MR. FRASER'S Son. -We regret t so far to extract the bullet from the head so far to extract the bullet from the head of little Fred. Fraser. The bullet travelled along the bone, cutting a groove as it went, and getting gradually deeper until it wedged itself firmly in the bone, at the same time flattening and spreading out. A fresh orifice had to be cut in the scalp to reach the ball, but it was so tightly wedged in that extraction could not be accomplished. It is hoped, however, that by keeping the new wound open for a time a sloughing and suppurating action will be set up that will loosen the bullet. Chloroform was used in the unsuccessful operation, we believe.

ready for use. A strange history at taches to this old weapon. It figured some years ago in Port Hope, but was suddenly sheathed when threats of tar and feathers and banishment were made. It more than once was carried, lik. he fiery cross, through North Wei. worth, gleaming in the light of Reim triumphs, and slashing about the ceure Reform victories. It has lately one service on the Tory side in the with Riding, and being wildly brashed about has in the melee at more friends than foes. Not satisfied with such bloody work, the owner of it now threatens Messrs. Massie, Mc Lagan, and the editor of the Mercuray with a taste of its steel, for our daring to draw a favourable comparison between these two gentlemen and the proprietor of the Herald. Will no friend of the public peace step forward and lay violent hands on this terrible bully, who goes flashing about old steel in faces or law abiding citizens? Will no one hire for us a fighting editor—a perfect Goliah—who can gobble up this political Hercules? Or will we have to bind him over to keep the peace till the North Riding election is over, and have that dangerous old steel put in Chief Constable Kelly's hands, to be hung up in the Police Court for safe keeping? "We want this fooling stopped, and it must be."

The hopes of the To 's ran high in the sailer part of the stroggle that they would prove victors in each of the three electoral divisions, but as time wore on, it was amusing to find how defuly they skipped from West to East, from East to Centre, from Centre to West, from Centre to East, and from East to West. CURIOUS ACCIDENT. — On Sunday morning last, a horse, belonging to Mr. Carson, of Arthur, got into a place where horses don't often go. The Confederate says:—'Mr. Carson, who was attending Divine worship in the Baptist Church, e Mount Forest, had taken his horse from r the sleigh and tied it to a post near an old well in the foundry yard close by. The horse by some means became restive and backed down into the well. Fortunately, some pieces of plank had got stuck fast across the well about six feet down, and these, with the strap he was tied by, kept him from falling further. The alarm was soon given and a number of men left the church and succeeded, by means of chains and a pole, in dragging him out, none the worse for his fall, with the exception of a few scratches. If the horse had fallen the entire depth of fifty feet, it must undoubtedly have been killed. The mishap caused a short interruption in the services.

A Scottish Vendetta.

CHAPTER XVII.

AN IMPORTANT CONVERSATION, WHICH INDI-CATES THE RESULTS LIKELY TO ARISE FROM IT—NEW DANCERS AREAD. Helping himself to another draught of the mountain dew, which was already deepening the red on the point of his nose, Gregor cleared his throat and com-menced—

"It will be more then thirty years ago before the Chevalier made his appearance—and just about the time when the feut between the houses of M'Leod and M'Kenzie commenced. Three years before I had myself come across from Lewis; where I was born, and many another good M'Donald besides; and the M'Donalds and M'Leods being at the time triendly, is et myself down in M'Leod's chachan of Druchaneas, and made myself useful to any who sought my services.

"One day I was returning from Inverness when I met none other than the Chief of the M'Kenzie—your father—who at once fell into conversation with me. He me asked where I had been, and where I was going, and was very much delighted when I told him that I was not a M'Leod, but a M'Donald, and that I was no more connected with the M'Leods save by living amongst them. He asked me whether I knew of the feud between Malcolm M'Leod and himself; to which I replied that I had heard of it. Well, in case Donald Cameron should come, I need not make my story longer than there is need for, and will not be telling all that was said by both of us; but we left each other fast and firm fri inds.

"Ere many days we met again, and when we separated that time I had promised to give your father intimation when it would be sale to appear with his clausemen before Cas le M'Leod; and you'll not be surprised when I tell you that the opportunity was not long in offering itself. The M'Leod went off on a raid to the low country, and the same day they left I set out for the home of the M'Leod's were not a dozen of the clau left to effend the Castle of M'Leod, or the clachan of Druchaneas against a foe. Well, since the M'Leod's were not expected back early, your father agreed that he would not make an attack that day, but he would assuredly do so the next. He walked a mile or two of the road home with me, while we arranged as to the best means of pulling the Castle down and of firing the clachan. Just as we were about to separate, to the astonishment of us both, a M'Leod steppe t out of the thicket a man was fleeter than he, and escaped him.

"Returning, M'Kenzie told me that he would not now dela, a moment, and that he was not thinking it would be safe for me to go forward. I sail that I too, would be counselling the M'Kenzies going forward directly; but I was afraid to leave my wife and family to the fry of the M'Leods, which would be ure to break upon them, when the fellow that had overheard us should go home and tell his knsmen what he had heard us saying. Your father replied that I would have to go back with him, and that the M'Leods would not so far anget themselves as to interfere with my wife and children when they we blameless.

wife and children when they we blameless.

"I consented to go back; and to the truth, I was afraid to to go forw unless in the midst of a body of arrimen. Well, to shorten the story, I win a few hours after on my way the cond time to Druchaneas—this time a companied by the Chief of the M'Kenzis and a large number of clansmen. We sped forward rap dly and steathily, and soon came in sight of the clachan. But sight that met my gaze almost chiled my heart with alarm and feat dense cloud of black smoke hung over the huts, and thick wreaths of it, intermingled with forked tongues of flame, were shooting and rising up from the midst of the dwellings. As we drew nearer, we heard loud wails of agony and pan mingled with yells of triumph, derision, and glee, and what was shortly proved to be the real state of matters was so strongly forced upon my mind that I almost lost command of myself, and dashed forward to the rescue of my wife and children, whom I believed to be perishing amid the flames.

Harriston Correspondence.
The political excitement of late has caused a slight anspension of business, people generally being too much excited to think of doing business, placing, as they thought, the interest of their party or their country above all else. However, last Thursday finished part of it for a few days, when we shall again be in the midst of a contest—this time for the Local Honse. Who the aspirants in this case will be is not definitely known, but as the time for choosing is short, no doubt candidates will soon be placed in the field. It is thought by some the contest will be even more hot than was the last. Happily, however, things have gone very well so far, there being scarcely any hard feeling by either party, which is the right way.

Joseph Montgomery, a farmer of Howick, shipped a car load of cartle by T. G. & B. R. to Toronto last week, and expresses himself highly pleased with the speculation, he having made considerably more than he would have done by selling here. All the cattle bought here now is shipped on that line the buyers giving it the preference.

Mr. Smith has purchased the boot and shoe business from S. M. Douglas, opposite Collison's Hotel. H. R. Young has opined a jewellery store in the place formerly occupied by Donald McMun, adjoining Dr. Rutherford's office.

Accident happoned to Gilbert Simmie, by which he narrowly escaped being killed. It appears he was engaged in J. D. McEachren's shingle mill, and was working about the shaft of the fly-wheel, when he came in too close contact, got caught in the belt, and was wound round the shaft and badly bruised. Dr. Rutherford was immediately called in, and dressed the wounds. He is now in a state of convelorments.

wounds. He is now in a state of convalescence.

The cattle fair on Friday was well attended, both buyers and sellers being numerous. Beef cattle were chiefly in demand, and brought good prices, a number of the cattle were not in extra condition, consequently did not bring good prices, and in many cases were driven home unsold. The following, are a few of the sales:—Neal White, 3 steers, $130; Robt. Morrill, 3 head, $140; Edward Sothern, 4 head, $95; J. Fleming, 3 head, $127; George Broughton, 1 cow, $27; Jas. Fallas, 1 cow, $27; Joseph Hail, 4 head, $120; Alox.Barron, 3 head, $98; Edward Barchar, 2 head, $41; Thos. Strong, 2 head, $85; James Bacon, 1 heifer, $23; Robt. Fallas, 1 cow, $26; Murdock McLeod, 1 cow, $25.

Never be ashamed of confessing your ignorance, for the wisest man upon the earth is ignorant of many things, insomuch that what he knows a mere arching in comparison to what he does not know. But we apprehed very few are ignorant of the wonderful effects of the "Canadian Pain Destroyer." it's a most suite and raof the wonderful effects of the "Canadian Pain Destroyer;" it's a most sure and ra-pid cure for colds rheumatism, pleurisy, cholic cholera mcrbus, and all summer complints.
