount of $300,000 here for emergency shelter is made up as follows: administration expenses, $3,000; projects operated by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, $97,000; municipal and university projects, settlement of leases, restoration of leased land, $100,000; payments re commitments on account of structural maintenance, $100,000. Those are the moneys required to operate the emergency shelters which are still operated by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and to restore land to the condition in which it was when taken over for emergency housing, at the time the emergency housing is closed up and the land is returned to its previous owners.

Mr. Fleming: Can the minister not be more informative in his statement? He has not told us where they are located or much about them. Those are general statements.

Mr. Winters: In 1945 the administration of the emergency shelter regulations was a responsibility of the wartime prices and trade board. The principal functions of the administration were to expedite the release of government buildings suitable for conversion to emergency shelter and the bringing of vacant houses into occupancy. By order in council P.C. 7502, of December 28, 1945, the administration was transferred to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. As the housing situation became more acute in early 1946, a more positive approach was adopted in emergency shelter matters. Municipalities were directly encouraged to anticipate their shelter needs and to establish a "cushion" of shelter against future demands. To this end the administration began to give financial assistance to municipalities in connection with "out-of-pocket" expenses of providing emergency shelter. A program was initiated to assist universities to provide emergency shelter for married veteran students and financial aid was granted to universities to cover the cost of providing such accommodation. The pattern of financial assistance was generally grants of one-half the cost—

Mr. Fleming: I do not wish to interrupt the minister but perhaps we can shorten this a little bit.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): You knew all that.

Mr. Fleming: Yes. That is not what I asked the minister. I did not ask him to go back and review the history of emergency shelter administration. I think we are familiar with that. What I was getting at—

An hon. Member: Finish it.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Fleming: There are some hon. members on the other side, Mr. Chairman, who apparently wish to hear the minister's statement. I thought I was saving the minister some time, but if the hon. members wish to hear it I will not interfere with him. What I hope to hear from the minister some time is some information with relation to the particular items he mentioned as making up the figure of $300,000. He has not indicated one place to which reference was made. Can he not give us some idea just what is the exact scope of the operations under this item? That is all we are asking for.

Mr. Winters: There are still under emergency shelter about ten projects on direct account operated by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and about one hundred that are operated jointly by the corporation and provincial and municipal governments. I can get for my hon. friend a list of them and of where they are. I do not have it before me at the moment, but I can see that he is given it.

Mr. Fleming: Can expenditures under this item be made on all those? Is that correct? I did not get that impression from the statement.

Mr. Winters: Yes, that is correct; for maintenance, where dry rot and deteriorating elements such as that are setting in. Also, as I mentioned before, for restoring the land to the same condition it was in when it was taken over for emergency shelter purposes.

Item agreed to.

Special projects branch—

393. Trans-Canada highway division, $300,000.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I have a question or two to ask the minister, but I am not going to delay the committee as this item was fairly well discussed the other night. There may be some other members, however, who want further information. I want to be brought up to date. I want to know if there is any further communication with the province of Nova Scotia and whether that province has entered into the agreement with respect to the construction of the trans-Canada highway. I should also like to know what proportion of this $20 million that is being provided this year by the federal parliament for the construction of the trans-Canada highway is being earmarked and set aside for the province of Nova Scotia, assuming that an agreement will be entered into. The province of Nova Scotia has announced the location of the trans-Canada highway although we may not all agree with the decision. I said the other night that the Nova Scotia legislature had passed legislation giving authority to build this highway and it would appear that the difficulty with regard to their not entering into the agreement and not having the work proceeded with must be the fault of the minister or of the federal government pending the production by him of the correspondence between himself and Nova Scotia. I should like an answer from the minister before this item passes.

Mr. Winters: On the question of allocating funds for the province of Nova Scotia, I may say that there has been no attempt to allocate funds for any particular province. We have agreed to undertake to pay for work as it is completed. As I said earlier, we will pay for back work as new work is completed. My hon. friend asked the other night if I would table the correspondence we have had with the province of Nova Scotia. I undertook at that time to contact the government of Nova Scotia. I have done that, but I have not yet heard from them as to whether or not they have changed the stand they took when I put the same question to them previously.

Mr. Fraser: I have just one question. Are you going to have a special trans-Canada highway marker? The reason I ask that question is that in the United States there are such markers on trans-continental roads and I wonder if we are going to have them here, because they are helpful.

Mr. Winters: During our conferences we have said that we would leave to the provinces matters of that nature but that if we could help out in any way by co-ordinating the efforts of the provinces, we should be glad to do it. We also expressed the view that the Goods Roads Association would also be pleased to have uniformity with respect to such matters.

Mr. Hodgson: I should like to ask the minister if the federal government or his department intends to build any of this road themselves, or is it all being built by the different provinces?

Mr. Winters: The only part of the highway that the federal government itself will build is the highway through national parks.

Mr. Ferrie: I want to bring to the attention of the minister the road that has been proposed through Manitoba, Saskatchewan and up through Alberta. When you consider that, I think you will realize that the point where this highway is going is away from the populated area of the three western provinces. I should like to bring to his attention the fact that from Winnipeg west we have a railroad that belongs to us, to the people of Canada. The highway that is to go through the three provinces in western Canada is to go down along the southern route, which does not help our own railroad. The highway should really and truly head in a northwesterly direction from Winnipeg. It should start out from the bridge at Lockport and head west till it hits the C.N.R. railroad. It should then hit northwest right through Dauphin and Kamsack. If the road were built that way it would help in another direction during the course of its construction. It would help with regard to the railroad bridges. There are railroad bridges that will have to be built very soon along the Canadian National railroad. They could be put in and serve a double purpose. There is the one across the Assiniboine between Dauphin and Kamsack. There is another one between Humboldt and Saskatoon at Clark's crossing. The highway should follow the Canadian National railroad right from Dauphin. It should run in a northwesterly direction right clean through to Edmonton.

One of the important sections of the agreement was that the road had to go by the shortest route. The route that the highway is taking from Winnipeg west is not the shortest route. It is wrong for the government to spend that large amount of money going down through that dried out area, through a part of the three western provinces where it will not serve the population that it would serve if it were three hundred miles farther north.

Mr. Cardiff: Look at the kind of government you have.

Mr. Ferrie: So far as governments are concerned, we have three different kinds in western Canada. I am not going to say what I think with regard to the payment being made on highways that are not and never will be up to the standard that we expect in western Canada and in all of Canada for a $300 million expenditure.

This money should be expended to give the best service to everybody in Canada. The southern route is not the best route, and it is not the route that will serve the people of Canada best. The southern route goes within fifty miles of No. 2 highway in the United States. That is not rendering a right and proper service to the people of Canada. The development of Canada today, and more especially in western Canada, is in the northern areas. The northern area is the area that will be developed. If anything should be done, then this highway should be headed in a northwestern direction from the big city of Winnipeg to the city that is going to be one of the biggest cities in Canada, namely, Edmonton.

Let me say something else. We should have put the pipe line down alongside the railway. The three should run together, the railway, the highway and the pipe line. Why should they run together? For the simple reason that the people of Canada have a railroad that is running up deficits, and it would help to pay the deficit.

Mr. Cardiff: Why did you vote against us?

Mr. Ferrie: The taxes that the people are going to have to pay because of the deficit of the Canadian National Railways could be very easily taken care of by a good highway alongside the people's railroad. The people's railroad is the Canadian National railroad. Where this highway is going belongs to the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is time we began to realize that the people's money should be spent where it can render the greatest service to the greatest number of people in Canada.

I want to bring to the minister's attention—and I see he has gone and has left a substitute. If his assistant were to do what is really and truly in his mind I am sure he would see that that highway went the way that I am asking that it should go, namely, through the Yellowhead pass.

Some hon. Members: Ask him.

Mr. Cardiff: Put him on the spot.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Ferrie: Hon. gentlemen on my left say: "Put him on the spot." I say to them: I am not that kind of a boy. So far as you fellows are concerned you think that you can say certain things.

Mr. Cardiff: You don't know the way to vote.

Mr. Ferrie: I don't have to vote the way that you tell me to, but you have to vote the way you are told.

Mr. Cardiff: You have not got a mind of your own.

Mr. Ferrie: I want to bring to the attention of the parliamentary assistant—

Mr. Cardiff: If you have, you don't know how to use it?

An hon. Member: The provinces choose the route.

Mr. Ferrie: I am not talking about the way in which the provinces choose the route; I am not talking about that at all. We know that the province chooses the route. We know that the province has done what we think should not be done. I am talking in this house not for the provinces but what I feel is for the good of Canada. I want to say this. I have been a municipal man in this country for many years. I have come to realize that today Canada is on wheels, and we need good roads. If these gentlemen to my left want to know something—

An hon. Member: We do not want to know anything.

Mr. Ferrie: No, you don't want to know anything. You never did anything but talk, in Ontario, as long as I have known Canada. And as far as this highway is concerned, I want to make it definitely clear that we have produced in western Canada, and these gentlemen on my left know that we have produced and done things in western Canada which have made them very well off, so that they could have good roads in eastern Canada. They have them in Ontario, and they have them there because they get the money from us in western Canada.

[Inaudible interruption.]

As one hon. member says, we never had money in western Canada. I want to tell hon. gentlemen that between 1920 and 1946 we produced in western Canada ten billion bushels of wheat. Who got the money for it? Yes, who got the money? The people of Ontario and Quebec; they got it.

Mr. Adamson: Boo! boo!

Mr. Ferrie: You can boo as much as you like, but I want to tell you that so far as you are concerned you have had your benefits from the people of western Canada. And I can tell you a little more, but I don't want to.

Mr. Adamson: Tell me everything.

Mr. Ferrie: Maybe I would fill your ears too full. So far as we are concerned in western Canada, we want a highway for that part of our country. We will not have the money to provide a highway of the standard we should have. Therefore we have to come to the federal authorities for help. If that highway is to be in the southern part of the province it will cost a great deal of money; that money will be spent down there in the building of the highway, and the people in the northern part of the province will be taxed to keep the highway in condition. Only a limited amount of money can be taxed in western Canada for highway purposes.

In Saskatchewan alone we have more highway service than Manitoba and Alberta put together. We have to provide highway facilities to more people than use such facilities. I want to bring this to the attention of the minister, that it is going to be a very serious thing for the people of Saskatchewan. It does not matter which government is in power in that province, because only a certain amount of money can be spent on highway construction. I am asking the minister to see that something is done to provide a highway system in the northern part of the three western provinces.

Mr. Cardiff: They will not pay any attention to you; you do not vote the way you think.

Mr. Ward: Mr. Chairman, it is not for nothing that I rise to delay the passage of this item, and particularly at this stage of the session when I know all hon. members wish to finish the work. Indeed, I believe many of them have made reservations for their passage home.

However, I am so dissatisfied with the terms of the agreement, from the point of view of the dominion government and the federal treasury, that I feel we are justified in delaying the passage of the item until we have had some further discussion. Had the minister been here I should have liked to ask him three questions, and the first would be this: Are the terms of the agreement being lived up to by the provinces?

From evidence gathered to date it is my understanding that those terms are not being lived up to, and nothing is being done to see that they carry out their side of the agreement. That agreement calls for certain specifications and, secondly, that it shall follow the shortest feasible route. I am not particularly interested in Ontario, but I am told that the route as laid out in this province is 160 miles longer than it should be. Certainly that is not carrying out the terms of the agreement.

Mr. Warren: Keep to your own province.

Mr. Ward: Coming to those provinces in western Canada in which I am most interested, I find that the route laid down and accepted under the terms of the agreement is one hundred miles longer than would have been necessary had it taken a more northerly course, and a course which would have been more in keeping with the hopes and dreams of the Canadian people. Certainly that is true of the people in western Canada.

As was pointed out by the hon. member for Mackenzie, according to reports which have been made the route is laid out along the southern part of the three prairie provinces in what might be called the dust bowl, within fifty miles of the international boundary. Just over that boundary line to the south there are several of what might be described as No. 1 highways.

We in Canada should build a trans-Canada highway worthy of the title. What could be more embarrassing than for us to proceed in a manner whereby we would accept, as I believe some governments are expecting the federal government to do, number two and number three grade highways as part of the trans-Canada system. We would end up with the federal treasury paying 75 per cent of the cost and still not have a highway worthy of the name.

To show that this dissatisfaction did not arise since we came to this session of parliament, or since the item appeared in the estimates, I should like to read a letter which appeared in one of the Winnipeg papers several months ago. It was in reply to an editorial that appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press and indicates that our satisfaction with the agreement certainly is not all that might be desired. I shall tell you who wrote the letter after I have finished reading it. It reads:

> Commendations are in order for the keen interest the Free Press is taking in the proposed trans-Canada highway. In your leading editorial of December 1, 1949, however, you have left at least some of your readers rather confused as to just where you do stand on the all-important issue of standard plus location.

Then he quotes the editorial:

> "The new highway has been too much discussed in terms of parochial benefits and not enough in terms of nationhood."

The letter continues:

> And, further on in your editorial you state: "As far as Manitoba is concerned one-third of the work has already been done." Where the confusion arises, Mr. Editor, is as to which road you are referring to."

I pause here to point out that the one-third of the highway through Manitoba referred to in the editorial is the portion from Winnipeg to Brandon. The letter continues:

> Surely not the present No. 1 highway from Winnipeg to Brandon for if this at best third-rate highway is to be the standard of a trans-Canada or coast to coast highway, then God forbid that we should be so nationally indiscreet, so prejudiced, so short-sighted as to think that we can fool other Canadians and much less Americans, by designating a third-rate highway by a first-rate name.
> If we are to keep our Canadians travelling east and west in Canada and attract Americans to do the same we will have to do better than that. As the writer sees it, the thing that is bedevilling the issue in Manitoba and likely in most other provinces is the painful amount of selfish parochialism. As you so well put it, Mr. Editor, we must, if the highway is to justify the expenditure, make it so good in standard and location as to be not only a practical alternative to the highways of the United States; it must be even more attractive, more appealing.
> To continue with your editorial, what does the "shortest practical east-west route consistent with the needs of the provinces" mean? Does it mean a wandering road, meandering here and there to take in as many local communities and constituencies as possible? If the reports we get here are even half true that is exactly what some provincial governments would do.
> For example, reports reaching Ottawa, in some cases from provincial government level, are to the effect that the route already chosen by them is through the extreme south or dust bowl of the prairie provinces, and will meander around to the extent of lengthening the distance over the three prairie provinces by more than a hundred miles—

And that is correct.

> —in excess of what would be necessary if a more northerly route was taken—

That is what the hon. member for Mackenzie suggested.

> —and one eminently more desirable, and passing as it would through our wooded areas, closer to our many beautiful lakes surrounded with summer resorts, and above all closer to our magnificent western parks second to none.

I might point out that the number of people who visited Riding Mountain national park in Manitoba last year almost exceeded the number who visited Banff, and the way it is progressing perhaps in another year or two it will be Canada's No. 1 park. Yet we are going to skip it, not go near it. Apparently we do not want the public to see it. The letter continues:

> Yes, Mr. Editor, politics and shortsighted parochial benefits may, if left unchecked, bedevil and destroy the hopes and dreams of millions of Canadians in the pleasure and economic benefits to be derived from a real trans-Canada highway.

There is a world of truth in that statement. As the highway is now laid out through western Canada there are no trees, lakes or parks. Neither is there any fishing or boating. There is nothing to attract anyone. To go back a few years to the period of drought in Saskatchewan—and there are some from Saskatchewan who will remember this better than I do—I recall driving through that province on one occasion when I had to drive most of the way from the Manitoba boundary to Regina with my car in low gear in order to plow through the sand that was blowing across the country. Is that the show we want to put on for our United States friends and others when they visit our part of the country? I do not think so.

If we take the more northerly route we can save 100 miles in the distance across western Canada and we would tap some of the finest lakes in the country. Although I represent the district in which Dauphin is located, I am not particularly interested whether the road goes that way, but if it does then it will pass through timber country where there are many fine summer resorts and good fishing and boating. In the district of Grand View and the Duck mountain area there are eight or ten beautiful lakes. The mountain rises 2,700 feet above sea level. It is a wooded area with fine spruce, jackpine and other types of trees. Last year the provincial government constructed a good highway to Duck mountain. There are many beautifully treed lakes around the mountain. There are lakes like lake Laurier, named after Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Blue lake, as blue as the ocean, Child's lake, Wellman lake, and Jackfish lake. They are all good fishing and boating lakes with excellent summer resorts, but we are going to skip all this.

The more northerly route would then proceed west to the region of Madge lake in the constituency of the hon. member for Mackenzie where there are beautiful summer resorts and lovely wooded country. Then it would continue westward to Saskatoon and Edmonton, and last but not least, the Alaska highway and the Yellowhead pass. There is everything to attract the public to travel over a route in the more northerly part of our western provinces, while there is nothing at all in the south. There must be an answer, and that is what I want to ask the minister. I should like to know why the terms of the agreement are being ignored, why the shortest practical route is not being followed, and why we are accepting third-rate highways, referred to in the letter which I read as a part of the trans-Canada highway. It would appear to me that we will end up with no trans-Canada highway at all. It is so ridiculous to think that out of the conglomeration of bits and scraps of roads across Canada we are going to build a trans-Canada highway and the dominion treasury is going to pay for it.

We have undertaken to pay 50 per cent of the cost of roads already constructed, and many of them are already worn out. I know they are in the province of Manitoba. They are only third-rate highways, and that is no reflection upon that province because they are just as good there as they are in most other provinces, and probably better than some. What we will have will be a highway that will not be worthy of the name "trans-Canada", just as the letter pointed out. Could anything be more embarrassing to the travelling public, to Mr. and Mrs. America who come to Canada to travel over our new highway, only to find that instead of the highway they had dreamed of and heard of up here in Canada, they must travel on only a third rate road? I can imagine Mr. and Mrs. America coming to Manitoba, perhaps from the northwest states, intending to go west over our trans-Canada highway, and coming to the city of Winnipeg. As the highway is laid out now it could not follow a more tortuous route, taking people right through the heart of the city. What could be more ridiculous? They would be lost before they got out of Winnipeg. Then when they had travelled another forty miles west Mr. America would think surely they must be on the wrong highway. Mrs. America would say, "No, the sign says trans-Canada highway." So they drive on and at the next town inquire where they missed the trans-Canada highway, only to be told that they are still on it.

Then they drive on through the sandhills, over a second or third class highway to Brandon. When they get there they find that the road takes a sharp turn down a steep hill crossing a long, narrow bridge, with room for only two cars, over the C.P.R. tracks. Again they will be lost before they get out of Brandon. When they do get out of that city, what do they find? Talk about a dog's hind leg; no dog had a leg as crooked as the route from Brandon to the Saskatchewan boundary. Then when they get to Saskatchewan it is still worse; and that is to be the trans-Canada highway.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if we are going to spend $300 million on a highway we should start right. There may be an answer; there may be some reason for the rush to build the trans-Canada highway out of these bits of roads we now have. If there is we should be told the answer; but I do say this question should have been fully discussed on the floor of parliament before any agreement was entered into or a dollar was pledged. I do not want to delay the committee, though many other things could be said in opposition to the proposed route. The trans-Canada highway should be better than the other highways; it should be something that would be a credit to Canada, that would make those travelling over it want to come back again and again to see our country. For goodness sake let us put it through that part of the country which has some attraction for tourists, not through the dust bowl of western Canada.

I am told the situation in Ontario is just as bad as anywhere else, and perhaps a little worse. I am told that parochialism has so bedevilled the plan in Ontario that they are taking the highway away down around by Peterborough. The hon. member for Peterborough West must be a good pleader to have the highway extended 160 miles further than it should be.

Mr. Fraser: That is a new highway, and they have to come to Peterborough, which is the best part of Canada.

Mr. Ward: That is just an example of what the editorial meant when it referred to provincialism and parochialism. Why, the way the highway wanders around western Canada, nearly every cabinet minister has had it come through his constituency; and we are asked to vote $300 million to build a road like that, which some day will bring us terrific embarrassment.

I do not know whether these words will do any good. I very seldom speak in the house because I have discovered that talking does not do much good. About eighty-five per cent of the speeches made this session were not listened to by anyone, and that is pretty well true of every session. I do my work outside, where I hope it is more effective. I made every appeal possible to the minister to try to prevent this thing happening, but the agreements were signed. I noticed that someone down in Nova Scotia was hesitating about signing it. Well, if that man belongs to the provincial government there is something wrong with his head if he hesitates to sign this agreement, because if ever anything was loaded in favour of the provinces, this is.

I have no objection in the world to the federal government giving the provinces some money for the construction of roads. That is all right, but let us not call those roads a trans-Canada highway. If we do we will only fool ourselves and others. If we want to give the provinces money to help them build roads, all right; but when we set out to build a trans-Canada highway let us build one worthy of this country. We are a great country, a big country, a wealthy country. We prate about our standards, our prestige in international affairs, and so on. Let us build a highway that will be a credit to Canada, that both Canadians and Americans will talk about and be proud of. Let us not build a road that will be forever an embarrassment to all of us.

Mr. Fraser: The hon. member who has just taken his seat wondered why the highway should go through Peterborough. I believe No. 7 highway was selected because it is practically new; it has been paved and is almost as smooth as the rug on the floor of this chamber. It goes through the centre of the greatest tourist area in Canada, through Peterborough, Victoria and Lindsay and up through the Muskoka lakes. By going through Peterborough the people of Toronto and other highly populated sections have a chance to reach that highway without having to travel a great many more miles.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): In view of the representations that have been made, does the parliamentary assistant think the trans-Canada route should go through Edmonton?

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I am going to help the parliamentary assistant answer that question; we have been friends for a long time, and I am sure he will be grateful. It does seem to me that we are wasting a great deal of time. This matter has been settled for so long that perhaps many of us have forgotten. To hear some people speak you would think they had never heard of Banff or Lake Louise, but in spite of their short memories those two most popular resorts in Canada are still doing business. I was interested in hearing the last speaker tell us about the attractions of his constituency, and I am quite prepared to admit them; I am sure it is the garden of the world. He forgot two of the main attractions on the route he suggested, however; one is gophers, and the other is mosquitoes.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): It is too late now to change the decision to permit the province to decide the route, but the natural and proper route for the trans-Canada highway east and west is through Edmonton to the city of Prince Rupert. That would join the great Cariboo highway on the one hand, and the Alaska highway to the north. Tonight the Pacific ocean is the centre of world attention, and Prince Rupert, as my hon. friend from Skeena would say, is two or three days closer to the ports of Asia than any other port on the American continent. It is a strategic city, a city of great promise in the future from an industrial angle. The proper place for the trans-Canada highway is to bisect Canada at depth, and pass through the city of Edmonton through the priceless tourist area of Jasper to Prince George and to the seaport of Prince Rupert.

Mr. Prudham: I should like to say a few words, but I am not going to become involved in the controversy over the route. The specifications laid down at the dominion-provincial conference last December are being rigidly adhered to by the provinces. I would remind hon. members that the agreement specifies that the route shall not only be the shortest, but the shortest practical route.

Mr. Higgins: I would be glad if the newest province's share of the trans-Canada highway could be carried by somebody other than the newest province. One day this week the minister announced that the specifications for the Newfoundland part of it were going to be exactly the same as the specifications for all other provinces. When the provincial minister of public works came here in April to sign the contract, he said he could not sign it because he felt the specifications could not be met owing to the cost. I should like to ask the parliamentary assistant what has happened to enable those specifications to be adhered to, and who is meeting the cost, if any?

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, I understand that in the case of Newfoundland, certain modifications of the specifications are now being considered under the agreement. It will still be a serviceable highway, but not of the standard required in more densely populated centres.

Mr. Higgins: You do not mean to tell me that the minister's statement was not correct?

Item agreed to.

Canadian Government Travel Bureau—

399. To assist in promoting the tourist business in Canada, $1,514,421.

Mr. Hodgson: There is a large item in this vote for advertising and publicity, amounting to nearly a million dollars. Will the parliamentary assistant tell us where this advertising is being conducted?

Mr. Pouliot: Before there is an answer, may I say something about Mr. Leo Dolan, who is in charge of the travel bureau. He has done an excellent job of advertising Canada in the United States. Due to his efforts—

Mr. Hodgson: I asked the parliamentary assistant to answer this question.

Mr. Pouliot: My hon. friend is not alone in the house, and while the parliamentary assistant weighs the argument he presented, I do not see why another member of parliament has not the right to speak. The hon. member who has put the question has no mortgage on the time of the house. He has an opportunity, in common with other members, to ask his question, and the parliamentary assistant has a right to answer whenever he feels he has to do so. In the meantime another member of parliament has unquestionably the right to say what e has to say about a matter of this kind involving an expenditure of a million and a half dollars.

I recall the time when another party was in power, and we had the travel bureau. A large amount was spent under Mr. Manion, who was the leader of the Conservative party. He appreciated the work that was done by the travel bureau, and believed that Canada should be advertised. How many people in the United States are interested in Canada, but do not know much about it? It is my duty as a member of parliament to congratulate Mr. Dolan on having publicized Canada, as he has so successfully in so many of the large cities in the United States. He has made the tourist industry an important business in Canada. Very often I have complained about some civil servants, and I am pleased at this time to be able to say I am satisfied with one. I do so with the utmost pleasure.

Mr. Prudham: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the member for Victoria (Ont.), the money is all spent in the United States.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have sat here all evening without making any comment on these items, and I intend to make a few comments on this item regardless of the "Oh's". First of all I am pleased to see there is an increase in this item of $216,000 because I think that this department is one which is well worth any extra expenditure. Before proceeding with the brief remarks I wish to make on this item, I want to say that I think Mr. Dolan and his staff are doing an excellent job. I have found evidence of that from people I know in the United States, and from people across Canada. One thing I liked from what I have seen of the staff of the Canadian travel bureau is that they actually do attempt to promote tourist travel in Canada. I believe there is excellent esprit de corps amongst the staff of the travel bureau.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to make my annual speech on this subject, and to urge again that as much advertising as possible be undertaken of the smaller resources in Canada, whether they be in central Canada, western Canada or any other part. We can leave the advertising of the larger resorts, such as Lake Louise, Jasper, the Seigniory club and the Chateau Frontenac to the railroads. I noticed an excellent article in the Christian Science Monitor dealing with tourist opportunities in Canada. It dealt entirely with the larger resorts in Canada. Mr. Chairman, there is a small percentage of the Canadian people of modest means, or people from the United States of modest means, who are able to visit the larger resorts. The average Canadian of modest means wants to attend a place at modest cost, where he can have his meals without having to put on his best bib and tucker. I do urge that everything be done to advertise the resorts all across Canada that are operated by the smaller people for the smaller people of modest means. That would be my only criticism of the literature published by the Canadian travel bureau. There happen to be in my constituency numbers of very excellent small resorts which some of the members of the House of Commons visit periodically. We have fishing, hunting, swimming, boating, mountain climbing, hot springs and skiing in the riding of Kootenay West. On the Kootenay lake we have the Kootenay cottages, Kootenay bay resorts, the beautiful Balfour beaches and resorts, the areas around Nelson, the north shore, and the beautiful fishing camps and resorts around the city of Kaslo. In the Arrow Lake district we have Halcyon hot springs for those who want medical treatment and Saint Leon hot springs for those who want to sun bathe, fish, hunt or swim. We have the lovely district around Nakusp and we have the district of Deer Park and the Lardeau where any member of this committee can go and be certain of getting a grizzly bear in the season at any time. In addition to that we have the remarkable community enterprise in the Rossland ski lift on Red mountain.

An hon. Member: Krestova.

Mr. Herridge: An hon. member opposite mentions Krestova, but that would be a tourist resort from an entirely different angle from the one I am mentioning now.

I do urge that these smaller resorts throughout Canada be advertised to the fullest extent because they are the type of resorts that the bulk of the American people of modest means and the bulk of Canadian people of modest means want and are able to patronize; and they are operated by people of small and modest means. In the district of southeastern British Columbia one finds 40,000 square miles of mountain scenery, and everything the tourist delights to enjoy. I do urge in conclusion that the full facilities of this bureau be used to advertise the beautiful but smaller and in many cases almost unknown resorts in Canada.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Adamson: I want to ask the minister one question. I should like him to ask his highly efficient travel director, the next time he is in Montreal, if he will tell the Canadian Pacific Railway that there is $300 million invested every year or spent every year in skiing. Along the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway is the finest skiing in the world and practically nothing is being done about it. I wish that the government would try to nudge the railway to do something about it because we have the greatest potential tourist asset along that main line of any anywhere, not only in North America but anywhere in the world.

Mr. Hodgson: I want to thank the minister for answering my question. I am glad they are doing their advertising in the large cities of the United States, because I feel that the American tourist industry is one that can be developed. We have quite a number of American tourists coming up into our section of the country each and every year; and more are coming year by year. These American tourists, our cousins, make arrangements for anywhere from $200 to $3,500 per family in American exchange when they are coming over here. They make that arrangement before they come here, so that I know they are spending a great deal of money. We know from the banks the amount of American money that perhaps is collected from time to time in our local banks. It is a great asset to us to have the American tourists come in here. It is new money. It is therefore fine for everybody within our area. I am saying thanks to the minister, and I am glad they are spending as much money as possible in promoting the tourist industry and advertising in the United States.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): I find myself in sympathy both with the C.C.F. gentleman and with the hon. member for Victoria (Ont.). On opening the New York Times the other day I read a wonderful article dealing with the Alaska highway. Nobody had paid for the article; I mean, it was not an advertisement; it was a descriptive article dealing with the Alpine attractions or the tourist attractions of that area. I found out later that it had been placed there by this agency which is under this department. The Chicago Tribune also from time to time, in its Sunday edition, carries extensive articles dealing with northern British Columbia and the Yukon, and the attractions there. It costs us nothing but still these articles are written and the photographs are supplied by Mr. Leo Dolan and his department here in Ottawa.

I think that there are two sources of foreign exchange coming into Canada this summer. One is the sale of our gold and the other is the receipt of American dollars from the tourist traffic. In the little rock garden represented by the hon. member for Kootenay West there are many attractions, but you can go a thousand miles from there and the attractions increase as you go north. This department is presenting those attractions favourably to the tourists.

Mr. Higgins: I understand that the gentleman you know as "Mr. Travel" is going to Newfoundland in the next two months to assist in the promotion of the tourist industry. I want him to know that, with his past record, we are looking ahead with great interest to the work he is going to do. As far as Newfoundland is concerned, we wish him all sorts of luck. I am speaking of Mr. Dolan.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I have been interested in the development of the tourist trade ever since the department at Ottawa was established at the instance, I may say, of Senator W. H. Dennis of Halifax. I agree with what has been said with respect to the director, Mr. Dolan, the one who took over this work at the very beginning. It is true that he has been under many ministers in the intervening years. I suppose if he got a little bit of wisdom from each of those ministers, it would be some explanation of the development.

Since the department was established we have gone through some unfortunate years of depression and war. The construction of highways has greatly interfered with tourist traffic. I hope and expect to see greater development in the years directly ahead. If there is one criticism or wish that I might express, it is that more attention should be given to the people in central Canada, to whom we in the maritimes have contributed so much, to encourage them to visit the maritime provinces. There are a number of them who do come down to the maritimes, but a great many go to other places, especially to Maine in the United States, and who should properly come to the maritime provinces and in particular to Nova Scotia which has attractions for tourists unequalled anywhere in any country.

Item agreed to.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

269. Departmental administration, $1,353,625.

Mr. McLure: We have been a long time getting to this department, but we are there. We were on this item at six o'clock, Mr. Chairman, when you and I had a little difference of opinion about the time, whether it was 5·59 or 6·01. Eventually it was called six o'clock.

The item before us is one of the principal items in the Post Office estimates. I wish to direct a few remarks to the Postmaster General. As I said at the beginning, I endorse the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Peel with regard to the minister's return to the house, and also his remarks with regard to the setting up of a committee at another session.

The Postmaster General gave a very good account of the work of his department and of the increase in sales in his department amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars. We always look upon the Post Office Department as a department that has the opportunity of making large profits. I now ask the minister what was the net profit in the Post Office Department in the last fiscal year. In other years it has been as high as $13 million. With the volume of business that the department has done the net revenue I suppose will be larger than ever. I do not know whether he gave the figure when he was speaking this afternoon.

There is nothing in business that can be produced cheaper than a four-cent postage stamp. It produces the greatest profit of anything that can possibly be produced. Its sales are the largest in the entire department. In this connection I notice one item here that is a little bit discouraging. I refer to the mail service of Canada. An amount of $11,859,213 was paid last year for the mail services by ordinary land conveyance, including rural mail delivery. There is no breakdown for the year 1951 to show what it will be, but in this vote which includes air mail delivery as well as the rural courier delivery, there is a decrease of almost a million dollars, to be exact $948,264. Whether or not this decrease comes entirely out of the earnings of the rural mail couriers is something that I should like to know from the Postmaster General.

The problem of mail couriers has been with us for years. On many occasions in the house and in committee it has been discussed. When we were discussing the vote in 1946 the then Postmaster General promised to set up a committee to study the problem of the rural mail couriers. However, he did not last too long in office, and went out with the promise unfulfilled. If you compare vote 269 with 270, 269 dealing with mail couriers and 270 dealing with the employees of the central offices, you will find quite a difference. During last year there was an increase in salaries amounting to something over $4,450,000, but, as I said, at the same time the rural mail couriers took a decrease of almost a million dollars. I am not objecting to the salaries paid to these officials, but I do object to the decrease that was handed out to the rural mail couriers, because they are the people who distribute the mail and finally get it out to the people in the different parts of the country.

I might say that there is no class of servant in this country serving the public or His Majesty that can compare to the mail couriers. They have a hard job, and they do it well. I want to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to what happened in Prince Edward Island during last year, and to the mail couriers in my constituency, and I can speak for most of them. They have always been excellent couriers. Some of them have been in the service from 18 to 45 years, and are still key men. They have never had a complaint registered against them either by the public or by the department. I want to mention one of these men who had a mail route of about 28 to 30 miles. During the Christmas season last year we had very bad road conditions in Prince Edward Island. This courier was so anxious to serve the public, especially during the holiday season, when it was impossible for him to take a car over the dirt roads and he found that he could not make it with a horse and rig, that he went and hired a jeep. He also hired a driver for that jeep, and for six days he went with the driver of the jeep and delivered the mail, and did it on time. It cost that mail courier $9 a day for six days, which is quite a sum, besides his own costs. That is the type of men we have down there. I saw another man on the road at one time during that season when it was muddy. He took a car for seven miles on the highway. At the end of the seven miles he had to have a horse and wagon. He drove five miles more with them, and when he got to the end of those five miles there was a crossroad where there was from three to five feet of snow and he had to have a horse and sleigh to cover that distance. Then he had to double back over that same road. I just mention this because the contract of one of these men came up. I say the department should give careful consideration to a faithful man and give him a contract at a reasonable rate, one which would permit him to live and not necessitate his going into debt or to suffer undue hardship. However, the department said that it was not agreeable, and that it felt this work could be done for less money. It was further pointed out that tenders must be called for.

Where a man has given good service for a good many years, and continues to give it, where a man is prepared to serve the people properly, the Postmaster General and the department should be able to figure out what his services are worth so that he can be paid accordingly. It is all very well to say that the average price per mile in Prince Edward Island is $53.

Mr. Rinfret: That is the average.

Mr. McLure: Yes, the average. That may be so, but at the same time that is where the discrimination comes in. For instance, I know of mail routes in Prince Edward Island where they get only $35 a mile, and I know of others where they get as high as $87 a mile.

I could mention one route in particular where the contract calls for $2,400. That is not too much money—not a nickel too much for the 28 or 29 miles that must be travelled. However, I know of another man who travels 27 miles over a harder route and who receives only $1,625, or about two-thirds of the former amount. That is where the discrimination comes in under the present tendering system. The sooner this department can establish some principle whereby it could figure out what would be fair and honest for all these drivers, the better it will be for the service. So much for the mail couriers.

Then, I have another matter to draw to the attention of the Postmaster General, namely one having to do with an official who has been in the service for a long time as stamp vendor. He is now serving his forty-ninth year in the service, is still going strong and giving good service. He has not been pensioned off, and I am told that he has no opportunity of receiving any pension. This man is working under contract and cannot be dismissed unless it is shown that he is not giving proper service.

However, after serving for forty-nine years, without complaint either from the public or from the department, it is time something was done for him. Let us look at his contract. It states that he shall go to work at eight o'clock in the morning and must keep his office open until eight o'clock in the evening every day of the week except Sunday. Every year he is allowed two or three statutory holidays.

Let me contrast this with the average clerk in the postal department. The man to whom I am referring works a day and a half for every day the ordinary clerk works. Therefore, contrasting this man with a clerk, it is clear that while a clerk was working forty-nine years this man would have worked seventy-three.

His contract stipulates that he shall receive as payment two per cent on all sales. He applied for an increase in that percentage when the cost of living drove expenses higher and higher, but was unsuccessful in his application, and was reminded of the terms of the contract under which he had been operating. What happened? To get rid of this man who had been giving good service, meters were installed. I have no objection at all to stamp meters. According to his contract however he should have received two per cent on all meter sales. Despite the fact that his revenue has been cut in half, the Post Office Department does not allow him that two per cent on meter sales.

I say it is a mean thing when we find a big department such as this one trying to get rid of an employee by taking away his sales through the installation of a meter system. The time has come when this man should be given some kind of pension. I hope my suggestion will not be brushed off, because the plight of this man stands as a blot against the department. He has been working at a low wage, but the department is now proceeding to make something extra by taking sales away from him through the installation of stamp meters.

Last year we discussed the promise to reduce the postage rate from four cents to three cents. I would rather see it retained at four cents until such time as the mail couriers are properly paid for the work they do. I hope it will not be reduced until those people have received something for the fine service they have rendered.

In the post office at Charlottetown there are excellent officials, but the objection I have always taken is that while Prince Edward Island is a province, we have been tacked on to New Brunswick in this particular. We should have the very same rights as any other province—and we are going to get them some day. While this government discriminates against Prince Edward Island, there will be a change of government some day and we will get rid of the discrimination. There is no justice in our being tacked on to any other province. We are a province in ourselves, and according to the terms of our contract of 1873 we are entitled to whatever any other province can have, even though it be on a smaller scale. I would ask the Postmaster General to answer this point.

I would ask the Postmaster General to take up with the Minister of Public Works the matter of a new post office building.

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Where?

Mr. McLure: The one there now is fair, but for the last six or seven years they have been drawing plans for a new one. When the final plans are prepared it will be up to the Postmaster General to see that the post office at Charlottetown is properly located in the new building that has been promised for such a long time. In closing, I hope the Postmaster General will meet our request to set up a committee at the next session of the house for the purpose of studying the problems of the rural mail couriers, and laying down a policy by which they may have some sense of security and appropriate pay for their services.

Mr. Knowles: On April 6 of this year there appeared in the Hartland Observer of Hartland, New Brunswick, a news item to the effect that certain changes had been effected with regard to the postal service in that part of Carleton county. Apparently this item of news was rather offensive to one D. R. Bishop, who lives in Woodstock, New Brunswick, which is located in Carleton county. I find that a few days later he published a paid advertisement in the Hartland Observer taking exception to the news item that had appeared some days earlier. I should like to call the attention of the Postmaster General to two or three sentences in this paid advertisement over the name of D. R. Bishop. They are:

> I have documents in my file on this matter—
> The matter has to do with certain changes in postal delivery.
> —to show that I and no one else made all arrangements concerning this matter. Every detail concerning the cancellation of the original plan of the department, the setting up of a new route, additions to the new one, and as to what post offices would be closed, was arranged by me with the department. That can be clearly proven by records not only in my office but by records and road maps sent by me to Post Office Department at Ottawa.

The advertisement continues, but I need not bother reading it all. As I have already indicated, it is over the name of D. R. Bishop, and apparently is an advertisement which he paid for. I was a bit shocked at this barefaced claim to what amounts to the control of patronage in that area, and I felt I would like to get more information about it.

Mr. Sinclair: Is that in your capacity as parliamentary assistant to the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton?

Mr. Knowles: It is in my capacity as one who asked a number of questions earlier in the session concerning patronage, the answers to which may be found on Hansard. As a matter of fact, on page 352 of Hansard for this session the Prime Minister told me that there were no official records indicating patronage. At page 842 of Hansard for this session he said to me:

> The only knowledge I have of anything of that kind is that one of the defeated candidates in a by-election asked me who was going to handle patronage. I told him that to my knowledge there was no patronage, that there were persons who made certain recommendations to which more or less importance was attached, but that was all there was to it.

The Prime Minister went on to complain about my putting questions of that nature on the order paper. The assurance of the Prime Minister that there was no such thing as patronage really did not convince me, and from time to time during the session I have had instances of it drawn to my attention.

Mr. Sinclair: By whom?

Mr. Knowles: This is one to which I have just referred.

Mr. Laing: Is that a reliable newspaper?

Mr. Knowles: At least the advertisement was paid for by Mr. D. R. Bishop who, I have learned, by checking the parliamentary guide and other documents, was the Liberal candidate in the constituency of Victoria-Carleton in the election held a year ago today. It is quite fitting that we should deal with this matter today. I felt that this claim on the part of Mr. D. R. Bishop that he was telling the post office what to do in Carleton county was one that needed to be investigated. I put a rather all-inclusive motion on the order paper asking for the return of papers concerning this matter, feeling that I would either get the papers and see that Mr. Bishop was right, that he is in charge of patronage down there, and thus patronage would be revealed, or that there would be nothing on the record and he would be shown to be wrong.

It turns out that Mr. Bishop is substantially correct. As a matter of fact, sessional paper No. 85K, tabled on Wednesday, June 21, 1950, in answer to the motion I put on the order paper, reveals even more information than I asked for. By going through this document of some ninety-four pages, I discovered that not only does Mr. D. R. Bishop, the defeated Liberal candidate in that area, have a good deal of influence with the Post Office Department, but so does the senator from that region, to whom communications are addressed from time to time.

I rise deliberately to complain about the affairs of the Post Office Department being handled in this way. It seems to me that it ought to be on a civil service basis, or on a business basis, but not on a patronage basis.

Let me draw your attention to a couple of letters in the file which, as I say, my motion produced even though I did not know they were there. At page 78 of the file I find a letter addressed to the Hon. F. W. Pirie, the Senate, Ottawa, Ontario, over the signature of one of the officials in the operations branch of the Post Office Department. In the letter Senator Pirie is informed that there is a certain vacancy at Mineral, New Brunswick, in the electoral district of Victoria-Carleton. It does not say it is in Carleton county; it is in the constituency of Victoria-Carleton. Then there is this sentence:

Would you be good enough, therefore, to submit for the consideration of the Postmaster General, on the official form attached, your recommendation of a suitable person who will be willing to accept this position.

Mr. Rinfret: What is the date of the letter?

Mr. Knowles: July 8, 1946.

Mr. Pouliot: Was his advice good or bad?

Mr. Knowles: Just a minute—

Mr. Harkness: Eleven o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: I turn to page 72 and I find a letter from the director of operations of the Post Office Department. The department is ready to make the appointment to the post office at Mineral, New Brunswick, but there is this letter of July 21, 1947, to the Hon. F. W. Pirie, Grand Falls, New Brunswick. It states that the department is ready to confirm the appointment of Mr. So and So, but then there is this paragraph:

Before issuing instructions the department would like to know whether Mr. Kinney's appointment meets with your approval. An official form is attached for your convenience.

I remind hon. members that the Prime Minister assured me there was no such thing as patronage, no one handled it, and one of the reasons that one of my questions about patronage could not be answered was that there was nothing on the record. I now have some of the material respecting patronage that is on the record by the medium of asking this question about what is going on in the electoral district of Victoria-Carleton. In this paid advertisement Mr. D. R. Bishop states that he has documents, letters and maps to show that he is responsible for the arrangements that have been made at some of these places such as Holmesville, Mineral, Moose Mountain and so on, and sure enough in the sessional paper for which I asked here are the maps that Mr. Bishop drew and submitted, which apparently have become the basis for the routes that have been established down there. In this file are at least three maps submitted by this same Mr. Bishop.

Mr. Rinfret: What are the maps?

Mr. Knowles: They are maps of rural routes for that area. Then I look at page 34 of this interesting file and find a lengthy letter under date of January 20, 1950, over the signature of Mr. G. Herring, director of communications, addressed to Mr. D. R. Bishop, Woodstock, New Brunswick, setting out the arrangements finally agreed upon for the postal service in this area. It reads exactly like a letter from an official at head office to an official out in the field; you would not think it was just to a defeated Liberal candidate, but there it is. It is lengthy, so I will not read it, but I will read the reply, which is businesslike and direct. It is addressed to Mr. Herring and reads:

Re Upper Kent R.R. No. 1

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 20. The arrangements mentioned in your letter seem to cover this matter excellently. Therefore I am very satisfied with them.

Very truly yours,

D. R. Bishop

There is no such thing as patronage, says the Prime Minister, and of course no one controls it; but Mr. Bishop certainly thinks he does. In a paid advertisement he claims he does, and the documents he says are on file certainly seem to be there. Then I come back to page 30, where I find that on February 6, 1950, Mr. Herring addressed a communication to Daniel R. Bishop, Woodstock, New Brunswick, as follows:

Re Bath rural route No. 3

I am enclosing herewith a copy of the notice inviting tenders for the above mentioned mail service together with form 95-A for your information.

Yours truly,

G. Herring,
Director of Communications

The next several pages consist of applications that were sent in response to the invitation to tender. Then another letter goes to Mr. Bishop from Mr. Herring on March 20, 1950, informing him that the department intends to award the contract for this service to Mr. Saunders Giberson, the lowest tenderer, at the rate of $1,200 per annum.

Mr. Sinclair: Anything wrong with that?

Mr. Knowles: No, but listen to the next letter, dated March 24, 1950:

Dear Mr. Herring,

I have received your letter of March 20, and have had several protests from very responsible people to the effect that the lowest tenderer in this case is and always has been a most irresponsible person.

It, therefore, would seem that an investigator should be sent up there before this contract is awarded to him.

Yours very truly,

D. R. Bishop

I suppose you would call that patronage in reverse. The next letter is dated March 30, and is from Mr. Herring back to Mr. Bishop, and I think hon. members should get this. It is a most interesting document, and if you did not know who Mr. D. R. Bishop was you would think this was an exchange of correspondence between an official at head office and a responsible official out in the field. But that man out in the field is just a fellow who was a Liberal candidate in the last election. In reply to Mr. Bishop's letter saying that Mr. Giberson is and has always been a most irresponsible person, which is a pretty sweeping statement to make about anybody, Mr. Herring wrote as follows:

Dear Mr. Bishop:

I have your letter of the 24th March with regard to the conveyance of mails over Bath rural route No. 3 and I note your remarks concerning the lowest tenderer.

In reply I may say that this matter will be looked into at once.

Yours very truly,

G. Herring,
Director of Communications

Mr. Rinfret: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Bishop did not take too long to reply. The previous letter was dated March 30, and this one back to Mr. Herring is dated April 3:

I have your letter of March 30 in answer to mine of the 24th. The matter is further complicated by the fact that the present tenderer has requested to be relieved of this contract forthwith.

The general opinion is as I stated in my former letter, but since no one will make any specific charge, I do not feel their complaints should be listened to, and would advise that this man begin his contract as quickly as possible.

Yours very truly,

D. R. Bishop

First of all the man writes a most damning letter saying this fellow is and always has been most irresponsible and should not get the job. Then a few weeks later he writes and reverses his decision, and says that Mr. Giberson should be appointed. On April 6 Mr. Herring replied to Mr. Bishop as follows:

With reference to your letter of the 3rd instant concerning contract arrangements for the conveyance of mails over Bath rural route No. 3, I wish to inform you that instructions have been issued awarding the contract to Mr. Saunders Giberson at $1,200 per annum, subject, of course, to his being in a position to perform service satisfactorily.

Yours very truly,

G. Herring,
Director of Communications

Who is this D. R. Bishop? First of all the department writes telling him that invitations to tender have been sent out. Later on they tell him that so-and-so is going to be awarded the contract. He says no, that fellow is no good; don't give it to him. The department says they will hold up the contract. Then Mr. Bishop thinks it over again and says Mr. So-and-So should get the job, and he gets it.

I could go on, because this is a most interesting file, but I think the point has been established that this hardly conforms to the assurance the Prime Minister sought to give me that there was no such thing as patronage anywhere in the government service, that there was no such thing as defeated Liberal candidates having certain powers in connection with these matters. The hon. member for Red Deer says he knows now why a parliamentary committee will never be appointed to look into post office matters. Not many days ago I had something to say about this same Mr. D. R. Bishop in connection with another department. That stirred up a bit of interesting newspaper comment down in that part of the country, and I find that a letter has been brought to light which this Mr. Bishop circulated before the last election, and even before the Liberal nomination in that constituency. In that letter, which apparently was sent to a number of people and which is reprinted in The Observer of Hartland, New Brunswick, of June 22, 1950, Mr. Bishop said:

> You will therefore understand what may seem to be my inaction, but after Saturday I will be around in support of whoever the convention chooses. As you know, I do not particularly want this nomination, but with a new four-lane highway to be constructed under federal supervision from Grand Falls to Eel River, it means a lot of money will be spent here, and that somebody must be in charge of it.

As I say, hon. members must not forget the positive assurance I was given by the Prime Minister on March 1, 1950, at page 352 of Hansard and on March 16, 1950, at page 842, that there is no such thing as patronage in the government service and no such thing as defeated Liberal candidates having any say in connection with these matters.

Mr. Chairman, we hear about this sort of thing too often. It just so happens that in this instance one has the evidence. There is more if I want to take the time to read it. If hon. members desire to know about it I advise them to look at sessional paper No. 89C of March 18, 1948; 89E of April 27, 1948 and 87E of April 25, 1949. They will find that all those sessional papers, brought down on motions of other members of the house, produce documents showing the influence that Liberal members of parliament and defeated Liberal candidates seek to bring to bear upon the Post Office Department with respect to its affairs. We know that when there are vacancies in the postal service, advice is sent to the Liberal members. We hear of that from time to time. We do not get it. We do not want it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Rinfret: I have taken a note of that.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I wish the extent of that Liberal laughter could be properly recorded in Hansard. The fact of the matter is that Liberals are so immersed in this business of patronage and controlling things their way that they cannot understand anyone not wanting to be a party to it in any way, shape or form. I am protesting against patronage in so far as there is full evidence of it in sessional paper 85K; I am protesting against it in so far as we hear of its taking place in various places. I do insist there is need for getting rid of this kind of thing in the Post Office Department. I strongly support the suggestions that have been made during the course of this debate today that there should be a committee to go into post office matters—not just into the question of the rural mail couriers, but into the whole question of the post office as it is run—with particular reference to the part that senators, Liberal members of parliament and defeated Liberal candidates play in relation to post office matters.

Mr. Pouliot: I just want to say a word in answer to my hon. friend. He has read some excerpts from letters by Mr. Bishop and Mr. Herring, acknowledged in a natural way, in a democratic way. Canadian citizens in New Brunswick did write to the department and they were answered by the department much better than I am myself as a member of parliament. I ask a question of my hon. friend, and I am speaking of the Bishop-Herring file. The most important thing in what he has said is not whether the suggestion came from Bishop or from anyone else; the question is whether the suggestion made by a New Brunswicker to the department is a good one or a bad one. My hon. friend did not discuss that point. The most important point in connection with the business is not who made the suggestion, but the suggestion itself. I challenge my hon. friend to say that the advice given to the Post Office Department by Bishop was not good.

Mr. Knowles: Which advice? The advice to hire him or not to hire him?

Mr. Pouliot: Both. I challenge the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton to repeat what has been said by the member for Winnipeg North Centre. He will not dare touch it because it happened in his own constituency. It is better for the Post Office Department to listen to Bishop of New Brunswick about New Brunswick matters than to listen to the member for Winnipeg North Centre. The member for Winnipeg North Centre is one of my colleagues for whom I have great admiration. I admire his industry, and I admire his good intentions; but he does not know anything about the post office business in eastern Canada.

Mr. Knowles: What about patronage?

Mr. Pouliot: Patronage is a good thing. Those who pretend to the contrary and do not know about it may be excused. Those who pretend to the contrary and know about it are just hypocrites. It is essential that the Post Office Department or any other department should be informed by men in whom the government has confidence, and who will not betray the government in the advice they give to the department. Is it clear now?

If the department were to listen to the Tories about recommendations, the department would be led into error. If a Conservative government had been in power and the member for Victoria-Carleton had been a supporter of the Tory government, he would never have been able to give such good advice as Bishop did. I have great admiration for him, and I have more admiration for the way he used the member for Winnipeg North Centre as his dummy.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege, I think the hon. member on reflection would rather not be recorded as making that statement. The member for Victoria-Carleton, knowing I am interested in this question of patronage, showed me the original advertisement to which I referred. Members of this house who know me do not need to be told a second time that the minute I saw it I decided I was going to do something about it—on my own. I do not even know whether the member for Victoria-Carleton likes my taking this up, and I do not care whether he does or not. To me it was a most bare-faced claim to be in control of patronage, and I was concerned to find out all I could about it.

While I am on my feet may I say to the member for Temiscouata that when he tells me the government Post Office Department should get its advice from people in whom it has confidence, I agree. The department, however, should get its advice from the officials who the department knows are experts in the field. I am not suggesting they should get advice from the member for Victoria-Carleton, or from the member for Temiscouata.

Mr. Pouliot: I would not touch it.

Mr. Knowles: I am suggesting that we pay considerable sums of money for civil servants in this department, so that the department can have experts to decide on these matters. As for the matter of a person in whom someone has confidence, surely the member does not suggest that a candidate who has been rejected by the constituency is a person to whom the government should look as the man in whom to place confidence. Far better for the department to get its advice from its own experts in the field.

Mr. Pouliot: I will tell my friend one thing. If he is offended by the word "dummy" I will substitute an argument on the word and I will tell him that I never contended that he was magnetized or hypnotized by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton. All I meant to say was that the member for Victoria-Carleton had made him believe that it was an awful thing, but did not go so far as to admit it. He has admitted that the member for Victoria-Carleton had shown the paper to him, and the light was on the paper, and it induced him to do a lot of work to find that file in which there was nothing wrong. He was easily scandalized.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pouliot: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member for Temiscouata has already said that he wants patronage. We know where he stands.

Mr. Pouliot: If we continued that argument for five minutes, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would admit that I am right.

Mr. Knowles: Oh, no. Never.

Mr. Pouliot: So much so that the hon. membe for Victoria-Carleton will never dare to repeat what has been said by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SITTINGS WITHOUT INTERMISSION UNTIL END OF SESSION

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I should like to ask the unanimous consent of the house to present a motion that I discussed earlier in the day with the leaders of the various groups to the effect that tomorrow and the other days of the session there be no intermission from one o'clock to three o'clock nor from six o'clock to eight o'clock. I move:

That notwithstanding the terms of standing order 6 and of the special order of May 29 last, on Wednesday, June 28, and every sitting day thereafter there be no intermission of the sitting from one o'clock to three o'clock p.m., nor from six o'clock to eight o'clock p.m.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Tomorrow we shall continue with the estimates, beginning with the estimates of the Secretary of State, then Transport, National Revenue, Mines and Technical Surveys, Fisheries, Justice and legislation.

Mr. Knowles: What about Post Office?

Mr. St. Laurent: We shall try to get something done.

It being twenty-five minutes after eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, June 28, 1950

The house met at eleven o'clock.

THE LATE HON. J. A. GLEN

DEATH OF FORMER SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE—EXPRESSIONS OF REGRET AND SYMPATHY

Mr. Speaker: I am sure all hon. members have learned with deep regret of the passing of the Hon. J. A. Glen, Speaker of the House of Commons from 1940 to 1945.

Mr. Glen was elected to the house first in 1926 as member of parliament for Marquette. He was defeated in the general election of 1930, but was re-elected in 1935, 1940 and 1945. In 1940 Mr. Glen was elected Speaker of the house, and in April, 1945, joined the cabinet of Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King as Minister of Mines and Resources. He was a good administrator and a faithful and loyal member of the government to which he belonged.

In 1948 Mr. Glen was appointed to the international joint commission, and he was chairman of the Canadian section at the time of his death.

Those of us who were here when Mr. Glen was Speaker recall the fair and impartial manner in which he presided over our deliberations. During the difficult days of the war he occupied, with dignity and in the best traditions of those who had gone before him, the position which I now hold.

Mr. Glen had not been well recently, but he endured his illness with a courage and fortitude which deeply impressed all who knew him. I know all hon. members will join with me in extending sincere sympathy to Mrs. Glen and her son.

Mr. W. G. Weir (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, as a fellow Manitoban I want to say how much we appreciate what you have said with respect to the late Mr. Glen. I know it will be appreciated also by his friends in our province, as well as those from Manitoba who were associated with him in the House of Commons.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as one who has had the very great honour of following the late Hon. J. Allison Glen in the constituency of Marquette, I want to say that the sentiments you have expressed will be echoed in the hearts and minds of those who knew him best in the town of Russell and throughout Marquette constituency. From the time he went there as a solicitor to carry on the practice of law, having come to Canada as an immigrant from Scotland, he had the deep and well deserved respect of his fellow citizens, who even before he became a member of this house had honoured him with many positions of responsibility. In my experience in going about that constituency, no matter in what remote part I might be, I would always find the deepest regard and respect for the late Mr. Glen.

I am sure we all join with you in your expressions of sympathy to the family.

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): Mr. Speaker, the official opposition would like to join with hon. members opposite who have paid a glowing tribute to the memory of the late Mr. Glen. We desire to have you convey to Mrs. Glen and the family our deepest sympathy.

Mr. William Bryce (Selkirk): On behalf of this group, Mr. Speaker, I should like to join in this expression of sympathy to those who are bereaved by the passing of Mr. Glen. I have known Mr. Glen for the best part of my life; he always had the respect and admiration of those who knew him, and his passing will be deeply regretted.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I wish to associate myself, and the Social Credit group, with what has been said about the late Mr. Glen. I knew Mr. Glen from the time he first came to the house. In all the various activities in which he participated, he discharged to the full the responsibilities that were placed upon him. He was a good man, and he lived a good life. I am sure he will reap a good reward.

OLD AGE SECURITY

Second and final report of joint committee on old age security.—Mr. Lesage.

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND SALT CODFISH—REPORT OF PRICES SUPPORT BOARD—DISPOSITION OF 1949 STOCKS

Hon. R. W. Mayhew (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I stated in the house on Thursday last that I would make a statement on the salted cod situation as soon as certain additional information became available. I was referring at that time to important trade negotiations which were taking place with certain countries where quantitative restrictions of one kind and another have reduced our outlets for salted fish. The results of these discussions will be important in determining the market outlook. Unfortunately these negotiations have not yet reached a point where I can make a conclusive statement to the house, but I feel that I must make a statement on the report received from the fisheries prices support board.

The investigations of the board reveal that most of the existing carry-over in the Atlantic provinces is in the hands of merchants and exporters. There is, however, in Newfoundland a relatively small quantity in the hands of fishermen. The board has recommended that the government should purchase and dispose of these stocks held by fishermen. The board has further recommended that the price to be paid to fishermen should be 66⅔ per cent of the prices received by fishermen from their 1948 production. In individual cases the actual price will of course vary according to the size and grade of the fish and the area of production. The board has recommended against the purchase of these stocks in the hands of processors and exporters.

The government has accepted this recommendation, and has instructed the board to proceed with the purchase of fish remaining in the hands of fishermen in Newfoundland as soon as the detailed administrative arrangements can be worked out. Representatives of the board will proceed to Newfoundland next week. Details respecting prices, points of delivery, inspection, et cetera, will be announced from St. John's at the earliest possible date.

With respect to the stocks held by merchants and exporters in Newfoundland and on the mainland, the resources of the Department of Fisheries and of the Department of Trade and Commerce will continue to be available to facilitate sales in every possible way. I have referred to the special discussions that have been going on with other countries, and can assure the industry that there will be no let-up in our efforts to ease both the short and the long-term marketing problem. Further, it is hoped that additional sales can be arranged with some of the international relief agencies which have used this product in the past.

In the case of representations made to the board, both from Newfoundland and Quebec, that a floor price be established for the 1950 catch of codfish, the government has concurred in the board's recommendation that floor prices should not be fixed at this time. While the outlook for salted fish is uncertain, nevertheless it is felt that the world market should be permitted to find its own level. The board has been instructed to keep the whole problem under continuous review and to make such recommendations to the government as it deems necessary.

As I have indicated on previous occasions, I do not believe that price support is the answer to all the problems of the fishing industry. On December 6 last, I placed before parliament a more constructive solution, that is, that through the development of more efficient catching, processing and marketing practices the industry in all parts of Canada can expand its markets and thus enjoy a larger measure of prosperity. We are making progress in the implementation of this program. I believe that price support may be necessary under certain emergency circumstances to meet drastic price declines which occur through no fault of the fishing industry, but I do not feel that price support is a remedy for every kind of economic problem. I am encouraged by the developments which have already taken place and are now under way.

Mr. Higgins: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the province I should like to thank the minister for the statement he has just made. There is one particular point that has not been covered, and I would appreciate it if the minister would explain it. It concerns a statement attributed to him arising out of the conference with the chairman of the Newfoundland salt fish board, when Mr. Gushue permitted it to be announced that the conversion of sterling for the sale of up to 400,000 quintals of salt codfish was to be provided. Could the minister say anything about that?

Mr. Mayhew: I had two objectives in view in making this statement today. One was that it would be made prior to consideration of my estimates, and anyone wanting to ask questions about it could ask them when the estimates are taken up; they could be answered with less delay. The other objective was, of course, the necessity for speedy action. If the hon. member will hold his question, I will answer it on my estimates.

REPORTS AND PAPERS

DEBTS OWING BY EUROPEAN COUNTRIES—DIPLOMATIC INSTRUMENTS

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon) asked when it was the intention of the government to table the notes concerning relief credits to certain European countries. I wish to lay on the table three copies, in English and in French, of the exchange of notes with Denmark, Yugoslavia, and Norway respectively. The agreement with The Netherlands was tabled on March 2 last.

I should also like to lay on the table fifteen documents, which are diplomatic instruments published in the Canada treaty series. Perhaps the list might appear in Votes and Proceedings, unless hon. members would wish me to read it now.

FISHERIES PRICES SUPPORT BOARD—ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1949-50

Mr. J. W. MacNaught (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to table the annual report of the fisheries prices support board for the year 1949-50. Copies of the report in the French language will be tabled when they are available.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION IN KOREA—REPORT ON RECENT DEVELOPMENTS

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted to report to the house on certain developments that have taken place in the last forty-eight hours with respect to the situation in Korea, and to outline the attitude of the Canadian government.

The house will recall that at its meeting on Sunday the security council of the United Nations termed the armed attack upon the republic of Korea as a breach of the peace, and called upon the communist forces to withdraw to the 38th parallel. It soon became apparent that this appeal would be without effect on the communist government of North Korea. Their forces continued to advance on Seoul, the capital of Korea. The United Nations commission on Korea reported that they were convinced that North Korea would pay no heed to the resolution of the security council.

When the charter of the United Nations was drawn up, it was intended that such an act of aggression would be met by the dispatch of forces put at the disposal of the security council by member governments as the result of prior agreements. However, the security council has never been able to negotiate such agreements, for reasons which I need not go into now. In these circumstances, with one link missing in the chain which has been designed to hold aggression in check, it was impossible for the security council itself to take effective action to provide military assistance to the republic of Korea. If help were to be given, the responsibility would have to be shouldered by individual members of the security council acting within the terms of the charter, but on their own initiative. In this case the United States recognized a special responsibility which it discharged with admirable dispatch and decisiveness.

As hon. members will know, President Truman yesterday announced that the United States would send air and sea forces to give the Korean government's troops cover and support. I feel sure that all members of the house will applaud and support this act of high courage and firm statesmanship on the part of the government of the United States.

I think it would be appropriate, Mr. Speaker, if I read into the records of the house the statement of the president. It was as follows:

> In Korea the government forces, which were armed to prevent border raids and to preserve internal security, were attacked by invading forces from North Korea. The security council of the United Nations called upon the invading troops to cease hostilities and to withdraw to the 38th parallel. This they have not done, but on the contrary have pressed the attack. The security council called upon all members of the United Nations to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution. In these circumstances I—> —have ordered United States air and sea forces to give the Korean government troops cover and support.

That is, President Truman.

> The attack upon Korea makes it plain beyond all doubt that communism has passed beyond the use of subversion to conquer independent nations and will now use armed invasion and war. It has defied the orders of the security council of the United Nations issued to preserve international peace and security. In these circumstances the occupation of Formosa by communist forces would be a direct threat to the security of the Pacific area and to United States forces performing their lawful and necessary functions in that area.
> Accordingly I have ordered the seventh fleet to prevent any attack on Formosa. As a corollary of this action I am calling upon the Chinese government on Formosa to cease all air and sea operations against the mainland. The seventh fleet will see that this is done. The determination of the future status of Formosa must await the restoration of security in the Pacific, a peace settlement with Japan, or consideration by the United Nations.
> I have also directed that United States forces in the Philippines be strengthened and that military assistance to the Philippine government be accelerated.
> I have similarly directed acceleration in the furnishing of military assistance to the forces of France and the associated states in Indo-China and the dispatch of a military mission to provide close working relations with those forces.
> I know that all members of the United Nations will consider carefully the consequences of this latest aggression in Korea in defiance of the charter of the United Nations. A return to the rule of force in international affairs would have far-reaching effects. The United States will continue to uphold the rule of law.
> I have instructed Ambassador Austin, as the representative of the United States to the security council, to report these steps to the council.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the end of President Truman's statement, issued yesterday. I should like to point out, if I may, that although the United States government has taken this step on its own authority, it is acting not only in accordance with the spirit and letter of the charter of the United Nations, but also in pursuance of the resolution which was adopted by the security council on Sunday. This resolution, it will be remembered, called on all members of the United Nations to render every assistance in regard to its execution. It should also be borne in mind that the United States has accepted responsibility generally for the maintenance of international peace and security in the Pacific area, and specifically for the maintenance of the security of Japan as the power responsible under international agreements for the occupation of that country. Those specific responsibilities, as well as the responsibilities which are shared by all of the members of the security council—and indeed by all members of the United Nations—for maintenance of international peace and security have no doubt contributed to the decision by the United States to come at once to the aid of Korea. If any further international authorization were needed for the prompt and vigorous action which has been taken by the United States, it has been provided by the further resolution of the security council which was passed last night recommending that the members of the United Nations furnish such assistance to the republic of Korea as may be necessary to repel the armed attack and to restore international peace and security in the area concerned. That resolution was passed by a vote of seven in favour, one against, and two delegations non-participating because they had not at that time received instructions in regard to this matter.

Mr. Green: Which country voted against it?

Mr. Pearson: The government of Yugoslavia, which had produced a resolution of its own in this matter, voted against the United States resolution. The representatives of India and Egypt had not at that time last night received instructions. I understand they expect those instructions during the course of the day. The U.S.S.R., of course, took no part in the meeting, and the other delegations voted in favour of the resolution.

Possibly I should put on Hansard this extremely important resolution of the security council. It reads as follows:

The security council,

Having determined that the armed attack upon the republic of Korea by forces from North Korea constitutes a breach of the peace;

Having called for an immediate cessation of hostilities; and

Having called upon the authorities of North Korea to withdraw forthwith their armed forces to the 38th parallel; and

Having noted from the report of the United Nations commission for Korea that the authorities in North Korea have neither ceased hostilities nor withdrawn their armed forces to the 38th parallel and that urgent military measures are required to restore international peace and security; and

Having noted the appeal from the republic of Korea to the United Nations for immediate and effective steps to secure peace and security;

Recommends that the members of the United Nations furnish such assistance to the republic of Korea as may be necessary to repel the armed attack and to restore international peace and security in the area.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the resolution of the security council on this matter. As hon. members know, Canada is not now a member of the security council and therefore no decision on our part was required yesterday in regard to this resolution; but I am sure that the house will support, as indeed does the government, the action taken by the security council, because it represents collective action through the United Nations for peace.

It is the firm hope of the Canadian government, as I am sure it is the firm hope of all members of this house and of the Canadian people, that this action which has now been taken by the security council and by the United States government in conformity with the resolutions of the security council will soon end the war in Korea and thereby make possible a fresh attempt to compose the differences which have long kept that country in a state of tension and unrest, and which have led to the present outbreak of hostilities.

Mr. Gordon Graydon (Peel): I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the house listened with keen interest and with unqualified approval to the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) indicating the government's policy with respect to support of the security council's decision and the action taken by the United States of America. Perhaps the minister might indicate to the house what that support he has mentioned as having been given by this government may mean when translated into practical terms.

I rose only to indicate that in a matter so serious and so vital to the peace and security of the world as the unprovoked aggression of the North Korean communist forces upon the South Korean territory, the people of Canada, having in mind their great desire for freedom, as they have so often expressed it and fought for it, would expect this kind of support to be given by the Canadian government. I was glad to hear the Secretary of State for External Affairs express it in the terms that he used.

I want to say to the government through you, Mr. Speaker, that when it comes to a question of such international importance and concern as this, in the twilight between peace and war—to use the expression that the minister used on a previous occasion—all of us in this parliament have a sense of unity of purpose which I hope does credit to the representatives of the Canadian people at large.

On the question of foreign affairs this parliament has sought to speak with a united voice. On an occasion so important and serious as this I want to say that when the preservation of peace itself is at stake, the government can count upon the wholehearted and unanimous support of the opposition in any measures that can be taken which are proper in the circumstances for the preservation of that peace and security. After all, when the vital issues of peace and war are before us there are no divisions in the parliament of Canada. We speak as Canadians rather than as groups divided superficially on party lines. I want to say to the government that we are prepared to lend such support as an opposition can lend in a situation such as this. We hope that the action taken, as the minister pointed out a few moments ago, so rapidly and so decisively by the United States government under the aegis of the United Nations will in the end, indeed in a very short time, bring peace to that area and solve one of the problems which face a troubled world.

Mr. Pearson: I know this matter should not be discussed at this time, but I should like to express my appreciation of what the hon. member for Peel has said, and for the spirit behind his words. He directed a question to the government as to what action we are taking to implement the words of my statement. I should like to point out to him and to the house that we have not yet even received the security council's resolution formally; we saw the text of it last night. I can assure him and the house that we shall be conferring, through the United Nations, with other members of the United Nations as to what part we in Canada can and should take in any future action that may be necessary.

Mr. Green: May I ask the minister to tell us what action has been taken by the other governments? For example, we read in the press that the United Kingdom has already taken action. Can the minister tell us what the situation is?

Mr. Pearson: We have had no information on that matter from any other government as yet.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there will be an opportunity for any extended remarks that may be necessary with respect to this matter on the estimates of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, which will probably be before us tomorrow. I rise now merely to say that we welcome the steps that have been taken to make whatever action the present situation calls for not the action of one power, but the collective action of members of the United Nations, prompted by one aim, namely, the maintenance of peace.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

INCOME TAX—CHARTERED BANKS—TRANSFERS FROM INCOME TO CONTINGENCY RESERVES

Mr. Quelch:

1. What was the total of the transfers made to contingent reserve fund from the earnings of each of the chartered banks in excess of their reasonable requirements for each of the years 1945 to 1949?

2. What was the amount that each bank was called upon to pay in additional taxation as a result of these excess transfers in each of the years, 1945 to 1949?

Mr. Sinclair: In view of the secrecy provisions of the Income Tax Act, it is not considered proper to furnish the requested information in respect of individual banks. The aggregate of the amounts transferred by certain banks in 1945 from income to contingency reserves considered to be in excess of their reasonable requirements was $341,536.71, and the appropriate taxes thereon were subsequently paid. There were no excess transfers to reserves in the years 1946, 1947 and 1948. The inspection of all banks for the year 1949 has not yet been completed.

SALE OF WARTIME HOUSES—WINDSOR, ONT.

Mr. Noseworthy:

1. How many wartime houses taken over by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation were taken over at the nominal value of $100 each?

2. What was the average amount spent to make those houses permanent before they were put up for sale?

3. How many of those have been sold, and for how much (a) in Canada; (b) in Windsor?

4. What price is being asked for those houses still unsold (a) in Canada; (b) in Windsor?

Mr. Prudham:

1. 14,486.

2. $785.24.

3. (a) As at May 31, 1950, 4,831 houses have been sold in Canada for an amount of $12,939,916.31. These figures include the en bloc sales to municipalities of 584 houses at an average price of $817.80 and the sales for removal from site of 59 houses at an average price of $807.62.

In addition, on that date 195 agreements covering the sales of houses referred to in (1) above, were in the process of documentation.

4. The average prices being asked for houses still unsold are:

	(a) in Canada	(b) in Windsor
4 room (small)	$2,603	$2,650
4 room (large)	$2,779	$2,950
5 room	$3,000
6 room	$3,259	$3,450

PROSECUTIONS FOR OPERATING MOTOR VEHICLES WHILE INTOXICATED

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many prosecutions, by provinces, of persons charged with operating motor vehicles while intoxicated, took place, and on what date, in each month since the 1st of June, 1949, and of these, how many convictions were registered?

2. Of those who were convicted, how many received imprisonment of (a) seven days; (b) seven to fourteen days; (c) thirty days?

3. In how many of such convictions were their drivers' licences suspended (a) temporarily; (b) for a period of three months or more?

Mr. McIlraith: There is no further information that can be given by way of answer to this question other than that given on Monday, June 26. I wonder whether the hon. member is prepared to let the question drop.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

PRODUCTS MANUFACTURED FROM SAWDUST

Mr. Bertrand:

1. What products can be manufactured from sawdust of mills?

2. What industries are manufacturing such products in Canada?

3. What are the market conditions for the said products?

Mr. McIlraith:

1. Wallboard; composition flooring; sugars; ethyl alcohol; yeast; molasses; charcoal, acetic acid and methanol; fuel briquettes (sawdust is also used, without any treatment, as a fuel); floor sweeping compound; wood flour —plastics, explosives, linoleum, wallpaper; soil conditioner; animal bedding; packaging material; insulating material; traction product for ice and snow. .

There are a number of other uses for sawdust in which only insignificant quantities are consumed. These are not listed above.

In uses for sawdust for such purposes as animal bedding, insulation material, soil conditioner, and packaging, the sawdust is procured from a large number of sources and normally by individual users, who collect direct from saw mills.

[Mr. Prudham.]

2. Only a very few of the products listed in the answer to question No. 1 are being produced in Canada from sawdust. The more important are:

Wallboard—produced from sawdust in the maritimes by one lumber mill.

Composition flooring—produced in Ontario by one plant.

Fuel briquettes—produced by several lumber mills in eastern Canada and British Columbia.

Floor sweeping compound—produced by a number of firms.

Wood flour—prepared by one Ontario mill.

3. Wallboard and composition flooring have at the present time a good market due to the high level of building activity.

Fuel briquettes are used extensively as heating and cooking fuel in the vicinity of manufacture. At areas distant from the source of supply, high transportation costs limit their use to special luxury purposes such as in open fireplaces.

Floor sweeping compound is in reasonably good demand.

Wood flour has a number of outlets. However, the specification requirements of the final products are so exacting as to make successful manufacture rather difficult and highly specialized.

H.M.C.S. "CATARAQUI"—COMMANDING OFFICER

Mr. Knowles:

1. Who is the commanding officer of H.M.C.S. Cataraqui?

2. What is his rank?

3. How long has he been connected with H.M.C.S. Cataraqui?

4. What pay and allowances has he drawn during each year he has been connected with H.M.C.S Cataraqui?

Mr. Blanchette:

1. Henry K. Hill.

2. Commander, RCN(R).

3. Since August 23, 1948.

4. Calendar year 1948, $1,243.10; calendar year 1949, $4,911.13; calendar year 1950, to May 31, $2,055.00.

POULTRY INDUSTRY—NEWCASTLE DISEASE

Mr. Jones:

1. What steps have been taken by the Department of Agriculture to curb the spread of Newcastle disease in British Columbia?

2. Is the department contemplating trying other methods of control, such as vaccine?

3. What number of birds have been slaughtered to date?

4. What area beyond the Fraser valley is affected?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. A program of eradication by immediate slaughter of infected and exposed birds; destruction of contaminated eggs; cleansing and disinfection of infected premises including poultry houses and all furnishings and equipment. Poultrymen are instructed regarding precautions to be taken to prevent spread of disease.

2. The outbreak is now well under control. General use of vaccine not contemplated at present time.

3. 337,760 birds have been slaughtered to date.

4. One flock at Princeton, B. C., and twelve on Vancouver island.

HOG OFFAL PURCHASES BY BRITAIN—SWINE RESEARCH

Mr. Harkness:

1. What was the total amount of money paid to the bacon board during the war period by the British government for hog offal?

2. What has been done with this money?

3. Has any consideration been given to a suggestion that these funds be used to set up a foundation for swine research?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. $7,962,953.10.

2. The full amounts of the British contract prices were paid to the Canadian suppliers.

3. As indicated in the answer to No. 2, there are no funds.

OATS—IMPORTATION FROM THE ARGENTINE

Mr. Diefenbaker:

How many bushels of oats have been imported into Canada from the Argentine since the 1st of May, 1950?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, while the data for the answer to this question have not been tabulated by the bureau of statistics, I can tell the hon. member asking the question that no oats have been imported from the Argentine since May 1, 1950.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

LANDS LEASED FROM THE JAMES SMITH OR FORT A LA CORNE INDIAN RESERVES

Mr. Wright:

1. What is the legal description of lands leased from the James Smith or Fort a la Corne Indian reserves during 1950?

2. Was priority given to veterans in this sale?

3. What is the name or names of those who obtained land from these reserves in sales of leases since 1945?

4. What is the legal description of the land held by each of the above?

5. What were the dates on which these lands were posted for sale, and in what places, i.e., post offices, etc., were these postings made?

6. What is the amount of (a) the lowest bid made on each parcel; (b) the highest bid made on each parcel?

Mr. Wright: In asking for the returns I used the name "John Smith" reserve. I made a mistake; it is the James Smith reserve. I have been in communication with the department, and they have corrected this.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): In answering this question I have taken the opportunity of attaching the papers which have been requested in a motion for papers on the same subject which will come later in the proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: Answered.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

LANDS LEASED FROM THE JAMES SMITH OR FORT A LA CORNE INDIAN RESERVES

Mr. Wright:

For a copy of all correspondence with respect to the sale of leases on land released from the James Smith or Fort a la Corne Indian reserves, during 1950, also for a copy of the successful bids on all such lands leased since 1945.

Mr. Prudham: Return tabled.

PARLIAMENT HILL

REFERENCE TO STATUES OF SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD AND SIR WILFRID LAURIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean François Pouliot (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, may I direct the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier) to the fact that the historical error on the statue of Sir John A. Macdonald on these grounds has not yet been corrected in accordance with instructions that were given last year. The pince-nez of Sir John is still broken.

May I also bring the attention of the minister to the fact that the statue of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, also on these grounds, has become a sanctuary for birds—a sanctuary for disrespectful and sacrilegious birds. I hope he will see to it that all the dirt on these statues is cleaned off at once.

WHEAT

QUESTIONS AS TO FINAL PAYMENT ON FIVE-YEAR POOL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. Diefenbaker (Lake Centre): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, arising out of a request from farm organizations. Since we are approaching the end of the five-year pool, is the minister in a position to indicate the approximate amount per bushel which will be paid to the farmers on the sale of their wheat during that period?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): While we are approaching the end of the period in which deliveries may be received for the five-year pool, we are not nearly as close to the period which will end the sale of wheat delivered to the pool. It is much too early yet to make any announcement as to the final payment.

INQUIRY AS TO DOMESTIC PRICE FOR COMING CROP YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. E. Wright (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is he yet in a position to say what the price of wheat will be to the domestic markets for the coming crop year?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, sir.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNITED MINE WORKERS UNION AND DOW CHEMICAL COMPANY, SARNIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Noseworthy (York South): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has he been informed of a labour dispute which has arisen between the united mine workers union and the Dow Chemical Company of Sarnia? If so, in view of the fact that it affects a government-owned plant, does the minister consider the situation of sufficient seriousness to warrant government intervention?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have not been advised of any labour dispute in the Sarnia area. I should be surprised if the employees of the Polymer Corporation were involved, having in mind the fact that an agreement was signed only a short time ago between the Polymer Corporation and its employees. In any event, any dispute of that kind is handled by the management of the Polymer Corporation, not by the government.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dion in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE

412. Departmental administration, $173,295.

Mr. Fulton: I should like to say a word about the work of the custodian of enemy property. I do not find any separate item for that, and this would appear to be the only point at which the subject can be discussed.

For at least two years I have been interested in this matter on behalf of a number of persons who suffered actual loss of their property through the action of enemy governments during the war. In some cases they suffered personal privations and hardships through their being interned, mainly in the hands of the Japanese in the Far Eastern theatre.

A large number of these people who have claims arising from damage sustained at the hands of enemy governments are in straitened financial circumstances as a result of the calamity that overtook them. I have in mind retired persons, for instance, living in the Far East, and I would refer particularly to one typical example, that of a lady who was interned with her husband, and whose husband died as a result of the treatment he received while interned. These retired and elderly people lost everything they possessed, and are not now in a position to start over again to restore their circumstances. They are suffering genuine financial hardship and distress; yet their claims have not been dealt with by the custodian of enemy property. So far as one can make out, no real progress has been made in setting up a system under which these claims could be dealt with, and in establishing a basis upon which they can be rejected, or accepted and eventually paid.

I appreciate the fact that there are difficulties involved. As yet there is no treaty of peace either with Germany or with Japan. The lack of progress results in great hardship to these people, which in the circumstances can only be described as heartless. I am not saying that the officials themselves or the government are doing this deliberately, or that they are heartless; but I am saying that the results flowing from a lack of policy and a lack of progress in dealing with these matters is heartless and imposes an unnecessary hardship upon the people concerned.

On May 15, as appears at pages 2518 and 2519 of Hansard, I received an answer to questions asked of the Secretary of State as to the total value of enemy assets held and the total amount of claims so far received. The answer I received was as follows:

Total assets in the hands of the custodian as at March 31, 1950, $51,124,833.25.

The third and fourth parts of the question were as follows:

3. How many claims have been received from Canadians for compensation for damage suffered in the European and Far Eastern theatres of war respectively?

4. What was the total amount of those claims?

The answers were as follows:

3. European theatres of war, 2,110 claims; Far Eastern theatres of war, 400 claims.
4. Approximately, $65,000,000.

The assets in the hands of the custodian total $51,124,833. They do not fall far short of covering the total amount of all the claims received. I suppose it is fair to assume that when a policy outlining the basis on which these claims will be accepted and paid is worked out and applied, there will be a reduction in the total amount of the claims, and as a result the claims to be paid will be more in line with the total value of the assets now in the hands of the custodian.

Under the circumstances it is nothing short of heartless not to set in motion now some machinery by which these people who are suffering hardship can be paid at least a portion of their claims. In the United States a commission has been set up to adjudicate on claims by persons interned during the war, and they are to be paid at the rate of $2 per day for each day of internment. Incidentally I might say that we have no similar provision in Canada. Not only have the United States made that provision, but they are making an interim payment to those whose claims have been recognized by the government.

The United States have not yet made final provision for the basis upon which claims will be paid, and as to the property out of which they will be paid, for the reason that there is not yet a treaty with Japan or Germany. But they have recognized that failure to pay imposes a hardship, and are making an interim payment. Those payments are secured and will eventually be returned to the treasury out of enemy assets held in the United States or on behalf of the United States.

It is imperative that we institute a similar process in this country. The principles could be worked out on which claims for war damage will be recognized and paid. There are 2,510 claims, and the total amount of the payments that would eventually be made could be determined. Having established that we would know how much would have to be paid out eventually, and, depending upon whether or not the total amount of the claims was covered by the $51 million of enemy assets in the hands of the custodian, we would know whether the claims as recognized could be paid in full or not.

It should be possible to make an interim payment of at least twenty-five per cent, which would be secured by the value of enemy assets in our hands. Unless we are to continue a heartless and indifferent attitude toward the suffering of these people, some program must be instituted. It may be years before a treaty of peace is signed with Germany and Japan, and no one should be condemned to suffer because such treaties have not been signed. We all know that it is the fault of the Russians; and no Canadian should suffer for that reason. We know we have the assets. I am sure all hon. members would appreciate it if the Secretary of State would indicate what progress is being made in connection with this matter.

Hon. F. G. Bradley (Secretary of State): This matter is not quite as simple as appears on the surface. In the first place, the policy of the government has not yet been laid down. Also certain of the assets in the hands of the custodian belong not to enemies in the full sense of the term but rather to technical enemies, and therefore cannot be applied directly to war claims. In regard to German assets, we are responsible to the inter-allied reparations agency for their disposition. I can assure the hon. member that the custodian's office is doing everything possible to facilitate the settlement of all cases.

Mr. Fulton: It is nearly five years since the end of hostilities, and the government should have been able to lay down a policy and work out a basis upon which claims could be recognized. The government should work out principles to determine which claims are valid and which are not. Once the government knew the total amount of valid claims, it should be able to work out a tentative agreement with the inter-allied reparations agency.

Mr. Bradley: Detailed recommendations have been made within the past few months; but the matter is exceedingly complicated. I confess that it is often beyond me to grasp the interlocking aspects of the various interests and exceptions that have been made, as well as their application of the positions of some of the countries with which we are still technically at war. We are getting on with the job just as quickly as we can, and as I say, detailed recommendations have been prepared by the custodian for the consideration of the government.

Mr. Graydon: I want to raise two questions on this administration item. I hope the first comes under the jurisdiction of the minister; if not, he will tell me so. My understanding is that the question of statutory holidays comes under this department. It may be, however, that it comes under the Prime Minister.

Mr. Bradley: For the civil service, or generally speaking?

Mr. Graydon: No—generally speaking.

Mr. Bradley: It comes under this department.

Mr. Graydon: That is what I thought. I want to raise a question which has been raised by a good many organizations across Canada, and which no doubt has been brought to the attention of the minister from time to time. It has to do with two of our national holidays, May 24, known as Victoria day, and July 1, known as Dominion day. These are the only two I desire to discuss at the moment.

There is a feeling in some quarters that these statutory holidays might properly be observed on the nearest Monday in each case. I suppose this has provoked about as much general discussion across Canada as almost anything else in recent years. I know there are arguments on both sides; no doubt for sentimental reasons many people will feel that there should be no change, but I wonder if the Secretary of State and the government might not give consideration to fixing the date for the celebration of Queen Victoria's birthday as the Monday nearest May 24, and similarly in the case of Dominion day. The minister might take this suggestion into consideration; I mention it only because so many organizations and citizens across Canada seem to favour the change, and I thought someone should raise the question at this time.

The other matter I want to bring up is of considerable importance; I spoke to the minister about it last session. I have no desire to go into it in any detail at this stage of the session, beyond saying that with business in the position it is, with our commerce expanding generally, the efficient, speedy issuance of patents becomes very important. The patent office is definitely linked with some of the most important branches of business in Canada. Our scientific achievements are well known and recognized throughout the world. We have some of the best scientists, some of the best inventors and many of the best brains in the world when it comes to science and its application to industry and business generally.

Whatever may have been the reasons advanced in the past for not giving aggressive leadership to bring the patent office up to date, it seems to me that now there should be a concerted drive under the leadership of the minister and the government to bring this about. It is a long way behind. I am not going to compare it with the patent offices of the United Kingdom or the United States, except to say that some years ago a concerted drive was made in the United Kingdom and the work of the patent office was brought up to something approaching a current level. I am not going to say there is not a backlog there, because I take it that in patent work a backlog must be expected. The United States was a good many years behind, but I understand that not so long ago they made a concerted effort and had substantial results in reducing the arrears of patent applications.

It has not been my privilege to act as a patent attorney, but I have spoken to those who have practised that profession. They have a great deal of sympathy for the commissioner and the other officials, whom they hold in high regard, but they say the whole staff have become discouraged because they are not able to keep up with the current work, let alone whittle down the backlog that has accumulated over the years. In these remarks I want to make it clear that I am not criticizing those officials, who are working hard and conscientiously, but I do criticize the government, the minister, and those who should have been trying to put the patent office on a proper footing. I do not think there is any branch of any government department that should call forth such vigorous condemnation of government policy as the patent office. There is no excuse for having let this matter simply dawdle along, to use a street expression. I had hoped that five years after the end of the war this office would have been modernized and brought up to date, but that has not been done. I am told that some patent applications which were filed back in the thirties have not yet received proper attention because of the conglomeration and congestion of work; that the backlog is so bad today that they are in arrears a minimum of five years, and in some cases much longer.

That is not the whole story. Because they are so far behind and because there are so many applications, it takes that much longer to search through all the unclassified applications which have not been attended to, when new applications are made. Fuel is added to the fire, insult is added to injury every day the patent office is permitted to continue as it is today. I do not think the public realize what this means to Canada and to business, because the patent office is unknown to most Canadians, who of course are not all inventors. Nevertheless the situation in the patent office is directly interfering with progress in the application of scientific discoveries to business and commerce in general. I do not think a government department should be in the position of having to admit that five years after the end of the war the patent office has not been modernized and brought up to date. I suppose the minister will say it is difficult to get patent examiners or other necessary staff. Somehow or other the other departments get these people.

In what sort of position does industry find itself when its scientists, in attempting to find new formulae or inventions, realize that their competitors in other parts of the world are able to get a patent through and be in competition long before the five years which it takes an application to be dealt with by this office? I say five years, but that is only the minimum; there are many applications that take a great deal longer than that. The government ought to be aroused to the importance of this matter. I am not anxious to thresh old straw or cry over spilt milk, but, year in and year out, those of us on this side of the house have pleaded, urged, condemned —we have done everything we could to get this patent office into better shape. An end does come to the patience of the people of Canada and of the members of the house who want to see something constructive done. It is not enough to say that the patent office is moving into new quarters; it is not enough to say that they are handling more than they did. It is important for the government to announce a new policy with respect to the patent office, and to bring it up to date.

I hope the minister will be able to tell us that a new drive has been made, and that industry in Canada in the years to come will be able to look forward to the prompt treatment of applications for patents. The government has a definite responsibility to business and to applicants for patents; that responsibility is not being discharged. I suggest to the minister that before we meet in another session he should be able to announce the implementation of a new policy with respect to the patent office which will give industry a fair break.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Chairman, first of all, with reference to the member's inquiry about Victoria day and Dominion day, I may say that that question has been under consideration by several of my predecessors and myself. There seems to be a good deal of difference of opinion about it, and I suggest to the hon. member that if he wants to try it out he should introduce a private bill.

As to the patent office, I know that this house—I do not say this by way of criticism of the hon. member's remarks, but it is a fact—has used the patent office as a football from time to time. Perhaps there was some reason for that. I do not believe hon. members generally quite understand the difficulties with which this office has to contend, and with which in fact other patent offices are faced. As a matter of actual fact ours is not the only office with a backlog. The United Kingdom has a substantial backlog, as has the United States. In the year 1948, which is the only year for which I have a comparison, we did dispose of seventy-five per cent of the applications, while our friends across the border managed to dispose only of thirty-three per cent.

There are delays in connection with the issuance of patents, I know. I believe the average period between the application for a patent and the issuance of it is somewhere in the neighbourhood of three years. Please do not lay all the responsibility for that at the door of the patent office. Frequently, very frequently indeed, those delays are caused not by the office but by the applicants themselves, who in many cases make their applications and prefer to wait until they have had an application granted in either the United States or the United Kingdom, as the case may be, and then perhaps amend their own application here to bring it in line with the patent which has been issued to them in the other country.

I know it is a simple matter to talk about speeding up the work of the patent office, but I should like to point out to the hon. member for Peel that if we proceed to speed up the work of the patent office too quickly, we shall only succeed in slowing the work. A great deal of the work, as my hon. friend is aware, in connection with this office is the work of the examiners. They are the key men to the whole process, and their work covers considerable time. They have to be highly trained men. Most of them, if not all, are engineers. In order to speed up our work we must of necessity bring in new men and train them. The more men we bring in to train, the more we slow up the work. We have to maintain a reasonable proportion between the men that we have and those that we bring in to train. This year we have already, I think, brought in eleven men. The staff of examiners now totals about forty. We cannot bring in any more men to train just now, because if we do we shall slow up the work.

Mr. Green: But eventually you speed it up.

Mr. Bradley: Eventually we speed it up, and then when we have got over the hump we find that we have too many men on our hands. It is not as simple as it appears, but I can assure the hon. member that we are doing our best to get things speeded up, having in mind that if we make too much haste we may in the long run make too little speed.

414. Trade marks branch, $124,395.

Mr. Higgins: Mr. Chairman, I have no criticism to make, but I should like the minister to know that trade marks and copyrights were always handled in Newfoundland, as he is aware, before union. Newfoundland's work is now being handled in Ottawa, and I should like him to know from my experience that I have always found the officials of that department most courteous and co-operative. I want to pay that tribute to them. I am sure the department has not suffered any from having Mr. Harold Pippy of the Newfoundland office associated with it.

416. Canada Temperance Act, $1,500.

Mr. Bryce: Will the minister explain what this vote is for? There is nothing in the details to explain it.

Mr. Bradley: The Canada Temperance Act is in operation in two counties only in Canada at the moment, but the money is provided for in case the need for it arises.

Mr. Graydon: There are three counties only, I think, it which it is in operation.

Mr. Bradley: Three, is it?

Mr. Graydon: Yes.

Mr. Bryce: Was the money used last year?

Mr. Bradley: Last year we spent the amount of $1,500 in legal fees.

Mr. Bryce: And none has been used this year?

Mr. Bradley: No, none this year.

Mr. Bryce: What is the $1,500 for?

Mr. Bradley: In case there should be a request to bring the act into force; and that can be done at any time.

Office of the chief electoral officer—

47. Salaries and expenses of office, $45,515.

Mr. Knowles: What is the reason for the increase?

Mr. Bradley: That would probably be readjustment of salaries.

Mr. Knowles: From the details it looks as though there has been an increase in the number of employees.

Mr. Bradley: I think there are two additional.

Mr. Knowles: In a non-election year?

Mr. Bradley: I should like to point out to the hon. member that the fact that there is not an election does not mean that the electoral officer has nothing to do. Perhaps I should not talk politics here, but it strikes me that an electoral officer's duties are similar to those of a political party. The campaign begins when the polls close at seven o'clock in the evening on polling day.

[Mr. Higgins.]

Mr. Knowles: Six o'clock standard time.

Civil service commission—

63. Salaries and contingencies of the commission, including the chairman of the civil service commission and two civil service commissioners at $2,000 each, additional to chapter 53, statutes of 1947, $1,561,250.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why is it that the numbers of appointments outside the civil service commission are apparently so much on the increase? Through the minister's office in answer to certain questions I asked, a return was brought down, sessional paper 102F, of June 14. It indicated the appointments by the civil service during the period from January 1, 1949, to February 1, 1950. The number of permanent appointments was 6,514, and the number of temporary appointments, 18,624. The number of appointments made to the civil service other than by the civil service commission during that period, as I total it, was 5,598. One of the questions was: "How many appointments were made after certificate granted by the said commission?" No answer was given to that question; it was lumped in with the answer given by the civil service commission as to the number of appointments made.

The number of appointments outside the civil service is altogether too large, and cannot be explained away merely by saying there are some temporary appointments. It seems to be that there is quite an extension in each year of the number of appointments made outside the commission, and I feel that that trend should end. Certainly this return indicates that the civil service commission is making too few of the appointments, and that the tendency to go outside is becoming too pronounced.

I would ask the minister particularly this question, because the answer was not given in the return: How many appointments were made in that period of time after certificate granted by the commission? As I understand it, the certificates are granted when it is felt that certain qualifications are required. No answer was given to a clear and straightforward question, and I should like to have the answer now.

Mr. Bradley: What period did the hon. member mention?

Mr. Diefenbaker: January 1, 1949, to February 1, 1950.

Mr. Bradley: During that period altogether there were some 25,000 appointments made, of which 6,514 were permanent and 18,624 were temporary.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is, by the civil service commission?

Mr. Bradley: Yes. As I understand it, in connection with many of these appointments the practice is that the individuals go into the service on a temporary basis, and after a time they go into the permanent list. That is the case with some of the 6,514 that I have just mentioned. They were not all new appointments. Many of them were persons already in the service who had been transferred from the temporary to the permanent list.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have all that information, Mr. Chairman. The information that I have not is how many appointments were made after certificate granted by the commission.

Mr. Bradley: 25,138.

Public printing and stationery—

282. Departmental administration, $60,000.

Mr. Knowles: I should like to ask the Secretary of State one or two questions with regard to working conditions at the printing bureau. I understand that a few weeks ago a notice was posted at the bureau respecting holidays to be taken by the employees this summer. I am told that the terms of the notice were at variance with what has been the practice for a number of years, and that this caused a bit of a stir over there, because to employees who had already made their holiday plans it seemed that they were going to have to alter them. I understand that the result was that a petition was circulated amongst the employees, addressed either to the king's printer or to the Secretary of State, asking that the notice be rescinded.

I am told that before the petition was presented the request of the petition was met and that the notice I am speaking of was changed. In other words, for a time all was happiness and content again, at least so far as that particular grievance was concerned. Now, I am told that another notice has been put up informing the employees that they must take their holidays in either one of two set periods, a certain two weeks in July or a certain two weeks in August.

As the Secretary of State or anyone can realize, employees do make plans in advance as to what they will do on their holidays. They engage certain resort accommodation or make plans with their families or their friends, and it is rather upsetting to have these plans changed. I am wondering whether the Secretary of State can inform me if this offensive order has been restored, and if so whether something could be done to make for better relations in connection with this matter.

Mr. Bradley: I do not altogether approve of the word which my hon. friend used in describing this notice. He said it was offensive. I do not think there was any intention on the part of anybody to issue an offensive notice. He has part of the story correctly. Whether the rest of it is correct I cannot say at the moment. I presume he receives reports from somebody, but I should like to point out to him that there are substantial difficulties in dealing with the employees of the printing bureau, not because they are a more belligerent type of employee than any other, but because we have there two, yes three, types of employees. In the first place there are the civil servants; then we have the prevailing rates men, and even they are subdivided into various groups, from highly skilled labour to the ordinary labourer. It is not always easy to adjust the notions of unionist hourly paid labour to monthly civil servants, and the king's printer has considerable difficulty in that respect.

We try as best we can to adjust things to meet the convenience of our various employees but it must be borne in mind that the department has at least some rights, and we must adjust holidays in such a way as not to interfere with the production of the bureau.

It is quite true that there was a notice issued, as my hon. friend points out, in connection with holidays, which in itself, if it had been agreed to, would I think have been excellent from the point of view of production in the department. Of course the bureau has been operating for a number of years. Conditions of work and holidays, and so forth, have been changing from time to time. Possibly, having regard to the practice of the past, this may have been a little bit too drastic a change to make at the time; but it must also be borne in mind that the employees themselves, while they have some rights, I presume, as to when they should take their holidays, and at least should be given consideration cannot be permitted to take their holidays whenever they please. Some regard must be had to efficiency, and the production of the department; because it is so easy in a department of that kind, where the work of one man is dependent on the work of a man in the line immediately ahead of him, to throw the whole system out of gear and reduce production tremendously. I think, however, we have been working the matter out fairly well during the past three or four weeks, and I am optimistic enough to think that the difficulty which my hon. friend has heard of will be overcome.

Mr. Knowles: I take it when the Secretary of State admits that part of my information is correct he is referring to the statement I made about the original notice a couple of weeks ago and the fact that that notice was withdrawn. I take it the part he is not up to date on is whether or not I am correct in saying that another notice has been put out specifying that the holidays are to be taken in the two two-week periods that have been indicated. If he will make inquiries, I believe he will find my information is correct.

I will admit that regard has to be had to the efficiency of a plant such as the printing bureau, and that there has to be give and take and recognition of rights on both sides. But if the practice has been well established as to how holidays are to be taken, it does seem to me that before making a change in a practice of that kind it would have been only fair, indeed it would have been good labour-management relations, to have some discussion with the representatives of the employees.

I know the Secretary of State does not want to say that printers are difficult people to get along with, and being one myself I can assure them that they are not. But I can assure him also that printers, like other trade unionists, are jealous of their rights. They are not unmindful of the rights on the other side, but it does seem to me that there is an opportunity here for the Secretary of State to explore the possibility of finding some better way than now exists for maintaining the best of labour-management relations at the printing bureau. I urge him to look into the matter. He will recall that earlier in the session I asked whether or not this whole matter might be referred to the committee on printing. The minister gave a more or less favourable answer, provided that it could be arranged; but the session is passing and obviously it is not going to happen before prorogation. I would suggest that he try to obviate the necessity of my asking for that at the next session by trying to work out better labour-management relations during the period between now and the next session of parliament.

If, when the next session of parliament meets, help is needed on that score, I would suggest that consideration be given again to the idea of the parliamentary committee on printing meeting and having before it the king's printer on the one hand and representatives of the employees on the other.

While I am on my feet may I ask the Secretary of State another question? In view of the uncertainty about the five-day week and the five-and-a-half-day week for the summer, will the minister tell us what pay the employees at the bureau will get when they are off on their holidays during July or August? When they are off for their two weeks, will they be paid on a five-day or a five-and-a-half-day basis?

Mr. Bradley: They will be paid at exactly the same rate as those who work while the others are on holiday.

Mr. Knowles: That means that these printing bureau employees who get two weeks' holidays with pay will actually get two weeks' holidays with short pay rather than the pay they would normally get for two weeks in the ordinary working part of the year?

Mr. Bradley: They are given exactly the same pay as they would receive if, when they are on holidays, they had been actually working.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

524. Board of transport commissioners for Canada —administration, maintenance and operation, $624,800.

The Chairman: The committee is now considering item 524 in the estimates. To this item an amendment was moved by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew):

That item No. 524 be reduced to the figure of one dollar.

Then we have a subamendment moved by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis):

That the amendment be amended by striking out the word "to" and substituting therefor the word "by."

The amendment of the leader of the opposition would then read:

That item No. 524 be reduced by one dollar.

I have examined the subamendment, and I must say that it seems to me it is out of order, because the reduction is not substantial. Therefore I rule the subamendment out of order. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. Low: Mr. Chairman, I believe when this matter was considered before I moved the adjournment of the debate. I should like now to try to sum up the case which I suggested that evening had not yet been dealt with.

Let me make it clear at the outset that the Social Credit party in the house realizes, as do all others, that the railways might need increased revenue to meet increased costs. We are not arguing that at all. If that is so, then the railways ought to have the increased revenue. But we say that no increase in freight rates should be allowed until such time as a mutually satisfactory railway freight rates policy is devised and laid down. That has not yet been done.

The board of transport commissioners is not the body to lay down policy. Evidently the government has been attempting to use it either for that purpose, or merely as a body to whom they might pass the buck when they get into difficulty—a sort of shock body.

The function of laying down policy is that of the government and parliament, and not that of the board of transport commissioners. I do not intend to belabour the board or to say unkind things about it. It might well be that the biggest reason why the iniquitous discrimination in the Canadian freight rate structure has been allowed to continue is that the board have never been given any clear and adequate directive by the government, by this department, by statute, or in any other way. Certainly they have not exercised any initiative of their own.

The act under which the freight rates structure is set out and under which it operates does not contain any clear statement of policy to guide the board. For that reason the board find it convenient to follow the practices of the past, as they have grown up, in a rather haphazard manner. I do not think any body can claim honestly that our freight rate structure was built up in a comprehensive way, and based upon the principle of justice and non-discrimination and in the full light of facts that obtained at the time the freight rates were established.

I think as a matter of fact that almost anyone who has made a study of the situation must admit at once that the Canadian freight rate structure has developed on a piece-meal basis, and that actually there have grown up in Canada five main rates territories which correspond to the five main geographical regions of the country. For example we have the Ontario region, which has its rates; the maritime territory, which has its rates; the Ontario-Superior region, the prairie region, and the Pacific region. Those are the five, and each has its freight rate structure.

The eastern rates are rankly discriminatory against the western regions. In his speech the other day the hon. member for Lethbridge pointed out some examples, and I shall add to them so as to bring the information up to date. We advocate the removal of regional discrimination as a first step in the effort to give justice to consumers in all parts of Canada, as well as to put the railways in such a position that their revenues will adequately cover their requirements.

It must not be forgotten that shippers, with the exception of farmers, are in a position to pass on their freight rate costs to the ultimate consumers. Everyone knows therefore that the consumer has to bear the full weight of any increase granted in freight rates. I might point out here incidentally that the farmer is the only one who pays his freight rates both going and coming. That is something that must be considered when this whole question of freight rates is studied. I am concerned about the position of the board in this matter. I am convinced that the board simply cannot remove these regional discriminations and introduce the principle of equalization without clear and precise direction laid down by the government in the railway statute, because to do so would be for the board to presume that it has the right to lay down policy. The minister and his colleagues must know that the board has not the right to lay down policy. I think that it was a recognition of that principle that led the original framers of the Railway Act to put in section 52, which placed upon the government not only the right but the responsibility to take action when direction is needed by the board.

There is no statutory direction to the effect that there must be no regional rate discrimination, and for that reason the board has doubtless felt that its main job in the matter of freight rates is to prevent unjust personal discrimination or undue preference within a region. That seems to be the principle which has guided them thus far and the tradition upon which they work whenever a reference is made to them. I must say that consistently and constantly the board have been actuated by tradition and not by good sense or judgment.

In 1925 the government of Canada appeared to have realized that what I have just stated was true, and in that year they passed order in council P.C. 886, which made explicit reference to the equalization of freight rates as a matter of government policy. I should like to quote from the directive given by the committee of the privy council to the board, as follows:

> The committee therefore advise that the board be directed to make a thorough investigation of the rate structure of railways and railway companies subject to the jurisdiction of parliament, with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rate structure, which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities, so as to permit of the freest possible interchange of commodities between the various provinces and territories of the dominion and the expansion of its trade, both foreign and domestic, having due regard to the needs of its agricultural and other basic industries. . . .

However, in the general freight rates investigation that ensued, the directive from the government to the board in connection with equalization was followed only to the extent of prescribing that branch line rates on grain in western Canada should be equal to main line rates. The difference between standard class rates and tariff rates in western Canada was left unchanged, and the mountain differential was not removed. In my judgment the pity was that the government of the day made no changes whatever in the act which would give specific directions to the board.

I should like to refer to another order in council, P.C. 1487, passed on April 7, 1948, containing another directive to the board of transport commissioners on the same subject of the equalization of freight rates. I should like to quote briefly the directive part of that order in council, to show how similar it was to the one passed in 1925, and to show that no more could be done under that directive than could be done in 1925. It reads:

> The committee also observe that since decision was rendered upon the investigation referred to in the preceding paragraphs, namely by judgments of the said board of September, 1927, many changes have taken place in the economy of Canada and it is therefore advisable that the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada be directed to make a thorough investigation of the rates structure of railways and railway companies which are under the jurisdiction of parliament, with a view to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rates structure which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities so as to permit the freest possible interchange of commodities between the various provinces and territories of Canada and the extension of Canadian trade both foreign and domestic, having due regard to the needs of agriculture and other basic industries.
> The committee, accordingly, advise that the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada be directed to undertake a general freight rates investigation along the lines indicated in the preceding paragraph subject to such special statutory provisions as affect freight rates—

Those last words render the directive absolutely useless. The same thing will happen as happened after a similar directive was passed in 1925. The board will find it impossible to remove regional or other discriminations. The failure of the board in 1925 and thereafter to make specific progress toward equalization as a result of the general review of freight rates that took place then emphasized the need for a change in the Railway Act if any particular change in policy is to be accomplished by which effective equalization steps can be taken.

With regard to statutory regulations, we in this corner of the house have advocated constantly two guiding principles that ought to be in the minds of the government and the board. The first is that the general form of the rate structure should be prescribed by statute and not be allowed to rest in the hands of a board that is guided almost solely by tradition. The responsibility of the board then would be, and ought to be, to maintain the form, laid down by the sovereign power in this country, the representatives of the people in this parliament.

The second guiding principle is that the regulations and rates should be governed in the main by standards of comparison which do not go beyond the rates themselves. When that sort of freight rate structure is built, then I maintain that the board will really have something to guide them. Until then they will not.

I would direct the attention of hon. members to the fact that the Maritime Freight Rates Act contains certain sections which illustrate the kind of change which may be required in order to establish the principle of equalization. I should like to quote briefly from section 3, subsection 2, of that act, as follows:

> The board of railway commissioners, hereinafter called the board, is authorized and directed to
> (a) approve such cancellations, and, subject to the provisions of the Railway Act, respecting tariffs of tolls for the carriage of freight, where not inconsistent with this act, to approve all tariffs of tolls so substituted;
> (b) maintain or cause to be maintained such substituted tariffs, subject to all provisions of the Railway Act respecting tariffs of tolls not inconsistent with this act, on the general rate level of approximately twenty per cent below the tolls or rates existing on the first day of July, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-seven, while the cost of railway operation in Canada remains approximately the same as at the said date, but the board may allow the increase or reduction of such tolls or tariffs from time to time to meet increases or reductions, as the case may be, in such cost of operations;
> (c) adjust or vary such substituted tolls or rates from time to time as new industrial or traffic conditions arise, but always in conformity with the intent of this act as expressed in sections seven and eight and other relative sections hereof.

As a result of the specific direction given the board in that act, it is no longer necessary for a shipper in the maritimes, in making a complaint against a difference in class or commodity rates as between the maritimes and central territories, say in Ontario or Quebec, to show personal discrimination or actual detriment in order to obtain an adjustment. All the board requires is to have someone raise the question, whether he be a shipper or not, and under the section I have just read the board is bound to consider the complaint and shippers in the maritimes are thus given almost automatic adjustment. That is the sort of thing that ought to be in our whole freight rates structure, and that is what we are asking the government to consider.

Before I pass on I should like to emphasize that the significant part of the section which I read lies in the fact that a directive is given to the board which finds no parallel anywhere in the Railway Act, which governs western and central railway freight rates. According to the section I read, the board has been directed to maintain a certain relationship between the rates of the two regions, and to vary the rates in the maritime region always in conformity with the intent of the act, which was to make it possible for the maritime freight rates schedule to be twenty per cent lower.

Mr. McLure: Are you opposed to that?

Mr. Low: No, sir; I am not opposed. I say that is only one compensation, and perhaps a small one, for what confederation has done to the maritimes. I am not at all opposed, but I say that in principle it is the kind of directive that should be given in our general freight rate law; that is all.

Mr. McLure: That was given only to compensate the east for what the west had.

Mr. Low: I understand that, but of course it goes beyond that point now. It puts the maritimes at a very great advantage over the west at the moment.

Mr. McLure: I do not agree, but I will take the matter up with the hon. member later.

Mr. Low: That is fine; I respect my hon. friend's judgment. Let me make it clear again that I am not complaining about the twenty per cent compensation. I think it is coming to the maritimes. I am trying to emphasize that the government realizes that the board of transport commissioners requires a specific directive to be able to accomplish that result. So, I contend, they must give a directive to the board of transport commissioners in order to bring about the result which must be achieved if the west is to get away from these serious discriminations.

I do not believe I need say any more at the moment to convince members of the committee that responsibility for removing the discriminatory features of the present freight rate structure lies with the government itself, not with the board of transport commissioners. Whether or not we have confidence in the board, that body simply cannot do its job without a law giving it proper directions as a matter of settled policy. Let us leave it at that. The minister may want to deny this, but right now I charge the government with having used the board as a buffer when they did not want to stand up and accept their responsibility.

Western Canada is facing a shocking situation, to say the least, as a result of the freight rate increases of the past two years. The recent twenty per cent award by the board of transport commissioners is a paralysing blow to the prairie provinces, and especially to my own province of Alberta, which stands at the very peak of the whole structure. Saskatchewan is almost as badly off, and my words now are an appeal for fair play to all the prairie provinces, which are suffering together. People have been led to believe that the recent increases were horizontal, and it will come as a shock to many that this is not so. The railways have already decided that no portion of the last twenty per cent increase will be applied to the competitive rates that exist in the western provinces. The board's orders of March 1 and May 11 of this year make that procedure quite possible, and the railways have already come to a decision in the matter. The question, then, is whether this twenty per cent increase, from which the railways expect to gather in another $29 million—

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to interrupt the argument of my hon. friend, but I am sure he does not want to make a statement that is wholly inaccurate.

Mr. Low: Of course not.

Mr. Chevrier: The railways have already made the statement in their briefs that upwards of forty per cent of the forty-five per cent increase that has been granted has been applied to competitive rates.

Mr. Low: I said that the railways had already decided that no part of the twenty per cent increase would be applied to the non-competitive or normal rates.

Mr. Chevrier: I must say that statement is wholly inaccurate and untrue.

Mr. Low: I accept the minister's statement for the time being, but that is the information coming to me directly from the railways themselves. There is no gainsaying this; that in the board's orders of March 1 and May 11, provision is made whereby the railways can do that. I do not believe that can be denied; and if the loophole is left in the board's orders do you suppose for one moment the railways will not take advantage of it? We will leave it at that and see what happens.

Under the orders of the board the railways have the right to gather in another $29 million of revenue, and in all probability that $29 million will be added to the non-competitive or normal rates; we will put it that way. This simply means that the whole twenty per cent increase will be paid by the people of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, with the lion's share being paid by Alberta and Saskatchewan. All the canned goods, textiles, clothing, automobiles, farm machinery, tools, furniture and a great many other necessities that go into Alberta will be subject to a large and unwarranted freight increase, and the costs of these things to the consumers out there will take another great jump as soon as the new rates go into effect, unless this government takes counter-action following the petition presented by the provinces last week against the twenty per cent award. The government can quite properly do this under section 52 of the Railway Act. Whether or not that has ever been done, this government has done a good many things never done before, so why in the name of common sense should they fall back on a foolish argument like that?

This increase of twenty per cent will further accentuate the difference between the cost of living in eastern and western Canada. It will be simply one more tariff barrier against trade between the central provinces and the Canadian west, which is a very serious matter. Our people out there are asking with increasing frequency of late just where are those benefits that people have been talking about as accruing from confederation. If these iniquities continue there will be a greater outcry against the terms of confederation. Our people do not want anything but a unified Canada, but certainly they want fair treatment and I bespeak it for them. Again, the twenty per cent increase will apply to everything shipped out of Alberta and Saskatchewan bound for either the west coast or the east coast, with the exception of our grain. Our coal, oil, beef, pork, pottery, hides, lumber and fish will be handicapped by one more laid-down cost disability, so that the producers in those provinces will not find it possible to compete against eastern or foreign products of the same kind. I say this is a shocking situation.

Moreover, thanks to the canals built and operated free of charge by the federal government, for which our western people helped pay; and thanks to the competition provided by the Panama canal route with respect to goods shipped by way of Vancouver and the west coast, the competitive railway rates which apply in Ontario and Quebec, and also on through shipments to the west coast, will bear no portion of the twenty per cent increase. To all intents and purposes the canals were provided for Ontario and Quebec free of charge, and their operation is also provided without charge to the central provinces. As a result Alberta and Saskatchewan get it in the neck, and that is not right.

I should like to cite briefly, Mr. Chairman, some examples to illustrate how unjustly discriminatory to the west the rates have become. Let us take this one first: When the recent twenty per cent increase becomes effective, the rate on canned goods, which form a substantial part of the wintertime diet of the western people, from eastern Canada will be as follows: From Toronto to Calgary and Edmonton, $2.77 per hundredweight; from Toronto to Vancouver, $1.40 per hundredweight; from Vancouver to Calgary and Edmonton, $1.25. Now, the rate to Calgary and Edmonton directly from Toronto and the rates from Vancouver to Calgary and Edmonton will be increased because they are normal or non-competitive rates. But the rate from eastern Canada to Vancouver, which is a competitive rate, will not be increased at all. As a result the rate to Calgary will be 197 per cent of the rate to Vancouver, although the distance to Vancouver is 500 miles greater. If that is not rank discrimination, you show me.

To make the matter look even more ridiculous, the rate from Toronto to Vancouver and back from Vancouver to Calgary or Edmonton, will be 12 cents per hundredweight less than the published rate direct from Toronto to Calgary. Talk about stupidity and being bound by tradition! Yet the the minister says there is no discrimination.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the minister made no such statement.

Mr. Low: If the minister will look at the speech he made when this subject was under discussion three weeks ago, he will see that he did.

Mr. Chevrier: I object to the hon. member putting words in my mouth. I did say that there was discrimination, but there was a distinction between the discrimination as mentioned in the Railway Act and the illustrations given. The point at issue is whether there is unjust discrimination. The hon. member has been citing cases all along, none of which are proof of unjust discrimination within the meaning of the act; that is the whole point.

Mr. Low: That is exactly the whole point I am discussing today. I am appealing to the minister to see to it that the act is changed so that these diabolical things cannot continue.

Mr. Chevrier: That matter has been referred to the royal commission. When we have the report of the royal commission, perhaps we shall be able to act in accordance with the recommendations.

Mr. Low: Perhaps. I am just wondering how many times we have to have royal commissions before we can get justice.

Mr. Chevrier: That is what the house wanted—a royal commission.

Mr. Low: We wanted the act changed. We have been asking for it for years, and instead of that we get royal commissions, and reports which nobody reads—at least, no one that can do anything about it. The people in the west are wondering if this whole thing is deliberately engineered in order that prairie points may not become distributing centres. In any event, that is the effect of it. Whether or not it is done deliberately, a good many people ask themselves just how it is engineered.

Here is another example concerning an item that is vital to farming in western Canada—tractors. These implements are necessary to enable the people to produce the quantities of wheat and grain that they do. Many of them come from Rock Island, Illinois. From Rock Island, Illinois, to Montreal, Quebec, which is a distance of 997 miles, in 1947 the rate was 99 cents a hundredweight. In 1950, if the last twenty per cent award is put into effect, there will be no increase on that particular haul. But from Rock Island to Neepawa, Manitoba, a distance of 1,001 miles, the rate in 1947 was $1.40 per hundredweight. When the twenty per cent increase is applied it will be $1.56½, as compared with the 99 cents for a distance only four miles less. The rate to Manitoba would then be 57 per cent more for approximately the same mileage. Who can justify that sort of discrimination? If it is not unjust, I should like the minister to explain it in a way that reasonable people can understand.

For the same haul of a tractor from Rock Island, Illinois, to Quebec city, a distance of 1,170 miles, the rate is $1.10 per hundredweight. That was the charge in 1947, and that will be the rate under the new schedule, because it is a competitive rate for which there will be no increase under the twenty per cent award. The rate to Swift Current, Saskatchewan, the same mileage, in 1947 was $1.72, which is discriminatory in itself. In 1950 it will be $1.93 per hundredweight, showing a rate discrimination of seventy-five per cent against the west for exactly the same haul in miles. For hauling one of those tractors from Rock Island, Illinois, to Saint John, New Brunswick, a distance of 1,472 miles, in 1947 the rate would have been $1.25 per hundredweight. No increase will be made under the twenty per cent award, so it will remain at $1.25. However, to Brooks, Alberta, a distance of 1,480 miles, eight miles further, in 1947 the rate was $1.96 per hundredweight. The new rate under the twenty per cent award will be $2.27½ per hundredweight, showing a ninety per cent rate discrimination against the Alberta point for a haul of only eight miles further. Yet there is no unjust discrimination, the minister says.

Let us take a shipment of binders as another illustration of this iniquitous discrimination. A binder that weighs 2,052 pounds, shipped from Hamilton, Ontario, to Saint John, New Brunswick, a distance of 1,115 miles, in 1947 took a rate of $11.39. The 1950 rate will be $16.62—that is when the twenty per cent increase is applied. For the same binder shipped to Lethbridge, Alberta, from Hamilton, a distance of 1,897 miles in 1947 took a rate of $32.82, but the 1950 rate will be $48.69. The distance from Hamilton to Lethbridge is 780 miles further than from Hamilton to Saint John, but the rate to the Alberta point is almost three times that to the New Brunswick point which indicates at least a fifty per cent discrimination against Alberta.

This is not the end. It seems, Mr. Chairman, that the railways are to be faced shortly with a further wage demand that may run into $19 million or $20 million. This will probably mean another application by the railways for freight rate increases. If the application is granted, then the non-competitive rates are likely to take another jump. The freight rate structure is breaking down before our very eyes, while the government stands idly by, passing the buck to the board of transport commissioners which is prostrated into incompetence through lack of specific direction from the government.

We in the Social Credit group hold the definite view that whenever the railways really need added revenues, and when they are unable or unwilling to apply an authorized rate increase equally to all parts of the rate structure and to all sections of Canada, then we say the time has arrived for the consolidated revenue fund to provide the amount of the increase. This would prevent the widening or aggravation of regional discrimination that otherwise is sure to result. Surely, to call upon Alberta or any other province to pay not only its share of the rate increase, the total of which is now forty-five per cent above 1947, but also the share which the competitive rate areas escape paying, is indefensible and unjust action which can and must be corrected by providing relief to the railroads out of the public treasury. By doing this the burden of rail costs can be equitably distributed over the whole of Canada.

Unless some such action is taken, and soon, confederation may be strained very close to the breaking point, and that would be a disaster that should never be allowed to occur. I am speaking advisedly when I say that. A good many people, and I am one of them, believe that the Canadian railways are pricing themselves out of business. I am one of those who think that the railways have become complacent and lazy; that they have not kept up with the times in equipment, service or operating costs; and that is why they are facing such strong competition from the buses and trucks in many parts of Canada. It seems to me that they ought to be following some of the policies that are being followed by certain railways in the United States. Those railways have given us an object lesson; they have provided lighter trains, faster and better service, pick-up service, and delivery service. They have reduced their rates in many instances, and their business is booming.

Mr. Chevrier: They have increased rates by over sixty-five per cent.

Mr. Low: Yes, I know. I will just refer the minister to something I noticed the other day. This was an article in Harper's magazine in the United States, quoted by the Lethbridge Herald in its editorial of Monday, May 22. I am just going to read a short part of it, as follows:

> The United States rail story is told by Herbert Askwith, a New York public relations counsel who has travelled far and observed much. As a commuting New Yorker he has felt the impact of increased rail rates, so he decided to study the problem and see what he could find. And what he found is a rather scathing denunciation of what the American railways have been doing. In "Railroads on the Wrong Track", he fears that, because of ever higher rates, the railways may be heading into government ownership and socialism through loss of patronage to other forms of travel—the plane for passenger and the truck for freight. He knows the Americans wouldn't like that.
> But he thinks he has found the antidote in the action of some of the western U.S. roads, the Southern Pacific and the Santa Fe in particular. As against the poor showings of the eastern roads, these western systems both made good money in 1948 by running good passenger trains and charging less per mile, and by improving their freight handling program so as to do a more efficient job for their customers. Mr. Askwith points out that while the eastern roads are charging around 3·375 cents a passenger mile one way, the Santa Fe is charging 2·41 cents a mile for a one-way ticket and just over two cents for a round trip. Southern Pacific on some of their de luxe coach passenger trains in the south and west are as low as 1·59 cents single and 1·43 cents per mile on a round trip. In April of last year the S.P.'s famous "Daylights" serving the west coast carried 10 million passengers. Fares are low because they're not running with empty seats and because they're beating plane fares. This is in contrast with what Mr. Askwith says appears to be an "unstoppable determination on the part of the eastern roads to price themselves out of the market."

That is what is happening in the United States, and that is what is happening in Canada. Then the railroads come crying to the board asking them to stop this iniquitous bus competition and bus competition. I think it would be a tragedy if the board of transport commissioners or this government interfered until such time as the railroads have brought themselves up to date and have shown some pioneering spirit in these days.

I just want to close by making a short reference to the Crowsnest freight rate agreement. It is an agreement to hold in perpetuity. It is an agreement that must not be broken. It is an agreement which I know certain forces have been trying to have abrogated. But I will tell you that it is vital to the success of the farming operations in the west. It is vital to all our people. I will say this, Mr. Chairman. The railroads have never yet been able to show that they are not making money hauling grain under the freight rates of the Crowsnest agreement; and until such time as they do show that they are losing money, not even slight consideration should be given to any change in the policy. The minister will certainly get himself into trouble, and so will the government, if they ever permit the abrogation of the Crowsnest agreement.

Mr. Argue: I listened carefully to the speech delivered by the leader of the Social Credit party, and I wish to compliment him on his excellent presentation. I also wish to assure him that I support what he has said. As he so well pointed out, the chief fact before us today is that, with increasing railway freight rates, there is an increasing amount of discrimination. The minister himself, in a remark he has just made, underlines that fact when he says there has been a forty-five per cent increase in general rates and a forty per cent increase in competitive rates. When one considers along with that the fact that the competitive rates were initially lower, and that the percentage increase in competitive rates has been less than in other rates, then one realizes that the regular rates which are paid by us in the west and the competitive rates paid by the people in central Canada are getting farther and farther apart.

I believe it is the duty of the government to adopt a freight and rail policy which will be fair to all parts of Canada. In a country so wide and extensive it is essential that we have an adequate and efficient transportation service. We in the west have been hoping for many years to have our area industrialized to a greater extent, but with each increase in freight rates the possibility of our getting industries into that part of Canada is getting less and less.

The first increase in freight rates came about in the spring of 1948. Since that time, during almost all of that time, there has been an application before the board of transport commissioners. We know that when an application is before the board of transport commissioners we in parliament are denied the right to discuss railway freight rates.

Although this is the third increase that has taken place since last fall, we were not able until June 2 to have a general discussion on the government's freight policy and the policy adopted by the board of transport commissioners. I object to an opportunity not being given to parliament, at regular intervals, to discuss our transportation problems. It is important that we do not allow the fact that the matter is before the board of transport commissioners at any time to prevent parliament from discussing railway freight rates and transportation policies. Surely we on all sides of the house have a real responsibility in that regard.

On June 2 it was said by most speakers in that debate that the board of transport commissioners has been inadequately staffed, and that it has shown, by its various judgments and the mistakes which it has admitted, that it is incompetent. I believe that one of the commissioners, Mr. MacPherson, in the judgment of March 1, 1950, or in his statement following the judgment of the chief commissioner, frankly admitted that the board was not in a position to deal adequately with the question of discrimination. Let me quote what he said:

> I concur in the judgment of the assistant chief commissioner although I would prefer to see some relief given by way of maximum increases on basic materials where the markets are long distances from the source of supply. I realize, however, that the board cannot deal with the over-all revenue requirements and limit the increase in certain cases. To do so would entail a much more complete study of individual types of traffic than the board is able to do at the present time.

In other words, Mr. MacPherson said that something should be done to remove discrimination, but the board is not in a position to undertake such a job. The government should see to it that the board of transport commissioners is adequately staffed; that it is in a position to study and to establish freight rates in Canada that are equitable to all parts. While it may be the duty of the board of transport commissioners, so far as it is possible, to remove discrimination, it certainly is the duty, obligation and responsibility of the government to remove discriminatory freight rates against any section of western Canada to which they may apply.

The government of course was quite willing to appoint a royal commission; it was quite willing to shelve its responsibility for a year. The minister has said before that the provinces were not anxious to place their case before the board of transport commissioners in relation to the general inquiry; that they wanted a royal commission. Well, that is true; but the provinces want the removal of discrimination. They felt that from the experience they already had with the board of transport commissioners it was useless for them to go to the expense and the trouble of submitting reports for a general inquiry; they would rather take their chances on a brand new body. Of course that is why they asked for a royal commission. They asked for a royal commission in the main because they wanted the royal commission, but they asked for a royal commission also in the hope that somehow, some time, a royal commission might give some information on which the government would act to remove discrimination.

We shall soon learn whether or not the government set up the royal commission with the objective in view of removing discrimination, or whether it was set up only in order that the government might shelve its own responsibilities until the election was over, and after that to allow three further increases in freight rates, and perhaps in the future allow further increases and further discrimination to take place.

Before the royal commission has come some excellent information as to the impact of freight rates on various industries and various parts of Canada. At the sitting in Regina in June of last year, Mr. J. S. Turnbull, of the Saskatchewan dairy association, placed on record the impact of freight rates against the dairy industry in Saskatchewan. He pointed out that while the whole cost of operation in the manufacture and distribution of a pound of butter amounted to 9·92 cents, of that amount 4·97 cents was used for the payment of freight rates. In other words, the total cost in the manufacture and export of butter from the province of Saskatchewan has in it a 60 per cent cost for freight rates, which amounts to 5 cents a pound. That was before the last three increases in freight rates. We know that the price of butter has been going down because the government has set lower and lower floor prices under butter. According to the submission of Mr. Turnbull, the dairy industry in the province of Saskatchewan was in real peril back in June, 1949. Of course that peril has been increased because the price of butter itself has gone down, and there has been a further addition in cost owing to three increases in freight rates.

The Saskatchewan poultry producers informed the board that the total cost of freight going into the collection and distribution of a dozen eggs amounted to 6 cents. They pointed out that while in 1948 the eastern prices for eggs were 47½ cents a dozen in the spring and 54¼ cents a dozen in the fall, because of freight rates and other reasons the producers in Saskatchewan received only 30 cents a dozen. Of course now the price of eggs has been reduced, the government's floor price has been reduced, and on top of the original 6 cents freight cost there have been three further freight rate increases. It is little wonder that in correspondence I get from poultry and egg producers in Saskatchewan they tell me that at the present time they are receiving only from 19 to 20 cents a dozen on the basis of average grades. That is understandable, when in 1948 they received only 30 cents a dozen.

The Canadian Co-operative Producers Limited, which is a meat processing plant located in the city of Swift Current, placed before the royal commission the effect of high and discriminatory freight rates against that industry. In his submission the secretary of that co-operative had this to say:

> The net effect of increased cost was a deficit on 1948 operations of $93,663, and an examination of figures presented herein shows that discriminatory freight rates and other transportation difficulties have been mainly responsible.

In other words the high and ever-increasing cost of transportation was crippling the Canadian Co-operative Producers Limited. According to the reports submitted to the royal commission, freight costs were crippling the poultry and dairy industry in Saskatchewan. I should like to see a policy adopted that would encourage the industrialization of the prairies and the maritimes, but the government through its transportation policy, or lack of policy, allow increasing freight rate increases, increasing discrimination, and by that means not only fail to encourage industrialization in these parts of Canada, but even prevent industry already located in those areas from operating at a profit. Instead of those areas becoming further industrialized, the industry which they now have is being crippled through increased freight rates.

The government have taken this attitude: The main thing in the question of freight rates is to see that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company makes a profit. That would be the yardstick. The C.P.R. must make enough to have a reasonable margin, have a reasonable surplus and pay a reasonable dividend; we shall set freight rates in such a way that the C.P.R. will show that profit position. The government have been very successful in that regard. The C.P.R.'s profits in 1949 were $2 million higher than they were in 1948. Instead of the government making C.P.R. profits the yardstick of its transportation policy, they should make equitable freight rates their yardstick. The government should say: We are going to have equitable freight rates, freight rates that will apply equally to all parts of Canada. Then we would find out whether the railways make money or lose money. If they lose money, the government should consider subsidies. But the government should not say that our transportation policy is based upon profits to the C.P.R. Rather it should say that it is based upon an equitable freight rate structure, and then, if necessary, take care of the operating expenses of the railways by some other means.

The government have done something in the way of subsidies on freight rates. Feed grains going to eastern Canada from western Canada have been subsidized for a number of years. The total subsidy to date has amounted to about $139 million. It has been suggested by members from western Canada from time to time that that subsidy was one only to the eastern producers. I believe that when the government pays a subsidy on a shipment of feed grain from Fort William east, and by that means removes the freight cost, the result is beneficial not only to eastern but also to western producers.

The hon. member for Peace River has mentioned the Crowsnest pass rates, and has said that those rates should not be changed. He pointed out that if they were changed there would be the greatest possible amount of resentment shown in western Canada. I agree with him wholeheartedly in that statement. I want to point out, however, that so far as the shipment of certain grains to eastern Canada is concerned, we have something which is just a little better than the Crowsnest pass rates. We have the Crowsnest pass rates on grain going to Fort William, and then we have free freight after that. In my opinion that is a good thing.

I am trying to say to the minister that the government is already paying a subsidy in respect of freight rates on a certain commodity. It has not entirely opposed subsidies on freight rates. I say it should now give consideration to a greater subsidy, if that is necessary—and I believe it is—in order that freight rates may be equalized from one end of Canada to the other.

Mr. Higgins: Mr. Chairman, I intend to speak to the amendment offered by the leader of the opposition, but in doing so I shall not use general arguments but rather shall confine my remarks to the recent decision of the board of transport commissioners in the matter of the application of Newfoundland in connection with freight rates. I spoke on this matter some time ago, but imagine that what I said at that time is not fresh in the minds of hon. members.

The position is that prior to confederation it was clearly understood by the people of Newfoundland that the freight rates structure of that new province would be comparable to the freight rates structure of the maritime provinces, subject of course to the mileage differential.

As a member of the national convention of 1946, and as a member of the national convention which came to Ottawa to discuss with a committee of the cabinet the whole proposition related to confederation, I would say that at that time it was my definite and clear understanding that Newfoundland in the event of union was to receive the same treatment as the other maritime provinces.

Mr. Chevrier: Without wishing to interrupt the hon. member, may I point out to him that neither of these decisions in any way affects Newfoundland. I am sure he understands that. It was not intended, either in the twenty per cent case or the other case.

Mr. Higgins: I am not referring to that. My remarks are directed to the amendment offered by the leader of the opposition.

Mr. Chevrier: That amendment is to reduce the vote to one dollar. I hope the hon. member will make his remarks pertinent to the amendment.

Mr. Higgins: I am endeavouring to do so, and I think the minister will see what I am talking about. The report of that delegation was announced at the conclusion of the talks. What I have just said with respect to treatment was placed before the convention, and was spoken about on a number of occasions at those meetings. During both referenda in 1948 this same position was stressed by the parties advocating confederation. There was no question at that time that the government of Canada had any different views, because a representative of the government attended all sessions of the convention, and the High Commissioner for Canada, Hon. J. Scott Macdonald, was present in Newfoundland during both referenda campaigns. Certainly he heard the radio addresses made, as well as the formal addresses made at meetings.

When the second delegation came to Ottawa following the referenda to conclude the final terms of confederation, six members of that delegation returned with exactly the same opinion as I have outlined. So that the position is that the members of both delegations, having talked here in Ottawa on both occasions with committees of the cabinet, appeared to understand that we were to be put in that same position. That was notwithstanding the necessity for water carriage between North Sydney and Port aux Basques, with the consequent extra handling of freight at those points. It was also notwithstanding the fact that the Newfoundland railway is a narrow-gauge railway, and the freight cars are consequently very much smaller in size.

That was all understood. Section 32 (2) of the terms of union designate that the traffic between North Sydney and Port aux Basques is all-rail traffic. I submit therefore that that definitely guarantees a freight rate structure on through traffic going into Newfoundland comparable to like traffic in the maritime provinces, subject of course to the mileage differential.

In that connection may I quote from Hansard when the matter was discussed in the house in 1949. The minister, referring to section 13 of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, said, as reported at page 607:

> I should repeat everything I said on that occasion, except to say that the freight rates structure of the maritime provinces will be made applicable to the province of Newfoundland.

Referring to this matter of water traffic, the Prime Minister said, as reported at page 608 of Hansard:

> That is something also which was carefully discussed with the representatives of Newfoundland, and they were told that all these matters would have to be taken into consideration by the transport commissioners. What is provided is that this connection to Port aux Basques is a part of the railway rate, but the maritime rate will apply within Newfoundland. It does not apply now to the traffic carried by water from Halifax to any point in Newfoundland; but in determining what will be proper rates to charge for rail movement the board will have to take all appropriate factors into consideration. The delegates from Newfoundland finally were satisfied with this position; that we do not want to have things happen which will interfere with the economy of Newfoundland.

At page 609, the Prime Minister said:

> It is part of the agreement that water transportation between Sydney and Port aux Basques will be on the same basis as if it were a rail operation; that is the agreement.

And again:

> Through traffic moving by rail and having to take this jump across the water will be treated on the same basis as if that mileage were part of the railway haul.

Then at page 619, the Minister of Transport:

> The provision in the bill that through traffic between Canada and Newfoundland shall be treated as all-rail traffic when passing over the water route between North Sydney and Port aux Basques on the steamship now owned by the Newfoundland railway is nothing unusual. It is the same practice as was followed with respect to the vessel service between the mainland and Prince Edward Island many years ago, when through rates were made via that service; the only difference is that the steamer service between the mainland and Prince Edward Island has been changed to a car ferry.

Incidentally I want to thank the minister for making provision for a new ferry in the estimates.

It is not possible under present conditions to establish a car ferry between North Sydney and Port aux Basques; therefore the steamship service must be considered as a substitute for a car ferry service.

And again:

The same situation exists with respect to the water service now carried on via the car ferry between Mulgrave and Point Tupper—that is, the rates between the rest of Canada and Cape Breton are on a through rail basis.

And again, in the middle of the page:

Such rates will have to conform to the general pattern of rail rates in the other provinces of Canada; otherwise they would be discriminatory. Discriminatory rates, either higher or lower than in the same general territory, cannot be maintained under the Railway Act. Therefore, as stated, the rates will follow the general pattern of the rates in other provinces.

And then on page 621, the Prime Minister:

No increase is being provided in rates from any point within the preferred area to any point in Newfoundland. At the present time there are no through rail rates from Halifax to Newfoundland. There is a rail rate to Halifax, and then water carriage beyond that. Under this arrangement a through rate will be possible from points within the preferred area through North Sydney and Port aux Basques, treated as an all-rail rate.

In connection with discriminatory rates, the minister is reported on page 3166 of Hansard of June 2, 1950, as having said:

It is well known by all who have given any attention to the matter that the board of transport commissioners have no power of themselves to deal with discrimination affecting geographic, economic and industrial conditions. That is the very essence of the case for the provinces. Their whole brief was based on this argument. It has been held time and again that a rate-regulating commission has no right whatever to attempt to equalize geographic, climatic or economic conditions. They are simply and wholly concerned with questions having to do with the reasonableness of rates or tolls.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who has the power?

Mr. Chevrier: The only conclusion I can come to is that the language used by the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for Lake Centre is—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who has the power?

Mr. Chevrier: Just a moment. I did not interrupt the hon. member when he made his speech, when he waxed so indignant. Let him allow me to carry on, because there are a number of things that have not been said that need to be said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is a question that you cannot answer.

When following that decision by the board of transport commissioners the premier of Newfoundland announced that he was going to appeal to the cabinet, apparently he made the approach and then was advised that the matter should be referred back to the board of transport commissioners. That has not been done as yet. In the event of there again being an unfavourable decision by the board of transport commissioners I should like to ask the minister if there is any right of appeal to any body, or what is to happen?

I should like to read from the record of the national convention on January 5 and January 19, 1948, where an answer was given, I presume by the cabinet or by some official, with regard to the terms of union, as follows:

Although it would be inappropriate to guarantee in the terms of union that there would be no increase in any rates in any of the above services after union, it would seem that in general Newfoundland users of these services after union would benefit from the extension of Canadian rate schedules and the Canadian system of protecting consumers from unfair and unreasonable rates.

In the application submitted to the board of transport commissioners the special case of the Buchans Mining Company Limited was set out. This company operates in the middle of the island and ships ore to a point to be forwarded by boat. This part of the application reads:

The annual production of concentrates of the company, amounting to approximately 130,000 long tons, is shipped by rail from Buchans via Bishops Falls to the port of Botwood on the northern coast of Newfoundland.

The company is presently paying a rate varying from $2.35 to $2.75 per ton on the movement of the concentrates from Buchans to Bishops Falls, and the schedule of rates applicable is the same as applied prior to confederation of Newfoundland with Canada.

This movement is a preferred movement under the Maritime Freight Rates Act, and is entitled to a twenty per cent reduction on the basic rate under the statutory requirement of that act. The application of the act and the statutory twenty per cent reduction would result in a substantial decrease in the rate presently fixed on these concentrates. It appears that this movement has not been accorded the benefit of the act or any reduction whatsoever.

Apart from the failure to apply the Maritime Freight Rates Act in this instance, it would seem that the basic rates fixed on this concentrate movement are excessive and discriminatory. Despite the fact that, in connection with the movement of the Buchans concentrates, the Buchans Mining Company Limited furnishes all the ore cars for the movement and maintains forty-seven per cent of the trackage used in the movement and assembles all the ore trains, the freight rates chargeable by the Canadian National Railways are in excess of rates for comparable movements in other parts of Canada where all equipment is provided and track maintenance and services assumed by a railway.

By way of comparison and illustration, it is pointed out that the rate on lead concentrates released to $50 a ton from Montauban to Montreal (for export)—a distance of 126 miles—is $2.39 per ton, reflecting a ton mile earning of 1·8 cent which, applied to the 79 miles movement from Buchans to Bishops Falls, produces a rate of $1.42 per ton. This latter would give a fair basic rate for the Buchans movement if the provision of all equipment and maintenance of all trackage were obligations of the railway. As this is not the case, a further deduction and allowance should be made on this rate of $1.42 per ton in order to arrive at a fair basic for the Buchans concentrates movement. When that rate is established, the twenty per cent deduction under the Maritime Freight Rates Act would then have to be applied.

As I say, the rate charged another producer for a haul of 126 miles is $2.39 per ton. For the 79 miles from Buchans there is a rate of $2.75. That fact also has been placed before the board of transport commissioners.

As to how the other parts of the maritimes feel about that and about the contract, I should like to refer briefly to an editorial which appeared in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of March 8, 1950, under the heading "The Terms of the Contract." It had this to say:

Newfoundland, as a result of union, is a maritime province, the fourth maritime province. And the terms of union with Newfoundland provide that "for the purpose of railway rate regulation, the island of Newfoundland will be included in the maritime region of Canada" and "through traffic moving between North Sydney and Port aux Basques will be treated as all-rail traffic." And generally, "all legislation of the parliament of Canada providing for special rates on traffic moving within, into, or out of, the maritime region will, as far as appropriate, be made applicable to the island of Newfoundland."

That is clear enough and specific enough. Certainly, there can be no possibility of doubt about the spirit of the terms or the intentions of government and parliament in approving them. And while the qualifying phrase is there—"as far as appropriate"—the people of the rest of Canada want to see Newfoundland a maritime province in all that the name implies.

As I say, in spite of all these facts having been brought before the board of transport commissioners by counsel for the province of Newfoundland, that board upheld the discriminatory Newfoundland freight rate structure. I am now quoting from page 2 of the judgment of that board, dated February 14, 1950:

The common law contains no rule against discrimination by common carriers, and the only kind of discrimination prohibited by the Railway Act is discrimination that is undue, unfair or unjust.

Certainly this discrimination is unfair and unjust.

Railway companies have, therefore, always had the right to discriminate in rates because of dissimilarity in circumstances and conditions. Do the statutes referred to in the preceding paragraph—

Those are the statutes I have quoted.

—lay down a different rule in Newfoundland? In our opinion the answer is no.

Then they go on to quote the terms of union, and here is what they say about that:

We think that the obvious purpose of this subsection is—

That is the one referring to through traffic.

—first, to make Newfoundland part of the maritime region in order that Newfoundland may have the benefit of the Maritime Freight Rates Act in respect to all freight movements between points in Newfoundland and points in the rest of the maritime region; and

Secondly, to provide that carriage by water between North Sydney and Port aux Basques is to be regarded as carriage by rail for rate-making purposes.

This subsection may also mean that the rate structure in Newfoundland is to be in general conformity with the rate structure in the other maritime provinces.

They do not answer that specific question; they say it may be, but they make no ruling on the matter. That is one reason why I certainly approve the motion of the leader of the opposition. As hon. members will understand, local businesses and industries in Newfoundland have been greatly affected by confederation. One of the things we were led to believe would happen was that the cost of living would be greatly reduced. That has not come about. If, as my leader suggests, the freight rate structure should be such as to be economically sound in every part of Canada, bearing in mind the economy of each province, it is the contention of Newfoundland that a freight rate structure comparable with that of the maritimes should be conceded.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Higgins: I shall not be long. In speaking on this matter previously I made some statements that were considered rather strong. I do not intend to repeat them, but certainly I intend to stand by what I said at that time; I have not changed my opinion. I would say that if the fault is with the board of transport commissioners, then they are not competent to perform their duties, with all due respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Bonaventure. If the fault is elsewhere than with the board of transport commissioners, then I submit that Newfoundland is entitled to a full and complete explanation. If the fault is with the government, then I say Newfoundland has been the victim of the crime of false pretences in entering into union, and that false pretence has been either express or implied.

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Chairman, I recognize that we are now in the dying moments of this session. I have also been told that the minister is anxious to get away; therefore I shall attempt to cut short my remarks this afternoon. I do feel impelled to say a word or two with respect to the Crowsnest pass agreement, however, by reason of the fact that we have received so many resolutions and letters opposing any change in the statute. These resolutions and letters have come from many organizations, as well as individual farmers, and I do not feel I should let the session close without saying a word or two on behalf of my constituency, which is approximately sixty-five per cent agricultural. Grain rates by statute has been the national policy of this country for over fifty years. No matter what party has been in power, whether Liberal or Conservative, all administrations have accepted the fact that grain rates by statute is a matter of national policy. Now a move is being made to lift the Crowsnest pass freight rates out of the statutes of Canada and place the responsibility for those rates in the hands of the board of transport commissioners. I rise to oppose that move as vigorously as I can. In doing so I am not registering any particular criticism of the board. The point I want to make is that the board of transport commissioners, in fact any board or commission, is set up to administer government policy, not to make it. Since the Crowsnest freight rates by statute has been the national policy of this country for over half a century, I do not believe the question of changing that policy should be placed in the hands of any commission, no matter what it may be.

My second point is that agricultural economic principles are never static. That is the reason the Crowsnest pass agreement must remain as the law of Canada. That is the reason the Crowsnest pass freight rates must remain statutory. The economic principles of agriculture move up and down continuously. At the moment prices are in all probability on the decline. Our overseas export trade for wheat and other grains is also probably on the decline. If these declines do take place, the result will be that farm income will be reduced. The extreme variability of economic principles as applied to agriculture makes it all the more necessary to retain the Crowsnest pass freight rates on the statute book. Another thing I should like to say—it has been said before but it will bear repeating—is that the farmers of this country sell on an uncontrolled market but they have to buy on a controlled market.

Mr. Chairman, the depression of the thirties still remains vividly in the minds of the farmers of this country. I remember in 1935, when some of us were first elected to this house, how the farmers came to us, and some of them were crying because they were about to lose their farms. The mortgage companies and individuals who held mortgages on their land were threatening foreclosure. Many times we were asked to draft or write letters for farmers to mortgage companies in order to help them retain their land. There was no hope in the world at that time of the agricultural industry of Canada remaining solvent. In Alberta the Aberhart administration took the bull by the horns and put a moratorium on debt. If it had not been for that action, many of the farmers in that part of the country would have lost their homes and farms. Then the debt adjustment boards were set up in an attempt to bring creditor and debtor together. These boards helped to some extent in solving the problem; at least the farmers were able to save their homes.

Two or three years later the war broke out, and that changed the economic picture for the farmers of western Canada. Prices began to rise, and the farmers began to see their salvation. What a tragedy it is to think that we should have to have a war in order to save the homes of the farm people of Canada! That was the situation, Mr. Chairman. As I say the economic principles of agriculture are never static, but fluctuate one way or another, and that is the main reason why the Crowsnest pass agreement must remain on the statute book.

Another point I should like to make is that the development of this entire nation is largely due to the expansion of the prairie provinces in agriculture. I realize the argument will be advanced that the railroads stretched their ribbons of steel from coast to coast across this country, and where the railroads went, industry and the farmers followed. I do not know whether that is the order in which the events should be placed; perhaps where the farmers and pioneers went, the railroads followed. I am rather inclined to think that is the more accurate picture. Let us remember that in the early days of railroad construction in this country the people of Canada, through the government administration, poured millions of dollars into those railroads in the form of gifts. I am not objecting to that; it is now history. But we are continuing to pour money into the railroads of this country.

Not only were millions of dollars placed at the disposal of the railroads in the early days, but I would remind you, Mr. Chairman, that no less than 32 million acres of land were given to the railroads to compensate for cost of construction. Thirty-two million acres is a lot of land. I realize that much of the land is raw land, but they have had the opportunity of selling that land, as they do today, and the price received in the aggregate would amount to astronomical figures. Every little town we pass on the railway means that the railway has created that townsite and sold the land. I have no criticism to make. It is a good thing they did; it is exactly what they should have done. My point is that over the years the railways have not fared badly at all. May I say, too, that on the 32 million acres that were given to the railroads of this country the mineral rights were reserved for them.

The next point I wish to make is that a previous prime minister of this country committed himself and his government to retaining on the statute book the Crowsnest pass agreement. On May 4, 1922, at page 1436 of Hansard, the former prime minister, Mr. Mackenzie King, stated:

> Unless it can be shown that in the public interest there are good and sufficient reasons why what is termed the Crowsnest pass agreement of 1897 should not again become operative in July next, the existing statute will not be interfered with.

Those are the remarks of the then prime minister, and we can take them as a pronouncement of government policy at that time. Mr. Chairman, I have not been able to discover any evidence submitted before the commission from which it could be deduced that it would be in the public interest that the Crowsnest pass agreement, which so vitally concerns a large and important part of Canada, namely, the agricultural industry, should be altered or disturbed in any way. I say that this Crowsnest pass freight rate must remain on the statute book. I cannot emphasize too strongly the fact that the farmers and the entire agricultural industry of this country are banking on this government, and on any government that might follow, to retain as government policy the statutory fact of the Crowsnest pass agreement.

Before I sit down, there is one further comment I wish to make. I wish to support the hon. member for Bow River in the speech he made the other day, and also the leader of this group, the hon. member for Peace River, in the speech he made today. I believe that the speech made by the leader of this group today was one of the most dynamic that has been made on this issue. I refer particularly to the points made by both hon. gentlemen with respect to the trucking industry of Canada; for a move has been made to curtail the interests of the trucking industry, which move would be favourable to the railways.

I know that we should look at these things in a solid fashion. We must not go off half-cocked and let our emotions run away with our reason. I recognize that fact. I also recognize the fact that when millions upon millions of dollars have been invested in an industry, you just cannot close your eyes to the fact that such an industry must be protected. I am all for it. But I do say that there must be an attitude of fairness in relation to other industries that are imposed upon us by the development of the country and the advancement of civilization—and I think I can use the term "civilization" because what is true today in industry affecting the lives of our people may not be true ten, fifteen or twenty years from now.

There was a day when the railways refused to look upon the trucking industry as a menace to their interests. Now they are beginning to discover that the trucking industry can haul freight and give a service which is perhaps cheaper and more favourable to the public than the service the railroads can give. That is a thing that is coming and we cannot help it. We have to recognize it.

We have these problems coming up every few years. The discovery of vast resources of oil in Canada means that the coal mining industry of Canada is now being pushed into the background and will perhaps eventually deteriorate to a place where it is almost non-existent. I do not know what will happen, but the fact that oil has been discovered causes the coal mining industry to worry considerably as to its future. What are we going to do about it? I use that only as an illustration. You cannot stop progress. It is bound to come. The day may come when the utilization of air traffic will be such that it will become a threat even to the trucking industry. We cannot help that. While on the one hand, we have to try to protect large investments in industry, we must be fair to any newly-developed industry that is going to serve the country and serve the people, and, speaking of trucking, one that is able to transport freight in many instances much more cheaply than the railroads and to give a service which to many people would be much better—not always, but in many cases —than the railroads can give.

I have a great many notes before me on the trucking industry, Mr. Chairman, but I know that the minister is anxious to get away, and I will not detain him or the committee. I will forgo any discussion of those notes now, and perhaps if I have another occasion at some future time to talk about this matter, I will pursue them further.

May I just say one word in closing? I cannot emphasize too strongly the fact that the minister's portfolio is that of Minister of Transport, not minister of railways or airways or shipping.

Mr. Green: Or Trans-Canada.

Mr. Hansell: Or Trans-Canada. He is Minister of Transport, and he is just as much responsible for fairness to the trucking industry as to any other branch of Canada's transportation industry.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a finding of the board of transportation commissioners dated August 12, 1949 and initialled "T.D. 14157·4". It is signed by P. F. Baillargeon, secretary. This finding deals with an application of the milling and feed industries in regard to the freight rates on soybeans from southwestern Ontario to Toronto; and the application for a decrease was refused. This statement by the board points out why they have refused the decrease in freight rates. I want to review the paragraphs that are pertinent to the request dealing with the decrease in rates. I will provide the minister with a copy of this finding so that he will know what I am referring to.

Paragraph 4 reads as follows:

The premises upon which this application is made appear to be that a reduction in the present rates on soybeans would promote an increase in acreage; that large imports are now necessary from the United States; that Canada's edible oil requirements exceed domestic supply; and that diversion to truck transportation is likely to occur.

That is the first time I ever heard that the freight rate was to be based on the question whether it would increase or decrease the production of farm products. I understood that freight rates are based on the cost of haulage, on the competitive rates of other transportation systems, and the like, and not on whether they would increase or decrease the acreage of a certain product.

Paragraph 6 reads in part as follows:

The board's powers are limited to considerations of the reasonableness per se of the rates charged and the removal of unjust discrimination. Consequently, features of your complaint, other than the latter, will not be dealt with herein.

Unjust discrimination? Where are we going to draw the line? I never heard of such a thing as just discrimination.

Mr. Chevrier: There is discrimination under the Railway Act. This is what is meant.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): I see. Take a carload of corn or wheat from the same station to Toronto; the rate is three cents lower than it is on soybeans loaded in the same kind of car by the same machinery. They would like to know why the rate on soybeans should be three cents higher. The board say that is not unjust discrimination. I cannot see the reason for that.

In paragraph 9 there is a statement of the dominion bureau of statistics showing that the increase in the acreage of soybeans has been considerable. Since 1942 the increase has been from 44,000 acres to 94,000 acres in 1948. By that they are intimating that the rate is not too high. They say that because there has been a great increase in acreage the rate is not too high. The actual fact was that the price of soybeans had improved to such an extent that it was more advantageous to grow soybeans than some other cash crops.

[Mr. White (Middlesex East).]

They also tried to prove that the freight is not discriminatory today because there has been an increase in acreage.

Let me read paragraph 11, which deals with it:

It is obvious from this tabulation that the acreage and total production has substantially increased. It would not appear that the railway freight rates complained of had a tendency to curtail production, nor is it clear that a reduction in such rates would tend to further increase production. The board is, therefore, unable to find any indication that unreasonable rates per se have been or are being applied.

There is nothing reasonable in a difference of three cents between corn, wheat and soybeans. Production should not be the basis of a freight rate.

Paragraph 13 reads in part:

Difference in rates is discrimination; but the prohibitions of the Railway Act in regard to discrimination are prohibitions of unjust discrimination or undue preference, and the question is whether the discrimination amounts to an unjust discrimination or undue preference.

My only comment on that is that there certainly is unjust discrimination.

In paragraph 14 they deal with the findings regarding the Ontario Paper Company, and point out the ruling there. That has absolutely no bearing whatever on freight rates so far as farm products are concerned. Paragraph 15 reads:

Evidence is required as to how rates complained of react to the detriment of the applicant.

We grew two million bushels of soybeans in 1948, and considerably more last year. If you multiply that by three cents a bushel you will get $60,000. It cost the producers of southwestern Ontario just that much money, and that is how it is reacting to the detriment of the applicant.

In paragraph 16 they deal with the water rate, and say that it is not discriminatory. Actually the water rate from Chicago is to the advantage of the Toronto elevators which bring beans from Chicago rather than from Chatham by rail. Therefore the statement in paragraph 16 is not borne out by the facts.

Paragraph 18 reads:

From information in the board's possession it would appear that the product chiefly derived from soybeans is the oil extracted therefrom. The board is informed that oil constitutes approximately sixteen per cent of the production plus imports of beans, and that in consequence of the extraction of oil the residual meal is about 73 per cent. The board's information is that soybean flour is about three per cent of the said production plus imports of beans.

Actually, these figures do not add up. They say that oil constitutes sixteen per cent. I have been informed that it is not quite that much, but we will say it is sixteen per cent. What is all the rest? It is residue of one kind and another. It constitutes the bulk of the bean, not the oil. Soybean meal goes into feed for livestock. It is shipped all across Canada. I want the committee to understand that the producer is paying three cents more freight on the raw product to the mill, but when the mill sends it out again to the farming areas as feed for livestock it goes out at the same rate as the by-products of wheat and corn, so that the farmer alone is the boy who is taking the loss on that particular article.

Paragraph 19 reads:

The railway tariffs applicable to Ontario grown grain and grain products show that grain products rates are accorded to shipments of soybean flour, meal and cake; therefore, these products are not placed at any rate disadvantage compared with other grain products.

In other words the millers again are the ones who are winning, and not the farmers. We heard something about the milling combine. It would appear that they have a finger in the pie here.

Paragraph 20 continues:

On the other hand soybeans are accorded the same rates as contemporaneously apply on flaxseed.

Any hon. member who knows anything about flaxseed knows that there is no comparison in the risk of handling soybeans as compared with flaxseed. Flaxseed will go through almost any small hole. It is a difficult product to ship, but not so with soybeans. I continue:

It is noted that oil produced from soybeans is also utilized in the manufacture of paints.

What bearing that has on the setting of a freight rate for the bean is more than I can understand.

Paragraph 24 reads:

While the board views the ex-lake rates as being, in a large measure, controlled by competition, it also considers that such rates form only a portion of the total transportation movement and that "notwithstanding the spread between the ex-lake export rates from the bay ports and from Ontario points, the transportation cost to the eastern Canadian seaboard in respect of the export of western Canadian grain and the products thereof is greatly in excess of the transportation cost from Ontario points."

This actually has no bearing whatever on the freight rates, so far as soybeans are concerned, from western Ontario to Toronto. It is another red herring drawn across the trail to confuse the farmers and those who are applying for a reduction in the freight rates.

Paragraph 25 goes on:

In view of the conclusions therein stated the board is unable to find that a fixed spread of 1¾ cents on ex-lake soybeans over other ex-lake grains constitutes unjust discrimination of Ontario soybean movements.

Actually, as I mentioned before, the net result is that the preference is given to the United States soybeans from Chicago and not to the Canadian growers.

Paragraph 26 is very revealing. It reads:

Reference herein has been made to the board's possession of data from which certain conclusions have been drawn. It may be stated, for your information, that the source of such data is the dominion bureau of statistics, who have requested that the information furnished be privileged due to the restricted scope of manufacture of soybean products.

I cannot see why any figures supplied by the dominion bureau of statistics should be privileged. We should know about them just as we do about anything else. We are paying for the compilation of those figures. Then the paragraph goes on to say:

In view of the board's understanding that Victory Mills Limited is considered to be the leading processor of soybeans, the conclusions stated can no doubt be readily verified.

That is all the more reason why the minister and the board of transport commissioners should look into this vexatious question of discriminatory rates so far as soybeans from southwestern Ontario are concerned.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, as the committee is aware, this question of freight rates is of great importance to all the provinces of Canada, with the exception of Ontario and Quebec. While Newfoundland has not been a party to the various appeals, I imagine that when that province finds out just what its freight rates structure really means, the government of Newfoundland will also be vitally interested in this whole question of freight rates.

This afternoon I should like to ask the minister to answer one question which to my mind is at the heart of this whole problem. My question is this: How and when is the question of discrimination to be decided?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Green: I do not want the answer so fast. To my mind that is the heart of the problem. The board of transport commissioners has obviously failed to deal with the disparity in the freight rates applying to different parts of Canada, because all the increases the board has granted have been on a horizontal basis. That, after all, has the effect of making the discrimination worse.

I think the situation was clearly summed up by the resolution presented in the British Columbia legislature on March 20 this year, when dealing with the decision of the government of British Columbia to join with six other provinces in an appeal to the dominion cabinet. One paragraph of the resolution reads as follows:

The board—

Referring to the board of transport commissioners.

—erred in authorizing a general horizontal or flat percentage increase, disregarding and accentuating existing disparities in the freight rates structure;

And the board further erred by failing to limit the authorized increase to flat maxima amounts or by other exceptions, or otherwise.

When the first decision was given, back in March of 1948, there was a great volume of protests from seven provinces in Canada. At that time the Minister of Transport was very much on the spot. He was being attacked in the House of Commons, and was dodging from one excuse to another. He was really in extreme difficulty.

Mr. Chevrier: You know that is not so.

Mr. Green: Well, perhaps we could say that he was very much embarrassed. If he was not, he should have been. In any event, under that pressure the government, through the Minister of Transport, announced that there was to be a general investigation of the whole freight rates question in Canada by the board of transport commissioners. I have here the minister's statement on April 7, 1948, when, on the same day, he tabled an order in council which authorized this general investigation by the board of transport commissioners. I shall read a portion of the order in council to which reference is made at page 2717 of Hansard just to show the step the government was taking at that time:

The committee—

Referring to the privy council.

—observe that no general investigation of freight rates has been made in Canada since that conducted in 1925 by the board of railway commissioners for Canada. . . .

The committee further observe that in the said order in council it was stated that "the policy of equalization of freight rates should be recognized to the fullest possible extent as being the only means of dealing equitably with all parts of Canada and as being the method best calculated to facilitate the interchange of commodities between the various portions of the dominion as well as the encouragement of industry and agriculture and the development of export trade."

Then it goes on to say:

It is therefore advisable that the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada be directed to make a thorough investigation of the rates structure of railways and railway companies which are under the jurisdiction of parliament, with a view—

And this is the important part.

—to the establishment of a fair and reasonable rates structure which will, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, be equal in its application to all persons and localities so as to permit the freest possible interchange of commodities between the various provinces and territories of Canada and the extension of Canadian trade both foreign and domestic, having due regard to the needs of agriculture and other basic industries.

Then the order in council went on to authorize the general investigation. Even that proposal was not satisfactory to the house. There were further protests, with the result that six days later, on April 13, the minister made a lengthy speech in which he pointed out that the board of transport commissioners, under the order in council I have just read, was being given the widest possible power to deal with discrimination. The minister's statement is to be found at page 2898 of Hansard for 1948, and he concluded by saying that the chairman of the board of transport commissioners had told him that there was nothing in the Railway Act which hampered them in any way in dealing with inequalities or the so-called discrimination which may exist in the country.

That was the stand taken by the government at that time. Some hon. members asked how long it would take for the board of transport commissioners to make the inquiry, and the minister answered as reported at page 2904 by saying that the chairman of the board had assured him that it would require an absolute minimum of six months in which to complete the investigation, and that it would probably be completed within the year. That would be a year from April 13, 1948.

On that same date the then leader of the opposition, Mr. Bracken, pointed out that he was afraid there would be a much longer delay, and that these increases were making the discrimination that much worse. As a matter of fact, Mr. Bracken moved an amendment to the motion then before the house.

The board of transport commissioners took action on that order in council right away and two days later, on April 15, issued a notice to the public which said that in order to carry out as expeditiously as possible the directions of the order in council the board invited provincial governments and other authorities, boards of trade, chambers of commerce and other interested parties to submit to the board any statements of fact under which it was claimed unjust discrimination or undue or unreasonable preference or advantage or unfair treatment existed against or in favour of any locality, province or region by reason of the present rate structure. In that notice the board asked that the submissions be filed not later than May 25, 1948. The notice also contained this paragraph:

The purpose of this notice is to put the board, as early as possible, in possession of any and all complaints against the existing rate structure, and to specifically direct attention to the subject matter of such complaints, with a view to considering what changes, adjustments and redistribution in rate incidence may be necessary to correct the defects complained of.

That was over two years ago and it is interesting to note what happened. The story is contained in a statement made by the Minister of Transport in this house on June 2 of this year, to be found at page 3115 of Hansard as follows:

To date the plan and proposals of the railways have not been received, and the provincial governments have not made any submission with respect to the order in council.

The board of transport commissioners were of the opinion that the report and recommendations of the royal commission should be studied before completing their findings pursuant to P.C. 1487.

A royal commission had been set up in the meantime to consider the transportation problem of Canada with the exception of this question of freight rates. Throughout, during this whole time, there has been a demand for some steps to be taken to remove these discriminations. In the speech from the throne delivered on January 26, 1949, the government had this to say:

A royal commission has been appointed to inquire into and report upon all questions of economic policy within the jurisdiction of parliament arising out of the operation and maintenance of national transportation. Together with the findings of the investigation by the board of transport commissioners, the report of the royal commission should furnish parliament and the government with the basis for a sound transportation policy.

That was a year and a half ago but now we find ourselves in the position where the board of transport commissioners has not carried out its investigation and where the royal commission is not to make its report this year. Yet the government has taken no steps to correct this problem of discrimination. There was one decision made by the board for which I give it credit, that removing the mountain differential which affected British Columbia, but on the general question of discrimination there has been nothing accomplished and there will be nothing accomplished until the royal commission reports next year.

I submit that we have good reason to be doubtful as to whether the board of transport commissioners will deal with the question of discrimination on a Canada-wide basis even after the royal commission reports. If they do it will probably be more years before there is a finding by the board. I submit to the minister and to the committee that the government should act without delay and not permit this discrimination to continue indefinitely. I ask the minister to answer the question I posed in the beginning: How and when is the question of discrimination to be decided?

The amendment now before the committee questions the capacity of the board of transport commissioners and asks that the vote for the board be reduced to $1. I do not intend to say anything about the various judgments in connection with freight rates but they certainly do not indicate great strength. However, I should like to say a word about a recent judgment of the board in connection with an application by the British Columbia Telephone Company for an increase in telephone rates in British Columbia. That application was heard by three members of the board. The chairman started out to take part in the hearing but was taken ill and did not get to the Pacific coast. The members who did sit told counsel representing the company, the province of British Columbia, the cities of Vancouver, Victoria, and New Westminster, the municipality of Burnaby, the Union of British Columbia Municipalities and various other public bodies that only a certain number of days could be spent on the application as the board had to get back east to deal with other business. From the tone used one could only assume that that business was considered far more important. The result was that a proper opportunity was not given for the consideration of this application.

The application affected most of the people in British Columbia because the British Columbia Telephone Company serves most of the settled portions of that province. The hearing was held in January of this year and on May 30 an interim judgment was handed down which granted the company 93 per cent of certain of the increases applied for. No reasons for judgment have yet been given to my knowledge and the result is that those of us who are interested cannot find out on what basis the award was made. The cities interested cannot decide whether they should appeal because they have no reasons for judgment upon which to base a decision.

That is not good enough for a board of this kind. While the board gave an interim judgment which awarded a large increase it has called upon the British Columbia Telephone Company to supply further information before rendering a final judgment. I submit that if the board of transport commissioners is to retain the respect and confidence of the Canadian people it must be a great deal more careful in the way it does business. I think it must be far more ready to look out for the interests of the little fellow, the man who has to pay these bills.

On this particular hearing there was one point which I thought was of some importance. When the British Columbia Telephone Company came to this house in 1947 asking for an increase in capital, we obtained from the member who sponsored the bill on the floor of this house an undertaking that they had no intention of applying for an increase in rates. At page 2718 of Hansard for May 2, 1947, I asked the then member, now Senator Reid:

> I understand that the hon. member has been authorized to give assurance to the effect that the company has no present intention of applying for an increase of rates and will not make any such application unless compelled to do so by extensive changes in conditions.
> Mr. Reid: That is my definite understanding.
> Mr. Green: That assurance is clearly worded and contains a statement to the effect that an application will not be made unless the company is compelled to do so and then only by reason of extensive changes in conditions. If the hon. member for New Westminster is prepared to give that assurance on behalf of the British Columbia Telephone Company I for one shall have no objection to the bill passing.
> Mr. Reid: I am authorized to do so, and it is my definite understanding.

That was in May of 1947; hon. members will notice that there was to be no application for increased rates unless extraordinary conditions arose. I believe the telephone company officials went right back to Vancouver and started preparing an application for an increase in rates. At any rate they were not very long in applying for an increase. When counsel for the city of Vancouver tried to bring in that assurance as evidence before the board of transport commissioners the chairman ruled him out of order and would have nothing to do with it. He ruled that what had been said in the House of Commons was not evidence, that it was of no importance whatever, and went right ahead to hear the presentation by the company. In other words right there the board ruled for the company; it agreed with the submission of counsel for the company that this assurance could not be brought in as evidence, and I do not believe the board gave the people of British Columbia a fair run for their money. If we are to have a board of that type, in such a great hurry to hear the representations of these big companies and not giving the little fellow a break, I think it is time something was done about the board itself.

I suggest to the minister that he had better not be so sure as he was when he last spoke on this amendment that the board of transport commissioners is perfect. I admit that it has plenty of problems, but I am afraid it is far from perfect. Certainly some of its actions recently have shaken the confidence of the people in its wisdom. I would hope that the minister will take steps quickly to see that the board is strengthened.

Mr. Chevrier: If I may be allowed a moment to reply to the question put to me by the hon. member, he asked how and where discrimination is to be eliminated. Discrimination can be eliminated in more than one fashion. It can be eliminated by the railways themselves; that has been done on many occasions. It can be eliminated by the board as a result of its hearings. It can be eliminated by P.C. 1487, the general investigation the government has authorized by the board. The fact that it can be eliminated is indicated by the words of the hon. gentleman, who says the mountain differential was removed following the hearing held by the board in Vancouver. Then it can also be eliminated by recommendations that may be made by the royal commission on the general question of transportation.

I do not think there should be any doubt in the mind of the committee that under P.C. 1487 the board has the right to eliminate discrimination. The difficulty has arisen because of the fact that no evidence has been submitted. It is true that the provinces were busy with the royal commission and these other two hearings, and I believe now they have given an undertaking to co-operate to the fullest extent, so I am hopeful that from now on they will make submissions. Since 1925 no evidence has been submitted before any public body or commission to establish discrimination. I do not want to go over the discussion that took place previously, but most hon. members maintained that there was discrimination. Well, as far as the board is concerned it could not consider discrimination until it had been charged with that responsibility, as it has now been, and until evidence of discrimination has been submitted. Under P.C. 1487 the board is anxious that there be public hearings so it may determine what the discrimination is, if any.

Mr. Green: Then is this the minister's plan: first, that nothing further will be done until the royal commission reports, which he said would be next year. Then the board of transport commissioners will have a general inquiry into the whole question of discrimination, and after that is held and a decision is announced the government will have to act to make any amendments to the statute law that may be necessary. Is that the course the minister believes should be followed?

Mr. Chevrier: No, that is not the course I suggest at the moment. What I suggest is that two years ago the board was required under P.C. 1487 to conduct a general rate investigation. During that time the board has invited any public parties interested, particularly the provinces, to submit evidence of discrimination. The provinces have given reasons why they could not or should not do so. Meanwhile the board has not remained idle. It has commenced studies of the waybill question, and is making a complete analysis of the freight waybill in order to ascertain by that method, which I understand is a new method, whether there is discrimination and to what extent. It may well be that they will make a finding before the royal commission on transportation brings down its report. On the other hand the chairman of the board has indicated to me that a complete investigation could not be made until such time as certain questions referred to the royal commission were answered. The whole point, I would think, is that evidence should be submitted before the board by the parties alleging discrimination.

Mr. Green: Once the board embarks upon this general inquiry, how long does the minister think it will take to complete that work? Has he asked the chairman of the board for an estimate?

Mr. Chevrier: I would not attempt to answer that question in any way other than the way I answered it when my hon. friend referred to the matter previously. I could not attempt to answer it, because it depends upon so many contingencies. It depends upon the length of time required for the waybill study. It depends upon whether or not the provinces will make submissions to the board. It depends upon when the royal commission is likely to report. It depends upon so many contingencies that any answer I might make could not possibly be at all accurate.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I should like a few moments of the time of the committee, in the hope that what I say may be regarded as a contribution to an understanding by the committee of our real problem with respect to railways. In saying that I do not wish it to be inferred that I am presuming to speak as an expert, in any broad sense of that word. Freight rates are something with which I have had some experience, particularly in the western part of Canada. I cannot help recalling that my parents came to the city of Regina before the Canadian Pacific Railway. From the time I was able to read or to listen, I remember the battles which took place between the Canadian Pacific and the various municipalities that thought they were discriminated against at that time—that is the settlers in their areas thought they were discriminated against.

Now that was a time in the history of rate making when it was one hundred per cent true to say the basis of rate making was what the traffic would bear. I do not think that will be disputed by anyone whose memory goes back any considerable distance. The rates vary all across Canada, not by the fixation of those rates by the board of railway commissioners, as they were first known, but in the discretion of the railway itself. I do not say that critically, because I would think that would be the way that any of us would probably conduct our business in the event that circumstances of a like kind were present in the conduct of that business. Before I am finished I am going to make a suggestion, and it is this: that until we make rates which bear some relationship to the cost of carriage, then I believe our troubles will never end. Even today there is no such relationship established in any broad way.

I well remember the debates in this House of Commons in 1921 and 1922 when the Crowsnest rates were made statutory. I believe it is well to remember that they were first made by agreement, at a time when the railways were, to use an ordinary expression, in the driver's seat, because they had no competition whatever in connection with the haulage of those goods covered by the Crowsnest pass rates. We cannot blind ourselves to the developments which have taken place since. The result has been that in central Canada a new source of competition, in the old days completely unheard of, has sprung up, and that is transportation by truck. In those old days we had only one yardstick to use in controlling freight rates, and that was transportation by water. Many of us are old enough to remember the change that took place at the time the Panama canal was opened. We then had a major change in the structure of water competition. One could ship by water from Hamilton, through the Atlantic ocean and the Panama canal to Vancouver, and that shipment enjoyed the cheaper water rate.

We are coming to a point now where the members have listened with much interest, as I always do, to the member for Macleod insisting that the Crowsnest pass rates, which are statutory rates made by this parliament, must be maintained at all costs. I am going to agree with that, with a modification, but for an entirely different reason. My reason is that they have been in force for such a length of time that those rates must now be regarded as part of the basic structure of freight rates, and should not be regarded as a stab here and a stab there to suit different occasions. I know quite well that the railways were happy to haul all the grain they could to eastern Canada at those rates. I say, therefore, that in any consideration of our general rate structure they should not be regarded as a change in the structure now debatable, but should be regarded as part of the whole rate making structure in connection with our railways.

I remember coming down here before the railway commission many years ago when we endeavoured to find the cost of hauling a ton of goods, we will say from Drumheller in Alberta to the city of Toronto. I believe our efforts on that occasion could only be described as futile, because of the inability of those of us who were not experts in rate making to present evidence to the board in contradiction or in contradistinction to that presented by the two railways. The railways, of course, have made great studies of those matters. Having regard to my amateurish theory, if you like, with respect to costs, I well remember endeavouring to find that cost by asking both railways why they did not base it on their own costs. The railways have a term known as OCS, or on company service. In other words, they haul their own coal from the Crowsnest pass to Winnipeg or they haul their own ties and other supplies, and they charge themselves, to use the initials, an OCS rate.

Upon my examining the higher officials, they frankly admitted that the OCS rate, that is what they charged themselves to do their own business, had no relationship whatever to cost, and was simply an arbitrary figure which they had fixed for the conduct of their own business. What are the changes, perhaps I should say in the economic life of the country, which most affect the rates?

I mentioned the canal. I mentioned the increase of trucking service. Let us not forget what this trucking service is doing; and we have all been approached by emissaries of the truckers in the last while. What they are doing is skimming the cream off the freight business. We shall need our railways. Certainly in bad weather we shall need them to carry all of our freight and, in other times, to carry that which goes a considerable distance.

In addition to that, we found the eastern part of the country building good highways with which those highways of ours farther west could not compete, and everything I say, Mr. Chairman, applies to the maritimes as well. We found ourselves in the position that we did not have the highways nor did we have the money to build them. The density of our population does not even compare with the density down here in the east. The truck, of course, would call at your place of business and deliver the freight at the place of business to which it was consigned at the other place. That is the next important fact which has entered into this picture.

We shall now take a horizontal increase in freight rates. What does it mean? We have heard much about the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec not appearing before the commission. If I were running either of those provinces I would do exactly the same thing as they have done. Why? Because they know perfectly well that you can make a horizontal increase in freight rates clear across the country and it is not going to cost them a dime because the railways cannot collect that increase, in view of the truck competition and water competition through your rivers and canals which are in this part of the country. What I say is this. It is just a matter of common sense, a matter of simple arithmetic, to know that horizontal increases, in so far as they may benefit the finances of a railway, are paid for—I was going to say entirely, but perhaps that is too strong a word—in great proportion by those of us who live far from here, both in eastern and in western Canada.

I add this comment. I think it is a wrong principle that, in determining rates, there is such a complete separation between the passenger rates and the freight rates. Included in your passenger rates, of course, consideration must be given to the operation of railway hotels across Canada. Those were built, of course—and wisely built—in the first place in order to find more passenger traffic. Yet it is generally accepted today that the passenger traffic is conducted at a loss. Someone may quickly rise and say, "well, that should be stopped". That, of course, would be said by someone with no knowledge of the situation. Your transcontinental traffic is governed by two things: American competition out of Seattle, through Chicago, up into Toronto, we will say; and now, with the addition of air travel, there is another competition. He would be foolish who would simply say, "Raise passenger rates in Canada", because that indeed would be killing the goose which laid some kind of an egg, even though it be not a golden one.

I want to speak of another principle before I come to a suggested solution, and it is this. I am one of those who think that a railway company should never be called upon to operate a railway at a loss and to take the profits from its other investments into account in determining what is an adequate freight rate. I cannot help bringing that proposition down to its simplest form, to my way of thinking; because I think in simple form. Let us assume that over on Sparks street here I had a fair boot and shoe business, just to pick one out of the air. If I had, I would not have holes in both shoes I am wearing. But let us assume that I have a boot and shoe business that is doing fairly well. Then, out on Bank street or in some of those areas, let us say, I think there is an opening for, we will say, a grocery store. So I take my savings and I put them into my grocery store. Then suppose hard times come to one of my small industries. Who is there so foolish as to say that I must continue to operate my boot and shoe business, which is losing money, because my grocery business is making money? That is all there is to this argument that the railways should be compelled to put into a common pot all the money they receive from their various investments.

I now come back to what I said in opening. You meet today the request for the removal of discrimination, and certainly I agree heartily that there is need for that. But what we need is not so much a raising or a lowering of rates. In dealing with this problem, we shall never get anywhere until we have equalization on some common basis across the Dominion of Canada. When I say "equalization" I mean this. We must get into our rate-making at least some of the principle that a longer haul does pay more money than a shorter haul. That is not true today. That principle is just good common sense, Mr. Chairman. If you buy a ticket for a passenger trip to Vancouver, you will pay a great deal more than you will for a ticket from, we will say, here to Winnipeg or vice versa. But that is not true with respect to freight.

I therefore come back to my original proposition, that until we get to some extent an introduction of the rule of costs of doing the business, we shall never be out of the bush with respect to special rates on this commodity and that commodity and with respect to discrimination here, there and elsewhere. In that regard we must all remember the terms on which our outlying provinces came into confederation. I am not saying for a moment that you can just adopt that rule. It might increase certain freight rates because of these three changes in conditions which have arisen very much within my own time, but what I am saying is that unless you start with a sound basis you will never get anywhere. From that sound basis you will have to make changes here, there and elsewhere, but now we cannot make any change without introducing so many complex questions of various kinds that we do not know where we are.

May I say one thing more about our present procedure? I think this appeal from the board to the privy council is one of the silliest procedures I have ever known.

Mr. Chevrier: Hear, hear.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I do not know how many members there are of the privy council but let us use the figure twenty. I remember an appeal in which I was involved some years ago. I think it was that twenty-fifth time the minister spoke of; but in any event my late friend, Mr. S. P. Woods, was counsel in the matter. What happened? I am not blaming the members of the privy council. You come down to the privy council with volumes of evidence. Today you will have the Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport and somebody else on the council. The following day, owing to duties that they must carry out, you will have perhaps one of these three gentlemen and three or four others. You could easily come to the place where you would never have even one minister listening to your appeal day after day throughout the whole appeal. Therefore when I use the word "silly" I can think of no better one. Perhaps "ineffective" would be better. It is a completely ineffective way of proceeding with appeals.

A word with respect to the amendment, and I am through. I am bound to say this. I am going to vote for the amendment. I realize the difficulty that the board of transport commissioners have to contend with, but in my judgment they have fallen far short of the mark. One reason may be that the difficulties are too complex. Perhaps the fact that they divide themselves up to hear cases, one section in one end of the continent, and another section in another, has something to do with it. The only thing I am going to say is this. In recent years they have proved ineffective. I hope no one will go to the members of the board and say I am suggesting that they are no good. But I am saying this. They have not fulfilled the hope held for them. For reasons perhaps better known to others than to me they have proven incompetent to discharge the duties thrust upon them by parliament and by circumstances at the present time; therefore I will vote for the amendment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are just one or two observations that I am going to make on this matter. I am not going to traverse the ground I did on June 2, but I do wish to make one or two references to the speech made by the minister on that occasion. He denied that there was discrimination against the western provinces. All I can say to that is that if he be correct in that view then every newspaper in the western provinces has been wrong for fifteen long years. Every newspaper supporting the government of the day has had editorial comments indicating that there is unjust discrimination against the western provinces.

All I can say in regard to the increase is this. No one objected, nor will anyone object, to any increase necessary to assure that the railroads of this country shall, when efficiently operated, return the cost of their operation and a fair and reasonable profit. No one argues anything contrary to that. But what we from the western provinces argue, and have a right to argue, is that in a series of horizontal increases we today are paying 21·7 per cent higher freight rates than are paid in Ontario and Quebec. The result is that our people are suffering unjustly and unfairly by these horizontal increases.

If I were to say to you that certain businesses of the prairie provinces are going to suffer as a result, and will be placed below the profit level in consequence of the increases, you might feel, sir, that I was speaking without justification. I therefore call in support the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, which on May 26 said in reference to the recent increase in freight rates—that was the last one:

> But coming on top of three other increases in a little more than two years it will inevitably push some farm districts and some businesses in western Canada below the level of profitability.

In the course of his remarks the minister said there was no proof of discrimination. I have his remarks here but I am not going to quote them. He said that I advanced no proof of discrimination in my argument. He as a lawyer knows that when a thing is so obvious that all know it proof is not required. However, if proof is required cannot the board of transportation commissioners read the evidence that has been taken before the Turgeon commission? For over a year and a half the Turgeon commission has been hearing evidence. The evidence is there regarding discrimination. It was placed there by eminent counsel representing the three western provinces. Surely further evidence is not needed. Cannot the board of transport commissioners read the evidence that has been taken, or must they again have further evidence to establish what is already known?

I am not going to answer my hon. friend on this occasion in kind. Were I to do so I would be speaking at greater length than I intend to. Suffice it to say this: the fact that I do not answer that flamboyant speech that he made on June 2 is no indication of any desire not to answer him, for it consisted in large part of generalities and indicated on his part not that sympathetic attitude that a minister of the crown, occupying the high and responsible position that he occupies, should have toward the western provinces for which I believe I am speaking now.

Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba are not in disagreement in this any more than the maritime provinces are in disagreement that they are being discriminated against. The minister's attitude indicated not that regard for the national viewpoint that I would have expected him to have displayed. I can only take it that it was made in the pique of the moment, and that in annoyance he gave expression to certain things that indicated a considerable removal from that judicial viewpoint that I would have expected him in a matter of this kind to have exercised.

Sir, I repeat what I have said on this and on other occasions. No one has any objection to an increase in freight rates to permit of efficient operation and a fair and reasonable profit. We take that for granted. But what we do object to, and what the legislature of Saskatchewan unanimously objected to, was the loading of the western provinces with still a greater burden of freight rates by reason of unfair discrimination being intensified through the increase.

For some reason or other when we try to get relief through the use of the Hudson Bay railway we get little support in that direction. Indeed, if press reports of the last few days are correct, the Hudson Bay route during the present year is going to be used less than it has been in the last two years. That would have reduced freight rates. That would have given to the western farmers a larger share of the amount ultimately realized. But even hopes in that regard are not going to be maintained. More than that I will not say on this occasion. But I should have liked to see Liberal members from all parts of western Canada rising on this occasion in the house in protest against this injustice, which is a denial of the principles of confederation—equality to all provinces, and injustice to none.

An increase horizontally allowed makes agriculture in the western provinces less remunerative, and imposes a burden greater than there is any justification for imposing at this time. I will not go into the question of discrimination. If there is to be an argument on that, then I have the material before me. It is accepted that it is unfair. I submit a horizontal increase should not be allowed.

The minister might say that there could be an appeal to the cabinet, as he said on that occasion.

Well, if an appeal is made to the cabinet, as has already taken place, I understand, on the part of seven provinces, I hope the minister will not adopt the adamant attitude he did in the House of Commons, and that the attitude here displayed was merely for show purposes in the House of Commons, and was in no way indicative of his general attitude toward the unfairness that is being shown to the western provinces.

Mr. Chevrier: May I just say a word. I am sure the hon. member for Lake Centre would not wish to leave the impression that by anything I have said in my speeches in the past I am not fully sympathetic toward the problems of western Canada as well as the problem of the maritime provinces, because if that impression was created in his mind and in the minds of any others I wish to dispel it immediately. That certainly is not the position that I have undertaken to adopt.

There is one thing however which my hon. friend said, and I am sure he will not wish to create a wrong impression as it certainly is not in accordance with my recollection of what I said. The hon. member said that I denied there was discrimination. At no time did I say that. On the contrary, I said that if there was discrimination there was no evidence of it. I said that discrimination was undesirable. I said on a number of occasions during my speech in the House of Commons that there is discrimination, but why not let the board determine the extent.

In answer to the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra I said that there were several methods whereby the proof could be established, whereby evidence could be given, and one of these was before the board. In fact, when the provinces came here the other day they indicated their co-operation by stating in effect through their counsel that they would co-operate by offering evidence of that discrimination. I have stated in the house repeatedly that since 1925 or 1927, since the year of the last general investigation into freight rates, there has been no official inquiry into that discrimination, and hence no evidence which the board could be seized of.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was there not evidence given before the Turgeon commission?

Mr. Chevrier: I am coming to that. My hon. friend states there was evidence. Yes, there was evidence, but the board of transport commissioners has been set up as a board of inquiry to decide whether or not there is discrimination. I think it is proper that if there is discrimination those concerned should come before the board and establish it.

My hon. friend says they are paying in western Canada 21·7 per cent higher freight rate costs by reason of the horizontal increase. That is a statement made in the evidence. Mr. Moffat gave this evidence before the board. That has been denied by the railways, and they denied it in their appeal before the governor in council the other day. The provinces in their brief maintain one position; the railways in their brief deny that position and until there has been a determination by a competent authority such as the board on this question of discrimination, it is not competent for my hon friend simply to state that there is a discrimination equivalent to 21·7 per cent against western Canada.

I have been most anxious to approach this, as I have said repeatedly, with the greatest of sympathy, because I realize that politically, economically and financially this is a tremendous problem. I noted the hon. member said that I was flamboyant. However, the hon. member for Lake Centre is sometimes flamboyant.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You were not imitating me?

Mr. Chevrier: I felt, Mr. Chairman, that I should put on record what was intended by my remarks, namely that no general inquiry was held. An inquiry has been authorized, and the provinces are happy and willing to give evidence. I just wished to clear that up, and the board is anxious to clear it up.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So that there may be no misunderstanding as to the way the minister expressed it, I read this from page 3166 of Hansard:

> He said that the latest decision will accentuate and increase the discrimination. That was the important statement made by the hon. member for Lake Centre. Of course if discrimination exists it is bound to be accentuated by an increase in freight rates. I do not think there could be any doubt about that.

And then he goes on to say this:

> True, you can have a removal of discrimination if it exists; but my hon. friend did not put one tittle of evidence on the record to indicate that there was discrimination.

And then later on:

> He took it for granted, as many others take it for granted, that there is discrimination. Yes there is, but to what extent? While it is true that freight rates in Ontario and Quebec are generally lower than those in the maritimes and on the prairies, and on the Pacific coast they are somewhat lower than on the prairies, there has been no evidence since the case of 1927 to indicate wherein that discrimination lies.

The minister now has been fair enough to say that evidence taken by the Turgeon commission is to that effect in certain cases. I would wish that he might see to it that the board of transport commissioners will be allowed just to look at that evidence so that they will have before them a compendium of pages and pages of evidence indicating conditions of discrimination both unjust and unfair.

There is another matter about which I should like to ask the minister. It arises out of a debate on March 22, 1950, but I do not know whether I should bring it up under this item.

Mr. Chevrier: I would ask my hon. friend to leave it until an item is called which has to do with Canadian National Railways.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It may not be applicable to that other item, but it probably will be more in place, and I bow to the minister's suggestion.

Mr. McCusker: I spoke the other day on this matter of western freight rates, and I think I outlined pretty clearly what seemed to me to be the discrimination that existed. Having received the assurance of the government that the royal commission was looking into this matter, I was satisfied to wait until we had their report. I see no sense in repeating my remarks two or three times, as the hon. member for Lake Centre has just repeated his speech of the other day, with a few more exaggerated gestures, and as my hon. friends further along in the opposition have done. These hon. members have accused the western Liberal members in the house of not supporting the claims of the west in connection with freight rates. They have charged, both in the house and on the hustings, where they have been spending a lot of their time lately, that we are not doing anything to protect the rights of our provinces. As I stated previously I made a speech on freight rates the other day and I am ready to stand by what I said.

Amendment (Mr. Drew) negatived: Yeas, 32; nays, 53.

Item agreed to.

Canadian maritime commission—

525. Administration, $190,170.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, when the estimates were last under discussion we had just begun to consider this item, which brings up the whole question of Canadian shipping policy. There are two matters I should like to place before the minister today. The first is the question of faster cargo vessels for Canada, which I raised on the previous occasion. At that time the minister did not give a clear-cut answer as to whether the government had a policy to help provide faster cargo vessels for the Canadian merchant marine. I had pointed out to him that under what was known as the replacement plan the government had allowed certain owners of wartime ships to sell them provided that the proceeds were placed in an escrow fund; further, that it had always been my understanding that the main purpose of that provision was to make money available for the building of faster cargo vessels.

In his reply on May 26, as reported at page 2929 of Hansard, the minister intimated that this escrow fund had only served the purpose of enabling Canadian ship owners to consolidate their holdings, and helping the government to get back certain money still owing on the original purchase price of the wartime ships.

If the minister will refer to the first report of the Canadian maritime commission he will find that in several places it is emphasized that one of the main jobs of the commission is to recommend the means by which Canada can get a modern merchant navy. We find the tonnage replacement plan carefully explained in the report. They say:

> One of the principal problems being dealt with by the commission is that of modernizing the Canadian-flag fleet. The Canadian fleet now consists mainly of 115-10,000 ton and 22-4,700 ton ex-"Park" ships which were sold by the government to private Canadian shipping companies on liberal terms with a flag transfer restriction prohibiting their being resold with transfer of registry.

And again:

> These war-built ships made a most important contribution to the Canadian and allied war effort and are still suitable for carrying bulk cargoes in many trades. However, many Canadian ship owners must have faster and more specialized tonnage for their services if they are to meet foreign competition effectively.
> To meet this problem, the commission is carrying out a tonnage replacement plan to enable Canadian ship owners who need new tonnage to sell their ex-"Park" ships with transfer of flag, using the proceeds to obtain replacements.

And again:

> It is felt that the plan will benefit both the shipping and shipbuilding industries. The ship owner is enabled to obtain the present high world market price for his war-built ship and to replace it with a ship better suited to his operations and capable of meeting foreign competition. The plan should provide long-term employment for Canadian shipyards and the personnel they employ. Merchant seamen will have better accommodation and living conditions and a greater guarantee of continued employment. The government will receive prepayment of the mortgages now outstanding upon ex-"Park" ships and Canada will have a more balanced up to date fleet to serve her external trade and provide for the needs of national security.

That is a clear-cut explanation by the commission of this tonnage replacement plan. It obviously was designed to enable Canada to have a fleet of fast cargo vessels, but the present position is that we have none of those faster cargo vessels except the one or two owned by Canadian National Railways. Apparently none are being built under this tonnage replacement plan, and we are ending up with forty wartime vessels. That is to be the Canadian merchant navy, forty old, slow, wartime cargo vessels. I would like the minister to explain whether the government has given up all hope of Canada's merchant navy having any of these fast cargo vessels.

There is one other question I would like the minister to answer, having to do with the north Atlantic shipping control board. When the north Atlantic council met in London a few weeks ago they agreed upon the setting up of a north Atlantic control board, which I believe was supposed to hold its first meeting last Monday. I would like the minister to explain just how Canada is affected by that board, and who is to be our representative on it.

Mr. Chevrier: Dealing with the first matter, it is true that in its first report the maritime commission advocated the construction of fast cargo ships. As my hon. friend knows, however, the position in reference to the Canadian maritime fleet was seriously affected by a number of causes in 1948 and on into 1949. Until the end of 1948, yields and profits from the operations of the fleet were good. Suddenly, however, because of a decision by the United States that at least one-half the movements under ECA should be in American bottoms and the other half in bottoms of the recipient countries, the financial position of Canada was unquestionably affected. Then came devaluation, which struck a serious blow at our merchant fleet. Then there were the costs of operation, which even before devaluation were not very satisfactory, and were aggravated following devaluation.

So when my hon. friend asks whether the government have given up hope of building fast cargo vessels, I must reply that as long as the position remains as it is I do not think we can give serious consideration to their construction. However, we are hopeful that the situation will remedy itself. When it may be possible to give consideration to these questions is another matter. Certainly it cannot be done at the moment, when we are putting into operation our policy of assigning ships to the United Kingdom and paying subsidies to other ships in order to keep them in operation in Canada.

Mr. Green: Just on that point, the maritime commission still has under its control in this escrow fund a good many million dollars. Is that money to be paid out to the shipping companies without any obligation upon them to build fast vessels, or is it to be held?

Mr. Chevrier: I have already put on record the conditions governing the replacement plan. I put them on record last year, and again in the statement I made, though I did not say how much money was in the fund. There has been paid into the replacement fund $27 million, from the sale of some forty-four ships. Of that amount $4,249,000 has been spent for the conversion or improvement of ships.

Mr. Green: That has been paid out?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Green: So there is still $23 million in the fund?

Mr. Chevrier: There is still the difference between $27 million and $4,249,000 in the escrow fund, and that may be taken out only if it is to be used for construction or conversion. If anyone does want it, he has to pay a pretty stiff penalty.

Mr. Green: Will it be allowed out for the construction of any vessel, or must the new vessel be fast and modern?

Mr. Chevrier: The answer to the latter part of the question is no; and it can be assigned, as it has been on some occasions, to other companies so that they in turn may build under the terms and conditions providing for the payment in of these moneys.

Mr. Green: Then in effect we have no hope of getting any fast cargo vessels in the near future?

Mr. Chevrier: I should not think we would have any hope for 1950.

Dealing with the next point, unfortunately that is a matter on which I cannot give a great deal of information, since it concerns security. All I can do is repeat what I stated in the previous debate, that a north Atlantic shipping control board has been established; that it has met in Washington and London, and that its purpose is to devise ways and means of establishing a shipping pool in case of emergency; that the plan has been worked out, and that our representative on the board will be the High Commissioner for Canada in London, Mr. Wilgress.

Canadian maritime commission—

526. Mail subsidies and steamship subventions, as detailed in the estimates, $3,317,000.

Mr. Green: I should like the minister to explain what portion of this amount is payable to companies operating on the west coast, and to what companies.

Mr. Chevrier: Two of these subsidies are provided for operations on the west coast. One is to the Vancouver and northern ports of British Columbia and Queen Charlotte islands service, operated by Union Steamships Limited of British Columbia.

Mr. Green: How much is that?

Mr. Chevrier: The subsidy is $345,000. The other company is the C.P.R., in the amount of $60,000.

Mr. Green: Some question has arisen in connection with this subsidy to Union Steamships Limited. Apparently it is supposed to be paid in connection with their northern run, but I understand they are in very keen competition with a line operated by young Canadian naval veterans, called Gulf Lines Limited. This new line operates on the southern end of the run, and apparently Union Steamships Limited have followed the practice of cutting rates on the portion of the run also served by this new line. As a result the government would appear to be in the position of subsidizing the older company to make things difficult for the new one. I do not believe that is fair. I understand there is some suggestion that this subsidy is all spent on the northern run, that none at all finds its way to the southern part of the run, where there is competition; but it is strange indeed that there should be these reductions in rates which make it almost impossible for the young veterans to carry on. I would like the minister to explain the picture with regard to that subsidy.

Mr. Chevrier: I must say that the maritime commission conducted a complete investigation into a number of services that made application for the subsidy under the Steamship Subvention Act, and a full hearing was held in this city. I cannot recall from memory what companies made application, but there were several; the Gulf Line to which my hon. friend referred, and two or three others. After three days of careful, protracted hearing by the commission on a number of questions, the commission came to the conclusion that those were the two lines which, because of the principles laid down by the commission, were entitled to a subsidy. They so found, and there will also be an item in the supplementary estimates covering the C.P.R. in the amount of $40,000.

Mr. Green: The Union Steamships is getting $345,000?

Mr. Chevrier: The same amount as last year.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. Green: What inquiry was made into this question of Union Steamships Company spending all that government subsidy on the northern route?

Mr. Chevrier: A very full inquiry was made, and the decision rendered as I stated.

Mr. Green: Are their accounts in such shape that an examination can be made?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, and the commission have auditors who examine the accounts and make a careful examination.

Mr. Green: Did the commission inquire into the practice of reducing rates on the routes where there is competition?

Mr. Chevrier: I am told it did.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I should like to ask the minister if any headway has been made towards restoring the ferry service between Parrsboro and Wolfville. The people who have been served by this ferry for fifty years or more feel that they have been robbed of their rights, and that this government has been the robber. The people who have utilized this ferry for so long were glad to surrender their rights and have the boat, the Kipawo, taken for war purposes, although it was specially built for the ferry service. The subsidy was then cancelled, the only service of this kind in all Canada where this was done. The boat was taken to Newfoundland and sold, the proceeds of the sale being added to the consolidated revenue fund of Canada. This complaint has been before the government from time to time, and I should like to know what steps have been taken or are being taken by the government to see that this ferry service, which saves 150 miles of travel, is restored?

Mr. Chevrier: I have too much respect for the hon. member to even attempt to say anything that would be offensive, but I am sure that when he reads what he said a moment ago he will want to change it. He said that this service has been robbed, and the government was the robber. I do not believe he would want to leave that impression, because he knows as well as I do that there can be no action of that kind before an application is made by the contractor to the commission so that at least the commission may have an opportunity of determining whether or not, because of public convenience and necessity, the service is warranted, and the subsidy, if any, which should be granted. My hon. friend has brought this up before, and I have indicated to him that if an application is made to the commission by a contractor it will receive very careful attention. If he wants to send it to me, I shall see it receives their usual consideration. Thus far no company or contractor has come forward for this service.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I want to point out again that there was a special obligation on the minister and the government which cannot be overlooked, because they took that boat from this service, under the guise of war necessity, and did not restore it. They did not give the people interested an opportunity of having it brought back. Instead the boat was sold in Newfoundland at a considerable sum, which amount was turned over to the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Mr. Higgins: Mr. Chairman, I believe this question was answered some time ago by the minister, but I would appreciate it if he would answer it more fully at this time. It is in connection with the operation of the steamship Eskimo, owned by the government of Prince Edward Island. The premier of Prince Edward Island announced that so far as losses were concerned this vessel was being subsidized by the federal government. The vessel is in trade with Newfoundland, and it is in competition with the farmers of Newfoundland by reason of the fact that it brings farm produce to the island. Some time ago the minister announced there was no subsidy, but I should like him to confirm that in view of the positive statement of the premier of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Chevrier: The position is the same, so far as I am aware. No application has been made to give any subsidy, and no subsidy has been granted.

Mr. Higgins: Will there be a subsidy?

Mr. Chevrier: There cannot be a subsidy until an application is made, and no application having been made the answer is the same as heretofore.

Canadian maritime commission—

527. To provide assistance for Canadian flag ocean shipping industry, $3,000,000.

Mr. Green: This is an item to provide $3 million for Canadian flag ocean shipping, as announced by the Prime Minister last year. I would ask the minister to explain to the committee whether the plan is to subsidize for one year or whether this policy is to be continued for a period of years. When the Prime Minister announced it on December 9, he said, as recorded on page 2981 of Hansard:

> The policy is to provide a subsidy not exceeding $3 million under which it is hoped that the owners of approximately forty of these ships—

That is the wartime cargo vessels.

> —will undertake to keep them in operation under Canadian registry and the Canadian flag for the year during which they will get a portion of the subsidy.

I wish the minister would explain his present plan.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister made it quite plain in his statement of policy that the subsidization of these forty-odd ships was for a period of one year. There is nothing which would indicate that policy should be changed, certainly nothing of which I am aware. The Prime Minister's statement went on to say, as I have stated from time to time, that it was hoped because of this policy that at the end of the year these ships would be able to stand on their own and operate economically.

Mr. Green: There really is no possibility of the subsidy being continued beyond the end of this fiscal year?

Mr. Chevrier: No.

Mr. Green: How many ships are now getting that subsidy?

Mr. Chevrier: None.

Mr. Green: Can the minister tell us the names of the ships in respect of which the subsidy is paid, including the names of the companies?

Mr. Chevrier: I have already done that. It is in Hansard now.

Mr. Green: When the minister last spoke, the whole forty had not been picked.

Mr. Chevrier: What I stated was that no subsidy had been granted, and that is still the position today. It cannot be granted until this amount is voted. Applications have been made and have been approved. When this money is voted these thirty-five ships will be granted the subsidy, and there are some nine applications still before the commission.

Mr. Green: Are there still to be forty ships, or is that number to be reduced?

Mr. Chevrier: That is the intention, that there be forty.

Mr. Green: How many Canadian ships are now laid up?

Mr. Chevrier: Prior to this policy going into effect, there were forty ships laid up and there are nine now.

Mr. Green: About those ships that have been transferred to British registry, are the owners permitted to sell them, and if so are sales subject to the tonnage replacement plan or just what provisions apply to those particular ships?

Mr. Chevrier: The owners are not able to sell them without the consent of the commission; and it is subject to the replacement plan, yes.

Mr. Green: The proceeds of any sale would have to be paid into the tonnage replacement fund?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Green: Is there any change in the figures since the minister last gave his statement?

Mr. Chevrier: In what figures?

Mr. Green: The numbers of ships that have been so transferred.

Mr. Chevrier: I think I gave 93 at the time. There are 95 now.

Item agreed to.

Government-owned enterprises—
National harbours board—

557. Advances to national harbours board, subject to the provisions of section 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, to meet expenditures applicable to the calendar year 1950 on any or all of the following accounts: reconstruction and capital expenditures, Halifax, $1,655,000; Saint John, $282,000; Quebec, $520,000; Port Colborne, $176,000; Churchill, $321,000; generally unforeseen and miscellaneous, $200,000; total, $3,154,000; less amount to be expended from replacement fund, $130,000, $3,024,000.

Mr. Green: We have a problem which comes up under this item, Mr. Chairman. Within recent weeks a new charge has been levied in Vancouver harbour on the wharves. It is known as a wharfage charge. I asked the minister about that matter in the house on May 23, and he indicated that nothing could be done to change the provision, and that this new charge would have to apply. He went on to say that one reason it was being levied was that there was a similar charge in the northwestern United States ports, such as Seattle, Tacoma and Portland. But I do not think that is a good reason for levying a charge in a Canadian port.

According to the annual report of the national harbours board for 1949, Vancouver harbour showed a net income surplus of $122,057. The suggestion has been made to me that the harbours board should make some reduction in the cargo rates that are being levied in Vancouver harbour. Apparently those charges are not levied in any other harbour and they netted the national harbours board about $680,000 last year. I would ask the minister whether consideration could be given to a reduction in those cargo rates, particularly in view of the fact that this new wharfage charge has been levied.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sure that the hon. member will appreciate the fact that this decision to establish a berthing charge was not the decision of the national harbours board.

Mr. Green: They joined in it.

Mr. Chevrier: I will come to that. It was a decision of the B.C. wharf operators' association which comprises all the owners of wharves at Vancouver and New Westminster. The national harbours board is a member of that association but is not the owner of the majority of the wharves. It is true that the national harbours board joined in the decision. In other words, it was a unanimous decision.

Mr. Green: Why did they do that?

Mr. Chevrier: Because they were convinced that the arguments made by the association were such as to warrant the increase. Here is what it is, in case there should be some difficulty about it. While the berthing charges did not exist before on working ships, they did exist on ships that were idle in the harbour. The charge is five cents per linear foot of the wharf used for an eight-hour period, so it comes to fifteen cents a day per linear foot. In the case of an ordinary ship, it might mean about $60 per day. As to why it was brought about, I now state what has been given to me by the B.C. wharf operators' association as the reason for the increase. It was brought about because of the increase in costs, and also because of the fact that there had been no increase in these wharfage dues coming to the association over a period of forty years.

Mr. Green: It is terrible to change it now after forty years. I do not know why the government had to do it.

Mr. Chevrier: The government did not do it, and I am sure my hon. friend is not trying to create that impression. It was done by the association and an agency of the government which is one of the many owners and operators.

Mr. Green: The government is responsible for what the harbours board does—

Mr. Chevrier: Will my hon. friend allow me to complete my answer?

Mr. Green: Go ahead.

Mr. Chevrier: He has asked me a question and I am attempting to answer it; he interrupts me by asking more questions, thus making my task more difficult. What I am trying to say is that the national harbours board is one of fourteen owners and operators and they must take the responsibility for the action. A number of associations have made representations to which I am giving consideration at the moment. I do not know what the decision will be, but from what evidence I have at the moment I would think it is going to be rather difficult to upset the decision that has been made.

Mr. Green: What about the cargo rates? The minister has not said anything about them. The national harbours board could reduce the cargo rates.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Green: They are making money in Vancouver harbour and I suggest that that help should be given to the harbour.

Mr. Chevrier: They are making money elsewhere. They are making money in Montreal and in other harbours, and it all inures to the benefit of the harbours because it means that the harbours will get greater facilities and it will be much easier to finance the facilities and the additions and betterments which from time to time must be made to the harbours. But if it will please my hon. friend, I shall be glad to ask the board to take a look at the matter.

Mr. Green: The minister will have the board give consideration to a reduction in the cargo rate?

Mr. Chevrier: I shall be glad to ask them to consider whether or not it can be done.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Does that mean, Mr. Chairman, that the whole appropriation in item 557 is to be carried without any further particulars being given? I should like the minister to explain the details of this appropriation of $1,655,000 for Halifax. I know it is warranted, but I should like to have particulars of it. I should also like to know the relative traffic that is passing through the port of Halifax this year in relation to recent years. I understand that the volume of traffic is most disappointing. First, I should like the minister to explain the details of this appropriation, reconstruction and capital expenditures, Halifax, $1,655,000.

Mr. Chevrier: That amount is for the construction of the new pier 3 and sheds at the deep water terminals. This project consists of the replacement of an old timber pile wharf and single-storey wooden transit shed by a modern reinforced concrete crib wharf. The amount to be expended upon that project is $1,640,000. The rest of the item is for a heating unit on pier 2.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): May I ask he minister if the contract has been let; and if so, to whom?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. It has been let to E. G. M. Cape and Company. It was let on May 14, 1949.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): When is the contemplated work expected to be completed?

Mr. Chevrier: We hope it will be done some time in October or November of 1950.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Can the minister give us some information as to the traffic passing through this important port, the best natural large port on the eastern coast?

Mr. Chevrier: Those figures can be found in the annual report of the national harbours board which was tabled here. It gives a fairly good indication of the traffic. My information is that the traffic is holding its own, or that is has been reduced by a small percentage only. The board and the government consider that Halifax is an important port and will certainly treat it as such.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): That report will apply only to traffic in the previous years. The minister is not able to make a statement regarding the current traffic?

Mr. Chevrier: It applies to the year 1949. The figures for 1950 are not yet available.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Has the minister any information as to the relative traffic for this year in comparison with 1949?

Mr. Chevrier: Thus far it is down by 5 per cent or 10 per cent.

Mr. Brooks: I am amazed to find in this item such a small amount going to the city of Saint John. Halifax has $1,655,000. Of the five ports mentioned Saint John has the least with the exception of Port Colborne. Churchill has $321,000, and in item 560 another $203,000. It does seem a very small amount of money to be spending on such an important seaport as Saint John. Will the minister tell us what this money is being expended for?

Mr. Chevrier: On the contrary, we are spending a substantial amount of money at Saint John.

Mr. Brooks: You are?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. The amount of $282,000 in the estimates now is for the remainder of the construction of the new Pugsley wharf for which there has been voted already $3,140,000.

Mr. Brooks: Is it not a fact that we have waited for that a good many years? The minister must know that.

Mr. Higgins: As the minister is aware, there is no national harbour at St. John's, Newfoundland or in Newfoundland. The provincial government has submitted a brief to the royal commission on transportation suggesting the establishment of a national harbour at Bay d'Espoir on the south coast of Newfoundland. I should like to tell the minister that it is an utterly impracticable place for every reason. If there is going to be only one national harbour it should be at St. John's where the bulk of the trade is carried on. If Bay d'Espoir is decided upon it will mean a cost of $9 million to connect with the railroad. That is the estimate of the manager of the Canadian National Railways, Newfoundland service. I do suggest to the minister that any suggestion by the provincial government or by any other body making Bay d'Espoir a national harbour in preference to St. John's should be disregarded.

Item agreed to.

Deficits—

Transport—

558. Amount required to provide for the payment during the fiscal year 1950-51 to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the national company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport made from time to time by the national company to the Minister of Finance and to be applied by the national company in payment of the deficit (certified by the auditors of the national company) in the operation of the Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals arising in the calendar year 1950, $1,159,000.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wish to direct the attention of the minister to a matter that affects many thousands of employees of the Canadian National Railways. I dealt with this matter at some length on March 22 of this year, which may be found at page 1023 of Hansard, and set out the situation prevalent with regard to pensions to Canadian National Railways employees. I pointed out that in Canada there were 2,952 employees of the Canadian National Railways who are receiving upon retirement after thirty and forty and more years of service the amount of the basic pension, namely, $25 a month. That amount may or may not have been sufficient at the time the pension plan was set up; but today, having regard to the increased cost of living, it is unjustifiably low and meagre.

On the occasion to which I refer I asked the minister, as I have on a number of occasions since July 2, 1947, to bring to the attention of the board that administers the pension scheme of the railway the need of there being a substantial increase in that amount. Since bringing the matter up I have received many letters from the lodges of the various railway brotherhoods asking whether or not something could be done in order to increase this basic pension. I speak particularly of the employees in the lower income tax brackets who are unable to provide for themselves, and who, after years of service, find themselves receiving less as a retiring pension than do many of those retired by private business. I believe that the government as an employer through government companies should be a model employer. As I see it, the provision of $25 a month cannot be justified. Not a day goes by—and I do not want to overstate it—certainly not a week goes by, without some employee writing in. I hold in my hand a letter from a constituent of my hon. friend who has just interrupted. This is what you might call a coincidence because it came to hand today. It asks for consideration and points out that the writer, after having given 38 years' service, receives but $25 a month.

Mr. Blue: What is his name?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will let my hon. friend have it. When I brought the matter up last time the minister stated—and I quote from his remarks at page 1025 of Hansard of March 22:

> I consider these matters of such importance that I do not think I can in a minute or two reply to the questions that my hon. friend has raised.

There were other questions in addition to the pension matter. I continue:

> My suggestion to him and to the committee is that perhaps I might be allowed to make a statement when my main estimates are up for consideration.

I would ask the minister now to make a statement on this matter which is of pre-eminent importance to the welfare of many thousands of Canadian National Railways employees, and in particular to those who, unable to make provision for their own pensions after retirement, find themselves in the position of having a reduced standard of living and having in large part but $25 a month upon which to live. Besides the fact that the amount is small, it places many of them in a position after five years, when they reach seventy years of age, of having too great an income to permit them to receive the old age pension.

Mr. Chevrier: It is a fact that when this matter was up for consideration on the supplementary estimates prior to the main estimates I did indicate that this matter was of great importance. I had hoped that there would be an opportunity of discussing it more fully. There was that opportunity on two or three occasions when the main estimates came up, but I think I can deal with it now, though not at as great length as I would like to.

The question of the basic pension being insufficient for employees of the Canadian National Railways is one which has been given careful consideration by the directors of the railway. In fact representations have been made by the brotherhoods suggesting increasing the basic pension, and the railways have given it careful hearing. They did, according to my understanding, establish an internal committee to deal with it, and I think reports were given to the directors from time to time. If my memory serves me correctly I believe that the president of the Canadian National Railways indicated in general terms only the position with reference to this subject when he gave evidence before the committee on railways and shipping. However it is a question which cannot, I think, be disposed of by itself.

There is not only the question of the Canadian National Railways employees under their own pension plan to be given consideration, but there are also other pension plans of the railways, such as the Intercolonial plan, and the plan in Prince Edward Island. The employees of the latter group have made representations to me and to the government on one if not more than one occasion to the end of increasing their basic pension which, according to them, was far too small.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What was the amount of their basic pension?

Mr. Chevrier: It is on the same basis as the pension plan of the Canadian National Railways. I told them on one occasion at least that the whole matter must be studied in the light of all superannuated civil servants who felt that they were in the same position, and in the light of owners and holders of government annuities, and the representations made by pilots in this country who feel that they should be entitled to a pension plan and have made representations accordingly, and in the light, too, of the report tabled today in respect of old age pensions and social security generally.

After having given the matter consideration the management of the railways wrote to the general chairman of the association of brotherhoods a letter, the last paragraph of which is as follows:

> After full consideration of the implications involved in respect of general policy, we regret to have to advise that we are unable to advance this proposal to the point where the expense involved could be included in our annual budget, which as you know, requires the approval of government and the authorization of parliament.

That letter was dated February 15, 1950. I think the president at that time was making the position quite clear in so far as the railways are concerned, and I have attempted in my present short reply to make the position clear in so far as the government is concerned, namely that it would be difficult to render a decision on this matter without also giving consideration to the whole problem. I hope that it will be possible to do it.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to follow up the matter introduced by the hon. member for Lake Centre because with the report of the committee on social security before the house I do not think it is proper for us to do that kind of thing. I rise at this time to comment briefly upon a reasoned article appearing in the Ottawa Journal in which we find a discussion of this whole matter of government-owned enterprises.

This article of recent date in the Journal carries the caption, "Government Lost $27,648,000 in Business", and states:

> Mr. Canada's business, as represented by government boards, corporations and railways, is closing the books on a poor year.
> The loss, as represented in the accounts of various government organizations, mostly for the year ending March 31, is somewhere near $27,648,000, according to figures in reports available to parliament today.

It should not be my job to bring this before the committee. I say government members should have picked it up, because the statement contained in this article is false and misleading. Certainly it does not reflect the true position of the organization to which reference is made. I like to give credit where credit is due. A number of organizations are mentioned here. These are under the jurisdiction of the government, and I say that not only have they done a good job from a financial standpoint, but they have done an excellent job from the standpoint of service.

I shall read further from the article just to show how it is juggled and made to mislead the public. I know that the people who own the Ottawa Journal and who write its editorials do not believe in government enterprise, but I think they should be at least honest when they write this kind of thing for public consumption. Under the paragraph headed "Bank of Canada Ahead" they say:

> Some institutions did very well—like the Bank of Canada, which reported a profit of $20,667,378. But the Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation went in the hole $14,910,943.
> Eldorado Mining Company, plucking wealth in uranium and associated minerals from the Northwest Territories, produced a neat $1,335,399 profit for the government, but the national harbours board took it away again with a loss of $1,493,517.
> Nineteen organizations under government control, including the Canadian National Railways, produced a total profit of $36,723,842 and a loss of $64,371,884.

Would not someone outside the house reading that find it rather peculiar? It is stated here that while these corporations had a total profit of over $36 million, they had a deficit of over $64 million. It is hard to figure that out. However, the propaganda is designed to discourage government enterprise. Then they go on to say:

In the profit column were these others: Farm loan board, $148,488; foreign exchange control board, $8,438,081; Northwest Territories Power, $63,681; Central Mortgage and Housing, $4,032,195; Canadian Patents and Development Limited, $73,452; Commodity Credit Corporation $234,352; Northern Transportation Corporation, $1,024,136; Polymer Corporation $403,542 and Sugar Stabilization Corporation, $303,228.

In the loss column were: Fish prices support board, $868,793; Export Credits Insurance, $34,515; Canadian National Railways, $42,043,026; Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, $460,497.

My reason for getting up at this time is the same reason I have given on every other occasion when the totals for government enterprises—and there is a considerable number of them—are given. They did not have a deficit of $27,648,000 as indicated in this press dispatch. In the dispatch are lumped what are called the deficits of the Canadian National Railways, so that the whole operation is discredited. If that so-called deficit is taken out, the over-all operating profit of these businesses amounts to over $15 million. This $42 million that they bring in, for public consumption, as a deficit in the operations of the Canadian National Railways, is no such thing; and the newspapers of this country should be made to understand that. That is a fixed debt of interest on old bonds taken over from defunct railways and harnessed to the Canadian National Railways for years and years. They are old historic bookkeeping records.

I rise at this time to point out that most of the organizations set out in this press statement are service organizations and are not designed to amass profits. Seventy-five per cent of the organizations referred to in this press statement, such as the harbours board and the commodity stabilization corporation, are maintained by the government to give service to the people of Canada which they could not get from any other organization. I thought that particular press statement should be straightened out on the record of this house.

Mr. McLure: I have tried to point out to the minister on several occasions the difference between deficit and service, and this time I shall direct my remarks to his two officials in order that they may grasp the idea. The government owns the Abegweit and the Prince Edward Island, which are sublet to the Canadian National Railways, who operate them in fulfilment of a contract entered into with the province of Prince Edward Island in 1873. Why should this be shown as a deficit when it really represents a service that is being given? If there is a shortage as between the government and the subcontractors it should not appear against Prince Edward Island as a deficit. I cannot understand why the government persists in showing it in this way. If the officials will look up the meaning of deficit and service I think they will realize that it should not appear as a deficit. As long as it does appear in this way I shall bring it to the attention of the minister.

Item agreed to.

National harbours board—

560. To provide for payment to national harbours board of the amount hereinafter set forth to be applied in payment of the deficit (exclusive of interest on dominion government advances and depreciation on capital structures) arising in the calendar year 1950, in the operation of the Churchill harbour, $203,100.

Mr. Diefenbaker: To what degree is it expected the facilities at Churchill will be used this year?

Mr. Chevrier: I would think to the same extent as last year.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Two or three days ago the press carried an item to the effect that it was not expected that much wheat would be shipped through the port this year. If I remember correctly, it was intimated that only about 40 per cent of what was shipped last year would be shipped in the coming season.

Mr. Chevrier: When the discussion was had on this item earlier my information was that about five million bushels, perhaps more or less, would be shipped, an amount similar to that shipped last year. I have no different information today, but it is quite possible that there will not be that amount. It is difficult at this stage to say exactly what there will be. All I can say is that it is anticipated it will be about the same.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—

787. Nautical service administration—further amount required, $275,000.

Mr. Green: Apparently this is for further vocational training for the merchant navy men. The minister will remember that earlier in the session I asked him to relax the regulations applying to this training and I would be grateful if he would state whether he is prepared to do that.

Mr. Chevrier: This amount is exclusively for vocational training, and is in addition to the amount already voted in the main estimates for that purpose. The hon. member asked that I give consideration to relaxing the provisions of the order in council. I did give consideration to that in a general way and I have to say that until such time as it can be ascertained what the effect will be of the shipping policy it will be difficult to relax the terms of the order in council. We feel that there is sufficient here to look after the position as it now stands. If it should aggravate itself, then I shall be glad to look at it again.

Mr. Green: Will any of this vote be used for the training of those men who served in the merchant navy but are not presently eligible or those younger men who joined the merchant navy since the war and who have lost their jobs because their ships have been transferred to British registry?

Mr. Chevrier: This vote is available to those in receipt of either one or other bonus and who apply for vocational training.

Mr. Green: It is still confined to those eligible under the old provisions?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Green: How many men remain in the Canadian merchant navy?

Mr. Chevrier: At the end of 1949, 3,225.

Mr. Green: That was six months ago.

Mr. Chevrier: That is the position today, roughly.

Mr. Green: Quite a few ships have been transferred to British registry since then.

Mr. Chevrier: It will be some time before it will be possible to ascertain the actual number of seamen affected.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—

788. Marine service steamers, including icebreakers —maintenance operation and repairs—further amount required, $600,000.

Mr. Higgins: Is there going to be any extension of the icebreaking service? I am thinking particularly of North Sydney where many times during the year the ferry cannot get in and has to use Louisburg and more particularly Corner Brook, Newfoundland.

Mr. Chevrier: This item is to provide for the operation of two weather ships on the Pacific coast.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—

791. To authorize the write-off from active assets to consolidated deficit account of the balances of advances or loans made to the Halifax and Sydney pilotage districts, $8,359.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Can the minister give some information with respect to this item?

Mr. Chevrier: This is for the operation of pilot ships and to provide for the purchase of a ship at Saint John.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Will that be purchased by tender, or in what way?

Mr. Chevrier: That has not yet been decided.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): The contract has not been let?

Mr. Chevrier: No.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): What are the specifications? Is this to be a wooden vessel?

Mr. Chevrier: I should think it would be of about the same type as that in use at Saint John; 65 feet long, I am told.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Will tenders be called?

Mr. Chevrier: I am not in a position to answer that question.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): In this connection I want to point out that at Port Greville, near Parrsboro, there is a shipbuilding yard as good as any now remaining in the maritime provinces. It has been in operation for a great many years, and has skilled, experienced workmen. The work put out by that yard is equal to the best; it is so good and reliable that inspectors are not required to examine and check it. There could be no question as to the quality of the work done there. There could be no question as to this yard being deserving, and no question as to the whole community being deserving of special consideration when this contract is let, since they have suffered through lack of employment and by the discontinuance of the ferry service. I would like some assurance from the minister that this yard will be given consideration and that the contract will not be let without tenders being called. I think that is the least we should expect, and the least the minister should be prepared to undertake.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I suppose it must, if I cannot get any assurance from the minister.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sorry, but I cannot give that assurance to the hon. member.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—

793. To provide for the construction of a general service workboat for use at St. John's, Nfld.—capital, $38,000.

Mr. Higgins: Would the minister outline what this item actually means?

Mr. Chevrier: It is for the construction of a small wooden general service workboat to work in ice for local lighthouse supply and buoy work in Newfoundland coastal waters, where required.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I ask the minister a similar question with respect to this boat. Will it be built under contract, and will such yards as I have referred to be given an opportunity to tender?

Mr. Chevrier: That has not been decided yet.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): And the minister is not prepared to give any assurance?

Mr. Chevrier: That is right; I cannot give that assurance.

Mr. Higgins: Where is it proposed to construct this boat?

Mr. Chevrier: That has not yet been determined.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—

794. To provide towards the construction of a lighthouse supply and buoy vessel for the east coast (estimated cost $1,725,000)—capital, $103,000.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): The same questions would apply to this item.

Mr. Chevrier: No; this boat has been completed, and this is the last payment.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Where was it built?

Mr. Chevrier: By Vickers.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): A steel boat?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, and it is now in operation.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—

796. To provide for the construction of a general service workboat to be operated out of Parry Sound, Ont., agency—capital, $12,000.

Mr. Fraser: What is this for? It seems a small amount.

Mr. Chevrier: This is a small service workboat in the Parry Sound area.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—

797. To provide towards the construction of a lighthouse supply and buoy tender vessel for service at Victoria, B.C. (estimated cost $1,100,000)—capital, $100,000.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): What is this appropriation for?

Mr. Chevrier: This is the last payment on the Alexander Mackenzie, a ship for service on the west coast.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—

799. To provide towards the reconditioning and refitting of vessels for Pacific ocean weather station "P" and the expense of transporting vessels to station operating base—capital, $960,000.

Mr. Green: Will the minister explain this?

Mr. Chevrier: This is for the the cost of construction and reconversion of two weather ships for the west coast.

Mr. Green: Is that the total cost of the two ships?

Mr. Chevrier: Together with item 788 that is the cost of three ships, though one is going to be transferred from the east coast to the west coast.

Mr. Green: How many weather ships will Canada have on the Pacific?

Mr. Chevrier: One station and three vessels.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): These last three items were all to provide for boats on the west coast.

Mr. Chevrier: The last two; but there are several in there for the east coast.

Item agreed to.

Railway service—

800. To provide towards the construction of an auto-ferry vessel for service between North Sydney, N.S., and Port aux Basques, Nfld.—capital, $300,000.

Mr. Hatfield: Will this vessel take trucks, or is it only for automobiles?

Mr. Chevrier: My information is that it will include accommodation for motor vehicles, and I take that to include trucks.

Mr. Hatfield: How about the car ferry from Yarmouth to some point in Maine? Has that been put into service yet?

Mr. Chevrier: Far from having been put into service, the matter has not been finally determined. The general policy has been laid down in accordance with the statement I made in the house some months ago. At that time I indicated that a committee of representatives of the Canadian National, the province of Nova Scotia, the Canadian maritime commission and others would be established to decide upon the terminals and the plans and specifications.

Mr. Hatfield: The terminal in Maine has not been decided yet?

Mr. Chevrier: Not yet.

Mr. Hatfield: How about having that boat call at Saint John?

Mr. Chevrier: That has been given consideration by the committee.

Mr. Higgins: Would the minister mind giving me a few details as to the specifications of this boat? I have already thanked him for making provision in the estimates for it, but I should like some further information. I presume this is the first payment?

Mr. Chevrier: All I can say is that this is to provide a sufficient amount for the plans and specifications for the construction of this ship.

Mr. Higgins: When would you expect it to be completed?

Mr. Chevrier: I would not think before the end of 1951, and that is conjecture.

Mr. Higgins: Has the minister any idea of the size or anything of the kind?

Mr. Chevrier: Not yet.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Is this to be a wooden or steel vessel?

Mr. Chevrier: That has not been determined, but since it is an automobile ferry I should think it would be built of steel.

Mr. Hatfield: Has any consideration been given to a car ferry from Sydney to Newfoundland, the same as we had operating to Prince Edward Island before the wide gauge was put on the island? They had a car ferry that took the large cars over and then transferred goods from the small cars on the island. That saved a great deal of expense in handling goods.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sorry to say that matter has not been considered.

Item agreed to.

Railway service—

801. To reimburse the Canadian National Railway Company for expenditures to be incurred for a special railway maintenance work program in the province of Newfoundland, $750,000.

Mr. Higgins: Would the minister give a few details on this?

Mr. Chevrier: This is to provide additional employment in Newfoundland by way of a special railway maintenance work program which will be carried out by the Canadian National during the summer and autumn months of 1950.

Item agreed to.

General—

803. To provide for the expenses of the royal commission on national transportation—further amount required, $94,545.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What has been the total cost of the royal commission to date?

Mr. Chevrier: $277,835.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it anticipated that this amount of $94,545 will be sufficient to complete the work of the commission?

Mr. Chevrier: I have no assurance, but I hope it will.

Item agreed to.

Air service—

Civil aviation division—

Airways and airports—

804. Construction and improvements, including radio facilities—capital—further amount required, $1,101,000.

Mr. Green: On May 26 I asked the minister whether any money would be provided this year for extending the runways at the Vancouver airport in order that trans-Pacific planes could be adequately served there. At that time he said he would give the matter consideration, but he was not sure whether there would be anything included in the supplementary estimates. Is there any money included in this vote of $1,100,000 for that purpose?

Mr. Chevrier: No, there is not.

Mr. Green: Is there to be anything done during this fiscal year about those runways?

Mr. Chevrier: I would not say there is to be nothing done about them, but there is no money provided in these supplementary estimates.

Mr. Green: Is there money provided in any vote?

Mr. Chevrier: No, there is not.

Mr. Green: I do think that might be quite serious, in view of the situation in the Pacific.

Mr. Chevrier: I can assure my hon. friend that I am familiar with the position; I know the implications of it. I have seen at least two groups from Vancouver who have made representations to that effect, and I have told them what the position was, part of which I have already put on record. I can only say I am sorry there is no item in here to provide for that.

Mr. Green: Is there any way by which that work could be commenced during this fiscal year?

Mr. Chevrier: I hardly think so.

Mr. McLure: Is there an amount in this vote 804 covering the Charlottetown airport?

Mr. Chevrier: No. There is no amount provided for the Charlottetown airport here, but there was in the main estimates. There is nothing in the supplementaries.

Mr. Higgins: I asked the minister some time ago about the lengthening of the runways at Gander. He told me it was not the intention to lengthen the runways this year at least. I would ask him to reconsider that decision because of the facts that have come to my attention recently, and which I have drawn to the attention of the Minister of National Defence.

As a result of the seepage of water last fall the runways were heaved by the frost during the winter, and they are now in very bad condition. They have been dug up in several places and resurfaced, and the whole runway system now resembles a patchwork quilt. Heavy planes like the Boeing are unable to take off from Gander except when the temperature is under 40 degrees, and that does not happen too often at this time of year. On one occasion during the past few weeks one of these heavy aircraft had to dump 1,500 pounds of cargo before it could take off. That seems to me a rather impossible situation at an airport such as this, and I wish the minister would look into the matter.

Mr. Chevrier: I shall be glad to take a look at it.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Would the minister advise what airports are included in this amount of $1,101,000?

Mr. Chevrier: There is a long list of small items for various airports which would be too lengthy to put on the record. There is Fort Smith, $10,000; Goose Bay, $10,000; Lethbridge, $22,000; Norman Wells, $10,000 and Prince George, $30,000.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Perhaps the minister could put them on the record.

Mr. Chevrier: I would rather not do that. Perhaps I should state to the hon. member that there is an item of $70,000 for Fredericton, and there was a provision in the main estimates for substantial expenditures in the maritime provinces.

Mr. Hatfield: Will this amount be used for the extension of the Fredericton airport?

Mr. Chevrier: It is for the construction of a radial range being transferred from Blissville to Fredericton.

Item agreed to.

Civil aviation division—

806. Contributions, subject to the approval of the governor in council, to assist municipalities to improve existing airports or to provide new airports, the sites of which have been provided by such municipalities—further amount required, $127,000.

Mr. Herridge: I am not going to detain the house long. I have been quiescent throughout the minister's estimates, but I do want to mention one subject which I missed on the main estimates because I was called to British Columbia in a hurry. I am concerned about assistance to the municipal airport at Castlegar which is owned by the city of Nelson and the villages of Castlegar and Kinnaird. I think the minister and his officials are well acquainted with the situation. It is a most important airport so far as the southern interior is concerned. I believe it deserves special consideration, because the local people have done a lot themselves. I am not going to read the details, but the local people and the Canadian Pacific Air Lines since 1945 have spent a total of $12,495. Of course, the Canadian Pacific Airlines has spent the larger amount of that. I think they have petitioned the minister for assistance, and I understand they require a minimum of about $35,000 to do the necessary work to put this airport in first-class condition. There is the grading of the north end of the field, $25,000; gravelling the taxi strip at the edge of the field, $10,000; new construction for extension at south end of field, $5,000.

I brought this matter up when I first came to Ottawa, and discovered then that the government did not assist airports not owned by municipalities. I suggested the people should get a municipality to own it, and they have done that. They have regularized everything, so that all that is necessary is for the minister to include an item in his next estimates.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): This item of $127,000 covers assistance to municipalities to improve existing airports. When this subject was being discussed on the main estimates, I pointed out the position of the Amherst airport. I am not going to repeat what I said at that time, except to advise the minister that I sent a copy of Hansard to the mayor of the town of Amherst. I had a telegram from him, which unfortunately I have not with me at the moment or I would read it into the record, stating positively that the town of Amherst had never taken over this airport from the department after the close of the war. This is in direct contradiction to what the minister said was his understanding. Some minor repairs are necessary, and it is urgent that they be undertaken or the airport will deteriorate rapidly. The town certainly desires, in view of what it has done heretofore, that the department shall not allow this airport to deteriorate to a point where it would not be useful. All I am going to do is to ask the minister if he will give special consideration to the communication from the mayor of Amherst, which I shall send him, and let the mayor know just what the department is able to do.

Mr. Chevrier: If the hon. member will send me the correspondence he has received from the mayor, I shall be glad to give it my attention.

Mr. Hatfield: Will the minister say if it is the intention of the department to complete the Fredericton airport this summer?

Mr. Chevrier: This vote provides for assistance to municipalities.

Mr. Hatfield: Is that not a municipal airport?

Mr. Chevrier: Fredericton is covered by a separate vote which was approved in the main estimates.

Item agreed to.

Civil aviation division—

807. Contribution to the South Pacific air transport council as Canada's share towards the maintenance and operation of air transport facilities in the south Pacific—further amount required, $112,500.

Mr. Knowles: When the corresponding item on the main estimates was before us, an amount of $112,000, the minister indicated that this was for the purpose of paying towards the maintenance and operation of air transport facilities in the south Pacific, and that the only Canadian line making use of those facilities was the Canadian Pacific Air Lines. Is that still the case, and what is the reason for the increase of this figure from $112,000 to a total now of $224,500?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, Mr. Chairman, by virtue of an understanding or undertaking given by Canada at the South Pacific Air Transport Council, it was decided that we would pay a portion of the costs of maintenance and operation of air transport facilities in the south Pacific. Along with Australia, New Zealand, Fiji and the United Kingdom, we were assessed a certain amount. When the main estimates came forward, it was not determined what the full amount was. When the main estimates came forward all we had was the current expenses. They amounted to $112,500. This is for the other.

Mr. Knowles: The other was $112,000.

Mr. Chevrier: It is the same as this, I am told.

Mr. Knowles: I am sorry, but the other was $112,000; that is item 509.

Mr. Chevrier: And so is this.

Mr. Knowles: This one is $112,500.

Mr. Chevrier: It is the same amount.

Mr. Knowles: I will not fight with you about it. There is $500 difference, though. That is still a lot of money to me.

Item agreed to.

Radio division—

810. Administration of the Radio Act and regulations—further amount required, $59,520.

Mr. Fraser: We have to buy radio licences for our cars. From people who have to travel some distance over the highways I have had a number of complaints that there is a constant leak from the power lines along the highways. Is there any way the minister's department checks into that matter? Is there anything that can be done about it?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. That is provided for in a vote in the main estimates, radio interference. If there is any particular case that my hon. friend has in mind, and he will bring it to my attention, I will see that it is investigated. But it is not covered in this vote.

Mr. Fraser: I think that all the minister has to do is to turn on his radio when he is travelling along where the power lines come near the road, and he will have trouble without my telling him any more about it.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not in the fortunate position of having a radio in my car.

Mr. Fraser: The minister evidently knows what it is; where you come to a power line, the radios are no good.

Item agreed to.

Radio division—

811. Telegraph and telephone service—construction and improvements—further amount required, $38,650.

Mr. Higgins: Has the minister received any request for the establishment of telephonic communication between the island of Twillingate and the mainland of Newfoundland? I refer to an application from a private corporation.

Mr. Chevrier: I receive hundreds of applications. I may well have received it and not have it before me at the moment. But I shall be glad to inquire.

Mr. Higgins: At Twillingate, which is the home of the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay, one of our larger hospitals is situated. There is now only telegraph communication, and I believe the company that is formed proposes to establish telephone communication. There is merely the little matter of competition with the C.N.R. telegraphs. The hospital is so important, serving 40,000 people, that I suggest that when the minister gets the application, if he has not already received it, he give it every consideration, because it is an important matter.

Item agreed to.

Canadian maritime commission—

812. Mail subsidies and steamship subventions, as detailed in the estimates—further amount required, $122,000.

Mr. Green: To what company on the west coast is the $40,000 of this subsidy paid?

Mr. Chevrier: Union Steamships.

Mr. Green: The full amount of $40,000?

Mr. Chevrier: I am sorry; I have not the detail before me, but I gave that on the original estimate when it came up a few moments ago.

Mr. Green: It is the service from Victoria to the west coast of Vancouver island, and I do not think they have a ship on that run.

Mr. Chevrier: This is for an additional $40,000 to Union Steamships.

Mr. Green: That means a total of $385,000?

Mr. Chevrier: That is right.

Mr. Green: Can the minister give us any details of this particular service?

Mr. Chevrier: I am sorry, but I have not the supplementary estimates here. I know I should have them. I thought I had them. I can give my hon. friend the details; perhaps he will allow me to send them to him. Oh, I am sorry, but I was in error. The subsidy is altogether $40,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Item agreed to.

Loans and investments—National harbours board—

819. Advances to national harbours board, subject to the provisions of section 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, to meet expenditures applicable to the calendar year 1950 on the following account: reconstruction and capital expenditures—Montreal—further amount required, $300,000.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): There is $300,000 in this vote?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): What is this for?

Mr. Chevrier: This is to pay for the structural steel purchased directly by the board for the shed in Montreal harbour.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): If this is the last item, I have one question to ask the minister arising out of the main estimates. I asked him what had been the total cost of dredging the main channel of the St. Lawrence, and he was not able at the moment to answer me. I could well understand that. But he said he would get the information and give it to me later. I should like to have it. It would not include the actual dredging or improvement in Montreal harbour, but I wanted it for the main channel.

Mr. Chevrier: That information has been obtained for me, and I thought I had it in my files, but unfortunately I have not. I am afraid I shall have to ask my hon. friend if he will allow me to send it to him by mail.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Customs and excise divisions—

259. General administration, $1,687,155.

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Chairman, this appropriation of the Department of National Revenue is for the sub-department of customs and excise divisions. The total amount requested in the four customs-excise votes for 1950-51 is $20,886,229, an increase of $1,560,628 over the amount requested last year.

Of the total amount requested, 82·8 per cent represents salaries, and the increase over last year's estimates is due to higher salary costs. As regards non-salary items, we are budgeting for an over-all reduction of $105,888 compared with last year, but the higher salary costs result in the net increase of $1,560,628 mentioned previously.

The principal function of the customs and excise divisions is the collection of revenue—customs and excise duties and taxes. It is of interest that our pre-war net customs-excise revenue in the year 1938-39 was $292 million, while our estimates for that year totalled $9,861,000. This year our estimates total a little over twice as much as they did in 1938-39, but our net revenue for 1949-50 of $1,019 million represents an increase of over three times the pre-war customs-excise revenue. In addition to the increased revenue collected, there has been a marked increase in administrative volume, since customs and excise has had to take on work connected with foreign exchange control, import quotas, et cetera, which have materially increased the work load. All this has been accomplished with a staff increase of less than forty per cent over the pre-war period.

Mr. Fleming: There is a matter which I should like to bring to the attention of the minister, if indeed it has not already been brought to his attention. It has to do with the customs service for the city of Toronto, and the methods now followed of selling goods that have been placed under seizure. According to my information the methods now being followed are not efficient, and are not yielding the full value that could be realized on the sale of goods. There was a time when goods were sold at auction by true auctioneers who gave adequate publicity to the sale. According to my present information that method was abandoned some time ago as a result of some patronage difficulties that the government encountered, and now the sales are simply carried through by members of the staff of the department who are not qualified as auctioneers.

Here is a situation where more money could be yielded to the public treasury if efficient methods were followed in realizing the utmost possible on goods under seizure. I would ask the minister to look into this matter, and give it his personal attention because, according to the information I have, much more could be realized on the sales if efficient auctioneering methods were followed.

Mr. McCann: I had not any knowledge that the method of disposal of seized goods had been changed. Notice of the auction is given to the public press and the goods are sold by auction. It may well be that there is a difference in the classes of auctioneers. Some auctioneers may be able to get a better price for goods than others, but the best possible price is realized when goods under seizure are disposed of. However I shall be glad to look into the suggestions of the hon. member for Eglinton, and if the method is not up to date we shall bring it up to date.

Mr. Fulton: If I may, I should like to express to the minister my own personal appreciation, and I am sure my feeling is shared by others, of the statement that he gave us at the introduction of his estimates. It is very helpful to hon. members and to the whole country to understand the scope of operation of a department and some of the reasons for changes, if changes should be made, and I hope that the habit will spread to others besides the present minister.

What I want to ask is I think perhaps best asked on this item, although if there is another item on which the minister would prefer to have me bring it up I shall be glad to do so. It has to do with the question of space being acquired or arranged for by the Department of National Revenue in the various cities across Canada. As I understand the practice, it is that the department indicates to the Department of Public Works what space is necessary and the arrangements for the space are actually made by public works. Is that correct?

Mr. McCann: Yes.

Mr. Fulton: In the case of rented premises who pays the rental, public works or national revenue?

Mr. McCann: I think, Mr. Chairman, certainly in the case instanced by the hon. gentleman, the rent would be paid by public works as a matter of general policy, since public works supplies the buildings that are required by other departments. If the Department of Public Works supplied a building to the Post Office Department the post office would get it free; but if they supplied the space I presume they would pay the rent. It really does not make an awful lot of difference because it has to come out of the same pocket, but it may be charged to a different department. The department in question would ask for an appropriation to meet that amount.

Mr. Fulton: I think it might make some difference in keeping what is obtained strictly in line with what is required. If the department had to pay its own way and showed that rent as a charge or as a dispersal it might make a difference. What inquiries are made when the Department of National Revenue requisitions, as I think it is called, for space with the Department of Public Works? What inquiries are made as to whether the actual amount of space asked for is in fact needed and occupied? Can the minister say what the relationship is between the two departments?

Mr. McCann: Yes. Our needs are made known to the Department of Public Works. Just at the moment we are discussing the matter of customs and excise. I presume the hon. member's question refers to customs houses. In a growing community we would be guided by the amount of business in that particular community. With reference to the location, if we are near a harbour the proper place for a customs house is in the vicinity of where your business is. In some localities along the United States-Canadian border, where there are crossing points, we build a number of these places ourselves. All of these matters are given consideration, and most are made known to the Department of Public Works, and they say as to the amount of space, accommodation and refinements and the like that are needed.

Mr. Low: Can the minister tell the committee what is being done to inform Canadian tourists travelling in the United States about restrictions on materials that they may bring in from the United States?

Mr. McCann: When they get the passage card or permit, if they are driving a car out, that information is usually printed. I think the information is pretty well known that after a stay of forty-eight hours a Canadian citizen coming back from the United States can bring in goods to the value of $100, and that that cannot be repeated within a period of four months. Where many people make a mistake is that they do not make a declaration of these goods when they are asked. Even if they bring in $90 worth of goods they are supposed to make a declaration. They are asked by the customs officials probably two or three times if they have anything to declare. If they say no, and a seizure is made, the goods become the property of the crown. They can be fined for a breach of the Customs Act and the vehicle in which they bring the smuggled goods can be confiscated. As I say, these regulations are generally known. In case they are not known we print the information and it is clearly exposed at all the customs houses. In addition to that, on the permit which they take out with their car the information is given.

Mr. Low: Trouble arises sometimes when people do not know that there are prohibited goods. I am just wondering whether anything is done to inform them of that when they get their permit. Are they told that there are certain things they cannot bring back? As I understand, there are certain electrical goods that they cannot bring back even if they purchase them for less than $100.

Mr. McCann: Under $100 I think there is nothing prohibited. Any person who is travelling from Canada to the United States and who has not that information can easily get it at the customs houses.

Mr. Fraser: The minister said that nothing is prohibited. If a man brought in a commercial toaster for which he paid $99 it would be prohibited.

Mr. McCann: Under the act it is for personal use, and in baggage which can be carried.

Mr. Fraser: I think that is what the hon. member wanted to get across. You are not allowed to bring commercial goods into the country free.

Mr. McCann: That is true. It is for personal use.

Mr. Catherwood: I understand there are some changes in the regulations as to a farmer charging profits and losses to a succeeding year. I wonder whether the minister will explain that.

Mr. McCann: I think the hon. gentleman is confusing the taxation division with customs and excise. I would ask him to wait until the taxation division is called.

Mr. Fulton: Could the minister tell us what the guarantee fund is? In the details for the customs and excise divisions there is a comparatively small amount for the guarantee fund. Is that a fund to guarantee against wrongful action of customs inspectors, or something like that?

Mr. McCann: That is right.

Mr. Fulton: How is it accumulated, where is it held, and what sort of offence would it cover?

[Mr. McCann.]

Mr. McCann: It covers defalcations of an officer collecting money.

Mr. Fulton: A sort of insurance fund to reimburse the treasury?

Mr. McCann: Yes.

Mr. Fulton: Would it apply to reimburse a person duties wrongfully charged by a customs officer?

Mr. McCann: No, that would be done by remission.

Mr. Fulton: What were the expenditures in the last year for travelling in connection with the administration item?

Mr. McCann: The amount spent under that item was $24,977.

Mr. Fulton: What is the total of the guarantee fund? Is it carried from year to year, and is it cumulative?

Mr. McCann: The guarantee fund is $13,900.

Mr. Fulton: Is that under the administration item?

Mr. McCann: No, under that item it is $300; under inspection it is $1,600; and under ports it is $12,000.

Mr. Fulton: Is the fund cumulative and carried forward with additions from year to year? Is there a larger total fund than that shown in this year's estimates?

Mr. McCann: No, this is like paying an insurance company. This is to reimburse the department for any loss sustained through defalcations of employees.

Mr. Fulton: What does treasury board do with this? Let us suppose that $13,000 comes in, and there are defalcations of only $1,000, or none at all; next year another $13,000 is put in.

Mr. McCann: Yes.

Mr. Fulton: Is that held in treasury board as a separate fund?

Mr. McCann: No, the surplus goes back into the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. McLure: I notice the total we are asked to vote for the Department of National Revenue is $51,950,979. Out of this amount 26 per cent or $13,485,000 is given to the department as a blank cheque for the payment of temporary employees. We have had no breakdown of that amount, except as to the number of employees. We have never had that information before. In another year I would ask the department to give us details of this large amount. For instance, they could tell us whether there were ten or fifteen clerks at $5,000 each, and so many more at $4,000, the same as they do in connection with permanent civil servants. That would give us some idea of where this amount, which is more than a quarter of the total vote, goes. One could then find out how many of those temporary employees have been in the service for a good many years and have never been made permanent.

Mr. McCann: Before we proceed further may I point out that the hon. member is referring to the estimates of all branches of this department. There are two distinct sections, that having to do with customs and excise, with which we are now dealing, and the other dealing with the taxation division. The total appropriation for the customs and excise divisions is $20,886,229—and not $50 million, as the hon. member indicated.

Mr. McLure: I was referring to the total for the whole department.

Mr. McCann: If the hon. member would turn to the details at page 191 he would find information concerning salaries both below and above $5,000. He will see reference there to the deputy minister and to the assistant deputy ministers. If there is any further information the hon. member wishes to have, I can supply it.

Mr. McLure: I am asking for information about temporary assistants.

Mr. McCann: This gives the salaries of permanent employees but it lists the number of permanent and temporary employees.

Mr. McLure: But it does not give any information about the temporary employees, other than the number of them.

Mr. McCann: It does not give detailed information with respect to the salaries of temporary employees, that is right.

Item agreed to.

Customs and excise divisions—

718. Ports, outports and preventive stations, including pay for overtime, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, and buildings and rentals for temporary purposes—further amount required, $255,557.

Mr. Fleming: Would the minister explain this item?

Mr. McCann: The details are given at page 29 of the further supplementary estimates. There are additional salaries for permanent employees amounting to $19,340, and for temporary assistance $112,785. In the summertime when the tourist trade is at its peak it is necessary to employ a number of people temporarily at border points. Students and others are given the opportunity to do this work. These two items I have mentioned total $132,125. Then we require $50,000 for stamps and labels, principally excise stamps to be placed on tobacco and liquor. Then there is an item for the acquisition or construction of buildings and works, including the acquisition of land, to an amount of $73,432. All these items total $255,557.

This item for the acquisition or construction of buildings and works is here because in small places, with buildings costing less than $5,000, the department has the authority to go ahead with construction, on tender.

Mr. Fleming: This would seem to be an addition to item 261. Where are these new buildings to be erected? If there is a large number of them, would he indicate the number and give some idea as to their distribution?

Mr. McCann: There are to be two additional buildings at Little Gold Creek in the Yukon, and they will cost $25,000. Then there is an amount in the new housing item to be spent at Gander, where we expect to construct six units, and at Goose Bay four units. At Sandspit, British Columbia, there is one; at Armstrong, Quebec, seven. Those are for housing for our employees and the total is $54,000. Then at Chief Mountain, Alberta, three. That is the housing program for this year, totalling $279,000, with the additional supplementaries. It includes the construction of ten temporary buildings and residences at border points, $150,000, plus the ones I have mentioned. In addition, Fort Nelson, $18,000 and Grand Falls, $10,500.

Item agreed to.

Taxation division—

263. General administration, $1,778,855.

Mr. Fulton: Is the minister going to make a statement on this item similar to the one he made on customs and excise?

Mr. McCann: Mr. Chairman, this part of the estimates has to do with the other division of national revenue known as the taxation division. Hon. members might be assisted in their consideration of the estimates of the taxation division, Department of National Revenue, if I made a few remarks regarding the larger items:

Reference to the estimates—page 35—will show that the total amount required is $29,288,350. This compares with the estimates for the year 1949-50 of $31,315,212, with actual expenditures for the year 1949-50 of $28,029,214.

Of the $29,288,350 required, $25,330,550 represents salaries and the salary item compares with actual expenditures for 1949-50 of $24,891,263. There has been a major change in the composition of the salary item. When the last report to the house on estimates was made I said that the staff at

October 31, 1949, consisted of 10,963 persons. At the end of May, 1950, this figure had declined to 10,477, composed of 5,231 permanent employees and 5,246 temporary employees. At the end of March, 1949, there were 11,704 employees, of whom 2,773 were permanent.

The estimates before you provide only for positions occupied at the time the estimates were prepared and a small number of student assistants, 210, taken on in the various district offices for the summer to assist in clearing peak-loads of work. There is a steady, continuing shrinkage in staff due largely to the introduction of new methods and procedures and to the fact that, through prodigous efforts last year, the great backlog of work accumulated during the war has been cleared. I am unable to forecast accurately what the ultimate shrinkage in personnel will amount to, but I am satisfied that it will be substantial and I hope that, by the end of the current fiscal year, I shall be in a position to make a more realistic statement as to the level at which the staff will tend to become stable.

Hon. members will be interested to know that as of this date all assessments for 1948 and prior years have been made, with few minor exceptions which have arisen for reasons outside the control of the department. I should also add that a very substantial part of the returns filed for the year 1949 have also been assessed and that practically all refunds arising from overpayments of 1949 taxes have already been made to the taxpayers. The comparable inventories of all unassessed returns on hand at May 31 were as follows:

Of the inventory on hand at the end of May 1950, practically all are 1949 and 1950 returns, whereas a substantial part of the inventory on hand at May 31 last year consisted of returns for 1948 and prior years.

It should be added that reductions in staff do not necessarily represent comparable reductions in dollars because there are promotions, reclassifications and salary increases occurring constantly. These are very carefully screened by the department, the civil service commission and treasury board.

The second largest item to which I should like to refer briefly represents printing, stationery and equipment for which submission is made for $1,605,000. This compares with $1,610,000 in the estimates of 1949-50 and actual expenditures of $1,258,078. Included in the estimates is an amount of $188,980 covering accounts for the 1949-50 year not rendered until after the end of the fiscal year. Expenditures under this item consist largely of stationery and forms. As hon. members will understand, the consumption of forms is enormous. In addition to millions of personal returns, there are information returns and departmental forms of various kinds required in head office and district offices of the department in the handling of the large sums for the collection of which the department is responsible. Considerable progress has been made in eliminating unnecessary forms and in simplifying those in use. There has, however, been a constant increase in the cost of getting forms made. This work is handled through the office of the king's printer and I am satisfied that the greatest care is exercised in ensuring that the work is done at the lowest possible cost to the crown.

The third largest item in the estimates is travelling expenses. Figures for travelling are as follows: In the estimates of 1949-50, $1,015,500 was voted. The actual expenditures for that fiscal year were $604,708. The amount requested this year is $900,000. The amount of travelling done by officials of the department is governed almost entirely by the amount of field work done. To ensure equitable administration of the tax legislation involves a considerable amount of field work. While travelling expenses may appear to be high, I am satisfied that this amount is fully justified by the results of the work done by the officers of the department who are required to travel.

The next largest item is postage. This represents postage at the district offices. The district office postage cost covers largely communications with taxpayers, including a substantial amount of mail required to be registered. No important reduction can be anticipated in this item.

The next item to which I should like to make brief reference is legal costs. It was estimated for 1949-50 that these costs would amount to $200,000. The actual expenditures were $165,000. The amount requested this year is $200,000. The increase over the actual expenditures is due to the fact that the department expects to spend more this year in collecting overdue accounts. A program has been undertaken to ensure that taxes for 1949 and prior years will have been collected in full by the end of March, 1951. The public might as well have that known at this time. This is now possible because the assessing for those years has recently been completed and it is felt that collections must be brought into line with assessing.

I should like to add a brief word on publicity. The department's advertising costs, except for a small amount for newspaper notices, are entirely those expenditures made by way of radio and street car advertising in the spring of each year, advising taxpayers of the requirements for filing returns and endeavouring to persuade taxpayers to get their returns in early. This publicity is of assistance to the public and at the same time accelerates the flow of returns, which means that the returns can be dealt with more efficiently in the district offices.

With the very able assistance of the comptroller of the treasury and his officers, the handling of refunds of overpayments was greatly expedited this year. Between February and June 9, some 1,599,810 cheques for $44,473,335 were issued to individual taxpayers, representing overpayments of 1949 taxes. On March 31, some 8,137 cheques for $52,436,515 were issued to corporate taxpayers, representing the refundable portion of the 1944 excess profits taxes. Those two figures give a total of $100 million which was returned promptly to Canadian taxpayers in that period.

There are still in the hands of the department some 76,665 cheques payable to individual taxpayers in respect of the refundable portion of taxes. Claims for these cheques are still coming in, but at a diminishing rate. Those cheques which have not been delivered by the end of the current fiscal year will be returned at that time to treasury for cancellation.

During the fiscal year which ended March 31, 1950, some 33,395 individual taxpayers received interest of $87,040.87. This is the first time this item has appeared in departmental accounts, following the new provisions in the Income Tax Act. The smallness of the amount in relation to the refunds made is an indication of the speed with which overpayments are now being restored to the public.

I should like to place on record a short statement of comparative costs of collecting, by districts. The hon. member for Greenwood, who is not present, asked me a day or so ago if this information could be provided by provinces. That cannot be done, because some districts such as Ottawa, for example, take in portions of two provinces. The table is as follows:

Department of National Revenue
Taxation Division
Collection cost

District	1948-49 Cost per $100 collected	1949-50 Cost per $100 collected
Newfoundland	....	2.40
Charlottetown	5.16	5.86
Halifax	2.92	3.18
Saint John	2.34	3.00
Sydney	3.56	5.77
Quebec	2.35	3.33
Montreal	1.60	1.62
Sherbrooke	1.83	5.13

Edmonton	3.36	3.33
Vancouver	1.62	2.02
Yukon	2.90	2.86
District totals	1.71	1.86
Head office and other undistributed costs including printing and stationery	.34	.30
Total	2.05	2.16

The explanations I have given are for the purpose of helping hon. members to understand the estimates. I shall be glad to give any further information which may be required.

Mr. Fulton: Once again I would like to express appreciation of this quite complete statement by the minister on the operations of the department, which in addition to being informative is actually a very interesting survey of the work of the taxation division. I have just one or two comments arising out of the statement. The first has to do with the amount of overpayments refunded to individual taxpayers; I believe $44 million was the figure mentioned. In that connection I think the department is entitled to a word of commendation from those of us who are sometimes critical of the work it has done in catching up with overdue assessments. I do feel that a tremendous effort has been made by the minister, and I think those of us who have urged that this be done should express our appreciation.

It seems to me the amount of the refund of overpayments would perhaps justify some of the criticism that has been directed not to the minister but to his colleague the Minister of Finance in connection with the penalties on arrears of income tax. This $44 million refunded in overpayments would indicate that Canadians are much more prone to overpay their taxes than to deliberately underpay them. Yet I recall that in giving reasons for the quite heavy interest rate imposed as a penalty on arrears of taxes, the Minister of Finance said that was done to discourage underpayment. Certainly it cannot be said that the interest rate allowed on advance payments is any encouragement to overpay, so I believe it is a tribute to the honesty of the Canadian people and their desire to comply with the income tax laws to the very best of their ability; and when they err they do so on the right side. I am not going to press the point, because it concerns the Minister of Finance, but I believe it does reinforce our contention, which I still put forward, that the interest penalty on arrears of taxes is unfair and too heavy, particularly when, as in most cases, it can be clearly proved that the underpayment resulted from an error and not from any deliberate intent. I am interested in that figure; I think it will serve as a basis for discussion when the budgetary provisions are before us again.

The minister mentioned 76,000 cheques representing refundable portions of taxes which had not been distributed. I should like him to give us the reason for that. Is it because the addresses of the taxpayers are not now on record, or what is the reason?

Mr. McCann: We have tried every method we could think of to locate these people.

Mr. Fulton: The reason is that their addresses are not available?

Mr. McCann: Or the marital status has changed; the name has changed. Miss Jones put in her return; now she is Mrs. Brown, and has changed her residence; and unless she puts in a claim there is not much chance of locating her. I am not going to review the methods followed, but we did have a very fine follow-up system which worked well in the great majority of cases. Many people are careless about their money, however, and once it is gone they do not try to reclaim it. These refunds will not be lost. At the end of this year we have to turn these cheques back to the treasury, but people who can establish a claim after that time will do it through treasury rather than through the revenue department.

Mr. Fulton: If they establish their identity they will still be able to have the money returned?

Mr. McCann: Yes.

Mr. Fulton: The minister will remember that some time earlier I asked about the relationship between his department and the Department of Public Works. I find I should have discussed that matter under this item, because it was a taxation building rather than a customs building I had in mind. I wonder if the minister has any information on the situation in St. Catharines, where I have been informed the amount of space requisitioned and provided greatly exceeds the space at present occupied by the department.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. McCann: The explanation is that a few years ago we had a survey made by a very competent committee of outsiders, working with officials of the Department of National Revenue, in connection with the location of tax offices. At that time it was considered that it might be in the public interest to establish a tax office at St. Catharines. The department communicated with the Department of Public Works, and asked them to get us so many square feet of space. From the amount of taxes collected in a particular community we can calculate what our requirements will be. If it is decided that we need 100 square feet for each of our employees, and we have 100 employees, we shall need 10,000 or 12,000 square feet.

As things developed we found that with the great burden of work there was in connection with arrears it would not allow us to take personnel from the established offices, such as Hamilton, or Toronto, to establish a sub-office in that particular city. There were other things that entered too, such as the matter of space, and the matter of trained personnel. We shall have before us the matter of establishing a number of offices in other parts of the country. For instance, there should be an office, according to the recommendations in the report, somewhere in the north country to relieve the office in Ottawa of the amount of work it has. Primarily, though, the office should be established to give better service to the public. As I say, when we know approximately what the collections are in a district we can estimate how many people it will take to provide service. Then we can estimate the amount of floor space we shall require, and we can requisition for that. All of these things are determining factors in deciding the amount of space we need. In growing communities we feel we should make provision for the future growth of a particular district, because I think one can state without fear of contradiction that income tax collection is going to be a continuing process in this country.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, following up this question, I understand that the amount of space requisitioned at St. Catharines was 16,000 square feet. Arrangements were made through public works for the leasing of that space for five years at an annual rental of $1.75 per square foot. The income tax division took occupancy of only 7,283 square feet, or less than half of the amount requisitioned and obtained by the Department of Public Works. Then I am informed that the Department of Public Works made various attempts to sublet the surplus space, and managed to rent 1,500 feet of it at a dollar per square foot or 75 cents per square foot less than they are paying. In 1949 they sublet an additional 2,435 square feet at $1.25, or 50 cents less than the price they are paying. Up to March, 1949, or for a period of less than half the term of the lease, the Department of Public Works has experienced a direct loss of $28,000 for rental of the unoccupied space.

This brings to mind certain questions in connection with the transaction. The minister has explained why they could not occupy all the space they first wanted, but does he know whether the balance of the unoccupied space is now rented, and if so at what price?

Mr. McCann: Mr. Chairman, I would not know that. When we came to the conclusion we did not require all the space which we had requisitioned, and which had been leased for us, we informed public works of the amount we could release. It was up to them to re-rent it. At the present time the number of employees we have at St. Catharines is 18 or 20, and the space we are using is adequate for our needs.

Mr. Fulton: The minister has not got that information; it would only be with the Department of Public Works. I want to go back to a matter which was touched on before, the question of who pays the rent for this building. I would ask the minister what his attitude is to the suggestion that, in cases such as this, the Department of Public Works should be entitled to recover the loss from the requisitioning department, that is any loss it incurs by reason of not being able to sublet the surplus space or being able to sublet it only at prices lower than the original lease. It seems to me it would act as a control measure, not only for the Department of National Revenue but for all departments, if they were likely to be billed for such losses. I know that the money comes out of the same pocket, but I do not believe any department would like to have in its account a bill for space that was not used. I think such billing might act as a control measure on all departments, and would mean keeping their requisitioning of space to a minimum. I wonder if the minister, who is a financial man, would give his reaction to that suggestion?

Mr. McCann: Mr. Chairman, any comments I would make upon it would be entirely personal. I think the hon. gentleman will recognize that it has always been the policy of governments, irrespective of political shade, that all buildings are controlled by the public works department under the Public Works Act. From a strict accounting point of view, it might be better if the Post Office Department were charged rental for the buildings they occupy, and national revenue were charged for the space they occupy. However, that has not been the method. I presume if the government could be persuaded some time they would not be averse to a change in that direction if it were to be for the general advantage of the country.

Mr. Knowles: I wish to rise on a question of privilege. I realize that a decision was taken by the house last night, and I was here when it was taken, that we sit straight through today from eleven to eleven without any break. So far as I am concerned that is all right, but I would point out it is a heavy burden upon some of the people who work for us, particularly the Hansard reporters and the amanuenses upstairs. I wonder if we could not reach an agreement to recess for half an hour some time between now and eight o'clock. I do not suggest that it be at this moment, but perchance when the items of this division are finished. The reason I suggest it now is that, if we are going to do it, it would be useful for the Hansard reporters, the amanuenses and other members of the Hansard staff to know in advance. I would suggest that when we reach the end of items 263, 264 and 265, we agree to recess for thirty minutes.

Mr. McCann: Why not take the whole department first?

Mr. Knowles: I would be willing to suggest that, but I know that the member for Eglinton has a speech, which will probably not be short, on the C.B.C.

Mr. Fleming: Let me make the speech, and determine the length of it.

Mr. Knowles: If we wait until that is completed, it will be eight o'clock.

Mr. McCusker: I would suggest he make that speech during the thirty-minute recess.

The Chairman: It would have to be done by unanimous consent of the house, not the committee.

Mr. Knowles: If there were unanimous consent, the chairman might simply leave the chair for half an hour.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): We could all be of assistance to these distinguished Hansard reporters by being brief.

The Chairman: If there is not unanimous consent, we shall have to continue.

Mr. Knowles: Would the chairman inquire to ascertain whether there is unanimous consent?

The Chairman: Is there unanimous consent to the adoption of this course?

Mr. Fournier (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): No; we are here to work, and we shall work.

Mr. Hatfield: I should like to ask the minister if there is any consideration being given to the plan used in the United States, whereby when income tax returns have to be made out there is an advertisement inserted to the effect that a man will be at a certain post office in certain centres to aid the farmers and workingmen to make out their income tax returns. He is there for a week or two, depending upon the size of that centre. That has been a great help and it has collected a great deal more money for the taxation department in the United States than has any other one thing, I understand. I was wondering about it here.

Mr. McCann: That is a matter to which the department has been giving consideration. At the present time we render every assistance that we can to taxpayers to help them to make out their returns. We do not make the return for them. They make that. But the matter is being given consideration, and we hope at some future time to extend the facilities of the department in order to make it easier for farmers and other taxpayers to submit their returns.

Mr. Hatfield: That is done only in the cities where you have offices. I meant in places out in the rural districts. A great many farmers have not made out an income tax return for the simple reason that they do not know how to do it. They do not want to spend the money to hire an auditor and they just have not done it. The department have lost a great deal of money on that account.

Mr. Catherwood: I believe there are some changes made in the regulations with regard to farmers filing their income tax returns, and charging over to a succeeding year. I wonder if the minister would give the house a little clearer picture of these new regulations regarding the position of the farmer, as to the method and as to how they could carry out the new regulations of the department.

Mr. McCann: Does the hon. member refer to the matter of losses that are sustained?

Mr. Catherwood: That is right; to losses.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Fraser: No, not yet. The minister is going to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Haldimand.

Mr. McCann: The new regulation provides that losses can be carried back one year and forward for five years. The old regulation was that they could be carried back one year and forward for three; so that it gives the farmer the opportunity of spreading the losses on any of his operations over a greater period. Is that the information the hon. member wants?

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Catherwood: Yes. Is it optional with the farmer as to whether he uses that method or not?

Mr. McCann: Yes, it is optional.

Mr. Fraser: The minister's department have been kind enough to put a temporary office in Peterborough for a month before the income tax is due. Could that period not be extended a little longer, perhaps to one and a half months or two months? Last year they came in on a Saturday, the first of the month, and they had only one man there. I mentioned the matter in the house, on account of the crowd; but I discovered the reason for it. They did not think they would have many in at that time. On the Monday they had four there and they did excellent work; but they were busy all the time. They had four there for the whole month. I think if you could get two in there for a month before that, it would help a great deal.

Mr. McCann: We should be glad to consider that suggestion. If the records show that it would be of greater benefit to have them in the hon. member's particular district for six weeks rather than for four weeks, we shall carry out that suggestion. The general policy of the department is to attempt to facilitate the work which the taxpayer has to do with reference to making his return, and to make it as easy as possible for him to be accommodated by the department.

Mr. Fraser: I want to say that the Kingston office has been extremely co-operative. It has helped as much as possible. All those who were put in the Peterborough office did the work well, and everybody seemed quite satisfied.

The minister mentioned that he advertised on the radio with regard to people getting their income tax returns in. I may say that in my parliament hill broadcast at the last of March I asked the people to be sure to get their income tax returns in as soon as possible.

There was one other question I wanted to ask and it is this item. Has anything been done regarding the collection of 1942 tax? There was the uncollected half of tax that was levied, and I believe it was only for one year—they could pay on the life expectancy basis on that half. I wondered if anything else had been done regarding this collection. Some people will die and they might not leave enough to pay their income tax that is due. If it is not paid, there is an 8 per cent penalty on that.

Mr. McCann: What the hon. member is referring to is the deferred tax?

Mr. Fraser: That is right.

Mr. McCann: That there was a change in the method of collection, from the year before to the current year. The answer to his question is that nothing further has been done in that regard.

Mr. Fraser: I wonder if it would not be wise to make some suggestion to the public to get that paid because it is going to be a hardship on the heirs of an estate if they have not money enough to pay that half when the time comes.

Mr. McCann: That is a matter that the Minister of Finance has to deal with; and if he will change the law, we will carry it out.

Mr. Bryce: In an answer to the hon. member for Haldimand the minister said that the farmer could start the new system when he liked. Is that right?

Mr. McCann: No. That is not right. I did not say that.

Mr. Bryce: When can he start? I understood the minister to say that he could start when he wanted to.

Mr. McCann: This of course has to do with losses, and the farmer would not start it until he had a loss. If he had a loss in this year, he could carry it back to the previous year or retain that and carry it forward for the next five years until the time he sustained a loss.

Mr. Bryce: But if he starts the system that you are proposing to have or that is being put on the statute books, he cannot go back to the old system?

Mr. McCann: There has been no change in the system. It has only been an extension of the time giving the farmer a further benefit in which he can write off his loss against his profit.

Mr. Bryce: If he adopts that system you offer him of taking it from year to year, at no time in the future can he go back to the old system?

Mr. McCann: I think the hon. member is talking about a different thing. He is talking about the system of accounting, whether he is doing it on a cash basis or on an accrual basis. Is that not it?

Mr. Bryce: Yes.

Mr. McCann: That is a different question. If he is doing it on a cash basis, then from year to year he gives his cash receipts and his expenditures and he pays on the profit which he makes or the income. On an accrual basis he takes into account both his receipts and expenditures in any year, whether or not he has received the money in that year or made the expenditures in that year.

Mr. Bryce: If he adopts that plan, can he go back to the old system?

Mr. McCann: No. He is supposed to stick to the one system.

Mr. Hatfield: At the present time an incorporated company has six months in which to make out their returns after the close of their year. Has any consideration been given to giving that time to the farmer? That is, has any consideration been given to giving him six months to make out his income tax return?

Mr. McCann: No. The farmer makes his return at the end of December and pays 75 per cent of his tax. He then has until the end of April, like the individual taxpayer, in which to make his return.

Mr. McLure: I think the minister misunderstood me when I was mentioning the total amount for the Department of National Revenue. When I said 26 per cent was for temporary assistants I meant that that referred to the total of the whole department. We are now on item 265 of the taxation division which will probably explain more fully what I had in mind. For instance, $26,310,140 is asked for for district offices. Over 33⅓ per cent of this amount is for temporary assistants, namely, $8,566,165. We have this explanation regarding it. During the last year the permanent positions have been increased to 5,272, while the number of temporary assistants has decreased. What I was asking for in the first place was that at another session we should have a breakdown in rough figures giving us the number of grades, their salaries and so forth. The average salary for temporaries in this department is now about $1,850. If we had that information we could then calculate how many of these would eventually be made permanent.

Mr. McCann: The practice that we follow in the Department of National Revenue is the practice that is followed by all government departments. However, we will give consideration to the hon. member's suggestion.

Mr. Fulton: Can the minister tell me what progress is being made in opening up the assessment office of the taxation division in Kelowna, British Columbia? There was to be a sub-office of the Vancouver office in order to have someone there to assist the ranchers, the farmers and the businessmen of the interior in ironing out their tax problems, and helping them to get their assessments in quicker than if the office were in Vancouver.

Mr. McCann: I cannot give a very encouraging answer to that because we have not made any progress in opening up an office at Kelowna. We have one at Vancouver and one at Victoria, and up to the present time they appear to meet our needs, because in order to run a tax office you must have experienced help. You need accountants; you need auditors; you need experienced people, and it is not the easiest thing in the world to get them. When you do get them and start an office you have to get your costs down in order to justify your continuing it. As I indicated earlier the smaller the office the greater the cost.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, but I want to say this. I understood at the time that the decision was made. It was two years ago when it first came up. I was under the impression from what the minister said it was a decision which was taken, a definite decision, and that the matter would be proceeded with as soon as the department was able to get around to it. My recollection is that the minister said at that time that owing to the terrific pressure of trying to catch up with arrears of assessments they did not want to disturb the set-up in Vancouver or divert their attention by undertaking additional activities such as opening up a new office; but as soon as that pressure was off and the backlog was disposed of they would turn their attention to opening up the office. I understood the decision had been taken and they were merely waiting for the right time to implement it.

In reference to what the minister said I would point out that this office would serve a very productive area, and an area of at least a hundred thousand in population, but not a hundred thousand taxpayers, in the southern interior of the province.

Mr. McCann: With reference to the matter of opening up a tax office at Kelowna, I remember having discussed it. No decision was made. It was a decision of the committee and it was a hope of the department at that time, a hope that has not been realized.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask the minister another question or two? Has he figures of the amount of arrears of income taxes in each province? I think he gave us figures of the arrears in assessments. Has he the amount of arrears of taxes by provinces and the total for the country and the number of prosecutions by provinces in the last calendar or fiscal year, whichever is more convenient?

Mr. McCann: Our figures are not kept by provinces, because we have overlapping. Take the district right here in Ottawa. It would be foolish to have a district headquarters in Ottawa and another across the river in Hull.

[Mr. McCann.]

Mr. Fulton: I see that.

Mr. McCann: Therefore part of the province of Ontario, of the Ottawa district office, goes over into Quebec province.

Mr. Fulton: It would be more convenient if I asked for that information by districts?

Mr. McCann: Yes.

Mr. Fulton: The information I want is with reference to the arrears and the prosecutions by districts and the number of prosecutions in the last year.

Mr. McCann: I have not the arrears at the moment, but if the hon. member will look back a week or two ago he will see I made a return in answer to a question having to do with the total amount of arrears. I am not sure whether the hon. gentleman asked the question or not, but it showed the amount of arrears for a year, and from one to five years, and of all the arrears beyond five years. I remember this figure. The figure of arrears of more than five years—I remember that was away back to 1917—was only a little over $5 million.

Mr. Fulton: Was that return made by districts?

Mr. McCann: No, it was not made by districts.

Mr. Fulton: If it is not immediately available so as to be given to the committee while we are sitting, can the minister have it brought in later and tabled so that it may go on Hansard; also the number of prosecutions by districts to collect arrears of taxes?

Mr. McCann: We will try to get that information for the hon. gentleman. The prosecutions in 1949-50 under the Income War Tax Act for failure to file returns totalled 4,301. It is believed that some prosecutions were instituted against farmers in this figure, but the number has not been segregated. Prosecutions in 1949-50 for failure to deduct or remit taxes under section 92 of the Income War Tax Act or 112 of the Income Tax Act totalled 126; prosecutions in 1949-50 instituted for false or deceptive statements totalled 24. Only one of these was against a farmer.

Mr. Fulton: The minister will follow that up and give us the figures by districts?

Mr. McCann: Yes.

Mr. Fulton: I think this is my last question. The minister made reference to the amount for travelling expenses which he termed fully justified. While I do not think I would be prepared to go that far, I certainly am prepared to say that I agree with him, that, if tax enforcement is to be uniform throughout the country, then it is necessary to provide an adequate amount for travelling. But I am a little surprised that the amount should be so substantial under the administrative branch. As reported at page 198 of the details the minister is asking for $90,000 this year. I would have thought that the branch would not have needed quite as much as that, although I can appreciate that a large amount might probably be necessary in the internal inspection and verification branch of the taxation division and in the district offices in order to provide for collection and inspection, and so on. Can the minister tell us how much was spent last year in the administrative branch?

Mr. McCann: The amount spent last year in the administrative branch was $44,525.

Mr. Fulton: The minister is asking for $90,000 this year. It does seem to me to be a very large amount to ask for under branch administration when at the same time you are asking for large amounts for the field and for the districts. Why does the minister want so much more than he spent last year?

Mr. McCann: I am informed that more work will be done by head office staff in the district offices than has been done previously. Take the matter of inspection. We have inspection service, and they go out from head office and inspect all the district offices. It is just the same principle as bank inspectors. These trips are made, and our staffs go from here to Vancouver and from here to Newfoundland and to Halifax and to other offices, and that costs a good deal of money for travelling.

Mr. Fulton: Is it really felt that the amount of such liaison and inspection carried on in the past year or two has not been adequate?

Mr. McCann: No.

Mr. Fulton: And that you need to double it this year?

Mr. McCann: No, I would not admit that it has not been adequate; but this will give us the opportunity of doing it more frequently and perhaps more thoroughly.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, one remark made by the minister in his introductory statement attracted my attention. It had to do with the provision for legal fees. He mentioned that last year $131,000 was appropriated for this purpose on the taxation side of the department, and that $165,000 is sought this year.

May I say at once that where people have not paid their taxes I do not think anyone in the House of Commons is going to have any undeserved sympathy for them. We wish to see vigilant enforcement of the tax law. That, however, does not go the whole way of justifying the large increase in this item. I have found that in more cases than there is any necessity for the department engages outside counsel to represent it in taxation cases. This in many cases becomes a matter of making patronage payments.

There are most competent counsel in the minister's department; and in many of those cases where counsel from the department are appearing as junior counsel to assist someone from outside, those junior counsel do most of the work. I wish to make this observation that I think outside counsel are being retained in many more cases than they are required. Those competent counsel in the department are capable of handling more cases than they are being given the opportunity to handle at the present time.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): That is peculiarly a Toronto viewpoint. Let us suppose there is a prosecution in Dawson Creek; would the hon. member send counsel from Toronto or Ottawa to prosecute, when competent counsel could be retained in Dawson Creek?

Mr. McCann: In connection with tax collection prosecutions we are up against the best talent in business who, in the great majority of cases, within the law attempt to have their assessments reduced. I can think of cases over the last few years in which enormous amounts of money have been involved. We would be derelict in our duty if we did not employ the best counsel procurable to advocate our side of the case. That is why we have made provision for this expenditure, and it has paid profits, I am sure.

Mr. Fleming: The minister has not answered the point I have raised. Of course there always are and always will be cases where counsel from outside have to be retained. The point I make is that outside counsel are retained in many cases where they are not necessary and where they do not add anything to the competent presentation of the case made by counsel in the department.

As for the observation made by the hon. member for Cariboo, may I say that many of these cases are handled here in Ottawa. The exchequer court is trying them all the time. Counsel are often brought here by the department from outside to argue these cases. I am speaking from personal observation when I say that I think money could in many instances be saved by the department without weakening one iota the presentation of its case before our courts.

Income tax appeal board—

266. Administration expenses, $73,000.

Mr. McLure: I have in mind the case of an immigrant whom I shall call John Doe who came from England to Prince Edward Island on June 20, 1948. This man had a wife and one child. In 1948 he received no family allowance payments. The law had just been changed from three years to one year. This man filed his income tax return for the year 1949, and claimed $400 exemption for his seven-year-old child. In place of this he was allowed only $150.

This man had received family allowances for only a short time. Should the family allowance payments of a few dollars be figured in connection with his income, letting him have the total exemption of $400, or should it be figured on a basis of his receiving family allowance for the child for five months? In this way five-twelfths of $400 plus seven-twelfths of $150 would give him an exemption of $260. I understand the taxation branch do not want to allow him anything in addition to the regular $150.

Mr. McCann: The hon. member is referring to a specific case. If he would send the information to the department we would have it investigated, and the taxpayer would be given as fair treatment as it is possible to give him.

Mr. Fleming: Is the minister in a position to indicate the extent of the backlog of cases awaiting decision now by the income tax appeal board?

Mr. McCann: Yes, I can give that. This estimate is to include salary, printing, stationery and travelling expenses. There have been 290 appeals received. Appeals filed with the board up to June 22, 1950, are as follows:

Disposed of (judgments delivered)	97
Judgments expected shortly	31
Appeals settled or withdrawn	40

This gives a total of 168. Appeals yet to be considered number 122.

Mr. Fleming: Over what period of time?

Mr. McCann: Since the appeal board was established two years ago.

Item agreed to.

International shortwave broadcasting station—

267. Maintenance and operation, $1,598,400.

Mr. Fleming: This brings us to an entirely different subject. As hon. members realize, this item represents the cost of a service operated on behalf of the government by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and has nothing to do with the budget of the corporation itself. The corporation acts as the agent of the government in operating this service, which has proved to be useful and well received in countries abroad to which broadcasts have been beamed by C.B.C. in their local languages.

At the outset I should like to say that the two items under this heading were thoroughly considered by the special committee on radio broadcasting, which heard officials of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and reported favourably on them, after which the items were recommitted to this committee of supply. I express the hope that this practice will be followed in future sessions, because in that committee the items can receive a more complete study than in committee of supply.

The details of the first item of $1,598,400 appear on page 203, and among these details is a sub-item for "travelling and removal expenses and duty entertainment, $55,000." That detail is in turn broken down into the following three sub-items:

Travelling	$45,000
Removal	5,000
Duty entertainment	5,000
	$55,000

The amount of this item last year as voted was $60,000, and at first glance it might now appear that there is a reduction; but the amount actually expended was $34,868; in fact there is an increase of $20,000. The evidence submitted to the committee did not justify an increase of $20,000.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): On a point of order, may I point out that there does not appear to be a quorum in the committee.

On the count being made, more than twenty members were declared to be present.

Mr. Fleming: The facts brought forward by the officials of the corporation in support of the item and the increase of $20,000 over last year's requirements were to the effect that there was value in having the officers engaged in this international service visit the countries to which the broadcasts are carried, and in addition that there was a conference at Rapallo this year to which representatives would be sent.

It was not suggested that more than two or three officials at the most would be sent abroad in any one year for the purpose of establishing contacts with those interested in receiving these broadcasts, and the conference at Rapallo is not going to necessitate such a large expenditure as to take up the difference between the expenditure last year and the estimate this year. It is quite clear, and this was not denied in the committee, that $10,000 in addition to what was spent last year would meet the expenses of sending delegates to Rapallo and sending two or three officials abroad for the purpose I have indicated.

Mr. Maybank: I rise to make a correction which I think the hon. member will permit. I do not think he intended to say that the argument he is now putting forward was not controverted in the committee. The record of the committee is available, and I am sure he will admit that there was controversy over this item.

Mr. Fleming: The hon. member was not following what I said. I said that it was not denied that $10,000 in addition to the expenditures of last year would meet these additional expenses.

Mr. Maybank: That is the point I was making.

Mr. Fleming: That will be found on pages 317 to 323 of the proceedings of the committee. I moved in the committee that the amount of the item be reduced by $10,000, which would still leave $45,000 available this year as compared with an expenditure last year of $34,868. That suggestion was sought to be answered by saying that the amount would not be expended unless it was required, and if it was not needed under this particular detail it could be used under some of the other details which were rather tightly estimated. The fact is that in the evidence given before the committee no case was made out for the need of an additional amount, and therefore I intend to make the same motion I made in the committee. I move:

That the amount set opposite item 267 be reduced by $10,000, from $1,598,400 to $1,588,400.

In moving this amendment I emphasize the fact that it has nothing whatever to do with the national service provided by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It will not affect that in the slightest degree. Here, I think, is a clear-cut instance where $10,000 can be saved.

Amendment (Mr. Fleming) negatived on division.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again later this day. The motion is not debatable, but may I just say that if it carries, when the Speaker then takes the chair I would move that Mr. Speaker leave the chair until thirty-five minutes past seven o'clock, which is half an hour from now.

Mr. McCann: I would not object to a little intermission, but would hon. members agree to extend the sitting after eleven o'clock this evening to make up for the time taken in the intermission? I do not like to take the responsibility of cutting down the time covered by the motion yesterday, which was from eleven o'clock in the morning until eleven o'clock at night. If we rose for half an hour now could we agree to sit half an hour later tonight?

Mr. Knowles: I would not object, but I think it would be difficult for us to bind those who might be in the house at eleven o'clock. I would point out that we are working the Hansard reporters and amanuenses, in particular, unreasonably long hours without a break.

The Chairman: The motion is not debatable.

Motion negatived: yeas, 7; nays, 20.

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—

719. To provide for advances to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, subject to such terms and conditions as the governor in council may prescribe, for working capital and to partially finance the deficit of the corporation pending determination of the provision to be made for its future financial requirements, $650,000.

Mr. Fleming: May I say at the outset, Mr. Chairman, that, contrary to the unauthorized statement of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre a few minutes ago, I do not intend to make a long speech on this subject. However, even at this late stage of the session there are some points I think should be mentioned with respect to this important item.

Hon. members will recall that the special committee on radio broadcasting tabled its report in the house on June 26, two days ago. The scope of the review conducted by the committee this year was considerably narrower than that of the last two committees in the sessions of 1946 and 1947. There was a general feeling in the committee that in view of the fact that the royal commission on national development in the arts, letters and sciences is sitting and may submit its report within the next few months, it was unnecessary and perhaps undesirable for a committee of the house to cover the same ground. Consequently the whole subject of the basis and system of control of radio broadcasting in Canada was not touched upon in the committee, except briefly in relation to television. Those in competition with the corporation in local areas were not before the committee, which concentrated on an examination of the C.B.C. officials in regard to the operating side rather than the controlling and regulating side of the corporation. In a sense the evidence we heard was the evidence of only one side, in some matters; but, all things considered, I believe the committee adopted a course that was reasonable.

Before I go further I should like to pay a tribute to the officials of the corporation. The relationship between the committee and those officials has always been happy and harmonious, and I think every member of the committee respects the officials for the quality of their service and for their intense loyalty to the system which is placed in their hands to administer.

The report tabled in the house on June 26 contains a good deal with which some of us who did not support it nevertheless find ourselves in agreement, including the desirability of extending the services of the corporation to areas which do not enjoy those services now, and also the desirability of making improvements in the system. The report, however, was adopted by the committee on division. Those of us who were not able to support it felt on the one hand that the tone of the report was altogether too sweeping, based largely as it was on hearing only one side in certain cases. On the other hand we felt that many of the recommendations contained in the report ought to have been deferred until after the royal commission made its report. For instance, there are extensive recommendations on the subject of the financing of the operations of the system, which field is under study at the present time by the royal commission. Some of these problems have to be faced in the very near future, including the question of the basis of financing the operations of the corporation, but some of us felt that to make extensive and in many cases sweeping recommendations to the House of Commons at the present time was premature, having regard to the fact that the royal commission will be bringing in recommendations on these same matters within a short time.

When I speak of sweeping comments I would direct attention to an example of the sort of thing I mean. In the report of the committee, at page 577 of Votes and Proceedings of June 26, this statement appears in reference to what would happen if the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation were called upon to live within its present sources of income:

> It could reduce expenditures. The consequences of doing this would, however, be disastrous.

Now, I think the word "disastrous" is too strong, as I said in the committee. Undoubtedly certain features of the system would suffer. I mention that as one example of what I think is a certain tone running through this report that goes too far, that is too sweeping.

However, sir, having regard to the desirability of economizing on time, I shall confine my remarks to three subjects which are dealt with in this report and which were considered by the committee. Those subjects are finance, the Radio Canada building in Montreal, and television. Other subjects were considered by the committee and some of them are referred to in the report. If there were time I think those subjects are worthy of consideration in the house, but our time is very short. I shall confine myself, therefore, to those three subjects.

The subject of finance must soon be faced. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is confronted with a situation today where deficits are mounting. In the year 1948-49 the system incurred a deficit of $43,000. In the year ended March 31, 1950, a tentative figure for the deficit was given as $242,000. The officials of the corporation estimate that the deficit for the current year ending March 31, 1951, will amount to $962,000. I trust that the minister will give the committee some information concerning the way in which the particular amount in this item 719 was arrived at, because the figure of $650,000 covers only about seventy per cent of the deficit estimated by the officials of the corporation.

I have indicated that I thought in the committee, before we made recommendations on this subject, we should have the benefit of the study made by the royal commission. However, the subject is here, and I wish to make just one or two observations about it. The committee has said that it refrains from indicating how moneys should be raised, although it feels that additional money must be supplied to the corporation. In the brief tendered to the royal commission by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—

Mr. Knowles: Order.

Mr. Fleming: —a fee of $5 was suggested for persons having receiving sets in place of the present $2.50 fee. The way in which that amount was arrived at was not made clear, except that it was shown to the committee that, while the corporation does not designate that as necessarily the method, the yield from such an increase would meet the revenue needs of the corporation for the measurable future. I wish to say this, sir, that the present licence fee of $2.50 is nothing more than a nuisance tax. The cost of collecting it has been borne, since 1947, not out of the yield of the tax to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, but out of the consolidated revenue fund. The cost is running in the neighbourhood of $600,000 per year to collect this one source of revenue to the corporation. I might say that that represents about twelve per cent of the amount collected through that $2.50 licence fee, and that is an unusually heavy percentage for the cost of collecting.

In the concluding paragraph of its report the committee has drawn attention to that fact. The report reads:

> Costs of collection of this licence fee run to between twelve per cent and thirteen per cent, which seems to your committee to be a very high collection cost. In saying this your committee intends no criticism of Mr. Browne or his staff,—

That is to say, the staff of the radio division of the Department of Transport.

> —who in fact are both conscientious and efficient, but it would suggest that unremitting consideration be given to discovering less expensive ways of obtaining these fees.

So I say that the time is fast approaching when the house will have to face the problem of meeting the cost of operating the corporation out of a parliamentary vote.

The second subject of the three is the Radio Canada building in Montreal. That building, sir, you will recall, was acquired by the government through the assistance of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in the spring of 1948. This is the first time any parliamentary committee has had an opportunity of reviewing that purchase and the expenditure involved. The committee went to Montreal and examined the building. I was one of those who went, and I wish to say, with all frankness and emphasis, that I think that building, acquired by the government for the use of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, is a very suitable building. I was impressed by the fact that the corporation has done good work in converting the building, the former Ford hotel, to the use to which it is now to be put. The building will house not only the many services and departments of the corporation generally, but also the international shortwave service. An annex is in the course of construction now to provide for a producing centre for television in Montreal.

The price paid for the building was $2,200,000, which included a figure of $150,000 required to buy out the occupation rights of tenants then in the building. I am not in a position, and I feel that the committee was not in as good a position as members seemed to think, to pass on the price of the building. For instance, I asked in the committee whether independent appraisals or reports had been sought or obtained by the corporation from valuators before the purchase had been made. We were told that no outside valuation had been obtained by the corporation. Dr. Frigon did consult certain sources of advice open to him, and we had some evidence directed to comparing the price paid with the price paid for a nearby property acquired by the Y.W.C.A. I mention that, sir, and I do not express any opinion on the point. I should like to have seen the corporation, before making that large purchase for the government, obtain the report and advice of a competent independent valuator.

As to the cost of renovating the building and fitting it for its intended use, there are one or two facts deserving of mention. The cost of renovating the building was $1,300,000. The estimate originally prepared by the corporation was $1 million. Without inviting tenders at all, the corporation retained the services of a general contractor in Montreal, who is widely acknowledged to be a competent and efficient general contractor. He agreed to a fee not to exceed eight per cent of the corporation's estimate, that is, a maximum fee of $80,000. I have stressed the fact that no tenders were invited for the general contract. It is only fair to say that when the corporation came to let the subcontracts, about seventy per cent of the cost of the work was let to subcontractors by tender. In the case of the provision of the fittings for the building and the installation, $800,000 was the estimated amount. Again the contract was let to the same general contractor without tender. In the case of the fittings, about $345,000 of the $800,000 is being let by way of subcontract on tender.

Mr. Maybank: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member would object if I suggest a correction to him?

Mr. Fleming: No, Mr. Chairman; I should be glad to have it if I have made an error.

Mr. Maybank: I rather think that an error has been made just now, unintentionally. Reference has been made to $800,000 for equipment, as though that were part of what the contractor was supplying, and also as if it were something for which the contractor was being paid eight per cent or any other percentage. If the hon. member will recall the evidence, I am quite sure that he will realize that such a statement is entirely incorrect. The contractor, of course, has nothing to do with the buying of equipment. Consequently this eight per cent does not apply upon the cost of it. On consideration I think the hon. member will agree with that.

Mr. Fleming: I wish to be perfectly fair. I cannot at the moment take the time to look up the page of the evidence on that point. If the hon. member assures me that I am wrong, I am quite happy to accept his correction.

Mr. Maybank: There was an estimate of the total cost of the transformation, not including equipment, and eight per cent was reckoned on that. If that estimate were to turn out to be wrong—that is, too low—and consequently more money was spent, that eight per cent would not arise. There was a limit of $80,000.

Mr. Fleming: Oh, quite so. I mentioned the fact that there was a maximum fee of $80,000 on the work of renovating the building. The estimate, as it has turned out, was low by about twelve per cent, in the case of both the estimate of the cost of renovation and the estimate of the cost of the fittings for the building.

I turn now to the third and final subject, that of television. The future of television is vast. The officials of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, in the evidence taken, acknowledged that in television a tremendous field is opening up in this country. We are far behind the United States and the United Kingdom in this respect. It is estimated that there are 6 million television sets in use in the United States as against 5,000 in Canada.

The situation here to some extent stems from the use made of the licensing powers under the broadcasting act. With regard to television, the position under that act is precisely the same as it is with regard to sound broadcasting. The licensing of stations for the use of designated frequencies lies in the hands of the Minister of Transport, on recommendation of the board of governors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

We have not any television being produced in Canada today. Any television that is being received in Canada today is being received from United States stations. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is now at work in setting up two producing centres, one in Montreal and one in Toronto. It is expected that they will be in operation by September 1, 1951. That is a long time for Canada to wait for television, Mr. Chairman. I say that we Canadians would have had television earlier if those responsible for licensing had been willing to grant licences to persons who were making application and who were prepared to meet whatever requirements were laid down.

In previous sessions I have referred to the fact that we have not been getting television in Canada nearly as fast as we should have; and I think that those responsible for the licensing of television producing stations in Canada must accept a large share of the responsibility for this delay. In the first place, a paternalistic attitude was adopted, for which the government must take responsibility. Applicants were told, as was the radio committee, in 1947, that persons should not be permitted to risk their money in the development of television under private auspices in Canada until the experimental stage had been passed because they might lose their money. It did not matter that they were willing to risk their money; it was felt by the government that they should not be allowed to risk it. That was not a good enough excuse.

Then a question has been raised all along, and properly raised, as to the Canadian content of television programs that might be made available if television licences were issued. Let me make it abundantly clear that I for one want to see the highest possible Canadian content in television broadcasting. Had the licensing authorities seen fit to grant licences to private applicants, it would have been the duty of the corporation, to see that a proper Canadian content appeared in all those television programs.

A third excuse given for delay was that if licences were issued to private applicants, they might just sit on their rights and not develop television. That is a pretty empty excuse when you consider that these licences would probably have been granted for a year at a time, and they are subject to close supervision on the part of the corporation. If any licensee simply sat on his rights, his licence could be immediately cancelled.

The fourth occasion for delay has been the answer given by the corporation to certain applicants, in telling competing applicants that they should get together and embark on a co-operative enterprise. There may be some difficulties presented in an area like Toronto where there are only two channels to be made available to private television stations and where there have been four principal applicants. In Montreal, on the other hand, there have not been as many private applicants as there are television frequencies available to be assigned in due course to private applicants.

I want to express the opinion that to tell people who are keen competitors in the field of sound broadcasting that their applications for television licences are not to be dealt with until they have joined together and decided to co-operate and to go into the venture as a joint enterprise, is dodging the responsibility laid by statute upon those who are charged with the duty of recommending the issuance of licences and the duty of actually issuing them.

In my opinion the explanation of this long and unfortunate delay in dealing with applications on the part of private applicants for television licences is not to be found in any of these factors that I have mentioned. They have been merely useful excuses. The fact of the matter is, sir, as I see the situation, that the government could not make up its mind what to do about the development of television under the auspices of the publicly-owned Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. After a long delay they eventually made up their minds what they were to do, and the applications of others who would have liked to go ahead and develop television in this field have simply been held up in the long meantime, until the government made up their minds as to whether and how they were going to develop television through the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

This long delay is most regrettable. Canadians who have shown themselves capable of keeping abreast of the world in any form of technical and scientific development have by the government's decision in fact been deprived of the development of television in Canada in these recent years, and we are now far behind the United States and the United Kingdom. I for one express here the hope that no more time will be lost in dealing with these applications.

Obviously the corporation may have a difficult problem on its hands in selecting those who are to be successful in an area like Toronto where there are more applications than there are available frequencies; but that is one of the duties laid upon the board of governors and upon the minister, and the decision is not going to be made any easier by being delayed. Therefore I urge that the time has come when some decision must be made in this field so that this development may not be longer delayed.

As I have indicated, sir, there are other matters which are worthy of the attention of the committee at this time, but in view of the fact that we are in what I understand to be the dying moments of the session, and in view of the fact that there are so many of these matters of leading importance which are to be, we expect, the subject of recommendations of the Massey commission, we may await a better opportunity to debate them at the next session of parliament, when we hope to have a full report of the royal commission before the house.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I have listened to the hon. member for Eglinton speaking on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for several years now, and I feel that this was probably the least critical of his speeches. There may be a reason for that. For the first time for many years the committee got down to considering the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation itself, how the corporation works, what the corporation is hoping to do, and what the corporation needed. As he pointed out, the committee did a constructive job of work in its investigation, and I share with him his appreciation of the way in which the officials of the broadcasting corporation tendered their evidence. However, although I do think that much of what the hon. member said was constructive, there are some of his views with which I disagree, and one of them is in the field of television.

The government may have been laggard in its approach to this new avenue of education and entertainment, a matter on which I have not yet made up my mind, and one which I do not think at the moment is very important because, to use a cliché, television is still in its infancy.

The hon. member for Eglinton said we had a long time to wait for television. Well, if what I have seen in the United States is any criterion I am quite content to wait for another year or two; for much of it is not particularly edifying. What the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation must remember is this. Surveys in the United States have shown that children now are watching television for as many hours as they are receiving education in the schools. That means that television can be a tremendously important social force, either for good or for ill. My opinion, for what it is worth, is that had commercial licences been granted I doubt very much whether the owners of those licences would have realized to the full the possibilities of television; that they would have concentrated, within the rules of the system, on making as much money as possible out of their broadcasting. We would have been inundated with all sorts of commercials, and I do not share the feeling of the hon. member for Eglinton that the programs would have had a large Canadian content. I think the officials of the corporation are right when they say that television in Canada must be Canadian, must have a large Canadian content. Certainly we do not want to prohibit anything which may come from the United States or from some other country, but we have to remember first of all the responsibility of the corporation to Canada, and I do not think private interests would have fulfilled it.

There is another aspect of the situation, and it is this. Commercial groups have approached the corporation for licences for television and they have been turned down by the board of governors. They were turned down because in the opinion of the board the applicants did not make out a sufficiently good case to be awarded a licence. If the board is right, then I think there should be no criticism, and I accept the board's judgment at the moment, although my opinion of that judgment may be wrong and the hon. member for Eglinton may be right.

As regards the radio building, I think those of us who saw that building at Montreal were impressed by it. The corporation has every right to feel proud of its own architects and engineers who out of the shell of the Ford hotel have constructed studios which I believe will be the most up to date on the North American continent. If I have to find fault—and I have to find fault in one place—it would be with the height of some of the operating booths. Their ceilings are far too low, and on more than one occasion my head came in violent contact with beams which had not yet been hidden.

As regards finance, it is true that in the coming fiscal year the corporation may have a deficit of almost a million dollars; and yet the committee, I think unanimously, has asked the corporation to increase its expenditures for the coming year. Therefore the committee must realize that the deficit may be larger if the corporation goes ahead and gives the further services that are desired by all. Whether they can or not of course will be a matter for the corporation to decide. What is evident above all as a result of the committee's studies is the lamentable lack of money from which the corporation suffers. It must have more finances, I would say a minimum of $5 million per annum in the next two or three years, if it is going to do the job which we expect it to do. It cannot get more money from additional commercial advertising, because more advertising would be distasteful to the great majority of Canadians, and would be opposed to the policy of the corporation. The raising of the licence fee to $5 is I think impracticable. I object to the idea of the corporation having to come to parliament year after year, cap in hand, to ask for a grant of money sufficient to cover the deficits.

If we are to keep the corporation independent and as far as possible out of the political arena, then the corporation has to get money in some other way. I have a personal suggestion with which my party is not associated. The corporation should be given funds by statute on the basis of a dollar per capita of the Canadian population per annum. That would amount to about $13 million. We could then abolish the licence fees and in place of the five or six million the corporation has in the form of revenue from licence fees it would have $13 million. With that amount of money it would have no possible excuse for not giving the service the people of Canada want. I would not want my remarks to be distorted, because I feel the corporation is only too willing to give that service. However up to now it has not been able to give it because of a lack of funds. If we want the corporation to do the job of work Canada expects it to do, then it has to be provided with money. The way I am suggesting is one which I believe will assure the independence of the corporation.

Mr. Higgins: Mr. Chairman, for some time past there appears to have been grave misconception as to the value of Newfoundland as an added asset in the confederation of Canada. Many assertions have appeared in the press, credited to various people, that Newfoundland's coming into the Dominion of Canada has been a deficit. In that particular connection I should like to refer to a broadcast made, I believe, by the minister on February 17, with respect to the broadcasting facilities of the broadcasting corporation of Newfoundland, the predecessor of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation now operating in the province.

At that time the minister tabled the report of the C.B.C. and expressed some concern as to its financial position. He referred to the present financial loss and then, according to the information I have, added that the cost of the service for Newfoundland is burdensome. This is a most unfair statement. I say that because at the time of confederation the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation took over all the assets of the broadcasting corporation in Newfoundland which, at that time, consisted of a 15 kilowatt station then known as VONF, a shortwave station at St. John's, VONH, a shortwave station at Corner Brook, VOWN, a 500-watt station at Gander, VORG, as well as the equipment for the projected station they were about to open at Grand Falls, and which has since been opened.

This service included a complete and up-to-date set of transmitting equipment, a $25,000 studio building at Corner Brook, an extensive program library, and a line service between St. John's, Grand Falls and Corner Brook. In fact the broadcasting corporation of Newfoundland at that time regarded its equipment as being very much up to date. This service cost the C.B.C. not one penny. Upon the acquisition of that equipment belonging to the broadcasting corporation of Newfoundland programs were changed very considerably, and the people of that province were given what the people in the rest of Canada have come to know as soap operas. I am told 80 per cent of the broadcasting hours in each day are taken up with these soap operas. I am further informed that the improvement, if it can be called that, has not been very great.

My chief annoyance is with the suggestion that the taxpayer of Canada has been asked to carry a heavier burden. That suggestion is most unfair. Whatever burden in dollars the Canadian taxpayer has had to assume because of the entrance of Newfoundland, Newfoundland has more than compensated for in other ways. I say that in connection with this particular operation involving the C.B.C. no additional burden has been assumed at all.

In the eleven years of operation of the broadcasting corporation in Newfoundland some facts might be of interest to the committee. It started out in 1939 with a capital investment of $8,000. Over the eleven years of its existence it was able, through the sale of licence fees, radio time and the opening of three additional stations to remodel the entire existing facilities, and to purchase all the necessary buildings which have now been handed over to the C.B.C. It was able to instal the best possible equipment and to give a service which the most severe critic could not possibly criticize.

When the broadcasting corporation of Newfoundland was dissolved as a result of having been taken over by the C.B.C. there was a surplus amounting to over $150,000. I am informed that with the revenue available to the corporation in Newfoundland it showed an annual profit of $15,000. My information is that the people of that province are very much upset about the minister's suggestion in the broadcast of February 17 to the effect that the addition of Newfoundland to the dominion has meant an additional burden upon the people of Canada generally. I feel certain that the minister would now like to retract his statement.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Higgins: Does the minister wish to reply?

Mr. McCann: Item 719 in the supplementary estimates has to do with $650,000 to meet the operating deficit that is likely to occur from April 1, 1950, to April 1, 1951. We believe that will be the actual cash deficit. The amount of $962,000 that was suggested would be the paper deficit and, according to the method of accounting, known as the accrual method, would include depreciation allowances and the like.

The other item of $938,961 is made up of a revote of $638,961, which is a revote of money voted last year to finish the Radio Canada building in Montreal, plus $300,000 to meet the requirements to finish that building. I mention these two facts to make clear to the committee the purposes for which the money is required.

It was not my intention to discuss at length the operations of the C.B.C., because perhaps it would be out of place to do so at this time. Opportunity was given to hon. members to learn, from the report of the radio committee of this year, all the items having to do with the C.B.C., the international service and with television.

In his remarks about these two items the hon. member for Eglinton availed himself of the opportunity to discuss the finances of the C.B.C., Radio Canada building, and television. It is in that connection I wish to make a few remarks. I have no doubt it was made abundantly clear to the committee that the C.B.C. could not continue to operate and to produce the type of product or program they have produced throughout the year on the finances available to them, and that some method would have to be found so that they could increase their revenue. I am not in a position to say just what that method will be. As all hon. members are aware, this matter is before the Massey commission. Representatives of the C.B.C., as well as other persons throughout Canada interested in broadcasting, made representations to that commission. I feel that sometime this fall the commission will bring in a report and make suggestions to the government as to the best method of financing. Whether that will be on a fee basis or in the form of a subsidy along with fees or the total cost to be borne by the government is a matter of government policy which, of course, would be further reviewed by parliament when it meets.

I sometimes marvel that the C.B.C. has done as good a job as they have with the money made available to them. Everyone must admit that they are carrying on now with fees that were in existence ten years ago. It has been clearly demonstrated that in their operation, as in every other operation in the country, the cost of wages, services and equipment has gone up materially. It could not be expected that they would continue as they had in former years to show an operating profit. It is a good thing that they had an operating profit in former years because they were able to meet the deficit for the year ending March 1949 out of the reserves built up in former years. That obligation was not placed upon the government. The general expansion of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation under which the greater part of the country is now serviced is well known to all hon. members.

With reference to the Radio Canada building in Montreal, I am sure that all hon. members are familiar with that building. I was glad to hear the words of commendation from the hon. member for Winnipeg North and the hon. member for Eglinton. I am sure that they feel, as I do, that when this building is completed we shall have a radio centre second to none in the world. Within the last two or three weeks I have had the opportunity of visiting a number of radio centres, including the British Broadcasting Corporation in London. They have not anything such as we have. It is true that in London they propose to change from Alexandra Palace to another location, but at the present time their studios do not compare to the splendid studios we shall have in the Radio Canada building.

It is true that this has cost a lot of money. We did pay a considerable amount for the Ford Hotel building, including the purchase of the franchises which already existed. While it is not on the record that an appraisal was made of this building, I made it my personal business to interview people in Montreal who were able to give accurate information as to values and I was told that this was a good bargain at the price we paid. I am willing at any time to substantiate and back up the deal.

With reference to the transformation of the building into studios and the purchase of equipment, I am ready to admit that some of our estimates fell far short of the actual cost. In this connection I should like to give one example. A control board was needed and it took the companies that tendered something like six months to figure out their tenders and they varied all the way from $175,000, which was the figure of the Northern Electric Company, up to $375,000. When concerns in a particular business show such great variation in their estimates on a piece of equipment I think it can be readily understood why some of our estimates did not equal the actual cost. All in all it is going to take a revote of $678,000, plus an additional $300,000, to complete the building. But when the building is completed, the Canadian people will have the most outstanding broadcasting facilities in the world.

With regard to television, I cannot agree with the hon. member for Eglinton that we have been dilatory in announcing a policy or in carrying it out for the Canadian people. I remember over two years ago I went to New York and visited the studios of C.B.S., the National Broadcasting Corporation and of private concerns, and I made it my business in February to go to Chicago to see what was new there.

I found that within the last two years while there have been some advances they have not been great. In the meantime the broadcasting corporations and private industry have spent something like $50 million in an attempt to develop television. I am not ashamed to say that two years ago my advice to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was to delay for a time any expenditures on experimental work until we saw what advances were made in the United States. We might be accused of hanging on to their apron strings, but they had a lot more money to spend than the Canadian people, and we had no appropriation to carry out that work on behalf of the Canadian people.

Today we are able to start in with no cost at all and take advantage of the advances that have been made. Television is going to mean a lot to Canada, but it is going to cost a lot of money. As I indicated when the policy was announced, the $4,500,000 will provide only for telecasting in two languages in Montreal and in the city of Toronto. Before facilities are extended to the greater part of Canada it will cost between $10 million and $15 million.

Private industry has not been in too great a hurry to get into this business. It has been found from the experience in the United States that it costs approximately half a million dollars to set up a station, and you must be prepared to take a loss of half a million dollars before commercial advertising will place you on an earning basis. We have guarded the Canadian people against the granting of licences to people who were not prepared to go ahead. We do not want them to have the advantage of having television licences and then trafficking in them because of their increased value.

I am particularly pleased with the progress we have made. I wish to say just a word about what television will mean with regard to the electronics industry. I should like to quote an article from the Financial Post, of June 17, entitled, "TV sales climb here; export parts to U.K." It reads:

> The television virus which is spreading like wildfire through the United States is gradually infecting Canadians who are within range.
> At last count (April 30):
> 13,500 Canadians had bought television receivers. At an average price of around $400, they had dug down for a healthy $5.4 million since Canadian General Electric turned out the first Canadian set in 1948.

That is just two years ago.

> TV antennae are sprouting from more and more rooftops in the fringe areas where U.S. stations can be picked up: about 2·5 million persons in southern Ontario are within range of stations at Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Erie, Cleveland, Toledo, Detroit; about 100,000 in the Vancouver area can get Seattle.

That means that something like 2·6 million people in this country are already within range of television stations and able to receive television programs. As at April 1 some thirteen Canadian radio manufacturers were making television receivers. So far this year they have made 5,300 sets.

Projected production for the year is 31,000 sets, with some estimates going as high as 35,000. Canadian General Electric is already producing cathode ray or picture tubes for domestic purposes, and within the last few months received an order for cathode tubes worth half a million dollars for delivery to the United States, thus giving work to Canadian people.

Some criticism has been directed toward the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for not buying their transmitters from Great Britain. We in Canada are adopting the United States standard in television. This means that United States and Canadian receiving sets will be able to record the programs coming from both United States and Canadian telecasting stations. Had we adopted the British standard, while the British machines would have been able to record the telecasts of Canadian stations, they would not have recorded those of United States stations. Therefore one order was given to Canadian General Electric and the other to RCA Victor. Canadian General Electric equipment is manufactured in the town of Peterborough, and seventy per cent of the content of that transmitter will be of Canadian manufacture. While I was in London I had the privilege of visiting the great factory of the Marconi wireless people in the city of Chelmsford. I went there because the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has already given them orders on a competitive basis for over $600,000 worth of equipment, thus giving Britain Canadian dollars with which to buy Canadian products.

I am not going to say anything further, except that I have carefully read the record of proceedings of the committee on radio broadcasting this year, and I want to commend the members of that committee for the very thorough manner in which the affairs of the broadcasting corporation and the international shortwave broadcasting station were reviewed. I believe the report tabled by the chairman of that committee was excellent. I must not close without mentioning the reference by the hon. member for St. John's East to the use of the word "burdensome". Perhaps that was not the right word. I meant it in the sense of an obligation, that an added obligation had been assumed, which I am sure the hon. member must recognize.

Mr. Higgins: You did not mean you were taking over a deficit?

Mr. McCann: It was not meant in that sense at all. We are very glad to have been able to link up our broadcasting facilities with those of Newfoundland. The comment I have heard by people from that province is that they are pleased with the splendid additional programs they receive over the trans-Canada networks.

Mr. Higgins: I am very happy to have the explanation by the minister; I am so glad he agrees that in taking over the Newfoundland broadcasting system the C.B.C. got an asset. A correspondent writes me stating that at the time the system was taken over there was a vacancy on the board of governors of the C.B.C., and he suggests that it was rather a discourtesy that the chairman of the Newfoundland broadcasting system was not appointed. Is there such a vacancy, and is there a possibility that the former chairman might be appointed to it? The other question is not mine; before he left the hon. member for Eglinton asked me to put it to the minister. He mentioned a figure of $962,000 as the deficit, while this estimate calls for $650,000, and he would like to know the reason for the difference.

Mr. McCann: I explained that a moment ago. They worked out the deficit as $962,000; but included in that, as I am sure the hon. gentleman will understand, was provision for depreciation, which was a very considerable amount. This was brought to the attention of the broadcasting corporation, who were asked to revise their figures, and this $650,000 will meet the actual cash deficit.

Mr. Higgins: Then what about the vacancy on the board?

Mr. McCann: There is one vacancy at the present time. I believe the act requires that the members of the board of governors shall represent different occupations and geographical districts. The present vacancy was caused by the resignation of the gentleman who is now lieutenant governor of Alberta, and the west feels that it should be given representation. However, I shall bring the suggestion of a representative from Newfoundland to the attention of the government when the vacancy is being filled.

Mr. Higgins: I can assure the minister that the former chairman of the Newfoundland system would be an admirable member of the board in every way.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I am sorry I missed the earlier remarks of the minister, because I always listen to him with great interest. However, I have been in the railway committee room, listening to something even more enjoyable.

In view of his compliment to the committee, of which I was a member, I must say that I think this year's committee was the most useless I have ever known to be set up by this house, though no doubt it was asked for by someone on this side. I made that very plain the first minute of the first day we sat. There we were, carrying on a review parallel in every particular with that which was carried on by the Massey commission dealing with the fine arts, culture and so on. I assume they included radio broadcasting under the broad term "culture"; otherwise I don't know how it could have come in through the door. I felt that we were duplicating the work of the Massey commission. I attended every sitting I could, and in the committee we were in this position: We heard only the officers of the broadcasting corporation, with the exception of a contribution made by a member of the Department of Transport, Mr. Browne, and a gentleman from Toronto whose name escapes me at the moment. So as far as the policy of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is concerned, we had only a one-sided picture.

I am not complaining. Everyone had full opportunity to come and state his views if he wished to do so. I assume that most people agreed with the idea I had, that we were pursuing a phantom and uselessly expending a great deal of time, at the same time making the job of the officers of the corporation infinitely more difficult. I did not hear the minister's remarks, and if he has answered this previously, I hope he will quickly tell me. The inquiry I make about television is this. I hear from people who should know that there are many more bands for television than for ordinary sound broadcasting. I heard the minister say that if someone starts a station he must be prepared to lose something in the neighbourhood of half a million dollars in order to get it on its feet. If someone wants to lose half a million dollars, why don't we let him do it?

We are going to have television stations in Montreal and Toronto, which will be a very satisfying business for the people who live in that neighbourhood. While a great deal of the tax money comes from that area, ultimately the rest of us are going to be paying for television for those people. We in the distant points hope that some day we shall have the privilege of buying a television set and enjoying it. What I am utterly unable to understand is this. If a person in the city of Edmonton wants to lose his money in an effort to give that area television, why in the world is the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, who admittedly are doing nothing in that area and do not intend to do anything for some time to come, prohibiting the establishment of that station? Why is it the policy of the government—because it is the government which issues the licence—not to permit someone to attempt to make television go in these outlying places?

I know all the arguments in favour of Canadian culture, and I know that we are going to have Canadian programs. I trust some day you will find someone to listen to them; that is at least a hope I express. I cannot see why the government, or the government-owned corporation, should not let anyone, shall we say in Edmonton, attempt to establish a station. Give him a licence; let him spend his money; and reserve to the corporation any number of bands which they might at some future time require. I cannot see that to do otherwise is good business or common sense.

I want to pay a compliment to our committee chairman this year. He had nothing very difficult to do, but he is one of those fellows who can do a pleasant thing in a very difficult way. This year he did not do that; he was good-natured throughout the piece, and I am sorry I missed the opportunity of shaking hands with him when we had finally got our report together. It was a very pleasant experience; in fact it was a joy right through. There was nothing to the whole business at all. I heard someone say "carried", and that is the kind of committee it was. There is no doubt about that; the word "carried" came in and you did not even have to press a button. The "carried" boys were all there, well schooled and anxious to exercise their throats in the one way, by calling "carried".

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

183. Departmental administration, $321,042.

(Translation):

Mr. Dumas: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend, at this stage of the session, to launch into a discussion on the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. However, as the mining industry ranks third, in our country, both in production and exports, I believe it well deserves a few minutes of our time.

There are several mines within the limits of the constituency of Villeneuve and it behooves me, I believe, as the member for that constituency, to draw the attention of my hon. friends to certain facts and to quote certain figures which may help them to understand the true importance of this industry.

(Text):

Mr. Chairman, when we look at the country's record for the first half of the century, we realize what mining has done in transforming the economic and social life of the country. If our country is a leading power in the complex world of today, it is due to the great expansion of its mining industry. Canada leads all other countries in the production of asbestos, nickel, platinum and its associated metals; Canada is second in zinc and cadmium, third in gold, copper, magnesium and cobalt, and fourth in silver and lead. We have reason to be proud of our country's record in mineral production during the second world war, when the allied nations were so pressed by an urgent need for base metals.

During the six war years, the total value of our mineral production amounted to over $4 billion. Of this, $1 billion worth of base metals only was contributed to the war effort, including 3·6 billion pounds of copper, 1·26 billion pounds of nickel, 1·6 billion pounds of zinc, and 1·3 billion pounds of lead. That is a fair record for a country like Canada. It is true to say that we surprised ourselves with the vastness of our own war contribution.

In time of peace we are continuing to produce minerals at an accelerated pace. The total Canadian mineral production for the year 1945 amounted to $499 million; in 1947 it amounted to $645 million; and in 1949 to the spectacular figure of $890·2 million. This last figure includes the production of Newfoundland, which amounted to $25·7 million. These are impressive figures if we consider that the total mineral production in Canada during the year 1900 barely exceeded $64 million.

According to the most recent survey the production of 1949 is divided as follows: Metallic metals, $534·8 million, including gold to an amount of $147·8 million; non-metallic metals—that is fuels—$184·2 million; other non-metallic metals, including asbestos, barite, salt and quartz, $62·3 million; clay products and other structural materials, $108·8 million.

The mining industry is the third leading producer in Canada. Not long ago we could read in the Financial Post, immediately before the trade fair took place in Toronto, this title: "Canada: The largest per capita trading nation in the world". Below that we could also read:

> In the past thirty years we've seen $80 billion of goods and merchandise cross our borders.

Our total export in 1949 amounted to $3 billion and the leaders in the commodities which were exported were the following: wood, wood products and paper to the amount of $875·3 million; agricultural and vegetable products, $773 million; non-ferrous metals, $426·6 million. The world today has become dependent upon Canada for such necessities as nickel and asbestos. Without our mines humanity would be sadly deficient in gold, silver, copper, zinc, lead and platinum. Canadian uranium played a vital role in the development of atomic energy. In metals, above all, Canada outdid itself not only in quantity but in quality and diversity. As countries go, Canada is still young.

The foregoing is a short résumé of its achievement in mineral production. It is, we can say, our duty to keep up the pace.

Here I should like to refer hon. members to an article which appeared in Saturday Night of June 27. I should like to read these few lines:

> Prospects for the sale of Canadian metals in the United States never have been as promising as they are today. . . . In the 12 months ending February 28, 1938, the United States imported $43 million worth of non-ferrous metals from Canada. For the 12 months ending February 28, 1950, they had jumped to $198,800,000.

These are impressive figures. In another paragraph we can read the following:

> The U.S. has less than a 35-year supply of 21 out of 35 minerals. Some of these, such as petroleum, copper, lead and zinc, are minerals in which the United States led the world for many years.
> While the U.S. has lost her leadership in the raw materials field, Canada is fast becoming the world's greatest source of such items as copper, zinc, lead, nickel, and aluminum. Tomorrow she may take her place as one of the leading producers of iron ore, petroleum and titanium.
> Non-ferrous ores and metals constitute the largest single classification of imports to the United States. Ores and metals were brought into the States to the tune of approximately $550 million in 1947; $775 million in 1948, and $840 million in 1949. And such shipments bid fair to be much higher again this year.

After taking cognizance of this article we can see that in the United States we have a big market for our metal production, and it is up to us either to increase our production or to find new mines.

Here I should like to say this. If our country is a leader today in base metal production and if we are capable of such achievements in mining during the first part of the century, I will venture to say that it is owing to the incentive our prospectors had when they were prospecting, always hoping to find that famous gold mine.

Today many people think that the gold mines are not so important. But I will say this; it is owing to the fact of the prospectors looking for gold mines that our base metal mines were found. We must not forget that fact. Besides that, the production of gold during the last three years has been increasing, owing to the encouragement on the part of the government. The gold production in Canada from 1858 to 1949 amounted to $3.3 billion. The gold production in 1945 amounted to $103.8 million; in 1946, to $104 million; in 1947, to $107.5 million; in 1948, to $125.6 million and in 1949 to $147.7 million. We see that there was a substantial increase from 1947 to 1949. We know that it is mostly due to the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act which we call EGMA as an abbreviation.

Hon. members are aware that this act will terminate at the end of December, 1950. I will not ask the minister to state definitely what the government intends to do after that date, but I will urge him to study closely all that is related to the gold mines. For instance, we know that some gold mines do not need this emergency assistance; on the other hand, we know that other gold mines need it. The word "emergency" was correct when the government passed that act and it is still correct today in the case of many mines. If the low-grade mines today did not have this act to help them, and did not have this bonus, they would certainly be obliged to close. That would be a bad thing. It would have a very bad effect on many parts of the country from British Columbia to the maritimes. I shall cite only a few instances in my own constituency and especially in my own town where we have four gold producers and they are all low-grade mines.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Will the hon. member permit one question before he leaves the last subject? He gave us the increase in dollar value of gold production throughout the area. What relation to that increase do the subsidies paid by this government bear? In other words, suppose we gained $2 million in one year, how much did we put out by way of subsidy in that year to get the $2 million gain?

Mr. Dumas: I will tell the hon. member for Calgary West that it was not only an incentive to the gold mines to produce more gold, but without it some of the gold mines would have been obliged to close their operations. If it had not been for the bonus these gold mines would have had to shut down.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I favour the subsidy. But I wondered how it compared with the amount of new gold we mined.

Mr. Dumas: In 1948 it cost the government $10 million in bonuses paid to the gold mines, and the increase of gold in that year amounted to $16 million. From 1947 to 1948 $16 million worth of gold came to the government.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): In other words, we paid $10 million to get an increase of $6 million.

Mr. Dumas: Yes, but I ask the hon. member to recall that in the first year of the act all the gold mines could not get organized in the space of a few months to produce more gold. He will notice that in 1949 the production jumped to $147 million, and it did not cost the government any more for these gold mines to produce $40 million worth more of gold in 1949 than in 1947. Therefore I think it paid the government, because of the bad situation we were in so far as United States dollars were concerned.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I agree with the bonus. I just want to find out what the bonus paid. We paid 25 cents to get a dollar back.

Mr. Dumas: I do not want to take up too much of the time of the committee. I ask the minister to think seriously of extending the bonus into 1951, but probably on a diminishing scale. I ask him to extend the bonus so that our marginal mines can keep on producing gold that we need and also as an incentive to prospecting. We know that our prospectors will go into the bush and try to find a gold mine but they will not go into the bush and try to find a base metal mine. It has been proved in the past in all the mining districts of Canada that wherever the prospectors went to find gold mines they also found base metal mines, and our base metal mines are leaders in our mining industry.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I have only a word to say, and I am going to say it on the first item. I think I may ask questions here which can be answered now, and we shall save the time of the committee and save me the trouble of asking them on the individual items. The first question is very narrow. I want to know what this geographical names board is, and what portion of the $1,386,410 goes to the geographical names end of it. The next question is a broad one. If you look at items 188 to 196 you will observe that they are items in connection with surveying. If you turn over the page you will find that we are paying the Royal Canadian Air Force the same sum in both years, namely $1,340,000. I am not complaining about this cost. My only worry is this. Do the items which I mentioned a moment ago eliminate all air service in connection with surveys? In other words, does the $1,340,000 mean the total paid to the air force in connection with all surveys? I assume that is probably correct; but in trying to follow the items, the numbers of which I gave, I should like an answer to see whether there is any overlapping in any of these items. First I want to know about the geographical names. I do not know what it means.

Mr. McCann: Would it suit the hon. member to wait until we come to these items?

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I had hoped the minister would answer it now and I would not have to wait, but I will wait.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Hon. members may feel that Newfoundland is getting a lot of prominence in the discussion of these estimates, but it is because it is the expiry of the first full year of union.

The report of the Department of Mines and Resources which I have in my hand deals with the fiscal year ended March 31, 1949, and it is very difficult to know exactly what was done in Newfoundland during the past summer. In reading the report I notice that a great deal of investigation has been going on in different places on geological, hydrographic, topographic and engineering work. I am wondering whether we have to wait until next year before we get any indication of any discoveries that were made in Newfoundland.

In connection with these reports, I also notice that the department is assisting industry to a very large extent, making studies of minerals, and helping in the search for minerals. In Newfoundland, as hon. members know, we have three mines, the iron ore mine on Bell island, the lead zinc nickel composite ore at Buchans and the fluor spar mine at St. Lawrence in the southern part of Newfoundland. In addition to that the country is highly mineralized. In the past we have suffered from lack of trained geologists. We have only one geologist at work in the island. Before he was appointed we had to engage a man from Princeton, Professor Snelgrove.

Great work was done in the early days by Mr. Howley, but nothing compared to what is going on in the other provinces of Canada. I am wondering whether the minister has considered extending the services which have been given to other provinces in regard to these minerals, which are considered the most profitable at the present time.

We have an oil well at Parson's Pond, which was discovered over a hundred years ago, but we do not know the extent of it, and we cannot know it without proper geological and more intensive surveys. I do not know what facilities the department has for estimating what quantity is there but I understand that the provincial government is engaging the services of an airborne magnetometer for this summer. With regard to radioactive investigation, I saw in one of the local papers that a discovery of radioactive minerals had been made down there. I am wondering if that has been brought to the attention of the minister's department? Finally, what relationship is there between this Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and the department of resources in Newfoundland?

Mr. McCann: There is no relationship between this department and the provincial department; but there is a very close association whereby we put the services of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys at the disposal, so to speak, of the provincial department.

With respect to the work going on in Newfoundland, or that contemplated this summer, one engineer will be there to make a general investigation of the mineral resources of the province. At the same time he will act as deputy inspector of explosives. A ceramics engineer will investigate the clay deposits and will assist the brick industry. A third engineer will make a survey of peat bogs for the provincial department of agriculture, and will also investigate the suitability of peat for fuel purposes.

We intend to put out a number of parties. In connection with the geological survey we will have four field parties. In topographical survey we will have five field parties, and three in the Quebec-Labrador section. In the hydrographic surveys we will have three boats charting Newfoundland waters; in the geodetic survey we will have four field parties, and five in Labrador. In the legal survey we will have one field party on radar altimeter work. In the geographic branch we will have two field parties in Labrador and two in Newfoundland. In connection with the dominion observatory there will be one party on magnetic surveys work, and there will be aerial photography of 14,183 square miles of Newfoundland done by the Spartan company and 800 square miles of Labrador done by the R.C.A.F.

I suggest that contemplates a very good program for the first years in which we have undertaken to do work in that province. The party is made up in some instances of an engineer and four or five other people. Parties can be either larger or smaller than that. So that in all these different branches of the Mines and Technical Surveys department, including geological, topographical, hydrographic and so on, we are detailing to Newfoundland a very fair proportion of the available staff for this kind of work.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The minister did not mention the work done last year. Did he have parties in all these branches then, too? If a person is interested in a mineral deposit how does he go about having an investigation made? I would understand that he would have to go to the geological branch in St. John's, and a geologist may turn him down. I have done that for years in connection with a property in which I was interested. Promises were made to me, and I was put off.

The area to which I am referring is highly mineralized. In the area of Placentia Bay copper is to be found in several places. Fee simple grants have been given because a certain amount of mining has been done. This was done under the old system. Under the modern method it should be possible for a geologist to give some account as to the economic value of these deposits. There are three places I have in mind, the first of which I have mentioned, the other two being Fleur de Lys and Baie Verte. The people interested in the minerals at these points do not seem to be able to get ahead. They are not satisfied with the work done by the local geologists. I suggest the department should be guided to some extent by the reports which have been given in the past. I know that there have been favourable reports about the three places I have mentioned.

Mr. McCann: It is not the policy of the government or of the department to make examinations at the public's expense of every private property, and to give an opinion upon it. It is the policy of the government to study the general conditions. Ore that might be found in any particular area could be sent to headquarters at Ottawa where it will undergo an examination and a report will be made upon it.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): In the neighbourhood I have mentioned there should be other deposits worthy of investigation.

Mr. Murray (Cariboo): Is there any likelihood of renewing the dominion-provincial arrangements whereby assistance was given in connection with the construction of trails and roads leading to mining areas? This policy in the past has resulted in bringing in a good many mines in British Columbia, and in the north. I would hope it might be resumed.

Does the minister not think that the project launched by the board of trade of Niagara Falls for the casting of silver dollars by the Canadian government is one which should interest the mining fraternity? We in the Cariboo are large producers of silver. The same applies in Quebec, Manitoba and other provinces. While I have not any desire to introduce the subject of monetary reform, I do suggest that the value of a silver dollar as a souvenir, particularly for the tourists, is something which should not be overlooked. I should like to see a policy whereby instead of exporting our surplus silver to the United States or Belgium it would be retained in Canada and coined into silver dollars so that it might be made available for general circulation particularly in those areas visited by tourists.

The mines branch in Canada has always led in the development of that industry. Reports were made by Dr. G. M. Dawson of the geological surveys branch in the early days of our country. He made a blueprint of all the mineral-producing areas we have in Canada today. Dr. Eugene Haanel and Dean Brock of the geological surveys branch, and later of the university of British Columbia, contributed greatly to the mining industry in our country. I believe this work could be encouraged.

I have only one suggestion to make to the minister, and that is that in connection with the oil industry we should have here in Ottawa an engineer of outstanding ability to make a check on the new oil wells being brought in in Alberta and the northwestern part of the country. Thus we would have available an exact, authentic and official record for the guidance of investors and for the general shaping of this great oil industry which has been developing in our land.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Perhaps I could answer the last part of the hon. member's speech. All the information needed by the hon. member for Cariboo could be obtained from the oil and gas conservation board of Alberta. Dr. George Hume is in charge of this work in Ottawa, and I do not think a better man could be found to do what the hon. member has suggested.

Mr. Higgins: Will the minister state briefly his opinion of the Labrador-Quebec iron ore potentials, and what effect this development will have upon the St. Lawrence seaway?

Mr. McCann: That is a pretty large question. The reports are that there are enormous deposits of iron ore in Labrador, and private interests have indicated that they are prepared to spend between $150 million and $200 million in building a railroad, developing water power and bringing out the ore. My hon. friend asks what effect this will have upon the St. Lawrence waterway. Any extensive development of natural resources cannot help but be of benefit to the whole country. I think it is proposed that when this ore is produced, part of it will be smelted in Canada and part of it somewhere in the middle west and along the eastern seaboard of the United States. We have continuous negotiations with the promoters and the people who are sufficiently interested to put up their own money, and progress is being made with regard to this development. I understand the actual starting of the development is awaiting further drilling and testing so that a sufficient quantity of ore may be outlined to guarantee the life of the property for a great number of years.

Mr. Higgins: Will the water powers of Labrador be used, and who is going to carry on this development?

Mr. McCann: Our information is that the development might start in 1951, and from what I have read I understand that it is proposed to use potential water power in Labrador. This development is being carried on with a combination of United States and Canadian money.

Mr. Higgins: The principal company being?

Mr. McCann: There are a number of companies, one being the Labrador Mining and Exploration Company. The Canadian interests are the Timmins people, who are the owners of the Hollinger mine. They were initially responsible for the development.

Mr. Higgins: How much ore has been blocked out so far, and how much will have to be blocked out before production actually starts?

Mr. McCann: I understand they have in the neighbourhood of 300 million tons, and they would like to block out in the neighbourhood of 350 to 400 million tons before starting the actual development.

Mr. Higgins: Will Labrador power be used for smelting?

Mr. McCann: That is a possibility.

Item agreed to.

Mines branch—

185. Mineral resources investigations, $1,722,053.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): What work has been carried on under this vote, and what have been the results?

Mr. McCann: This vote provides for office, laboratory and field investigations relating to metallic minerals, industrial minerals, fuels, and mineral economics. The Geology and Mines Act of 1907 provided that the mines branch of the then department of mines was "to make such chemical, mechanical and metallurgical investigations as are found expedient to aid the mining and metallurgical industry of Canada." The present mines branch assists the bringing into production of Canadian mineral deposits by developing suitable ore-dressing and beneficiation methods. Research is being carried out to find efficient processes for treating low-grade and complex ores and to find means of lowering the costs of producing such metals as lithium and titanium.

The facilities in physical metallurgy are used to assist Canadian industrial development, and major problems in research concern advice and assistance to the national research council in connection with the atomic energy project. Co-operation with the Department of National Defence and with manufacturers of equipment involves various fields of research on alloy metals, including testing and development to find metals most suitable for service at extreme low temperatures and other metals which will withstand the extremely high temperatures required for jet propulsion. The branch, at the request of national research council, has undertaken investigations into the application of radioactive tracer materials for industrial and scientific problems. Some of the problems involve work of highly confidential or secret nature. In the field of fuels, close liaison is maintained with the dominion coal board, and major projects on coal include evaluation of Canadian coals for stoker operation and research on pressurized combustion to develop the use of coal in turbine propulsion. The problems in coal, natural gas and oil technology referred to the branch are many and varied. Included in the investigations and experimental work is the means of extracting and utilizing the oil in the bituminous sands of Alberta.

The hon. member's question referred more particularly to Nova Scotia, but the principles I have enunciated would apply to that province as they apply to other parts of Canada.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): How much work has been done and what has been accomplished?

Mr. McCann: There are two resident geologists in Nova Scotia, and with their parties they are engaged in exploring possible extensions of the coal properties in that province.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): What results have been accomplished up to now?

Mr. McCann: If the hon. member would be content to allow me to defer that answer, I will try to get it a little later.

Mr. Gillis: Supplementing what the hon. member for Cumberland has said, I find it difficult to understand where all this money goes to. This survey in Nova Scotia has been going on for the last eighteen months, at least, and a million and a half dollars is a lot of money to have been spent last year in that field. The mining association met in Nova Scotia within the last week; the press gave a complete report of government undertakings in that province in that field, and they sound very good. I have also gone over the report of the mines branch, but it devoted only about one paragraph to the survey going on in Nova Scotia.

It seems to me that government departments carrying on this kind of work, involving large expenditures of public funds, at least should make some comprehensive report to the minister and to the house to justify the appropriations. I find it hard to understand what is going on. I thought the mineral resources of Nova Scotia had been pretty well mapped out a long time ago. I know it is a good many years since I read the geographical surveys of the coal companies and papers and articles by F. W. Gray. The provincial department of mines did a great deal of work in that field, too, and I have wondered what kind of supersurvey was being carried on now and what results we got from the expenditure last year. I am glad to see this being done, if we can find out exactly what is going on. What progress was made last year which would justify the amount appropriated for that project in Nova Scotia?

Mr. McCann: I will get further information as to just what has been done in Nova Scotia, but if the hon. member turns to page 159, where the details of this vote are set out, he will see that $405,000 is for the permanent staff, which includes highly trained and highly paid technicians, scientists, assayers, chemists, electricians, engineers and so on. Then the temporary staff accounts for $718,000. There is $30,000 for casuals, an amount for overtime, and the necessary expenditures for printing, stationery and travel. There is an item of $296,000 for the acquisition of equipment, and $140,000 for supplies and materials; and the comparison is given with the previous year. Few of the people engaged in this activity are in the field; most of them are in the laboratories here in Ottawa, known as the Booth street property. There samples of ore are tested; investigations are made in reference to the mineral resources of Canada, and so on. While what is done in any particular province is not kept segregated, field parties are sent out every year with a view to keeping up to date with any mineral properties that may be found, or extensions of present fields.

Mr. Gillis: That statement would hardly justify the expenditure of this amount, if you are just going to spend it on highly trained technical employees. What I have in mind is that in the field of geology I thought the work in Nova Scotia was pretty complete. It is largely a question of coal in that province; that is about all they will find there. I was wondering if this department was carrying on any research in the direction of finding new uses for coal. Oil is very definitely entering that field, and I think the time is not far distant when we may have to take the by-products of coal and use them for commercial purposes. That industry is shrinking; and I do not think the discovery of new coal fields is the answer, because the markets already established are disappearing. I wondered if some of this money was being used in research of that kind, instead of sending out geological parties to find more coal.

Mr. Herridge: I understand that some of the research staffs of the large mining companies in Canada are working with research workers of this branch in the laboratories of the department.

Mr. McCann: That is right.

Mr. Herridge: What arrangements are made for the research men of private companies who work in the laboratories of the bureau of mines; and are any discoveries made there available to all companies in Canada?

Mr. McCann: We do provide facilities for private companies to carry on experimental work in our laboratories. Such work is being done at the present time by a number of companies, more particularly one from northern Manitoba which is attempting to work out a new process for the smelting of nickel. We co-operate with them, give them all the assistance we can, and any finds made by our people are available to the general public. Anything new developed privately is a matter for the people concerned in its development, but as a rule it is given to the public later.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I understood there were enormous deposits of nickel ore in the northwestern parts of the prairie provinces. Can the minister make any statement in that regard, and what part the department has played in those discoveries?

Mr. McCann: I do not know that I can give any more information than I have just given the hon. member for Kootenay West. I should like to answer the question concerning these surveys in Nova Scotia. The answer is that surveys of various Nova Scotia coals covered their physical and chemical properties, and so on; producing better and more marketable products, and eliminating waste; the interrelation of coal seams to aid in determining the future course of mining development. That is the work being done in reference to the coal industry of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Does that include examination into the practicability and necessity of washing plants for certain grades of coal?

Mr. McCann: I am told we do that work, too.

Item agreed to.

Mines branch—

187. Investigations of radioactive ores, $280,991.

Mr. Harkness: Would the minister tell us what this branch does? In the details at the back I notice that only three permanent employees, one chemist and two engineers, are listed. Is this branch chiefly concerned with what might be called assaying samples of radioactive ore sent in, or is it chiefly concerned with the investigation of any ore bodies that may be reported?

Mr. McCann: This appropriation is to maintain the services of the radioactivity division of the bureau of mines. These services were commenced in 1945 at the request of the minister of munitions and supply and the president of the national research council for the purpose of carrying on research on ore dressing and recovery of uranium from ores from the crown-acquired Eldorado mine at Great Bear Lake. The services to the crown company, Eldorado Mining and Refining (1944) Limited, are increasing in importance with the understanding of large-scale experimental work on the problem of recovering uranium lost by present methods of treatment. The policies of the atomic energy control board, in stimulating search in Canada for uranium-bearing minerals, are having widespread effect in causing new discoveries and the board takes the view, for security reasons concerning processes, that the burden of assaying and carrying on development of ore treatment methods for privately controlled uranium enterprises should be borne by the mines branch. The work of the section is part of the secret atomic energy project being carried out by certain government departments. Included in the activities is research into methods of detecting uranium which may have an important bearing upon the results of future prospecting in Canada.

The development of uranium ores, as I am sure the hon. gentleman knows, has been stimulated greatly by the increased price for uranium oxide. At the moment I believe it is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $6.00 per pound as compared with $2.75 per pound about a year ago. There has been a lot of activity in that particular development. The government, through Eldorado Mining and Refining Company, is in the market for uranium oxide as it is produced. The department of mines attempts to assist people by giving them such information as is available concerning the places where uranium might be found, taking into consideration geological factors. The department gives information with regard to the type of instruments which are now being used for the detection of those ores.

Mr. Harkness: I understand this particular branch is concerned with working out a new process for the recovery of uranium ore, and also with giving advice to people who are attempting to find those ores. Has the department anyone who goes out to the places from which samples have been sent to survey the ore body in order to determine how much there might be? The reason I ask the question is that the extent of the uranium ore which we have is a vital matter from the atomic point of view, and a vital matter from the defence and security point of view. I wondered whether either this particular branch or any other branch of the department has mining engineers who go out to the places where ore bodies have been discovered to make surveys?

Mr. McCann: Yes, we have an appropriation here of $8,000. This $8,000 is for field investigation of radioactive mineral occurrences which are brought to our attention, and which we consider are worthy of more detailed examination. In addition to that, geological parties that are out in the field will make examinations of particular ores that are brought to their attention.

Mr. Maltais: In view of what the minister has said, I wonder if he has any information about a survey having been made in the province of Quebec, in the county of Charlevoix, in the vicinity of St. Simeon?

Mr. McCann: I understand that a geological party of the province of Quebec is engaged in surveying this area. So far as analyses are concerned, we do not give the result publicly. They are given privately to the people who send in the sample.

Item agreed to.

Geological survey of Canada—

188. Geological survey administration and miscellaneous services, $156,300.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Mr. Chairman, you will observe that the votes from No. 188 to 196 involve surveys. I have examined them, and I have no particular questions to ask, except if the minister would relate them to the item over the page which concerns payments to the Royal Canadian Air Force and commercial companies for air photography, and to defray the expenses of the interdepartmental committee on air surveys, $1,340,000. I believe I have referred to all the items with respect to surveys other than the one which I have read. I am only anxious to know whether this vote No. 201, $1,340,000, covers the total cost of air services in connection with these many surveys which are mentioned on the previous page?

Mr. McCann: The answer is no, it is not the total cost of air services. This item of $1,340,000 has to do only with aerial photography. About $250,000 of this sum goes to private companies which have contracts to photograph 64,000 square miles, and $1,100,000 goes to the R.C.A.F. who will photograph about 200,000 square miles.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Apparently I have not made myself clear to the minister. Let us take item 189, which reads:

> Geological surveys, including an amount of $2,500 for Canada's share of the cost of the committee on mineral resources and geology, London, England, and a contribution of $3,000 towards the Arctic institute expedition to Baffin island, 1950.

Then there is the surveys and mapping branch, surveys and mapping branch administration, and what I am trying to find out is —I think this must be so—whether that $1,340,000 is the total paid for air work in connection with the items listed on the previous page.

Mr. McCann: Well, I am informed that the vote of $1,340,000 has nothing whatever to do with these other votes. That is money paid out to the private companies and the R.C.A.F. for aerial photography, but in carrying out the other surveys, geological surveys, topographical surveys, hydrographic surveys and geodetic surveys, there are expenditures for aerial transportation of the parties distinct from the amount the hon. member is questioning us about.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I rather fail to understand it, because the only use you can make of surveys by air is to fly over and look at the ground beneath you and then to photograph it. That is all you do on an aerial survey. If you will notice item 189 which I just read, you will find there that we are spending $1,524,774, an increase of $329,409. I hope the minister will appreciate the fact that I am not criticizing this. I assume that the increase in the vote must be for more extensive work. What I am trying to find out is how much of the money we are spending is going for surveys by air and how much of it remains for surveys on foot, by motorcar or on horseback. In all these items on the first page to which I referred, page 29, it is difficult for anyone to segregate the various types of effort which we are putting forward. If air surveys are also included in items 188 to 197, it does not give us much information to say that the air force and private companies doing aerial photography are getting $1,340,000. We do not know what portion of these other items are going to aerial surveys, and I have read as carefully as I can the details given later on in this book.

I want to ask one other question. I take it that the minister may answer both questions at the same time and then I at least have finished. I wish he would tell us separately about item 191, topographical surveys—I know what that means—including expenses of the Canadian board on geographical names. When the minister rises, I wonder if he would tell us about that. Then I have nothing further to bother him with.

Mr. McCann: I think I can deal with those matters now satisfactorily. This vote of $1,524,774 is to continue the geological survey of all the provinces of Canada, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, with the object of determining potential sources of minerals, oil and gas; to initiate and maintain research facilities in all the branches of geology, with the object of advancing the practical application of geology to the search for mineral resources; to compile records and issue maps of field investigations and studies for the purpose of informing and assisting prospectors, mining men and others interested.

The principal increase here is in salaries. The increase is $329,000. Of that, the principal increase in salaries is $142,000; field surveys, $109,000; acquisition of equipment, $45,000. These increases are based on additional requirements for personnel and equipment for an increase of about 20 per cent in the number of field parties that are sent out in the summer; additional personnel, instruments, equipment, etc.; and for the extension of mineralogical investigations and of increased costs of materials, supplies and printing.

My understanding of it is that in those items which the hon. member has indicated, other than item 201 which is for $1,340,000, there is nothing included in them for aerial mapping but there is included in them something for air services. That would be the transportation of men and materials into and out of the fields where they go. But the amount of money spent on aerial mapping is, as I indicated, $1,340,000. It is divided between private companies and the R.C.A.F., so that there is not a duplication in those items in the charge for aerial mapping. They are all correlated because the ground on which the geological parties are working either has had aerial photography or will have it. It is the compilation of the information which is brought in by those geological, topographical, hydrographic or any other parties that are in the field, along with the mapping, that gives the basis to the department to make the maps during the winter months. Really that is what a great deal of this information is collected for.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): They also, of course, have air assistance in connection with their field parties?

Mr. McCann: Yes.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): In many places I have no doubt that air transport takes them in and brings them out again.

Mr. McCann: Yes.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Will the minister tell me about this geographical names business, and then I will have nothing further to ask. You will find that in item 191. I hope the minister will not mind my grouping these.

Mr. McCann: Not at all.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I think they are full brothers.

Mr. McCann: There was a time when I knew as little about it myself. On item 191—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am quite willing to go along with the minister, but for the purpose of order, and so that all hon. members may know exactly with what item we are dealing, I think we should proceed item by item.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): You are quite right, Mr. Chairman. I was trying to cut a corner.

The Deputy Chairman: We are now on item 188.

Mr. McCann: May I answer the hon. member for Calgary West? This is taken from the annual report of the Department of Mines and Resources. As to the Canadian board on geographical names, order in council P.C. 3397 of August 3, 1948, changed the name of the geographic board of Canada to the Canadian board on geographical names, and brought up to date the authority, the functions and membership of the board. The names for 88 maps and 49 hydrographic charts were adopted and many new names and changes were considered. A revision of the board's regulations, principles, nomenclature and bylaws was published and considerable work was done in preparing a forthcoming gazetteer of Canada series. Then it goes on to give the names of the different people on the board, and their function is to select proper names for rivers, mountains and these geographical places that have to be named, to see that appropriate names are given and that there is no duplication in them.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): What does it cost?

Mr. McCann: The board works without salary.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to ask the minister when the report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1950, will be published. It seems to me that when the reports appear—and this applies to all departments—they are so ancient that they are not read so much as they otherwise would be. Is it not possible to have the report of the geological survey published sooner? Evidently the 1950 report will not be published until 1951 or 1952.

Mr. McCann: The report for the work that is done this year will be compiled in the next winter months and published six months after that.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): We have not received the report of last year's work yet.

Mr. McCann: That will be in shortly.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): When do you expect to have it published? I refer to the report of last summer's field work.

Mr. McCann: According to the statutes, it will be reported at the next session of parliament within ten, fifteen or thirty days after the session opens, for the fiscal year preceding.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I notice that the expenditures contemplated by this item go far afield, over water, over ice and over Baffin island. I think we should know what have been the results of the explorations of Baffin island.

Mr. McCann: During the summer of 1950, the Arctic Institute of North America will sponsor an expedition to Baffin island in order to study the glaciology, geology, and biology.

The former department of mines and resources was approached by Mr. P. D. Baird, director of the Montreal office of the institute, who requested participation by the department in the expedition to the extent of supplying a geologist and one assistant, and a contribution of $3,000 towards its financing. Inasmuch as the geological survey of Canada is much interested in studying Baffin island, which is part of the Pre-Cambrian shield, Mr. Baird has been advised that a geologist and one assistant will be provided, and that parliament will be requested to approve of a grant of $3,000 to help meet the expenses of the expedition.

198. Geographical branch, $160,000.

Mr. Gibson: This being the department of technical surveys, I wonder whether the minister has considered the possibility of making a factual survey of the proposed routes of the various pipe lines which are supposed to go from Alberta to the Pacific coast. It would be very valuable. Instead of our taking secondhand information from the various private companies as to whether one route or another route is feasible, and whether one would cost $20 million more than another, it would be very valuable to the board of transport commissioners or to the cabinet when it comes time for them to make a decision in this matter of the exportation of fluid and electricity to have the minister's department provide them with firsthand information. Does the minister not think it would be valuable, and has he considered making a survey of that kind?

Mr. McCann: Mr. Chairman, that is a suggestion which could be considered at least; but I might say to the hon. gentleman that the matter of pipe lines comes under the Department of Transport.

Mr. Green: The Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. McCann: The Department of Trade and Commerce; if we were requested by that department to make a survey and we could get the money somewhere with which to do it we would be prepared to do it.

Mr. Gibson: I am sure we would vote the money for it if the department were asked to do it.

Item agreed to.

195. Legal surveys, including grant of $350 to assist in printing the publication of the Canadian Institute of Surveying, $572,167.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): This is an item which raises the curiosity of a good many. I suppose legal surveys are surveys of the legal profession. This is quite a large sum. I do not know how far it would go if some of the firms of lawyers that this government employed are on the payroll. It is an interesting title to give an appropriation under the minister.

Mr. McCann: "Legal" as it is used here has nothing to do with the legal profession. The purpose of this vote is to maintain the legal surveys division which undertakes all legal surveys of crown lands in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, of national parks, ordnance lands, and Indian reserves, and legal surveys required by the departments of the dominion government; the preparation of electoral district maps; the plotting, preparing and maintenance of aeronautical charts of all kinds for civil and military purposes; the preparation of air flight manuals; the maintenance of a central distributing agency for charts, maps, plans and technical publications, and the maintenance of the central office for indexing, filing and recording survey returns and plans and supplying information from them.

This is a very important function. During the summer months we will have a great number of field parties out that will be doing this work. We will have certain parties on the Yukon-British Columbia boundary; one on the Alberta-British Columbia boundary; another on the Alberta-Northwest Territories boundary; Alberta survey of the western boundary of Wood Buffalo park, Indian survey in Alberta; surveys will be carried out in Assiniboine, Nut Lake and Meadow Lake at the request of the Indian affairs branch. There will be surveys in Manitoba, in Ontario, and in every province of the country. A press release was given out a few weeks ago with reference to some of these survey parties and the number of parties that will be engaged in this particular work is twenty-five. It is not entirely a spending department. There was a small revenue amounting to $44,183 in the past year.

713. Gratuity to Mrs. Michael Feniak, widow of the late Dr. Feniak, a former employee of the geological survey of Canada, who lost his life while on duty in the Northwest Territories, $2,000.

Mr. Knowles: Is this gratuity covered by item 713 the only payment that will be made to this widow? I am not complaining about the payment. It seems to me that unless there is some other provision, the amount should be larger.

Mr. McCann: This has to do with the gratuity which is paid to the widow of Dr. Feniak, who was an employee on the geological survey of Canada. He lost his life while on duty in the Northwest Territories.

Under the workmen's compensation ordinance, Yukon Territory, Mrs. Feniak received a lump sum payment of $5,000 for herself and $1,500 for her two children, a total of $6,500. Had her claim been administered by the Ontario workmen's compensation board she would have been provided with a pension of $50 per month until death or remarriage plus $10 per month for each of her two children until they reach the age of sixteen years. It is obvious that the Ontario pension offers greater security over the years and takes into account the age of the children. The income from her present lump sum benefit will be most inadequate for herself and the two children in the years directly ahead. Mrs. Feniak is but thirty years of age.

Mrs. Feniak's case was brought to the attention of the Northwest Territories council with a view to having the compensation paid to her supplemented by ordinance or otherwise. The council were in favour of assisting her in this way and sought the opinion of the deputy minister of justice as to whether they had the authority to do so. However, the deputy minister of justice gave an opinion that they did not have this authority.

Since Dr. Feniak's widow and children are to suffer financially, because of the geographical location of his work at the time of death, this department considers that a gratuity of $2,000 would be of some assistance to Mrs. Feniak in bringing up her two small children.

That is why this is sought as a vote from parliament.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask whether this amount will put Mrs. Feniak in the same position she would have been in had her husband lost his life in Ontario?

Mr. McCann: No, it will not.

Mr. Knowles: It seems to me if there is an argument for making this payment, as I believe there is, the department should have gone all the way at least to equalize the position she would have been in had her husband died while in Ontario.

714. To authorize and provide for a compassionate payment, by way of reimbursement to the province of Manitoba, of the department's share of the costs in connection with an accident to Angus Thomas, employed by the Ontario-Manitoba boundary commission, who was severely burned while engaged in survey work in northern Manitoba, $7,000.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps the minister would make an explanation of this item as well. Again my interest is in seeing that this Mr. Thomas, who was severely burned, gets a fair—

Mr. McCann: An explanation of this is, to authorize and provide for a compassionate payment, by way of reimbursement to the province of Manitoba, of the department's share of the cost in connection with an accident to Angus Thomas, employed by the Ontario-Manitoba boundary commission, who was severely burned while engaged in survey work in northern Manitoba.

Angus Thomas, an Indian dog driver employed by the Ontario-Manitoba boundary commission, was severely burned in a tent fire on January 25, 1948, while engaged in survey work in northern Manitoba. His injuries have rendered him totally disabled. The commission filed a claim on his behalf with the workmen's compensation board of Manitoba. This claim was accepted and it was necessary for some time to pass before the full extent of the medical and pension costs could be determined.

The Ontario-Manitoba boundary commission is financed jointly by the federal, Ontario and Manitoba governments, each government being responsible for one-third of the cost. Because they are closer to the work being done, the department of mines and natural resources of the Manitoba government handles the accounts for the commission. Commission expenditures are made through the open ledger account of the Manitoba government who in turn are reimbursed by the other governments.

During the winter of 1950 this department was informed by the workmen's compensation board of Manitoba of the cost incident to the accident sustained by Thomas, as well as an estimate of the future cost. Payments made by the workmen's compensation board of Manitoba up to January 21, 1950, amount to $1,470.82 plus medical expenses, making a total of $4,520.70.

In addition the board have on hand an outstanding air transportation account of Central Northern Airways Limited in the amount of $172.20. I could give considerable detail, but perhaps it would be sufficient to say that the gist of the whole matter is that the sum of $7,000 comprises $6,836.85 for the reimbursement of the province of Manitoba in connection with Thomas' medical costs to date and his compensation pension to date and in future, and the remainder is to provide for the possible medical and transportation expenses which may be incurred during the year 1950-51.

Mr. Knowles: In other words this is money that will be paid to Manitoba by way of reimbursement. We cannot tell from this information what Mr. Thomas' position is as a result of whatever has been done?

Mr. McCann: We have taken the figures of the workmen's compensation board in Manitoba, as to what their projected cost is.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Would the minister make a statement as to the headway made in connection with the examination and development of bituminous sands. There has been a great miscarriage of appropriations in this matter up until recently.

Mr. McCann: During my years in parliament going back for the past fifteen years the development of Abasand oils has been a live issue. Money was appropriated for it; but during the last two or three years, since the enormous development of the Alberta oil fields, not so much attention has been paid to the Abasand development.

The department has taken an interest since early in this century in investigating the occurrence and possible utilization of these sands as a source of petroleum products. A scarcity of petroleum during world war II stimulated investigation of these deposits and of the recovery of bitumen.

In 1942 drilling was undertaken to discover, if possible, a uniformly rich deposit of the sands which could support a large oil industry. By 1947 a four and a half square mile area had been located containing an estimated 900 million barrels of bitumen.

In 1943 the government, in an effort to solve other problems confronting the utilization of bituminous sands, undertook to finance the improvement of the plant of Abasand Oils Limited. Some results were obtained but the separation plant was destroyed by fire on June 16, 1945.

Because of the change in the war picture by that time, the federal government decided not to continue with the project, and an agreement was entered into between the federal government and Abasand Oils, conveying to the latter all rights and equipment, on consideration of which the company undertook to pay the government the sum of $2,063,289.11, part of it to be reimbursed from the sale of movables; another part from the proceeds of rentals on buildings and machinery; the major portion, amounting to $1,913,427.08, to be reimbursable at the rate of 5 cents per barrel of bitumen produced or contained in materials sold, if and when the company would enter into production.

The indebtedness of the company to the federal government now stands at $1,802,107.39.

The department's view is that the production of petroleum products from the bituminous sands would be uneconomic in competition with Alberta crudes at their present prices.

The mines branch have developed on a pilot plant scale a cold water method for the separation of bitumen from the bituminous sands.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

111. Departmental administration, $418,340.

Mr. Applewhaite: Mr. Chairman, there is a matter connected with the Department of Fisheries which I believe I might well discuss under this item. I feel sure however that the people in my section of the Pacific coast, irrespective of their political persuasions, would never forgive me if I were to undertake to speak on this subject without first expressing their appreciation to the department and its minister.

I would not like to say that they have no complaints and no requests for betterment. No one in this parliament knows better than the Minister of Fisheries that in any business once anyone reaches a stage of complete satisfaction and complacency, once he stops trying to improve and to get ahead, just at that time he begins to slip back. So I shall warn the minister that we will never stop asking for more, and expecting to get it.

I wish to tell him however that that part of the fishing industry for which I am speaking, along the northern Pacific coast of British Columbia, is appreciative indeed of the work being done in their interests and for their good by the Department of Fisheries. They place the credit for that largely where it rightfully belongs, namely with the Minister of Fisheries.

The subject I wish to discuss this evening is that of the halibut season on the Pacific coast. Perhaps I shall suggest certain changes in the powers and set-up of the international fisheries commission. May I make it clear however that I am not attacking the members of that commission. On the contrary I am convinced that they are doing as good a job as is possible under present conditions, and that they are not only keen but also enthusiastic in their work, which is being done most conscientiously and efficiently.

They are restricted by a convention and a statute. I wish to discuss the convention and the statute. The views I am about to discuss this evening are those I obtained before this session opened from an open mass meeting of the fishermen in my area held under the auspices of the deep-sea fishermen's union, with the approval of the halibut vessel owners association, and from conversations with several sound and experienced halibut fishermen.

The statements of fact I am going to make were acquired in that way. I believe they are correct. If not the minister will correct me. If I make any misstatement of fact it will be through error and not by intent. The administration of the Pacific coast halibut fisheries, so far as the closed season is concerned, comes under a convention between the United States and Canada signed on June 29, 1937, and confirmed by chapter 36 of the statutes of that year. That convention gives to the international fisheries commission the power to make certain recommendations. I wish to emphasize the fact that they have power to recommend, not to order. The commission does not make final orders, and it does no enforcing. The operative words there are these:

> The international fisheries commission . . . subject to the approval of the President of the United States of America and of the Governor General of Canada—

Then it goes on to set out the powers to divide the waters into fishing areas, to limit the catch, to set a closed season, to fix the size and character of the appliances, and so forth. I wish to emphasize the words, "subject to the approval of the President of the United States of America and of the Governor General of Canada" which surely prove that when the orders are finally issued they are government orders. That point is made clear in the statute itself. I quote section 9, subsection 1, which reads:

> The governor in council may make orders and regulations to give effect to any permission, limitation, regulation, prohibition, or other action of the international fisheries commission, pursuant to the provisions of the convention.

I wish to establish, first, that the powers of the commission are to make recommendations, and, second, that the orders as finally issued are orders of the respective governments. The next point I want to make is that the powers of the commission are based upon principles of conservation only. The commission is set up in the interests of the conservation of the north Pacific halibut fishery. The commission is not set up to regulate the industry. Under the terms of reference they cannot be influenced in their judgment by matters of business practice. As I say, they are restricted to the title of the treaty, which is, "for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the northern Pacific ocean and Bering sea". Such recommendations as they see fit to make can be made only in that connection.

But the government and we in this parliament are interested, not only in conservation but in the efficient conduct of the industry. We are interested further in the working conditions of the men engaged in the industry. I can hardly say their comfort and convenience, because those words are a little soft when applied to an industry of that sort, but efficiency and satisfaction in their work are matters that can be considered in connection with any industry, including the fishing industry.

As I say, my second point is that the commission is confined in its recommendations to those concerning conservation, but the government of the country can take into consideration matters having to do with the most efficient conduct of the north Pacific halibut fishery.

What the halibut fishermen want is a split season, or two seasons. The present halibut season is too short. I think it is necessary that one should explain how it comes about that there is a restricted halibut season and how such season is based on principles of conservation. The commission has power to investigate and to recommend what quantity of fish it is safe from a conservation point of view to take from any given area.

Let us say that they take a given area and say that 10 million pounds of halibut can safely be taken from that area. When those 10 million pounds are taken the season comes to an end. The claim of the halibut fishermen is that the present season is too short for efficient operation. It is possible that there are other views; it is possible that other branches of the fishing industry on the Pacific coast may not be in favour of changing the present short halibut season. I have no idea what the views of the large companies are, but I suspect that the salmon fishermen like the present short halibut season very much because it enables them to fish for halibut for a few weeks and then go into their own line of salmon fishing.

The halibut fisherman, with the type of craft he uses, cannot go into salmon fishing, and from his view a certain proportion of those engaged in salmon fishing chisel into his industry. I admit that there may be different views on this matter but I suggest to the government and the minister that the views of the producers of halibut should receive first consideration. It is their industry that is primarily involved, and their views should receive paramount consideration. In justification of my statement that the season is too short, may I point out that in area No. 2 in 1931 the halibut season was 245 days. It has steadily shrunk until in 1949 it was 34 days, and this year it was 31 days. In area No. 3 the season was 245 days in 1931, and in 1949 it had shrunk to 73 days.

Thirty-one or 34 days is a pretty short period in which to earn the most of your year's income. I do not think that is an unfair statement to make. The halibut fishermen are so equipped that they cannot fish for any other type of fish. If a ship has a slight mechanical break-down and loses a trip, or even three or four days, that constitutes a substantial part of its annual earning capacity. Halibut vessels cost a lot of money, and they can be paid for only by earnings. Thirty-one or 34 days is a short time in which to earn an amortized share of the cost of a halibut vessel.

Recently there has been an unfortunate slump in dogfish livers, which used to be a first-class sideline. That alternative to which the halibut men could turn is being restricted also. I may be wrong in my next statement, but it occurs to me that this progressive curtailing of the season may result eventually in forcing up the price to a point where it will be beyond the reach of the average consumer.

I said that there might be opposing views to my other suggestions, but I do not think there are any opposing views to my next suggestion, which is based on conservation. The halibut season for this year opened on May 1 and closed on June 1. There are halibut on the banks in July. It is the opinion of the fishermen on the coast that those halibut which are on the banks in July were not there in May and will not be there next May, and so are not being fished at all. In other words there is a run of fish not being considered, which does not come into the picture when the quotas are being fixed. In that connection I want to read the binding words dealing with the season, as they appear in the treaty. It is within the power of the commission to—

(c) prohibit departure of vessels from any port or place, or from any receiving vessel or station, to any area for halibut fishing, after any date when in the judgment of the international fisheries commission the vessels which have departed for that area prior to that date or which are known to be fishing in that area shall suffice to catch the limit which shall have been set for that area. . . .

So if a limit of ten million pounds is set for an area and that limit is caught every year by the first week in June, those July fish are not caught at all. I understand that scientific opinion is gradually coming to be the same as that of the fishermen themselves, that these July or later runs are not being fished. In that connection I note with pleasure further down the page that item No. 118 is being increased by $15,000. I presume the United States government will have to match that, since the expenses of this commission are borne fifty-fifty. May I express the hope that the $30,000 so made available, or some portion of it, will be used, as I have reason to believe it will, in proving or disproving our theory that those July and later halibut are never fished. If that theory can be proved correct, there are two to four million pounds or more of halibut available to be caught every year which at present are not being touched, which presumably die a natural death and represent a total waste. Therefore I claim, and with reason, that if our arguments are correct the opening of a later season can have no possible adverse effects from the conservation angle.

To get at those July or later fish would involve a split season. The fishermen on the coast are of the opinion that the Canadian and United States governments do not interpret the present treaty in the same way. I have no personal knowledge of the interpretation either government places upon the law, but I must read this section once more in order to explain to the committee the problem with which the fishermen are faced. The powers of the commission in connection with fixing the season, skipping some words, are:

—to prohibit departure of vessels from any port or place . . . after any date when in the judgment of the international fisheries commission the vessels which have departed . . . shall suffice to catch the limit . . . set for that area.

Under a very strict interpretation of those words there might be power to prohibit vessels sailing into a ten million pound area after eight million pounds had been accounted for in order to permit them to return later in the year and pick up the other two million pounds. A very close reading of the provision, however, might lead one to the opinion that the fishermen may only continue fishing until the limit has been caught, and then they must stop for that year. The fishermen on the Pacific coast are of the opinion that this is not the interpretation placed upon the treaty by the Canadian government, that the Canadian government believe that under the present treaty there may be power to order a split season. They also believe that the United States government holds a different view. Rightly or wrongly my fishermen are firm in their belief that the view of the United States government is that under the present treaty there shall be one season only. I do not know what the interpretation is; but if we are right in believing that the Canadian government thinks the power is there now, then we respectfully suggest that the government could not have much objection to entering into a new treaty which would state in so many words that the right is there, putting the matter beyond all possible question.

So our request is that this government, at the earliest possible moment, enter into negotiations with the United States with a view to drafting a new treaty to cover this point. A draft has been drawn already, of which I have a copy. I understand the author is Dr. Chapman, special assistant to the under secretary of state of the United States. At any rate I know Dr. Chapman read and explained this treaty at public hearings for fishermen on the Pacific coast. On the point I have been discussing the new treaty would read as follows:

—the international fisheries commission, with the approval of the president of the United States of America and of the governor general of Canada, may, after investigation has shown such action to be necessary, in respect of the nationals, inhabitants and fishing vessels and boats of the United States of America and of Canada, and in respect of halibut or sablefish or both, as the case may be:

(a) divide the convention waters into areas;

We have been given to understand in some quarters that objection has been raised to extending these powers, to giving the international fisheries commission too much power. I repeat that under this draft, as under the existing treaty, the powers of the international fisheries commission in reference to enforcing their regulations are entirely subject in Canada to the governor general in council and in the United States to the similar organization under the president. Incidentally this draft treaty also makes another change; it increases the number of members of the international fisheries commission from four to six. This would enable one of the United States members to be a representative of Alaska; and I should mention that under my hand I have a copy of a resolution from the associated boards of trade of central British Columbia, passed last year, endorsing that principle.

I am not wedded to the terms of this draft treaty, but I am wedded to its objectives. I do not plead for the government to sponsor this particular draft, but I do plead with them to investigate the possibility of negotiating some document which will incorporate the main provisions of this draft. The draft to which I refer has been adopted by the united fishermen and allied workers union in a statement I have under my hand. It has been approved by the united fishermen's co-operative association, which approval I also have.

What about the industry as a whole; what is their view? A poll has been taken up and down the Pacific coast among both boat owners and fishermen. It is not unanimous, which proves that it is genuine. I should like to give the committee the result of that poll. In Juneau, Alaska, both boat owners and fishermen were against adopting the split season. In Petersburg, Alaska, the boat owners were against adopting the split season and the fishermen expressed no opinion. In Ketchikan, Alaska, owners and fishermen were both in favour of a split season. In Prince Rupert, British Columbia, owners and fishermen were both in favour of a split season. In Vancouver owners and fishermen were both in favour of a split season. In Seattle, Washington, owners and fishermen both favoured a split season. I do not think there can be much doubt, therefore, as to how the industry feels on this question.

In conclusion, therefore, I should like to urge this government to give prompt and favourable consideration to these proposals which have the overwhelming support of the people who are concerned, the halibut fishermen on the Pacific coast. I would ask them to bear in mind, if it is true that they feel the power is there and so a change is not necessary, that it cannot do any harm to make the power even more obvious. I should like to ask the government to bear in mind what we realize, that the whole treaty system is set up on a basis of conservation. My fishermen want a split season, but they do not want to affect in any way the excellent conservation work that is being done. On the contrary they feel the adoption of their proposals would assist in conserving the stocks which at the present time are being fished, and at the same time make available a stock that has never been fished.

I would ask the government to consider that it is the long line fisherman himself who wants it. It is for him I am speaking in making this proposal. I would ask the government to consider, although it has nothing to do with conservation, the benefits that would be derived by enabling men engaged in the halibut fishing industry to know that if they come into port on Saturday and stay over until Monday they have not lost one-tenth of the year. That may sound exaggerated to some members, but it is equivalent to a little over a month of our time. I have seen a ship held up for thirty-six hours and thus miss a trip, and that represented about one-sixth of her earning capacity for the year. The only other objection that I think might be raised at this time is that the argument that the July run is not being fished may not be sound. It may be that those July fish on the banks were the same ones that were not caught in May. Well, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that if that is true the commission will not recommend a split season. It would not hurt anyone, since international negotiations take a long time, to make the necessary treaty provisions so that, if the scientists and conservationists believe it is justified, we will be ready for the next season. Then we shall not have the men who are trying to make a living starting their year's work on the first of May, finishing it on the first of June, and wondering how they are going to get by the rest of the time.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, I had intended to say a few words about this subject when vote No. 118, to provide for the Canadian share of expenses of the international fisheries commission, was under consideration. Now that the subject has been raised by the member for Skeena, and dealt with by him so thoroughly, I would merely like to add that I have had similar representations from the fishermen and the vessel owners' association as well as the co-operative in Vancouver. A large number of halibut fishing boats go from Vancouver, and the opinions of the fishermen there as expressed to me, are along the same lines as the views given tonight by the member for Skeena.

They suggest too that the position now is that halibut can only be caught for one month, and that as a result most of the halibut being sold throughout the year is in the frozen form rather than as fresh fish. The fishermen believe that is another bad feature. I do not believe the member for Skeena dealt with that aspect of the matter.

Apparently the United States government is prepared to negotiate a new treaty, and the delay seems to be on the part of the Canadian government. That is what I have been told. It may not be correct, but the understanding of the men who interviewed me was that the Canadian government had been delaying action. They felt that government policy should now be directed towards the negotiation of a treaty with the United States which will bring about the results requested by the member for Skeena. When the minister replies, I hope he will be able to give us some assurance that the government realizes the importance of this problem and is prepared to take action.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Mr. Chairman, I just want to speak briefly about a problem that is confronting the fishermen on the Atlantic coast. This problem is connected with the sardine industry. The fishermen on the east coast today are facing a season that is not so bright, owing to the fact that the prices paid for raw materials by the Maine canners have been cut in two since the first day of June. The demand for sardines is very limited. Other branches of the fishing industry on the east coast are faced with the same problem. At the present time, one of our very important industries in the Quoddy area is the pollock fishery. These fishermen are in a position to make very large catches of fish, but the price has dropped from ten to twelve cents each during the past few weeks.

In my opinion the most serious problem is presented by the sardine industry. At the present time the cost of maintaining and operating sardine weirs is at the highest peak in the history of this country. Fishermen who had a few thousand dollars this spring decided, owing to the fact that during the past eight or nine months the catch of sardines had been limited, and it was assumed the market was clear, to take their savings to buy the materials to go back into the business this year. Up until the first of June the catch had been very small. Then sardines struck in large quantities in Maine and Charlotte county and also in Saint John county. The fishermen were able to shut off thousands of hogsheads of sardines in coves. In a very short time it was found that there was no market, and the price dropped from $20 a hogshead to $10 in a few days. Along the main coast, where there were thousands of hogsheads shut off the fishermen held them until the situation was hopeless, then lifted the twine and let them swim away. Today the demand is limited and the price is 50 per cent lower than it was one month ago.

Listening to the debates in this House of Commons, I often wonder just what would happen if the price of wheat dropped 50 per cent or the price of beef suddenly dropped 50 per cent, or any other of the primary products. We would see the members from all the agricultural districts in Canada telling their story in the House of Commons. This problem is one which seems to have created very little interest, and very little worry except to the people who are directly affected. I do hope that conditions may improve, but I can assure you that at the present time the outlook is gloomy.

One week ago tonight I attended a meeting in my home town. It was an international gathering and there were 50 or 60 representatives from the state of Maine. A large proportion of that number were engaged in the sardine canning industry. Mr. Pike, who is president of the Maine sardine canners association, spoke at that meeting and gave us a clear picture of the situation in which the fishermen and canners find themselves today. Markets are extremely dull. They were hesitant as to buying sardines at the price they had been paying for two or three years, holding off when it looked as if the price of canned sardines would drop. For that reason about 50 per cent of the canneries in the state of Maine are operating. The other 50 per cent have their doors still closed and it is doubtful as to when they will start again.

During the war a ceiling price was put on sardines. The fishermen were given to understand that after the war every effort would be made to maintain a fair price in order to make up for some of the loss they sustained during the war when they might have taken, on many occasions, double what they were getting. But it has not worked out just that way, and they find themselves in the same position they have found themselves in after every war. The market is limited; the price has been cut in two; and the outlook is none too good. I hope that the Canadian canneries will continue to pay $15 per hogshead as they are at the present time. They are taking perhaps 50 per cent of the sardines that are being caught. In Saint John county and in Charlotte county there are hundreds of hogsheads for which markets cannot be found.

I intend to speak only briefly because I realize that we are trying to get through. But before taking my seat I want to compliment the Minister of Fisheries and the officials of his department for the concerted effort they have made during the past few years to create a more friendly feeling and greater evidence of co-operation between the fisheries department and those engaged in the fishing industry. It is quite noticeable where I live that every effort has been made by the fisheries department to create this friendly feeling; and I know that between the industry and the department there is better co-operation today than there has been at any previous time.

I believe that if those engaged in the fishing industry and also those in the canning industry can be educated to provide a better article, it will do the industry a great deal of good. In the past our weakness to a great extent has been that we were not providing as good an article as we could provide. I believe that the Department of Fisheries, through their efforts, and with the knowledge they have, can be of great assistance to the industry. I want to say that the assistance they are giving and the evidence of co-operation between the department and the industry are greatly appreciated. If it continues, I believe that we may look forward to something better in the fishing industry in the future.

Mr. Higgins: I wish to join with the hon. member for Skeena on the other side of this great country and on the other side of this chamber in extending to the minister, as I have before, and all those associated with him, our thanks for his work and for the statement of the work that he is doing. I expect he is going to hear continually from this side of the chamber requests such as he heard from the district represented by the hon. member for Skeena.

As hon. members of the committee are aware, I have been asking questions on various occasions about this matter of the fisheries, particularly as it pertains to Newfoundland. I do that not for the sake of talking but because I realize, as do hon. members and as does the minister, how vital this industry is to Newfoundland itself. When I talk of the fishery, I refer particularly—and I intend to do so tonight—to the salt codfish industry. In order that hon. members may be able to evaluate the position in the proper perspective I should like to say that the total production of all the provinces engaged in the salt codfishing industry is scarcely 40 per cent of the average normal Newfoundland production. The hon. member for Charlotte will probably know that as well. Moreover, the markets to which salt codfish is sold by the other provinces are all on this side of the Atlantic. Because of the size of the catch of the other provinces and its relation to the total industry of each of the mainland provinces the salt fish trade is of comparatively little importance to these provinces.

The question of marketing of any surplus occasions little worry and the only problem really is the sale of the current year's catch. The problem in the newest province is quite different indeed, because almost half the catch each year must be sold in European markets. If prices are low or if there is difficulty in making sale, the effect on the economy of the province might well be ruinous. It must be remembered that salt fish supports practically half the total economy of the province of Newfoundland. Up to the present time there is no alternative means of providing earning power and I suggest that it is much better to produce salt fish, even though government assistance may be required, than to stop fishing. Hon members will appreciate the fact that of the population of some 325,000 people in Newfoundland, some 30,000 are engaged in the fishing industry, scattered over the province in some 1,300 fishing communities. It will therefore be realized what an important factor the salt codfish industry is to the province.

I have read the statement of the minister today, and frankly I must confess to him that although I thank him for it, I do not feel entirely satisfied with it. I realize fully, of course, the position the department was up against. But in so far as I am concerned, whilst the statement is appreciated it does not go far enough and it does not answer the worries that the people engaged in the fisheries in the province of Newfoundland wish answered. Actually all that has happened is this. The government is to buy at two-thirds of the 1948 price the amount of fish in the hands of the fishermen. As the minister stated, that amount is comparatively small. The minister may feel like telling the amount but I am not going to press him to do so. Neither am I going to ask him what amount of fish is still in the hands of merchants and exporters in Newfoundland. I do not think that amount of fish should be disclosed. It may interfere with future marketing, and I certainly have no intention of putting that question to him.

With all due respect to the fisheries prices support board and their recommendation, I suggest that their recommendation is not a sound one. As the minister well knows, the fishing industry in Newfoundland is carried on under a system that is unique, having regard to the rest of the dominion. It is largely a credit business. Fishermen do not go fishing until they have been given supplies by the merchants in the various settlements before the fishing begins. As I am quite certain the hon. member for Grand Falls-White Bay will agree, having surplus fish in the hands of merchants, particularly where the capital of the merchants is not great, is going to preclude the giving of supplies to fishermen. With all due respect to the advice the minister has received, I feel it is not quite the answer to the problem. I feel that there is a real emergency in the province at the present time, and I feel that there should be given a definite undertaking to buy at least the amount of fish that was left over, that could not be sold and that will not be sold in the ordinary manner and through the ordinary channels at the end of the year. If that is not given then I fear very much for the supplying that is going to take place this year. I realize of course that they are going to fish because Newfoundland people are usually independent, but if the needed money is not in the merchant's hands to grant supplies then I do not know how it is expected that the ordinary fisherman is going to be able to go fishing. I say that with all due respect to the particular committee that made the recommendations to the minister.

I have eight particular things that I want to discuss with the minister. The second one is the question I put to him this morning, namely, arranging the convertibility of sterling for the sale of salt codfish up to 400,000 quintals. To bear out what I said this morning I want to read two or three excerpts from newspaper accounts at the time the explanation was made. The first one is dated April 24, and is from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald. It reads:

> The government of Canada will aid Newfoundland in selling her salt codfish to Europe over the sterling-dollar exchange barriers during 1950, fisheries minister R. W. Mayhew announced here today through Newfoundland fisheries board chairman Raymond Gushue.
> It is understood that the federal government will provide the necessary exchange to enable Newfoundland to sell 400,000 quintals of codfish to Italy, Spain and Portugal.

On the same day, April 24, in the Evening Telegram of Newfoundland in big black headlines we find the following:

> Federal government will help Newfoundland sell salt cod to Europe
> The government of Canada will aid Newfoundland in selling her codfish to Europe over the sterling-dollar exchange barriers during 1950, fisheries minister R. W. Mayhew announced here Sunday through Newfoundland fisheries board chairman Raymond Gushue.

The report is practically the same as that which appeared in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald. The statement is made in the issue of the Evening Telegram of April 26, and again on May 2 in an editorial in the Daily News of St. John's, beginning:

> That Ottawa's undertaking to facilitate the marketing of 400,000 quintals of salt fish in Europe has not been sufficient to facilitate spring supply has been illustrated by the demands of many fishermen for guaranteed minimum prices.

The last one is the particular reference that I made this morning to the announcement by the acting chairman of the Newfoundland salt codfish association, and this is what he said:

> As indicated in the recent statement brought back from Ottawa by Mr. R. Gushue, the federal government is sympathetic and is anxious to help find a solution to the problems, and that statement has been interpreted by Mr. Gushue to mean that the federal government will undertake to provide conversion to dollars for the sale in sterling areas of not over 400,000 quintals of the 1950 production of Newfoundland salt codfish.

Definitely, whatever the minister's views are in the matter now, that was the way the statement was interpreted and I hope that he may be able to clear up whatever confusion there may be in the matter.

The next matter to which I wish to refer is the question of trawlers. The minister has already made a statement on that matter. He has sent his largest boat, the Cygnus, to the banks. I do not know whether the minister is fully aware of the situation, and I am certainly not going to read all the newspaper clippings that I have because they are too numerous. But we start off with the statement of the Evening Telegram of June 12 headed, "Piracy on the Grand Banks". It gives a description of what has happened. Then we have another account describing the number of people that are fishing on the banks and who they are. This is from the Telegram of June 10:

> Well, the result of many inquiries made by the Telegram during the past couple of days indicates that close to two hundred, if not actually more, ships from Spain, France and Portugal have been on the banks at one time or another this year.

They range in size from tiny 58-ton Spanish trawlers which fish in pairs to the mammoth 1,000 tonners of which each of the European countries sends out many to the new world waters.

At present there are seventeen ships from Portugal.

There are forty-eight from France and I do not know how many from Spain, but they are quite numerous. There has been some very strong comment over the fact that crews have been losing lines. They have been losing their trawl lines. One fellow reported losing seventy. Another crew reported losing forty, and in one particular item it was reported that there was actually great danger to the fishermen in the dories. I know the minister is very serious about this matter. I hope that because of the provisions of the international northwest Atlantic fisheries convention which has been adopted by this parliament this year the situation will be taken care of in the future. If the minister is going to reply I would like him to tell me what will be done by this fisheries convention and what is proposed by Canada should be done.

Also in connection with these trawlers fishing the banks there comes the very vital matter of the depletion of the resources of the Grand Banks. In that connection I would refer the minister—I am sure he remembers it—to a statement made by him on March 21 on the first day's session of the meeting of the fisheries council of Canada. This is what he said at that time:

Our industry both for itself and for future fishermen must recognize the importance of such conservation work. On the Atlantic the European fishing fleets will by next year be 140 per cent above their pre-war capacity and they will be fishing more intensely the waters around our shores.

Mr. McIlraith: Carried.

Mr. Higgins: I will not be long; you can carry me after that. At page 5 of the annual report of the fisheries research board of Canada for 1949 appears this statement:

Fisheries that are being studied for the purpose of detecting changes in abundance due to overfishing include the cod, haddock and other groundfish off our east coast. Fishermen of many countries including the United States and several European countries (France, Spain, and Portugal), fish the Grand Banks, and waters even nearer our shores. Some believe that overfishing is taking place and that there should be international action for the control of fishing. Canada's stake in these fisheries is so great that we must have reliable information of our own as a basis for action to protect our interests in negotiations looking to the study and control of these fisheries. Such studies have been under way for a number of years but they must be expanded as rapidly as possible. Our responsibility for Newfoundland's fisheries has increased our responsibility in this regard.

I have just a couple more excerpts to conclude this matter of depletion. The Daily News of May 26 reads as follows:

Vast as are the fishing resources of the Grand Banks, they are not inexhaustible and it is consequently disturbing to hear of the damage that some trawlers have been doing to the grounds. The owner of a banking vessel has told recently how his schooner had to sail through a large area of water which was covered with young fish that had escaped from trawlers' nets or had been thrown overboard as too small for commercial use. That can hardly be good for the preservation of the banks as a first-class fishing reserve.

From the Telegram of March 24 I quote the following:

As soon as the war was over European trawlers began crossing the ocean in hundreds to fish the waters of the Atlantic. At the same time American trawlers moved north as the old Georges bank and other Yankee fishing grounds became depleted. All of them moved in on the fishing grounds which Newfoundland and Canadian fishermen had come to regard as their own.

At the same time these foreign fishermen were not too particular as to how they treated the grounds nor the Canadian fishermen. They'd sweep through nursery grounds, killing all the small fish on them, and they'd sweep straight through the gear of the Canadian fishermen, wrecking it completely.

It is on the subject of conservation that I hope the minister will make some comments because last year at the time of his estimates I believe he said there was no evidence at all to justify any contention that the fishing grounds were being over-fished. I hope he can give some guarantee this year. It would be interesting to hear it.

I should like him also to comment on the question of Labrador fisheries, in so far as Newfoundland is concerned. I believe there has been a suggestion that to continue that fishery would be impractical and uneconomical. There are so many persons in the province engaged in that fishery that unless there is a very clear statement as to why it would be uneconomical I fear it will continue to be prosecuted. I certainly would like to have the minister's views in the matter.

The next matter has already been raised by my colleague. It has to do with unemployment insurance for fishermen. I realize the difficulties there may be in this respect. However the situation which has developed in the new province is commented upon in the Daily News of April 18, from the Grand Banks on the south coast. Here is what they say:

It is reported that some of the bank fishermen have decided not to go fishing this year but are seeking other employment in which they can qualify for unemployment insurance. In interviews with some of the men who are going fishing it was learned that bank fishermen feel strongly about not being included in unemployment insurance. They argue that they are the primary producers of codfish and are not included in the insurance scheme, whilst the women and men ashore who cure and handle the fish in preparing it for market are eligible and have been receiving benefits this past winter.

I would urge the minister to think over the possibility of making fishermen eligible to come under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

The final matter I should like to bring to the minister's attention arises out of the marketing of salt codfish. I do not mean the actual selling of it, but the straight marketing. In a brief presented by the Newfoundland Associated Fish Exporters Limited this selling agency expressed an opinion to the royal commission on transportation, I believe, and a particular reference was made to what was happening in connection with the transportation of fish to market.

I shall not delay too long in drawing to the minister's attention the chief points to which these Newfoundland salt codfish are sent. The first of these groups is (a) by direct vessel to Jamaica, Puerto Rico, Cuba, Dominica, Grenada, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and some three or four more. Then there is group (b), which includes transshipments via Halifax and/or New York.

In connection with group (a) the situation is that these are by locally-owned vessels, and they are required to pay 50 cents per cask over and above the regular freight rate. In class (b) the shippers are obliged to pay a freight rate which is based upon the regular rate from Halifax, plus the cost of movement from ports in Newfoundland to Halifax.

The general plea is that they ask that arrangements should be made whereby Newfoundland salt fish moving to markets under (b) should receive a freight concession on an equal basis to that granted movements of salt fish from points on the mainland to export points.

An additional charge of 50 cents a cask which many shippers are at present obliged to pay for the privilege of having direct vessels load at their port should be, at least in part, absorbed by the Canadian National Railways in accordance with the policy of providing special depressed rates to cover similar situations in other provinces, and because there are no facilities for the movement of fish by rail.

A very serious situation would arise in Newfoundland in the event of the direct vessels at present serving markets under (a) being withdrawn, or the rates increased.

I draw this to the minister's attention, because I believe he should be aware of it. That sums up what I had intended to say. All hon. members appreciate the work of the minister and of his assistants, and their great interest in the fishing industry. I am sure when I bring these points to his attention he will understand that it is only because of the keen interest he has shown in the fisheries.

[Mr. Higgins.]

Mr. Mayhew: Mr. Chairman, I should like to answer some of these questions before they pile up ahead of me. Perhaps I might first reply to the hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. The hon. member for Skeena was right in the premise he took that the halibut commission had the authority only to recommend and not to regulate. We are quite prepared to enter into a treaty, so long as that treaty has in it that provision. But if it means that they want the power to regulate, then we do not think that as a federal government we can agree to it without becoming involved in provincial as well as marine law.

For instance, we would not want anyone to regulate the time our boats would leave or return to port. If the term "regulation" were changed to "recommendation" we might agree to such changes in the treaty as proposed.

One point was made which I think was a mistake. The impression was left that the department was confining the catch of halibut to thirty days. That is not so. We regulate by the amount of fish caught. In area 2 the quota set for this year is 25,500,000 pounds. That amount was caught this year in thirty days. In area 3 the quota is 28,000,000 pounds, and they will catch that amount in about sixty days. I might point out that in 1931 there were 328 vessels on the banks, whereas now there are 744. That is the reason they get this quantity of fish in such a short time. We have no regulation that they must be caught in one month. This is controlled rather by the number of boats on the banks. They catch the quota which has been set by the halibut commission.

We are now investigating whether there should be more fish caught, and whether the banks will allow us to continue to fish at that rate or at a greater rate. If the halibut commission believe that the fish are there, they can make a recommendation to us, and it will no doubt be carried out.

Mr. Green: What about the split season?

Mr. Mayhew: There is no reason why we should say that we would not be prepared to recommend a split season. But what good would it do? You would work for fifteen days and catch your allotment and then lay up your boat for a month or so. You would then go out and fish for another fifteen days and catch another allotment. Unless we are prepared to increase the allotment I do not see any sense at all in having a split season. The fishermen would not catch any more fish and their boats would be laid up for one or two months. As has been suggested by the hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, investigations should be made and they are being made.

The hon. member for Charlotte referred to a problem in connection with sardines. We will ask the fisheries prices support board to take a look at the situation. But I would remind the hon. member that sardines and herring are unpredictable fish. Some years you are able to catch a lot of them and in other years you get very few. Some seasons the catch is so large that it is almost impossible to take care of it. We have been able to take care of a similar situation on the west coast by the use of reduction plants and possibly the same method could be used in other areas. At any rate we will have the fisheries prices support board look into this situation.

The hon. member for St. John's East referred to the statement I made today and intimated that I had not gone far enough. We followed the recommendations of the prices support board which I think were fair and reasonable. We are taking the fish from the fishermen for more than one reason. The fish were not cured until this spring and we are not sure whether or not they should go on the market. This will give us a chance to find out and to eliminate any that should not go on the market. One of the principles we try to maintain is to see that the quality of our fish is high because that is what the people want. Any fish of inferior quality that get on the market are a detriment to the rest. The amount involved is only 12,000 or 15,000 quintals, but we do not want even that small amount to get mixed up with the good stock now held by the merchants and processors. That stock is disappearing fairly rapidly and I do not think there will be any difficulty in disposing of it.

The hon. member then referred to the alleged statement made by Mr. Gushue. Mr. Gushue was authorized to say that the government of Canada would do everything in its power to see that the exchange difficulties with certain European countries would interfere as little as possible with the disposal of the 1950 catch. Hon. members will appreciate that arrangements of this kind are not solely in the hands of the Canadian government. The matter is under active discussion with the government of the United Kingdom and as soon as a definite announcement can be made the industry in Newfoundland will be informed. The negotiations are going on and for that reason we are not in position to say anything more about them.

Mr. Higgins: I did not mean to say that Mr. Gushue made the statement. It was attributed to him.

Mr. Mayhew: That is what I said. The hon. member referred also to piracy on the Grand Banks. Those waters are international and our own fishermen are down there just the same as the fishermen from Spain, Portugal and seven or eight other countries. We have no jurisdiction over those waters nor has the northwest Atlantic convention. They are concerned only with conservation. The rules of the road will be discussed this fall but that is quite a different matter from conservation.

Labrador fisheries were also mentioned. I may be wrong, but my understanding is that the Labrador fish is not equal in quality to the fish caught off the shores of Newfoundland. It is considered to be a second-grade fish and we feel that as far as possible the fish marketed should be of the highest quality and be caught where they can be caught most cheaply.

The matter of unemployment insurance for fishermen is being considered by the Department of Labour and is something with which we are not concerned. Freight rates are a responsibility of the Department of Transport, but we will see what can be done about them.

Mr. Higgins: I thank the minister for the information he has given. Can he say anything about the depletion of the Grand Banks?

Mr. Mayhew: Our biologists tell us that there is no evidence of depletion on the Grand Banks, and I think that they are right.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): Tomorrow we shall proceed with fisheries, external affairs, justice, the Prime Minister's office and legislation. I understand that there are some uncompleted items in finance, veterans affairs, post office and health and welfare. We shall take the first three or four in the order mentioned, but the remainder will be taken as occasion permits.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE

412. Departmental administration, $173,295.

413. Companies branch, $69,900.

414. Trade marks branch, $124,395.

415. Bureau for translations, $698,100.

416. Canada Temperance Act, $1,500.

Patent and copyright office—

417. Administration division, $47,580.

418. Patent division, $530,180.

419. Copyright and industrial designs division, $16,820.

420 Patent record division, $71,005.

421. Contribution to the international office for the protection of industrial property, international copright union office and union for the protection of literary and artistic works, $4,000.

General—

422. Expenses in connection with the bibliographic centre (National Library), $41,240.

777. Companies branch—further amount required, $3,145.

778. Bureau for translations—further amount required, $34,715.

Patent and copyright office—

779. Patent division—further amount required, $115,950.

780. Contribution to the international office for the protection of industrial property, international copyright union office and union for the protection of literary and artistic works—further amount required, $500.

Office of the chief electoral officer—

47. Salaries and expenses of office, $45,515.

Civil service commission—

63. Salaries and contingencies of the commission, including the chairman of the civil service commission and two civil service commissioners at $2,000 each, additional to chapter 53, statutes of 1947, $1,561,250.

Public archives—

281. General administration and technical services, $208,242.

Public printing and stationery—

282. Departmental administration, $60,000.

283. Printing, binding and distributing the annual statutes, $30,000.

284. Canada Gazette, $130,000.

285. Plant equipment and replacements, $30,000.

286. Distribution of official documents, $108,730.

287. Printing and binding official publications for sale and distribution to departments and the public, $230,000.

726. Plant equipment and replacements—further amount required, $139,375.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Board of transport commissioners for Canada—

524. Board of transport commissioners for Canada—administration, maintenance and operation, $624,800.

Canadian maritime commission—

525. Administration, $190,170.

526. Mail subsidies and steamship subventions, as detailed in the estimates, $3,317,000.

527. To provide assistance for Canadian flag ocean shipping industry, $3,000,000.

Government-owned enterprises—

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 29, 1950

The house met at eleven o'clock.

NEW MEMBER

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that the Clerk of the House has received from the chief electoral officer certificate of the election and return of the following member, viz.:

Of Leon D. Crestohl, Esquire, for the electoral district of Cartier.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

Second and final report of special committee appointed to examine into the operations of the national research council.—Mr. McIlraith.

TRANSFER OF DUTIES

ESKIMOS—FROM CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION TO RESOURCES AND DEVELOPMENT

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to lay on the table a copy of order in council P. C. 3153, dated June 27, under the provisions of the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act, transferring to the Minister of Resources and Development the duties, powers and functions conferred and imposed upon the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration relating to the affairs of the race of origin commonly referred to as Eskimos.

Under the general terms of the Citizenship and Immigration acts, these duties would probably come under the responsibility of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, but most of these people are in the territories administered by the council responsible to the Minister of Resources and Development. It was felt therefore that there would be less likelihood of any duplication if what concerned them was dealt with by and under the council of the Northwest Territories.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

TABLING OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND PROVINCE OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. George Prudham (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Resources and Development): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Resources and Development, I should like to lay on the table the memorandum of agreement between the government of Canada and the government of the province of Newfoundland in respect to the trans-Canada highway, as requested by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Browne).

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT

AMENDMENT WITH RESPECT TO BORSTAL SYSTEM IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—TRANSFERS OF OFFENDERS

On the order for introduction of bills:

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, a matter which is represented to me as being of some urgency has been brought to my attention by the attorney general of British Columbia. I have discussed it with the leaders of the opposition parties, and I understand they have taken it up with such of their members as might be interested. I believe it will prove to be non-controversial.

The province of British Columbia set up a Borstal system for taking care of male prisoners between the ages of sixteen and twenty-three years, and in that connection came to this parliament in the session of 1947-1948 requesting us to incorporate in the Prisons and Reformatories Act a little code of three sections referring only to this Borstal system in British Columbia, and therefore without interest to any other province.

Section 147A, the first section of this code, provides for the imprisonment of these prisoners in the Borstal institution called New Haven. In all these cases in which the prisoners could get three months or more of imprisonment in the common jail, it is open to the courts in that province to impose a sentence of three months or more definite, and then an indeterminate sentence in addition to that of any period up to two years less one day.

By section 147B, the lieutenant governor may appoint a board of parole in order to grant parole to these prisoners, and by section 147C, the lieutenant governor may authorize the attorney general from time to time by warrant to direct the removal of these prisoners from this New Haven Borstal institution to Oakalla prison farm. In this last connection the relevant words of section 147C are:

> . . . there to be detained for the unexpired portion of the term of imprisonment to which such person was originally sentenced . . .

In that province a case has arisen recently in which one of these prisoners, upon being transferred to Oakalla prison farm after serving his definite period of time, applied to the courts for a writ of habeas corpus upon the ground that as soon as he had served the whole of his definite term of imprisonment he could no longer be detained in any prison in British Columbia, except the New Haven prison, for the indeterminate portion of his sentence.

There is no desire that any legislation which might be passed here would apply to that particular litigation, and such legislation is subject to the general rule of the Interpretation Act that it does not apply to current litigation. But what the British Columbia authorities are afraid of is that if this precedent were followed in respect of all those who have been transferred to Oakalla prison from New Haven, it might result in a number of prisoners being set at liberty. We therefore ask for certain amendments, which will be in the printed bill, which I have arranged to have distributed. These three sections will make it clear beyond any doubt that the lieutenant governor in council in British Columbia shall have the powers which it was contemplated he should have when in 1947-48, at the request of the British Columbia government, and using the language suggested by it, we incorporated these three sections in our Prisons and Reformatories Act.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to introduce the said bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Garson moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 318, to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Green: We have not yet seen the bill, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that second reading be given later this day.

Mr. Speaker: Later this day.

*BRITISH COLUMBIA—PUBLIC WORKS PROJECTS —CONSULTATION WITH B.C. MEMBERS

Mr. Fulton:

1. Since June 11, 1948, have any Department of Public Works officials consulted the Hon. R. W. Mayhew with respect to public works projects in British Columbia outside his own constituency?

2. If so, in how many cases in each constituency other than his own, and what was the project and the amount of expenditure involved in each case?

3. How was such consultation effected, and what was the date thereof in each case?

4. Have any other members of parliament from British Columbia been consulted or advised during the same period with respect to projects outside their own constituencies?

5. If so what members, and on what projects in the case of each such member?

Mr. Mayhew: My colleague the Minister of Public Works is not here today, but I discussed this question with him yesterday and am directed to make the following answer:

1. Yes; all works of major importance.

2. No details are kept. If the hon. member wants to get the full answer, he can quite easily consult the estimate book.

3. No record was kept of the dates. The consultations are effected in several ways: by writing, by telephone and by personal conversation. Where the minister wishes, it will be carried on with his deputy minister.

4. We do not know of any. It is probable that where a member had in his own constituency a project that affected the neighbouring constituency, they might consult with the minister through me.

5. No record has been kept.

SLAV CONGRESS

REFERENCE TO REPORT IN "CANADIAN TRIBUNE" —DELEGATION FROM U.S.S.R. TO TORONTO MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Decore (Vegreville): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. According to newspaper reports, especially one in the Canadian Tribune, a communist publication, dated June 26 of this year, a so-called Slav congress will be held in Toronto, starting today, and will last for two days.

According to this same publication a delegation from the U.S.S.R. is coming to this congress, which will consist of Russian writers, poets and others whose occupations are not clearly defined. The delegation is headed by Lieutenant General Alexander Gundorov. Before I proceed with my question, Mr. Speaker, if I may, I should like to say just a word about this distinguished gentleman, because he is no ordinary individual.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Without the unanimous consent of the house, the hon. member would be required to put his question.

An hon. Member: Ask the question.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Decore: Lieutenant General Gundorov was the chairman of the all-Slav conference held in Moscow in 1941, and presided over similar conferences in countries behind the iron curtain and in the United States. He has the reputation of a first-class Moscow organizer. In 1949—

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Speaker: I understood that the hon. member had the unanimous consent of the house to proceed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Knowles: No.

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Graydon: Let him go ahead.

Mr. Decore: I have just one more statement, and then I am through.

Mr. Cote (Verdun-La Salle): Finish the statement.

Mr. Graydon: Surely nobody objects to hearing that.

Mr. Speaker: With the unanimous consent of the house, the hon. member may proceed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Decore: I notice that some of my C.C.F. friends are not anxious for me to proceed.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, when we ask that the rules of the house be observed, and be applied equally to all, that is not to be regarded as a comment on the subject that has been brought up. May I point out that the hon. member may discuss this subject on external affairs estimates, on justice estimates or in a number of places; but I submit that on this occasion there is not unanimous consent for waiving of the rules.

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the hon. member to put his question without further comment.

Mr. Decore: I will, Mr. Speaker. The question I want to put to the Secretary of State for External Affairs is whether the Canadian government has granted visas to this "distinguished" Russian gentleman and his associates, consisting of poets, artists and others who are so anxious to charm us here in Canada with their poetry, their music and other things?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have been aware for some little time of the intention to hold a Canadian-Slav congress in Toronto, beginning I think tomorrow; and I am also aware of the nature of this organization. In the specific case mentioned of General Gundorov, an application for a non-immigrant visa was received and refused. I may add that no visas have been granted to enable persons—poets, musicians or otherwise—to enter Canada for the purpose of attending this conference. They would probably supply a form of music that we do not desire to hear in this country.

GOLD MINING

QUESTION OF EXTENDING EMERGENCY ASSISTANCE ACT BEYOND DECEMBER, 1950

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Armand Dumas (Villeneuve): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Will the minister make a statement regarding the possibility of extending the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act beyond December, 1950?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): As the house is aware, payments to gold mines under the present legislation will terminate as of the end of this calendar year. We have had representations from the industry, and in particular a comprehensive brief prepared by the Canadian Metal Mining Association, urging that the legislation should be extended, perhaps on a slightly modified basis.

Because of the pressure of matters incident to the closing weeks of the parliamentary session, the government has not yet been able to give consideration to these representations. When such consideration has been completed, an announcement will be made promptly as to the decision reached and any proposals which the government may have to recommend. We hope to be able to give the mines as much time as possible for future planning.

Mr. Adamson: Will the minister inform the industry, through the Canada Gazette and through the mining association, in plenty of time so that they may adjust their bookkeeping for the next fiscal period? It is very important that they may know in ample time so that they may plan their operations.

Mr. McCann: Just let me repeat the last sentence of the statement I made. We hope to be able to give the mines as much time as possible for future planning.

Mr. Adamson: Thank you; I did not hear it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR BRIEF SUSPENSIONS OF SITTING DURING THE DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister? Out of consideration for the Hansard staff, could there be an understanding, despite the motion which was passed the other day—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Knowles: Could there be an understanding, despite the motion that was passed the other day, that at some time during the noon hour and some time during the supper hour we suspend the sitting for twenty or thirty minutes?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): In view of the special order made by the house it would require unanimous consent, and unanimous consent in matters has not appeared to be very probable this morning.

Mr. Knowles: Will the Prime Minister ask whether there is unanimous consent? I am sure if he would ask for it, it would be forthcoming.

Some hon. Members: Not debatable.

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT AMENDMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply, may I say that we have now had an opportunity to read the bill which has been introduced by the Minister of Justice, and if he wishes to go ahead with it at this stage the official opposition will offer no objection. Apparently it is simply a matter of adopting two amendments suggested by the attorney general of British Columbia; and the minister has added a third amendment which in our opinion is perfectly in order.

Mr. Garson: And which the deputy attorney general of British Columbia, upon being consulted, agrees with. We thought it was necessary.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT

AMENDMENT WITH RESPECT TO BORSTAL SYSTEM IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—TRANSFERS OF OFFENDERS

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 318, to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Dion in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time—now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Garson moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Knowles: May I say to the Prime Minister that perhaps the mood of the house has changed. We have just had two unanimous consents.

Mr. St. Laurent: I hope the hon. member is right.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Dion in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

111. Departmental administration, $418,340.

Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): When the house adjourned last night I was prepared to be quite brief in the comment I wished to make on this item. Even though it is the beginning of a new day, my intentions are still the same. I hope I shall be so brief as to set an example for those who may follow me in this and in other matters.

I think my first words should be those of commendation, not only of the minister but of the excellent men he has in his department for the carrying out of a new forward-looking policy in regard to the fishing industry. I was glad to hear him say yesterday that he thought the solution of the troubles of the fishing industry did not lie in the principle of price support. I thoroughly agree with that. There are times, and we have just witnessed one of them, when price support serves a very useful purpose. I am sure our friends in the province of Newfoundland will be glad to learn of this price support policy in regard to the distribution of their salted fish.

The minister is perfectly correct when he says that the most important thing that can be done is to follow out general policies which will lead to the general health of the industry. By that I mean renewing old markets which perhaps have been temporarily lost, and developing new markets. I think the general policies of the government which have led, and we all hope will lead, to a continuation of the high economic level of this country will also be reflected in the fishing industry. The industry is perhaps affected as much as, if not more than, any others when we have what we have known in the past as depressions.

The fishermen whom I represent hope that the western farmers will continue to be able to sell their beef at the very high prices at which it is selling today, so that the fishermen will be able to find a ready market for their product, which is more healthful, and we think more nutritious, than theirs. It is a product which can be sold at a reasonable price by those in the industry, at a much lower price than people have to pay for beef. Therefore I hope that the price of beef will stay just where it is, so that the price of our fish will stay just where it is.

I do not wish to take up too much time, but I feel I should point out just how important this fishing industry is to the constituency of Queens-Shelburne. Figures I have here, taken from the Nova Scotia fisheries year book, show that in 1948 the landed value of fish in the small constituency of Queens-Shelburne, with a population of only 25,000, was $3,250,000, and in that respect it stood third. Of this amount there were lobsters to a value of $1,500,000 landed on our shore. In this respect my constituency took second place in Nova Scotia.

The hon. member for Digby-Yarmouth knows, of course, that his constituency took first place in the landed value of all types of fish and in the landed value of lobster. The constituencies of Halifax and Lunenburg are the other two major constituencies, Halifax taking second place and Lunenburg, the home of the famous Bluenose, taking fourth place. It will be of interest to hon. members to note that although it has the reputation of being one of the greatest fishing counties—and there can be no doubt that it is a great fishing county—Lunenburg has had to take a back seat in comparison with the constituency I represent.

I believe it should be said that the large production of high quality fish in my constituency is possible because of the skill and industry of the thousands of fishermen who fish along that rocky and treacherous coast, where the storms become very severe and arise in a very short time. Approximately a thousand small motor boats are operating down there. The number is rapidly increasing, and has continued to increase since the war. Many war veterans, upon their return from overseas and with the assistance they received from provincial and federal governments, have gone into the fishing business themselves and have purchased very fine boats. The size of the boats is increasing and the engines with which they are equipped are becoming better all the time.

This increase of course results in a large concentration of boats in these small coves and harbours. I believe one of the greatest handicaps to the expansion of the industry in the past ten years has been the lack of proper breakwaters and wharves. The fishermen I represent are most grateful to the Department of Public Works for extending the breakwaters and wharves which are so necessary to the operation of the small-boat shipping industry. In the last three years the program has been extended rapidly, and I trust the Department of Public Works, in co-operation with the Department of Fisheries, will continue this work so that it may keep pace with the expansion of the small-boat fishing industry.

While I am on my feet I should like to thank the Department of Fisheries for their help in making it more apparent to the Department of Public Works and to treasury board that this expansion is necessary, and that the growth of the industry depends so much upon it.

As evidence of the high value fishermen place upon this public works aspect, it might be of interest to mention that when I was home at Easter I talked with a number of fishermen and others in the fish business. My chief topic of conversation, to begin with, was to ask their views about old age pensions, which subject was being discussed in committee. It is our hope that something will be done about this matter in the near future. Almost all of the people with whom I talked appeared to be more concerned with the funds provided to establish breakwaters and wharves so that they might be in a better position to look after their old age security and that of their fathers and mothers who were not blessed with too great wealth. These people felt that we should not drain too much money from the taxpayers of this country for the provision of old age security when, with some little help by way of providing public works, they would be able to look after themselves. I believe this is an evidence of the fact that the people I represent are not leaners. As has been pointed out, they do not qualify for unemployment insurance. I do not think they want anything like that, but they do want a better chance to look after themselves.

It might be of interest to the committee—I am sure the Department of Fisheries is aware of it, but perhaps it should be emphasized—that our fishing industry down there is practically all of the small-boat variety. Ninety-seven per cent of the fish are landed from small boats. In contrast to this, about sixty or sixty-five per cent of the fish landed in the other two larger fishing constituencies to the east, those of Lunenburg and Halifax, is landed by larger boats. When I refer to the larger boats I include schooners, trawlers, draggers and that sort of craft.

It is clear therefore that the fishing industry is divided into two sections, small-boat fishing and large-boat fishing. There is no question about the quality of fish landed by small boats. The price obtained by small-boat fishermen is usually a little higher. I know, for example, that several firms will deal only with small-boat landings, because the quality of the fish is that much higher. Its quality can be depended upon.

I would ask the department to keep firmly in mind the great importance of this industry in western Nova Scotia. Some observers detect a tendency to change to mass production methods, but I think we should keep this matter of quality in mind. It is important, and I think all those connected with the business realize that. This is one way in which our sales can be expanded—by making sure that the quality is kept high.

It may be of interest also to note that the decentralization of production by small-boat fishing makes an even distribution of employment along the coast. The degree of decentralization in the fish business is striking, where the small boats are used. For instance, in Lunenburg there are eighteen fish plants, whereas in Queens-Shelburne there are sixty-eight. I believe it is fair to say that almost every cove and every harbour has at least one fish dealer in it, which, of course, results in the young men growing up and staying in their own villages. Some years ago there was a great movement back to the land. Down there we have a back-to-the-sea movement, and we believe it is most important.

I am informed there is one great weakness so far as quality is concerned. Many wholesalers buy fish by the freight carload because the rate by freight carload is cheaper. In many instances this results in wholesalers buying more fish than they can sell readily. This means that they must carry over that fish, with the result that the fish carried over cannot be of the same quality as if it were marketed immediately. I do not know how difficult this problem may be, but it seems to me the department might consider the possibility of encouraging the shipping of all fresh fish by express only. I do not know just how this could be done, but I certainly think consideration should be given to it.

That is about all I have to say at the moment. May I summarize by urging the department to realize the importance of small-boat fishing when formulating its policy, and urging it to continue its assistance in having recommendations from the Department of Public Works approved by treasury board, so that larger quantities of high-quality small-boat fish can be placed on the market. I urge them also to continue research and assistance toward improving methods of transportation so that the quality of the product that reaches the consumer will be improved. I urge also that everything be done to keep this industry decentralized so that the fishing villages will continue to flourish for many years as the true home of free enterprise.

Mr. McLure: Mr. Chairman, after the speeches that have been made on this administration item it is not my intention to extend my remarks at all, but there are a few things I should like to say on the individual items. Last year the minister made an excellent statement with regard to the prospects of the fishing industry in Canada, and I was hoping this year he would extend his remarks and indicate whether the policies which he suggested before had worked out for the benefit of the fishing industry.

On several occasions when estimates have been before us I have indicated that I felt it was a mistake for the departments to ask for blank cheques. In this particular case there is a considerable amount being asked for in connection with which no information is provided. For instance, we are being asked to vote a total of $8,931,590, out of which $3,109,477, or practically thirty per cent, is accompanied by no information with the exception that reference is made to temporary assistance. When you consider the casual assistance that is provided for, this amount is brought up to practically fifty per cent. The committee should be told something about it. This year we are told that there are 1,292 temporary employees besides the casuals and permanents, but there should be a breakdown to show how many are inspectors, how many are superintendents, and how many are day labourers. The minister has been engaged in big business, and I know he would not want his manager to come to him and say he wanted thirty-five per cent of the year's outlay for purposes about which he would tell him nothing.

I hope the minister will give the committee a further statement. Later on I shall have questions to ask, more particularly with regard to the establishment of fish meal plants in my own constituency, and in relation to draggers.

Hon. R. W. Mayhew (Minister of Fisheries): The total number of people employed by the department at the peak of the season is 3,391, some of whom may work only a week, some a month and some two months. The regular staff numbers 1,526. There is a great fluctuation in the number of persons employed.

Mr. McLure: That is part of the information I was looking for. There are 316 civil servants in the department, with an additional 1,892 temporaries. Then on top of that are the casuals, which brings the total to the figure the minister mentioned. We have never had any information about this large number of temporaries. When are they to be made permanent?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): This is the department in connection with which hon. members from Newfoundland might be expected to speak in extenso, but I shall condense my remarks to a few observations.

I am glad to see that the minister has regained his optimism about the future of the fishing industry in Newfoundland, even if he has abandoned his attempt to revolutionize it overnight by changing it from a salt cod fishing industry to a fresh fish industry. There is room for both, and a proper balance should be struck. If this is done, a great future lies before the industry.

The minister seems to have the most highly trained staff of any department of government. When I looked at the list in the annual report of the fisheries research board I was amazed at the high quality of the technical and scientific staff engaged in the department. I am sure that the majority of the fishermen do not realize that there is such a highly qualified body of men behind them who are studying their problems and trying to help them make a better living. Some of the men in that list have quite a reputation; I notice particularly Dr. Huntsman, who at one time was associated with the fishing industry in Newfoundland.

As this report was in our hands before the estimates of the department came up, we had an opportunity to see what had been done during the year. This is the very point I made in connection with the geological report in mines and resources. I found it most interesting reading. There is one item on page 48 of the report I should like to draw to the minister's attention and ask if it really means what it says. In connection with haddock, it states:

> Measurements in 1949 at sea and on shore during four trips of commercial trawlers have shown numbers of haddock discarded at sea of 47, 32, 71 and 49 per cent of the total catch. Varying percentages of the haddock below 50 centimeters were discarded.

That seems to be a tremendous amount of fish to be lost. I believe that the minister shares the enthusiastic outlook of his staff as to the new vistas that have been opened up by the enlargement of Canadian fisheries with the annexation of Newfoundland. Newfoundland has a great variety of fish that still remain to be exploited. We not only have cod, but also lobster, salmon, trout, mackerel, herring, plaice, halibut, clams and scallops. Then there are various processes of preparation and preservation, such as salting, drying, freezing, canning and shipping in the live state. Then there is investigation of stocks on the Grand Banks and in the different waters around the island, the location of these stocks, the establishment of hatcheries, and many other possibilities.

I might say that in reading this report I was surprised to learn of the work that has been done by the scientific gentlemen to whom I have referred in the discovery of the location of fish. Let it be said again, as Bacon said hundreds of years ago, that the fisheries of Newfoundland are more valuable than the silver mines of Peru. If properly developed and protected they should be like the prairie soil, a source of great wealth for ever to the people of this country. The increasing world population, and the scarcity and high price of animal products, particularly in time of war, have compelled the nations of the world to look to the sea more than ever for their food.

I should like to see the fishing industry of Newfoundland, as the hon. member for Queens-Shelburne said about his province, maintained on a sound basis. From a social as well as from an economic point of view the methods of fishing in Newfoundland were ideal. I do not wish to see the fishing industry become centralized and highly industrialized like the motor car industry, unless the fishermen are to be partners and shareholders in the enterprise. The principle of private ownership, which is a very important feature of the Newfoundland fishing industry, must be preserved, and, I suggest, improved and strengthened. In the past I had the honour to be closely associated with the co-operative movement which was introduced into Newfoundland in 1936 from Antigonish. I may say, especially in the sale of live lobsters to the United States, that the co-operative movement has been outstandingly successful.

The provincial government is so alert to the value of co-operation in regard to the fisheries that the new provincial minister of fisheries has also taken the title of minister of co-operatives. The set-up in Newfoundland therefore provides a field of endeavour for any economist associated with the fisheries research board of Canada, and I hope there is one who is familiar with co-operative methods. Probably there are many, although I am not aware of it. I trust there is one who is interested in and conversant with the co-operative methods developed at Antigonish.

I cannot emphasize too strongly the necessity of building on the traditional methods of independence amongst the fishermen. I know that many of them are sometimes badly off at the end of a voyage when the fish fail them; nevertheless the principle is sound, and remedies can be found to cure the scarcity of fish. I am going to speak about one now. In my opinion the study and application of co-operative practices is the best way of improving the economic position of the fishermen.

I am forced to speak about an important need in many parts of Newfoundland, the supply of fresh bait daily. The Minister of Fisheries is familiar with the pressing need. The supply of fresh bait daily to fishermen who are using trawls or the hook and line is an absolute necessity. It is impossible for them to carry on without it. I wonder if the establishment of a floating bait freezer is not the solution for a large section of the coast. I am glad to see that the minister is making an experiment in that direction this year, and I trust it will be very successful. I hope it will be able to operate in my district, because the constituency of St. John's West, although it is so largely concerned with the city, is probably the most important fishing section of the country. Five big trawlers operate a shuttle service to the Grand Banks from the south side of the city of St. John's and bring in large amounts of fresh fish.

From the south side of St. John's for 100 miles down the coast to the Ferryland district, fifty miles up into St. Mary's bay, down to Placentia bay and another 150 miles up Placentia bay, in every settlement along that 300 miles stretch of coast there are fishermen who go out in boats, punts, dories or jackboats, to fish with hook and line, trawl, net or seine. A ready supply of fresh bait is essential to most of them if they are to catch fish. To have such a supply near at hand is also important, because it means that they can keep down the cost of catching fish, which will mean that there will be more profit. I feel sure that the minister is sympathetic to their position; because I have already drawn to his attention the need of places like Renews bay—where there is an industrious group of fishermen who sail out in jackboats many miles away—and Bay Bulls. I understand it was decided that there would be a bait depot at Placentia. I trust that the minister is still considering these matters and that he will not disappoint people who are expecting to have these facilities.

There is one other matter to which I should like to refer, the salmon fishing industry in the inland waters so far as the tourist trade is concerned. The preservation of salmon stocks requires a study of inland waters and therefore close integration between forest research and water supply. The maintenance of levels in lakes and rivers is a very big problem, and can only be done by co-operation between experts in the Department of Fisheries and the Department of Resources and Development. I am aware that at the north-east section of Trepassey river tagging was carried on for a short period, and the warden of that river also made some examination of all fish caught by measuring the length and taking samples of the scales to be sent to the biological station in St. John's. I trust that practice can be carried on in as many rivers as possible.

I noticed that there was tagging being carried on in Cape Royal river, which I know very well. It is a tiny river, and I do not think it is suitable for that purpose. The Trepassey is a very much better river. I have been going there for sixteen years, and I know it has a steady supply of fish except for last summer which was most extraordinary. For the first time the fish were prevented for weeks from entering the river. When the water level becomes too low in the river, fishing is finished. We have to try to keep people from cutting timber along the banks of the rivers and lakes so that there can be a more even flow of water. If that effort is successful, then salmon fishing in the rivers will be, as it should be, a great attraction for tourists and will provide much pleasure for them.

That is all I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, but I trust that the minister will give some consideration to the points I have raised.

Item agreed to.

112. Fisheries inspection, including fishery officers and guardians, fisheries patrol and protection services, $3,771,000.

Mr. McLure: I notice that there is an increase of $546,000 over last year. No doubt it is due to the number of extra employees who have been taken on. I see that there are 275 inspectors and other types of officers. I should like to know how many of these are inspectors or fish wardens in Prince Edward Island. If the minister could also give an idea of the work these officers are doing in Prince Edward Island, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Mayhew: Mr. Chairman, item 112 covers additional positions. There are 275, and that includes a number of inspectors who have been taken over from the Newfoundland fisheries board and are now included in the regular estimates. Last year they were covered by a separate estimate. That amounts to $359,206. Then there are the regular statutory increases, promotional increases, reclassification increases, and casual assistance, which amounts to $176,367. This will give the hon. member an idea of the details in connection with that particular item. The number employed in Prince Edward Island is 37 full time, and 22 of these 37 are inspectors.

Mr. Higgins: Will the minister state whether the inspectors that were taken on from the Newfoundland service are on full time?

Mr. Mayhew: The staff of the Newfoundland board has simply been transferred to our department, and is on full time.

Mr. Higgins: Does this also take in the wardens on the rivers?

Mr. Mayhew: I believe they have been taken over as well. We have recently taken over the inland fisheries.

Mr. Higgins: And it applies to them? They will be permanent too?

Mr. Mayhew: I think they are, but I would not like to make the categorical statement that all of them are.

Mr. Higgins: The minister does not know how many of those wardens there are?

Mr. Mayhew: The department took over 40 from the Newfoundland fisheries board, and they are permanent.

Item agreed to.

113. Educational extension service, including grant of $3,000 to Lunenburg fisheries exhibition, $225,000.

Mr. McLure: In connection with the educational program, I should like to know who is the fishing demonstrator, and lecturer, and what area he or she covers. I should like to find out what the $82,160 for materials in the lecture course covered. What are they required for, and what are they? Another large item is advertising and publicity. What is the object of the advertising, and what type of advertising is done? Is it to increase the consumption of fish or the production?

Mr. Mayhew: As to the first question, the person responsible is Miss Hazel Freeman. She has been with the department for many years, and is a capable person. The money spent on supplies and materials is to provide for obtaining exhibits for display at national exhibitions and regional fairs; for the production of educational films and the obtaining of film strips and still pictures; for materials and supplies necessary for the display in the development of the consumer service. The decrease is due to the fact that some of the existing exhibits can be utilized at new locations.

Mr. McLure: The item seems very large for materials for a lecture course.

Mr. Higgins: Will the minister outline what this item covers? I am not familiar with it, and it would not take too long.

Mr. Mayhew: This service provides for the operation of the departmental information and educational service, which includes fishery cookery demonstration exhibits at national and regional exhibitions; film and film strips and still pictures; consumer education; publishing of reports and pamphlets, cookbooks, etc., including the monthly fishing trade news advertising; and for providing technical services to fishermen and the fishing industry.

Mr. Higgins: Why the particular reference to Lunenburg? Is that a special fair or exhibition?

Mr. Mayhew: It is a grant to that special exhibition at Lunenburg.

Mr. Higgins: Is that the only exhibition there is?

Mr. Mayhew: That is the only one of that kind.

Item agreed to.

114. Fish culture development, $750,000.

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Chairman, I am making my annual speech on the small dam in my riding which has not yet been built. Before I do so I want to speak first as a representative of a fishing riding, to say once again how pleased we are with the steady progress which has been made in the development of the fisheries department since the end of the war. I have in my riding both the fish packing industry, and a great number of fishermen. Both the industry and the fishermen are pleased with the steady expansion of the service, and the conservation work which has been done. That does not blind me to the fact that there is still a cinder in the eye so far as my riding is concerned, and that is the little fishing dam on Sakinaw lake near Pender harbour, which is the chief fishing town in my riding.

I have talked about this for ten years. When the present Minister of Fisheries became minister he saw the need for the dam, and an item of $5,000 was put in the estimates. It is about twice what the dam should cost, but that shows you how small a problem it is. The fishermen tell me that when the previous dam was in place the sockeye salmon were there to the extent of about 20,000, which means a fishery of about $40,000 a year. It made excellent fishing for the old men and the boys in the area, because the fishermen themselves go far afield. I am much interested in this community, because I think it is typical of the very best fishing communities. The fishermen are mostly of Scotch descent. They do not ask for price support; they do not ask for big expenditures for fishermen's harbours; they do not ask for assistance in the construction of boats; they do not ask for free bait; all they want to do is to fish. They want to fish the year round, and sometimes they fish more enthusiastically than the department sees fit, and they have trouble because they are working too hard. The one thing they do want to make sure of is that there shall be fish there for fishing.

It is now two or three years since the item for this small dam was voted, but there have been continual delays in the building of this little dam. It could be built in a week. The latest delay is said to be caused by the Indians who own the land through which this stream passes. They are demanding a rental of $150 a year. The fishermen's union and I have taken it up with the local Indian band, and they have consented to reduce the rental to $75 a year. The local chief said that if a white man owned this land the government could not build on it without paying a rental, and after all, the Indians have as much right to their land as the white man. I must confess I am inclined to agree with the Indians.

Under this item I do not think it unreasonable for the department to do two things. First of all they should pay the Indians what they would pay a white man if he owned this property; second, investing a small amount of money to produce fish that can be sold is better than paying price support for fish that cannot be sold. I should like to ask the minister what progress is being made in the negotiations with this Indian band.

Mr. Mayhew: The member for Coast-Capilano said the Indians had agreed to a rental of $75 instead of $150 for the land. This is the first time I have heard of that. They have been asking $150. It is true that $150 is not in itself enough to delay this or any other project, but it establishes a precedent or basis of calculation that would make some of the other projects we have in mind away out of reach. The department at the present time are proposing to build a fishway at Morristown, and that fishway will cost in the neighbourhood of $60,000. It also is on an Indian reserve. If we had to pay $150 a year for the privilege of having a few square feet to anchor the dam on each side of the small Sakinaw creek, then I do not know what we would have to pay for similar privileges at Morristown. So it is not just the $150.

I know there has been delay, and no one's face is redder than mine about it. First, there seem to be about as many steps to take in getting through a small project as there are in getting through a large project. Here it was to dam this creek. There were nineteen people that we had to get permission from. Of those nineteen people I think only one or two were residing there; the others were scattered around with domiciles in different parts of Canada. They had to be hunted up and their permission had to be obtained to raise the water level. That has been done. Then when we went to the Indian band, they wanted $150 as a yearly rental. The last communication we had on it was just a few days ago. The present minister in charge of Indian affairs has been most co-operative and helpful, and I think the matter will be settled soon. I do not think the hon. member will have to bring the matter up next year. I hope, however, that will not prevent him from making a contribution to these discussions.

Mr. Sinclair: I will certainly ask the minister about it next year, and in view of what he has said, I hope that the answer will be that the dam is built.

Mr. Higgins: May I ask the minister how many hatcheries there are, where they are located, and what type of fish they are taking care of in those hatcheries? Is any special provision being made for Atlantic salmon? If so, where are those hatcheries? What investigation has been carried on at the Grand Banks?

Mr. Mayhew: We are not carrying on any extensive investigations at the Grand Banks; but so far as salmon is concerned, we are doing a great deal, not in one province but in all provinces. I think hon. members will recall that some time ago I said I thought that our efforts should be weighted towards the species of fish for which we could get a ready sale. One of those species is of course salmon, both on the Atlantic and on the Pacific coast. Although our Atlantic friends think we have not the right to call our Pacific coast fish salmon, nevertheless that is what we call them.

We are spending a great deal of money in clearing streams, in providing dams and in seeing that the fish get to the spawning grounds. We are fighting a hard battle not only to maintain our present supply of fish but to increase it. That battle is against industries that sometimes regard our rivers more as a sewerage system than anything else. We have to try to get fish up there and to get them to live in that kind of environment.

We are trying to protect the species against improved methods of catching fish. The kill of salmon from a commercial standpoint and the kill of salmon by sportsmen is increasing rapidly. I make no apology for having some increase in this item, and I think that the amount will probably have to be increased rather than maintained at the present level if we are going to win in this fight. It is not only for the salmon, but it is for the many other species of fish for which there is an easy market and of which we cannot find enough to supply the present market, such as lobsters, oysters, shrimp, and some groundfish. There is a ready market for them. We are spending a great deal of money. We are not detracting or taking away from our efforts with regard to the others, but we are adding to our efforts in connection with those particular species.

The hon. member asked how many hatcheries we have. The number in Nova Scotia is 15; in New Brunswick, 7; in Prince Edward Island, 3. That makes a total of 25.

Mr. Higgins: Is it proposed to establish any hatcheries in the newest province?

Mr. Mayhew: We shall have to give that matter consideration. We have only taken over for a few hours, as it were.

Mr. Higgins: I am not making any complaint.

Mr. Mayhew: We have no objection to your bringing these matters up for discussion and pressing for them. We realize that in some of the provinces the fisheries are the basis of their economic stability. We are trying to work out plans with the provincial government, with the industry and among ourselves, so that all three will combine in an effort to maintain that stability. It affects particularly the province of Newfoundland, but it also affects New Brunswick, in a lesser degree Nova Scotia, and in a still lesser degree Prince Edward Island, which is so highly developed as an agricultural centre. It is a beautiful place, and we are not neglecting it. You have some districts in Prince Edward Island that we think are marginal, and we should like to do something about it just as soon as we can get around to it.

Mr. Higgins: Last year I made a suggestion to the minister in connection with the conservation of salmon. I would appreciate some comment from him if he feels like making it. At that time I suggested that the only salmon fishing I know of is that which is done in Newfoundland, and at the mouths of the rivers; a number of the fishermen live there and they fish right at the mouth of the river. I made the suggestion that it might be well to subsidize these fishermen not to fish for a period of two or three years. It might be much cheaper than having hatcheries in Newfoundland. I think it could be easily arranged. I know the minister is aware of the situation, since he was in Newfoundland last year. The fishermen use nets close to the mouths of the rivers. They use cod nets. They cannot be prohibited. Because of the use of cod nets, the smallest type of salmon are being caught and the rivers are definitely becoming depleted. I should like to have the minister's comment as to whether he agrees with that suggestion or not. To me it appears to be a sensible way of handling this conservation problem. Nobody would be hurt, and the department would still be saving money.

Mr. Mayhew: It sounds like a simple way; but I think that if the hon. member were sitting in my position as Minister of Fisheries he would have to get larger premises to accommodate the delegations of sports fishermen who would descend upon him if they were robbed of their rights to catch some fish.

Mr. Higgins: I did not say to rob them; I meant to pay them.

Mr. Mayhew: Even to delay them. With most of the fishermen there is no tomorrow.

That is our principal trouble, that there is no tomorrow so far as the fishermen are concerned. We are trying to create a tomorrow by doing a good job.

Mr. Higgins: I merely want subsidies and support, not for the sport fishermen, but for the sea fishermen at the mouths of the rivers; pay them what their average catch would be. The result would be a great saving of fish.

Mr. Mayhew: And it would cost the government about $50 million a year.

Mr. Higgins: Oh, not at all—not anything like that.

Mr. Mayhew: If you did it there you would have to do it at other places.

Mr. Higgins: I merely suggest trying it as an experiment at a couple of rivers.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I was very much interested in the statement made by the minister. He suggested that fish for which markets are readily to be found were receiving consideration so far as protection is concerned. Mention was made of lobsters. My mind goes back to several articles that I read recently in magazines published in the state of Maine, indicating that lobster hatcheries in the state of Maine are making a very favourable report this year. I have seen several statements of the kind. To my knowledge the hatcheries that we have in New Brunswick have nothing to do with lobsters.

As any member of the department who has visited the maritimes would know, there is no shortage of spawn lobsters in that territory. At different seasons of the year thousands and thousands of female lobsters, spawn lobsters, can be obtained. In the exchange of information between the minister's department and the United States department, is the minister in a position to say whether the statement I have made is correct? Has the fisheries department in mind at any time the idea of establishing hatcheries somewhere in the maritime provinces?

I might also mention that in my riding—and one's own riding is the one that one usually thinks of first—there is a lobster pound that was formerly used by R. J. Conley Company. It would be available at the present time for that type of work. I am sure it could be obtained at reasonable rental by the department, and lobsters are available at all seasons of the year in that region. I should like the minister to comment on that.

Mr. MacNaught: In reply to the hon. member for Charlotte I may say that in the state of Maine the value of artificial hatching of lobsters has become so doubtful that the authorities there have cancelled plans for the expansion of the facilities. Instead they are carrying out an extensive investigation to determine what happens to the small lobsters when they are planted. They are using the entire output of their rearing station for this purpose. Canadian scientists are keeping closely in touch with this investigation. It would obviously be unwise to undertake any program of establishing lobster rearing stations until further results of this investigation are available.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): The parliamentary assistant has mentioned the value of lobster hatcheries. Can he give me some idea of the value of trout hatcheries in New Brunswick to the industry and to the general public?

Mr. MacNaught: The great value of trout or salmon hatcheries is chiefly to restock areas where the species have become badly depleted.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I believe the same number of men who are employed in the trout hatcheries in New Brunswick could be employed in the rearing of lobsters. If that were done we would find in a very short time that in dollars and cents it would be worth a great deal more to New Brunswick than the set-up you have at the present time.

Mr. Blackmore: May I say a word or two in support of the minister's policy of increasing hatcheries and increasing the supply of fish throughout the country? I believe it is a fundamental principle that has to be recognized, and it is beginning to be recognized by everyone in Canada that we should do everything possible to build up our stocks of fish to their former abundance. I therefore support the minister in the expenditures that he now asks for, and I would support him if they were greater than the ones he now proposes.

I should like to bring one matter to the minister's attention. I am not quite sure whether he has to do with the fish hatcheries in parks. In my riding we have a park, and I suppose you will find parks in a great many other ridings, in which there are lakes and streams in which it is desirable to replenish the fish. There is a hatchery there, but up to the present time the reports that I have indicate that the hatchery, after producing the small fish, the fry, turns the fry loose into the lakes—

Mr. Mayhew: Is this a national park?

Mr. Blackmore: Yes, Waterton national park in southern Alberta.

Mr. Mayhew: That is under a different department.

Mr. Blackmore: The principle is all right, anyway. The point is that the fish are turned into the lakes while they are tiny little things. There they readily become the prey of other fish. It seems desirable, in fact it must be desirable, to have little pounds made where the water will be warm enough and where these little fish can attain sufficient size to be able to take care of themselves. I understand they would then be called fingerlings. I wonder whether the minister has taken steps to provide for little pounds in which the fish could grow up. I would support such a proposal because the wastage of little fry when they are put into the lakes to look after themselves is terrific.

Mr. Mayhew: National parks are not under the Department of Fisheries; neither are the hatcheries in these parks. This matter should be referred to my colleague the Minister of Resources and Development, who is in charge of tourist trade.

Mr. Blackmore: Is there any provision for correlation between the efforts of the Minister of Fisheries and the efforts of the minister in charge of parks? It would seem to me to be an excellent opportunity for correlation.

Mr. Mayhew: In addition to that, we do not administer fisheries in the central provinces. These parks are mostly in the central provinces; therefore the co-operation would come through the provincial government rather than through the federal government. We are glad to give any assistance we can when we are asked, but we have not been asked.

Mr. Low: Do the minister and his department agree with the principle stated by the hon. member for Lethbridge, that instead of stocking streams and lakes with fry, have rearing ponds of various descriptions to raise them to the point where they are able to take care of themselves? I understand that in the stocking of fry the mortality is up to ninety per cent.

Mr. Mayhew: Our policy is to have hatcheries and to have rearing ponds. From the rearing ponds they go to the streams in which they are planted.

Mr. McLure: Under this item of fish culture I notice there is $112,899 for materials; and for the acquisition or construction of buildings there is an amount of $166,030. Where were the buildings purchased?

Mr. MacNaught: The materials and supplies for the hatcheries include gas and oil for the department's trucks, fuel oil, wood and coal for the fish hatcheries and dwellings, ice, salt, nails, brooms, brushes, whisks, truck tires, rubber boots, coats, fish food, and so on. That is fish food for the fish in the ponds, and it consists of beef liver, hog liver, spleen, lungs, lamb livers, horse meat, dried blood, sardines, herring, tripe and so on. Then there is the purchase of fish, eggs of parent salmon, water fertilizer, material for poisoning lakes, rifles, shot guns, ammunition for predator control, and screen clearance.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Do they give them liqueurs after feeding?

Mr. MacNaught: Absolutely. This amounts to about $50,000. Then there is the acquisition or construction of buildings, including the land.

Mr. McLure: What about buildings?

Mr. MacNaught: It is mostly for repairs. There is a large list of them, if the hon. member thinks it worth while to put it on the record. There is Bedford hatchery, $7,500; Grand Lake rearing station, $3,000; Margaree hatchery, $3,400; Mersey river rearing station, $6,000—there is a whole list of them. Does the hon. member want me to continue?

Mr. McLure: No.

Mr. MacNaught: There is one large item for the construction of the Morristown fishway for $60,000.

Mr. Catherwood: As the great lakes fishing industry is an important part of the industry in Canada, will the minister outline what work has been done in fish culture on the great lakes?

Mr. Mayhew: That is done by the province of Ontario. They administer their own fisheries and look after their own fish culture. However, we are willing to co-operate with them and to advise, if necessary.

Mr. Catherwood: Does not the federal government make a contribution toward hatcheries on the great lakes?

Mr. Mayhew: I am told we do not.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): On a question of privilege, I am wondering whether this protest movement in action to my left would come under your scope, Mr. Chairman. I note that standing order 12 says that Mr. Speaker shall preserve order and decorum. Could we have a ruling, or does it come within your authority?

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): There is very little evidence left of any breach of order and decorum. The sandwiches have been eaten.

Mr. Higgins: What knowledge has the department in connection with the successful canning of live lobsters?

Mr. Mayhew: This experiment was begun about a year or two ago, and we have not heard anything about it recently. We have very little knowledge of it. It appears to be an expensive process.

Mr. Higgins: Is it successful?

Mr. Mayhew: It is successful in that the lobsters can be moved from one point to another and kept alive for some considerable time. But the expense involved is considerable.

Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Mr. Chairman, I have been in communication with the department for some time about repairs to dams on the Medway river in Queens county. Medway has been, and I think still is, one of the world's finest salmon rivers. The water levels have continued to drop, and it is felt down there that by erecting dams to hold back the water it would improve angling and help the situation considerably. Has any action been taken?

Mr. MacNaught: The work being carried out on the Medway consists of the building of two small dams, one at Hog Lake and one at Black Rattle, with the main purpose of holding back the water for a longer period and thus enhancing the angling development during the low-water period of summer. The amount for the Hog Lake dam is set at $4,000, and at Black Rattle, $2,000. The Medway system at present is relatively clear. The main trouble was at Charleston, and it is now being removed. A fishway has been installed at Brookfield, and one at Harmony Mills. Negotiations are now under way regarding the screening of the intake of the power station to protect the downstream migrants in this place.

Item agreed to.

115. Oyster and clam culture, $78,900.

Mr. McLure: I notice there is an increase of $5,200. Is this because of taking in clam culture with oyster culture? What is the revenue from oysters in the maritime provinces? I understand that something over $300,000 worth of oysters were shipped from the leased beds of Prince Edward Island. What would be the royalties on those, and how are they collected?

Where is the clam culture taking place? What kind of clams are being cultivated? Is there any culture of quahogs? Some people are keenly interested in the quahog industry.

Mr. Mayhew: As has been pointed out, the increase here is $5,200. This consists of increases in permanent salaries amounting to $660, temporary assistance, $1,360; wages, $1,735; acquisition of equipment, $4,500. This makes a total of $8,255. Then there are some decreases in printing and stationery, and office equipment, $75; travelling expenses, $1,990; material and supplies, $950, and sundries, $40, making a total decrease of $3,055, or a net increase of $5,220.

[Mr. Mayhew.]

Mr. McLure: What royalties were received last year? Where does the clam culture take place?

Mr. Mayhew: The over-all oyster royalties amount to $5,132.62. There is no specific area in which clam culture is taking place. It is linked in with oyster culture.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): What progress has been made in the protection of oyster beds in Cumberland county? The department had undertaken certain work near Wallace and Malagash, and took over certain established beds. It is expected that these beds would be turned over to private individuals who would lease them. Could the minister make a statement on this?

Mr. MacNaught: The oyster developments around that area have been going on rather slowly. At Malagash arrangements are being made to construct a dike in an adjacent silt-free area. The department's object is to demonstrate the practicability of utilizing tide flats for the production of seed oysters, as is now done in many European countries and in parts of the United States. If successful, this method may prove to be the cheapest way of rearing small oysters. The great difficulty in the oyster industry is the rearing of small oysters.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): What happens to the young oysters? Are they distributed throughout the district?

Mr. MacNaught: They are placed in other areas.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): There are some beds being developed for commercial purposes, and I should like to know what success has been achieved.

Mr. MacNaught: I have no information on that before me, but I can assure the hon. member that this matter is receiving very sympathetic attention.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): This effort has been carried on for some time, and I understood one of the primary purposes was to establish beds for the commercial production of oysters in the Wallace harbour and Malagash area.

Mr. MacNaught: Very little interest has been shown by the local people in leases. We have not the details before us, but I know that in the Northumberland strait area the quantity of oysters has been increased by 100 barrels in 1949 over 1948. In 1948 the production was 3,500 barrels; in 1949 it was 3,600 barrels.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): That does not indicate very great success. I understand that a good oyster bed will produce several hundred barrels per year per acre.

Mr. MacNaught: But it takes a long time to develop it.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Only a few years.

Mr. MacNaught: Oh, no, it takes from four to six years for oysters to grow to a merchantable size.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): The life of an oyster is only four or five years. I understand that the effort is being made to bring some of these oyster beds back into production. There is practically an unlimited market for oysters from Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, because people all over Canada realize there is no better oyster to be found anywhere in the world. I am disappointed that the minister cannot give a more satisfactory report on these efforts that have been carried on for many years.

Mr. Mayhew: We have not the complete history before us, but I shall undertake to supply the hon. member with it. He is interested in this matter, and the success of the project depends upon the interest shown by the local people. We hope the interest shown by the hon. member will stimulate interest by others. This must be regarded as something in the nature of an experimental farm, and sometimes the results seem rather slow. They seem to be slow to me, and I can understand why they seem to be slow to the hon. member.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): About ninety per cent of the clams that are shucked in Charlotte county, as well as most of the lobsters produced there, are shipped to the United States. In the past large clams have been shipped to the United States, but they have not been received favourably, and in many cases losses have been sustained by the shippers. The United States market demands a small clam. This may be due to the fact that they are sold by the dozen at roadside stands and restaurants. The same thing applies to lobsters.

I understand it is hard for those who have little knowledge of the lobster industry to realize the difference between the price received for a chicken lobster and the price received for a select lobster. A chicken lobster will bring no more than 35 cents per pound on the market, whereas a select lobster is worth from 60 to 65 cents per pound. Whether we like it or not, we shall have to supply that market with the type of lobster they want and with the small clam they want.

When the large clam canneries are operating, the shuckers are able to sell the large clams to the canneries, but when they are closed there is quite a loss in that regard. I ask the department to give serious consideration to changing the size limit so that these shucking plants may carry on. In my own constituency these plants employ quite a number of girls who make good money, and in my estimation they are responsible for the price of clams being higher today than at any time in the history of the country. I ask the department to consider seriously the fact that we have to produce something that will sell, that we have to give the United States market the type of article they want over there.

Mr. McLure: Did the hon. member say that chicken lobsters were worth 65 cents a pound to the fisherman?

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I quoted the prices paid by R. J. Conley Company at St. Andrews for live lobsters.

Mr. McLure: What does the fisherman receive at the boatside? He never gets more than 23 cents per pound.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I do not want to enter into an argument about price spreads. These lobsters are held in pounds for several months. They are purchased in Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and sometimes great losses result. R. J. Conley and Company ship lobsters to the United States 365 days in the year. Recently I was in their plant with the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and on that day they shipped 26,000 pounds of lobsters to the United States. More than ninety-six per cent of the lobsters they purchase are sold in the United States.

119. To provide for Canadian share of expenses of the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission, appointed under treaty dated May 26, 1930, between Canada and the United States, for the protection, preservation and extension of the sockeye salmon fisheries of the Fraser river system, $180,650.

Mr. Gibson: I know the minister must have received a communication recently from the united fishermen and allied workers union in regard to the proposed division of the catch of sockeye salmon that will come to the Fraser river this year. I wonder if it would not be advisable for the minister to give us some idea of the reply he made. It might be helpful to other members from British Columbia who received the same letter.

Mr. Mayhew: The letter that the hon. member refers to came to my office only a couple of days ago. I have scarcely had time to do more than read it. I have not given it enough consideration to reply to it, but will be doing so in a day or two.

Item agreed to.

121. To provide for transportation, dressing and dyeing and other expenses incidental to receiving and disposing of fur seal skins accruing to Canada pursuant to provisional fur seal agreement between Canada and the United States by exchange of notes dated December 26, 1947, $500,000.

Mr. Higgins: I should like to ask the minister for an explanation of this item of $500,000. This is what you spend but what do you get out of it? What profit is there to Canada?

Mr. Mayhew: The net profit to Canada on the Pribilof seals last year was $682,000. Sixty-five per cent of our portion of the seals goes to the Fouke fur company in St. Louis for dressing, twenty-five per cent to C. W. Martin & Son, London, England, and ten per cent to Martin-Schnaufer Limited in Toronto. We have been checking with the firm in Toronto to see how they are getting along, and our latest information is that England is sending 400 of its seals to the Toronto factory for processing, indicating that there is a development taking place at Toronto.

Mr. Higgins: You made a profit of three-quarters of a million dollars.

Mr. Mayhew: The net to Canada, including what we pay in customs duties, is $682,000.

Mr. McLure: I understand from what the minister says that you are sending a certain amount to the new plant in Toronto for processing. We know how the processing done in the United States compares with the processing of Martins of London, England; but how does the processing of the Canadian firm compare? In the last sale I noticed that skins processed in the United States brought the highest price. It is not a matter of how cheaply we can get the processing done. It is a question of the finished product, and one thing about which the department must be careful is to see that the finished article is kept up to the standard of those finished in the United States. If the seals are not properly processed and obtain a lower price than the same quality of skins processed in the United States, then it will be a bad thing for the industry in Canada.

As the minister has told the committee, there is enormous profit in the fur seal industry of the Pribylov islands. It is something that should be protected and looked after carefully. Going back to the year 1945, I made inquiries at that time and found that there was a profit of $136,000, and we were spending nearly $300,000. Today there is an enormous profit, and it can be greater still if, through co-operation between the governments of Canada and the United States, we decide to take off a greater number of skins. The minister will correct me if I am wrong, but I understand that for this year they decided to take off about twenty-five per cent more skins than last year. However, that will be verified from the results of what they do at the Pribilof islands.

Mr. Mayhew: Mr. Chairman, generally speaking Canada has received more for skins processed in St. Louis than for those processed in England. For that reason the amount sent to England was considerably less than that sent to the United States. I think we would be pretty severely criticized, however, if we did not give the Toronto firm some skins to prove whether or not they can do the work in Canada. We do not know whether it will be successful because we have not yet had any finished skins from the Toronto plant. Apparently London is satisfied that their curing is equally good, because they have sent some of their own skins from England to be finished in the Toronto plant. I should like to at least give our own people a fair chance in order to ascertain whether they can or cannot do the work.

The prices of the various cured skins have varied from time to time, and in the last sale just a few days ago British cured skins brought a fairly good price.

Mr. McLure: I was not making any complaint about giving a percentage of the skins to the Toronto firm.

Mr. Mayhew: No.

Mr. McLure: What I say is if their processing is not equal to that of the United States, then by all means do not continue it, because our furs have a wonderful name and we might just as well keep it. The highest price realized at the St. Louis and Montreal sales was for a Canadian skin, the product of the Pribilof islands, which had been processed in St. Louis. I should like to know what is paid for processing in St. Louis, what is paid for processing of the same article to Martins of London, and also what is to be paid for processing at Toronto.

Mr. Mayhew: Does the hon. members mind if I give him that information tomorrow? We do not have it broken down in the way he wants it. I may say that the Martins company is a very old firm; also we felt that we did not want to risk putting all our eggs in the one basket, and for that reason our allotment was divided. Canada has a very high reputation for her furs, and we are not going to see her lose that reputation by accepting poorly cured seal skins, no matter where they come from.

Item agreed to.

122. To provide for the destruction of harbour seals, $60,000.

Mr. Higgins: There are no details for this particular item; will the minister explain it?

Mr. MacNaught: The amount of the bounty paid for adult seals, matured seals, in the maritime provinces has been increased to $10. It used to be $5.

Mr. Higgins: Ten dollars per seal?

Mr. MacNaught: Ten dollars per seal; that is right.

Mr. McLure: What was paid by way of bounty in Prince Edward Island last year for seals?

Mr. MacNaught: $750.

Mr. McLure: At $5 per pelt?

Mr. MacNaught: That is right.

Mr. McLure: Now that has been increased to $10?

Mr. MacNaught: Yes, to $10 for mature seals.

Mr. McLure: Will the proposition also be made to those who are going after seals that they separate the carcass and have it sent to the fish meal plant? Some of them are counting on that.

Mr. MacNaught: We require the jaw bone, and that is what the bounty is paid on.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): Would the minister give a comparative figure on the bounties that were paid in the county of Cumberland, Nova Scotia?

Mr. MacNaught: The counties of Cumberland and Colchester, 116 seals, or $580.

Mr. Gibson: Is the same price paid in British Columbia?

Mr. MacNaught: You will note that in my answer I said the price for adult seals applied only to the maritime provinces. In all other areas it is $5.

Mr. Gibson: What is the reason for the difference in price?

Mr. MacNaught: The problem is more serious in the maritime provinces because the biologists have found that the harbour seal acts as the host for the cod worm, and that is a very tough problem in the maritimes.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Does the item of the deep sea fishing bounty come under this vote?

Mr. MacNaught: No; we are on item 122.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Is it not under the same item?

Mr. MacNaught: No; this covers harbour seals.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): But there is an "(S)" under the item.

Mr. MacNaught: That designates a statutory amount, and that is the fishing bounty.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): Therefore I can discuss it on this item. I want to ask whether the department has ever had any other idea for the disposition of this bounty. This is a bounty paid to fishermen on the Atlantic coast, and it amounts to $7 or $8 per fisherman. In my estimation perhaps 50 per cent of the fishermen who are eligible for the bounty never receive it. Has the department ever considered some other method of disposing of this $60,000?

Mr. Mayhew: Mr. Chairman, we have given consideration to various ways of distributing this money. Consideration was given to whether we could buy insurance for the fishermen which would give them greater benefit. We have not as yet found a better way.

Item agreed to.

123. To provide for administration expenses of Newfoundland fisheries board, $101,300.

Mr. Higgins: Will the minister explain the decrease in the amount of this item? In the particulars given it appears that the largest amount cut off is for temporary assistance.

Mr. Mayhew: There has been no decrease. In fact, there has been an increase in the cost of this work to the government. This item has been transferred from the Newfoundland board to the Department of Fisheries here.

Item agreed to.

124. To provide for maintenance and extension of bait service, $548,400.

Mr. Gibson: I notice there is a substantial increase in this item, and I imagine that once again it is for the maritime provinces exclusively.

Mr. Mayhew: It is practically all for Newfoundland. We are providing for three new bait services, but we do not know whether we will build three.

Mr. Herridge: I have discussed this bait service for the maritimes with the member for Charlotte several times, and he has given me a lot of information about it. I have never understood it clearly. Will the minister explain exactly what service is provided?

Mr. Mayhew: This was a Newfoundland government service which we took over from the Newfoundland government at the time of confederation. They had bait storage depots and a refrigerator boat that went out to sea and brought in herring. These herring were put into the cold storages and later distributed as bait. The proposal was that the government would break even on it—that is, that they would do it on a cost basis. However, that was not the result before we took it over, and has not been the result since. Invariably there has been some loss in connection with it.

Mr. Gibson: I am curious about this. Out on the Pacific coast, for instance, private concerns catch herring and put them in freezers. It is a regular part of their normal business. I imagine it is quite a profitable part of it. I do not believe it is a very sound principle—it may be necessary and I am not criticizing the minister for having taken over this particular service and continuing it temporarily—for the federal fisheries department to be giving away bait.

Mr. Mayhew: I think the hon. member has to take into consideration the fact that there is a great deal of difference between the way fishing is handled in Newfoundland and the way it is handled in British Columbia. There are no big concerns in Newfoundland who can take a loss on bait. I know of no other way of doing it. We shall study the matter to see if somehow we can reduce the loss.

126. To provide for the extension of educational work in co-operative producing and selling among fishermen, $80,000.

Mr. Higgins: Will the minister explain what this is? There are no details.

Mr. Mayhew: It is a grant to three universities for educational work among the fishermen.

Mr. Bryce: I am renewing a request I made on a previous occasion when these estimates were up to see if some of this educational work in co-operative selling could not be done in Manitoba. The minister was going to consider it a year ago.

Mr. Mayhew: It is a little different in Manitoba. In the inland provinces we do not administer the fisheries. The fathers of confederation were wise enough, I think, to put fisheries under the federal government; but when the natural resources were returned to certain of the provinces, the fisheries as well as other natural resources were transferred; therefore we cannot propose a unified plan for the whole of Canada and administer it without the co-operation of the provinces.

Mr. Bryce: The money is voted for educational work in co-operative principles, and that is why I was asking the minister if it was not possible to devise some way of doing some work in Manitoba.

Mr. Mayhew: If we do it for Manitoba we will have to do it for practically every university across Canada. I do not know whether or not that would be good.

Mr. Herridge: I am interested in this item. If any particular province is concerned with carrying on educational work in the development of co-operatives, not only for fishermen but fruit growers and others, would the dominion government—I presume the province makes a contribution—extend those services to other provinces that are willing to co-operate in the same way as the provinces in which these votes are spent?

Mr. Wright: I might say that in the province of Saskatchewan we have organized an educational extension department. At the present time it is taking up this matter of organizing the fishermen on the lakes into co-operatives to solve some of the problems they have there, just the same as the fishermen have problems in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and the other places. The province is carrying that work on. If the dominion are prepared to assist one province, I would think they would be prepared to assist other provinces that are prepared to go ahead and to do this type of educational work among the fishermen.

Mr. Mayhew: That is the job of the provincial government. They took over the natural resources. They want to administer them and we are allowing them to do so. If there is any way in which we can give them assistance, we shall naturally be prepared to do anything we can. But in doing what they are doing, they are only carrying out their responsibilities.

Mr. McLure: This item is for administration purposes, and I thought perhaps I might bring to the attention of the minister a question that I asked him some time ago about protection for the fishermen of Rustico, in my constituency. At the time I asked the question: What about the bombing range? I should now like to know if this bombing range has been definitely decided on; because a certain number of the fishermen, upon considering the matter, think that it will be detrimental to them if this bombing range is located where the officials were first talking about putting it. I had an answer from the minister, in a way, in which it was stated that they would look into the matter. Then when I put the question to the Minister of National Defence, he said that he had nothing further to add to what the Minister of Fisheries had said.

In justice to the fishermen I think that something definite should be given to them. There is no great necessity for taking this location for a bombing range when they already have a bombing range at Chatham in New Brunswick. If it is going to be outside the fourteen mile limit, that is a different question. But if it is just going to be outside the three mile limit, I am told—and I do not know whether it is correct—that it will destroy the fish in that area and that they will leave. I think the fishermen should have assurance as to whether it is going there, when it is going, or how it is they are to seek protection.

Mr. MacNaught: I can tell the hon. member for Queens that no firm decision has been made on the area for a bombing and gunnery range for Prince Edward Island.

Mr. McLure: No decision has been made?

Mr. MacNaught: No decision has been made. Many negotiations have taken place and many meetings have been held with the fishermen of the area affected. I am sure that a site can be agreed upon which the majority of the fishermen will say is satisfactory. But it is purely in the preliminary stages.

Mr. McLure: The site is agreed upon?

Mr. MacNaught: No; it has not been definitely agreed upon—"tentatively" probably would be a better word to use. But it is just in the preliminary stages. I do not think any more definite information can be given at the present time. It may never be used.

Mr. McLure: As I said a moment ago, it is not definitely needed when they have one a few miles farther away. Why should they subject the fishermen of that area to this hazard when they have one about thirty miles farther away? Thirty miles by air is not a great distance in these times. I would urge the Minister of Fisheries to take the matter up definitely with the Minister of National Defence. It will be up to the Minister of Fisheries to see that the protection needed out there is given. If it was in time of war and they wanted a second range, it would be a different matter. But they already have a range. For the sake of the distance of thirty miles, coming from Summerside, I do not think we should go after our fishermen so hard.

Mr. Mayhew: I have been in consultation with my colleague the Minister of National Defence, and I am quite prepared to assume the responsibility the hon. member has put on my shoulders.

Mr. Herridge: I should like the minister to explain to the committee why the federal government is willing to contribute funds to educational work in co-operative producing and selling among fishermen in the maritimes and is not willing to apply the same policy to other provinces in Canada.

Mr. Mayhew: We do it in the maritimes, and there is a vote for British Columbia. Those are the areas in which we are responsible. It was recommended by the royal commission. At the time the grant was made it was for education among the fishermen, to show them how to fish and to care for their gear, and to educate them in methods of co-operative selling. It has gone a little bit further than that, but we assist only in the areas in which we are responsible.

128. To provide for assistance in the construction of vessels of the dragger and/or long liner type, subject to such terms and conditions as may be approved by the governor in council, $100,000.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): I should like to ask the minister what are the plans with respect to the construction of the vessels for which this vote of $100,000 is being provided. It is supposed to be a wooden vessel. Will tenders be called? I would point out again, as I did the other day, that we have one yard that has been in operation a hundred years or more. It is the shipbuilding yard of Hatfield and Wagstaff. Is is one of the few yards in Nova Scotia that have survived all these years. Wooden ships that sailed the seven seas were built there. I would ask the minister for particulars as to what is proposed, and whether tenders will be called. This is a reliable firm, with as long a record of production as any yard of its kind in Canada.

Mr. Mayhew: I think the hon. member is a little bit confused about this particular item of $100,000. It is for subsidies to groups of fishermen who have boats or draggers built. The provincial government gives them a loan and we give them a grant of $165 per ton. We have nothing to do with construction of boats at all.

Mr. Black (Cumberland): This vote being under the authority of the minister, I presume he will require that tenders be called so that all yards will have an opportunity of tendering and the contract will be placed with the yard that gives the best value and the lowest price.

Mr. Mayhew: We have nothing to do with the letting of contracts for these draggers. This is to assist a group of individuals who have a right to adopt their own methods of procuring their own boats. It is not something over which we have control.

Mr. Higgins: How much was spent on this item last year?

Mr. Mayhew: $49,000.

Mr. Higgins: How long has the practice been in effect?

Mr. Mayhew: Before my time; I think four or five years.

Mr. McLure: I should like a little information as to the proposals that were made some time ago to the fishermen of Rustico and Souris and other points with reference to draggers or trawlers. I think there was some plan to have a couple of trawlers operate off the Prince Edward Island coast. It was advertised in the press that fish meal plants would also be started to take care of the fish that would be caught by the trawlers but in the ordinary way would be destroyed or lost. I understand that the fish meal plant is to be started at a place called Hunter River. According to the press the plant was to get the finest machinery and assistance from the fisheries department. I do not know anything about it except what I saw in an article in the Charlottetown Patriot on May 18 with reference to it. The minister was being commended for plans to establish the plant. I should like to know how far the government has gone with this fish meal plant at Hunter River, and probably in Souris as well. Are they satisfied that trawlers can be operated off our coast? Some fishermen tell me that there must be a smooth bottom for trawlers to operate over. To find a smooth bottom on the north side of Prince Edward Island they would have to go at least twelve or fifteen miles off the coast, and the distance would be too great.

As I said a moment ago, I have no information except that it was publicized that the department were to have two or three trawlers and also draggers, and assistance was to be given to the fishermen if they wanted to take advantage of it. I should like an explanation.

Mr. Mayhew: The province of Prince Edward Island can come under this vote just the same as any other province, and can get the draggers and so forth. As to whether it is feasible to use draggers off the Prince Edward Island coast, I think there is ample proof in the fact that the trawlers and draggers from New Brunswick do fish along that coast. Therefore I would think the hon. member's own government would probably want to take under advisement doing the same thing as they do in New Brunswick and in Nova Scotia.

So far as reduction plants are concerned, I indicated certain locations where I thought it looked feasible to establish them. One of those was a place in Prince Edward Island where I thought a reduction plant should be set up to take care of the offal and the surplus fish that turn up along that shore. An individual has taken the hint and is now in the process of trying to establish a plant. He is making his application to the industrial bank for assistance. Just what success he is going to have with it remains to be seen, but it is in the process of development. The same thing has happened along the New Brunswick coast. We are pleased when private industry comes along and does these things, because the government does not want to get into this kind of business. There is a small plant in New Brunswick which has done very well, and I would think that perhaps this individual in Prince Edward Island may be able to do the same.

Mr. McLure: Is the one the minister is speaking of at Hunter River to be carried on by private enterprise?

Mr. Mayhew: It is private enterprise, and application is being made to the industrial bank for assistance.

Mr. McLure: The Department of Fisheries would give them some assistance, would it not?

Mr. Mayhew: We are not standing in their way; we are not encouraging the industrial bank to withhold assistance.

Mr. McLure: The reason I ask the question is that judging by the publicity that has been given to it, the department should pay something for the excellent publicity they have received regarding this plant. If it is purely private enterprise I think the department had better reverse the publicity and give credit to private enterprise.

One thing more in connection with this department; it has to do with protection for the fishermen in certain localities, one of them being Rustico harbour. I have a letter which states that they had very successful lobster fishing, but the great trouble is the shallowness of the water, which makes it difficult to get out of the harbour. They are anxious to know whether the construction of a bridge, or repairing of the bridge that is there, is to be undertaken this season, to give protection. Last year a survey was made with reference to the building of a bridge, but I understood it had nothing to do with the fishermen, except that if it were built it would perhaps change the current of the harbour and be of great assistance to them in that way. Can the minister say anything about that?

Mr. Mayhew: Yes, I have been at Rustico and I have been over that area. Naturally I am not as familiar with it as is the hon. member, but I have drawn it to the attention of the Department of Public Works and they have investigated it. I think it is a very difficult area to do anything with, because the sand is pretty loose. It is difficult to see how you could put a channel through there that would not fill up again in a matter of a few months. However, the matter has not been lost sight of. It has been brought to the attention of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Kirk (Digby-Yarmouth): As the minister and his officials know, during the last year I have had innumerable interviews and have written several hundred letters to his department about the use of draggers off the coast of Digby Neck and the islands; in other words, off the coast of Digby county in the province of Nova Scotia. May I right now thank him and the officials of his department for making arrangements to send a senior official from the department down there in the latter part of this month to talk to the fishermen and the members of the fishing firms in order to explain the policy of the department and discuss with them the effect of dragger fishing upon the fishing grounds. There is a great deal of concern in that area as to whether or not these draggers are injuring the grounds. There is also a great deal of concern as to why we should keep our own Canadian draggers or trawlers twelve miles off the coast and then permit the American draggers to come up within three miles. This in effect means that the area between the three-mile limit and the twelve-mile limit is being maintained as a preserve for American draggers.

Will the minister tell the committee how many draggers are licensed in Nova Scotia, and how many trawlers are licensed? How many of those licensed make their home port any port in the counties of Digby or Yarmouth?

In the United States there are three types of vessels in this class. They refer to small draggers, medium draggers, and trawlers, whereas in Canada we classify them as draggers—sometimes they are called small draggers—and beam trawlers. How does the department distinguish between the small draggers and the trawlers in the granting of licences?

In western Nova Scotia up until last year we had not done any fishing for rosefish, sometimes known as redfish. Within the last year, however, they have been dragging for redfish. Where are the grounds, in relation to the three-mile and twelve-mile limits, in which these rosefish are found; and would the minister care to comment on the future prospects for the taking of rosefish in western Nova Scotia? While this is not a new industry, it is new to western Nova Scotia.

Mr. MacNaught: The hon. member has asked about five questions. He asked first how many licensed trawlers are fishing out of Nova Scotia ports. There are eleven. He asked how many licensed small draggers are fishing out of Nova Scotia ports. There are thirty-five. I think he asked how many small draggers are fishing out of ports in Digby and Yarmouth. There are twenty-six. He wanted to know how the department differentiates between draggers and trawlers, with reference more particularly to the definitions in the United States. The distinction between trawlers and draggers is partly one of definition. In the United States there are three classes, small and medium draggers, and trawlers. On the east coast we have two classes, small draggers and trawlers. At present the dividing line between these two classes is sixty tons. Over sixty tons they are trawlers, and under that they are small draggers. Our small draggers are growing in number, and various types and sizes are being developed for the industry. Our classification may have to be adapted further to the needs of the industry. At the present time, however, we classify as a small dragger anything under sixty tons. There are no restrictions as to the number of these, and the licence fee charged is $5. Trawlers are above sixty tons, and the licence fee is $500.

Canadian trawlers are not allowed to fish within twelve miles of the coast. That provision is contained in section 56 of the Fisheries Act. Of course foreign trawlers can come up to the three-mile limit, the range of international waters.

The hon. member also inquired whether any discussions had taken place between our government and that of the United States. The matter of the twelve-mile limit for trawlers was discussed with the Department of External Affairs in the course of the last year. As a result of such discussion it was decided that until we can show we have good reason for our legislation, or that the United States fishing industry would benefit, it would be unlikely that the United States government would give our request the careful consideration we think it merits.

Until the present time it has been difficult to establish a cause for such action, and for several reasons. The first is that it is difficult to show that the twelve-mile limit is based upon any sound conservation policy. That twelve-mile limit is not general in Canada; it does not apply on the Pacific coast, and there is no twelve-mile limit around Newfoundland. Even if the United States were to withdraw her trawlers to the twelve-mile limit, there is no certainty that other governments would be disposed to take similar action.

Rosefish dragging in western Nova Scotia is done mainly by American trawlers. Those fish can be taken only by trawlers or draggers. As I said, under our dragger policy larger boats up to sixty tons are able to fish for rosefish, and such small draggers can fish inside the twelve-mile limit. The Canadian fishing industry has not yet made full use of these rosefish grounds, although the stock seems to be plentiful around western Nova Scotia. I understand the processing of these fish requires expensive scalers, and market outlets have to be built up. This is being done, and we look forward to the industry making much greater use of the rosefish grounds.

Mr. Bryce: When we were discussing the prices support legislation I asked the minister some questions. As we were hurrying to finish the work the minister said he would supply the information when his estimates were before the committee. Can he do that now?

Mr. Mayhew: Would the hon. member be content if we sent him all the material in written form?

Mr. Bryce: That would be satisfactory.

129. To provide for assistance in the construction of bait freezing and storage facilities, subject to the approval of the governor in council, $100,000.

Mr. McLure: Is the bait-freezing plant at Charlottetown assisted by the Department of Fisheries here? Last season they put in a large quantity of fish—indeed, so much that they were not able to sell it. A good deal of it was sent over to Nova Scotia and given away, and the rest of it was taken to the dump. Was that because of a surplus of bait, or because the plant did not keep the bait in a satisfactory condition?

Mr. Mayhew: There was a surplus. That is one of the risks in operating a bait-freezing plant. The federal government did assist in connection with the bait storage plant at Charlottetown. We have already contributed $25,000, and there is a further extension for the holding depot at Tignish amounting to $5,000, making a total of $30,000.

Mr. Higgins: What plans are ahead for new construction in the way of cold storage?

Mr. Mayhew: Three plants have been arranged for in the estimates, and the site has been chosen for one.

680. Departmental administration—further amount required, $17,495.

Mr. Cruickshank: I represent the greatest fishing country in Canada. One of my colleagues has just handed me an advertisement of the virgin mermaid lure, which is described as follows:

In your tackle she's a doll—in the water she's a "wow." Colours, blonde, brunette, redhead.

As I say, I come from the Fraser valley where the principal salmon fishing industry is concentrated. In British Columbia 55 per cent of the total commercial fishing of Canada is carried on. We produce more than the other seven provinces combined. I shall be brief now, because I intend to speak later on the estimates of the Minister of Finance.

Some years ago the Sloan commission was set up at a cost of many thousands of dollars, but it brought down a very fair report. Among other things it outlined the boundaries of area No. 17, in which I am particularly interested. We shall be perfectly satisfied if that district stands. During the war the boundaries were extended as an emergency measure, but at the present time we strongly object to the extension of the boundaries. The Sloan report was brought in after many months of investigation, with the assistance of experts of the Department of Fisheries, although in referring to them I am sometimes inclined to say "so-called experts".

Mr. Mayhew: The department is not making any ruling this year in connection with area No. 17. If the Canadian boats catch their share of fish in other places, there will be no thought of touching the Sloan line. If they do not, then we shall have to take the matter under advisement.

The problem in that area is twofold. We have to provide for conservation, and we have to see that the Canadian fishermen get their share of the salmon going up the Fraser river. Attention must be paid to the quality of the fish. I think the Sloan line was set up ten years ago, but the situation has changed considerably since then. When that line was set up it was not thought possible that fishing could be done in the straits of Juan de Fuca. But considerable fishing has been done there. This year the weather may be so rough and conditions may be such that no fishing will be done, while the United States fishermen will be able to make their catches along their coast. If the Canadian fishermen get a small catch in a good year of sockeyes, the matter will have to be considered.

We think that this matter should be considered with the best interests of the fishermen in mind. If the line were set up as a permanent fixture it could not be changed without strenuous objections, and we might have to set up another commission. We intend to deal with it as fairly as possible, considering all the circumstances and conditions.

Mr. Cruickshank: In the province of British Columbia we have what are known as the big five, the packers and the canners, but there are also many thousands of fishermen, whether they be within the union or whether they belong to co-operatives. I hope that before any change in the boundary is made, those fishermen or their representatives will be called in, not merely the representatives of the canners and packers.

Mr. Mayhew: Recently I spent most of a day in Vancouver with two sections of the gill netters on the Fraser river, and I told them very much the same as I have just told the hon. member. They went away quite happy. I have also discussed the matter with the industry. Before we do anything they will know what the situation is and it will be discussed with them.

681. Fisheries inspection, including fishery officers and guardians, fisheries patrol and protection services—further amount required, $317,650.

Mr. McLure: Has there been any change in the law with regard to poaching? A good deal of poaching goes on in our province during the lobster season. In certain parts of the island the fishermen live up to the regulations, but in other parts poaching is carried on throughout the whole year, even before the season opens. In those localities no regard is had for the regulations. Last year the poaching was greater than ever, largely because it was an election year and they knew there would not be any fines imposed.

Mr. Cruickshank: That is a bunch of hooey.

Mr. McLure: Just a moment, or I might tell you something that you don't want to hear.

An hon. Member: Out of order.

Mr. McLure: Just a moment. What I want to get at is that this season that excuse is not before the people, and they should be protected. Those who are observing the regulations should be protected against those who are breaking them and helping to deplete our lobster resources. I bring the matter up because the parliamentary assistant to the minister knows full well that poaching is helping to ruin the lobster industry in Prince Edward Island. If the matter is to be left to the provincial authorities and police to take care of, then they should be given their instructions early so that poaching can be stopped, especially in the lobster business.

Mr. Kickham: In fairness to other hon. members, may I say that the hon. member for Queens has implied that poaching was permitted last year. In the riding of Kings, Prince Edward Island, in the week prior to the election, a number of fishermen were brought into the courts and fined for poaching. I think in all fairness the hon. member for Queens should retract his statement.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Department and missions abroad—

64. Departmental administration, $2,378,880.

Mr. Graydon: During the last few weeks I have been directing inquiries to the Minister of Fisheries, who some time ago was at the Sydney conference. I do not mind saying that if it were not for the close and intimate association I have in a personal way with the Minister of Fisheries, and the high regard in which I hold him, I would be saying something much more critical and severe than I intend to say at this time. I think we should have had a statement about the Sydney conference just as soon as the conference was over. I am sorry to have to raise this question at such a late stage of the session, but the Minister of Fisheries indicated the other day that he would make a statement about that conference when the estimates of the Department of External Affairs were under consideration. I suppose he will rush in to make that statement at the first available opportunity.

The parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance was on a mission to Europe during the interval between the first and second sessions of this parliament. He has a report to make, and perhaps it may not be necessary for him to do more than to answer three questions I should like to pose to him. That may suffice for the statement that normally might be made about such an important mission.

First of all, country by country in Europe, what was the outstanding debt owing to Canada with respect to the matters with which he was concerned? Second, what was the amount of the settlement finally arrived at as to each of the debts? Third, what was the percentage ratio of each settlement to the original debt. If he answers those questions it may not be necessary for him to make a speech, even though, as usual, we should be delighted to hear him.

When the international situation was acute some years ago, before and during the second world war, it became the habitual practice of the then prime minister, who was also secretary of state for external affairs, to make a statement each day in the house while the situation remained critical. I think we should have a day by day account of what the government has heard and what its knowledge may be, so far as it can be communicated to the house, with regard to one of the most dangerous situations that has arisen in the international field in some time. Before the Secretary of State for External Affairs deals with his estimates I hope he will bring us up to date with respect to the situation in Korea, and submit himself to examination with respect to certain points on which hon. members may feel it advisable or necessary to question him at this time. I make that suggestion because of the keen interest in the matter among members of parliament and throughout the country generally. We are nearing the end of the session, and I fancy that every member will want to be brought up to the very last minute so far as information is concerned relating to a matter that affects the home, fireside and security of everyone in Canada.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Chairman, so far as the first two points are concerned which were mentioned by the hon. member for Peel, the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance will be glad to speak on the question of military relief credit. The Minister of Fisheries has already announced that when the estimates of the Department of External Affairs are under consideration he will make a statement about the Sydney conference. Those estimates are now before us, and the Minister of Fisheries is willing to make his statement now.

As to the third question, I shall be glad to make a short statement bringing the committee up to date, so far as I can, on current developments, and to submit myself to any questions which may be asked.

Hon. R. W. Mayhew (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Chairman, the sudden elevation from fisheries to external affairs hardly becomes me; nevertheless it is a pleasure for me to take this opportunity to make a brief report on the Sydney conference.

I should like to take this opportunity to report on the recent meeting of the commonwealth consultative committee on south and southeast Asia which was held last month in Sydney, Australia. I am convinced that it was one of the most significant meetings in the history of the commonwealth.

The British commonwealth of nations has, in the past, given proof that it is a vital and effective force in world affairs. Recently, with the free entry of new independent nations, the term "commonwealth" has taken on a wider meaning. The orbit of our family of nations has been enlarged, and its duties and responsibilities have been increased. At Sydney the commonwealth accepted these new duties and responsibilities, and reaffirmed its faith in co-operative action.

At this meeting we witnessed a convincing and heartening demonstration that "commonwealth" is no mere name, but a term that implies unity of purpose for the good of all. And, more than that, it was clearly shown that the commonwealth is not an exclusive club, conferring benefits only on those fortunate enough to belong to it. The program of assistance formulated at Sydney recognizes the needs and aspirations of all countries in south and southeast Asia.

There were two very good reasons why Canada was represented at the conference in Sydney. First, Canada is a senior member of the commonwealth and is anxious to assume its full share of the responsibilities of membership. Second, as five members of the commonwealth are in this area—and as Canada is a Pacific power as well as an Atlantic power—we must look both west and east.

Before giving some of the highlights of the Sydney meeting, I would like to express my thanks, and those of the other members of the Canadian delegation, to the Australian government and people for the really overwhelming hospitality accorded to us while in their country. It would be impossible for me to describe adequately the warmth of the welcome we received and the wonderful way we were treated while "down under". The Australians are an energetic and forthright people, and this is evident even in their hospitality.

I did not have as much opportunity of visiting in Australia as I should have liked. Most of my time was spent in the wonderful and beautiful city of Sydney, and I had very little time to visit the rest of the country. I did have a trip from Sydney to Canberra, a distance of about 200 miles, and I saw enough to realize that we have something in common with Australia. We both have large countries with small populations, and we are both doing our best to fill up empty places and to make the most of our resources. Anything that Canada can do to co-operate with Australia and New Zealand I believe we should do.

At this point too I should like to say how much I appreciated the opportunity of visiting New Zealand, which I did during the week following the commonwealth conference. I received a truly royal welcome from the government, and while their guest I was able to see a good deal of the country. I left New Zealand with lasting memories of a rich and beautiful land and a people as intelligent and progressive as they are warm-hearted.

Here again I think there is an opportunity for Canada to become more closely related in a business way with these two as well as the other three commonwealth nations in that part of the world.

Members will recall that at the conference of the commonwealth foreign ministers at Colombo last January, Mr. Spender of Australia and Mr. Jayawardene of Ceylon put forward a plan of assistance to the countries of south and southeast Asia.

Both of these statesmen are to be congratulated on recognizing the importance and the seriousness of this problem. I think we should feel particularly grateful to Mr. Spender. At Colombo, and in the period between that meeting and the recent one in Sydney, he devoted all his energies towards the drafting of a program that would enlist the interest and support of commonwealth and other countries. He was the chairman of our meeting in Sydney, and throughout these negotiations he provided vigorous and effective leadership.

Before proceeding I think it would be well if I defined the area that is described by the term "south and southeast Asia". The countries of south Asia are of course Pakistan, India and Ceylon—and they are all members of the commonwealth. The chief countries in southeast Asia are Indo-China, Thailand Burma, Malaya and Indonesia. One could mention some of the other countries, particularly those of the Indonesian Archipelago, but I have not chosen to spell them out in this statement.

Most of these nations have recently achieved independence. Together they form one quarter of the world's population. They are struggling with great problems. They are in the process of establishing their own administrative systems. They are attempting to repair the damage done by war, civil disturbance, and economic dislocation. By various and determined efforts they are struggling hard to raise the living standards of their people.

This fight is going on at a critical period, when the winds of political conflict throughout the world are high and gusty. If they can surmount their many difficulties they will have laid the foundation for new nations which will contribute greatly to the richness and strength of a free world. But at the present time they are extremely vulnerable to dangerous forces, from within and without. If these forces prevail, these countries will quickly be robbed of the freedom which they have so recently won.

I say that the problems of this part of Asia are of vital concern to all Canadians. Our world of today is a very small world. If I may use a humble metaphor, it is like a haystack. It does not matter on which side the fire is started; if the wind is favourable, all will be destroyed.

During the meetings in Sydney there were reports in the press of differences which separated the Australian from other delegations. Those reports were much exaggerated. Of course there were differences of outlook and approach. There always are in any conference. But such disagreements as did emerge were recognized as springing from honest differences of opinion; and, by the time the conference had concluded, they had all been composed into one set of many resolutions which all delegates could agree to recommend to their governments.

The recommendations of the conference are now being considered by the government here and by the other governments which were represented at the conference in Sydney.

The final set of resolutions of the conference included the following recommendations:

(a) It was recommended that a report should be prepared setting out the need for development, the development programs of the countries in the area which might be expected to be completed over a period of six years ending the 30th June, 1957, and the need for external assistance in order to carry out these programs.

(b) It was also recommended that a commonwealth program of technical assistance should be established immediately to supplement the United Nations program.

It was agreed that all the countries in the area, commonwealth and non-commonwealth countries alike, should be invited, as a matter of urgency, to prepare during the next two or three months a plan of economic development. These various plans, prepared by individual countries, would then be considered and consolidated at the next meeting of the consultative committee which is to take place in London in September.

I perhaps need to point out why this program represents a distinct advance. There have been many plans produced by individual countries. What has not yet been produced is a single plan of co-ordinated development. This consolidated plan will define the needs of the area and also define a program of economic development designed to meet them.

The needs of the area, in spite of its great natural resources, are enormous and pressing. They must, however, be activated and made articulate. And there must be a clear program of economic development if these countries are to have any hope of bettering their standards of living and of attracting assistance from outside the area to that end.

When such a plan has been prepared and carefully examined it will be possible to determine what external assistance will be required. Indeed, it is already being provided, at least in part, by the United States, the United Kingdom, and through a number of international agencies, notably the international bank. More help will probably be necessary. But before determining its scale or the form it should take, a clearer picture must be drawn of the needs of the countries in the area and what they, themselves, can do to meet them.

For there can be no question that the chief responsibility for fostering economic development must continue to rest within the countries concerned. Economic development is essentially a matter of growth and the creation of a favourable environment; and this is primarily of domestic concern. A favourable environment depends on many things—a suitable fiscal policy; conservation of resources for the most important uses, and an intelligent timing of the projects to be undertaken. The initiative in creating all of these must come from within.

When all possible steps have been taken within the countries concerned, however, it is virtually certain that external assistance will still be required. It will then be for countries outside the area to decide whether or not they can assist.

I made it clear several times during the conference that Canada's ability to be of help would be severely restricted by its other international commitments. I explained that we had undertaken heavy responsibilities in the north Atlantic area, and that these responsibilities must be a first charge on whatever resources we might be able to devote to assistance abroad. On the other hand, I added that the existence of these prior commitments did not mean that we intended to overlook our responsibilities in other quarters of the globe. The statement of needs and resources which is being prepared will provide a basis for decision by the Canadian and other governments.

In one field, however, it was agreed that further action need not wait on the completion of the plan which I have mentioned. It was decided to inaugurate, without delay, a commonwealth technical assistance scheme for the area to organize technical assistance on a bilateral basis between governments. The aggregate of assistance involved would be £8,000,000 sterling over a period of three years.

Mr. Green: Three years?

Mr. Mayhew: Yes. Hon. members will have noticed in the estimates that the Canadian government has now decided to make available to countries of south and southeast Asia technical assistance of the value of $400,000 for the first year of this three-year period.

Mr. Green: Is that for commonwealth countries?

Mr. Mayhew: Commonwealth countries.

Mr. Green: Commonwealth countries exclusively?

Mr. Mayhew: The use will not be confined to commonwealth countries, as the hon member will see as I proceed.

Technical assistance extended in this way would be supplementary to that provided through the United Nations. The estimates will also have revealed that the Canadian contribution to the United Nations expanded program on technical assistance should be $850,000 for the first eighteen months of its operation.

It seems to me that one of the most useful things we can do to assist in the economic development of countries in south and southeast Asia is to supply them with technical assistance. I would like to see a much larger number of Canadian experts and technicians travelling to that part of the world to put their skills at the disposal of peoples who are not so far along the path of economic development as we are. I would also like to see a much larger flow of students from India, Ceylon, Pakistan, Malaya and other countries coming to Canada to study in our universities and agricultural colleges, and also to be trained in some of our great industrial undertakings.

Money will be needed in order to stimulate this flow in both directions. But, in addition to money, we will need a great deal of patient effort in making arrangements here in Canada to expand the available vacancies for students from abroad and in removing the obstacles which now hinder the flow of experts to other countries. In this task we shall have to rely very heavily on co-operation from Canadian educational institutions and from those who control our industries. I feel sure, however, that such co-operation will be forthcoming.

The end result will be a freer flow of knowledge, goods and services in both directions.

Above all, what will be needed in this enterprise is a sense of mission. Those of our young men whom we send to help in the development of these underdeveloped countries must have real sympathy with the aspirations of the people among whom they work. They must also have a high sense of the importance of what they are doing to spread to other peoples of the world the abundance which we enjoy.

May I say here that on more than one occasion I emphasized the necessity of using great care in selecting those people that we send from this country into some other country to assist their peoples. We need the experts, certainly. We need men of great skill and great knowledge. But above all we need men who are truly representative of Canada. If we send men who are truly representative Canadians, men who have some idea of pioneering and pioneering methods, their services will be accepted; and they will do the maximum good for those countries and the maximum good for our country. I would emphasize here again the necessity of our being careful in selecting the Canadians who go to these countries.

I believe that this technical assistance program can be very effective. But it could fail, if we do not find the right men for the job. The bureau that is to be set up must use the greatest care and caution in the selection of personnel. The success of the program will depend almost entirely on the men who are charged with the heavy responsibility of putting it into effect.

This account of only two of the main recommendations of the conference at Sydney has, I hope, given at least some indication of what was planned and accomplished. At the conference in Ceylon the idea was conceived of commonwealth co-operation to assist the countries of south and southeast Asia. At the conference in Sydney a start was made in giving that idea form and shape and in equipping it with some of the machinery. At the next meeting of the consultative committee, which is to be held in London in September, we hope that the machinery will be put in motion. It is impossible overnight to raise the standard of living of these peoples. Time and patience will be needed, as well as thought and energy and money. But I believe the countries which were represented at the conference in Sydney have given proof that they realize the urgency of the problem and are doing their utmost to help in solving it.

Canadians will want to share and assume their full responsibility in the implementation of this program. But this is not all we can and should do to help these people. We can help in another way.

We in Canada have been very successful in selling our primary products to overseas markets. We have also achieved considerable success, particularly in recent years, in the production of manufactured articles for sale abroad. But we have done very little in the field of foreign investment. I think it is time that our Canadian businessmen gave some thought to the possibility of setting up agencies in other countries, and particularly in this part of Asia, where they could produce and package goods that would sell in Canada and in other dollar countries.

I am not in favour of that type of investment where money alone is sent to a foreign country. I would advocate the investment of equipment, brains and technical know-how, along with a sufficient amount of money to put these to work to the best advantage. I can see a very profitable field for this kind of investment—profitable not only to ourselves, but also to those countries where development is needed. This is one very practical and very realistic way of helping those countries to achieve a standard of living comparable to our own. And it can be done side by side with the commonwealth and other programs of technical and economic assistance.

I have in mind the production and packaging of such goods as jute, rubber, fabrics, tea, coffee, spices, fruits. And there are many others. These are things that Canada needs and will buy more of if they are prepared and sold to Canadians in the right way. For too long we have depended on others to act as middlemen and supply us with products from foreign countries, at greater cost to ourselves. I would urge that we go directly to the source, develop the product, and do the business ourselves.

By thus encouraging a new flow of goods from these countries to North America we would be helping to solve the difficult exchange problem between the dollar and sterling areas. Opening up new markets here for these countries will make it possible for them to purchase more from us in return.

Discussions I had with several people during my recent trip convinced me that the countries in this area would welcome Canadian investment of this kind. I know that they would do everything in their power to create the proper environment. But primarily the responsibility rests with private business. If they show initiative, courage and imagination, they can do a good job for themselves, for Canada, and for our potential friends in that part of the world.

If I might summarize in a simple way, the battle upon which we are now engaged in south and southeast Asia is a battle of the plowshares and not of the sword. The aims and spirit behind it are those that the people of this area will understand and appreciate. Though in real war too, they are great and valiant soldiers, they are at heart, like ourselves, peace-loving people. What they want, and what we want to help them achieve, is a better and richer life and their rightful place in the family of peace-loving nations.

I know there will be those who will claim that what I have said here is too little and too late. Those who would wish to destroy the scheme would say that, but I point out that it is never too late to make a new beginning. What these people are trying to do is to make a new beginning. They want to feel that they are doing it themselves, but they are not too proud to accept help, because they know that they will be giving help in return.

I want to add this—and it is something I had to explain two or three times on my trip. Canada always seems to be facing toward Europe. That has been true in the past. It is true because the two racial strains from which we spring came from Europe. It is true because we fought two wars in Europe, and our attention must be directed that way. But it is now time for Canada to look both ways and devote more attention to affairs in the east as well as in Europe.

Mr. Graydon: The minister did not mention the appropriation which was made by the government for technical assistance to underdeveloped countries. I was wondering whether that was the result of the consultative committee's discussions. What will the machinery consist of to co-ordinate all these programs for technical assistance to the underdeveloped nations of south and southeast Asia? We have now President Truman's point four program, which is a large one. Then we have the United Nations program under the economic and social council, and the consultative committee's program with respect to the commonwealth. How is it proposed to fit these in and dovetail them so that there shall be no overlapping and the money and the technical assistance will be put to the very best use, and as rapidly as possible?

Mr. Mayhew: I am only the Minister of Fisheries. I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs should answer that question.

Mr. Pearson: I am sure the Minister of Fisheries would answer it better. The question is an important one and I think can best be answered in this way. The hon. member for Peel mentioned three separate forms of international technical assistance. One is the United States form of technical assistance which they are working out by bilateral arrangements with other countries, mostly in Latin America. The other is popularly known as President Truman's point four program, which has now been taken over by the United Nations, and the arrangements for which are being considered by the economic and social council of the United Nations which meets in Geneva next week. We have participated in the preliminary meetings of the committee which had been discussing this matter, and we shall participate in the discussion at Geneva next week. Under the United Nations scheme for technical assistance, which my hon. friend mentioned a short time ago, we are asking parliament to contribute the sum of $850,000 in the supplementary estimates that are before us. That scheme, if it is not handled in the right way, may overlap with the program of the commonwealth technical assistance arrangements which have been described this morning, and to which we are asking parliament to contribute this year $400,000. When the consultative commonwealth committee meets in London in September next we will try to make sure that the contributions that were made to that scheme are dovetailed into and do not overlap anything that the United Nations may do. In other words, it now remains for consideration that everything possible should be done to prevent these two schemes from overlapping. That can be done in the consultations we are having in London in September, and it can also be done in the consultations which are opening in Geneva next week; but there is a very real danger unless provision is made to see that it does not happen.

Mr. Green: Is there not another danger as well? It is my understanding that this vote of $850,000 for the United Nations expanded program for technical assistance to underdeveloped countries will be available to countries which are satellites of Russia just as much as it will be available to any other countries. I believe that is so; yet Canada is contributing nearly twice as much to that fund as she is contributing to the commonwealth consultative committee. I do not understand why we should be contributing more to the fund from which these satellite countries can draw.

Mr. Pearson: The relationship of the United Nations fund to the assistance requirements of communist satellite countries has been in our minds. That is a matter we discussed in the committee on external affairs. I can assure the hon. member that other governments are just as anxious as we shall be to make sure that this particular United Nations scheme is not used for the benefit of countries which will not participate in the United Nations and accept the obligations of participation in this scheme.

Mr. Green: How can that be prevented?

Mr. Pearson: It can be prevented by arrangements which will be worked out in Geneva next week at the meeting of the economic and social council. We will do our best to see to it that those arrangements are satisfactory. The reason we are contributing more to the United Nations scheme is that it is being conducted in a much bigger way and covers a much larger area than the commonwealth scheme.

Mr. Bruneau: Mr. Chairman, our Secretary of State for External Affairs should be congratulated upon the clear and brilliant exposé of the situation in the world today, and the bearing of these fast moving events upon Canada, that he delivered in this house some time ago. The study just given to us on the situation in Asia by the Minister of Fisheries no less commends itself to our admiration.

I am grateful also for this trip we have been able to enjoy around the world. However, a study of the world situation today looks more like a military tour of inspection because, when one goes through the countries, east and west of North and South America, the events one meets are more those of a world at war than of a world at peace.

But no matter how gloomy the situation may be, it is comforting to know that our country is represented at the United Nations council by men like our Secretary of State for External Affairs, General McNaughton and, not so long ago, our Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Our relations with our good neighbour to the south are those of bonne entente, good will and mutual understanding. We, I believe, with the United States, set today an example to the world. We, the borderline countries with an imaginary frontier, work hand in hand to our mutual benefit, the pursuit of happiness and the attainment of peace.

With our other neighbour, more to the south, our relations are no less peaceful and our treaties are those of a nation at peace. And from this land of America we have inherited the Marshall plan which has had the happy effect of stabilizing a precarious economic situation. The Atlantic charter, in which our present Prime Minister was particularly interested, has certainly kept at bay the enemy from the land of the czars, besides placing in the limelight the doctrines of true value, the four liberties of: freedom of speech; freedom from fear; freedom from want and freedom of worship.

But, not very far from our side of the globe, it seems that governments have refused to let their people hear of the advantages of freedom of liberty. Only a few years ago we got rid of Prussian imperialism, and now we already have to cope with Russian imperialism.

When we stop in the Balkans, for instance, we open a chapter which reads like our story books. There were once brave little countries of eastern Europe where life was peaceful. They asked for no other privilege than that which is not refused to free men and which is recognized by the natural code of the rights of men and fundamental liberties: that of working, living and carving for themselves a future under a free government of the people, by the people.

These small democratic countries of the Balkans wanted only to forget, as soon as possible, the awful experience of a second world war and heal the scars of ruin, death and desolation left by this last conflict. They demanded, in fact, a very legitimate right, that of living in harmony, peace and everyday work.

But, another powerful country had much different ideas. The Russian bear, stunned by the clash of victory, and eager to implement its scheme of world domination, undertook the underhand, systematic and ruthless conquest of its neighbour.

And one day those free countries found out that they no longer possessed their right to govern themselves. The conqueror was already there. One by one the citadels have crumbled. The new occupant had already given the people of those countries a taste of its fifth column; and espionage is now a byword. Suspicion and vicious accusations are already in high fashion and there are always quislings and opportunists ready to serve for a price and give the death blow.

Under the pretence of democratic liberty, the soviets have overthrown governments, and those who have dared to oppose themselves to the New Order were given a one-way ticket to Siberia.

One by one, countries have been caught in the net of bolshevism: Yugoslavia, Hungary with its mock trial of Cardinal Mindszenty, Bulgaria, Roumania and more recently Czechoslovakia with its so-called suicide of Jan Masaryk, followed shortly after by the decease of Edouard Benes. They were promised the New Order and have inherited the five-year plan; they were promised social liberty and are now the slaves of the fourteen mighty of Moscow. They have now to get in step to the tune of the Russian knout. And a stone's throw from there, Greece is still struggling under guerrilla warfare.

More to the southeast, where the Russians have pulled down another heavy iron curtain, we arrive at the great wall of China. In this country where it seems that everything is eternal, where time is important only through the succession of centuries, war has been going on now for over fifteen years and there are no signs yet of a coming total lasting peace.

With the invasion of Manchuria by the Japanese, it was the beginning of a long and costly war which lasted during the six years of our last world conflict. The humiliating subjugation of Manchuria was prolonged by the occupation of that northern province by the Russian forces. The aggressor has been substituted by another one and Chiang Kai-shek had to leave the country in the hands of a communist government.

This vast country the human capital of which could constitute a tremendous factor of progress, development and achievement, is still paralysed by the effects of a useless war which has destroyed its domestic economic basis. This oriental country which has now been fighting for a long time for its national independence, and its commercial enfranchisement, certainly deserves peace, or at least a truce long enough to enable her to place her production on a sound footing and take her place among the great nations of the world. This peace towards which China aspires and which she certainly deserves after so many years of heroic struggle, in order to ascertain her survival and give her people a normal life which a whole generation of her children have not yet known, is still a thing to come.

Fortunately for that country and the others under the Russian heel, they have hopes for a brighter future, and to keep that spark alive they have but to look toward the still free countries of the world today. There is a government in Lake Success which is now doing its utmost to find a true solution, the proper formula to right this great wrong.

Even though we might hear from different corners of the globe of events that are not so promising, there is still great hope when we think that governments of the people, governments like our own, have at the United Nations council delegates who endeavour and do their utmost to see that right prevails and it is the duty of every one of us here to see that the work of those who at that world government speak in our name is not done in vain. We have the grave responsibility, because of the people we in turn represent in this house, to study closely reports like the one given now and then by our Secretary of State for External Affairs in order to realize that there are somewhere in the world today people like us who would like to have a government of their own.

Let us keep high the torch of liberty so that it may shine very bright and keep the hope of those who can no longer hold it. To that end also and with the recent developments in South Korea let us never forget that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

Mr. Low: Mr. Chairman, when the minister made his statement on Korea yesterday I felt that I should join the other party representatives in a brief comment, but the debate was clearly out of order and for that reason I reserved what I wanted to say for this occasion. I think all of us must feel that the present world situation is fraught with grave dangers. At the same time it is perfectly clear that the North Korea aggressive act constitutes a threat to world peace and security. The prompt and salutary action by both the United Nations and the United States to meet this breach of international law has committed them both irrevocably. That means, of course, that there can be no turning back by either one without consequences that can be described by no other term than disastrous.

It seems to me that Canada must now fully realize her true position. Canada is a member of the United Nations. We have pledged ourselves to uphold the charter in every respect. By becoming a member of the United Nations we undertook most solemn obligations. We pledged ourselves along with other member nations to take whatever collective action was considered necessary to meet any threat to the peace and security of the world or to any part. For that reason Canada is committed just as irrevocably as is the United States. I take it too that there is for us also no turning back.

I would remind the committee that when the United Nations charter was before parliament in 1945 for ratification I heard no criticism of it, I heard no opposition to it, I heard no warnings about it from any section of the house except my own. At that time I objected strenuously to certain features of the charter, but I heard from maritime members, from Quebec members, from Ontario representatives, in fact from the representatives of all the other provinces nothing but the most enthusiastic support, not only for the charter but for Canada's full participation in the United Nations and in all its agencies.

I say that only to remind the committee that when Canada did decide to become a member nation there was no evidence of fear or of hesitancy or of criticism except from my own group. The vast majority of the members of the house in 1945 did favour Canada's membership in the United Nations. At that time I heard no member suggest that we renege on the responsibilities that go along with membership should trouble arise demanding collective action by the United Nations countries, nor did I hear a single reservation voiced by any member of the house outside of those in my own group, and perhaps the former member for Broadview, Mr. Church.

The United Nations is a reality and it has called for swift, collective action to halt events that may develop into very serious proportions. Already the United States has moved in in response to that call. She is one of the very few countries in position to set forces in quick motion to assist the government of the Republic of South Korea. But I remind hon. members of this committee that the United States is not the only country that is morally and legally bound to take action whenever action is required to restore South Korea to her democratic government. Canada, along with the other nations, is morally and legally bound. We have to realize that. Let us not forget that Canada has never defaulted on her obligations. Her word down through the decades has been her bond, and it must always remain so. If we have been careless in giving our word, let us nevertheless fulfil any obligation arising out of our pledge, however distasteful it may appear to be to some of our people. As soon as ever we can see clearly how we can best help to restore peace and security I think that our unmistakable duty is to stand shoulder to shoulder with every member nation of the United Nations and do what we can.

There is a time of testing before us, perhaps the most difficult time of testing that the United Nations has ever faced. If the forces of North Korea effect a complete conquest of the Republic of South Korea the prestige of the United Nations and the United States will suffer irreparable harm. So I say we must not by anything that we leave undone contribute to that disaster. It would have consequences that none of us can now see.

The party that I represent and for whom I am now speaking will back the minister and the government in anything that they undertake to do to discharge Canada's responsibilities to the full in an effort to contain the trouble within Korea and to restore that republic to its former territory.

Just a word about the estimates. I have been a member of the external affairs committee and have enjoyed the experience very much. I have read the report which was presented to parliament a day or two ago. I find myself in concurrence with that report. I believe that this year the estimates of the Department of External Affairs have received the most careful consideration of any year since I have been in the House of Commons. I believe that we dug more deeply into all the estimates. We did gather together a tremendous amount of information as a result of our investigations.

I want to thank the officials of the Department of External Affairs who appeared before the committee to give us valuable help. There was nothing that we asked for that they did not attempt to give us in the fullest possible measure. The minister also appeared before the committee and gave valuable assistance. Without reservation I submit that the method of studying estimates before a committee such as the committee on external affairs is a method that should be extended to other departments. I think that suggestion ought to be given careful consideration by the government. My experience has been that in that committee we have been able to dig far deeper than we have in committee of supply because we have been able to have before us informed public officials to give evidence and to answer questions. Surely the experience we have had with this department ought to be one of the best arguments for extending the practice to some others. Then we would not have this last minute rush every year, this sweeping, almost like the North Korean forces, through the estimates of various departments. Under such circumstances we certainly can neither get the full benefit of our study nor give the full benefit to the government.

There is one suggestion I should like to make. On some occasion when the minister finds it convenient, I wish he would give me a much fuller answer to the question I asked him some time ago when he introduced his estimates. I asked at that time if he would give us clearly and in detail exactly what it is he wants to drive towards, what it is he wants the people of Canada to do, about this whole matter of sovereignty. I was not satisfied with his answer, and I do not think he expected that I would consider it a full answer. I should like him to tell us in detail at some time exactly what he means when he says that Canada, in common with other nations, must be prepared to surrender her sovereignty. With that I shall rest.

Mr. Graydon: There are two matters that I asked the minister and the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance to deal with. In order that we may continue the sequence of the discussion, perhaps we might now have the answers to the questions I asked the parliamentary assistant, and then a statement by the minister on the Korean situation.

Mr. Sinclair: Mr. Chairman, it is a very unusual thing for me to be requested by the opposition to speak.

Mr. Low: We like to hear you.

Mr. Sinclair: Earlier this session, in both the external affairs committee and the public accounts committee, the request was made that I should appear as a witness to give an account of the settlements reached this spring on what are known as the military relief claims between Canada and European countries. It was not possible to do so at that time because all the agreements which had been negotiated had not been formally signed. Opposition members were good enough to allow a delay until this time. Yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs tabled the last of the agreements which have been signed.

I had prepared a pretty long account of the matter for the committee, but, thanks to the courtesy of the hon. member for Peel, he has asked that I summarize it and deal merely with the actual payments made by these countries and the reasons for the deductions. I cannot do so, however, without a short preface to show why we did not receive payment in full for each of these accounts. These military relief claims arose out of the necessity toward the end of the war of trying to re-establish immediately liberated and conquered countries. It is quite true that there was a plan under UNRRA to do that after the war, but we could not wait until then. Therefore the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada got together and agreed that they would pour in supplies to the civilian populations to help them back on their feet as quickly as possible.

It was a very difficult thing to do. There was great urgency, because the war was still raging. We had to use military transports to get the supplies to the various countries, and you will appreciate that making deliveries of supplies through the army during the course of a war is not like making deliveries of goods through civilian channels in peacetime. There is not the same certainty of delivery. More than that, in many of these countries there was no real government. There were provisional governments and governments in exile. In two countries there were governments which had secured power through leading the fight in the underground during the war. Therefore it was not possible to carry out the usual formal arrangements which would be normally made by countries negotiating such supplies.

[Mr. Graydon.]

The understanding of the United States, Great Britain and Canada was that these countries who received the goods would at some time in the future, when and if they were able, make repayment. Canada's share all told in this program was five per cent of the entire sum spent, our actual claim for goods we supplied amounting in all to $75,033,496.50. First of all we had a rebate on that because once UNRRA took over the work it was on a different footing. We still had goods in flow to Europe for military relief at that time; $4,500,000 worth of supplies were bought from us by UNRRA, and $3,145,000 of truck and motive equipment were also purchased, leaving our net claim against these nine European countries at $67,388,496.50. All these figures are United States dollars. They were used as the standard.

As I pointed out, there were no formal contracts. The governments were mostly provisional, and in some countries no real government; and because of that there was another difficulty, that of accounting for the goods received. One or two countries which had governments in exile that moved in with the army were able to keep accurate accounts of the goods they received. Other countries which were still in a state of turmoil simply took the goods as we delivered them. There was also the matter of what you might call the natural shrinkage of goods which pass through the hands of an army still fighting a war. I think any of you who were soldiers in the last war will understand that if you had been entrusted with supplies to deliver to civilian governments, and as an army unit still fighting you were short of supplies, there might be a certain deterioration in the quantity or quality of the goods before they reached the civilian governments.

I mention all these facts to indicate to members some reasons why payment was not made in full. Two years ago the United States wiped out almost all their claims, and their claims were twelve times as large as ours. The British a year ago decided to make settlement, but in almost every one of the countries the British had other claims and obligations, and therefore most of their claims were settled jointly. We had another claim in only one of the countries, the Netherlands. We waited until the last, for two reasons. First of all, it was only proper that the big debtors should have the first opportunity. Second, we thought that the longer we waited the better shape these countries would be in to pay. I think that decision turned out to be a wise one.

The Netherlands came forward two or three years ago because they had another problem, that of the Dutch guilders which our troops brought home. Because they wanted that matter settled we settled the questions of military relief and the Dutch guilders at the same time. Our claim against the Dutch was for $14,099,724, and we settled in the end for $5,733,966. Of course the Dutch put forward good reasons for compassionate treatment. They said they were not in a position to pay in full, that they had suffered very great war damage, which is quite true. These payments are in dollars spread over ten years. The arrangement with the Dutch was made two years ago.

This spring the government thought the time had come to try to make collection of the other accounts, and I was chosen to go over there. I was accompanied by a very bright young counsellor of the Department of Finance, Mr. Clarence Read. First of all we went to Great Britain and spent a week with the British treasury officials. Since they had made their settlements the year before we thought their experience would be of assistance to us, and they were extremely helpful in telling us of the problems that we would encounter.

We then went to Belgium, taking that country first for the very good reason that, of all countries in Europe, Belgium has made the best recovery, and therefore we thought they would be in the best position to pay in full. The Belgians have made that recovery because they have worked hard and because they had extremely capable financial management under Camille Gutt at the end of the war. They have been able to get pretty well back to pre-war standards. We asked them for payment in full. Belgium, however, was one of the countries which because of an organized government, had even better accounts of the goods they had received than we three countries had of the goods we sent. When the British went over there the year before, the Belgians had shown various items where the quality expected had not been delivered, or the quantity had not been delivered. Because of that the British had given them a concession of nine per cent, an adjustment actually because of the deficiencies in deliveries made. The Belgians asked actually for more than that, but we said we had to do at least as well as the British. In the end the Belgians agreed to pay this adjusted amount in full. Our original claim was, in round figures, $7,822,000. The payment made was $7,106,000, which was paid three or four weeks ago in American dollars here in Ottawa.

From Belgium we went to Luxembourg where we had a claim for $439,000. Luxembourg put up the same arguments as the Belgians so far as the quality and quantity of the goods was concerned. They also put forward an argument which they had successfully raised with the British, that in Luxembourg there was an excellent form of price control. They said this meant that we paid twenty-five per cent less for the goods we bought from them than we paid for the goods bought in Belgium. For this reason Luxembourg thought it should have a better deal than the Belgians. We agreed to settle on the British adjustment, and they paid an amount of $365,000 in cash in one payment here in Canada.

The next country to which we went was France. While the French were very anxious to make a final settlement, the British had asked us not to do so. In view of the great help the British had been to us in advising us on our accounts, we were disposed to listen to them. The British did not settle with the French two years ago because they felt that the sterling position of France was growing stronger and it was likely a better settlement would be made if it were delayed. We did, however, achieve an interim payment of $4 million, payable in French francs. This was the first so-called blocked payment, as the payments of the Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg were in American dollars. We have $4 million to our account in France to be used for any Canadian government operation, such as the purchase of properties or the local operations of our embassy, the purchase of equipment for our French embassy, or for other government operations outside of France. I feel that when we do come to make a final settlement with France we will make a satisfactory one.

Perhaps I should finish the northern countries first, because the Mediterranean countries are in a different position. We went to Denmark, where we had an account of $565,000. Denmark was slightly different from all the other countries that owed us money. They were the one who took the initiative in trying to bring about a settlement. Two years ago they wrote and said they had this account on their books and they would like to settle it. At that time we were not prepared to settle with all countries, and so took no action on their request. Again the Danes took the initiative and deposited one million kroner to our account in the bank in Copenhagen. The Danes were also instrumental in finding a very good building for our embassy at a reasonable price so that we would have some use for the money. Still later the Danes put another million kroner to our account out of their next budget and asked us to accept it.

When we finally went to Denmark they asked for a somewhat similar adjustment to that arranged with the Belgians, because of the quality of the goods and the deliveries, totalling in all 13½ per cent. The only other thing they asked us was that the amount paid before devaluation should be accepted at pre-devaluation rates. That was a reasonable request, and we accepted it. Then Denmark paid the balance of $72,000 at once. In all they paid $493,000 out of our original claim of $565,000.

We then went to Norway, and perhaps of all the north European countries Norway has been the hardest hit by the war. They were of course occupied, fought very bravely against the Germans, and suffered great losses. The one dollar-earning asset which they have, their merchant fleet, was in our hands during the war and was of great help in winning the war, but they lost over half of it. They asked for special consideration, and we had our longest negotiations with the Norwegians. In the end they made an offer that they would pay either 8 million kroner, which amounts to a little over a million dollars, or they would pay $850,000 in United States dollars in one payment. It was beyond our powers to accept that arrangement; so it was referred back to the cabinet. It would take us a long time to use a million dollars in kroner in Norway, so it was decided to accept the offer of $850,000 in United States funds. Norway settled for roughly half of the original debt, but it was a good settlement because both the United States and Great Britain wiped out their debt.

I now turn to the Mediterranean countries. Three years ago, owing to political and economic troubles in both Italy and Greece, the United States and British governments agreed to wipe out their debts completely. The Canadian government was asked to do likewise, but being a small country we did not feel we could go quite that far. We did say we would accept substantial reductions, and that we would accept nominal payment some time in the future. Our debt with Italy is about $28,400,000. I went to Rome with Mr. Read. The Italians and ourselves have a little different idea as to the meaning of "nominal", but in the end they made a provisional agreement to pay us $1,300,000, to be used only for the purchase of other property or scholarships for Canadians in Italy. That is the plan adopted by the United States for the settlement of debts in many of these countries. There has been no payment of this money as yet because the Italians felt they ought to submit this proposal to parliament which does not meet until this fall.

From there we went to Greece, and we naturally could not expect more from the Greeks who were our allies during the war than we got from the Italians. Our debt with Greece was actually $612,000. This country is in a difficult economic situation because of ten years of war, five years fighting the Germans and Italians and almost five years of fighting the communist bandits along their northern frontiers. One thing we have in Greece is a tremendous fund of gratitude.

Mr. Fleming: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sinclair: I am very glad to hear the member for Eglinton say "hear, hear" because he was there two years ago as a member of a parliamentary delegation. One thing which struck me when these other countries were complaining about the quality and quantity of the goods was that I did not think there would have been any complaint about the quality or quantity in 1945. In Greece, wherever we went and whatever the political complexion we met this amazing feeling of gratitude for what Canada has done for the Greek people. They especially remember that during the German occupation we shipped wheat and flour through the International Red Cross which kept thousands from dying of starvation. Since the war the Canadian people, especially those of Greek origin, have given much aid for the Greek children as well as the building of hospitals for the children. Gratitude was expressed for that work. If we get no other payment out of Greece than that gratitude, I think Canada will have been well repaid.

The most interesting country we visited was Yugoslavia. At one time there did not seem to be much point in going there to collect debts. In any event we went there, and we were very pleased when Yugoslavia paid two-thirds of its debt. Out of a claim of $226,000 they paid us $150,000 in four instalments in local currency. They pleaded inability to pay, because of the great war damage and loss of life in the war, and their present difficult economic position. However that spirit of independence which has always motivated this brave people made them feel that they would like to make some payment.

One country we did not visit was Albania which owes us about $64,000. We do not have diplomatic relations with Albania, so we are just marking time until the day arrives when diplomatic relations can be resumed, and an attempt can be made to secure some return.

From all the northern countries except France, therefore, we have recovered 59 per cent of our original claims. In three of those countries, Belgium, Luxembourg and Denmark, we considered we got payment in full.

It is the sort of settlement a business concern would get when you consider goods which went astray, were damaged or were of poor quality on arrival. In the case of the Netherlands and Norway concessions were made because of the war damage suffered, and the financial position of these countries today. One thing which might be surprising is that not one of those countries ever raised the point that there was no legal obligation to pay. There really was none. No government entered into any agreement with Canada, Britain or the United States to say that they would pay but all these countries acknowledged the obligation without question.

In conclusion there are one or two things I should like to say about this matter. First of all, because it was raised in the external affairs committee, there is this matter of blocked currency. When Mr. Read and I were sent abroad our instructions were to simply get all we could from those countries which could afford to pay, and to get as much of it in American dollars as possible, and if we could not get it in American dollars to get it in a free currency. If it could not be obtained in a free currency, then we were to get it in whatever form we could. We did get a settlement in United States dollars from three countries. This phrase "blocked currency" is one that is loosely used. What it means of course is that some of the countries simply have not got American dollars and they say: We will pay you in our local currency which you can use, subject to some restrictions. In the case of the interim payment of France there was almost no restriction on it, as long as it was for Canadian government purposes. The same was true in the case of Yugoslavia. In the case of Italy, because of their extremely difficult exchange position, they said: "We will pay you this amount subject to the approval of our parliament but you may only use it for the purchase of property or to build up cultural relations between our countries by sending Canadian scholars here under a scholarship foundation." When such blocked currency is used—for example, the $150,000 we had in Yugoslavia—that is what happens. Our embassy in Yugoslavia costs us about $20,000 a year in local currency. That is for the rent of the building and the provision of local staff and things like that. Before this settlement we provided this in Canadian dollars, exchanged for dinars. Now we have the dinars there, so as far as Canada is concerned that money there in Yugoslavia is just as good as dollars for a period of seven years. Our accounts of these moneys are kept in a special way, however, because of the fluctuating value of the currencies. These amounts in blocked currencies are not kept in our accounts as assets at the present rate of exchanges. They are kept as special assets, and on the liability side there is a contra item classifying them as a deferred asset. When, for example, the Department of External Affairs or the Department of Trade and Commerce has use for those funds, then the money is subject to the same control exactly by the comptroller-general as though it was dollars in the Canadian bank and charged to that department under the proper appropriation at the existing rate of exchange.

That leads to the last point, which has nothing to do with finance but which was raised in the external affairs committee. It is the matter of the acquisition of properties in these countries using blocked currency. In countries where there is likely to be wide fluctuation in the value of these currencies, and it is more likely to go down than up, I noticed that foreign business firms who have a surplus of local currency did one thing. They put that surplus, wherever they can, into real estate which is the one sure hedge against that type of inflation. I noticed also that ordinary citizens in some of these countries do not buy government bonds for fear of inflation. If they are farmers, they try to get gold and put it under their mattresses. If they are businessmen, they try to get their surplus cash into real estate. Therefore in those cases where we have invested some of our blocked currencies in real estate I think we have fairly well protected the interests of the Canadian people against inflation in the years ahead and depreciated our payments in these currencies.

Then there is one last thing that I should like to say about the Canadian diplomatic representation abroad. I am one of those who have never taken part in an external affairs debate because, like many another Canadian, I thought that was best left to the people who were skilled in it; although, after all, I was educated in Europe. I went over there doubting in my own mind whether Canada should have as many embassies abroad as we have now, or whether we should not have stayed like Switzerland with just the odd consul here and there. My eight weeks over there dealing with our embassies in those nine countries has certainly changed my mind on that point. First of all, there is the fact that we have a very fine type in our external affairs department. There is no reason why they should not be because I think they are pretty well the cream of our Canadian universities in the political and economic divisions. The second thing that we found, and which both of us appreciated, was their great knowledge of local conditions; because, in dealing with these countries which are asking for special concessions by reason of their financial or trade positions, the material amassed by the staff at our embassies there was of tremendous help to us.

But there is another feature which I think should be forcibly drawn to parliament's attention with regard to the value today of our representation abroad. Here in Canada we have long regarded ourselves as being useful as a link between the British commonwealth and America; we have felt that because we were halfway between we could interpret the British to the Americans and the Americans to the British; and we have been very successful in that. I think we have a bigger job today, especially in Europe. As far as the Americans are concerned in Europe, there should be the greatest gratitude to them because Europe is recovering, and is doing so mainly because of the incredible generosity of the American people through the Marshall aid plan. They have poured their money in there. But money is not enough. After pouring in these billions of money, in addition they have furnished American know-how to build up their European productive capacity. But the very presence of these Americans in strange lands has been an easy opportunity for extreme nationalists and for communists to rant about American imperialism. It is fairly natural also, I suppose, especially in a backward country, to have resentment of these people from abroad coming over there and showing you how your country should be run. The same is true to a lesser degree as far as the British are concerned in some of these countries, because today the British are the key to the entire sterling bloc, and it is easy to blame a country's exchange problems on British management of sterling.

Now we are over there too and there is no resentment against us in any country. The people of Europe who twenty years ago knew Canada only as a land of Indians, Eskimos and mounties, after what we did in the last war today recognize Canada as a leader of the small nations and realize that Canada is a country which asks nothing out of this last war except peace. Therefore I think our embassies abroad have a great opportunity to serve as a link between the English speaking peoples and Europe. We know the British. We know the Americans and we are held in high regard by those European countries. We can serve there as an interpreter to these people of the American and British aims and as a liaison between the European people and Britain and America, all because of our unique position, liked and trusted by both sides.

[Mr. Sinclair.]

We are making a real investment in international understanding. It is true we are spending about $7 million a year on our service abroad. That is a service that I think is an investment in international understanding. We are paying over $400 million this year for defence just in case war should come. If there can be better understanding of the aims and aspirations of the commonwealth of nations and of America amongst the other nations of the world, then I think there is little likelihood of war, for the real root of war is ignorance and fear.

Another thing I should like to mention is the warm reception we received everywhere because we were Canadians representing the Canadian government. I felt proud of that fact. We were received by the political leaders of the countries we were in. I think perhaps the highlight was the evening we spent with the king and queen of Greece, and the fact that we were received by Marshal Tito in his home. Again that is evidence of the high regard in which our country is held on the continent of Europe.

There is one other thing I should like to say. I am glad the Prime Minister is in the chamber. I spoke about Marshall aid and the tremendous job that Marshall aid has done in European recovery. Up to two or three years ago there were a great many congressmen who could not see much point in pouring all this money into Europe. In the next year or two a considerable number of those congressmen and senators had the opportunity to go over to Europe and see the tremendous job of European recovery being done through that plan. I am convinced, and some American ambassadors abroad are also of that opinion, that one of the reasons the American congress has continued Marshall aid in the fashion they have and with the willingness they have is that sufficient of the legislators were over there and were able to see and appreciate the job being done. I think it is a great pity that more Canadian M.P.'s have not that opportunity, not to go on a Cook's tour but to go as part of the various delegations we have sent at various times to Europe so that we too can learn at first hand of the problems of Europe and the progress being made and can come back and tell the Canadian people about that program.

Mr. Fleming: I should like to say just a brief word following the statement made by the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance. The first remark is of a personal nature. I should like to congratulate the hon. gentleman on his statement. I think it is the best statement that it has been my privilege to hear him make in this chamber.

In the second place, the nature of the report which he has made is eminently satisfactory, so far as my personal view is concerned. I noted that his instructions were in general to get as much money in those settlements as he could. I should like to have seen that instruction qualified by thoughts of giving as generous treatment as possible to those western European nations, many of whom have made great sacrifices and are in need of help today in finding their way back along the path of reconstruction.

I was particularly interested in what the hon. gentleman said in regard to the settlements with Italy and Greece. He mentioned that the British government had in effect agreed not to ask repayment by these two countries, and had expressed the hope that Canada might see fit to do the same. I hope that the government will try to be as generous as possible in its treatment of the debts owed to Canada by these two countries. Italy is in an impoverished condition and we want her good will. Italy needs a lot of help. She has had serious tasks in confronting the forces of disorder within her own borders; and in this way by exercising some generosity that is not going to hurt Canada very much it seems to me that we can contribute toward bolstering Italy's position, helping her back to a place among the democratic and freedom-loving nations of the world.

In regard to Greece, sir, it seems to me that the opportunity that is given to Canada of forgoing in its entirety a relatively small debt is an opportunity which we should not allow to pass. It is a matter of only $600,000. The Greeks are one of the greatest peoples in all the world, and they have fought a long and courageous battle against heavy odds. Far too many people think of the modern Greeks as being somewhat different in type and calibre from the ancient Greeks. They look back to the days of ancient Greece, and they think of the epic story of the Greece of yore holding closed the gateway to Europe and the Mediterranean against the hordes of barbarians at Salamis, Marathon and Thermopylae. The people of the western world need to know that the Greeks of this day and generation have rendered just as great a service to mankind as their ancient forebears in again holding fast the gateway to the western world and to the Mediterranean against barbarians from the east and from the north.

Here is a small debt owed to us by a people to whom we, along with all the nations of the western world, owe so much today. I think we should not only cheerfully but enthusiastically embrace the opportunity of saying to Greece: "Well done; it is little enough that we are doing now in forgoing this debt to show our appreciation to you for your courage and magnificent sacrifice by which all of the freedom-loving nations of the world have gained."

Mr. Sinclair: I want to thank the hon. member for Eglinton very much for his remarks. I spoke a little loosely when I said our aim was to get as much as we could. That was certainly true of those countries which could afford to pay, but it was never thought by the government at all that anything should be asked for from Greece. I might point out this one thing, however, that this is not all that Canada has done for these countries. Canada has done a great deal through mutual aid, through war gifts and through commercial credits and loans since the war. These are all formal contracts and formal obligations or straight gifts. It seemed fairly important that this one comparatively small over-all debt which was made on that understanding, at a time when it was not possible to conclude a formal agreement that it would be repaid if it could be repaid, should be honoured. And I think most of the countries we dealt with felt that way too.

I was especially glad to hear the hon. member speak of Greece as he did because my feeling, after having left Greece, was what a pity it is that all the people of Canada cannot feel this tremendous warmth and gratitude which these poor but brave people have for this country.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Fleming: I understood the minister was going to make a statement on Korea in answer to the hon. member for Peel.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, that was the third question that the hon. member for Peel brought up. I think the first two have been satisfactorily dealt with. He asked me if I would say anything about the developments in Korea since I last reported to the house, which after all was only yesterday. There is very little I can say about developments themselves. We are continuing of course to get news, but most of the news we get on the operations in Korea appears in one form or another in the press. From the information which is at our disposal it seems to be pretty clear that the initial advantage that so often attaches to aggression is being maintained by the North Korean communist forces.

In regard to the security council resolution which I mentioned yesterday, and which I stated we supported, and there was no indication in the house on any side of lack of support for that resolution, we immediately after yesterday's statement got in touch through our representatives in the United Nations with other members of the United Nations to exchange views as to how best we could implement this resolution. We know of course that the most important member of the United Nations in this particular matter is the United States. It is the country best able to intervene in this matter as an agent of the United Nations and it has already, as I said yesterday, acted effectively. Therefore we have been discussing not only at Lake Success but in Washington with United States authorities what action Canada, as another member of United Nations, might appropriately take to help the government of South Korea maintain itself in the face of this aggression. Also our High Commissioner in London is meeting with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and with representatives of other commonwealth governments to see what can be done, to exchange views with these governments on what they are preparing to do. Of course, as we know, some of these governments have already made statements. I think the committee will also be interested to learn of an announcement that the government of India, the representative of which was not in a position yesterday to state his government's position on the security council resolution, has now indicated its full support of that resolution. Our High Commissioner in Pakistan has also cabled us that the government of that eastern dominion of the commonwealth, through its foreign secretary, has told him that they support strongly the security council's resolution.

The secretariat of the United Nations, through one of its senior officials, was in touch with me yesterday to inquire whether we could do something which they consider of some immediate importance, and that is, to supply one or two military observers to join the United Nations commission in Korea which, as members of the committee know, has been functioning there although it recently had to leave South Korea temporarily, but I understand it is going back. The work of that commission is of great importance, especially that aspect of it which deals with observation and report to Lake Success on what is going on. They have a lack of trained observers for that purpose, and they asked us if we could help fill the gap. I at once got in touch with my colleague, the Minister of National Defence, and we have agreed that we would make two military observers available at once for that particular duty. I hope they will be on their way soon.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that is all I can say on the immediate situation at this time. If any points should arise in the course of our discussion which I can deal with later I shall be glad to do so.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has stated that there has been no indication from any part of the house of any lack of support for the position taken by the security council and steps taken by this government consistent with that. I feel sure that not only is no objection taken to the course that has been followed, but there is very warm support for every step that can be taken to align ourselves with those who are seeking in this way to preserve peace.

The minister pointed out that the government had immediately taken steps to ascertain what action might appropriately be taken by Canada under the terms of the resolution adopted by the security council of the United Nations. That in itself is the key to the future action the government may be called upon to take. As he has already pointed out, it has been suggested that military observers would be welcomed, and that they could accompany the United Nations commission in Korea. Through those observers the Canadian government will be kept in touch with all information which the United Nations commission obtains as to the actual conditions on the spot. Undoubtedly through that advice the government will be able to formulate its plans with the advantage of direct knowledge from Canadian observers as to what the situation is.

One of the extremely gratifying features of the situation is the promptness with which the nations that have the responsibility in this case have acted. Without reservation they have demonstrated that they believe the United Nations can be an effective mechanism for the preservation of peace. To that extent I should think these past few days have offered more encouragement than we have had for a very long time. There can no longer be any doubt as to the willingness of member nations of the United Nations, who believe in our free way of life, to associate themselves in effective steps to preserve that freedom. Very encouraging to all Canadians will be the information the Secretary of State for External Affairs has given us this afternoon to the effect that India has expressed its full support of the resolution passed by the security council. Geographically, India is closer to the scene than any of the other nations that have been called upon to make these decisions. That great nation embraces a tremendous population, and the influence of its decision is bound to be very great. So also is the decision of Pakistan, which aligns with us the two largest Asiatic members of the commonwealth.

The situation however is one that is bound to change rapidly from day to day. The United States, having its armed forces in Japan, was the one nation in a position to take quick and effective action consistent with the expressed wishes of the free nations with which the United States is so closely associated on this occasion.

Having taken the steps that have been taken, there can be no doubt that the prestige of the United States, of Great Britain and of all the nations which have indicated their support of the resolution adopted by the security council, is committed in a very substantial measure to the outcome of events in South Korea. All the steps which have been taken are related to the events taking place in one particular part of the world. The outcome of those events will have a significance for each of us far beyond any similar events which have occurred since 1945.

For that very reason it will be difficult for the government of Canada or for any other government to anticipate, with too great a degree of certainty, what the situation may be even a few days from now—certainly even a week from now.

I do wish to indicate my own support and the support of the party to which I belong for all effective steps which may be taken by the government of Canada in association with other governments of the United Nations to demonstrate that all free nations are willing to join together in a collective effort to preserve peace in this way.

As members of parliament each of us is concerned with the form the assistance given by Canada may take. I would not seek to obtain from the government any fixed commitment at this time, in the absence of more definite information as to the course of events. But I would certainly ask—and I feel sure I need not do more than make the suggestion—that the government do give an undertaking to hon. members that, if events should call for action which places the responsibility upon parliament for any decision, parliament will immediately be reconvened.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, following the remarks made yesterday by the Secretary of State for External Affairs I made a very brief statement. However as I look it over in Hansard I realize that within the space of a sentence or two I did express the views which we in this group hold with respect to the present situation. The emphasis I urged yesterday—and I repeat it today—is our complete support of the principle of collective security, and our readiness to carry our support of that principle into all it may involve.

I am sure that we in this group are not alone in the concern we felt earlier this week, not only because of the seriousness of the situation in Korea, but because of the danger there was that a conflict might develop simply between one great power on the one hand and another great power on the other. Even though we were saying nothing about it, because of the seriousness of the situation, we felt it was extremely important that whatever action was taken should be taken as collective action by a decision of the United Nations, and not as action by only one power against another. Accordingly we were gratified to note the speed with which the security council met and dealt with this question, and passed in addition to its resolution of Sunday its resolution of Tuesday night, which I now understand has the affirmative support of eight members of the security council.

May I say again that we regard the keeping in repair of the principle and machinery of collective security as the most important task facing us at this time of crisis. If there were a conflict between just two powers, no matter how that conflict came out, it would not guarantee the future peace of the world. Even collective security cannot guarantee peace absolutely, but it has an infinitely better chance than can be achieved by the victory of one power over another.

I emphasize the need that this whole incident has indicated, namely, the need of strengthening the United Nations and moving further in the direction of what was sought in article 43 of the charter. Yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs pointed out that agreements have not been concluded under article 43, so another kind of action has had to be taken, as is indicated in the resolution passed on Tuesday.

This development reminds me of the discussions that used to take place four or five years ago when the United Nations was first being set up as to what would be the situation in the security council, bearing in mind the veto, if there was an act of aggression in which one of the great powers was involved. The question was whether the security council would be prevented from acting. It was a serious discussion although an academic one. I notice now that the free world readily accepts the resolution of Tuesday night which was passed by a vote of seven to one—now eight to one—as putting complete moral authority behind the collective action being taken to preserve the peace.

I suggest that even though the letter of the charter may not have been kept, at least the spirit has been kept and the reaction of the free world toward that resolution indicates that there is more strength to the United Nations, despite all the stumbling it has done in the last few years, than some people have thought to be the case. I think we should draw a lesson from this experience. It is now our task to add to the strength of the United Nations and to insist that we must reach the day when that organization will be able not only to discuss matters of international importance but will be able to enact international law and have the authority to enforce that law.

There are three basic principles which I feel should be worked into the framework of the United Nations. I indicated these during the course of a speech which I made in this house on March 26, 1945, when we were discussing the sending of a Canadian delegation to San Francisco. At that time I said:

> I feel that there are three fundamental conditions which are basic to the success of a world organization, and I trust that the San Francisco conference will see to it that these three basic conditions are met. First of all, if a world organization is to succeed, it must have authority to enact international law. In the second place, such an organization must have authority to enforce that law. In the third place, it must have the capacity to retain the authority vested in it by the consent of the governed.

We do not achieve perfection in our institutions overnight and we cannot expect to achieve it very fast in the international field. But I agree with those who have already expressed the view that with all the tragedy with which this week has been fraught there is also an element of hope in that the United Nations, despite its stumbling and the barriers it has had to get over, has been able to act and that there has been a show of collective action to preserve the peace, and a determination not to make the same mistakes that were made in the past.

I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs is right when he says that the government has the concurrence of all the groups in this house in its readiness to support the action taken by the United Nations. That is clearly our obligation, and that way alone lies hope. If we can deal with this present crisis on that basis and demonstrate the effectiveness of collective action for peace we may yet achieve much more in that direction than at times we have dared to hope.

Mr. Pouliot: Mr. Chairman, any man who reads the magazine section of the New York Times must have obtained considerable information about world affairs. The details of the armaments of the various countries are no longer secrets because they have been published and anyone can read. I can remember what appeared in the New York Times not long ago about the difficulties in Korea. The boundary of Korea on the north is a river which divides it from Manchuria. Across the river it is no longer Korea.

Then there is a division between the north and the south. There were Russian military experts in the north and United States military experts in the south. When the Russians decide to withdraw they go across the river but still are not far from Korea. If the United States have to withdraw they will be between the devil and the deep sea. They will have to go to Japan or the United States or to the South Sea islands. That is that.

The Russians have foiled the United States. Mind you, I am not saying that communism is right. At the end of the last war everybody was hysterical about the menace of Japan. Those who are familiar with external and foreign affairs, which I am not, must have read the magazine of the United Nations which contained an interview with a vice admiral of Japan who stated that the intelligence service of the United States had given the wrong information to President Roosevelt about the strength of Japan during the last war. That may have been the reason why he made so many concessions to Russia; he may have thought that Japan was much stronger than she was.

The wrong information given by the United States intelligence service misled the president, as is indicated by what has appeared in the official publication of the United Nations. It may have been because the Russians did not trust Winston Churchill that President Roosevelt had to make more concessions but I will not insist on that. I can remember the denunciation of Russia made by Winston Churchill at Fulton, Missouri, in front of President Truman. I was puzzled and amazed when I read that during the last British elections Winston Churchill was bold enough to say that he was the one who could appease Stalin. If you take his Fulton speech along with his election speeches you can readily understand why the British people could not trust Churchill any longer. He may have many great qualities, but unfortunately he is not a diplomat.

We are to discuss Korea. Why? Because of the yellow press that has magnified the incident. Russia has often had political and diplomatic successes in other parts of the world, in all of central Europe, the Balkans except in Greece, on the east and south sides of the Baltic sea. What did we do about them? Everybody regretted the inefficiency of the United Nations and the security council. It is a fact. I am merely relating facts that are known everywhere. It is not the first time that Russian intrigue has been successful. Why is it that the diplomats of the other members of the United Nations are not as bright as those of Russia? It is deplorable to see how weak their brains are. I am not commenting about the Secretary of State for External Affairs because Canada is not one of the great powers and has no seat on the security council.

I have great respect for the United States and for their president; I have great respect for Mr. Attlee and the British people; but we are not bound by decisions made by the United States. When have we ever seen a statement made by any Canadian statesman in Canada, by any one of our prime ministers except when they might be visiting Washington, reproduced in the congressional record? Never. The undertakings and achievements of the United States in the diplomatic field and our own are entirely different and should be so considered except when something is done in accordance with a treaty binding us with other nations.

In 1940 at the outset of the war my colleague from Leeds and I suggested that we should have a treaty for defence with the United States. Our only guarantee was a verbal declaration which President Roosevelt made in 1940 at Ogdensburg. Mr. King had said two weeks before that it was not the time to ask for such a treaty, that we did not need a treaty for defence with the United States. A couple of weeks afterwards he met the president for the opening of a bridge and he made a declaration which has been our shield since that time. The individual actions of the United States and those of the security council are entirely different. As one of the big nations the United States has a permanent seat on the security council. We have not. It seems to me that, since the security council is no less than the board of management or board of directors of the United Nations, it should have been the one to speak first and to make its protest first about the Korean situation. That was not done. It was done by President Truman who was dissatisfied with the turn of events and said that he would have forces ready to prevent any further invasion of South Korea.

What happened in South Korea? Thinking again of the New York Times and the information I quoted, because I had none from other sources, elections took place not long ago in South Korea where communism was banned. No candidate could run as a communist. Nevertheless they ran as independent candidates, secured one-half of the seats and the government was defeated. It was after the government that was opposed to communism in South Korea was defeated that the Russians withdrew to the other shore of the river and said to the Americans: Do likewise. We will withdraw from North Korea. Withdraw from South Korea. Take your boats, return to the United States, Japan or the South Sea islands and eat bananas.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Are you sure of your history?

Mr. Pouliot: I have no direct information from Russia. I got my information from the New York Times. That is the best I can say.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): You must be reading double talk.

Mr. Pouliot: My information is information that is available to all. I cannot say that my hon. friend is better informed than I am because I would be called on to withdraw. I will tell you what the situation is. In my humble opinion I believe that force should be met by force, and I said so a long time ago. I said that if the Russians would not listen to quiet arguments and would not join in talks for peace then we should impress them with a display of our strength. But that is not enough. What we need is correct information and intelligent comments so that we shall be thoroughly familiar with the situation.

The North Atlantic pact has served a purpose by uniting nations that were ready to honour their signatures and separating them from those that did not show the same respect for their undertakings. On the other hand, it is very dangerous to play with fire. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said yesterday that he was ready to give his support to the security council. I was anxious to know what that support would be, and for this reason. At the outset the United Nations were supposed to have military forces at their disposal to impose sanctions. They never did, except some of them through the North Atlantic pact. They did not have it because Russia would not join them. Russia would not give its assent to the establishment of a military force, and that needed unanimous approval. The security council, therefore, is without any power to impose sanctions. It is something hypothetical and theoretical. It is a meeting of nations who follow where the United States and the United Kingdom lead. Whereas the United States and Great Britain have seats on the security council, there is no reason why the first protest did not come from the security council instead of coming first from the United States, second from Great Britain, and third from the security council.

What are we going to do about it? What interest do we have in Korea? There may be a few Canadian missionaries of various denominations in that place, but how many Canadians are there in South Korea? If Canada is going to support the security council's decision regarding Korea, what form will that support take? It could not be platonic; that is impossible because it is a serious matter. Now, sir, I remember the dark days of the war when there was a small group of men raising their voice in protest against the unanimous approval of war-mongering. Who is responsible for that situation if it is not the press? It is the yellow press that plays on the credulity of the people. Always they are talking war: Malbrough s'en va-t-en guerre. I wonder how many of my colleagues realize the seriousness of the situation, not in Korea but right here in Canada.

I use my privilege as a Canadian citizen and as a member of parliament to give a warning to you, sir, to the House of Commons, to the parliament of my country, and to every man, woman and child in this country. It is very nice to beat the drums. We hear the beating of the drum at the beginning of the war and at a military funeral. The sound is made on the same instrument, but is it the same? We may think of that. As a member of the parliament of Canada I cannot do otherwise than to regret that nearly all members of parliament have their mentality shaped by the yellow press in Canada; the yellow press which exploits the credulity of the people to the limit. I will ask you, sir, without having any sympathy for Russia or for communists: If you were a Russian citizen visiting Canada and reading the papers that are published here, would you not believe that Canada was already at war with Russia? Perhaps the same thing is written in reverse in the Russian press. What is the security council doing to stop that most dangerous propaganda throughout the world, which is exciting war after war, nation after nation, and bringing everyone to the door of war?

Sir, there is another thing that we should realize. It is that the United Nations has completely failed, and two of the big powers have decided to act independently of the security council on which they sit to help it give the lead to others. With all due respect I do not think the Canadian minister of external affairs should have communicated with the security council to ask them what to do. We are supposed to receive a call for help. It was not our duty to run after it. If they need us, let them say so. If they do not need us, we shall be left alone—not alone in the sense of being abandoned, but alone in the sense of enjoying peace. Sir, the desires of all are for peace. I hope that the Canadian people will be in a position to breathe after the excitement about Korea is over. We need it because the Canadian people suffered so much during the last war. We should not get into it again on account of the stupidity of the men who are on the security council, and who have been unable to prevent a situation like the one that exists.

It is pleasurable to make trips to Lake Success and all over the world to meet people. Let us meet people. But those trips have not met with success. It is over five years since hostilities ceased, but we have not yet attained peace. I hope, sir, that the session will be prorogued soon so that the discussion about external affairs will stop, and instead of encouraging—

Mr. Cardiff: You are certainly helping it.

Mr. Pouliot: I will tell my hon. friend who has just spoken that if I gave him a chance to make up his own mind about anything, I would be satisfied to have had that opportunity. If my hon. friend wants to read the yellow press, and if he is impressed by it, let him be. I am not.

Going back to what I was saying, I hope the minister will understand that the duty of his department is not to follow the lead of jingoes like the hon. gentleman who has just spoken; blind jingoes; ignorant jingoes; stupid jingoes—

Mr. Cardiff: I will ask the hon. member to withdraw that statement, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pouliot: I withdraw entirely.

Mr. Cardiff: All right.

Mr. Pouliot: Open the way to peace, lasting peace. Mr. Trygve Lie was criticized for going to Russia. Stupid people thought that he should stay at home. They did not understand the necessity of talking things over with Russia. I am not at all favourable to communism; I abhor it. But it is important to discuss things. Why do so many people leave Canada to attend conferences if not to discuss matters with other people? When they had a general council meeting of the bar at Montreal, there was a speaker who made a statement about some matter and his language was nebulous. I asked my neighbour why there were such meetings if there was some talk that we could not understand. He said: These people think that the important thing is to meet, and so long as they meet without deciding anything, they are sure that they have fulfilled their mission.

The next time that there is a meeting, I hope that the minister will go and I hope he will again be accompanied by my good friend the Minister of Fisheries, who did such a good job. I hope that both of them will try to bring the other nations of the world to their senses so that the next war does not come as soon as it is foreseen by some newspapers but rather that the world will enjoy lasting peace.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, these days may be the gravest in the history of our nation. I believe that the Secretary of State for External Affairs should clarify the stand the government is having Canada take on this question. He has not yet made the position clear, particularly in that he has not yet said whether Canada has told the United States and the United Kingdom that she stands beside them. In my judgment, that position should be made clear to those nations, and also to the Canadian parliament and to the Canadian people. We are entitled to have that information.

The position is this. The United Nations security council has called on the members of that organization to take steps to stop this aggression. Sanctions have been imposed by the security council. As I understand, the United States did not move in South Korea until that resolution had been passed by the security council. Yesterday the minister called the action that had been taken by the United States government an "act of high courage and firm statesmanship"; and he was roundly applauded in this chamber when he made that statement. I am certain that practically every member of the House of Commons agreed that the action by the United States was one of great courage and of great statesmanship; and also that by such action our neighbours took considerable risk. They have now been joined by the United Kingdom, and those two great nations are giving leadership to the world today in this crisis.

Mr. Blackmore: They always have given leadership to the world.

Mr. Green: That is right.

Mr. Blackmore: They did not have to wait for the United Nations.

Mr. Green: I believe that Canada should be standing beside them. Yet we have not had a statement to that effect by the government. If one analyses the statement made yesterday by the minister, one finds that Canada has asked the security council to tell her what she should do. The minister knows just as well as we all do that the security council is not in a position to tell Canada what part she should play in this crisis now that there is fighting. The security council has never been able to set up an organization that could give such directions. If Canada has to wait until the security council tells her what to do or until she has been able to consult with various other nations, which incidentally have not been named by the minister, then it will probably be too late for Canada to take any effective part.

The minister yesterday pointed out the weakness in the United Nations set-up when he said, as reported at page 4251 of Hansard:

> In these circumstances, with one link missing in the chain which has been designed to hold aggression in check, it was impossible for the security council itself to take effective action to provide military assistance to the republic of Korea.

It is impossible today for the security council to tell Canada what part she should play. This parliament should remember the unique position of Canada with regard to the United Kingdom and the United States. We are in a position such as is no other nation in the world with regard to these two great powers. We have the most friendly relationships with both of them, and in times of crisis like this we should be extremely careful to play our part so that that relationship will not be weakened in any way.

The hon. member for Temiscouata says that Canada is in no danger. He asks: What interest do we have in Korea? The whole purpose of the action now being taken by the United States and by the United Kingdom is to prevent a third world war. That is the only reason they have made these moves. If there should be a third world war, Canada will be directly and seriously involved. On June 22, a week ago today, General McNaughton pointed that out when speaking in Vancouver. He said that if the third world war should come, this continent would be under attack from Russia. Here is his statement:

> It would present therefore—

Referring to the North American continent.

> —a prize objective to attack, should the possibility for this be left open, and we are no longer immune by reason of distance from other continents.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs himself said much the same thing when he reported to this parliament on February 22 on the conference at Colombo. He ended his speech with these words, and how very true they are today. Referring to Asia he said, as reported at page 137 of Hansard:

> But whatever the result, Mr. Speaker, our own country, Canada, which once may have seemed to be so remote from these matters, and which now stands on the threshold of such great developments, will be deeply and directly affected by the outcome of what is now going on in Asia.

Canada cannot avoid trouble if there should be a third world war. I have said on different occasions I believe she would be the Belgium in such a war; so that we are directly involved. The attitude taken by the government is altogether too much like the attitude taken in regard to the Berlin airlift. Here were the other nations maintaining that lift; the United States, the United Kingdom, Australia and I believe New Zealand all taking part in that lift which was essential to preserve peace, and yet the Canadian government would not make a move. Let us not be put in that position in this present crisis.

The statements of the minister so far would seem to indicate that Canada is adopting very much the same attitude that she took with regard to the airlift. The minister has said today that we are going to supply two military observers. Apparently we have agreed to supply two military observers. Well, that is not in line with the position Canada occupies in the world today. I plead with the minister and with the government that a clear-cut statement be made to this parliament, and through this parliament to the Canadian people, to the effect that Canada stands now beside the United Kingdom and the United States in this great crisis.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are just one or two questions that occurred to me, and I should like to have the minister elucidate them. It seems almost fantastic that five years after the signing of the United Nations pact we in this parliament should be discussing a matter so serious to the welfare not only of all Canadians but generally of the people of all the world. No one wants to discuss this matter in words that are not characterized by restraint and a realization of the situation that prevails. But it is passing strange that in the last hours of this session of parliament we discuss these matters with little information or no more than one can secure by listening to the radio or reading the newspapers. So far as I have been able to hear—and I have listened to the statements made by the minister—all that we have today is in effect an epitome of what has taken place in the United Nations, and the placing on Hansard of the words of the President of the United States.

Parliament is not to be kept in session, which would lead one to believe that the situation is not as serious as many feel it is. Certainly the moves of the last few days in the matter of collective security constitute a step forward, a great step forward in the history of international law. For 200 years, and particularly since the council of Vienna, the great statesmen of the various countries of the western world have looked to a day when collective security would be enforced as against aggressor nations. The dream of an international police force was placed before the council of Vienna for the first time by Castlereagh. At San Francisco the same view was expressed that we were to have an international police force, if you will, representative of the various countries within the United Nations. However, that police force has come to naught. It has never come into existence because of the fact it was realized that the U.S.S.R. would apply the veto in the event that such a proposition were advanced.

I feel the people of the country will want to know certain facts. They will want to know whether or not the interpretation of our responsibilities under the United Nations by the government consists in the belief that, whatever direction the United Nations may give as to Canada's contribution, Canada in such a case might act through its government automatically.

The people of Canada will want to know whether it is the interpretation of the government that, if the United Nations asked for material or manpower assistance, our responsibility under the United Nations charter could be discharged by the government without parliament. They will want to know whether or not parliament will have to be reassembled.

I am one of those who believe, as I endeavoured to show during the days of the last war, that an opposition has responsibilities no less than has the government. What I am about to say may seem somewhat critical of the attitude taken by some members of the opposition. I believe a mistake was made when the government ceased to have representatives of all parties in this house attending at the United Nations assembly meetings. I think that was a retrograde step. We are asked to accept, as we must as members of the opposition, responsibilities without at the same time being in possession of the information which the various representatives chosen from the government side of the house have in their possession by reason of their membership in the various agencies of the United Nations.

I think that Canada wants to have from the minister today not a general expression; she wants to know what our responsibilities are going to be within reason practically. Canada wants to know—and no Canadian today knows outside the government—what degree of responsibility is to be assumed by Canada. She was a member of the security council for a while; she is not now. The fact that she is not in no way detracts from the degree of her responsibility, as I see the situation. What Canada wants today from the minister is an assurance that in permitting the prorogation of parliament there is in that fact a tacit admission by the government that the situation, the world situation caused by the Korean crisis, is one that in the opinion of the government will be solved, that aggression will have been prevented, and that the achievement of peace will have been advanced immeasurably by the collective action of members of the United Nations.

I do not remember a more serious occasion in my few short years in parliament than the events of the last few years. Yet, as I sit here and listen to the debate, it seems as if we live in this parliament in a fantastic atmosphere of make-believe. Either Canada has responsibilities, and she has those responsibilities as a signatory to the United Nations charter, or she has not. If she has responsibilities, then surely the Canadian people have the right to know what they are. Those responsibilities cannot be measured by the sending of two military observers. That is a step. Surely Canada has a right to know whether the world situation is such, and whether her responsibilities are much greater than would appear to be the case by the discussion that has taken place in this committee.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I think I should say a few words by way of comment on the statements which have been made just now by two hon. members opposite. In the first place I would not like to leave the impression in any member's mind that anything I may have said or may not have said indicated that the government, or I as its spokesman on this occasion, do not realize the seriousness of the present situation. Because it certainly is serious. As the hon. member who has just taken his seat has said, it is tragic that in the dying days of this session, in these last days of June, 1950, we should be discussing a matter which is more important, possibly more grave, than anything else we have discussed at this session.

The fact that parliament may prorogue tomorrow or the next day should not of course be taken to indicate that the government feels that this is not a serious situation, or that it feels that it is one which will clear up easily in the next day or two. That is not so. It might of course have been possible to adjourn parliament; but I understand it would be just as easy and just as quick to bring parliament together after prorogation as after adjournment, if such course proved to be necessary.

So far as I am concerned, I find myself in agreement with the leader of the opposition who in his remarks, I suggest, correctly outlined the position regarding those circumstances which would make it necessary to call parliament together again to consider this matter, if the situation should deteriorate to the point where that course would be advisable.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra asked me if I would make a statement as to where the government stood in this matter. He wanted to know whether we stood behind the United States and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Green: Beside.

Mr. Pearson: "Beside." I can tell him, as I had hoped my words would have indicated yesterday, that we do stand beside the United Kingdom, the United States and all members of the United Nations who accept the security council resolution. I do not think I can go further than that. The security council resolution speaks for itself. Our obligations as a member of the United Nations with respect to that resolution are just the same as if we had been a member of the security council and had voted for it at Lake Success.

As to what we should do to carry out this resolution or to participate in its carrying out is something which cannot be decided in an hour or a day, as the leader of the opposition said a few moments ago. The situation is changing in Korea from hour to hour. Naturally any participation by ourselves in this collective effort—because that is the only encouraging feature about this whole tragic situation, that it involves for the first time, genuine, effective collective effort—must be guided by events.

Mr. Green: Time is precious.

Mr. Pearson: The situation, however, in regard to the matter is changing from hour to hour, and our participation in this effort will have to be related to that changing situation. For that reason we have already begun to discuss with other members concerned, and more particularly the government of the United States, which is immediately concerned—because it is the only government that can do anything about this matter now, and because it is the only government that has a force on the spot at this time—what we shall do.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra has said that we should not be going to Lake Success to consult with the security council as to what we should do, that we should not ask the security council about this. I have not said we have done that. If I did—and I do not think I did—I conveyed the wrong impression. What I meant to say was that we have discussed at Lake Success with other members of the United Nations how we can concert our effort in this matter. I think that is an entirely proper course to take. Also I hope it will not be suggested that because I mentioned this afternoon that we were sending two military observers to Korea I necessarily wished the house to infer that that is necessarily a discharge of our responsibility. I did not intend to leave any such impression. I mentioned the matter because the United Nations secretariat had asked us to do this service for the United Nations commission in Korea as something of value at this time, and we said we would be glad to do it. But that, of course, is only one small element in this whole problem.

As it happens, I am not at this time in a position to say how our responsibilities can best be discharged so that we will carry out the obligation we have taken as a member of the United Nations in regard to this matter. But let me say that Canada will do as she has always done: her full duty in regard to any international obligation that she has undertaken. Our obligation in this matter is one which springs from our membership in the United Nations, and that is the only obligation we have.

That is an extensive obligation because it imposes upon us the duty and privilege of doing what we can to see that peace is preserved, not only in Korea but in any country of the world where it may be challenged.

It was said this afternoon by one hon. member on this side of the house that there might not be any Canadians in Korea, that we might have no interest in Korea, that Korea is a country far away. Well, there were no Canadians in Danzig; and I remember one European statesman saying in 1939 that Czechoslovakia was a small country, far away. I think all of us in this House of Commons recognize—if we do not, then we have been blind to the events of the last twelve years—that there is no country, small or large, which is far away from Canada, and that there is no way by which we can be safe in a warring world. Therefore we must take our part in collective police action to stop trouble before it spreads. That is the purpose and the policy of the government and, I am sure, the policy of this House of Commons in this matter. I feel confident that we shall discharge that policy with credit to ourselves and to our country.

Mr. Boisvert: Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of taking part in this debate, but from the speeches I have heard today I must admit that our country is facing a difficult situation. When the country we love so much is faced with trouble it is the duty of members of this parliament to endeavour to get everyone in the country to back the policy of the government to deal with the conditions that arise.

Along with a group of nations Canada has pledged herself to try to establish peace in our world. Since 1945 I do not think any other country has done as much as Canada to attain peace for each and every one of us. It cannot be said that we did not succeed. I cannot say that the world will be at war tomorrow, but if war does occur, let us be behind the government and adopt all necessary means to defeat the enemy, to defend our country, and, in the international field, to take all peaceful means which will bring about a definite peace. If conditions tomorrow are worse than they are today, I am sure that all the people of Canada will be united and will be behind the decisions that may be made by the government to bring about that which will be a joy for ever—peace for ourselves and for our children.

I was not prepared to make a speech today, but I want the committee to know that we from the province of Quebec will be like brothers with those from other provinces in our readiness to support the government and to make it strong in the presence of conditions which none of us want but which must be faced.

Mr. Fleming: Yesterday the minister tabled a lengthy list of diplomatic instruments, to be found on pages 708 and 709 of Votes and Proceedings. I do not know how many of these could have been tabled at an earlier date, but it is unfortunate that these instruments were not tabled before the committee on external affairs concluded its sittings. If there was anything in them of interest or importance which could have been discussed by the committee, or if further information was required, they should have been placed before the committee. The committee has again done useful service, particularly in the review of the estimates of the department. Inasmuch as several of these instruments involve the exchange of notes leading to agreements with respect to aviation, I should like to know if any of the five freedoms of the air have been thereby extended to other countries.

Mr. Pearson: I regret very much that these instruments were not tabled sooner and made available for discussion in the committee on external affairs. I hope in future we shall be able to do that. With regard to the exchange of notes on air arrangements, I can assure my hon. friend that in no case has the fifth freedom been given to any other country.

Mr. Fleming: Do some of them relate to air freedoms?

Mr. Pearson: I have not the list before me, but it is possible that some of the air agreements may relate to the first, second, third and fourth freedoms.

Item agreed to.

The Canadian government's assessment for membership in the following international or commonwealth organizations—

73. United Nations organization, $1,343,700.

Mr. Eudes: Mr. Chairman, on this item I should like to review the activities of one of the most important organs of the United Nations. I had the responsibility of representing Canada at the United Nations during the tenth session of the economic and social council. As one of the original members our country served on that council from 1946 until 1948. After a lapse of one year Canada was elected for a second three-year term starting in 1950.

The economic and social council plays an essential part in the pursuit of the noble ideals that the United Nations themselves supported, the establishment of international peace and security. Under article 56 of the charter all members of the United Nations pledged themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the organization for the achievement of the purposes set forth in article 55. Those purposes are as follows:

With a view to the creation of conditions of stability and well-being which are necessary for peaceful and friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples, the United Nations shall promote:

(a) Higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development;

(b) Solutions of international economic, social, health and related problems, and international cultural and educational co-operation; and

(c) Universal respect for, and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion.

Under article 60 of the charter it is enacted that responsibility for the discharge of the functions described above shall be vested in the general assembly and, under the authority of the general assembly, in the economic and social council. To exercise these functions properly, the economic and social council needs the extensive powers provided for in chapter X of the charter. For instance, the council may make or initiate studies and reports with respect to international economic, social, cultural, educational, health, and related matters, and may make recommendations with respect to any such matters to the general assembly, to the members of the United Nations, and to the specialized agencies concerned.

According to its own rules the council meets twice a year. The first session in February and March of this year was held at the United Nations headquarters. The second, as in previous years, will take place next week at Geneva. Informally referred to as ECOSOC, the economic and social council is composed of eighteen members of the United Nations elected by the general assembly in a way to grant, so far as possible, adequate representation to the various geographical, political, racial and economic areas of the world. For instance, this year the members sitting at the council's table are the following: From the commonwealth of nations, the United Kingdom, India, Pakistan, Australia and Canada; from continental Europe, France, Belgium and Denmark; from the Latin American countries, Chile, Brazil, Peru and Mexico; from the Soviet bloc, Russia, Czechoslovakia and Poland; from the rest of the world, the United States, China and Iran.

It has been, Mr. Chairman, the constant view of our parliament that every member becomes, as soon as he is chosen, a representative of the whole body of the Commons without any distinction of the place whence he is sent to parliament. In a like manner, each of those eighteen members when elected to the council, bearing in mind of course the national interests of his government and country, serves for the whole of humanity. His approach to the problems submitted to the council must tend, because of the solemn pledge of the members of the United Nations, towards the implementation of the purposes of the organization, the maintenance of international peace and security.

If one considers even briefly this very simple truth, made evident by international events of every moment, that peace and security are not a mere absence of war but require essentially the establishment of a reign of justice, order and equality, the part to be played by the economic and social council becomes of prime importance. Because of the wide scope of the subjects falling within the council's competence, its field of action is as vast as are varied the problems liable to touch the individuals and the peoples of the world in their moral, intellectual, physical and economical well-being.

As the council does not touch matters provoking for the near future calamities that will destroy mankind, its work is less spectacular than that of the security council and of the general assembly, and thus does not stir up as much public opinion. Such a psychological attitude, which is easily conceivable, does not lessen in any way the importance and the necessity of the task which the United Nations have vested in the economic and social council for the building up of world peace.

How will true peace and security be achieved if each individual, no matter what his race, creed or speech may be, does not enjoy the goods of life to which by nature he has a vested and undeniable right? In order that each individual may have access to the goods of life, there must exist a set of conditions, a social and economic climate favourable to a standard of living as high and as equal as possible for all individuals not only of the same country but all peoples.

Those thoughts, Mr. Chairman, are so much the more important today when the only menace to world peace derives from the Soviet countries. Since the end of the war, the world has witnessed the upsetting sight of the growing domination of communism due of course to its brute force and methods but also to its repeated and unceasing attacks against democracy, and to its assurance that it alone is capable of smoothing inequalities between men and of establishing for all high and equal standards of living. We have indeed to realize that brute force is not the sole power of communism. Convinced communists exist who sincerely believe in the superiority of their doctrine.

Our international relations with the Soviets are giving us an opportunity of estimating the importance those countries attach, for the purpose of dominating the world, to the effect of their charges against the democratic system as being the source of all evils and the obstacle to the equal enjoyment by all of the goods of life. While the peoples of good will are in all good faith and at all costs co-operating sincerely for the betterment of humanity and for the maintenance of peace, the communist countries are using the United Nations organization as a powerful propaganda medium.

The communist menace is startling not only because distance today is a meaningless word, not only because places whose geographical position yesterday made them invulnerable are now within the range of war weapons, but also because millions of individuals, deprived of the necessities of life, constitute a potential prey to the alluring promises of communism.

It may well be, Mr. Chairman, that the system which has the best chance of surviving is the one that will appeal to those millions of individuals as being capable of promoting their way of life. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs said in this house as recorded in Hansard for March 3, at page 425:

> The importance of sound economic and social policies in our relation to communism and to the communist states is obvious, because our strongest long-run defence against communism is wise and progressive social and economic policies.

This opinion is shared, I believe, by all hon. members.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, in case of an attack military preparation is absolutely essential for the defence of our territory and for the safeguarding of our liberty and security. Essential as it may be, it should not cause us to lose sight of the absolute condition for the creation of peace. This condition, if achieved in all parts of the world, may make that attack impossible and our military preparation unavailing. It is the establishment of an economic and social climate under which each individual may enjoy and exercise his vested right in the goods of life.

Mr. Chairman, in the course of its tenth session, the economic and social council, within the limit of powers placed at its disposal by the charter, has striven in a calm atmosphere of international collaboration and understanding to establish more fully that desirable economic and social climate. The calm which surrounded the council's deliberations was perhaps the calm that precedes storms since indeed it followed the absence of the bitter critics of democracies. At the opening of the session the representatives of the Soviet union, Poland and Czechoslovakia walked out from the council, immediately after their resolution attempting to expel the representative of nationalist China was defeated. The usual propaganda speeches, with their attacks against non-communist countries and the counter-attacks which such charges inevitably provoke, were missing.

The temporary withdrawal of the soviet countries on this issue constitutes a flagrant failure to live up to the obligations of the charter. Member states are entitled to hold and advocate their own views when differences of opinion occur, as in the case of China, about the proper authorities to represent a state. But no member has the right to try to impose his will on the others, by walking out of the meetings, because he has not his own way. Because of the obligations vested in them by virtue of their acceptance of the United Nations charter, it was incumbent upon them to take part in the work of the council in spite of the differences of view about China. It was evident that the soviet countries were more interested in the propaganda effect of their withdrawal than in the solution of the international problems before the council. A large and important part of the world's population was not represented in the co-operative attempt of the United Nations to better the economic and social conditions of humanity. Nonetheless, under the very able chairmanship of the Hon. Hernan Santa Cruz, representative of Chile to the United Nations, the economic and social council, with a unanimous spirit of understanding, overcame that obstacle to the universality of the United Nations, which is one of the basic conditions for the success of the San Francisco charter, and efficiently performed the task which was expected of it. The agenda before the council was lengthy and varied like the matters falling within its competence, dealing for instance with a universal pattern of road signs, full employment, natural resources, police action against use of narcotics, the world economic situation, and other matters.

This house, Mr. Speaker, might be interested in a brief report on some of the council's achievements during its last session. The most practical project so far undertaken by the economic and social council is the program of technical assistance for the economic development of underdeveloped countries. The potential results of this experiment in international co-operation, in terms of economic and social benefits to millions of people, are tremendous. The concept of international co-operation in the field of technical assistance is not a new one. The United Nations has, for more than a year now, been carrying out a modest program approved by the general assembly and financed within the regular United Nations' budget. Under this program a number of fellowships have been granted to persons from underdeveloped countries, while experts from more highly developed countries have been commissioned to advise governments on specific technical problems.

Canada, as one of the more highly developed countries, is co-operating actively in this work. Two fellows, one from Cambodia, and one from Brazil, are now in Canada following special courses of training in forestry and industrial fuels. Arrangements have been made for a fellow from Pakistan to study water control. A Canadian expert will advise the Mexican government on the re-organization and modernization of its iron and steel industry. The fifteen-man international team of experts who will assist the Bolivian government in an over-all technical survey is to be headed by a Canadian. Other requests for Canadian experts and for training facilities in Canada for United Nations fellows are now under consideration. Those examples illustrate the practical nature of the United Nations program and the way in which Canada has been taking part in it.

The scope of the regular United Nations program of technical assistance is strictly limited. The funds allocated out of the United Nations budget for 1949 amounted to something less than $300,000, and the total for 1950 is approximately half a million dollars. The project has been efficiently administered and the results have been well worth while. However, it is impossible within the framework of this modest effort to do much more than scratch the surface of the problem. It was a sound start but from the beginning it was recognized that something on a much larger scale would be needed if the underdeveloped countries of the world were to be helped to develop their economic resources.

The impetus for a greater co-operative effort in the field of technical assistance was provided by President Truman in his inaugural address to congress in January, 1949. In the now famous "Point Four," the President said in part:

> We must embark on a bold new program for making the benefits of our scientific advances and industrial progress available for the improvement and growth of the underdeveloped areas.

He urged that other countries should pool their technological resources in the undertaking and that the enterprise should be a co-operative one in which all nations would work together through the United Nations and its specialized agencies whenever practicable.

On the initiative of the United States delegation, the economic and social council, at its eighth session, began a study of the actions which the United Nations might take to carry out a program of technical assistance for underdeveloped countries. The secretary general and the specialized agencies were asked to study the problem with a view to determining what part the various agencies of the United Nations could play in an expanded program of technical assistance. When the council met for its ninth session, it had before it detailed reports and plans from the secretary general and the specialized agencies. The project in all its aspects was carefully considered, and a final plan was drawn up, which was submitted to the general assembly and unanimously approved.

The technical assistance program is not intended to provide capital funds for economic development. Its aim is to provide expert advice and assistance, on request, to governments of underdeveloped countries who lack the technical knowledge required to develop their economic resources. Responsibility for the program as a whole rests with the economic and social council. Between sessions of the council, general supervision will be exercised by the technical assistance committee which is to be composed of representatives of the same governments which are members of the council.

The program is to be financed by voluntary contributions from member governments of the United Nations. The program's fund will amount to approximately thirty million dollars in the first year and it is expected that the United States will make a substantial contribution towards this total. A technical assistance conference of all members of the United Nations will consider the contributions and decide on the allocation of funds to the participating agencies.

The program will include the training of technicians of underdeveloped countries, the loan of experts to recommend what economic development can usefully be undertaken in any area, and the establishment of pilot projects where appropriate.

Application for assistance will originate with the government of the recipient country which must make its own arrangements for obtaining the capital required to carry out the recommendations. The technical assistance fund will be used for payment of salaries of experts, costs of training in technologically advanced countries, and other expenses of the program payable in foreign funds. The estimated total amount required for the technical assistance fund is comparatively small. The most important contribution is the technical "know-how."

The basic principle of the technical assistance program is to help countries to help themselves. There is a great awakening among the people of less advanced areas, especially in the countries of Asia, and a new determination that their standards of living shall be improved. Provision of technical assistance through the United Nations is one way of increasing the economic productivity of these countries and of offering them a helping hand toward the better social conditions which they are striving to reach.

The benefits which will result from this program will not be confined to the areas receiving technical assistance. As their living standards improve, consumer demands will become greater and an increase in the total volume of world trade should be the result. Moreover, it may be expected that a successful program of technical assistance will help to create a more favourable investment climate in underdeveloped areas. If, as a consequence, United States investments abroad are substantially increased, the difficulties at present caused by the chronic dollar deficit in the sterling area would, to some extent, be relieved. A factor which is less obvious, but none the less important, is the opportunity for increasing good will and understanding between the peoples of the more industrialized and advanced countries and the peoples of the underdeveloped areas. The successful development of the program should also discourage economic nationalism and lead to a more extended multilateral system in international trade.

Upon the economic and social council, as the international supervisory and guiding agency, rests the responsibility for making the technical assistance program work. The council is also preoccupied with many other problems, both economic and social. It has for example devoted considerable time to the study of full employment and the measures to achieve and maintain full employment. The problem of unemployment is, of course, primarily the concern of national governments and cannot be solved by shifting responsibility to an international body. Nevertheless there are international aspects to the problem, and neither the cause nor the effect of unemployment is confined within the boundaries of a state. For an exporting country like Canada, the lowering of tariff barriers, the development of a system of multilateral trade, the freer convertibility of exchange, are all of major importance for the maintenance of a high level of economic activity and employment. The continuing study being given to the problem by the economic and social council is, therefore, of genuine interest to Canada.

In the social field, the economic and social council has a variety of interests and responsibilities. Its commission on human rights has been engaged in drafting an international covenant which is scheduled to come before the council at its summer session. The social commission is carrying out programs of work in housing and in town and country planning, in rehabilitation of the physically handicapped and in family and youth welfare. Other commissions are carrying on useful work in such fields as taxation, statistics and narcotic drugs. An international convention relating to refugees and stateless persons has been drafted by a special committee. A working group has made a survey of the continuing needs of children and its report will be submitted to the council with a view to determining what measures the United Nations can usefully take to improve the lot of the world's underprivileged children.

In addition to a host of other activities, the economic and social council also acts in the capacity of a co-ordinating body for all the specialized agencies of the United Nations and it provides the means of consultation between international, non-governmental organizations and the United Nations.

(Translation):

The major part of the 10th session of the economic and social council was devoted to economic matters. Because the problems of this category are so closely related, each was dealt with as a point in a general discussion noted for the conscious responsibility and the spirit of co-operation which were significantly displayed. This general discussion shed new light on the imperative need of finding an international solution to present day pressing economic problems. Never, in my opinion, has the interdependence of the various economic areas of the world and of their individual problems become more obvious; in fact, it was no longer possible to establish an order of priority among these areas or problems.

The economic and social council has undertaken to find, in the shortest time possible, a solution to some problems whose international angle has, admittedly, long been neglected. It is not possible to assess, at the end of each session of the council, what progress has been achieved.

There is, however, one undeniable fact calculated to hearten the sceptical. It has been possible, in the economic field at least, to attain international co-operation and positive results despite the reticent, crafty and obtructionist methods of Soviet Russia's representatives.

At the end of the 10th session of the council, the chairman, the Hon. Hernan Santa Cruz, delivered a remarkable speech, of which I would like to quote an excerpt with your permission:

> Delegations at the meeting of the council have shown that when ideological intransigence is put aside, there exists a basis of understanding and co-operation in spite of the differences between nations, which stem from the degree of economic, politic and social development achieved by each. Those delegations have magnificently availed themselves of the opportunity of giving to public opinion the world over a clear indication that co-operation and constructive efforts are possible in the international sphere.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words about the Canadian delegation.

This house certainly does not expect me to belittle the value and efficiency of the contribution made to the work of the council by the delegation which I headed. I am happy to state that the delegation's contribution was a most useful and active one and earned it a flattering reputation. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute to the devotion and knowledge of the officials who made up that delegation.

Allow me to name Mr. Sydney Pierce, associate deputy minister of trade and commerce, Dr. George Davidson, deputy minister of national welfare, Mr. Sidney Pollock, of the Department of Finance, Messrs. John Holmes, Bruce Keith, George Grande, Jean Côté, of external affairs, and Major Pierce-Goulding, of the Department of National Defence.

This was a most excellent team indeed, one which at all times applied itself diligently to its work and upheld Canada's excellent reputation at the United Nations.

As a matter of fact, in spite of certain adverse factors—such as a small population dispersed over a huge area, our two racial groups, our federal system made up of a central government and ten provincial governments with full sovereignty within the limits of their jurisdiction, and the irresistible appeal of our powerful neighbours—Canada has conquered a leading place in the world.

This enviable reputation we owe, among other things, to the wise policies of our Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and of his predecessor, who have taken advantage of characteristics that are peculiar to Canada, such as our dual culture (English and French), our two official languages, our abundant natural resources, our allegiance to the Commonwealth and our friendly relations with the United States.

I have been very pleased to note that the Canadian government and, in particular, the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) are held in the same high esteem and consideration at the United Nations as they are at home.

International joint commission—

82. To provide for preliminary studies and surveys of the midwestern watershed (revote), $10,000.

Mr. Drew: In regard to this vote a question now arises in connection with the appointment to the joint commission, does there not?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, there is now the question of an appointment to the joint commission because of the decease of Mr. Glen.

Mr. Drew: In relation to that may I say that I strongly urge when the appointment is made it shall be an outstanding practising engineer. The representation from the United States on that joint commission is of a standing that undoubtedly indicates their belief in its importance. Because of the various new problems that have arisen I believe that in the best interests of Canada the person appointed should be an engineer, and an engineer who has been actively practising that profession right up to the present time and up to the time of his appointment.

Mr. Pearson: I agree with the hon. member that the Canadian membership on this very important commission should be of the highest calibre. I am not prepared to agree with the hon. member that the calibre of Canadian membership in the past has been lower than that of the United States side of the commission.

Mr. Drew: I am not seeking to make any invidious comparisons. I was pointing out that the United States, by the nature of the appointments on their side, has obviously accepted its importance. I was further pointing out the newer problems that have arisen and expressing my hope that when the position that has unfortunately become vacant is filled it will be filled by an engineer of the highest standing, an active practising engineer who will be in touch with all the latest engineering developments.

Mr. Knowles: Can the minister give us any more information than was given earlier in the session with respect to the powers of the international joint commission in relation to our problem in connection with the Red river? I have in mind two general questions. On the one hand, what is the extent of the field in which the international joint commission can make recommendations or take action? Is it limited to the Red river itself, being a river that is international, or can it make recommendations with respect to tributaries to the Red river that might be wholly within the United States or wholly within Canada but which do have a bearing upon the situation such as the flood we had this year?

The other type of question that is in my mind is this. Has the international joint commission any funds for proceeding with any project between now and the next session of parliament that it might decide upon? If not, is there any way in which it can recommend the expenditure of funds by other bodies that might have the money?

Mr. Pearson: On the point which has just been raised I made quite a lengthy statement in the committee on external affairs as to the jurisdiction and powers of the international joint commission. It may be that the hon. member has read that statement; if not, it goes into the matter in greater detail than possibly the committee would like me to go into it at this moment. The power of the international joint commission springs of course from the boundary waters treaty between Canada and the United States. The commission's function under that treaty might be summarized in regard to the matter the hon. member has brought up as follows: It has compulsory jurisdiction in instances of diversion, obstruction and new uses affecting the natural level or flow of water along or across the international boundary. The commission has power only to make recommendations to the governments, as my hon. friend knows. If we desire it to have any other power then it can only be done by extending its present powers under the act.

As has been pointed out, the commission has no permanent engineering staff of its own. When references ad hoc are made to it, for carrying out this investigational work usually technical staffs from the two governments of the United States and Canada are made available. But it has no authority to deal with problems that are exclusively within a province or within a geographical area of one country or the other.

Mr. Knowles: Can the minister say a few words further on the other question I asked? I am the last one in this committee, Mr. Chairman, who wants to get out of order, but what is in my mind, if I may say it, is that the other day we passed a vote in the estimates of the Minister of Finance amounting to a million dollars for certain damming works along the Red river. I was wondering what would be the situation if the international joint commission were to recommend some works in relation to the Red river that required more money than has been voted in that estimate. Has the international joint commission any power to draw on any funds at all from one country or the other or from both?

Mr. Pearson: It is my understanding that the joint commission would have no power to draw on any funds from that vote or a similar vote.

Mr. Knowles: In other words, if they made a recommendation then in so far as the expenditure of money is concerned they would have to go through the usual channels.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, I think that is correct; the money would have to be provided by the governments of the two countries to carry out the recommendations.

Mr. Adamson: I would like to concur in the suggestion made by my leader with regard to the international joint commission appointment of an engineer. I would most strongly urge the minister that an engineer, preferably a hydraulic engineer of the highest possible standing in the Canadian profession, be appointed as chairman of the Canadian section of the international joint commission. The problems are primarily hydraulic ones. They have to do with flows of rivers; they have to do with the problems that are peculiarly germane to the training of a hydraulic engineer. I would strongly urge that that be done.

What negotiations are being carried out with regard to the waters of the Columbia river? I am not a member of the external affairs committee. If it has been given in detail in the committee perhaps the minister will tell me so and I will not take up more time.

Mr. Pearson: There is a reference before the commission covering the Columbia river. Under that reference extensive investigations are proceeding which include aerial reconnaissance, hydrographic mapping, establishing of gauging stations, ground water investigation, establishment of precipitation stations, and exploration of damsite and storage possibilities. Therefore the commission is very active at the moment in regard to this reference.

Mr. Adamson: I am glad to have that information. In view of the fact that this work is being done on the Columbia river, which is in part wholly within the confines of Canada and in part wholly within the confines of the United States, I suggest that immediately the question of the development of the St. Lawrence should be taken before that commission. Here we are dealing with the Columbia river—and I am sure there will be tremendous benefits to both countries—and I am suggesting that immediate pressure should be put on for a study and for the development eventually of the international section of the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): When may we expect a report on the Passamaquoddy tidal projects?

Mr. Pearson: The board filed its final report with the international joint commission on March 17. The terms of the report, as well as the representations to the two governments, are before the commission now for consideration. As a matter of fact I believe they have been given initial consideration.

Mr. Blackmore: I should like to ask about the use being made of the international joint commission in connection with the Winnipeg flood. It has been rumoured that a good deal is being required indirectly of the commission in connection with the Red river flooding. Is that so?

Mr. Pearson: The responsibility of the international joint commission in this connection is only that of an international agency in respect of matters affecting both countries. As has already been indicated, the government is establishing a separate agency to concern itself with the purely Canadian aspects of this problem. The international joint commission will not be concerned with that aspect of the problem, because it is an international body. The separate agency will deal more particularly with the question of what might be done in future to prevent a recurrence of the recent flood.

Mr. Blackmore: As the minister knows, the international joint commission is now occupied with an exceedingly important matter involving four international rivers of southern Alberta. I suggest they should be able to give their undivided attention to that problem until they have arrived at a solution.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

133. Departmental administration, $270,421.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Chairman, I am searching for information, and it may also be a case of searching for justice. Has the minister received at any time a communication from Constable J. E. Keays, a provincial constable of Ontario?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Chairman, I do not recall the name, but, inasmuch as we have a large volume of correspondence in the department it is conceivable that it might have come in without coming to my attention. I shall make inquiries.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): I know nothing at all about the case, except that Constable Keays some time ago in the course of what he considered to be his duty made a report which apparently reflected upon his superiors. A proclamation was issued in Ontario on January 6, 1949, as follows:

> Now know ye that we, having and reposing full trust and confidence in you the said J. Keiller Mackay do hereby appoint you to be commissioner to inquire into and report upon any charge or complaint made against any police officer, or public official, in a report made by Provincial Constable J. E. Keays, dated the thirtieth day of October, 1948, addressed to the Commissioner, Ontario Provincial Police, Toronto, Ontario.

As I read this the terms of reference were that the commissioner was to inquire into and report upon "any charge or complaint made against any police officer, or public official". I am informed that the commissioner's recommendation was that Constable Keays be dismissed from the service. If that is so, then I should think he was overstepping the bounds of his commission.

Constable Keays maintains that he has not been dismissed. Furthermore, he is going around in uniform. If that is so I suggest it comes within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice, because, according to the terms of section 169 of the Criminal Code—

> Every one who falsely represents himself to be a constable or other peace officer, or who, not being a constable or other peace officer, makes use of any badge or article or uniform or equipment—

And so on.

> —is liable upon summary conviction to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars and costs, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, or to both such fine and such imprisonment.

I gather that Constable Keays wishes to have his position clarified. He has a letter dated December 14, 1948, saying that he is on leave of absence. Yet an order in council was approved by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario on July 14, 1949, in which Constable Keays is told that he is dismissed.

Constable Keays argues that that is in violation of the law. He states that there is no legal justification for his dismissal, until the law is complied with. In other words he states he has to be given notice in writing that he is going to be accused of certain offences. Then the case will be decided, and he may be retained or dismissed.

What I am trying to establish is justice for Constable Keays. I should like to know what his status is. Is he still a police constable or has he been dismissed? If so, what is the Minister of Justice doing in view of the fact that Constable Keays is still allowed to wear a police uniform? Can the minister give us an opinion under the law concerning the rights of the individual concerned?

Mr. Garson: I should be glad to accommodate my hon. friend, but I am under the distinct impression, from the facts he has laid before the committee, that this provincial constable, an employee of the province of Ontario, comes under the jurisdiction of the legislature of that province, and that this is a matter with which we in the Department of Justice have nothing to do.

It is true that the Criminal Code is a federal statute, but its administration is in the hands of provincial attorneys general.

[Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North).]

I think therefore I cannot help the hon. member very much, since I think the representations he makes are those which might more properly be made from the floor of the Ontario legislature.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to secure the opinion of the minister in a certain matter. I refer to the matter of drunken driving I raised some time ago in connection with an amendment to the Criminal Code. I am not going into the same details I went into on that occasion, but a number of articles have come to my hand since I dealt with the subject and the amount of correspondence I have received from every province has been most extensive.

I mentioned the two or three tests that could be made in connection with suspected drunken drivers. These include the blood test, the breath test and the chemical test. A particularly good article on this subject is to be found in the July Woman's Home Companion where the matter is dealt with at length and where additional evidence is to be found to that compiled in the article which appeared in Maclean's magazine.

There is only one reference I intend to make in addition to those I made previously. There are those who fear that the taking of a breath or blood test would be an infringement of the personal freedom of an individual. That argument might be advanced as far as the blood test is concerned, but no force is required to take a breath test, which test has been used in several jurisdictions. All three tests have been endorsed by the American Medical Association as well as by the national safety council of the United States, a body which is charged with the responsibility of endeavouring to reduce the horrors created by persons driving on the highways when intoxicated. These tests have also been approved by the American Bar Association which is representative of the outstanding lawyers of the United States after it had made a considerable investigation as to the efficacy of the test.

When I spoke last I said that one or other of these tests was in use in eleven states. However, I do not think I could find a better example of how effective such tests can be than to refer to the results of their application in Detroit, Michigan, a city known for the number of motorcars operated within its limits. The Michigan state police commenced using a testing machine—I shall not advertise it by giving its name—in 1947, and the tests have proved most effective in Detroit where the campaign against drunken driving began in 1947 with the use of drunkometers. Since that time there has been a sharp reduction in accidents. In 1948 the total number of fatal accidents attributable to drunken driving was three, with 120 injuries. The number of fatalities was reduced by 93 per cent in six years and the number of injuries by about 90 per cent. The estimate is that the program has saved at least 50 lives each year in Detroit.

Some may want to know how that came about, whether it was due to stricter enforcement. The conclusion of the Michigan police force is that it is brought about because people realize that they will be subject to a breath test. When such a test is taken there is no doubt about the guilt or innocence. If a man smells of liquor and advances the defence that his condition is due to shock as a result of the accident, a defence that is advanced quite often, one being noted in the Montreal papers of yesterday—

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Almost invariably.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As the hon. member for Calgary West says that defence is almost invariably advanced and he has had long experience on the side both of the crown and of the defence. Such a test removes the possibility of a defence such as that being successful. It was interesting to note the other day what happened when I tried to find out how many convictions for drunken driving there had been in this country. The Minister of Justice did not have this information so they had to turn to the Minister of Trade and Commerce who is in charge of the bureau of statistics, but without success.

The last records I have—the minister will have later records although I was unable to get them—are to be found in the 73rd annual report of statistics of criminal and other offences for the year ended September 30, 1948. This shows that the number of convictions for driving a car when drunk increased from 1,155 in 1945 to 1,898 in 1946, with a decrease to 1,481 in 1948. I am not going into the mass of information on the subject that has come to my hands, but as a result of the general discussion there has been on this subject almost every outstanding newspaper in Canada gave support to the need of something being done to prevent the colossal death losses due to drunken driving.

For the benefit of those who are interested in studying the subject, one of the best discussions of it is to be found in an address delivered before the provincial committee of the accident prevention association of Ontario at the Royal York hotel, Toronto, on February 23, 1950, by Professor R. N. Harger of the department of biochemistry and toxicology, Indiana university, a man who is recognized in all articles I have read on the subject, and in every book on toxicology dealing with the subject, as the outstanding authority in the United States.

Mr. Carroll: Are there any statistics which would indicate to us the number of deaths due to drunken driving?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The only statistics available are estimates made by the association of chiefs of police. That is the only basis upon which one can determine the question. They accept available statistics as to the numbers who were killed in Canada last year, and then they estimate the number whose deaths in automobile accidents were directly attributable to drunken driving. It was those figures I placed before the house on a former occasion, and for the sake of brevity I am not going to refer to them now. The question asked by my hon. friend, with his long experience as a judge, is a most searching one. It is obvious that no one could go further than to arrive at an approximate estimate of the numbers. Certainly on the basis of those figures the number who died in Canada last year in consequence of drunken drivers being on the highways exceeded by five or six times or more the number who met death through either murder or manslaughter.

I do not want to overstate or overdiscuss the problem, but I feel it is one that deserves the serious attention of the minister. It is one against which arguments will be advanced. I am not going into the chemical arguments now although I am in a position to do so. There are those who will say that it means some invasion of one's liberty. Looking at it from the point of view of one who, with few exceptions, has invariably been engaged on the defence side, my answer is that I do not believe any question of the liberties of the subject arises when a person who has been in an accident which was obviously due to his negligence, and who apparently is under the influence of liquor, is asked to breathe into a balloon with a view to determining once and for all the question whether or not the degree of his intoxication was such as made it dangerous for him to be on the highway. More than that I will not say.

A vast amount of correspondence, I might say, has come to my hand on the subject. I have had hundreds of letters, and not one per cent have raised any question against the application of those rules that have meant the lives of many people being saved from avoidable and wanton death. I believe in personal liberty, individual freedom and the rights of the accused, but as I see it no man has a right to raise the defence that his liberties are going to be interfered with by asking him to do a thing which will mean the application of no unnecessary force to his person, will give him an opportunity to establish his innocence if he is innocent, and on the other hand will not allow the parade one sees today in the courts of this country of those who, stumbling and staggering after an accident has taken place, find that there is no part of the Criminal Code more honoured in the breach than in the observance in so far as conviction is concerned.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I want to say a word on this subject largely in support of what has just been said by the hon. member for Lake Centre. One only has to go a few years back to a time when the question whether or not a man was intoxicated was settled rather simply. We took the word of the police officer, the neighbours or witnesses to the accident. Then a development took place. Respect for the oath lessened in this country so that—and I speak from experience—a situation developed where witnesses were prepared to say that they were in the motorcar, had spent the afternoon with the individual charged, and the number of beers was always two. Later on, as the party broke up and they went home, he had a sip from some other fellow's glass. I heard that until I was sick and tired of hearing it.

As we progressed in these smart defences, we found that there was always a doctor friend around the corner who made an examination and found that the man was suffering from shock. So a doubt was cast on the condition of the accused person, and our courts quite properly gave the benefit of the doubt, as it belonged, to the accused. We are making many changes, if not advances. For example there is psychiatry. I know of a drunken driving case where the defence was advanced that just at the time of the accident the driver had a psychosis. It had not recurred for forty years, but it occurred at that moment.

I like the definition given in one case by a judge who was at one time chief justice of the Supreme Court of Alberta. Psychiatrists from all over this continent were in attendance, and I mean the top fellows. We did not bother with the chaps who had just come out of university. Of course we had no difficulty getting psychiatrists on one side, and the other people had no difficulty getting them on the other side. This man, who I think was a great judge, said, "What do his neighbours think? They are the people who know whether or not the man is crazy." That is the way matters involving insanity were decided, certainly within the memory of myself and the hon. member opposite who spoke a moment ago. So in these drunken driving charges we come to this, that we have got into a matter of science to ascertain whether or not a man is drunk. The neighbours know, but they will not tell us.

Then, there is the necessity of distinguishing between shock and drunkenness. I do not care who the doctor is; he has a nose the same as the rest of us and when he smells liquor one would think the first thing that would occur to him would be: perhaps this fellow is drunk. No, that is not it. They say that has not anything to do with it. He is suffering from shock. They say, would you not suffer from shock if you saw someone lying on the road with his legs broken and his head bashed in? Of course you would. I have been watching these scientific analyses for some considerable time. I have always thought what a wonderful thing it would be if those things really worked. I think the developments of the last few years as explained by the member for Lake Centre, particularly the experience of the city of Detroit, have established the fact that they are scientific and they are correct. I believe the blood test is perhaps the more sure of the two I have in mind.

There is some talk about the liberty of the subject. All you are asking a man to do is to breathe into a balloon. I would not worry much about that, even if he refuses. We might start there, and if necessary interfere with his liberty later. If a man is asked to breathe into a balloon and says, "no, I will not do that because that is interfering with my liberty; I breathe where I please," all right; in the police court I say to him: "You would not breathe into that balloon?" "No, my liberty was at stake." "The accident victim has not got any liberty; he is dead. If you are as innocent as you say you are, why did you not establish it by breathing into the balloon?" My point is that I think we should perhaps begin in that way, and if that proves to be unsatisfactory I agree with the member for Lake Centre that talk of that type, that it interferes with personal liberty, is nonsense. Advantage is taken of it to absolve people from the consequences of their drunken acts.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, the member for Lake Centre has raised here today, as he raised on the discussion of the Criminal Code amendment, a matter of the greatest importance. I think it is quite in order for us to discuss this subject on this occasion whereas on the former occasion I thought then, as I still think, it was not proper to do so. I am happy he has mentioned it again today, because it enables me to reply to some of the points he made that I must regard as being erroneous.

First of all, I should like to make the position of the Department of Justice quite clear. With the necessity for some method of preventing drunken driving no one will disagree, certainly no one in the Department of Justice. With the devices to which my hon. friend has referred, we do not disagree either. We have had the commission which has been considering a revision of the Criminal Code look at these various methods, and it has been found that the employment of them on a proper basis which is consonant with British justice is much more difficult than many people think, and much more difficult than any of the remarks of the member for Lake Centre would indicate. We find it most difficult to reach a really conscientious opinion, that type of conscientious opinion which should be the basis of any legislative amendment to provide for the adoption of a blood test, a breath test, or a urine test. I want to emphasize that, particularly at the present time, we have not in any way prejudged the question. Any remarks I make today should not be considered as being in opposition to these tests; but I think that the members of this committee will not have a clear picture of both sides of this problem if some mention is not made of the opposite side to that which has been presented by the last two speakers.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I saw them last week, and I converted them.

Mr. Garson: If my hon. friend did convert them that problem is solved, but I doubt it. One of the best articles upon the subject is a reprint in the Canadian Bar Review of December, 1948, of an address delivered before the American Medico-Legal Congress of St. Louis, Missouri, January 19, 1948, and of lectures on medical jurisprudence and toxicology, McGill university. I shall not attempt even to abridge this article, because it is quite a lengthy one. All the merits of these various methods of testing for drunkenness are examined in detail. I should like to quote a few of these statements to indicate that scientific opinion on this subject is by no means in agreement. One of the conclusions reached by the author of this article, a medical doctor who specializes in medical jurisprudence, is this:

> . . . a technician, except under most careful supervision of an expert chemist alert to all the pitfalls, has no place in a medico-legal laboratory, in so far as tests for alcohol are concerned. Only the most careful attention to all the details of the test, from the time the material is being collected to the completion of the analysis, may prevent the lodging of an innocent person in jail . . .

Then there are the arguments which have been advanced by my hon. friend with regard to the liberty of the subject. No one more than he in this house has been interested in the liberty of the subject, and I am sure that we would not expect from him any attacks upon that liberty. It is my view, for what it is worth, and in this I am in complete agreement with the last two speakers, when any citizen gets himself into a condition of insobriety of any degree and then sets out to drive a car and an accident supervenes, then whether or not he is drunk, he is the last person who should be able to invoke the liberty of the subject in refusing to comply with a test which might be sought to establish his condition. It is not so much a question of whether we are infringing upon the liberty of the subject as a question as to the scientific adequacy and the scientific accuracy of those tests.

As I said before, I do not want to detain the committee with even a résumé of this article; I wish only to indicate that it ends with the conclusion that these tests cannot be relied upon, and that one cannot be sure that innocent people are not being convicted when they are employed. It is also in order to show that the author is by no means alone in the views which are outlined in this statement. He states this in his article at page 1459 of this issue of the Canadian Bar Review:

> In contrast to the enthusiasm of the prophets of chemical tests of drunkenness, Carlson, the physiologist in the United States, warned that there is no single test or criterion for the degree of alcoholic intoxication that has the implication of drunkenness. Newman and Fletcher stress the fact that the idea the law has in mind is to punish drunkenness and not drinking, and warns against unfair convictions possible with the 0·15 per cent rule (1·5 parts per 1,000). In England, the late Sir Bernard Spilsbury, one of the world's greatest medicolegal authorities, warned that "drunkenness cannot be boiled down to a test." Sydney Smith and Glaister, among the leading toxicologists and medicolegal experts in Scotland, warn that "chemical analysis of blood, urine and expired air does not yield information on which alone a diagnosis of alcoholic intoxication can be made or rejected."

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): When was he quoting Spilsbury? He has been dead for ten or fifteen years.

Mr. Garson: No, not that long. To continue:

> McGrath, in Ireland, warns against hard and fast limits of blood alcohol concentration. It is "evident," he states, "that blood alcohol estimation does not provide an automatic answer to the question: Was the individual drunk? The blood alcohol concentration is a far safer guide to the person's condition than even definite evidence (so often difficult to obtain) as to the amount of alcohol actually consumed, since it short-circuits and eliminates the relatively uncertain factors of absorption, metabolism and excretion. The courts, therefore, might reasonably regard the amount of the blood alcohol as being more helpful and cogent than proof of the amount of alcohol consumed. But, in all cases, it is still necessary that all circumstances of the cases including an efficient physical examination, should be taken into account when assessing the relative degree of alcoholism present.

Then he goes on to quote Hoffman and Jetter and draws this conclusion:

. . . "the blood alcohol determination in practice can never indicate with absolute certainty that the accused is under the influence of alcohol." In Canada, the late Professor A. T. Cameron, of Winnipeg,—

Who did not die ten years ago, but recently.

—warned that blood alcohol should not be rigidly interpreted to indicate whether or not a person was under the influence of alcohol but can properly be used as additional contributory evidence.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): I never knew he was alive either.

Mr. Garson: I continue:

With this, Magone and Frankish, of the attorney-general's department in Ontario, agree.

Mr. Magone being, I understand, deputy attorney general of Ontario.

Mr. Fleming: And a good one, too.

Mr. Garson: I continue:

"Clinical findings," they state in their book, "should correspond in general with the alcohol content determined by blood analyses, and it is submitted neither shall be disregarded."

I cite these quotations not to indicate in any way that our department or the commission which is looking into this matter is, on the basis of evidence of this sort, opposed to the adoption of the test; but as I understood my hon. friend's case when this matter first came before the house this year when we were advocating certain amendments to the Criminal Code, he said we should not be bothering with the trivia which were contained in the amendment which was submitted to the house but that we should be dealing with the more important things and it was overdue that we should bring down an amendment providing for these tests for drunkenness.

I agree, and our conduct so indicates, that this matter deserves the careful consideration which we are giving to it. But notwithstanding the Woman's Home Companion article that my hon. friend referred to, I do not think that this test is nearly as open and shut a scientific matter as his remarks would indicate. When we say that it requires more consideration before we reach a conclusion upon which we base an amendment to the code to be submitted to this parliament, I think we are taking a perfectly reasonable attitude. That attitude is the more reasonable because of the fact that the statements which were made by my hon. friend as to the present condition of the law, the present number of acquittals, the present loopholes in the law and so on are quite inaccurate as I shall now prove.

When I listened to my hon. friend on this previous occasion, and had in mind the some twelve years that I spent in the Manitoba cabinet, to which appeals for remission in matters such as this were continually coming, and the fact that while I was there I acted for quite long periods on occasion as acting attorney general and in that connection obtained personal experience and knowledge of the matters I am now going to discuss, I could not help but feel that it was a long while since I had heard such an absolute travesty of the facts as that which was presented on that occasion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Of course, Mr. Chairman, that statement is quite non-judicial and quite improper. The statistics that I presented were as I said, from Maclean's magazine and from the police officers of this dominion. As a matter of fact, when one asks for the records, one finds out how interested the department is when they have no records available, according to the answer given the other day, since 1948.

Mr. Garson: The statement that I made was rather a severe one, Mr. Chairman, and now I am going to prove that it is true. What my hon. friend said the other day was this, as reported at page 2960 of Hansard:

Yet we go on year after year, with the Criminal Code unchanged, the minimum penalty being seven days and the percentage of acquittals particularly high—

That is a straight categorical statement of fact.

—because in many cases the crown is unable to establish guilt. The defence can always be raised that there has been a leak in the pipe in the motor, and the man has suffered from carbon monoxide poisoning, or he has had a heart attack or some other seizure.

Or as the hon. member for Calgary West said, that he had two beers, and evidence of that type. Then he goes on:

I am one of those whose experience over the years has been largely for the defence. Nevertheless, I believe there is no section of the criminal law that is more evaded and circumvented than the provision against drunken driving. Indeed, as the law is today, there is nothing of a deterrent in the possibility of receiving a sentence of seven days in jail when any person desiring to break the law must realize that the possibility of conviction is next to nothing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is right. They charge them with reckless driving.

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend continues:

However uncertain a person may be, however much he may smell of liquor, however terrible the accident in which he has been involved, there are in the law as it stands today so many loopholes—placed there not by the accused but by parliament—that I feel it should be strengthened.

When I listened to that statement, as I said, it was so completely at variance with my own personal experience that I immediately wrote a letter to the deputy attorney general of the province of Manitoba to see if I had lost my memory. In order to bring this up to date, to take care of this modern development in perjury—perjury is not too harsh a word—to which the hon. member for Calgary West refers, I asked him to give me the figures for the last completed year in the province of Manitoba. I think I should read his full letter into the record because I do not want to make any misuse of the statistics, and I want the figures to have the explanation that he gives to them to support them. He says:

I think the figures which I will give demonstrate that in so far as we in Manitoba are concerned no difficulty has been experienced in prosecutions under section 285(4) of the code.

As we do not keep statistics I had to secure these figures from the city police court and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. They cannot, of course, be taken as covering the whole province as they will not include prosecutions by local police forces.

What I suggest, and I am sure my hon. friend will agree, is that the percentages of prosecutions and convictions for an offence of this kind will be on a higher rate in metropolitan Winnipeg—and those are from the provincial and city police courts in Winnipeg—than they are likely to be in the rest of the province.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I quoted from the chief justice of Manitoba. If the minister is going to read this letter he should also read the letter he wrote so we would know the circumstances connected with the letter.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): I never heard of a rule like that.

Mr. Garson: I continue:

However, they can be taken as covering the great majority of cases in this province and hence give a good indication of the situation which prevails. As the city police court keeps its records for the calendar year and the mounted police for the fiscal year, the periods covered by each are not the same.

I want to make that qualification.

Here are the records: in the city of Winnipeg police court for the year 1949—and I asked for the numbers to compare them with the statement of my hon. friend that there are a large number of acquittals on these offences—number of prosecutions, 88; convictions, 81; acquittals, 7; percentage of acquittals, 7·95.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is all right.

Mr. Garson: Royal Canadian Mounted Police—

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Is that the total number of those charged in one year in Winnipeg?

Mr. Garson: That is right.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): They charge them with reckless driving.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what they do. That is the difficulty.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Only 100 men charged with being drunk while driving cars in a year in Winnipeg. There are that many in a week.

Mr. Garson: I am now referring to the number of prosecutions in the police court. Number of prosecutions, 64; acquittals, 5. In other words, out of all the police courts in the city of Winnipeg there were 12 acquittals in one year, and my hon. friend says that the law is full of loopholes and cannot be enforced.

I should also point out he says that the figures given cover not only drunken drivers but also persons accused of having care of cars while intoxicated.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the same thing.

Mr. Garson: Then, with regard to the question whether our present penalties are severe enough, in all fairness to my hon. friend, if I understood him correctly, and he will correct me if I am quoting him wrongly, I think he agreed himself that the present penalty of seven days in jail is quite severe and, if I understood him correctly, tends rather to prevent convictions than to secure them. But at any rate here is the information in the letter of the deputy attorney general:

The consequences which follow conviction under section 285(4) have always seemed to me to be severe enough. In addition to the imprisonment which may be imposed our Highway Traffic Act calls for impoundment of the convicted person's car for a period of three months, and suspension of his driver's licence for a period not exceeding six months for a first offence.

And that, Mr. Chairman, is mandatory. The magistrate has no authority but to impose it. I continue:

Under subsection (7) of section 285, the court may make an order prohibiting the convicted person from driving for a period not exceeding three years.

If the procedure is by indictment the minimum term of imprisonment may be thirty days. One of the other statements that my hon. friend made—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Before the minister goes on I would like him to read the letter on which the one he just read was based, because I read from the letter of the chief of police of Winnipeg, and his view was different from that of the deputy attorney general. Would the minister read the letter he wrote?

Mr. Garson: If my hon. friend wants it, here it is. I hope he will not complain or call this unparliamentary, because he is the one who asked for it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is all right.

Mr. Garson: I quote:

Dear Andy:

Could you, without too much trouble, get for me particulars of the number of prosecutions for drunken driving; the number of acquittals; the number of convictions; the number of cases in which the accused, upon being convicted, had his car impounded for three months or more; and the number of cases in which the conviction was remitted by the board of remission or by the cabinet.

I think that in all frankness I should disclose to you my purpose in seeking this information. In a debate in the house yesterday, John Diefenbaker made the following comments upon the subject of drunken driving.

I have read the remarks to the committee already. I continue:

I certainly do not think that this is a fair representation of the administration of the sections of the Criminal Code or of the law generally relating to drunken driving in the province of Manitoba where there is good administration of the law; and by way of doing a little boasting about my province, I would like, when I get on my estimates, to just explain to the House of Commons how the law is administered in Manitoba; and incidentally, show how it could be administered in any province whose attorney general desires to administer it properly.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Good old Andy!

Mr. Garson: I continue:

If you can give me any information that would be of help in this connection I would appreciate it very much.

In this connection, by the way, I would be glad to have your personal views as to whether you think that an amendment to the present sections dealing with drunken driving is necessary and what form it should take. My own impression is that in those provinces, and I dare say they exist, where the enforcement of the present provisions is extremely lax, we would have no reason for supposing that the enforcement of any stricter provisions would be any more efficient; and indeed the enforcement might be in the inverse ratio to the severity of the provision.

Yours sincerely,

I want to say that I would not have read the letter if my hon. friend had not asked for it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is a nice compliment to yourself.

Mr. Garson: Just to indicate that it is by no means an isolated matter in Manitoba, may I say that if anyone takes the very figures which my hon. friend was quoting from, namely, the statistics on criminal and other offences, which is a break-down for Canada as a whole, he will see that the very item he was quoting from, namely, prosecutions for drunken driving, in 1948 for Canada as a whole amounted to 1,746. Of that number there were 265 acquittals and 1,481 convictions. It is rather significant—

Mr. Diefenbaker: How many of the 1,481 pleaded guilty?

Mr. Garson: There is no record of that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the information we must have.

Mr. Garson: In all these cases there were 1,465 jail terms, indicating two or three things: first, that contrary to what my hon. friend says the present section of the code is enforceable. In cases where charges are laid a very large percentage of convictions is secured without any breath tests or blood tests or any outside assistance, and that in connection with these matters the accused is not let off with a fine but is sent to jail.

I make these points to indicate that the present law is not without its merits if it is properly enforced. Take the average man of moderate respectability. Some may say that it is a matter of indifference to him whether he goes to jail; but any one of us knows that for a man with any standing in the community at all who has never seen the inside of a jail and who never would in his lifetime for any other reason, to have to spend seven days there, and have his car impounded so that no one can use it for a period of three months, and lose his licence for six months—that is a very severe penalty.

As a matter of fact when we recently polled the attorneys general of the provinces to see whether they wished to have the present minimum sentence maintained or relaxed about a third of them felt that this minimum sentence in jail, with all the social and other implications it has, was such a severe penalty that in some cases its severity might make it difficult to secure convictions. They pointed out that it meant that a man who might have a respectable position in society, and who misconducted himself only once might be ruined.

I myself took such a case to the Manitoba court of appeal. This was the case of a man with a long seniority on the railway. It was not one of drunken driving but just of being drunk in a public place. I applied to the court of appeal in my province asking them to try to find on the evidence, on a point of law, that the place in question, which was a general store after closing hours, was not a public place. They could not so find, with the result that the man lost his seniority, and lost his job at a time rather late in his life.

I am not suggesting, not for one moment, that we should not consider these matters of breath tests, blood tests and so on. But I ask: Even if we do adopt these blood tests, what purpose will they serve except to establish convictions in respect of charges laid? And there is no evidence from the figures we have before us that when charges are laid there is a very high percentage of acquittals. In Manitoba it is less than eight per cent.

So that if law enforcement officers really want to enforce the law and stop drunken driving, they have a pretty good instrument at their hands right now. And I suggest they may not have a very much better instrument if they introduce these blood tests. I am not for one moment saying that we should not introduce these tests, but what will that do but increase the present percentage of convictions from 92 per cent in Manitoba to perhaps 100 per cent? We have only a small margin on which to work. Once in a while there is picked up an innocent man who, on the facts, should get off. He is in that seven per cent.

May I say that I appreciate my hon. friend's raising this point. It is a most important one. We are trying to give it the consideration it richly deserves. But I suggest that we are not deserving of his criticism simply because we have not rushed an amendment into the House of Commons to bridge that small gap, in the face of those scientific disagreements which the authorities indicate. That does not mean for one moment that we may not later bring down an amendment along these lines. But it will not be until we have given the whole matter the most careful consideration, so that when we bring an amendment down we can lay it before members and absolutely vouch for its fairness and its efficacy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just a word in reply—and I do not intend to reply in kind. When the Minister of Justice says that there are less than 8 per cent acquittals, that statement does not tell the picture at all. For what invariably happens is this, that when a man is charged with driving when drunk, and with the evidence of the police officer that he staggered, seemed to be uncertain of his equilibrium, and was thick in his speech, and had the other symptoms common to intoxication, charges are laid for a lesser offence.

The hon. member for Calgary West suggests that thickness of speech is one condition. I place his opinion even a little higher than that of the former attorney general of Manitoba, because I know that the hon. member for Calgary West has prosecuted hundreds, if not thousands, of cases in the criminal courts.

What happens is that charges are laid for a lesser offence, that of reckless driving. In fact, in the statistics for September, 1948, issued by the government of Canada, this situation is pointed out, where they deal with the theft of automobiles and say:

> It would seem that to avoid the heavy penalty of not less than one year in prison for theft of a motor, the charge of "taking a car without the owner's consent" is resorted to.

Then it goes on to point out in connection with intoxication that conviction for dangerous and reckless driving dropped 10·8 per cent in one year, whereas those under class VI in which drunken driving is contained dropped by 16·2 per cent.

My hon. friend referred to the deputy attorney general of Manitoba. Let me now present some of the officials who have been in charge of the administration of justice. These are police officers, and this is what they say. The minister says there is no difficulty in connection with convictions for drunken driving. Well, Chief Walter Mulligan of Vancouver used these words:

> A drunk-driving charge is one of the most difficult to prove.

My hon. friend mentioned the number of cases during the year, and said that there were only 8 per cent acquittals. I am asking him how many pleaded not guilty, and I have had no answer to that question. Many who are taken in plead guilty. But that in no way answers the argument that a defence and a plea of not guilty leads in most cases—and I say most cases—where there is any doubt whatsoever arising as a consequence of evidence advanced by the defence, to a conviction for a lesser offence, or at least a conviction on a charge of reckless driving.

Dr. Joslyn Rogers, outstanding provincial analyst in Ontario, a man of exceptional capacity and one who is regarded by many as Canada's outstanding toxicologist and one learned in criminal jurisprudence, says this:

> The drunk driver's killings and maimings would appall the public if they could be put before people in all their horror. He is the greatest menace we have.

I have referred to the chief of police in Vancouver. Let me now refer to Chief Charles MacIver of Winnipeg who says:

> Drunk driving is the No. 1 social problem today. A motorist under the influence of liquor is a potential murderer.

Mr. Garson: We all agree with that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, yes! The type of agreement of the man charged with law enforcement in this country is, "I agree with that; but we are not going to do anything about it." And then he says, "Give us time."

Mr. Garson: That is not what I said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is in effect what the minister said—"Give us time; we are looking into it"—while time rolls on and men and women are dying in consequence of a failure to put teeth in the law, as they have done in the United States.

The hon. member for Inverness-Richmond asked the number of those whose deaths were attributable to drunken driving, and when he asked his question I was not in a position to give him the figures. Those figures show that approximately 1,800 have died each year in motor accidents. The question arises as to the percentage due to alcohol, and drunken driving.

Dr. Josyln Rogers, the analyst and pathologist in Ontario, says it is 45 per cent. Chiefs of various city police forces have placed the figure from 15 to 35 per cent. The minister says this indicates that it is not so seriously regarded. Well, the inspector of the Toronto Police traffic division, Inspector Page, said the other day:

> Drunk drivers are a greater menace every year.

If that be so, then certainly there is something wrong with the enforcement of the law. I have one other quotation, and then I shall have finished. I will then leave it to the Canadian people as to whether public opinion will be aroused in order to meet a situation to which opinion has been directed.

The minister says, "Oh, it is easy to get a conviction", and he calls on the deputy attorney general of Manitoba and asks for an opinion. I give him now the opinion of Crown Attorney J. W. McFadden of Toronto, a man who was trained in the west and who before he went to Toronto was prosecutor in the city of Saskatoon. These are his words, and this is my answer to the minister, from a man whose record in prosecutions is worthy of the highest tradition in crown prosecution. This is what he said:

> "Many border-line cases who are admittedly dangerous as car drivers have to be overlooked because we could never make the charge stick in court," Crown Attorney J. W. McFadden, of Toronto, says.

The minister referred to statistics and said that there were 1,481 cases with less than eight per cent acquitted. As Mr. McFadden points out, there are many cases where the crown realizes that if it is to get a conviction it must proceed with a reduced charge. He says that tests are no good until they have been established. Everybody wants established tests so that no innocent man shall be convicted.

Mr. Garson: That is what we all want.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister referred to Glaister, and although I have not Glaister before me at the present time I know that he says that intoxication is established when there is a percentage of 1·5 or more in the blood. The court of appeal of Saskatchewan accepts that. In any event it is interesting to note that in all the quotations it is pointed out that the medical evidence alone would not be sufficient. But there would be the evidence of the police officers and of possible bystanders, which evidence would be emphasized by the toxicological investigation. The article continues:

> David Archibald, psychologist investigating the alcohol problem for the Liquor Control Board of Ontario, says: "If police could use tests like those accepted throughout most of the United States, Canada could make some strides in this tragic business of drunk driving."

My hon. friend has quoted authorities, all dead, but I should like to quote Dr. Joslyn Rogers, who says:

> Chemical tests get right to the crux of the matter —how much alcohol has the man got in his brain? If his blood has a 0·15 per cent alcohol concentration he's a lying fool when he says his dizziness was due to indigestion.

However the minister may look at it, if public opinion is aroused to the need of something being done, something will be done irrespective of the wishes or desires of the minister. Out of this discussion—we must have an exchange of opinions, in order that both sides may be presented—I hope will come a full consideration of this matter to the end that the horror thus created on the highways will be reduced, as it can be reduced with laws that have teeth in them.

Mr. Carroll: Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of entering into this debate because I realize that there is a commission investigating the revision of the Criminal Code and we may expect its report at the next session of parliament. I would not want any remarks of mine to influence the recommendations to be made in that report. British law and Canadian law have always stood for the principle that a person is presumed to be innocent until he is proved guilty by evidence which convinces a jury or magistrate beyond reasonable doubt. It has also been a principle of British and Canadian law that no man shall be forced to give evidence against himself, either in court or otherwise.

I fear that if a provision were put in our Criminal Code to make it incumbent upon a person accused of drunken driving, or of anything else, to give evidence against himself it would be a far-reaching and dangerous thing and absolutely against British and Canadian law in the matter of prosecutions for criminal offences. The same thing applies to confessions. If a confession is obtained by force from a person accused of a crime, that confession is not admitted as evidence by any court. Any argument in connection therewith always takes place in the absence of the jury. If the prosecution wants to get that evidence before the court it must be proved that it was obtained voluntarily. I would not want to see any change made in that time-honoured law.

I repeat that I would not want my few remarks to influence the recommendations of the commission investigating revisions to the Criminal Code. Drunken driving is difficult to prove, but many offences are difficult to prove. That is not the fault of the law. You have perjury in practically every criminal case and in most civil cases, but that is not the fault of the law. I have never tried a charge of drunken driving as they are tried by magistrates, but I have tried many manslaughter cases arising out of motorcar accidents. The question of intoxication arises quite often and I always put it to the jury that if in their opinion the effect of spirits on the driver is such as to render him less careful than he would otherwise be in a normal condition, then they could take that into consideration as an element of negligence, and it was negligence because he put himself in that condition. In the section of the country from which I come I know that, so far as investigations are concerned where people are killed on the highways, inside of twenty minutes the mounted police are on the spot. There may be some places where it is more difficult to get them there in such a short time. The mounted police investigate these cases. They investigate the condition of the driver and also investigate what his condition was two or three hours before the fatal accident. The mounted police were always very careful to ascertain whether they could smell liquor on a person, and I want to say that I do not think all the investigations by chemicals, breathing or anything else would be more convincing to a jury than the evidence given by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in cases I have had under my observation.

As I say, I am not against making the law more stringent. I have nothing to say about whether the method of punishment is or is not sufficient. I suggest, however, that in cases where a person is convicted of drunken driving something might be done to impose upon him a substantial assessment of damages for any wrong he may have done because of his drunken driving. I am not speaking about manslaughter cases. That would relieve those who are injured from the necessity of bringing actions in the civil courts. I say again that something should be done to help offset the fearful slaughter, and slaughter it is, caused by drunken driving in this country.

But I do not think that the common law and statute law of Great Britain and Canada should be interfered with too much, on the subject I have mentioned. The hon. member for Calgary West criticized legislation where certain inferences must be drawn. Let us suppose it is not a case of drunken driving. Let us suppose a bottle of liquor is found on a man. I believe the statutes of all the provinces say that the inference must be drawn that the man has it for illegal purposes, either for sale or for some other purpose. That is something on which the hon. member for Calgary West and I agree perfectly. The point came up in connection with some other matter that was raised in the house. I have always been against it. I do not think it is fair. I think it is an infringement of the common law that in criminal or civil proceedings the court should be forced to draw legal conclusions from certain acts when the court is quite capable of drawing proper conclusions itself in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): They have reversed the rule and said that he is guilty until he proves himself innocent.

Mr. Cavers: Mr. Chairman, in casual conversation with some of my fellow members, I was told if I made a lengthy speech at this time I would run the risk of justifiable homocide. I shall assume that risk. I assure you that I will be brief, Mr. Chairman. I wish to take some of the time of the committee to deal with the administration of penitentiaries and the report of the commissioner of penitentiaries. I do not intend to speak in detail about the report of the commissioner, although I commend it to the consideration of members of the committee.

During the last few years there has developed in this country, as well as in the United Kingdom and United States, a change in the attitude towards imprisonment from the concept of deterrent punishment to one contemplating treatment that will release the prisoner to society better equipped to re-establish himself in civilian life. In Canada this changed concept of the purpose of imprisonment was brought forcibly to the attention of the people by the report of the royal commission to investigate the penal system of Canada, commonly known as the Archambault report. That report emphasized that the proper basis for a good penal system was the protection of society. It went on to point out that, entirely apart from humanitarian grounds, from the economic standpoint it was important that people who found themselves in penitentiaries should be in a position to rehabilitate themselves again in society so that they would not become habitual offenders.

Three points should be kept in mind. First, prisoners must be kept in safe custody until they have served their terms. Second, the term of imprisonment should be used to effect a change in the attitude of the accused to society, and to provide him with some special knowledge or skill which would enable him to take his place in society again without resorting to his criminal habits. Third, the prisoner should be treated fairly and humanely during his term of imprisonment.

Resulting from the Archambault report, we set up a commission to deal with penitentiaries. The commissioner, Major General R. B. Gibson, has done a good job. He is assisted by the deputy commissioner, Mr. Joseph McCulley, a prominent Ontario educationist, and Dr. L. P. Gendreau. I am told by those persons who are in a position to know that they are doing an excellent job. What are they doing? I am told that in 1948 they commenced training classes for persons who might be engaged on penitentiary staffs. These courses are designed to develop a knowledge of principles of modern penology and to raise the standards of the officers.

In addition, I am informed that educational courses are being provided for those persons who are incarcerated. Correspondence courses are provided by the Department of Veterans Affairs to all prisoners, and prisoners who are qualified to do so are permitted to take university extension courses. Library facilities have been extended, and there are now available to prisoners somewhere in the neighbourhood of 30,000 books, as well as a fine collection of periodicals and magazines. Experience has proved that the circulation of good literature tends to combat less desirable activities.

Then there are those who desire to engage in the industrial shops and construction activities of the penitentiary. They are taught valuable trades and vocations which they may use when they return to civilian life. Some of the trades that are taught are brick masonry, construction, carpentry, cabinet making, plumbing and steam-fitting, sheet metal work, and plastering. These activities have been carried on in a very fine manner since the reorganization which took place in 1946. They teach the men valuable vocations which may be of benefit to them when they return to civilian life. But they do more. They keep the prisoner busy, and his mind occupied during the period of his incarceration. However fine this work is which may have been done by the penitentiaries commission, I believe there is much room for improvement in the period preceding the prisoner's return to society which I should like to call the "tapering off" process.

To expect prisoners to get into step with the march of life immediately is imposing a great strain on human nature. Not so long ago a man reported to an office of the John Howard society after having served ten years in a federal institution. He was out of touch with the world, and was afraid to cross the street alone. He could not handle the changing of a two-dollar bill, and shrank from eating in the restaurant in the presence of others, when for so long a time he had eaten his meals alone. I suggest that during the last few weeks of imprisonment prisoners should be permitted to hear the radio at all times; they should be supplied with the daily newspapers, and have their meals in common with others. I am sure if this course were followed they would find civil rehabilitation a great deal easier.

I further suggest that these prisoners should have the opportunity of speaking to carefully screened lay persons concerning their personal problems or current events. This would establish some contact with the outside world which would ease the change-over for the prisoner. Then there are the personal needs of the dischargee which must be provided. A person released from a penitentiary comes out with an outfit of clothing and not less than $10 in cash, plus a one-way ticket to the place from which he was sentenced. Many dischargees have no homes to go to, no savings on which to depend, and few friends to aid them. Not long ago a man reported to a business place in Ontario. When he arrived the personnel manager thought he was slightly crippled because he walked with a limp. It turned out that the shoes which had been supplied to him on his discharge did not fit. They were good shoes, properly made but ill fitting, and the man had difficulty in walking. He could not throw them away because he did not have the price of a new pair of shoes. He felt himself conspicuous enough without the added embarrassment of his peculiar walk. Let us take care to see that these people are permitted the proper clothing and attire when they attempt to adjust themselves to civilian life.

Then there is the problem of securing employment for the ex-prisoner, so that he will not return to his former illegal practices. Whether it is proper "to tell or not to tell" the boss presents a thorny question. Some require tools with which to work and are unable to pay for them. Others are impeded by the hurdle of providing a bond which is usually refused when one has had a prison record. A man comes out of prison and finds that he cannot drive a truck or taxi or engage in selling, because a municipal licence is required, and the civic authority will not grant a licence to an ex-convict.

I am happy to note that the estimates provide a grant of $35,000 to prisoners' aid societies. This grant was first made, I understand, in 1948, and it should be continued because these societies, usually known as John Howard societies, provide much after-care for prisoners. I would be remiss indeed if I did not make special mention of the aggressive and effective work that has been done in rehabilitating prisoners by Mr. J. Alex Edmison, K.C., president of the Canadian penal association. Mr. Edmison and his associates have done much to provide employment for prisoners, and set them again on the road of life. Employers have confidence in his judgment and rely upon his recommendations. Some of the elementary services which he provides are the supplying of car tickets, meals, clothing, room rent and the various equipment that might be required. This organization is filling a great need in civil rehabilitation.

In conclusion I wish to extend a word of commendation to the present Minister of Justice, who is continuing the new deal for prisoners which was established in 1946. He is doing a good job. I should also like to offer a word of congratulations to the commissioner of penitentiaries and his two assistants who have been carrying on in a fine manner. We have not evolved the perfect system, but this dominion may yet set an example for other progressive nations in the field of civil rehabilitation.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, as the member representing the riding in which the greater number of Doukhobors live in the province of British Columbia, I make no apology for taking the time of the house for a few minutes this evening to discuss the Sons of Freedom question, and place before this house and the government the opinions of the great majority of the people I have the honour to represent. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that the Sons of Freedom have been referred to by Maclean's magazine as the "sons of anarchy" and I think that is a correct definition of the people with whom I shall deal this evening.

When speaking in this house in 1946 I had this to say at the conclusion of a speech upon the Doukhobor question. It appears at page 5694 of Hansard of August 30, 1946:

> In conclusion, on behalf of my constituents I urge this government, in co-operation with the provincial government of British Columbia, to give immediate consideration to the wishes of the people I represent with a view to solving this long-standing social problem. I am certain that, if the problem is approached with determination and understanding, the result in the very near future will be satisfactory to the people I represent, the people of Kootenay West, and will cause the great majority of Doukhobors, who wish to live according to Canadian law and Canadian standards, to say in their usual way; Slava Bohu.

That was in the summer of 1946, and since that time there have been recurrent outbreaks of burning and disorder but practically no action on the part of the provincial or federal governments to deal effectively with the situation until recent months.

Before proceeding, Mr. Chairman, I want to distinguish, for the benefit of the members of the house, between the Sons of Freedom sect and the main Doukhobor community. We have in the district about 12,000 people who are generally termed Doukhobors. This is not a race, but a group of people having certain religious beliefs. Of those 12,000, 10,000 are reasonable, law-abiding people. Two thousand are known as the Sons of Freedom, and they are the group that cause the trouble in the district which I represent. They are causing both the federal and provincial governments serious concern at this time. In my remarks from this point forward I shall refer to them as the Sons of Freedom. I believe, Mr. Chairman, in fairness to the law-abiding Doukhobors it would be more correct if the press referred to these people as the Sons of Freedom, and not by the general term of "Doukhobors".

I do not intend to deal at length with the historical aspect of this question, because I just want to present the opinions of my people to the house and the government. Anyone who is interested in the historical aspect of this question so far as British Columbia is concerned would be well advised to look at page 5691 of Hansard for 1946, in which they will find a comprehensive review of the situation. This is the fiftieth anniversary of the Doukhobors coming to Canada. I do not intend to go into the whole situation this evening. Suffice it to say as a brief introduction to the present situation today that the Doukhobors first came to Saskatchewan, and later Peter Verigin 1st began to seek another field for them to develop, came to Kootenay West, looking for the same, and at that time—

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Yorkton, Saskatchewan.

Mr. Herridge: Yorkton, Saskatchewan, yes. That is quite correct. The hon. member for Calgary West is usually correct when it comes to the historical events of western Canada. Verigin had this to say of the Kootenay:

"In British Columbia we will buy our land and own it so it will not be necessary to be subject to the English king, and keep our land. No schools are there. The air is very pure, like Switzerland. So we will live in good health in the Canadian way with no government to bother us, no rheumatism and few mosquitoes. Slava Bohu."

I will just mention that to indicate that he knew, when he came to settle in Kootenay West, as far as land and opportunities for settlement are concerned, he had picked a choice country. In 1909 we had a special train bearing about 800; in 1910 several hundred more, and in 1911 another thousand. Later, after the Saskatchewan government began to take stern action against certain practices of the Sons of Freedom in Saskatchewan, there was an influx of the Sons of Freedom. According to the editorials of all newspapers of that time, the Doukhobors were looked upon with favour and their community prospered.

Then the Sons of Freedom commenced coming from Saskatchewan. In Saskatchewan the provincial government took drastic action when they began cutting the capers that they have been cutting in Kootenay West for the last twenty-five years; but that strong action simply resulted in their leaving the area around Yorkton and coming to Kootenay West, and we have had them ever since. In 1927 the first trouble commenced with the development of what I would term the nude strategy. Since that time we have had bombings and burnings right through the years up to 1946—schools, houses, bridges and factories were destroyed.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Nude strategy began in Yorkton.

Mr. Herridge: I am talking about nude strategy in British Columbia.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Oh, it started long before that.

Mr. Herridge: Shortly after that, in 1946, we had the Sullivan commission, of which we had high hopes, but nothing happened. A great deal of evidence was taken here and there, and then the commission folded up. Since that time all hon. members have read of the recent events—the burning of their own houses, the dynamiting of railroad tracks and the blowing up of bridges, until now we have over 400 in the penitentiary, with the attorney general of the province suggesting there would be many more there if there was space for them. In all it is estimated that these people have caused damage, in the district I represent, totalling over $1 million to date.

[Mr. Herridge.]

This is a most complicated and unusual question, Mr. Chairman. We have not this situation existing anywhere else in Canada, and I know that it is not easy of solution. This Sons of Freedom problem has caused advertising of our district all over the world. Canadian papers in recent months have been carrying headlines from day to day about the continued burnings and difficulties that have occurred in Kootenay West. Here is a quotation from the Trail Times of April 21:

Sons of Freedom confess to guilt. Maintained they have the sanction of supernatural revelation.

Here is one from the Nelson Daily News of April 22:

Tot pulled in to nude display; four more Krestova buildings destroyed. Twenty arrests in two days; over 80 in cells here.

And so on and so on.

Then we have even the British press taking notice of these unusual occurrences. In the Sunday Pictorial, October 9, 1949, I see a picture under these large black headlines:

Strip tease girls who make a whole nation blush.

Recently I was informed of an article in one of the San Francisco papers, of typical American style and content, stating that a parade of nude Doukhobors down the main street of one of our small towns was led by a gorgeous nude blonde riding a white stallion. You can imagine the advertising, and the, shall I say, exaggeration that goes on in connection with this Sons of Freedom disorder.

The minister is well informed of this situation. The people of my district have sent letters and resolutions to the Minister of Justice and to the attorney general because it has been of serious concern to them for some years and particularly during recent months. I think the opinion of the people in the district is expressed by resolutions from the Trail board of trade, the Nelson board of trade, the West Kootenay and central farmers' institute and the associated boards of trade of eastern British Columbia.

I want to say that I think the people of our district have been most patient with this problem throughout the years. Anyone who has lived as close to it as I have lived during the last twenty-five years will realize that the patience of the people of Kootenay West is a demonstration of their belief in law and order and in making every effort to settle this difficult question according to the principles of law and order. That is the attitude of the people I represent. What is the attitude of the law-abiding Doukhobors? I just want to quote a resolution forwarded to me quite recently. It is as follows:

Resolution of a meeting of a group of Doukhobors, held at Trail, B.C., on the 8th day of June, 1949, under the chairmanship of Peter Konkin, and secretary William P. Reibin, with regard to terrorism in the Kootenays.

We protest against any and all allegations that the Doukhobors in general are responsible for the terroristic acts committed in and around our settlements.

We directly suffer more than anyone else from the acts in question.

In the name of justice and fair play we appeal to the authorities to take the necessary measures so that we as peaceful, law-abiding citizens, would not be subjected to live in terror, as well as suffer from cruel and unjust discrimination against us at the hands of those who, due to lack of knowledge of the true facts, blame all Doukhobors for such terrorism.

It is not just to blame all for criminal actions of a few. We request immediate investigation to uncover and apprehend all persons responsible for these outrages, regardless of race, colour or creed.

We reaffirm our policy of toil and peaceful life.

Then, Mr. Chairman, I have another one here from the mass meeting of the union of the spiritual communities of Christ held on April 14 which, in similar terms, appeals to the Minister of Justice at Ottawa and to the attorney general of British Columbia for action to be taken to prevent the continuation of these outrages, these burnings and the terrorisms.

First of all, why has this situation continued throughout the years? I have no hesitation in laying the blame, in the first instance, for the development of this terrorism, these burnings and this lawlessness throughout the years, directly upon the shoulders of successive provincial governments of British Columbia.

I am not going into the details here, Mr. Chairman, but I can tell you that the matter of dealing with the Doukhobor question in British Columbia is a very mysterious one. I have no hesitation in saying that in my opinion—and it is the opinion of large numbers of responsible citizens—this situation has developed because of the failure of successive British Columbia governments to nip, shall I say, this social ulcer in the bud at the very commencement. That is a rather mixed metaphor, but I am quite sure that you, Mr. Chairman, know what I mean.

What do I find? I find further evidence of the provincial government's failing to grasp this question and to accept its responsibility. These are serious times. People in public office and people representing the public, on this question and on all public questions, must be willing to accept their responsibilities. I pick up the Sun of June 27, which carries a news dispatch from Victoria, as follows:

Red influence seen in Douk uprisings. Wismer says fanatics may be hostile to Canada; demands Ottawa action.

The article goes on to say:

Attorney-General Gordon Wismer, in a radio broadcast Monday night, suggested communistic influence among Sons of Freedom Doukhobors who have been resisting British Columbia's laws.

"I think I am justified," he said, "in suggesting that these people, Russian in origin, and many of whom, though born in Canada, speak only the Russian language, may, in this period when the cold war is perceptibly warmer, be actuated by motives entirely hostile to the country of their adoption."

"Their constant cries that what they are doing is in protest against a third world war—this while they are endeavouring to sabotage railway trains and to cut off the supply of power to large industries by dynamiting power lines—sound strangely familiar to those who observed the strategy of another group during the last war, before Russia entered into it."

Mr. Wismer declared flatly that solution of the Doukhobor problem is a matter for the dominion government. All British Columbia can do is arrest them for law-breaking, but it has no other powers.

In that article Mr. Wismer suggests that it is a problem for the federal government by suggesting that it is a security problem, a question of national security, and therefore it is the responsibility of the federal government.

Some three or four weeks ago, Mr. Wismer, attorney general of British Columbia, said that what was happening in Kootenay West was civil insurrection. In my opinion, that was an attempt to lead the people to believe that this was entirely a federal responsibility. Later he said it was a national emergency, again to create the impression that this question is the sole responsibility of the federal government. Thirdly, we have his recent broadcast to the people of British Columbia, in which he suggests that it is a question of national security and the prime responsibility of the federal government.

I am of the opinion that we cannot handle this difficult question, or similar questions, by trying to evade our responsibilities. Quick action in Saskatchewan soon settled the Doukhobor question to the satisfaction of Saskatchewan, but to our embarrassment. I am of the opinion, Mr. Chairman, in which opinion I think I am correct, that the legal responsibility for the administration of law and order in the province rests entirely in the hands of the provincial government; but I do say that in view of the agreement of 1898, and the particular nature of the question, the federal government has a moral responsibility. In my opinion we now have a problem of such magnitude that it can only be solved by federal and provincial governments effecting joint responsibility and approaching the problem together.

Before proceeding to give my few suggestions I want to pay a compliment to the members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the provincial police who have had to deal with this question throughout the years. I think, and I have considerable knowledge of the difficulties that the police in both jurisdictions have had to work under in dealing with this most unusual and most complex question, that the provincial police have been most patient and very careful in their whole handling of this question. I want to pay a compliment to Commissioner Meade, who has given excellent advice and who has been most co-operative with the other police officials, civilians and committees who are working toward a solution of this question. I mention that because I think it is indicative of their strong sense of the civil rights of the subject in Canada. Under the most extreme provocation at times both the provincial police and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have been very careful to act with tolerance and justice and with a full appreciation of the civil rights of the subject.

In recent months public indignation has forced both governments to take some action. I was pleased to see Mr. Wismer's statement in respect to this matter some four or five weeks ago. I was hopeful that as a result of the statement—it was termed a joint action statement, there was going to be some close co-operation between both governments on this question. I am pleased indeed to know that we now have a committee established in British Columbia headed by Dr. MacKenzie, president of the university of British Columbia. Included in the committee are other members of the faculty of the university of British Columbia. They intend to pursue a long-time study of this serious and complicated question. I am pleased indeed to see that. I understand they will start from the beginning to attempt to sort out the underlying causes or reasons for the unorthodox behaviour of the radical Sons of Freedom. Their deliberations will not be guided by emotions, but by their specialized skills applied with logic and intelligence.

In that connection, Mr. Chairman, I cannot refrain from informing the committee that that is exactly the course of action that was advocated by the C.C.F. in the provincial legislature since 1933. We have a section in the Regina manifesto entitled "Social justice". That section deals with the necessity for the use of psychiatrists and a special approach to certain problems such as these, and to certain criminal cases, if we are to rebuild these people, reform their characters and make them useful citizens. I am pleased to know, Mr. Chairman, that we have another illustration of a capitalistic government in British Columbia adopting a plank from the Regina manifesto in an effort to solve this most difficult question.

[Mr. Herridge.]

In addition to that, we have a committee in Kootenay West established by the associated boards of trade of Kootenay West, with wide representation, which is now studying the whole question, having a wide knowledge of the local background and the sequence of events throughout the years; and it is willing to co-operate in every way possible with the provincial government and with the federal government. I am also happy to know that the Society of Friends, who in the first instance were largely responsible for the coming of Doukhobors to Canada, are going to send some of their people into Kootenay West. I pay a great tribute to the work that the Society of Friends has done in many cases similar to this throughout the world.

I am sure that the local committee, the provincial committee, and the efforts of the Society of Friends will in the long run produce some lasting results.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Herridge: Some hon. members are crying "Carried". I may say I purposely refrained from commenting on other items that I would like to have commented on in order to feel morally justified in taking up twenty-five minutes of the committee's time at this late date.

I may say that the people I represent are pleased with the actions so far in the appointment of this committee. They are very glad to know that the provincial committee, the provincial government and the federal government are willing to co-operate with the local committee. The Kootenay committee is going to keep in close touch with all those concerned with this problem.

As one who realizes to the full our priceless heritage of civil liberties, and as one who has a close personal knowledge of the situation for many years, and as the member for Kootenay West, I wish to submit the following proposals. I say first of all that both governments must accept some responsibility if this question is to be solved. I say that the federal government has a moral responsibility. The provincial government has a legal responsibility, but I think this difficult question must be approached in the spirit of co-operation between both governments. I do urge that the Minister of Justice use all the, shall I say, advantages of his supreme office and department to promote co-operation in every way possible with the provincial government. In saying that I fully realize the difficulty the minister faces. I recognize that you cannot accept responsibility without power, and that the power and the responsibility at present rest in the hands of the provincial government. But I do hope that in the future—and the people I represent have the same hope—there will be a close understanding and close co-operation as well as a joint acceptance of responsibility by both federal and provincial governments.

There is a fringe of these people who are definitely criminal. I suggest—and I think I am speaking for the majority of the people I represent—that those who commit acts which are definitely criminal in their nature, such as burnings, bombings and matters of that kind, should be arrested, and, when proven guilty, receive the full impact of the law. But I cannot see any solution, and the people I represent cannot see any solution in sending people to jail or to a penitentiary for three years, just because they have taken their clothes off. I think that is evidence that the provincial government is trying to pass the responsibility over to the federal government, by simply sentencing these people who have undressed themselves to three years in jail. The sentence is out of all proportion to the offence involved, and it is a policy in my opinion of loading the expense connected with the care of these people upon the federal government.

If you once pin the leaders down it will be found that they are a very small core of crafty men who are taking advantage of a group of mentally unbalanced and mentally ill people. Get at that core, and I think it will not be long before we will solve the problem. For the greater group of mentally unbalanced and mentally ill I suggest it may be necessary to pass special legislation, after consultation between the federal and provincial governments. But I do hope that these people can be treated as people who are ill, people who are unbalanced and who require remedial treatment.

They may require detention without arrest. They may require being placed at some point where they can earn their own living by cultivating the land. It requires a policy of understanding, and what I would term humane firmness, to restore these people to the point where they may become good citizens, and resume normal lives.

I am just hurrying along in order not to take up too much of the time of the committee. I do hope that the government will use all its facilities, and as well the Society of Friends and the local committee. The people in my district whom I represent are the finest to be found anywhere in Canada, and they are willing to volunteer to do anything they can toward finding a solution to this problem, and work so that these unfortunate people can be restored to a proper and balanced life.

I come now to a branch of the government which I believe can do some good work. Here is an opportunity for what I would describe as some social engineering. We have only about two thousand Sons of Freedom who create difficulty. There are at least ten thousand Doukhobors who are law-abiding people. When I dealt with this question in 1946 I suggested that here was an opportunity for the citizenship branch of the then department of mines and resources to do some good work. So far the citizenship branch has not spent one five-cent piece among those ten thousand Doukhobors.

I say to the young minister now in charge of that branch that here is an opportunity to do some social engineering and to bring all the facilities of the citizenship branch to bear in assisting these people to accept more and more the full responsibilities of Canadian citizenship. In caring for these mentally ill people we have to use all possible agencies. We have to provide for the education of the children, and to make provision whereby they will graduate to full citizenship, upon evidence being advanced that they are cured of this mental unbalance and this state of disquietude.

I have mentioned the necessity of training for citizenship. Before concluding may I refer briefly to the franchise. We must have a positive approach to this question, even with that larger group in the community which is generally known as the Spiritual Community of Christ. Then there are what are known as the Named Doukhobors. Then there are the Independent Doukhobors, those who have left the community and who own land outside. There is also the small group known as the Progressive Doukhobors. Then we have this group of two thousand who call themselves the Sons of Freedom.

Everyone who is willing to accept the responsibilities of citizenship in Canada is entitled to the opportunity to exercise the franchise. We have a good number of excellent people in Kootenay West, members of boards of trade, business men in various communities, men who are respected and who have been playing their part in their communities for twenty-five or thirty years, who in some cases have had nothing to do whatsoever with Doukhobor communities in all that period and who, in our province, through present provincial and federal legislation, will never have the opportunity to exercise the franchise. The same applies to their descendants. I urge that the government of Canada bring this matter to the attention of the provincial authorities in British Columbia, and that in dealing with the whole aspect of the problem something be done to correct this situation.

The provincial elections act says that no Doukhobor can exercise the franchise. Let me read briefly the definition of Doukhobor:

> Doukhobor means a person, male or female, exempted or entitled to claim exemption or who on production of any certificate might have become or would now be entitled to claim exemption from military service by reason of the order of the governor in council of December sixth, 1898; and every descendant of any such person, whether born in the province or elsewhere.

I know of a man who has had nothing to do with a Doukhobor community for years and years. He has carried on and accepted the responsibilities of citizenship. Yet, according to the law as it stands at present, neither he nor his children for all time to come would have the opportunity to exercise the franchise.

Section 14(1) of the Dominion Elections Act has this to say:

> In any province, every person exempted or entitled to claim exemption or who on production of any certificate might have become or would now be entitled to claim exemption from military service by reason of the order in council of December 6, 1898, because the—

The Chairman: Order. It seems to me the hon. member is out of order in discussing the franchise on this item.

Mr. Herridge: I think I am in order. I am making a suggestion in connection with the administration of justice with a view to a solution of the Sons of Freedom problem.

The Chairman: But the hon. member's suggestion is out of order.

Mr. Herridge: Very well. I was asking the government to give the matter serious consideration, that it be brought to the attention of the provincial government, that positive action be taken to give these people the feeling that they are recognized as Canadians, and to encourage them in greater numbers to accept the full responsibility of Canadian citizenship.

An hon. Member: Amen.

Mr. Herridge: I thought I heard someone say "Amen". I shall conclude in a few moments.

Mr. Cruickshank: It was said behind the curtain. He would not come inside to say it.

Mr. Herridge: In conclusion—and I have hurried through this as rapidly as I could; but I do feel keenly about it, and in what I have said I have been expressing the majority views of the people in my constituency—in conclusion let me say this again: punish the criminals; punish them according to law, as an object lesson and as a deterrent to those who would continue to do likewise. Establish a policy of re-education for the mentally ill and unbalanced if necessary, through special legislation. Then, there should be citizenship training for the whole of the Doukhobor community, and for the younger people particularly, so that they may soon fit into the Canadian economy and into the Canadian social pattern.

I emphasize again that we must do something positive, and one of the things we should do is to extend the franchise to all those who are willing to accept the responsibilities of Canadian citizenship.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word on a question of particular importance to the Minister of Justice; I refer to the problem now confronting the British Columbia authorities of providing prison accommodation for those who have committed offences.

Just before going on may I say that this is a special and particular problem which concerns the hon. member for Kootenay West in whose constituency these Doukhobors reside almost exclusively. I urge upon the government as a whole and upon the Minister of Justice in particular the most serious and favourable consideration of the point of view just advanced by the hon. member for Kootenay West.

The problem which confronts the British Columbia authorities in connection with the offences which have been committed by these Doukhobors appears to be one of providing prison accommodation. According to the press articles it would seem that the Ottawa authorities are unable to understand why the British Columbia courts are imposing such severe sentences upon Doukhobors for the nudism which has been going on. According to a dispatch which appeared in the Vancouver Sun of June 14 the authorities at Ottawa would appear to be annoyed or irked at the sentences being imposed upon Doukhobors.

I think it is felt by all citizens of British Columbia that that attitude indicates an incomplete understanding of the problem which faces the authorities in British Columbia. Although the Doukhobors are being brought into court charged with nudism the background of the whole situation is that this particular sect of about 2,000, the Sons of Freedom, have been indulging in a campaign of terrorism and violence and arson and other things which constitute a complete defiance of the whole system of law and order in the section of the province in which they reside.

It is felt, and I think with justification, that since all efforts to placate and deal reasonably with this particular sect have failed, since they have persisted in spite of those efforts in their campaign of violence, the time has arrived when they should be treated sternly—not harshly—and that the offences they are committing justify a certain amount of severity. That is why they are receiving penitentiary terms for the offences of nudism and the background of the situation is in the minds of the judges in imposing sentence.

The headline of a report in the Vancouver Sun of June 15 intimates a break between Ottawa and British Columbia because of the Doukhobors. It states that the relations between Ottawa and Victoria over the handling of the Sons of Freedom are nearing a cracking point. That indicates the seriousness of what appears to be a difference of view between the authorities in the department and the authorities out there as to the sentences that should be imposed.

The background of that difference of view appears to lie in the fact that the federal authorities are reluctant to provide the penitentiary or jail accommodation for these Doukhobors. No doubt the committee is aware that sentences of six months and under are the responsibility of the provincial authorities in the way of providing necessary jail accommodation, whereas penitentiary sentences are, broadly speaking, a federal responsibility. Because of the number of offences that have been committed the federal authorities are worried, and I can imagine they have cause to be, over the accommodation they will have to provide in the penitentiaries as a result of the sentences imposed.

Not to labour the point, I think I can conclude by saying this: If the officials of the Department of Justice will realize that this problem can no longer be dealt with by placating the Doukhobors, if they will realize that it requires stern measures, then they will appreciate that our courts must impose severe penalties in order to let this sect know that they cannot continue to defy our whole system of law and order. Penitentiary sentences must be imposed.

It is not a case of the British Columbia authorities wanting to evade responsibility in providing the required prison accommodation, it is simply a case of their having to impose these sentences if they are to deal adequately with this campaign of terrorism and violence. If the federal authorities will appreciate that there is that necessity, the irritation which exists, according to this press dispatch, will disappear and perhaps there will again be good will between the federal and provincial authorities, which is necessary if there is to be a solution of this problem.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the minister would have some comments to make on the two very thoughtful speeches that have been made about a problem about which I imagine the committee is fairly ignorant. I should like to introduce a new subject at this time however, although I have made previous references to the matter of security clearance. The minister knows my views quite well. I am dissatisfied with the statement he made on June 12, when, if my memory serves me aright, he said that the deputy minister of a department would decide who should stay and who should be dismissed for security reasons. I should like to know if my memory is correct because I do not want to do the minister an injustice.

It seems to me that that is giving too much power to a deputy minister, power of a kind which he might not appreciate. Secondly, and more important, it does not give the civil servant, who after all is a citizen of Canada, the security which he should have. To put it briefly, my opinion is that if a civil servant is suspected of subversive activities, within limits, the facts should be made known to him and he should have the right to present his case to a board of review. The board would consider the facts and report to the deputy minister, who in turn would report to the minister. The minister would be the last court of appeal as far as the accused person was concerned.

What I am most concerned about, and I am quite sure the Minister of Justice shares my concern, is that the rights of the individual shall be protected. A state can be arbitrary and individuals can be arbitrary, and at all costs the rights of the citizen must be protected. I would like to know in what way the rights of the civil servant will be protected.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I have much to add to the statement that was made before in reply to a question by the hon. member for Kamloops. That statement can be perhaps oversimplified by putting it in these terms: The head of a department always has had the right, even before this question arose of securing the unquestioned loyalty of all civil servants, of seeing to it that the members of his staff were properly fitted to do the work for which they were responsible. When the question of security arises, the head of the department is under continuous responsibility to see to it that every member of his staff is one from whom complete responsibility can be expected in the matter of loyalty. That being the case, as I indicated then, in the proper discharge of his own responsibility he cannot afford to take any risk whatever as to John Doe, one of his employees. His judgment in that regard will be exercised partly in relation to the degree of vulnerability of the department of which he is head, or it may be exercised in relation to some new responsibility imposed upon the department which makes it vulnerable. Therefore since he cannot, in the proper discharge of his official responsibility, take any chance in the matter, he is under the obligation to remove from a position of great responsibility any person about whose loyalty he entertains any doubt whatsoever. That move may take the form either of letting the individual out of the service altogether, or of securing employment for him in another department of the government where no question of vulnerability arises, at least to the same degree.

I admit that in theory it appears that the possibility for arbitrary action is present in such a situation, but no cases have come to my attention of any injustice in that regard. I think my hon. friend will realize upon reflection that if action is taken in the first instance by the deputy, as it usually would be, although not formally provided there is in the nature of the matter an appeal for John Doe who is suspect and who thinks he is being unjustly treated. He will naturally go to the minister. I think the ministers of the government, all being fairly humane and reasonable men, will take great pains to make sure that there is no injustice in a particular case. That arrangement has worked well so far. Nothing has developed which indicates any need for changing it, but I think it would be safe to say that if anything developed to indicate that the appeal to the minister is not sufficient, the government would be quite prepared to consider such a change.

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North): What I am asking is that the stable door be locked before the horse is gone. The minister has told us —and of course I accept his word—that no cases have come to his knowledge of deputy ministers dismissing anybody because of suspicion about loyalty. I think that is true. Nevertheless I think the Minister of Justice may also have some knowledge of a case, for instance, to which there was a dossier attached in which certain allegations were made about events that happened long ago, and because of those events doubt was cast upon the loyalty of the person today.

We are up against the tremendously difficult problem of trying to define what is a subversive activity. I do not ask the minister to do it because I do not think I can do so myself. I am not arguing for a moment about the right of a deputy minister, or somebody in a position of power, to decide as to a person's capability for work. They have a perfect right to dismiss an employee if he is not capable, but I have the gravest doubts about anybody's ability to decide on the most objective grounds as to what may be doubts about loyalty or subversive activities. I am not asking that security measures should be relaxed; I want to see them maintained; but I also want to see the security of the individual maintained.

The suggestion I put forward is not a new one. The minister probably is familiar with the system existing today in the United Kingdom. If a person is suspected of disloyalty, charges are laid before him, and he is given leave of absence with full pay to appear before a board which only has power to report upon the facts. After having interviewed the person charged, it reports the facts to the minister, and the minister has the final decision. I ask for such a board not because I have any suspicion of our deputy ministers but to protect the individual and above all to make sure that there can be no possible case of injustice to the individual. I am quite sure the minister is broad-minded enough to realize the necessity for safeguarding the individual. I hope he will give my suggestion careful thought and implement it if possible.

Mr. Fleming: I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question concerning a subject which is not new. When the Judges Act was amended about seven years ago to permit judges at their option to share their pensions with their wives, the provision was not made retroactive to include judges who prior to that date had retired. I have argued previously in the house that an injustice was thus done. It was a form of discrimination for which there was no warrant or justification. As I say, the matter is not a new one. I have raised it several times previously, although, I think, not since the present Minister of Justice took office. I hope the minister will undertake to reconsider the situation and extend to the judges who had retired prior to that change in the law, and whose numbers are shrinking year by year, the same privilege and opportunity as was given to their brethren on the bench when the legislation came into effect.

Mr. Garson: I shall be glad to give the matter consideration. I suppose my hon. friend would bracket with them some of the widows as well.

Mr. Fleming: Pardon?

Mr. Garson: I suppose my hon. friend would bracket with the judges who did not have the opportunity of making election some of the widows of those judges who also do not have that opportunity.

Mr. Fleming: Quite. Their position would have to be equated with that of widows of judges since that time. I think there is a very clear-cut situation there. The judges then on the bench were given an opportunity which was just as much sought after at the time by retired judges as by judges on the bench. While the privilege was extended to judges on the bench it was withheld from those who had retired.

142. Combines investigation branch, $213,235.

Mr. Fleming: About a week ago the minister made an announcement concerning the appointment of a commission to study the Combines Investigation Act and recommend changes. Can he give any indication as to the length of time it is expected the commission will require for its study of the problem, and tell the committee if there is any likelihood that their report may be received before the next session so that any implementing legislation can be introduced at that time?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I do not think I can give a very accurate estimate because the terms of reference are substantially as I stated them the other day. They are quite wide. We have a commission in whom we have the greatest possible confidence. We have given them carte blanche, and we do not know what they are going to write on that carte blanche. We imposed no restriction as to time, but I may say we had hoped we might possibly be able to consider their report before the next session of parliament. That is just a hope, it is not an estimate, and in no sense is it any commitment on the part of the commission.

Mr. Knowles: Can the minister state whether any investigations have been instituted by the combines investigation branch since the appointment of the new commissioner? Also, has the minister any comment to make on the report from the United States alleging monopoly or cartel in the Canadian newsprint industry?

Mr. Garson: I might answer my friend's first question by giving a little more information than he requested. First, the flat glass prosecution: The date for the commencement of the trial at Toronto has been fixed as September 25 next. The counsel for the commission are Mr. T. N. Phelan, K.C., and Mr. D. D. Carrick.

As to the bread prosecution, the argument on the preliminary application to quash the charge has been fixed for June 28. Mr. Blanchard, who is our counsel, has decided to stand upon the charge he preferred as agent of the attorney general of Alberta. The trial itself has been set for the criminal sittings next September 11 at Calgary. The counsel are Mr. C. S. Blanchard and Mr. H. W. Riley.

The match prosecutions: Counsel are still considering the exact form of charges, and directing their attention particularly to the question whether a preliminary inquiry will be necessary. We expect to have their settled opinion very shortly. The counsel are Mr. J. G. Ahern K.C., Mr. Guy Favreau, Montreal.

As to pending inquiries, no details can be given, but it may be said that there are two inquiries in advanced stages and a considerable number of preliminary inquiries, which may or may not lead to formal inquiries, that are under way in regard to other matters. In addition, the commission is receiving and dealing with the usual number of week to week complaints and inquiries, which are disposed of without leading to formal investigations. While the responsibility for the three prosecutions that have been mentioned rests with the counsel who have been appointed to conduct them, necessary consultations with such counsel and preparation of material for their use have been taking up a large proportion of the time of several members of the staff.

With regard to the second question my hon. friend mentioned, that is an export industry whose operations in the United States do not fall within the purview of our act: Without expressing an official opinion, I might say that having regard to the general shortage of newsprint in the world at large, and the very great demand for it, it would not have been surprising had the price gone higher than it has, on the basis of supply and demand alone.

Mr. Knowles: I take it from the minister's answer to the first question that the setting up of this commission that is considering possible changes in the act is not being allowed to interfere with the normal work of the branch.

Mr. Garson: I am glad my hon. friend raised that point. There is no interference with the work of this board at all. In the first place the commission is composed of men who are entirely outside the branch. They are all eminent men. Dr. Mackintosh is, in my personal opinion, the leading economist in Canada. Professor Maurice Lamontagne, is one of the leading younger economists. Mr. Justice MacQuarrie is from the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, and the other gentleman is Mr. Curtis, the dean of the university of British Columbia law school. I do not believe it would be possible to get four better men to conduct an inquiry of this sort. Their terms of reference are very wide, and no restriction is imposed upon the commission in any way. No specific matters have been referred to them. What we want is their opinion, after a careful examination, as to what, if any, changes could be made in the act to improve its operation.

144. To provide for the revision, classification and consolidation of the public general statutes of Canada, $75,000.

Mr. Fleming: Could the minister tell us what progress is being made with the revision of the statutes?

Mr. Garson: Progress in matters of this kind is never quite as rapid as one would hope. On the whole we regard it as satisfactory. Some of the products, not so much of the commission itself, but of the work which is being done by Mr. Driedger in the drafting and consolidation of statutes, have come before this house from time to time.

Mr. Fleming: The minister has not indicated when he expects the work to be completed. My recollection is that when Mr. Ilsley obtained authority from the house to undertake this consolidation he indicated that the task would cover about three years. I am speaking from memory now, but that must have been two years ago. Can the minister indicate when we may expect completion?

Mr. Garson: I believe, Mr. Chairman, that by the time the work is finally completed, Mr. Ilsley's prophecy will have proven to be a little bit on the conservative side.

Mr. Fleming: What do you mean by "conservative"?

Mr. Garson: His estimate of time will have proven to be too small. I should think it will take not less than two years from the present time to complete this task.

Item agreed to.

145. To provide for the revision of the Criminal Code, $50,000.

Mr. Fleming: What progress is being made with the revision of the Criminal Code and when may we expect completion of the task?

Mr. Garson: We would expect that in not less than two years.

Penitentiaries—

146. Administration of the office of the commissioner of penitentiaries, including $35,000 for grants to recognized prisoners' aid societies, as may be approved by the governor in council, $263,430.

Mr. Bryce: When the minister's estimates were up last year, I believe I asked him about the quota for prisons. I explained to him that I thought the quota for a prison should be something like the crew on the Queen Elizabeth, it should always be fully staffed in case of a riot or breakaway. The minister told me the quota was 80 per cent, and it has been increased. By how much has it been increased?

Mr. Garson: I have not that answer at the moment, but I can secure it and give it to my friend before the committee rises.

Mr. Bryce: Then I asked the minister about the hours and wages last year. I asked about the working week. He told me that it was under active consideration. I think those were the words he used. Can he tell me what progress he has made with regard to giving the custodians and the guards at the penitentiaries in Canada a 44-hour week?

Mr. Garson: We can report progress on that.

Mr. Knowles: Conservative progress.

Mr. Fleming: Ask leave to sit again.

Mr. Bryce: Am I to understand from the minister—

Mr. Casselman: You understand that you do not get any information.

Mr. Bryce: It is a bad example for a government department to have men working 51 hours a week when other departments of the civil service are working 40 hours a week. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. I do not think that is fair, and I hope that the minister will speed up that action. These men are as much entitled to a 44-hour week as anybody else. They are asking only for a 44-hour week.

Mr. Garson: I might reply to my hon. friend that the progress we are reporting is this. The necessary employees to put this reduction in working hours into effect has been authorized by the government and we are gradually hiring them now, so that in due course the reduction will be put into effect.

Mr. Bryce: Has the minister provided enough money in the estimates in order to take care of that?

Mr. Garson: Yes. As a matter of fact, it is already in effect in about three penitentiaries.

Mr. Bryce: Is Stony Mountain included?

Mr. Knowles: Has the minister ever been there?

Mr. Garson: I am not quite certain as to whether it is in effect in Stony Mountain but I will get that information.

Mr. Bryce: If it is not, will you see that it is?

Mr. Garson: I certainly will.

Mr. Bryce: I talked to the minister some time ago about the overtime. As to these men in the penitentiary, the custodians, guards and so on, if they work three hours they get paid for it. But if they work two and a half hours each day they do not get paid for any overtime. That is a grievance they have and I think it should be corrected.

Mr. Garson: I think my hon. friend is quite right in the statements that he makes but he just states part of the truth. They do not get paid for overtime but they get for their own use compensatory time to replace this overtime.

Mr. Bryce: I may be wrong about that, Mr. Chairman, but they do not get compensatory time, as I understand it, unless they work three hours continuously. So if they work two and a half hours, they do not get paid for it.

Mr. Garson: That is right.

Mr. Bryce: If they get two and a half hours' extra work each day, they do not get paid for it. I think the minister should look into that matter. Then as to the wages, I have raised the problem with regard to these fellows' wages before. This new commission has been set up and I think it is a good commission; they are doing a good job. But you are asking a higher calibre of intelligence and better qualifications than you ever did before. In the past you paid them street-cleaners' wages. They still get $60 a year less than the man that delivers letters. I do not say that the man who is delivering letters is getting too much; far from it. But these fellows should be getting the same; that is, another $60 a year. Forty per cent of them still are at these low wages. I think the minister should look into that matter too. Can the minister tell the committee something about the houses that have been built in different parts of Canada for the penitentiary employees, and the rents charged at the different places?

Mr. Garson: I might take a place that my hon. friend, I am quite sure, will be particularly interested in because it is in his own constituency. At Stony Mountain we have built twenty houses within the last eighteen months to two years. Those houses cost approximately $9,000 and they are rented for $35 a month.

Mr. Bryce: How does that compare, as to rent, with the houses at St. Vincent de Paul or Kingston?

Mr. Garson: The houses that will be used by the different penitentiary personnel of course will not all be of the same age. Some of them, such as those at Stony Mountain, were constructed within the last one and a half or two years, and others are much older. As to the rents that are charged for them, we try to make them comparable, having regard to the difference in age, the difference in quality and the like.

Mr. Bryce: I want to know how they compare. Let us take, for example, a house with three rooms and a kitchen. It does not matter whether it was built ten years ago or last year. Take, for instance, a three-room house or a four-room house at the different penitentiaries. How do the rents compare?

Mr. Garson: It would be obviously impossible for me, Mr. Chairman, to make comparisons of the houses at all the penitentiaries in Canada. But taking again one in which I am sure my hon. friend would be particularly interested, these houses at Stony Mountain are six-room houses, fully modern in every way, having been built within the last two years. They cost $9,000 and they are rented at $35 a month. We think that is a fair deal for the employees.

Mr. Bryce: I do not think that the minister has just answered my question. I am trying to get a comparison between the different penitentiaries, because I have had a great many complaints about these houses. I do not want to condemn the houses until I can get the facts from the minister and weigh them for myself. I know that the minister must have had some complaints about them.

Mr. Garson: No, I have not had any complaints. Might I ask my hon. friend to specify what ones he is complaining about? Then perhaps we could tell him what the type of house was, the rent and so on. But if he just states a question in general, it is difficult to answer it. What ones are you complaining about particularly?

Mr. Bryce: What I want to get at is this. The minister tells me that they charge $35 a month for the houses at Stony Mountain. What do you charge for the same kind of house at St. Vincent de Paul?

Mr. Garson: We have not any of the same kind of house at St. Vincent de Paul.

Mr. Bryce: Have you nothing by means of which to make a comparison?

Mr. Garson: These ones we are talking about at Stony Mountain have all been built within the last one and a half or two years. As I indicated before, not all these houses at all the penitentiaries are of the same age or of the same quality; nor are they alike in many respects. So that if my hon. friend has a complaint to make about some specific house, if he would tell us what penitentiary he is talking about and what type of house it is, we shall be glad to give him the figure as to the rent, what kind of house it is and the like.

Mr. Bryce: To stop any argument about it, can the minister supply me with the rent and the number of rooms in the houses at the different penitentiaries?

Mr. Garson: Not out of my head tonight, but I shall be glad to do so later.

Mr. Bryce: I do not ask for it tonight.

Mr. Garson: Certainly I will let you have it.

Mr. Bryce: You will let me have that?

Mr. Garson: Certainly.

Mr. Bryce: Then I will have that information.

Mr. Garson: I shall be glad to do that for you.

Item agreed to.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Privy Council office—

277. To provide for expenses of the royal commission on national development in the arts, letters and sciences, $175,000.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Will the Prime Minister say something about this?

Mr. St. Laurent: I understand that the royal commission has practically finished its public hearings with the exception of those that are to take place in Newfoundland, and that they are leaving for Newfoundland on July 6. I further understand that the work of preparing the narrative part of the report has reached an advanced stage, and that the commissioners have been working very steadily and continuously at the consideration of the recommendations that it will be proper to make in that report whilst supervising the furtherance of the narrative part of the report.

I hope that the report will be available in the early fall. Of course that is a hope, but the conversations I have had with members of the commission have led me to hope that we might expect that sometime in October we can get this report. I know the members of the commission have found the work very interesting; but they are men and women who have other important duties; and they feel that it will be desirable for them to discharge their responsibilities in this connection just as expeditiously as will be compatible with the purpose of a job which they wish to be one that will be helpful to the Canadian people and a credit to themselves.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Can the Prime Minister give us any special reason for the substantial increase in cost? Was the scope extended from that originally intended?

Mr. St. Laurent: The general scope was not extended, but it was found by the commissioners as they went along that they would expedite their work by employing a larger staff than they had when they started out, and by getting special studies made by ladies and gentlemen who they felt were qualified to make those special studies for them.

Mr. Fleming: In view of the importance of the report may I ask if when it is printed the Prime Minister will send copies to the members without waiting to table the report at the next session?

Mr. St. Laurent: That is a matter which will receive consideration. The public will be anxious to get the report, and we will be anxious to act in such a way as will not incur displeasure from the public.

Item agreed to.

Federal district commission—

279. Expenses of the national capital planning committee, $100,000.

Mr. Fleming: Will the Prime Minister give us a brief report of what progress is being made with the national capital project?

Mr. St. Laurent: Hon. members will recall that a preliminary report was made on the plan last year. I will just say in a general way that it is to be a master plan to indicate what would be the desirable things to have done for the purpose of a convenient national capital for a larger population than Canada has today, without its being intended to carry out the project in any short number of years. It is designed more particularly to prevent the doing of things that might have to be undone to achieve the ultimate implementation of the plan.

I understand that the final report of the Greber commission is for a large part now in the hands of the printer and will be available quite soon. Hon. members will recall that in the preliminary plan one of the first things suggested was the building of this bridge over the canal and the railway lines to try and avoid some of the congestion in this part of the city, and that is now under way. An arrangement has been arrived at with the city of Ottawa whereby its contribution to that project will be $300,000 and the federal district commission will provide the rest of the costs of the bridge. The contract for the bridge has been let, and that is preparatory to the other project of trying to do away with the railway tracks that come into the centre of the city, which it is felt contribute materially to the congestion which I am sure all hon. members have noticed is quite serious. I noticed it not more than two and a half hours ago when I had to go out to Government House. I thought I had provided ample time, twenty minutes, to get there, but I got there ten minutes late because of the traffic conditions.

Mr. Knowles: Look at the trouble you are going to have when you live out that way?

Mr. St. Laurent: Well, if there is no more rapid progress than has been made there is some chance of there being an improvement in conditions that will relieve traffic.

There has been and there is being constant progress made, but it is designed to keep pace with the appropriations that are provided by parliament for the implementation of the plan.

One subject that is still under discussion results from the declaration made by the Minister of Finance. Everybody knows that the city of Ottawa wants a new city hall. The Minister of Finance said that, if they placed the city hall on one of these sites that the plan indicates as proper sites for permanent public buildings, the federal district commission would contribute to the cost of the city hall.

There is no desire to have the city hall go on one of these sites, because it is felt that ultimately they will be required for buildings devoted to public purposes. If the city of Ottawa chooses—and it is still under discussion, I understand—to erect an office building for a city hall elsewhere, that would not interfere with the ultimate implementation of the plan; it would not interest the federal district commission. This is one of the matters that are taking up some of the time of the federal district commission. There is another, the acquisition of land for the relocating of railway lines and sidings. That is proceeding. Another matter that has occupied their attention for the purpose of creating a feeling throughout the whole country of its interest in the national capital was the preparation and exhibition of the model which has been shown throughout the country and which has been seen by a very large number of Canadians and certainly has had a tendency to make them more interested in the capital city of the nation.

There are a great many things that will be done—not all at once, but successively—that are engaging attention. One is the selection of a site for a proper national gallery. The other evening hon. members expressed the hope that more convenient arrangements would be made to display and even to increase the treasures which have accumulated in the Canadian national gallery. I know the governors of the gallery are discussing with the federal district commission the selection of a site where a new gallery could be provided.

These are all matters which will, of course, be brought individually before parliament, as soon as they are ready for execution.

Mr. Noseworthy: What provision is being made so that hundreds of thousands of visitors to parliament hill in Ottawa may have a glimpse of that model?

Mr. St. Laurent: I understand work is being done to it to make it more complete. There was a most interesting suggestion in one of the Ottawa newspapers recently that during the summer months it should be on exhibition in these parliament buildings. That suggestion by the newspaper is receiving consideration.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Would the Prime Minister refresh our memories—and perhaps I should know—as to just where the powers and responsibilities lie from now on. Is it wholly in the federal district commission? The Prime Minister has referred to a further report as to the over-all plan to be produced this autumn and which, I think he said, would be distributed. To whom is it to be distributed? Is the matter of planning and execution wholly in the hands of the commission, so that all that rests with us is from time to time to vote the amounts required?

Mr. St. Laurent: There is a national planning commission. The architect employed by that commission is Mr. Greber, who has a staff assisting him. Mr. Greber's work goes to the national planning board and they report it to the federal district commission. The federal district commission reports it to the governor in council, and the Prime Minister reports it to the House of Commons. The real control lies in the fact that, unless it is something that meets with the approval of the House of Commons, it could not proceed. The house is called upon each year to provide an appropriation for its implementation, and it could make its displeasure known.

I suggest that provides pretty effective control over the progressive implementation of the plan.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): As it is we are now asked to vote $2,500,000. I understand that is toward a fund which is accumulating and will be used for the carrying out of the plan. Would it be possible in future to have something in the nature of a progress statement—and when I say "progress" I am not referring to the actual work, but rather to progress in what is contemplated. We would have from time to time in that way some information as to just what stage we have reached when we are asked to vote money.

Mr. St. Laurent: There is an annual report filed with the governor in council and tabled in parliament.

Item agreed to.

Federal district commission—

280. To authorize payment of the third instalment to a special account in the consolidated revenue fund, known as the national capital fund, established under vote No. 809, Appropriation Act, No. 4, 1947-48, $2,500,000.

Mr. Knowles: Has any of this money put into this fund been spent, or is the full amount on hand? I take it the total amount that has been put in is $7,500,000, or at least this vote will bring it to that amount.

Mr. St. Laurent: I am sorry I have not the capital account here. I have information with me respecting receipts and expenditures during the course of the last year. However, I have not the information as to the capital account showing what amounts of the three grants of $2,500,000 have been expended, and what amounts still remain.

Mr. Knowles: I take it that some of the money has been spent out of the capital fund, as well as the running expenses we voted in the last item?

Mr. St. Laurent: I think that is correct.

Mr. Fleming: What were the expenditures last year? I understood the Prime Minister to say that he had with him an account of the expenditures made against the national capital fund.

Mr. St. Laurent: No, if I gave that impression I was wrong. I have expenditures of the maintenance vote of the statutory sum of $300,000, and of the expenses of the national committee. I have not the expenditures made out of the capital grant of $2,500,000.

Mr. Fleming: Are expenditures being made out of that fund or is it being accumulated? Apparently this is the third of three annual instalments of $2,500,000 each.

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

Mr. St. Laurent: I shall have to secure that information. I can get a statement for the hon. member as to what capital expenditures have been made out of these grants. I have not the information with me.

Item agreed to.

Governor general and lieutenant governors—

130. Office of the secretary to the governor general, including the salary of the secretary to the governor general at $7,600 additional to salary authorized by R.S.C. chapter 182, $117,065.

Mr. Knowles: There is one question I should like to ask the Prime Minister, and I am asking it under this item, not because I wish to highlight the particular case referred to here, but because I have in mind a number of other cases similar to it. I refer particularly to the comment of the Auditor General with relation to items in the estimates such as this which legislate and in some cases have the effect of varying the provisions of statutes. If I may say so, I note that the Prime Minister has been responsible for tidying up a number of things like this, and it would seem to me that the suggestion of the Auditor General would appeal to him.

The Auditor General points out that in this instance, as with the salaries of the civil service commissioners, the statute sets the salaries and then an additional amount is provided by this kind of item. The Auditor General suggests that the proper course to follow would be to amend the appropriate statute. I wonder if the Prime Minister agrees with the Auditor General and with me on that point?

Mr. St. Laurent: I certainly do. I shall be happy when we can arrange things so that we shall be asking parliament to legislate under the appropriate acts.

Mr. Knowles: To show my appreciation of the comment just made by the Prime Minister I shall not raise the other cases I had in mind. I express the hope, however, that he will have his officials look at all the items referred to in the Auditor General's memorandum.

Mr. St. Laurent: We have already discussed these matters, and hope to do what the hon. member has suggested should be done in the way of cleaning up some of these practices, which, while not reprehensible, are not the way we hope to be doing them in due course.

Item agreed to.

LEGISLATION

House of Commons—

175. General administration—estimates of the clerk, $873,335.

Mr. Knowles: I should like to ask one or two questions of His Honour, who I believe is piloting these particular estimates through the committee. I should like to inquire whether the practice brought in last session of giving a week's pay to members of the sessional staff at the end of the session will be continued this session. At the same time perhaps His Honour can state whether this will be a permanent practice.

Second, has any consideration been given to revising the salaries of employees of the house whose salaries were not revised in the last two or three revisions that have taken place? I realize that this is something that involves a relationship between the House of Commons and the civil service commission, but hon. members will recall that once in a while these reports come before us for approval. There are certain categories of employees and certain individual employees whose salaries were not increased on those occasions, and I wonder if consideration will be given to their cases.

Third and last, is any consideration being given to changing the basis upon which sessional employees work? Quite a number of our employees are on annual salary, some being required to be here the whole year, while others are required to be here only while parliament is in session. There are other employees, however, and I have in mind particularly the stenographers who work for us, who are employed only during the session and for such additional period as may be necessary, and who have no other income for the remainder of the year.

I have suggested before that they be put on an annual basis, and in saying that I do not suggest that the annual salary should be unreasonably high, considering the fact that they would be working only a certain number of months in the year. It seems to me that consideration might be given to providing some reasonable basis upon which they would be paid an annual salary and in turn required to work for the time that we need their services, just as is the case with our good friends the Hansard reporters whom we are working to death today.

Mr. Speaker: In regard to the first question, I may say that the extra week's salary was given at the close of the first session of this parliament when we were approaching the Christmas season, and it was felt that we could be a little more generous at that season of the year than we had been at the close of other sessions. We felt that this session reasonable notice had been given to the sessional employees of when the session might end, and for that reason additional salary after the close of the session has not been provided. I might say that a number of the sessional employees are being retained for three or four days after the close of the session.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre then asked whether there was to be a revision of the salaries of employees who had not received an increase. I can assure him and the committee that this matter is receiving the attention of those responsible, and I expect that a further report will be brought in next session. That, of course, does not include all the employees who did not get an increase, but there are certain employees who we feel should receive an increase as soon as possible.

The third question was with regard to setting up a permanent establishment of sessional employees. I do not know whether the hon. member intended to include all sessional employees in the house, but he did refer to the stenographers. Many more stenographers are required during the session than between sessions, and it would be difficult, and I do not know whether it would be practicable, to have a great many stenographers around the building during a recess with nothing to do. I realize the difficult position in which some of them find themselves, having worked here for three or four months and then probably not securing work elsewhere. The matter is receiving consideration, but I cannot say that we are near to reaching a solution to the question. I would say, however, that we hope to set up a permanent establishment with a definite number of stenographers who will be retained throughout the year.

Hon. members realize that between sessions members come to Ottawa and need stenographic service; therefore it is necessary to have a number of stenographers available. The matter is receiving our careful attention and we hope that at the end of another session we shall have something definite to report.

Mr. Knowles: I want to thank the Speaker for the answers he has given to my questions. I thank him particularly for the answers to the second and third questions. I am sorry that the answer to the first was in effect in the negative. It seemed to me that the gesture made at the end of the last session was a reasonable one. I recall that at Christmas time we often express the hope that the spirit of Christmas will last the year round. It would seem to me that the same good will we were prepared to show to our employees just before Christmas should be shown just before Dominion day, especially at a time when their employment is being terminated. I will not extend the argument, except to express the hope that it may yet be considered. Indeed, if no other way can be found

I hope it may be possible to keep the sessional staff employed for a few days after the conclusion of the session. After all, there is a lot of work to be cleaned up.

I wish to make one other comment about the third matter I raised, namely, a yearly basis for the stenographers. There is one point of clarification I should make in case I did not make it clear before. I was not suggesting that we should keep a large staff of stenographers around the building for whom there would be nothing to do during the months when the members are not here. I suggested that they be put on the same basis as the Hansard reporters. We pay them annual salaries. We require them to be here when we need them, and I think they earn their annual salaries during that time, without doubt. During the months when members are not here they are free to go on holidays, brush up their shorthand, do court reporting or whatever they wish. My suggestion was that the stenographers might be put on the same basis. I shall not ask for a further answer tonight, but I thought I should clarify that point, particularly in view of the fact that the Speaker has indicated these matters are under consideration.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Mr. Chairman, I hope the remarks I am about to make will be under the right item. If they are not, I crave your indulgence, because even a fat man must eat occasionally.

The matter I intend to speak about concerns something as to which, if the rules of the house permitted it, I would move a motion and if necessary divide the house thereon. Unfortunately the rules do not permit me to move a motion involving money matters. I hope that I may spare the blushes of the Speaker in what I am about to say, because I intend to say something later with which he may not entirely agree. If I were able to, the motion I would make is that we should supply our Speaker with at least $5,000 per year as an entertainment allowance. As one of those who has enjoyed his hospitality, I would be in favour of such a move.

That is not the basic reason for what I have in mind. After all, we as members of the House of Commons can only act or speak through Mr. Speaker. During the last session and the present one, in fact ever since he has been Speaker, on occasions when persons of prominence from other nations have visited us, he has discharged his responsibility better than any other individual I know, and I mean all of us. He has permitted some of us, not chosen by lot but no doubt on some basis of that kind, to go into his chambers and meet these delightful people. I am sorry I was away the other day when he had a social affair in the railway committee room. I, who know something about the cost of entertainment even in my little two by four room, know that that function cost him plenty of his own money.

We are the only country I know of—and I mean civilized countries—that does not make such an allowance. Taking the United Kingdom, United States and Canada, we are the only country of those three where the Speaker of the lower chamber—and I use that word with great respect to what we sometimes call the upper chamber—is not provided with an entertainment allowance. We give him an allowance of $3,000 in lieu of a residence. I am sure that he spent two-thirds of that amount in one entertainment which he provided for us in the railway committee room of the House of Commons. What I am anxious to do is to assure the government that in another year they will receive all the support I can possibly give them if they will do something about my suggestion.

What are we? Where are our instincts of what is right, what is dignified and what is decent hospitality? Someone may say: Go ahead and put up your own money; that is all right. We know that things like that are utterly impossible, because in a group like ours the collector is always out money at the end of the road. I have collected dozens of times, and I know. I think, Mr. Chairman—and I say this with the utmost sincerity—that if we have any respect for ourselves we will permit the gentleman who is our leader in this house and who speaks for us to do the decent thing so that he may maintain his own dignity and we as members may maintain ours. I suggest that in another year something along that line should be done. I am quite prepared to name amounts, but that makes it commercial and I do not want to do so. I do not think we appreciate the things which the Speaker has done for us during the present session.

I turn now to something else, and in saying this I want to make it plain that I am not referring to any individual who spoke today or yesterday or anything of that kind. We have a rule that speeches may not be read in the House of Commons. In saying that I am not talking about any individual who reads a speech, Mr. Chairman. If this practice which is growing so fast continues, then this place will lose its value as a place in which contributions are made by individual members for the good of the country. I am going to go this far; if this practice continues we would be infinitely better off to adopt the rule of the congress of the United States whereby a man just files his speech on the congressional records. He puts in his laughter, his hear hear's, his chuckles, loud cheers and all that. If we are going to read speeches, let us at least be frank with one another and with the people.

When I came to Ottawa I know I had a vision of a great many people back home who would be interested in what I said. I soon discovered that was not true, and I learned my lesson well. The net result has been that I have never sent out copies of any speech I ever made to anyone in the whole Dominion of Canada. I could have paid the $15 per thousand, or I could have paid the extra $1 to have my photograph on the copies, but that would ruin any speech so I did not touch it at all. I say that this is the place where we may express our views, and it will lose its value if there be any doubt about the views we express being our own views. When we are allowed to read speeches in this chamber, no one can be certain we are expressing our own views. I think it infinitely better to adopt the Washington rule of filing the speeches. Members can buy their copies afterwards, and have their photograph on them to send home. They are marked then that they were filed. I used to picture myself addressing a crowded house and crowded galleries, but never had I had more than fifty per cent above a quorum at any time that I have said anything. I am not suggesting that the Speaker has not been fair. I know he relaxes the rules and properly so, for maiden speeches. No one can argue against that. In the new session, whenever it comes, let us express our views with the greatest latitude, but let us not lead people into thinking we are expressing our views when we are simply reading from a magazine.

We are not allowed to read newspapers. I have seen better speeches in many newspapers than I have ever made, and better than I have heard in this House of Commons. I do not think we should steal the thunder of these newspapermen. Now they are called columnists, and they all have bylines. They all get credit in the newspaper for their material, and they should get credit if I, for example, use their material in a speech.

In conclusion I should like to say that our present Speaker, in fairness, in good judgment, in good humour, is the best person I can think of for the position. I am sure that the whole House of Commons will wish him well in this trip he is taking abroad, I hope at the expense of the British government. He is such a modest fellow he may say: "I have $18 left in my house allowance, so I shall chip in with that". I hope he never does that.

Mr. Fair: Mr. Chairman, as one of the members in a distant corner of the house, I can endorse the very kind words expressed by the member for Calgary West with regard to our Speaker. We have no complaint as to his fairness. I believe he treats all sections of the house with equality, so that he can rest assured that we in this corner can endorse the remarks made by the member for Calgary West.

There is one small matter I should like to mention at this time. Those of us who come to the buildings fairly early in the morning meet a number of charwomen leaving the building. I understand that the most of them are widows who find it necessary to work. I have heard that some fairly well-to-do married women, whose husbands have good jobs, are also employed. The general consensus is that these positions are supposed to be reserved for women who are in need. I understand they draw about $30 a month. They arrive here at six o'clock in the morning, in good weather and bad, and clean our offices. Many of these women have been here for twenty or twenty-five years, but before they are of pensionable age many of them are unable to continue this work. Then they do not know where they are going to get the money to replace what they have lost. I understand that no pension of any kind is provided for them. I am wondering whether something could not be done. Many mornings I meet these women, and I feel that some of them should not be here. They should be at home enjoying a long holiday in the evening of life. Perhaps while everyone is in a good humour something might be done to help these women.

Mr. Speaker: I believe I should say a few words, first in reply to the hon. member for Battle River with respect to the wages paid charwomen. They receive $2 per day, and I believe they work for a few hours in the morning. If that amount is not considered sufficient, the matter can be reviewed, and I can assure him it will be reviewed.

I should also like at this time to thank both the member for Battle River and the member for Calgary West for the complimentary remarks which they have made about me, particularly the remarks made by the member for Calgary West. His remarks were, of course, greatly exaggerated, and as he said I was somewhat embarrassed. I want to assure the house that I appreciate the splendid co-operation which I have received from all members on both sides of the house during the time you have honoured me with this very important position. It has been a pleasure for me to act in this very high office, but if I had not had the co-operation which I have received the position would have been a difficult one indeed.

I do not recall all that has been said by the member for Calgary West, but I can assure him, and the other members, that I shall obtain a number of additional copies of Hansard and hand them to my children, so that they in turn can hand them to their children.

As this will probably be the last night that the House of Commons will sit this session, I feel that I should like to shake hands with all members, especially in view of the very kind remarks which have been made and the applause which greeted those remarks this evening. At the close of this session I hope the members of the house and of the press gallery will come to my chambers so that I may shake hands with them before we leave for our homes.

[Later:]

Mr. St. Laurent: May I have the unanimous consent of the committee to give the information I was unable to give a few minutes ago when the estimates of the federal district commission were being considered.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. St. Laurent: I apologize for not having had the figures at that time. Of the $5 million which had previously been placed in this national capital fund, $500,435 has been expended to date for the acquisition of land for the industrial area and for the railway cut-off lines and freight lines. That is the amount that has so far been expended of the $5 million provided in this national capital fund.

As to vote 725, of $1, it is to provide authority to make expenditures for the replacement of the railway lines; and those expenditures will naturally have to come out of this national capital fund, as will the cost of the bridge for which the contract has just been let.

Mr. Graydon: May I just raise one other question with respect to this legislation item. As one who has been somewhat discouraged over the progress that we have made when we had committees set up previously to try to improve the rules and procedure of the house, I want to say this. Perhaps another try ought to be made at it. I despaired of finding some common denominator by which committees can find a way of recommending something worth while to make an improvement in our house procedure and rules. But perhaps we should not give up. The last time we had a committee—I believe it was a year or so ago—a good deal of work was done in connection with it. We were able to come to agreement on certain things, but they were not important things as to which we found common ground to work on.

With a new parliament, however, and with many new members in it, those members themselves must see great difficulties in connection with our rules and procedure and must be aware of great improvements that could be made. In private conversation from time to time some hon. members have expressed to me, as they have to each other, a desire to see something done with regard to this matter. The matter of the sitting hours of the house is, of course, one of the problems and is something with which I think everyone is pretty much dissatisfied. The hours from three o'clock to eleven o'clock, with two hours recess from six o'clock to eight o'clock, make a day that is quite wearying and quite trying for most members when the session goes on for a long period of time.

I have made this suggestion before, and I am going to make it again, although I know that there are great difficulties in carrying it out. It is that, somehow or other, we ought to be able to start our sitting at one o'clock and end at seven o'clock. I think that would be a sensible kind of arrangement. I know that the Prime Minister and the cabinet will see some objections to that procedure, inasmuch as it cuts into their time for cabinet council meetings. Nevertheless, if a committee were set up next session, and if we made an aggressive attempt to try to straighten out these kinks in our procedure, I think that would meet with the approval of every member of the house. I suggest that on that committee, which should not be too large, we ought to have some of the new members who have not been in the house for a long time and who have not got into any grooves or ruts. Between those with more experience and those who have come in fresh, I think that we ought to be able, at the next session, to do something to improve our procedure and to modernize the rules of the house generally.

I make the suggestion that Mr. Speaker, the clerk of the house and the assistant clerk, if they have any time at all in between the two sessions, might perhaps give some thought in an informal way to some of the things that could be dealt with by a committee like that. Then if the Prime Minister could see his way clear at the beginning of the session to set up a small committee, we might get down to business and make one final attempt to see if we could not find some common ground whereby we could have some improvements made in our rules of procedure governing the way in which our business is conducted.

Mr. Speaker: I can assure the hon. member for Peel that I too have felt that there should be a revision of the rules, and I know that a number of other hon. members have had the same feeling. The question was raised previously this evening by the hon. member for Calgary West but I was so overcome by the complimentary remarks he made about me that I neglected to refer to the point he raised with respect to the reading of speeches. I took the attitude which he mentioned, of allowing considerable latitude this session and last session to members who were in the house for the first time. But now that most of us have been in the house for at least two sessions, probably the house would support me if next session I tried to enforce the rule respecting the reading of speeches.

Item agreed to.

House of Commons—

178. To provide hereby, notwithstanding anything contained in the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act or the provisions of the Senate and House of Commons Act respecting the independence of parliament, for the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund to each member of the House of Commons appointed by the governor in council to be a parliamentary assistant (which appointment shall not render such member ineligible or disqualify him as a member of the House of Commons) to assist a minister of the crown in such manner and to such extent as the minister may determine and to represent his department in the House of Commons in the absence of the minister therefrom, a salary of four thousand dollars per annum and pro rata for any period less than a year, $56,000.

Mr. Cruickshank: I should like to say a word in connection with this item. I happen to have the privilege of sitting in the midst of nine parliamentary assistants. I am right in the centre of them. I should like to move either of two motions. I should like to move either that the item be reduced to $1 or that the hon. member for Fraser Valley get $4,000 for writing their speeches and telling them what to say.

Item agreed to.

House of Commons—

179. To provide for an allowance to the deputy chairman of committees, $2,000.

Mr. Knowles: May I just say that I am sure that members in all parts of the house are happy to vote for this item; and if there were time there would be a great many well-deserved tributes to the recipient.

Mr. Cruickshank: By all except one.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Public debt charges—

97. Commission for payment of interest on public debt, payment of premiums on government of Canada sterling securities, services of fiscal agents, London, registrar's fees, etc., $406,100.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Chairman, when we came to the end of the first consideration of the finance estimates, my understanding was that we had just come to item 96. I told the minister that I wanted to ask a question as to the amount of $6 million shown under the heading of "appropriation not required for 1950-51". I had sent word to the minister in advance, and I hope perhaps I may get some details of that amount.

Mr. Sinclair: This item for the amount not required is with regard to the payments in respect of flour contained in wheat which was paid to the millers under the wartime act. That was cancelled on March 23 of last year, but last year's estimates had been prepared of course before that time, and therefore there was an item in last year of $6 million, which was never used. We are just drawing attention to the fact that that item is no longer in the estimates.

While I am on my feet perhaps I should answer the questions which the hon. member for Lake Centre asked the Minister of Finance when the estimates were up last, and which the minister promised to answer. The first question is to be found on page 4073 of Hansard. He asked the names of the various representatives in the province of Saskatchewan of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. It is a fairly lengthy list, and with the permission of the committee I should like to include it in the record. The list follows:

Statement A

Office of the Registrar of the Appeal Court, the F.C.A. Act, 1943, Regina, Saskatchewan, April 1, 1949 to March 31, 1950

	Total salary
C. W. Hoffman, registrar	$3,600.00
Mrs. H. McPhaden, stenographer	1,884.00

Fees paid to official receivers in the province of Saskatchewan for the fiscal year April 1, 1949, to March 31, 1950

M. C. R. Batten	$ 25.00
H. J. Bell	50.00
C. E. Bradley	25.00
J. M. Bright	25.00
W. G. E. Campbell	....
M. W. Coxworth	....
L. G. Dafoe	....
P. J. Dixson	40.00
G. Epp	40.00
A. N. Forcier	50.00
W. O. Fraser	....
J. E. Friesen	75.00
J. N. Gale	....
D. C. Gerrand	....
J. M. Goldenberg	....
E. D. Hancock	....

Fees paid to official receivers in the province of Saskatchewan for the fiscal year April 1, 1949, to March 31, 1950—Concluded

E. B. Hutcherson	$ 75.00
J. R. MacDonald	75.00
H. MacKay	390.00
J. A. MacMillan	....
C. B. McGregor	....
S. H. Miskiman	....
D. J. Mitchell	25.00
H. A. Rutherford	75.00
A. R. Smith	....
C. Stackhouse	....
G. S. Thompson	....
E. G. Waterman	....
Mrs. J. F. Watt	....
S. Windsor	....

In his next question he asked for particulars as to the number of cases in which forfeitures had taken place under the Foreign Exchange Control Act in each of the provinces during last year, and the number of cases in which there has been a return of moneys taken. Our records are not kept by provinces. I have here a return of the disposition of seizures in the country in 1949 and for the first five months in 1950, which I would also like to put on the record. It reads as follows:

Statement B

Disposition of Seizures of $100 and Under

1949	No.	U.S. dollars	Canadian dollars
Cases dealt with	2,657	$68,465	$14,300
Seizures maintained	1,097	22,707	10,236
Seizures returned	1,560	45,757	4,064
Per cent maintained	41	33	71
1950—January to May
Cases dealt with	545	$15,058	$ 3,144
Seizures maintained	233	5,019	2,090
Seizures returned	312	10,039	1,054
Per cent maintained	42	33	66

The third question asked was:

What was the total amount paid in legal fees last year?

It may be found at page 4082 of Hansard. The answer is as follows:

Statement C

A. Gervais, Murray Bay, P.Q.	$6,501.63
F. Monet, Ottawa (Includes some accounts of 1946, 1947, 1948 and 1949)	5,465.35
J. R. Johnson, Toronto	5,065.80

At page 4092 of Hansard the hon. member for Greenwood asked for the number of offices and the amount of space used by the wartime prices and trade board. There are 39 regional district and branch offices occupying a total of 103,591 square feet.

Item agreed to.

Payments to municipalities—

Grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes on federal property—

100. To provide for administration of the program respecting grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes on crown property outlined in the House of Commons on November 14, 1949, including grants and other payments to be made in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $1,655,000.

[Mr. Sinclair.]

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): The matter of grants to municipalities in respect of crown properties was up last November and the minister stated at that time, and it was stated again at the time of the speech from the throne, that there would be legislation. You may say that by passing this item it is legislation, but we have no legislation. The only authority we have for this is to pass this very item. I think this is a very extreme case of the kind of thing that was pointed out earlier, and which I think the Prime Minister said he would put a stop to.

Mr. Sinclair: This matter of municipal grants has occupied great attention in our department in the last two or three months because of the work of the committee which is now progressing very satisfactorily. However, because of some of the difficulties they encountered and because they felt the legislation would be better if we waited until the end of the year when they had assessed all the cities in the country which had more than four per cent and when they knew exactly the problems they would encounter, the legislation has not been introduced. One problem which was not anticipated was the matter of wear and tear on roads and snow removal in municipalities which had completely self-contained camps such as military camps. In the original statement these camps would not be included in tax computations. Nevertheless there is a loss of revenue to the municipality because of things like that. There are difficulties which are now being sorted out and it is still the intention to bring down an act, but it was felt it would be better if they waited until they had a complete survey of the problems arising out of this proposal, which is progressing very well at the moment.

Mrs. Fairclough: Will the legislation be prepared in time to be operative next year?

Mr. Sinclair: The original statement on this said that the grants would be paid from the beginning of this year. No matter when the final assessments are made the grants are retroactive to January 1, 1950.

Mrs. Fairclough: Do they apply only to those municipalities where the assessment on federal property is in excess of four per cent of the total assessment?

Mr. Sinclair: That is quite right.

Mrs. Fairclough: In what proportion are they paid, in ratio to the amount over and above the four per cent?

Mr. Sinclair: Yes, three-quarters of the normal taxation rate over four per cent; but in addition to that crown corporations make their own taxation agreements, and aside from that, in the municipalities in which they may be located—

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Are there not some special agreements in respect of large railway properties?

Mr. Sinclair: Local properties?

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Where there are large railway properties.

Mr. Sinclair: Yes, but in the regulations that is all spelled out. There are special regulations both as far as crown companies are concerned and also all municipalities where the government comes in and acquires existing property. Even though there was a doubt as to payment of taxes there on the question whether the municipality in question had more than four per cent or not, provision is made for tapering off of taxation, covered by regulations in the Canada Gazette, part II, of February 17, 1950.

Mrs. Fairclough: In arriving at the amount of the total assessment, although the crown companies make their arrangement, is their assessment included in the total assessment to arrive at the figure which would determine whether or not they are eligible?

Mr. Sinclair: No, the crown companies pay on their property in accordance with normal taxation procedure.

Mr. Knowles: Is it possible for the parliamentary assistant to say yet how many cities or municipalities in the country are likely to qualify on the basis of the formula that has been established?

Mr. Sinclair: It is not possible to say yet, but the big jobs of course have been Ottawa, Halifax, Esquimalt and Vancouver on the west coast. But out of the pattern of assessments there the branch handling it is getting that work well in hand. Of course a great number of municipalities have made applications, and each of those applications will be processed. At the present time it is hoped that the entire job will be done by the end of this year.

Mr. Adamson: When the government has used the Railway Act as a method of expropriating the properties, will the properties now come under these new amended regulations? I speak of a property in the township of Etobicoke which was expropriated by the Canadian National Railways and on which there has been a great deal of disagreement. Will these come under this act?

Mr. Sinclair: I am informed that, as far as the Canadian National Railways is concerned, the taxation agreement will have to be concluded between the municipality and the railway direct.

Mr. Knowles: Would I be correct in concluding that the cities or municipalities processed thus far have been the ones which it was believed would be sure to qualify?

Mr. Sinclair: Quite right.

Mr. Knowles: On what basis are the cities and municipalities next on the list to be processed?

Mr. Sinclair: I cannot say; but I can say that the city of Winnipeg has a high priority on the list of those about to be processed.

Mr. Higgins: What is the position of a municipality in respect of property occupied by the United States armed forces?

Mr. Sinclair: I am afraid that is a matter which will have to be answered by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): In occupied territory.

Item agreed to.

Contingencies and miscellaneous—

102. Cost of telephone service at Ottawa for all departments, $415,000.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): A question arises here which I think was raised by the Auditor General, as to whether it is a sound plan to have a telephone service all paid for by the Department of Finance, that would be covered by this amount, or whether it should not be carried by the relative departments.

Mr. Sinclair: I am informed that if each department handled its own telephone bills it would involve a great deal of detailed accounting for some large amounts, and a great deal of very small amounts, and it was thought best in the interest of economy to have one department, especially the Department of Finance, handling all the local telephone calls and exchanges.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I was not suggesting a change in it. My suggestion merely went to the point of having the departments, which I think is not the case now, carry as part of their own expense their share of that amount. I would not suggest it should be done in bits and pieces.

Mr. Sinclair: One difficulty would be the compiling of switchboard costs, because we have a main switchboard, and then we have four or five satellite switchboards which serve more than one department.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Well, I shall not pursue the matter further. I have no doubt it will be considered, and that we may get some progress next year.

Item agreed to.

General items of payroll costs including superannuation payments—

103. To provide for a government contribution to the superannuation fund in an amount equal to the estimated current payments of individual contributors in the previous fiscal year, $7,100,000.

Mr. Herridge: On June 23 last I brought the attention of the minister to a certain case in connection with a former employee of the Post Office Department who could not pay up his superannuation. In concluding his remarks the minister said he would be glad to study the situation to which I referred, and to see whether anything could be done. Is the parliamentary assistant in a position to answer my question?

Mr. Sinclair: I am sorry I did not answer that question when I answered the others. The case in question has been studied. It refers to a man who worked eight years as an employee in a revenue post office. At that time the postmaster was not a civil servant. He ran his post office on a commission basis for the government, and employed whatever staff he needed. Then that post office was made a civil service post office, so that the postmaster and the employees all came under the Civil Service Act and the Civil Service Superannuation Act. He then worked twelve years as a civil servant, employed directly by the government.

This man is in difficult circumstances, and he is now asking whether or not his eight years of service under the commission postmaster should not now be included so far as superannuation is concerned. Hon. members must realize that that would open a very wide field, because it would include within the provisions of the Civil Service Act and the Civil Service Superannuation Act people who had not been direct employees of the government. It could be extended perhaps to include employees of contractors doing work for the government. For those reasons the decision has been that his eight years of service before he became a civil servant cannot be included for pension purposes.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the last time the estimates of this department were being considered I had just entered the chamber and did not have certain files with me. I should like to ask the minister if he remembers receiving a letter from the superannuated federal civil servants in Vancouver, British Columbia, on March 3, 1948, to which he replied as follows—and I shall now quote the reply the parliamentary assistant made.

Mr. Sinclair: In 1948, of course, I was not parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Fulton: Did your view change when you got your appointment?

Mr. Knowles: I think the parliamentary assistant led with his chin that time.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): You are still a good diplomat.

Mr. Knowles: This is what the hon. member for Vancouver North, as he was then, wrote to these people:

I acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 3, drawing my attention to the difficult plight of superannuated civil servants.

I agree with you that the rise in cost of living has made pensions quite inadequate to meet living costs, and I will be very glad to do all I can in representations to the government and in the house to have this situation adjusted.

Yours sincerely,

James Sinclair

Will the parliamentary assistant give us a report of what he has done in connection with making representations to the government and in the house concerning this matter?

Mr. Sinclair: I shall be glad to do so. As I said at that time, I was a private member, and I was not as conversant perhaps with the superannuation act as I am now. But I did at that time see the minister, and the minister, as will be recalled, made a statement in which he said that while it was admitted that these people on fixed civil service retirement pensions were having difficult times in those days, it also applied to those who were on pensions from companies, and those who had planned for their old age through buying government annuities, and also all the other citizens who were not under a government civil service or pension act.

He pointed out, as the hon. member will recall, that the government of Canada had subscribed part of the cost of those pensions. I must say that his argument was that, if it was a matter of helping them, then all not civil servants who were in that position should be helped. That is the intent of the report of the committee which has just been sitting to consider old age security—to see that all people who are in this plight will secure assistance, not just those fortunate enough to have been civil servants.

I could add that my knowledge of the situation since the time I wrote that letter has inclined me to agree with the views taken by the Minister of Finance.

Item agreed to.

General items of payroll costs including superannuation payments—

104. To provide, subject to the approval of the treasury board for supplementing other votes for the payment of salaries, wages and other paylist charges, $1,000,000.

Mr. Wright: I notice that last year the amount of this vote was $20 million while this year it is only one million dollars. How much of the $20 million was spent last year, and what departments drew from this fund?

Mr. Sinclair: Of this vote of $20 million last year $6,196,671.01 was paid, the details of which are as follows:

Agriculture	$471,369.00
Chief electoral office	50,000.00
Citizenship and immigration	129,000.00
Civil Service Commission	81,000.00
External Affairs	10,000.00
Finance	634,000.00
Fisheries	8,800.00
Insurance	25,000.00
Justice	1,710.00
Labour	4,606.68
Unemployment Insurance Commission	153,475.03
Legislation—Senate	5,844.00
Legislation—House of Commons	24,000.00
Library of Parliament	2,518.00
Mines and Resources	181,622.30
National Film Board	64,805.50
National Health and Welfare	13,020.00
National Revenue	904,000.00
Post Office	2,415,500.00
Privy Council	28,000.00
Public Archives	10,000.00
Public Works	73,000.00
Secretary of State	55,220.00
Trade and Commerce	223,000.00
Transport	492,180.00
Veterans Affairs	135,000.00

Last year was a year of substantial salary revisions. It is not expected that this year the upward revision will be as great. The original estimate for last fall was a little on the low side, so we have a supplementary item for another million. So, instead of a vote of $20 million as last year, of which around $7 million was used, this year we have a total vote of about $2 million.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous grants—

108. Royal Astronomical Society of Canada, $2,000.

Mr. Adamson: This has been an active organization, and they have written to me asking that this vote be re-established. I am glad to see it here.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): It is not an astronomical amount.

Mr. Adamson: No, but the $2,000 is helpful. I would bring to the attention of the parliamentary assistant two other societies. I am not at the moment asking for any specific grant or any specific amount in their behalf. However I would ask that in his wisdom the Minister of Finance consider them. I am referring to the Arctic Institute and the Canadian Alpine Club, both of which are doing a great deal of exploration work in districts where other government agencies do not work. They operate entirely outside the regular work of any other government branch, in both topography and photography, dealing with conditions of glaciers, climatic conditions and mountaineering conditions. I would suggest that when the estimates for next year are being considered these two organizations be not forgotten for the work they are doing, gratis, in the development of our mountain and arctic areas.

Mr. Sinclair: I shall draw that to the attention of the minister.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous grants—

109. Royal Canadian Academy of Arts, $2,025.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I do not like to appear in the guise of one asking for an expenditure of more money, even though it would be just a little more. However, I would ask the parliamentary assistant to tell us what this Royal Canadian Academy of Arts, to which we subscribe only $2,025, does; and I would ask for the same information in connection with the writers foundation. We spend large sums on other things and this seems to me to be quite a small amount for what would appear to be a special purpose.

Mr. Sinclair: This amount is to help the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts which conducts art classes and makes grants to exhibitions. Then as far as the Canadian Writers Foundation is concerned, the original Canadian Authors Foundation was organized in Toronto in April, 1931, and local advisory committees were appointed across Canada. A dominion contribution was granted from 1933 to 1943 and then commenced again in 1946. In 1945 the foundation was incorporated under dominion charter and the name was changed to Canadian Writers Foundation. Its purpose is to assist needy Canadian writers.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I know the need is great and I suggest that that might be considered. A grant of $4,000 seems to be quite small for the purpose because it is rather difficult to get assistance in these matters.

Mr. Higgins: Why should these grants come under this particular department?

Mr. Sinclair: It may be because it is thought it will be harder to get a grant out of this department than out of any other.

Mr. Knowles: This may not be the proper item, but it seems to be the only place I can ask it. There was a total of $115,000 voted last year which does not appear this year and perhaps the parliamentary assistant could explain why.

Mr. Sinclair: Last year a grant of $65,000 was made to the empire press conference which was held recently in Ottawa and of course that will not be repeated this year. Last year a grant of $50,000 was made toward the Halifax bicentenary celebration, which of course is not being repeated.

Item agreed to.

Insurance—

687. Departmental administration—further amount required, $19,652.

Mr. Fleming: What is the reason for this additional vote?

Mr. Sinclair: It is due to the increased volume of business being done by the insurance companies. I might point out something which does not appear in the item, that most of this is recovered in fees from the insurance companies. Last year a total of $233,000 was recovered so that this expanded cost will be reflected in expanded revenues for inspection fees.

Mr. Adamson: Upon what basis is the assessment made on the insurance companies?

Mr. Sinclair: It is based on the cost of the actual functions performed.

Item agreed to.

Insurance—

132. Expenses of work in the interests of fire prevention, $18,165.

Mr. Adamson: May I repeat a suggestion which I made on a public works item in connection with fire prevention. This year we had in Canada two shocking fires where two communities were largely destroyed. There are other communities in Canada which are liable to be destroyed by similar holocausts. May I suggest that the government draw up a fire prevention code or fire prevention standards which would be applicable across the dominion. We have had two disasters this year and in the future we may have more and something should be done to prevent them.

Mr. Knowles: Are there only two employees in this office?

[Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood).]

Mr. Sinclair: The work done here is not similar to that done by the fire marshals of the province. The reason why the dominion fire commissioner is under the Department of Finance is that he must work closely with the fire insurance companies. His main job is to co-ordinate fire prevention work carried out by the different provincial departments. I may say that the insurance companies are very pleased with the work being done by the dominion fire commissioner. It is true that at the present time the permanent staff consists of only two people.

Mr. Knowles: Is the person now in the office of the dominion fire commissioner a permanent appointee?

Mr. Sinclair: Yes, Mr. C. A. Thomson is a permanent appointee.

Mr. Knowles: Since when?

Mr. Sinclair: I have not the exact date but for the last two or three months.

Mr. Cruickshank: I should like to congratulate the parliamentary assistant. We are proud that he comes from British Columbia. We have seen him handle the details of the budget and of these estimates and with all due deference to the other parliamentary assistants I do not think any other could handle these details as well.

An hon. Member: What do you want?

Mr. Cruickshank: I want to correct the parliamentary assistant on one thing. I was all ready to start for home this morning but he told me that a certain item had not been carried and now I am told that it has been carried.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

Housing projects—

821. To authorize the Minister of National Defence, on transfer to the Department of National Defence of works or buildings or both, constructed or converted by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the said department, to assume the obligation of the corporation to repay advances made to it in respect of the works and buildings so transferred, together with interest, in accordance with the terms of the relevant debentures delivered by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as evidence of the obligation, the corporation to be fully discharged from the said obligation to the extent that it is so assumed, $1.

Mr. Fleming: There should be some explanation of this item because it is another of those suspicious-looking one-dollar items that we should be on our guard against.

Mr. Prudham: Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation built houses as agents for the Department of National Defence. In order to make the necessary advances of money for the construction of these houses, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation raises the funds by debentures from the Department of Finance. On completion of the houses and when they are turned over to the Department of National Defence the Department of Finance takes over the debentures together with the interest which has accrued during the interval. The practice is to allow these debentures to accumulate to an amount of approximately $1 million before a transfer is made.

Mr. Fleming: When the parliamentary assistant says that the Department of National Defence takes over the debentures, I take it what he means is that the carrying charges on the debentures are then charged against the estimates of the Department of National Defence. Is that so?

Mr. Prudham: That is right.

Mr. Fleming: Then actually what is being sought here is, after all, probably no more than statutory authorization. This does not involve any further expenditure?

Mr. Prudham: No.

Item agreed to.

Mr. McCann: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask for leave of the house to put on Hansard an answer to a question asked last night in the discussion with reference to the taxation division of the Department of National Revenue.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the minister wish to put it on Hansard?

Mr. McCann: Yes.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the minister leave to put the answer on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCann: The answer is as follows:

Income taxes assessed and unpaid as of 15th March, 1950, (individuals and corporations) by districts

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

269. Departmental administration, $1,373,625.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): Hold it for a minute until I can turn the page.

Mr. Rinfret: Mr. Chairman, in the dying minutes of the sitting the other night the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made a charge against the government in general and my department in particular. At page 4244 of Hansard he said:

As I say, hon. member must not forget the positive assurance I was given by the Prime Minister on March 1, 1950, at page 352 of Hansard and on March 16, 1950, at page 842, that there is no such thing as patronage in the government service and no such thing as defeated Liberal candidates having any say in connection with these matters.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): You are certainly looking for trouble.

Mr. Rinfret: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre went on to say:

Mr. Chairman, we hear about this sort of thing too often. It just so happens that in this instance one has the evidence.

I cannot allow this statement to go unchallenged and unanswered. If this is one instance where the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has the evidence, then let us examine the evidence. One of the officials of the department is charged with having written a letter to Senator Pirie in these terms:

Would you be good enough, therefore, to submit for the consideration of the Postmaster General, on the official form attached, your recommendation of a suitable person who will be willing to accept this position.

I sincerely cannot see anything wrong, Mr. Chairman, with asking influential people in a district for a recommendation. We not only ask such people when a postmastership is vacant but we also ask the Canadian Legion to submit a recommendation of a suitable person. The fact that a recommendation is made does not necessarily mean that it will be accepted. There are any number of members in this house, particularly on this side, who have complained often enough that their recommendations have not been accepted. An investigation is made by the officials of the department.

In this particular case I did not even inquire whether or not Senator Pirie made a recommendation for the simple reason that we did not proceed with the appointment of a postmaster. We did not proceed because certain influential people of the vicinity made representations to the Post Office Department that we should abolish the various post offices that were in existence at that time. One of the letters to which I wish to draw the attention of the committee is dated December 8, 1947, and is addressed to Mr. Herring, superintendent of land and air services. It reads:

I am of the opinion that the following post offices, in the upper end of Carleton county, should be done away with and a free delivery service inaugurated, namely, Holmesville, Mineral, Killowen and Moose Mountain. These four offices are in one group and as a free delivery service has been inaugurated all around them I do not see why they should not be served by a free delivery. I might say that these offices are situated in one of our best farming districts and the farmers are deserving of a better mail service. I wish you would have an investigation made, or probably it has already been done, and in the spring, when the roads are in better condition, have this change made.

Mr. Herring answered this gentleman that an investigation was taking place. The letter of the 8th December which I have quoted is signed by H. H. Hatfield, the present member for that district, which shows that some influential people, other than Senator Pirie who was mentioned by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, are consulted on such matters. There is another letter, also signed by Mr. Hatfield and dated December 31, 1947, the purport of which is the same. He is asking that rural mail delivery be instituted instead of post offices. The charge made to the effect that this was patronage is ill founded because there was nothing done on whatever recommendation Senator Pirie might have made for the good reason that the post offices were dispensed with. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre then proceeded to say that we went on with rural mail routes and that we advised Mr. Bishop of our intention to ask for tenders. Apparently the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton was also informed that tenders would be asked for. That appears in the letter of December 31, 1947, over his signature. Tenders were sought, and the lowest tenderer was a man by the name of Saunders Giberson. The amount of the tender was $1,200.

It is true, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, that Mr. Herring advised Mr. Bishop to the effect that the lowest tenderer was Mr. Giberson in the amount of $1,200. It is also true that Mr. Bishop upon receiving this information wrote a letter, which has already been read into the record, in which he complained that Mr. Giberson was a most irresponsible person. To that letter Mr. Herring replied that the matter would be looked into at once. Mr. Bishop then, as indicated by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, wrote a second letter saying:

I have considered the matter and I find that this man is not as irresponsible as I thought.

The conclusion drawn by the member for Winnipeg North Centre is as follows, as appears from page 4243 of Hansard, June 27:

First of all the department writes telling him that invitations to tender have been sent out. Later on they tell him that so-and-so is going to be awarded the contract. He says no, that fellow is no good; don't give it to him. The department says they will hold up the contract. Then Mr. Bishop thinks it over again and says Mr. So-and-So should get the job, and he gets it.

On the next page the hon. member says he could go on. Well, I wonder why he did not go on. If he had gone on he would have found another letter, also addressed to Mr. Bishop, under date of May 15, 1950, which happens to be the first letter under the cover of the order which he asked for. It reads as follows:

With reference to previous correspondence concerning contract arrangements for the conveyance of mails over Bath rural route No. 3, I wish to advise that information has now been received to the effect that Mr. Saunders Giberson would not be qualified to perform the duties of contractor.

We are therefore proceeding with the awarding of the contract to the next lowest tenderer, Mr. Wendell W. Wyman, Bath rural route No. 3, at $1,495 per annum.

This shows that, after Mr. Bishop had made certain recommendations, and after he had withdrawn the recommendations, the department, independently of the recommendations that had been made by Mr. Bishop or anyone else, continued its investigations and found that Mr. Giberson was not a responsible person. They did not award the contract to him, as the member for Winnipeg North Centre said.

Mr. Knowles: I thank the Postmaster General for the attention he has given to this matter. With regard to the point he made at the conclusion of his speech, I suggest that the very fact that the department finally discovered this man should not get the job shows that they should not have been paying any attention to Mr. Bishop at all throughout the whole piece.

Mr. Rinfret: He was the one who drew our attention to it in the first place.

Mr. Knowles: He gave you advice both ways. And what about the advice Mr. Bishop gave with respect to the various mail routes? The other point I want to answer is this. The Postmaster General says the department follows the practice of getting advice from influential people, and that they invite people like Senator Pirie—

Mr. Lapointe: And the member.

Mr. Knowles: Was the member for Victoria-Carleton advised of this?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Of course not. I know I have never received a notice of any vacancy in the post office service in my constituency.

Mr. Rinfret: You told me the other day you did not want any.

Mr. Knowles: And I do not, but I am asking a question, whether influential people who might be in a position to advise the Post Office Department include senators, Liberal members, and defeated Liberal candidates, but not members for constituencies concerned who were elected by the people but who sit on the opposition side of the house?

Mr. Rinfret: And the Canadian Legion.

Mr. Knowles: All right, put in the Canadian Legion. I ask if influential people from whom advice is sought include in addition to senators, Liberal members of parliament, defeated Liberal candidates and the Canadian Legion, members of parliament who sit on the opposition side of this house?

Mr. Wright: The Postmaster General has just said that the Canadian Legion is informed about vacancies that occur in post offices. I should like him to read again the correspondence he has from the Ridgedale Canadian Legion with respect to the post office at Ridgedale.

Mr. Knowles: I should like to have an answer to my question, and I should also like to know if the Postmaster General is aware of this fact, that I did not read all the letters—

Mr. Lapointe: Just those which suited your purpose.

Mr. Knowles: There are some letters here which would have suited my purpose very well, if the solicitor general wants it that way, including several letters from Mr. Bosse, an executive secretary to the minister in another department.

An hon. Member: And a good man.

Mr. Knowles: I have no doubt about it, but a civil servant in another department writing officials of the Post Office Department and telling them what, in his opinion, should be done by the post office down in New Brunswick surely is not a good practice. Does the department include among those influential people, senators, Liberal members of parliament, defeated Liberal candidates, civil servants, but not the members on the opposite side of the house?

Mr. Rinfret: I think it would be correct to say that Mr. Bosse made the same suggestions as the hon. member for Victoria.

Mr. Hodgson: I should like to correct the Postmaster General: not the member for Victoria, but the member for Victoria-Carleton.

Mr. Rinfret: I am sorry.

Mr. Knowles: Can we not bring this questioning to a close by having an answer yes or no as to whether members of parliament on the opposition side are considered influential people whose advice can be sought; yes, or no?

Mr. Ferguson: If my hon. friend wants to bring it to a conclusion, I can tell him that I have been consulted about post office work in my riding.

Mr. Knowles: Anyone else?

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Knowles: No, no one else.

Mr. Gillis: Mr. Chairman, the discussion just carried on would lead one to believe that, in so far as the post office was concerned, there was no civil service. Until tonight I was of the opinion that mail carriers in the postal department had to write a civil service examination, and were hired by the department on a merit basis. Postmasters, clerks and junior clerks in the post office must all write civil service examinations.

In view of the discussion we have had tonight, based on the documentary evidence supplied by the postal department to the member for Winnipeg North Centre, I do not think that can be so. I believe the Postmaster General was ill-advised to bring up that question at this particular point in the session. My assumption now is that the civil service does not exist so far as the postal department is concerned.

An hon. Member: You wish it did not.

Mr. Gillis: It does not, as the member for Winnipeg North Centre—

Mr. Rinfret: I believe I can help the hon. member by saying that all post offices where the revenue is less than $3,000, according to the Civil Service Act, come under the supervision of the Postmaster General. For all the post offices where the revenue is over $3,000 the appointment of postmasters is under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. Gillis: That is the thing that has not been made clear in all of this discussion concerning appointments to the postal department. The Postmaster General did not say whether those offices came within the category of those for which appointments are made on the basis of patronage.

Mr. Rinfret: These four post offices about which we are talking pay, if my memory serves me right, $280, $91, $83 and $55 or something like that.

Mr. Gillis: A soft explanation such as the Postmaster General has made just now, if made last night, would have avoided a whole lot of discussion. In listening to this discussion I was led to believe that in New Brunswick appointments to the post office were made on the basis of recommendations by someone who did not get elected in the last election who wrote in and said, "I want this fellow appointed." It is clear that is not so.

Mr. Riley: A good idea.

Mr. Knowles: The member for Saint John-Albert says it is a good idea.

Mr. Gillis: I got the idea from something that was said that was the way it was done all over the country. It is done on the basis of patronage and there is no use of denying it. Until such time as we have the regulations changed, it will be done in that way.

Mr. Smith (Calgary West): No one will deny that.

Mr. Gillis: That is the way members want it, and by and large that is what the Canadian people voted for. I do not see where we have any reason to squawk about it. I am glad to find out that the civil service do perform some function in the postal department, with regard to employing people.

Item agreed to.

270. Post offices, including salaries and other expenses of headquarters and staff post offices and supplies and equipment for revenue post offices, $42,247,430.

Mr. Shaw: When notification is given that a vacancy has occurred in a post office and that a postmaster is required, I believe it is specified that he must be a patron of that office. But is it also specified that he must have resided in that district for a specified period of time?

Mr. Rinfret: He must be a patron of that office for one year.

Mr. Shaw: One year?

Mr. Rinfret: Yes, before the vacancy.

Mr. Adamson: When the minister opens up the new revenue post office in Islington, in order to allay any suspicion of patronage in York West I hope that he will invite me to the ceremony.

Mr. Catherwood: I believe that employment is carried out through the civil service commission for the post office, and I understand that the postmaster is not consulted about that appointment. Yet he is responsible for any losses should they occur through the inability of those employees. I wondered if it could not be arranged as for the civil service, where provisions are made for burglary insurance through the post office guarantee fund. Why could not these employees be placed on the same basis as those under that fund?

Mr. Rinfret: We have in the Post Office Department a similar reserve fund for that purpose.

Mr. Catherwood: Does that apply to the employees who are engaged by the civil service commission and where the postmaster has to make up that loss if there is any loss incurred?

Mr. Rinfret: The postmaster is only called upon to make up for the losses when he is responsible.

Mr. Hatfield: I should like to point out to the Postmaster General that I requested the building of a post office at Plaster Rock, New Brunswick, in 1939. The site was secured and tenders were called for the post office at this place, but the work was dropped on account of the war. I took it up with the former postmaster general, Hon. Mr. Bertrand. He told me two or three years ago that there were twenty post offices, I think, in the same category. The work had been stopped on account of the war after tenders had been called and let. He grouped those twenty post offices together and said that they would have the first priority.

In this town of Plaster Rock the revenue has trebled since 1939 and it is almost $10,000. It is a prosperous agricultural and lumbering town. The Fraser Company have built a new mill there and they have spent a great deal of money. Two schools have been erected there in the past year, and they have cost nearly $1 million. It is a large centre. The post office building that is used in this place is not becoming to the town. I pass over to the Postmaster General a picture of the present post office. Last session he promised to give the matter consideration, and I should like to ask him if they will recommend the building of that post office.

Mr. Rinfret: I have received the photographs that have been sent me by the hon. member. I might say that some other members have also made recommendations about the same Plaster Rock post office. We know that the accommodation is not satisfactory but, unfortunately, under the rules of the department we cannot recommend a public building because the annual revenue has not yet reached the $10,000 mark. We are now making inquiry of the public works department to see if we can find better accommodation.

Mr. Hatfield: According to Mr. Bertrand, the former postmaster general, this post office was put in a special group that had been let in 1939. The revenue at that point in 1939 was some $3,000. Today it is over $9,000. Still there is not sufficient post office space. The site is there in the main part of the town. What the people would like to have is the new post office that they were promised in 1939. I should like to have the minister reconsider the matter.

Mr. Rinfret: The regulations then were not the same as they are today. Prior to the war and during the war we had to lay aside certain places where it would have been convenient to have a new post office. We have a backlog of offices, and we have had to fix this figure of $10,000 as the mark for the moment. We hope to be able later on to reduce it.

Mr. Pouliot: Mr. Chairman, I observe the golden rule. I am delighted to support the request of the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton because I know the place and I know that the Fraser Company has spent a great deal of money there. I also cannot forget that the hon. gentleman gave me support on the Temiscouata railway bill last year.

Mr. Low: How long after a certain centre qualifies by reaching the $10,000 revenue mark do you usually wait until you make a decision with respect to a post office?

Mr. Rinfret: We make the recommendation to public works; and as the backlog is quite heavy, we have had to make categories even there, public works choosing those where the necessity is more pressing.

Mr. Hatfield: I understand that all first-class mail possible is now carried by air, whether there is an air mail stamp on it or not. In my constituency, the mail from the province of Quebec and the maritime provinces, if it is sent in by air mail, is delayed one or two days over train mail. But if it is coming from western Canada—from British Columbia, for instance—it is two or three days ahead, of course. But if the letter is mailed in Montreal to go by air mail—and it goes air mail, whether it has an air mail stamp on it or not—it is delayed one or two days because there is no air mail delivery in my constituency. It goes to Moncton by air mail and it goes from Moncton next day by train to Saint John and from Saint John back to my constituency. It is delayed one or two days. As to letters coming from the United States, the people have to notify those who send letters in not to send them by air mail if they are in a hurry to get them there. I should like to ask the Postmaster General if anything has been done about that.

Mr. Rinfret: If the hon. member has one particular instance that he wants to bring to my attention, I shall be pleased to have it. The instructions that our officials have are that if a first-class letter can be expedited by sending it air mail, they have to send it that way. If it gets to its destination quicker by train they have to send it by train. Those are the instructions. If there are any instances that my hon. friend can give me, I shall be glad to look into them.

Mr. Catherwood: I should like to ask the minister if it is not right that some of our postal employees who have worked for 20 years in the department are not receiving three weeks' holidays. I understand that is a regulation of the department. Can he explain if there are some cases where it does not apply?

Mr. Rinfret: Some of the post offices that are under the civil service rule, those that are over $3,000, are given three weeks' holidays. In some of the revenue post offices only two weeks are given, but we have under consideration at the present time giving them three weeks, the same as the others.

Mr. Catherwood: Is it not a regulation of the department that after 20 years' service in the department three weeks' holidays must be given?

Mr. Rinfret: I have just indicated that in some instances it is not exactly that, but we are trying to bring everybody up to the same level.

Mr. Higgins: I should like the name of the influential people who recommended the appointment of the postmaster at Holyrood, Newfoundland.

Mr. Rinfret: I will check through my record and let my hon. friend know.

Mr. Noseworthy: How does a community or a municipality of 80,000 people qualify for a post office? In York township we have approximately 80,000 people. All we have by way of post offices are little cubby holes in the back of grocery stores, meat stores and other kinds of stores. They must all be good Liberal supporters.

273. Air and land mail services, $22,094,857.

Mr. Adamson: Has the Postmaster General received requests for new uniforms or more comfortable summer uniforms from the postmen who actually deliver the mail on the postal routes? Several of them have suggested to me there might be certain modifications in the uniform, particularly the summer uniform. Have there been any complaints about them?

Mr. Rinfret: We have received certain representations that some small changes be made, for example, that the shirts be left open and that they be not required to wear bow ties or things like that.

Mr. Adamson: These were the recommendations that were made to me; that, particularly in hot weather, the shirts be left open and that they be not required to wear ties. If possible I should like the Postmaster General to consider that, because in the extremely hot weather it is quite a problem wearing a tie.

Mr. Rinfret: I will consider it.

Mr. Adamson: Particularly with a heavy bag and a long walk.

Mr. Fulton: Will the Postmaster General tell us about the position of the payment from the department to Trans-Canada Air Lines for the carriage of mail? The matter was before us in the special committee on government-owned railways and shipping. It was indicated to us there by Trans-Canada Air Lines directors and management that they were not being given adequate compensation for the carriage of the very substantial volume of mail they are called upon to carry under their present agreement. I think the agreement expired in May of 1949. Since that time it has been continued on a temporary basis at the same rate. They have not been successful in getting the increased rate they asked for. The fact became evident from the information given to us there that if they do get the rate they are asking for it will go a long way toward reducing their present operating deficit on the domestic line. It certainly seemed to me in the committee that the management of Trans-Canada Air Lines had made out a bona fide case, anyway, in support of their contention. I would be interested to know what the present position is.

Mr. Rinfret: In my opening statement I said we had hoped that the company would be able to agree on rates that will permit the continuation of the all-up scheme on a permanent basis. At the present time we are in negotiation with the Trans-Canada Air Lines. They asked for an increase in the contract rate. We are negotiating with the company at the present time but we have not yet reached an agreement.

Mr. Fulton: When is it expected that negotiations will be concluded?

[Mr. Adamson.]

Mr. Rinfret: I do not know. We are discussing the matter. I am not a prophet.

Welfare branch—

245. Assistance to schools of social work, $52,500.

Mr. Fleming: May I just say a very brief word on this item? It has to do with assistance to schools of social work. Up till two years ago, this item was considerably larger than it is at the present time. The larger grant that was made available prior to two years ago did assist very much the various schools of social work in this country in the training of personnel in the field of social work. The training of personnel in the field of social work is, I have always thought, good economy because the administration of social services at various levels in the hands of trained social workers contributes to the attainment of the utmost value out of the expenditure made on those services.

The various schools of social work, through their association, the national committee of Canadian schools of social work, have made representations to the department, and they laid before the department two years ago and again in the past year a program which invited the department to agree to pay the contributions of assistance through this vote on a five-year basis, so that the schools would be able to make plans on the assurance that grants would be forthcoming. It seems to me that this is altogether desirable in the national interest.

I cannot believe that the minister personally would be unsympathetic to a worthy proposal of this kind. It does mean economy in the end. It is an investment; it is not the sort of expenditure that should be classed as moneys simply expended. It is money invested. I do urge that very serious consideration should be given to the proposals of the national committee on Canadian schools of social work, both with respect to the modest increase in the amount of this item which they have asked for, and placing it on the five-year basis which they have approved. I think the department should give effect to this very reasonable and modest request.

Mr. Hellyer: I find myself in full accord with the remarks of the hon. member for Eglinton and I endorse what he said.

Mr. Carroll: I want to associate myself with the remarks of the last two speakers in regard to this social work. I do not know of any institutions in our province that have done more not only in what we usually call social work, but in the interest of administering and adding to the administration of our social security. In Halifax we have a school of social work, but I am not making this suggestion from any selfish motive. I happen to be a director of that school. The school was organized about six or seven years ago. It was organized by the various institutions in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and I believe in Prince Edward Island. Those universities gave every assistance they could. A survey was made, and a certain amount of money was obtained from the public in the three maritime provinces. This was done at the instance of social workers in Nova Scotia. One of these was Dr. Curran, a Roman Catholic priest, and the other man was Dr. Prince, of the university of King's College. It was through their efforts that the school was finally started. We did get some assistance from the department.

However I think that in matters of this kind it would be almost impossible to have our social services properly administered—and I am talking about administration, not the supplying of money or anything else—without this sort of help. I have in mind the welfare of the people, so far as the social services are concerned.

There has been a tremendous increase in the good done in the three maritime provinces through social services. I am heartily in accord with this procedure. As a matter of fact, I visited the minister and some of his officials when representations were made to him last fall. I am just saying now that I am in complete accord with the last two speakers, and I believe that instead of lowering these small subsidies, if they may be so described, they should be increased.

Before this school was started—and I speak with some knowledge of the subject—it was almost impossible in Nova Scotia to get anyone to look after the social welfare of the people. Today, however, graduates of that school find employment in the local governments of the three provinces, and they do good work. However, I know that only two years ago two bright young university graduates who were short of funds came there. The money which had been given by this government for scholarships had been taken up, and those boys had to go off to work somewhere else. That was a serious loss to the social welfare of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Knowles: I am sure the minister is deeply interested in and sympathetic to the requests that have come to him from the national committee in connection with schools for social work. I just wish to make it clear to him—although I know he already realizes it—that the support for their two requests, namely for an increase and that it be put on a five-year basis, is unanimous. I hope the minister will take good advantage of that unanimous support and do his best to see that these requests are met.

Mr. McCusker: The minister usually meets us, instead of having to be prodded in matters of this kind. I should not like to have this vote passed without saying that I have received many representations from people in my constituency asking me to support what has been said tonight. I shall not take time to repeat it.

242. Administration, $86,320.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, under this item in the estimates it is not my intention to enter into any debate in regard to the report of the committee on old age security appointed last March, which has tabled its report. At the time the motion was before the house to set up the committee I, and other members of the opposition, objected to that appointment of a committee on the ground that it would only delay a decision by the government and prevent any action being taken during the present session to implement the government's promises.

Members of the committee have worked very hard. They have heard a great deal of evidence. The report, which constitutes a digest of that evidence, contains much statistical information which will be helpful to all hon. members. However, the recommendations, which are the result of the decisions of the majority of the members of the committee, do not carry out the earlier undertakings of the government, and do not go as far as they should go if this extremely important subject is to be dealt with in a way which will satisfy the older generation of Canadians.

In our increasingly complex society people naturally think with growing concern about what will happen to them in their old age, or at a time when they are no longer able to earn a livelihood. There is increasing agreement that pensions should be paid as a right at an age when the earning capacity of our people is substantially or entirely reduced because of their age. In considering this subject the questions about which our people are most concerned are the age at which pensions will be payable, whether they will be subject to a means test or not, and whether they will be adequate to maintain those who receive them under the conditions which exist in this country from time to time.

There is also increasing agreement that the means test is unfair, because it does penalize those who are prudent and have saved something throughout the working years.

The age at which the pensions are to be payable is the other extremely important point in the minds of our people. Industrial employers have established the age by the extent to which sixty-five has become recognized as the age of retirement. I am not suggesting that this applies only to industrial workers. But the very fact that industrial employers are now so generally retiring workers at that age has settled that as the age which we must regard as the age of retirement for a very large part of our population. If that is to be the age of retirement, it is also the age at which the pensions are needed.

That is the reason we have urged that there be an over-all contributory retirement pension payable to everyone at the age of sixty-five, without a means test. Members of our party who were on the committee urged that the report of the committee make this recommendation. We will continue to press for a contributory pension plan upon that basis.

We stated our position on this subject earlier in the session, and we adhere to the position we put forward at that time. We will welcome every advance that may be made. We will welcome every advance which may result from the report now tabled. The recommendation that the means test should not apply to those who have reached the age of seventy is a definite step forward. It does not go far enough, however, in my opinion. If those from sixty-five to sixty-nine are to receive a pension only subject to a means test, then during that period between retirement from work and full entitlement to a pension without a test they will be called upon to exhaust their savings, except in the case of those with fairly substantial means. This also will penalize those who have been thrifty during their working years.

I am raising the subject again at this time in the hope that when the dominion-provincial conference does take place later this year the government will carry out its earlier undertakings and place before the conference a proposal for a contributory plan for pensions to be payable as a right, without a means test, at the age of sixty-five, at a level adequate to meet the living requirements of our people.

I am not disregarding the estimates which have been made of the cost of such a plan. I would point out, however, that those estimates all relate to the total over-all cost of the program. I believe that our people are anxious to contribute a fair share of the cost of pensions of this kind, and if that is done the burden upon the dominion treasury would only be its share of the combined contributions. After all, there are many people of small incomes providing pensions for their old age through insurance and government annuity plans at the present time. If those plans can be worked out by the insurance companies and public agencies on terms suitable to the individual, I am convinced that a broad national plan can be worked out on a sound actuarial basis which imposes no unreasonable burden upon the national treasury. I am equally convinced that a satisfactory pension plan for old age and permanent disability is one of the essential requirements of our modern society.

In making this statement in relation to an item which calls for a consideration of this subject at this time I am not overlooking the very grave period through which we are passing. I think the fact that we may be called upon to consider other responsibilities should not divert our attention from the importance of convincing all our people that our system of society is the best in the world.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, as many hon. members know, it was not my intention to initiate a debate on this item, or indeed to speak at all at this stage of the session, had it not been opened already. Even so I shall be brief. One of the reasons why I was prepared not to initiate a debate on this question will be obvious. We have been dealing with the matter most exhaustively in the committee on old age security of which I had the privilege of being a member.

However, if anyone has the right to rise on this item and argue for an adequate pension, for the elimination of the means test, and for doing that at an age not later than 65 years, I believe I have that right, and no one in this house will deny it. Furthermore, as I have already made clear, once we have got over the immediate task that is before us in this field of old age security I shall be in there continuing the fight for the improvements that I feel to be necessary.

Having said that, I am convinced that the task of those who are interested in making progress in the field of old age security is to get behind the recommendations of the joint committee which were tabled yesterday in this house. They do not go as far as I would have liked to have seen them go. So far as I was concerned, it was a compromise downward to agree to the report. But not only did I agree to it for the purpose of getting what it proposes; I pledged that I would fight for its implementation because my chief concern is to get some real and definite progress in this field of old age security. I do not want to see anything done that will jeopardize the chances of getting what we were able to agree on in the joint committee made up of members from the four parties in this house and from both parties in the other place.

I would point out that there are three aspects to the question of old age pensions on the benefit side: the age, the amount, and the means test. In my view there is a job to be done with respect to all three of those aspects. As hon. members know, I along with others so contended in the committee, as I have done in and out of this house across the years. With a committee of that size and complexity it could not be expected that everyone would agree with what every member wanted. It is true that the committee did not arrive at a decision with respect to our arguments for increasing the amount of the pension, but it did take action with respect to the removal of the means test, at least at some point. The point decided upon by the committee was the age of 70.

In its recommendation that the pension start at age 65 the committee did not go all the way that some of us would have liked to have seen it go and recommend that the pension at that age start without a means test. But progress has been made. It is proposed for the first time in Canada, and in a form that has some chance of reaching the statute books, that there be a pension payable at age 65. Because of that recommendation, because I see a possibility of its reaching the statute books, I feel that our job now is to get in and fight for all we are worth in as united a fashion as we can.

I should like to say one further word about the benefit side. When I referred to this recommendation as not going far enough I do not want that to be taken as a political belittling of it on my part. In my view the recommendation the committee made has got over one of the most important hurdles in the field of old age security in that it calls for the establishment of the principle of universality, even if it does not start it at 65 years. For the first time we will have the principle of universality established or in other words the elimination of the means test. That is an important hurdle, that is something we have been fighting for across the years. In my view it will be a great day for Canada when that becomes the law of the land.

There are other changes that will have to be made after that, but those changes will simply be amendments; this report establishes certain basic principles, and I do not want to do anything that will jeopardize the chances of getting this program implemented.

In addition there is the question of how this old age pension program is to be paid for. In the main there are two general ways, one being the insurance or funded principle by which the money is put aside by contributors into a fund designated for the purpose of the contributor and paid to him on the basis of some relationship to the amount he has paid in when the time comes for him to retire. The other way of paying for pensions is on a current or pay-as-you-go basis. By that we mean that those on pension now will draw their pensions out of the general revenues of this day and age, to which we who are now working will contribute.

In my view it is a very important decision for a country to make, whether it is going to put its old age security program on a funded or on a current or pay-as-you-go basis. This report is the most significant report in the history of old age security in this country because it rejects the funded idea, which has failed where it has been tried, and comes out clearly for the current or pay-as-you-go system. The leader of the opposition has used the word "contributory", a word which any of us who were on the committee would not use lightly, or without defining it. I am not going to go into it because we who were on the committee know the various definitions that can be given to it. He has also used the word "actuarial" in relation to establishing a proper old age pension plan. Our study of the plans in other countries made it clear to all of us, certainly to the vast majority, that we would be making a mistake if we tried to establish old age security on a funded plan or an actuarial basis, or indeed on any other basis than a current pay-as-you-go system.

Because the recommendations of the committee are on that side of this important question, I say again that this is a splendid piece of work the committee has done. I raise my voice now to say, as I said in the committee and as I have said tonight, that despite my interest in getting something better later on, in getting the amount raised and the age at which it is payable universally lowered, I do not think that now is the time to introduce any note that would jeopardize the chances of getting this much adopted. We have got agreement amongst all four parties in the house through their representation on the committee. We got agreement between this house and the other place. I feel we have something that will appeal to the provinces as worthy of their favourable consideration. I feel we have something that will not only commend itself to the government but something that the government will realize they simply cannot fail to implement, and until this report has been implemented that should be our main job in the field of old age security. I shall continue to fight down through the years for the best we can possibly do for old age security but right now my concern is that none of us do anything to jeopardize the chances of the Canadian people getting as soon as possible—and I hope it is only months away at the outside—the advantages of such progress as is contained in the recommendations that the committee has made to the house.

Mr. Shaw: Mr. Chairman, personally I consider it rather unfortunate that the subject of old age pensions should have been opened for discussion at this time. I had hopes that, with the results of the committee's deliberations presently in the hands of members of parliament, with the dominion-provincial conference in the offing and with another session coming up next year, hon. members would have been satisfied to permit the matter to rest for the time being. I recognize and appreciate, however, the right of any hon. member to discuss the subject at this time. I regret that my participation has become necessary because of what has already been said.

I was rather surprised that the leader of the opposition commenced his observations by asserting that he had no intention of dealing with the report of the committee and then set about to do just that. He did not do so in detail but he made it abundantly clear where he stands with respect to it, and thus, I contend, opened the matter for general discussion. Let me assure the committee, Mr. Chairman, that, having regard to the stage of the session we have reached at the present time and my personal reluctance to speak at this time, I shall be extremely brief.

The committee on old age security was welcomed by the Social Credit members. We realized, as all hon. members realize, that there was room for improvement in the existing old age pension scheme in Canada. We recognized that there were certain anomalies that should be removed. We recognized the fact that there were probably certain age groups within the country that should be given further consideration at this time. We have expressed ourselves from time to time with respect to the means test. We are on record on innumerable occasions. We have heard much about the schemes in other countries, and the virtues or presumed virtues of many of them have been extolled upon many occasions. I and those associated with me were extremely anxious to learn just what certain other countries have that we might find it desirable to accept.

The resolution setting up the committee offered the suggestion at least that the government has in mind the desirability of coming to grips with the subject of old age security, giving consideration to it, and possibly providing justice for the pioneer citizens of Canada. May I say in passing that I have served on many committees of the House of Commons during the past ten years and I never enjoyed committee work as much as I did the committee work on old age security. I was deeply and profoundly impressed by the attitude of every member serving on that committee. I think it was a highly successful committee, and I think its success was due in no small part to the skill, impartiality and hard work of the co-chairman representing the House of Commons. I should also like to say that its success was attributable to the excellent assistance given to us by Dr. Davidson, Mr. Willard and Mr. Sharp. We do not forget for one moment of course those who worked behind the scenes, probably both day and night, in order that we might complete our deliberations during the present session.

As a matter of fact, when the resolution came before the house I said to myself that here was a committee that would sit for two years. I was firmly convinced in my own mind that it would take us two years to do the work. I am happy to express the view that I believe we did two years' work in a matter of two and a half months. Down through the years, as I said before, we have stated that we are desirous of seeing the age for eligibility lowered so far as Canada's pioneer citizens are concerned. We have expressed the opinion from time to time that, having regard to all the circumstances, the amount of the pension was not sufficient to assure at least a minimum basic standard of living. We have also, as I said a moment ago, expressed our views as to the means test. We have also done something else to which I must make reference in passing. From time to time we have expressed opposition to certain economic and financial policies of the government which we felt imposed restrictions that made it impossible for them to go as far as they could safely go if they were a Social Credit government. We feel that these economic and financial policies have imposed certain restrictions which need not necessarily be imposed. We have asserted from time to time that if the economy of the country were changed in the way that we have suggested it should be, probably we would experience no difficulty in going as far as I might desire to go in the field of old age security.

Nevertheless I hope that I can be considered as being realistic, and as a realist I see certain limitations. Therefore I am prepared to conclude that I must accept something less than I think would be possible and desirable if these limitations did not exist. We have always felt, for example, that under the type of organization which we would advance, support and make effective, we could dispense with certain aspects of the contributory scheme of old age insurance. In spite of its strong psychological value we have said that in many respects it would be found to be impractical. We have also taken the position that we rather fear a movement too far in this direction where you card index every individual. Then, of necessity, you must make a greater number of demands upon his pay envelope. We have expressed the fear of going so far in a certain direction that you run into a multitude of penalties which are imposed in case of default. We have also expressed the fact that we are fearful of any regimentation that might accrue as a result of any move in the direction of a greater measure of social security.

Mr. Chairman, I want to stress that while we have not changed our position at all with respect to the basic and fundamental views which we hold on this subject of old age security, we are prepared to recognize that we must accept conditions as they are, and govern ourselves accordingly. I would very much regret, Mr. Chairman, ever to find myself put in the position where, upon finding that I could not get all that I wanted, I would refuse to accept anything. This report, sir, certainly goes in the right direction. It does take into account certain other age groups; it does take vast strides towards the elimination of the iniquitous means test, and for those reasons certainly we are prepared to accept that as being considerably better than anything which we have had heretofore.

Having those things in mind, Mr. Chairman, we are certainly anxious that this house should agree that here is something better than we have. You could take 262 members from this house, and form them into one committee, which you could call the committee on old age security. You would probably get 262 different ideas, but certainly if you could bring those ideas closely enough together that out of them you got something better than you had when you started, you would be extremely foolish not to take that something better. I am hopeful, Mr. Chairman, that the government will see fit to take action upon this report. I feel, as does the member for Winnipeg North Centre, that we are not going to say this is enough. We are accepting it as a most desirable step in the right direction. So long as we continue to occupy seats in the Canadian House of Commons you will hear our voices pressing for something more, because we are convinced that the productive capacity of this country could support the program which we have so frequently urged and provide full old age security if it were translated into realistic financial terms.

In conclusion, may I just assure the house that we support this report, and we do hope that there will be no debate here which will jeopardize our obtaining the good things contained therein.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, might I draw your attention to the fact that it is eleven o'clock. Have I the permission of the committee to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, the old age pension plan contained in the report of the committee on old age security is, I believe, a good plan as far as it goes, but it falls short in two important respects. First of all, the age at which the pension starts is too high; and second, the means test is retained.

I should like to deal first with the age at which the pension starts. Today, the great majority of firms require both men and women to retire at sixty-five years of age. Very few of those in industry are able to set aside enough during their working years to provide for themselves after their regular employment has been terminated. Part-time work is very hard to find at retirement age, and so, in the great majority of cases, a pension is urgently needed at sixty-five. For these reasons, the pensions should start at sixty-five, the age at which regular employment ends, and not five years later.

I should like now to deal with the retention of the means test. The eligibility test, referred to in the committee's report, is nothing more or less than the old means test, dressed up in a brand new title in an attempt to give it respectability. Despite its new title, the eligibility test remains the means test, and I intend to deal with it as such.

To apply the means test to persons between the ages of sixty-five and sixty-nine is, I believe, an iniquitous thing, because it penalizes two things which should always be encouraged. First of all, it penalizes the savings which a person, through self-denial, has been able to set aside during his or her working years. Secondly, it discourages the desire to work at a part-time job, if one can be obtained. I believe that neither of these two worth-while aims can we allow to be discouraged any longer.

If the means test is retained between the ages of sixty-five and sixty-nine, the savings which a person has been able to set aside during his or her working years are used up during that five-year period. The result is that when the age of seventy is reached there is nothing left for the pensioner to live on except the $40 per month which the pension provides. If the means test is abolished, the standard of living of the pensioner increases in proportion to the amount of savings which the pensioner has been able to set aside during his or her working years. For these reasons, I believe that the means test must be abolished from the age at which a pension is required, namely sixty-five.

Now, how are we going to bring about a pension at sixty-five without a means test? By introducing a contributory pension plan, with contributions based on the pension being paid at sixty-five without a means test. Government, the employer and the employee would each make equal contributions in the case of those who are employed, and government would participate on an equal basis with those who are self-employed. The division of the cost borne by government between the dominion and the provinces would be worked out by negotiation between the dominion and the provinces at the forthcoming dominion-provincial conference. Contributions would continue until the age of sixty-five is reached, and from then on the pension would be received as a matter of right. Those who are sixty-five and over today would receive the pension in exactly the same fashion as those who would in future contribute towards it.

I have talked to a great many working men and women about how they feel about contributing toward a pension plan of this kind, and I have found that they are not only willing, but anxious, to be able to contribute during their working years, so that they can look forward with certainty to at least a basic minimum standard of living when they reach retirement age. One point they make clear, however, is that, having contributed towards the pension during their working years, they want to start receiving the pension when they reach the retirement age of sixty-five, and not five years later.

I have also talked to a great many employers, and I have found that they, clearly seeing the pattern which union agreements are taking on this continent today, are anxious that the government should set up a contributory pension plan now so that their employees will automatically receive a basic pension when their retirement date comes due. They feel, as do their employees, that having contributed towards the workers' pension during working years, they want their employees to start to receive it when they reach the retirement age of 65, and not five years later. They prefer a government plan to a company plan, because then the cost of pensions will be borne equally by all firms in an industry, and not just by the progressive few, as is the case today.

[Mr. Hees.]

The sooner we start a contributory pensi plan, with contributions based on paying a pension at 65 without a means test, the sooner shall we be on an actuarially sound basis; and the cost borne by government will be approximately 40 per cent of what it would otherwise be under a non-contributory system. We shall then be able to apply tax revenues toward increasing the pension, and thereby increasing the standard of living of old people and bringing it more into line with that enjoyed by other members of the community today.

If we had started a contributory plan some years ago, we would today be able to pay a $50 pension. As $50 a month is no more than a bare minimum standard of living at today's cost of living, let us, as soon as possible, get ourselves into a position in which we can pay a pension of that amount.

Let us get on with the job. As the workers want it, as the employers want it, and as it is the only kind of plan which meets the needs of the situation today, I call on this government to bring in a contributory pension plan, to start at 65 years of age, without a means test, at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Lesage: I do not wish to discuss the report. It is not the time or the place to do so. I had hoped that the report itself would not be discussed in the chamber because, as the report states in its concluding words:

> The committee trusts that the views herein set forth will appeal to the provincial governments as worthy of favourable consideration.

There is no direct recommendation in the report. It is the opinion on balance of the committee. It is the opinion of 39 members of the other place and of this house who have spent hours and hours in the study of this extremely difficult and complex problem. If I had not been a member of the committee and if I had not read the report, I could have done as the leader of the opposition and as the hon. member for Broadview have done. But of course the members of the other parties who were on the committee did not use the same language. Of course they knew that you cannot have a pay-as-you-go system on an actuarial basis because a pay-as-you-go system is exactly the opposite of an actuarial system. An actuarial system is one of insurance which means the building up of a reserve fund. In a country which is not far from us a legislative body has thought it well to spend $25,000 for a two-year study of the means of getting rid of the actuarial basis. It is the only country in the world, except Switzerland, where it is in force.

If the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for Broadview had been on he committee, they would know that the 50 pension at the age of 65 would cost $660 nillion in 1951. They would know that hat would involve an additional expense of ver $500 million. They would know that f a sales tax were collected to pay for that, t would mean an additional 10 per cent on he 8 per cent sales tax that we already have. f they believe that the country as a whole s ready to see prices go up to such an extent is a result of an increase in the sales tax rom 8 per cent to 18 per cent, they may well ry to convince the people of Canada of that, ut I am sure that, as usual, they simply will ot be able to do it. If it was a direct contribution—and I do not have to use chapter ; I know it by heart and I am sure the eader of the opposition does not—on the mployee and employer basis, which was nentioned by the hon. member for Broadiew, it would mean a direct contribution, vith certain exemptions, of 6 per cent on ll incomes and 6 per cent on all payrolls. am not sure that the people of Canada s a whole and that the employers of Canada elieve that, for the good of the country, hey should pay as much as that at this time. The committee of course has studied all the ngles. I am not going to try to discuss the 00-page report in five minutes; but I can ay that the leader of the opposition and the on. member for Broadview should read it arefully. If they had a sense of their esponsibility as representing, in this hamber, the people of Canada, they surely vould not have said what they said without t least glancing at the report.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. mem- er who has just taken his seat would spend little more time listening, he would perhaps earn that what I said had nothing to do vith introducing a $50 pension in 1951. I aid what is perfectly true, namely, that if number of years ago we had started a contributory pension plan, we could today pay $50 pension; and I say that the sooner hat we pay our contributions of the right mount, basing them on paying a pension t 65 without a means test and supporting a roper plan now, the sooner shall we be ble to afford to increase the pension to $50. did not say next year. I said the sooner we tarted, the sooner we would be able to do it.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Martin: Just before the item carries, here is something I want to say. I do not ropose to detain the committee for more han a moment or two. I want to take this pportunity—and I think I do so on behalf of every member of the house—to thank the joint chairmen of this committee and the members from all parties who constituted its membership for the thorough work they have done and the study they have made on this subject. It has been said throughout the session by shrewd observers that not in a long time has there been a committee that pursued its objectives and its purposes with such a measure of thoroughness.

I can assure the house that the government will give the report on old age security the closest study and earnest consideration. The committee's extensive analysis of old age security systems, and its detailed review of the system now in effect in Canada and other alternative systems proposed, have been summarized in a document that cannot fail to command respect.

On March 10, while advocating the establishment of this joint committee on old age security, I outlined certain basic considerations, as reported at page 644 of Hansard, which it might be useful now to recall to the committee:

> What we wish to do is to develop, within the limits only of the financial capacity of our people and with due regard to our over-all commitments in all fields of social security and other governmental responsibilities, the simplest, most effective and most humane system of old age security that it is possible for us to devise. We wish to do this, not in open disregard of provincial rights or interests or concerns, but in full consultation, agreement and partnership with the provinces. This is our objective in the field of old age security. It is with this, along with other equally important matters in mind, that we look forward to our conference with the provinces in the autumn of this year.

I say in conclusion, the committee in its deliberations has recognized the importance of its task and fully respected the special position of the provinces with regard to old age security. I am confident, therefore, that the committee's report—especially since it has the support of all parties represented on it—will commend itself to the most careful and sympathetic consideration both of the federal and of the provincial governments.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Special—

652. Amount required to recoup the agricultural prices support account to cover the net operating loss of the agricultural prices support board during the fiscal year 1949-50, $3,484,918.

Mr. Charlton: I am sorry to detain the committee at this time, but the hon. member for Huron North was not able to be present, and he asked me to read a telegram which he has received regarding cheese having price support action. The question has been asked on several occasions. The telegram reads as follows:

Blyth, Ont.

L. E. Cardiff, M.P.
Ottawa

At a protest meeting of representatives of the unit holders of Blyth farmers co-operative association a request for immediate action on cheese price was made. A price comparable with other milk prices cannot be paid for cheese milk while selling cheese on the export market and we will be forced to make coloured cheese for the domestic market if something is not done immediately. Please reply.

Blyth farmers co-operative association.

I was not under the impression that coloured cheese was not being requisitioned. Is it a fact that coloured cheese is not requisitioned for Great Britain? Can something not be done to increase the price for cheese that is being requisitioned for the old country, so that the cheese milk price will compare favourably with the price now being paid for concentrated milk?

Mr. Robert McCubbin (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Agriculture): In respect to the inquiry of the hon. member for Brant-Wentworth, may I say that I saw a copy of the telegram from Blyth that he has just read. I understand full well the position of the cheese producers of western Ontario. Nevertheless the representatives of the cheese producers and the trade were down here in April and they asked the Minister of Agriculture at that time to requisition cheese so that the contract they held with the United Kingdom might be filled. That was done. I too am well aware of the fact that the concentrated milk people are taking some of the milk that formerly went into the production of cheese.

On the question whether anything will be done to put the price a little higher f.o.b. seaboard or f.o.b. factory, I am of the opinion that probably something should be done and a higher price paid to the cheese producers in western Ontario. But that is a matter of government policy which is being discussed, and I hope that an announcement will be made in the near future.

Mr. Charlton: The parliamentary assistant did not answer my question with regard to coloured cheese.

Mr. McCubbin: If my memory serves me right I did not think that coloured cheese was requisitioned, but it is a fact that cheese is requisitioned. Whether you can sell coloured cheese without a permit, I am not in a position to say.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Under this requisition order the deal was made last April, but circumstances alter cases. The government has changed its attitude from time to time as conditions change. Therefore it seems to me that if the situation is such that one particular line of produce of a dairy industry is going to be penalized to provide cheese for Britain when the other producers are selling whole milk, concentrated milk, and the like, and are going to get a higher price than the man who is maintaining the export market not only now but in the years that lie ahead by being penalized to the extent of about 50 cents a pound something should be done. I am hoping that the parliamentary assistant—I realize what he said a day or two ago in response to my question, and what he has just said—will be in a position to make an announcement very very shortly.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

657. Departmental administration—further amount required, $44,728.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I regret that I shall have to take a little time to read a statement which has been prepared for delivery for some hours. This is the item on which I might read it.

For some time the government has given consideration to the complex external factors which have led to a serious decline in post-war immigration to Canada. These factors were examined in the light of the basic principles of government policy.

Hon. members have stated that there was and is widespread public support for the immigration policy announced on May 1, 1947, by the prime minister of the day.

It is significant that no one has questioned the soundness of the principles of the immigration policy pursued by the government since that time. Today, three years after it was formulated, and in spite of changing circumstances at home and abroad, the principles of the policy announced by the former prime minister remain unchallenged and, I believe, command the confidence of the Canadian people.

These principles will bear repetition. Canada is to foster the growth of its population by the encouragement of immigration through legislation and vigorous administration to ensure the careful selection and permanent settlement of such numbers of immigrants as can be advantageously absorbed in the national economy. Immigration, however, must not have the effect of altering the fundamental character of the Canadian population.

In reaffirming these principles the government feels that it will receive the approval of the Canadian people. No immigration policy can be successful without the active support of our people.

In seeking a solution to the problems which have had an adverse effect on migration to Canada, it must be obvious that some of those problems can be resolved only in co-operation with other governments. This is the case, for instance, of restrictions imposed by most countries of emigration on the export of capital. It would be inappropriate for me to discuss at this time what may be the outcome of consultation with other countries in this regard. I can only assure the house that every effort is being made to find a way of making it easier for immigrants to obtain as much of their financial assets as possible for the purpose of establishing themselves in Canada. Several alternatives have been and are under consideration and it is hoped that at least a partial solution to the exchange difficulties will be found in the not too distant future.

For instance, our settlement service can be of great assistance. The main functions of this service consist of developing opportunities for the placement and permanent settlement of immigrants in Canada, and seeking and selecting abroad persons possessing the required qualifications or experience to take advantage of these opportunities. This service also assists in the settlement of agricultural families through the guidance of officials experienced in land settlement and who have a specialized knowledge of farming in its various branches. Such assistance is also of clear benefit to artisans and small businessmen who wish to establish themselves in rural areas.

To foster growth of Canada's population and to encourage immigration, regulations must necessarily be flexible. Under the present regulations the admission of immigrants who do not come within the categories therein described have to be admitted by special order in council. This caused administrative delays and often discouraged applicants who would have been desirable citizens of this country. The government has, therefore, by order in council P.C. 2856, dated June 9, 1950, which I hereby table, broadened the regulations governing the admissibility of immigrants. This order in council which will go into effect on July 1, 1950, supersedes P.C. 2743, but does not affect P.C. 2115.

P.C. 2856 does not affect the conditions governing the admission of British subjects as defined in P.C. 2743, citizens of Ireland, citizens of the United States and native citizens of France, who remain admissible as heretofore subject only to complying with civil and medical requirements and being able to support themselves until they find gainful employment.

The admission of all other classes of immigrants is placed in the discretion of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In the precise wording of P.C. 2856 "all other immigrants must satisfy the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, whose decision shall be final that:

(a) They are suitable immigrants having regard to the climatic, social, educational, industrial, labour and other conditions or requirements of Canada; and

(b) They are not undesirable owing to their peculiar customs, habits, mode of life, methods of holding property or because of their probable inability to become readily adapted or integrated into the life of the Canadian community and to assume the duties of Canadian citizenship within a reasonable time after their entry."

In co-operation with the provincial governments it is intended to pursue surveys already in progress to determine the possibilities for the establishment of immigrants in their respective provinces.

Immigration from the British isles will be encouraged by every means possible. We have already in the United Kingdom representatives of the Department of Labour and of settlement service of the immigration branch advising prospective immigrants. A re-organization of the immigration headquarters in London is in process. In the near future it is expected that we will be able to provide free medical examination, including X-ray, to British immigrants in certain areas of the British isles. In France, new premises were secured last year and the re-organization is almost completed. Immigration from France will also be encouraged. It is also expected that we will shortly be able to provide free medical examination including X-ray for the benefit of prospective French immigrants.

To facilitate the selection of immigrants who will best fit in the Canadian economy, immigration officers serving abroad will receive special training on labour problems through the co-operation of the Department of Labour. Several officers are now receiving guidance at national employment service offices in Canada and others are being selected to commence this training shortly.

To reduce administrative delays and to make the immigration service as efficient as possible, directives from the minister will be issued from time to time to senior immigration officers in the field defining classes of persons who are admissible. Beginning the effective date of the order in council P.C. 2856, July 1, and for the time being, it is proposed to admit the following classes without reference to the minister:

(a) British subjects, citizens of Ireland, citizens of the United States, and native citizens of France as defined in P.C. 2856;

(b) Relatives sponsored by legal residents of Canada in cases where satisfactory settlement conditions are established, such conditions to include good prospects of employment for persons other than dependent relatives;

(c) Persons applying for admission to Canada for the purpose of marriage, provided the prospective husband is able to support his intended wife;

(d) Agriculturists who have sufficient means to farm in Canada;

(e) Immigrants individually nominated by employers in Canada who establish that their services are required; provided that the number of immigrants nominated by an employer in any one group application does not exceed 25;

(f) Domestics and nurses' aides; and

(g) Immigrants recommended by the settlement service of the immigration branch.

With respect to the admission of relatives, hon. members will have noted that this category, formerly restricted to first degree relatives sponsored by residents of Canada, has been widened to include all bona fide relatives, subject to the reasonable condition that, in the case of persons other than those who are by reason of age or some other disability unable to support themselves, the sponsors supply evidence that there is good prospect for employment.

All applications other than those previously mentioned will be referred to the minister for consideration on their merits.

For example, the minister, under the new regulations, will be able to make prompt decisions with respect to such classes as:

(h) Immigrants bringing capital to Canada for the purpose of establishing an industry or business;

(i) Immigrants coming to Canada as artisans or small businessmen for the purpose of establishing themselves in rural areas;

(j) Members of professional classes and others who are deemed capable of making a significant contribution to the economic or cultural life of Canada;

(k) Group movements other than those previously defined; and, generally speaking, with respect to all immigrants deemed to be desirable and suitable in accordance with the true intent of the regulations enacted by order in council P.C. 2856. It is to be understood that there are no changes in the existing requirements as to health, character and passports.

Mr. Knowles: The minister will probably recall that there has been some discussion in the house with respect to Chinese and I have in mind the matter of foster children. The last time this matter was before the committee the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar raised a question which the minister said could be dealt with on his supplementaries. Probably he did not know that that would be at a quarter to twelve o'clock, but here we are. Does the new order in council to which the minister has just referred cover the case of a citizen of Canada, Chinese in origin, whose wife, two natural children and one adopted child are in China?

[Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce).]

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): The order in council referred to a moment ago does not affect P.C. 2115 which still relates to persons from China.

Mr. Knowles: In this case the person is a citizen of Canada and is in Canada. Does that make any difference?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): None whatever.

Mr. Knowles: Then I draw this case to the attention of the minister and I shall get in touch with him again about it. It seems to me that in this case the minister should exercise discretion if he has it. This is a Canadian citizen whose two grown daughters and adopted son are in China. He can bring his wife and two grown daughters to Canada, but that would mean breaking up the family. Now that this matter has been broadened as suggested by the minister I hope he will give favourable consideration to this matter.

Mr. Higgins: Will applications for citizenship by Chinese residing in Newfoundland prior to union be recognized in so far as the dates are concerned?

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce): After the hon. member spoke the other night on the estimates I asked for a report on these particular persons, but I have not been able to read it as yet.

Item agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

Hon. W. E. Harris (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Beaudoin in the chair.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce) moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1951, the sums of $1,044,731,265.43, $1,666,666.67 and $82,451,398, respectively, be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): These figures are being produced without there being any chance of checking them in any way. Can the minister assure us that they have been carefully checked and that there is no possibility of error?

Mr. Garson: I can assure my hon. friend that they have been checked.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 319, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1951.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the first time.

Mr. Harris (Grey-Bruce) moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Drew: We have got things through quite satisfactorily tonight and I think the second reading should be left over until tomorrow. Hon. members will then have an opportunity to examine the bill, which I am sure is in exact form, before it is passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

HOUSE TO MEET AT 10.30 A.M. JUNE 30

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): If I could have unanimous consent I should like to move:

That when the house rises tonight it will reassemble at ten-thirty tomorrow morning.

Hon. members will then have an opportunity to consider the appropriation bill, and we shall be able to arrange for prorogation before noon.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. St. Laurent the house adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, June 30, 1950

The house met at ten-thirty o'clock.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION IN KOREA—CANADA'S PART IN COLLECTIVE ACTION UNDER UNITED NATIONS

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a further brief report to the house with regard to our relationship to the present situation in Korea.

As the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) said yesterday, our responsibility in this matter arises entirely from our membership in the United Nations and from our support of the resolution of the security council passed on Tuesday last, part of which reads as follows:

> The security council . . . Recommends that the members of the United Nations furnish such assistance to the republic of Korea as may be necessary to repel the armed attack and to restore international peace and security in the area.

Any participation by Canada in carrying out the foregoing resolution—and I wish to emphasize this strongly—would not be participation in war against any state. It would be our part in collective police action under the control and authority of the United Nations for the purpose of restoring peace to an area where an aggression has occurred as determined under the charter of the United Nations by the security council, which decision has been accepted by us. It is only in such circumstances that this country would be involved in action of this kind. The house, I think, has already approved this position.

I would add, however, that if we are informed that a Canadian contribution to aid United Nations operations, under a United Nations commander, would be important to achieve the ends of peace, which is of course our only purpose, then the government wishes parliament to know that it would immediately consider making such a contribution. It might, for instance, take the form of destroyers to operate with other naval units of the United Nations, though our destroyers could not in any event reach Korean waters in less than about three weeks' time, because after all it is more than six thousand miles from Esquimalt.

Hon. members will recall that our naval units there were to proceed to European waters for summer exercises. These arrangements will be suspended, and the move will now be made into western Pacific waters, where the ships would be closer to the area where they might be of assistance to the United Nations and Korea if such assistance were required. If the situation in Korea or elsewhere, after prorogation, should deteriorate and action by Canada beyond that which I have indicated should be considered, parliament will immediately be summoned to give the new situation consideration.

Meanwhile the government, within the mandate which the attitude of the house in the last two days has given it, will do its full duty, within the measure of its power and ability, as a member of the United Nations, in common with other members, to make the collective action of the United Nations effective, and to restore peace in Korea. If this can be done—and it can—then the chances of preserving and strengthening peace over far wider areas of the world than Korea will be immensely increased.

Mr. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): The house will welcome the assurance by the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) that in the event of deterioration of the situation which would call for action, parliament will immediately be summoned. It is particularly appropriate that on the day we prorogue there should be a further opportunity to discuss this subject in the light of the statement which the Prime Minister has made.

As the Prime Minister has pointed out, we are now seeing the first real effort to make the collective principle of the United Nations charter effective in the form of sanctions, in an instance in which there has been clear-cut aggression such as has occurred within the past week in Korea. Far from feeling depressed about the gravity of the events, it seems to me that all of us should be greatly encouraged by the hope this offers that the steady wave of aggression which has spread over many parts of the world in these past few years may at last be stemmed by the vigorous and effective joint action of free men throughout the world.

I think the sentiment of this house has been clearly demonstrated within the past few days. What is important is that there seems little doubt that the sentiment expressed in this house is the sentiment of the people of Canada whom we represent. That sentiment seems to be unreservedly behind such collective action at this time as will offer the one hope of peace that is before us. This being so, I do not think we should leave this house today with any lack of appreciation of the full seriousness of the events of those past two days.

The United States, as the only nation with effective military forces within the area where aggression has occurred, has taken action which has already produced significant results. That action, however, has been action on behalf of the United Nations, which is represented in that area through a commission which was charged with the responsibility for administering the area. Anything that is done there will be action on behalf of the United Nations, as pointed out by the Prime Minister in the remarks he has just made. What is of vital importance and vital concern to every one of us is that more than the use of military force has been committed within these past few days. The whole prestige of the United Nations has been committed. Our prestige and the prestige of every member nation are committed by these events. On the outcome of this issue in Korea depends the future effectiveness of the United Nations. For that reason it is not only the fate of South Korea that hangs in the balance; it is the fate of the United Nations, the fate of that organization upon which the hope of peace in the years ahead now rests.

Had it been necessary, any of us could have made these remarks in discussing the supply bill this morning. For that reason I should like to point out that we shall presently be dealing with a supply bill which includes very large sums for national defence. Under the terms of that bill additional expenditures can be made and additional commitments undertaken if that becomes necessary. Before we leave here today I think it should be said in this chamber that in the light of world events every hon. member, I feel sure, will support such action as is necessary to bring our defence forces to the highest state of effectiveness.

This morning I saw in a press report from Korea a short statement which, it seems to me, casts a warning light upon the consideration of defence measures in times like these. There was in that statement a tragic explanation of the rapid advance of the North Korean forces. It explained that the morale of the southern troops was excellent, but that having regard to the mountainous nature of the country, interspersed with paddy fields, it had been not thought practicable or necessary to supply the southern forces with tanks and other heavy equipment. This report emphasized that the psychological effect of heavy tanks in the possession of the northern forces had a great deal to do with the sudden weakening of the southern line. It then went on to say that one division of Southern Koreans had dealt effectively with that situation. They had suddenly organized suicide squads. Volunteers had gone into action against the tanks with dynamite strapped to their bodies. By these supreme acts of heroism, the tanks had been stopped by units of that division. With all the lessons of the past few years, and with all the courage of our people, neither here in Canada nor elsewhere do we want to see the necessity arise for suicide squads to replace armoured equipment which could be produced by the greatest industrial nations of the world. For that reason I urge that every step now be taken to equip with the most modern aircraft, the most modern armour and the most modern weapons those gallant young men and women who wear the uniform of Canada. There are ways in which this can be done.

While we are waiting for production to give us the arms, the equipment and the armour that we need, it should be possible for us to make arrangements with the United States or Great Britain for certain types of equipment which we then could replace at a later date. But, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that, in the light of events as they are before us today, the one thought that must be in the minds of all of us is that every step that can be taken by this government to bring our armed forces up to a state of effective organization, in being, for whatever situation we might be called upon to face, is the number one priority of the government in the days and weeks ahead.

When we shall not be meeting in this House of Commons the people of Canada should be kept fully informed from day to day by the government as to events which may affect the lives of every one of us. I hope that the people of Canada, because they are the ones who will be directly concerned, will be fully informed by the government, and particularly by the Department of National Defence, as to steps which have been taken to bring to the greatest measure of effectiveness the highly disciplined and highly skilled units which we possess.

Once again I emphasize what I said before: that the preparations we are making today, the collective action which is taking place in Korea, is for the purpose of preserving peace; and everything we do to increase the effectiveness of our defence forces in Canada and elsewhere is the one real guarantee of peace that exists for us in the troubled world of today.

In taking whatever steps may be necessary to preserve the peace, I am sure that the government of Canada will have the wholehearted support of all the people of this country.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we regard it as fitting that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) should have taken the house into his confidence as he did this morning. We are gratified by the two assurances he has given us, and the two points he has emphasized. On the one hand he has assured us that Canada will live up to her obligations under the United Nations charter, and that any action taken by Canada will be taken under the auspices of the United Nations. With that emphasis we are in complete accord. On the other hand the Prime Minister has given us the assurance that if there is any deterioration in the situation, parliament will be summoned. We are grateful for that assurance. It is as it should be; nevertheless it is good to have it on the record. We feel that the way of collective security on the international front and strict adherence to the principles of democracy in our own affairs is the one way that offers hope and peace in this troubled world.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to say a word to commend the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) upon having made the statement he did this morning, and upon having given us the assurance that, in the event of its being necessary, this parliament will be called to consider further measures that may have to be taken to fulfil our commitments.

I stated the other day, and I am emphasizing it now, that the cost of being unprepared to meet the dangers that are extant may be far greater than the cost of being fully prepared. For that reason I join with the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew) in saying: Let us be as fully prepared as we possibly can be for the days to come.

Mr. Jean François Pouliot (Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, if I did not rely upon the wisdom and the foresight of my leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) I would make now a longer speech than that of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew).

REPORTS AND PAPERS

Hon. F. G. Bradley (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wish to lay on the table of the house parliamentary return, reference No. 145, moved by the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Lennard). May I add that I am expecting another return this morning, which has not yet arrived. I would ask leave to hand it in when it comes.

TRADE WITH BRITAIN

SALES OF IRON ORE AND SALT CODFISH TO UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. F. Higgins (St. John's East): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question, of which he has been given notice. On Monday, June 26, the minister stated that, as a result of the talks he had while in England and subsequent talks that are now current in England, before the end of this week he hoped to be able to announce the sale of 300,000 tons of iron ore to the United Kingdom for delivery this year, coupled with 700,000 tons of iron ore for delivery in 1951. He also stated that, with respect to new markets for salt codfish, he expected to make an announcement also before the end of this week. Would the minister inform the house if he is now ready to make this announcement, and if not, when does he expect it will be made?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am not in a position at the present time to extend the remarks I made last Monday. If the hon. member will keep a watchful eye on the daily press, I think he will be informed shortly.

Mr. Fulton: As soon as prorogation takes place.

SUPPLY BILL

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Acting Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 319, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1951.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Dion in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. Knowles: Does this bill differ in any particular from the appropriation bills usually brought before the house?

Mr. Garson: It does differ in one particular, in that it increases the amount of the borrowing authority referred to in section 5 of the bill from $200 million to $500 million. As hon. members, particularly those who have been here longer, will recall, the authority to borrow money for refunding purposes is usually contained in the first appropriation bill passed each year. The authority to borrow money for other than refunding purposes is contained in the final appropriation bill which in the present case is the one we are now considering.

The amount so authorized started out in 1931 as $150 million; it was raised in 1932 to $200 million, and remained at that figure until the present time, when it is being increased to $500 million. This is made necessary because each year latterly we have been issuing Canada savings bonds in amounts in excess of $300 million per year. In addition at certain times it is necessary to raise money temporarily to meet extraordinary payments. This is often a question of timing. It is possible that at certain times our cash position is such that instead of refunding maturing issues we are able to pay them out of cash on hand. When this is done it may later become necessary that we replenish our cash by new borrowings, which, since they are not refundings, cannot be issued under the authority contained in the Appropriation Act No. 1. Thus as long as we are following the present financial policy it is necessary for us to increase our borrowing authority in the manner indicated, although this increase in borrowing authority does not mean that we shall use it to increase the public debt any more than we would have done under the $200 million borrowing authority.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): If we could consider section 5 I should like to ask the minister to give us assurance on one point. The wording of the section is:

> . . . not to exceed in the whole the sum of five hundred million dollars, as may be required for public works and general purposes . . .

My understanding is that that is merely a phrase which somehow or other has crept in and is used, but that in fact this borrowing will not increase the public debt in any way but will be expended purely for financial operations of the type indicated.

Mr. Garson: I am not just sure what meaning my hon. friend has in mind to attribute to this phrase but as I understand the operations of this matter, it works in this way: We borrow money for public works and general purposes, which is the phrase used in the section. The necessity for increasing this borrowing authority arises from the fact that if in following out our policy to encourage savings we should issue $300 million per year in Canada savings bonds, it puts us in a cash position at various times which is not necessarily related to our borrowing needs. We sometimes have to use that cash for paying off rather than refunding an issue, and when we do that it creates the necessity of having greater borrowing powers later on.

Mr. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I am satisfied with that explanation. I raised the point simply to draw attention to the somewhat unusual words and to be assured just what was meant by public works.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Schedules A, B and C agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Garson moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Motion agreed to and bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, June 30, 1950

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber at 11.30 o'clock for the purpose of proroguing the present session of parliament.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. F. Delaute,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. St. Laurent: May I suggest that the sitting be suspended until we receive a message from the other place?

I should like to take just a moment to express on my behalf, and on behalf of my colleagues, appreciation of the manner in which the matters brought before the house by the government, in the discharge of which it considered to be its responsibilities, have been dealt with by all hon. members. At the same time I should like to extend to all hon. members our best wishes for a restful holiday, which will enable them to return whenever the occasion requires in the mood that has been displayed throughout the whole of this session.

SITTING SUSPENDED

At 11.10 p.m. the sitting was suspended until twelve o'clock noon this day.

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at twelve o'clock noon.

The Commons of Canada have voted supplies required to enable the government to defray certain expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1951.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

To this bill the Clerk of the Senate, by command of the Deputy Governor General, did thereupon say:

In His Majesty's name, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this bill.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

After which the Deputy Governor General was pleased to close the second session of the twenty-first parliament of the Dominion of Canada with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The North Atlantic council has made a significant forward step by the formulation of the principle of balanced collective forces as the basis of the defence of the Atlantic community. The government welcomes the decision to have deputies of the foreign ministers appointed to maintain continuity in the work of the council.

In order to further the economic co-operation of north Atlantic nations, Canada, along with the United States, has accepted an invitation to become associated on an informal basis with the work of the organization for European economic co-operation.

Canada was also represented at the commonwealth meeting held in Australia to consider the means of assisting in the economic development of south and southeast Asia.

The United Nations has recently been called upon to deal with a serious threat to peace in Korea. Though the situation emphasizes the grave concern which has long been felt over the failure of the security council to arrange for the provision of forces to implement its decisions in such cases, the prompt and energetic measures taken by individual members on its behalf and in conformity with its resolutions to restore and maintain peace in that area have met with general approval in all the free nations and will, I am sure, dispose them all to supply such form and degree of co-operation as may be required.

The government remains convinced that until there is genuine good will among all nations, the maintenance of peace will continue to depend upon the unity and strength of the free nations.

The government is continuing to give close attention to the development of our defence forces. Measures have been enacted to provide for the consolidation of existing legislation with respect to the armed forces including a purely Canadian disciplinary code; and to provide for the procurement of munitions and defence supplies. The government was gratified by the announcement of the United States government that a program for the purchase of defence supplies in Canada on a reciprocal basis was being developed for the year beginning on July 1.

Our external trade remains at a high level despite difficulties arising out of the world-wide shortage of United States dollars which continues to affect overseas markets for certain of our export products. My ministers are giving constant attention to the removal of obstacles to the free flow of trade between our country and our traditional customers overseas.

Satisfactory discussions have been held with the government of the United Kingdom concerning the sale of wheat after the completion of the present contract.

A measure has been enacted to bring the powers of the Canadian wheat board into conformity with the provisions of the international wheat agreement.

You have renewed the Agricultural Products Act and have provided legislative authority for continuing the support of prices of agricultural and fishery products where such support may be required to reduce the impact of price adjustments.

Legislation was enacted early in the session to bring additional workers under the protection of the Unemployment Insurance Act and the protection itself was extended by supplementary winter benefits.

A joint committee of both houses of parliament has examined carefully the whole question of security for the aged with a view to providing an essential background of informed opinion in advance of the forthcoming general conference of the federal and provincial governments.

During the session agreements were concluded with several of the provincial governments to implement the legislation with respect to housing and also the legislation with respect to a transcontinental highway enacted at the last session.

The Niagara diversion treaty between Canada and the United States to provide for the permanent regulation of the diversion of water from the Niagara river for hydroelectric power has been approved and it is the hope of the government that, in the interests of both countries, it will receive the early approval of the Senate of the United States.

A uniform and systematic procedure has been provided for the publication and tabling in parliament of regulations and orders made by the governor in council or ministers or other agents of the crown in the exercise of powers conferred by statute. You have also approved a measure to enable corporate crown agencies to sue and to be sued in the ordinary courts.

The consideration of the measure to revise the Indian Act has not been completed. This measure will be reintroduced at your next session. In the meantime, among other amendments to the Dominion Elections Act, 1938, provision has been made to extend the rights of Indians to vote in federal elections.

During the session measures have been enacted respecting the national research council; prize money; the inclusion of veterans of British and allied forces within the scope of the War Veterans Allowance Act; prairie farm assistance, and the national film board.

Bills have also been passed to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act; the Customs Act; the Income Tax Act; the Excise Tax Act; the Tariff Board Act; the Judges Act; the Trust Companies Act; the Loan Companies Act; the Foreign Insurance Companies Act, 1932; the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, 1932; the Railway Act; the Canada Shipping Act, 1934; the Aeronautics Act; the National Parks Act; the Northwest Territories Power Commission Act; the Official Secrets Act, and the Criminal Code.

The Transitional Measures Act has been extended to provide for the orderly decontrol of rents.

The spontaneous and tangible expressions of sympathy for the victims of the Manitoba floods and the fires at Rimouski and Cabano have been a gratifying demonstration of national unity. My ministers felt they were acting with the unanimous approval of our people in providing immediate assistance in fighting the floods and fires and in applying to the disasters of 1950 the principles and considerations applied in the Fraser river valley flood of 1948. As on that occasion the work of the armed forces was most effective. Joint federal-provincial commissions of investigation were appointed, and as soon as they could report, an announcement was made of substantial national financial assistance for rehabilitation and reconstruction of the devastated areas.

The Canadian section of the international joint commission has been requested to expedite the investigation into measures required for the future control of the Red river.

The greater Winnipeg diking board appointed jointly by the federal and provincial governments is proceeding with the work of providing flood protection for the Winnipeg area.

The prairie farm rehabilitation administration has been instructed to complete the compilation of data, much of which has already been gathered, with respect to flood control in the Assiniboine river.

The splendid manner in which our people met these disasters, the efforts and endurance of those who fought the flood and the fires, and the response from all parts of Canada and abroad to appeals for assistance have provided heart-warming evidence of the feeling of common humanity which exists in many other countries as well as our own.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for all essential services for the current fiscal year.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

As you return to your homes, I express the hope that Divine Providence will continue to bless our people with peace, prosperity and happiness.

This concluded the second session of the twenty-first parliament.
