He omitted to mention last week that the handsome silver ice-pitcher and goblets presented to Mr. E. F. Moore were purchased from Mr. James Inurie, who carries a choice stock of silverware in addition to his stationery, etc.
Business men should not grow about dull times, but advertise in THE SIGNAL, tell the public the truth, and sell at bottom prices. This is the best way of making business brisk we can think of. Advertise early, and catch the fall trade.
The following visitors have been enjoying themselves at the residence of Mr. G. N. Davis during the past week: Mr. John Bond, Miss Kate and Miss Elizabeth Jones, Detroit; Mrs. Harry Gorman, Sarnia; Mrs. John Plummer, London.
GENEROUS GIFT.—Col. A. M. Ross, M. P. has generously presented the Lucknow Caledonian Society with ten dollars, towards the prize list of the approaching games. We hope to see the Colonel present on the 13th of September. —[Sentinel].
WEATHER PROBABILITIES.—The great New Western telegraph Company, during the harvest times, issues a weather bulletin at all of its offices throughout Canada, at 8 o'clock each morning, giving a forecast of the weather, for the succeeding 24 hours.
About 700 excursionists passed through on the G. T. R. to Goderich on Friday last from Mitchell. The peculiarity about this excursion was—there were no women looking girls aboard. We will pay Mitchell against Clinton for ugly old maids.—[Seaford Sun].
LATE ARRIVALS AT THE POINT FARM.—A. J. Robertson, Mrs. Robertson, 2 children and nurse, Toronto; A. B. Hay, Jas. Hay, Mrs. Hay, 3 children and servant, A. Pattullo, Miss Jessie Hay, Woodstock; W. J. Blackburn, London; J. G. Asterbury and family, Detroit.
A former resident of Brantford, now living in Goderich, gave meals to thirty-four different persons on the occasion of the big excursion on Saturday. Such hospitality as that, if more general, would make Goderich the most popular point for excursionists of any line of rail.
On Wednesday night of last week, as Mr. George Parke, was driving home to Bayfield from Zurich, the horse became unmanageable, and ran away, colliding with a telegraph pole, smashing the buggy, and seriously injuring Mr. Parke. The horse was also considerably hurt.
Mr. A. W. Wright, Secretary of the Ontario Manufacturers' Association, but better known as an advocate of rag currency, was in Clinton last Thursday. He was there for the purpose of inducing the Salt Association to join the Manufacturers, but there was no meeting of the Salt Association that day.
On Thursday next the town Band will hold a picnic in Bingham's grove. Every arrangement has been made to make the affair a complete success. The band, under the leadership of Mr. R. Parker, has made great progress during the past season, and we hope the picnic will be well patronized by our town-folk.
Mr. Walter N. Hoosie, bursar of the Brantford Blind Asylum, was at one time a resident of Goderich, was in town for two or three days during the week. On Sunday he gave an interesting address to the scholars of Knox church S.S., of which he was a scholar for a number of years. Mr. Hoosie takes a keen interest in Sunday School matters.
A FORGER ARRESTED.—A dispatch from Greenock, Scotland, says that the police of that city arrested John Rapier on the steamer State of Nevada, on his arrival at Greenock. Rapier is charged with forging three thousand dollars on his employer, Mr. Ben. Allen, of Chicago, formerly of Goderich, now a prosperous jeweller in the Phoenix city.

Among the arrivals at the Brunswick Hotel, Winnipeg, as given by the Free Press of the 2nd August, we observe the names of M. C. Cameron, M. P. Mr. and Mrs. George Acheson, and Mr. S. Pollock and wife, of Goderich. Mr. Pollock, it would appear, had some other object beside real estate in view in making his north-west journey. We wish the happy pair plenty of days and many joys.
The Fargo Sunday Argus says:—R. Hadwin, one of the bonanza farmers of the Valley, spent yesterday in piloting one of his old neighbors at Wingham, Canada, J. M. Leet, around the metropolis of the wheat and banana belt. Mr. Leet has spent the past year traveling on the Pacific slope and the Rocky Mountain states and territories, but has seen no region that impresses him so favorably as the Red River Valley. Hadwin says he will "catch on" before he leaves, and the indications are that Hadwin is a prophet. The first half of the game was closely contested, but McNair got warmed up as did his partner at the other end, and they walked away from their plucky competitors. A return match will be played at Dunlop on Wednesday next, at five o'clock p. m., when the Colborne men hope to reverse the score.
A GOOD TIME.—The G. T. R. excursionists returned home late on Saturday night from Goderich where they reported having an excellent time. Although seventeen cars left this city in the morning the accommodation was found inadequate and four more had to be added at Stratford, so it is estimated that fully a thousand people were on board. Although the excursion was the largest one of the season, it was exceedingly well managed, nothing occurring to mar the pleasure of the day, and the G. T. R. employees are to be congratulated on the success of the affair.—[Brantford Courier].
The largest excursion which has yet visited Goderich arrived from Brantford on Saturday. A big turnout was expected, but when the visitors swarmed from the long train of coaches our townspeople who were eight-seeking looked surprised and delighted. The G. T. R. and Citizens' Band of Brantford, accompanied the excursionists, and played in the style during the day, under the leadership of Bandmaster Quillie. The band uniform was a natty one, consisting of a grey suit trimmed with black, with swallow tails, epaulettes, and brass buttons and shakos with white plumes. The report of the excursion, by one of the visitors, in another column, is taken from the Brantford Courier.
BASE BALL.—The baseball match between the Low-batters of Seaford and the Goderich Athletics, played here on Saturday last, resulted in favor of the visitors by a score of 26 to 11, and an innings to spare. The Seaford club gave a fine practice, and good discipline for young players, and promise to make a crack club. Our boys have some good material also, but one or two of the players talk too much on the field. With more practice and less "chin music" by some, the Athletics would make a tip-top team. We give the number of runs made by innings:—
Seaford—1 4 2 0 3 4 11
Goderich—0 1 0 1 3 0 6—11
Mr. Levi Latimer, of Seaford, made a very good umpire.

ACCIDENTS BEHIND THE BAT.—During the baseball match on Saturday afternoon, R. Deveraux, catcher of the Seaford nine, was struck between the eyes by a ball hot from the pitcher's hand, and had to retire. The wounded man bled profusely, and upon examination it was found that although the nose was not broken, it was badly cut and swollen. Deveraux, who was a fine looking young fellow, will have his beauty spoiled for some time. F. Blakely, of the Goderich club, was also struck on the cheek bone by a foul tip, and went to join Deveraux in the temporary hospital. Although his face was badly swollen, Blakely got off much better than his Seaford acquaintance. Both boys bore their punishment with pluck.
IS IT FORGERY?—On Tuesday Constable Gill, of Exeter, passed up to Goderich with a young man named Arthur Carrick, of Hry, who had been committed to jail for trial under the following circumstances:—Some time ago Hazzard Bros., of Brantford, Brantford, hearing that Carrick wanted to purchase a steamer for a threshing machine, went to the mill where he was employed and persuaded Carrick to give him an order for one, the young man signing his father's name to the order. In due time the engine arrived but Carrick refused to accept it or pay anything on it. Hazzard Bros. offered to settle the matter on payment of $100 to cover expenses of shipping, etc. but he would not agree to this, and a warrant was accordingly issued against him, on a charge of forging his father's name to the order. He was tried before Mr. McDonagh, of Exeter, who committed him to stand his trial. The plea upon which defence will likely rest, is that the signature, being made in the presence of an agent, was not a forgery. When Gill and his prisoner arrived at the railway crossing here, they got off expecting to catch the morning Trunk train, but it had passed, and a conveyance had to be taken to Goderich.—[New Era].

THE LOST "EXPLORER."

R. G. McCulloch, submarine diver says that he Found Twelve Auger Holes in the Bottom, and also a Body and Several Tons of Stone.

From the Port Huron Times.
The story recently published about the finding of the lost schooner Explorer, which was sunk about fifteen years ago in Georgian Bay, Lake Huron, has revived a great deal of the interest that was manifested at the time the vessel was sunk. The statement that Capt. Waddell, who was in command, had planned to defraud the insurance companies and also caused the death of the sailors, is credited by some newspapers as being true, while others emphatically stamp it as a slander upon a dead man. Capt. Waddell was well known in Goderich, and a few years after the Explorer was lost he was drowned. The Goderich Star published a long article denying the story printed in several local papers, and stating that the editor had examined the bottom of the boat and could not find any auger holes, and further that no bodies were found in the hole or cabin by the divers. The article in the Star is replied to by R. G. McCulloch, a submarine diver of this city, who examined the boat and claims to have found the auger holes and some of the wooden planks in the hold, and also the perfect body of a man and the bones and putrid flesh of another; but he does not pretend to say who scuttled the schooner. He writes as follows:
To the Editor of the Port Huron Daily Times.
Sir:—I see by your valuable paper that the Goderich Star denies the fact that the schooner Explorer was scuttled and sunk, as published in the local papers. I was one of the divers that worked on the Explorer and gave the report to the press concerning the scuttling of that craft, and from personal knowledge know that the Explorer was scuttled.
If the editor of the Star will get the harbor-master of Goderich, and go on board the Explorer and lift the "limber" boards, the harbor master (who thoroughly understands his business) will show the editor of that paper where he can find twelve inch-and-a-half holes, eight on the starboard side and four on the port side.
I will further state that the schooner was stripped of all her sails, blocks, rigging and booms, and the sheet blocks were cut with a cold chisel, and part of the links left on the traveller; and the lamp and compass were taken out of the binacle box.
The schooner was weighed with (as near as I could judge without weighing) fifteen tons of stone, and thirteen lockers in the cabin were also filled with stone. There was one perfect body found on board with a shirt and pair of pants on, and the bones and putrid flesh of another was found on deck, having evidently floated out by the surging of the water while we were working at the wreck. The hatches were spiked down, and the hatch bars on and secured fastened. I also found seven of the plugs in the hold of the vessel that had been used to stop the holes until all was ready. The small door leading from the cabin to the hold of the vessel was also out. The cabin door had been locked, and the key left in the lock, but the door was lying on deck, having been torn off with an anchor or grapple. I have no hesitation in saying the schooner was scuttled and then sunk.
Mr. Lewis, who claimed to own the schooner, asked me to say nothing about it in Goderich, as he said, "The least told the sooner mended." The schooner had been under water for several years, but the name was perfect on the quarter and stern, as follows: "Explorer of Chatham. Who scuttled the schooner, I do not know, but the facts which I have stated can be proved by a dozen witnesses.
Hoping you will publish this, I remain yours truly.
R. G. McCulloch,
Sub-Marine Diver.
Port Huron, August 3rd, 1882.

The "Tribune" on the "Explorer."

The Port Huron Tribune says: "D. S. Gooding is the name of a Chicago attorney who thinks he has a clear case of libel against the Tribune because we published that Waddell-Explorer affair. He is cordially invited to wade in and try it. We have the best authority for every statement made in that article, and are prepared to back it up at any time. We do not state it as a fact that Waddell scuttled the Explorer, but gave the story told by himself and the condition in which the vessel was found. People can draw their own inferences." Another item in the same paper reads thus:—
"Every word of that article about the schooner Explorer, recently published in the Saturday Tribune, is true and can be verified under oath, if necessary. Among the witnesses would be found Captain H. N. Jex, of this city, Captain Matthew Watta, R. G. McCulloch and D. Fecteau, all of whom were present at the raising of the vessel. Captain Jex personally assisted in plugging up the twelve auger holes that had been bored in the bottom of the vessel, and his crew spent nearly half a day removing the stone with which she had been filled."

Senator Skead met with a serious accident on his farm, near Ottawa, Saturday evening. A horse which he was driving ran away, and he was thrown out of a light wagon to the ground, the result being that his left shoulder was dislocated, and he had two ribs broken.

THE ONONDAGAS.

The Story of the Noble Red Man of the Salt Country, The Tipperary Dodge—A River Boat is Run Down by the Superstitious Savages—Breakdown and Crime.

The last remnants of the Onondagas a branch of the "Six Nations" and the most enlightened and powerful tribe of all the North American Indians, are gradually but surely becoming extinct on a small reservation, five miles long by three wide, some eight miles south of Syracuse, N. Y. Christian Valley is on one side of the reservation and Cardiff, the little hamlet that became famous as the birthplace of the fraudulent giant who was unearthed in 1859, is on the other side.

They were composed of the Onondagas, Cayugas, Oneidas, Mohawks, Senecas and Tuscaroras. At the breaking out of the war for independence the Onondagas, of all the North American Indians, were the only large tribe that espoused the cause of the colonists. All others took sides with Great Britain.

In 1830 they numbered about 4000; in 1870 nearly 1200, and in 1880 considerably less than 1000. It will only be a few years when the once brave, true and powerful Onondagas will have completely passed away.

Their language they still preserve, and although surrounded by whites, they religiously adhere to their old traditions and customs. The green corn ceremonies and dances are as rigorously observed as they were one hundred years ago.

To illustrate with what tenacity they cling to an old traditional superstition. Nearly 100 years ago a sprightly young Onondaga was drowned in the river running on one side of the reservation.

The usual number of articles of under clothing for a trousseau is either six or eight everything—night-dresses, drawers and chemises. Three flannel petticoats and one dozen stockings, thick and thin.

These girls who suffer from headache ought to bathe the face and brow regularly for five minutes more at a time in cold water, to which a little perfumed vinegar has been added. This is to be done three times a day.

Phosphatine is a wonderful thing, yet so natural, so reasonable. Why? If you have feelings of goneness; too weak and dragging; too nervous to sleep; any ailment that hardily sufficient to keep body and soul together; headache, with pains across the back; the whole system relaxed; perhaps coughs and sore lungs; and will use one to six bottles of Dr. G. L. Austin's Phosphatine as the case may demand; it will not fail to make you an enthusiastic friend.

whisky. It is amusing to hear him prorate: "Boy bring him from Oitico." "Injun man got quart at Homer." "Find him on stump." "See bottle in woods." "Pocoman buy Injun drink," anything except the truth.

"Hennessy, are you here again?" was the inquiry. "Yes, your honor, truth I am thin; but for the sake of the days when I knew you in Tipperary, where we both him from, let me go just this wane."

For some reason or other he was let go. An Indian arrested for being drunk, and who overheard the foregoing dialogue, was the next called.

"Well, what have we here?" was the judicial inquiry. "Me Tipperary, too," was the answer, but it didn't work; he was sent thirty days on the hill.

Bridesmaids must not wear dresses lighter in colour. House gowns trimmed with feathers are much affected by aesthetic young ladies.

A woman's dress is like the envelope of a letter—the cover is frequently an index to the contents. Under the present regime of fashion it is quite legitimate for scarlet satin shoes to twinkle beneath white or blue evening toilets.

No form of compliment is expected by a lady from her guests either on arrival or departure. It is, therefore, needless to give one.

In attending ladies to a public entertainment a gentleman should proceed then in entering the room or hall and procure seats for them.

There have been several instances recently of a mother giving her daughter away when the father was either dead or acting as the officiating clergyman.

It is stated that if the sufferers from asthma get a muskrat skin and wear it over their lungs with the fur side next to the body, it will bring certain relief.

People love truth, but invite the lie to dinner. When the house is builded, death enters in. Heaven sends almonds to the toothless. There was never good or ill, but woman had to do with it.

Put a crow in a cage, will he talk like a parrot? The nin tree will not be sweetened, though you water it with milk. Twang on the golden harp and the people will admire your playing.

Challenge. Six athletes in the corporation of Brussels, says the Post, "are desirous of testing the athletic powers of other towns and, therefore, challenge six men, residents of some other town, to a friendly competition in thirteen or fifteen games for a purse of $100 to $500 as agreed upon, Caledonian rules to govern.

I. F. Smith, druggist, of Danville, under date of June 1st, writes of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. "It sells immensely in fact has the largest sale during the summer of any patent medicine in stock, and adds that he can heartily recommend it to the public.

The Poet's Corner.

Good bye, proud world! I'm going home;
Thou art not my friend; I am not thine;
Long through the weary crowds I roam—
A river ark on the ocean-brises
I sail I've been tossed like the driven foam;
But, now proud world, I'm going home.

Wesley's Tact.

The following anecdote of the founder of Methodism has, we believe, never been published. It reaches us from a trustworthy source, and it illustrates in a remarkable manner the mingled tact and piety of that eminent man.

Fun and Fancy.

A quick doctor heads his advertisement. "Ho, all ye dyspeptics!" That's just what dyspeptics won't do. If they would all ho vigorously they might not need any medicine.

Said little Edith to her doll, "There don't answer me back. You must be saucy, no matter how hateful I am. You must remember I am your mother."

A clergyman, lecturing on Palestine, remarked concerning one very rugged locality:—"The roads up these mountains are too steep and rocky for even a donkey to climb, therefore I did not attempt the ascent."

When you called upon Mr. Roberts what did he say? was a question propounded to a voter before an election committee. Ere the man could open his mouth to reply the question was objected to.

Words of Wisdom.

All nature is a vast symbolism: every material fact hasseathed within it a spiritual truth.
Great ideas travel slowly; and for a time, potently, as the gods whose feet were shod with wool.

Just as soon as any conviction of truth becomes central and vital, there comes the desire to utter it. Sacrifice is gladness, service is joy when such an idea becomes a commanding power.

Never Give Up. If you are suffering with low and depressed spirits, loss of appetite, general debility, disordered blood, weak constitution, headache, or any disease of a chronic nature, by all means procure a bottle of Electric Bitters.

Do Not be Deceived. In these times of quick medicine advertisements everywhere, it is truly gratifying to find one remedy that is worthy of praise, and which really does as recommended.

ANOTHER RAILWAY WANTED.

We believe the time has arrived when the question of obtaining another line of railway to Goderich should be taken up in earnest by the ratepayers of our town.

Without another railway Goderich cannot progress. The lake trade has fallen off in Goderich, as it has in all the other lake ports of Ontario during the past few years, and the terminus of the G. T. R. branch line at this point does not give us the railway facilities which at one time it afforded.

Last fall an agitation of some importance was started in Goderich and worked its way to St. Marys, where an effort was made to secure connection with the C. V. R. at Woodstock, to run through to Goderich. Owing to the rumors of amalgamation between the C. V. R. and the G. W. R., at that time, the scheme was allowed to fall through.

Now is the time to take the matter in hand. Don't wait to see what to-morrow will bring forth; do the incentive work to-day. Another railway is wanted, and another railway should be had.

We would suggest that the Mayor take an early opportunity of calling a public meeting to discuss the question. At the meeting a competent committee should be appointed, and the hands of the men at the other end of the proposed line strengthened.

It will be said by some, we have a railway committee already, and why not leave the matter in its hands? Our answer to this is that the present committee have not shown signs of doing anything, and the matter should be attended to at once. It is imperative that action should be immediately taken in the premises.

The outside towns and villages are already moving in regard to the question of bringing another line into this section. It is high time Goderich put its shoulder to the wheel.

The Seaforth Sun last week had a nice little romance in its editorial column. It stated in effect that Mr. M. C. Cameron was so afraid of a protest that he was prepared to resign West Huron, and already an arrangement had been made so that Mr. McMillan would "step down and out" from West Huron to make room for Mr. Cameron. The Sun is correct in every particular except the following: That Mr. Cameron fears a protest; that he will resign in West Huron; and that Mr. McMillan has agreed to vacate his seat in South Huron.

Some of our exchanges complain of the silent manner in which the Canadian press takes our recent "snubbing" by the British Government in the matter of the Irish Resolutions passed in the Canadian House of Commons. We are of opinion that the so-called "snubbing" does not alter the propriety and wisdom of the Canadians speaking a word for Ireland and Home Rule.

Up to the present time no protest has been entered against the return of Mr. M. C. Cameron for West Huron.

SENATOR ABAM HOPE, of Hamilton, is dead. He was a Reformist, and was appointed to the Senate by Hon. A. Mackenzie.

PERSONS who take umbrage at anything that appears in THE SIGNAL, and feel that they must reply, will always get a hearing in our columns, if they keep to the question under discussion. It is a sign of weakness when such an one fights shy of the paper in which the subject was originally handled.

A NUMBER of our contemporaries have suspended publication for a week during the heated term, to allow their staff to cool off, and recruit their health. The idea is a good one in many respects, although we cannot follow it. Heat or cold, rain or shine, Christmas week or the dog days, THE SIGNAL must come out, to satisfy the eager gaze of its thousands of readers.

A MEETING of Conservatives was recently held in a Clinton woolen mill, in order to glean evidence which could be used against Mr. Cameron in case of an election protest. Among those summoned to attend the meeting was an old gentleman who had been offered a couple of plugs of navy tobacco by a vagabond storekeeper if he would vote for the Reform candidate.

THE $1000 put up with an election protest is returned if the candidate appealed against is unseated. There should be no difficulty experienced in raising the money in a riding where there is much hope of the protest being successful. In West Huron cash offerings toward the protest fund have been small.

In dealing with the Muskoka election case, in which a recount of the ballots was demanded and made, Judge Gowen expressed some very sensible opinions in regard to the marking of ballots. Objection had been taken to over six hundred ballots, and the judge showed that in the working of the machinery for the carrying out of an election a great number of agents would necessarily be employed, and that many of them would probably be of limited education, certainly not accustomed to the work, of varied intelligence, and possibly not without prejudices.

DEAR SIR,—In your last issue appeared communication signed "Citizen" and "Conrad" respectively. The whole tone of both letters is intended to mislead, and convey to the public impressions entirely at variance with the feelings entertained by the citizens of Dunganannon.

DEAR SIR,—In your last week's issue I notice a long letter written by "Conrad" against "Annabella." Fearing lest his few friends, and fewer acquaintances, might mistake the portrayed character of the subject of his invectives as that of himself, he currently circulated among this small circle that I was the party whom he had in view as the author of the "Annabella" letter.

COMMUNICATIONS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions of our Correspondents. Contributions to this department must confine themselves to public questions, and be brief.

Mr. E. J. BROWN.—THE SIGNAL of Aug. 4th, contained two letters written by the "Citizen" and "Conrad." The soul of the first is evidently filled with delight over the so-called contradiction he imagines "Annabella" made. I suppose he has "revised" his delusive thought in his mind until he really supposed he had something resembling a sugar plum.

He mentions something about a "Philadelphia Lawyer," but if they are as thick-headed as the Philadelphia dentists we do not expect them to have much knowledge of English literature. I must confess it would be extremely difficult, if not utterly impossible to write an article suitable to the comprehension of such an ignoramus as "Citizen" has shown himself to be.

As to "Conrad," I accept his apology, although it is in the style of the school boys, "Please, sir, I didn't mean to," for he says "no harm was intended." I freely forgive him for the first part of his epistle, as the youth was greatly mistaken in the selection of a victim. This is one of the imaginary flights he is accustomed to take. But he has the audacity to say he writes a "humorous, yet truthful, account of the games."

WAR IN EGYPT.

REPORT OF THE ENGAGEMENT.

Gen. Alison's report of the engagement with the Egyptians yesterday says: Owing to the persistent nature of the reports existing the past few days that Arabi was retiring from Kam-el-Dar upon the Damnahour, I determined upon a reconnaissance to ascertain clearly whether Arabi still held his original position strongly. The left column commenced the advance at 4.45 p.m. The four advance-pickets of the launch lines moving by both banks of the Mahmoudieh canal and soon came into action with the

in a group of palms on the east side and in strong defensible houses and gardens on the other. These positions were carried, Lieut. Vyse of the 60th and a soldier being killed. The enemy then took a second position one-half mile in rear, upon the east bank of the canal among high crops and houses behind the irregular banks of the canal. From this position also they were driven with great loss. I accompanied the right column myself. As soon as the enemy observed us they opened fire with the artillery. I pushed on as rapidly as possible till we reached the point where the railway approached nearest to the Mahmoudieh canal and then opened on the enemy lining the banks of the canal. Two 9 pounders were dragged on the embankment and came into action against the enemy's guns, the 40 pounder firing over our heads against the point where the enemy's forces were beginning to appear. I now threw forward two companies to carry the house near the camp and followed up by throwing four companies still more to my left upon the banks and across the canal, thus attaining the position I wished and forming a diagonal line across the canal and railway. The enemy retired slowly. The fire of their seven pounders and nine centimeter guns was speedily got under by our artillery. The

A MUSKETRY FIRE

OBJECT OF MY RECONNAISSANCE
was obtained and I determined to withdraw. The movement was carried out with the most perfect regularity and precision. The troops fell back by alternating companies with the regularity of a machine. Every attempt by the enemy to advance was crushed by the beautiful precision of the forty pounder and the steady firing of the nine pounders.

THE LOSSES OF THE ENEMY
appear to have been very great. They were so dispirited that contrary to the usual practice of Asiatics, they made no attempt to follow up our withdrawal. As the reconnaissance was a success our move was all I could wish. I regret to state our loss was somewhat heavy. Lieut. Vyse was one of the most promising officers I ever met. Our total loss is four killed and twenty-nine wounded. The enemy was about 2,000 strong.

The First Battalion of the Black Watch (42nd Highlanders) left Edinburgh last evening by train for London, on their way to Egypt. A great crowd witnessed their departure. The band played "Auld Lang Syne." Great enthusiasm was manifested.

A COURAGEOUS YOUNG CANADIAN.
The Herald correspondent writes:—Latiff Effendi returned yesterday from Arabi's lines. He reports being present at the following conversation between Arabi and Midshipman DeChair:—
Arabi:—Would you rather remain with me or return to Alexandria?
DeChair:—"I wish to return."
Arabi:—"Why?"
DeChair:—"My duty is with the guns at Alexandria."
Arabi then (addressing his officers) said:—"This boy is an example to you all. Do not allow a hair of his head to be harmed. I only wish he was born an Egyptian instead of an Englishman."

LORD CHARLES BERESFORD.
This naval officer, who has been selected to lead the land forces at Cairo until the arrival of the British army, was at Victoria B.C., as lieutenant of H. M. S. Clio twenty-one years ago. He was then a young, hardy, scarum fellow, full of fire and energy, and when he came ashore with his friends was accustomed to make the old Colonial Hotel "howl." Shortly before arriving at Esquimaux the Clio called in at Honolulu. One night Lord Charles and his party, when ashore, knocked the Hawaiian coat-of-arms from the front of the U. S. consulate, and carrying it aboard ship nailed it up in his room. Next morning complaint was made to the captain of the Clio, who compelled his frisky young lieutenant to carry the insignia ashore, ascend a ladder with hammer and nails, and in the presence of several thousand people, restore the coat-of-arms to its accustomed place. Lord Charles is a brother to the Marquis of Waterford, and is a particular friend of the Prince of Wales, whom he accompanied to India.

RUSSIA'S TRICKERY.
It is reported that Russia has 200,000 men collected in the Caucasus with all stores and munitions of war for a descent upon the Bosphorus should an opportunity offer. It is said the delay in England in forwarding the army to Egypt is caused by the knowledge of these facts, as well as the calling out of the English reserves and the acceptance of services of some volunteer artillery.

rying to draw, a d looking pale and nervous. Suddenly the door opened and Gilbert appeared.

"Bessie, will you come and see father?" he asked.

Bessie got up, shaking a little, and they went away together. Gilbert was looking pale and excited too, but not distressed.

While they were gone, I told Anna what Bessie had said to me on the night before, and she looked very grave. She said nothing; but I knew she feared, as I did, that so much mystery must hide something unpleasant.

Bessie came back in half an hour, pink and tremulous; she seated herself, and made another heroic attempt at her drawing. Anna and I would not question her but presently she said—

Your father will not sanction our engagement till he has heard from Mr. Drewitt. He was so kind; he looked very grave, but he kissed me. He called me 'my dearie,' just as he does Anna and you. And your mother was kinder still. She said, 'Heaven care for you, my dear!'

She put down her pencils, and we kissed her, both very much moved by love and compassion.

She was to stay with us a month longer, she said. Our father was writing to Miss Parsons also, and mother had asked her to stop. The cloud almost cleared off as she told me this; and I began to feel hopeful.

We had another happy week. The children went back to school, and Eva returned home. Tom was obliged to resume his studies in London directly after the departure, and we were left a peaceful quartette, with only the babies to enliven us.

Mr. Drewitt's letter was long in arriving, and we did not know when it came. It had been taken to pocketing his letter at the breakfast-table and walking with it in them up and down. But one morning, Ella came to our sitting-room and said that father begged Miss Beale to go to the study; he had something particular to say to her. So Bessie went.

It was an hour before she returned, and then she only put her head in at the door, and said in a strange rough voice, unlike her natural one—

"Laura, will you come and help me to pack? I want to catch the 5.30 train, and there is hardly time."

Anna and I exchanged glances of grief and dismay, and I followed Bessie upstairs. Somehow I did not dare to speak to her. I hardly ventured to look after the first glance, for her face was so altered—white and drawn and frightened. She packed steadily and carefully and put on her hat and cloak at the glass as if her dazed unhappy eyes could see her reflection. I could not bear it, and went and put my arms round her.

"Don't!" she said almost roughly, and shook me off. Then she looked at my face and, seeing what was written there, said, "don't be unhappy, don't pity me, dear little Laura. I have been told that Gilbert and I are to be parted forever, and your father, just and good as he is, will not say why. If any one pities me, I shall break down. Something dreadful must have been said about me. I do not know what it is; but I mean to know."

"But where are you going?" I asked, crying. "To Miss Parsons."

"No, I am going to Mr. Drewitt to make him tell me what he knows. When he has told me—if the secret is anything like what I think and fear—I shall go away, and no one I have known will ever hear of me again, except Gilbert just once."

She kissed me with cold lips, and Anna too, and hugged the little ones whom she had petted, and then, getting into the dogcart, drove off with Tim the groom. She had already hidden good-bye to mother and father, she said. Gilbert was nowhere to be seen. She refused to let father drive her, and would not stop till the next day, though we implored her with tears.

Anna and I went back to the sitting-room, and passed a mournful evening alone. Gilbert did not appear; nor did mother and father; they went off after dinner to their own room. We knew our parents would tell us all directly; it was their way to take their children into their confidence, and of both their joys and sorrows we were kept informed. So, when we were sent for to mother's room next morning, we knew why she looked pale and troubled, and as if she had not slept.

"Dear children," she said, "poor Gilbert and Bessie are to be made very unhappy. Your father refuses to consent to their marriage, and says that he can never change his mind; and I think his decision is right. Better than my own boy and that poor child should suffer than that an almost eternal wrong should be committed. How I wish she had never come here? There is Mr. Drewitt's letter. Take it, my dears, and read it."

I looked over Anna's shoulder and read a follows—

"St. Clement's Rectory, January 30, 187--.

"My dear Sir,—With great pain of mind I answer your letter of the 24th.

Of Miss Bessie Beale I have nothing to say but praise; she is good, affectionate, patient, true, and, I need hardly say, possesses great personal beauty. But the circumstances of her birth are most unfortunate; and it is for that reason alone that I have kept her away from my family. I have sons, and feared some such complication as has happened in yours. You will see how very painfully I was placed; I could guard my own, but others I could not. I have always hoped that poor Bessie would be fortunate enough to place her affections on some person who would find what I am about to state no insuperable barrier to marriage; but I perceive from your letter that it is not so, and that my poor ward must continue to suffer even more painfully than she has hitherto done.

"Miss Beale is the only daughter of William Holbrook Beale, who was, I dare say you remember, condemned to death for the murder of his friend, Raymond Smith, eighteen years ago. The case caused much sensation at the time, the victim and the murderer being both educated men, well known in a certain set. The cause of the murder was a too well-founded jealousy on Beale's part. His wife died directly after the horrible, and his sentence was finally commuted to penal servitude for life. He also died in the course of the first year. He had been my dear friend at college, and committed his unhappy little daughter to my care. He was himself penniless, but his wife's relatives, who had always disliked him, handed over to me sufficient funds to produce for Bessie an income of two hundred and fifty pounds a year. They were wealthy, ill-bred, purse-proud people, and stipulated that they should never see her again.

"Allow me to express my deep regret for the pain that all this will cause you and yours. Try to recognize the difficulty of the position to me. The girl is all she should be—how could I condemn her to isolation for life? I hoped weakly that some fortunate chance would save her. I need not, I think, beg you to deal kindly with her and withhold this story, if possible. I trust her feelings and those of Mr. Gilbert Wynyard are not too deeply engaged. Tell my poor little ward I shall see her as soon as possible after her return to Miss Parsons; I should write to her at once, but that I am so much puzzled to account for my conduct without giving her information that would only increase her distress. In some way I must try to escape explanation.

"Believe me, dear Sir, Yours faithfully,

"PAUL DREWITT."

Anna and I looked at mother, grieved and horror-stricken. Here indeed was grief for us all—and what anguish for Gilbert and Bessie!—for we knew that Bessie had by this time compelled her guardian to tell her all.

"Poor Bessie!" we cried, with tears. "And poor Gilbert!" sighed mother.

"Does he know?" asked Anna.

"Yes. He asked father if he had any objection to his going away for a week or two, and father said 'of course not.' Gilbert wants to think the matter over in quiet, away even from me. He will go to Brighton to-day; do not notice his departure, my dears, or question us. And we went away to talk things over sorrowfully, and to see Gilbert drive off with his head down, and without a good-bye to any of us except mother.

In a few days another letter arrived from Mr. Drewitt. He told father that Bessie Beale had come to see him late on the night she left us; that she had explained to him that she had come away of her own accord, and in spite of mother's entreaties, in a manner that had left him no resource but to tell her all, in spite of his pity and disinclination. She had remained at his house for the night, solely because it was too late to go to a hotel—as she took care to explain—and the next day she had disappeared, without seeing any member of his family but himself, and without saying whether she was going.

Poor Mr. Drewitt was evidently very unhappy. We sent his letter on to Gilbert, and he wrote back to say that he had later news of her—that he knew where she was, but that she had bound him over not to tell, and also compelled him to promise not to seek her. He said he would come home at the beginning of the next week and go on with his work. He had come to a decision, he said, which he would communicate to father and mother on his return.

We were shocked when we saw the change in him. He seemed to have ceased in this short time to be the boy we had always thought him, and to have become a grave, stern, thoughtful man.

Mother told us what Gilbert had said to her and father on his return. He had promised father not to disobey him. He said that he did not share his opinions about hereditary birth—at least in full—and that he thought the family pride in our own purity was hard and selfish. Had there been madness in Bessie's family, or any disease of body known to be hereditary, he and she would have said good-bye to each other forever in this world. But Bessie's father had committed a crime in a moment of passion excited by a great wrong; and he could not see how that should affect Bessie. If he had only himself to think of, he would have married directly, proud to share her troubles and even her undeserved disgrace. But, then, Gibbie owned that often, when he had thought father mistaken, he had in time found him to be right after all, so he would wait and think, only begging father to think on his side and not without long reflection condemn Bessie to so much misery.

Father and mother were greatly pleased with Gilbert's strength and patience and obedience, and were very tender with him. Father promised to reflect well on all that Gibbie had said, and wrote a kind little note of sympathy to Bessie, which Gibbie forwarded.

That was a sad summer to us; even Anna's happiness could not brighten it. Mother looked drooping and sad, and father and Gilbert went about with grave thoughtful faces. At midsummer Anna was married, and went away; and though she was not far off, and Mab came home from school "for good," it was still a hard parting and a pain to miss her.

I do not believe that Gilbert and father exchanged words about Bessie all that year. We supposed, mother and I, that their opinions were unaltered, and we knew that Gilbert would be patient. But, when Christmas came round again, he was evidently very much tried. Eva Dennis came again, and her father and brother; John and Anna arrived to stay a month; Charlie Spurr—to whom I was by this time engaged—was also invited; Tom and the children were at home; and we could not help laughing and being happy.

One day in the first week in January I was standing at the hall window, when I saw a telegraph-boy coming up the drive. I opened the door to him, rather frightened; for we do not send telegrams in our family unless for serious reasons. It was for father; and I took it to his sanctum up-stairs. He opened, read it, and then, looking pale and disturbed, handed it to me. It was in French, and said—

"Miss Bessie Beale begs Mr. Wynyard to allow his son Gilbert to come over. She is not expected to live. She implores him to hasten, or it will be too late."

It came from a convent at Rouen. "Find Gilbert and bring him here," said father.

I ran off and brought him. Father said, "My poor boy!" and handed him the telegram. As he read it, he turned pale; but he set his lips, and said—

"I must go, sir."

"Surely," said father, a little surprised, and then he procured a time-table and examined it. "If Laura can fill a carpet-bag for us in ten minutes, we can catch the packet at Newhaven," he added presently, and rang the bell.

I heard Gilbert's exclamation of thanks as I flew out of the room. In less than ten minutes I was in the hall with the carpet-bag, and snatched a hasty kiss as they jumped into the dog-cart. Then I ran up-stairs to find mother and tell her father's hurried message of love.

It was four days before we got a letter. Then mother had a long one from father. He said that he had found Bessie well, ill—so ill that her death was hourly expected. It appeared that there had been an outbreak of scarlet fever in the town; and Bessie, who had been boarded at the convent and working with the sisters, had insisted upon doing her share, as usual, though she was already drooping and out of health. Naturally she caught the fever, and had it in its most severe form. She got over it, however, but, instead of getting well, she began to sink with terrible rapidity; and when she knew that all hope was over, she had begged the sisters to send that telegram. Father said that her life was still trembling in the balance, but that she had survived so long was a slightly hopeful sign.

Two days later we heard from father again. Bessie had "turned the corner," and was, he hoped, saved. But they could not leave her, of course. Mother must forgive him for staying away so long, and must be prepared to receive Bessie, too, when he and Gilbert came. They could not leave her weak, alone, and heart-broken in a strange country. The rest of the letter was filled with reports of the sister's praises of Bessie, Father thought they might perhaps begin their journey home in three weeks, but it of course depended on the progress of Bessie's convalescence.

Mother wrote at once to father, and enclosed a little note for Bessie, saying that she was longing to have her back again, and begging her to get well enough to travel early; we should soon make her strong at the Grange.

At last, at the beginning of February, they came home. Gilbert sprang joyfully from the hired close carriage which had brought them from the station. Then father got out, carefully supporting what looked like a bundle of shawls. Was that white, worn face, with its great sad, brown eyes, Bessie's? I hardly knew her.

Mother had come down, and she had the poor child carried into the sitting-room, where she was put upon a couch and petted, caressed, and fed till she was fit to walk upstairs. She looked round the room with eager eyes, and her face quivered. Then Gilbert, who was standing behind her couch, stooped over and kissed her solemnly on the forehead; and we knew that all was well, and that father had yielded.

"Yes," he said, talking it over later, "Bessie is as good as gold, and she has been tried like gold. I still think my general principle the right one; but this is an exceptional case. And as for the disgrace," he went on, with a slight painful quiver of the lip—"why, we are so many and so strong that we can well bear Bessie's burden amongst us—and he ended with a smile.

By dint of careful and continued nursing, Bessie got well. But she was a long time about it—as long that the wedding had to be put off till the following Christmas. Then Gibbie and Bessie and Charlie Spurr and I were married at the same time; and Bessie became "deputy-mistress" at the Grange, as Gilbert is "deputy-governor." And father and mother love her no less dearly than they love their own daughter.

Buckley's Arnica Salve.

Who's the Best Physician.

The one that does most to relieve suffering humanity of the thousand and one ills that befall them, is certainly the best of all physicians. Electric Bitters are daily doing this, curing where all other remedies failed. As a spring tonic and blood purifier they have no equal. They positively cure liver and kidney complaints. In the strongest sense of the term, they are the best and cheapest physician known.—[Daily Times. Sold by Geo. Rhyas, at 50 cents.]

Nine Physicians Outdone.

It is generally considered a pretty difficult task to outdo a physician, but the following will prove conclusively where nine were completely outdone. Mrs. Helen Pharviz, 331 Gayton St., Chicago, was treated for Consumption by nine physicians, and all pronounced her case incurable. Seven bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption completely cured her. Doubting ones, please drop her a postal and convince yourselves. Trial bottles free at Rhyas's Drug Store. Large size $1.00. (4)

The widow of the late Luke Noble, of Cottam, Essex, has gained an unenviable reputation by marrying her deceased daughter's widower, just eleven weeks after the death of her husband. This is the first known instance in Canada of a man actually marrying his mother-in-law. Such a marriage is contrary to the laws of this country. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. V. Smith, of Windsor, who, of course, did not know the relationship the parties bore to each other.

Parties just returned from the Qu-Appelle district report upwards of eighty squatters on the proposed Bell farm in that district. They declare their intention to remain, as they were squatted before they knew of the sale of the tract of land.

An insect resembling the army worm has appeared at Halifax. On Saturday they were in such numbers at one place as to change the color of the ground. Places where they have passed are as brown as though from weeks of drought.
